Press, J. F. Garver, Charles Fry.

Appropriations, Bishop R. Bullard, general executive committee.

The General Superintendent, Daniel Macgregor, reported in part, as follows:

Nothing spectacular or extraordinary has transpired or is transpiring; rather has there been a steady development in every field of service. Indeed it is as our Lord observed, "The kingdom of heaven cometh not with observation, neither shall they say, Lo here, or lo there." And this prosperity is to be noticed in the progress of the pupil as well as of teacher. . . . There is a growing desire towards a close affiliation with the general church. We are sensing as never before, that the Church is our church, its quorums are our quorums and its prophet is our prophet. This is as it should be, and can not but result in a more manifest recognition by the Father in an outpouring of his Spirit.

In these times of agitation, an agitation world-wide in its movement, there is a tendency upon the part of our leading workers to consolidate and affiliate our interests with the general church, and it seems to us unnecessary to argue the good that will undoubtedly result from such affiliation. "United we stand; divided we fall."

We trust that this work of coordination will continue until we as church members will no longer say, We have a school, nor that we as members of the school can say, We have a church, but rather that each can say of each other in happy harmony, We are the Church, We are the school. . . .

The labors of your general officers are becoming more exacting as the burdens of office increase; and it will not be expected that the expense of carrying on the work will be limited by the allowance of the past. We are but human, and can not respond beyond the utmost; after that must summon assistance from other sources. . . .

We are pleased to note the spirit of sacrifice growing among the little ones so bountifully displayed in the late magnificent Christmas Offering. It is bigger than ever.

In trying to forecast the policy of the future we can only speak in general terms and as we see it we believe that measures should and will be attempted to confine the recreational energies of our young within the realms of the saintly surveillance. The association rather than restrain the pent up powers of youth, should direct it. It is a big problem and well worthy our consideration.

The first assistant superintendent, G. R. Wells, reported, in part:

Having been kept so busy in other departments of church work the past year, we have not been able to give to Sunday school work the service it deserves and needs. . . . Tried to take care of some field work at reunions last summer, but physical disability and other work made it nearly a failure. Hot weather and dust also made it trying on all. Have given all possible aid to the general superintendent which has been accomplished entirely by correspondence. Being the nearest in touch with our publishers, have rendered some service in reporting on the welfare of our Quarterlies, from a financial standpoint.

The second assistant superintendent, Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, reported having assisted the superintendent whenever called upon. She had written some hundreds of letters, and had done field work at special places. She had on invitation written articles for publication.

The secretary submitted statistical report.

Home department superintendent reported, among other items:

Having kept in close touch with the labors of our splendid workers, we are firmly convinced that our home department is rich in character and energy, and not altogether impoverished in results. . . . From the reports at hand we submit the following: The department has used 3,823 Quarterlies during the year and contributed $1,232.82. The total membership for the year is 6,013, but with 636 members transferred to local schools we have a present enrollment of 5,377 members.

The treasurer, John Smith, reported: Balance, $2,771.16; receipts not including balance, $4,166.92; expenditures, $4,575.54; balance on hand, $2,362.54.

The auditors reported having examined books and accounts of the treasurer and that they found same to be correct.

Report of the treasurer, with the auditors' report, approved.

The normal superintendent reported 118 as having taken the standard course and passing examinations. Six had taken examination on the advanced course. The work of the department was reported heavier every year. A training school for workers was suggested.

The social purity board reported as indicated in the report of the Religio Convention.

The credentials committee recommended amendments in their report affecting Southern Indiana, Des Moines, Gallands Grove, and Eastern Michigan districts, which were approved.

The revising committee reported their work hindered because of irregularity in sending them manuscript, in some cases, also because in some cases care had not been taken in the use of quotations.

The committee on merging reported:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 3, 1914.

To the General Sunday School Association: We your committee appointed to consider the matter of merging the Religio Society and the Sunday School Association report:

We held a brief introductory session jointly with the committee appointed by the Religio Society during the General Conference of 1913, at which time the matter was briefly considered, but no conclusions reached, only that the members of the committee would during the year give the matter consideration and form a report to the conventions at a meeting held prior to the Religio convention. No further joint sessions were held. The committee further reports that we do not favor a merging of the two societies at the present time, only as they both shall merge into the general church by a closer affiliation therewith through the presiding and governing councils of the church.

To accelerate this affiliation we recommend the adoption of the resolution pending before the convention relative to the placing of one of the First Presidency and one of the Twelve on the executive staff of the association. And we further recommend the adoption of any proper measures that will give to the Quorum of Twelve and the First Presidency in council assembled some say in the appointment of the general superintendent of the association. In this way we believe that the foundation for a correct and cohesive merging of Zion and her institutions can be best effected.

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

D. J. KRAHL.

It was moved to adopt the report, together with its recommendations.

Moved to amend the report by striking out the words, at the present time.

The amendment was lost. The original motion prevailed.

Sister B. M. Anderson was appointed musical director, with Charles B. Eaton assistant, and Sister Arthur Hodges pianist. Belle Robinson James and J. F. Mintun were appointed assistant secretaries.

A joint committee of the First Presidency and Twelve and the executive committee submitted the following:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 4, 1914.

To the Convention of General Sunday School Association, Assembled: At the request of a select committee representing the joint council of the Presidency and Twelve, the executive of the Sunday School Association met to confer with said committee April 3, 1914.

The aforesaid select committee stated that the Sunday school convention of last year having referred to the Presidency and Twelve a resolution regarding the matter of the general superintendent giving his whole time to the work of that office, it seemed necessary that consultation should first be had with the officers of the association regarding the matter of nominating the incumbent of the office of general superintendent. After due deliberation upon this matter the following resolution was moved and unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we recommend to the Sunday School Association that the power to nominate the general superintendent be lodged with the joint council of the Presidency and Twelve; a committee of three to be appointed by the association to meet with the joint council and confer with the council on such nominations."

This resolution is now respectfully referred to the convention for your action.

G. R. WELLS, Secretary.

This report was adopted.

As the committee referred to in the above, D. J. Krahl, W. W. Smith and J. A. Tanner were selected.

2 P. M.

A school of methods was conducted for superintendents, secretaries, librarians, seniors, intermediates, juniors, primary, beginners, home department, normal department.

3 P. M.

Session opened by singing number 144, prayer by Frank Mesle.

Vocal solo, a and b numbers, was rendered by Master Orville James.

Three-minute reports were heard from the directors in the school of methods held at two o'clock.

The library commission reported as indicated in the report of the Religio Convention.

A communication was received from the joint council of First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve acknowledging receipt of notification of the sittings of the convention, expressing the appreciation of said council of the courtesy, and assuring the convention of the readiness of the council to cooperate with the Sunday school.

Articles of condolence were passed expressive of the sympathy of the convention to be extended to those bereft in the departure of Sister Lois Elizabeth Smith Badham.

Joseph H. Anderson rendered a violin solo.

7 P. M.

Superintendent Daniel Macgregor announced number 182, after the singing of which J. F. Garver offered prayer. Number 148 was sung.

Minutes read and approved.

Sr. E. S. McNichols read a paper on "Learning to live by service." She said, in effect: The religious world once lived by blind faith. The inclination of to-day is to demand intelligent service. The first essential to this service is thought. Thought is the basis of action. In this service we must serve others. Render service unto humanity and you render it unto God.

The paper was by motion referred to the editor of Autumn Leaves for publication.

Appropriation for social purity work was referred to the executive committee with power to act.

Request for $600 for publication of Doctrine and Covenants in German was referred to the General Conference.

The Independence choir rendered two selections.

The matter of translating the Book of Mormon for use in the Palestine Mission was referred to the General Conference.

An appropriation of $125 was made for school work in the Palestine Mission.

A resolution to provide letters of removal for members of schools moving from one school to another was tabled.

A resolution to provide record book for small schools was referred to the executive committee with power to act.

A resolution to provide a book of poems suitable for use as recitations was referred to the executive committee with power to act.

Resolution to provide for special publication of quarterlies as presented by Eastern Michigan District was referred to the executive and lessons committees with power to act.

Petition from Central Nebraska District requesting a field worker was referred to the executive committee with power to act.

A resolution to add to the officers of the General Association, district or stake associations, and local schools a cradle roll superintendent was tabled.

J. W. Peterson reported as a member of the Bible normal book committee, stating that certain manuscript prepared by himself was in the hands of the board of publication. Matter of publication of Bible normal book was referred to the General Conference.

As the nominee for superintendent of the Association, the joint council of the First Presidency and Twelve submitted through the committee appointed to confer with said council, the name of W. N. Robinson. By motion the nomination was ratified by a vote of 233 to 4.

For first assistant superintendent the following were nominated: L. F. P. Curry, G. R. Wells, G. S. Trowbridge. G. R. Wells was elected.

For second assistant superintendent L. F. P. Curry and D. J. Krahl were nominated. D. J. Krahl was elected.

For secretary E. D. Moore and M. A. Etzenhouser were nominated. E. D. Moore was elected.

John Smith was unanimously elected treasurer.

Sister E. S. McNichols was unanimously elected home department superintendent.

For member library board Sister T. J. Sheldon and E. H. Fisher were nominated. Sister Sheldon was chosen.

John Smith, R. S. Salyards and Albert Carmichael were sustained as the revising committee.

For member of social purity board R. W. Farrell was chosen.

Vacancies on auditing and lessons committees were referred to the executive committee with power to act.

A vocal sextette was rendered.

A collection was taken up for the Jerusalem Mission, amounting to $123.56.

Minutes read and approved.

The doxology was sung, Daniel Macgregor dismissing.

SUNDAY, APRIL 5.

7.45 A. M.

A prayer meeting was held, John Smith and G. E. Harrington in charge.

9.30 A. M.

A Sunday school session was held, the officers of the local school being in charge.

10.40 A. M.

With W. N. Robinson in charge, number 62 was sung. William Anderson offered prayer. Daniel Macgregor was called to the chair.

Critic's comments on the session of Sunday school just held was read.

A soprano solo was rendered by Sister W. N. Robinson.

D. J. Krahl addressed the convention on "Securing efficiency." He said, The demand of the day is efficiency. To survive man must be efficient. There are two phases to the situation: securing efficiency that the Sunday school itself may be efficient, and securing efficiency for members, teachers, and officers. Everything is possible with God. To secure the things of God we must move Godward. We must move efficiently, with effect. Fundamentally, the greatest problem of the Sunday school is to so live as to be of the greatest benefit to itself, to those around it, and to those who follow after. Do not confuse efficiency with system. Efficiency asks for the facts, regardless of tradition. Efficiency is common sense applied. To be efficient make proper tests, and apply the best. Plan, do not guess.

L. F. P. Curry spoke on "Father of the boy." He said: We often hear boys say, I am going home to see mother. What has the father been doing that his boy does not say, I am going home to see father and mother. Father has been too busy for the boy. There are good fathers and indifferent fathers. F-A-T-H-E-R, if he be a good father, stands for: Friend, adviser, teacher, helper, example, rock. All these the father should be to the boy.

A. N. Hoxie rendered a violin solo.

A. N. Hoxie addressed the convention on "Music; its place and power in the school." He said, in part: Music is an impelling force. Men lean upon music in sorrow, use it as a medium in expressing joy. We need it in the home as an uplifting power. We have it in the church as an inspirational presence. I today can sense a new interpretation of our battle hymn, God is marshaling his army. We should feature more music in the Sunday school department. We should use more music written by and for our people, words and music by inspiration, to help spread the glad gospel message. Our talented workers should be willing to devote one hour each week to some ambitious little soul who could not otherwise receive instruction. In a few years we would have in our services music that would fill our churches. Let the Sunday school lead in this work. We need music with a different ring to that which we ordinarily hear about us. We need consecrated service in our music. Let us couple the power of music with the power of the gospel. When that happy day is here the songs of Zion will have a new meaning. Let us cultivate the gifts given us, then consecrate our powers to the glory of God and the uplift of others.

Number 21 was used to close, R. S. Salyards dismissing.

An overflow meeting was held in the lower auditorium, with F. G. Pitt in charge, short addresses being given.

1 P. M.

A school of methods was held in the same departments as at 2 p. m. the day before.

2.15 P. M.

Sacramental services were held in upper and lower auditorium, in charge of the Independence stake officers.

3.30 P. M.

A round table was conducted in the lower auditorium in charge of Sister M. A. Etzenhouser.

In the upper auditorium, a chorus was rendered by pupils of the intermediate department of the local Sunday school. Samuel Brown offered prayer. W. N. Robinson, in charge, called Daniel Macgregor to the chair.

Three-minute reports were given by those who had been in charge of the departments in the school of methods just held.

Mabel Knipschild read a paper on "The successful teacher." Among other things she said: A few teachers are born, many more are made. Study and preparation are necessary for success. It is needful for the teacher to secure and hold the attention of the pupil. To do this the following is necessary: Knowledge of the subject matter; knowledge of the pupil; ability to teach; a worthy character. The guiding of others to the higher life is the greatest service God can require of us. As teachers, let us prepare for our work by study and the development of character.

An instrumental quintette was executed by members of the local Sunday school orchestra.

John Smith spoke on "An old New England school." Elder Smith said that on March 18, 1866, a Sunday school was organized at Fall River, Massachusetts, the first New England school in the Reorganization, with which he was associated, and which continues to this day. They had no quarterlies. A subject was taken up, such as faith, pupils committed verses of scripture on the subject, and recited them before the school. Characters of the Bible were similarly treated. An effort was made to impress truths and lessons thus upon the pupils. Reference was made to the blessing of a little girl of this school in October, 1866, who, after testifying to the goodness of God, and relating how she had been taught by her parents and in this school to pray exercised under the gift of tongues.

Dismissed by John Smith.

7.30 P. M.

With W. N. Robinson and Daniel Macgregor in charge, number 38 was sung. Prayer by John W. Rushton.

The local Sunday school orchestra rendered two numbers.

Mary Lewis Mesle read a paper prepared by Lucie H. Sears, entitled, "Handwork and home work." This paper recited: It is not enough to know what, it is necessary to know why. Handwork and home work have been introduced into the new Quarterly for this purpose. Every gateway to the mind of the child must be used. The finger-tip gate carries to the brain and from it. What the finger tip can not express the mind does not know. Handwork includes written work, sand table, map work, story telling, clay molding, paper folding, etc., including service to others. Handwork, correlating with the lesson, should be done at home and brought to the class. The teachers' mission is in leading the child to right thinking, for right thinking leads to right living. Handwork and home work are helps to this end.

Sister M. A. Etzenhouser spoke on, "The Adolescent." This period, she said, is the awakening time, the period of budding manhood and womanhood. In this period proper food should be provided. It is a time of sensitiveness. We should have a care how we handle the boys and girls during this age. The home should furnish every attraction to hold the youth at this age. The church, also, should study the child with a view to holding and tiding the youth over this period.

G. R. Wells spoke on "The church and her children." He urged the necessity of child study, the study of good books, under the light of the Spirit. The church has its work with the child, but we need to be careful lest we pass the child over to the church and leave him without home training. The major responsibility for teaching the child rests not upon the Sunday school, not upon the church; it rests upon the parent; God has placed it there. Parents are required under the law to so teach the child that at the age of eight years it will be ready for baptism. The church and the Sunday school come to you to help you in this work. This is why we urge the need of child study.

During the singing of number 94 an additional offering was taken for the Jerusalem Mission.

Paul Craig rendered a baritone solo.

W. W. Smith addressed the convention on "Stopping the leaks": I have observed for many years the terms, department of church work, the nursery of the church, etc. We are coming to a position which entitles us to a more dignified name. We are ready now; if not we will be soon ready to define the Sunday school as the church studying the work. Thus does the Sunday school perform a function of the church. We have the cradle roll, the home department and the regular school, so that we may reach all. The cradle roll should bring all your children and the children of your neighbors in touch with the Sunday school. The teen age is where we have the greatest leakage. We should stop this leakage by a proper study of the child, and by properly ministering in social matters as well as in religious, so as to hold these children.

Number 21 was sung. F. G. Pitt pronounced the benediction, and the convention stood adjourned.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

"The Unthinking Husband."

The Column is in receipt of an article under the above caption, the substance of which we give as follows:

The name of the unthinking husband is legion. Because he has provided shelter, food, and raiment for the mother of his children, he surveys himself with satisfaction and proceeds to leave her to herself while he enjoys his evening paper or some other pastime in which she has no part.

If he is a man who stays at home evenings, he thinks his wife should be very grateful that he is not like other men who go out to club, or to spend his time away from home in other ways.

Should you make a tour of the homes of your community and look in unobserved upon its inmates, in how many instances would you see a man, buried in the easiest chair, reading, dozing, or gazing into space, while his wife, sitting near, while she makes pretense of reading, or sewing, is furtively watching for signs of sociability in the companion who, if he would, could be the very orbit of her happiness. "How many such 'ladies-in-waiting' there are who never set foot in the palace of happiness which their marriage contract promised!"

The man forgets that, for the average woman, happiness in marriage is not founded on shelter, food, or raiment, or even on luxuries, but on the small attentions which the average man ignores. A woman revels in the thought that she is essential to the happiness of her husband. Some husbands dislike to admit that their wives are essential. The husband who tells his wife often how he appreciates the help and comfort she is to him will find her ever ready to make every exertion to continue to minister to his happiness and will find in it her own greatest joy.

"Making love to his own wife is a splendid investment for a man, materially or sentimentally. Yet men give the best of their energies to supplying creature comforts for their wives and the least of their energies to the more profitable task of love making."

It is true there are times when, for business men and women, absolute quiet and relaxation are necessary to mental and physical preservation and afford opportunity to recuperate the forces for the next day's fray. But these instances are comparatively rare. The ordinary reason for a man's wishing to be "let alone" is a selfish desire which, when long indulged, becomes a habit.

Those who study life through unprejudiced eyes and from an impersonal standpoint, admit that the men and women who accomplish big things in business are those who do not permit themselves to live selfishly but enter into the joys as well as the perplexities of those about them. They play at times as lightly and irresponsibly as little children. They hold themselves at other times to the rugged duties of life with strength.

The great are never selfish. He who is great loves. He who is great serves. He is not unmindful of the joys or the sorrows of those about him.

Prayer Union.

SUBJECTS FOR SECOND THURSDAY IN APRIL.

Prayers for the church, its priesthood and members, that all may earnestly engage in the building up of Zion to the ideal condition of oneness and equality revealed in the word of God to the church. Pray that all may exercise love and charity towards each other, neither speaking nor thinking evil of any and regarding each other's reputation as our own. Prayers for the success of the conference.

Lesson, Psalm 87: 1-7; memory verse, Isaiah 14: 32.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

It is due to the earnest efforts of Sister Eleanor Waldorf Kearney that we have the circle known as the Prayer Union, a circle with no organization whatever, its work being purely spiritual. The members of this union observe a stated season of prayer, each in her own home or other place of her choice. Sister Kearney furnishes the suggestive readings and subjects for that hour of prayer and consecrated thought.

Our sister is growing old. Her life has missed many things commonly enjoyed by us, though it has yielded to her that richness which comes as compensation to those who utilize their opportunities to draw deeply from the wells of salvation. She has had joy in contemplation of the great and varied theme of the gospel.

Recently she has sustained the loss of one of her brothers and of an old-time friend, and her only remaining brother lies ill in a distant city.

It would be carrying out the purpose of the circle, should its members uphold Sister Kearney in their prayers, asking our Father to fill her declining days with his peace and that comfort which he has power to administer. She has not sent in this request, but we suggest that she be remembered as an earnest Saint who loves God's work.

WAYNE CITY, ILLINOIS, March 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: When the Saints meet together for prayer, April 5, I desire them to pray for me, that I may be restored to health, if it is the Lord's will. I have not been able to go to church for nearly two years. Please make my desire known to the Saints.

Yours truly,
M. R. BROWN.

Prayers are asked for a brother in Davenport, Iowa, whose name is not given us. He has been trying to live a good life, though he has made mistakes. The Saints are earnestly asked to pray for him, that he may have strength to live above the temptations that assail him and to overcome evil influences by the divine power that may be given him.

The request comes to us from one who signs himself as a brother, but who entreats us to remember the petition.

The Man the Ages Want.

The man who is strong to fight his fight,
And whose will no force can daunt,
While the truth is truth and the right is right,
Is the man the ages want.
He may fail or fall in grim defeat,
But he has not fled the strife;
And the house of earth shall smell more sweet
For the perfume of his life.—Anon.

Ah, well for him who knows when each new goal
Eludes his steps, 'tis only that the soul
To farther goals may speed, and that the eyes
May thus be lifted toward a fairer prize;
Who, called at eve to lay his hopes away,
Knows higher hopes shall come with breaking day.

REPORT OF E. A. BLAKESLEE, COUNSELOR.

EASTERN COLORADO.—Sunday school met in Denver, March 6. A good interest was manifested. All officers were re-elected. Eight schools out of nine reported. Total enrollment of district, 451, including home class members. Mrs. M. E. Everett, secretary, 129 South Logan Street, Denver, Colorado.

Died.

DAVIES.—Sarah Ann Davies was born October 28, 1861, at Troforst, Glamorganshire, South Wales; married Moses Davies, January 19, 1879; baptized May 6, 1894, at Keb, Iowa, by James McKiernan; died near Rockvale, Colorado, March 4, 1914. Services conducted by F. A. Russell; interment in cemetery near Florence, Colorado. Besides being the mother of eleven children, she had so endeared herself to the people of the community that she was everywhere referred to as "Mother Davies," which fact in-itself shows the high esteem in which she was held.

ALEXANDER.—Mary Frances Odom was born December 6, 1855, in Atchison County, Kansas; died March 23, 1914, near Fortescue, Missouri. She married Henderson Alexander. To them were born fourteen children. She was converted to the gospel in the fall of 1913, but owing to poor health could not be baptized. She leaves husband, ten children, twelve grandchildren, two brothers. Interment in Catron Cemetery; invocation by R. K. Ross, and sermon by T. A. Ivie.

TOWER.—William J., son of Brother William and Sister Elizabeth Tower, was born July 3, 1896, at Brinton, Michigan; died at Flint, Michigan, after a few hours' illness. He filled his place at a factory a part of Saturday, and peacefully fell asleep on Sunday, March 9, 1914. He leaves father, mother, grandparents, four sisters, four brothers. Funeral at Flint; sermon by William Collins; interment at Brinton.

RYAN.—Mary Lonetta, daughter of Louis and Mattie Ryan, was born March 25, 1913; died February 4, 1914, of pneumonia. Funeral at the home of Albert Harris, by A. G. Miller; interment in Scarcliff Cemetery, near Scranton, Mississippi.

ROGERS.—Elizabeth Rogers, a faithful Saint, died at the Charity Hospital, Biloxi, Mississippi, January 6, 1914. She leaves husband, one daughter, many relatives and friends. Funeral sermon at Ware Cemetery, by A. G. Miller, where body was interred.

THOMAS.—John B. Thomas was born in Wales in 1841; came with parents to America when eight years old; in 1865 married Sister Jane Morgan, at Mineral Ridge, Ohio. To them were born six children. He served in the Civil War until honorably discharged. He joined the church in 1876; was ordained a deacon in 1880. He lived at Bevier, Missouri, for thirty-four years, where he passed peacefully away, October 27, 1913, leaving companion and four children. Services from Saints' church, by W. B. Richards and F. T. Mussell.

McKEE.—Jane McKee was born near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, August 22, 1824; died March 10, 1914, near Clarksdale, Missouri, being burned to death while fumigating her hen house. She married Thomas McKee March 2, 1843; to them were born fourteen children. She leaves ten children, thirty-five grandchildren, fourteen great-grandchildren; her husband preceded her four years ago. She was a kind mother, and a faithful member of the Dekalb Branch. Funeral in charge of A. W. Head; sermon by T. T. Hinderks.

ROBERTS.—Margaret McMullen was born at Attica, Marion County, Iowa, November 12, 1857; married Jesse Roberts, December 5, 1878. To this union were born two sons and four daughters. She was baptized at Saint Charles, Iowa, September 7, 1902, by C. J. Peters; died at Lamoni, Iowa, March 13, 1914. By her call home to the rest appointed to the people of God the family is equally divided, the mother, one son and two daughters gone on before; the father one son, two daughters, with ten grandchildren and three brothers left to mourn. The funeral was at the residence, March 14, in charge of R. S. Salyards; sermon by R. M. Elvin, from Revelation 14: 15; interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

HOCKNELL.—William Henry Hocknell was born September 2, 1839, at Syracuse, New York; died February 16, 1914, at Vassar, Michigan. He became a member of the church over thirty years ago; he held the office of priest. He served his country in the Civil War. He leaves to mourn, a companion, one son, six daughters, five grandchildren. He was a faithful child of God and was always ready to do his duty. Services at the home, sermon by James Mead.

CHRESTENSEN.—Ethel Louise, second daughter of Charles C. and Lulu Chrestensen, was born December 29, 1908, at Joplin, Missouri, died November 8, 1913, at Joplin, Missouri, after a lingering illness of seven months. Services from Latter Day Saint church in charge of T. W. Chatburn; sermon by J. W. Rushton; interment at Fairview Cemetery.

BALLOU.—Richard Clair Ballou, infant son of Brother S. E. and Sister Alice Ballou was born at Lamoni, July 7, 1912; died March 7, 1914, at the age of twenty months. The funeral was held from the home March 9, John Smith in charge. The sermon was by Elbert A. Smith, from the text, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." The sympathy of the entire community is with the bereaved parents.

HATCH.—Earnest F. Hatch died at North Penobscot, Maine, of pneumonia, March 10, 1914, aged 26 years. He was a believer in the gospel; his father, mother, and one sister were members of the church. He leaves mother, three brothers, two sisters. Services at the home by J. J. Billings.

BADHAM.—Lois Elizabeth Badham, wife of Walter Badham, and daughter of Heman C. and Vida E. Smith, was born in San Bernardino, California, November 3, 1892. She died at Lamoni, Iowa, March 27, 1914. She leaves an infant son, Robert George, for whom she went into the valley of the shadow. Her husband, father, mother, two sisters, and one brother, besides a host of other relatives and friends, mourn her departure. She retained her childhood purity and gentleness, and went over to the other side unmarred by this world; like the Hebrew children, without the smell of fire upon her garments. The funeral was from the church in Lamoni, March 29; sermon by M. M. Turpen; J. F. Garver in charge.

KING.—Augustus King was born April 14, 1843; died February 20, 1914. He was baptized June 9, 1907, by G. W. Bankester, confirmed by J. M. Stubbart and C. J. Clark. He leaves wife, two brothers. Sermon by G. W. Bankester. He lived faithfully and passed away with the hope of a part in the first resurrection.

SHIPPY.—At Independence, Missouri, March 24, 1914, Sister Ervina Shippy, widow of John Shippy, aged 61 years, 26 days. Her first husband was Jason Cover, who died in 1879, in Indiana. She removed to Ringgold County, Iowa, in 1880, and there received and obeyed the gospel in 1882; baptized by E. W. Wildermuth. She married John Shippy in 1906 and cared for him until his death in 1910. Two sons and a daughter survive her. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by John Smith; burial at Lamoni.

A Wonderful News Service.

Have you ever paused to think what a marvelous organization must be necessary to lay before you each day an accurate account of the happenings of yesterday in Europe, Asia, Africa, South America, Australia, the islands of the sea and the whole expanse of our own continent, all in a single newspaper? The intricate network of cables and telegraph lines, the complicated chain of news-gathering agencies stretching across continents and oceans, the innumerable reporters working daily for you under tropic suns and over arctic snows—have you ever felt the romantic thrill of it all in reading a great modern newspaper such as The Chicago Record-Herald? We mention this paper especially because of the completeness of its domestic and foreign news service. It has a correspondent in every town or city of any importance in the United States, a veritable army of them in all. In addition it has the benefit of the foreign news service of the New York Herald, famous for its world-wide cable system and for the reliability of its foreign news; also that of the New York World and the New York Journal of Commerce, besides that of the great cooperative news-gathering organization, the Associated Press. With such a vast and complete news service it is not strange that The Record-Herald so easily holds its own as one of the greatest newspapers in the world.

Book Reviews.

THE INSIDE OF THE CUP.—In the Inside of the Cup, Winston Churchill's latest novel, published by the Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York City, $1.50, Mr. Churchill presents his personal view of twentieth century religion and its solution "so far as I have been able to work one out." In this book the author holds that "Christianity is at fault, is untworn, or else is presented in the wrong way." He sees in the church an institution of inefficiency, in conflict with the new philosophy and historical criticism, unqualified to help the disorders of society and to lift the world from the depths of sin. The limitations of the church as seen by Mr. Churchill were brought about by the submerging of self in the sea of credulity and thought in the terms of the church. Out of this night of submersion the author sees the church rising in an age of materialism and individualism. Mr. Churchill would strip the church of all authority and permit the individual to come directly to God. He discusses marriage and divorce. He repudiates the immaculate conception. The only true God he sees is the God in Christ, which is the Spirit of Christ, and this not by any material proof, but because he recognizes Christ spiritually. He sees coming out of confusion the blending of all sects and of all religion "in the increasing vision of the truth revealed in Jesus Christ, stripped as you say of dogma, of fruitless attempts at rational explanation." Reverend Hodder, the hero of this story is brought from an obscure New England parish into the throbbing life of a growing city in the Central West. He finds the younger members of the new parish grappling with new thought ideas and with suggestions of higher criticism. He finds his church withdrawn from the world and uninterested in the needs of the poor only for the maintaining of a small settlement house. He finds it utterly impotent in the matter of reaching the sin segregated in the city. This minister in his reasoning and work develops the conceptions of Mr. Churchill as indicated in this review. While he drives from his church practically all of the original congregation, he packs it to the doors with individuals from every walk of life, calls back after a long exile the only man who ever seems to have had the true conception of church work, and strikes a responsive chord in the hearts of those who come under his ministrations. This seems to be Mr. Churchill's conception of the work of the church, to bring together and blend in one harmonious whole all humanity, and to lead them onward to the correction of social evil and the elimination of sin.

FIFTY-FOUR YEARS OF CONFLICT.

(Address by President Joseph Smith at the opening of General Conference, April 6, 1914. Reported by Louise Giesch.)

Brother President, fellow officers and delegates; it is with much pleasure and immeasurable gratitude to God that I express myself as privileged once more to stand in the assembly of the people of God.

Fifty-four years ago this morning, an untried religionist, an unschooled philosopher, a but poor converser in my native tongue, I stood with a little band who had borne a portion of the burden of conflict with the Prophet, the Patriarch, and their co-associates in the presentation of a new faith among the multitude of faiths discoursed among men. It was branded as a new faith, yet it bore to these men the indorsement of God through the principle of direct revelation; and acting upon the common sense with which God had endowed them and inspired by the quickening influences of the Spirit which had been conferred upon them by virtue of their having been obedient to the declaration of the gospel of the Son of God, they ventured to present this old and tried faith in the midst of the multitude of conflicting errors which prevail as religions. They fought not against men, they fought not to advance pet theories of their own, but they felt under obligation to God to offer to him a reasonable service, and to adopt and preserve, so far as lay in their power, the strong, conservative spirit of salvation declared unto men.

I could not at that time feel the depth, the height, the breadth, the almost awful sublimity of that which was resident in their breasts towards God for that which had been granted unto them. I shared with them their courage, I shared with them their willingness to bear the obliquity that had been cast upon the people by virtue of that which had come in as a flood, and had almost destroyed the root and branch of that wonderful work begun in 1830.

I had been impressed, by what consideration I was qualified to give and by the indwelling of the Spirit which must have accompanied my baptism and my confirmation under the hands of my father and those associated with him, that the principles of good, that the power of upright and honest conduct before God and men must sooner or later bear great fruit. I was prepared, so far as was practicable for me to be, for that which might come in the conflict.

Few of that little band remain. At our last assembly here I think there were but nine who were present and sat upon the platform with us. Since then, two at least of those who thus sat with us have passed over to the great majority, Sister Elizabeth Blair and Edmund C. Briggs. But, my fellow associates in this gospel economy, have the principles which were then announced and which I have mentioned lost their power with God or their attractiveness to the human mind? I answer confidently, nay. That conservatism which was thus prepared to enter into the conflict has continued unbroken, and you may, if you please, attempt to measure the enjoyments that I feel in standing with you after fifty-four years of that conflict to answer to you as I would have answered to them and to God for the propagation of those imperishable principles which constitute the power of God unto salvation.

I have not now any disposition of mind, I have no feeling within my heart to swerve one iota to the right or to the left from the declaration of the principles then made, and it is with this understanding that I meet you this morning and strike glad hands with everyone of you under a renewal of the bond of our associate fellowship in Christ for the continuation of that great warfare against evil and wrong in the world; against error and unbelief in them who have declared a profession of faith in God and in Christ, and remeasure, again and again with those who choose to meet and disclaim against our presentation of those principles, and to remember, so far as continues to lie with us, the obligation we are still under.

May God, in his infinite mercy, grant that the Spirit of Christ which has from the first watched over the interests of this church continue operative, unspent in its force among its devotees, and continue to spread more widely among those who are inquiring after the faith.

It pleases me to state that the Spirit of God has been with me from time to time, and that under its influence I feel an added source of comfort and consolation in meeting with you again in this fifty-fourth year of my service at its close. How long God may permit me to live, how far he will permit me to retain the possession of my natural faculties, including that dominating power of mind, I know not; and so far as I am concerned, understanding that it lies with him, I have no feeling to complain, I have no feeling of mistrust. I am willing to subscribe now as I have been hitherto unto that massy confession of belief in God, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him."

I feel the assurance this morning that our session is to be, as to its finality, a good one. As to what may transpire during these sessions, I may have some avidity of mind, but if I can but remember, if we all can but remember that we are but servitors together in a common cause, I can feel satisfied, so far as I myself am concerned, and justified so far as all these my associate members are concerned, that it will not be in the service of our private interests, or that our prejudices shall control us in the discharge of our duties; but that the love and fellowship due from those laboring together in a common cause shall still continue to bind us together; and that we shall disregard those things that would seek to disrupt our work and bring it to naught, to sow dissension, disfellowship, and disruption among us from ourselves.

I adjure you, then, in the opening of this session of conference, to consider as a rule safe to obey in principle and in action, to allow to all others, especially to those with whom our labor lies, as honest intention, as upright motive as we ourselves ask to be extended to us. Let us not forget in the application of these principles that we should treat each other with common courtesy and kindness; nay, more, that we may stand within the circle of each other's acquaintance as not only willing but absolutely free to conduct ourselves toward each other under that redeeming qualification.

With added thankfulness to God for the liberty of the occasion accorded me to address you at the opening of this session, I submit our cause into the hands of Him in whose hands rests the destiny of men and of nations.

General Conference.

MONDAY, APRIL 6.

The sixty-first General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints convened in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, at 10 a. m., Monday, April 6. President F. M. Smith called the assembly to order, and announced number 58. Prayer was offered by Bishop E. L. Kelley.

The First Presidency were chosen to preside over the Conference, arrange for the further organization, determine the time, nature and adjournment of meetings, speakers, etc.

President Joseph Smith addressed the conference. (See Editorial Department.)

The following was announced by President F. M. Smith: As secretaries, R. S. Salyards, F. A. Russell and M. H. Siegfried; as stenographers, Sisters O. L. James, Ruth Lewis and W. W. Smith; as choristers, A. N. Hoxie, with Sisters B. M. Anderson and Florence McNichols as assistants; organist, Ralph Smith, with power to choose assistants; credentials committee, Heman C. Smith, J. F. Garver, L. G. Holloway, with R. J. Lambert to act in the absence of H. C. Smith; local deacons as ushers, to choose assistants from visiting deacons; postmaster of the conference, L. H. Haas; press committee, J. F. Garver, Charles Fry, A. M. Chase.

Credentials committee reported. Sister C. H. Lake was by motion added to the delegation from the South Sea Islands. Report was adopted subject to further amendment.

It was moved that alternates regularly appointed be recognized. The motion prevailed.

The First Presidency reported:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 6, 1914.

To the General Conference, Greeting: In the past year the members of the Presidency have continued such activities as they could under existing circumstances. President Joseph Smith has remained in Independence, working, as his health would permit, at his correspondence, editorial work, and memoirs. The second counselor, E. A. Smith, has acted as associate editor of the SAINTS' HERALD and editor of Autumn Leaves, which work has absorbed most of his time and attention, though he has done some correspondence on affairs connected with the Presidency, and visited at two reunions and some conferences, and has carried on considerable correspondence in connection with the Bureau of Publicity. The first counselor and secretary of the quorum was for about nine months of the year in the West, though the work of the office was carried on as best it could be under such conditions. This absence necessitated additional correspondence, but despite the disadvantages, he kept quite closely in touch with the work of the church in its different phases, besides doing some writing for publication. Some of the activities of this quorum will be indicated in other parts of this report.

The secretary of the Presidency has at various times in the past year had correspondence with the State Department at Washington, District of Columbia, and through these efforts has reached the foreign offices of Great Britain and the German Empire relative to our work in those countries. It will be necessary to follow these matters up as the results reached have not been satisfactory so far as the German Empire is concerned, though from the proper authorities we have been informed that in Great Britain there is at present little likelihood of any legislation that will be inimical to our work there.

REPORTS.

It has been the object of the Presidency to formulate and put in active operation a system of reporting whereby the Presidency would be regularly informed as to the conditions existing in the various districts, so that the local work might be kept pretty closely under the general supervision of this quorum. We are pleased to state that the system of reports instituted by us has met with quite general support on the part of the district presidents, and out of a total of seventy districts we have received the last quarterly report from all but four, and these four may be heard from at any moment. In general these reports indicate a rather pleasing activity on the part of the local priesthood, though there are some districts which are not in good shape owing to the indifference or inactivity or lack of supply of the local priesthood.

We are pleased to note that in many of the districts there is a cry for more men for ministerial work, and the opportunities for work greatly exceed the supply of men. In this connection we desire to state that we have felt the necessity for the general appointing powers of the church, namely, the Presidency and Twelve, to select high priests of presiding ability to look after some of the districts which are needing the work of an executive, and to improve the condition in some of the branches where the lack of good spiritual conditions can be attributed almost directly to a lack of proper coordination of the work of the local priesthood. This work of arousing the local priesthood to activity and to regular appointments and a general and persistent interest in the prosecution of the work has in many quarters progressed encouragingly and we feel to urge closer attention to it. In many places, however, the need for pastors is great, and we trust that the developments of the near future will enable us to fill these demands.

Besides the reports from districts, we are receiving reports more or less regularly from practically all the quorums of the church, though these reports are not up to the general standard that we desire to see. However, as greater interest in quorum work becomes developed and as the benefits of quorum activity are becoming more apparent, we find an increasing desire on the part of quorum officers to look after the matter of reporting to the Presidency more carefully. In the matter of reporting to conference, we have, as indicated in the past, been quite insistent in our instructions that quorums organized locally should report to local conferences and should not expect to report to the General Conference, though all quorums should report at regular intervals to the First Presidency. Thus the local conferences, so far as the quorums are concerned, will stand as representatives of the general church in receiving reports from quorums. We desire to commend the activity of the quorum officers who are striving to enhance the value of their quorum meetings, and to urge upon all quorums the holding of regular meetings where properly supervised and carefully worked out programs may tend to the elevation of the spiritual and mental tone of the members of the quorums.

Besides reports from districts and quorum officers, the Presidency has received reports from special officers of the church, general and otherwise, and we desire to state that this matter of reports will receive even more careful attention at the hands of the Presidency, as we desire to keep in close and constant touch with the general officers and the work throughout the world by careful and persistent reports. The reports of the mission presidents have as usual reached you through direct channels.

PUBLICATION OF REPORTS.

It will be remembered that the last General Conference authorized the Presidency and the general Church Secretary to print all reports to conference so far as practicable to do so, previous to the opening of conference. The Presidency desires to express its pleasure at the readiness with which the various officers and committees have responded to our urging that their reports be in our hands in time. These reports have been published and will be placed in the hands of the conference. We have received reports from practically all officers and most of the committees and these reports will be found published.

One report, however, which reached us in time for publication, does not appear, namely, the report of the Physician to the Church, Doctor Joseph Luff. This report reached us, accompanied by a report on the sanitarium made by the house physician to Doctor Luff. The report was held up until too late to appear in printed reports, owing to an attempted adjustment of the question as to whether the report should reach the Presidency and the conference through Doctor Luff or through the Board of Sanitarium Trustees. Therefore his report is presented separately, and will be read to the conference.

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

The Presidency desires to call attention to the paragraph in the report of Graceland College as found on page 25 of the published reports, in which attention is called to the fact that the finances of the college can only be handled satisfactorily in connection with those of the whole church. The time is ripe for conference to determine a definite policy as to the financial support of the college. That institution in our opinion merits a support which will enable it to enter upon its activity without being crippled as it has been in the past by uncertain financial backing, and we hope the conference shall be able to devise some means whereby those in charge of the college may be able to figure with a reasonable degree of definiteness upon the financial support upon which it can depend. The immediate needs of the institution are succinctly set out by the president of the college, and we trust that careful consideration will be given to this question.

GENERAL CHORISTER.

The Presidency is in receipt of a report from the general chorister, Brother Albert N. Hoxie, who was appointed by the Presidency and the appointment ratified by the General Conference. We are pleased to note the general interest which has been awakened in musical circles, and the cooperation of the work of the choristers that has been effected by Brother Hoxie's enthusiastic and efficient work. We are specially pleased to note from his report that a splendid feeling exists among the musicians of the church, and that the spirit of jealousy so often found seems to be at a minimum.

In his report Chorister Hoxie expresses the belief that the time has not yet come for us to consider a musical organization so far as a formal and heavy organization is concerned. The Presidency believes the present organization is quite effective and we suggest that the organization be allowed to remain as it is, namely, that the General Chorister be selected by the Presidency, subject to the approval of the General Conference. Acting on the presumption that such will be the case this year as in the past, we submit the name of Brother

Portions of Brother Hoxie's report to the Presidency will be of sufficient interest to the church to justify their insertion in our report. He says:

"The influence of the choir movement has been quite generally felt throughout the church. The progress and achievement of the various choirs have received recognition in The Staff column, edited once a month by Sister Audentia Anderson, and published in the HERALD. They have been so numerous and interesting as to cause us to be encouraged with the gradual awakening of our people as to their possibilities along musical lines. Sister Anderson is to be commended for her careful and conscientious work.

"From conference time until August 1, I visited Independence, Saint Louis, Omaha, Chicago, Lansing and Flint, Michigan, Toronto, Niagara Falls, and the Eastern Michigan reunion in the interest of the choir movement, gave several concerts, rendered many solos, and spoke in the interests of the movement. In August I was selected to the choristership of the Philadelphia Branch, and organized a choir of fifty voices, whose efforts along the lines of oratorial and concert work have received much commendation from the press and our friends. This choir rendered special programs for about twelve different occasions, and went in a body to the Elks Mills convention, and the Brooklyn, New York, conference, assisted the New York choir in the rendering of the 'Holy City.'

"In addition to my Philadelphia work I have conducted the Brooklyn choir most of the winter. Since last conference I have conducted about one hundred fifty rehearsals, and the last week in December made a special trip West in the interest of the choir movement, putting forth a special effort in Independence and Lamoni.

"I can report very active work in the New York and Philadelphia District, Saint Louis, Omaha, and the Lamoni and Independence stakes. Sister McNichols, E. C. Bell, and Bishop Becker have performed much good work as district choristers. I have interesting reports of labors performed by Paul N. Craig in Council Bluffs and Omaha.

"We published our yearly series of anthems in August, and by the first of the year the entire edition was sold.

"We are encouraging the cause of music in the church, and the consecration of talents to the service, and the splendid results in increased activities assure us that the inauguration of the choir movement was a timely step. We are looking for a splendid demonstration of the results of our year's work, and every indication points toward a big gathering of musicians at conference.

"It has been a great pleasure for me to serve the Master in this way."

PEACE CONGRESS DELEGATES.

On the 14th of April, 1913, at the last General Conference, the secretary of the Presidency presented to the conference a matter touching the appointment of delegates to the Fourth National Peace Congress. By motion, the Presidency was authorized to appoint delegates to this congress. Subsequently the Presidency appointed as such delegates Elders F. M. Sheehy, J. W. Rushton, T. J. Elliott, and Russell Archibald. No formal report has been submitted to the Presidency by these delegates, though two of the members, namely, Brethren Sheehy and Rushton, have verbally reported to the secretary of the Presidency concerning their attendance at this congress. We feel that the movement was well advised and that the Presidency should be authorized to appoint delegates to conventions of this character when in their judgment attendance thereat would be advantageous to us as a body.

COMMITTEE ON TRACTS.

For some years there has been carried on the minutes of the church a committee known as the committee on tracts, and inasmuch as this committee has been the First Presidency we do not see the advisability of carrying this longer as a committee, but that such work as has been done by this committee as such be referred to the First Presidency as a function of their routine duties. That is to say we deem it unnecessary to longer recognize this as being a specific committee. The committee therefore, in our opinion, may be abolished and the work recognized as a part of the routine of the Presidency's office.

ORGANIZATION OF QUORUMS.

Some few years ago on the suggestion of the Presidency there was referred to the joint council of Presidency, Twelve and Bishopric the matter of reorganizing quorums with respect to locality. This committee, after taking the matter under advisement, referred the matter to the Presidency for action favoring the reorganization suggested by the Presidency. The Presidency in turn turned the work over to the secretary of that quorum, and the work has been prosecuted as advantageously as appeared practicable under conditions existing. We have heretofore reported on various quorums organized and are pleased to see that the results following the reorganization have justified the anticipations of the Presidency to a large extent, though there is still much to be done in this direction. In the past year the following quorums have been organized:

Saint Louis Quorum of Elders, (Saint Louis District, Central and Southeastern Illinois districts), organized September 28, 1913, by J. W. Rushton. Ohio Quorum of Elders (Ohio, Southern Indiana and Kentucky), organized February 22, 1914, by R. C. Russell. Saint Louis Quorum of Priests, (Saint Louis, Central and Southeastern Illinois districts), organized September 28, 1913, by J. W. Rushton. Saint Louis Quorum of Teachers (Saint Louis, Central and Southeastern Illinois districts), organized September 28, 1913, by J. W. Rushton.

We feel that there is no necessity for a committee being continued on this matter, as the work has developed and is organized to such an extent that further developments can well be left to the direction of the Presidency as part of the routine of that office, leaving them free to suggest organization of new quorums as the demand seems to exist, referring the matter of organizing in specific localities either to the members of the Quorum of Twelve direct, or to such local officers, such as stake presidency, etc., as in the judgment of the Presidency are qualified to effect the organizations demanded. We therefore recommend that the matter of further organization be left to the Presidency, and the committee as formerly constituted be considered as discharged and that the minutes so show.

ON THE WHOLE.

The general outlook is encouraging. The reports coming to this office indicate an awakening in many places. So while storm clouds appear to threaten disturbance of the waters, yet the appearance of the sun in other places gives promise of better things. Such disturbing causes as exist can with brotherly and saintly cooperation, under divine guidance, be sooner or later eliminated, we feel sure. Let us grow together under the peaceful, gentle, but advancing influence of the Holy Spirit and saintly fraternity.

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Church Physician, Joseph Luff, reported:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 1, 1914.

To the General Conference: Inclosed you will find report of year's work in the Sanitarium as submitted to me by the house physician. Personally, I have done no work in the Sanitarium except to visit parties there on two occasions, by special request.

Have, however, been actively engaged in my duties outside, and attended to all cases that have appealed to me and which could be treated in my office or by mail. The results, so far as I have been able to judge, have been up to the expectation of the average physician at least. My health has been, on the whole, better than the former year, but not what might be called good.

My paramount desire and ambition is to act in the place and way that will be most pleasing to God, and the appointment I leave entirely to him, only asking that he will give me the assurance with confidence and courage, intelligently, knowing that I am in cooperation with him.

In gospel bonds,

JOSEPH LUFF.

The Library Commission reported as indicated in the report of the Religio Convention.

The following were appointed as a committee on boundary lines: R. S. Salyards, C. I. Carpenter, J. F. Garver, O. W. Newton, D. J. Krahl.

The following, submitted by the Minnesota District, was read and by motion referred to the joint council of First Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric:

Inasmuch as the law provides that the elders should render an account of their stewardships unto the church and should pay for that which they have received, inasmuch as they have wherewith to pay; and should lay all things before the bishop that they may be accounted faithful laborers (see Doctrine and Covenants 72); and inasmuch as the Lord in the late revelation has counseled a greater regard for economy both in private and public expenditures and the repression of unnecessary wants; and inasmuch as the poor of the church are now struggling under the burdens that rest upon them because of the condition by which they are surrounded in the world, and also the demands upon them in caring for the present needs of the church and in discharging the accumulated debt of the church; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the Saints of the Minnesota District in conference assembled, do respectfully and earnestly petition the General Conference and the appointing powers to take action regarding,

(1) That ministers to be eligible to appointment as missionaries shall be required to lay all things before the Bishop, or in other words to make an inventory of their financial status for the use of the Bishop and the appointing authorities.

(2) That in the interests of economy and justice, that the burden now resting upon the tithing poor of the church may be lightened and the indebtedness of the church more readily discharged, and the recurrence of similar indebtedness avoided in the future, hereafter family allowances be paid only to those missionaries' families whose inventories show that they are actually in need of assistance from the church, (see Doctrine and Covenants 75:4), and that those who have sufficient for their needs be permitted to go self-sustaining (see Doctrine and Covenants 75:5), to the end that the means obtained by the sacrifices of those who are poor and needy may not be used for the benefit of those who have no need.

The following was read:

Action of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric touching the communication from President Joseph Smith pertaining to the Sanitarium, which was referred to the joint council by the last General Conference.

After comparison of the document with the articles of incorporation of the Sanitarium, we find that the document could not be adopted without a modification of the articles. The articles of incorporation make it the duties of the trustees to provide for a board of physicians and regulate and direct the management and business of the Sanitarium; and provide further that such rules and regulations shall be in harmony with the articles of incorporation. Article 9 of the articles of incorporation reads as follows:

"Article 9. Duties of Trustees.—The trustees by a two thirds majority vote at any regular or special meeting shall have power to enact measures, make by-laws, and provide for a board of physicians and regulate and direct the management and business of the said Sanitarium, providing always that such rules and regulations shall be in harmony with these articles of incorporation."

We suggest and recommend the following procedure:

(1) The Board of Trustees of the Sanitarium shall be elected or sustained by the annual or General Conference, authorized to nominate direct, unless it shall choose to refer such nominations to a committee or to quorum or quorums of the church.

(2) The physicians to be selected and appointed by the Board of Trustees as at present provided for in the articles of incorporation, after due consultation with the physician in charge.

Respectfully submitted,

F. M. SMITH.

J. W. RUSHTON.

Number 214 was sung, W. E. Peak dismissing.

At 2 p. m., President F. M. Smith in charge, announced number 13. J. W. Rushton lead in prayer.

Sister Belle James being unable to serve as stenographer, Russell Archibald was appointed.

The matter submitted by the First Presidency, Twelve and Bishopric relative to the Sanitarium, was by motion ordered published for distribution and made the special order for Thursday at 3 o'clock.

Credentials committee submitted supplemental report, which was approved.

The report of Church Secretary R. S. Salyards, detailing office work, was received.

The report of Church Recorder C. I. Carpenter included the following:

Our last year's total membership was 68,211, to which we have added 3,670 by baptism, and 2,137 by letters of transfer, while we have sustained a loss of 1,670 by letters of transfer, 89 by expulsion, and 656 by death, leaving us a net gain of 3,491 and a present membership of 71,702; of this total, 60,505 are in the United States, while 11,197 are in other lands.

There were 384 ordinations, 560 marriages, and 1,381 children blessed, while the reports show 4,895 men or 6.82 per cent of the total membership holding the various orders of the priesthood, and 28,673 members, or 39.98 per cent of the total membership are reported as absent from branch organizations.

Of those baptized about 65 per cent were by missionaries, and 35 per cent by the local ministry; 36 per cent were males, and 64 per cent females; and 36 per cent were under fifteen years of age. . . .

As compared with other years the baptisms and net gain are the largest ever reported as the work of any one year, but to be more explicit we note that the report of 1891 showed a total of 25,368; for a period of ten years following this the annual averages were, baptisms 2,368, expulsions 150, deaths 391, net gain 1,987, making an average increase of 5.75 per cent, with an average of 212 missionaries in the field. The report of 1901 showed a total membership of 45,381, and the averages for the ten years following were, baptisms 2,433, expulsions 132, deaths 544, net gain 1,708, making an increase of 3.22 per cent, with an average of 309 missionaries in the field. As compared with these two ten year periods the present report shows for the year 1913, baptisms 3,670, expulsions 89, deaths 656, net gain 3,491, making an increase of 5.11 per cent, with 347 missionaries in the field.

Missouri led in the matter of baptisms with 590, Canada following with 437, and Iowa with 371. Missouri also leads in total membership, with 11,305; Iowa has 10,041, Michigan 6,100. During the year 25 new branches had been organized.

Church Historian Heman C. Smith reported missionary work vigorously prosecuted. This report contained among other items:

PRESS AND PULPIT.

These agencies have been very active in the past year in opposition to the work, but some notable instances have occurred where men and periodicals of influence have spoken in our defense and in corrections of misrepresentation. The historical periodicals have almost universally been honorable and just in treating upon our history. Several of these exchange with the Journal of History and are very courteous and fair.

INDIANS.

These people are making some significant movements for the betterment of their race, among which is the organization of "The Society of American Indians" in which all Indians are eligible to membership without reference to tribal relations. The motto of the society is: "The honor of the race and the good of the country shall be paramount." During the year they have issued from Washington, District of Columbia, a magazine of great merit entitled: "The Quarterly Journal of the Society of American Indians."

LOCAL WORK.

We desire again to recognize the excellent service to this department of many of our local representatives, who without hope of financial remuneration have devoted themselves to the service of preserving history.

OFFICE WORK.

We can not in the short space of a report enter into the details of the work of the office. We have been kept busy and have been prevented from entering into some of the many avenues of usefulness on account of lack of time. Much correspondence has been carried on with publishing houses and authors with a view of correcting misleading and vicious publications. In some instances we have met with courteous treatment and fair promises of desirable results, and in some instances the results have materialized. We have succeeded in getting a very fair historical sketch in the third volume of the History of Nebraska, by Albert Watkins, Ph. B., LL. B. Some have treated us with contempt, but these are not among the more respectable class of writers.

The Journal of History still remains a strong factor in reaching the influential class of writers and publishers. The first of June, Sister Vida Inez Smith severed her connection with this office, and hence her valuable service in research work has been lost to the department, but we have secured the service of Brother Rupert A. Wight, who is making excellent promise of a valuable assistant in the Historical Department.

The Order of Evangelists reported twenty-three active members. They had lost two by death: E. C. Briggs and Nelson Van Fleet. This report contained the following paragraph:

During the year there has been considerable activity upon the part of the members of the order, along what may be known as the evangelical line, and many services have been held in branches as revival meetings, which have been conducive of much good among the membership. Some of these meetings have been well attended by outsiders and a number of them have been brought into the church. The evangelical feature of the work is increasing and, as we believe, becoming better recognized and appreciated, believing as we do that this is our first and primary work in connection with counseling and advising, as the revelation provides, it will make its influence felt for good in the church when it has become more fully recognized and appreciated, and we are satisfied that a work will be accomplished that will produce excellent results. It will relieve the missionary staff of much of this kind of work which they have had to do in times past and will enable them to push their work more energetically in the new fields, and at the same time the branches can be encouraged and strengthened and the work built up and revived from time to time through the work of this order, as the Lord has designated and the benefits and results intended by the Lord in giving this will not only be realized by the church but also fully appreciated.

Graceland College Trustees reported the need of extension work, to supply demands from those who are not in a position to attend the college, yet who could take work by correspondence. It was held that the college should be made an instrumentality by the whole church in educational work. With reference to the matter of credits, it was stated that students graduating from the preparatory department are accepted without question at the larger universities, and without examination; and that graduates from the college were accepted without question for advanced work. The report included:

VESPER SERVICE.

Further, beginning in December, one Sunday evening a month, a special vesper service is being held at 4.30 p. m. in the college chapel. It is the aim to make this vesper service deeply devotional, and to leave, for the Thursday morning chapel talk, scientific discussion.

STUDY HOUR.

Two Sunday afternoons a month are devoted to study hour, in which the lessons taken in the Bible study, the lectures delivered in chapel, and the vesper service are open for discussion and pertinent questions. There have been, as heretofore, various promiscuous addresses by visitors which have generally been of a high character, and will be more fully set forth in the college bulletin or catalogue. But a distinct effort is being made to plan chapel talks by members of the faculty, having a definite purpose or end in view, and so making them distinctively educational. This should be continued and strengthened next year.

The regular short chapel period has been observed with a reading of scripture, song and prayer, and such announcements as are of general interest. This is also a period of brief devotion in the midst of a busy day. . . .

STUDIO DEPARTMENTS.

In the departments of music and oratory no changes were made until the fall of the year, at which time an engagement was made with Miss Enid Alexander, of Leon, Iowa, to teach a class in violin. . . . Since we were able to use rooms already rented, and our only expense was our engagement with Miss Alexander, the venture has so far more than paid its way, in addition to giving us an added interest and ally. . . .

FINANCES.

We respectfully represent that the finances of the college can only be properly handled in connection with the finances of the whole church, and consideration given to every department. This end may largely be met through an annual budget, and when fully undertaken, the college should be run within the limits laid down by the body, the debt met, reduced, paid off, and when paid, kept paid, and additional expenditure made only with the consent of the body. There should be economy in collection as well as in expenditure. But under existing circumstances, it is an open question if there is any other alternative than for the college Board of Trustees aggressively to push efforts for the securing of means.

To succeed Daniel Anderson as member of the college Board of Trustees G. R. Wells, D. F. Lambert, R. M. Elvin and Daniel Anderson were nominated. G. R. Wells receiving 277 votes, all others 15, he was declared elected. To succeed himself Albert Carmichael was the unanimous choice, receiving 303 votes.

It was moved that that paragraph in the report of the Trustees of Graceland College having reference to an annual budget, and referred to in the report of the First Presidency, be adopted.

A motion to defer action until the budget provided for by the conference of last year and to be furnished by the Presiding Bishopric be filed with the conference, prevailed.

Number 216 was sung and President E. A. Smith pronounced the benediction.

At 7.30 p. m. A. C. Barmore was the speaker, assisted by E. F. Robertson.

TUESDAY, APRIL 7.

The First Presidency had announced that arrangements had been made for a series of lectures to occur each morning at 8 o'clock for the benefit of the brethren of the Melchisedec priesthood and the priests of the Aaronic priesthood, to be conducted by W. W. Smith on the subject of homiletics, and by S. A. Burgess on comparative religions, these brethren to alternate. At the appointed hour a large assembly came together in the lower auditorium, when W. W. Smith delivered his first lecture, Presidents F. M. Smith and E. A. Smith in charge.

The prayer meeting at 9 o'clock was in charge of O. Salisbury and D. C. White.

The speaker at 10.45 was O. R. Miller, assisted by J. D. Curtis.

At 2 p. m. the assembly was called to order by President F. M. Smith. After the singing of number 97, F. M. Sheehy offered prayer.

Minutes read and approved.

The report of the Board of Trustees of the Sanitarium as received, included the following:

That the prosperity of the Sanitarium last year exceeded any other year of its existence. There were 313 admissions, an increase over the previous year of 144. The earnings from patients were $16,750.89, an increase of $7,953.81. That although there was a large increase in attendance, there were fewer deaths. . . .

For the training of pupil nurses, it was found necessary to employ an instructor at $50 per month in addition to board and room, who, from reports given us, has proven a very successful teacher. Several needed improvements are asked for by the business manager, Doctor Messenger; that of an enlargement of the operating room, and a pathological laboratory. The building is quite well filled with patients, so much of an increase has been had in attendance of patients there, that provisions were made for the occupancy of the place close to the Sanitarium, known as Kensington Place, which has been partly utilized for accommodating the nurses. It is stated by the physician in charge that if the business of the institution increases as rapidly as in the past year, that it will be necessary to seriously consider the enlargement of the building.

Doctor Messenger tells us that if the regular rates were paid for those who are cared for by the church that the institution would show a gain instead of a loss. Last year the Sanitarium gave the needy sick, $3,898.42. The Bishopric gave a like amount, while the donations received only amounted to $670.20. The increase of the number of nurses, adding a teacher of nurses to the institution, and the payment of $700 for special nurses, contributed to lessen the gains. With some needed changes being made, it is expected that the expenditures of the institution will be considerably reduced. . . .

An additional organization of the sisters in the church in behalf of the Sanitarium has been brought into being, and known as the Patroness Society. This society was organized November 20, 1910, with the following officers: Mrs. E. L. Kelley, president; Mrs. Joseph Mather, vice president; Miss Della Criley, secretary; Mrs. Jesse Roberts, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Edward Rannie, treasurer. The purpose of this organization is to act as auxiliary to the Sanitarium Board, to develop public interest in the institution by organized effort to direct sympathy, and help financial and otherwise, and to use whatever means are in their power to advance the well-being of the Sanitarium.

Since the last report, six children have been placed in private homes, twelve returned to friends, four dismissed for other causes, one removed by death, twenty-three have entered, leaving the present number in the home, at this date, twenty-nine.

At a meeting held January 22, 1914, Articles of Incorporation were adopted in accordance with a resolution of General Conference of 1912.

The corporation began its existence February 10, 1914.

A continued encouragement has been received from many of the Saints and from many of those outside of the church by their freely giving in different ways to help maintain the institution in caring for the many innocent but unfortunate children who have entered the home.

H. C. Smith was nominated to succeed himself as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Children's Home, and was the unanimous choice.

Report of committee in charge of the Saints' and Liberty homes for the aged, at Lamoni, Iowa, was received, showing the number cared for during the year to be 59.

Reporting other matters, the Board of Publication included:

During the past year our plant has been very busily engaged in putting out various publications of the church. Of the weekly publications we put out about 7,000 HERALDS, 8,000 Stepping Stones, and 4,000 Hopes. Our monthly publication, the Autumn Leaves, has a subscription list of about 4,400. The Journal of History, published quarterly, has a subscription of about 1,200. The latter publication needs better support to make it pay.

Besides the publishing of these papers we have put out the Sunday school Quarterlies and Exponent, also the Religio Quarterlies for part of the year.

The Stepping Stones is a new venture, having been started about July 1. Numerous letters from Sunday school workers made us believe that there was a need for a Sunday school paper for our boys and girls in their teens. Many letters of commendation from various Sunday school workers, and the size of the subscription list, proves that this paper is filling the need.

In reporting on the Ensign Publishing House, W. H. Deam said:

As most all recognize, the Ensign has been a great power for good in making converts and building up those already in the faith. Besides the elders' families, it goes free to many who are too poor to pay for it, and goes to something like one thousand nonmembers at half price, in all about six thousand, being over a thousand less than at one time about four years ago. . . .

By the installation of an improved typesetting machine the first of the present year, the efficiency of the office is not only greatly enhanced, but a great boon in bringing to it work from outside that is and will strain the capacity of the office to handle. . . .

Some may not know that the Ensign Office has paid for itself without costing the church a cent directly or indirectly, and not a cent donation from any source.

The committee on concordance to the Book of Mormon reported that they had been unable to do anything further in the preparation of such work. The committee was by motion continued.

Credentials committee reported, same being approved.

It was moved that the action of the Board of Trustees of the Independence Sanitarium in appointing J. L. Gray to succeed B. J. Scott, resigned, be approved, and the board continued.

Moved as a substitute that the selection of this board be left to the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric and Quorum of Twelve, together with the Church Physician, to suggest nominations to be ratified by the body.

The substitute was lost. The original motion prevailed.

The committee appointed to meet with a committee of the Church of Christ reported that there had been no occasion for a joint meeting. The committee was continued.

The committee on compilation of General Conference resolutions reported that resolutions had been compiled to date, indexed, and referred to the Board of Publication to be published. The committee was continued, instructed to amend the resolutions by the elimination of obsolete matter, Heman C. Smith being added to the committee.

Committee on library building reported they had under advisement a plan contemplating the construction of a building, student labor to be employed in the construction thereof. The committee was continued.

The committee on a monument to the Martyrs included in their report:

It was decided to erect a first-class iron fence around the east half of block 155, where the graves are located, and also to build a retaining wall along the water front of this property. Bishop Kelley invited other members of the committee to counsel with him regarding the protection of the Nauvoo House property, and the committee decided to recommend the erection of a retaining wall along the water front of block 156, so far as needed.

The same day, in the afternoon, the committee met at Montrose, Iowa. The mayor of Nauvoo, through Elder Lambert of the committee, presented a proposition for the establishing of a boat landing at the foot of Main Street. The committee by resolution authorized Elder Lambert to inform the mayor that the committee would look with disfavor upon the proposition, but would be glad to consider a proposition for a landing one block east of Main Street. The committee by resolution appointed Elder George P. Lambert to supervise the improvements decided upon, with power to act.

A motion to continue the committee prevailed.

The committee on revision of church history reported:

Your committee . . . held twelve sessions, from May 20 to 27, 1913, six of which were devoted to examination of manuscript of the Juvenile Church History, and six to examination of manuscript of the fifth volume of the History of the Church.

Among other actions of the committee the following are reported:

That the Juvenile History be published in twelve point type.

That all documentary notes be referred to as citations or entered as footnotes in smaller type, to be determined by the committee.

That the title be, "Juvenile History of the True Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints"; written by Mrs. Vida E. Smith, granddaughter of Joseph Smith the Seer; published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The Social Purity Board reported in part as follows:

The past year has seen but little public activity on the part of our board, for the reason that we have sought through careful study and research to reach a successful analysis of the problems we desire to solve. The lack of agreement among leading educators of to-day concerning both method and policy in dealing with the perplexing problems of immorality and impurity warrants us in moving forward with caution.

We are convinced that the most fruitful field for educational development is among the present home builders and the coming fathers and mothers of the next generation. A certain amount of warning may be necessary, that serious evils and pitfalls may be avoided, but, more, we need right living among parents, right preaching on the part of the ministry, intelligent parental instruction of the young, proper supervision of, and provision for, wholesome, legitimate, and educational recreation for our young people of all ages; a simple, nutritious diet, and the spirit of the restored gospel put into practical daily application. It is the power of the Holy Spirit, enlightening, directing, and strengthening the body, that may enable the Saints to occupy as the children of God. The gospel of Jesus Christ, intelligently and consistently lived, stands paramount as the most effectual moral prophylaxis.

From among publications by men, dealing with the thought and problems of the age, we are selecting a limited number which may be indorsed and recommended by our board and by other official bodies of the church organizations and then placed within the reach of the membership at large. These books shall be the best that can be obtained until similar works are produced under the influence of the gospel.

J. F. Garver was continued on this board to succeed himself.

An appropriation of $50 asked for by the Social Purity Board was allowed.

Ministerial reports from ministers in charge were submitted by P. M. Hanson, Eastern Mission; F. M. Sheehy and J. E. Kelley, Pacific Coast; W. H. Greenwood, British Isles; H. N. Hansen, Scandinavia and Germany; C. A. Butterworth and G. T. Griffiths, Australian Mission; J. Charles May, South Sea Islands.

A motion to provide a boat for use of missionaries in the South Sea Island Mission was referred to the First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric with power to act.

Report of U. W. Greene, in charge of Palestine Mission, was submitted.

Request in the report of U. W. Greene for special help for the prosecution of the work in the Palestine Mission was referred to the First Presidency, Twelve, Presiding Bishopric, and the Order of Bishops.

Number 98 was sung. J. W. Wight dismissed.

At 7.45 a program was given under the auspices of Graceland College.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8.

At 8 a. m. S. A. Burgess delivered his first lecture on comparative religions, President F. M. Smith in charge.

At 9 o'clock the prayer meeting was in charge of J. C. Chrestensen and M. M. Turpen.

The preaching at 10.45 was by Samuel Brown, assisted by D. E. Tucker.

At 10.30 the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service conducted a conference of the sewing and aid and literary and educational departments.

President F. M. Smith announced number 179 at 2 p. m. Following this hymn, Bishop Richard Bullard offered prayer.

Minutes were read, corrected and approved.

Additional report of credentials committee was adopted.

Reports were received from the following in charge: W. M. Aylor, Southern Mission; James A. Gillen, Mission number 1; J. W. Rushton, Missouri, Kansas, Central and Southeastern Illinois; Peter Anderson, Rocky Mountain Mission; J. F. Curtis, mission number 11; R. C. Russell, mission number 4.

The Board of Auditors reported:

To the General Conference: The board appointed to audit the accounts of the various institutions of the church have completed their work except the accounts of Graceland College which are not ready for auditing at the time we are required to make this report. We have checked the books and accounts of the office of the Presiding Bishop, the Herald Publishing House, the Ensign Publishing House, the Independence Sanitarium, the Children's Home, and the accounts of the various homes for the aged, and the Kirtland Hotel, as appearing in the office of the Presiding Bishop, and have verified same with the various published statements, finding same to be in agreement.

We have been kindly treated and aided in our work by all of whom we have asked assistance.

We have made a special report to the joint council of the First Presidency and Twelve touching the various church institutions with a special reference to the administration of affairs in the office of the Presiding Bishop.

Respectfully submitted,

G. W. BLAIR.

J. F. GARVER.

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 27, 1914.

It was moved that the report be approved.

It was moved that the special report referred to in the report of the auditors as having been made to the joint council of First Presidency and Twelve be read before the conference.

Moved to defer action on the report of the auditors until Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock when it was to be made the special order.

The motion to defer was lost. The motion that the special report to the joint council be read to the body was lost. The motion to adopt the report of the board of auditors prevailed.

The General Sunday School Association reported. A supplemental report was presented for the Sunday School Association by W. N. Robinson, stating, among other things, that the Association had taken steps to provide that one of the First Presidency and one of the Twelve be associated with the executive committee of the Sunday School in an advisory way. The action of the association was approved, and the appointment of such members was left to said quorums respectively.

The Zion's Religio-Literary Society reported. Supplemental report was submitted for the Religio by J. A. Gunsolley.

The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service reported:

The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service report 69 active locals, 7 district organizations containing 29 locals, and an approximate membership of 1,651. The six departments of the organizations have been conducted as heretofore. . . . Our increase this year has been 3 district organizations, 32 locals, and 429 in membership. The new districts are Massachusetts District, Eastern Michigan District, and Saint Louis District. . . . Four locals have either disorganized, or are not holding meetings. . . . We have 28 field workers who have visited or corresponded with 53 branches. Number of locals organized, 19; number of reports from field workers, 13. . . .

The organization has endeavored to provide for its mothers' meetings a study of fundamental principles of child development, suggestions in courses of reading and study for the literary inclined, rules and directions for wholesome cookery in the home, suggestive ways and means for raising money for church purposes, a list of books for those who wish to study race-culture, and for the young women of the church, a study in simple Christian service that may be daily rendered.

The Presiding Bishopric reported:

To the Presidency and Members of the Conference; Greeting: The work of the Bishopric the conference year just past has in many ways been specially blessed under the divine hand, and whatever may be said of the indifference, lack of earnestness or unfounded criticisms on the part of a few who should have been faithful laborers with the Master in his cause, the fact remains that generally speaking no previous year has witnessed the universal interest on the part of the Saints in the financial work as that manifested during the one just closed.

The demands upon this arm of the service have also been greater than any previous year. To meet the heavy expense attaching to foreign and home missions; furnish aid for the sick, poor and needy; sustain the general and special work of building and improvements, and many others, have required the hearty volunteer help and service of the laborers, whatever the calling, in the interest of the gospel work in home and foreign fields.

It will be noticed upon examining the financial statement herewith submitted that the receipts the past year exceed those of any previous year in the sum of $32,235.87, the total for the year reaching the sum of $560,611.30. The expenditures including the amount on church debt fund aggregate $514,873.30. The amount of church debt fund paid in to January 10, $23,166.44.

This, notwithstanding the fact that there has been a depression in financial lines in many parts of the country, shows true growth and development in the financial work for the year 1913.

During the year past Bishop E. A. Blakeslee, counselor, has devoted what time he could in the interest of the work, and local bishops and agents have generally performed excellent work in their respective fields, the full account of each appearing in the full financial report submitted for publication.

There is urgent request for help the present year in arranging the mission work in Jerusalem and other cities of Palestine, which merits immediate attention. The financial condition of the work in the British Isles Mission is much improved and Bishop R. May reports confidence in further advancement the present conference year.

In the Scandinavian and German Mission field there must be had ample financial support the present year, as in the past, to overcome the many difficulties to be met by the missionary in his work, but the outlook is brighter for this than at any time in the past.

The bishop for Australia, Brother George Lewis, sets forth the financial work in that country to be in an improved condition, and the Saints in that far-off country as also other foreign countries have manifested their full interest in the gospel work by the late remittances received of their portion of the special debt fund.

The conditions of the Society Islands Mission and also the work in the Sandwich Islands indicate a need for some help in a financial way during the year, which must be met from the general fund, but we do not anticipate any great difficulty in meeting these demands.

As per suggestions of the past General Conference we respectfully call your attention to the condition of Graceland College, the financial report of which has already been presented by the president and college board. Graceland College has been unfortunate in the last few years in having to provide for its work just the things that its patrons and the church membership, who were acquainted with its work, were demanding. An agricultural department was deemed necessary (and properly, too, as we think) and land was purchased to enter upon this department of the work. Dormitories were absolutely necessary to the proper running of the institution and the college board proceeded to erect the same. New building for heating plant was necessary, as also a new plant, and these must be had or the college stop, so this was erected and a proper heating plant secured.

All of these required large extra expense. The college day was set apart in the church to raise funds to meet the expenses necessary to the running of the institution. While the expenses necessary to the running of the institution have mostly been met by the college day collection, yet not sufficient collections have been made to meet the outlay of funds to secure the necessary grounds and buildings demanded for successful running of the college, and the college at the present time shows an indebtedness of a little more than $30,000 that must be provided for. I know of no member of this body or the church who takes the ground that these furnishings for the college were not to the best educational advantage, but the objection seems to be that a debt was created in performing the work. I know of no party who claims that the debt was created by reason of the loss of funds, but by reason of placing funds to what was deemed a necessary use. In this consideration of the case it occurs to me there can be but one true way to settle the question, that is, to move forward and arrange for the payment of the debt.

This has been fully realized by the Bishopric for the past year, and it has been our determination that when the church debt fund that was called for was paid in, that from $15,000 to $20,000 of the same would be devoted to the extinguishing of this college debt fund, the Bishopric believing that the $75,000 called for would be sufficient so that the college debt fund could be handled in connection with its work. It is for this reason that the church has not expected to call for either interest or principal upon the $4,000 college indebtedness which it carries.

To the mind of the Presiding Bishopric it will cost far more to cease the running of the college than to carry it on. True economy is on the side of running the institution. No one can justly take the position that Saints and friends shall not educate their children, and in a proper way. If we stop our educational institution much more money is required to send the children to other institutions of learning than to provide for them at our own. This was effectually shown by the amount of money expended by those who availed themselves of the privileges of other institutions before Graceland College was opened, even by the few who were given such privileges; but there were very few children of the Saints who received these educational advantages prior to the opening of Graceland College in comparison to those who have been supplied since.

In the view of the Bishopric, as a financial venture the church is benefited instead of injured by running the college. And then when we compare the advantages of moral life and culture in behalf of the children who must be sent to an institution of the kind for educational advantages, it removes the question of what shall be done with the college beyond reasonable discussion.

In addition to looking after the indebtedness, which we have referred to, the budget of running expenses of the college for the year is as follows:

For salary of fourteen instructors and helpers .....	$8,000
For fuel for all buildings .....	1,100
Expense, water, light and machinery .....	600
Insurance .....	125
Upkeep of library .....	250
Advertising college work and properly presenting the institution .....	200
Bookkeeper .....	200
Stenographers .....	400
Making a total of .....	$10,875

These are the amounts which have been fixed in consideration of the budget with the president of the college, and adding an item of $125 for unforeseen expenses, which will likely arise, we present to you as necessary to the running of the college for the ensuing year the amount of $11,000. From $2,500 to $3,500 of this may be calculated upon as tuition received from students. About the same amount can be relied upon from the college day offering, making a total of about $6,500. The remainder, $4,500, would be required from the church, unless by the increase of students in the college and the increase of the college day collection this remainder of $4,500 shall be provided for.

The past few years the question has been urged upon the Bishop of the church to issue to brethren desiring to conform fully to the rules of the law, certificates of stewardship. We have not thought it would be wisdom or proper for the Bishop to issue certificates of this nature unless duly authorized by the body, believing that all things of such special undertaking as that should be begun under the rule of common consent in the body. It is the opinion of the Presiding Bishopric that this work may be entered upon if the body is of the same mind and sees fit to instruct the Presidency and Bishopric to enter upon the administration of this part of the law.

We submit herewith itemized financial report of the business of the church for the year just past.

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 8, 1914.

Financial report of the Bishopric was submitted.

It was moved to adopt the report of the Bishopric, together with the recommendations contained therein.

A motion prevailed that these recommendations be taken up separately.

A motion to adopt that part of the report of the Bishopric having reference to a budget for Graceland College finances was made the special order for Thursday at 3.30 p. m.

A motion to adopt that part of the report of the Bishopric referring to the issuing of certificates of stewardship prevailed.

Number 1 was sung, benediction by F. A. Smith.

At 7.30 a program was rendered under the auspices of the Independence Sanitarium. An overflow meeting was held at the same hour in the lower auditorium, E. E. Long being the speaker, assisted by F. G. Pitt.

THURSDAY, APRIL 9.

At 8 a. m. W. W. Smith delivered his second lecture on homiletics.

The 9 o'clock prayer meeting was in charge of Samuel Twombly and G. A. Smith.

At 9.15 a special business meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service was held.

The speaker at 10.45 was J. E. Wildermuth, assisted by R. O. Self.

At 2 p. m. President E. A. Smith called the assembly to order by announcing number 134. Prayer was offered by E. A. Blakeslee.

Minutes were read and approved.

The Quorum of High Priests reported an enrollment of 163, with a loss by death for the year of 7, sermons preached 7,743, baptisms 575.

The following were recommended for ordination to the office of high priest: A. J. Corbett, G. W. Stewart, Ephraim Squires, S. A. Burgess and James F. Keir. By motion the ordinations were approved and ordered provided for.

The Seven Presidents of Seventy recommended for ordination to the office of seventy D. J. Williams, J. D. Shower and W. E. Shakespeare. It was moved that the recommendations be approved and the ordinations provided for. The ordination of D. J. Williams and W. E. Shakespeare was approved. D. E. Tucker stated that he was not prepared to accept without personal evidence of the call; that part of the recommendation effecting Brother Tucker was deferred and referred to the Seven Presidents of Seventy.

The First Presidency submitted the following:

To the General Conference: In order to properly carry on the work of distributing literature and information the First Presidency deemed it necessary early in the conference year to effect at least a temporary organization of a Bureau of Publicity. This was done after consultation and agreement with the Presiding Bishop and members of the Quorum of Twelve. Elbert A. Smith and John F. Garver were placed in charge of the work for the year.

The main feature of their work has been the distribution of the Open Letter to the Clergy. This document, gotten out in very neat and attractive style, has been mailed to many clergymen in various parts of the country. One edition of ten thousand copies has been exhausted and the work of distributing a second similar edition is under way. In each instance the Open Letter is accompanied by a letter from the Bureau of Publicity inviting further investigation. In the matter of distribution the Bureau has cooperated with ministers in charge and district and branch presidents. There is practically no limit to the work that might be done along this line if means were at hand to carry it forward. Almost unlimited numbers of names and addresses might be secured from the year books of various denominations had we the money to properly prosecute this work. But the bureau did not feel to go farther than it could go with the aid of voluntary contributions from local congregations, and has made the work pay its own way thus far.

The matter of publishing and mailing the Open Letter was handled by the Herald Publishing House, the manager co-operating with the bureau in that regard. The price of the Open Letter was placed at such a figure as to cover expense of postage and clerical aid so that that feature of the work was handled by the Publishing House and not by the bureau.

The bureau has endeavored to render assistance in other ways to those in the field and to promote publicity for the work wherever practicable.

The British Isles Mission proposes to establish a mission Bureau of Publicity for the distribution of the Open Letter in that mission. Their communication to the joint council regarding that project has been referred to the Bureau of Publicity for action.

Apostle U. W. Greene secured the publication of the Open Letter in the press in Jerusalem and proposes to publish it in German for use among the Germans.

We recommend that some action be taken by the conference to continue the Bureau of Publicity as we see in it great possibilities for good to the work in general.

The work among the clergy should be followed by a similar work among schoolteachers and editors.

Respectfully submitted,
FREDERICK M. SMITH,
Secretary Presidency.

The work of the Bureau of Publicity was approved and the bureau was continued, the First Presidency to appoint those to have charge of same.

It was moved that books published against the work and that should be replied to be replied to by the Bureau of Publicity.

A substitute was moved to refer such books to the First Presidency, Board of Publication, and Church Historian.

The orders of the day were called for.

By motion the report of the joint council of First Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric on the matter concerning the Sanitarium was taken up. This report recited:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 6, 1914.

To the General Conference; Greeting: We are authorized to transmit to you the following action of the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric, touching communication from President Joseph Smith pertaining to the Sanitarium, which was referred to the Joint Council by the last General Conference:

After a comparison of the document with the articles of incorporation of the Sanitarium, we find that the document could not be adopted without a modification of the articles. The articles of incorporation make it the duty of the trustees to provide for a board of physicians and regulate and direct the management and business of the Sanitarium, and provide further that such rules and regulations shall be in harmony with the articles of incorporation.

Article 9 of the articles of incorporation reads as follows:

"ARTICLE IX.

"DUTIES OF TRUSTEES.

"The trustees by a two thirds majority vote at any regular or special meeting shall have power to enact measures, make by-laws, provide for a board of physicians and regulate and direct the management and business of the said Sanitarium, providing always that such rules and regulations shall be in harmony with these articles of incorporation."

We suggest and recommend the following procedure:

First. The Board of Trustees of the Sanitarium shall be selected or sustained by the annual or General Conference; the conference to nominate direct unless it shall choose to refer such nominations to a committee or to quorum or quorums of the church.

Second. The physicians to be selected and appointed by the Board of Trustees as at present provided for in the Articles of incorporation, after due consultation with the physician in charge.

Respectfully submitted,
FREDERICK M. SMITH,
Secretary Presidency.
JOHN W. RUSHTON,
Secretary Twelve.

It was moved that this report be adopted. The following amendment was moved:

Moved to amend by striking out all after the word church in the second paragraph (of article 9) and adding the following: "And that where vacancy occurs in the board in the interim between conferences, that such shall be filled by the board themselves.

"Second, that in providing for the board of physicians as set out in the articles of incorporation, that the chief medical director and physician of the church should make nominations, subject to the approval of the Sanitarium Board of Trustees.

"Third, that in case of a need of assistant to the chief medical director of the Sanitarium, that such assistant be appointed by the medical director, subject to ratification of the Sanitarium Board."

At 3.30 the special order concerning the Graceland College budget and finances, was deferred until the matter before the body concerning the Sanitarium be disposed of.

After the singing of number 211 Richard Bullard pronounced the benediction.

At 7.30 an illustrated lecture was given by the secretary of the Panama Pacific Publicity Bureau on the Panama and Pacific Exposition and the West. An overflow meeting was held at the same hour in the lower auditorium, G. W. Robley being the speaker.

FRIDAY, APRIL 10.

S. A. Burgess delivered his second lecture on comparative religions at 8 o'clock.

The 9 o'clock prayer meeting was in charge of A. V. Closson and Orman Salisbury.

The speaker at 10.45 was David Dowker, assisted by E. J. Goodenough.

At 2 p. m.; with President E. A. Smith in charge number 66 was sung. Prayer was offered by J. W. Wight.

Minutes read and approved.

The matter pending at the adjournment of the meeting on the 9th with reference to the Sanitarium was referred to the joint council of First Presidency, Twelve and Seventy.

The chair was resigned to President F. M. Smith.

The matter of budget for Graceland College, deferred at the previous session, was taken up. After considerable discussion the previous question was ordered, and the delegate vote was called for. The motion to indorse the recommendation of the Presiding Bishop and approve of the budget asked for was passed by a vote of 574 for, to 238 against.

Number 31 was sung. T. W. Chatburn dismissed the assembly.

At 7.45 a program was rendered under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service. An overflow meeting was held in the lower auditorium, Richard Baldwin being the speaker, H. W. Hattie in charge.

SATURDAY, APRIL 11.

W. W. Smith delivered his third lecture on homiletics at 8 o'clock, with R. C. Russell in charge.

At 9 a. m. the prayer service was in charge of H. O. Smith and T. C. Kelley.

At 10.45 the speaker was James E. Yates, assisted by J. A. Dowker.

With President E. A. Smith in charge, the session at 2 p. m. was opened by singing number 251. Prayer was offered by P. M. Hanson.

Minutes read and approved.

The following was submitted by the Order of Bishops:

Resolved, That we instruct the Board of Publication not to accept for printing in the church papers any advertisements of real estate dealers or banking institutions.

It was moved to amend by adding, "mining stock, or other projects of a speculative character." The amendment prevailed, as did the motion as amended.

The following, passed by the Independence Stake, and duly published, under the rule, was read:

Be it resolved, That this conference petition the General Conference, beginning April 6, 1914, to amend the Rules of Order and Debate, page 105, section 170, second and third lines, as follows: In the place of the words branch in the city of the stake, or seat of organization substitute the word stake; so that the resolution as amended shall read as follows: "The duties of the stake presidency are to preside over the stake; have immediate charge and oversight of the general spiritual work of the stake," etc.

The adoption of this proposed amendment was moved. Motion to refer the matter to the joint council of the First Presidency, Twelve and Seventy was lost, as was a motion to refer to the joint council of the First Presidency and Twelve.

During the discussion of the motion to adopt the proposed amendment the chair was resigned to President F. M. Smith.

The previous motion was ordered.

The motion to adopt the proposed action was carried by a vote of 231 to 51.

Under a question of privilege Bishop E. L. Kelley stated that he wished it understood that he was willing on the day he so stated, and was yet willing that the report of the Board of Auditors as made to the joint council of First Presidency and Twelve, and referred to in their report to the conference be read to the conference, on the condition that his reply thereto be also read; that he had in hand a copy of this report and his reply thereto, and was willing to turn them over to the secretary of the conference.

It was moved that the report together with the reply thereto be read. A motion to indefinitely postpone the matter prevailed.

Number 51 was sung. Joseph Luff dismissed the assembly.

At 7.45 the Conference Choir, under the leadership of General Chorister A. N. Hoxie, jr., rendered the oratorio, the "Holy City." An overflow meeting was held in the lower room with H. E. Moler as the speaker, J. M. Terry in charge. At the same hour, at the meeting place of the Quorum of Twelve, an ordination meeting was held, at which time the brethren approved for ordination and present were ordained.

SUNDAY, APRIL 12.

The meetings at the Stone Church were as follows: From 8 to 9 a. m., prayer meetings were conducted, in the upper auditorium in charge of Albert Carmichael and T. U. Thomas, in the lower room in charge of C. J. Hunt and J. M. Baker. From 9.20 to 10.30 Sunday school was held in charge of the local officers. At 11 o'clock the speaker in the upper auditorium was F. A. Smith, assisted by Ammon White; in the lower auditorium F. G. Pitt preached to the children, assisted by D. J. Krahl. At 2.30 Russell Archibald was the speaker in the upper auditorium, assisted by J. A. Becker; in the lower room W. A. McDowell was the speaker, assisted by A. D. Angus. At 7.45 the conference choir repeated the "Holy City."

At Central Kansas City church the 11 o'clock hour was occupied by C. J. Hunt, assisted by R. J. Lambert. The speaker in the evening was J. W. Wight, assisted by J. B. Wildermuth.

At Walnut Park W. E. Peak spoke at 11 a. m., assisted by Charles Harpe. W. E. Shakespeare spoke there in the evening, assisted by John Wahlstrom.

F. M. Slover occupied at the South Side Independence church at 11 a. m., assisted by George Jenkins; H. W. Smith was the speaker there in the evening, assisted by J. G. Munsell.

At the old Evangelical church O. E. Sade spoke in the evening, assisted by E. E. Long.

CONFERENCE NOTES.

WRITTEN REPORTS.—The printing of reports from general church officers and standing boards and committees as provided for by the General Conference of last year did away this year with the tedious reading of these reports, and permitted the conference to proceed at once to the consideration of the business before the body. This arrangement is very much of an improvement over the former method, both as to time and convenience. Each delegate has in hand the reports printed, in booklet form, all in one copy, and is thus permitted to deliberately and intelligently consider matter covered therein. Thus, in addition to the saving of time, the assembly is in a position to act with a greater degree of certainty than under the former system.

LECTURE COURSES.—A feature new to the conference is the arrangement of lectures for the benefit of the Melchisedec priesthood and the priests of the Aaronic order. These lectures are under the direction of the First Presidency of the church, and, excepting Sunday, occur at 8 o'clock each morning. Two courses are being given, one by W. W. Smith on homiletics, the other by S. A. Burgess on comparative religions, the brethren alternating. The purpose of this arrangement is to encourage a broader study on the past of the priesthood of the church, looking to a ministry better equipped for the work before the church. The meetings are largely and generally attended, and should prove a stimulus to the study of all good books, etc., in harmony with the counsel of the Lord in the revelations of latter days.

CHURCH CHOIR.—The church choir, under the leadership of Albert N. Hoxie, jr., general church chorister, is rendering excellent service at the various meetings of the conference. The musicians of the church have taken hold of the general choir work with enthusiasm, and the idea is spreading throughout the various districts. From every part of the country the singers are come together, and, under the spirit of the hour, the songs of Zion and the special and appropriate selections as rendered, are made to express the devotion and consecration of the assemblies. The work of the general choir movement is not alone for better service at the General Conference; it is also intended to encourage the Saints everywhere in the cultivation of "the gifts of music and of song," that altogether and finally as a people there may be developed within the body the consecration and ability, under the Spirit of God, to compose words and music, and to render the same, expressive of the hopes of Zion and prophetic of her triumph, all to the glory of God, and to the honor of his name.

CONFERENCE NURSERY.—A very desirable arrangement has been made by the Independence Saints which provides for the convenience of mothers, and for the comfort of children attending the conference. In a temporary building adjoining the church a nursery has been fitted up, where mothers may leave their children in the care of competent and responsible parties during the business sessions. Sister Emma Criley is in charge of this work and is assisted by other devoted sisters. Children ranging in age from four months to seven years have been cared for, and entertained with toys, games, story telling, etc. This provision is appreciated by the mothers, as is evidenced by the number of children left to the care of the nursery.

Of General Interest

TROUBLE IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

[It will be remembered that there appeared in the HERALD of January 21 an account of the "Kikuyu Controversy." This controversy grew out of a conference of Protestant ministers and bishops of the Anglican Church in western Africa, at which conference the Anglican bishops of Mombasa and Uganda admitted Protestant ministers to the communion. This act roused the Bishop of Zanzibar, who branded it as heresy and appealed to the Archbishop of Canterbury. The latter has referred the entire matter to the "Consultive Body" of the Anglican Church, which will meet in July. In the meantime the Bishop of Zanzibar has issued an open letter to the Bishop of Saint Albans in which he raises this and other issues. The open letter is published in pamphlet form by Longmans, Green and Company, New York and London, under the title Ecclesia Anglicana. If his charges are true, the Church of England in her higher councils is divided on doctrinal matters of more or less vital importance. He concludes that it is idle for a church that is divided at home to send missionaries into Africa. We quote at some length from the open letter.—EDITORS.]

The long series of modernist publications with which we have grown familiar was crowned towards the end of last year by seven Oxford men, who published a book called Foundations as a contribution towards the reconciliation of religious belief with modern thought. The seven are not all of one mind on every vital point, but the book read in its printed order is said by the editor, who was your lordship's chaplain, to express their corporate mind, and it is fair to suppose that it contains no theory or theological position which, in the judgment of the seven, is inconsistent with communion at the altar of the church. Now so used are we to heretical speculations and teachings by cathedral dignitaries and academic teachers, that one book more or less would not be seriously felt. The significance of this particular work lies in the official relations in which the authors stand, or stood, to bishops of the church. For it is evident that what an examining chaplain, or the principal of a theological college, can tolerate in a book of which he is a joint author, he is bound to accept as within the limits of orthodoxy from his ordination candidates. So that the chief value of the book is not in its theology nor its philosophy, but rather in the revelation it affords of the official attitude of the bishops implicated towards heresy and unorthodox speculation.

Mr. Streeter, who does not regard belief in our Lord's bodily resurrection as necessary for himself or for others, quietly ceased to be your lordship's chaplain, but the other priests, who allowed his view as permissible in a brother priest, remained at their posts. Some of them, we are told, do not accept Mr. Streeter's teaching; but that it is not wrong in a priest to accept it, they are pledged to maintain.

The book, briefly speaking, permits priests to believe and teach, among other things equally heretical,

(a) that the Old Testament is the record of the religious experiences of holy men who lived roughly from 800 B. C. onwards; some of whom wrote the so-called historical books in order to show how, in their view, God acted in circumstances that quite possibly, and in many cases probably, never existed;

(b) that the Christ's historic life opens with his baptism, at which he suddenly realized a vocation to be the last of the Jewish prophets;

(c) that Christ did not come into the world to die for us; but having come, he died because of the circumstances of the case;

(d) that Christ was mistaken in what he taught about his second advent, thinking that the world would not outlast Saint John;

(e) that therefore he did not found a church, nor ordain sacraments;

(f) that his body has gone to corruption;

(g) that there is no authority in the church beyond the corporate witness of the saints, many of whom are now unknown, to the spiritual and moral value of the Christian religion.

Thus it is allowed by the seven to any priest to deny the trustworthiness of the Bible, the authority of the church, and the infallibility of Christ.

As I have said, the mere publication of such views by priests is not so unusual as to arouse comment. They are quite commonly expressed in reviews and in book form. But it gives one pause to find that one's metropolitan and several of his comprovincial bishops are so disposed towards these views as to be able to work their dioceses with theologians who either hold or allow them. I say one pauses: for if episcopacy, sacraments, the Bible, and the Lord Christ himself are on the official list of open questions, what is there left in the deposit that we are here to hand on to the Africans?

The answers that are offered for my consolation in this matter vary. Roughly speaking they may be stated thus:

(a) "The Ecclesia Anglicana is by her nature and claim within the Catholic Church, but in order to save confusion and schism, she allows men to remain within her communion who on the Continent would have been driven out. Thus she has a character of inclusiveness that may be said to give her a duty of mediating between various opinions and temperamental views."

For myself I gain no comfort from such an answer. A mediating church, it seems to me, would not include within its borders two men of directly contradictory beliefs: rather it would so modify and adjust the two beliefs until they were seen to be complementary, and then it would help one man to hold them both. For example, while sacramentalism and personal religion can be held by any one man as complementary truths, I do not see how a mere sacramentalist, if such a man exists, could remain in communion with one who believes only in a personal religion; and a church that would seek to retain both men would in no sense be a mediator: it would not be in any true sense an organism: it would be merely a society for shirking vital issues. Or again, what is it that the church is mediating when she includes within her borders a man who believes that Christ is virgin-born, and a man who calls him the son of Joseph? Or a man who believes that Christ is his infallible guide, and a man who holds that Christ was seriously mistaken about the need of a church and ministry? Or a man who believes that our Lord's glorious manhood is the fountain of grace, the temple of the Holy Ghost, and a man who teaches that the manhood has ceased to be whole and complete, the body having gone to corruption? Personally I do not see exactly what it is that is here "mediated" by the church.

(b) "The will of God is to purify the church by permitting these heresies to abound within her borders. If we are patient, all will be well."

As I listen to this I try to work it out for myself. Here, in this diocese of mine, heresy may burst forth. If it does so, shall I be able to say that it is God's will? First, I must think over the indications of God's will that are most evident. And at once I remember that in his will and providence, just five years ago to-day, the Archbishop of Canterbury and his coconsecrators exacted from me, as a condition of my reception of the rank and grace of episcopacy, a most solemn vow that I would always be ready to banish from my diocese any erroneous and strange doctrine that I might meet.

Clearly then it is God's will that no heretic should remain in my diocese unpunished. Arguing thus from the diocese to the church at large, I perceive that the presence of heresy within the communion of God's church is entirely contrary to his most holy will. God's will is to purify the church by driving away heresy, which no doubt implies also the driving away of obstinate heretics, sad and unpopular as such an action would be.

(c) "It is an excellent thing that our young men should make experiments in reconciling the faith with modern thought."

This answer can be challenged from many sides. My chief objection is that it omits to specify the point of view from which the experimenting Christian must regard both the faith and modern thought. If so be he is fully conscious of a God-given power of faith, in the strength of which he can see things as no mere modern thinker, as such, can see them; if he brings to his task a mind of which revealed truth is the guide; and if he sees in the limits imposed by the creeds the boundaries of accurate thinking upon God, let him go where he will, and say what he please: he will be always serving the truth in his degree.

But this is not what young men to-day care to do. They stand side by side with the "modern thinker": they throw away faith lest they be accused of unfair advantage: they "start fair." And then? Without faith, they sacrifice in the name of reason much that faith found in creed and book and tradition: which done, finding their logic pointing them to complete unbelief, they exercise in the end the very faith they had mislaid, making pretense that it is reason alone which has led them to their goal. . . .

It is easy to see the method of the thorough-going modernist; he is a "modern thinker" and frankly throws over faith for reason, keeping just so much of what corporate faith has stored up for him as approves itself to his moral and spiritual measures. But these experiments of the younger men neither start from faith nor finish in pure reason; they are themselves the measures of individual readiness to sacrifice the past for the sake of the present: whereas all that really matters is the future.

Believe me, then, there is no comfort for me in such an answer as this.

And when these youthful experiments are made by men who have been appointed to train, test, and select candidates for holy orders the position becomes critical.

For what is the prospect of a missionary church whose clergy is recruited in the very dioceses of which these men, and others like them, are the trusted theologians? Without a shadow of a doubt we must expect to receive year by year young men whose faith is not that of our church: men who have modified this and rejected that in the name of modern thought, until at last the diocesan catechism will be set on one side as impossible, and our people either perverted, or thrown into direct opposition to the very church whose products they are said to be.

Put it in another way. Let it remain an open question whether the old or new be true: but can the Ecclesia Anglicana, in her present state, hope to act as a foundation for a permanent, solid, new church?

I can speak only for what I see and know; and speaking for the Mohammedan land, I do not hesitate to say that a church that has two views in its highest ranks about the trustworthiness of the Bible, the authority of the church, and the infallibility of Christ has surrendered its chance of winning the Moslem; for his dependence upon his book, his traditions, and his prophet will be broken not by a debating society, but by the living, speaking church of the infallible Word incarnate.—Ecclesia Anglicana, pp. 9-15.

News from Missions

European Mission.

I have labored almost continuously in the city of Copenhagen since my arrival in September, with no great apparent encouragement, though the attendance at our services has been considerably better lately than in the past.

News reached me from Germany, however, indicating that part of the field as especially opening up for the spread of the gospel. Being requested by the Presidency to visit that country in order to be in position to properly report and present the needs of the work there, I concluded that I must make a personal visit to Germany. This I had previously contemplated doing, but hesitated because of not being able to speak the language. I left Copenhagen on the morning of February 17 and arrived the same evening in the city of Berlin, the capital of the German Empire, and next day reached the historic city of Wittenberg, where I received a Saintlike greeting and welcome at the home of Brother A. Kippe and family.

While in this city Brother Kippe and I took a walk to view some of the old landmarks and places of interest. We saw the old-time residences of Luther and Melancthon, and for a small admission fee were permitted to pass through and view the interior of the first named. A few pieces of the old-time furniture are still preserved, the pulpit from which he preached and other relics, such as old-time books and documents in cases, under glass, among which I noticed some bearing the signature of the pope, but all in a language that we could not read. We saw also the historic church where Luther so boldly proclaimed against the usurpations of the pope, and under which his body is said to be laid away. We did not enter the church, not caring to spend money for the privilege, as we had important work before us, requiring means, besides being informed that the interior had been entirely renovated so it did not resemble what it was at the time of the Reformation. Some time ago the woodwork was destroyed by fire and the door upon which Luther had ventured to placard his ninety-five theses in raised letters cast in the door.

On the morning of the 19th I left, in company with Brother Kippe, by rail for Hanover and Brunswick. Arriving at the first named city at about five p. m., we received a welcome at the home of Brother and Sister Huvendick. Meeting was arranged for the evening, and at the hour appointed I was pleased to meet a noble band of Saints, together with quite a number of friends to the cause, before whom I preached my first sermon in Germany, Brother Kippe interpreting. This was my first experience in preaching to a people by the aid of an interpreter. The effort seemed to be appreciated, however, judging from the earnest and eager attention given by all present.

The following evening five persons were baptized, Brother Kippe administering the ordinance, after which we retired to the hall and the confirmations were attended to. A goodly degree of the Spirit attended us and all present felt to rejoice. The parties baptized had been brought to an understanding of the gospel through the earnest efforts of those who had previously united with the church, which speaks well for the Saints there, and bears witness of their integrity, earnestness and faith. The parties baptized at this time as well as the ones previously in the fold are all fine, intelligent looking people, in the prime of life, as noble and earnest a band of Saints as I have seen anywhere.

I have never seen anywhere a better opening for gospel work than appeared here. With the ones now baptized the Saints numbered fifteen. They have already considered themselves a branch of the church, having hired a commodious hall in a respectable locality where they were holding meetings twice a week, studying the scriptures and talking to each other about the gospel, though none of them had been ordained to the priesthood.

They were anxious to be more fully organized. We made the matter a subject of prayer, that we might make no mistake; and in the Sunday afternoon prayer meeting I felt free to recommend Brother Gustav Huvendick for ordination to the office of priest and Brother Heinrich Hundertmark for ordination to the office of teacher. This was indorsed by Brother Kippe and unanimously approved by the Saints. The brethren named were called upon to express their feelings in regard to the matter, and they each made a speech telling of their desires and love for the work and of their willingness to accept the ordination, in a manner that bore witness of their ability and fitness for the positions named. While it was in a language sealed to me and I could only catch a word now and then, yet when I looked at the radiant countenances of the eager listeners and beheld their moistened eyes, all of which bore witness of the feelings within, so well understood by all who have had experience in the Lord's work, I felt sure that we were moving along lines approved of the Master, and confident that if the brethren continue in faith, humility and steadfastness they would accomplish a good work, and in the due time of the Lord be called to added responsibilities. We attended to the ordinations, partook of the Lord's supper, and blessed two children. Shortly after, we took train for Brunswick to meet with the Saints there in the evening. Nearly all of the Saints accompanied us to the depot, bidding us Godspeed. We felt to ask the Lord to bless his people and to prosper his work in Hanover.

We arrived in Brunswick just in time for meeting, and here we had the privilege of meeting even a larger audience than at Hanover. There were only nine members of the church, but a large number of friends to the cause were in attendance, and marked attention was given to the word spoken by Brother Kippe and myself. Here also they have secured a hall, hold regular meetings and consider themselves a branch of the church. I could see no good reason why they should not be organized. Brother Kippe and I had previous to our arrival conferred together relative to conditions in Brunswick and had arrived at the conclusion that some one ought to be ordained here also to watch over the flock and to labor for the ingathering of others. We proposed the ordination of Brother Gustav Gerwin to the office of priest. The brother when called upon responded with ability and feeling equal to that of the brethren in Hanover and the same good Spirit bore witness of the Lord's approval of the recommendation, and the ordination was attended to. Quite a number of those not members became interested and partook of the Spirit's influence, and seemed to rejoice together with us in the goodness of the Lord. We believe that Brother Gerwin will do a good work for the church, and that in the near future he will find colaborers among those now coming into the fold.

I had planned to return to Hanover on the evening of the 23d, to take train the following morning for Hamburg, but after the dinner hour when in conversation with a young man interested in the work, I was told that if I would remain another day he would be pleased to be baptized that evening. I complied with this request and on the evening of February 23 I administered the ordinance of baptism to Gustav Henry Falke, my first baptism in Germany. This young man entering the church at the beginning of manhood bids fair to become useful in the Master's cause and if faithful has an important work before him. It is the intention to start a Sunday school in Brunswick, which I regard as a move in the right direction, as I saw quite a number of children and young people in the audience.

After visiting Hanover and Brunswick and meeting with the Saints and friends and partaking of their hospitality in both places I saw that the report that had come to me had by no means been exaggerated. Surely the Lord had been moving upon the hearts of the people, and if the necessary labor can be done we may expect quite an ingathering into the church in Germany. There seems to be quite a number standing near the kingdom in Brunswick. We have reason to praise the Lord who "giveth the increase."

To show in what manner the Lord has been preparing the people for the reception of his truth, I will only mention Brother Gustav Huvendick, who for a number of years had been identified with the Utah Church and had somehow heard of the Reorganization. Not being entirely satisfied where he was, he was anxious to learn something about the church, and sought to communicate with the Presidency by writing, addressing a letter to The Presidency of Reorganized Church, Bamoni, Iowa. The letter was returned with the statement that there was no post office by that name in the State. This was in 1905, but the brother still preserves the letter, unopened as it was returned.

He still continued as a member and officer of the Utah Church, but did not get away from the impression that there was light and information for him some day from the Reorganized Church. He told me that upon several occasions when standing before the people to preach to them a voice would say to him, "Wait until you hear from Missouri, (The Reorganization)." The looked-for opportunity came, when a little over one year ago Brother Karl Green, at that time an elder and missionary from Utah, broke away from the Utah Church and united with the Reorganization. He being well known among the Utah people in Germany the news spread and Brother A. Kippe, our only elder in that country, and Brethren Robert and Johan Smolny, who hold the office of priests, were privileged to administer in the ordinances of the gospel to these people, who now became convinced that the Reorganization was the true Latter Day Saint Church, and the church acknowledged by the Lord. Brother Huvendick and his companion who for so long had waited for the opportunity, were among the first to embrace the truth in Hanover, as it dawned upon them. This brother is now in charge of the branch there.

Our membership both in Hanover and Brunswick are mainly converts from the Utah Church, though the five lately baptized at the first named city were never connected with that institution, and were entire strangers to the latter-day message until it was introduced to them by the Saints. Thus it will be seen that the leaven is working, and an effectual door is being opened for the spread of the gospel message in Germany, and now seems to be an opportune time to put forth an effort in that land.

I earnestly hope that some of our German-speaking brethren may be found who can and will take a mission to their native land, or that a young brother or brethren to whom the learning of the language will not be a great task will be willing to go to Germany to preach the gospel. I shall pray that the Lord may direct the brethren who have the responsibility of making the appointments, that the opportunity now before us in that country may be improved upon. The brethren ordained will do what they can for the work, but they need assistance. We ought to have two or more elders who can give their entire time and attention to the work. I am informed that the Utah people are redoubling their energies, and we can not under the present favorable opportunity afford to be inactive in the matter. Could I speak the language I would be willing to leave the work in Scandinavia for a time to devote my energies in Germany, not that I deem it consistent to abandon the work here, but the field just now seems so much more ripe in that country. If I were a young man I would be willing to put forth an effort to learn the language, but at sixty-four years of age it would be an undertaking for which there could be but little hope of success. I must therefore, be content to do what little I can among the people to whom I can make myself understood and "pray the Lord of the harvest to send laborers into his vineyard," where the field is seemingly now ready. There are a few in Germany with whom I can correspond in English, and I shall endeavor to continue in touch with the work there and render what advice and assistance I can.

I was informed that there were three or four members in Hamburg, but I only met Brother David Ullerich, who seems to be alive and interested in the work. Brother Kippe did not accompany me to Hamburg, so I felt somewhat handicapped, as it was with difficulty that I in a measure made myself understood. I found Brother Kippe an agreeable companion and was loath to part with him, but the cares and responsibilities of life made it impracticable for him to accompany me further.

I found at Hamburg besides Brother Ullerich a few interested in the work, among them a lady whose daughter and son-in-law went to New York last summer. They were members of the Utah Church, but in New York or Brooklyn had come in contact with our people and were attending our services, intending to unite with the Reorganization. The mother gave me to understand that this was pleasing to her, as she also expected to unite when opportunity is given. Others whom I met gave evidence by acts of kindness that they were friends to the cause. Hamburg is a city of nearly one million inhabitants, and the greatest seaport on the European continent, hence is visited by people of nearly all nationalities. If the church could maintain a permanent mission there great good would no doubt result. I am also informed that good openings and opportunities are found in other parts of the country, but of these I can not speak from personal observations.

I can not report so great opportunities and prospects for the work in Scandinavia, yet we are by no means discouraged. The reports from the brethren recently have all been of an encouraging nature, and we feel hopeful for the work here also. Brethren O. W. Okerlind, J. H. Hanson and C. A.

Swenson are laboring in Sweden, Brother P. Muceus in Norway, and I have been trying to do what I can for the advancement of the cause in Denmark. A few have been baptized in Scandinavia the past year, and we are looking forward for a better harvest by and by. Two of the brethren, Oscar Johnson and T. O. Strand, have returned to America the past year, and Brother Okerlind who has been absent from his family and home nearly two years is anxious to return some time in the near future. So we shall need reinforcements also in Scandinavia or the work will suffer.

I was pleased to read the article by Brother Lambert in a late HERALD under the heading, "Faith and belief synonymous." The position taken meets my approval. It would be impossible for me in the ministerial work in this mission to make the distinction between faith and belief as some endeavor elsewhere to do, as the Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish languages have only the one term, tro, which means either faith or belief. The same is true in German in which language the word glaube is used either for faith or belief.

Sister Hansen and myself are enjoying fairly good health, and feel grateful for a loving Father's care and protection. We hope to be remembered by the Saints in the home land, and we pray, "Lord be with us till we meet again."

Hopefully,

H. N. HANSEN.

Florida.

I have been making an effort to establish the work in eastern Florida of late. During the month of February I held a very interesting meeting in the new Baptist church at Century, Florida, where I was assisted by Brethren A. E. Warr and Hale W. Smith. There were two baptized as the result of efforts there, and quite an interest awakened in the hearts of others.

By reason of an urgent request, I then went to the home of Sister T. E. Sutton, Valrico, Florida, only a short distance from Tampa, for the purpose of administering in gospel work, and to make an effort to open up the work there. While efforts were made on the part of leaders to prevent us from reaching the ears of the people, meetings were announced and efforts were made in presenting the word of God as the spirit of wisdom directed. I trust the precious seed that was sown will bear fruit.

Sister Sutton is an excellent Saint, and has been very liberal with her means in supporting the gospel. She is one of those who truly manifest their faith by good works. Some of her loved ones are very severely afflicted, and they as well as she are in need of the faith and prayers of the Saints.

I was met at Kissimmee, Florida, February 28, by Elder N. C. Enge, who has done considerable missionary work. We went in a small boat to his place about seven miles away on Lake Tohopekaliga, which is an Indian name and signifies sleeping tiger. But on this particular day the tiger was very much awake. The wind was blowing heavily and the lake very rough. The launch being heavily loaded made the trip very dangerous. We were vividly reminded of the experience of the disciples, when with Jesus in the ship there came down a storm of wind on the water. We felt to voice the same sentiment in silent prayer, as voiced by the disciples, "Lord, save us." And after being safe on terra firma, in secret we felt to thank the good Lord for his protecting care. A few days before this, while traveling by rail, the locomotive was derailed, but not one passenger was hurt. We can truly say, We have been in peril both on land and water.

March 1 we occupied as speaker in the house of Brother Enge. While the weather was very stormy, a few of his neighbors came out, to whom we presented the word. I was blessed and cheered as a result of the effort. Brother Enge is trying to do something for the work by preaching the word in his part of the land. He and his good wife made us welcome in their home, and did not fail to assist us in a material way.

The next day this brother and I went to a large mound of sand, upon which was growing large pine trees. With a shovel we made quite an excavation and discovered several human skulls, one of which was quite large, also some pottery and a flattened piece of metal, somewhat resembling a half moon in shape. Mr. Oliver Collins, who has worked in gold mines in Alaska many years, stated after examination that the metal was composed of copper and gold mixed, and that it had been there hundreds of years. I only give a brief writeup of the discovery, without taking any position in regard to the composition of the metal, the date when the mound was constructed or who was buried there.

This mound was built almost if not entirely of white sand. Bones as well as the pottery being in a crumbling condition is an indication that the interring was many years ago. However, I leave the reader to form his own conclusion in regard to the matter. One of the old settlers stated that the mound was there before the Indians ever came to that part of the country.

The next day Brother Enge and I walked eight miles to Saint Cloud and visited Brethren Wilbur Savage and John Spaulding and their families, of Lamoni, Iowa, who are spending the winter there in order to escape the cold weather. We were glad to meet them, and glad to find both of these elders in the harness, trying to do something for the gospel.

On the 4th I took my departure for Umatilla, Florida. Arriving there I found Sister Caroline F. Dickinson and her family from Independence, Missouri, and found her to be a true Saint indeed, trying to let her light shine before strangers, and making a strong effort to get our position before the people. I can truly say it is very cheering and encouraging to the missionary to find the isolated ones taking the church papers and trying to get the work before the world, notwithstanding the bitter opposition. Truly Sister Dickinson, like the true and faithful missionary, is not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. Her faithful testimony and good works are proof of that fact. Here we published meetings in a large hall. A few came out, and I preached twice. On account of a protracted meeting having just started among the Methodists we thought it wise to abandon the effort for the present. The word Mormon is a great stigma to the minds of the people here as well as elsewhere, and is used very freely to keep the people away from our meetings.

While at this place I was told by a Mr. G. R. Hurlbut of Johnson City, Tennessee, that while he was in conversation at Friendship, New York, in 1874, with Sidney Rigdon, he was told by Rigdon that he (Rigdon) wrote the Book of Mormon and buried it. It is a well known historical fact that Sidney Rigdon never saw the Book of Mormon until after it was translated and published in 1830. I have before been told that Rigdon wrote the Book of Mormon, but the report that he buried it is a new one to me.

March 9 I had the pleasure of visiting Saint Augustine, the oldest city in the United States. My mind reflected back to the time when as a small lad in a small country school I learned this historical fact. I did not then have the slightest thought that my connection with the great latter-day work would cause my feet to tread within the limits of this historic city. Saint Augustine was founded by Menendez, in the year 1565. The old town looks like a foreign city yet, and remains of the old Spanish fortifications can still be seen there.

March 10 I started out early as a curiosity seeker, not searching for the fabled fountain of youth, so diligently sought after by Ponce de Leon, although I heard of one only about one half mile away, the waters of which were being sold at ten cents a drink. I was searching for the old historic landmarks of the city. I will not take the space to describe minutely all the places of interest, which are many, such as the old house of history situated on Treasury Street, six feet and one inch wide, the narrowest street in the United States. The old Spanish fort built of stone required sixty years in building, and remains to-day just as it was two hundred years ago. It is a very strong fortress, said to be the only castle on the American continent built after the plan of those of the middle ages. While standing upon the beautiful white beach, viewing the great Atlantic Ocean, I felt the same longing and burning desire as expressed by Lehi in regard to one of his sons, "Oh, that thou mightest be like unto this river, continually running into the fountain of all righteousness."

While here I met Elder J. A. Pack, of the Utah Church, who had been a missionary to the Society Islands, and who is now located in Jacksonville, Florida, where he claimed they had a church and a branch of one hundred fifty members. While going about together viewing the items of interest in the old historic city, we had a very friendly conversation in a general way, in regard to the two churches. I made a strong effort to treat him courteously in every sense of the term, and to make him feel that I was trying to be a Christian gentleman, notwithstanding our widely different views. In argument he made an effort to defend polygamy, but when confronted with the fact that their own Doctrine and Covenants with the section on marriage eliminated and the revelation on polygamy inserted in lieu thereof contradicted section 42 where we read, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else," also section 49, and the Book of Mormon, he remarked that he believed that thousands of our people were honest but that our leaders were apostates. I asked if he would consent to our elders preaching in their church in Jacksonville; he said I would have to ask the president of the mission about that, and stated that he had been informed that our elders were debarred from occupying their houses of worship in Utah because they abused their people.

I next went to Green Cove Springs, and had about fifty circulars printed, announcing a series of meetings in the school auditorium, Sister E. D. Guest having secured permission from the county superintendent of schools to use the building. When I had circulated only about a dozen of these bills word came from the superintendent that we could not use the house on account of being Mormons, as he stated. So I held a series of meetings in the home of Sister Guest. The opposition that had been raised did not keep her neighbors away, as she had gained their confidence by living as becomes a true Saint, and had been endeavoring to get our work before them. She is a close reader of HERALD, Ensign and Autumn Leaves, and is keeping up with the lessons in Sunday school and Religio quarterlies, all of which is very encouraging in helping to open the work in new places.

I went north from there by boat down the beautiful Saint John's River to Jacksonville, and visited the Brighamite church building, in which I met a few of their members. I also visited their mission house in company with a brother, and had a very heated argument with the president of their mission, in which he tried very earnestly to defend polygamy as being a righteous principle, revealed through Joseph Smith. But he stated he did not practice it now. As he had one wife living and another dead he said he expected to practice it in the world to come. In reply I read from the so-called revelation on the eternity of the marriage covenant, including plurality of wives, as follows: "For behold: I reveal unto you a new and an everlasting covenant; and if ye abide not that covenant then are ye damned." He at once admitted in positive terms that he is damned and repeated it and stated that God had withdrawn the principle from the earth through Wilford Woodruff by reason of the unworthiness of the people. I asked permission to speak in their church, and he gave his consent, but stated he would have to refer the matter to higher authority.

While in the city I made my home with three sons of Brother Enge and their sister Lily, who was keeping house for them; all are nice, intelligent, and very industrious young people. I noted with much pleasure the tears of joy that came so freely to the eyes of this young sister when I remarked as follows: You don't know how happy I am and how thankful I feel to see you young people engaged in a good business, going ahead and trying to do something. I feel sure all of them are worthy of those words of praise and encouragement.

I am now engaged in meeting in De Funiak Springs, a new place where a sermon was never preached until I came. I have baptized one. I am glad to be in the conflict for truth, and by the help of the Master I expect to continue until the victory is won and the goal is reached.

In bonds of love,

F. M. SLOVER.

News from Branches

Woodbine, Iowa.

The little branch of the church here is still struggling to keep its head above the turbid waves of corruption. Its general membership are good, honest, God-loving men and women. The Aaronic priesthood here are good men, but have to labor for the support of their families. They willingly help financially, and attend the means of grace, but officially they are backward. Our president is a live and good man, well fitted for the duties of his office. He endeavors to fill his calling, and his services are very acceptable.

Our membership is very widely scattered. This makes it awkward because when means are needed for general church purposes the tax laid upon the branch exceeds our actual numbers, and becomes a burden on those present. But we shall try to do what we can, and pray God to send laborers in his harvest field.

Our young people are not numerous. This is one of the conditions from which we suffer. In spite of drawbacks the branch is not dead. We have fair meetings, be the attendants few or many. Of late we have been blessed with the labors of Elders G. R. Wells and R. Etzenhouser. Both were highly appreciated and I trust accomplished good. Gomer with his musical talent and aptness at instructing in the way of righteousness and truth was with us several evenings. Then a few nights afterward Brother Rudolph came with his stereopticon work, giving archæological views, illustrating the works and wanderings of that portion of God's ancient people who dwelt on this continent in the ages past, and proving God's loving care for all mankind. His text very appropriately every night was, "God so loved the world," etc. The elder gave clear and abundant evidence of that love, so that there was no room for doubt nor quibble. He had a crowded house of attentive listeners every night. What will the harvest be?

Another event has stirred the town of Woodbine, the death of our aged Sister Ann Butler, which occurred on the 13th of March. She was eighty-nine years, five months, and twenty days old. In early life she joined the church and came to this land. She discovered the abominations of the Utah Church and refused to be engulfed in them, and after a time became identified with the Reorganized Church. In an early day she with her husband settled near what is now Woodbine. The authorities and business men of Woodbine united together and purchased a beautiful galaxy of flowers with the name "Mother of Woodbine," enwreathed among them. A vast audience attended the funeral, and the "Mother of Woodbine" was laid to rest in the well-kept cemetery that bears the name of her childhood home, and her gentle spirit was borne on angel wings to the rest that remains for the people of God.

My Task.

Not mine to mount to courts where seraphs sing,
Or glad archangels soar on outstretched wings;
Not mine in union with celestial choirs
To sound heaven's trump or strike the gentler wires;
Not mine to stand enrolled at crystal gates,
Where Michael thunders or where Uriel waits.
But lesser worlds a Father's kindness know;
Be mine some simple service here below—
To weep with those who weep, their joys to share,
Their pain to solace or their burdens bear;
Some widow in her agony to meet;
Some exile in his new-found home to greet;
To serve some child of Thine and so serve Thee.
Lo, here am I! To such a work send me!

—Edward Everett Hale.

Home and Child Welfare Department.

The May Meeting.

Instead of the usual reading furnished for use in the monthly meeting of this department, the following list of questions is offered for discussion. These questions are the ones presented for discussion in the conference of the Home and Child Welfare Department at the General Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary held in Independence, April 7 to 11.

The time for the conference of each department was very limited, and the discussions so full of interest that regrets were expressed each time that they could not be longer continued.

There is abundant material for an interesting program in the questions here offered for use in the May meeting.

We suggest that this might be made an open parents' meeting, in which both fathers and mothers may be free to take part.

1. What is the effect of referring acts of disobedience to the father for punishment?
2. What is the mother's position in her family?
3. How do children learn their first lessons?
4. Is commanding the best way of securing obedience?
5. What should be the aim in training children?
6. How early in life can we begin to teach the child self-control?
7. How early should we begin to teach children habits of cleanliness and order?
8. How may a child be taught to respect property?
9. What is the result of giving a child too many playthings?
10. Is it wise to give very small children something to do?
11. To what extent should we do things for children?
12. What can be done to help the child in the use of correct language?
13. What is the advantage of telling stories to children?
14. Why should children be sent to bed at night with pleasant thoughts?
15. Is there any objection to limiting a young child's diet to certain prescribed articles, and the quantity to certain weights and measures?

At General Conference.

This week the editor will prepare copy for the Column under unusual conditions. Instead of writing in her own corner at home, she finds herself, in an interval between meetings, ensconced in a corner of the great stone church at Independence, Missouri. Instead of clicking off her thoughts at a typewriter, she progresses more slowly with pencil and tablet, and the primitive writing desk,—her knee. Instead of the unbroken stillness of the solitude of home, there rises the musical hum of hundreds of voices of Saints in happy communion.

To the many absent Saints, who, as intently as those gathered here, are looking and laboring for the redemption of Zion, the gathering of her children, and the culmination of the great work, we desire to send a word of cheerful admonition to be strong, patient, brave, abounding always in those good works which bring honor upon the great cause we love. The eye which never ceases to watch over Israel, the ear which never fails to hear, the heart which never remains untouched by his children's prayers are as attentive to those faithful ones who call to him from isolated homes as he is to us in the great gatherings of the people.

Faithfulness in one, in all, is the watchword. Till He comes let us individually occupy with diligence, each in the niche to which life has assigned him, remembering that among the noblest heroes of the church is many a one who "stands just out of sight and does his duty in a lowly place."

May the blessings of the Lord rest upon his scattered people. In his own time and way may he gather them in one. May we labor with him to accomplish the work "intrusted to all."

Our Boy Scouts.

The afternoon business session has opened, and, looking in the direction of the platform, upon which are seated our leading church officials, one sees, on the steps, two quiet figures in the brown uniform of boy scouts.

Those lads are in waiting to serve any who need them. They carry messages of conference business to and fro. Respectful, quick, alert, they are learning the great lesson of serving, not for remuneration, but from willingness to contribute service to the general good. And this is all the greatest man in the church can do.

At the opening of conference, the leader of the boy scouts appeared upon the platform and announced that these young helpers would be on hand in the building and on the grounds to serve any who might need them, and the presiding officer was not too exalted to express his approval of the proffered service.

Let the boys and girls help in the work of the church, and they will have deepened interest in it.

When It Comes to You.

Our work is onward. In every department, growth is manifest. From this assembly of the Saints the workers of the church will soon disperse to go forth in all the world, some to present the gospel to those outside of the fold, others to labor in the work of the internal development of the church.

At your reunions, in your district conferences and conventions, and through the literature the church will put within your reach will come your opportunity to keep pace with the onward movements.

Watch for your opportunities when they come, and use them to the utmost. So shall the whole body grow.

In Home and Child Welfare Conference.

On the walls of the room in which we convened for this conference were numerous mottoes suggestive of the earnestness of our work and of its varied character. One of these mottoes says, "Life is not a cup to be drained, but an offering to be poured out." In other words, we are not to use life as that which is given primarily to yield us pleasure, but, rather, as that which we are to use to the glory of Him who gave it. Life is not to be used to the gratification of self, but in ministration to others.

In this conference of women practical questions were earnestly discussed. The subjects were those pertaining to the welfare of children.

Do You Rock Baby to Sleep?

This was one of the questions discussed, and we shall tell you some of the things that were said.

One sister, raising the question whether or not the baby should be rocked when put to sleep, expressed the opinion that the child needs this loving attention of the mother to strengthen the bond of affection and sympathy that should exist between mother and child.

Another mother spoke and said she had pursued a different plan with her boy. She did not rock him to sleep, but she always lay down beside him when his sleeping time approached. She said that, as he grew older, this time afforded opportunity for heart to heart talks in which she found her way into her child's inmost thoughts.

She guarded against his becoming exacting with regard to the enjoyment of these seasons of sympathy and confidence. She taught him to excuse her from remaining with him at times when duties demanded her presence elsewhere.

A trained nurse gave us the benefit of her experience. She told the mothers a child should not be rocked to sleep, that the rocking tends to disturb his bodily functions and to cause indigestion.

Afterwards an experienced mother added her testimony, that too much "jiggling" of a baby is not good. She told in detail how it caused wakefulness in an infant. She had seen young mothers make the mistake of rocking violently with baby in arms and of their slapping the child vigorously on the back to still the child when it cried.

It was the consensus of opinion that babies are better not to be rocked to sleep. One wise little mother, so expressing her opinion, added that she thought better to rock the baby and caress him when he awakes, bright and rested from his nap.

When a Child Cries for Things.

In answering the question, "How may a child be taught self-control?" it was suggested that when a child cries for a thing it should not be given him until he has been induced to control himself sufficiently to quiet his cries.

The Montessori Materials.

One mother at the conference displayed the homemade Montessori apparatus her husband had made for the use of the little daughter of two years. This little child, who has passed her second birthday by two months, recently buttoned four of the six buttons on her own shoes. She surprised her grandmother by naming a circle when she saw it, and in other ways is beginning to demonstrate the worth of the principles of the new method of teaching children.

Prayer Union.

SUBJECTS FOR THE THIRD THURSDAY IN APRIL.

Prayers for our missionaries in all places; especial remembrance of the Lamanites, that the preaching of the gospel to them may be with conviction that will lead them to obedience, and that thereafter their lives may demonstrate its purifying, uplifting power. Similar petitions might be presented in prayer for the Society Islands. Remember also the mission at Jerusalem, and those who have been sent there; that they may be protected and be successful in their mission.

Lesson, Micah 2: 12, 13. Memory verse, Micah 2: 7.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Brother Rufus Culp of Lucasville, Ohio, writes requesting all Saints to pray for him. He feels that he is under responsibilities which he can not bear without the Lord's aid. He desires to be divinely qualified for his work, and that the hindrances that oppose him may be removed. He is willing to do all he can for the Master, but keenly feels his need of the Lord's assistance.

Sister Elizabeth Elwood of Byesville, Ohio, requests an interest in the prayers of the Saints, that she may be healed of her afflictions, if it be God's will. She says, "If ever in my life I feel the need of the prayers of the Saints and help from my merciful Father, it is now. Pray for me."

CONFERENCE MINUTES.

Minutes of the Northeastern Nebraska district conference should have read: Conference adjourned to meet at Decatur, Nebraska, at the call of the executive committee, instead of Blair, Nebraska, as reported. Anna Hicks, secretary.

April North American Review.

The April issue of The North American Review is a number of varied interest and striking timeliness. The editor in the leader makes an appeal to the President "to save Mexico; to save his party; and to save himself," and so reviews the Mexican situation in a vivid way. In the editorial department he considers "A Page of Diplomacy," as well as pays a fine tribute to "Tenniel and Punch," and under Comment, gives expression in his whimsical way to significant affairs of the moment. A valuable paper is contributed by Lord James Bryce on Goldwin Smith, whose friendship he had for forty-five years. Samuel Untermyer surveys the "Anti-Trust program" and points out certain defects in the pending legislation. "American Railroads Justified by Results" is the title of a paper by Slason Thompson, of the Bureau of Railway News and Statistics, in which he takes issue with Professor Lauck, whose article on "The Plight of the Railroads" appeared in the January Review and Emory R. Johnson, some time Commissioner on Panama Tolls and Traffic, writes informally on the vital topic, "Coastwise Toll Exemption." Carrington Weems has an article on "Government Railroads in Alaska," and R. B. Van Cortlandt answers his query, "What is Agricultural Credit?" A thoughtful essay is contributed by Rear-Admiral A. T. Mahan, U. S. N., on "Twentieth-Century Christianity" in which he contests Doctor Eliot's recent thesis on the subject. The poem of the number is by Sara Teasdale—"Spring Night," and another literary contribution is an appreciation of the work of the French poet, "Paul Fort—Ballades Francaises," by one of the young English writers, J. K. Rooker. "Travel" is the title of Louise Collier Willcox's monthly essay, and Lawrence Gilman in Music and Drama considers Charpentier's "Julien." F. M. Colby reviews Lippman's "A Preface to Politics" in The Book of the Month, and the number concludes with New Books Reviewed and Letters to the Editor.

Book Reviews.

BRIGHAM YOUNG AND HIS MORMON EMPIRE.—This book is the latest work of Frank J. Cannon, with whom George L. Knapp is associated, published by Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, Chicago, and Toronto, $1.50 net. This volume has to do chiefly with the building up of the political institution of the Utah Church. Brigham Young is the central figure, and is presented as a sultan with small beginnings who rises to eminence in the valleys of the West. The journey of the people across the prairies is pictured, as is the foundation of the new "Zion." Other chapters are, Signs and Miracles Attending the Colony, The Church Political, Manna from the Gold Seekers, The Way of a Sultan, The Church Dukes, The State of "Deseret," Blood Atonement, At Mountain Meadows, The Mormon War, A Prophet Seeking Prophet, Spoiling the Gentiles, Brigham a Trust Builder, The Kingdom Endures. While HERALD readers will not concede the correctness of the contention of the authors in their discussion of the early church, during the years 1830 to 1844, and when they seek to connect Joseph Smith with polygamy, yet they will find in this book an interesting presentation of the work and power of the Utah Church, as presented by a man who was for many years intimately associated with the leading authorities of Utah.

RELIGION AND LIFE.—This is the title of a very interesting work by Elwood Worcester, rector of the Emmanuel Church of Boston (Episcopal) and founder of the Emmanuel movement, published by Harper and Brothers, Franklin Square, New York, price $1.25 net. The author discusses such questions as Christianity and the social question; forty years of agnosticism; the power of faith; the healing of Naaman; Christ at the door of the heart. The following excerpt is from his chapter on the social question:

"The world has always regarded wealth and power, costly possessions, means of pleasure, objects of art, as the most precious and interesting things it possesses. It will bow down to money, it will bow down to power, it will not bow down to love nor to sorrow. Jesus emphatically declared that men and women are far more precious and that in comparison with them things are nothing.

"It is difficult to see how two views of life so radically different can coexist. Two generations ago Abraham Lincoln foretold the downfall of human slavery or the downfall of this Republic on the ground that a house so deeply divided against itself could not stand. To-day the same prediction may be made of modern society and the Christian religion. They can not continue to coexist and to enjoy free expression, because in so many respects one is the flagrant contradiction of the other."

ELECTRICAL TOY MAKING FOR AMATEURS.—This is a book that will appeal to boys. The author is T. O'Connor Sloan, A. M., E. M., Ph. D., author of The Standard Electrical Dictionary, Electricity Simplified, etc., published by the Norman W. Henry Publishing Company, 131 Nassau Street, New York City, price $1. There are ten chapters. They are devoted to such subjects as Batteries, Batteries in General, Permanent Magnets, How to Magnetize Steel Bars, Construction of Electro Magnets, Electric Motors, Electric Bells, Miscellaneous Toys, Induction Coils, Construction of Motors, and many other topics of interest to the young electrician. A splendid book for the beginner in electricity.

A SOURCE BOOK FOR ANCIENT CHURCH HISTORY.—This is a work for students of church history, its author being Joseph Cullen Ayer, jr., Ph. D., professor of ecclesiastical history in the divinity school of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia, published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York City. As the name indicates, the work deals with historical documents connected with the early history of the church. A chapter is devoted to the church under Constantine and its transition period from a state of persecution and poverty to the ensuing state of wealth and popularity. Other chapters are devoted to apostolic and postapostolic times. This is a valuable book to use in connection with a reading course of church history.

Colorado Is a Great Place for the children

"One of the happiest remembrances of my youth," wrote a Chicago man, "is the month I spent in Colorado as a youngster with my burro. Many a joyful jaunt I had with that shaggy little wise-eyed fellow, with the patience of Job and the loving wisdom of the centuries, and what delightful adventures we had in the flowery fields and on the sun-checked, pine-tapestried trails of that Wonder State! Since then it has always seemed to me that nothing more delightful can happen to a boy or girl than to be turned out-o'-doors in Colorado with a burro."

AN APPRECIATION.

[Following the adoption by the church of the revelation appearing elsewhere in this issue, President Joseph Smith addressed the conference briefly. From this address we quote the following.—J. F. G.]

I may say, with confidence, that I feel very grateful indeed to God; and I am very grateful to the people composing the church and its representatives here for the kindness of their treatment to me in the discharge of this duty of answering to the call of the people in imploring divine direction, and in transmitting what I received through the Spirit, which directs the work unto those who represent the body at large.

The difficulties rise up before me and it is necessary and always has been for me to take a careful survey of the whole field, so far as my ability enables me to do; and when that is done to transmit faithfully the intent and purpose and will of the Master, who has so far carried forward the work in his wisdom, and has not, as yet, permitted it to meet with defeat or disaster. Hence I would, if I could, put within the mind,—and I may add, the soul—of everyone present to-day what I have felt of the difficulty of the situation under which I was called to act, and of that which I have felt in discharging that duty.

For the wisdom of it I do not answer; for the reason of it, any portion of it, I do not answer; I know not, beyond what is given, what may have been in the divine mind, and should anyone of you ask me why this or that is in any of the revelations which I have been permitted to give to the church I must answer, inevitably, unless the revelation itself contains a reason, or the reasons, I am not able to answer.

I am but a humble instrument in the hands of God, as are all of you. I claim no higher tribute, no higher characteristic or qualifications of honesty, of intent of purpose than each one of you may claim. I am not to be considered as within the counsel of the Almighty, only so far as that counsel is transmitted by the voice of inspiration to me when action on my part is required. . . .

It seems to me that we ought not to faint, that we ought not to fail, that we ought not to quail. When I learn that our elders have engaged in discussion before those who have attacked the faith I have lifted my heart and hands in prayer to God, asking that they might be sustained. From the day when Brother William Kelley and myself in the discharge of our ministerial duty passed on into Canada, and Brother Blair in the discharge of his duty provided for a discussion at Quincy, Michigan, I have felt no fear of defeat. We three old elders in the work left a boy scarcely turned in his majority to meet a polished minister of the Christian Church, we went out and left him to the battle, but we carried away with us (I answer for one) no fear of disaster, no fear of defeat. We believed that as the young man with his sling and pebble from the brook met the champion of the Philistine host and defended Israel against that attack, so would the Master arm this lad, and so would he maintain the faith. And so it has been since that year, 1878, if my memory serves me right; we have been thus trusting to God and to Christ in the defense of his work. Shall we fail now? In the name of God, No! In the name of Christ, Nay! In the name of the Holy Spirit, which has stood by us from the first to the last, I say, Nay! And, brethren, here assembled, I hope I say nay with you, and that you say nay with me in answer to this question.

I thank you, my brothers. I thank you as men; I thank you as officers; and I thank you as delegates sent here by the voice of your conferences, your districts and your branches, for the faith you have still reposed in me. If I have failed by reason of advancing years in taking proper cognizance of what my duty was unto the people; if it be feared that disaster may result from my being continued in the trust and put in this care, I pray you that you will relieve me and put a younger and stronger man, or men, in the position that I have held so long before you. I shall feel no regret; I shall feel no sense of injury or personal difficulty or want of confidence in anyone who may believe that such should occur. I am ready to lay down the weapons of my warfare, either to be taken to my final rest or to continue in sessions with you, unshorn of any of this responsibility, and trusting for you to choose whom you may call on, or who may be pointed out by divine wisdom.

Again I thank you, one and all, for the confidence you have expressed in the vote which you have taken this day.

A PRAYER OF THANKSGIVING.

[The following prayer was delivered by President Elbert A. Smith at the conclusion of the business session during which the church accepted the revelation above referred to.—J. F. G.]

As it was, our heavenly Father, when the Master met with his children anciently, so it is with us,—our hearts burn within us and we realize that he who came to save Israel has been with us.

We thank thee, our heavenly Father, that during the vicissitudes of the past year thou hast preserved the life of our aged prophet, and that once more he has been privileged to deliver to us thy word. We thank thee that in all the past fifty years or more as he has spoken to us through and by the aid of thy Spirit we have always received that which has made men better; and never have we received that which has made them worse. And so by the fruits and by the works we realize that it is indeed the word of God that has come to us. And so we pray that thy divine benediction may be upon this our latest revelation from thee.

We present before thee those who are called to assume greater responsibility, and we pray that they may be blessed in carrying that responsibility and in accomplishing the work that is intrusted to their care,—that the work of the bishopric may move forward, that all together we may be inspired with confidence and with the spirit of consecration and devotion.

We commend this, thy people, to thy care. We pray thy blessing to be with us, in Jesus' name. Amen.

INTERESTING FEATURES OF CONFERENCE

Among the interesting features of the conference were the statements of Bishop E. A. Blakeslee and Brother Richard C. Kelley, made in connection with their calling as named in the revelation adopted on Wednesday. Neither of these brethren were present in the meeting at the adoption of the revelation. Their statements were made, as requested, and on the day following. Bishop Blakeslee will be remembered as one of the Presiding Bishopric. Brother Kelley is the third son of Bishop E. L. Kelley. Their statements are as follows:

E. A. BLAKESLEE.

Mr. President: This document was handed me a short time ago. I see nothing in it but what I can comply with, and will try to do so as far as possible. Any way that it is possible for me to help the church, I will be very glad to do so. I realize my weakness in these matters, and always have. But I suppose that none of us can give the proper results in any of these matters except by the influence and help of the Spirit of God. I presume if we put ourselves in the right attitude and try to do the right thing that he will be with us to guide in every way that will be for the upbuilding of his work.

I can see great possibilities for the work if we can get together a little more in harmony of heart and in harmony of purpose. I am confident that it will be necessary for us to do this; it will be necessary for us to have the spirit of charity, and the mantle of love must dwell in our hearts or we can never accomplish those results that the Lord desires us to accomplish here, and that which is in the heart and mind of each one who is working in the cause here.

I am confident that we are all interested in the upbuilding of the work, and that we have an earnest, burning desire that it should grow and develop so that the gospel might be carried throughout the earth, that the honest in heart everywhere might have the privilege of hearing of it and thereby have the opportunity of obeying its blessed principles. But we never will be able to accomplish this until we get together and all work with one purpose.

We must abandon in our hearts and minds the spirit of suspicion, the spirit of doubt of the purposes of our brethren who are working with us. That should be the spirit of our prayer all the time.

If we feel that those with whom we are associated are not quite accomplishing that which perhaps in our minds we think they ought to accomplish, let us take the matter to the Master in prayer, and pray for them, pray for that quorum, and earnestly unite our sympathies and solicit the sympathies of Christ in their behalf to enable them to understand and fulfill the full purposes of their work. Perhaps then if we are not in perfect accord that the Spirit of God will bring us in accord if we should happen to be outside. Sometimes I have thought we ourselves are outside of the line when we think our brother is outside.

Now I am confident that if our purposes are turned in this direction that nothing in this world can stop the onward movement of this great work in which we are engaged, and which we all believe and know is the work of God here on the earth.

RICHARD C. KELLEY.

Mr. Chairman, Members of the Conference, Brothers and Sisters: During the last three days I have been giving most serious consideration to that part of the late revelation which sets forth that I should change the plan of life along which I have been working, and should devote my work to the church and to the ministry.

I have the highest respect and honor for the men who have given their lives to the advancement of the work of the church. I believe that I see in them examples of the highest type of service that men can give to their fellow men. In the eyes of all true Christians it must be an enviable position to go forth to represent the gospel and the church of Jesus Christ with that faith and spirit which can result only from great assurance that the work of the individual is mapped out and approved by no lesser authority than God himself.

I have been in attendance at many conferences of our church and have witnessed the acceptance of many revelations pertaining to the general work of the church and the calling of special men to positions in the church. I have always believed that these men took up their work only after having received a personal direction and assurance of the Spirit that wherever and in so far as they lacked in their personality, in their physical and spiritual powers, that which would make them able to fill the part to which they had been called—I say that they had an assurance that whatever lack they had in these lines would be made up by the Spirit which prompted their calling. I believe that ordinations to office should always be taken after the receipt of such assurance.

I have no choice this afternoon other than to request that the arrangements for my ordination to the eldership shall be deferred until I may receive light in this matter, and direction of the Spirit which I have, as yet, not received. I bespeak your prayers in my behalf in seeking this light.

The Little Red Ribbon.

The little red ribbon, the ring and the rose!
The summertime comes and the summertime goes—
And never a blossom in all of the land
As white as the gleam of her beckoning hand!

The long winter months, and the glare of the snows;
The little red ribbon, the ring and the rose!
And never a glimmer of sun in the skies
As bright as the light of her glorious eyes!

Dreams only are true; but they fade and are gone,
For her face is not here when I waken at dawn;
The little red ribbon, the ring and the rose
Mine only: hers only the dream and repose.

I am weary of waiting, and weary of tears,
And my heart wearies, too, all these desolate years,
Moaning over the one only song that it knows:
The little red ribbon, the ring and the rose!
—James Whitcomb Riley.

Play the Man.

Play the man!

With your body. Keep it fit,
By the highest use of it,
For the service of the soul,
Every part in full control,
Strong for labor, deft to do
All that is required of you—
Play the man!

Play the man!

Keep your inmost soul as pure
As your mother's virtue. Sure
If within no evil dwells,
There's no power in all the hells
Strong enough to drag you down,
Rob you of your manhood's crown—
Play the man!

—George A. Warburton.

General Conference.

CORRECTIONS.

On page 355, last week's issue, the paragraph concerning recommendations to office of seventy, it should read that J. D. Shower was not prepared to accept without personal call, etc., instead of the name of D. E. Tucker, as stated.

For the Sunday evening service in the Stone Church, lower auditorium, it should read: C. A. Butterworth, assisted by I. M. Smith.

In the report of the ordination meeting held Saturday night, it should read, S. A. Burgess was ordained a high priest; D. J. Williams, R. D. Davis and W. E. Shakespeare, seventies.

MONDAY, APRIL 13.

At 8 a. m. S. A. Burgess delivered his third lecture on comparative religions. President F. M. Smith was in charge of the meeting.

The 9 o'clock prayer meeting was in charge of R. M. Elvin and I. N. Roberts.

At 10.45 Amos Berve was the speaker, assisted by J. M. Terry.

With President F. M. Smith in charge, the 2 p. m. session was opened by singing number 92. Ammon White offered prayer.

Three o'clock, April 13, was fixed as the time limit of new business.

The minutes were read, corrected and approved.

Joseph W. Lane was recommended for ordination to the office of high priest. The recommendation was approved, and the ordination ordered provided for.

The following was adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this body that no further debt be incurred by the Board of Trustees of Graceland College for such extensions as gymnasiums, dormitories, etc., until such proposed work of extension shall have been first presented to this body for their approval.

The following was submitted and by motion adopted:

To the First Presidency and General Conference: As a matter of personal privilege and in fairness to the conference, we respectfully beg leave to make the following statement in regard to the audit of the Graceland College books.

In the interests of economy the bookkeeping has been done by students of the college. The result was, on account of sickness of the bookkeeper and other reasons, the books were not fully closed when the auditors were first in Lamoni. We urged that the books should be audited, and the conditions frankly stated. The auditors, however, very courteously suggested that we should close the books and they would return for the audit. The books were in shape and the auditors notified prior to the submission of our financial statement either to the publisher or the Presiding Bishop, and the auditors repeatedly agreed that they should be audited, certainly before the opening of conference. Various other demands interfered with their doing so, but still it was agreed that the audit should be made; and we were very much disappointed to learn yesterday that it had not been done.

We therefore respectfully request that the auditors make an examination as soon as possible after the close of the conference, and that their report be published in the church papers and in the conference minutes.

Respectfully submitted,
S. A. BURGESS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 11, 1914.

The matter of replying to works published against the church, interrupted by the special order at a previous meeting, was by motion taken up, and after some discussion was tabled.

Consideration of the paragraph in the report of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College suggesting definite provision in the matter of financing the college, deferred at a previous session, was taken up, under a motion to approve the paragraph. A substitute that the college debt, together with the amount of appropriations referred to in the budget submitted by the Bishop be paid out of the general church fund was denied.

Questioned as to what the motion to adopt the paragraph in the report of the college trustees would mean if adopted, the chair ruled:

That if we adopt this motion as we have it contained in the report of the college, it places the administration of the college financially under the financial officers of the church, and authorizes them to pay it out of the funds of the church if they so choose.

The motion to approve the paragraph in the report of the college trustees under consideration was adopted.

Number 215 was sung. J. W. Wight pronounced the benediction.

Daniel Macgregor was the speaker at 7.45, assisted by J. F. Garver.

TUESDAY, APRIL 14.

At 8 a. m. W. W. Smith delivered his fourth lecture on homiletics with President E. A. Smith in charge.

The prayer meeting at 9 o'clock was in charge of William Johnson and John Midgorden.

H. J. Davison was the speaker at 10.45. He was assisted by Wardell Christy.

The business session at 2 p. m., with President F. M. Smith in the chair, opened by the singing of number 123, prayer being offered by F. A. Smith.

Minutes read, corrected and approved.

On the matter of petition from the Minnesota District touching inventory and allowance of ministry entering the field, referred to the joint council of Presidency, Twelve and Bishopric, said council recommended the following:

Resolved, That in our opinion the matter is already sufficiently covered by existing resolutions and the law as contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

On recommendation by the First Presidency, John Chisnall, on account of advanced age, was released from membership on the Standing High Council of the church. To succeed Brother Chisnall, and W. A. McDowell, ordained a patriarch during the year, Charles Fry and R. J. Lambert were recommended by the First Presidency, and approved by the conference.

The committee on textbooks for Graceland College reported as follows, the report being approved:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 6, 1914.

To the First Presidency and General Conference, Greeting:

We, your committee appointed to consider the advisability of publishing proper textbooks for Graceland College, respectfully beg leave to report as follows:

We have carefully canvassed the situation, and recognize the fact that many of the textbooks now commonly used in institutions of learning, assume, as proven, certain hypotheses, which, in the minds of the young, tend to raise questions of doubt as to the faith of their fathers, and that the manner in which these questions are sometimes discussed tends towards agnosticism or even atheism.

And while we believe that in the revelation to Oliver Cowdery and W. W. Phelps an opportunity was given to meet some of these difficulties, yet in the education of our young people we must fit them to meet the questions of the day, and many of these ideas are too firmly established to be ignored with impunity, even were that desirable. Also for accredited standing definite work must be covered, and especially if advanced work is to be taken in other institutions of learning.

We, therefore, respectfully recommend that the standard textbooks used in other institutions of like rank, be used in Graceland College; that as rapidly as possible supplementary lectures be provided in which these topics are discussed in a fair and proper manner, and that provision be made for discussion by the proper instructors on these questions in a manner to set forth clearly the truth; and that when it may be deemed advisable supplementary texts may be provided, but such texts only to be used in connection with the standard texts most commonly used in other institutions of learning of like rank.

Trusting that the cause of truth may triumph,

Respectfully yours,

F. M. SHEEHY.

A. CARMICHAEL.

S. A. BURGESS.

The Order of Enoch reported cash receipts of $21,161.41, cash expenditures $21,012.63, with net gain from donations, $18,255.80.

Sister L. L. Resseguie was nominated by the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service to succeed herself as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Children's Home, and was so chosen by the conference.

The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service reported a convention held, of department conferences, and one business meeting. Their report included the following:

At our business session held on Thursday, April 9, Mrs. B. C. Smith, president, gave a survey of the work of the organization for the past year, further stating that as she had borne the responsibilities of the presiding officer for a great many years it might be well to make a change and release her from this office. Therefore she placed before the convention the matter of soliciting the advice of the joint council of Presidency and Twelve in the selection of a president, and any suggestions they may have to offer regarding our work. Regrets were expressed by various speakers at the possibility of Mrs. Smith leaving the office she had held so long, and in which she had so faithfully served. But believing the burden could now be assumed by others, a motion was made that the joint council be notified of our meeting and that nominations for presiding officer be sent them, with the request for their selection and any further advice they may have to give. A courteous reply was returned to us with the selection of Mrs. S. R. Burgess for president, Mrs. B. C. Smith for vice president. This action was ratified by the convention.

Mrs. D. J. Krahl asked to be released from the office of secretary, and in the regular order of election of officers Miss Minnie Scott of Saint Joseph, Missouri, was chosen secretary, Mrs. J. A. Gardner treasurer. The two additional members of the advisory board are Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser and Mrs. D. J. Krahl.

The convention, by rising vote, expressed their appreciation of the past services of Mrs. B. C. Smith and Mrs. D. J. Krahl, president and secretary.

By vote of the convention, Mrs. B. C. Smith was made historian of the organization.

The Second Quorum of Seventy reported thirty-seven members present at the conference. By members of the quorum 6,178 sermons had been preached, 326 were baptized, children blessed 197, debates 6, new openings 83. This report included:

Further, I am authorized to report the following: On the tenth day of April, 1914, it was voted to suspend O. H. Bailey from quorum membership for the cause of adultery; such suspension to become permanent upon his failure to appeal, or the affirmation of the guilt of said brother by the court or courts of appeal. Also that on the thirteenth day of April, 1914, it was voted to expel Joshua T. Hackett for the cause of adultery.

This report was adopted.

The following was presented:

To the Presidency and General Conference Assembled; Greeting: I beg leave to submit the following on behalf of those interested in education as a means of glorifying God and rendering service to his children.

Two informal gatherings have been held upon invitation of President Frederick M. Smith. Much interest was manifested by the brethren and a general demand for extension and correspondence work seems immanent among the Saints. At the first meeting on April 6 a committee was selected to outline a plan for organizing and unifying the educational interests of the church by bringing together those interested in education, either as teachers or students.

There seems to be a great demand for home study and extension work in educational, scientific, and philosophical subjects. To meet and supply this demand a plan was adopted, and an organization effected to be known as Graceland Extension Institute. President Frederick M. Smith, of Independence, Missouri, was chosen director; Elder Samuel A. Burgess, president of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, was chosen associate director; and Professor Charles B. Woodstock, of Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, was chosen registrar, the three officers to constitute the managing board of the institute.

Membership of the institute shall be composed of two classes. First the fellows, those who are willing to outline and prepare courses of study and supervise extension work; and second, matriculated members who shall register with the institute and pursue an approved course of study. A nominal registration fee is required to cover the cost of postage and stationery. The services of the officers and fellows are entirely free.

An annual meeting of the institute is provided, at which time officers shall be elected and regular business transacted. The institute is open to all, and an invitation is extended to all those who have teaching qualifications to assist in this work, and to all those who desire assistance to enroll as students.

Trusting that this may meet with your approval, we submit the same for the institute.

WALTER W. SMITH, Secretary of the Meetings.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 11, 1914.

The work of the Graceland Extension Institute was by motion indorsed.

By motion it was ordered that a General Conference be convened on April 6, 1915, the place being left to the First Presidency.

The First Presidency nominated for general church chorister A. N. Hoxie, jr. The nomination was approved.

The committee on tracts was abolished, and the matter formerly done by said committee was referred to the First Presidency, as a function of their office.

The committee on organization of quorums was discussed, the work of the committee being referred to the First Presidency to direct as developments require.

The First Presidency was authorized to appoint delegates to national conventions and conferences in such instances as in their judgment the interests of the church could be served by the attendance of delegates representing the body.

As the advisory member of the Sunday school executive board for the First Presidency President E. A. Smith was nominated by the Presidency, said nomination being confirmed by the conference.

The committee on vacancies on the Board of Auditors, President F. M. Smith, J. W. Rushton and H. A. Stebbins, was sustained.

At 7.45 the oratorio "The Holy City," was repeated in the upper auditorium for the benefit of those who could not attend at the former renditions. In the lower auditorium the speaker was R. W. Farrell, assisted by J. O. Dutton.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15.

At 8 a. m. the fifth lecture, by S. A. Burgess, on comparative religions, was delivered, President F. M. Smith in charge.

The nine o'clock prayer service was in charge of John Smith and D. E. Powell.

The speaker at 10.45 was J. W. Davis, assisted by L. W. Fike.

The session at 2 p. m. was called to order by President F. M. Smith. Number 297 was sung. A. B. Phillips offered prayer.

Minutes were read and approved.

For the advisory member of the Sunday school executive for the Quorum of Twelve, J. W. Rushton was presented by the Twelve and approved by the conference.

Committee to the American Peace Congress at Saint Louis reported. The report was approved, and a copy was ordered submitted to the secretary of the American Peace Society.

The following was presented as the will of the Lord as revealed to President Joseph Smith for the direction and government of the church:

To the Officers, Delegates, and Members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Conference Assembled; Greeting: In agreement with the notice for the general fast of the church to be observed on the first Sunday, being the fifth day of April, 1914, I, Joseph Smith, president of the church, in common with the custom of the brotherhood, observed the rule requiring the fast, and spent that day in meditation and prayer upon the work of God and our present duty in the affairs intrusted to our care. Before the hour of breaking the fast came, I was blessed by the presence of the Holy Spirit resting upon me in quiet assurance and in power. In the still small voice which giveth light and understanding to the intelligence of man, exalting the soul and sanctifying the spirit, there came unto me the directing voice of Him whose work we are engaged in.

Thus saith the Spirit unto the church: The time has now come when the necessities of the work require that the servants of the church, Bishops Edwin A. Blakeslee and Edmund L. Kelley, should be more closely associated in the carrying on of the financial affairs of the church and caring for the various organizations requiring the expenditure of the moneys collected from the membership of the church and the care of the properties belonging to the church as an organization under the laws of the church and of the land. To accomplish this object the servant of the church, Edwin A. Blakeslee, should make himself more thoroughly acquainted with the affairs in the office of the bishopric, that he may be better prepared to advise, strengthen, and aid in controlling the affairs of the bishopric to the successful accomplishment of the object in view when he was called and ordained to the bishopric.

The Spirit saith further, that it is expedient that additional aid be given to the bishopric in charge of the general affairs of the finances, and to do this Richard C. Kelley, son of my servant Bishop Edmund L. Kelley, should be called and ordained to the office of an elder, that he may act with the bishopric in case of necessities and to work in the office of the bishop in looking after and caring for the affairs appertaining to that office; and in due time, if he approve himself in this work, he should receive an ordination to the high priesthood which would authorize him to act fully as a part of the bishopric.

The Spirit saith further, that the spirit of distrust and want of confidence in those who are called and ordained to act in the various responsible positions in the priesthood and in authority in the church is unbecoming those professing faith in God, Jesus Christ his Son, and the Holy Spirit of truth, and evinces a serious lack of that charity which Paul, an apostle of Christ, declared to be the quality of Christian virtue which thinketh no evil. Those who go out from the assemblies and solemn conclaves of the church should exercise great care in their ministration abroad both to the branches where they may officiate and in their preaching the gospel to them outside, to avoid sowing seeds of distrust and suspicion either in public ministration or in private conversation. The church has been admonished heretofore in this respect and the Spirit saith again, it is unbecoming to the character and calling of them who administer in the name of Jesus Christ the Lord.

In witness whereof I, Joseph Smith, president and servant of the church, hereto set my hand this fourteenth day of April, in the year of our Lord, 1914.

(Signed) JOSEPH SMITH.

The junior members of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, the seventies, the high priests, the Order of Evangelists, the Order of Bishops, the elders and the members of the Aaronic priesthood in turn reported that the communication had been duly considered by them, and that it had been received as the instruction and revelation of God to the church.

The communication was by motion adopted as a revelation from God, and was ordered published in future editions of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

By motion, the revelation as adopted was ordered published as a supplement to the HERALD and Ensign in a form suitable to be inserted in the copies of Doctrine and Covenants in the hands of the ministry and members.

The assembly arose and sang, "We thank thee, O God for a prophet," and President E. A. Smith pronounced the benediction.

In the upper auditorium at 7.45 the speaker was A. B. Phillips, assisted by T. J. Sheldon. At the same hour W. W. Smith delivered his fifth lecture on homiletics in the lower room.

THURSDAY, APRIL 16.

At 8 a. m. S. A. Burgess delivered his sixth and last lecture on comparative religions.

The prayer meeting at nine o'clock was in charge of M. H. Bond and W. H. Garrett.

At 10.45 the speaker was J. M. Terry, assisted by James McKiernan.

President F. M. Smith announced number 21 as the opening song for the business session at 2 p. m. W. H. Kelley offered prayer.

Minutes were read, corrected and approved.

E. A. Blakeslee and R. C. Kelley, not in attendance at the business session the day previous, by request spoke briefly as to their willingness to engage in the work suggested in the revelation adopted at the previous meeting. Elder Blakeslee stated that he was willing to occupy as indicated. R. C. Kelley requested that his ordination be deferred until he received light with reference to his call, and asked the prayers of all that the light desired might be given.

The ordination of Richard C. Kelley was referred to the First Presidency with power to act.

The Committee on Archæology submitted a lengthy report. Those especially interested in the work represented by this committee may find the text of the report as appearing in the published minutes of the conference.

The committee on archæology, F. M. Sheehy, William Kelley, A. B. Phillips, R. Etzenhouser and William Woodhead, was continued.

The setting apart of Hubert Case as a counselor to Bishop Ellis Short was authorized.

Second Quorum of Seventy reported in part:

During this conference Columbus Scott, who has presided over this quorum from its organization, presented his resignation as president of the quorum, which was duly accepted. Arthur B. Phillips was selected as his successor, which selection was ratified by the council of Presidents of Seventy.

Resolutions of appreciation were adopted and presented to President Scott for his long and faithful service as president of the quorum. He is still a member of our quorum. Our present number is fifty-eight.

The Quorum of Twelve recommended I. M. Smith for ordination to the office of evangelist. The recommendation was approved.

The committee on boundary lines recommended that Tulsa County, Oklahoma, be taken from the Eastern Oklahoma District, and annexed to the Central Oklahoma District; that the State of Colorado be divided, the continental divide to be the dividing line; that the State of Montana be divided, the Western boundary lines of the present counties of Valley, Dawson and Rosebud be the dividing line; that the petition of the Nauvoo District asking for the annexation of Adams County be referred back with suggestion that this district confer with the Central Illinois District in the matter. These recommendations were adopted.

The Order of Evangelists reported eleven members in attendance at the conference. Their meetings had been conducted under a spirit of unity, peace and good will.

The Third Quorum of Seventy reported twenty-two members present at the conference, including R. D. Davis, D. J. Williams and W. E. Shakespeare, ordained at this conference. Twenty-one members reported 2,699 sermons, 195 baptisms, 27 ordinations, 21 new openings, 3 debates.

The Seven Presidents of Seventy reported all members of the council present at the conference. The spirit of earnestness and anxiety for the best interests of the work had been manifested.

The First Quorum of Seventy reported forty-five members present. Sixty-five members reported 7,935 sermons, 598 baptisms, 84 ordinations, 6 branches organized, 25 Sunday schools, 3 Religios, 86 new openings, 7 debates. The quorum was reported full.

The elders reported one hundred and fifty-eight attending the conference. The best of spirits had prevailed. The meetings had been educational.

The Order of Bishops reported ten bishops and three counselors in attendance. Associations with the First Presidency and Twelve had helped them to more clearly discern the relationship that should exist between them.

G. W. Blair was selected to succeed himself as a member of the Board of Auditors.

On nomination by Bishop E. L. Kelley, Bishop E. A. Blakeslee was chosen as a member of the Board of Publication to succeed Bishop Kelley.

The Library Commission was sustained.

The committee on historic relics was abolished, and the work of said committee referred to the historical department.

The committee on publication of reports to General Conference was dismissed and the work of the committee referred to the First Presidency and Church Secretary.

Number 14 was sung, J. W. Wight dismissing.

Hubert Case was the speaker at 7.45, assisted by W. A. Smith.

An ordination meeting was held under the direction of the Twelve, at 7.30 p. m.

FRIDAY, APRIL 17.

At 8 a. m. W. W. Smith delivered his sixth and last lecture on homiletics.

The prayer meeting at 9 o'clock was in charge of Asa Cochran, assisted by J. F. Garver.

At 10.45 the speaker was E. E. Long, assisted by G. W. Robley.

The business session at 2 p. m. was called to order by President F. M. Smith. Number 91 was sung. Prayer was offered by F. A. Smith.

Minutes read and approved.

The joint council of First Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy reported that in the matter concerning the Sanitarium referred to said council the report of the joint council of the First Presidency and Twelve had been adopted.

It was moved that the report of the First Presidency, Twelve and Seventy on the Sanitarium matter be adopted. The motion prevailed.

Bishop E. L. Kelley was authorized to make such changes as he desired, if any, on the Saints' Homes Committee.

The following committees were continued: On church offices building; on teachers edition of Holy Scriptures; on translation; on juvenile history.

G. W. Harrington resigned from membership on the board of trustees of the Independence Sanitarium. Charles Fry was selected to fill the vacancy.

Committee on revision of Rules of Order and Debate reported progress and was granted further time.

The following were by separate motion sustained: Joseph Smith as president, seer and revelator to the church, and F. M. Smith and E. A. Smith as his counselors; the Quorum of Twelve; Presiding Bishopric; Order of Bishops; Quorums of Seventy; Quorum of High Priests; Order of Evangelists; General Standing High Council; Heman C. Smith, Church Historian; Joseph Luff, Physician to the Church; R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary; C. I. Carpenter, Church Recorder.

J. W. Rushton resigned from membership on the board of trustees of the Independence Sanitarium. E. A. Blakeslee was selected to succeed him.

Bishop E. L. Kelley resigned from the Board of Trustees of the Independence Sanitarium, and Doctor Charles Keown was selected to succeed him.

The daily press and reporters were formally thanked for the consideration shown the Saints and conference.

The representatives of the press present thanked the Saints and conference for the courtesy extended them.

General Sunday School Association, Zion's Religious Literary Society and the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service were sustained.

Minutes were read and approved.

Bishop E. L. Kelley announced as Saints' Homes committee Joseph Roberts, Lorenzo Hayer, R. J. Lambert.

The list of appointments as made by the First Presidency and the First Presidency and Twelve were read.

A motion to adjourn prevailed.

Number 160 was sung, and President Joseph Smith pronounced the benediction.

WHAT MUST I DO TO BE SAVED?

"Sirs, what must I do to be saved?"—Acts 16: 30.

This is the language of the Philippian jailer to Paul and Silas. The circumstances that led up to this question are somewhat peculiar. Paul and Silas while at Philippi had gone where prayer was wont to be made. While there they entered into conversation with the women who had gathered. A woman of Thyatira named Lydia listened to them, gave heed to things spoken of by Paul, and was later baptized.

As they went to prayer on another occasion a young damsel possessed with a spirit of divination met them. She brought her masters much gain by her soothsaying; one of her statements was, "These men are the servants of the most high God, which show unto us the way of salvation." She followed them a number of days, and continued to annoy them. Finally Paul, in the name of Christ, commanded the spirit to come out of her. When her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone they caught Paul and Silas and drew them into a market place under the rulers, accused them of being Jews, of troubling their city exceedingly, and of teaching customs which were not lawful for them to receive, or to observe, being Romans.

They were beaten with many stripes and put in prison, the jailer being charged to keep them safely. While in the prison their zeal was not lessened, nor their spirit to worship cooled, for we find them praying and singing praises unto God.

Suddenly there was an earthquake and the foundations of the prison were shaken. Immediately all the doors were opened, the bands on all the prisoners were loosed. The jailer, awakening out of sleep and seeing the situation, drew his sword to take his life, when Paul cried out, "Do thyself no harm, for we are all here."

* WHAT MUST I DO?

After making a light the jailer fell trembling at the feet of Paul and Silas, and asked the question, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" We know not what may have been this man's conception of salvation before this. We see that his conscience has been awakened, and that he realizes there is something for him to do to be saved.

This same question has been ringing down through the corridors of time, generation after generation, until to-day we find ourselves ever confronted with it. The conscientious person either in or out of a church finds himself repeating it over and over again,—What must I do to be saved? Yes, What must I do to be saved, is the all-important question.

To note the many answers given from pulpit, rostrum, and street corner, one would think it an easy matter, and probably wonder why the people en masse do not accept the various answers. But they do not, and it seems to be no fault of the divines, for they try to make the way as easy as possible for everybody. The cry that is heard everywhere is, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." To emphasize the correctness of the cry we are cited to the following passages of scripture: John 3: 16; Acts 16: 31; Romans 5: 1; Ephesians 2: 8. In nearly every instance these texts are interpreted in a way that isolates them from their relation to and bearing upon other texts; consequently they are robbed of their true and full meaning. In this isolated condition we are asked to use them as a foundation on which to build our hope of salvation.

AN UNSAFE METHOD.

The question that necessarily and very naturally arises in the mind is, Is it safe to separate one text from all the others related to the important question of salvation and thus make it do duty in establishing a basis upon which to work out the problem? We think it very unsafe; in fact, we consider it very dangerous, and feel that we are only deceiving ourselves and others if we permit ourselves to do such work. Let us see if we can impress the danger of this method by way of counter argument.

We kindly ask the reader to go with us to the third chapter of the book of Luke. Here we find John the Baptist in the country around Jordan preaching "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." He calls the attention of the people to the time of restoration; tells them to bring forth fruit worthy of repentance! tells them that the ax is laid at the root of the tree, and that every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire. The people are touched with the message, and they come to him and ask, "What shall we do?" Their consciences, like that of the Philippian jailer, were awakened to the necessity of their doing something.

Now, let us take the answer of this man and isolate it from all other scripture that has a bearing on the same question and make it do duty for us in sustaining a religion that we will suppose we want to start among the people. I presume our right to do this will not be questioned; for if others have a right to isolate and separate passages of scripture to support their religious beliefs, the same right should not be denied us. So we take the answer of John in verse 11: "He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise." Ah, that is splendid! It will make a fine religion; and, the best of all, we can support it from the Bible.

Now, dear reader, do we not find many who advocate just such a religion as this? And do they not claim that if we do good to our fellow man that is all that is required of us? That we do not need to belong to a church? That we may be saved outside the church? So we would have no trouble in securing converts to the answer of John, if we were to build our hope of being saved upon it. We might present to the poor and needy the benefits of this religion, and add them to our ranks, and thus have a host of members to help spread the gospel of giving. We could be charitable and add a little more scriptural teaching, and say, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Now I fancy objectors arising and telling us there was no saving efficacy in this doctrine, for it does not say thou shalt not steal, or lie, or commit adultery, or any other thing that is morally wrong. They admit it is good to be charitable, but tell us our religion is too narrow, for it does not help us morally and spiritually.

Friends, read carefully John 3: 16: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life," and then answer and tell what there is in that verse that forbids any immoralities. There is nothing, is there? All it presents to us is that God loved the world and gave his Son, and that if we believe on him we shall live; no "thou shalt not" anywhere in the verse. Can not we see the dilemma we get into when trying to bolster up a pet theory with just one passage of scripture?

TURNING THE PICTURE.

To illustrate: A man becomes ill; his friends visit him; they advise him to call in a physician whom they highly recommend; they tell him how reliable this physician is in every way, careful in diagnosis, and conscientious in administering medicines. He consents to have this physician. He comes, carefully examines the patient, decides on the disease, and then prescribes for the man. In a few days his friends call and find he is not following out the advice of the doctor and does not take that which is prescribed. He manifests confidence in the physician; believes he is a splendid doctor, and that he has good judgment, etc., but thinks it of no use to take his medicine, believing he will get along just as well by pursuing a course of his own.

Turn the picture: Christ, the great physician, comes into the world; he makes a diagnosis of man, finds he is sin sick, prescribes for him, and tells him the remedies that will make him well. Man concludes that he, the Son of God, is a splendid physician, able to heal, and has every confidence in him; but for some reason or other does not think it necessary to follow out his advice or to do as he prescribes, believing he can be saved without all of the gospel of salvation.

What do you think of the man who believes in the doctor, but who will not follow his advice? Do you think he has as much confidence in him as he pretends? He might praise him highly and laud him to the skies; but when he ignores his advice, and is not willing to do as he prescribes, he indicates that he has very little confidence in the man as a physician.

Is this any less true with reference to Christ, the great physician? What good to believe he is the Son of God, that he came to save the world, heal the sin sick, and yet not be willing to take his advice, or to do as he prescribes? Does it not indicate that we have not near the amount of confidence in him we profess to have? To believe in Christ evidently means to believe in the message he brought to the world, to believe in his work as a whole, and not in part.

GOOD RULES.

There are a few good rules we can safely follow when reading the Scriptures: First, learn who the speaker is; second, who it is that is being spoken to; third, the subject matter under consideration.

Let us apply these rules to John 3: 16: "For God so loved the world," etc. Who is the speaker? Jesus. Yes; but we did not find it out in this verse. Who is spoken to? Nicodemus. Yes; but we did not find that out in this verse, either. We have to go to the very first part of the chapter to learn these facts. There we find that there was a man by the name of Nicodemus who came to Jesus by night, acknowledging that he was a teacher sent from God. Now what is the subject matter under consideration between the two? The birth of water; the birth of the Spirit; God's love; the sacrifice of Christ; and a belief in Christ in order to be saved.

We readily see that to learn this we have to read all of the sixteen verses, and not only the sixteenth verse. Jesus told Nicodemus that except he was born again he could not see the kingdom of God. The man did not understand how it could be done. Jesus said, "Except ye be born of water and the Spirit, ye can not enter into the kingdom of God."

The man evidently marveled at this philosophy, for Jesus said, "Marvel not that I say unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is everyone that is born of the Spirit."

Nicodemus did not yet understand, and asked, "How can these things be?" Jesus explained further, told him of Moses lifting up the serpent in the wilderness, and said, "Even so must the Son of man be lifted up." Then it was that Jesus called his attention to God's love, and said, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

It was now the proper time for Jesus to tell this to Nicodemus, for he had been telling him of his gospel to save in the way of being born again, and of the work of the Holy Spirit, and of the condition of a newborn child in Christ and the kingdom of God. Now, Nicodemus, if you believe in the Son of God—that is, believe his message, his doctrine, and in his mission,—and are born again, you may have everlasting life. It was a matter of having sufficient confidence in the Great Physician to do as he prescribed, that spiritual health and salvation might come in the place of sin-sickness.

How easy to understand the scripture referred to when we follow out the rules suggested, learning the speaker, the one spoken to, the subject matter under consideration—no wresting a passage from its relationship to other passages; no destroying the meaning of the passage quoted; no misrepresenting the intent and meaning of the author of that which is quoted; but a collection of facts upon the subject by reason of closely following the narration, and paying attention to the instruction given. What is true in applying the rules to this reading is true with reference to all other scripture.

BELIEF ALONE NOT SUFFICIENT.

Let us now note the reply of Paul and Silas to the Philippian jailer when he asked what he must do to be saved: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." Paul was the speaker, the Philippian jailer the one spoken to; salvation the subject under consideration. The jailer is instructed to have faith, to believe on Christ; and this was very essential, for it was a stepping-stone on the way to believe the "word of the Lord" that Paul preached to him; and that he did believe is evidenced by his acceptance of the message of life, and being baptized with his household that very night.

We can readily see that belief alone was not sufficient. Other things were necessary, and the jailer was quite willing to do the other things. If we examine the other scripture referred to (Romans 5: 1) and take that verse from all others, it teaches justification by faith; and of course in its isolated condition we could not very well see repentance, baptism, or any other doctrine specified in it; but I want to parallel the ninth verse of the same chapter with it by separating it from the chapter and all other scripture; "Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him." How easy, isolating this verse, to argue that the blood of Jesus justifies us; we do not need to repent, be baptized, have faith, or do anything to work out our salvation, for the blood of Jesus has done it all; we are justified by it, and that settles the whole matter. Can we not see the danger in such work, and the folly of him who would want to isolate scripture and then interpret it as mentioned above? Yet that is the way many people are doing; and not only the laity of religious organizations, but many of the ministers as well.

We are justified by faith when we do the will of Christ, even as he did the will of his Father. We are justified by his blood when we follow him, obey his gospel, and do all that he has commanded us to do; but we will have to associate many passages of scripture with the ones given above in order to learn the will of God, to learn the commandments of our blessed Master.

WORKS NECESSARY.

We now turn to Ephesians 2: 8, 9, "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast."

If we take this verse by itself and do not refer to that which precedes it, or that which follows it, nor to any other scripture, we might make out a good case of being saved by just believing. We might argue, as stated, not by works, lest any man boast. But when we connect it with the rest of the chapter, we find the Apostle Paul presenting to the Ephesian saints the love and mercy of God through his Son. Through grace (favor) he condescends to save by faith, not of works, (men's works that they might originate to save) lest we boast. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."

This places a different interpretation on verses eight and nine, and we are able to see just what Paul meant when he said we are saved by grace, through faith. Yes, faith in God, faith in the Son of God, faith in the gospel of his dear Son, and faith in the good works God ordained we should walk in.

Let us see if we can learn what it means to be saved by grace. The Scripture teaches us that we are of a dual nature, physical and spiritual; or, as is sometimes stated, body and spirit. God in his infinite wisdom, and by reason of his matchless knowledge, was able to see man's necessity in a physical way, hence made provision for him when he placed him on this earth. God gave the sunshine, the rain, the atmosphere, the soil, the gases, and all things that were conducive to man's physical welfare, including the vegetable kingdom that physical life might be perpetuated, and man have his needs supplied. And all this God gave through his favor—saved by favor (by grace).

But suppose a man were to purchase a farm, scratch the dirt a little, put in the grain, and then go out under a big shade tree and spend the summer,—what would be the result? Some of his friends might call his attention to the condition of his crop, and tell him the weeds were taking it. They might tell him if he did not cultivate the crop he need not expect to harvest when the reaping time came. He might reply, "Oh, yes I will, God is love, he is mercy. He saves me by grace, through faith. I do not need to work, or labor in my fields, for God gives the grain, and sends the sunshine, and the rain, and all other things necessary to my good. I have implicit faith in him; I know he will save by grace, through faith. There is nothing for me to do, for if I work I might boast: God does it all."

Friends, when will this man be saved physically? Does God's grace (favor, through faith) reach him? I fancy I hear some one saying, No, if the man expects to be saved, he must accept the means God has provided, and work in harmony with God's physical laws to secure the desired result.

Now the other side of man comes up. If we are dual creatures and God saves us physically by grace, has he not provided for our spiritual needs? He certainly has, when he gave the gospel through his Son, and sent him here to build his church. In 2 Peter 1: 3, 4 we read:

According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue. [Emphasis mine. J. A. T.] Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Now suppose we, like the man who would not cultivate his crops, go and sit down on the stool of doing nothing, and say it is not necessary to repent or be baptized, or have hands laid upon us for the gift of the Holy Spirit, or to do any works lest we might boast, for God saves us by grace (favor) through faith,—if we do that, when will we be saved? When will we ever enjoy the benefits of his grace through faith if we neglect to use the very means and spiritual laws he has proffered to us? Like the man who trusted God for rain and sunshine, atmosphere, and other blessings, and who would not use them or work in harmony with them, would not cultivate the grain, we will be saying, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved."—Jeremiah 8: 20. So we see we are saved by grace, through faith, only as we apply the means of grace he has given us. Then what must we do to be saved? "Repent ye, and believe the gospel."—Mark 1: 15 (emphasis mine).

THE GOSPEL.

In the commission of Christ to his apostles we read, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth [the gospel] and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not [the gospel] shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.)

The gospel is composed of fundamental principles, (Hebrews 6: 1-3: Faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment), and when we read carefully the New Testament Scriptures we find Christ and his apostles teaching faith in God and Christ, and in the gospel, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins. They also taught and practiced laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit, ordination to the ministry, healing of the sick, and blessing of little children. The resurrection from the dead was the great hope that stimulated all along the pathway. In eternal judgment they saw the justice, mercy and love of God displayed; and always reminded the people that they should be rewarded and punished commensurate with the good or evil done by them.

Paul, in writing to the Roman saints said he was not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it was the power of God unto salvation; and when writing to the Galatian saints he warned them against those who would pervert the gospel, and told them, "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."

Dear readers, we do not wish to meet with God's displeasure in preaching a different gospel than Christ preached, nor for perverting the gospel; then let us see to it that we do not obey a different gospel and practice it, and thus offend our heavenly Father. Let us study and pray to know his will, to understand the truth, and be willing to obey it, that we may have his Holy Spirit to comfort us, to guide and lead us into all truth, to be the educational factor in our lives, so that we may grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth in Christ Jesus, and come "unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ"; and thus be saved by grace, through faith; be justified by faith, even by the blood of the Master.

May God help us to see his salvation and walk therein with peace, plenty, and contentment.

A HEDRICKITE REVELATION.

Our friends of the Church of Christ (commonly called the Hedrickite Church) are constantly asserting that the Reorganized Church is guilty of changing and leaving out certain parts of revelations because they do not suit our fancy. This bald assertion comes as a result of our not being willing to indorse the Book of Commandments which is held sacred by the Hedrickites. The church has never as a body nor through its leading representatives officers indorsed the Book of Commandments, for the reason that many errors existed in it; but we have always been ready to defend the Doctrine and Covenants as the law to govern the church.

In a recent issue of a publication known as the Evening and Morning Star, for February 19, 1914, attention is called to a certain pretended revelation which they have indorsed as a church as coming through Granville Hedrick, dated April 24, 1864. For reasons best known to the editor of the Evening and Morning Star, only a small part of the so-called revelation is quoted. It perhaps would have made very interesting reading had the editor given us the following as a part of that same revelation (italics mine):

And inasmuch as my church and people have been driven and scattered, therefore take council of me, your Lord and director, who says unto you: prepare yourselves and be ready against the appointed time which I have set and prepared for you, that you may return in the year A. D. 1867, which time the Lord, by your prayers and faithfulness in all things, will open and prepare a way before you that you may begin to gather at that time. Hear now, O ye people of my church—take council together that you may escape the awful calamity of war and famine which shall fall upon this people of the Northern States, beginning in the year 1871, at which time the sword shall fall heavily upon the people, and famine shall quickly follow, and thus shall the sword continue to be drawn, and by bloodshed shall this Nation war and contend until they are overthrown and their liberties taken away from them, which shall terminate in the year 1878, and thus anarchy and destruction shall reign throughout the dominions of the wicked, while you, the people of my church, shall be assembled and grow up into a peaceable multitude where I, the Lord your God, will raise up a strong and mighty people, whose delight will not be to shed blood, but will trust in God and live in peace for I, the Lord God, will protect them.—The Truth Teller, vol. 1, p. 4, July, A. D. 1864.

When we read the above purported prophecy it can be easily discerned why the editor failed to quote that part which is here given. We are almost astonished that he would even hint that there ever was such a revelation bearing the indorsement of that body of believers containing so many untruths as this one does. In fact, it would be difficult to find a document mentioning so many events and dates that have failed so completely of fulfillment as predicted, even in the remotest sense.

INDIAN SHAKERS.

A strange new religion has developed among the Indians of the northern Pacific coast. While under no influence from the Shaker communities once conspicuous in our eastern States, this new movement among the Indians seems to be of similar character. The Home Mission Monthly, New York, describes the movement as "a strange mixture of Catholicism, Protestantism, and Indian belief and ceremonies." The religion was first preached "by an Indian who pretended to have died and have been sent back to life again," to spread the new faith. Miss Helen W. Clark, writing in the same magazine, says that its founders were not satisfied with the quieter services of the churches they had joined, and proceeded to found one for themselves. They seem to draw many followers after them. Miss Clark, representing the Presbyterian Women's Board of Home Missions at Neah Bay, Washington, personally encountered this people, concerning whom she says:

When the agent forbade the medicine-men from practicing their rites, and ordered them to secure a doctor, they were not ready for it. When a child was sick and they could not use the tom-toms to scare off evil spirits, they lit candles around the child and rang bells. Working themselves into a frenzy, one of them began to shake, another and another was added, and finally "shaking" became very popular. Later it became part of their religion to confess their sins with uplifted hands, and stand in that position till they began to shake. Those who are nervous and weak shake almost immediately; others, sometimes, have to stand many hours. When the windows are open they do not so readily get into a frenzy, so they prefer a tight room. The old people stand it pretty well, though when they began it killed off the weaker ones. Many of the younger Indians are too nervous, and have had to give it up. Those who have left it say it is very exhausting, that they feel fine at the time, but for the next two days are useless.

Miss Clark says that the leaders of the cult seem to have a strange power over the younger people. Those coming to the meetings merely out of curiosity are told to "shake"; they obey, and find themselves Shakers. She says further:

When one is up for membership they circle around him and brush off his sins. Some open doors or windows and throw them out. They are always shaking over the sick, and any one shaken over must not only fee the leaders but feast the crowd.

The leader went to a house where a child was ill, and, pointing at her, said repeatedly, "There is nothing the matter with you." The child died within a half hour; but they get out of things of this kind very smoothly. . . .

One Indian Shaker said to another Indian: "Come and shake; it's as good as getting drunk. You tingle all over." This I believe to be true, and that that is the reason why those who shake have no desire to drink. It takes its place. A missionary said: "Take alcohol out of whisky and the dance out of Shakerism, and the Indians would not care for either." He is right; it is the intoxication that draws.

A FALTERING AND STAMMERING CHURCH.

Reverend David H. Fonse, pastor of the First Reformed Church, Denver, Colorado, in preaching on "A faltering and stammering church," February 1, is reported in the Rocky Mountain News for February 2, as having said in part:

The need of the Christian body is not a new subscription to the doctrine of prayer as a fact and force in the life of Jesus and during apostolic times. Everybody is ready to believe those facts, and modern psychology is making the whole story credible for those of little faith. The need of the Christian church is the conviction that the laws and forces, operative nineteen hundred years ago, are operative to-day; that the prayer results of that distant time may be duplicated now, and that greater and wider reaching demonstrations should characterize our modern Christian life.

DEPENDS ON MEMORY.

If our religion is being discredited to-day, it is where she stands, in the midst of the terrible demands of a tense and exacting civilization, with only a memory and a record centuries old, to offer men who are going mad for the want of something that will hold them up and give them a sense of security amid the falling walls of their air castles and the crumbling of their human endeavors. Mere profession of the supremest truth is cruel mockery to those who need help but to whom help is never offered. It is like the cathedral bells of Saint Petersburg booming through the dungeon walls the response, "Have mercy, O Lord," while mercy is a stranger in the prison corridors.

It is with confusion of mind and face that we churchmen stand before the problems, not of the church, touching her maintenance and existence, though they are serious enough, but the crying, vexing problems of our communities. If we are anything, we are the salt of our cities, but unless we have a decided savor, the mocking crowd may justly deny our claim. Indeed, what are we, custodians of an ancient doctrine of prayer, a mere museum of sacred antiquities? Never! We are they who, in the midst of gigantic material achievements, profess to the discovery and experience of spiritual influences which are superior to every other. We are in the world, not to talk about prayer but to pray, not to sing and preach about marvelous and infinite forces, but to use them.

A prayerless church halts and stutters before the claim of Jesus that the works he did we should do also, and that we should do even greater works. We have been satisfied to look back nineteen hundred years and reverently watch him as he went about healing the sick and restoring the lunatic. In so doing we have failed, either to glorify him or to honor his teaching.

THE CHURCH MUST BE BOLD.

The church needs a consummate boldness in attempting the use of those powers which lie back of her Christian philosophy. The world will respect the church that does things, not necessarily the church which is able to assemble the largest crowds, but the church that discloses to weary men a spiritual law which will, in the sphere of man's highest nature, work as definitely and unfailingly as the law of gravitation in the physical, a principle as workable and as practical in the region of the moral and spiritual as electricity in the natural.

The church hesitates and stammers when she does not believe her own doctrine, when she fails to operate her professed forces.

Letter Department

ODELL, TEXAS, February 25, 1914.

Editors Herald: There are only a few of us here. We do not have regular services, as we have no church building. Occasionally some of the elders come and we have meeting in Odell. Brother Glauud Kuykendall held a meeting for us in December. Notwithstanding the bad weather, each night brought a large crowd of both old and young. Brother Kuykendall possesses that congenial spirit which makes everyone feel welcome. Much prejudice was removed. At the close of the meeting the editor of the local paper gave us quite a writeup, and insisted that Brother Kuykendall come back in the spring and hold another meeting. We think if he is able to do this he will gather the fruits of his labor while here.

Brother S. W. Simmons has been loyal to our little band and ready at all times to render his best service.

How wonderful is this gospel. Once lodged in the heart it is not probable that it will be uprooted.

Truth is abiding and must in the process of time prevail. May God remember his Saints, and the poor and needy creatures of the world.

Your brother in Christ,

M. CROWNOVER.

GREYSTONE, RHODE ISLAND.

Editors Herald: A little over eight years ago I was asleep in bed when I suddenly awoke and saw a light at the foot of my bed and heard a voice say, "The church in which your father is, is the one true church of God." The light vanished and I again fell asleep. Father had joined the church the June previous. None of the family besides him belonged, though we attended the meetings at the home of my aunt, Sister A. Clough. When the Saints at Leeds, England, our nearest branch, heard of this they were surprised at my having the testimony of the truthfulness of the gospel before my baptism.

I wanted to be baptized but waited till mother was ready, and we were baptized on March 9, 1907, by Elder Thomas Taylor, in the Russian Baths, the church having no conveniences for the administration. We were confirmed the day after. Since that day I have never looked backward.

Four years ago we left England and came to America, with the best wishes of the Saints in our home district. We only live about five miles from the church at Providence, so go often and hear some good sermons from our pastor, James W. Davis, and others.

Having read the various means the other Saints are using to get their tithing in, I will tell you of ours. Our bishop, M. C. Fisher, has had some small cardboard boxes made with a slit in them. Into this we can slip a nickel or dime or any amount we feel like, and take it in to his agents every sacrament Sunday. The boxes are numbered, and each one gets the credit for the money paid. We hope in this manner to be able to contribute tithing more regularly.

We ask the prayers of all the Saints in behalf of Brother Edward F. Yerrington, our school superintendent, who is very ill. We ask that he may be spared to continue his work among us. He was a faithful worker for the church. We feel that we need more workers instead of losing one. We are thankful his life has been spared thus far.

We ask an interest in your prayers that we may remain faithful to the end, and that my brothers may be brought into the church to work for their Master.

ALICE FIRBY.

SAINT JOHNS, KANSAS, February 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: Are we as a church making the spiritual progress we should? And if not, why not? Is it not because we as individuals have not lived just as we should? The church is a great, organized body, with many members, comprising officers, from prophet to deacon, together with members, and if any of us step aside there is a certain shadow cast over the church as an organization, and part of the light which should illuminate and penetrate into the darkness of the world and by its beauty draw the wandering stranger into the true fold of God is obscured.

Oh, think of it, Saints, our lives should be living testimonies to those who are hungering and thirsting after righteousness! Not one, whether he be of priesthood or membership, can step aside without casting a shadow over the entire body. Let us examine ourselves and see if our consciences will justify our conduct; and if not, then let us try to place ourselves in line, that we may be prepared for our work and to meet our Savior.

We have the most beautiful doctrine in the world, and should and will receive the same wonderful blessings as did Christ's children in all ages, if we will fully conform to his law. But, Saints, we should shun the very appearance of evil, lest we cast a stumblingblock in the way of some others, and keep them waiting without the fold of Christ.

One thing we should practice is self-reserve; for the stranger seeking a pure and great religion is ever watchful of the conduct of officers and members of an organization they expect to join.

We can not be too careful in training our children. Nor should we think a religious training alone will prepare them to meet the battles of the world. They should be trained from the cradle up in regard to self-reserve. As soon as their little minds are developed sufficiently, we should unfold to them gradually the mysteries of creation, teaching them at the same time that these talks are sacred, and that they should talk of those things only with papa and mamma, who love them and would protect their dear little lives from harm. We should teach them to be careful in their conversation and allow no one, especially of the opposite sex, to become too familiar with them. Thus would many a home be saved, and many a heartache spared. Do not think just because they are children all will be well with them.

The boys and girls of to-day are to be the men and women of to-morrow. Let us as parents awake to meet the demands of duty and try to carefully guide and guard their little footsteps. For has not God intrusted these dear little ones to us? And is it not our duty to watch carefully over them and seek to develop them in such a way as will meet with his approval?

Older ones should be careful; yes, very careful of their own conduct, for has not Christ said, Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father's notice. The very hairs of your head are numbered. Fear ye not, therefore; ye are of more value than many sparrows.

Saints, let us awake and with Paul put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore, let us take unto ourselves the whole armor of God, that we may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand, having our loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness, and our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. Above all taking the shield of faith, wherewith we shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked; and taking the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all Saints.

Dear Saints, let us not think, We will have a good time for a little season, and then settle down to spiritual things. Life is suspended by a single thread, and we know not when we shall be ushered over the valley of death. Then let us awake and sacrifice those pleasures of this life that are not in harmony with the Spirit of our Savior, that we may not be afraid to meet our heavenly Father.

BETTIE MADDEN.

ELWOOD, KANSAS, February 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: I thought I would write you in regard to the work of God in the town of Elwood. We have been having Sunday school and preaching in my house since we were organized last July. I do not own the place and will have to move out the first of March. The house where I am going is not large enough for the holding of services.

There are only a few Saints in Elwood, but as there are a few who are investigating and seem to be very much interested, we thought it would be much better if we could raise money enough to put up a small building. Then we could have a public place of worship, which would have a tendency to attract more of the outsiders to our meetings. People do not always like to go to a private house for meetings; and especially to the home of a Latter Day Saint.

We feel that there is a great work to be done in this little town. There are several whom we believe will come in with us before long. Our hearts' desire is that the work will prosper and grow, and that many precious souls may be added to our little flock in the near future.

W. O. WEBB.

PORCUPINE, WISCONSIN, February 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: We have just been enjoying a spiritual feast in the way of hearing the gospel preached in a simple, plain manner, attended with the Spirit and the power of the truth. It seems that more has been accomplished in the last three weeks than has previously been done in that number of years. Brother J. F. Curtis and Brother Leonard Houghton were with us. The attendance was large, increasing as the days passed during their stay. One was baptized; several more were made favorable, converted perhaps, awaiting more personal labor and encouragement before obeying.

We have a full corps of officers now. The writer was ordained a priest; Oron Knapp, teacher; John Longdorf, deacon. The Saints are all rejoicing in the work of the Lord here. Brother Curtis is the right man in the right place. He left here Thursday, February 26, on his way to Michigan to hold a debate with one of the representatives of the Christian Church.

WILLIAM LIVINGSTON.

BERLIN, NORTH DAKOTA, March 2, 1914.

Editors Herald: How precious this beautiful gospel becomes as we grow in the faith. I want to add my testimony to that of others that God liveth, and is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

I was recently made to realize the tender mercies of the loving Father in the rebuking of disease, both to myself and baby. For months I had suffered extremely from terrible pains in my stomach. I could sleep but very little; was up and down all through the night. I patiently waited until one of the elders came, when I was administered to, and the blessing was given. All praise be to our Lord and Savior, and God the Father.

Baby caught cold early last fall. It settled in his head and caused him to struggle for breath all during the night. It was painful to watch him. Our blessed Father gave relief by the laying on of hands, Elder Wagner being the officiating minister.

How close the Savior has seemed! When praying it did not seem that he was at a distance, but the presence seemed right in the room and I could speak as if to another.

Oh, what a joyful day when we can see his face, when he will come to reign victorious. Then will wickedness cease. Little children will be happy. No more factory grind for them. No leading of pure, innocent minds downward, and all shall be made right. May God hasten the day.

Saints, we can help to hasten that day by each one keeping his heart and mind pure. When tempted to sin, which means to think evil of our neighbor or become angry, or read trashy literature, or anything that tends to grieve the Holy Spirit, I find by bringing to my mind some beautiful passage of scripture, or a hymn, I can dispel from my mind evil thoughts or even grief. Praise God, he is an ever present help.

I am expecting to attend General Conference in April for the first time. My heart rejoices at the thought.

I have many times received encouragement from letters in the HERALD. I hope some one will be benefited by this testimony of God's goodness. I could not well be without the HERALD. It is always a feast on the day it comes to hand.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. H. HEISZLER.

BOYNE CITY, MICHIGAN, March 3, 1914.

Editors Herald: I read the item in a recent HERALD, the title of which was "A warning." Some people of the world certainly are dangerous. Not long ago while walking with a friend one evening a man stepped up to us and offered us some popcorn. I had been warned not to take anything from strangers, so I said I did not care for any. But he kept urging me to have some. When he found that neither of us would take any he went a short distance and threw it away. I am young and need the prayers of all the Saints.

I am your sister in the gospel,

AGNES BASHAW.

HAMILTON, ONTARIO, March 3, 1914.

Editors Herald: We had our church opening Sunday, March 1, when the upper auditorium of the neat little chapel was made sacred by celebrating in it the Lord's supper. The sacrament and social service began at 9 a. m., and thus was the Spirit of the Lord invited to be with us. We were not disappointed, for the gift of tongues and interpretation was made manifest unto us, reproving for division and commanding to become united and thus become one.

Brother G. C. Tomlinson was the speaker at 11 a. m., Brother John Shields at 3 p. m., and Brother James Pycok at 7 p. m. We had fairly good crowds at all the services, and we believe it was a day of profit to all who attended. We hope and pray this may be the beginning of brighter days for the work of God in the city of Hamilton. Our district president, Elder D. B. Perkins, was present, and in his usual cheery manner helped to make the services of the day a success.

The little handful of faithful Saints of this place under the leadership of Elder Charles Hannah deserve great credit for their untiring zeal, devotion, and great sacrifice in erecting this little "bethel" of praise, in what we might call "troublesome times."

The writer landed in Hamilton January 24, and since that time has been doing some preaching. Most of the time during the day I have been assisting Brother J. T. Thompson in putting the finishing touches on the interior of the building. The writer takes no credit to himself. Brother Joe certainly knows how to make a church look nice on the inside.

On Monday evening, March 2, a concert was held in the church under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary, which was certainly very entertaining. The proceeds are to be applied on the church debt, I understand.

We hope that in the near future better conditions may be brought about, and perfect unity prevail, that the word of life may be dispensed with greater power to those hungering and thirsting for the truth.

With kind regards for all God's people, I remain,

Yours for truth,

W. D. ELLIS.

TRYON, NEBRASKA, March 3, 1914.

Editors Herald: We enjoy reading the HERALD, especially the good letters from the brethren and sisters. I do not see how any Saint could get along without the church literature, which contains so much food for the soul.

I think it so interesting to read of the Indians awakening to the realization that their fathers really worshiped God. I rejoice to know that they are coming in so rapidly. And with tears of both joy and sorrow I read of the converted Jew. I sorrowed that they made the mistake, and rejoiced that some among them seem to be coming to the understanding that their forefathers erred and are willing on their part to repent. We are looking for these things, but it seems sometimes that they are coming a little faster than we are expecting.

Tryon is the place where the debate between Elder Etzenhouser and Elder Zenor, of the Christian Church, was held. If Mr. Zenor were a fair sample it would seem that a mistake was made when that church was named. I can not believe that the people called Christians first at Antioch were anything like him. He was very abusive. He would not have the gospel back of Pentecost. He said the land without bars or gates meant Jerusalem. The sea over which the branch grew he said was the Dead Sea. He did not like Brother Etzenhouser's map. He said he did not have all that was in their church on the map, but he did not put anything more on it. He said the Book of Mormon was taken from the Spalding story. His moderator was more smooth, but was fighting the truth just the same. Brother Etzenhouser was equal to the emergency, and our cause did not suffer by any means.

Brother Etzenhouser has preached at their church since the debate. Zenor seriously objected, but three of their board were in favor of our having the church, so the majority prevailed. Some of their members stayed by us. So Zenor must have known that the "Mormons" are not down and out as bad as he said.

The work here is in very fair condition. We missed Brother Prettyman very much. He had preached for us a long time. We would be glad to see him back, with others, if the Lord sees it is best.

I have a sister and family living in Alberta, Canada. If any of the elders happen that way I would be glad if they would call upon them. Their post office is Kinmundy, a country post office. I think it is about one hundred and fifty miles east of Calgary, and about forty miles from the Saskatchewan line. Their name is Methenny. They say there are fifteen houses in sight of their place. The Seventh Day Adventists are holding meetings and Bible readings at private houses. There seem to be a goodly number of them there.

Praying God's blessing on all his children, I am,

MINERVA JOHNSON.

JACKSON, MICHIGAN, March 3, 1914.

Editors Herald: It is probably known to you that Ex-Senator F. J. Cannon, formerly of Utah, is on a tour of some of the larger cities of the United States with a Doctor J. S. Martin, lecturing on the "Mormon menace."

There may be some of our people in the places where he is to lecture who would wish him to make a distinction between the Utah Church and ours; he will say nothing of our church unless directly appealed to from the audience. This is the experience of others than myself.

When I learned he was to lecture here I wrote him a kind letter, inclosed one of Elbert A. Smith's An Open Letter to the Clergy, and asked him to kindly make a distinction between the Utah people and ourselves. This letter he utterly ignored, so far as making the statement as requested by it. After he finished his discourse I sent him a note by one of the ushers, asking him again to make the distinction. He read the note but did not respond to it as requested. Then I arose to my feet, secured the privilege of a question, and put it squarely up to him. He then responded as follows: "I am making direct charges against the Mormon Church, telling the treason and the unholy doctrines of that faith. I do not care to take the time of those present by making comparisons of different religions unless it is their will. The charges I am making are against the Mormons, not against the Reorganized body, or Methodists, or any others not having the same evils of organization."

Yours for the cause of truth,

W. P. BUCKLEY.

DEER ISLE, MAINE, March 10, 1914.

Editors Herald: We are glad to be able to say that we are still striving with the Master's assistance to come up to the conditions where he can work with and use us according to his own good will and way. I find one of the great lessons of life is to learn to bring myself in subjection, so to be able to truthfully say, "I'll be what you want me to be, dear Lord," and to lose my will in the will divine.

The work here is still alive, and we have hopes of greater results in the future. We believe there are many in this place yet to be gathered into the fold, when the conditions are ripe for the harvest. May the Lord hasten the time.

Desiring the prayers of the Saints, and praying and working for the final victory, I remain,

Your brother to the end,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

GORDON, NEBRASKA, March 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: I wonder if I am the only Latter Day Saint in all Western Nebraska. I never see an article from this part of the country, nor do I meet any Saints here. One feels much alone sometimes. It does one good to know there are other Saints in the vicinity striving to keep in the narrow way. We sometimes attend services of other denominations, but do not get much benefit therefrom. They do not ring true.

Last fall Brother Levi Gamet came into our neighborhood and held several services with good interest. Most all who heard have invited him to come back again. I believe this will be a good opening, but as I am the only member it falls heavily on me to pay a minister's fare, because it is quite a distance from any branch.

I was down in the sand hills last fall, and visited Sister Winter, also Grandma and Grandpa Thacker. They are two lonesome people since Charley has severed his connection with the church. They seem to feel as if they ought to follow his lead, especially as they are under his care, and he provides for them. I had quite a talk with them. I do not know what they will do. I pray they may remain true to the covenant they have made with their Master. Grandma Thacker is very feeble. I wish Brother Sparling who baptized them would write them a letter. They would appreciate it much, and it would do them a world of good could they know they are remembered. They talk much of Brother Sparling.

I am still striving in my weak way to do what I can, but I feel that I accomplish very little. I tell those who ask all I can. I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, but sometimes I think that people make themselves disgusting along religious lines as well as others.

Ever praying for Zion's welfare, I remain

Your sister,

NELLIE BUTTERWORTH BAKER.

New York.

Last January we were called to this point to try to assist in the work of livening things up a bit. We responded accordingly to the best of our ability. With the local workers we sought to quicken the interest generally, making a special effort for a Sunday school normal class each Monday night, Religio Tuesday, choral work Wednesday, and midweek prayer service Thursday evening, with two preaching services and Sunday school on Sunday.

We did not feel that it would be for the best interests of the branch to set aside these auxiliaries and preach each evening, but tried rather by our efforts to quicken the interest in these. To this end as a part of our Religio programs we delivered a short lecture upon the subject of the Doctrine and Covenants, under the head of "Our Church Discipline," and assisted in other ways, as we could, in each of these services. We advertised our Sunday sermons and sought to obtain a quickened interest in that day's work. And each Friday night, also Sunday afternoon at 2.30, with Brother F. C. Mesle, our able and genial branch president, and others of the local workers, we went out to La Salle, about four miles distant, and held cottage meetings. This was made possible by the zeal and interest of one of our deacons, Brother Montgomery and family who live there. We did not feel that we were doing any spectacular work, but did feel that we were making progress.

However, there was an element with which we had not reckoned, though it had started its operations a little ahead of us, viz, an epidemic of smallpox. And while we were going on, it was, seemingly, like the brook, going on for ever, and the longer it continued the greater it became in volume. Accordingly on January 25, foreseeing an official quarantine of the public places of the city and not wishing to be commanded to quit, even though there were, as yet, no cases of the disease among our members, we closed our church building. The quarantine was declared a few days later.

From this point we went to Lockport, where we held a week's cottage meetings, having some interest, and leaving some outsiders believing and reading. Brother and Sister R. T. Goodman are the only Saints in this place. We made our home with them.

Our next point was Greenwood. Here we ran into another epidemic, this time it was rabies. Here the dogs were quarantined. This did not affect our work, though we were glad they all wore muzzles. At this point, where we labored from February 8 to 22 inclusive, we found a small band of Saints greatly in need of a shepherd. Exceedingly cold weather and much snow militated against a large attendance, but we enjoyed our visit among the Saints and friends.

An interesting event occurred at our evening service here the first day. Two elderly gentlemen came into our midst, and at the close of the sermon we shook hands with them, asking them whether they had before heard our work preached, and one said, "Oh, yes, I've heard your men here and in Salt Lake City, Utah. I attended an Easter service in Salt Lake City."

We rejoined, "We hardly think you attended an Easter service of ours in Salt Lake City."

"Yes, I did," was the reply, "I was coming from the Mormon Tabernacle and a man was preaching in an automobile, and the Mormons were asking him questions."

"Well, perhaps you did then," we answered.

"Do you know that man," was the next question.

Our reply was, "Yes, we are well acquainted with him. In fact, I am the man."

Looking at me in astonishment our friend said, "Chase, Chase, why yes, that was his name! By jinks, you are the same man! I've been shouting all around this country about you ever since! We'll shake hands again." And we did.

Well, this all goes to show that this is not so large a country after all.

February 23 we went to Ithaca, New York, where wife and daughter are located. Everything in the interior of New York State was "snowed in," and we thought it a good time to renew our family acquaintances. While at Ithaca some of the Cornell students where daughter is finishing her course requested me to deliver a lecture on "Mormonism," before the Cornell Young Men's Christian Association, securing the use of Barnes Hall for this purpose. Of course we complied, gladly. We secured a good notice in each of the three dailies, and, March 6, spoke on "Latter Day Saint ideals and their perversion by the Mormons of Utah." From this came an invitation to address a Bible class at the same place Sunday the 8th. The theme there was, "The spirit of the gospel as emphasized by the Christ." After the address there were some who had not attended the lecture who wished to hear of "Mormonism," so again we complied, emphasizing the departure from the gospel ideals as delivered to the church by Joseph Smith.

The following Tuesday we spent about three hours with a student from Cleveland, Ohio. He came to our place for that purpose. Our theme there was, "The gospel as it is."

On all these occasions as well as on others where we have had opportunity to assist inquiring students the Master has been with us and we feel that good was done, both for the students and for our cause.

Friday last, the 13th, we received word that the quarantine here had been lifted, so Saturday evening found us once more on the ground. Yesterday Brother Stone baptized two from the Buffalo Branch, coming to this point to use the font. We had a good day for our opening here, yesterday, and are trying to work up a "rally" for the 22d.

In all of our work here we experience the great pleasure and encouragement of feeling that we have the cooperation of the local workers, so we are hopeful of good results.

Sincerely and hastily in the cause,

Your coworker,

A. M. CHASE.

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK, March 16, 1914.

I love to steal awhile away
From every cumbering care.
And spend the hours of setting day
In humble, grateful prayer.

Mrs. P. H. Brown.

News from Branches

Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Council Bluffs Branch gave a musical and literary entertainment Thursday evening, March 19. There was a large and appreciative audience present. No admission fee was charged but a collection was taken at the close of the program, amounting to about $18. This entertainment was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. We certainly have some good talent in our branch.

The Ladies' Aid Society have done a wonderful work during the past year in raising funds for the building of our new church, and their efforts are worthy of imitation in other branches. When pledges were being taken, the society pledged $500 to be paid in five years; they have already raised very nearly $700. These sisters are certainly workers. They have served meals several times in vacant store buildings, held rummage sales, given sociables, and in many other ways have labored to help pay the debt on the church.

We feel very proud of our new church, which indeed exceeds our greatest expectations. We feel that the Lord has been with us and blessed our efforts in this direction. Mr. John C. Woodward, our architect, although not as yet a member of the church, said he felt that he was assisted by the Spirit of the Lord in drawing the plans; and indeed it does seem so, as in no other way could a building have been planned that would so nearly please everyone. And in letting the contracts, buying the material and furnishings, it seemed as though God had a hand in it all, as in nearly every instance the prices were far below what we had anticipated.

But it seemed to us during the services held by Brethren Wight, Smith, and Gillen we had not built large enough, as many times the capacity of the church was taxed to the utmost. We feel that the future holds great things in store for the Council Bluffs Branch, if its members are only faithful. The Lord has spoken to us several times of late, promising wonderful blessings if his people will only draw nearer to him.

Praying for the progress of the work everywhere, I am,
Your brother and coworker,

MARCH 23, 1914.

W. T. SPANSWICK.

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

"Pleasant Corners."

A dear old lady was found by a chance caller out-of-doors, busy with the work of arranging her flower garden. In surprise, her visitor noted that she was setting some of her choicest plants out in the back yard.

"Yes," said the aged gardener as she answered the exclamation of her friend, "I'm going to put geraniums and pinks and other things that will bloom all summer out here, too, child." Then, as a tender look dimmed the kind eyes, she nodded toward an upper window in the dingy wall of a house opposite and said, "I know the flowers will be out of sight from our house, but there's a woman who sits sewing at that back window day after day, week in and week out. I'm fixing up this corner for her. I don't know her, but she's always busy and tired-looking, and maybe the flowers will put a bit of brightness into her life."

"Who can tell what memories, what hopes, what lessons, the beauty of the blossoms and their fragrance bore to that little upper room through the long summer days? And how many ways there are of making pleasant corners to gladden tired eyes, if only we were not too selfishly busy to notice the eyes or plan the corners!"

We have to add to this beautifully suggestive anecdote only this thought, that the working woman in the dingy tenement apartments would have enjoyed a thousandfold the beauty and fragrance of the flowers, set for her tired eyes and weary heart, had she known that the love and sympathy of another human heart placed them there for her. It is sympathy and love the heavy laden need most of all. A little visit occasionally from the kind old lady to the poor seamstress would have added immeasurably to her thoughtfulness in planting her flowers. Just a pleasant nod of her head, or a friendly wave of her soil-stained hand as she worked would have sent a wireless message of good will that would have done much to lighten the heavy load that always lies on the heart of an overworked woman, especially if she be a lone toiler.

The poor of the cities may look upon the beauty of flowers in the parks and on the lawns of the rich, but one little blossom given from the loving thought of a sympathetic heart means more to the recipient than the greatest floral display in shop windows where they mean commercial income or on the lawns of the rich where they have a part in marking the difference between the world's favored children and her denizens of poverty.

Love is what the sad world needs, "just the art of being kind."

Love's Offerings.

A mother was interrupted one morning by the entrance of her little son who came to her with his hands full of red roses and his face glowing with the joy of bringing them to his mother.

She took him upon her lap and was holding him close as she thanked him for his gift, when a second child, younger than the first, came in, bringing her an offering also, in imitation of what he had seen his brother do. But the younger boy was still so little that he did not know how to discriminate in what he should bring as a gift; so his chubby hand deposited on the white table-cloth only chips and dust.

But he was as full of pride, and love, and joy over what he had brought as the older child had been in bringing his roses, and the mother held them both close, appreciating the gift of each equally with the other, because each was the offering of love.

And she wrote in a poem the thoughts that came to her from this incident. The closing stanzas are these:

"And I thought, as I held my darlings,
Of that good Father above,
Who has for each of his children
Far more than a mother's love.

"And I said to myself: 'So is it'—
At the thought my eyes grew dim—
When we come to his feet with our offerings,
Prompted by true love for him.

"When we come to him with our treasures,
And come with childlike trust,
Does it matter if it be red roses
Or only the chips and dust?"

Prayer Union.

The editor, at this writing, is still at General Conference. She regrets having mislaid the letter of Sister Kearney which contains the subjects and texts for this week. Each member will, therefore, supply her own this once.

Many requests for prayers are daily read in the morning meetings of the conference, and many are the testimonies that rise from grateful hearts for the blessings the kind Father has bestowed upon his children.

A dear sister asks special prayers in her behalf. She has an affliction which affects her back. The attacks are becoming more frequent and are very painful.

May the Lord attend your prayers for this sister.

Conference Notices.

Southern Indiana will meet May 16, at 10 a. m., with the Louisville, Kentucky, Branch. J. R. McClain, president, Edwin Perry, secretary.

Statement.

Noticing the notice on page 318 of HERALD for April 1, 1914, signed by Elder William Johnson, I wish to state as follows: While Robert F. was with us at home, until nineteen and a half years of age, he was an industrious, trustworthy, and truthful boy. From the age of eleven till he left home, with his father's consent, he managed the farm and did much toward maintaining a large family, while his father was away doing missionary work. His father has been in correspondence with him ever since he went West, and, permit me to say that Robert says he is innocent of the crime with which he is charged. If, however, he has done such a wrong, we feel that he must have been unduly aggravated. We are sorry and troubled to think anything of that kind should have occurred, but we feel that justice to Robert demands that a statement of this kind should be made and published. Of course we are unable to say what changes may have occurred since he last visited us in the winter of 1902.

Very respectfully,
ELDER AND MRS. CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Address.

H. N. Hansen, Vesselsgade 7, Copenhagen, Denmark.

Died.

BABER.—Charles Wesley, son of James and Lizzie Baber, was born near Dow City, Iowa, July 30, 1892; died at the home of his father, near Dow City, April 3, 1914. He was baptized January 23, 1910, and has been a consistent member of the Reorganized Church ever since. He died with a bright hope of a part in the "resurrection of the just," and eternal life. Funeral at Saints' Church, Dow City, April 5, conducted by Charles E. Butterworth.

REMMICK.—Margaret Klundt was born December 17, 1870; died April 1, 1914, at the home of a daughter, La Moure, North Dakota. She was married November 19, 1888, to Henry W. Remmick. To them were born three daughters, one son. She was baptized June 7, 1909, at Berlin, North Dakota, by J. E. Wildermuth. Services in Methodist Episcopal Church, in charge of William Sparling, assisted by Reverend E. J. Satchjen, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, interment in Rose Hill Cemetery, at La Moure. Four children, five grandchildren, three sisters and one brother survive her.

LANG.—Catherine Clunis Lang was born January 1, 1827, in Caledon, Ontario, died at Collingwood, Ontario, February 20, 1914. She was the mother of eleven children, eight of whom survive her. Her husband preceded her twenty-five years ago. She was baptized by R. C. Russell, October 21, 1906, at Arthur, Ontario. She was firm in the faith and received many blessings. Sermon by G. C. Tomlinson, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Andrew McKean, before a large gathering of relatives and sympathizing friends.

ORFIELD.—Leroy Thomas William, son of Harrison and Nettie Orfield, and grandson of Elder Thomas Wellington, was born in Burrell Township, Decatur County, Iowa, February 24, 1905; died at the same place April 2, 1914. His death followed an operation for appendicitis and was a sad blow to the household. The funeral occurred from the home, April 5, James W. Davis of Providence, Rhode Island, conducting services and preaching the sermon. Interment in the cemetery near Terre Haute. Mother, father and two grown brothers mourn his absence from earth life.

FREDERICK.—Catherine Matthews Frederick, daughter of the late David and Catherine Matthews, was born at Syracuse, Ohio, April 13, 1866; died at her home near Parkersburg, West Virginia, March 18, 1914. She was baptized March 24, 1875, by T. W. Smith, and remained faithful to the end. She is survived by her husband, Brother J. C. Frederick, to whom she was married May 2, 1908, at Columbus, Ohio, by her brother Josiah E. Matthews, and two sons, James and Thomas Duffey by her first husband. Sister Frederick was a woman of kindly disposition, charitable to a fault, and devoted to the cause of the Lord. Elders were heartily welcomed at her home, and never departed empty handed. She was a great sufferer for several years from a nervous malady which she bore with Christian fortitude. She was often relieved by faith in prayer and administration of the elders of the church. It is a sad bereavement to lose such a devoted Christian wife and loving mother, but our heavenly Father doeth all things well, and we have the assurance that he will reward her with eternal life, and we earnestly pray that we may also inherit, and be reunited in that kingdom. Sister Frederick was laid to rest in the town cemetery at the home of her childhood. The funeral was attended by many of the companions of her girlhood and sympathizing friends. The sermon was preached by R. C. Kirkendall, of Creola, Ohio.

WILLIAMS.—Mrs. William Williams, an aged and respected pioneer resident of Savanna, Illinois, and member of the Reorganized Church passed away at her home in the country a short distance north of town, Friday evening at 7.45, January 30, 1914. Sister Williams was stricken with paralysis about two months ago, suffering a second stroke on Thursday, since which time her decline was rapid, death mercifully ending her affliction at the hour stated. In the death of Sister Williams a dear wife and mother has passed from earth's scenes. She had lived a good life, one which was filled with works well done, and now that she has finished her work here her soul has gone on to the home provided for those who are faithful unto the end. She was born in Hancock County, New Jersey, October 19, 1840. She married William Williams fifty years ago, who with her five sons, two sisters, Mrs. Ben De La Vergne and Mrs. Grayless of Savanna, she leaves to mourn. Services at Saints' chapel, Chestnut Park, sermon by E. W. Voelpel of Clinton, Iowa.

HYDE.—Malinda J. Carr was born November 16, 1857, in Perry County, Indiana; died at Eldorado, Illinois, November 18, 1913. She married William H. Hyde, May 22, 1879. Three children were born to them, one son and two daughters, who with husband and four brothers survive her. She was baptized by I. P. Baggerly, September 14, 1895. The remains were brought to Derby, Indiana, where they were interred November 26, D. H. Baggerly officiating. A special funeral sermon was preached at Derby by A. C. Barmore, March 29.

HALL.—Casper Hall was born May 13, 1886; died March 24, 1914. He was baptized October 5, 1912, by Jacob Halb. Married Limmi McFall, October 10, 1912. Wife and one child, mother and two sisters survive him.

Book Reviews.

CONTINUITY.—This book contains a report of the presidential address before the British Association for 1913, as delivered by the greatest living scientist, Sir Oliver Lodge. Those of our readers who are interested in the attitude of science towards religion in general and the immortality of the soul in particular will be interested in securing this book. It is a complete and authentic report of the address that was recently reviewed in the HERALD, first editorially, and second by Elder John W. Rushton. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, 2, 4, and 6 West Forty-fifth Street, New York, $1 net. No more vital or noteworthy pronouncement upon questions of great concern to religion has been made during the past decade. The following extract is from the closing paragraph of the book:

"Men and brethren, we are trustees of the truth of the physical universe as scientifically explored: let us be faithful to our trust. Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity and in the reality of things. It is not surprising that by our methods we fail to grasp it: the actions of the Deity make no appeal to any special sense, only a universal appeal; and our methods are, as we know, incompetent to detect complete uniformity. There is a Principle of Relativity here, and unless we encounter flaw or jar or change, nothing in us responds; we are deaf and blind therefore to the Immanent Grandeur, unless we have insight enough to recognize in the woven fabric of existence, flowing steadily from the loom of an infinite progress towards perfection, the

A YEAR WITH A WHALER.—A Year with a Whaler is the title of a new book by W. N. Burns, Outing Publishing Company, New York City. The author gives his experiences in many waters on board a whaler during an entire year, from the time when he was inveigled into signing up, later to find that his year's wages would be only one dollar, a "big iron dollar" as the sailors termed it, until the end of the cruise. An interesting book for boys, full of adventure, and giving an accurate idea of marine life on such an expedition, and a good deal of information about whales and whaling.

VIOLENCE IN THE LABOR MOVEMENT.—Robert Hunter (Socialist) author of Poverty, and Socialists at Work, has undertaken a review of the theory or doctrine of violence in connection with the labor movement. He begins with the work of Michael Bakounin, styled the "father of terrorism," and ends with a discussion of the present attitude of labor and Socialism toward violence, including a discussion of sabotage, direct action, etc. Published by The Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Price $1.35 net.

A New Edition of the Doctrine and Covenants

By order of General Conference a committee was appointed to correct all typographical errors, also Section 22 of the Doctrine and Covenants. This has been done and the book is now ready. It contains a valuable addition in the form of a new concordance. All the revelations up to date are included. You will need this edition.

A Vacation on a Ranch

this summer will do you more good than a barrel of medicine. Get out into the open, close to nature and have the time of your life. Rest relax and recreate. Ride over sun-flooded trails in the hills; row on silvery lakes; fish in shady brooks; tramp down winding paths among the trees; loaf in soft valleys of green; stroll in the moonlight; eat of the fat of the land and sleep like a babe. Such a vacation pays tremendous health dividends. You will come back feeling like a different person.

In the Black Hills of South Dakota, in the Big Horn Mountains of Wyoming, in the Buffalo Bill country, along the Cody Road into Yellowstone Park, there are countless places where you can spend just such a vacation and at a very moderate cost; while down at Thermopolis, in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming, is a hot spring, the waters of which are as an anti-toxin to hundreds of ills that beset the human race.

Editorial

SHOOK ON THE ORIGIN OF POLYGAMY.

NEW EDITION.

The HERALD editors are in receipt of a copy of a new edition (1914) of the book entitled, The True Origin of Mormon Polygamy, by Charles A. Shook. We have previously noted the publication of the first edition of this work. The first edition was paper covered and contained an introduction by R. B. Neal in which he boasted that the book would "shake the foundations of the Reorganized Church . . . to the toppling of the whole superstructure." This later edition is bound in cloth and is much more presentable and respectable in appearance,—and omits Neal's introduction. This is well: "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off." The book was first published in 1910, and we note that the gains of the church in membership each year since then have been larger than the gains of any year previous to this terrible shaking.

The author gives particular attention to the Reorganized Church. His object is to prove that Mormon polygamy originated with Joseph Smith. He seems to assume that if he succeeds in proving that proposition he has at once destroyed the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith and for ever discredited the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Nothing that we can conceive of could be farther from the facts in the case.

THE QUESTION NOT VITAL.

To demonstrate (if such a thing were possible) that Joseph Smith at one time in his life taught or even practiced polygamy would not necessarily discredit the prophetic work accomplished by him at an earlier date, long before such moral lapse and departure from the faith. Bible believers have but to refer to well-known events and characters in Bible history to convince themselves that we are correct in that statement. On the other hand, if we were to prove that Joseph Smith never even remotely sanctioned polygamy, either in teaching or practice we would not thereby establish the validity of his prophetic claims. The issue raised is extraneous. His prophetic calling must be proved or disproved by the testing of quite different issues.

The question, Was Joseph Smith a polygamist? may be an interesting one, and certainly has been much discussed both by his friends and his enemies. But it is not a vital question with us. It is not the primary question.

ATTITUDE OF CHURCH AND CHURCH BOOKS PRIMARY QUESTION.

The nature of the doctrine and practice of polygamy is a vital question. The attitude of the church and of the standard books containing the "constitutional law" of the church toward the doctrine is of vital importance. The moral integrity of any one man, however high in the church, however great his previous work under God, is and must ever be of secondary importance as compared with these other questions. The church can not in justice be tried on the personal record of any one man. No church that has existed since the days of Adam would voluntarily submit to such a judgment.

THE CHURCH AND CONSTITUTIONAL LAW SOUND AND CLEAR.

As to the nature of the doctrine in question the position of the Reorganized Church is and ever has been sound and clear. On that question the position of the church under Joseph Smith up to the very day of his death was sound and clear. In all of the standard books of the church and in all the legislative enactments of the church touching upon the doctrine it was condemned and monogamy was strictly enjoined. On that vital issue the church is and ever has been safe, sound, and sane.

WORK MUST BE TRIED ON ITS OWN MERITS.

Any lapse that Joseph Smith may have made in his private life he must answer for himself in his own person. We do not believe that he taught or practiced polygamy at any time. But if it should be demonstrated that he did (a contingency that we admit only for the sake of the argument) not one member of the church capable of intelligent reasoning need lose faith in the church, for the church has ever been sound on that subject; nor yet in the inspired books of the church, for they, too, are sound on that subject, and much more explicit and clear than most other writings that deal with the question.

The teachings, doctrine, organization, and blessings of the church commend it to the faith and intelligence of the members. The work of restoration contained its own internal evidences of divinity.

MR. SHOOK ON THE REORGANIZED CHURCH.

In his preface Mr. Shook says:

To the fact that the members of the Reorganized Church are usually good and law-abiding citizens, I cheerfully bear witness. They will compare favorably with the members of other churches, but they are no better. As I make this acknowledgement, let no man put on a shoe that does not fit him. What has been written is in respect to the evil designs and practices of the original leaders, and does not apply to the rank and file to-day. No one, who has studied the history of the Mormon movement, will for one moment believe that there is any more connection between the Josephite and Brighamite churches than there is between the Presbyterian and the Roman Catholic. The former have fought their polygamic brethren with a zeal that would be commendable if it were consistent. But, while they strongly oppose polygamy now, they own and acknowledge as prophet a man who has confessed to being the father of the celebrated "Revelation on Celestial Marriage," which has been the basis of the doctrine of the plurality of wives in Utah. (See Millennial Star, vol. 21, p. 715.)

MR. SHOOK HIMSELF INCONSISTENT.

We must thank Mr. Shook for his courteous reference to the members of the Reorganized Church as good and law-abiding citizens, and for the clear distinction that he makes between the Reorganized Church and the "Brighamite Church."

But we know of no confession such as he mentions in the closing lines of this extract. He cites us to an alleged confession found in the Millennial Star, but it was published by Utah Mormons fifteen years after Joseph Smith's death, and on page 205 of his book Mr. Shook expressly repudiates Mormon witnesses. So he will pardon us if we reject this alleged confession in toto. He could not well ask us to do otherwise.

This is one of the amusing features of Mr. Shook's book. His star witnesses are Mormons, including even the notorious John D. Lee. Their testimony runs all through the book, beginning in the preface with this citation to the Millennial Star. Yet he tells us: "It is evident from these flagrant violations of their pledges and the law of the land, that the Mormon word of honor is not to be depended upon."—The True Origin of Mormon Polygamy (new edition), p. 205. Thus he saves us the disagreeable task of impeaching his leading witnesses.

OUR COURSE CONSISTENT.

The course of the Reorganized Church is and has been consistent with itself and with the course pursued by Christian people regarding Bible institutions and Bible characters of other lands and times. We accept the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, the covenant that God made with him, the church that was established, the blessings that followed, the doctrines held by the church. We do not believe that there was a personal, private moral lapse on the part of Joseph Smith into the teaching and practice of polygamy; but whether there was or was not such a lapse, we reject and condemn that doctrine. Could Christian people who constantly accept blessings coming through the ancient patriarchal order, while consistently rejecting many of the private moral practices of the patriarchs, ask us to do more or less than this?

We have not discussed the origin of Mormon polygamy in this editorial, as it has so often been discussed in these pages. Our views on that subject are known. We have simply pointed out that even if we were to grant the contention of our opponents on that point they would gain nothing. E. A. S.

A CRITICISM.

"THE PROBLEM OF THE UNEMPLOYED."

The following letter comes from a good brother who takes exception to an editorial item appearing in the HERALD for March 25, entitled, "Problem of the Unemployed." We publish the letter for two reasons: First, that any element of justice demanding its publication may be satisfied; second, that our readers may have the benefit of a certain kind of criticism which comes our way at times, together with our explanation or defense.

EDITORS SAINTS' HERALD,
LAMONI, IOWA.

Dear Brethren: Since you have taken special pains to reprint "a wild and incredible story" of the capitalistic press of California, relative to the intentions of the unemployed Kelley men of that State, and since you give evidence that you do not believe the report but think that it may be a prophecy of that which will actually take place in the future, do you not honestly believe it to be your duty to give the other side of this "current event"?

Why not tell your hungry readers that these same papers that circulated this impossible yarn had been printing the flattering, capitalist advertisements that were responsible for filling the coast States with fifty thousand men hunting for work? That the apparent object of these ads was to get the fares of the men who should come, and to flood the State, that labor might be cheapened? That when some of these men formed themselves into an army their real threat consisted in a demand that having been enticed into California, and robbed of all they had, they be fed and sent back east?

Why not tell your readers that it was only $1.20 per day for only three days a week instead of $3 per day that the supervisor offered a limited number? and that citizens were present begging these men not to take the work away from residents who had families to support?

Why not tell them that though this mass of hungry, helpless, intelligent men were clubbed by the police and attacked by the fire department who turned the hose onto them and chased them away, and burned their tents and meager belongings, not one of these poor fellows resisted; that they were perfectly law-abiding; that these inhuman reports are now circulated to cover up their own crimes?

This current event of yours seems to me to be misleading in the extreme. And I see no way for you to atone for it but to now publish the other side also. Have you the courage to do so? At least let me suggest that considering the sad experience that this church has encountered at the hands of infuriated mobbers, we who are so closely connected to those brave sufferers should at least be unbiased enough to read both sides of such desperate happenings before defending the mobbers by printing only their side of the story. A story half told often becomes the worst kind of a news item.

You can no longer afford to keep silent, and refuse to mention such crucial events, nor can you afford to give out such ex parte reports.

On behalf of humanity I humbly beg that our church paper be conducted on an unbiased foundation.

May God bless you in your great work. You have my very best wishes.

The criticisms contained in the above letter were evidently offered in a good spirit, and they are received with the best of feeling. Still the fact remains that they are based on a misunderstanding of the editorial note in question.

The editorial item did not profess to be an exhaustive review of the situation, but so far as it went it was fair and accurate. It did not contain one word of unjust condemnation of labor or the cause of the unemployed. Toward the close the paragraph contains these words, "The causes for these outbreaks are deep-rooted in prevailing inequality and injustice." Why did our critic pass that statement unnoticed? Evidently his entire reading was colored by a previously formed opinion that the cause of labor was about to be attacked in some way, and this mental attitude of anticipation led him to see things that did not exist.

Reviewing the letter by paragraphs, we will say first that certainly no harm was done the cause of Labor by our act of branding as untrue the sensational story that the unemployed were about to seize the arsenal at Rock Island and then march on Washington.

The second paragraph probably contains considerable truth, even after making due allowance for the great numbers of vicious and indolent tramps that infest California during the winter months. The large residue of truth remaining after such deduction is a part of the problem which we mentioned at the close of our paragraph as demanding "wise and constructive" methods to obtain a solution. The events of the past winter have set in motion a movement to obtain a nation-wide survey of the industrial field with a view to serve the interests of labor by forestalling any such local congestion and exploitation of labor, a nation-wide effort to bring the man and the job together.

The third paragraph is based on an entire misunderstanding. The statement was made in our editorial that it was charged that I. W. W. leaders of the unemployed in New York City had refused to work for less than three dollars per day of eight hours at a time when their followers were begging bread at church doors. In such an event labor was badly served by unwise leadership. The item had no reference to conditions in California. Our critic has confused events that were sundered by the width of a continent. All of which shows that one should not criticize after such hasty reading.

We did not make the statement found in the fourth paragraph because we believe that as it stands, and taken as a whole, it is not true. The local authorities, themselves no less than the unemployed victims of circumstances and forces inherent in the industrial situation at that time existing, may have done all that is here charged, but it is too much to say that the others without a single exception maintained the meek and saintlike policy of nonresistance with which they are credited.

The fifth paragraph is devoid of point and not applicable, because we have made no defense of mobbers, not even by publishing their side of the case.

The closing paragraphs suggest that the editors should be unbiased and avoid ex parte statements of events involving labor and capital.

We have no objections to such an expression of desire, for that has been our ambition and policy. We wish that all our readers would review the editorial item in question, compare it with this letter, and then judge for themselves as to who is impartial and who gives an ex parte account of the events in question. Readers no less than editors should be impartial and just.

There seems to be a demand in certain quarters that the HERALD editors shall take up the slogan of a noted agitator, sounded before a great political convention in 1904, "The working class, right or wrong! And I don't care whether they are right or wrong!"

Our sympathies are naturally with the disinherited and oppressed, and with every sane and legitimate effort for their emancipation; but we have not sanctioned, neither will we sanction a program of folly and deeds of violence, no matter whether such are indulged in by labor or by capital. As the lines are drawn more sharply, and brutal men on both sides give way to their baser natures, and the bloody conflict grows more acute, it will become evident that Latter Day Saints can not ally themselves unreservedly with either side, but must pursue a course peculiar to themselves under gospel law. Those who now habitually indulge in inflamed and partisan thought and speech will then be too deeply involved on one side or the other to take such a stand.

The HERALD proposes to continue to treat such questions (when they are considered at all) from an impartial standpoint, and will not become an apologist for any program not consistent with gospel principles.

We have our own peculiar work to do in these last days, and can not become mouthpiece for contending classes and factions.

CURRENT EVENTS.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

MEXICAN WAR.—Since last referred to in these columns the Mexican War has developed the sharpest fighting thus far in the struggle between the Constitutionalist and Federalists. The Constitutionalist under General Villa, after terrific fighting and at the cost of many lives on both sides, have taken Torreon. The Federalists under General Velasco on retreating from Torreon were reinforced, and at San Pedro forty miles east of Torreon made a desperate stand, from which they were routed by the Villa forces with heavy losses. The Constitutionalist have long conducted a siege against Tampico, an important eastern coast city, but have been unable to take the same.

IRISH HOME RULE.—The Irish Home Rule Bill has for the third time passed its second reading in the House of Commons. Mr. Asquith has proposed temporary exclusion of Ulster, while the Ulster leader asks that the province remain out until voted in by act of Parliament. While talk of civil war has very largely ceased, Sir Edward Carson continues to drill his Ulster volunteers.

MICHIGAN STRIKE ENDED.—The long strike in the copper fields of Michigan came to an end on the 12th, when by a majority referendum vote the miners agreed to accept work on the terms of the operators. By this agreement the men must give up their membership in the union and apply for work as individuals. The operators say that all will be reemployed as soon as there is work for them, except those who engaged in violence.

LABOR WAR.—What is described as a battle between militia, national guardsmen and company guards, and strikers occurred in the Ludlow district of Southern Colorado on the 20th instant. The coal miners in this district have been on strike for some time and feeling has run high on the part of both miners and operators. Reports of the armed conflict are meager and uncertain. It is definitely stated, however, that the battle lasted fourteen hours; that it was ended by darkness; that the militia swept the strikers' tent colony with a machine gun and that thirteen persons were killed, including eleven strikers, one soldier, and one noncombatant.

CHINA FINANCIALLY EMBARRASSED.—The Chinese Government is embarrassed for lack of funds. Internal taxation is small, and the provinces instead of contributing to the central government call upon it for assistance in suppressing rebellion. The import duties, limited by foreign governments, provide insufficient revenue for current expenses, and the Chinese Government has been compelled to enter into negotiations with French, German, British, Japanese, and Russian banks for a new loan. The stability of the Chinese Government is so uncertain that this group of banks are stipulating for foreign control of Chinese finances for a period of fifty years.

MEXICO AND UNITED STATES IN CONFLICT.—A series of indignities on the part of the Huerta government in Mexico and heaped upon the United States culminated on the 9th instant in the arrest, at Tampico, by a Mexican officer and squad of men of the army of General Huerta, of a United States paymaster and men who were in the act of securing supplies for the Dolphin. Paymaster and crew were marched up one of the streets of the city until met by a superior Mexican officer who ordered them returned to the landing. By order of the commander of the Federal forces at Tampico the paymaster and men were released. This incident was further complicated from the fact that two of the men were taken from the whaleboat in which they had approached the landing, while the boat at both bow and stern flew the United States flag. A few days after the Tampico incident an orderly from the Minnesota was arrested at Vera Cruz while ashore in uniform to obtain the ship's mail. He was for a time thrown into jail. Apologies from the commander at Tampico and from General Huerta followed the release of the United States men at Tampico. Admiral Mayo insisted that in turn for the insult to the United States flag, the flag be saluted by the firing of twenty-one Mexican guns. General Huerta agreed to this demand on condition that the United States salute the Mexican flag simultaneously. This the administration at Washington declined to do, standing on international custom and pledging that the Mexican flag would be saluted after the salute to the flag of the United States. General Huerta refused to comply. United States gunboats steamed to Vera Cruz, and on the 21st and 22d United States marines under the protection of the gunboats took the city. Six Americans and two hundred Mexicans are reported killed and thirty Americans wounded. The Huerta forces withdrew from the city on the landing of the

WARNINGS, COMMANDMENTS, PROMISES.

TO THE SAINTS IN ALL THE WORLD.

Whether we have ever clasped hands in personal acquaintance, or whether our former fellowship be only that holy bond of kinsmanship which unites all Saints, it is a pleasure to send this greeting.

As the wonderful facilities of modern invention bring us close together by means of the press, the railway, and the telegraph, while mountains and seas stretch between, even so the oneness of Spirit may bring us very near each other in brotherly love and holy communion, though literally separated by a vastness of diversified personality and ocean tides of proceeding and receding human weaknesses.

Being given voice through the HERALD to speak to souls in the many nooks, corners, and countries where this sheet of blessing circulates, we wish to call attention to three texts of scripture which deal with the eternal verities. None of these texts are new, neither is the gospel; for its eternal truth is like God himself; without beginning of day or end of life.

The first text we select comes to us having been written more than three thousand years ago, dictated by the Lord himself, and sets forth an unalterable principle.

WARNING.

Behold, I set before you this day a blessing and a curse; a blessing, if you obey the commandments of the Lord your God, which I command you this day: and a curse, if you will not obey the commandments of the Lord your God, but turn aside out of the way which I command you this day, to go after other gods, which ye have not known.—Deuteronomy 11: 27, 28.

The practical application of the principle stated in the text quoted, blessings through obedience to God's law of life, and cursings developing as the natural and inevitable result of disobedience, may be verified by the thoughtful scrutiny of our own experiences, and a general observation of the doings of others.

Find a person the disposition of whose mind is to do right continually, and you have found one whose life is sweetened by a blessed and divine touch which is as real as the fact that they live and are not an empty imagination. Such a life embraces all the elements of real blessing, even though temporal adversity and soul-trying circumstances should combine to harrass to the uttermost. A veritable halo of blessing kisses the doings of such a life, whether it be named after "ite," "ism," or "creed," and whether found in penury or in a palace.

eous development of a life which is not obedient to the truth, and cause cursings where blessings might have been. But as all true development is from within, and as every heart may have the fountain source of all spiritual life opened to it directly, it is thus made possible that supposedly unfavorable surroundings and conditions may have a real value, and in the end prove to have been of lasting benefit to those who gain strength in the mastery of perplexing difficulties by being obedient to every known requirement of right.

The Lord said: "I set before you this day a blessing and a curse," but did not limit the setting before them of either blessings or cursings to any particular day. The same opportunity for obtaining a blessing, and the same awful danger of being stricken with a curse has been set before every living man from that day to this. Men have been continually securing real and priceless blessings by choosing obedience, and suffering awful and relentless cursings because of disobedience.

Parents, every lovable grace which gives you delight in your family, or makes home a place worthy of the name because of the confidence and fidelity of the inmates in and toward each other, is a blessing coming to you because certain of God's laws have not been disobeyed, and because certain home conditions have been maintained, either in conformity to good laws which governments have framed, or in conformity to the demands of upright conscience in the heart of each individual member of the family. Every unsavory blight or curse which has touched your home is the result of disobedience to divine law upon your part, or upon the part of some other.

If it be because of others, and you have not aided or abetted the wrongdoing in any way, you may be called upon to suffer because of the intricate associations and interdependence of the human family; but it shall be for a far more eternal weight of glory at last to the innocent, and therein will a blessing be found. But to the extent of disobedience to the law of right, to that extent will the sting of the curse be intensified.

Husbands, you who cherish the blessing of fidelity in the heart of a true and faithful wife, dare you allow your own fidelity to lapse in the least? If so, beware of the peril of the curse, for every man's sin will find him out.

With respect to thorough-going fidelity to each other according to the commands of God, is there one standard for the husband and another for the wife? If any have thought that such is the case, the Devil himself is their informant, and the curse is their portion if they continue.

Lax deportment with regard to these things involves jealousies, deceptions, lying, murders, and every namable crime; then sorrows, anguish, remorse, wretchedness, and woe. Let those who have thought that greater latitude might be accorded to man than to woman without seriously impairing his morals, beware of the curse.

The most casual observation of the processes of this awful, hideous monster sin of society, shows that many a man desiring to preserve his respectful integrity in the eyes of his companion seeks to hide from her his own misdeeds; and whether the extent of his own lapses of pure integrity be in the performance of some actual wrong, or be merely that he has surrendered his thoughts to evil, the ultimate result if pursued is the same, and he awakes some dreadful day to find that what he thought so carefully hidden was known all along.

He awakes from his stupid dream to find that the same demon of infidelity to lawful betrothal with which he has toyed has seized, marred, and seared the felicity of his own home! The fire that burned at first with a thrilling glow has burst into the roar of devouring demons! Oh, the fury! The issues of hell are here! It is the curse, it is the curse!

How many homes fitted for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit with all its touch of blessing have thus been transformed into a carnival of hell! How many hearts and homes yet unspoiled may we as Saints of God guard, protect, and bless? How many suffering victims of sin may we rescue? Many, if we keep our own dooryards clean, and labor where the Spirit leadeth.

Then when we pause to think that this matter mentioned is only one of the thousands of things in which obedience brings blessings and disobedience brings cursings, we need not ask whether there is anything we can do in the interest of righteousness and suffering humanity.

Men need to be influenced to repent of sin in order that curses may be removed from their heads and blessings be put upon them. Many need to obey the commandment of the Lord to be baptized, lest when the Lord comes he take "vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel." Others need to know that though they have gone through some form of baptism it is not wholly acceptable to the Lord unless performed by the authority of a church which Christ recognizes as his own body; and that there is a choice and heavenly blessing for them through the laying on of hands in a divinely appointed manner.

Many suffer under the weight of an accursed doctrine which does not inform them what the resurrection of the dead means. It is a blessed, wholesome balm to a restless mind, or a soul thirsting for knowledge of the truth, to learn that the resurrection of the dead means the final perfect adjustment of the physical man to the spiritual man, giving proper blending of both elements as they combine in the finished product of God's creative power—a life of perfect poise—souls redeemed from death, hell, and the grave, fitted for the greatest felicity, and prepared to continue the most effective and ennobling service to their Creator. All who have learned these things may help others to obtain the incomparable present blessing of a knowledge of the truth of them.

Many famishing souls are under the blighting curse of believing that the doctrine of eternal judgment means that unless poor, sinful, ill-advised creatures here in this world toe up to a certain dead line, drawn by some preacher or church, in front of the altar or mourner's bench, that such sinner is eternally lost. God is supposed to summarily pass eternal judgment and turn them over to devils with red-hot pitchforks to be tormented through time of endless duration. All who have been blessed with the knowledge that such a representation of eternal judgment is a misrepresentation of God may assist in passing the blessing along.

Many bleeding hearts do not know that the present curse from hell, which finds expression where miserable poverty agonizes in the shadow of hoarded wealth, is brought about because the nations have chosen the curse rather than God's blessing, in that they have not kept the commandments with respect to tithes, consecrations, and the proper adjustment of the laws of commerce and remuneration for labor.

Others invite a still deeper curse by thinking this evil condition of inequality among men can be permanently remedied through measures which embody the spirit of hatred toward possessors of wealth. Any movement which engenders hatred, even toward an enemy whose wickedness is conceded, is too frail an instrument with which to secure real and permanent blessings for the people.

The statement just preceding our text faithfully portrays the absolute heritage of those who keep the commandments:

Every place whereon the souls of your feet shall tread shall be yours: from the wilderness and Lebanon, from the river, the river Euphrates, even unto the uttermost sea, shall your coast be. There shall no man be able to stand before you: for the Lord your God shall lay the fear of you and the dread of you upon all the land that ye shall tread upon, as he hath said unto you.—Deuteronomy 11: 24, 25.

The above, though given to a certain people at a specific time, is applicable for all time and everywhere.

COMMANDMENT.

The center and substance of God's commandment to the race:

Now this is the commandment, Repent, all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me and be baptized in my name, that ye may be sanctified by the reception of the Holy Ghost, that ye may stand spotless before me at the last day. Verily, verily I say unto you, This is my gospel; and ye know the things that ye must do in my church; for the works which ye have seen me do, that shall ye also do; . . . if ye do these things ye shall be lifted up at the last day.—Book of Nephi 12: 33-35.

Those who are thus converted from natural carnal-mindedness to saintly spiritual-mindedness, whose lives are sanctified by such holy influences as the Lord sends upon his obedient people, have the earnest of their inheritance, even the Holy Spirit, whose office work is to encourage and instruct all along life's way, unless they grieve the Spirit by such conduct that he departs from them.

Brother, if we have thus grieved the Spirit it is a departure demanding repentance; be assured he will come to us again as oft as we truly repent, and to all except those who commit the unpardonable sin; for they are delivered over to the buffetings of Satan, and awful indeed is their condition.

For the natural man is an enemy to God, and has been, from the fall of Adam, and will be, for ever and ever; but if [unless, J. E. Y.], he yields to the enticings of the Holy Spirit, and putteth off the natural man, and becometh a Saint, through the atonement of Christ, the Lord, and becometh as a child, submissive, meek, humble, patient, full of love, willing to submit to all things which the Lord seeth fit to inflict upon him, even as a child doth submit to his father.—Mosiah 1: 120.

Included also in the commands of God is the explicit injunction that we approve all things that are excellent, that we judge everything that enticeth to do good to be of God, and that we cultivate a depth of sincere charity toward all, without which godly grace all profession of sainthood is an empty sham in the sight of the Lord.

If Latter Day Saints allow the milk of human kindness which should continually flow from the heart to be turned into corroding acid, or allow their charity to be soured because of ill usage received from others, or because of misrepresentations, such as other Saints have had to endure, the acidity of the infection will canker their own souls.

We pride ourselves that to this church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, through the restoration, has been given the highest expression of religion on earth. But what is your religion worth to you personally if it fails you when the neighborhood gets into a quarrel; or when some person in the church or out of the church does some little mean thing and you get down from your religious pedestal into the dirt and fuss and quarrel, too?

Business man, what is your religion worth to you personally if it keeps you along lines of honesty and fair dealing until you get a nice, handy chance to peel somebody without it being known who did the job, and then modestly retires to the background while the skinning is going on?

Serviceable religion is the kind which makes good when put to the test.

What about the religion of one whose inclination is to sin by gossip, if it seals her lips just when there is no one to talk to only the cat and the canary, but can not stop her tattling tongue when Mrs. Brown comes in to air the faults of Mrs. Jones?

We all concede the divine, saving quality of love, but of what superior strength is our religion if we love those only who love us? Does not the world even the same? The command: "Love your enemies" is a most wholesome doctrine; but its attendant blessings are not available to those whose love toward their enemies is manifest by an attempt to call down fire from heaven upon them; or to kindle a little devilish earthly fire with which to roast them brown.

PROMISES.

For thus saith the Lord, I, the Lord, am merciful and gracious unto those who fear me, and delight to honor those who serve me in righteousness and in truth unto the end; great shall be their reward, and eternal shall be their glory; and to them will I reveal all mysteries; yea, all the hidden mysteries of my kingdom from days of old; and for ages to come will I make known unto them the good will of my pleasure concerning all things pertaining to my kingdom; yea, even the wonders of eternity shall they know, and things to come will I show them, even the things of many generations; their wisdom shall be great, and their understanding reach to heaven; and before them the wisdom of the wise shall perish, and the understanding of the prudent shall come to naught; for by my Spirit will I enlighten them, and by my power will I make known unto them the secrets of my will; yea, even those things which eye has not seen, nor ear heard, not yet entered into the heart of man.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 2.

He who has made these matchless promises has not left us destitute of evidence that he is abundantly able, and that he will fulfill all.

In addition to the above statements made by the Lord to this present generation, we have the same promise summed up in one brief sentence, which embraces in its magnificent scope all of heaven and splendor which it is possible for a loving Creator to bestow upon his creature: "Nevertheless, the day shall come when you shall comprehend even God, being quickened in him, and by him."

As knowledge in any department of her treasure house bestows power, so knowledge of God bestows the power of eternal life; and as for me, I shall crave no higher heaven than to be able to comprehend even God.

JAMES E. YATES.

Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that fact let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it.—Abraham Lincoln.

NECESSITY OF COMPLIANCE WITH LAW.

"Order is heaven's first law" and God has a law to govern all things in his universe. A definition from Webster gives law as "a rule prescribed by a supreme ruler of a state." God is supreme ruler of the universe; his laws are just and should be obeyed.

Physical laws of nature are studied by astronomers, who by their knowledge of the law governing the solar system predict with certainty the exact date of an eclipse of the sun or moon. God is the great Creator of these laws, as well as of the laws that cover both physical and moral necessities of man.

When we speak of the law we mean God's law binding on us as the people of God. Ignorance of the laws of our country will not excuse us before the judge of the law. We must suffer the full penalty of our guilt. Nor will ignorance of God's law excuse us as we stand before the judgment bar of God. We are commanded to study and read, to "search the scriptures," to gain knowledge; if we do not we will have no excuse to offer when we meet God. We have plenty of opportunity to learn the law from the three standard books.

UNDER THE LAW.

Much responsibility attaches to being under the requirements of the law, as our future state of happiness or unhappiness depends on our activities in this life; and it is our privilege to gain the highest condition in a future life by obedience to the law here. A knowledge of the law is necessary, as we will be judged by the law. It is written, "For out of the books which shall be written I will judge the world." (2 Nephi 12: 66.)

By the law we will be justified, and by the law we will be condemned. Paul says "For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified." (Romans 2: 13.)

It is necessary to our spiritual development to become acquainted with God's law, and observe its precepts that it might bring us to that knowledge requisite to pure and holy living; and only by close application of those laws in our daily life can we obtain that salvation which is the highest aim of every true Latter Day Saint.

Paul, speaking of the Gentiles, said, "These having not the law are a law unto themselves." This is plainly evidenced by the Sabbath desecrations of our land to-day. God's law, "Remember the Sabbath to keep it holy," given to Israel of old, is as binding in this age. In Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4 we read, "The inhabitants of Zion shall observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy." As we see crowds of busy pleasure seekers, each bent on his own particular pastime, we see the great necessity of God's chosen people reverencing his law and keeping themselves aloof from the frivolities and giddy pleasures of the world, and thus becoming a beacon light to this generation.

God has given laws regarding health, morals, decorum in personal conduct, and temperance. There are great promises connected with the keeping of the Word of Wisdom, together with "the commandments."

We are engaged in the greatest work known to man. The law of God in reference to temporalities, involving the principle of equality, is the root and foundation of perfection. This law involves great principles—all the principles of the celestial kingdom. For God deigns to reveal unto the church "things which have not been revealed since the foundation of the world." The law governing the celestial kingdom is purity, and only the "pure in heart shall see God."

We must control our impulses to evil; cultivate desires for that which is pure and clean, develop and build noble characters for truthfulness, uprightness, and honesty; and only by the consecration of our lives can we arrive at this high standard. We talk of redeeming Zion, and we desire to see it redeemed; but our desires alone will not accomplish anything.

It is like the story of the farmer whose barn was burned, and whose friends and neighbors came together to sympathize with his misfortune. An Indian present among the number saw that words of sympathy were valueless without deeds, and said, "Me sorry five dollars; how much you sorry?" And so Zion can not be redeemed only by a people who keep the law.

A DAY OF WARNING.

At the General Conference of 1913 we were admonished in regard to using our means for that which is not essential, "for verily it is a day of sacrifice, a day of warning and not a day of many words." There is no time to waste; all must be up and doing. We can see in the panorama of events taking place that Jesus Christ will soon be here. The trifling things of time are blinding our spiritual vision to the realities of eternity. We are allowing the God of this world to sit on his throne and dictate to us what we shall do, and we are bound helpless by his chains because we will it. Let us arise in our might and control our own affairs. Free agency is our God-given right. We know the law; then let us keep it.

God speaks to-day in thunder tones. Zion must be redeemed. Woe to the church of God if she keep not this law. Zion must be redeemed. At what cost have we "kept our moneys"?

If my pen were lightning and every word a blaze of warning it would write, Prepare to meet your God. Pay your tithes, your surplus, your offerings, your consecrations.

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

WHY "PREACH THE WORD"?

I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.—2 Timothy 4: 1-4.

It may be proper for the clown to amuse the crowd with his antics, or for the actor on the stage to play his part in the drama in order to furnish the sort of amusement the people want and are willing to pay for; but it does not appear that the minister's proper work takes him into the field of amusement. Legends, myths, and fables, if at all connected with the message the church has for the world, can never serve as a substitute for "the word," though they may serve at times to make clear an otherwise obscure meaning.

SECULAR TRAINING.

Among savages, generally, beads and trinkets are more highly prized than broadcloth. Captain Speake says they wear their goat skins and mantles when the weather is nice and warm, but place them carefully away in bad weather to preserve them; with them function is subordinated to appearance. These primitive habits have not altogether died out. Herbert Spencer said: "All of our industries would cease were it not for that information which men begin to acquire . . . after their education is said to be finished." And yet in our school life we supposedly give preference to those studies which have a bearing upon the useful activities of life. If Mr. Spencer is right, the time spent in acquiring an education (in preparing men to live) has been largely wasted; and when for the time we ought to be living we find that we have still to learn how to live; and the abundance of life must be postponed.

Beads and trinkets are still valued more highly than broadcloth. In training the mind the ornamental is often placed before the useful. Poetry, music, Greek, French, etc., are given preference over studies which conduce to personal well-being. Some phases of music may be classed among the primary subjects; but other studies in music and in romance, French, etc., should not be given preference over those studies which prepare us for life.

We still have more or less of the ambition of the savage, namely: to "show off." To be able to speak

French, of myths and romance, is the end sought, for then people will think we are polished. Women in attiring themselves generally allow a desire for approbation to override the desire for warmth and convenience. Not what we are, but what we shall be thought to be, seems to be the dominant thought. And so it is in clothing our minds.

WHAT ABOUT OUR RELIGIOUS EDUCATION?

Is it preparing us to "live"? If not we shall find that when for the time we ought to be living, we still have to learn how to live; what we suppose we were doing remains still to be done. Here, too, we may find that the spectacular is often given preference over those forms of activity which have intrinsic value.

The primary function religion by the ministry of Christ has to perform is to "teach all nations . . . to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." To teach, means to "cause to know." The field of knowledge to be covered by the ministry was made clear in the commission: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." In preaching the gospel the "word" must be preached since "this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." "Discrimination is the beginning of knowledge"; and to be able to identify "the gospel" we must know something of its essential characteristics. In setting forth the gospel in detail we must preach doctrine; but since "doctrine" is not popular, and people will not think well of us if we preach doctrine, many have decided that their religious training shall not have its foundation in preaching of "the word." This is not giving primary studies a secondary place; but it is an entire elimination of the fundamental studies upon which a successful religious career depends.

MAKING SECONDARY WHAT IS PRIMARY.

That which makes life possible, "the word," has been postponed to that which makes possible, "life." To illustrate: The florist cultivates the plant for the sake of the flower. In doing so he regards the parts of the plant, i. e., the roots, leaves, and stem, as of value chiefly because they are instrumental in producing the flower. And while to the flower, the end, everything else is subordinate, yet the roots, stem, and leaves are the condition, the means, which make possible the flower, and are therefore of primary importance.

"The word" lies at the basis of a life in Christ: "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments"; "The words I speak unto you . . . they are life"; "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word . . . of God." Clearly, the observance of the "word" is the plant upon which the flower of eternal life blooms; it is the means to the end. What should be the object of our affection and attention then, the "word," or that which the word makes possible? The plant, or the flower? Religion in the main has neglected the plant for the sake of the flower. Its anxiety to achieve the end has diverted its attention from the means; it has been exulting over the prospects of life everlasting, and has overlooked the only possible means of acquiring that coveted possession.

The florist, in his effort to obtain the flower, bestows every care upon the rearing of the plant; and he knows that it would be folly to neglect the plant in his anxiety to obtain the flower. The rearing of the plant may not be so pleasant as the plucking of the flower. We may find it necessary in the course of our labors to fight against insects and other enemies to save the plant, but we must save the plant or lose the flower. Just so, religion should "Take heed unto . . . the doctrine" . . . "for in so doing" it will save its devotees (1 Timothy 4: 16). But in the face of the fact that doctrine (that is, the doctrine of the Bible) is unpopular, we may find that it is not so pleasant to "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints" (Jude 3) as it is to ignore that faith, and join the procession that honors God with its lips, but does not honor him by keeping his word. We may have a fight on our hands, to be sure, but we must fight or lose the reward: "These are they that came up out of great tribulation." With the ignoring of the word the prospect of life fades away.

EMOTION VERSUS ANALYSIS.

When Peter preached that memorable Pentecostal sermon, the purpose was clearly to defend the mission of Christ and the gospel. While some of the matter introduced did appeal to the emotions the effort was clearly one of analysis; the sentimental matter was simply incidental. Answering the inquiry, "What shall we do?" the people were directed to appropriate action based upon the doctrine of Christ as set forth in the gospel (Acts 2: 38). They were not left to soar in the realms of imagination, and asked to contemplate the fruits of a Christian experience; but they were directed to the cultivating of the plant upon which the fruit grows, and advised that the fruit would be theirs as a consequence.

To-day men are invited to "come to Jesus" and left to guess as to how they shall get there. To-day there is renewed from time to time the invitation, "Come unto me all ye that labor," but the manner of coming is left unexplained. The admonition to "fear God and keep his commandments" is scarcely ever accompanied with instructions which make the keeping possible.

It is a psychological fact that when the emotions run high the reason runs low; and so long as religion is looked upon as something intended to stir the emotional nature of man to the exclusion of those functions which bring men to the place where they "know the truth" its ministers will have use for a rich fund of fables, and the people will exult over the prospects (?) of eternal life to the extent of forgetting that eternal life is possible only by the keeping of the word.

SELF PRESERVATION.

Self preservation is said to be the first law of nature. Self preservation depends upon acquiring the means of life and appropriating them to their proper use. Religion has to do with the "life" of mankind; its chief function is to prepare men for complete living. It declares that life is consequent upon the observance of its laws. Whoever, therefore, purposes to enter into that field of activity which in religion is denominated "life," must at once be interested in understanding the laws according to which those activities vary. The law is the means; the life is the end. While to life everything else (including the law) is secondary, yet the law is primary, because upon its observance all life depends. Since that law is comprehended in "the word," self preservation demands that the preaching of the word shall take place as originally designed.

THE WORD DEFINED.

"Those facts which concern all mankind throughout all time must be held of greater moment than those which concern only a portion of them during a limited era." (Spencer.) Knowledge which has intrinsic value should take precedence over that which is only of conventional worth. Naturally enough the "word" that the ministry of Christ has for the world has application to all men, throughout all time. This is evident in the commission, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." But this obligation can not be discharged by the simple use of the terms "the word," "the doctrine of Christ," "the gospel," etc. "Discrimination is the beginning of knowledge," and before it can be truthfully said that we have met the conditions upon which the preservation of our lives depend, we must have such a knowledge of the doctrine, the word, and the gospel, as will enable us to discriminate between the gospel and a gospel; between the doctrine of Christ and a doctrine that may have currency under the name of Christ.

Without attempting to go into all the details that characterize the word of God, we will simply call attention to its fundamental characteristics. Some system of principles underlies every form of life. This is true of a life in Christ. Read Hebrews 5: 12 to 6: 3; here the importance of the principles of repentance, faith, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection, and eternal judgment as a condition for a perfected life is plainly set forth. These are to the soul what water, soil, air, and sunshine are to the plant. These are to a perfected life what the roots, stem, and leaves are to the flower. Upon the obeying of this law as a foundation for a life in Christ, and upon the "going on," the perfection of our lives depend.

The florist can not afford to neglect the watering of the plant any more than the cultivating; or any one principle in its development more than another; for each has its place in the development of the flower, and well does he know that it would be at the expense of the flower should he fail to apply each principle in its proper time and place. Instruction in horticulture which obscures or omits an essential element is undesirable, for the following of such a course would defeat the purpose of the florist. Imperfect doctrines or perverted gospels do not furnish a condition for eternal life any more than do imperfect instructions furnish a condition for the desired flower. Hence we are admonished that "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not" (2 John 10); and again, "If any man preach any other gospel . . . let him be accursed" (Galatians 1:8).

It is fatal to the interests of mankind to cause them to think that what is true is not true, and what is not true is true. And so the ministry have been placed under obligation to "preach the word," because by it alone does salvation come. "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth" (John 17:17).

GERMANY DESERTING THE CHURCH.

Church attendance in Protestant Germany is shrinking in what The Christian World's Berlin correspondent, quoted in The Christian Work (New York), calls an alarming way. According to a census made on a recent Sunday only eleven thousand two hundred and fifty-two persons were attending the sixty-eight State Protestant places of worship in Berlin. In the town of Chemnitz, in Saxony, with three hundred thousand Protestants, "the church attendance on this particular Sunday was two thousand two hundred and forty-eight." Or, taking the communion statistics as a test, "in Berlin, last year, only 14.81 per cent of the Protestant population partook of the communion." Of course, says our informant, the numbers are more satisfactory in country districts, but "in the towns, and in numerous country districts as well, not only is the number of communicants sinking, but it is rapidly sinking, and has been rapidly sinking for several years past." And we read on:

In Berlin it is an established fact that the number of those who make a practice of going to church is rapidly decreasing. A serious journal here has been investigating the causes for this, and as the result of its inquiries among the working classes, it has obtained the following six reasons for the falling off: 1. The influence of the antireligious press. 2. The Social Democratic agitation against the church. 3. The influence of evil-disposed neighbors and fellow workmen on those who would otherwise attend church. 4. The notorious unbelief of the educated classes. 5. The widely spread suspicion and dislike expended on the clergy, especially the belief that they do not themselves believe what they teach, and that their piety and truth is merely hypocrisy. 6. And, finally, the fact that all public places of amusement are open on Sunday, and that it is exactly on Sunday that the proprietors of these places use the greatest efforts to fill them. Another reason given for the increasing absence of young people from divine service is the recent institution of associations such as scouts, wanderers, and boys' and girls' brigades, all of which have their gatherings on Sundays. The great horse-races are held on Sunday, also the chief athletic events. It is stated that all these things help to deplete the churches.

Another journal in examining the causes at work in emptying the churches does not hesitate to remark that the antiquated methods employed by the clergy in addressing their flocks and in conducting their services are becoming "repulsive" to church-goers. Modern men in modern life will not tolerate a man in a pulpit calling them "beloved hearers." They hate the sanctimony and unctuousness inseparable from so many pastors. It irritates them to hear, "firstly, my beloved," and "secondly, my dear brethren," and "thirdly and lastly."

Then there is a strong impression that much might be done to modernize the service of song. The Germans are the most musical people in the world and possess some of the most magnificent church music ever written. But they are beginning to lose all patience with those slowly droned-forth chorales in which there is neither force nor fire. With a sigh they think of the bright services of song in English and American churches.

These remarks of German critics are presented "for what they are worth," but the writer is inclined to think that "the causes working for the emptying of the churches are deeper and more far-reaching than any here sketched." One effect of the decline in church attendance is itself a cause of a still further decline. That is the propaganda of the "Confessionless Committee," which is "agitating for a mass secession from the Protestant State Church." This movement, we are told, has set in with "tremendous impetuosity." One meeting is described, which met in one of the largest halls in Berlin, "called for midnight, to enable cabmen and tram-conductors and chauffeurs to attend after their day's work."

The place was packed to the doors, and the speaker of the night was Adolf Hoffmann, one of the most admired leaders of the Socialist party. On the tables in front of the audience were printed forms containing the text of the formal application to the authorities for secession from the State Church. You had only to sign your name and address, and everything else would be arranged for you. Some venturesome pastors put in an appearance. They thought it their duty to combat this movement, and the chairman was courteous enough to offer them the ear of the meeting. But they were simply howled down and covered with opprobrium. The meeting lasted till five in the morning. Hoffmann received ovation after ovation. The people frantically cheered as he quoted those passages in the Bible which treat of rich and poor, of masters who do not sufficiently reward their servants, of the powerful who oppress the weak. The entire audience sprang to their feet cheering hysterically when Hoffmann turned to the pastors and asked, "Gentlemen, do you ever preach from these texts?"—Literary Digest, February 7, 1914.

CONDENSATION OF MOISTURE.

The condensation of moisture in the atmosphere, i. e., the initial step in the formation of clouds, fog, rain, hail, and snow—has been explained for more than a generation by the presence in the air of myriads of minute (mostly ultra-microscopic) "dust" particles, each of which was supposed to serve as a center of condensation.

The well-known instrument invented by Aitken, in 1888, in which, after a small measured volume of air has been cooled by expansion, the resulting droplets of water are inspected through a microscope and counted, is known as the "dust-counter," because it has been assumed that the number of drops formed in this process represents the number of particles of "dust" in the given volume of air. This idea is entrenched in the very latest works on meteorology in the English language, though qualified by the admission that in a highly supersaturated atmosphere, such as may be produced at will in laboratory but hardly occurs in nature, condensation also occurs on ions, in the absence of "dust."

However, if we turn to recent German meteorological literature (e. g., Wegener's Thermodynamik der Atmosphäre or the third edition of Hann's Lehrbuch der Meteorologie, now appearing in parts) we find that a new idea, after slowly taking shape in the scientific journals for several years, has now definitely crystalized into the belief that "dust," in any ordinary sense of the term, has comparatively little to do with condensation in the atmosphere. Yet it is still believed that the water-droplet forms around a something-or-other that is not water. Ignorance as to what this something is, finds expression in its noncommittal name of "nucleus" (German Kern). Perhaps it may be a molecule of a hygroscopic gas. Several such gases occur in small and variable amounts in the atmosphere.

The whole subject is still in a highly problematic stage, the only definite fact being that "dust" has been shorn of its time-honored function as a cloud-maker, and that Aitken's Staubzähler has become a Kernzähler.—Scientific American, February 7, 1914.

MUSIC FOR THE MASSES.

People who are interested in the elevation of the standards of musical taste will watch with the keenest interest an experiment about to be tried by the Thomas Symphony Orchestra of Chicago.

A series of three concerts will be given during the spring months with prices of admission ranging from fifteen to seventy-five cents.

The management is desirous of learning to what extent the public will avail itself of the opportunity to hear high-grade music at a merely nominal rate.

If these concerts are anything of a success they will become a regular weekly feature of the orchestral season of 1914-15. We have long contended that the American people can be made just as appreciative of standard music as those of the countries of Europe if their taste is given the proper material upon which to feed. We confidently expect the Chicago experiment to be confirmatory of that conviction.—Des Moines (Iowa) Capital, February 10, 1914.

The General Conference.

Well, it is over! The last big song together,—the hand-claps, hurried or lingering,—the "good-byes," coming from hearts throbbing with the joy of friendship, and the comradeship of mutual service! In spite of all we can do, the parting time of our conference is the sad time of the season. We have met, mingled our prayers, united our praises, joined our efforts, received together of God's wondrous Spirit, felt his blessing, his commendation, or his chiding, and together or separate we go out, with mutual experiences, and mutual desires to renew our allegiance to our one great Master!

In these comminglings we learn to respect each other, to love and to trust. We find new and lovely depths of character in many heretofore casual acquaintances; and recognizing their purity, their devotion, their self-abnegation and complete surrender of all earthly rewards that the cause we love may prosper, can one wonder that eyes are dimmed with unshed tears, or that hearts swell with emotion and longing when the "good-bye time" has come—when comes the "parting of the ways," and we realize none may know whether they will ever again converge upon earth?

It is joy, however, to remember that to the gentle, trustful spirit of the true Saint there is no such thing as despair; for always he is attended by a living hope, a confidence that, whether here and soon, or elsewhere and later, there will be a reuniting of broken links,—a happy resumption of interrupted associations!

Our music? Truly the conference of 1914 will be ever blended in memory with harmony and the concord of sweet sounds! Never before has one of our conferences received such splendid uplift in this line of consecrated service! The singers were united in the joy of giving, and, thanks to the breadth and generosity of perception in the minds of our presiding officers, who recognized, some years ago, the possibilities ahead by uniting our musical activities, and who took the initiatory steps necessary to coordinate them as has been done, every opportunity was granted to us to present our messages of harmony to the public.

Three times the building was filled, a different audience each time, with eager listeners who hung with delight upon the artistic rendering of the oratorio, "The Holy City." Beautiful settings were given these renditions by the graceful introductions of Brethren W. W. Smith, J. W. Rushton and J. W. Wight, on the three occasions respectively. The soloists were Sisters W. N. Robinson and Frances White-Norris, and Brethren Paul Craig and O. L. James. Sister Amy Winning did some truly lovely work at the organ. Her solos were heavenly, and the quickness of her ear, and mind, and fingers makes her an ideal accompanist as well. Brother R. G. Smith added to the strength and vigor of the attacks of the chorus by his excellent piano work. And between the one hundred and fifty singers and their enthusiastic leader there was an almost magical accord. Brother Hoxie is a most talented director, having the perception of all fine shadings and blendings, as well as the majesty and thrilling rhythm of the larger finale movements. He played upon the great responsive human organ before him with consummate skill, and was an inspiration to everyone in the chorus.

The general conference choir enrolled about one hundred and ninety, and these members were as faithful in attendance as their various duties permitted. Special programs on seven of the eleven nights of the conference prevented the use of as many of the anthems as had been anticipated. Then, too, the necessity for smoothing out the rough places of the Holy City numbers gave less time to anthem practices, so that more of the 1913 series were used than of the newer ones.

Throughout all the conference much was heard about the splendid music. At the close of evening services the choir remained for rehearsals. Large numbers would stay—listening and rejoicing—disregarding the lateness of the hour. The singing has proved an inspiration to the eldership as well as the singers themselves. As one expressed it with great earnestness and energy, "I'm just going away from this conference with a firm determination to get busy, and stay busy, and DO THINGS!"

Our choir should have been even larger and better prepared. So many expressed themselves as regretting that they delayed too long in getting the anthem books and fitting themselves for a place. Then, too, we learn of whole choirs, near enough to have added materially to our strength and numbers who failed to get in line and in touch. May we not hope to have you with us next time? We are hoping and planning for even better and bigger things.

Brother Hoxie will be making announcements soon, and unfolding his plans for the coming year. His whole-hearted enthusiasm about this work is irresistible, and is, in itself, a guarantee of a grand success. Would there were opportunities for him to get in personal and frequent touch with the masses of our musicians, and inspire them with a portion of his own determination and consecration! Then Zion would indeed be ready to "Arise, and put on her beautiful garments," and be able to do really wonderful things in the glorious name of music!

MRS. B. M. ANDERSON.

Staccatos.

Brother Charles Brackenbury, of Lamoni, took some pictures of our conference choir after the Easter morning services. About one hundred and fifty are shown. Many were absent for various good reasons, but enough were present to give an idea of the enthusiasm and devotion, represented by our 1914 conference choir. Copies of these pictures may be obtained for fifty cents each from Brother Brackenbury himself, at Lamoni, or through his agent in the matter, Brother Hale W. Smith, 803 West White Oak Street, Independence, Missouri.

Monday evening, the 13th, the Independence choir members entertained all visiting choir people at the home of Sister Emma Criley. A receiving line, of which every person present became a member, was the first feature of the evening. Then a short program consisting of songs by Sister Anna Mae Morgan and Brother Paul Craig, piano solo by Sister Laura B. Kelley, violin solo, by Brother Hoxie, and reading by Sister Mildred Irwin. Then Sister Bertha Steele-Van Eaton took charge of some amusements, the chief one being a fieldmeet, in which the tenors got four of the six first prizes: Hoxie and Flanders in the relay race; Cooper in the shot put, and Brackenbury in the broad jump. The altos came next for honors, Miss Criley winning first in the yard dash, and Miss James first in the hammer throw. As far as the refreshment event was concerned each of the one hundred and twenty-five present won first place.

The morning preaching services during conference were characterized by the work of a large chorus of men's voices, also by a variety of solos from visiting singers. The work of finding out these soloists and arranging for their appearance was left to a committee. This solo work proved a very attractive feature of the services.

Some very diversified music was heard during the convention. Among the special numbers were vocal solos by Sister W. N. Robinson, Brother Paul Craig and Sister J. C. Smith; violin solos by Brother Hoxie and Brother Joseph Anderson; vocal sextette; string quintet; choruses by the Independence choir, and by children of the Intermediate grade; a piano solo by a five year old girlie; and a vocal solo by a sweet-voiced boy of eight were vastly appreciated. Perhaps the biggest hit of all was made by the Sunday School orchestra, under the leadership of Brother Charles B. Eaton. We must not forget to mention the Juvenile orchestra, in charge of Sister Royal Brocaw. This organization has twenty-six members, none of whom are over twelve years of age.

In the conference choir were members from the four quarters of the country: Canada, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Texas, Mississippi, Nebraska, Utah, and California were represented, as well as the regions more nearly "round about." It was remarkable that the work manifested should have been so uniform, and so easily rounded out.

MRS. B. M. A.

General Chorister's Message.

The last of the good-byes have been said, and the parting handclasps meant even more than ever before. New ideals have been formed, a desire for a greater service has been awakened, and we return to our homes with new visions of our possibilities.

Our columns have been filled with the achievements of the singers of Israel. Soloists and chorus have received their measure of commendation. We leave unsaid what has already been written, and mention some of the incidents that make us feel that much has been accomplished.

The expressions of appreciation were not idly spoken. Many came with tears in their eyes and a warm handclasp, thanking God that we were making the effort to encourage music and its proper use in the church. Some remarked that it had awakened keener desires, had created new ideals, and had strengthened them in a good purpose.

"It has made me realize how little I knew," remarked one, "and I am going back to study."

Another said, "I can never be a musician, but I can be and will strive to be a better preacher, and a bigger man." The beautiful strains and uplifting thoughts had lifted his life out of a rut to bigger and better things.

How wonderfully it has impressed us with the thought that music touches the soul of man, stimulates his intelligence and truly helps him to develop a greater capacity. Our lives would have been cheered had we known only one had been reached; but when the knowledge comes that the multitudes have found rest, inspiration, and cheer, we lift our voices in praise and adoration to God for his precious gift of music.

And mingled with our praise is a longing, heartfelt desire that no evil will attend the success for which the choir movement is aiming. We have a wonderful opportunity, but we warn you all again and again to keep humble, that the Spirit of God may perform its part in the mission of our work.

I can not give a full expression of that which is in my heart, but desire to say that many whom we have longed to see turn into the pathway of service have come to us with willingness, and in the true spirit of service have asked us to let them help, offering all of their talent to the glory of God.

Let "the other fellow" be our motto this year,—helping him over the rough places helps us also. My message to you at the beginning of another conference year is, Study—but not to the neglect of duty to God and fellow man; learn to be a willing, cheerful giver, without thought of recompense. That is true service.

ALBERT N. HOXIE.

Chords Still Vibrant.

THE OLD CHOIR MOVEMENT IN THE CHURCH.

The new choir movement was in my mind when I picked up an old volume of Times and Seasons to do a little research work, and the interesting title given below attracted my eye. I read as follows:

"CHOIR OF THE STAKE OF ZION IN THE CITY OF NAUVOO."

"The Choir of Singers presented a petition to the Board of Regents of the University, at their last sitting, for the appointment of a professor and wardens in the Department of Music in the University of the City of Nauvoo, to constitute a board for the regulation of music in this city, which was adopted, and the following persons appointed; to-wit: Gustavus Hills, professor. Wardens: B. S. Wilbur, first ward; Stephen H. Goddard, second ward; Titus Billings, third ward; John Pack, fourth ward.

"The chancellor, General Bennett, recommended the regents to instruct the board composed of the professor and wardens, aforesaid, to prohibit the flat sound of the notes, and adopt the broad; whereupon General Joseph Smith observed, 'I move the instruction, for I was always opposed to anything flat.' The motion prevailed.—Nem Con."

This was early in January, 1842. Later in the same month we find the following editorial:

"MUSIC.

"We are pleased to see the laudable zeal manifested by some of our musical friends, to bring about a uniform and tasteful style of sacred singing. Among a people emigrated from different countries, with different prejudices and habits as we are, this is no easy task, and we can but admire the improvements made, and the judicious order established within a few months past. By the by, we peeped in the other evening, during the performance of the Musical Lyceum, and heard what will make us try to peep in again.

"A proper and expressive articulation of the words constitute the life and soul of music; intelligence thus clothed with the robes of melody, and harmonic numbers, moves gently over the spirit, imprints her heavenly footsteps, and awakens all its energies. We should not be so sure that the performances before hinted at were good, were it not that we are sure we have a tolerably good ear for music, or an ear for good music, and we were delighted, whereas our devil, who is known to have a bad ear for good music, and a good ear for bad music, was quite differently affected; he crowded in edgewise, but soon deserted,—said he could not stand the racket."

And on page 666, volume 3, Times and Seasons, this interesting article. You will notice it is in the minutes of a meeting held prior to the preceding notices.

"UNIVERSITY OF NAUVOO—MUSICAL LYCEUM.

"At a meeting of the professor and wardens in the Department of Music, in the University of the City of Nauvoo, held in said city, December 21, 1841, present Gustavus Hills, professor, and B. S. Wilbur and Stephen Goddard, wardens. Voted, that B. S. Wilbur act as secretary of the board.

"Resolved, That we will adopt the Manual of Instruction, published by Lowell Mason, as a textbook for the examination of teachers in the elements of the science of music, and as a guide for instruction in the art of sacred singing in the schools of this city.

"Resolved, That we approve of Porter's Cyclopaedia of Music, as a textbook for those who wish to pursue the science beyond the elementary principles.

"Adjourned, to meet again December 25, 1841.

GUSTAVUS HILLS, President.

"Attest, B. S. WILBUR, Secretary."

"December 25, 1841.

"The board met pursuant to adjournment; present Gustavus Hills, professor, and B. S. Wilbur, Titus Billings, Stephen Goddard, and John Pack, wardens.

"Voted, That Stephen Goddard act as treasurer of the board.

"Voted, That approved teachers shall receive from the board a certificate of qualification, under the signature of the professor as president, and countersigned by the secretary.

Resolved, 1st, That for our own improvement in the art of music, and with a view to extend and elevate musical science, we hereby form ourselves into a Lyceum of Music, to be styled 'The Teacher's Lyceum of Music in the University of the City of Nauvoo.'

"Resolved, 2d, That the professor shall be ex officio president, and the wardens ex officio directors of said lyceum.

"Resolved, 3d, that all questions before the board shall be decided by a majority of votes; the minority may, however, appeal to the chancellor and regents of the University. Provided, That in voting for admission of members, the decision shall be by unanimity.

Resolved, 4th. That any person may become a member, and be entitled to the privileges of the Lyceum by a unanimous vote of the board of officers.

"Resolved, 5th, That the Lyceum shall meet once each week at such time and place as the board shall appoint.

"Resolved, 6th, That each member shall bear, if required, his quota of the expenditures necessary to carry out the operations of the Lyceum.

"Resolved, 7th, That every member absenting himself from any regular meeting of the lyceum shall forfeit and pay the sum of twelve and one half cents for each and every meeting from which he shall have been absent. Provided, however, that if a reasonable excuse be rendered, the forfeiture shall not be exacted. And provided, further, That if any member shall have been absent for three regular meetings in succession, and no reasonable excuse be rendered, he shall have forfeited his membership, and his name shall be struck from the list of members.

"Resolved, That the secretary shall keep a journal of all the proceedings of the board, and of the lyceum, and a list of the names of all the members, on the several parts assigned them, which proceedings shall be signed by the president, and countersigned by the secretary.

"Adjourned to meet again the 28th inst., 1841.

"GUSTAVUS HILLS, President.

"Attest, B. S. WILBUR, Secretary."

Of course we know there was no great university building at Nauvoo, but they had a charter for a university and a board of regents, a chancellor, and registrar, and a faculty, also wardens for the different wards with the departments of mathematics and English literature in operation, and others provided for at this time.

In volume 4, page 95, I found a call for sacred hymns:

"SACRED HYMNS.

"Persons having hymns adapted to the worship of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, are requested to hand them, or send them to Emma Smith, immediately.

"NAUVOO, February 15, 1843."

And it is further interesting to us to remember the story of Ebenezer Robinson regarding the publishing plant. He had been associated with Don C. Smith in literary work while in Missouri. When they went to Nauvoo, they had only an old printing press that had been buried in the earth to keep it from the mob. This had to be cleansed of what Ebenezer Robinson called "Missouri's polluted soil."

Nauvoo had few houses at this period and they could obtain no room in which to put the press. They moved it into a cellar. A spring of water came through the wall and ran through the cellar. Here these two men and Robert B. Thompson risked their health to edit the Times and Seasons. Elder Robinson resigned but afterward occupied again.

In August, 1841, both D. C. Smith and Robert B. Thompson died, supposedly of exposure in this work. This was a blow to the literary work of the church. The printing press was moved from the corner of Bain and Water streets to Main and Kimball. There were many martyrs to the early work of the church.

Maybe I have wandered from the choir movement—but have I? Are there any among us ready to work at any cost for this onward movement of the church work—in any department? As were these men of the '30's and '40's in church history?

The Echo Stop.

MRS. AUDENTIA ANDERSON, Independence, Missouri.

Gospel Sister: Adopting your suggestion and complying with your request, I will present one of the pictures hanging upon memory's wall, imprinted there by its being oft repeated during my youthful days by my saintly mother. The story will have to come to you in my own wording and manner of expression.

In faraway Scotland there was born at Paisley a lad, May 11, 1823, who, ere he was a year old, was left without a mother's care. After an eventful and checkered life he in 1841 received baptism at the hands of Elder Glaud Roger, and not long thereafter was ordained and sent out to preach the angel message in his native land.

There resided at the town of Blantyre a canny old Scotchman, by name Humphrey Baird, with his family of wife, three sons, and seven daughters, all members of David Livingston's church. The sons and eldest daughter married and emigrated or died, as did also the mother and father by early spring of 1844. It was in the fall of that year that that which I desire to relate took place. The care of the home fell upon the youngest but one of the girls, Miss Martha. She was quite an active church worker.

One evening while she with a number of other lassies were on their way to prayer meeting, and as they passed down the street, there came through an open window singing. The lassies stopped to listen and inquired one of another, "Girls, what is that?" Their curiosity being aroused, they crossed the street, and looking in through the open window they saw the rooms of a private dwelling filled with people in the act of worship.

A tall young man with raven-colored, curly hair led the singing, and also offered prayer. Another hymn was sung, and the young man began to preach. Miss Martha suggested to her companions that they go in, at which some one who had joined the girls said, "They are Mormons." The word or name was new and strange, but Miss Martha, deserted by her associates, boldly entered and heard a sermon on baptism.

Exception was taken to the denial of infant sprinkling, and the lassie bearded the lion in his den, challenging the young man for proof of his statements. He at once began to read from the Bible, when (then, as now, so soon as a Latter Day Saint minister begins to read the word of God,) the cry was raised, Oh, you have a different Bible from ours. The controversy was adjourned for the evening and until the next afternoon, to be renewed at the home of the young lady, when every quotation depended upon by her only turned to her disappointed and defeat. She soon after united with the church, and later became the wife of the young minister.

It was the sweet music of Zion that brought about this union. There were eight children born to them, six of whom held membership in this Reorganized Church, the eldest of whom pens these lines. Father preached the restored gospel for fifty-six years, and I for more than forty-seven years. The power and attractiveness in the music of a clear and manly voice in the singing of the Saints' delightful songs was the chit of this short recital.

May God aid and bless you in the effort to increase the song service of the church, is my humble wish and prayer.

In gospel bonds,

ROB'T. M. ELVIN.

Musical Notes.

Under the O'Gorman Bill provisions are made whereby $150,000 may be spent by the United States Government for the purchase of musical instruments and military band supplies; from which it will be seen that "Uncle Samuel" has a certain appreciation for the value of the charms that are supposed to soothe the "savage breast."

The new parcels post rate, effective from March 16, will lessen the cost of postage on music as well as other printed matter weighing more than eight ounces, the difference in cost depending upon the distance, up to the fifth zone for several pounds and up to the second zone for one or more pounds. Music books and dealers' supplies will be principally benefited by the new rate.

Columbia University has added a new course to its curriculum in the study of the physical basis of sound as related to music production, including both voice and instrument. It may be noted also that the Educational Bureau at Washington, in a recent report, urges the use of a course in musical appreciation, with credits to be given for the work done under proper teachers outside of school hours besides the credits otherwise given.

The Exposition organ to be used in San Francisco next year will be one of the five best organs in the world. Most extraordinary preparations are being made in every leading line of musical activity, and, from all appearances, we may expect the greatest musical treat upon a large scale that the public have ever been privileged to hear.

It is claimed that of $6,464,000 worth of musical instruments exported from the United States in 1813, fifty-nine per cent were exported from New York. Notwithstanding the greater volume of business, however, it seems that one can often purchase to much better advantage in several other places, where the prices are not so rigidly maintained.

The world's champion song writer is said to have been Henry Russell, an Englishman, born in 1812. He left eight hundred published songs as his record. "The Old Arm Chair" is one of his best known compositions. Professor W. F. Suds, an American composer of note, has written nearly five hundred musical compositions that have been published.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

The Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The room in which the auxiliary held its meetings was decorated with the following suggestive mottoes:

- "Man serves God only by serving man."
- "Work well planned is half done."
- "Poor cooking renders good food indigestible."
- "A partnership with God is motherhood."
- "Bring up your children in light and truth."
- "God requires great things of the fathers."
- "Christ saw much in the world to weep over, but nothing to look upon with contempt."
- "Domestic science—means conservation of time, energy, and material."
- "Intelligent labor is not drudgery."
- "The end of learning is to know God."
- "Life is not a cup to be drained but an offering to be poured out."

Homemade Montessori Materials.

On the morning of the first conference of the auxiliary an instructive talk and demonstration was given, in which a number of homemade Montessori "materials," such as are used in the houses of childhood, were exhibited. Afterwards, when it was our pleasure to visit a Montessori school in Kansas City, we found that the homemade articles were fully the equal of those in use in the school. We may add that we saw in the school nothing that could not be done by a mother in her home.

This is our encouragement to mothers to inform themselves concerning this method of teaching their little children. It is something of value to the children which mothers and fathers may do at home for their little ones. Later, we may have something to say of what we saw in the school we visited.

The Eugenics Conference.

We were not in time to hear the paper on "The child," but it was reported as being excellent. However, the following questions, had under consideration in the conference, will serve to show the value of the work of this department:

"What children have the best chance in life?"

"What is the surest way of imparting right character to children?"

"What is the cause of the large number of defective characters?"

"Upon what does the world's welfare largely depend?"

"Does the character of parents previous to parenthood have any effect upon their offspring?"

"What can we do now?"

The study of eugenics is the study of such problems as these.

The Sewing and Aid Conference.

We missed the early part of this meeting also, but what we did hear was practical and full of interest. One thing we especially felt to indorse was the suggestion that the sewing and aid societies may be a help to burdened mothers in caring for their children, not only in sewing for them, but, at times, by relieving the mothers, so that they may have some of the pleasures and benefits of attending church services.

We are reminded by this of a little sister who absented herself one Sabbath afternoon from prayer meeting that she might sit with an aged mother whose daughter was obliged to devote herself to exclusive attendance upon her feeble parent. Does not the Lord, looking down upon us all, view with approbation service of this kind? Is it not worship in his sight?

One of the questions asked in this conference was, "Is it necessary to ask permission of the officers of the branch every time we give a social or entertainment?" It was answered that it certainly is necessary, if the social or entertainment be held in the church. We suggest further that the counsel of the branch officers should be heeded, even if the entertainment be held elsewhere. The cases are rare in which the advice of the officers of the church is at fault. Care should be exercised always by all Saints to live together in peace. Friction should not be permitted to arise over small matters.

Another question was, "Is it right and does the church sanction the selling of tickets on a quilt, one ticket holding the number that draws the quilt?" It was agreed that such methods of raising money should be avoided.

Still another question was asked, "If we join the auxiliary, can we still use the money we earn as we see best?" Very promptly came the answer, "Without a doubt."

Literary and Educational Conference.

The session of this conference was opened by an introductory talk in which the speaker told of the profit and pleasure of one literary and educational circle, who chose for themselves the name, "Hugo Study Club."

They were mothers who formed this circle, women who had given years of devotion to their homes and children until the time of less arduous labor had come to them. They felt the desire to "brush up" in some of the things that engage the attention of younger people. They got out their dusty grammars, histories, and dictionaries. They wished to speak our English language correctly, a very laudable desire. After a time, they selected a literary work for study, Hugo's Les Misérables. They read in connection the history of the times which formed the setting of the work. They considered sociological questions as they read Hugo's portrayal of the conditions of poverty. They did other things as an outgrowth of their effort to do systematic and profitable reading. They found deep enjoyment under this refining influence.

Other persons present in this conference told of similar circles of study in other places. Some are studying the church works, some are studying psychology, some the history of education, or other branches of profitable learning. The field of research is so great that the tastes and talents of each one has full opportunity to be satisfied, if she will avail herself of the avenues that open before her. We may be and should be intelligent people, and, to be such, we must read good literature.

Domestic Science Conference.

A practical demonstration in cooking was given in this conference by one of our young ladies who is studying domestic science at the State Agricultural College of Kansas. In this conference were considered such questions as, "What causes fruits to jell? Why should soft water be used for boiling vegetables? Why should eggs be cooked at low temperature instead of in boiling water? Why should meat for soups be started to cook in cold water? Why is spring wheat better than winter wheat for bread making?" The young demonstrator readily gave the scientific reason for the correct methods of cooking the articles named, and for the selection of proper articles of diet.

How invaluable is such a fund of information to the young woman who takes upon herself the responsible position of housekeeper! One of the factors that will work speedy results in the making of better homes is the study of domestic science. Our young girls should utilize their opportunities to obtain this knowledge.

We noted in the audience on the morning of this conference not only the mother but also the father of the young lady who gave the demonstration. We observed his presence with pleasure, wishing mentally that all fathers might realize the importance of giving their children the equipment that will make them able to fill places of usefulness in the world's great field of service.

The Young Woman's Conference.

No conference of the Woman's Auxiliary was more spiritually uplifting than that of the young women. The scripture text, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," and the motto, "Some other girl," were especially appropriate to the work of this conference.

In a ten minute talk, one of our young sisters advocated the cause of the unpopular girl, the girl who is neglected from various causes, because she is in some way unattractive, or, if bright and good, is too poor to keep up with the demands of society in the way of dress and in ability to take her turn in entertaining.

The speaker urged that our girls should be trained to befriend one another. She pointed out the possibility of one's being a religious non-Christian, a professor but not a practitioner of religion. She presented it as the duty of popular girls to look after the unpopular ones. We commend her thoughts as worthy of acceptance.

Following this speaker came a young miss, a member of the former speaker's Religio class, who told of the efforts of herself and classmates to be helpful. They sometimes visit the old people in the church home for the aged and sing for them. One girl of the class makes a practice of going into the homes of people who need help in "just little things," doing her good deeds and slipping away as quietly as possible. Another young girl, of a Sunday school class, modestly exhibited the May baskets made by her class, to be filled with flowers and carried to places where they would give cheer.

The leader in these efforts stated that the principle governing in the work of her classes was to work quietly, not letting the right hand know what the left hand does. She justified mention of what they were doing only by the desire to extend the good work among others.

The Prayer Union.

SUBJECTS FOR THE FIRST THURSDAY IN MAY.

Prayer for the church, its priesthood and members, that all may be earnestly engaged in the building up of Zion to the ideal condition of oneness and equality enjoined in the revelations to the church; to speak evil of no one, to regard the reputation of our brother and sister as we regard our own, that love and faith may abound.

Lesson, Mark 13: 33-37; 12: 28-31. Memory verse, Psalm 119: 10.

LETTER TO THE PRAYER UNION.

About a year has passed since the reestablishment of the Prayer Union, and, according to my promise, I will report as much as I can of its progress.

The names enrolled are fifty-two, a very small number out of the total membership of the church, to be sure; but even fifty faithful ones can be a source of strength. I presume there are many who observe the hours of prayer who have not sent in their names. Among the fifty-two are two brethren who desired especially to observe parents' day. I think this commendable, and that it should encourage the mothers and sisters that there are even two.

The requests for prayers by the sick and afflicted have been many, but no record has been kept of the number except by Him to whom our prayers are offered. It would be encouraging to see a letter now and then from such as feel that they receive good from the faithful observance of the time and subjects of prayer. Suggestions for improvement in the programs are invited, from either the brethren or the sisters.

In your prayers also remember me.

God's Seed Not Nursed by a Polygamous Wife.

"For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people: otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things."—Book of Jacob 2: 6.

The Utah polygamists see in this "for if I will" quotation a future provision for polygamy. The writer of this article sees in this clause provision for a system of raising up seed unto the Lord as opposite to that of polygamy as is the brightest noonday to the darkest midnight.

The prophet Jacob tells these Nephites that they excused themselves for having more than one wife because of the practices of David and Solomon, et al. A close reading of the words of Jacob discloses the fact that these much married pre-Brighamites argued that as David and Company had numerous progeny which the Lord blessed, therefore they would also "raise up seed unto the Lord" by the many wives route; but the Lord commands Jacob to say: "For if I will . . . raise up seed unto me, I will command my people." The Lord makes the issue, not of raising children, but raising up seed unto the Lord. We ask our very technical polygamists, who will throw over all the numerous commands against polygamy and hinge their salvation on this "for if I will," etc., to please notice the real subject under consideration.

I have examined two hundred and sixteen quotations from the old Bible on the subject of "seed" and fail to find one single text which refers to producing offspring as raising up seed unto the Lord. There may be such a statement but I have not found it. Malachi 2:15 comes nearest to that thought than any other I have noticed, and that is a positive command against more than the one wife. In America a "righteous branch" was to be raised up by one wife law.

If raising up seed unto the Lord was to be accomplished by having more than one wife, why did the Lord command the people to stop polygamy, and call it a "grosser crime" and an "abomination" in his sight! If many wives would raise up seed unto the Lord, then one wife would be doing her share. But the Lord saying: "For if I will . . . raise up seed unto me, I will command my people," shows conclusively that he had never given a command to that people how seed was to be raised up to him. By neither one wife nor many could that desirable condition be consummated.

GOD'S SEED AND BRIGHAM'S BROOD.

The Lord said in the beginning, to Adam and his one wife, "Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth" (not heaven). That is the object of the marriage covenant, to reproduce the species. David and Solomon were doing this at a wholesale rate, with Brigham a close third, but the Lord calls that an abomination in his sight; so they were not raising up seed unto him.

There is only one system on earth that has ever been given whereby God raises up seed unto himself! He did not wait until away down in the year 1843 to announce that law either. Turning a few leaves from the statement of Jacob, condemning polygamy, in Mosiah 8:4, you will find this: "But I say unto you, that the time shall come when it shall no more be expedient to keep the law of Moses." These Nephite polygamists were then under that law. Noting Mosiah 8:39-43, we find the law to raise up seed unto the Lord, and the only law under heaven given for that purpose. Here it is: "Behold, I say unto you, that when his (Christ's) soul has been made an offering for sin, he shall see his seed. And now what say ye? And who shall be his seed? Behold, I say unto you, that whosoever has heard the words of the prophets, yea, all the holy prophets who have prophesied concerning the coming of the Lord: I say unto you, that all those who have hearkened unto their words, and believed that the Lord would redeem his people, and have looked forward to that day for a remission of their sins; I say unto you, that these are his seed, or they are heirs of the kingdom of God."

This is how God would raise up seed unto himself! Polygamy was as far from the mind of the Lord when he said, "For if I will," as heaven is from hell. A belief in Jesus Christ made the believer of the seed of Christ. Who can be so stupid and sensual as not to see this?

The idea that God would make the most emphatic declaration against polygamy that language could convey, and affirm it and reaffirm it, and then in such a verse, which calls it an abomination, make provision for its practice at some future time! God was to raise up the seed, not Brigham and Joseph F. God's way to raise up his seed was, "Ye must be born again"; Brigham's was, "Ye must be married again." Brigham preached that and enthusiastically practiced it; and Joseph F. has partaken of the same enthusiasm.

To prove that the whole polygamous conception of "seed" is wrong, I shall quote the words of one of the great apostles of the "grosser crime," Orson Hyde:

"If the Savior of the world found it his duty to be baptized to fulfill all righteousness, a command of far less importance than that of multiplying his race . . . would he not find it his duty to join in with the rest of the faithful ones in replenishing the earth? . . . 'He shall see his seed.' . . . If he has no seed, how could he see them? . . . We say it was Jesus Christ who was married (at Cana) . . . whereby he could see his seed, before he was crucified."—The Seer, reproduced from Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, pp. 79-82.

WHO ARE CHRIST'S SEED?

Hyde evidently had never read what the Almighty had inspired Mosiah to say about the seed of Christ. I quote again from Mosiah 8:39-43: "Behold I say unto you, that when his soul has been made an offering for sin, he shall see his seed. . . . And who shall be his seed? . . . all those who have hearkened unto their words, and believed that the Lord would redeem his people, and have looked forward to that day for a remission of their sins; I say unto you that these are his seed, or they are heirs of the kingdom of God."

This agrees with Isaiah 53:10. Christ was not to see his seed until after his crucifixion, and it was not to be a fleshly seed either. If the polygamous mind can make such a colossal blunder regarding Christ, how much light can be expected from that source?

To place this matter of the "seed" beyond all doubt, I give a number of other references. Christ said these words in Book of Nephi 4:47, "And as many as have received me, to them have I given to become the sons of God." This is the law for raising up seed unto the Lord, and it is not polygamous doctrine. Doctrine and Covenants 90:4: "And now, verily I say unto you . . . all those who are begotten through me, are partakers of the glory of the same, and are the church of the Firstborn." This is how God raises up seed unto himself; not by polygamous wife number nineteen, etc. 1 Peter 1:23, "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God."

The polygamous conception of raising up seed unto the Lord is to start a private kindergarten; God's way is, "Except a man is born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter the kingdom of heaven." How plain this is made in Matthew 13:38, "The field is the world: the good (God's) seed are the children of the kingdom." Also 1 Corinthians 4:15, "For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for in Christ Jesus I have begotten ye through the gospel."

Those old Nephite polygamists had the Mosaic law. God told them, "For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people." He did command them, and that command was to obey the gospel and become the seed of Christ. I think that "For if I will" is the most potent clause against polygamy ever written. Raising up seed by polygamy is sensuality; raising up seed by the gospel, is spirituality. They are diametrically opposed to each other, and as "For if I will" is God's way, the gospel way of raising up seed; therefore that clause is a scintillating, a vibrating, a dynamic denunciation of polygamy. We have seized the enemy's gun, turned it on him, and blown his false interpretation to that place which John Sherman said was war—and that is where it belongs.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

ROZELLE, AUSTRALIA, 623 Darling Street, March 4, 1914.

Curtis-Ellmore Debate.

This debate was held March 2 to 13, at Sparta, Michigan. Brother J. F. Curtis affirmed church proposition the first six nights. Elder William Ellmore, of the nonprogressive wing of the Church of Christ, affirmed their church proposition the last six nights. The debate was interesting and educational. Those acquainted with Brother Curtis will know that our side of the question was well looked after. He was wonderfully blessed while setting up the church, showing up the apostasy, and presenting the restoration of the gospel.

Mr. Ellmore tried hard to show that there was no total apostasy by dwelling on, "Let the wheat and tares grow together till the harvest" (Matthew 13: 30). He made light of the signs following the believer now. He tried hard to prove that they were intended merely to confirm the gospel when first established, then to cease with the apostles. He attempted to show that the gospel was complete without the signs and power; that when the gospel was confirmed at Pentecost the power ceased, and thus became separated from the gospel. He urged, What God hath put asunder let no man join together. Brother Curtis showed that the gospel and signs were inseparably joined together (Mark 16: 16, 17). He quoted Romans 1: 16, "It [the gospel] is the power of God unto salvation," hence, "what God hath joined together let no man put asunder." Mr. Ellmore floundered around Holy Spirit baptism and made light of the laying on of hands for the healing of sick.

He did not believe in this ordinance because the Devil and sinners could and did work miracles to deceive the people. He finally went to the hog pen for a miracle, which he seemed to accept as genuine. He read about a crippled man walking with crutches past an old sow and her litter of pigs, when one of the crutches struck one of the pigs and the old sow chased the cripple to a fence, where he threw down his crutches, jumped over the fence and ran away scared and cured. Brother Curtis, in reply, said, "My opponent admits that the Devil and sinners can work miracles; he admits that an old sow can work miracles; but that a Campbellite can't."

Brother Curtis produced abundant scriptural evidence as proof of a total apostasy. He also read from several Campbellite writers, such as Warlic, Chism, Franklin, and Life of Campbell, all of which agree that there was a total apostasy.

Mr. Ellmore in referring to the man child of Revelation 12 made sport of the name "authority" that Latter Day Saints gave the "baby." Brother Curtis took up the Campbellite version, the "Living Oracles," and read the name they gave the "baby," "a masculine son." Said he, "Would it not have been too bad if it had been a 'feminine son'?"

Mr. Ellmore's hobby was, "no church until Pentecost." He conceded that the terms church and kingdom were synonymous. Brother Curtis showed that the gospel of the kingdom was preached by John the Baptist (Mark 1: 1-5) and that Jesus said, "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel" (Mark 1: 15); also, "The kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it" (Luke 16: 16).

Brother Curtis read from Sketches of Our Pioneers, page 43; Hayden's History, page 173; Grafton, page 84; and Limerick, page 3, all of which show that the Church of Christ started in 1827. He repeatedly asked Mr. Ellmore to talk about that church, but all to no avail. Brother Curtis asked him time after time, "If you belong to the Pentecost church, what in the world are you doing in this church organized down here in 1827, by Alexander Campbell?" All he would say to that was, "I'm not going to heaven nor hell on A. Campbell's back." He started and ended at Pentecost.

After the Pentecost story, Brother Curtis picked up Ellmore's American Standard version of the Bible that he used during the debate and read from Acts 2: 47 and showed that according to his Bible he could not prove that there was a church at Pentecost. It reads, "And the Lord added 'unto them,'" not "unto the church" as it reads in the King James version, which was to be the standard of evidence in the discussion.

The Saints are stronger in the faith than before. There seemed to be some outside interest. Elders E. N. Burt and Clyde Ellis remained a few days after the debate to hold meetings. We hope to hear of good results soon.

ALVIN R. ELLIS.

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA, March 7, 1914.

Editors Herald: We are glad to report as president of the Wilburton Branch that we have some faithful Saints here who are willing to do their best in helping on the Lord's work. While we have some dark places we have many things to encourage. As a district we have not received much help from the missionary force.

This is God's work and God is in this church. While some things are not just as they should be, other things come to us that cause us to rejoice. My labors this past year have been limited on account of finances and dull work and other things over which we have no control. I have done some preaching to interested audiences. I find many opportunities for preaching in Oklahoma. The schoolhouse in the country where I have been is open to us; there is very little preaching in country schoolhouses here by our people. I hope the time will soon come when I may do more in the way of reaching the world.

May all live faithful with myself that we may soon be gathered in for the coming Savior.

Your brother in Christ,

V. L. LUM.

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA, February 6, 1912.

Editors Herald: Many times I have promised myself, and others, too, that I would write oftener for the church papers; but when I am at work, I haven't time, and when I am not at work I have nothing to write.

Since our reunion at Dixonville, Alabama, I have been very busy, laboring at Theodore, Bay Minette, near Irvington, and at Brother Latham's, in Alabama; and at Escatawpa, Three Rivers, Bayou Casotte, Bluff Creek, Biloxi, and Gulfport, in Mississippi; and at Fairview, near Pensacola, in Florida. I find good-hearted Saints all along the line, who are trying to keep the work moving; and, in some places, they are going forward.

Under the direction of those in charge, I have devoted much of my time preaching to the Saints; and I think some good has been done. But I find in my work among the Saints that a lack of unity is greatly hindering the onward progress of the work. The admonition to "all speak the same thing," and be "perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment," is just as necessary, now, as it was when given; and "where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work," is just as true now as when it was uttered. And until the Saints of God learn to "prefer one another," and cease to "strive for precedence or place in duty or privilege," their efforts will not be productive of any great amount of good.

It is quite difficult for some of us to sink self altogether out of sight and keep Christ and the good of his work to the front at all times; and yet no man or woman can ever be an effective worker for the Master until that condition of mind and soul is reached. To be "meek and lowly of heart," like the Master, is one of the essential qualifications in this great work; and the man or woman who attempts to do work for the Master without that qualification will learn, some day, that such work was done in vain.

If I am "meek and lowly of heart," and am laboring for the Master, with an eye single to his glory, it will make little difference to me whether men honor me as they should or not. I should labor on, just the same, knowing that the Lord is taking cognizance of my work, and that the reward is sure. When the Savior "came unto his own, and his own received him not," he went straight ahead, doing the work which the Father had given him to do, saying, "I receive not honor from men." And then he asked the people: "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" It is not the honor we receive from our fellow man that counts. The man or woman who insists that he or she must be honored by the people in his or her work, or even by the Saints, forgets that there is an "honor that cometh from God only," which is far more important, and for which all should seek.

If we are called of God, to labor for him, he will honor us in that work, so long as we labor with an eye single to his glory; but to refuse to work for the Lord, because men refuse to honor us in that work is certainly a serious mistake, and will result in great loss to the one who makes it.

May the Lord help us to crucify self, that Christ may live within us, and that we may be able to properly and correctly represent to the world the divine nature.

With a burning desire to do the will of the Lord, I am still in the conflict.

News from Missions

Palestine.

We are now in the time of the latter rain. It will continue at intervals for a month or six weeks. Since the first of November until now the grass has been trying its utmost to paint the hills green. The Mount of Olives has scarcely enough grass to keep a dozen goats alive. This country is in need of some trees and some practical farming to prevent the soil from sliding from these almost barren hills, and to preserve the strength of the soil.

The Mountains of Moab, which loom up very distinctly, look as if they had been barren of grass and trees for centuries. The earth must be kept back by stone embankments or all the remaining soil would wash down into the valleys and into the sea. I can not see where there is a possibility of this country returning to the fertility it once had in the space of time intervening before the coming of Christ, unless his coming is farther off than some have thought.

It is quite true that prophecy is having its literal fulfillment in the gathering of the Jews and the building up of the waste places, but the land is in such a deplorable condition that it would make the heart of an iron man sick to gaze upon it.

We have had rain at intervals for five months, and on some of these hills there are few signs of vegetation. The land is very productive, but it is of a nature that dries very quickly, and requires much water to make it practical for farming purposes. This means that irrigation is the only practical method of farming in this country. This can be done, and it seems that this was done many years ago, as there are evidences of great cisterns on the tops of the hills, with sufficient capacity to keep large farms going through the dry season.

Along the Jordan the land is being bought up very fast by the Jews. They see the need of using the Jordan water for irrigating purposes. In the land of Goshen this is done, and the land being very fertile, yields from three to four crops a year.

Right here let me say that if the church ever intends to do mission work in this country they should purchase the land now, because in the near future the price of real estate will be so high that we will not be able to reach it.

Jaffa is to have its docks; Jerusalem its tram cars, sewers, water works, electric lights and other improvements. The railroad is soon to be in process of building from Damascus to Jerusalem, connecting this city with Beirut and Constantinople. This will make property more valuable, and this is only the beginning of advancement for this country.

We want also to take into consideration the fact that all Christians and Mohammedans are interested in this land. And besides the interest manifested by the Jews, most every denomination is purchasing land for colonization and mission work.

Just now the Ottoman Government is oppressing its subjects to the utmost in the matter of taxation. Many are forced to sell their property to escape high taxes. Every available piece of property of worth is being bought up by the Jews and Christians, and we must speak quickly if we would purchase a suitable piece of property for our work. It would take from $12,000 to $20,000 to provide for this work.

Furthermore, everything Protestant and everything Catholic is arrayed against our work here. Steps have been taken to prevent us from purchasing property in Jerusalem. Those who have come to our services in the past have been forbidden to do so or lose their positions. Others are offered positions in order to keep them away from us. What are we going to do in this matter? We are not in a position to offer the people work, and there is scarcely any way for them to secure employment other than to join or work for some church organization.

We have advertized quite extensively through the mails, but the people, knowing that we can not help them out in the way of employment, will not risk their positions to come to our services. Hence we have but few strangers at our meetings.

Our night school work is the only thing that is in any way giving us a chance to work. And in this we are handicapped, having no desks, or proper seats, and only twelve books for forty-three scholars. While this line of work will not materially benefit the church by gaining members for it, yet we shall win them as friends, which means a lot in this city of religious fanaticism.

Day school work is the only permanent foundation to work on, but we can not think of such a thing at present. There are many things to obtain before we can begin this work.

Before drawing this letter to a close I wish to tell of something that Elder Greene and I saw going on in the Holy Sepulcher Church. We were informed that something unusual was going on, so we went to see what was taking place. When we arrived at the church we found that we would be obliged to pass through two lines of Turkish soldiers before entering the place. Making our way to the sepulcher (?) of Christ we found over five hundred Greek Catholics massed in very closely about it, to prevent the Roman Catholics from worshipping there.

We proceeded around the sepulcher where the Roman Catholics were going from one station to another in their march to the holy (?) places in the church. The bishop was there with his scarlet-colored hat and scarlet robe. There were boy singers and attendants. Over fifty of their priests were in line. The air in the church was stifling with no ventilation whatever, as they dare not touch the windows that are closed because of removing holy dirt, or permitting some vile fowl to enter. Before the procession arrived at the sepulcher, about two companies of Turkish soldiers with bayonets fixed and guns loaded, drove the Greek Catholics from the sepulcher. They then stood guard, keeping the Greek Catholics back while the Roman Catholics worshiped there.

It sickened our very souls to see such things displayed in the name of religion. Soldiers are kept inside this church so as to prevent the Greek and Roman Catholics from getting into serious trouble and killing each other.

Here in Jerusalem, as in Rome, we were permitted to see Catholicism in all of its pernicious workings. In the Franciscan convent we saw in a large cellar huge casks of liquor. I am sure that I could easily walk around in these casks without reaching the top with my head. In Bethlehem we saw and took the picture of two priests making whisky. In the church at Bethlehem, the same as in the Holy Sepulcher Church, soldiers are kept on guard day and night. In the Franciscan Convent there is enough gold and silver in candelabras and rubies to make the hundreds of poor wretches in Jerusalem happy. I doubt very much if all the valuables in gold and silver in this church could be hauled away in fifteen cart loads. This place truly needs the gospel of Christ.

It will be impossible to reach all of the hundreds of deceived persons, but we may be able to reach a few in time. Just now the work is at a standstill, but I am confident that we can gain ground if we are properly supported financially. This is our greatest drawback just now, and we are looking to those to whom we must look for help if we are to have what is necessary to establish the work here on a permanent basis.

In gospel bonds,

H. ARTHUR KOEHLER.

News from Branches

Chicago, (Illinois) Central.

The hour spent in testimony and prayer on Wednesday nights is certainly a blessing to the Saints here. We are only sorry that the world can not see the folly of their worldliness, and that they are not putting forth any great effort to learn of their heavenly Father. They do not seem to look forward to a future. If they could sense the sweet influence that we the children of God enjoy in our daily lives, with a realization that it comes from God, there is no doubt but that a large majority would abandon their desires for worldly pleasures, and would fit themselves to receive the blessings of God.

It is for us, then, to become better men, women, and children, that we may show by our daily walk and talk that we have something to be thankful for, that the world at large does not have, and that those with whom we come in contact may be persuaded by our shining light.

Three Sunday school children were baptized Sunday. The work is progressing steadily.

Yours in truth,

C. L. WAINWRIGHT.

CURRENT EVENTS.

United States soldiers, the resistance being by civilians. On the 22d the Senate passed a resolution previously passed by the House justifying the President in the employment of armed forces to enforce amends for the indignities committed by Huerta representatives. Diplomatic relations have been broken; every available United States warship is plowing both Atlantic and Pacific for Mexican waters, and a full brigade of the first army division is shipping in transports from Galveston to Vera Cruz. President Wilson maintains that the taking of Vera Cruz is an act of reprisal and not of war. It is held that until Huerta either by a formal declaration or a hostile act declares war, the United States will make no further advances other than the possible seizure of several miles of railway leading out of Vera Cruz to Mexico City. General Carranza contends that the taking of Vera Cruz is an act of hostility to all Mexicans, and seems to show sympathy for Huerta. The Constitutionalist have been warned that the United States Government will not tolerate succor for Huerta from any source, and the embargo has again been placed on arms and ammunition. While it is to be hoped that further hostilities may be avoided, the situation is serious in the extreme.

MEDIATION ACCEPTED.—Latest advices state that President Wilson has accepted a proposal of mediation from Brazil, Argentine and Chile for settlement of the conflict between the United States and Mexico. It is understood that the United States will not limit a settlement to the recent Tampico incident, and that the only terms on which an adjustment can be reached would eliminate Huerta, he, the Constitutionalist and forces under Zapata to be brought together by some kind of agreement. President Wilson is doubtful of a satisfactory settlement, and while, pending the attempt at adjustment no further steps will be taken to secure reparation for the indignities that have given rise to the present situation, the former plans of the Washington administration in preparation for drastic action, if finally found necessary, are being carried out.

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral.

To Those Interested in Mission Number 4: It being contemplated by the joint council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve to publish a general epistle which will incorporate certain instructions and admonitions which will apply to the entire missionary staff, I do not enter into many details of a general character, but rather confine myself to that which applies to Mission number 4 in particular.

In the following districts the brethren named will labor, receiving directions from and reporting to the first named, he being assistant in charge.

Kirtland: Richard Baldwin, 98 Oakland Avenue, Sharon, Pennsylvania; F. G. Pitt, J. M. Hardin, who extend their labors to the Ohio District; John Jones, M. W. Liston, M. E. Thomas, the latter being in charge of Kirtland Temple during the summer months, and later under the charge of the minister in general charge.

Pittsburg: James McConaughy, 971 Haynes Street, Akron, Ohio; James Pycock, J. E. Bishop, John D. Carlisle.

The Virginias: L. G. Burdick, Route 50, Transfer, Pennsylvania; Fred Moser, H. E. Winnegar.

Ohio District: N. L. Booker, Wellston, Ohio; C. E. Bozarth, W. C. Neville.

Southern Indiana: J. W. Metcalf, Kansas Street, Independence, Missouri; Jacob G. Halb, L. C. Moore, F. A. Rowe.

Kentucky and Tennessee: Jesse Roberts, West Short Street, Independence, Missouri; J. R. McLain, S. E. Dickson, C. A. Nolan.

Bishop J. A. Becker will labor in Kirtland, Pittsburg, and Ohio districts, reporting to Richard Baldwin.

As all the ministry may not be fully acquainted with the most approved plans of drafting articles of debate, you are advised to consult with the minister in general charge before signing such agreements. As it will work injury to none, but may more perfectly guard the general interests of the church at large, you are admonished to ordain none to the priesthood until consultation is had with the president of the mission.

Please forward to assistant ministers not later than three days after the close of June, September, December, and February report for the quarter preceding. The assistants will please provide their men with the necessary blanks.

The primary purpose of sending missionaries out is to get the gospel into new localities where new branches may be raised up, and when organized left to the care of the local workers. We expect that during the year every man will do himself and the church justice by occupying according to his calling.

I will deem it a favor to hear from the missionaries occasionally in a general way. You are of course expected to be in such close communication with the assistant in charge that he may know at all times where you are laboring, and where you contemplate your next location will be. By observing these rules we will work all the more harmoniously together.

May heaven's richest blessings crown the laborers of the ensuing year.

Your colaborer for the cause of truth,

R. C. RUSSELL,

Minister in General Charge of Mission Number 4.

CHATHAM, ONTARIO, 135 Selkirk Street.

Quorum Notice.

HIGH PRIESTS.

To the Members of the Quorum of High Priests; Greeting: With the passing of the General Conference, there has been made changes in the field of labor assigned to some. The pale reaper took from our ranks six of our number last conference year; and there were several recommended and in-dorsed for ordination this spring. These changes, together with whatever changes may have occurred since the mailing of your last report to the secretary, will necessitate the re-arranging of the alphabetical list for our 1914 annual. Permit me to urge that you read with interest and a desire to aid the secretary the paragraph beginning on page 36 of the annual of last year, under the caption "Attention."

Hope to hear soon from all who up to date have not furnished me their post office address for the coming conference year.

Your fellow servant,

ROB'T M. ELVIN, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 24, 1914.

Conference Notices.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana will meet with Grand Rapids Michigan Branch, June 13 and 14. All reports of branches and ministry should be in hands of district secretary by the 10th. Do not forget collection for secretary and district expenses, which should be taken up May 24, and forwarded to the secretary as soon as possible thereafter. Take car at depot going south, transfer to Lafayette car, get off at Madison Square, ask for Board of Trade Hall, or phone 31873 and some one will go to the depot to meet you; or drop a card to E. K. Evans, 517-519 Ottawa Avenue, Northwest, telling him what train you will arrive on, and he will see that you are met. Anyone arriving in the city and wanting help or information may call his phone, 6011 Citizens. G. A. Smith, president; W. P. Buckley, secretary, Route 3, Jackson, Michigan.

Convention Notices.

Montana District Sunday school will convene at Bozeman, June 5, at 10.30 a. m. William J. Murray, secretary.

Massachusetts Sunday school and Religio will convene in Saints' church, New Bedford, May 9, at 2.30 p. m., continuing over Sunday. Ora Viola Holmes, Diamond Hill, Rhode Island; Calvin C. Sears, 15 Sycamore Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts, secretaries.

Notice to Northern Illinois Saints.

The branch at Sandwich, Illinois, will hold a two-day meeting May 9 and 10. All Saints of this district and others are invited to meet with us. Good speakers. Sandwich has not had a meeting of this character for many a year, so come and help us to establish the work here. Order of meetings will be announced later. Visiting Saints will be cared for. If coming, notify Elder Henry Williams, Sandwich, Illinois, or 343 South Forty-first Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

To Locate Lucy Drazey.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of Lucy Drazey, until nine months ago residing at Climax Springs, Missouri, please notify Henry Drazey, 5639 South Fourth Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Notice Concerning Hymnals.

A request has come to the manager to have a character note hymnal published. This can not be done unless there are enough pledges to pay for the edition. How many of the Saints would buy one?

Abstract Wanted.

Anyone having an abstract of the Temple Lot Suit that would care to part with same, address the undersigned, stating price.

J. MACHARDIN, Uniopolis, Ohio.

Address.

Emma Burton, Holden, Missouri.

Married.

RANGE—MINER.—At Saints' church, San Jose, California, April 12, 1914, Brother Alma Dale Range and Miss Deborah Miner were united in the happy bonds of matrimony. Elder C. W. Hawkins, pastor of the San Jose Branch, pronounced the pleasing words that made them husband and wife. May peace and happiness attend them through life. C. W. Hawkins.

Died.

CLARK.—George Francis, son of Brother and Sister S. S. Clark, was born in Glenwood, Iowa, August 12, 1885; died at his home in Tabor, Iowa, April 10, 1914. He was baptized January 21, 1894, and was a faithful member until death. Although an invalid for years, he was kind, patient, and loving, looking on the bright side of life. Besides parents, he leaves two brothers, two sisters, James S., William L., Lillie M., Irene V. Short services were held at his home in Tabor, April 12, and remains were taken to Glenwood, where services were held in the Latter Day Saints' church at 2 p. m., conducted by W. E. Haden, of Independence, Missouri. Burial in the family lot at Glenwood.

MUIRHEAD.—Sister Sarah Ann Muirhead, wife of Brother James R. Muirhead, of Rosedale, British Columbia, was born at Lucknow, Ontario, March 27, 1876; died March 1, 1914. She leaves husband, six children, father, mother, and a host of friends. Sister Muirhead was called upon to meet an opposition that few are called to face; she withstanding without flinching or making a compromise with the opposers. She became identified with the church in November, 1899, baptized by Daniel Macgregor. Hers was one of the largest funerals ever held in the community, evidencing the respect of all. A noble woman has gone to her reward. Sermon by William Johnson, of Seattle.

EATON.—Mary E. Eaton was born May 14, 1853, at Deer Isle, Maine; died of cancer April 2, 1914, after suffering nearly a year. Her husband, Samuel Eaton, died seven years ago. She was baptized March 7, 1866, by George W. Eaton; confirmed by John Landers. She lived steadfast to the end. She leaves three sons, one granddaughter, five brothers, one sister, many friends. Services at the home, E. Joice in charge; sermon by J. J. Billings; interment in Gray's Hill Cemetery, Deer Isle.

NOFTSGER.—Margaret Dotson was born in Park County, Indiana, September 14, 1849. She professed faith in Christ in her fifteenth year. During the later years of her life she gave preference to the restored gospel. She married Josiah S. Noftsger, September 14, 1868. To them were born six sons, five of whom were present at time of decease, which occurred at her home two miles north of Lamoni, Iowa, March 30, 1914. Funeral April 1, in charge of I. A. Monroe, sermon by Rob't. M. Elvin, from John 3: 15. Interment in Lily Cemetery.

LAMBKIN.—Sister Margaret J. Lambkin, beloved wife of

THE FIGURES AT THE DOOR.

(Synopsis of a sermon by Elbert A. Smith at Lamoni, Iowa, March 1, 1914. Reported by Elizabeth France.)

"Behold I stand at the door and knock."

"Sin croucheth at the door."

See, I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil; in that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, that thou mayest live and multiply; and the Lord thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest to possess it. But if thine heart turn away, so that thou wilt not hear, but shalt be drawn away, and worship other gods, and serve them; I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish, and that ye shall not prolong your days upon the land whither thou passest over Jordan to go to possess it. I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live.—Deuteronomy 30:15-19.

The language that we have just read was uttered many centuries ago, but it is still vital, and if we keep our eyes open we can see the force of it. God says, I have set before you life and death, good and evil, and you may choose this day which you will have. And it is still a fact that for those who choose evil the consequences are death; surely spiritual, and in many cases physical death.

THE PRIMROSE PATH TO RUIN.

And it is still true that thousands and thousands of men and women, yes, whole communities and even nations who make this choice, come to that inevitable end. We have read the history of Rome and of Sodom and Pompeii and we know what the consequences are. The same old choice still rests before nations and before individuals, and God still sets before them good and evil, life and death.

I have two texts this morning that I wish to use together. The first is found in the third chapter of Revelation, twentieth verse, where the Master says: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." And the other is found in Genesis, where the statement is made, "sin lieth at the door"; or as another version has it, "sin croucheth at the door."

Here is a striking contrast suggested by these two figures waiting at the door of every man, of every community. As we open the door and look out, framed in the bright sunlight we see the blessed face of the Master. He is standing there waiting to come in. As we sometimes sing from Zion's Praises:

Behold the Savior at your door, your kindest, truest friend
Is seeking entrance to your heart, your life with his to blend.
The Savior's knocking at your door and asking entrance in;
He's knocking, asking o'er and o'er. 'Oh, open unto him.

But what is that dark shape that we see in the shadow of the door? That is the contrast. Evil croucheth at your door and is also asking entrance in. Every individual sooner or later must determine which one shall come into his heart and into his home, because these two can not dwell long together in the same heart or in the same home.

NATIONS MUST CHOOSE.

There is a principle involved here that we believe has its application to nations and churches and communities and individuals. So far as nations are concerned we do not need to go beyond the history of our own country to find a most striking example of the truthfulness of that great principle.

We are told in the Book of Mormon that God ordained this land to be a land of liberty; that he caused Columbus to come over here and discover it; that he moved on the hearts of men in many nations to come here and seek liberty. History sustains that thought, because strong, intelligent, and noble men and women came from England and Germany and France. As Longfellow expresses it, "God sifted three kingdoms to find seed for that planting."

God stood at the door of the new nation and he came in and brought with him the blessings of liberty,—intellectual, political, and religious.

"THE DEADLY ORIGINAL SIN OF THIS REPUBLIC."

But an evil shape stood in the shadow at the doorway. It was African negro slavery. And the people invited it in and permitted it to come in with these good things. Behold, evil croucheth at the door. We read that away back yonder the sons of God came together for a council, and the significant statement is made that Satan came also.

Even while our forefathers were drafting the resounding phrases of the Declaration of Independence for themselves and the great Constitution to safeguard their own liberties, they were riveting chains on the limbs of the black man.

After they had fought for their own political freedom and had obtained it, and came together to draft the Constitution, God was there. We are told in the Doctrine and Covenants that God said: "I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose."

And so President Wilson tells us in his history of the United States that when the delegates came together, George Washington said to them, "Gentlemen, the event is in the hands of God."

Yes, God was in the Constitution. But evil also was crouching at the door, and it is just as true that to a limited extent the Devil entered into the Constitution.

I will quote from the writings of Hannis Taylor, LL. D., of the University of Edinburgh, in his book on The History and Growth of the American Constitution. He says:

The deadly original sin of this Republic was African slavery, which had crept into all the colonies prior to the Revolution. Finally in 1789 the North and South covenanted together in what is known as the "compromises of the Constitution" to perpetuate it by law for ever.

And so later when people began to see the nature of this thing, they found that it was entrenched in the Constitution. Legislators, reformers, and the courts were powerless temporarily because it was entrenched in the Constitution. And it never was driven from there until Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation, January, 1863, and the thirteenth amendment was adopted in 1865, which declared that no man should be kept in servitude excepting as punishment for crime of which he had been duly convicted before a court of the land. And so finally it was rejected. But a bloody and costly war was the penalty of a wrong choice at the beginning.

And so now under the Constitution we have great blessings of liberty, but we still have evils, although not entrenched in the Constitution, yet hiding under the flag and actually claiming its protection. It is not necessary perhaps to specify them; but you know that in every community where the saloon is licensed and where the vice district is recognized by law or authority, those evils are hiding under the protection of the flag. Any man who has a son serving in the militia or as a policeman may some time see that son called out to defend with his life the property rights and very existence of those great evils that are entrenched under the protection of the flag. Every citizen who pays taxes helps to sustain them by affording them protection of law in that way.

AS APPLIED TO THE CHURCH.

We believe this principle is also applicable to an extent to the church. We believe that God organized this great church in these last days, that he restored to it the old primitive gospel. He gave it the old blessings, and the old church organization. It was the answer to Alexander Campbell's prayer, "We want the old gospel back, and sustained by the ancient order of things." It was the fulfillment of John Wesley's prophecy wherein he said that God would shortly "arise to maintain his own cause and set up his own kingdom."

And so God stood at the door; and he came in with these choice blessings. He certainly did bless the people, and the church prospered, and missionaries were sent abroad in all the world. It was like olden times when God said to the church at Philadelphia, "Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it."

WHEN EVIL CAME IN.

But what was that dark evil that was crouching at the door of the church, and that finally came in and brought with it a train of attendant evils? I do not need to tell you what it was. I do not need to name it. You are familiar with the history of the church and with the dark apostasy that followed.

So you see we must be on our guard even in the church; like the old Pilgrim fathers when they went to church in this new country and carried their old flintlocks with them and had their cannon mounted on the roof of the church. They were watching against an enemy. And we must watch against an enemy; not, however, an enemy of flesh and blood, for as the Apostle Paul says, "we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." And he exhorts us that we shall be armed, that we shall have our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, that we shall take the shield of faith, and that we shall have the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, and that we shall pray always.

So God wants us to be on our guard against those evils that may possibly creep into the church. I am glad that we have a class of people that are and have been on their guard in the church. There is no danger that we shall repeat the errors of the past; but there are other evils that may come in if we do not watch. I am glad we have a class of people who are constantly on their guard. If they think the rights of the people are in any way in jeopardy they instantly raise their voices, as they did yesterday in the stake conference, and as they frequently do in the General Conference. Sometimes we get a little vexed at this class of people; but still we believe it is necessary that we should have watchmen in the church and watchmen on the tower.

WATCHMEN, NOT WATCHDOGS.

Some one said that we need "watchdogs" in the church. I do not agree with him. I do not like that term. I do not think we need watchdogs in the church. A watchdog has not brains enough always to discriminate between a menace and an overture of kindness. We want watchmen. It takes brains to be a watchman, and it takes judgment and spirituality, so that one can see and discriminate between an actual and an imaginary danger.

A few weeks ago some of the natives down in Mexico were driving a little flock of sheep into the City of Mexico, and some of the watchmen, seeing the cloud of dust that was stirred up, imagined that the whole rebel army was coming, and pretty soon the entire city was in an uproar. We do not want the whole church to become stirred up over the cries of a few watchmen who chance to see a little, insignificant cloud of dust; neither to be mistaken when there is an actual and real danger.

I was reading a little story of the last fight of the Pawnee Indians. They were encamped on their hunting grounds, hunting the buffalo as was their custom annually and their ancient enemy, the Sioux, came against them in great numbers. The watchmen of the Pawnees saw them coming. But the crafty Sioux had covered their heads with their blankets and lay along the necks of their horses, so the Pawnee thought it was a herd of buffalo, and they raised the cry, "The Great Spirit is sending the buffalo into our camp." But the next they knew the Sioux were upon them, and they broke the power of the Pawnee nation so that it never did recover.

We want watchmen that can see and not be deceived when there is real danger coming. We want a people who will pay attention to the warnings that the watchmen give. There have been warnings given from those set to watch over the flock, and the people have said, "These watchmen are deceived; it is not a menace but a blessing." What good is a watchman if the camp refuses to hear his warning? We need to be on our guard; we need to be faithful and spiritual, and we need the blessings of God that we may not be deceived.

AT THE DOOR OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

We come now to the third and last application—that of the individual. In the life of every individual there is this choice between good and evil. Sooner or later in his life, and perhaps repeatedly, he is called upon to choose between good and evil, between life and death. It would be a fine thing if we could make the choice once for all and never have to make it again. But our free agency is ours. We can not give away to-day the free agency of to-morrow; we must determine our course to-morrow just as we do to-day. But when we choose right day after day it becomes easier, it becomes habitual for us to do that which is right; but if we do the wrong it also becomes easy and habitual for us to do that which is wrong.

GOD WANTS NO SLAVES.

Away back yonder in the beginning God gave man his free agency, gave him the choice between good and evil. Some one says, Why didn't God fix it some way so that man could not sin? Perhaps you are a father. Why not try it yourself? If you have a son, fix some nice room upstairs where nobody can ever come to him, and put bars over the windows and doors, put him in and lock the door and keep him there. He will never come in contact with the evils of this world. Nobody will ever bring him down into bondage.

But you say, "I want my son to be free, and though no one else should enslave him, he would be my slave."

God is just like you, in that particular; he wants all men to be free. He wants his children to be free. And if we had not our free agency, though no one else could enslave us, we would be God's slaves. God does not want slaves; he wants colaborers. He wants men who are free because they know the truth and because that truth has made them free.

Every individual who has any strength at all realizes that there is a struggle going on in his own nature between good and evil. Why of course there is, because both God and the Devil want that man or woman. All men more or less have been conscious of that condition. Whittier tells about it in his poem, of the two voices. Tennyson speaks about it also in one of his poems:

Where is one that, born of woman, altogether can escape
From the lower world within him, moods of tiger, or of ape?

The Apostle Paul speaks about it where he says, "When I would do good, evil is present with me."

The Book of Mormon speaks about it where it says that that which inviteth and enticeth to do good is of God, but that which inviteth and enticeth to do evil is of the Devil. And so these contending forces go on, and we must make our choice, which we will choose and which we will serve. Our personal welfare depends upon the choice that we shall make.

THE FALL OF MAN A SELF-EVIDENT FACT.

Man fell in the beginning because he made the wrong choice. "Well," some one says, "is the fall of man a scientific fact? Is it an actuality?" It seems to me that the fall of man is a self-evident fact. If we assume that he was created in the image of God and just a little lower than the angels, we have only to look around us in the world to see the evidences that he has fallen. Man individually and collectively is living far below his possibilities. But if we assume that he was created only equal with the animals and came up through the animals by the law of evolution, and had no superiority over them on the start, still we have evidence that he has fallen, because he is actually lower than the animals in many instances.

I will read you a little extract from the writings of a scientist on this subject, that I trust will not be too offensive. I quote James Foster Scott, B. A. (of Yale University), M. D. C. M. (Edinburgh University) in his book The Sexual Instinct. He declares: "The brutes are far purer in their desires and cleaner in their methods than the lewd part of humanity."—Page 79. Again he says: "By sinking to a depth of infamy far below the level of any examples to be found among the brutes, the unchaste members of the human family have transmitted the filthy venereal diseases through the ages, while the lower animals are exempt."—Page 83.

Three times in his book he emphasizes the fact that man has fallen lower than the brutes in that particular—the social evil. We do not need to mention intemperance and other things of which the animals are not guilty. So though we were to assume that man started as an equal with the animals, he has certainly fallen, because he has gone to depths and suffered penalties unknown to the animals. The fall of man is a self-evident fact. That fall it seems to us should be just as evident to philosophy and science as it is to theology.

What is the recovery? The recovery is not alone through education and civilization, because these evils of which this man has written, the worst of which I have not dared to read to you, flourish most in the higher civilizations. The great civilization of Rome went down because of them. They flourish in the great centers of art and education.

WHY JESUS KNOCKS AT THE DOOR.

There is only one thing that will save man, and that is redemption. That is why Jesus Christ stands knocking at the door.

If the fall of man is self-evident, the necessity of the mission of Jesus Christ with the gospel of salvation for the redemption of man is also self-evident. And humanity can never recover from its fallen condition until that fact is recognized and the gospel of Jesus Christ is accepted in all its simplicity and power.

PARABLE OF THE BUILDER WHO CHEATED HIMSELF.

In conclusion I wish to call your attention to a little modern parable that originated with Edwin Markham. In the story he told of a certain poor man who was without a home. He had no place to shelter his wife and children. He was in abject poverty. A good rich Samaritan saw his condition, took pity on him, and came to him and said, "I want you to build a house on a sunny hillside. I will pay you for your time, and I want you to put good material and good workmanship into it. I am going away on a journey and by and by I will come back and settle with you."

And so the poor man thought, What a splendid opportunity! And he started in to cheat; working slowly by the day, and lengthening out his job; putting in poor material, inferior nails, and bad workmanship.

Finally when the house was finished, the rich man came back. And the poor man said to him, "The house is done."

The rich man replied, "Good; here is the deed to it; it is yours. I had it built for you to live in."

Then the poor man said, "Ah, if I had only known that I was building my own house!"

He thought he was cheating the other man, but all the time he was cheating himself.

And so we go through life, and sometimes we think we are cheating our neighbor, or cheating God, but we are only cheating ourselves. We are building character that will be ours, not some one else's; ours not here alone, but for ever and for ever. May God help us to make a wise choice and happily abide the consequences is our prayer.

CURRENT EVENTS.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—Generals Huerta and Carranza have accepted the proposal of Brazil, Argentina, and Chile for mediation. The United States and Huerta have agreed to an armistice so far as United States and Federal forces are concerned. Carranza has declined to be a party to an armistice in connection with the international war. He insists that the matter of mediation has a bearing only on the differences between Mexico and United States. The United States makes the composing of conflicting elements in Mexico an essential in the settlement of the general conflict. The South American authorities represented in the mediation movement are prepared to submit propositions for adjudication of the differences between United States and the contending parties in Mexico. ### CONSISTENT DEVELOPMENT.

(Synopsis of a sermon delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, Easter Sunday, April 12, 1914, by Elder E. D. Moore.)

From John's gospel, twelfth chapter and thirty-second verse, we read the words of the Savior:

And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.

In addition to this we read:

And they took Jesus, and led him away. And he bearing the cross went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha: where they crucified him, and two others with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst.—John 19: 16-18.

In still another place (Acts 4: 33), we read:

And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all.

Here is the statement of the Master. The next passage tells us he was lifted up. The writer of the Acts shows that the heaven was already working.

RESURRECTION.

The wonderful event about which our thoughts should center to-day is indeed a momentous one—perhaps the greatest and most important the world has ever known. The writers of the gospels tell very little of the early years of the life of Christ; they leave unmentioned many historical facts that would be of interest; they give comparatively little of the conversation and teachings of Jesus; but a large part of each gospel is devoted to the wonderful events clustering around the death and resurrection of their Leader.

Later New Testament writers quote very few of the words and teachings of Jesus, evidently giving proper credence to them, but placing greatest stress upon this extraordinary event—the resurrection of the Savior. "With great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus."

For a text, we should like to use the words of the Master, quoted at the beginning, as a basis for a few thoughts on a phase of the resurrection and atonement: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

This season of the year causes us to especially observe the forces of nature everywhere at work, opposing the law of gravitation by the operation of that power which draws all vegetation upward to development and maturity and fruition.

Man has not been fully able to comprehend the principle of growth and springing life; he sees the operation and notes the effect, but is unable to fully explain the causes.

There are some who seriously question the principle of resurrection, regarding it as unreasonable and inexplicable, but many things are of themselves and alone unsusceptible of our comprehension. If we were to produce for your inspection a mariner's compass, with its needle ever pointing to the magnetic pole, no outward and solid demonstration is available to explain the cause. Yet it continues uninterruptedly on in its work.

We may not all of us fully understand the details involved in the atonement of Christ, but it still remains an important and overshadowing factor in our moral and spiritual development.

SOME TRAITS OF JESUS CONSIDERED.

It may be well to consider some of the traits in the character of Christ as a man, and thus discover some of the ways in which he will appeal to us in drawing us unto him. He is quoted by John as saying that he did always the things that pleased the Father. This is a strong statement but a true one, and perhaps the secret of his success as a Son of God among men.

Let us consider some of the ways in which he pleased the Father.

REASONABLE SPIRITUALITY.

First, we take up his spirituality.

There are those among our young friends who are prone to lightly consider or entirely disregard this valuable principle because they have observed those who have claimed to be spiritual and were not. In viewing the limited panorama of life so recently spread before them, they have beheld, now and then, specimens of pharisaical hypocrisy, and becoming disgusted with the sham, have hastily judged many innocent ones by these offenders. Because there are a few who wear their religion as a cloak to hide their hideousness, while inwardly they are as whited sepulchers, these observers have often failed to give proper credit to this valuable trait in character building.

We believe the spirituality of the Savior was based on his purity of heart. His communion with God and association with man eliminated tendencies to selfishness and left him pure and clean and holy.

The spirituality of the Savior was not acquired by the torture of his flesh nor by undue isolation from men. He fasted and prayed as was necessary, but developed his strength and the application of his spiritual power by his association with men; not in the principle of segregation.

LIBERTY IN SUBJECTION.

We note now the subjection of Christ. He was always ready to do the will of God, whether the effort was easy or difficult. There was no cringing, abject fear, but an independent, open, free obedience to the mandates of a higher power—his Father and ours.

We often hear it said by those who have had little experience, that they do not care to be tied down in church work—they want to be free and strong and independent. The strength of newly acquired maturity must be tested and tried and enjoyed.

This latter phase is a just one. The strength and power of youthful energy must be developed and utilized; it is needed by the church and society. It is well, though, that we understand the meaning of true independence. We should remember that men and nations are judged by their use of liberty. Oft-times the trying out of our liberties leads us into license; the use of license into sin, sin into death and destruction. The wages of sin is death.

True independence is real subjection—subjection to a higher and better power that will really make us strong and true and useful to our fellow men.

CULTIVATED SYMPATHY.

We see the sympathy of our Savior always manifested. Being with men in all their goings and comings, he was able to fully sympathize with them in their sorrows and rejoice in their joys.

It is recorded in the seventh chapter of Luke's writings that Jesus and his disciples were passing along toward the city of Nain and met a funeral procession. Some men, accompanied by a great number from the city, were carrying out the body of the only son of a widow. The bereft mother was grief-stricken as only such mothers can be. Jesus seemed to fully sense her sorrow; he was willing to carry some of the excessive grief of sorrowing motherhood, always so poignantly sensed on such occasions. He was willing to carry some of the burdens of sorrow. He was able to do more than this—and did it. While sympathy and grief in this time of sorrow were more than acceptable, he used the power given him, and restored the life of the son and gave him back to the mother, a living evidence of his sympathy.

Sympathy has always been a dominating force in the lives of our best loved great men. As an example among the many, we mention only one, Abraham Lincoln. Torn with grief and remorse at the sorrow and distress all about him, burdened with responsibility, and fully sensing that the men on each side in the mighty conflict between the armies of a divided Nation were confident they were right, he still had time to display his intense sympathy. Here and there he touched the youthful head of some son of a weeping mother and gave him back to her. Ever and anon listening to the pleas of the suffering, and with heart torn and bleeding, he gave of his mighty sympathy and service to those around him.

Our sympathy gives us opportunity, day by day, to touch the heartstrings of our friends and cause music and joy to reign where before was sorrow and suffering. This old world, with its many fickle conditions, makes many demands on our sympathy, yet we often fearfully turn away, hesitating, lest we be not able to properly clothe our sentiments. There is an insistent demand that we cultivate the traits of sympathy and loving-kindness.

STRENGTH IN SUBMISSION.

Strength is the fourth dominating force in the life of Christ that we shall consider at this time. It is charged by some that the mission of Christ showed monumental weakness because his enemies took him and killed him. They tell us that his other good qualities were not balanced with strength. Let us see:

Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it up again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again.—John 10: 17, 18.

Is not this glorious strength? The power of Christ was not manifested in resistance to those who sought his life, but in the conquering of sin and sorrow, ignorance and death.

CHURCH AND SERVICE.

It may be well now to consider another phase of moving Christward.

It was asked of your speaker at one time: "What is the use of churches? Why so much organization? Isn't it just as well to live good, moral lives and not waste so much time on churches and churchgoing?"

Let us consider this.

When the printer wishes to produce a printed page for our perusal, he does not go to the case or the typesetting machine and fill the chase with jumbled characters, run it through the press, and present it to us as a finished product. On the contrary, it requires much care and skill to form the pieces of metal into proper order and according to the usages of the language employed, to express thought. There must be an entire correlation of integral parts that the whole may be perfect.

Briefly speaking, the object of the church and religion is service. Because man is a social being, there has been provision made for his development by service to his fellow men. God does not need our service in the sense of our assisting him personally. He is all-powerful and has all helpful agencies, much more powerful than we can comprehend, at his direct command. He does, however, want us to develop those qualities that shall make us more and more effective among his children, and that is by our effective service.

The natural tendency in man when left alone is downward. Without God and righteousness there is a constant reversion to barbarism. If this were not so there would be no need of the constant fight against sin and degradation. Degeneration comes from the lack of effort, consistent effort, to build character.

It is sometimes charged against us that our church organization still leaves us rich and poor, weak and strong. True, even with all the laws in operation, there will be some inequalities. There are hereditary tendencies; there are educational tastes; there are many features in life that must be considered when we think of equality. These things are what develop service; the weak need the help of the strong; the poor require the assistance of the rich. There must be a correlation of integral parts.

The consistent doubter sometimes says—and we should much rather argue with a consistent doubter than with one who has no opinions—that it doesn't matter so much, anyway, for there is good in all the churches. We agree that there must be some good in most any religion. Of course the creeds of most of them must be wrong, from the fact that God has said they were, and those who believe in them prove it by constantly changing them.

The only church that can be accepted of God is the one that is organized to develop at least the principles enumerated: Spirituality, subjection or submissiveness, sympathy, and strength. The beliefs and laws of the church must be based on sound principles that require no change to meet new demands.

PRIESTHOOD FOR DEVELOPMENT.

There must be a priesthood, authorized of God and qualified to properly teach those who desire to learn. It is not enough for a man to feel that he has the sanction of God to teach men the principles of eternal life, for he might base his teachings on wrong premises. There must be in God's church among men that organization that he left on earth, that through it he may be able to draw all men unto him. There must be the deacon to minister to a form of our personal or temporal needs. Teachers are required to perform the essential spiritual and temporal duties in being with the church. The priest's work in visiting the members in their homes in pastoral capacity is very important. Then there are the elders, the high priests, and the patriarchs, with their various local and general duties as pastors and teachers of the word. Of course we must have the seventies and apostles and presidents to properly proselyte and generally correlate the integral parts.

All these officers are placed in the church, not only to develop the officers, but to help the membership to higher and better usefulness. They are as essential in their various callings now as they were when Christ placed them there after seeing the needs of man from a personal and divine standpoint.

To be sure, we may not upon entering the work, understand all the functions of the officers nor the need of all the principles governing us, but we must go on, step by step, until we reach the glorious condition to which Christ is drawing us, where we may have the association of the Father and the Son and Holy Ghost, together with those who have learned to love them. We shall know all then that we do now,—and more.

GOSPEL PRINCIPLES WOVEN INTO FIBERS OF LIFE.

The gospel principles are to become a part of our lives. We are to make our religious beliefs not a jumble, hurriedly pieced together and presented to God, but a careful arrangement of consistency and logic.

Then we should not regard our religion as a Sunday garment only, worn on the outside and easily injured, but because it is a part of us it will be with us when we need it—all the time. We must base our lives on the fundamental principles of the gospel and pass on into the newer and higher realms.

ELEMENTAL STEPS NECESSARY.

When we learn the alphabet in our childhood we must advance step by step. We may tire of the laborious processes of education. First, we usually learn the letters, in one way or another. We later arrange the letters into words. Words must then be formed into sentences. Sentences must be placed in proper sequence to express our thoughts. Thoughts must be selected and considered to properly express our sentiments. Tired though we may be, our teachers and parents do not allow us to give up because we are weary and unable to understand the difficult art of composition at the beginning. We are urged to go on and on, a little at a time, and all will be well.

When a child at our mother's knee, she might attempt to explain the mysteries of trigonometry, biology, astronomy, or some others of the branches of higher learning. Though the words used were the best at her command in the language, we could not comprehend. Neither the mother nor the words are at fault. Our intelligence had not advanced far enough; yet the standing and value of these subjects were not in the least affected. We must work and wait till we make the necessary progress to fully understand those things, then the same mother and the same words will be effective with us.

When we get a little older and enter into these or other lines of advanced learning we do not leave our first learning of the alphabet behind. We may forget having taken the first steps, but they are constantly employed—they are a part of our lives.

In our advancement in the service of the gospel we pass through much the same stages, yet there are those who disdain to take the elemental steps, become discouraged, and drop out. The fundamentals of the gospel may be forgotten in our onward progress, but they are there all the time—the gospel must be a part of our lives as truly as the knowledge of the alphabet is a part of our education.

EFFICIENCY DEMANDED.

The world and the church are demanding from our young people the efficiency that the gospel brings. The business man may not call it the working out of the gospel. It may be called "making good," it may be called qualification, it may be termed strength of character, but whatever it is called, it means the available efficiency that the teachings of the gospel affords. It will not be worn as an outer garment only. It may not consist of an embossed diploma, even though such things are ordinarily essential and indicate preparation. The efficiency that our friends in the church and out of it demand is that which embodies spirituality, submissiveness, sympathy, and strength, with the special education and training that have all become part of our lives.

There may be some things that deter our progress. Some pleasures, of themselves neutral in quality, may be detrimental because they hinder us from giving proper attention and consideration to our Christian education, but we should consistently and carefully advance, being willing to take the necessary steps to make the growth demanded.

By noting the traits enumerated of Christ, along with the other beautiful features of his life that enabled him to please the Father, we shall find they are practical and useful. God demands that we serve him by serving his people. We can best serve his people in an organization established and recognized by him. Christ has been lifted up. He will draw all men unto him, through the church which properly observes his method. We have the church, the opportunity; shall we make the consistent efforts necessary that his power may be made manifest in us?

There are evergreen men and women in the world, praise be to God!—not many of them, but a few. The sun of our prosperity makes the green of their friendship no brighter, and the frost of our adversity kills not the leaves of their affection.—Jerome K. Jerome.

The cross of Christ is such a burden as sails are to a ship, or wings to a bird—a burden that carries us onward to our desired home.—Samuel Rutherford.

CAN WE LOSE A KNOWLEDGE OF THE DOCTRINE?

Jesus said: "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." (John 7: 16, 17.)

This is surely one of the most wonderful promises ever made to needy man. It is his greatest safeguard against deception and error. Its fulfillment is specially needed in this age of so many offerings of the "truth" in regard to religion, each contradicting the other in many points, yet all claiming to be the "narrow way."

We must admit that men by their own wisdom have failed to find God (at least a God who is the same, and demands the same thing of all). If, therefore, the wisdom, effort, and research of man alone can not demonstrate the fact of the "truth" as to which among all the offerings of doctrine in our age is the "doctrine of Christ," then our surety lies in depending upon the fulfillment of this wonderful promise.

HOW TO OBTAIN THE PROMISE.

The doing of the will of the Father, according to the statement of Christ, is the only way the knowledge of the truth can be obtained. And the final test of the matter as to whether we have really received the real doctrine of Christ is evidenced by our receiving the knowledge.

When anything is offered us as the gospel, we compare it with the Bible; if it is not according to the "law and the testimony" we have a right to reject it. According to Paul's advice, we should prove all things and hold fast that which is good, or of God. Such presentation as seems to be in harmony with the Bible pattern in doctrine, in organization, and from every standpoint, we should accept; and in so far as we are able to find by our best efforts the same to be the truth, we should comply with its requirements.

Then if it be the true doctrine of Christ, the Father is bound by his promise to give us divine evidence of the fact, to reveal it to us in the ways he has promised in his word. In so far as we comply with "his will" that we do receive the "knowledge," is the testimony of thousands of Saints. It is strongly evidenced that a partial doing only gives a partial knowledge, or, in other words, we only receive the knowledge so far as we do the will of the Father who sent the Christ.

KNOWLEDGE MAY BE LOST.

One of the sad things in connection with this matter is that though we may have had this knowledge, and have actually received divine evidences of the doctrine being of God, yet we can lose that knowledge, even more easily than we obtained it. The natural food we ate yesterday gave us natural strength, but we must eat more food for to-day or we will soon lose our strength, and finally our life.

As with the physical man, so with the spiritual man; he must be fed, or lose strength and die, and our spiritual man must be fed by the same element of which he is composed, to continue his strength and life. Even as the light of truth came from God, so must the food come from him. We might know the things of man by the spirit of man; but we can only know the things of God by the Spirit of God.

Men who have borne strong testimonies to having received this great knowledge of the gospel have in after times denied it and said they did not know now nor never had known, thus acknowledging that they were not only now failing to receive a knowledge, but admitting that they had lost the knowledge that they once had.

Would I be justified in saying that they were not speaking the truth, when they were claiming to receive knowledge? Surely not. Nor would I deny the latter statement. But the latter statement simply proves that they now do not know that they ever had a knowledge of the truth. All this proves the necessity of continuing to do the Father's will, in order to possess a continued knowledge.

Then it is just as possible to lose as it is to gain this knowledge. In other words, when we cease to do the Father's will, we no longer receive knowledge, or spiritual food.

Neglect of anything that we have been brought to see is our duty is starving our spiritual man; and this is usually done by degrees, ignoring first one thing and then another, until finally the conscience becomes seared as with a hot iron, as the Apostle Paul expressed it.

If I should willfully absent myself from the meetings of the Saints and continuously attend the meetings of some of the organizations of men, I would soon lose the feeling of the duty to meet with the Saints; and it is just the same with everything the Lord has asked us to do for our good.

Ceasing to do some things that we may have called little things will in time lose for us the knowledge of them as our duty, and then some of the greater things will go the same way, until finally it is possible to lose what we might once have had, a knowledge of the gospel, or doctrine.

Growing in grace and a knowledge of the truth is accomplished by increasing our understanding of duty, in the various ways the Lord has given, and then doing as fast as we learn our duty, overcoming the things in our lives and dispositions that are contrary to God and his will.

THE COMING PRINCE OF PEACE.

Isaiah predicted that God would send the "Prince of Peace." (Isaiah 9: 6.) We are told in Luke the second chapter that at his birth the angel sang these beautiful words, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

SATAN TO BE BOUND.

The earth was in trouble before Christ came, and has been ever since. Paul said he came and preached peace to those who were afar off, and to those who are nigh, meaning the Jews and the Gentiles. We see that those who made their peace, calling, and election with him, were the only ones who have ever known who he was and who have understood what his mission means.

In Revelation 20: 1-3 we are shown that Satan is to be bound and cast into the bottomless pit, and is to trouble the nations of this world no more for the space of a thousand years. This millennium is the beginning of the era of peace to be brought about by this "Prince of peace," who came to destroy the works of the Devil, to cast him out and to give the world rest.

WORLD LOOKING FOR PEACE.

Our peace commissioners have tried and are now trying in vain to devise ways and means to settle all international disputes, and teach men to learn war no more. They are tired of war, bloodshed, strife, and oppression. They would welcome a solution to the problem; but the Devil is not yet bound. The Prince of peace came and offered the panacea for all our troubles; but Satan's work has been to blind the eyes of men to their own best interests, and cause them to yield to his suggestions, to envy, hate, covet, and disbelieve in the only one who has ever been sent, delegated with the power to put an end to all the trouble the Devil has ever caused. Ambitious desires have swayed the minds of great leaders; the world has not yet realized what they are looking and longing for.

ONLY CHURCH CAN BRING PEACE.

The scripture above referred to shows that some one is to arise called the Prince of peace, upon whose shoulders the government is to rest and whose government is never to end. Daniel also speaks of the same time (Daniel 7: 22-27) saying there is to be a kingdom whose greatness is to cover the earth; and the Saints are to be there. There are many other predictions pointing to the kingdom which was to come; that is why Jesus told us to pray when he said, "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven."

Christ, the Master, succeeded in everything he undertook. We see him in the pillar and cloud leading the hosts of Israel. In the fiery furnace, he shows his power. He stills the tempest by calmly saying, "Peace, be still," and the winds and the waves obeyed him. He stood at the sepulcher of sleeping Lazarus, saying, "Lazarus, come forth," and the dead man arose and lived. He touched the lepers, and they were cleansed. He healed the sick; opened the blind eyes; and cast out devils.

He was not dismayed at the thought of laying his own life down; he said he had power to lay it down, and to take it again. He demonstrated this to be true; for, when they had laid him in Joseph's new tomb, he was raised from the dead, after three days, as promised. So he conquered even in death, for he made possible the resurrection, not alone of his own body, but also of others, and the bodies of many of the saints arose and came out of their graves after his resurrection. (Matthew 27: 51, 52.)

He appeared on the Isle of Patmos to John the Revelator, and said, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore, amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." We also read in the Book of Mormon (Alma 9: 42): "Now if it had not been for the plan of redemption, which was laid from the foundation of the world, there could have been no resurrection of the dead." The Apostle Peter goes on record as saying that the name of Jesus Christ is the only name under heaven or among men whereby we may be saved. Paul tells us that every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess to the glory of God the Father that Jesus is the Lord.

So we see our heavenly Father has sent the only one in the person of his Son, who has proven himself the Hero of every struggle; Master of the situation. He was delegated with the means of reconciliation, to make peace, and he calls for volunteers, saying, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

After the resurrection of this wonderful man of Galilee, he said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."

ERA OF PEACE.

And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the suckling child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.—Isaiah 11: 5-9.

Again this same prophet tells, that the time will come when they will beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, when they will learn war no more. Now this man Jesus is the only one who is even a feasible candidate for us to consider, to bring the era of peace. For he is the prophetic "Prince of Peace" described in the Scriptures.

The earth must rest from the plagues, for there will be no more thorns or thistles. The Edenic conditions are to be restored; man will not hate his fellow man; but all will love one another, and the world will be a delightful place in which to live.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE.

We read in the thirty-seventh Psalm that the "meek shall inherit the earth and delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Here we are three times in this one psalm, told that we are to dwell on the earth, when there is a time of peace. Jesus also said, "The meek shall inherit the earth." We read also in Revelation 5: 10 we are to dwell on the earth during the reign of peace. Jesus is to reign as Lord and King of kings (Zechariah 14: 9). We are told that he shall be king over all the earth; in that day there shall be one Lord and his name One.

No wonder Napoleon, one of the greatest generals of this world, said of Christ, "His kingdom was a kingdom of love. He was not a man; he was a God."

That grand woman, Queen Victoria, said of him, that she believed he would come again, and that if he did before she died, she would be the first to cast her crown at his feet.

This peaceful King is not coming to be killed by wicked men; he is to be crowned the wonderful Sovereign of the world, to rule in that reign of peace. He said to John, on the Isle of Patmos, "I am he that was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore." That body he brought from the tomb is not to be destroyed. And our bodies are to be "fashioned like unto his glorious body," if so be we are followers of him.

He who closed the mouth of the lions, when Daniel was cast into their den, will teach all to love one another in the time to come when "the Spirit of the Lord will be poured out on all flesh."

HIS WEAPONS OF WARFARE.

Carnal men have used every device to kill and torture each other, in order to conquer and subdue. Jesus said to Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world. If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." (John 18: 36.) He said to Peter, "Put up thy sword . . . for they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

Listen to this peaceful man give counsel to the people as to the best means of conquering the world, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost." He said unto them, Heal the sick; cast out devils; preach, saying, "the kingdom of heaven is at hand"; and into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be unto this house. And if the Son of Peace be there, there abide, etc. Again, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself unto him."

We see that his weapons were not carnal. He also said, "When they revile you, revile not again." So the message he brought was not one of hate and revenge, but one of love, to bring a condition of peace to the earth.

He said the greatest commandments were to love God and our fellow men. No wonder this man is the central figure in all the history of the world. He is to be in the millennial reign upon the earth when he fulfills another prophecy, when he is to sit upon the throne of David and rule for ever.

Who is there in all the world who would not rally to the banner of this mighty Prince? The ensign has been raised, and the call has been sent forth to invite all who love his appearing. Some are accepting, others are making excuses, as in the days when he was here the first time.

We have shown that he came delegated with power and light to make himself master of the situation. He met his enemy face to face; that old general, the Devil, knew him, and offered him all the kingdoms of this world if he would fall down and worship him, but he meekly answered, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

THE NEW JERUSALEM.

Paul said Jesus came to destroy the works of the Devil. He will cast him into the bottomless pit for a thousand years. Then at the close of the great conflict, after the little season, will cast him away into the lake of fire. And upon the redeemed earth the New Jerusalem will come down from God out of heaven, and the tabernacle of God will be with men. Then will there be no more death, no more pain, no more sickness, for the former things shall have passed away. There shall be no more sea. We are told that the redeemed of the nations shall walk in the streets of that beautiful city of God; they will have no more need of the sun or the moon or the stars, for God shall be their everlasting light.

Surely the Bible as our guide has pictured this "Prince of Peace" whose soon coming will change the conditions of the nations to such an extent that we will all rejoice to be permitted to live, when there will be nothing to harm or molest in all the holy mountain of the Lord, for the earth will be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

May God help us all to see the light of the message, "On earth peace, good will toward men." Following this Leader and Commander whom God has sent, when "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ," may we be worthy of a place with him.

SEARCH FOR OLD BALLADS.

Chautauquans will be interested to know that a national search for old ballads has been inaugurated by the United States Bureau of Education. Convinced that many of the English and Scottish popular ballads of olden times still survive in the United States, and that immediate steps are necessary to rescue them from oblivion, the bureau has commissioned Professor C. Alphonso Smith, of the University of Virginia, to institute a Nation-wide search for versions of these old ballads that once helped to mold the character of the men and women who made up the larger part of the colonial population of this country. Professor Smith taught in the summer schools and gave series of lectures at Chautauqua in 1910 and 1912. He says:

If our American versions are not collected immediately they can never be collected at all. Many influences are tending to obliterate them. Catchy but empty songs not worthy of comparison with them, the decadence of communal singing, the growing diversity of interests, the appeal to what is divisive and separative in our national life, the presence of the artificial and self-conscious in modern writing are depriving our homes and schoolrooms of a kind of literature which, for community of feeling, for vigor of narrative, for vividness of portraiture, and for utter simplicity of style and content, is not surpassed in the whole history of English or American song.

A list of three hundred and five of the ballads, all that are known to exist, has been compiled by the bureau. Among the ballads for which survivals are sought are: "Robin Hood," "The beggar-laddie," "Bonny Barbara Allan," "The crafty farmer," "Durham field," "The Earl of Mar's daughter," "Fair Annie," Johnnie Armstrong's last good-night," "Ladie Isabel and the elf knight," "Child Maurice," "The lass of Roch Royal," "The mermaid," "Rob Roy," "The three ravens," "Trooper and maid," and the "Wife of Usher's Well."—The Chautauquan, January 31, 1914.

FIRST ATLANTIC WIRELESS MESSAGE.

Wireless communication across the Atlantic, long just below the horizon, has now risen into plain view as an established fact.

Emperor William has sent a brief message to President Wilson. It covered a distance of 4,062 miles, from Hanover to the New Jersey coast.

Mr. Marconi, questioned during the autumn as to the possibilities of the immediate future, backed and filled, hemmed and hawed, and coyly refused a definite answer. The officials of the German company that sent the message were equally secretive, save for a general statement of their ambitions. They were especially so as regarded the whereabouts of their American terminal, now disclosed as at Tucker-ton, New Jersey. But it is better to promise little and perform much than to promise much and perform nothing.

The Goldschmidt system, which accomplished the feat, depends on a "singing wheel" machine that permits the making of high-speed wireless communication at low cost and also permits, through an instant adjustment to any desired wave length, the sending of secret messages.

Neither cheapness nor secrecy, however, has marked the exchange of messages between the heads of the two nations. The event was one calling for a certain ceremonial "spread" and the imperial and presidential correspondents were able to rise to the occasion.—Record-Herald, February 3, 1914.

TO ABOLISH RED LIGHT DISTRICT.

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, February 2.—What is known as the "Kenyon Red Light bill" passed the House of Representatives last week. It had previously passed the Senate and now goes to the President for his signature. There is no question but that it will be promptly signed and become a law.

The bill, which now goes to the President, provides that a court may enjoin the continuation of any immoral resort in the District of Columbia, upon complaint of a citizen and proof of the general reputation of the place.

It is modeled after the famous "Iowa law," invented by Attorney-General Cosson a few years ago, and which has been the model for several similar statutes passed in different States.

There were various congressmen who did not wish to have the notorious red light district abated and had the nerve to say so. Representative J. Hampton Moore, of Pennsylvania, wanted to know what would become of the poor women of the underworld turned out of their resorts by the proposed law to walk the streets. Representative Mann replied that he had more sympathy for the boys who are misled than for the women of the underworld. He thought the measure would suppress open vice, at least. . . . It is expected that this bill will result in the extinction of the notorious red light district that has been a bad smelling social place near the White House grounds for forty years. . . .

This measure has been industriously pushed for a couple of years by the International Reform Bureau, which should have a large part of the credit for securing the enactment of the measure into law.—The New Republic, February 6, 1914.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

In a Montessori School.

During the past year, as Sister Stebbins and the writer have worked upon the preparation of the leaflets put out by the Home and Child Welfare Department of the Woman's Auxiliary, we have promised ourselves that, in the event of our attending General Conference, we would visit the Montessori school in Kansas City.

Accordingly we set out one morning at the close of conference and, under the guidance of a friend, made our way to the school referred to. We found it to be the beginner department of a private school. There were twenty children enrolled. The average age of the pupils was four; one little boy was three; a few were five; one or two were six. The tuition of each child was one hundred and twenty-five dollars a year.

It will at once be recognized that these children were from well-to-do homes. In appearance, they were neat; their clothing was comfortable, simple, and pretty. In every up-to-date American town children as bright and presenting very much the same appearance may be seen daily wending their way to kindergartens or to the primary departments of the public schools. The Montessori children we visited were just average American children. What they were doing any other children can and will do under similar conditions.

The Freedom of the School.

One visiting such a school must be impressed by the freedom of the children. Upon a first visit, we are distinctly conscious all the time that it is different from anything we have known before in the way of schools. The children are free, but that does not imply that they are unguided. One is not very long in the room before he becomes aware that there is wise supervision of their work and play, and yet the children are all the time choosing what they will do; they are continually exercising their own individuality.

As we entered the room, we saw them all grouped about the piano where one of the teachers was seated. They were singing selections of their own choosing. After a time, we heard the older boys begin to say among themselves, "Let's get to work." The teacher must have been waiting to hear this indication of their readiness to enter upon their tasks, for she stopped playing and the children quickly found the materials upon which they chose to work, and seated themselves at their little white tables where little white chairs had been waiting for them.

What They Were Doing.

Two little boys sat immediately in front of us. Each had selected a lacing frame, one of leather, the other of cloth. Two little girls, not far away, chose drawing materials, paper, red pencils, paint boxes and brushes, and glasses of water. They drew circles and colored them. A little boy near was drawing geometric figures and coloring them. Another boy was comparing the weight of different pieces of wood. He held a piece in each hand. They were of the same size, and he was noting the difference in weight. He was cultivating the baric sense. One little boy was just beginning to frame words from the letters, the sounds of which he had been taught as he traced them. The teacher said it had been three days since it dawned upon him that there was meaning in the combination of letters which form words.

The teacher sat beside this child and talked with him as two friends might carry on a conversation on a subject of deep interest. The subject of their conversation was the materials upon the table before them. The boy traced the letter a and gave its sound. He traced the letter n and gave its sound. The teacher suggested to him that he should procure from another table across the room the letter m and place it before the two he had already placed on the table before him. He rose to go, but had taken only two or three steps when he turned eagerly to the teacher and sounding the letters as they would stand in order on the table, he said, m-a-n, man. His face shone with earnest and intelligent light as he announced his discovery; the teacher smiled encouragingly upon him, and he went on with the work of combining his letters to make words.

At the table with this boy sat another who gave no heed to what was going on about him, so intent was he in reading the writing upon slips of paper. I glanced at what he was reading and saw sentences of considerable length, written in script, and containing words some of which were of six or eight letters. This boy was reading with the interest you or I would find in our daily paper or in a good book. He would not be called upon to recite a lesson, but he was taking in thought from written characters. He was learning to read.

Some of the children busied themselves at times at the blackboard, writing or drawing. Their efforts were childish scrawls, but they were made by little children. When the time for the Silence Game arrived, it was a little boy who wrote Silence on the board. The word was very crooked, big where it ought to have been little, and little where it should have been big, but it was clearly the word Silence, and it was written by a little boy four years old and at his own request.

When the boys who had been working with the lacing frames finished, one of them disappeared and the other brought forth a wooden block in which were fitted cylinders of the same length but varying in diameter. Lifting each cylinder by its knob, he placed it on the table. When all had been taken out, he proceeded to put them back in their proper places. He made one or two mistakes, which he corrected. Then he went to play at the sand table in an adjoining room.

While all these varied tasks were being done by the older children, little Frank, three years old, was building the pink tower on a green rug on the floor. He got out the rug, procured the blocks, and built the tower. Then he took it down and built it again. He pushed it over gently with his foot, for he was not a rough child, and then built it again; and I noted that the last time he built it much better than at first. Then he put his blocks away and went to the sand table.

Several boys were at play in the sand when the teacher asked them to please come and make the long stair for the visitors. They complied without demurring when asked to leave their play. Down on the floor on the big green rug, with some laughing and some of the crudity that belongs to childhood, they placed in order the rods that build the long stair. Then they placed the figures which numbered the steps in regular order. Sometimes one made a mistake and was pleasantly corrected by another.

All the time these things were going on, there sat in a corner of the room a little child who worked intently at something which I did not investigate. I recall the intentness with which she worked, the absorption which held her deeply interested in that which she was mastering.

But finally the period of work was over. The children one by one had scattered from the room, some out in the sunshine at play about the door, some in the room where the sand table was, some at one thing, some at another. Then we heard them beginning to ask for the Silence Game.

The Period of Silence.

If there be any body of human beings who exercise the right of initiative, it is a group of Montessori children in their school. It began among them, the request for the silence period. Silently one of the teachers seated herself at the piano, while the other took her place near the door. A child wrote upon the board the word "Silence," and, one by one, the children began to tiptoe to the rug or to their seats as they preferred and to assume an attitude of repose. Those on the rug lay down; those at the tables leaned forward upon them.

They were not immediately quiet. They reminded us of a brood of little chickens that peep and chirp and move about for a time before silence and rest descend upon them. The quiet teachers waited in silence. One turbulent little spirit was removed from the group on the rug and was not privileged to have part in the game. He came at the call and was assigned to a chair with the remark that he was not yet strong enough to have part with the others. Then no more attention was given him. He will learn soon to be strong enough to be quiet—a very valuable lesson in self-control, by the way, one which many of us have not learned as completely as we might.

At last silence reigned. Then, one by one, the children were called by name in a whisper by a child who was privileged to stand beside the teacher at the door. Each, as he was called, left his place and went as quietly as possible to the teacher. Some were very noiseless; some not so quiet. One boy was so noisy that he had to try the second time, when he did better, but not nearly so well as he will be able to do when he has gained full control over his movements, and when his stiff shoes are broken in and are more pliable.

When the last child had been called, the piano struck up a lively march and as many of the children as were so inclined flew to the painted oblong on the tile floor, and, keeping time to the music, danced singly or in hand with others, keeping within the limits indicated by the black lines. The music changed from time to time and the children altered their steps accordingly.

We discovered one object of this exercise to be muscular development. At a certain point, when the music became strong and vigorous, the boys, who had been sitting on chairs along the wall, rose, to a man, and shot out into the moving tide of children. Later, when the little white chairs had been arranged in rows in the middle of the room, the music changed again and the children went through the rhythmical movements of rowing. All this was done with very few words from the teachers.

Other Things They Did.

Our space is not going to permit us to mention all the interesting things those little children did, but we still have space to tell of a few more.

Luncheon time arrived, and appointed ones arranged the tables, side by side, in a long row and placed upon them paper doilies, plates, small fruit knives, glasses of water (a little girl poured it), paper napkins, vases of flowers. They placed the chairs around the long table thus improvised. Then they all brought forth their little baskets, each containing something for lunch, an apple, an orange already peeled, some oatmeal crackers or animal cookies, etc. They opened the baskets and placed the contents on their plates. Then all stood with hands behind them and, in unison, said, "Thank you," to the heavenly Father. A little boy who had never led before asked to do so that day and was cordially given the privilege.

The refreshment was light and the repast soon over. Each shared with the others what he had brought, and one courteous little lad passed his plate of apple to the visitors also, and we each took a tiny piece, and thanked him most sincerely.

We have not yet ceased to smile when we talk of the courtesy of the Montessori school. It causes us to remember the tiny little girl, who, in passing one of us to get a glass of water, said politely, "Will you please beg my pardon?"

We noted one small incident which illustrates an important principle of the method employed in the school. As the children were opening their baskets, one little girl came to the teacher with her basket which she thought she could not open. The teacher led the way to a side table, took a small knife and pried up the little close-fitting lid; then she promptly closed it down again, handed the basket and knife to the child, who, imitating the action of the teacher, opened the lid and returned to her place. She had been taught how to do for herself.

Time passed all too soon for us, and we were compelled to leave the happy little hive of activity. I think it was the same child who passed us his apple who gave each of us his little hand in a friendly good-bye as we left. The little boy who had learned that morning to frame the word man was down on his knees in the doorway chanting something about the lion and the unicorn, and others were frolicking about; the April sun was beaming down on us all; the world seemed friendly and kind as we went out to stand on a street corner and wait for the car that would carry us back to our own duties.

As we face those duties we see again the energetic little lad in blue, whose words might well be adopted as our slogan for the coming year, "Let's get to work." One and all in the great vineyard, according to our ability, let us do what our hands find to do, be it great or small, be it seen by many or by few.

Let's get to work.

Prayer Union.

SUBJECTS FOR THE SECOND THURSDAY IN MAY.

Parents' Day.—Prayer for our families and for the families of each other; for the conversion of kindred. Pray that we may all have a greater growth in spirituality, and a greater sense of parental responsibility; that the homes of Saints may be model Christian homes.

Lesson, 1 Timothy 5:1-8. Memory verse, Psalm 127:3.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Lottie B. Davis, of Glasgow, Montana, requests prayers for her mother, who has long been afflicted, that she may be freed from suffering, and strengthened in body and mind.

Prayers are asked for a sister of Saint Joseph, Missouri, who is sorely afflicted with tuberculosis. This sister has been operated upon twice. She has endured much suffering, and the doctors advise her that it will be necessary to amputate her leg. She has a blind husband, not a member of the church, and two small boys. She is reported as a faithful child of God. May she have the prayers of the Saints.

Letter Department

Jots by the Wayside.

To the Spring River Saints: The great wheel has whirled, and again we are thrown out into the Spring River District. It is well. We may have opportunity of crossing the border into Mexico. Our war dander has "risen" very perceptibly of late, until homiletics and peace offerings have almost faded away. We are fortunate, however, in having the best district and as fine a lot of Saints as there are in the church to work for and with. Brethren Lee Quick, A. C. Silvers and George Edwards are all tried and true workers who are also returned to the district, with the addition of A. L. Gray, a young man who bids fair to make his mark as a worker in the vineyard. We hope to interest a few of the local workers as fielders for the year, and with this force we should continue to keep our district in the forefront, up to date, and progressive in every movement.

Our district is composed of twenty-seven counties, six in Missouri, the Zion and God-honored State of the world, with its unequaled fruits and flowers, the dews of heaven and the deeps beneath; eleven counties in Kansas, with clean, fresh cities, abundance of cereals, and inexhaustible coal fields couched beneath; where the Kansas sunflower intelligently turns his smiling face to the orb of day, the home of the prairie-dog, rattlesnake, owl and the Socialist Party. Seven counties in Oklahoma, the land of great promise, where the red man is fast accepting the gospel, and the story of his forefathers; where the hunting grounds are fast being turned into vineyards and waving fields of grain; where the black crude oil from a thousand geysers brings wealth to Joseph's race, and his face waxes pale no more. Last, but not least, we have three counties in Arkansas, the land of the big red apple, stick tights and clear seed peaches; where the mighty hills of the Ozarks seem to lean over against the sky, hanging their dark, somber sides, upon the clouds; where the violets of the deep vales lift up their cups of blue, and through their perfumed breath are sun-kissed about the middle of the day; where the crowned peaks of those wooded monarchs reflect the golden splendor of the setting sun.

With all this vast array of territory before us, with the many opportunities for preaching in new places, as president of the district I suggest that missionaries confine their labors to the outlying districts principally, and to the weaker branches that are needing assistance, leaving the larger branches to the local arm to be cared for as specified in the law.

We wish to give notice of our quarterly conference in June, to be held with the Fairland Branch. Also remember our reunion, to convene at Joplin, in Cunningham's beautiful park, August 7, 1914. We expect this reunion to be the grandest of the series. We are already arranging and completing our plans. Music will be an especial feature, there being a movement on foot to combine all the choirs of the district to aid in the grand chorus. Our Brother Rushton the "different," together with other excellent speakers already secured, will be with us. Also Brother William Lewis, patriarch, will be present. We remember with much pleasure the service he rendered last year.

So, brethren, here's for a strong pull, a long pull, and a pull all together for the best interests of the work intrusted to our care. So mote it be.

Elder R. E. Davis of the Missionary Baptist faith kept writing to Elder W. P. Bootman, wanting to meet him in a debate, and finally wrote up propositions and offered Elder Bootman five dollars if he would sign them up. Brother Bootman signed the propositions, but did not receive the five dollars. They were to debate four propositions, the King James translation to be the standard of evidence, all other matter to rest on its merits. The debate began on the 12th of this month, our church proposition being up first.

Brother Bootman placed before the people the first evening about one hundred scriptural quotations, and I do not think he referred to his Bible more than five times. This made Elder Davis a little uneasy. Brother Bootman showed what kind of a church Christ organized while here on earth, with apostles, prophets, seventies, elders, priests, teachers, deacons, bishops, showing that those officers were perpetuated so long as Jesus Christ recognized the church on earth. He also showed from the Scriptures the great apostasy that took place. He then proved that the Bible made provision for a restoration. Brother Bootman also showed what age of the world we were living in, and that the time had come and passed for the great restoration to take place. He then showed that the doctrine of the Reorganized Church was identical with that of the church Christ instituted, in organization, teaching, and blessings.

Elder Davis only referred to a few of Brother Bootman's quotations. He used the term "old Joe Smith" forty-two times in one speech. He said the Book of Mormon was a fraud and originated from the old Spalding Romance. Brother Bootman had a copy of the same, and Elder Davis dropped his argument at once. Davis spoke of the Saints who had died in that county and asked Brother Bootman why they were not healed.

When the Baptist Church came on trial Elder R. C. Davis began his argument by quoting prophecies relating to the time our Savior came into the world to do his work, then tried to show that the church he established on earth had continued ever since. Brother Bootman proved by the Bible and about six of the leading historians of the Baptist Church, David Benedict, Thomas Armitage, D. B. Ray, H. C. Veters, H. H. Newman, and others that there had been a great apostasy, and by those same histories showed that the Baptist Church came from the Catholic Church. Elder Davis did not say much about the Baptist Church. He wanted to close the debate, saying that Brother Bootman had not answered his arguments. Brother Bootman insisted that he must finish the proposition on the Baptist Church.

At the close of the second session a fine man came up to Brother Bootman and demanded baptism. He said he could not stay out of the water any longer. There were four baptized during the debate and at the close. This debate has done a great deal of good. Large crowds attended all the time, and all seemed to be interested. Manchester is my old home place, and where I first saw the light. I rejoiced to see the work revive there again. We reorganized the branch and organized a fine Sunday school. Brother Fine Thompson and three of his sons belong to the church. All are noble men. Brother Thompson has lived there for forty years. He stands high as an honorable man. Brother Coats Cuswell accepted the gospel during the debate. He is a fine man, and will help the work on. Elder R. E. Davis, of Hughes Springs, Texas, is a bright young man, and I hope some day he will see the light and be a useful man in the gospel. Elder Flecher, of Hunt County, Texas, was Elder Davis's moderator, and the writer acted for Brother Bootman. We got along fine together.

Hoping the debate will bring forth much fruit for the Lord,
I am, Your brother,

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, March 4, 1914.

Editors Herald: Our kind and loving Father has blessed me during the past year in telling the sweet story of the good old gospel, and in presenting the way of life. What a pleasure it is to tell the sweet gospel story to honest people, and to see them obey and receive the spirit of life.

Last Thursday night I closed a six-weeks meeting at Hazeldell, and Weston, Iowa. I felt blessed there. We baptized three at Hazeldell and eight at Weston, and others will soon be ready at both places. That makes forty-four we have baptized into the church and kingdom of God this year. Weston is near the old historic camp ground, Parks' Mill, about five miles from Council Bluffs, where the Saints used to hold conference forty years ago. There is a noble band of Saints at Hazeldell and Weston.

I expect to go home soon to Independence, to see loved ones and attend the conference. I hope and pray that God will be with us and bless all in the conference. I pray that God's loving Spirit will be with the entire church, and that we will grow in grace and in understanding of the truth.

"Let us not be weary, comrades!
Let us faint not by the way!
Though the night be long and dreary,
Soon will dawn millennium's day.
Let us keep the camp-fires blazing,
Let us sound abroad his word:
There are glorious victories coming
For the army of the Lord."

Since writing this letter I have baptized six more precious souls.
Your brother,

KISSIMMEE PARK, FLORIDA, March 5, 1914.

Editors Herald: There is much that might be said about this southern peninsula, but space forbids. I may briefly describe the climate, scenery, and environment by saying I would like to name the place Paradise. This description would not include Lake Tohopekaliga, which, interpreted, means sleeping tiger. This would be an appropriate name, providing the tiger remained asleep. But instead it is often very much awake. I can assure you that when it is awake only those we read about would be able to "sleep in the afterpart of the ship." Brother F. M. Slover can verify this statement, as he accompanied the writer across this "beast of spray" from Kissimmee on February 28. It would be contrary to truth to say that neither doubts nor fears marred our trip. Nevertheless, we rode this much enraged "animal" and landed safely at the park about 3 p. m.

That night the wind shifted to the northwest, and the following day the weather was very cold. Meeting having been announced we repaired to the church, and the majority of those attending our services in that place were present. Brother Slover very ably expounded that part of the gospel referring to the temporal death and resurrection. The message was well received by those present.

Next day we proceeded ten miles into the interior to visit some historic mounds. On the southeast shore of Lake Alligator, is a circular shaped sand hill about ten feet high, which appears to have been a breastwork or ancient fort. Southeast of this knoll about one fourth mile are several mounds. We excavated in one of the mounds where I had before visited, and in a short time dug up several large skulls, leg bones, and pieces of pottery. Some pieces of pottery were finished with a coating of cement. We also found a thin piece of copper, beaten into a half circle, set with small pieces of gold. We supposed it to be some kind of ornament. We returned to the park with our curious find, and the next day walked six miles to Saint Cloud where our worthy brethren, John Spaulding and Wilbur Savage, of Lamoni, are located.

We are not in hiding in the park, and some of the churchgoers would like to see us leave or remain silent with reference to the hope of the world to come. We take pleasure in presenting the truth to our friends, far and near. Brother Slover stayed in Saint Cloud over night, and I returned home next morning. The "tiger" was very much asleep, and I rode across in my little skiff.

We are all well and have the necessaries of life, and the hope for life eternal.

Your brother in Christ,
N. C. ENGE.

DENVER, COLORADO, March 7, 1914.

Editors Herald: In reading a book the other day I was greatly impressed by an article. I take the liberty to quote:

"In every one of us, there lies a power that may help to make or mar the lives of our fellow creatures, a mighty power, yet little dreamed of, and we call it influence.

"For there is no man but he must of necessity influence, to a more or less degree, the conduct of those he meets, whether he will or no—and there lies the terror of it. Thus, to some extent, we become responsible for the actions of our neighbors, even after we are dead, for influence is immortal.

"Man is a pebble thrown into the pool of life—a splash, a bubble, and he is gone!

"But—the ripples of influence he leaves behind, go on widening and ever widening until they reach the farthest bank.

"In helping others, we ourselves are blessed, for a noble thought, a kindly word, a generous deed, is never lost; such things can not go to waste, they are our monuments after we are dead and live on for ever."

I desire to be an influence for good and let my light shine, that others may be led into the fold to the glory of our heavenly Father. Earnestly desiring an interest in your prayers that I may be more faithful, I am

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA, March 10, 1914.

Editors Herald: I gain much strength and light from the letters in the HERALD. I hope to write in a way that may be helpful to some one.

Our branch is moving along very nicely, though there is room for improvement. Brother Hale W. Smith has just left here. He organized a choir, which will be a grand thing. Brother Swenson left this place a few days ago. He has friends here, in and out of the church. We hope he may come again. Brother and Sister I. M. Smith start for General Conference some time next week. We hope they will soon come back. They have done much good here.

Dear Saints, I want all to pray for me that I may in the near future be restored to health again. I believe your prayers will be answered. I know the prayer of the righteous availeth much. I know God will hear and answer prayer. I will ever remember you.

A sister,
EMMA MOCK.

CALGARY, ALBERTA.

Editors Herald: We are still striving in Calgary to do good for the Master. Brother J. W. Peterson has been with us for a few weeks. We were holding meetings in the Globe Theater. Only a few outsiders came out. It is the same here as elsewhere, people seem to be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

There is a good little branch here, of twenty-seven members. Some are talking of leaving, however, so our number may be depleted. We have a good Sunday school and Religio.

We had quite a talk with a Baptist minister who came to call on us. Everything went on all right until mother brought out her Book of Mormon; then there was something doing. He tried to show us we were wrong; he said if he had the Book of Mormon he would burn it up, and that if we knew as much about it as he did we would burn it up. Still he has not read it. We have, so I think we should know a little about it. He became angry and soon left. He did not invite us to come to his church again.

I ask the prayers of all the Saints everywhere that our faith fail not, and that we may love and serve the Master until the end.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
VIOLET THOMAS.

DANA, INDIANA, March 10, 1914.

Editors Herald: The writer is at present laboring north of Clinton, Indiana, in a schoolhouse, with good audience and interest. Many are heard to say, "Surely this is the truth, and God is in the work." To God be all the praise.

How glorious is the experience of the servants of God when dispensing the truth to those who are hungering for righteousness. For truly those who keep themselves humble before God will be able to confound those who criticize and ridicule God's work, and persecute his servants.

The place where the writer is laboring is a new place. The angel's message has never been preached to these people before. The hastening time is on. And how can they hear without a preacher, and how can he preach except he be sent? Some in this part of the Lord's vineyard are near the kingdom.

I love this work, and many times am constrained to say, My lot could not be cast among a better people, and no work is more pleasant than service for the Lord.

Your servant in Christ,
CHARLES A. NOLAN.

VICKERY, TEXAS, March 11, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have thought many times of writing concerning my experience in this grand work of the restored gospel. I am now enjoying a blessed privilege foretold by the Spirit fifteen years ago, when it was said through one of the handmaidens that there would be a branch established in Dallas. We have the house and lot that were given to us. There are only a few Saints here as yet, but we look for more. The most of the Saints here are very willing to do anything they can for the advancement of the cause.

This old world is only a dressing room for eternity, and the Saints should be robing themselves for the great change. The Lord has no place for cowards in his army. He needs men and women who are willing to do whatever they are called on to do. I have seen the sick healed many times. I have seen the Devil cast out. I have heard prophecies and have seen their fulfillment. This latter-day work is the only thing that can stand a fair test. Thank God for his plan. How thankful I am that Christ won the victory for all who want to live hereafter.

MRS. ADDA STANDIFER.

SOLDIERS GROVE, WISCONSIN, March 11, 1914.

Editors Herald: The work in this part as a whole I think is doing fairly well. The Lord has blessed us very much during the past conference year. He has called two of our young men, Ervin Lenak and Philip Lavenport, jr., to the office of priest, Brother Johnson, teacher, and the writer to the office of elder. There have been eighteen or twenty added to this branch by way of baptism. The young men ordained to the office of priest if faithful will stand as pillars in this work in time. Oh, may they live humble, that the Lord may bless them and prepare them for the great work that lieth before them.

E. J. Goodenough, Lester Wildermuth and Brother Gratz have all done a good work in this part during the past year, preaching and instructing. If it be the will of the Lord to send these worthy men to this district again we will be glad to receive them; if not we can recommend them to any district whithersoever they may be sent.

Editors Herald: When we read of the good work and the happy times the Saints are having in different parts of the world, of the success attending the efforts of the various laborers in the good cause, we in our isolated condition feel as though we were not accomplishing anything, and as a consequence can not help feeling a little envious. But we are not idle. We keep "hammering away"; if the impression is not visible now, it may be in the future. At least we are allaying prejudice. We are very much interested in the work in the South Sea Islands, Jerusalem, and Australia, and the good accomplished by our brethren Gomer T. Griffiths, C. E. Miller and others. May the Lord bless that mission. We rejoiced in reading Brother W. H. Dawson's letter to the HERALD concerning the grand work accomplished at Sacramento.

We study the Religio and Sunday school Quarterlies at home, where we recite the lessons and comment upon them in the family circle. The church literature is our only solace. We seldom have a call from the elders, as there are no railroads in our country.

Let us not turn a deaf ear to the requests of the sick and afflicted ones. Let us pray for the auxiliary departments that all may bring about more purity, faith, hope and charity, which God demands and desires to see among his Saints.

Your brother in the faith,

EDWARD F. ADAMSON.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON, March 13, 1914.

Dear Readers of the Herald: We have passed another milestone in the history of the work here in the great Northwest. The five branches of the district were represented at our late conference. Our Religio and Sunday school conventions were very much below par. Some one must take a greater interest in these conventions or they are going to pass as a joke. We have some splendid talent in this district. The several locals prove this to be true, especially in the Seattle, Centralia, and Chehalis locals. We hope that at the next conference and conventions, which will be held in Vancouver, British Columbia, that there will be concentrated effort to make each session one of education.

We have just returned from British Columbia. The Saints there are already making calculations on a good conference. The conference will be in August. Our visit to British Columbia at this time was one of deep sorrow because of the death of one of earth's noble women, Sister James (Sarah Ann) Muirhead, of Rosedale, British Columbia.

More and more do we see the need of Saints taking a deeper hold of the latter-day work. To some it has lost its first fascination, that intense love for it has waned until a degree of indifference that is alarming has replaced that beautiful faith that once characterized the Saint, making it doubly hard for the faithful ones to successfully hold the fort.

I wish I could reach the ear of every young man in the church, and impress on them the golden opportunity of usefulness that is at the door of every one. Can you read the appeal from the watchmen of the church without feeling the spirit of response? If you can there is something wrong. Excuses are too numerous to mention. Some day we will want to push the hand of time back. Now is the accepted time. (Read Doctrine and Covenants 77: 3.) Rally, Saints, rally.

TABOR, IOWA, March 14, 1914.

Editors Herald: My father has taken the HERALD for a number of years. I enjoy reading the different articles and the letters from the dear Saints in different parts of the world.

We have a nice little church building situated a block east of Main Street. We expect to have the June conference of the Fremont District here and look for a large crowd.

Brother Haden is missed since he has been transferred to the Pottawattamie District as pastor of the Council Bluffs church. Brother C. Scott held some meetings here in November, with outsiders present at every service. Brother C. E. Butterworth was here in February and held a week's meetings but I was unable to attend.

I have felt quite poorly all winter, and I ask an interest in the faith and prayers of the Saints that if it is the Lord's will I may be healed of spinal trouble, and be an instrument in his hands to help carry on this glorious latter-day work.

Ever praying for the upbuilding of Zion, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

GEORGE F. CLARK.

MARION, INDIANA, March 16, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have been wonderfully blessed during the past month, and I wish to let others know of it. I feel that the Lord has answered my prayers.

I am one of the isolated Saints. I have been living in Marion, Indiana, for nearly sixteen years, and have not met a Latter Day Saint in this city, until two weeks ago when Brother William Dowker, one of the missionaries in Northern Indiana, came to our house. He was with us ten days, and preached five times to rather small audiences. No one showed any great interest, but we feel that the seed has been sown. Brother Dowker is a splendid speaker. I was sorry to see him leave so soon. Had the people shown more interest he would have stayed longer. God answered my prayers, for I have prayed constantly that some elder might come here that my husband might hear the true gospel. I hope the dear Saints will pray that he may be spared to accept the truth. I am trying to do my duty along all lines the best I can. Pray for me and my family.

We hope to see Brother Dowker or some other missionary here again. My prayers are for this work. I know it is true.

MRS. A. R. MARTIN.

DUNLAP, IOWA, March 16, 1914.

Editors Herald: Though we have no Sunday school nor church here in Dunlap, yet I never, no never lose the realization that Jesus Christ has not forsaken us. I am sure this is the true living church, and am earnestly striving to do what I can to help spread the good news. I let two ladies read my Book of Mormon and have given HERALDS and Ensigns to a few good people, which I hope will do some good.

I must bear my testimony, and thank the good Lord for his loving, watchful care over us all. For several years I was almost a nervous wreck, dragging on from one month to the next. On coming into the church two years ago last August, I felt sure I would be healed in time if I put my trust in God. And a year ago last July while attending the Logan reunion, I was administered to by Brother William Sparling and have been improving since and feel better than for years. Thanks to God.

We all have our trials and tribulations. I find the Lord a great comfort to me in these troubles. Our little Helen, who has tuberculosis of the bone, is no better. I do not feel that the doctors will ever do her any good. I ask the Saints of the Prayer Union to pray earnestly for her recovery, also for little Dean's full recovery. I feel weak in praying alone. I wish all who read these few lines to pray for us all. I also ask you to pray that my husband who is not a member of the church may see and accept the true message.

I find the church papers so much company, and the letters always make me feel as if I must live more prayerful.

If any of the ministers happen to be in Phoenix, Arizona, I wish them to call on my sister, Mrs. Lola Hannon, and family. She was baptized years ago, but at the present time seems rather discouraged concerning the work. If there are any Saints living there I wish them to go and see her, and do what they can to encourage them all. Her address is East 726 Portland Street.

I earnestly pray that some minister will come to our little village and bring the good message again. Brother W. A. Smith did much sowing here and some have been baptized since. I feel that there are many more who will be baptized.

Asking all to pray for us, I remain

A sister in the faith,

MRS. ELSIE STEWART.

DOW CITY, IOWA, March 17, 1914.

Editors Herald: Brother J. B. Wildermuth commenced a series of meetings at this place on the night of February 16, and continued each evening and Sunday until March 15, with a crowded house, attentive listeners, and the Spirit of God reigning supreme. He had thought to bring the meetings to a close at the end of three weeks, but through the counsel of the branch officers it was thought well to continue a couple of days longer, which, because of the manifest interest of Saints and friends, was lengthened to Sunday, interest never waning until on the last night an appropriate song would have been, "Lord, give us room that we may dwell."

We feel that our branch has been blessed through the manifestation of God's Spirit, and hope it may continue with us. One of our young men, L. C. Hatch, was ordained to the office of priest on the evening of March 3, under the hands of Brethren Wildermuth and Alfred Jackson.

A MEMBER OF THE BRANCH.

VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, March 18, 1914.

Editors Herald: It is a considerable time since I discontinued the HERALD, and on looking back over the happenings of years I feel that I have lost ground in not being posted in the happenings of the church in the homeland. Have decided to again take the HERALD, as I feel the necessity of keeping in touch with what is done in the church.

Elder Griffiths arrived here from Sydney on Monday, March 9, and has made his home with us. We find him good company, and listen with pleasure and interest to his conversation.

His work among the Saints here is already making for advancement, and is deeply appreciated by all, especially by the officers who have met him in council. His sound advice has been of inestimable benefit and worth and has been the means of making us to see where we have failed in the past in the performance of our duties. We feel spurred on to greater activity. Although we have passed through clouds in the past, yet they are already showing their silver lining.

As we consider the beauty in the formation of the church, as explained by chart by Brother Griffiths, we feel the holy influence of the Comforter enlightening our minds and illuminating our souls, creating in us a desire for more light and understanding, and a greater desire to do our duty to our heavenly Father. "I will build my church," our Master said; and as we trace through the formation of the grand and noble work we are engaged in we exclaim, "Thou art the God that doeth wonders; thou hast declared thy strength among the people." (Psalm 77: 14.)

It is also said, God shall supply all your need; and I can truthfully say our needs have been great in the past. I feel that the office work of our brother is by the power of God beginning to bear fruit. We feel honored in having the servant of the Lord among us, and I can assure you that a new era of light is beginning to dawn on us. We sincerely pray that our heavenly Father may be pleased to spare his servant, Gomer T. Griffiths, for many years to come, that he may be enabled with health and strength to do what he has been chosen to do, and that the fruits of his labors may be seen in the years to come.

May our heavenly Father bless his work and his people, and grant us his Holy Spirit to enlighten us, build us up, and bind us together in the bonds of love and unity, that we may be called the children of God, and that we may all receive his divine approval and blessing, and finally stand with Christ and his people, ransomed and redeemed, is the prayer of,

Your brother in Christ,

FLEMINGTON, 42 Brighton Street.

ALBERT H. FORD.

LONDON, ENGLAND, March 18, 1914.

Editors Herald: At the present time there is much agitation in religious matters here. A storm seems to be brewing in the Episcopal Church of England, and there is much controversy for and against the action of the Bishop of Zanzibar, for administering the communion to those of other denominations who gathered at the Kikuyu conference, thus seeking to bring about unity.

The action of these bishops has brought a storm of protests from the authorities of said church, and the turbulent waves continue to circle round with a shock, causing much discussion in pulpit and press. Many protest against this charge of heresy as being against the spirit of religious liberty and unity they are seeking to establish among the different denominations, and a cry for more religious liberty is heard. A breaking away from creeds and yokes of bondage, and the glory of freedom is demanded, which some have taken in hand to bring about. This is a hard problem, as it does not meet with favor from all sides. The conviction of some is that the more the question is agitated the more tangled and complicated it will become, and the more strife and contention will be the result. Just how successful the three American missionaries may be in their mission to England to bring about a unity of churches remains to be seen.

Many are questioning the solidity of their religious structures, and a cry is made for a more positive message. However, they fail to see it is being offered them in the message of the restored gospel. If this message had been offered to them through some of the high and noble, the worldly wise dignitaries, it would have been joyfully received. But God has not chosen their way, so they turn indignantly away from it and will not acknowledge the source from whence it comes. They have ears but hear not, and with their eyes they do not see; neither do they try to understand, but stagger on, believing not nor heeding the voice of warning, blind to the prophecies in the Bible they claim to believe, telling them of their present condition.

The little, struggling church is striving to get a hearing and a footing among these staggering giants, but like the Master who had not where to lay his head, is only scoffed at with derision, and though its rising up from behind the clouds appears to be slow, yet 'tis progressive, and must come to the surface and prevail and triumph over error in the end and find lodgment in honest hearts of those who are seeking the more positive message. Such is our faith in the restored gospel. I inclose some clippings that may be of interest to you. I will close with more anon.

Yours in the love of gospel truths,
MRS. R. MAY.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, March 18, 1914.

Editors Herald: It is a pleasure indeed to be engaged in a work which tends to uplift, ennoble, and bless mankind. We are daily and hourly cheered by sweet peace and blessed service to others. As the days go by, as knowledge is acquired and as virtue and truth are revealed in their true light do we begin to see the beauty, grandeur, and excellence of the gospel of the Nazarene. To me the life of Christ is altogether lovely; it comes to man as the perfect revelation of God. It is superlative in degree; it is glorious to contemplate; and the nearer it is approached unto the more blissful does our life become.

Christ was not uttering idle words when he said, "Abide in me," and again, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be given you." To abide in him is to become one with him. And since he is the great exemplar, the way, the light, the truth, and the life, the words that he utters are the words of life. Therefore, if those words dwell richly in us, our lives will correspond with his life, and by reason of our correspondence we will become the possessors of truth and knowledge. Our asking will then be in accordance with knowledge; that is, we will ask only for the things that are right, and such asking will always bring a response from the divine.

The aphorism of Christ, "Give and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down and running over," has quite a different meaning to me now from what it once did. I was once unable to properly vision, and therefore could not see in it what I now see. The essence of the real grandeur and magnitude of those words in their most beautiful analysis is the giving to the world of a life, a character that is altogether lovely; one that will daily and hourly reflect the divine man, and that will stimulate, encourage, enlighten, and bless others. By this giving we will in return receive good measure, here and now, of the joys and blessings of a real life, with the blessed assurance that the future will yet bring opportunities for service that we do not yet see or understand, thereby increasing our joy and happiness.

And so it is "more blessed to give than to receive," for Christianity is something the more of which we give away the more we have left. Therefore, the more of our life is given for the good of others the more life we have: our life increases as we give it to mankind, and brings joy and peace. Peace and joy increase in proportion to our giving; so if we desire to receive the best in life we must give the very best in life. The laws of compensation provide that the supply must be equal to the demand.

In visiting with people in their homes and speaking of the beauties of the Christ life and what it means for us if we will open our lives to the inflow of the divine Spirit, I find in many cases a desire on the part of the individual to know and to do better things; but as in the days of the Master so also now, "they are as sheep without a shepherd." The reason so many people are destitute of the higher life is because it is unknown to them—they have never been taught it. Let us, then, be shepherds; let us seek the lost sheep, and when we find them, let us not lacerate and wound them, but gently take them in our arms and carry them home to the fold, that peace and safety may be vouchsafed to them, and that better pastures may be found for them where they may lie down beside the still waters of peace and blessedness.

Optimism is the keynote of success. May we, then, take courage and prepare ourselves to give to the world a life that will bespeak faith in God and good will towards mankind.

Sincerely,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

GLEASON, TENNESSEE, March 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the church for nearly two years. I have been blessed in many ways, and have received more light in this church in this short time than I did for ten years in the Baptist Church to which I belonged. I belonged to the Baptist Church because mother and father did. I did not read enough to learn that they were wrong.

When I was married fifteen years ago my husband's people were Latter Day Saints. I went to reading to show them they were wrong, and instead read myself into the church. I was fully convinced for quite a while before I joined. My husband was in the faith, but still held off. I felt as though I could not live as I desired if he were to remain in wickedness. I spent many hours in earnest prayer in his behalf. Thanks be unto the Lord, at our reunion at Bethel Church a year ago last July we were both buried in the liquid grave. Our daughter, aged twelve, was baptized a few days before we were. Is it not grand to know we are children of God? When we kneel in earnest prayer and ask him for his guidance it is almost as plain as day.

Dear Saints, I want you all to pray for me and my family. I am the mother of seven children, and desire to raise them to be useful men and women for the Master. I have a little boy aged ten, who has tuberculosis. He has been so afflicted from infancy. I have also a little girl aged eleven who is sorely afflicted with kidney trouble. I earnestly ask the Saints to remember her in their prayers.

Praying for the upbuilding of Zion,

A true sister,

LILLIE SANDERS.

CLEVELAND, OKLAHOMA, March 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: I came to Oklahoma from Des Moines, Iowa, last October, to spend the winter with my son and daughter. I have thus been deprived of church privileges, as there is no branch here. Oh, how I long to be with the Saints at Des Moines once more.

My health was not the best when I first came to Oklahoma. I was troubled with rheumatism, but since requesting the prayers of the Saints at Des Moines and trusting the Lord in my affliction I am glad to say that my rheumatism has entirely left me and my health has been better than for some time. I am nearing my sixty-fourth year. I have been a member of the church for thirty-five years. My faith has been and still is getting stronger each day.

I have nine children, all married, seven of whom belong to the church. I am trusting and praying that the other two may enter shortly. My husband, W. T. Clark, passed to his reward on July 1, 1905, after serving as a minister of the gospel in the Reorganized Church for something like twenty years. I request the prayers of the Saints that I may ever be found watchful and ready to meet my loved ones when I am called on to lay down this life and become one of the faithful on the other side.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. JOSEPHINE CLARK.

TIGRIS, MISSOURI, March 20, 1914.

Editors Herald: During the conference year I have in my weakness tried to make proper use of my time; though there is nothing over which I boast. The number I have baptized can be counted on my fingers, and I trust that not one of them has been converted by the writer. In fact, I do not know that I have ever converted a single soul. I prefer to believe that God by the power of his Spirit accomplished that part of the work, hence all are his disciples. I can only be to God just what a tool is to me. God forbid that I should ever become topheavy and fall. I prefer to remain in the gospel rut and to be on the side of right, even at the risk of being considered over conservative.

During the year my mission headquarters has been at Malad City, Idaho, where we have a branch of some noble, free-hearted Welch Saints, who have done what they could to make the missionary comfortable and at home, possibly somewhat to their own inconvenience. The night before I left, the sisters prepared a farewell supper for me at the home of Brother and Sister D. J. Williams. A good and enjoyable time was had till about midnight. Their pocketbooks as well as their souls had been converted to the gospel, so they kindly remembered me in a financial way, thereby enabling me to return homeward. May God reward them abundantly.

From there I went to Salt Lake City, attended the Utah district conference, February 7 and 8. The attendance was not large, but a good spirit prevailed from first to last. I labored in the following places in Idaho: Malad City, Saint John, Elkhorn, Arbon and Pocatello; in Utah: Logan, Brigham, Ogden, Plain City, Salt Lake City, Midvale, Murry, Sandy, Pleasant Grove, Provo, Heber, and Springville.

Generally speaking, the Saints throughout my mission field have been very good and kind to me. A night or two before departing for the East the sisters of the Salt Lake Branch sprung a surprise on me at the hospitable home of Sister W. E. Winkworth and son William, where a nice lunch was served. It was a pleasant farewell party, of music, song, and joy, which might have been full but for the vacant chair, made so by the death of our estimable brother and high priest, W. E. Winkworth, who on last July was called hence. Our loss makes for his gain, as he was a noble man. On or about midnight we reluctantly gave the parting hand to Saints we had learned to love by reason of gospel ties, and so ended my several years' labor in Utah and Idaho.

On my way east I stopped off at Denver, Colorado, twelve hours, thence to Lincoln, Nebraska, to visit a brother and family. I called at the Saints' meeting place and preached for them once, by request of their branch president, Elder J. G. Munsell, the right man in the right place. My next stop was Omaha; thence to Independence, Joplin, and home, at Tigris, Missouri, March 14. I found wife well, but lonely. My first mission was at home by her side, and my last may be, although my greatest ambition is to do all the good I can, to labor for the Master in the interest of souls, and to live and die with gospel harness on. I would gladly return to Utah or any other mission field near or far, if conditions would permit, providing that God and the church directed.

I am now convinced that our labors among the Brighamites can not and will not bring about satisfactory results until some great change takes place. Nothing short of a marvelous manifestation of God's power will ever open their eyes as a people. It is true that there are many good, honest people among them, yet they are as blind as a stone wall, and oath bound. They still stand for polygamy and are practicing it, together with other doctrines that are contrary to the three standard books of the church. If that people are ever converted to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus it will be through the power of God, and loving kindness on our part, or on the part of those called upon to labor among them. We may be thankful if we reach the honest in heart there the same as among other denominations.

God speed the redemption of Zion.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

Extracts from Letters.

D. R. Jones, Gardnerville, Nevada: "The first sermon I ever heard from the Latter Days Saints was in my native town in northern Wales in 1842, when I was twelve years of age. On a certain Sunday with other boys I was leaving the church where I attended and in crossing the street we found a large crowd of people gathered around two men standing on the curbing. One was a constable, the other was a minister. The minister was there to preach and the constable to keep order. The constable failed in his efforts, and the minister was able to preach only when a large man in working clothes and sleeves rolled up came into the crowd and insisted upon silence and fair play. I did not know then that this man was preaching the gospel, and did not learn so until in 1878 when other representative men came and taught me the gospel story."

Mae Beverage, Vinalhaven, Maine: "There are only a few Saints here, but we are all trying to become more united. Elder Samuel Foss was here in February and baptized Sister Saide Barton. We have started a circulating library, with Brother Herbert Raymond librarian. Brother A. Begg, our priest, is always at his post. Brother Beverage as janitor makes the schoolhouse comfortable. We hope soon to have a branch here. May those who are in darkness be led to the light of this glorious gospel."

United States officials and subordinate to martial law has been established there. Quiet reigns in the city and is reported as reigning throughout the country. Hundreds of United States citizens and others are leaving Mexico without hindrance. It is reported that on Saturday, disregarding the armistice, a band of Mexican soldiers approached the United States forces guarding the pumping station nine miles from Vera Cruz, which furnishes the water supply for the city, and demanded that they surrender. On their refusal to do so the Mexicans fired a few shots and withdrew. The United States soldiers are under orders not to assume the offensive and not to fire at all unless attacked.

MEXICAN WAR.—The Constitutionals continue to follow up their recent victories. The attack on Tampico has been renewed. The Villa forces have taken Monterey, the strongest point left to the Federalists in northern Mexico. Villa's plans are to move at once on Saltillo, where the broken ranks of the Federal army are gathering and before they become entrenched in strongholds. Successful here, he would press on toward Mexico City and to the final conflict.

COLORADO LABOR WAR.—Reports of conditions in the coal mining district of southern Colorado are conflicting, and facts not readily determined. From the most reliable sources to which we have access, we glean the following: In a three-day battle, April 20 to 23, in the Ludlow district between striking miners and state militia, twenty-one persons were killed. Skirmishes occurred at Delagua, Primrose and Cameron, on April 22 and 23, eight being reported killed. Eight are said to have been killed in a battle at Forbes and one at Walsenberg. The killed include women and children. Much mining property has been destroyed. Appealed to to take action looking toward arbitration proceedings, John D. Rockefeller, jr., who holds large mining interests in the district, declined to do so. The armed miners are reported as having outnumbered the state militia and to have offered resistance beyond the power of the State to control. In compliance with repeated requests from General Ammons, operators and union leaders, Federal troops are being sent into the State. These troops are to police the district only—restore and preserve law and order. The State militiamen are being withdrawn as rapidly as the Federal troops arrive to relieve them. The miners are desisting and the conflict has been stilled. Secretary of War Daniels on the 2d formally called on all persons in the strike district "not in the military service of the United States"—mine guards, strikers and neutrals—to surrender all arms and ammunition to the United States army officers located at the scenes of trouble. Guards and strikers are reported ready to comply. This strike has been on for eight months. The main cause of difference seems to have been the refusal of the operators to recognize the miners' union. Both sides continue determined on this point. Strikers insist on recognition, operators say they will not recognize the union. This recent and terrible trouble is the climax of ten years of dispute and difference on this and other points.

MEXICAN ILLITERACY AND CREDULITY.—It is reported that perhaps not over five per cent of the Mexicans read and write. Playing upon this illiteracy the Huerta government impresses the people with the idea that Mexico is a mighty nation as compared with the United States. A Mexican paper recently published a story stating that El Paso, Texas, had been captured by the Mexicans, that Villa of the Constitutionals and Velasco of the Federalists had established headquarters in the city, and that following negotiations the terrified Americans ceded a part of El Paso to Mexico. And a large number of Mexicans are expected to believe, and will believe this story.

DISASTROUS MINE EXPLOSION.—As the result of a gas explosion in two mines, connected, at Echo, West Virginia, two hundred and three men are entombed with little chance of escape.

Conference Minutes.

NORTHWESTERN KANSAS.—Convened at Alexander, Kansas, March 21 and 22. Branches reporting: Homestead 106, gain 23; Hill City 33, loss 4; Twin Creek 77. Two branch reports were returned to Twin Creek for correction. Sister Eva L. Teeters was elected secretary pro tem until next conference. T. Comer Turpen was granted an elder's license. The twelve were requested to appoint E. F. Robertson to the district. The following was adopted: "Whereas we recognize that the requirements of the work of this district demand that the workers of the district be more active and make greater sacrifice for the work, therefore be it Resolved, That we bend our energies to meet the requirements by holding our quarterly conferences when practicable, and that we also hold a reunion this year." The meetings on Sunday were splendid. Preaching by John A. Teeters, and E. H. Ebert. Eva L. Teeters, secretary pro tem.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.—Met April 11 to 13, W. H. Greenwood and Bishop R. May assisting the district presidency in presiding. The meetings were held in the new church of the Northeast Manchester Branch. Preaching by Brn. May and Greenwood. Ten were baptized. Appointment of N. Dewsnup, bishop's agent of Manchester District by R. May was ratified. Statistical report showed a net gain of eight for the year 1913. John W. Taylor was elected to succeed N. J. Weate as president. Brother Weate sailed for America a few days after the conference. In his departure we lose a good and diligent elder and worker, one specially gifted in Sunday school work and care of the young in Religio. We commend him to those among whom he may be privileged to labor. A committee was appointed and a presentation made on behalf of the district to express our appreciation of his past faithful services. An excellent spirit characterized the whole session of the conference, one and all felt blessed, and a hopeful feeling prevailed for the welfare of the work in the immediate future. William Worth, secretary, Stockport, England, 28 Horace Grove.

The Bishopric.

To the Saints of Northern California; Greeting: The Savior said, "I must be about my Father's business." One of the greatest hindrances in the church to-day is a lack of finances. Our portion of the debt is $2,100. Last year the district paid $494, not a quarter of our share. Any who have not paid their tithing in full will be about their Father's business to do so as soon as possible, and then pay what they can on the debt. The debt is our debt, yours and mine. We are a part of the church.

We are all very anxious to receive blessings. How can we expect them if we fail to do what our kind Father has placed upon us to perform in doing his business? We are all stewards in this gospel work. He supplies all the capital, shall we not use it under his directions? Do you not think that if it were needful for him to be about his "Father's business" we ought also to be anxiously doing the same?

Some have said, The funds are not used according to my ideas, or we would have no debt. Now stop and think. The servants of God are called and set apart to do this work under a solemn charge: "As I live, saith the Lord, in the manner ye execute this matter, so shall ye be judged in the day of judgment." Who would dare to go contrary to the best light and wisdom they have with such a positive charge as this? A poor excuse. Let us do our part.

Your tithing is a tenth of your increase; your surplus is what you can spare without injury to your business. Your offerings are what you can give in the same way.

"Why do you call me Lord, Lord, and do not what I say?"

Some have done well. Let us not be weary in well doing. In regard to the debt, pay what you can. You will never be any poorer by doing the best you can.

Yours in hope,

CHARLES PARKIN, Bishop, Northern California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, 579 Fifth Avenue.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, and Mississippi; Greeting: The Quorum of Twelve have appointed as missionaries to the above named States, the following brethren; viz, I. M. Smith, Swen Swenson, Hale W. Smith, A. G. Miller, A. E. Warr, E. C. Shelley, and the writer. The quorum making these appointments has confidence that all will make an effort to live a pure life, and in this way convince the people among whom they labor that they are worthy to represent the Church of Jesus Christ, for surely there is no better way to make the gospel light shine than to be without blame in word and deed. (Doctrine and Covenants 119:3.)

I trust that none will be found saying or doing that which will have a tendency to destroy the confidence thus reposed by the Quorum of Twelve, or cause mistrust or suspicion among those with whom they are called to labor.

Having been given the oversight of the missionary force in this field this year, I call especial attention to the following clause in the late revelation, received through our beloved prophet, Joseph Smith, and adopted as a law to govern us as a people. This clause is as follows:

"The Spirit saith further, that the spirit of distrust and want of confidence in those who are called and ordained to act in various responsible positions in the priesthood and in authority in the church is unbecoming those professing faith in God, Jesus Christ his Son, and the Holy Spirit of truth, and evinces a serious lack of that charity which Paul, an apostle of Christ, declared to be the quality of Christian virtue which thinketh no evil. Those who go out from the assemblies and solemn conclaves of the church should exercise great care in their ministrations abroad to the branches where they may officiate and in their preaching the gospel to them outside, to avoid sowing seeds of distrust and suspicion either in public ministrations or in private conversation. The church has been admonished heretofore in this respect and the Spirit saith again, it is unbecoming to the character and calling of them who administer in the name of Jesus Christ, the Lord."

This warning from heaven has come to us for our benefit as missionaries, in order that we may build up confidence in each other where we labor as well as confidence in the chief authorities in the church. The membership are also admonished that the spirit of distrust and want of confidence in those who are called and ordained to act in various responsible positions in the priesthood and in authority in the church is unbecoming those professing faith in God, and evinces a serious lack of that charity which thinketh no evil. The ministry are especially warned and commanded to avoid sowing seeds of distrust and suspicion, either in public ministrations or in private conversation.

I call attention to the word of God lately received by us so that any among the ministry or members who realize that they have a weakness along these lines may be encouraged to overcome the same, and not have to suffer by reason of being found in the condition referred to by the Lord.

Any missionary who may be found acting unwisely to the extent that he is bringing reproach upon the church and consequently acting outside of the purview of his calling as a minister for Christ should be reported at once to one in charge of the field, whose duty it is to look after the brother in a kind, considerate way to adjust the difficulty. Those who report to those in charge of the field should exercise the spirit of wisdom and patience, giving them plenty of time to make an investigation and settle the matter, without spreading it among the Saints, to the injury of the brother and of the work. The cooperation of every local officer and member is earnestly solicited for the purpose of advancing the work, in all of its beauty and grandeur, in every department of the same, in order that the Saints may be built up in faith, knowledge, and wisdom, and the gospel go forth to those who are walking in darkness, who have not had a chance to receive the light.

Our mission has been given us by the Master, who plainly stated, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and all are commanded to labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." (Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.) The Lord has also stated, "Behold, now it is called day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people." (Doctrine and Covenants 64:5.)

The financial arm of the work should be kept up and strengthened in order that the work of God may be built up in all of its departments. This not only means that the families of the missionaries should be supported, but that those elders who leave their homes and loved ones for the sake of the gospel and stay in the field and labor should be well provided with means to travel and all that is needful in the way of clothing, books, etc. But in regard to this we have no room to complain, as the southern Saints have been quite liberal.

I also call attention to the important fact that Graceland College, our institution of learning, the homes for the aged, the home for children, the sanitarium, and the Order of Enoch should all be well supported financially, in order that each line of our work may be kept in good working order.

Let every man learn his duty and act in the office in which he is appointed in all diligence, without any jealousy, strife or faultfinding, and the work of God will build up, and the Saints be made to rejoice. The year will be a prosperous one if all will heed the warning herein given.

Brother I. M. Smith, lately ordained to the office of patriarch, will confine his labor to the branches. I request officers of districts and branches to confer with him and secure his services, that the Saints may receive the great benefit that is to be derived through his ministrations. (See Doctrine and Covenants 125:3.) It will be proper for the missionaries to keep up the interest in places where they have already opened up the work, as well as to do all they can to spread the work in new territory. I desire to keep in close touch with all workers in every part of the field, by mail, that I may know the needs and the conditions of the work in every locality, that every demand may be met so far as possible, and all the missionary force kept busy, that the work may be well cared for and built up.

Your coworker in Christ,

F. M. SLOVER, Assistant Minister in Charge.

Mission Address, MCKENZIE, ALABAMA, April 25, 1914.

To the Saints of Southern Nebraska District; Greeting: Another conference year has begun with its important events. We hope and pray that the Saints of the district will take new courage and renew their efforts in gospel work. We need new life and more workers. Since the number of our workers has been cut down, there will be more need for local workers to make up for the lack of general representatives in the district. By lending a helping hand in town and country, and laboring earnestly for the cause of right, we expect to be successful. We need more efficient work in the preaching of the word, and in the auxiliary work of the church.

Let us all put on the armor and fight manfully for the cause we love. Let the local ministry make appointments for preaching and fill them and call on the auxiliary workers for help in singing, etc. All are called, so let each work where he is appointed to labor. If to preach, let him wait on the word; if to labor in the auxiliaries, let him do it with good spirit, taking advantage of every opportunity to do good. Let the presidents of the branches help and encourage the local ministry to make and fill appointments.

We ask God's blessing upon the work of all and pray for success.

In gospel bonds,
W. M. SELF, District President.

Book Reviews.

POPULAR GOVERNMENT.—By William Howard Taft, published by the Yale University Press, 225 Fifth Avenue, New York City, price $1.15. Ex-President William Howard Taft, now known as Kent Professor of Law in Yale University, is author of a new volume entitled, Popular Government; Its Essence, Its Permanence, and Its Perils. This book is a compilation of a series of lectures delivered before the law school of Yale University. He took for his text the preamble to the Constitution, beginning, "We the people"; and in the course of the lectures took up such subjects as, the meaning of the term, "We the people of the United States"; the representative system; the initiative and the referendum; the recall; the direct primary; the selection and tenure of judges, "to establish justice"; to "to insure domestic tranquility"; and "to provide for the common defense." In this book for a very small fee the reader obtains the benefit of the ripe and mature learning of a public man of the standing of ex-President Taft, whose ability and experience qualify him to occupy the honorable position of Kent Professor of Law of Yale University.

WHEN I WAS A BOY IN PALESTINE.—By Mousa J. Kaleel, Lothrop, Lee and Shepard Company, Boston, cloth, 60 cents. This book contains the reminiscence of a boy born and raised in Palestine, familiar with all the ancient landmarks in and around Jerusalem and with the traditions of that strange land. Having come to America and having educated himself, he now endeavors to use his education in making the people more familiar with his native country.

THE HOME NURSE.—By Doctor A. B. Lowry, Forbes and Company, 443 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, price $1. It gives helpful directions for the care of the sick in the home and tells how to cooperate with the physician in providing for the comfort and cure of invalids. Full directions for first aid to the injured are also given. Technical terms are avoided and a complete index makes it possible to refer quickly to the desired information. The writer is an authority on nursing, and lectures on the subject in one of the leading medical colleges. The instructions may therefore be depended upon as conforming with the best medical knowledge and practice.

THE BACK YARD FARMER.—By J. Willard Bolte, Forbes and Company, Chicago, 443 South Dearborn Street, price $1. The seventy-five chapters of this useful book give complete and reliable directions for the best cultivation of vegetables, fruit and flowers, the management of poultry and pets, the proper care of the lawn, vines and shade trees, and discuss everything pertaining to the outdoors of the suburban, village or country home. Some of the chapters are: "Making the back yard a garden spot," "Back yard dividends," "Making a garden productive," "Preparing the garden," "Why gardens fail," "Making the city flock pay," "Laying out flower beds." The author, who is a practical gardener and an authority on the subject, was for several years a member of the faculty of two state agricultural colleges, and possesses the ability to write in a clear and entertaining style.

TELL ME A STORY.—The familiar cry from the little folks of an evening is, "Tell us a story." In fact it is an old, old cry of humanity, oft heard in many places, now kept alive by children. This volume is intended to aid parents in their efforts to meet the demand for wholesome juvenile stories. It contains short stories, mostly about children and animals, written by various authors and edited by Sidney Trist. It is profusely illustrated and well printed. A good book for the little ones from four to eight or ten years of age. Published by The Animals' Guardian, 22a, Regent Street, S. W., London.

Yellowstone Park

unique among the recreation and wonder spots of the world, was set aside by the Government "For the Benefit and Enjoyment of the People" for all time, primarily because it contains by far the largest and most complete collection of natural phenomena in the entire world. There are geysers of every known variety, falls twice the height of Niagara, the largest lake at its altitude in the world (excepting one in Peru); while to see the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone is an epoch in anyone's life.

The Burlington offers you excellent service to any of the Yellowstone Park gateways.

Come in and let me give you a fine folder on Yellowstone Park and tell you how easily and cheaply you can get there.

THE FREEDOM OF CONSCIENCE.

Be ready to give a reason to every man for the hope that is in you.

This injunction of the apostle is pertinent to us of this latter dispensation, as much so as it was in the day when it was written. The first thought suggested when it is used is evidently that the injunction requires that every man who has faith in the gospel of the Son of God should be qualified to give an answer to an inquirer that would be satisfactory to such inquirer, would silence objection, or convince such inquirer of the soundness of the position occupied by him who makes the answer. A closer consideration of the injunction, however, will not warrant such conclusion, for the reason that so varied is human judgment that few if any men have such peculiar qualification. It is evident that the Master had not, neither had the apostles, though all of these, however, were not only able but willing to give answer to proper inquiries respecting their faiths and beliefs.

The history of the Reorganization shows clearly that (hitherto at least) we have always been willing to give a reason for the hope that is within us; but our experience has also taught us that we have neither been able nor qualified to answer every inquiry satisfactorily to the one who chose to make inquiry, although such answer as we make should be amply satisfactory to ourselves.

Predicated upon the presumption that every man must answer unto God for himself, not only for the faith that is in him, but also for the things entertained by him, and the words, wise, sensible, or otherwise, that he may use in presenting or defending his faith, it follows as a matter of necessity that the judgment of no man, no matter who he may be, can bind the human judgment of any other in such way as to produce commendation or condemnation to the one upon whom judgment may be passed.

Hence, however grievous it may be to any of us that differences of opinion may occur and actually do occur in our church administration, by which men hold widely different opinions to our own, we have no power to enforce the decisions of our judgment upon them. They must answer to God for the exercise of their own faculties, and in the words of the preacher, to give an account in the day of judgment, "For God will bring unto judgment every secret thing," and also, "For every idle word that man shall speak." We should strive to be just in our treatment of our fellow men, and in this as in all other things be governed by the rule, "As ye would that others should do unto you, do ye also unto them."

A NEW STATEMENT OF FAITH.

AN INTERNATIONAL PROPHETIC BIBLE CONFERENCE.

A great gathering, termed the International Prophetic Bible Conference, convened in the Bible Moody Institute at Chicago on the 24th day of February last, and continued in session three days. Three thousand people were in attendance, including six hundred and nine delegates from twenty-nine States and five provinces. The main theme of this conference was the second coming of Christ, and one paragraph of their report contains this significant statement: "A group of seven of these pastors came from Denver and explained the Denver plan, by which they mean their method of presenting the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, among the people of their vicinity."

A statement of faith was adopted by the conference, having been drafted by a committee consisting of such prominent men as Reverend Robert M. Russell, D. D., LL. D., president of Westminster College, Pennsylvania; Reverend Canon F. E. Howitt, M. A., Hamilton, Ontario; Reverend R. A. Torrey, D. D., Dean of the Bible Institute, Los Angeles, California; Mr. A. C. Gaebelein, editor of Our Hope, New York City; and Reverend L. M. Munhall, D. D., Germantown, Pennsylvania.

We reproduce this statement of faith, believing that it will be of intense interest to our people. Its appearance has been delayed until we could secure an authentic copy, which we have been able to obtain by courtesy of the Moody Bible Institute;

CONFERENCE TESTIMONY.

The brethren gathered for the International Conference on the Prophetic Scriptures heartily indorse the declaration made by the previous Prophetic Conferences; but also feel it their solemn duty, in view of the existing conditions in the professing church, to restate and reaffirm their unswerving belief in the following fundamental truths of our holy faith:

1. We believe that the Bible is the Word of Revelation of God and therefore our only authority.

2. We believe in the Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, that He is very God by whom and for whom "all things were created."

3. We believe in His virgin birth, that He was conceived by the Holy Spirit and is therefore God manifested in the flesh.

4. We believe in salvation by divine sacrifice, that the Son of God gave "His life a ransom for many" and bore "our sins in His own body on the tree."

5. We believe in His physical resurrection from the dead and in His bodily presence at the right hand of God as our Priest and Advocate.

6. We believe in the universality and heinousness of sin, and in salvation by Grace, "not of works lest any man should boast"; that Sonship with God is attained only by regeneration through the Holy Spirit and faith in Jesus Christ.

7. We believe in the Personality and Deity of the Holy Spirit, who came down upon earth on the day of Pentecost to indwell believers and to be the administrator in the church of the Lord Jesus Christ; who is also here to "reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment."

8. We believe in the great commission which our Lord has given to His church to evangelize the world, and that this evangelization is the great mission of the church.

9. We believe in the second, visible and imminent coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ to establish His world-wide Kingdom on the earth.

10. We believe in a Heaven of eternal bliss for the righteous, and in the conscious and eternal punishment of the wicked.

Furthermore, we exhort the people of God in all denominations to stand by these great truths, so much rejected in our days, and to contend earnestly for the faith which our God has, in His Holy Word, delivered unto the saints.

THE JEWS RETURN.

The return of the Jews to Jerusalem and Palestine is a theme near to the heart of every true Latter Day Saint. From the beginning of our work as a church and a people, the scriptural prophecies indicating this return have been interpreted literally. We have felt sure of the Jews' return and of the confirmation of our faith. Hence every indication of an awakening among them giving promise of the beginning of their return has been followed by us with interest and anticipation.

These movements toward the final and complete fulfillment of the Scriptures in this connection have become so pronounced as to come prominently before the world in many articles appearing in a variety of publications. One of especial interest was published in a recent issue of The Continent. Discussing this article and the Jews, the Literary Digest for May 9, says:

In 1885 there were said to be not more than thirty thousand Jews in the Holy Land. To-day, a sober estimate of their numbers places this population at one hundred and fifty thousand, and in the city of Jerusalem itself not fewer than eighty thousand. Much has been printed about Zionism from the point of view of the distressed Jew who seeks a place free from persecutions, but an article in The Continent (Chicago) by Professor Franklin S. Hoskins, of the Syrian Protestant College, gives what the editors of that journal regard as authentic information about the actual results in Palestine of the Zionist Society's work.

One of the most notable things is the changed attitude of Turkey. Ten years ago that country had passed stringent laws to keep the Jew from entering Syria; his European passport was placed on deposit at a port of entry and his substitute "red receipt" signified his freedom to live for two years only in Syria. No Ottoman could sell land to a Jew without dire penalties following. To-day, we are told, "these laws are all dead letters, and if the Jew on entering leaves his 'passport,' it is held only for a 'baksheesh,' while every official in this part of the Turkish Empire is only too ready to take the gifts that go with all transfers of the land."

Of the activities of the Jews in Palestine The Continent says:

Twenty-five years ago one heard little of the Hebrew tongue in Jerusalem's streets or elsewhere in the land, because the Jew found it much safer to conceal his identity under the language of the country from which he chanced to come. But to-day Hebrew is used everywhere—in the market, the banks, and most especially in thousands of schools. It is one of the cardinal aims of the Zionists again to make this the language of the ancient homeland, and it will not be long before other nationalities and religions will have to learn Hebrew or simply be shut out of the commercial centers of the city and country. Only recently a German society for helping the Jews attempted to keep the German language in its schools. One of the results was a riot, and the matter was settled in favor of those who clamored for the Hebrew.

Those who have visited Jerusalem in former years will remember the thousands of pitifully poor Jews of all nationalities who lived on alms in the city. It is said on good authority that not less than five million francs, one million dollars, is now coming into the land annually for their relief. But each year brings a better class of immigrants, and that means less and less need for alms. The fifty or sixty colonies lately established wear a much more hopeful appearance.

Those about Jaffa and in the Plains of Sharon show every appearance of wealth and prosperity. The orange trade of Jaffa has increased greatly and will soon be largely in the hands of Jews. Out of one million and five hundred thousand boxes handled this year at that port, at least one third, or five hundred thousand boxes, are from the colonies or in the control of the Jews. While other nationalities, and especially Christians of all lands, are busy trying to circumvent one another in appropriating legendary and sacred sites, the Jews are in a common-sense way buying up agricultural land. It is not possible to make accurate estimate of what has been done in this line, but it is a well-known fact that no tract, small or large, within a hundred miles of Jerusalem, east or west of the Jordan, can be offered for sale without attracting Jewish buyers. Colonies, societies, and banks exist for this very business, and thousands of all nationalities and religions are in the trade for gain. Every day brings some fresh surprises of phenomenal purchases. This is one of the most striking features of the present commercial life of Palestine. The colonies are encouraging this agricultural conquest of the land, and meanwhile industrial schools under the patronage of wealthy societies and individuals are attempting a revival of Jewish arts and handicrafts with most creditable results.

Concerning the activities of the nations, the churches, and of the hope of the Jews in Palestine The Continent says:

Austria and Germany are most powerful in the trade of Jerusalem and its vicinity; France in high politics and finance. Of the influences from within the Arab element is almost nil, the Christian element too busy with trifles, the Jewish seriously and powerfully predominant. Certain churches and enterprises represent one or another of the European nations, but rarely more than one. But the Jewish element, for one reason or another, draws power from all nations. Leaders of the Zionist movement differ sharply on many points; misunderstandings separate powerful interests; motives are attacked and as vigorously defended. But underneath all the outward clash of theories, the heart and soul of the Jewish race does unitedly hope for and expect to establish a great Jewish state which, sitting at the juncture of three continents, in the seat of their ancient glory, shall levy tribute from the great nations of the earth.

The Saints have waited long for the return of this ancient people to their former land. In this return we have the fulfillment of prophecy, the material confirmation of our faith, and a vindication of the restoration of latter days.

We rejoice not only in the promises to Jacob, but also in every promise concerning the closing scenes of earth; for we rest secure in the certainty that the God of Israel who now orders his deliverance will in the day of preparation usher in the final consummation of the hope of the ages—the triumph of the Saints.

CORRECTIONS.

In our report of the opening address made by President Smith at the late General Conference he is made to say, HERALD of April 15, page 346, first column, line 20, "As to what may transpire during these sessions, I may have some avidity of mind." This should read, "I may have some dubiety of mind."

Under the side heading United States and Mexico, in our Current Events Column, HERALD of May 6, page 420, line 7, the word international should have read internal.

CURRENT EVENTS.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

MEXICO AND UNITED STATES.—Following the reiteration of General Carranza that he would not consent to enter upon mediation only in connection with the incidents which brought about a controversy between United States and Mexico, the mediators notified him that they could not separate the incidents occurring at Tampico and elsewhere from the general subject of pacification in Mexico. The refusal on the part of Carranza to enter upon an attempt at mediation covering the entire field, together with his continuation of hostilities, has for the present practically eliminated the Constitutionalists from the mediation conference. Efforts are being made to induce Carranza to reconsider his decision and appoint representatives. It is said that despite the self-elimination of Carranza, and in case he finally fails to send representatives, the Constitutionalist interests will be fully considered. The mediators have announced May 18 as the date of opening the conference, to meet at Niagara Falls, Canada. It is understood that the work of this conference is advisory only. The Huerta government has appointed representatives. Renewed demands by Mexican Federalist outposts for the surrender of the pumping stations supplying Vera Cruz with water are said to have been followed by orders from the War Department authorizing General Funston to extend his lines about Vera Cruz as far as in his judgment it might be thought necessary. It is reported that the American lines will be at once extended and heavy fortifications thrown up.

MEXICAN WAR.—The bombardment of Tampico continues. The Constitutionalists have captured Acaponeta. Heavy fighting is reported at Mazatlan. A part of Villa's army is said to have advanced against Saltillo. A Constitutionalist movement against San Luis Potosi is expected. Zapata is said to have threatened an attack on the City of Mexico. Huerta seems to have no consistent or aggressive plans of defense. The financial embarrassment of the Huerta government continues. The railroads have largely discontinued operations, business has been practically suspended, and customs collections have been cut off.

THE COLORADO STRIKE.—Mr. Arthur M. Evans, special correspondent for the Chicago Record-Herald, is in the field of the Colorado strike trouble and reports daily to his paper. He interviews leading men on both sides of the controversy, men who are neutral, and state officials. He seems to endeavor to fairly represent all. According to his reports the situation is presented as follows: The operators say that the recent trouble began with an effort started last August by the United Mine Workers of America to organize the miners. The organizers demanded: (1) recognition of the union; (2) semimonthly pay; (3) eight hour day; (4) check-weighmen; (5) right of men to trade where they pleased. The operators hold that all except the first demand were already in effect, the second, third, and fourth being covered by law. They declined to recognize the union upon the grounds that such recognition would be unfair to those of their employees not holding membership in the union, since it would require them to join or quit work. The miners answered that while demands two, three, and four were covered by law, through control of county politics in the counties where the mines are operated, and partial control of the State, these laws, except in a few instances, were ignored and violated; and that through this same control miners were not allowed to hold membership in the union even though they desired to do so, and though said union was unrecognized. It is claimed that every effort was made to keep union organizers out of the district, even to the killing of such as refused to withdraw peaceably. With reference to the right of men to trade where they pleased the miners say that when attempting to do so men were discharged or given poor work, and that, anyhow, the operators paid them in script, which was not good only at the company stores. Regarding the late opposition to the state militia, intelligent men among those who are neutral see no essential difference between violating the law through control of the Government and violating the law by opposing the Government. Governor Ammons says: This controversy will be settled only through intervention that will bring New York and Indianapolis together. (New York is the home of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., and other operators; Indianapolis the headquarters of the Miners Union.) To put the whole situation in tabloid form, this is the way it may be reduced: The issue at stake is recognition of the union, the organization of the coal miners of the State by the United Mine Workers. All efforts to bring producers and labor leaders together have failed, although numerous efforts have been made. The ordinary peace officers were unable to preserve law and order, and the militia had to be sent into the field. The controversy, stripped of its superficial features, is just where it was seven months ago. Nothing but federal intervention and arbitration will bring a settlement. If it were not for eastern influences there has not been a time during this trouble when I could not have settled the difficulty myself. To arbitrate requires that New York and Indianapolis be brought together.

DISASTROUS EARTHQUAKE.—A disastrous earthquake occurred in the vicinity of Mount Etna, on the Island of Sicily, on May 8. The number of dead officially reported up to the evening of the 9th is said to have been one hundred and eighty-three, with about three hundred and fifty injured. Fire followed the shocks in many places.

CANAL TOLLS REPEAL.—The Committee on Inter-Oceanic Canals on April 30 reported without recommendations the Houst bill to repeal the toll exemption provision of the Panama Canal Act. A proposed amendment was reported separately as follows:

Provided, that neither the passage of this act, nor anything therein contained shall be construed or held as waiving, impairing, or affecting any treaty or other rights possessed by the United States.

It is expected that the Senate will pass this bill together with the amendment.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ALCOHOLICS ABOLISHED FROM NAVY.—We call attention to an article appearing in the General Interest department of this issue of the HERALD, discussing an order by Secretary of War Daniels, issued on recommendation of Surgeon General Braisted, to abolish the use of all alcoholic liquors from every ship and shore station of the United States Navy. In a day when alcoholics were thought to be necessary to unusual physical feats, to say nothing of social enjoyment, the church accepted as the word of God the statement, "Strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies." The experiences of leading men and nations have come to bear witness of this truth. So we no longer administer alcoholics under great physical strain, nor, in a growing number of instances, serve them to liven social functions, private and state.

ECHO FROM R. B. NEAL.—The Christian Standard for October 10, 1908, contained the following challenge and threat from the pen of R. B. Neal:

Gentlemen editors of the Liahona and the SAINTS' HERALD, and all other papers that have published the article, "A pious forgery," I, acting under legal advice, give due notice that if you do not withdraw the charge of forgery you made against me, voluntarily, in your papers, I'll force you to try to prove the charge in the courts of your State. Fair warning.

Nearly six years have elapsed since the publication of this threat, and we have never heard from Mr. Neal through our state courts. Mr. Neal is one of those who charge that the word of Joseph Smith could not be depended upon.

WHITE FLOUR VERSUS WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR.—In the Physical Culture Magazine for April, Mr. Harold Swanburg, member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, relates an interesting experiment made to determine the relative value of white flour and whole wheat flour. Two white mice were taken for the experiment. One was given nothing but white flour and water; the other nothing but whole wheat flour and water. The white flour mouse lost weight steadily and died at the end of thirty-four days. The whole wheat mouse gained and was in good physical condition at the end of sixty-four days. The whole wheat mouse then being put upon a diet of white flour began to lose weight and died at the end of forty-one days.

BUILDING FOR ETERNITY.

I will use for a lesson Matthew 7: 21-29, and for a theme or text I will select verses 24 and 25:

Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock.

"ROCK OF AGES."

We are all building this house—building for eternity, every day, by every act and deed and thought. There is a plan by which, if we follow closely, we may be as the wise man who built upon a rock. This wise man was a scientific builder, so let us build as does the scientific builder. Follow the wise man; he built upon a rock.

The scientific builder finds a solid place to lay his foundation. What is the rock we want to build upon? "That rock was Christ." (1 Corinthians 10: 4.) There is the rock: "the Rock of Ages"; the solid rock. This is Christ, and indeed he is a solid rock. If we build thereon, according to the plan, our house shall not fall.

THE FOUNDATION.

What is this plan? Who did Jesus liken to the wise man? Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them." In another place (Romans 2: 13) we find these words: "For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified." Now Christ is the rock on which we should build and the foundation is obedience to the law.

Look for a moment at the teachings of the Apostle Paul, (Hebrews 6: 1, 2):

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.

We have found that the foundation is obedience to the law, and Paul tells us that the foundation consists of six principles, to wit: First, repentance; second, faith; third, baptisms; fourth, laying on hands; fifth, resurrection of the dead; sixth, eternal judgment. These are the first six principles of the doctrine of Christ. Paul said (writing to those who had obeyed them), "Let us go on unto perfection, not laying again the foundation"; not to forget those principles, but to first obey them, and then, with the foundation laid, go on and build upon it. We are to come to this perfection by studying to gain for ourselves the same perfection that was made manifest in the life of Jesus.

LAYING ON OF HANDS.

Of the different parts of our foundation, the first three, repentance, faith, and baptism, we now understand as they were considered under the previous study on baptism. But what about the fourth, laying on of hands? What is the purpose of this ordinance? Search the Scriptures and see!

ORDINATION.

The ordinance of laying on of hands is for ordination, for confirmation or bestowal of the Holy Ghost, for healing the sick, and for blessing. To-day, in most every church, when one is ordained and sent out to preach; those who ordain him lay their hands upon him to ordain him.

It was written away back in the time of Moses (Numbers 8: 10): "And thou shalt bring Levites before the Lord; and the children of Israel shall put their hands upon the Levites." And in Numbers 27: 18-20 we find that God commanded Moses to lay his hand upon Joshua, which Moses did, to ordain him.

Now we come to the New Testament. Paul was ordained with Barnabas at Antioch, by the laying on of hands, and was sent away to preach. (Acts 13: 1-3.) At one time seven men were ordained by the laying on of hands; among them the martyr Stephen. (Acts 6: 5, 6.) In Paul's first letter to Timothy (4: 14) he admonished Timothy to make use of the gift that was in him, the gift that was given by prophecy with the laying on of hands. This is the first use for the laying on of hands.

CONFIRMATION.

Secondly, we have the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Let us follow the apostles and see if they laid on hands for that purpose. Acts 8: 14-19 shows that it was in this manner that the Samaritans received the Holy Ghost. They had received the word of God and had followed the teachings of Christ. They had been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. The apostles at Jerusalem heard of this and sent Peter and John to them. Peter and John prayed that the Holy Ghost might come upon them; and then they, Peter and John, laid their hands upon them, and they received the gift of the Holy Ghost.

The question comes, Was it the prayer or the laying on of hands that brought the gift? Verses 18 and 19 explain: Simon was a wicked man, who worked on the fears of the people, claiming to be a great one, and doing many wonderful things by false methods, and was looked upon by the people as one who enjoyed the power of God. This man saw that the Holy Ghost was given through the laying on of hands. He came to the apostles and offered them money and asked for the power, that on whomsoever he might lay his hands, they should receive the Holy Ghost; but the apostles denied him, and called him and his money accursed. Assuredly the gift of the Holy Ghost would not have accompanied the laying on of the apostles' hands without the prayer. The gift was given through the laying on of hands in answer to prayer.

The Ephesians received the Holy Ghost in the same way. (Acts 19: 1-7.) Paul came to Ephesus, and finding certain disciples, asked them if they had received the Holy Ghost since they believed; but they did not even know there was any Holy Ghost. Paul asked them unto what they were baptized, and they told him, Unto John's baptism. Then Paul told them that John indeed baptized unto repentance, saying to believe on him that should come after him, that is Jesus Christ. When they heard this they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when they had been baptized according to Christ's words, Paul then laid his hands upon them, and they spake with tongues and prophesied.

Some writers have written on the subject as follows:

Jenks in his Comprehensive Commentary gives notes by Scott on Acts 8: 17 as follows:

The rite of confirmation, as practiced by many Christian churches, has often been and still is spoken of as a continuation of the apostolical laying on of hands for the confirmation of new converts by the Holy Ghost thus given them.

In another note upon the same text, quoted by Jenks, it is said:

The apostles seem to have laid down a rule, that after being baptized the proselytes should have the laying on of hands, accompanied by prayer, in order to their receiving the gift of the Holy Spirit.

Tertullian, who wrote in the latter part of the second century, says:

After baptism succeeds the laying on of hands, with prayer, calling for the Holy Ghost.

Cyprian, a martyr, and a writer of the third century, says:

Our practice is that those who have been baptized in the church should be presented, that by prayer and imposition of hands they may receive the Holy Ghost.

There are many more writers who say the same, but this is enough to show the point, that the laying on of hands was for confirmation or bestowal of the gift of the Holy Ghost.

HEALING.

We find that Jesus and the apostles laid their hands on the sick and healed them. But the world now says that this is not for us to-day, that it ceased when the apostles died. This, of course, means the twelve, or rather the eleven at Pentecost, and the one selected to fill the place of Judas Iscariot, Matthias. Paul was not even a Christian until long after that, and yet we have more records of Paul's laying on hands for this purpose than we have of any of the other apostles. As the first twelve died or were given a different mission, others were placed in their stead to always keep this quorum of twelve filled.

If the claim were true that these healings were not for us to-day, does it not make God a respecter of persons? And the Bible says that God is no respecter of persons.

Let us see how long these things are to continue. Peter said (Acts 2: 39): "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

Peter was speaking to the people of that day, and he said, "To all that are afar off." Were not the people of all the ages since then "afar off"? And again he says, "Even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Does not God call people to him to-day? Yes! Then the promise is unto us to-day.

Jesus, after he had risen, appeared to the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them for their unbelief. Then he commanded them to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He told them that those who believed and were baptized should be saved, but that those who did not believe should be damned. He told them that these signs should follow them that believe. In his name shall they cast out devils; they shall take up serpents; if they drank any deadly thing it would not hurt them; they shall lay their hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

Jesus said that these signs should follow them that believe. He made no distinction between the people of that day and the people of to-day. If he had, would not he have respected the people of that day more than the people of to-day? For would not the people of that day have received greater blessings than the people of to-day? I thank God that Jesus made no such distinction, but said that these signs shall follow them that believe, of all ages and times, meaning that believers to-day, as well as the believers then, should receive those blessings. Jesus said that believers would be able to heal the sick by the laying on of hands, and the New Testament is full of such happenings.

Jesus himself laid on hands to heal. Mark 8: 23-25, Jesus laid his hands on the blind man and healed him; Luke 4: 40, they brought many people with divers diseases and Jesus "laid his hands on every one of them" and healed them.

The apostles also laid on hands to heal. Paul laid hands on Publius and healed him. (Acts 28: 8.) Many miracles were done by the hands of Paul. (Acts 19: 11.) We could show many more such passages, but time and space do not permit. This is enough to show the usage of the ordinance.

BLESSING CHILDREN.

The fourth use of the ordinance of laying on of hands is for the blessing of children. We can not find a single instance where Jesus or the apostles baptized children, but we can find instances where Jesus took the children in his arms and blessed them by laying his hands upon them. (Matthew 19: 13-15; Mark 10: 13-16.)

But some will say, It was Jesus who did that. What was Jesus here on earth for? He was here as our exemplar. He did nothing in his life that he did not intend his disciples to likewise do. We are told to follow our blessed exemplar, Jesus Christ. Now, can we follow him in part only, and follow him in truth? No! We must follow him in all things. Then we are to do all things as he did them.

Now we have found that the fourth principle, the laying on of hands, is for the fourfold purpose of ordination, confirmation, or bestowal of the Holy Ghost, healing the sick, and for blessing.

The fifth principle, resurrection of the dead, and the sixth principle, eternal judgment, are lengthy, and it would be better not to consider these subjects at this time. But suffice it to say that all of these six principles are principles of obedience, the first four of which should be obeyed in this life, the last two to be obeyed after death, by every creature of mankind.

A TIME TO BUILD.

Now we have our foundation in the first six principles of the doctrine of Jesus Christ. After we have laid our foundation we are not to stop building, but are to go on to perfection, building upon the foundation. A scientific builder when he has laid his foundation does not stop building, but goes on and builds upon the foundation with good, substantial material. Let us then follow the scientific builder, and also take the advice of Paul to go on and build upward and complete our temple.

As we build our temple we should remember that we can build but once, for we know that "it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." We are given material to build with once. We have one life, and Jesus died once for our sins, to give us the material for our foundation. If we build once and let the temple grow corrupt or be destroyed, it is putting Jesus Christ to an open shame, for it would intimate that the material given was not good. This can not be, for he gives the good and perfect gifts. If we stop building before the temple is complete, or until our lives are over, it is hard to start building again, and the longer before one starts, the harder it is to resume, until if we wait too long, it is well nigh impossible to start again, and while one waits the work done grows corrupt and before long has rotted away. And so there is no building for eternity.

BUILDING MATERIAL.

As we are to keep on building, let us see what more material we may find to build with.

In 2 Peter 1: 5-7, we are told:

And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity.

And verse eight:

For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

So Peter says virtue is the first to add to faith, or to build upward from the foundation. That is good material. We must be found virtuous, live a good life (the Christ life), and do the will of God. What greater or more worthy material could we wish than this? It covers a great scope, and could be taken as the subject of a separate study, as indeed could all of these materials, but as we are to touch upon all, we will treat each one briefly.

The next material we come to consider is knowledge, knowledge of the truth. This is also important material. We are to "work out" our own salvation, "with fear and trembling." One very important way in which we must do this is to do the will of God, and, whatever that may be, how can we do his will if we do not know it? If it be his will that we should lead others into the kingdom, how can we do so unless we ourselves know to what we desire to lead them? Or how can we impart the truth of the gospel of Christ to one who knows it not, if we have no knowledge of it? We must, in order to lead a soul into the kingdom of God, be able to impart to that soul the truth; and to lead it in the right way. This is impossible if we do not have for ourselves a complete knowledge of these things. Then, this material is also necessary to our own right living before God.

Knowledge of the truth would include the knowledge of God's way of everyday living. One must not only have this knowledge, but must use it. If he does not, his temple will be corrupt, and in time the whole will be destroyed.

Temperance, Peter says, is next. Other worthy material. Temperance is commonly used in connection with abstaining from strong drink, but this is only one small part. We should use temperance in daily eating and drinking; be careful not to eat or drink too much, and use wholesome food, shunning those things that are injurious or harmful, or even unnecessary. Temperance in speech is a good thing—avoiding vain words, such as slang, boasting, telling bad tales, untimely jesting, or loud and boisterous laughing and talking at any time. So much for temperance.

Patience, Peter says, is the next material. A great many people are very impatient with both man and God. A person may make a prayer to God, and then think there is no answer, no fulfillment, not waiting for God to answer or fulfill—in impatience deny his power. If such person had faith the prayer would be answered, and, if it were the will of God, fulfilled.

If one fails at his task and we grow impatient with him it is possible that he never will succeed; but, on the other hand, if we are patient he will also have patience and try again. We may grow impatient with ourselves, and by doing so lose much that we have gained, while had we been patient we would not have lost so much at least, and the probabilities are that we would have gained. So let us be patient, for patience is good, worthy material.

The next material, according to Peter, is godliness or plain and simple "goodliness," living a godly life, doing as we are told, by the Father, keeping his commandments. In looking through the Bible, we find that godliness or goodliness means the adding of the following qualities: to be peaceable and quiet; to be contented and loving; to be meek; to be truthful; to seek to gain knowledge; to be gentle and long-suffering, good and kind. The life having these qualities is surely a life worth living in the sight of both man and God—a life worthy of the reward of life eternal, which reward God alone can give. What a beautiful life that would be, having these excellent qualities and virtues.

Peter names brotherly kindness as the next material. That is all the name implies. Your brothers are not only those in church fellowship with you or your relatives in the flesh, but everybody, everywhere. Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you is the rule of brotherly kindness. This rule, the golden rule, is one to be admired, and one we find prominent in the life of Jesus the Christ. This is a virtue, or material that we should all try to possess and to use.

The next and last material to use in this building is charity. While this is given last, it is by no means least, but rather the greatest, for it includes all, and the keeping of all, the beautifying of the temple. When a building is constructed there is much yet to do to complete it. This is the work of charity—to beautify and to preserve. It beautifies and at the same time preserves and guards against decay. Without charity our building will decay and go to ruin.

THE GREATEST OF ALL.

Charity is a wonderful, beautiful light, not artificial but real, the light of our temple. When lit with charity there is no darkness. Without charity our temple would be hardly habitable, a place of discomfort, ugliness and darkness, a place where God and Jesus would hardly feel justified in entering to dwell. With charity it will be a place of delightful comfort, where God and Jesus would be glad to sit and sup with us.

Is charity simply to help the poor? No! It is not, although that is a part of charity,—a very small part. What then is charity? "Charity is the pure love of God undefiled." How can we get an idea of this, the greatest of all materials, and how to use it? Please turn with me to Matthew 22: 37-40, and read there the commandment that Jesus said was the greatest. We can by following that one commandment obtain this beautiful charity.

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

If a man keep these two (which is charity or the pure love of God undefiled) he must keep all, for they are all contained in the two.

Let us review the ten commandments and see if this is not true.

The first commandment: Thou shalt have no other gods before me.

If a man love God with all his heart, soul, and mind, he will love but one God. Again, no man can have "the pure love of God" in his heart and have any other god before him. No man can serve both God and mammon.

The second commandment: Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven images, nor bow thyself down to worship them.

When the people of Israel and Judah became idol-worshippers, and went after gods that were graven images, and bowed themselves down to worship them, they did not have the love of God. They forsook all righteousness and came under condemnation.

The third commandment: Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.

Can any man love God with all his heart, soul, and mind, and dishonor him or dishonor his name? It is a great dishonor to use anything in vain, so it is dishonoring to God to use his name in vain. Love does not, nor can not dishonor.

The fourth commandment: Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy.

If a man love God, surely he will do all in his power to keep his day holy. For not to keep that day holy is to dishonor that day, and to dishonor that day, God's day, is to dishonor God.

The fifth commandment: Honor thy father and thy mother.

God placed children in the care of their fathers and mothers, and if they do not honor those in whose care they have been placed they do not honor him who placed them there. If they do not honor God, they do not love him.

The sixth commandment: Thou shalt not kill.

To kill is to love not God or man. To kill is to honor not God nor to love one's fellow men, and so is not charity.

The seventh commandment: Thou shalt not commit adultery.

What man, with the pure love of God in his heart, one who loves his neighbor as himself, could commit the degrading crime of adultery, a crime that comes of hate, or a lust so strong, wicked and vile, that it will even betray with a kiss,—hate of the worst kind. Therefore, the man who commits adultery is guilty of a double sin: first commits the crime of adultery; second, the sin of hypocrisy or hate, and has no charity even though he spends millions on the poor.

The eighth commandment: Thou shalt not steal.

It is surely not love that prompts a man to steal that which belongs to another.

The ninth commandment: Thou shalt not bear false witness.

To bear false witness against your neighbor, to lie about him, would in all probability do him hurt, and that you could not do if you love your neighbor as you do yourself. Anyone who lies in act, word, or deed, is breaking the ninth commandment, and also one of the two great ones, and has not charity.

The tenth commandment: Thou shalt not covet.

A man having the peace and love of God and his brethren in his heart would not covet what belonged to his brother; for to do so would be to break one of God's laws, and no man, loving God, breaks his law. Again, to covet his neighbor's property would be to wish his neighbor an ill, for if his neighbor had not that which he has, the neighbor would be the poorer.

In every case we find that if we keep the two great commandments we also keep the ten, and if we truly keep the ten the two are kept already. In short, the material named, charity, or being charitable in every sense of the word, is the greatest of all the materials we have looked upon.

So we are building our temple every day, every act of our lives is a portion of material of some kind to be used. It behooves each one to seek for the best material and build good, strong, and substantially; strive to build perfectly lest the temple topple over and be destroyed, burying you in the debris and destruction.

To sum up the whole, build on the solid rock, which rock is Christ, using for a foundation the principles of the doctrine of Jesus Christ, which we find enumerated in Hebrews 6: 1, 2, and which are as follows: First, faith toward God; second, repentance from dead works; third, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, laying on of hands by those called of God according to his word and ordained by him, thereby having the authority so to do, for the reception of the Holy Ghost; fifth, work and building upon the foundation, work out our own salvation "with fear and trembling," seeking a reward at the end when our souls shall be resurrected, when comes the eternal judgment of God.

LORD KELVIN'S SPEECH.

SCIENCE POSITIVELY AFFIRMS CREATIVE POWER.

On May 1, 1903, Reverend Professor G. Henslow, M. A., F. L. S., F. G. S., delivered an address on "Present-day rationalism with an examination of Darwinism." Lord Kelvin, the celebrated British scientist, followed Professor Henslow with comments, which are given as reported in the London Times, as follows:

I am in thorough sympathy with Professor Henslow in the fundamentals of his lecture; but I can not admit that, with regard to the origin of life, science neither affirms nor denies creative power. Science positively affirms creative power. It is not in dead matter that we live and move and have our being, but in the creating and directing power which science compels us to accept as an article of belief. We can not escape from that conclusion, when we study the physics and dynamics of living and dead matter all around. Modern biologists are coming, I believe, once more to a firm acceptance of something beyond mere gravitational, chemical, and physical forces; and that unknown thing is a vital principle. We have an unknown object put before us in science. In thinking of that object we are all agnostics. We only know God in his works, but we are absolutely forced by science to believe with perfect confidence in a directive power—in an influence other than physical, or dynamical, or electrical forces.

Cicero, by some supposed to have been editor of Lucretius, denied that men and plants and animals could come into existence by a fortuitous concourse of atoms. There is nothing between absolute scientific belief in a creative power and the acceptance of the theory of a fortuitous concourse of atoms. Just think of a number of atoms falling together of their own accord, and making a crystal, a sprig of moss, a microbe, a living animal. Cicero's expression, "fortuitous concourse of atoms," is not wholly inappropriate for the growth of a crystal. But modern scientific men are wholly in agreement with him in condemning it as utterly absurd in respect to the coming into existence, or the growth, or the continuation of molecular combinations presented in the bodies of living things. Here scientific thought is compelled to accept the idea of creative power. Forty years ago I asked Liebig, walking somewhere in the country, if he believed that the grass and flowers that we saw around us grew by mere chemical forces. He answered, "No; no more than I could believe that a book of botany describing them could grow by mere chemical forces." Every action of human free will is a miracle to physical and chemical and mathematical science.

I admire the healthy, breezy atmosphere of free thought throughout Professor Henslow's lecture. Do not be afraid of being free thinkers. If you think strongly enough you will be forced by science to the belief in God, which is the foundation of all religion. You will find science not antagonistic but helpful to religion.

The foregoing is taken from a work, Christian Apologetics, "A series of addresses delivered before the Christian Association of University College, London." Lord Kelvin is regarded as "The greatest man of science of the present day"—the High Priest of the Temple of Science. His statement is valuable and deeply significant. In connection with the late address of Sir Oliver Lodge, in which he affirmed the doctrine of "Continuity of life," or immortality, based upon the deductions of science, nothing is left for the agnostic or the atheist to affirm as a basis for negation and unbelief.

THE REFORMATION IN GERMANY.

(Read by A. H. Mills, before First Quorum of Priests, Independence, Missouri.)

If asked to name the most important period of history, so far as concerns the development of religious liberty, the student is compelled to acclaim that period known as the German Reformation. It is true that there have been other reformations, the importance of which have been world-wide and far-reaching; but the reforms that had their inception and rise in the Fatherland are so indissolubly linked with the literature, religion, education, political economy and prosperity of all Europe, that they constitute in fact the most important of all historical changes.

Other reformations had preceded the German reforms: the movement headed by Savonarola in Italy; Huss in Bohemia; Wycliffe in England; and in their but partly successful character they were largely preparatory to the all-important change that was to affect not only the destiny of Germany, but also that of Switzerland, France, Holland, Sweden, England and Scotland. Nor is its influence yet ceased, and we who have gathered here to-night are enjoying the fruition of its seedtime.

MARTIN LUTHER.

Martin Luther, the chief and controlling spirit of this wondrously successful epoch of reform, was born November 10, 1483,—the child of poverty. Under obstacles not easily understood now, he secured a liberal education, entering the University of Erfurt at the age of eighteen. Religious and devout by nature, he instinctively chose a life of piety, and soon after entered the ranks of the Augustinian order of monks. Here, however, instead of the expected serenity and peace of mind, he experienced unrest and doubt. He was advised by a priest to read the Scriptures, but this only served to increase his discontent.

THE SALE OF INDULGENCES.

It was at this time that the papal treasury of Leo X was sorely in need of funds. This voluptuous potentate had not only squandered the vast revenues of the church in pleasure and pomp, as any worldly monarch would have done, but he wanted very much to complete the crowning work of his reign; a monument that would above all others reflect the papal magnificence—Saint Peter's Church at Rome. But Catholic Christendom was tired of the heavy, everlasting drain of money to Rome, so the resourceful Leo revived a custom of the Dark Ages—he would sell indulgences for sin; and soon his agents were going up and down through the land, each with a large stock of this merchandise, seeking buyers for their wares.

The papal agent for Saxony was a coarse, noisy Dominican by the name of Tetzl. In wrathful indignation Luther preached against him and his practices, attacking the entire fabric of penance and absolution, as well as the abominable traffic in indulgences. His agitation reached the ears of Leo, who sent one of the most learned men of the church to meet and refute his teachings. The schools of the empire then took up the controversy, a great debate was held between Luther and the papal emissary, Doctor Eck, that attracted the attention of the entire nation. The whole array of priestcraft and scholasticism was turned against Luther, but the people were with him, and with the weapons of truth he was invincible.

ROMANISM DEFIED.

Luther finally severed himself from Rome and vigorously assailed her most time-honored institutions. He broke up and disbanded the array of convents and monasteries. In place of the doleful chants of the Middle Ages, he prepared hymns for the people themselves, some of which are in use at this day. He translated the Bible into the German tongue, and did it so well that it is to-day the accepted version among the Teutonic races. Finally as a seeming addition of "insult to injury" he openly married Catherine Bora, a former nun.

At last Luther was summoned by imperial command of Charles V to the diet of the empire at Worms. Here he must go, not knowing what might be the outcome, even though his safe return was guaranteed by the civil authorities. To their demands that he recant all his teachings he said: "Unless you refute me by the Scriptures I will recant nothing." The day was won and the reformation continued.

FRUITS OF THE STRUGGLE.

The fruits of Luther's struggle were an increase of religious liberty, the supreme authority of the Scriptures, and the right of private judgment. Its effect on the Roman Church was startling. No longer could she exercise her unlimited despotism and persecution and drive to martyrdom those who chose to differ with her.

Luther lived a life of varied and aggressive character and died in 1546. His legacy to mankind is the priceless gift of religious freedom.

Of General Interest

THE CHURCH AT PANAMA EXPOSITION.

[Noah C. Gause, member of the Committee of One Hundred, furnishes the press the following with reference to the work of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America at the coming Panama-Pacific International Exposition.—EDITORS.]

In the early stages of civilization fairs and festivals were held for the purpose of the exchange of commodities. Later they were held for the purpose of the display of products. But in the processes of evolution they have culminated in the modern international exposition where the object has been enlarged from the mere exchange or display of world commodities to the exchange of ideas and the presentation of ideals.

In view of this fact the exposition authorities, recognizing the inestimable service rendered by the constructive religious forces of the world, invite the churches to participate by holding great meetings and maintaining an exhibit. That this work might be adequately performed a local committee invited the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America to create a Committee of One Hundred for this purpose. With this in view, Doctor Shailer Mathews of Chicago, president of the federal council, and the executive secretary, Doctor Charles S. MacFarland of New York, visited San Francisco.

WORK OF COMMITTEE.

The committee, representing many of the leading churchmen of the world, is organized, and the opportunity lies before them and the Protestant religious forces of the world. Bishop Edwin H. Hughes is chairman of the Committee of One Hundred. Mr. J. E. White, a prominent attorney of San Francisco, is secretary. The committee is represented by an exposition executive secretary in the person of the Reverend Doctor H. H. Bell. . . .

The work to which this committee is dedicating its service is one of great importance to universal Christian civilization, and promises to be far-reaching in its influence. In the main, the plan of the work is threefold—religious activities, religious exhibits, and the holding of religious conventions. Briefly, religious activities will involve a carefully organized campaign of evangelism of a well-balanced, effective character. This will include social service, platform meetings, specialized forms of work for boys and girls, and for men and women. There will be classes and meetings for immigrants and for especially unreached portions of the community with generous and systematic distribution of the Scriptures. For this work volunteer workers will be organized, trained and directed into channels of the greatest possible effective service. Thus the evangelical churches of the world will concentrate their thought, prayer, and organized effort with the most improved methods at one given point, and by so doing demonstrate the highest efficiency to which the churches have attained.

COORDINATE WORK.

The coordinate work of various religious and social organizations under the direction of the "Committee of One Hundred" during the nine and one half months the Exposition will be open will be notable for their thoroughness and efficiency. Such organizations as the Women's Temperance Union, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Young Men's Christian Association, the World's Congress of Young People's Societies, as well as the Woman's Board of the Exposition are planning large things for practical service. For example, the Young Women's Christian Association will expend fifty thousand dollars in carrying on the work of the Travelers Aid. This will be supplemented by other organizations doing similar work, and all will be coordinated into unified action.

Every hotel and rooming house in San Francisco and around the bay is being investigated and recorded for future consideration in connection with the work. Railway trains and steamboats will be met and girls and women, traveling alone, will be directed to places of repute and safety. This will form a substantial basis for future work on the Pacific Coast in the interest of the increasing number of immigrants who will migrate to the Pacific Coast when the Panama Canal is thrown open to the commerce and travel of the world. It requires no flight of the imagination to become possessed of a vision of the value of this, not only in immediate result, but in the creation of an idea toward which we may strive and from which we may extract working principles for constructive, daily work in all lands.

RELIGIOUS EXHIBITS.

Through the religious exhibits, a vast Christian laboratory will be maintained in a building which it is hoped will be erected upon the grounds and known as Assembly Hall, to cost not less than two hundred thousand dollars. Here will be presented the historical development of Protestant churches throughout the world, culminating in the present-day achievements. This will be done by denominational exhibits, showing church distribution and the character of church activity, such as Sunday schools, young people's societies, Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Association, men's and women's organizations, lecture courses, study classes, etc.

The method of extending the kingdom of Christ through world agencies such as the educational societies and missionary societies will be fully demonstrated. The social service feature that has so marked the character of the Federal Council will be especially presented in concrete form, showing what the church has and may achieve along the line of helping to solve the social problems. This will include the relation of the church to organized labor, employment bureaus, the industrial problem and international peace. There will be maintained exhibits of the agencies for supplying the needs of the churches, training schools for the ministry, and for other church work and for all forms of social service, publications agencies and societies which issue Bibles, Sunday school material and general religious literature.

It is appropriate that the Federal Council should make an exhibit of the achievement along the lines of church federation. This will form a part of the general exhibit. It will include a review of interdenominational movements and tendencies in the development of the churches, including federations of churches, federations of organizations for doing the missionary and reform work of the churches and the numerous organizations Christian in spirit that are cooperating in world betterment.

RELIGIOUS CONVENTIONS.

Perhaps that which is most important of all and may prove more far-reaching in its effects will be the religious conventions. Great gatherings of delegated bodies will be held. Where the gatherings are too large for Assembly Hall on the Exposition site they will be held in the great auditorium down town which will seat twelve thousand people. There will be held national and international, denominational and interdenominational meetings that will reflect the religious thought of the world. The committee is planning a general conference of all Protestant Christians from all parts of the world to consider the program of the church of to-day. This will mark a new era of world vision, for thus the exposition will become a universal parliament for the exchange of thought in religious philosophy, and for the purpose of presenting and comparing the practical results of religious activity.

In connection with this Committee of One Hundred another committee of like size of the Woman's Board, some of whose leading members are members of the Committee of One Hundred, are directing a phase of the missionary interests of the churches. It is planned to present two great allegories to the public in the new auditorium at the civic center. The first will be at the close of the first week devoted to home missions and will be a vivid portrayal of the early history, development and present-day fruition of the missionary movement in America. This will make the early pioneer missionary activities live again. It will reveal the hardships and privations, the sacrifice and achievements of our pioneer apostles of the faith. It will present in living form the summit of their achievements in the mighty harvest of to-day. This will be a great lesson, presented in sufficiently dramatic form to leave a profound impression upon the audience gathered from all parts of the world.

Likewise there will be a great allegory presented in the same building at the close of the second week of the congress dramatizing the effective missionary movement among men throughout the world. Several hundreds of people will take part in this pageant, and the purpose of it will be to show the building of faith, hope and love into the structure of universal Christian civilization.

There is every indication that the Christian activities and exhibits in connection with the Panama-Pacific International Exposition will represent the most comprehensive and universal manifestation that has ever been held at a given time. It is prophetic of a new era in the onward march of civilization. . . .

LIQUOR OUSTED FROM NAVY.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Absolute prohibition will prevail in the United States Navy after July 1. Secretary Daniels to-night made public a sweeping order, which not only will abolish traditional "wine mess" of the officers, but will bar all alcoholic liquors from every ship and shore station of the navy.

This order, constituting one of the most notable victories ever won by the prohibition forces, was issued upon the recommendation of Surgeon General Braisted. It was brief and to the point.

The use or introduction for drinking purposes of alcoholic liquors on board any naval vessel or within any navy yard or station is strictly prohibited, and commanding officers will be held directly responsible for the enforcement of this order.

In a statement issued to-night, Secretary Daniels said:

I am in hearty agreement with the views expressed by the surgeon general in his paper accompanying the recommendation. There should not be on shipboard, with reference to intoxicants, one rule for officers and another and a different rule for the enlisted personnel.

The saddest hour in my official life is when an officer or enlisted man must be punished for intoxication. During the past week it has been my painful duty to approve a court-martial for dismissal from the service of an officer for intoxication. He told me that he had never tasted intoxicating drink until he did so in the wine mess on his cruise. Others who have been disciplined for drinking to excess have made similar statements to me.

Officers are now commissioned at the early age of twenty-two years. Has the Government the right to permit this temptation which too often destroys the highest usefulness of young officers? I think not. If there is one profession more than any other that calls for a clear head and a steady hand it is the naval profession. Experience has shown the wisdom of having no intoxicants on our ships for the young men who enlist.—The New Republic, April 10, 1914.

THE WHALE.

Roy Chapman Andrews of New York, in writing the National Geographic Society, Washington, District of Columbia, furnishes information regarding the whale that will be of interest to many. He says that large portions of the flesh of the whale are palatable and healthful, as much sometimes as eighty thousand pounds of the animal, and that only in Japan is the flesh of the whale eaten. Mr. Andrews predicts that the present world-wide hunt for the whale for commercial purposes will result in its extinction within a few decades. He writes further as follows:

Few people realize that the blue, or sulphur bottom whale, found in all our oceans is not only the largest animal that lives to-day, but is also, so far as is now known, the largest animal that has ever existed on the earth or in its waters. Specimens have been measured which reach a length of eighty-seven feet and in all probability weighed as much as seventy-five tons. Although the mouth is enormous, large enough in fact to permit ten or twelve men to stand upright in it, the throat measures only nine inches in diameter. These animals, like most of the whale-bone whales, usually feed on minute crustaceans, a shrimp about three-quarters of an inch long. They probably never eat fish of any kind if other food is to be had, and of the many stomachs I have examined, never once could anything but the little red crustaceans be found. From the stomach of one blue whale at Vancouver Island five barrels of shrimp were taken, and it was by no means full.

Probably no cetacean has such wonderful strength as have the blue whales. When I saw a blue whale with a harpoon between the shoulders drag a ship, with engines at full speed astern, through the water almost as though it had been a rowboat, I began to listen to the stories of their incredible strength with more respect. The finback, closely related to the blue whale, has been called the "greyhound of the sea," for its long, slender body is built on the lines of the racing yacht and the animal can equal the speed of the fastest steamship.

All the large whales show great affection for their young, and the cows and calves will seldom leave each other when pursued by a ship. I remember at one time in Alaska we sighted a female finback with a young one about thirty feet long beside her. As the old whale rose to spout, the gunner fired, killing her almost instantly. The calf, although badly frightened, continued to swim in a circle about the ship, and finally, when its dead mother had been hoisted to the surface, the little fellow came alongside so close that I could have struck him with a stone. During the time that the carcass was being inflated and the gun reloaded, the calf was constantly within a few fathoms of the ship, swimming around and around, sometimes rubbing itself against the body of its dead mother. Finally a harpoon was sent crashing into its side, and it sank without a struggle.

In the upper portion of the head of the sperm whale is an immense oiling tank, in which the valuable "spermaceti" is found in a liquid condition and from which it may be dipped with a bucket when an incision is made. From a sperm whale sixty feet in length, which was sent from Japan, twenty barrels of spermaceti were taken out of the "case" and the surrounding fat. The sperm whale is the animal which yields ambergris, the valuable substance used so extensively in the manufacture of our best perfumes.

THE CHURCHES AND PEACE.

Assuredly the churches of the great civilized and industrial nations, and especially of the United States, need no special urging and no financial inducements to become active factors in the peace and arbitration movement. Peace and good will is their gospel and their raison d'être. Mr. Carnegie understands this perfectly well, as do the trustees of the new Church Peace Union.

But Mr. Carnegie also knows that the churches are not too plentifully supplied with the sinews of war on war. His $2,000,000 fund is welcome because it will enable the churches to carry on a more active, more systematic and more general propaganda. It will enable them to print and circulate the right sort of literature; it will enable them to hold national and international conferences, to take a hand at the right time and in the right way in any timely enterprise in behalf of arbitration, further humanization of war, protection of private property at sea and so on. The trustees have made an admirable beginning in their appeal to the nations, which is as practical as it is sound and noble. Mr. Carnegie's new investment will bring society rich returns, judging by the enthusiasm of the eminent religious leaders who have accepted positions on the board of the foundation.—Chicago Record-Herald, February 12, 1914.

A little library, growing larger every year, is an honorable part of a man's history. It is a man's duty to have books. A library is not a luxury, but one of the necessities of life.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

What Some Women Are Doing.

In a department entitled, Greater Mothers of the Child World, the Mother's Magazine tells us briefly what some of the world's noble women are doing for other mothers and their children and for children who have not mothers, or, having mothers, still have need of love. We use our space in this issue to notice the good work done by some of these unselfish workers who toil in the interests of the young.

The Big Sisters of New York.

A defiant girl, scarcely more than a child, in torn, soiled dress, stood before the judge in the Children's Court. She had been there before, and the judge was looking her over with troubled eyes as he debated what to do with her. To send her home would only mean her reappearance in court in time, and to send her to a reformatory would mean other things he could not contemplate, and so he was troubled.

It was at this juncture that a woman in rich dress came forward, asking that the girl be given to her, and promising to be responsible for her.

The woman was Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt. She had been often in the Children's Court, listening with a heart of pity to the stories of the children brought there. And she had gone quietly to work to do what she could to counteract the great tide of evil that sweeps so many of the young of the cities downward to the underworld. The Big Sister movement was the outcome of her efforts.

With half a dozen assistants this lady was reclaiming wayward girls and delinquent children from the courts. She had set aside a house and its lovely garden on Long Island as a home for her proteges. In this cheerful home, the waifs of the streets were guests, not prisoners, and, under the refining influences about them, the good that lies in each human heart grew and bore its good fruit.

"We need our little sister," said Mrs. Vanderbilt. "Every woman needs a little sister."

In every city, town, and hamlet there are girls who need big sisters, and there are women who would be the better for having taken to their kindly care some little sister, or sisters, in need. Those women whose work we have sketched are of the wealthy class, but in all walks of life, there are opportunities to befriend the helpless, if there be in us the spirit of helpfulness.

The Woman Who Adopts Unattractive Babies.

A little white cot in one of the rooms of her fine home was empty and the big house seemed very lonely, though there were two other children left when the baby died. Then Mrs. Murray remembered that there are thousands of little, motherless babies in the world who have no little white cots in pleasant homes, and she resolved to still the pain in her heart by bringing into the empty place in her home some little child who needed the love and tenderness she would have given her own.

The child who finally came to that place was a six-week-old baby whose mother had deserted it. It was not an attractive baby when she took it, but the coming of the little, pinched-face mite of humanity was the pioneer in the way that led into a home and heart that was afterwards followed by many others. For when by patient nursing the first little stranger grew into a rosy child, Mrs. Murray found that the craving in her heart was for sick babies, for the neglected ones who were starving, some for bread and others for love.

Such as these she gathered in; little, defective children, at times giving shelter to as many as twenty. When care and kindness had healed their weak bodies, other homes were ready to take them, and their places were ready to entertain others from almshouses, asylums, or streets.

Says Mrs. Murray: "Love is what they need, these little fondlings gathered from out of city ash cans and hospital wards. No one wants to adopt a baby like this; that is why I take them. One or two months, or one or two years, it does not matter. I keep them. When their little bodies and hearts have blossomed into lovable flowers, there are always doors of other empty nurseries ready to open to them. People are only too willing to adopt an attractive child.

"I have faith in the transforming power of love—and a bit of lace whipped on a little dress. That's why dozens of my little mites of poverty, grave-faced, physically and mentally deficient, have found their places—healthy, normal children, in loving comfortable homes."

The woman who thus devotes her time, her wealth, and her love to reclaiming unattractive children, is Mrs. Sarah Van Alen Murray, of East Orange, New Jersey.

The Diet Kitchen.

Then there is in New York City a Diet Kitchen Association with a Babies' Auxiliary. For fourteen years this association has been presided over by Mrs. Henry Villard, a woman now past seventy years of age.

Mrs. Villard has dozens of secretaries, trained nurses, and other employees, all working in the interests of infant children, especially those of the poor and unfortunate classes. Eight milk stations are maintained by her, and she makes regular visits to them, that she may see with her own eyes that the milk supplied to nourish the bodies of the babies who drink it is in right condition to give the needed nutrition.

In her diet kitchen, prospective mothers are daily given food that is best for them and the children they soon will usher into the world. For weeks before its arrival, the baby's mother goes daily to the diet kitchen. She is taught the care of her health and how to treat her body. She is given nourishing soups and milk, and is told facts not before known regarding the feeding of babies. Her child thus cared for comes into the world perfect in mind and body, and, with the care she knows how to give it, is apt to tide over the first two years of its infancy.

For the Diet Kitchen stands as guardian to mother and child for the first two years. Then the real mother takes the entire responsibility, but with the knowledge she has gained under scientific instruction, she knows the foods her child should not have as well as what it should have. She knows how to pasteurize milk, make beef tea and chicken broth, and do other needful things.

A Blind Worker for Child Welfare.

Mrs. John Frank, of Nashville, Tennessee, was not always blind. It was after the birth of her third child that a serious illness left her sightless.

When her first baby lay upon her arm, she realized as never before the many necessities required in rearing a child hygienically, and she wondered how mothers of the poor classes managed.

When her blindness had come upon her and the whole aspect of her former life was changed, her thoughts turned again to the conditions of the poor, especially to mothers and their children.

The doctor who attended her was also physician of the city's poor, and, out of his experience, he told her many stories of his sick and needy patients. One day he told her of two sick children who had but one little ragged night garment each. When he had gone, Mrs. Frank asked her nurse to cut out half a dozen little night dresses that she might busy herself with making them.

The family humored what they regarded as a fancy, but the making of those little garments was but the beginning of Mrs. Frank's devotion to needy homes. Her restlessness of mind, her inactivity were gone. She had a new work in life. "She had found light within, a light that began its steady glow from the happiness of others who walked in darker places than she did."

She had before been active in establishing milk stations and in various departments of baby-welfare work, but she wished to do more. When she heard of school children in factory districts who went to school hungry because their parents were forced to go to their work so early that a sufficient breakfast could not be cooked for the children, she undertook to provide free breakfasts for those children. From her own purse, with additional funds provided by interested friends, she has for two years provided free breakfast for the little children of the factory district. She plans menus and watches with interest and devotion the results of the work among the children.

Recently Mrs. Frank has begun a state movement in the interest of blind babies. She is trying to instill into the lives of others some of the happiness she has received from doing good to the unfortunate.

Unity of Effort Among Us.

Mrs. S. R. Burgess was elected president of the Woman's Auxiliary in the recent convention in Independence. Following is a letter which she sends out to all women in the church. Her message should be considered carefully. This is the letter:

"If ye are not one, ye are not mine," has been the burden of my thoughts for many days. It came with a desire to write a letter to all women of the church wherever they live.

"In almost every district there is a woman's club of some kind, sewing, embroidery, literary, musical, or sunshine. Now, why can we not all join the Woman's Auxiliary? There is no requirement but to send the names of your officers and the number of members, together with the name of your club. If you are a "Mite Society" you can still retain that name.

"We ask but do not demand, that for each member ten cents a year be sent to the auxiliary to form a leaflet fund. All money raised by your society can be raised by you in any way you desire. If you do not wish to pay even ten cents per capita and will join with us, I will see to that part for your society, so it will not be a trouble.

"We do ask that every society in whatever district write to me or to our secretary and get leaflets and information, which will gladly be furnished free to any society or club.

"If you have members not of the church that is an advantage, and we wish to communicate with your officers.

"Let us hear from some one in every local, and come to a unity in sisterly love and unselfishness. We want to be humble and prayerful in our work and to give help and encouragement.

"We do not approve of aggressive or insistent methods, but rather we desire to convince you of our sisterly interest in the welfare of women.

"In gospel love,

"MRS. S. R. BURGESS."

Prayer Union.

SUBJECTS FOR THE THIRD THURSDAY IN MAY.

Prayers for our missions and missionaries in all places, especially remembering the Lamanites, that the preaching of the gospel may be with conviction that will lead them to obedience, and that thereafter their lives may demonstrate its purifying, uplifting power. Remember the mission at Jerusalem, and those who have been sent there, that they may be protected, and be successful in winning many to Christ and his truth.

Lesson, Isaiah 30: 18-21. Memory verse, Amos 8: 11.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

REDLANDS, CALIFORNIA, April 28, 1914.

To the Prayer Union: Sister N. W. Best requests the prayers of the Saints that her memory may be restored to its normal condition. I write this by her request.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. LETHA L. COOPER.

Dear Herald Readers: All who will, please pray for my sister. She is sorely afflicted with lung trouble, and I desire special prayers of the Prayer Union. Pray that she may be spared to raise her little boy, three years old, as she so much desires to do.

She has belonged to the church but a short time. May the Lord attend your prayers for all the afflicted ones.

A sister,

ETTA LEWIS.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, April 25, 1914.

To the Prayer Union: I again ask your prayers. I have been troubled with poor hearing for several years. The past few months, after taking a severe cold, I have at times had a very distressing feeling in my head, especially on the left side. I notice of late that I am rapidly losing the hearing of the left ear.

Several years ago, through answer to the prayers of the Saints, I was healed of abscesses forming on the drum of this ear. As my hearing is now leaving me rapidly, I earnestly request every Saint to remember me before the Father, that my hearing may be restored, and strength given the organs. I also ask that the Prayer Union make special request in my behalf.

Your sister,

PAULINE NAPIER.

A Call to Duty.

I am fully persuaded concerning production, with the experience of half a century, the greater part of which time has been and is still being spent where the mill turns its wheels in one of our greatest canned food manufactories of the East, that at no time in the history of this Nation has the yield of the earth been so great. And this is due to intelligence, science, and art of producing. The growth of industries has doubled their capacity.

Now all this great increase is shadowed by the spirit of "frenzied finance," principally in the hearts of those who have been called as managers of enterprise and the moving captains of industries. These are men whose hearts are fired by the first laws of nature; who love in the first law of the simple, and do alms to the poor; who admire the flowers of earth's growing, and songs of mother love and home. The widow and the orphan have place in their hearts, and the helpless have a deep consideration. But when overcome by the spirit of "frenzied finance," they become demons of the deepest dye.

The direct and indirect results of their evils are so far-reaching that time and space would fail the writer to even mention those things that cause the earth to weep and mourn and seek deliverance from this present evil way.

I am well aware of the hatred now between the captains of industry and the soldier of the common good. I am also well aware of the hatred between the union and non-union forces. Race suicide and other evils are abroad in the land. I see the warning of an empire within whose realm spiritual wickedness in high places is now greatly exalted and the invisible forces of the Evil One have expression through the children of this generation. But behold this division of Satan's kingdom, which are the kingdoms of craft, they are divided. Confidence is gone from the people; political adjustment is gone from the people; Christianity is gone from the people; money is gone from the people.

What stands for the issue? "Frenzied finance," disorganized brotherhood, and that awful divorcement between labor and capital. In consideration of these facts we are already now in the throes of that Satanic battle of the world. Should the Saints contribute further to the gigantic forces of capitalism and the spirit through which the kingdoms of this world have become exalted beyond measure? The children of this world seem to be wiser than the children of the kingdom of light.

Oh, Kingdom of Light, thy finances are all too limited; thou canst do nothing except through the law. Come hither, I pray thee, thou anointed ones of the house of Israel, according to the promise made to our fathers, which in our day should be fulfilled with power. Come forth; come, I pray thee, and receive thy double anointing. Remember how that the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, and how he hath commanded that all who have been called to be Saints are commanded to bring forth fruits, works, worthy of repentance.

Believest thou God? Believest thou the prophets of old? Believest thou the prophets that are sent unto thee? Believest thou that Jesus is the Christ? Believest thou in his kingdom, that both the spiritual and temporal forces are necessary to life?

As labors of my hand thou art my faith, and from my mouth the heart speaketh praise. How long before the mechanics will turn their full value of production to the treasury of Zion and realize that beautiful system of equality and pure democracy with equal rights to all and special privileges to none? But he who would be great among you is the servant of all, and rich in the invisible riches of the Spirit.

How long will seventy thousand Saints go begging for employment at the hand of the money kings of this earth and contribute to the brown stone mansions of many a wealthy captain of labor and capital, who has built this empire of wealth—America, $125,000,000,000? It should be remembered that the kingdom of God is to participate in both spiritual and the temporal affairs, and Saints are counseled to be arrayed in clean linen, pure and white, which is the righteousness of Saints. What is right? Mind and matter in harmony with God's laws. Can a man serve God and not consider the financial system provided in the law?

Oh, unbelieving Saints, are you wasting substance committed to your stewardship. Strengthen the hands of those whom God has called from among the people; the hands that represent the United Order of Enoch, that our own captains of industry may lead the soldiers of the common good to victory by building the Zion of this land, where those changed in the twinkling of an eye shall abide for ever.

It seems really too bad, as can be seen from casual observation, that orders now created among men observe a closer law of relationship financially than do the Saints. We need a united system in the name of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Our hopes and confidence should be strengthened and elevated from the rest of the under world, from the Satanic forces now present in our midst. Till he comes we may live in the invisible and enjoy that which is far better realized than tongue or pen can describe.

This letter is expressly written to revive thought to duty; tithes and offerings, money to make strong the government of God upon earth.

Yours truly,

F. L. NORTON.

History of Englewood Mission.

In the fall of 1916 Sister Smith, Sterling Avenue, agitated the question of holding meetings in Englewood. She opened her house and Brother Alfred White came and preached a few times. I believe there were only Sister Smith, Sister Wright, Brother and Sister Ely and family attending at that time.

Brother William Rushton was sent to take charge of the mission and the meetings were removed to Brother Ely's house. Brother and Sister Tousley and family came about this time.

The next leader, in 1907 was Brother Fred Koehler, of Independence, and the meetings were removed to Sister Wright's house. A Sunday school was organized. Brother Claude Smith, Brother Robert Batchelder, and Brother and Sister Bennett attended at this time.

In November, 1908, a hall was rented from Sister Wright for five dollars per month. Brother W. O. Hand took charge. Religio was organized with Brother J. C. Nunn, of Independence, Missouri, as president.

In 1909 Sister McChristy and Gatewood, also some children were baptized. Tent meetings were held opposite hall.

In 1910, Sister Fryberger moved into the vicinity, Sister Winn attended, also Brother and Sister Ballenger.

In 1911 Brother Gatewood and Sister Davis were baptized. I believe tent meeting were held about this time at Bristol Station.

In 1912 Sister Wright died and left the hall to the church. Brother and Sister Friend moved here. About April 27 Brother Zahnd took charge of mission.

About May 1, 1913, the interest continued to increase and it was necessary in October, 1913, to build an extension to the mission, which was done, and the same was duly decorated, making it a nice place for the Saints to meet. At the last stake conference, held in Holden, Missouri, in February, 1914, a branch was ordered to be organized, which was attended to on April 30, 1914, by our missionary in charge, Brother Rushton, and two of the stake presidency, President Harrington and Brother Garrett. Brother Lester Haas was chosen as secretary of the meeting. The following names were enrolled as charter members:

Agnes V. Daniel, William McKenzie and Elizabeth Helen Ely, Charles J., Jessie May, and Birdie B. Friend, Mary Elizabeth Gatewood, Flora B. Larson, Selma, Bernice, George Walter, and Mildred McChristy, Frances M. and Mabel A. McKay, Clinton Alney Rader, Ellis and Maud Shimel, Melvin L., Dora Rowena, Florilla S., Willis R., and Lillian L. Tousley, Ella E. and Archibal E. Waterman, John and Catherine Mackenzie Ely, and Sister Winn.

Officers elected were, presiding elder, John Zahnd, presiding priest, Lester Brackenbury, presiding teacher, Charles J. Friend, secretary, Willie Ely. Englewood has about fifty members of the church, and it is hoped all will become members of the branch soon. A Sunday school is now conducted, with Lester Brackenbury as superintendent, the Religio in charge of Charles J. Friend. Thus another branch is organized and established, and it is hoped many souls may be brought into the work in this place, as it is an important point being just west of Independence, and in harmony with the revelation given in the early church is located westward where the Lord stated for the Saints to purchase lands and locate.

JOHN ZAHND.

LONDON, ENGLAND.

Editors Herald: I have just commissioned the Argyll for service in the third cruises squadron in home waters, but I had hoped on going out to the Pacific Station, to commission the Algerine with the idea of the possibility of coming across some of the Saints of the Pacific slope. Even now it is just possible I might be called in for her, in which case I should be glad to have the address of any branches of the church out there, if you could manage to let me have them.

I offer also my warmest brotherly greetings to the church in Iowa and beg to remain in gospel bonds,

Yours fraternally,

WILLIAM MOORE.

CORYDON, INDIANA, March 26, 1914.

Editors Herald: We appreciate the HERALD very much, and feel that we could not do without it. There are only a few of us here. We try to do what we can to spread the truth.

Brother H. E. Moler was here in January, being called to administer to Sister Teller, who was very low with pneumonia, and who could only talk in a whisper. After the administration she could speak so as to be heard in any part of the room. She has now fully recovered. Brother Jacob Halb also paid us a short visit, which we certainly enjoyed. He also administered to Sister Teller and to the writer. I was also administered to by Brother H. E. Moler. Brother Jacob Halb preached two excellent sermons at Sister Teller's, which were much enjoyed.

I have been sick all winter. The doctor pronounced it heart trouble. I have a cough and at times a high fever. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may fully recover. I am all the help my mother has, and she is not strong and is growing old. My affliction is quite a trial for her. We live five miles west of Corydon. When any of the elders come to Corydon we will be glad to meet them any time and will entertain them the best we know how.

Your sister in the faith,

EMMA E. WYNN.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA, March 26, 1914.

Editors Herald: Many good things come to me through the HERALD. I find much pleasure reading all the precious things it contains. The sermons and letters bring joy and peace, even that heavenly feeling that comes from above. The greatest joy in my life is when I go to church or read the word of God. Oh, dear Saints, were it not for the gospel I do not know what I would do. It is the joy of my life. I want to do whatever I can for the Lord. He has done much for me. I desire to be one of those whom the Evil One will pass by.

Elder T. U. Thomas and I were at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, for a week a short time ago. Brother Thomas was doing some preaching down there. I believe there was some good done. I would like to see more help there because I believe much good can be done there yet. There are some fine Saints in Bloomsburg, and I hope and pray that the Lord will bless them.

A short time ago Elder Thomas had the pleasure of baptizing a gentleman who was a Baptist minister for twenty-five years. The work in Scranton is making fine headway now. We have a fine band here, under the leadership of William J. Lewis. We hope to do much good in the future.

Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may always have a desire to humble myself and work for the Lord. I would like to hear from Brother William Anderson, now in Maine. Brother Anderson labored in Scranton some time ago.

Your brother in Christ,

201 NORTH HYDE PARK AVENUE.

JOHN JENKINS.

WAYNE, NEBRASKA, March 27, 1914.

Editors Herald: It is now just a year since through much exposure I became ill with complicated lung trouble. I felt stricken in conscience because of wrongdoing, and felt that I could not of myself get relief. So in April of last year I went to the General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa. Being sick I did not stay, but went to Independence, Missouri, where I was cared for. While there I attended the meetings at the Stone Church several times. My reflections in mind worked my repentance. God granted forgiveness and refreshed my soul on a Sunday morning as I silently sought in the way that was accepted of him, and I have been kept to this very hour from wrong. God has helped me. I ask the Saints to pray that I may ever be kept from wrong.

I am still undergoing severe lung trouble, for which nothing can be done; in fact, doctoring is harmful. I would be thankful for some change, but pray only for God to work his way in my trials and afflictions. I am trying to trust God in my weak way, and try not to contend that my healing be made sure so long as our God may see differently. I believe that when the clouds of life break away, to those who endure patiently will greater vision be given.

Your brother,

GEORGE ELSON.

THOMASTON, TEXAS, March 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: We are at present located in southern Texas. I like this country fine. I think I would be perfectly satisfied if we only were where there is a branch of Saints. We are at present isolated. My father moved here from southwestern Arizona for the benefit of my mother's health. She seems to be much helped by the change.

What we most desire now is to locate among people of our own faith. I would be glad to correspond with Saints of Southern Texas with this point in view. We are interested in the price of land, schools, crops, etc. I am teaching, and if any of the Saints know of a school that I could get and be among the Saints, I would appreciate their writing to me.

Yours for the success of the truth,

J. E. PHILLIPS.

LOXLEY, ALABAMA, March 29, 1914.

Editors Herald: We left Richville, Minnesota, for this place last Monday morning. We have just located here at Loxley, Alabama. We find that there are some Saints here, which makes us feel glad indeed. They have services once a month at the house where our brother, Uncle Billie Booker, passed away. I also find that there is a branch at Bay Minette, nineteen miles from here. I have sent for letters of removal from the Union Branch, at Clitherall, Minnesota, and my wife and I will unite with the branch at Bay Minette.

I can truly say that this work is true. It seems that I can not do enough in the cause. I sometimes feel discouraged when I work hard to get the truth before the people and try to get them to come out and hear the gospel story, and no one comes. But my discouragement does not last long. I go to work harder than ever before. I know I can not do much, but I try to do all I can. I think people go to church more here than in the North.

Brother R. D. Davis was with us about three weeks before we left Minnesota. and I think much good was done. We took up the work in Richville again. Brother A. L. Whiteaker opened up the work there some years ago, but there seemed to be little interest then. I had been thinking for some time that it would be a good thing to make a new effort there, so when Brother Davis came we began to hunt up a place to hold meetings. We tried to get the Methodist church at Perham, but were told that only evangelical churches were allowed to use it. We tried for the Odd Fellows' hall, but they wanted three dollars a night. We next went to the village council, who let us use a room in the fire hall. We cleared it out and put in some seats.

We started in on Tuesday evening with about seventeen in attendance. The next night there were about fifty, averaging about that every night thereafter, many of the same ones coming each evening. The Odd Fellows offered us their hall Sunday evenings free of charge, so we used it.

The second Sunday night the Spirit was with us in especial power. Brother Davis had been sick all day, but I will never forget his face as I looked upon it that night. He looked perfectly calm and peaceful, and his countenance seemed to shine with a soft light. Most everyone said the sermon was the best they ever heard. Sister Burgess said that she received the Spirit of the work that night more than ever before. A collection was taken up that night unknown to us, and after services Brother Davis was presented with $7.50. Brother Davis was asked by many to return, and I hope his mission will be in Minnesota again this year so he can return to Perham.

Our house is open to any brother who can come here, just the same as it was in Minnesota. A warm welcome awaits all. I understand that most everyone goes to church here on Sunday, and that anyone can have the schoolhouse at Loxley. They have church there every Sunday except one in the month. I hope some of the brethren will write me and let me know what they think about an effort here. I am willing to do all I can.

With love and best wishes to all the Saints.

Your brother in Christ,

H. M. AEBLI.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 29, 1914.

Editors Herald: After a trip of several months through a part of the South, we arrived in Independence, and are anticipating a pleasant time during General Conference, in meeting friends whom we have not seen for four years.

Leaving Joliet, we first went to Indianapolis, Indiana, where we attended the district conference and labored for a short time. We were pleasantly located at the home of Mr. and Sister Morrison, who made us very welcome. There also we had the pleasure of meeting Brother and Sister Barmore, who had accompanied us to America from the South Sea Islands, we joining them there, as the steamer Tahiti stopped there en route from Australia.

Shortly after the Indiana conference, we left for Wirt, Indiana, where we spent a short time holding meetings in the nice church building located there. We had splendid interest at each service. Brother and Sister Ford shared their hospitality with us while in that part, and we greatly appreciated their kindness.

We then made a short visit to the Davis sisters who reside in Jamestown, Indiana. A social evening with their friends was planned, and spent pleasantly, and we trust that some good was done. We left here for Louisville, Kentucky, where we visited the branch and met the many Saints. A series of meetings was held and good interest prevailed. We made our home while in that city with Brother and Sister Vaughn Merrifield, who kindly entertained us and made us feel at home.

From there we left for Joliet to spend the holidays, this pleasure not having been ours for four years. We also desired to attend the district conference in Chicago. The conference was largely attended, and the meetings pronounced excellent. We left soon after, direct for Paris, Tennessee, where we had planned to go long before, but were detained. We enjoyed the train ride and reached Paris, a very beautiful little city, which appears to me to be laid out very much as Independence is. We were taken to the home of Brother and Sister William McClain, who reside a short distance out from the city, and were made very welcome at their home. They had a horse and carriage, and we were anticipating many pleasant drives, but we learned shortly that we were expected at once in other places, so we were obliged to move on. We held some meetings, however, at the home of Brother and Sister McClain, a few of the neighbors and friends not of the church attending, and seemingly interested.

We next visited May's Hill, not far from Paris, and we spent a week or so with Brother and Sister Boothe, holding the meetings most of the time in their home, as so much sickness and unfavorable weather hindered us in having the church services as had been planned. Brother Cobb, of May's Hill, kindly drove us into Paris, and from there we went out to India, a small place located near Paris. We went to the hospitable home of Brother and Sister Campbell, who made us very welcome, and with whom we greatly enjoyed the short stay. Meetings were held for several nights in the schoolhouse near, and the members seemed delighted with the results, in that so many came out to hear. Many favorable comments from those not of the church were heard, and we therefore trust that some good may result therefrom.

Near the close of the series of meetings held there the weather became unfavorable, and we decided to continue on our way to Peryear, Tennessee, where we wished to labor for a while before district conference would convene. We reached that city and were met at the train by Brother Connie Gallimore and Brother Curtis Ross, who gave us a fine horse to drive, and a comfortable carriage, while they led the way in another rig. We greatly enjoyed the drive out to the home of Brother and Sister Ross. The scenery was beautiful, and the day a perfect one. We reached their home, and Sister Ross, always ready to welcome the missionaries, came out and greeted us, and invited us in, where we had a splendid dinner. By the way, we shall not soon forget that good "peach cobbler," nor the interesting family. We left that evening for the home of Brother and Sister Gallimore, where meeting was to be held, and where we were kindly invited to stay during our sojourn in those parts. Meetings were held the two days we spent there, and the Saints seemed to greatly enjoy them. Many of the Saints came long distances, even though the weather was very unfavorable. We were kept rather busy here, especially that the conference was to be held there shortly.

Saturday, February 14, found us up early, preparing for a long drive in the cold, to the Oakland Branch, at Farmington, Brother J. R. McClain and Elder Pitt going in one carriage, and Brother C. Gallimore and I in the latter carriage. It was so extremely cold that we were commencing to feel uncomfortable, when the thought came to me that the umbrella would help greatly, so from that time on I made use of it, and it proved very efficacious. As I had always expressed myself as greatly enjoying cold weather, I knew I must not complain, but it was not necessary this trip, as the men in the party seemed to suffer more than I. About half way to our destination, they kept asking me if I wished to stop in at the different homes and get warm. I replied I was all right, so they evidently made up their minds they could not have me for an excuse so finally drove in, and we all made ourselves comfortable, and warmed the robes, and went on our way rejoicing. We reached our destination in a short time, and were royally welcomed at the pleasant home of Brother and Sister J. Adair. We spent many pleasant days holding meetings in the Oakland church. The weather was fine for a few days, and many attended each service, including a number of outsiders, but the rain and condition of the roads interfered, and it was thought best to discontinue, and thus we said farewell to the dear friends there, and journeyed on our way.

Brother and Sister Williams, good Saints, also reside near the Oakland Branch church, and Brother Williams kindly offered to drive us to the High Hill Branch, a distance of several miles. We gladly accepted his offer, and reached there after a very cold ride, going to the home of Brother and Sister Gray. We appreciated the warm, blazing fire of large logs in the fireplace, and soon made ourselves three of the party around the fire. We spent a week there, and held meetings in the High Hill church. Special efforts were made to make the meetings a success, and many came miles to attend the services. Elder J. R. McClain joined us there, and he and Elder Pitt were kept busy each evening. We left High Hill, Brother Gray, jr., and Brother McClain taking us to Bethel, where in the church there, which is one of the nicest churches we saw in the district belonging to the Saints, a lecture on Palestine was announced. We stopped two days at the home of Brother and Sister Hendrix, who are striving to let their light shine, even though practically isolated from the Saints. We were made welcome and enjoyed our short stay.

From there we started on our return trip to Foundry Hill, where conference was shortly to convene. We went directly to the home of Brother and Sister Ross. The last day of conference, Sunday, March 1, was a very stormy day, cold and snow flurries most of the day. A large gathering of Saints and friends attended the conference, and we all had a very pleasant time together. During conference we stopped a couple of nights at the home of Brother and Sister Alexander, who resided near the church; their hospitality was appreciated. At the close of conference we returned home with Brother Ross and family, and spent a week or so at their home, finishing our work and preparing for our departure, and also helping them to burn up many of the fine, large logs from the wood pile. We had a large fireplace in our room, and Elder Pitt thoroughly enjoyed piling in the logs, I assure you.

Our trip through the various branches was interesting, and while we could not at the time see that much good was accomplished, we sincerely hope that some good may result in the future.

There are many excellent young ladies and gentlemen all through the district, and we regretted that many of them did not have the opportunities which some others have, as they are capable of doing much for the cause we represent. We do hope and pray that these fine young people may have better advantages and opportunities in the near future. We shall not forget the kindness shown us, and the effort put forth to make our visits pleasant. Especially at this time do we recall the kindness of Brother Connie Gallimore and Brother Curtis Ross, two excellent young men, who were always ready and willing to drive us any distance. We only hope that sometime, somewhere, we may have the pleasure of reciprocating.

Before leaving for Independence we visited Eagle Creek, the young men mentioned above driving us there, reaching our destination in a blizzard. We stopped a couple of days at the home of Brother and Sister Roberts. Meetings were held in the church there, but whooping cough and measles, prevalent in that neighborhood, interfered with the people coming out to hear, so we journeyed on to Paris. We went again to the home of Brother and Sister Campbell, where we were welcomed, and meetings were arranged for at the schoolhouse. Large audiences were in attendance at each service, but the weather became unfavorable, so we decided to close.

Brother Campbell took us to the station and we went to McKenzie, Tennessee, where we were met by Brother Dickson, who had arranged a series of meetings in that district. We were made welcome at the home of Brother and Sister Reynolds, and meetings were held for a number of evenings, in the schoolhouse near. Brother Dickson is an earnest worker, and is well liked everywhere through the district. We met many excellent people in the different parts; many not of our faith. We were kindly invited to spend the day at the pleasant home of Mr. McCain, who resides near this place, and we found Miss McCain such a charming hostess that we regretted the day had passed so quickly. Next day we left for the train to go to Fulton, Kentucky, where we had promised to stop off for a day or two en route to Independence, with Brother and Sister J. R. McClain. He met us at the hotel, and we had the pleasure of having the first ride in a beautiful new carriage he had just purchased that day. We were pleased to have the pleasure of meeting Sister McClain and their interesting family, and we had been associated with him most of the time during our trips to different branches. He was always ready to do all he could to make our stay pleasant at the different places.

We left Fulton, March 20, for Independence, reaching there next day at 7 a. m. We were met by Elder Pitt's son, who took us to his home in his fine big car, and where we are now making ourselves at home.

Thus ended our trips through the various branches. We shall remember each brother and sister whom we met, and trust that the Lord will bless all in their labors for the Master.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

ROSA PARKS PITT.

LEBANON, OREGON, March 30, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am trying to work out my own salvation. I often become discouraged. And what is discouragement? It is that with which a Latter Day Saint should have nothing to do. Discouragement wears the livery of evil and is constantly and consistently working for its master. It is always pulling down and never builds up. Did you ever know anyone to accomplish anything worth while when in the grip of discouragement?

The much discouraged man is only happy when he is miserable, and the worse he feels the better he likes it. The things that please him most are the things that do not please him at all. He is continually stumbling into the two extremes of self-justification and self-condemnation. Both are bad. Both are modeled after plans drawn in the Devil's workshop.

How far away God seems to be when we are in the grip of discouragement.

Just think of the trouble we have caused ourselves by allowing ourselves to be robbed of our courage, when we have allowed discouragement to enter our minds. Evil does not wait for an invitation, it only needs the open door. Discouragement is a great door-opener for evil.

To illustrate: It is announced that the Devil is going out of business, and is to offer all his tools for sale to whoever will pay his price. And a bad looking lot they are: Malice, envy, hatred, jealousy, sensuality, deceit. These, together with other implements of evil, are displayed with the price of each marked. Apart from the rest is a harmless looking, wedge-shaped tool, much worn and priced higher than any of the others. Some one asks the Devil what it is. He answers, Discouragement. He explains that it is priced high because it is more useful than any of the others; that he has tried the souls of men with discouragement when he could not get near them with any of the others; that when once inside he could use these men in every way best suited to his purpose; that it is so much worn because he has used it extensively, since few people have known that it belonged to him. No wonder the price for discouragement has been placed so high! He still owns this instrument and is using it.

An effective plan to drive out discouragement is to bring into mind some thought of gratitude or praise. The good, old-fashioned practice of counting our blessings, the things we have and would not like to do without, generally brings gratitude. The fragrance of the sweet blooming flower, gratitude, if plucked and worn, will offer a magic dispeller of discouragement.

ROBERTS, MONTANA, April 29, 1914.

Editors Herald: When reading in the conference minutes as published in the HERALD and Ensign about the deep interest manifested by the elders in the special lectures on homiletics and comparative religion, my soul hungers and thirsts for the food thus distributed.

I, therefore, on behalf of the great mass of ministers who were not able to be there, respectfully suggest that the editors of HERALD and Ensign secure those lectures, divide them, and give them to the whole church through the columns of said papers.

With ardent love for the spirit of advancement, I am,
Your coworker for Christ,

D. R. BALDWIN.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—The HERALD Editors arranged to have these lectures reported, and in due time, if accurate transcripts can be secured, they will be published in full.]

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri.

Now that General Conference is over, the Saints are looking forward with bright expectancy of renewed interest in the work.

Seventy-five were out at the early prayer meeting April 26, and many testimonies were borne, lending inspiration and uplift to the meeting. The attendance at Sunday school settled down to the usual number, about nine hundred. A few of the missionaries still remained with us. A large and appreciative audience worshiped at the Stone Church all day. At the morning service Brother W. W. Smith was the speaker. Brother J. A. Koehler, of the Second Philadelphia Branch, held forth at the evening hour.

After considerable routine and important new business was attended to, at the close of a spirited contest at the business meeting on May 4, G. E. Harrington was elected president of the branch. D. J. Krahl received honor as a close second in the vote, A. H. Parsons and W. W. Smith following not afar off.

Two new missions have lately been opened, one on Enoch Hill, and the other in the northeastern part of the city.

The attendance at Sunday school was nine hundred and eight; beginners ninety-one, visitors sixty-five. J. F. Curtis was the speaker in the morning, R. M. Elvin in the evening.

There is always an excellent attendance of both old and young at the monthly sacramental meetings, and the testimonies are instructive and uplifting.

Dear Saints, may we ever have your prayers in behalf of the sick and afflicted ones here, and for all who say, "Pray for me"; also for the success of the work.

Your sister in the faith,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Lamoni, Iowa.

In accordance with the action of the recent General Conference, this branch considered the advisability of having some one other than the presidency of the stake as president of the branch. The business meeting was held on the evening of the 5th instant.

After a meeting in which the good Spirit dominated, presided over by President Elbert A. Smith, Stake President John Smith was sustained as branch president for the remainder of the year. One other name was considered, but the vote was overwhelming in favor of Brother Smith.

Brother Smith is president of the stake, with R. S. Salyards and John F. Garver as associates.

Good prayer meetings with gifts manifested have been the rule since the General Conference. Renewed determination in good works is freely expressed by many as a result of the conference activities and impressions. The Sunday school has broken the record with an attendance of 619, and the Religio is holding its own with a small but regular attendance.

Elder A. C. Barmore and wife have been with us for several days. Brother Barmore's illustrated lecture on Australia was greeted by a small attendance on account of threatening weather, but it will be repeated. Missionaries are stopping off to see us as they pass through; others are at home preparing for the strenuous work of the coming year.

Everything is moving.

E. D. MOORE.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

As the Master's servants again go forth on the work of another year, we trust their efforts will be blessed and crowned with success. While many of us were deprived of the privilege of attending the General Conference, we were pleased with the news received from those who returned, and also through the church publications. We missed our pastor, Brother T. J. Elliott, while he was away, but he left the work in good hands, as our presiding priest, Brother George Reeves, performed his work most creditably.

The primary department of the Sunday school rendered a very pleasing program Easter Sunday morning. The primary teachers are to be credited for the success of their efforts. The Religio committees having charge of the programs have been giving some splendid entertainments and promise others will follow.

Your sister in Christ,

2739 GREER AVENUE.

ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

Topeka, Kansas.

It may be of interest to some to note that the Saints in Topeka are still actively engaged in this great cause we have espoused. We do not have a large membership here, less than seventy-five, but we are fortunate in having many good, honest, and enthusiastic workers who are willing to preach the glorious message regardless of whether they be in the house of God, on the street corner, or in the workshop.

The writer feels that this conference year has many surprises in store for the Saints here, and that the membership will be greatly enlarged. We feel grateful to those who are directly or indirectly responsible for the appointment of such able men as Brethren Samuel Twombly and J. W. A. Bailey to our district. We have implicit confidence in their ability to present the gospel message, and let it be known that we will welcome them into our midst at the earliest possible date.

We have the pleasure of announcing that on last Sunday, April 19, Brother and Sister Weege were baptized and confirmed members of the church we so dearly love; also that after their baptism and confirmation they negelected not their duty in presenting to the Lord their little boy for a blessing. Brother James Bailey, of Scranton, was present with us and delivered a fine sermon in the evening. Well can it be said of him that he taught as one having authority. Come again, Brother Bailey; we appreciate your sermons very much.

Our Sunday school, which is being so ably conducted by Brother M. D. Robinson, is progressing very nicely. Many new features have been adopted, and in connection with our regular study we have taken up the teacher training lessons, which are proving of great help, and very interesting. Our Religio meetings are growing better from time to time, and with Brother Carney at the helm we feel encouraged to press on and make this department a grand success. Brother Carney is conducting Book of Mormon training lessons in connection with Religio, which I am told are proving quite interesting.

We are very desirous of having more Saints in Topeka. We think that Topeka is a very desirable place to live. Under ordinary conditions there is plenty of work in all lines. It might also be said that we are only a two-hour ride from Zion City, which makes it possible at a small expense to visit Independence often. We desire to extend a cordial invitation to all those who are seeking for a new abode, and ask you to come with the intention of rolling up your sleeves and going to work in favor of this good cause. Should there be any who are contemplating coming to Topeka to live, we would be pleased to correspond with them, and we will do all in our power to find suitable employment for them.

With hopes that God's cause may prosper more than ever before, I desire to remain, your brother in gospel bonds,

APRIL 24, 1914.

FREDERICK W. KUEFFER.

Miscellaneous Department

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of Central and Western Oklahoma Districts, and Northern Texas; Greeting: Brother Hubert Case has been ordained as one of my counselors. I therefore cheerfully recommend him to you and ask that you heartily cooperate with him in the temporal needs of our work.

The above territory has been provided with a willing and efficient number of laborers, whose families must be cared for while the husbands and fathers are presenting the great message of life and peace to mankind.

As the Lord has declared, he requires the heart and a willing mind. Let us remember that this is a day of sacrifice and the tithing of "my people." We trust that all, without hesitation, will rally to the assistance of our standard bearers and thus be partakers with them in the great salvation of our God.

The whitening and the widening of the field now, is before us. Let us perform our part of the duty that is allotted to us without hesitation.

Brother Case will receipt for all moneys paid to him.

ELLIS SHORT,
Bishop for above territory.

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT.

To the Saints and Friends of the Mobile District: This is to certify that upon the resignation of Brother Frank Stiner of Theodore, Alabama, as bishop's agent of the Mobile, Alabama, District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Elder W. L. Booker, of Bay Minette, Alabama, has been duly appointed bishop's agent in and for said district and authorized to receive and receipt for funds and pay out the same in accordance with the law of Christ governing in said church.

We bespeak for Brother Booker the ready and earnest help of Saints and friends within the district, that he may perform his work to the good of the cause of truth in which he is laboring, and trust that every lover of the truth may be ready to assist him to perform this work.

Trusting the Lord may help each and every worker in his cause, I am,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 7, 1914.

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Friends of the Church in Missouri, Kansas, and Central and Southeastern Illinois; Greeting: For another year the supervision of the work in this field has been committed to the undersigned; and we take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation for the good work of the brethren, missionary and local, by which this field was able to maintain its position in quality and quantity of results produced.

We also express our heartfelt thanks for the hospitality, good will, and sincere cooperation which we enjoyed during our association last year. There were some parts of the field I was not permitted to reach, owing to circumstances beyond my control; we hope to have the privilege of visiting those points this present year.

Some of the difficulties which existed when we took the field a year ago we are glad to note have been adjusted, though there are still some others which will need care and tact; above all, forbearance and conciliation on the part of all concerned. We shall approach this year's work in the hope that all will labor for the honor of the cause and the extension of the kingdom.

It was very gratifying to observe the hearty cooperation which developed between the missionary staff and the local ministry last year, and we hope to have that cooperation deepened and widened. We also appreciate the hearty support given in the attempt to systematize the local work, and the effort made to bring the district organizations to a higher state of efficiency, and to raise the morale of the ministry by the adoption of the code of by-laws suggested.

That the personnel of our staff has been changed somewhat and also reduced in numbers, is a matter which we regret; but while we regret to lose the brethren who have been located elsewhere, we welcome the new brethren, and though we have a depleted staff we confidently expect our year's work to equal previous records. We commend the brethren to the good will, confidence, and support of the Saints and friends among whom they are appointed to work as follows:

Far West: John Davis and John Ely will work together in the district.

W. P. Pickering will labor in Saint Joseph, making the third branch objective.

The First Saint Joseph Branch has been deprived of the services of Brother Scott by a post conference action, which I sincerely regret, but we trust that something may be done for this branch which will provide for the continuance of the good work which was begun. In the meantime we hope that the local brethren will take up the work and seek to meet the demands as best they can until such time as a successor to Brother Scott is appointed by those responsible.

Northeastern Missouri: D. E. Tucker and F. O. Pritchett will continue the work they had in hand last year.

Southern Missouri: Henry Sparling, L. M. McFadden, and J. F. Cunningham will look after the needs of the work in this district. We should like to urge that in this district there is need for the systematizing of the local work; and of attention to some cases of delinquency which should be adjusted.

Clinton: F. C. Keck, H. E. Moler, W. E. Reynolds, and Walter A. Johnson will labor in this district. Brother Keck is sick and will not be expected to travel or labor except at his own discretion. Brother Reynolds as district bishop's agent will no doubt find sufficient to keep fully occupied. We suggest that Brethren Moler and Johnson work together as much as may be practicable. The interest created by Brethren Higdon and Budd last year we should like to be developed.

W. S. Macrae will labor in the Clinton District as much as possible, and what time he needs to be at home because of domestic affairs he will labor in the Independence Stake.

Spring River: T. W. Chatburn, Lee Quick, A. C. Silvers, and A. T. Gray.

Nodaway: E. L. Henson, R. T. Walters, and A. McCord who will enter the field October 1, will meet the demands of the work in this field.

Independence Stake: The two missionaries in this part of the field will labor as best they can, according to their conditions of home and health, under the direction of the stake presidency. They are George Jenkins and F. L. Sawley.

Northwestern Kansas: J. D. Shower will be assisted by W. H. Harvey, who is new to missionary work. We trust these brethren will have the support of the local ministers in their efforts.

Northeastern Kansas: Samuel Twombly, J. W. A. Bailey, and George Edwards will labor in this part of the field. We advise that Brother Twombly confine his efforts to the Blue Rapids Branch, working to adjust the matters of difficulty there until the branch is freed from the incumbrances hindering its progress. The other two brethren will be free to meet whatever calls are made upon them in the district.

Southern Kansas, unorganized territory: J. Arthur Davis and O. D. Shirk will work together in this part of the field.

Central Illinois: A. M. Baker and R. L. Fulk will care for the needs of the work in this district.

Southeastern Illinois: S. S. Smith, S. H. Fields, and E. W. Sutton will labor in this district.

Saint Louis District: W. A. Smith and Wardell Christy will take up the work which Brethren Sparling and Dowker had in hand last year. We advise that they consult with Brother Archibald, the district president, as to the points to care for. Brother J. W. Paxton will continue the work he opened at the close of the conference year, particularly working to develop the work in Quincy.

The patriarchs: William Lewis will labor at his discretion in the State of Kansas. I. N. White, according to his ability and health, will labor in the Independence Stake.

Trusting that success may crown our efforts, with best wishes,

Sincerely yours,
JOHN W. RUSHTON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 4, 1914.

To the Saints of Mission Number 12, including Ontario, Quebec, Wisconsin, Michigan, Northern Illinois, and Northern Indiana; Greeting: Another year is before us. What shall it be? The year just past was a good one, indeed, and we are very hopeful for the future. We hope and pray that those who have labored so faithfully and earnestly in the past will continue their efforts, which we feel assured they will do. The blessings of God have always accompanied the efforts of the faithful ones, and they always will. When we consider the blessings of the past, we feel grateful to God for the favors bestowed, and feel it our duty to show our appreciation by doing all that we can to build up the kingdom of God and to assist in establishing his righteousness among the children of men.

We have made choice of the following brethren to act as assistant missionaries in charge of their respective districts:

O. E. Sade, Kewanee, Illinois.

J. O. Dutton, Northeastern Illinois.

A. L. Whiteaker, Northern Wisconsin.

L. O. Wildermuth, Southern Wisconsin.

E. N. Burt, Western Michigan.

William Davis, Northern Michigan.

G. W. Burt, Central Michigan.

Arthur Allen, Eastern Michigan.

J. D. Stead, Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana.

R. D. Weaver, Chatham.

Alvin R. Ellis, London.

W. D. Ellis, Toronto.

Philemon Pement, Quebec.

G. C. Tomlinson will labor on Manitoulin Island and other points near by as the work demands.

Arthur Allen will continue his work in and around Detroit, giving such time to the district work as will be consistent with his other duties.

David E. Dowker will continue his work in Chicago, Illinois.

W. D. Ellis will continue to give such assistance to the work in Hamilton, Ontario, as the work there demands.

All reports should be sent to my home address promptly on the first of July, October, January, and March.

Before entering into public discussions, please confer with me, if possible, but take care of the work when necessary.

I will be pleased to hear from either missionaries or members when you think it necessary to write me.

Hoping that each and everyone may labor earnestly and faithfully in the Master's service, and that his blessing may rest upon all, I am,

In gospel bonds,
J. F. CURTIS,
Minister in Charge.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 426 South River Boulevard,
May 4, 1914.

Having been appointed minister in general charge of mission number 14, I have selected the following brethren to assist me in charge:

Hubert Case, Kingfisher, Oklahoma, Central and Western Oklahoma and Panhandle of Texas. Those appointed to this part of the field please make reports to Brother Case.

Arkansas and Louisiana, J. T. Riley, 109 West Adams Street, Pittsburg, Kansas, in charge. Those appointed to these States may report to Brother Riley.

Alabama, Florida, Georgia, and Mississippi, F. M. Slover, McKenzie, Alabama, in charge. Those laboring in these States may report to Brother Slover.

Those appointed to Eastern Oklahoma, Central Texas, and Western Texas may report directly to me.

Saints and friends who want preaching, please notify the man in charge of your part of the field, giving direction plainly how to reach you. See the joint letter of Presidency and Twelve for further information.

Sincerely yours,
W. M. AYLOR,
824 South Chrysler Street.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 2, 1914.

To the Ministry and Saints of Pittsburg District; Greeting: Having been appointed assistant minister of this district, I desire the cooperation of all that unitedly we may be able to accomplish a good work for the Master this conference year. The appointing powers have been pleased to give you four missionaries this year, and with your cooperation we hope to be able to reach many honest souls with the beautiful gospel of the Son of God.

I desire to hear from each branch where meetings are desired, stating time most convenient for such meetings. We will try to arrange accordingly. I desire also to hear from all the isolated Saints where there is a possible chance for a new opening. This we most desire—pushing out into new fields where the gospel has not yet been preached, warning the world, as the Master commanded, and thus fulfilling the law.

The presidents of branches will please report promptly the first of each quarter to the district president, so that he can report promptly to the minister in charge. I desire that the missionaries report to me the first day of each quarter, enabling me to report to the general minister in charge on time, as he desires. These reports are due July 1, October 1, January 1, March 1.

Present field address, Wheeling, West Virginia, care O. J. Tary.

Praying God's blessing upon every effort for good, I remain,
Your brother and colaborer in Christ,

JAMES C. MCCONNAUGHY.

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA, May 4, 1914.

The writer is one of the missionaries to the Fremont, Iowa, District, and desires to cooperate with the officers and Saints in gospel work. It is very desirable to hear from the isolated Saints, especially to receive invitations to do missionary work in their respective neighborhoods. At times when it is desirable, convenient, and opportune, to hold meetings in the branches, upon invitation from the branch officers, I will gladly respond. Do not hesitate or delay in these important matters.

When you do not know where I am in my field, address me at home, Independence, Missouri, 709 South Fuller Avenue.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
EDWARD RANNIE.

To the Church of the Pacific Slope Mission; Greeting: With renewed assurance in the divinity of our cause, we continue our labor of love and service toward our fellow kind. May the work of the mission show at the end of the current year even better advancement than in the year past, even as last year shows decided advance over the previous one. I commend to you our General Conference appointees as follows:

R. D. Davis and R. S. Budd will do missionary labor in British Columbia and Seattle District. They may report to William Johnson for direction, whose address is 3618 Evanston Avenue, Seattle, Washington. He is now president of the district.

J. M. Terry will make Seattle and environs an objective point, and, if agreeable to the branch, may be placed in charge as pastor.

G. M. Shippy and C. Norris heading associate in missionary effort where led in Washington and Oregon.

A. C. Barmore may report to N. T. Chapman, president of Portland District, for missionary work. Changes may come later. Brother Chapman's address is 828 East Twenty-ninth Street, South, Portland, Oregon.

M. H. Cook will enter the active field work later in the year, when his circumstances will permit.

C. E. Crumley will go to Southwestern Oregon District as heretofore.

C. A. Parkin will continue his charge as bishop of Northern California District. His address is 579 Fifth Avenue, San Francisco, California. He will gladly respond to all offering financial assistance.

S. M. Reiste will labor with tent in Northern California District.

C. W. Deuel may continue his tent work in the San Joaquin Valley.

M. A. McConley may, when he can leave Hawaii, locate in Northern California District. Will arrange more particularly for him later.

In the Southern California District, R. F. Slye and W. A. Brooner will associate in tent work, following up the work of last year.

V. M. Goodrich will continue in Los Angeles as pastor of the local church.

W. A. McDowell as patriarch is at liberty to go to any part of the mission needful.

J. W. Davis and C. E. Jones may arrange their work in Hawaii as they find the demands after they get there. G. J. Waller will be found an essential counselor from his long experience in that Territory.

Time for reporting is the first of July, October, January, and March.

My mission address will be 281 Castro Street, San Francisco, California.

Most fraternally yours,
F. M. SHEEHY, Minister in Charge.

Died.

LITTLEPAGE.—Helen Irene Littlepage, daughter of Brother James and Sister Sarah Baldwin, was born in San Bernardino, California, October 23, 1893; died April 26, 1914, at her home near Chico, California. She was baptized June 5, 1913, by G. H. Wixom. Married Wallace Littlepage, June 8, 1913. Funeral from her home, R. F. Slye officiating. Sister Helen was respected and loved by all who knew her. She had great faith in the gospel. Although during her young life she was isolated from the church, yet she was not willing to step to the marriage altar until she had first made covenant with her heavenly Father in baptism. She has been called home, leaving a record unsullied.

OWEN.—At Lamoni, Iowa, May 2, 1914, Sister Rhoda J. Owen, aged 80 years, 8 months, 2 days. She was born in Wayne County, West Virginia, in 1833; married in Dewitt County, Illinois, in 1857. Of eight children, five are living, three in California, one in Kansas City, one in Lamoni. She was baptized in 1844, and held to the faith. She read the scriptures and church papers faithfully. Funeral services in charge of John Smith; sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

BEALS.—Robert Beals, of Sarnia, Ontario, was buried from the family residence, May 2; sermon by R. H. Huston, a life-long friend of the deceased; Otto Fetting, of Port Huron, in charge; singing by Port Huron choir. He leaves wife, two sons, one daughter. This brother was sixty-three years old last March. He was baptized by John Shields at Grand Valley, twenty-five years ago, and was faithful until the end. He was well known in Ontario by most of the Saints. May God bless those who are left to mourn.

DAVIS.—Minnie A. Davis, wife of Charles Davis, of Blue Rapids, Kansas, was born December 19, 1883, at Cameron, Missouri; died April 18, 1914, at the Swedish Hospital, Kansas City, Missouri. She was baptized August 12, 1894, by R. L. Ware. She leaves husband, father, sister, a host of friends. Hers was one of the largest funerals ever held in Blue Rapids, evidencing the esteem in which she was held by all. A noble woman has gone to her reward, to await the morn of the first resurrection. Services from Saints' church; sermon by Joseph Arber, assisted by Reverend T. M. Bell.

RYNEARSON.—Francis Edward Ryneason died at Muscatine, Iowa, May 3, 1914, of lingering heart weakness. He and wife united with the church October 21, 1894. He leaves companion, one grown son. Since two years ago his daughter Jennie awaited him in paradise. He was a good, kind neighbor, a faithful Christian, a loving husband and father. He will be greatly missed by the little band of Saints. Funeral in Bloomington church, in charge of James McKiernan, assisted by C. G. Dykes.

Lord, give to me the faithful heart,
That never will from thee depart;
A heart that's trustful, tender, kind,
Courageous, pure, serene, resigned;
A heart in which the Christ is guest,
That's loyal to the highest, best!

—James Ramage.

unique among the recreation and wonder spots of the world, was set aside by the Government "For the Benefit and Enjoyment of the People" for all time, primarily because it contains by far the largest and most complete collection of natural phenomena in the entire world. There are geysers of every known variety, falls twice the height of Niagara, the largest lake at its altitude in the world (excepting one in Peru); while to see the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone is an epoch in anyone's life.

The Burlington offers you excellent service to any of the Yellowstone Park gateways.

Come in and let me give you a fine folder on Yellowstone Park and tell you how easily and cheaply you can get there.

Editorial

ANOTHER CRITICISM.

EDITORIAL POLICY; COLORADO LABOR WAR; SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

We have received a communication from a certain brother who takes exception to the editorial policy of the HERALD. Some may think that the communication is not worthy of extended notice. But as it represents in spirit at least a limited number of similar letters, we have decided to reproduce it here, together with our explanations. For convenience we number the paragraphs:

Editors of HERALD,

1. Sirs: I see in HERALD of April 29 a piece entitled, "Criticism." Why is it our paper has to sound the notes of the master class? Why not sound the notes of the lowly Nazarene?

2. You speak of the vicious and indolent tramps that infest California during the winter months. Oh, ye judge! Who gave you the right to judge?

3. Why not tell the HERALD readers you are fighting Socialism? Don't go behind the bush, but come out in the open. Turn the HERALD into a genuine progressive paper. That's what you want to preach. Socialism is doing more for suffering humanity than all the churches combined. That's why you want to fight them. It teaches what you ought to teach but don't claim any inspiration. It claims to come to the aid of fallen man in a financial way.

4. See how you gave the account of the Ludlow massacre; made it as light on John D. Rockefeller as you could.

5. If you are going to treat on politics in the HERALD, please give Socialism justice. We are watching you.

A BROTHER.

In reviewing this letter by paragraphs we will say that the HERALD does not sound the notes of the master class. It does sound the notes of the lowly Nazarene, beginning with the first great keynote to rich and poor, master and servant alike, "Ye must be born again. . . . Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom."

We have not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God, beginning with the first great principle of personal regeneration and continuing on even to the divine plan of social equality and justice revealed in the word of God.

In the second paragraph the brother asks who made us a judge, though in every other paragraph he judges us. God made us a judge. God makes every man a judge. His restrictions are, "Judge not unrighteously, that ye be not judged; but judge righteous judgment." (Matthew 7:2, Inspired Version.) God gives all men brains, some more, some less, and he wishes them to be used, but righteously. Anyone who has lived in California as many years as the writer has lived there and has kept his eyes open knows that a certain percentage of the unemployed that flood that State during the winter months are vicious by nature and idle by preference. These should not be confused with the unfortunate and honest man out of employment and idle by compulsion. Any man who attempts a study of the economic situation and willfully ignores the presence of the vicious class in California and elsewhere is a blind man butting his head against the stone wall of facts. The depraved and idle present one phase of the problem; the worthy, naturally industrious unemployed present another phase of the problem. The problem is not solved by denying, Christian Science-wise, the existence of one of its parts. Even in the eternal ages some will remain "filthy still"; they can not be cleansed now by calling them clean.

In the fourth paragraph the brother touches on the recent Colorado labor war. Here, curiously enough, as in other paragraphs of his letter, he exercises the function of judging that he wished to deny us. We have no desire to minimize the horrors of the bloody and shameful field of Ludlow, where men with machine guns and rifles slew their brothers, and women and children were burned and suffocated in their tent homes. So far as John D. Rockefeller, jr., is concerned, we feel that he and his fellow mine operators made a fatal blunder when they refused to arbitrate, when they persistently refused months ago at the beginning of the trouble to meet the labor leaders even in an informal way and discuss their grievances. A just cause need not fear arbitration. Arbitration will be forced upon them sooner or later. The State will be compelled to arbitrate. Already it is said this strike has cost Colorado one million dollars for maintenance of the militia alone. This does not include property destroyed and loss and inconvenience to the industries of the entire State, said to exceed twelve million dollars, more potent argument with some than the loss of life. No one can predict the expense to be incurred by the Federal Government which has now taken control of the situation. Those who have refused to arbitrate may soon be compelled to choose between drastic state regulation and state ownership. Society will not permit such a bloody, expensive, and useless war to go on without an attempt to stop it.

We may go a step further and express an opinion on a vital question involved in this labor struggle. In doing so, the writer speaks for himself and does not wish to involve any other person or persons in the expression of his opinion. The question is economic, not political. The miners demanded the right to organize. The mine operators refused to recognize any organization formed, and practically prohibit organization, as it is the uniform testimony of the miners that any man suspected of union sympathies is immediately "sent down the canyon" (discharged) by the pit boss. The men claim only to be fighting for the right to organize and for recognition of their organization. The Outlook states it thus:

Chief of all, however, is the injustice of the very situation itself—a group of allied, mighty, highly organized corporations dealing with a great mass of men who these organizations insist shall not be allowed to become effectively organized. It is this particular form of social injustice which is the efficient cause of the private war between the miners and the employing corporations.

That is the crux of the entire situation. That is the one question on which they have been unable to agree. It seems clear to us that as conditions are in the world to-day, labor is compelled to organize. It is a matter of life and death. John Mitchell years ago set forth the fact clearly and succinctly that the individual laborer confronted by organized capital has no fair show in the labor market.

The mine operators say that they will concede every point contended for,—reasonable hours, fair wages, semimonthly payments, checkweighing, etc.,—excepting the one point of recognizing the union. But there's the rub. Suppose one month later or one year later they violate these pledges, as they have persistently done in the past. In such an event, if the individual laborer protests he has no redress; he is told that if he is not satisfied he can go, or as the expression is in Colorado, "It is down the canyon for you." A hundred men are ready to take his place. But if two thousand or more well organized men protest, they will be heard. And that we believe is the true reason why the mine owners oppose organization. We take little stock in their suspiciously altruistic and alleged burning desire to protect the rights of unorganized labor. It is easier to subdue, control, and exploit unorganized labor. The mine operators themselves are most thoroughly organized. By what rule of logic and justice do they refuse to treat with organized miners?

Of course there are two sides to this question, and it is alleged that organized labor is guilty of extortion, greed, and graft, and many excesses and abuses of power. But so is organized capital. And we may as well recognize that it is just as impossible to go back to unorganized labor as it is to go back to unorganized capital. Here again we face facts, and nothing is gained by denial.

The conflict in Colorado is but one of the signs of the times. We have no cause to believe that the great class struggle of which it is a part will draw to an immediate close. These conditions were predicted years ago. He who foretold these conditions also pointed out the avenue of escape for the faithful Saints. We see the prediction coming true; we have no reason to suppose that the proposed method of escape in Zion will fail if we do our part. In the struggle we may expect both capital and labor to do many things that we can not approve of.

In the third and fifth paragraphs the brother raises the question of Socialism. The HERALD has not made war on Socialism, behind the bush or otherwise. Neither has the HERALD advocated Socialism. The HERALD is a religious journal; obviously we could not turn it into a Socialist sheet, as the brother evidently would have us do. In this, however, as we know, he is not supported by thoughtful members of the church who are Socialists.

We could not make the HERALD a Socialist paper if we wished to; and do not wish to do so if we could.

However, when the subject has been discussed in the HERALD we have treated both sides alike, usually publishing articles of equal length, the one for and the other against. On several occasions we have advertised for and published articles by representative Socialists in order that the matter might be discussed on equitable terms, and our readers secure a fair understanding of the situation. Leading Socialists within the church have congratulated us on the justice of our stand, and the editor of a Socialist journal joined them in this, so we are not much disturbed by the insinuations of the brother. He simply has not observed, or observing has failed to understand.

The HERALD can not enter the field of politics. It can not plead the cause of Republican, Democrat, Progressive, or Socialist. It should not be asked to do so. Our work as a church is peculiar to itself and must continue along the lines that God has indicated.

GRACELAND EXTENSION INSTITUTE.

During the General Conference, two meetings were held by those interested in educational work in general, and the following constitution was adopted:

CONSTITUTION OF THE GRACELAND EXTENSION INSTITUTE.

1. Object. That an institute be organized for the purpose of making available a systematic arrangement for extension work and home study courses in educational, scientific, and philosophical subjects. A further purpose shall be to establish extension centers and local institutes at reunions and other church gatherings as the time and place and nature of the gatherings will permit. The organization shall be called Graceland Extension Institute.

2. Officers. That the officers of the institute shall be a director, an associate director, and a registrar. These officers shall be elected annually at the meeting of the institute.

(a) The director shall take the general oversight and direction of the work of the institute.

(b) The associate director shall be a counselor and assistant of the director and shall have direct charge and supervision of the work of the fellows of the institute.

(c) The registrar shall do the work of enrolling members, assigning courses and keeping record of the work done by the members. He shall also keep a record of the proceedings of the institute.

(d) The director, associate director and registrar shall constitute the managing board of the institute and shall be authorized to do such work, not otherwise provided for, as is necessary to carry out the purposes of the institute.

3. Membership. The membership of the institute shall be composed of fellows and matriculated members.

(a) Fellows shall be persons selected by the managing board to outline reading courses and prepare courses of study and to supervise the work of members. Other persons may be elected fellows of the institute at the annual meetings upon nomination of the managing board.

(b) Matriculated members shall be those persons who are enrolled by the registrar for the pursuit of approved courses of study.

(c) Matriculated membership in the institute shall be for one year; provided, however, that the time for the completion of courses may be extended by the registrar in cases where the members are unable on account of sickness or other good reason to complete the work within a year.

(d) Fellows and matriculated members may be enrolled for one or more courses of study with the approval of the registrar. The fee for enrollment in each course shall be two and a half dollars, or one dollar for conference appointees, and others on ministerial basis. Fees shall not be required of fellows who apply for enrollment in any course.

4. Meetings. The annual meeting of the institute and any other necessary meetings shall be called subject to the arrangements of the managing board.

It will be noted that the work of the institute is primarily for those who are not able to attend a regular school, and who wish to qualify themselves for better service to humanity and to the church.

The plan is to secure the help of those who have secured a liberal education and ask them to share their knowledge, as fellows, with all the rest of us. An effort will be made to select individuals who have spent years in preparation in their chosen field and whose advice and suggestion should be valuable to the student. They will work without pay, but may, themselves, take studies in the institute without registration fee.

The courses will be handled principally as reading courses, texts being suggested, with a few notes by way of explanation and direction in reading. Each student will be expected to pursue those courses, only, for which his previous study and experience qualifies him. All preliminary correspondence, registration and assignment to course will be through the office of the registrar, but a student will work under the personal advice and direction of the fellow in charge of the course. It is also planned that, so far as possible, extension lectures be arranged for at public gatherings of the church throughout the year in connection with the reading courses. An examination will be given, if desired, when the text is finished and credit given for each course completed.

The aim is to offer as wide a choice of courses as possible and in this spirit the following are suggested:

A. ENGLISH.

1. English grammar.
2. Composition and rhetoric.
3. English classics.
4. Public speaking.
5. Journalism.

B. HISTORY.

1. United States history.
2. Ancient history.
3. Medieval history.
4. European history.
5. Archæology.

C. SCIENCE.

1. Physiology.
2. Hygiene.
3. Dietetics.
4. Household economics.
5. Agriculture.
6. Astronomy.
7. Zoology.
8. Physical geography.
9. Geology.

D. SOCIAL SCIENCES.

1. Commercial geography.
2. Economics.
3. Sociology.
4. Socialism.
5. Cooperation.
6. Communism.

E. LAW.

- #### F. LANGUAGES.
1. German.
  2. Latin.
  3. French.
  4. Spanish.
  5. Hebrew.

G. PHILOSOPHY.

1. Logic.
2. Ethics.
3. History of philosophy.
4. Psychology.

H. EDUCATION.

1. Principles of education.
2. Methods.
3. History of education.

However, if a sufficient number request any other course an effort will be made to provide for it at once.

Anyone desiring to enroll will write to the registrar for a registration blank and will fill it out completely. We should have the name and address together with a statement of school work completed and of the extent and nature of reading done since, also statement of the texts subsequently consulted. We recognize that men older in years and the men in the missionary field have gained considerable knowledge in addition to that gained in school work. The very element of traveling; hearing and delivering lectures, of visiting art galleries, factories, museums and the like can not but have a broadening effect. The more thoroughly we can get in touch with your needs the better we can help you. It is for this reason that we ask for the age as well as the course desired, especially in the case of those who are under age, as the work is not intended to take the place of regular school and college attendance, for those who can take work in residence. However, the aim will be to have the work as nearly equivalent to work done in residence as is possible. In sending application blank, the enrollment fee of two dollars and fifty cents for each course should be sent with the application (or one dollar in the case of those laboring for the church on a ministerial basis.)

Make all remittances payable and send all communications to the registrar, C. B. Woodstock, Lamoni, Iowa.

F. M. SMITH, Director.

S. A. BURGESS, Associate Director.

C. B. WOODSTOCK, Registrar.

CURRENT EVENTS.

FRIEDMAN CURE FAILURE.—The New York Board of Health has published a report on the Friedman treatment of tuberculosis in which they state that fewer recoveries have occurred than would be expected under ordinary hospital treatment. Of seventy-six cases treated last year, thirty have been lost sight of. Of the remaining forty-six, twelve died, twenty-one are still in hospitals, seven are attending clinics for further treatment, one is being privately treated, five seem to have recovered. The permanent good or harm done the patients who seem to have improved can be determined, say physicians, only after further time. This report indicates that the Friedman treatment is a failure.

WOULD RECALL JEWS.—As an indication of the change in feeling toward the Jew, the Spanish government, by developing a center of Jewish culture in Madrid, is seeking to recall the descendants of the Jews expelled from Spain in 1492 by Ferdinand and Isabella. These people, known as the Sephardic or Spaniole Jews, live in Northern Africa and Eastern Europe.

PROHIBITION CONSIDERATION POSTPONED.—It is reported that antisaloon leaders have agreed to a postponement by Congress of consideration of the proposed action looking to national prohibition of the manufacture, sale, or transportation in the United States of alcoholics for beverage purposes, until the December session.

DEVIL IN BUSINESS.—In speaking of certain transactions of the New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad, and in explanation thereof, Mr. Charles S.

Mellen, former president of this road, in testifying before the Interstate Commerce Commission on the 14th is reported as having said: "I wanted to reach the people that it was necessary to reach; I wanted to reach the Devil or anybody else who could amend the charter." This standard, or lack of standard, explains the policies of certain other of the financiers of the country who labor for profits without regard to the rights of others, or their responsibilities to society.

MEXICAN WAR.—On the 13th the Constitutionalists, after terrific fighting and heavy losses on both sides, took Tampico, the Federalist gunboats withdrawing and the soldiery retreating toward San Luis Potosi. This gives the Constitutionalists the largest Mexican port after Vera Cruz. The last unit of the Constitutionalist army under the immediate command of General Villa is reported as having left Torreon on the 14th, accompanied by the general. Villa's plans seem not to be definitely known. Some reports say he will join an attack on Saltillo. The steady advance of the Constitutionalists on the north and the threatenings of Zapata on the south, together with the lack of support on the part of certain of Huerta's former advisers and the uncertainty of heretofore loyal Federalist army officials, to say nothing of curtailed financial resources, places the Huerta regime in an extremely precarious position.

MEXICO AND UNITED STATES.—The United States lines were not advanced about Vera Cruz as anticipated last week. Instead General Funston, as is reported, to meet the threats of the Federalists shifted his lines to more advantageous positions. The United States navy has taken possession of Lobos Island, off the eastern coast of Mexico and south of Tampico. United States authorities explain that this occupancy is not military. The lighthouse there was being deserted by the Mexican keepers, said to be the only inhabitants of the island, and the operation of the lighthouse was considered of greatest importance to navigation. With the Constitutionalist forces occupying Tampico and fighting discontinued, valuable oil wells in the vicinity operated by United States and English capital are thought to be safe from destruction. The operators are urged by Constitutionlists to return to their holdings there. At this writing the mediators and the Mexican representatives are on their way to Niagara Falls, Canada, the place of meeting of the mediation conference. Justice J. R. Lamar of the Supreme Court, and Frederick W. Lehmann, former Solicitor General, represent the United States. At the request of the Mexican representatives, that they may rest after their journey and before actual negotiations, the opening of the conference has been postponed until the 20th.

ETERNAL LIFE.

And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.—John 17:3.

To define eternal life and cause men to know what it comprehends, is one of the impossibilities, so far as the wisdom of man is able to explain. It is not the object of this brief article to attempt such a task, but rather to point out some of the means which would lead to that condition mentioned by the Master in that most wonderful prayer as uttered in the garden just before his crucifixion.

Eternal life is more than simply to exist. While the world has defined the word eternal to mean without end, yet in its true definition it comprehends more than the finite mind understands without being inspired by the Spirit of Christ. The finite can not comprehend the infinite without divine aid. Neither can man comprehend God only as it may be given him from above.

MAN; HIS LIMITATIONS AND POSSIBILITIES.

Man is a wonderful creature. When we reflect as to what he has done by the intelligence with which he has been endowed by his Creator, we are almost led to exclaim that there is no limit to his possibilities. But the Master gives us distinctly to understand that the world has not known the Father, neither the Son. Man has bridged the chasms in the mountains; he flies through the air; he transmits intelligence for hundreds of miles without visible means of communication; he measures the distance to the heavenly bodies; he can compute time to the fraction of a second; he can produce that which is even more precious than gold, by chemical action, that which is known as radium; he takes the air we breathe and by putting it under pressure produces that which will freeze mercury; yet with his own wisdom he can not find out God. Men of world-wide reputation who are known for their inventive skill and knowledge in the scientific world are dwarfs when it comes to the knowledge they possess in regard to the One who has so richly blessed them with their wonderful powers of mind.

The gospel is the only means by which the world can ever come into contact with the true source of life by which we can know God and his Son Jesus Christ. "Life and immortality were brought to light," says Paul, "through the gospel." The individual who accepts the gospel, then, is in possession of life, and so long as he continues in the gospel of Christ he retains that which will enable him to fully know God.

To say that we now fully comprehend God is to state that which would make us equal with God in wisdom and light. The Savior prayed that his true disciples might "be one," as he and his Father were one. When we consider the "oneness" of the Father and Son we at once realize they were not only one in purpose, but also in every sense that the word indicates in its broadest terms.

When man was created he was endowed with all the potential attributes of his creator. So we find in man that which if properly developed will produce wisdom, knowledge, love, patience, until he becomes like Christ in every respect so far as perfect manhood is concerned. Man was created in the image of God, not only in physical appearance, but in that which would enable him to become like God, comprehending things as God comprehends them, loving the things that he loves, and hating the things he hates.

When we start out in the religious life we are not expected to be as perfectly developed as we will become later on in life, that is we do not as fully comprehend the gospel and what it will do for us as we will after we have partaken of that which it brings to us in causing us to know of the powers of the world to come, instilling light and truth into our darkened minds. It is true, however, that our motives and thoughts should be, and must be pure from the very beginning. Even the Master "increased in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man." So we, too, must expect to improve, and day by day become more and more like Christ until we reach that condition mentioned by Paul in the language, "And of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." If we ever expect to dwell in the presence of God we must reach that perfect state, even that perfection that Christ reached.

John in his first epistle, 3:2, declares, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him: for we shall see him as he is."

Our Savior prayed that his Father would give unto those who believed on his name the same glory or intelligence that he possessed with the Father before the world was. If we are the recipients of the blessing here asked for by Christ, then we shall be like him, not simply in personal appearance, but in disposition, in thought, in everything that goes to make a perfect man or woman.

SALVATION.

One of the questions that confronts the race is, What is salvation? Some in answer to this question would tell us that it is living a sinless life, which would be true in a limited sense. But to take it in its broadest sense, salvation is a perfect development of the Christ character. In Moses we have an individual who was noted for his meekness. In Abraham we have the principle of faith well developed. In Job we have an exhibition of patience. In Solomon we find great wisdom. But in Christ we find all these attributes equally developed, and so he is no more noted for one of these traits of character than he is for another. He was perfectly developed in every attribute. So if we become like Christ we shall be perfect in wisdom, perfect in knowledge, perfect in patience, perfect in all our motives. In fact, we will lack nothing. All that which is objectionable must be eliminated from our lives so that which is pure and holy may have place therein.

Our development depends on the effort we make to attain that high degree of spirituality to which the Master attained. The Lord has told us in these latter days to improve on the opportunities he has placed before us, as will be seen by the following:

Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understandeth one another, and both are edified and rejoice together; and that which doth not edify, is not of God, and is darkness: that which is of God is light, and he that receiveth light and continueth in God, receiveth more light, and that light groweth brighter and brighter, until the perfect day.—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 6.

Here we clearly comprehend that we are to grow until we come to that condition mentioned by Paul when he says:

For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. . . . For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then [in the perfect day] shall I know even as also I am known.

Habakkuk, the prophet, in his writings mentions that perfect time, for he tells us, "For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."—Habakkuk 2: 14.

It is true, we may obtain a knowledge of Christ even before that time, which is to be desired. Holy men of old had it revealed unto them by the Holy Ghost that he was the promised Messiah. Among those who received this knowledge were John the Baptist, Peter, Paul, Simeon, and many others. This truth that he was the Christ was made known unto them by the Holy Ghost, for Paul tells us that "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." (1 Corinthians 12: 3.)

The Savior himself lays down the law even before Paul speaks, the means which shall be employed by the Father in revealing himself and his Son to the world. Hear him:

All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.—Matthew 12: 27.

As the finite can not comprehend the infinite without divine aid, so no man can know the Father except it be revealed by the Holy Spirit from above.

Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the Spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.—1 Corinthians 2: 9-11.

If we reach the standard of excellence we must receive that Spirit which enables us to grow in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. That growth must be normal and gradual, and when we fully comprehend the Father and the Son then we are in full possession of eternal life.

In 2 Corinthians 3: 17, 18, we have a most beautiful thought expressed by Paul, and which should appeal to every honest-hearted individual. He says:

Now the Lord is that Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. But we all, with open face beholding as in glass the glory [or intelligence] of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory [or intelligence] to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

Here we again discover that our growth is to be gradual, the result of our receiving the Spirit of Christ which is the true source from whence we obtain a knowledge of truth. When we define truth we find it is a "knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they are to come." (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4.)

When we come into that exalted condition in which God is willing to give unto every man knowledge by which he can and does know all things even as they are known to God himself, then and not until then will our joy be full. No individual can be happy in an unlimited sense when he is in ignorance of that which produces happiness. When we know all things of the past, comprehend all things of the present, and are able to look down the stream of time and know things as if they were present, then there will be nothing more we could learn that would produce real happiness. Then we will be heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, which means salvation in the celestial kingdom of our God.

THE OPPOSITION OF IGNORANCE.

The greatest opposition that has ever been urged against truth has been by those who were in ignorance of what truth really was or is. Those who have always stood for the Master and his work were those who were willing to obtain light and truth and receive benefit from the knowledge thus received. The wise man has said, "Fools despise knowledge," which is true in every age of time. There are those who will never reach the celestial kingdom of God for the reason they are not willing to accept the law of life and liberty. They are not prepared for that condition in which God and Christ will dwell. If salvation is a perfect development of the Christ character, which we prefer to believe it is, how can we develop that character unless we know Christ? We now can understand why the Master made use of that statement in his prayer: "And this is life eternal, that we might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

The more we comprehend God and his Son the more we love them. The more we comprehend the truth as proclaimed by the Son of God the more we love it and the faster will be our growth. Peter in his second epistle 1: 4-9 tells us how to live so that we may obtain a perfect knowledge of Christ. He says, verse four, "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature."

VITAL QUALITIES.

Virtue is one of the qualities which must be resident in man. Without it man could not become like his Master. Faith as another vital principle will if properly cultivated grow into knowledge. If we possess knowledge it will cause us to be temperate in all things. If Christlike, we will also show in our lives that principle so prominent in the work of Christ—patience. Without this trait of character we would become unstable, irritable, and peevish. Another trait of the divine character is godliness or God-like-ness; doing things as God would do them, loving the things he loves, and hating the things he hates. With these principles well developed, together with brotherly kindness, we shall be "neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Thus are our bodies made a fit abode for the indwelling of that Holy Spirit that brings knowledge, not only of Christ but all things intended for the happiness of man. But says the apostle, "He that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins."

Just to the extent that we develop the character of Christ, just to that extent will we be saved in the hereafter, in the different degrees of glory the Lord has prepared for those who have put on the whole armor of Christ, or those who have been less valiant in their warfare. If men were taken into the presence of the Maker of heaven and earth without due preparation, they would be in a state of misery, for they could not adapt themselves to that environment.

LIFE; CORRESPONDENCE WITH ENVIRONMENT.

Mr. Drummond, in that excellent work known as Natural Law in the Spiritual World, tells us that life is correspondence with our environment: while death is the exact opposite, that is, we are not in correspondence with our environment.

This law applies to man not only in the probationary state, but also in the hereafter. To be in the presence of God when we are not like him is death. Just to the extent that we are not like God, just to that extent are we removed from his presence. Just to that extent that we are banished from the presence of God, just to that extent the second death has power over us. So do those who inherit the star glory suffer more than those who are privileged to inherit the terrestrial or moon glory. Neither of these classes just mentioned is prepared for the celestial glory, for they do not comprehend God. The glory of God is intelligence, and these glories differ just as men differ in intelligence. If those who inherit the moon glory were placed in the celestial glory they would be in a state of misery, for they are not adapted to that environment. God is so good to humanity that he works for the greatest amount of happiness that can come to the individual. These different glories show the great wisdom manifested by the Creator in his preparing for the hereafter, so that each person may enjoy all that he is able to enjoy.

THE COMMANDMENTS.

Christ received a fullness of all truth; so we have exhibited to us in the gospel as taught and lived by him that which brings us in perfect rapport with God. No man can receive a fullness unless he keeps all the commandments of Christ. Moroni presents in very simple yet definite language the steps that lead to salvation in its fullest sense, or that which is life eternal:

And the first-fruits of repentance is baptism; and baptism cometh by faith, unto the fulfilling the commandments; and the fulfilling the commandments bringeth remission of sins; and the remission of sins bringeth meekness, and lowliness of heart; and because of meekness and lowliness of heart, cometh the visitation of the Holy Ghost, which Comforter filleth with hope and perfect love, which love endureth by diligence unto prayer, until the end shall come, when all the saints shall dwell with God.—Book of Moroni 8: 29.

Certainly if all these requirements are complied with men will come to a knowledge of their Redeemer. We should be able to see in our lives that growth which indicates that we are becoming more and more like our Savior in spirituality and knowledge. Not until we do come to that condition can we be saved with a perfect salvation. The Lord has instructed us to get knowledge by prayer and also by study. Let us remember that which is to be desired above all else is a true knowledge of Christ and his work. To this end let us labor.

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

You can not dream yourself into a character; you must hammer and forge yourself into one.—Selected.

THE WAY TO TRUE SATISFACTION.

I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness.—
Psalm 17: 15.

Beautiful expression from the lips of David, the tenderest of poets. I shall not be satisfied until I awake with thy likeness, should be the true feeling in the heart of every Saint. Sudden, complete salvation has no place in true Christianity. A man that is satisfied will not likely be disturbed by his neighbors, they will let him sleep on.

Contentment means death, or, possibly, perfection. Christ knew the danger of false contentment, therefore he declared, "I came not to send peace, but a sword." There may be a time for perfect peace and contentment, but not yet. The rumbling thunder must awaken the elements; then follows the refreshing shower. Our country's greatness was once threatened by division, the clash of arms, and the smoke of battle. But when the roar of battle ceased and the smoke cleared away, the pedestal was cemented and became the foundation for a greater nation!

UNREST BREEDS ACTIVITY.

We should not surmise, "apostate," "heretic," every time we meet a doubting Thomas! His question-marks may be the anchors that will ultimately save us from the destructive storms of life. His interrogations may be the fishing hooks that will bring from the unseen those stepping-stones that lead upward into the refreshing atmosphere of the Infinite.

We need men to-day who have been up in the mount and talked with God! We need men who will, from the fruitage of their experiences, help us solve the problems that hinder our progress, and assist us in making safe anchorage in the time of storm. To doubt is human. It is the index to life. Ella Wheeler Wilcox poetically expresses my thought:

Be not content; contentment means inaction;
The growing soul aches on its upward quest;
Satiety is twin to satisfaction;
All great achievements spring from life's unrest.

The tiny roots, deep in the dark mold hiding,
Would never bless the earth with leaf and flower
Were it not an inborn restlessness abiding,
In seed and germ to stir them with its power.

Were man contented with his lot for ever,
He had not sought strange seas with sails unfurled,
And the vast wonder of our shores had never Dawned on the gaze of an admiring world.

Prize what is yours, but be not quite contented;
There is a healthful restlessness of soul,
By which a mighty purpose is augmented,
In urging men to reach a higher goal.

So when the restless impulse rises, driving
Your calm content before it, do not grieve;
It is the upward reaching and striving
Of the God in you to achieve, achieve.

The great revival at Jerusalem; the glorious ingathering of souls; the Pentecostal blessings; the breaking of bread and the having of all things common, caused such happiness and peace for a while that the apostles, prophets, and elders seemed to be contented to stay there for ever. But they must be reminded of their duty even though it took "the stoning of Stephen" and "a tornado of persecutions" to do it! They seemed to have forgotten that the commission was to "go into all the world" after the Pentecostal endowment. Jesus had said, Be content—tarry until,—there is a limit to everything!

Romanism once ruled both church and state. Her rule was tyrannical. Luther might have remained contented and enjoyed the pleasure of sin for a season. But being the man of the hour, he stepped aside from the masses. His name went down in history; his body joined the elements from whence it came but he lives to-day. Luther on his way to Worms was reminded of the fate of Huss and warned not to go. He replied, "Huss was burnt, but not the truth with him. I will go into Worms, though there be as many devils aiming at me as there are tiles upon the housetop." He was not contented or satisfied. He despised corruption and brain-slavery! God bless him for his fearless work in breaking the chains of gross darkness.

A boy—tired of human creeds and inventions—sought wisdom from God. The heavens spoke; the church was organized; the ensign was unfurled. She has had to meet the armies of Rome and the Reformation combined, but to-day she stands on the pedestal of truth. Knowing this, my brethren, and knowing that Christ shed his blood, refuted the demons of earth, and drove back the imps of hell, how zealous we should be in good works. How humble and earnest we should be in the conflict. Step by step may the advance be made, till every foe is conquered, the victory won, and the Christ crowned King of kings and Lord of lords!

REDEMPTION THROUGH SERVICE.

From childhood I have heard Saints talk and sing of the "redemption of Zion," the "millennium reign," and the "celestial city of our God." In my imagination I have pictured it with as much glory and splendor as I possibly could. I have longed for it, looked for it, and prayed for it, but I now ask myself and all concerned, Have we labored together for it? It is pleasant to read John's picture of heaven with all of its beauties. It is easy to become enraptured and dream of the ecstasy of walking with God and meeting Jesus and the Saints of old!

We can, when in such an exalted state of mind, freely cry out, "My Lord, I will die for thee!"

Thus reads one of Ernest Crosby's poems:

So he died for his faith. That is fine—
More than most of us do.
But, say, can you add to that line
That he lived for it, too?

In his death he bore witness at last
As a martyr to truth.
Did his life do the same in the past
From the days of his youth?

It is easy to die. Men have died.
For a wish or a whim—
From bravado or passion or pride.
Was it harder for him?

But to live—every day to live out
All the truth that he dreamt.
While his friends met his conduct with doubt,
And the world with contempt.

Was it thus that he plodded ahead,
Never turning aside?
Then we'll talk of the life that he led;
Never mind how he died.

Good thoughts, though God accept them, yet toward men are little better than good dreams except they be put in action.—Bacon.

It is easy to stand amid the throngs and sing, I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord; I'll do what you want me to do; I'll be what you want me to be; but it is another thing to prove ourselves. Talk is cheap. Lip service is plentiful. To be able to declare the existence of "the true body of Christ" and a theory of "equality" is beautiful. But if the living testimony gives the theory the lie, though we speak with the eloquence of angels it will be as a sound from brass, or a tinkling cymbal.

Some Saints love to hear sermons on the organization of the church, and the initiative principles. They would rather hear the old repeated than the new that requires solemn thinking and forward movement. They have not fully comprehended the injunction, "Go on unto perfection."

Too many of us are like the little boy when he heard the complete story of the rich man and Lazarus. The teacher asked him which he would rather be? He replied, "I would like to be the rich man while here and Lazarus in the world to come!"

David had sufficient experience and knowledge to know that man could not live to himself here and "awake in the likeness of God." He knew that sleep and satisfaction in this life would not reflect the image of our Lord in the next.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox says in her beautiful poem, "The fault of the age":

We crave the gain; but despise the getting.
We covet the prize, yet shrink from the winning.
We grasp for pleasure we have not won.

You remember the two young men who wanted a seat on the throne so near the Master. They needed to learn that the avenue which leads to all valuable prizes is a difficult one. However, invited persecution is not godly.

Do not go out in search of crucifixions, but when God permits them to reach you without having sought them, they need never pass without your deriving profit from them.—Fenelon.

In true service pain becomes a pleasure. Some people spend hours of agony in doing what they are pleased to call their "duty."

The most valuable results of education is the ability to make yourself do the things you ought to do, when it ought to be done, whether you like to do it or not.—Huxley.

However, the task that to-day is a burden, may to-morrow be a delight. When I first started in the ministry, I thought that "taking charge of a meeting" or "attempting to preach" was one of the heaviest burdens ever. I worried till I was often sick. I begged to be excused whenever possible. I thought I was having more trouble than anyone in the world. Encouraging words from my fellow laborers, and recognition from heaven began to make my burden lighter. The work I dreaded then, to-day I love.

The word of God is literally alive with the word love. Duty is seldom found upon its pages. One writer has said, "Duty, like a pump, has to be forced; but love is spontaneous like a fountain."

Men who preach and women who teach because it is a pleasure, and they who are paying their tithing because they love to do so, are the ones who are enjoying Zion and will find happiness in heaven. "Zion is the pure in heart." "The pure in heart shall see God." They shall awake in his likeness.

Joy is a prize unbought, and is freest, purest in its flow when it comes unsought. No getting into heaven as a place will compass it. You must carry it with you, else it is not there. You must have it in you, as the music of a well-ordered soul, the fire of a holy purpose, the welling up out of the central depth of eternal springs that hide their waters.—H. Bushnell.

OUR EXAMPLE AND LEADER.

"I am the way," says Jesus. If we desire to awake in his likeness we must follow him. Those feet that trod the desert and hills only to carry a message of love, were pinioned to the cross; those hands that fed the hungry, blessed the infants, and healed the sick were nailed to the tree; that head that thought only pure thoughts was crowned with thorns; and, alas, his noble, tender, loving heart that went out in sympathy for the world was pierced by the cruel spear!

We may never suffer as he had to suffer. But, I wonder, can we imitate him in service? Can we, if called upon, deny ourselves, take up our cross, and follow our Lord? The glory of Jesus' life was its absolute faithfulness. He did always what pleased his Father. Because he was "faithful and true" to the infinite plan, men could not destroy him; the grave could not contain him; and the gates of hell could not prevail against him. He arose conqueror of all, and ascended triumphantly to the right hand of his Father. The beauty of it all is, he is alive to-day, not only in heaven, but also in the lives of men. When the clouds hang low the light of his noble life leads us on; when the breakers threaten our life he stills the storm. He has been leading men to victory all through the ages ago. He has stood the storm and criticism of most twenty centuries, and to-day the light of his life is as bright as of yore.

Were a star quenched on high,
For ages would its light,
Still traveling downward from the sky,
Shine on our mortal sight.
So when a great man dies,
For years beyond our ken
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men.

—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

I do not believe that David thought we could live a careless, worthless life here, ask forgiveness, fall asleep, and awake with the likeness of our Maker. So may we imitate our Lord, live a life of usefulness and devotion, be satisfied only with the best service to our God.

"It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him."—1 John 3:2. O. R. MILLER.

CONDITIONS IN COLORADO STRIKE REGION.

[Conditions in the mining district of Colorado and under which the miners there are required to labor, together with the natural outcome of such conditions, are graphically set forth in an article in the Outlook for May 9, under the heading, "The strike war in Colorado." This report is furnished by a special Outlook correspondent, Mr. W. T. Davis, a member of one of the militia companies called out. He shows an acquaintance with the conditions referred to and discusses them with a frankness and fairness to inspire confidence. We reproduce that part of the article of Mr. Davis under the subheading, "The conditions in the strike region."—EDITORS.]

The greater part of the strike field lies in the counties of Las Animas and Huerfano. In these counties there are approximately forty mining villages with a total population of some thirty thousand, eighty-one per cent of whom are foreign-speaking people, principally Italians, Mexicans, and Slavs.

These towns are almost entirely cut off from the social life of the outside world. The camps are situated in the canyons between the foothills of the front range of the Rocky Mountains. To the west are the high ranges, to the east the almost uninhabited plains. The mining villages are from ten to thirty miles from the principal towns, and for the most part are connected with them by branch railways which furnish very poor and very irregular train service. One group of three towns may be taken as typical of the isolated condition of the entire coal field. Tabasco, the nearest to the railway, is two and one half miles from the station and is situated in a narrow gorge. At half-mile intervals up the gorge are Berwynd and Tollerberg. In the three towns live some thirteen hundred people. They are so closely shut in by the hills that only two or three rows of houses are possible. It is twenty-five miles to a flower, a tree, save the scrub pinon high up in the hills, a lawn, a park, a farm, or a running stream. The same distance must be traveled to purchase a newspaper, a book, to attend a play, or to enjoy access to a reading room. Equally inaccessible are the dentist, the priest, and the lawyer. There is only one place of public resort—the saloon. Once a month a traveling evangelist or a Jesuit missionary visits the camp for a day and returns to his headquarters. Occasionally an itinerant moving-picture man gives a "show" in the schoolhouse. Thus we see that here is as nearly a moral and social desert as it is possible to imagine in a civilized country.

The character of the population itself has a profound effect upon conditions in the villages and the whole coal mine region. The per cent of illiteracy is about six times as great as that of the native whites of the State. Many of the people know nothing of America or American institutions, having been transferred from immigrant ships to trains and transported directly to the coal fields.

The houses provided by the companies are nearly all shabby, ugly, and small. There are some houses with four rooms, even a few with five, but houses of two or three rooms are far more numerous. In the rear of many of these may be seen sheds built by tenants for the purpose of providing more room. These are built of bits of board, building paper, scraps of old sheet iron, and such material. These bear silent testimony to the pitifully inadequate housing as well as add to the general ugliness of the surroundings. In one town the only boarding house for the single men of the Slavic population is the second floor of a tumble-down saloon building. There is not a beautiful or artistic building in or near any of these towns.

There is absolutely no sanitation worthy of the name. Refuse from kitchen, sick chamber, laundry room and stable is dumped promiscuously in and near the camp. Standing in the very center of Tabasco, the writer looked about, and was forcibly reminded of the perishable character of many things of this world, such as fabrics and fruits, and of the uncertain tenure of life among many created things. In some instances the entire water supply of the town is pumped from the mines. This water is not even filtered. Company wagons peddle it to the people, selling it at twenty-five cents per barrel. Contagious and infectious diseases are unusually prevalent.

The men work in an atmosphere of decided lawlessness. The state laws for the protection of the men's lives are disregarded by both employer and employee. The law provides that the men may choose check weighmen, and that they shall not be coerced into purchasing supplies from company stores. These and other laws regulating mining are constantly ignored.

The land in the villages is all owned by the companies. In every village the company owns at least one building which is used as a saloon. The saloons are farmed out to men who prove in most instances to be the very worst characters. "Human ghouls" is the way one prominent citizen of Trinidad describes them. Often men draw as much as one hundred dollars per month, and in one way or another spend or lose the greater part of it in these company-owned saloons. Open gambling for large amounts is discouraged by the companies, but in communities so poorly policed and in which men are so easily victimized it is more or less prevalent. Adjacent to many of the camps are privately-owned lands occupied by small tradesmen, a few cottages owned by miners, and the tradesmen's dwellings. In these localities saloon-keepers and other panders to passion and vice exist literally in swarms. Before the strike the dissipated men in some camps were supporting one saloon to every thirty adults. After allowing for the nonwage-earners in this group of adults, keeping in mind that the saloon drew its entire gross receipts from the remainder, the waste is seen to be so appalling as to be almost incredible. But men never assign their own spendthrift habits as the cause of economic pressure. Drink-befuddled and maddened by want, these men become perfect firebrands, assigning all their woes to the companies and to society in general.

In nearly all of these towns the people are deprived of any participation in the affairs of their own little public. The companies own the schoolhouses and the stores; they choose the school directors and peace officers; in many instances they even supervise the activities of the fraternal orders. In the counties of Las Animas and Huerfano practically every civil officer owes his election to the companies. The men live under a despotism so absolute that the radical labor press is not far wrong in calling them slaves. Such repression of their mental and moral natures inevitably results in unfitting them for a very intelligent exercise of the suffrage, though at heart they are for the most part intensely patriotic. We must expect industrial warfare till by the exercise of all of the rights of citizenship the workers come to a realization of the proper attitude of man to man and group to group in a democracy. It would be good business for the companies to allow the men to acquire lots for houses, stores, and public buildings, and allow them to incorporate and govern their own villages for the common good. But the companies make large profits from rents and merchandise, and do doubt prefer present profits, and the risk of losing them through the violence of the strikers, to the prospect of steady gains in the future from the improved character of their employees. But whether the companies lose or gain by it, the State should see to it that its citizens have the opportunity to exercise all of the rights guaranteed to them by a democratic government.

The ordinary educational facilities of civilized communities are either defective or wanting in the mining communities. Let it be said, in justice, that the work done in the schools is surprisingly good. The schoolhouses are built and maintained by the coal companies, and compare favorably with the grade schools of communities of equal population in other sections of the State. However, of all the schools in the mining villages, only one, so far as the writer could learn, does as high as eighth-grade work. Thus high school work is impossible for practically the entire school population. As a rule the boys are taken from school as early as the law allows and put to work in the mines. In fact, the people are entirely without any of the means by which the average man keeps himself in touch with public affairs. Facilities for instruction and inspiration in matters pertaining to private and social ethics are very meager indeed. It is admitted that it will require money, time, and genius to create among such a mixed people conditions under which a normal intellectual life can be maintained, but whatever price may be paid, it can not be too high.

It is not the writer's purpose to fix the blame for the unfavorable conditions described in this article. Both operators and miners are guilty of much that is wrong.

It must not be concluded from facts recited in this article that the miners now on strike in Colorado are inherently vicious or criminal. On the contrary, they are essentially as good as the average man, but that they are being rapidly debauched and degraded by conditions over which they have no control seems to be only too apparent; and these disagreeable facts are being recited in order to illustrate the principle that social ills, and especially those which are associated with the question of labor, are the natural outgrowth of the moral and social environment in which the masses of the people live and labor. The question of wages can not be ignored, but it is not of supreme importance.

When the union officers began to agitate a strike, they found Colorado a promising field. Their agitation did more than secure cooperation. It released a flood of passionate protest, a long pent-up spirit of revolution which neither they nor any other human power could control. The moral and social environment in which the men had labored and in which their wives and children had lived had given only the most elemental human emotions opportunity for development. Therefore it is not surprising that violence has played a large part in the events of this strike. This is not intended as an excuse for violence, but an explanation.

The conditions which produce the striker also produce the strike leader, as the majority of the latter come from the ranks of labor. The labor leader should possess the highest type of statesmanship. If he does not, he not only endangers his own cause but becomes a menace to society at large. Thus industrial conditions not only affect the workers themselves, but determine the characters of a class of leaders who in turn determine the moral and social attitudes of millions of American citizens.

IS THERE A REVIVAL OF PHILOSOPHY?

Glasgow, London, and Paris claim to furnish evidence of a remarkable revival in philosophical and metaphysical speculation. The popularity of Bergson has been repeatedly referred to in these pages, but it seems that Mr. Balfour's Gifford lectures at Glasgow have also made a great sensation. An audience of two thousand is the rule; men and women stand in line on the street for hours in order to get into the packed hall; the local newspapers, as well as the London journals, are printing columns of Balfour's very abstract and subtle arguments. We are assured that once more "there is a hungry interest in philosophy" in circles where it has been least suspected.

One feels that this is true, even if the word revival is not well chosen. Philosophical and metaphysical books are never among the best sellers, but a lecture is a very different thing from a book. Was there ever a time when men and women of reflective minds and reading habits were not interested in problems of life, immortality, the meaning of things, the destiny of the universe, the future of mankind, the nature of mind and matter? Let an able, gifted, magnetic, successful lecturer deal with these questions at any time, in any place, and people will flock to hear him.

Balfour is an ex-premier, and this fact "helps" no doubt; for premiers and statesmen are not often acute logicians and metaphysicians. Bergson is a thinker of rare charm of style and skill of presentation, and he has been widely acclaimed as the "re-discoverer of the soul." Such men never speak to glistening emptiness.

Thus the revival is apparent rather than real. The hungry interest is perpetual; the trouble is that philosophy is too often dry and forbidding, and that the men who write or talk about it have no originality, or depth, or power, or style. Philosophy and metaphysics merely need more Balfours, Jameses and Bergsons to "peopleize" them, to supply a demand which can never decline among the inhabitants of this spinning globe of ours.—Chicago Record-Herald, February 22, 1914.

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Chorister's Issue.

We are pleased this month to present to our readers the splendid appeal for music and its uplift, made by our general chorister at the Sunday School Convention. None will read it without feeling the force and power of its stirring message, and all who heard it will feel anew the spiritual strength and beauty which accompanied its delivery. Brother Hoxie's own consecration and devotion to the art of music and its place and power in our church, makes more forceful and convincing his appeal, and we can only wish, and pray, earnestly, that God will awaken our "sweet singers," and those who "make sweet music" with instruments, to a vision of what is possible for them to do, and give them determination and strength to step out, and realize that vision!

With the presentation of Brother Hoxie's speech, we are also favored with a cheery "spring" message from him and a few notes on Philadelphia progress and affairs musically, so that this issue becomes quite the choristers' own. And this is as it should be. The better we can get acquainted with Brother Hoxie the closer the understanding between him and the musicians of the church, the greater the assurance of success in his peculiar line of work, and the greater the confidence established—all of which will make for harmony and victory.

Music and the Sunday School.

[Address of Albert N. Hoxie, general chorister of the church, delivered at the Sunday School Convention, April 5, 1914, Independence, Missouri.]

Mr. President, Friends and Fellow Workers: It is a great privilege to address what I believe to be the greatest campfire of Sunday school workers I have ever met face to face. I have been absorbing the feeling of good fellowship which is in our midst, and have been gladdened and strengthened in spirit as I again mingle with those with whom I have worked in former years, and learn of their increasing desire to serve one Master.

I have been asked to present for your consideration the subject of music and its relation to the Sunday school. We are obliged to recognize the fact that music is a compelling force, and one that appeals to the majority of the masses. The world leans upon its inspiration in times of sorrow and need. It requires it as an outlet in times of great thankfulness as a means of expressing joy, and how often have we heard that its great stimulus on the field of battle has turned the tide of defeat into victory. We need it in the home as an uplifting power, we have it in the church for its inspirational work, and in the words of a hymn that I know, can not most of us say, "It soothes our sorrows, heals our wounds, and drives away our fears"?

To this land of Zion we gather from almost every clime, bringing with us the experiences of a year of real endeavor. It has been a year of victories. Our splendid, fearless working forces, using their great gifts of faith, knowledge and wisdom, have led into the waters of regeneration a little less than four thousand brave souls. Do you wonder that those who have the gift of song have a desire to sing? They can not help it, and we are constantly praying that the combined efforts of the singers of Israel in conference assembled will be one of the pleasantest as well as most uplifting experiences we have ever enjoyed. We have greater victories coming and we sense them with joy. As I look into your faces this morning I can sense a new interpretation of that battle hymn of ours: "God is marshaling his army for the rescue of his truth."

There is a very close relationship between music and the Sunday school. At a recent Sunday school convention in Philadelphia, representing forty-two churches of various denominations, where our choir rendered the musical program, the speaker of the evening turned to the choir and asked how many of the young people were workers in the Sunday school—ninety-five per cent of the hands went up. It is from the Sunday schools that we gather most of our workers to-day, and if that is the case, I say, why can we not feature the cause of music more in this department of the work? If the angelic hosts of heaven used song as a method of proclaiming the birth of the Christ child to the shepherds on the lonely fields of Bethlehem, why can not we, who are created but a little lower than the angels, as Scripture tells us, use the same means to proclaim the glad message of the restoration of the gospel? What we must have, and I believe it is on the way, too, is more music written by and for our people, music as well as words of inspiration. It should be taught in the Sunday schools, sung by all, old and young, and out of the whole there should step out the most talented who can give the message to the world.

There are four seasons of the year that can be celebrated in different manners—spring, with its thoughts concerning the resurrection; the beginning of summer, as a Children's Day—flowers and sunshine and music—ah, what a combination! then comes the fall, the rallying time, the harvests, the preparation for winter. It is only a short time from then until Christmas, when the spirit of giving can be accentuated—love, peace, joy to all mankind. Big themes, all of these, for our earnest consideration. Inasmuch as it takes from eight to ten weeks for each big endeavor, four times a year, it makes a busy, profitable year. I look back upon my work in Boston, creating these festivals, as the happiest of my experiences in the gospel work. And I remember, too, with much joy that some of these events were the means of some coming under the protection that the gospel plan affords. So the church as well as the Sunday school are profited by these festivals of song and thanksgiving.

This theme has awakened recollections of long ago, and I want you to forgive me if I use the personal reference too frequently, but I do wish to give you another side of the influence of music, and I am going to tell you the story of a boy whose greatest wish around a certain Christmastide was for a fiddle. It is said if you wish hard enough for any one thing your wish will come true. This boy's wish did come to pass, and, as is generally the case, it took the combined forces of father, mother, teacher and moral suasion to teach that youngster to play that violin, and these hours of exactitude were always accompanied by chats in which the gospel theme was interwoven with the harmonies. The father, unapproachable before, through the medium of music was introduced to the gospel in a friendly way, and to-day he is teaching others repentance and the way to eternal life. But what of the lad? I see him again, as I sit in the back of the church, wending his way down the aisle, now a big lad, with his beloved fiddle. The boy of yesterday has become the man of service to-day, and silently—by way of the skies—I breathed a prayer of gratefulness that music can penetrate, when other means fail, the outer shell of indifference and mold the soul to a desire of good purpose.

Listen, friends of talent, and answer to yourself to-day, this question: Can not I devote one hour or more a week to some eager, ambitious little artistic soul, which every Sunday school inherits? Do you know what would happen? It does not take you very long to form an idea of the results. In a few years hundreds of young people would be coming down the aisles of our churches. We would see the lute and the harp, and hear the tinkle of the cymbal, and the commanding attention of the instruments of brass, and the whole would be mellowed and purified by the stringed instruments. We would have a symphony orchestra of young people. Our churches would be the gathering places of eager listeners to the message they conveyed. It would be a fitting background and a splendid aid to our men of big thought and ideas of inspiration. The desire of all would be stimulated for the better life. Music binds the human race together, and melts our differences into one common cause. We must create the love of it in the heart and mind of our youth. The Sunday school can encourage the effort, find a place for it and profit by its use.

We must have music that has a different ring to it than that which is found on every hand. I am reminded of a statement of the reporter who attended the performance of the "Holy City" at our district conference in Brooklyn, New York, rendered by eighty voices of our young people. Our friend, the reporter, wrote in his kindly criticisms that the startling effect obtained by the rendering of this wonderful oratorio was due to a spiritual as well as a musical knowledge of the work. This very effect is what we had hoped and prayed for, and we were glad that this generous, broad-minded man was big enough to sense it and realize it. It is the very thing that we are aiming for and realizing to-day—music by us, for us, and rendered by consecrated lives, whose thoughts are centered on the service of God. One of our boys wrote me not long since that in the preparation of his work for service with the chorus he had been endeavoring to live in a way that he might be worthy to sing the very words of the part he assumes in the work. Think of that! And he went on and said still further, "On the night I render that solo I will give my talent, my very voice to God, and let him use it as he will." We want such thoughts of consecration to be taught to the children of the Sunday school, that their work from the beginning of life's experiences may be a matter of consecration. I say, again, provide a place, an outlet, an occasional demonstration for our children to employ their talent.

The Children's Chorus of this Independence Stake is another worthy undertaking, an example good to follow. How I wish that some talented musician would spend a few hours each week making special study of music suitable for this character of work alone. This is a big field of worthy venture and suggestion. And then there is another opportunity for some other young enthusiast to come forward and make a special study of the orchestra, and its possibility in Sunday school work. We need a man of discrimination and reverence for the house of God—a man to select music suitable for rendering in the Sunday school. The orchestra is an institution for much good, and you will find much work of this character done in every large and in some small schools throughout the country.

The average man whom we ask to suggest music for the orchestra which is suitable for church work hardly knows, to-day, what to suggest to us. If we have our orchestra engaged in the services they must play a class of music that is neither near nor distant relation to our famous ragtime.

When I visited Flint, Michigan, last summer, I followed the crowd to what I thought was to be a band concert. Imagine my feelings when I rounded the corner and found the scarlet flag of the Salvation Army waving over a brass band with a full complement of instruments, about fifty in number. I might mention in passing that this band at the time was about to start for a trip around the world. A vast crowd gathered about these enthusiasts, listening to the gospel songs, and the message that they have. Strong men wept and their hearts were touched as the band played, "Nearer, my God, to thee." Do you wonder that those boys in blue took back the multitudes to their barracks? I found myself there with the rest, and wondered why I chanced missing my train. But there you are again. It was the power of music. Couple with this power the power of the message we have and who can deny that it is the greatest combination in the world—the gospel of Christ first, and music, the kind that has been spiritualized by the same gospel, given freely to the world as a means of preparation for a bigger and better life—even a life eternal!

Some day, if my vision of the possibilities of music are realized, we will have these various organizations of band, orchestral and chorus work so perfected that we will have the pleasure of inviting you to listen to a rendition by these combined forces; and when that happy day is here the songs of Zion will have a new meaning. My message to you is not a new one; it is only an emphasis of the possibilities suggested by the inspired writing of 1887, found in the Doctrine and Covenants, given for our comfort and inspiration. It keeps us from being engulfed in the sea of materialism, which is ever ready to claim the busy business man. Let me read this passage to you.

"Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song; let not the middle-aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth and let them aid and assist so far as their cares will permit; and remember that Saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph."

And when you have cultivated the gifts, what then? Give them, employ them, consecrate them freely to the service of God, and you will find another expression of happiness entering not only into your own life, but you will see its effect upon the lives of others.

The Chorister's Message.

Spring seems to have become the shortest of seasons these days, mostly due to the fact that the winters of late years trespass much on the time that the spring gladness is supposed to reign.

We retire of a night, and lo, and behold! a day of unusual warmth has been ushered in, and to our bewildered though fascinated gaze, the fruit trees have unfolded a sea of white, the birds seem to have a song of newness, and the cool, green ivy begins to hide the homeliness of the wall of red brick.

Then a mysterious voice calls to us—born creatures of nature: "Come ye out of the hiding places of winter into the warmth of my sunshine. Absorb the feeling of gentle newness, rest your eyes upon the miles of greensward. I invite you to examine the mysteries of my handiwork, which can not be duplicated by mankind—you yourself are but another creation of mine. Look deep into the hearts of my flowers and see what I have done. The deeper you look the more shall you find, and to you will come the thoughts of angels."

But what relation has this to music? Ah, me! did you not know that the greatest of our musicians have walked down the path, have found music in the beauties of nature, and have transcribed the melodies that have haunted them as their sensitive natures absorbed the wonders about them? And do you know, too, that this same call of the spring urges many of our singers to seek the shady nook or enticing lake—and, as they wander through the fields or paddle lazily down the stream has there not come, too, a vision of the faithful remaining ones in the choir loft? Have you ever imagined the keen disappointment of the faithful leader who tirelessly plods on to fill the obligation imposed upon him? No? Then perhaps this will be part of your anguish when you are permitted to gaze upon the home up yonder that you are building for yourself. If you had learned to love music here and was denied the privilege of its enjoyment in the hereafter because of your failure to properly use the gift here, what think you? Would it hurt? We might feel refreshed by a day out-of-doors, but ask yourself this question, "In the course of a day of service, leading others to a state of higher appreciation for our heavenly Father, is it not all-sufficient—the feeling that comes as a reward? Is it not enough to lead us back each week to our places where we are expected, the places that have been prepared for us in which to labor?"

I wish that every choir member could stroll through the fields early these Sunday mornings, bring back with him the new song that he may hear, and give it to those who are always patiently waiting to hear the message that we have to offer. Let us be in our places this summer, and when we are tempted to forget our duties, I should say our privileges, let us just sing again that last song the conference choir sang together,—“Yes! the Lord can depend on me.”

Musical Notes.

At the Church of Saint John the Divine, New York City, it was announced at the close of Easter service, Sunday morning, that Frederick G. Baume had given five hundred thousand dollars to the trustees of the Cathedral Choir School, founded some years ago by Bishop Potter, as an endowment fund for the maintenance of the school. This probably makes it the wealthiest school of its kind in the world, and should insure exceptional music for the cathedral through coming years.

At the exposition to be held in San Francisco next year it is planned to demonstrate the value of musical training in the public schools. Invitations are extended, through musicians of note, to as many children as can attend, to sing. This work will be featured at the Palace of Education, from February to December inclusive, so that everyone may know how music is taught in high and other grade schools. The general director at the exposition will be George W. Stewart, of Boston, Massachusetts. The large pipe organ at the exposition is to be built by the Austin Organ Company, of Hartford, Connecticut. It will be seventy-one feet high, forty feet wide, and twenty feet deep, and will have five keyboards, with one hundred and thirteen stops. A thirty-five horsepower electric motor will be required to operate it.

It is claimed that under a new contract Caruso will receive a salary very largely in excess of two thousand dollars per night. In a recent article on the subject of diet, he recommends abstaining from food for at least several hours before singing, in order to give more room for the diaphragm to expand. This, he claims, is a very vital principle, however simple it may seem. He also condemns the use of spirits, and of cigarettes, particularly for young singers.

The Music of the Bible, is the title of a new book recently issued by J. Stainer, and published at London. It seeks to trace the development of modern musical instruments from ancient types, and contains much of interest to students of this subject.

Philadelphia Interludes.

The Philadelphia Choir is attracting many singers outside our own ranks. Miss Leila Steele, contralto, has volunteered her services for many special occasions these last few months, and her beautiful voice has been a comfort and inspiration to all.

Miss Margaret Schwartz, a protegee of Henery Gordon Thunder, is another friend who has rendered a most unusual service for one who is not a member of the church. Not only has she attended all Sunday evening services for the past few months, but special occasions and choir rehearsals as well, and her influence and unusual voice make us happy indeed for the generosity and good will shown toward us. Both of these young ladies have church positions in our prominent churches. Other volunteers have assisted us, among whom are Mr. and Mrs. Wright, Doctor Albert Steele, Mr. Schwartz, and others.

The splendid attention and attendance at rehearsals lately is due to the announcement of the chorister,—“Work hard from now until July 1 and rehearsals during July and August will be discontinued.” During the warm weather a few minutes on Sunday after services will be used in preparation for the next service. Inasmuch as most of the congregation remain “to listen and get better acquainted” it is a feature that the people enjoy. Hence there is joy all around!

The Reverend Doctor Arthur Jamieson, pastor of the Park Avenue Church, New York, believing in the power of music to advance the work of his church, has engaged the services of Mr. Kriens, the Dutch composer and violinist, and a school of orchestral music is now a flourishing institution of the church. Last Wednesday this body, known as the Kriens Symphony Club, gave a very successful concert in Aeolian Hall. The work of Mr. Kriens embodies the ideal of our general chorister, who hopes to see the young people of our church study with the end in view of being capable of performing the symphony works of our great composers.

This coming summer a feature of the Philadelphia band concerts, which are given every night on City Hall Plaza, and in the past have provided enjoyment for so many people, will be “songs,” in which the audience is to be invited to join. The plan ought to meet with success. In many foreign cities, London, for example, and quite commonly in Germany, the idea of “community singing” has met with enthusiastic approval from the populace. Some of our own western cities are said to have experimented successfully with the plan. Philadelphia, with its large population of Germans and descendants of Germans, has always shown extraordinary interest, as a community, in Maennerchors, “song-fests,” and similar musical activities. That there would be a large number of people willing and glad to listen to the singing at City Hall, if not to join in, is altogether probable. Mr. Harry C. Lincoln, who has been selected to arrange and conduct this part of the concerts, is so thoroughly identified with this type of work that his leadership is almost a guarantee of popular success. Mr. Lincoln has trained children's choruses for many large municipal and religious meetings; his management of large groups of children at the Convention Hall and the Academy of Music will be remembered by the majority of Philadelphians. Doubtless the music to be selected by Mr. Lincoln for these Philadelphia band concerts will be a distinctly popular and human sort—the more so the better. One can not imagine a better relaxation for the tired city dweller nor a surer device for keeping children who must be on the streets at night out of mischief than an hour of homely but uplifting song. There is a real social value in the idea.

Sister W. N. Robinson, our gifted soprano, was accorded an unusual demonstration at the farewell banquet of hotel men given in their honor at the Waldorf Astoria in New York prior to their sailing for Europe. When it was learned that Mrs. Robinson was present, she was invited to sing, and at the conclusion of her number she was accorded a wonderful demonstration in which the orchestra joined. Sister Robinson is a type of the truly great artist, and her vocal achievements have been the admiration of all whose privilege it has been to hear her. Never satisfied with her attainments, she makes it a point to find time to seek the paths of greater knowledge. Her world-famed teacher, Oscar Saenger, has stated that her voice is one of the greatest of the age. Sister Robinson does not seek fame, and finds her greatest enjoyment in the comradeship of home ties, which, after all is the sweetest joy in the world. All remember with pleasure her superb singing in the “Holy City” during conference. The sacrifice she made to assist us at the second performance was greatly appreciated.

JUNE READING.—MONTESSORI APPARATUS AND GAMES.

THE GEOMETRIC INSETS.

One part of the Montessori apparatus is a series of thin, square tablets of wood with removable centers. These center pieces are cut in different shapes and each has a small knob or handle by which it may be lifted from or set in the place in which it fits exactly. These are called the geometric insets.

In all there are thirty-six different forms, among them the square, the triangle, the circle, the oval, the rectangle, the octagon. The child playing with these geometric insets, soon learns that he can find the shallow recess in which each fits. In order to get an accurate conception of form the child needs to have his sight reinforced by touch, and so, holding the inset by the knob in his left hand, he runs two fingers of the other hand around the edge of the inset and then around the edge of the space into which he would fit it.

In this the child is doing something more than learning to recognize form and size. The frequent tracing of a form, "like all frequently repeated actions, wears a channel in his brain which tends, whenever he begins the action, to make him complete it in the way he always has done it." Later, he traces the letters of the alphabet as he now traces the forms of the insets.

Another thing he learns from the use of the geometric insets is the mastery of the pencil. Placing the pattern upon paper he traces the form, moving the pencil from left to right as in writing. Later, when he knows the characters of the alphabet and their sounds, the muscular habit and mastery of the pencil resulting from oft repeated tracing enable him to write the words he has learned to frame by sound and with the sandpaper letters.

Those who may desire to read further on the use of the geometric insets and the teaching of reading and writing according to the Montessori method are referred to The Montessori Manual, by Dorothy Canfield Fisher. (The W. E. Richardson Company, Chicago.)

SIMPLE WORK WITH FORMS AND COLORS.

There are many mothers who will not be able to follow the instructions for the advanced work who might easily give to their children some of the simple work with form and color suggested by the Montessori Method of teaching. The gold band from the mother's finger may furnish a pattern for tracing a circle, the smallest of a set of circles. Spools of varying sizes, a napkin ring, a bottle, a cork, or other familiar objects may furnish the needed sizes for gradation. This idea of graduated sizes should be added only after work with one circle, one square, one triangle and so on. Later, after a row of circles increasing in size has been made, the largest circle may be traced first, then the next smaller pattern may be traced inside, and so on to the smallest in the center.

In all this work, after merely giving the idea, the Montessori Maxim should be observed: "Let the child do it himself."

The first color work may be done with a good sized circle (two or three inches in diameter) which the child has traced. It is to be filled in with parallel strokes of colored crayon, the marks not extending beyond the circular line. To start him let the mother make a few light, downward strokes to give him the correct idea. At first he will not be able to keep within the boundaries, but, later he will succeed in making an evenly colored disk. He should not be allowed at any time to fill it in with promiscuous scratching.

This same work may be done with the square and other geometric figures. For a variety of these consult any advanced work on mathematics.

Water colors may be used in place of crayons at a later time.

MATCHING OF COLORS.

At about the same stage of development when the geometric insets are first given to a child the mother may begin to teach him distinctions in color. The color box of the Montessori apparatus contains eight sets of flat spools, wound with silk of varying shades. There are eight main colors and eight shades of each color.

At first the child is shown two strongly contrasted colors, red and blue, for instance. The name of each is pronounced clearly and distinctly, as the corresponding color is held up. The mother may then give to the child bits of ribbon or cloth in these two colors and leave him to fix them in his mind by sorting them, placing each color by itself and speaking its name as he adds each piece.

By spending a few moments in this way she will then be free to go about her own work for a time while he is absorbed with his task. Later, the mother may test the accuracy of the child's knowledge by saying, "Give me the red," or "Give me the blue." When she finds him able to make the proper response, she may test him still further by holding up a color and asking, "What is the color?" The answer will require him to name the color. When he can do this he will have learned not only to distinguish colors but to call the name of each.

After he knows the eight main colors the next step is to differentiate between light and dark shades of the same color, for instance, between dark red and light pink, navy blue and sky blue, deep green and pale green. Little by little, as the child's accuracy increases, he may be led to recognize the intervening shades. In the Montessori school the children grade each of the main colors from its deepest to its lightest shade. The eight main colors are violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange and two kinds of red. Each of these is carried from dark to light in eight shades.

COLOR GAMES.

One of the simplest games is the matching of colors, which may be played by two children or by mother and child. One places a color on the table and the other matches it.

Another game is played by eight children. Each chooses the name of a color. The sixty-four spools lie in confusion on the table. They are to be dealt out as called for. One child asks for red and the dealer, selecting a spool of this color, gives it to him. This continues around the circle until each child has the eight shades of his chosen color. Should the dealer make a mistake, the right to deal goes to the child next to him.

When each child has his eight shades, all set to work to see who can soonest arrange them in the right chromatic order. The one who finishes first has won the game. He deals first in the next game.

As children become expert in the distinguishing of colors, a test in which they engage with great enjoyment is to "carry a color in the eye." That is, after looking at a spool of a certain shade, they go across the room to a pile of spools and pick out the shade that will match it.

Colors from paint cards may be made use of in such games.

Using paints or crayons, the child may color a series of circles in regular order of shading from light to dark.

This work may be varied with different forms and colors. A leaf may be traced and the child led to notice the natural color. He may then paint it green or in the autumn colors as the case may be.

"Too much importance can not be placed upon the developing of the chromatic sense in early childhood. If the child at an early age acquires a deep interest in shades and tints of colorings, he will not only be able to appreciate his environment much more, but this knowledge and appreciation of color will be of inestimable value to him in later years. . . . If the child is taught to see the beautiful and to appreciate it in his early years it must have a marked effect upon his later life. Psychologists tell us that we are the creatures of habit, and it is only reasonable to believe that if these very desirable habits can be formed in early childhood they must be very beneficial when the child reaches maturity." (Mrs. Fisher.)

THE COUNTING BOXES.

Prepare two small, shallow boxes with five divisions or compartments in each. Leave the first compartment empty. In the second, place one smooth stick. In the third, place two sticks. In the fourth, three, and in the fifth, four. This exercise is for a very little child who has no idea of the sequence of numbers. The mother should arrange the sticks in the first box as described. This serves as a model for the child, who is given the other box and a supply of sticks and is invited to make his box exactly like the one his mother has arranged. She should not help in this process, because it does the child no good for her to correct his mistakes. If his brain is sufficiently developed, he will ultimately accomplish the task himself. If he has not yet arrived at the right age, his inability will be apparent and the boxes should be withheld until a later time.

As soon as he can complete the series up to four, the two empty boxes may be placed at his disposal and he can go on, one at a time, to complete the series up to nine. It should be remembered that the first compartment is to be left empty, so the nine sticks fill the last one.

Mrs. Fisher in the Montessori Manual tells of a child three and a half years of age who, having just mastered the sequence in the counting boxes, ran about the house, counting the windows, the drawers in the bureaus, the chairs in the rooms, the legs of the tables, deriving the most mysterious satisfaction from his new acquisition of power.

THE SANDPAPER NUMBERS.

In connection with the use of the counting boxes, the characters that stand for the numbers may be introduced. The figures 0 to 9 inclusive, of rough sandpaper pasted on cards are placed in order in the compartments, each with the number of sticks which it represents. The mother guides the little forefinger over the sandpaper number, speaking the name slowly and distinctly and connecting the character with the number of sticks in the compartment. In this the child should not be hurried. Give him all the time he needs.

NUMBER GAMES.

As this number work progresses the mother may apply that principle of teaching involved in the color game previously suggested in this reading. The mother first names the characters for the child. She then lays several on the table and says, "Please give me the 2," or "Please give me 5," when he has mastered this, she holds up different cards, asking him to name them. She may then hold up a card, asking him to give her that number of sticks.

This game may be varied, using any large figures, such as might be cut from an old calendar. The mother, holding up a number, asks a child to throw her "this many" kisses, and showing another number asks one to clasp his hands, "so many" times. Showing the zero she asks another to open the door this many times. When he remains in his place he gives evidence that the abstract idea of zero is becoming firmly settled in his mind.

In another game, a number of the counting sticks or other objects such as marbles, clothespins, spools or spoons are placed on a table. The mother holds a bag containing the numbers up to ten. Each child draws a number and, without showing it, returns to his seat. When all have their numbers, each child goes to the table and takes back with him the number of objects indicated by the number in his hand. The mother then goes to each and the child tells his number and enumerates the objects before him. By this means a mistake becomes apparent to him. If he should have the wrong number of objects, she simply smiles and passes to the next, or she may say, "Right" for the correct number and "Wrong" for the mistake.

A child may be taught the significance of money by games played with coins. The coins should be made clean before being used in this way. The little child will at first simply sort the money into different piles, all the pennies together, the nickels, the dimes and the quarters each in its right place. He should be allowed to play in this way until he knows their names and sizes very well.

When he can count to ten with certainty he can learn the relative value of the different coins. Five pennies may be laid beside one nickel and ten pennies with one dime. Touching the pennies he may count the five and then, with his fingers on the nickel, count five. In the same way he may count ten for the ten pennies and the dime.

When he has grasped something of this relation the mother, holding up a nickel or a dime, may ask, "How many pennies do I want for this?" Later, two nickels for the dime and five nickels for the quarter may be explained to him. But a new combination must be given only when he has thoroughly mastered the preceding ones. In this way he will learn the valuable lesson of making change.

A simple game of "shopping" is always fascinating to a little child, especially if he may handle real money. Play money may be used, having the denominations marked on the pieces, but will hardly accomplish the same purpose. If coins are used the child should not be permitted to leave them lying around carelessly. It is important that he should be given a proper impression of the value of money.

Suggestions for the games are taken from The Montessori Mother and from the Manual.

Prayer Union.

SUBJECTS FOR THE FOURTH THURSDAY IN MAY.

Prayer for our Sunday schools and Religio societies, for the Prayer Union, and for all the auxiliary departments of the church, that each may be blessed in its work for the general uplift.

Lesson, Isaiah 58: 8-12. Memory verse, Psalm 10: 17.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

The following comes to us from Glasgow, Montana. It is the request of a daughter in behalf of her mother. The letter in itself breathes the deep desire and filial affection of the daughter who suffers in spirit with the object of her love upon whom the affliction is resting. May the request find response in the prayers of Saints in behalf of the sufferer: "Will the Saints everywhere pray for my poor mother who has suffered so long, that, if it be God's will, she may be strengthened in body and mind and be freed from her suffering."—Lutie B. Davis.

There's never a rose in all the world
But makes some green spray sweeter;
There's never a wind in all the sky
But makes some bird wing fleeter;
And never a rosy cloud but helps
To crown the sunset splendor;
Nor robin but may thrill some heart,
His dawn-like gladness voicing;
God gives us all some small, sweet way

Contend for the Flag Once Delivered to the Saints.

In consulting the calendar the other day I noticed the date, July 4, and it came to me with force that I was ten thousand miles away from home, in a foreign land, under a foreign flag.

Apparently there is as much liberty here in Australia as in the States. One is not made to feel the hand of political or religious oppression. The despot is not in evidence. This goodly land (nearly as large as the United States) seems to be a brilliant satellite of the "land of the free and the home of the brave"; but that magic "Fourth" made me "think thoughts" as Mark Twain would say.

To the "land shadowing with wings" the descendants of the Egyptian Joseph were divinely directed. By their industry great cities sprang up, colossal pyramids were erected, the deep valleys were spanned with bridges, the towering mountains were mastered. As they looked upon that unbounded land of the wide west, they felt the spirit of peace and heard the voice of freedom in the crystal mountain brooks; they sensed it in the sweet songs of the birds in the virgin forest; the blooming wild flowers soothed and aroused them; and as they looked heavenward for light they saw in "the forget-me-nots of the angels" the message of peace and freedom. They saw it in the flight of the eagle in the sky, and in the movements of the fish in the crystal sea; they felt it mightily welling up from the depths of their very souls as a gift from the living God. And when despotism sought to rob these pilgrim pioneers of their peace, their homes, and their freedom, a Godly warrior arose, and the spirit of freedom gave birth to and found expression in the first flag which ever floated over the land of America. On its waving folds were these inspiring words: "In memory of our God, our religion, and freedom and peace, our wives and our children."

It was entirely fitting that such a "title of liberty" should not be made of silk, but of homespun, as it did not represent a palatial palace, but a peaceful home. Its folds first enveloped a man of God; its spirit is slowly enveloping the whole earth. And Sunny Australia has imbibed deeply from the cup extended her across the peaceful Pacific. Soon the demand for freedom and peace shall become so insistent that the heavens will answer with the "Prince of Peace."

When the Pilgrims landed on these hospitable shores, they came under the spell of that spirit which had been invoked upon the land by the godly Moroni, who, when he waved, high in the air, that first flag of America, dedicated the country to God and freedom; and they determined to "close for ever, the schools of despotism, bondage and error, and to open the grand University of Liberty" and to keep it open for ever, so the millions of the oppressed of all lands could enter and take their degree.

Greed, cruel greed, placed three million black men in slavery, "the sum of all evil." But the spirit of freedom swept away those shackles and forged them into plowshares. Black slavery has been annihilated, white slavery must be abolished from the workshop and the harem.

This land has been dedicated to home and freedom, and when another despot in the West arrayed himself against Moroni and his message, and converted marriage into a sacrament of adultery, God then was arrayed against that system, for the Lord had thundered from the American Sinai—Kirtland's hills,—"Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else." So there is only room in this dedicated land for one kind of a home, the home Moroni fought for and God ordained; a harem home is a hell home, and it must go to its own place, and Moroni's glorious flag shall not wave over it.

Let the next Sunday School Convention order the manufacture of that first flag, with Moroni's inscription upon it, and let it wave in every Latter Day Saint Sabbath school in the land, and then we shall be contending for the flag once delivered to the saints! That flag, if followed, shall make our proud Republic prosperous, limitless, invincible! A republic on a hill whose light will not be hid, a land where an ensign has been lifted upon the mountains, a "land without a chain and a flag without a stain."

C. EDWARD MILLER.

CLITHERALL, MINNESOTA, March 22, 1914.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure that we peruse your pages each week and observe the improvement of its columns. We especially note "The Staff." We hope the effort that is being put forth along musical lines may grow and develop until it reaches every district in the whole church. It has always been my belief that wherever this gospel is preached it should be accompanied with the very best of music. Did not the angels sing for joy long ago when the Savior came to this world? We know music has had its effect in bringing out many to hear the glad tidings.

Years ago when powers of darkness blinded my eyes and prejudice filled my heart there was a reunion held here. Those in charge announced that there would be special music before each evening service. Being very fond of music, I put forth an effort to attend. There was a young Brother Omans who accompanied the organist with his violin. This, combined with the sweet songs of Zion, drew me to that tent every night, and I soon became interested in the preaching, my prejudice grew less, the veil of darkness began to fall from my eyes, and the result was that at the close of the reunion I was ready for baptism. If it would affect a poor sinner like me, will it not affect others?

Oh, that our young men and maidens would remember the word of the Lord, to cultivate that gift of music and of song. The old, too, should not forget the gladness of their youth when making use of their talents in the Master's cause. We have not forgotten the special music by Brother and Sister Christy at our reunion two years ago; nor Brother Lambkin with the cornet.

Brother Lambkin has said if he remained in this district he was going to try to have an orchestra organized to furnish music for the conference and reunions. There is already an effort being put forth here to have an orchestra for our coming reunion, to be held here in June. Fred E. Mollison, a believer in the restored gospel, has promised to assist. His knowledge of instrumentation is extensive. He is at present leader of the band at Estelline, South Dakota. We hope our young people as well as all others who can will make a special effort to come to help make this one of the best reunions ever held here, that the gospel may be heralded through these parts, and that the good seed sown may bring forth fruit fit for the Master's use.

We do not forget the promise that was made us through the Spirit. This came as a precious morsel, especially to those who had been putting forth an effort here to have a more suitable place of worship, fasting and praying that our heavenly Father would reveal his will. Oh, how our hearts went out to him who had heard and answered our prayers.

Elder Lambkin, one of the committee, told us there would be a little extra funds needed for advertising and buying tracts to distribute during the reunion. There was a farmers' institute held here. The town gave us two dollars and a half and wanted our sewing circle to serve lunch on that day. We took in about fifteen dollars.

We decorated the building we used in red, white and blue, for the Saints were all happy over the result of the election that was held here in the village the day before,—voting out the saloons with a large majority; only eight voted for retaining the evil that has cursed our village for the past sixteen years. It was quite a surprise to everybody when the votes were counted; but those who had been making this a subject of prayer that our kind Father would intercede at this time felt to give him the praise.

We hear of a good many in the district and also from North Dakota who are planning to attend the reunion. One of the brethren received a letter from Elder T. C. Kelley stating if he was sent back to the same mission field he would step off here and take in the reunion, and in that way would get to meet all the Saints. He will certainly be a welcome visitor, for the good work he did here years ago in this district is remembered.

Happy in the work and hopeful for a glorious victory for the truth, I am,

Your sister in the one faith,
ELEANOR WHITING.

FLINT, MICHIGAN, March 25, 1914.

Editors Herald: Your pages of valuable thoughts are always welcome. The work is onward in Flint. Brother John Grice baptized one in the icy waters of Flint River when he was home for the holidays. Since then Brother Hupt baptized one in the font at the church and Brother McNamara two this evening at the church. Others are investigating our claims and we feel will accept. I heard one say they did not like to be too quick to jump at conclusions, but that they were forced to believe that there was more in our faith than in the one they were trying to follow. So we feel certain that more will unite with us. We rejoice to see them entering the kingdom, knowing the blessings that are theirs if faithful.

Sunday, March 15, was "everybody to church day" in Flint. The Daily Journal printed a photo of all the pastors of the city, including Elder McNamara. Our church was well filled in the morning, Elder Thomas McNamara being the speaker. In the evening Elder William Collins occupied the time, speaking to a crowded house of attentive listeners. We already often see the need of a larger church, also often see the need of one that could devote all his time to the work. We have a good local force in Flint, but all work for the bread that perisheth. We expect General Conference to take some of them for the field, and know several are very capable. Truly the harvest is ripe and the laborers few.

Ever praying for the success of the cause we love, I am,

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. J. H. ALLSHOUSE.

SENTINEL BUTTE, NORTH DAKOTA, March 22, 1914.

Editors Herald: Until a year ago the Methodist Episcopalians of Beach, North Dakota, a place about eight miles west of here, held forth every two weeks at our schoolhouse, about four miles from the town of Sentinel Butte. They assessed the community one hundred and twenty-five dollars a year for such services; this without any voice of the community on the subject; and they came without invitation. We always attended their services and took part in their Sunday school, but paid no part of the salary. At first the community paid quite freely, but after a year or two the preacher began to experience a good deal of difficulty in getting his salary. A year ago he deserted the "flock" to the "wolves."

Brother D. S. Baughman, of Williams, North Dakota, about twenty-five miles south of there, thought it would be a good time for us to begin the promulgation of the latter-day message. So Brother Baughman drove the twenty-five miles every other Sunday all summer and preached. When winter began to close in, at the request of the people, we secured Brethren Wildermuth and Leitch of Fargo for a series of sermons. Then Brother J. C. Page came again this winter. We have quite an interest stirred up.

Brother Page left here the 23d of February and went home, Culbertson, Montana, then to Taylor, North Dakota. Arriving there March 7 he began a series of meetings. Brother William Sparling, of Minot, North Dakota, with whom Brother Page is associated, had been at Taylor and gotten things stirred up so that the Lutheran minister had challenged him to debate. Propositions were signed up; the Lutheran minister wanted a little time to study up, which was granted. Brother Sparling moved on to another locality about twenty-five miles north. This was about the time Brother Page landed at Taylor. Brother Sparling held the fort at two places at the same time, preaching in the afternoon at one place and in the evening at another. Everybody turned out to hear him.

When Brother Page reached Taylor he opened up for eight nights. From appearances twenty or thirty will be baptized there soon. When Brother Sparling arrived at Taylor the Methodist Episcopalians had just finished a revival which had been quite successful. We have most of the converts won over to our message. Thus God uses his enemies to his honor and glory.

The debate was arranged to begin April 1. We are anxiously waiting to hear of its result. Greetings to friends and Saints at Moorhead, Little Sioux, Woodbine, and Gallands Grove.

In gospel bonds,

G. W. LINDSEY.

CULBERTSON, MONTANA, March 25, 1914.

Editors Herald: We met for the first time in new church building last Sunday. We were thankful indeed that our dreams have been so nearly realized. Brother J. A. Bronson preached the first sermon, which was appreciated, we believe, by all present. We are very glad to have Brother Bronson make his home here. Saints and friends both like to hear him as well as our other missionary, Brother J. C. Page.

This is the first church building to be erected in Eastern Montana. We hope it will not be the last.

Hopefully,
MRS. C. B. FREEMAN.

HIBBING, MINNESOTA, March 31, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am one of the Saints who live apart from anyone of the true faith. I feel this is the true gospel as taught by our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

I was baptized by Elder L. Houghton, near Lawton, North Dakota, in December, 1904, together with my niece, Rhoda F. Nash. I have not heard the true gospel preached since a few days after we were baptized. I left North Dakota January 7, 1905, settling in Hibbing, until January 26, 1907, when I came here, thirty miles from town, settling on a homestead five miles in the bush from anyone, except my husband. I have not seen a woman's face for over four months.

The Lord has been with me. I am not strong in body, being very sick a great deal of the time. Besides this I am lame, going part of the time with a crutch or cane. I ask the Saints to kindly pray for me, that I may be restored to health and strength again if it is the Lord's will.

I also ask the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my companion and daughter who know not the Lord, that they may be brought into light and liberty as they are in Christ

Jesus, into the true gospel of Christ. I feel his Holy Spirit guiding me, and keeping me that I do not fail altogether. At times I feel I am alone here, as I know of no other Saints who live near me. I have written to Brother Houghton and some others at Fargo, North Dakota, asking if it could not be arranged so that some brother could come here, if only for a visit, that I might hear some one speak of the love of Jesus, and to give my husband an opportunity to enter the fold of Christ.

There are no Christians of any denomination in the whole township. All are without Christ. Is it impossible for anyone to come into this part of the country to speak a word for Jesus? We are poor people, but any of God's people will be welcome to come to our place at any time. I am not able to get any of the Saints' books and papers. I have just now sent for a new edition of Doctrine and Covenants, the first I could secure. I am not able to subscribe for the HERALD or Ensign. I have a brother, Elder George Smith, in Port Huron, Michigan, who sometimes sends me the HERALD or some other kind of reading to help me along. I should like to help along with this true gospel, but I can not give even the widow's mite.

May God be with and bless all the Saints wherever they may be, is the prayer of your sister in Christ

MRS. J. J. DEAN.

WASHINGTON, OKLAHOMA, April 3, 1914.

Editors Herald: We wish the Saints to know that we are among the isolated ones who have the Sunday school home department work and are interested in the lessons.

Dear Saints, while I have reason to mourn, yet I have reason to rejoice because of added testimonies to this great latter-day work. Four weeks ago I received word to go for my mother, who lived in Eastern Texas. I left behind me great responsibilities and loved ones, asking the Lord to care for them and to protect me on my journey. Mother looked well and was anxious to accompany me home. One week later I started home with her. She stood the trip well, and her prayers were answered, as she wanted to meet me and the children once more. Her stay with us was short, just twelve days. She was eighty years old. She passed away March 30. She talked of the gospel and the change that she was looking for, and seemed willing to go.

Dear Saints, remember me in your prayers.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

FANNIE REED.

LUCEDALE, MISSISSIPPI, April 5, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am glad to say that I am a child of God, a soldier of the cross. I ask all to pray for me that I may be a brave warrior in the work of the Lord, and that I may do a work for him.

I am the only colored Saint here. I am trying to labor in the interests of the Master. I hope to hold out faithful to the end.

Your brother in Christ,

E. E. BOOKER.

HURON, SOUTH DAKOTA, April 5, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have been a reader of the HERALD since before I was baptized, five years ago last August.

As my husband and I, two isolated Saints, are trying to observe the fast day as set apart by the church, I feel that I would like to write a few lines to let those Saints whom we have met know that we are still in the faith. I trust that what I write will encourage some who are isolated as we are.

What a comforting thought it is that while we are not permitted to meet with the Saints for worship yet we can be one with them in purpose. Our prayers are ever for the church and God's people. We hope it will not be long before we can move to Zion; our efforts are directed that way.

We have not had an elder with us since last November, when Brother Orman Salisbury spent Sunday here and administered the sacrament. We enjoyed a goodly degree of the divine Spirit, and enjoyed the brother's visit very much. We have always tried to keep some consecrated oil in the house, and before the children could talk they would lead me to the medicine closet where the oil is kept whenever they got a bump or hurt. So while we can not call in an elder to administer in time of trouble or sickness, we use the consecrated oil and the Lord comes to our aid.

There are plenty of churches here in this city of five thousand people, but we do not enjoy their services. We long to have the children, three and five years old, in Sunday school, but so far we have not felt inclined to take them. We teach them the gospel as they can grasp it, and by example and right living strive to mold their little lives in the right way.

We are anxiously awaiting the first edition of the daily Ensign with its good things from General Conference. Praying for much spirituality and unity at the conference, and the welfare of Zion, I am,

A sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. E. E. WILLARD.

OAKFIELD, NEW YORK, April 5, 1914.

Editors Herald: There is no branch here. As I am a stranger here I take this method of reaching any Saints who may live here or near here, as I should like to meet them. People here are not familiar with the name of our church, some have never heard the name, while others class us as "Mormons."

We have a baby boy four months old, whom I want to have blessed. If any elder should come this way, I would appreciate it if he would call.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. FRY W. JACOBS.

SABANNO, TEXAS, April 7, 1914.

Editors Herald: We are isolated from church privileges. There are no other Saints here besides my husband and I.

We are very sad and lonely since the death angel has taken my dear father, Brother J. M. Crawford. It has been very hard to say, Thy will be done; but he suffered so much he was ready and only waiting for the call. On December 24, the Lord relieved him of his suffering.

He was baptized November 3, 1891, by S. W. Simmons, at Oscar, Oklahoma; ordained a priest in March, 1903.

Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may hold out faithful. If any of the elders come this way our latchstring hangs on the outside. We would like to hear from Sister S. Reed and Sister H. Duncan.

With love to all the Saints,

LEE CLEVINGER.

DOWAGIAC, MICHIGAN, May 4, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am writing to ask a favor of some one. I would like to see an elder. I have long wished to join your church, but have not had the chance. About eighteen months ago an elder came to see us and blessed my little brother and administered to me. He could only stay with us a little while in the afternoon. I enjoyed his talk very much. I live one and one fourth mile south of Glenwood, a small village, with only one church, Seventh Day Adventist. I formerly lived at Houghton Lake, Michigan.

We are very much in need of some one to come here and hold meetings. I believe that it would be a good field to work in. I have talked to many about your church and they have expressed a desire for an elder to come here.

Oh, will not some elder come in answer to this! One would be welcome at our home. I can not put in words how much I desire one to come. I wish to thank all of the kind friends who cheered me when I was ill some three years ago, who wrote such kind letters and post cards to me. It brought to me much comfort. I pray that God may bless all for their kindness.

Praying that some elder will answer this appeal from one who wishes to be a sister, and who prays that God may bless all in the good work, I am,

ROUTE 3.

FLORENCE M. LEIBY.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes.

FLORIDA.—Met at Fairview church, near Pensacola, Florida, April 11, C. J. Clark presiding. Branches reporting: Fairview 28, Alafloa 172. Bishop's agent reported: Receipts, $72.27; expenditures, $127.02; balance due agent, $54.75. Treasurer reported on hand, $1.65. Expense bill of district president, $2.60, was ordered paid. Next conference will be held at Fairview church, near Pensacola, Florida, 10 a. m., July 10. Preaching by John H. Johnson, C. J. Clark, James Cooper. E. N. McCall, secretary.

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT.

The Saints and Friends of the Eastern Colorado District: Please take notice that upon the resignation and removal from the Eastern Colorado District of Brother Arthur H. Mills, former agent, Brother A. E. Tabor, of Wray, Colorado, has been duly appointed bishop's agent for said territory in the interest of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Brother Tabor also has the recommendation of the former agent, Brother A. H. Mills, and Brother J. W. Rushton, missionary in charge. We commend him to the Saints and friends in this work.

The Bishopric extend special thanks to Brother A. H. Mills for the good work he has performed in the office the past year. We trust he may be prospered in his business.

We trust the Saints will be ready to help Brother Tabor as one of the Lord's ministers, and that the work placed in his hands may be promptly and fully carried out. May each one who thus labors for the Master's cause receive his special blessing.

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 12, 1914.

Pastoral.

To Those Interested in Mission Number Three, Comprising Maritime Provinces, Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, New York, Massachusetts, Maryland, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and District of Columbia; Greeting: The results accomplished by the united efforts of the ministry and membership last year were so encouraging that we may look forward to this year's activities as likely to produce a large ingathering of souls, an extension of all the departments of church work, and a closer approach to the ideals of the church.

Our message to the world is "Christ, and him crucified." Nothing should be allowed to come between that message and the world, in the nature of ambiguity of language, slothfulness, unattractive mannerisms, or philosophy that confuses. In the difficulties to be met, and sacrifices to be borne, may we support each other, and by God's assistance accomplish the important work assigned us.

We trust the following appointments of the ministry will be satisfactory to all:

New York and Philadelphia District: W. W. Smith, Philadelphia objective; J. A. Koehler, Philadelphia second church objective; E. B. Hull, Brooklyn, objective; George Morris; if assistance can be procured Brother Morris will operate the tent in season.

New York District: A. E. Stone; A. M. Chase, who will give such help to the Niagara Falls Branch as may be deemed necessary.

Elder A. D. Angus will labor as an evangelical minister in both the above-named districts.

Massachusetts District: A. B. Phillips; William Anderson. These brethren will perhaps find it of advantage to be associated for a time in tent work; after the tent season Brother Anderson may wend his way to Maine, where a good field awaits his labors. After consultation with the Presidency, R. W. Farrell has been assigned to Providence.

Eastern Maine District: F. J. Ebeling, who will give support to Jonesport and vicinity.

Western Maine District: J. F. Sheehy.

Elder H. O. Smith will labor as an evangelical minister in the New England States.

My mission address will be the same as last year, 343 Medford Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts. Let all be assured I will be glad to learn of the triumphs and needs of the mission work. Times of reporting, July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. Let a note be made of the above address and times for reporting, so there will be no delay made in the reports reaching the Presidency.

May local workers unite their efforts, and thus honor their calling and make successful their work.

I will endeavor to give support in the fields where help especially is needed; and if the way is clear I may visit Nova Scotia before the close of the year.

May God's peace and blessings abide with his people everywhere.

PAUL M. HANSON,

Minister in General Charge.

To the Saints and Brethren of the Southern Indiana District: Having been chosen by the minister in charge to labor as his associate in charge of the work in this district, I sincerely call upon all the Saints and local forces to give us your very best aid in effecting new openings this year, that others who have not heard the gospel may be privileged to hear it and obey. Now, dear Saints, please write to me when you want an elder to come where work is needed. My field address is 315 North Thirty-second Street, Louisville, Kentucky. My home address is 813 West Kansas Street, Independence, Missouri.

I desire to keep in touch with the missionaries all the time, so we may be able to meet all emergencies.

Let me urge upon the Saints to see to it that their names are placed on the bishop's agent's books. In this way all may be coworkers in this great work of building up the kingdom of God.

Your brother and colaborer for Christ,

J. W. METCALF.

Come and learn how up-to-date teachers and classes do things. Conference will convene Sunday the 27th at 10 a. m.

Notice to Eastern Oklahoma Saints.

Inasmuch as Brother John Harp, who has been acting as district president in the immediate past, has been transferred by the appointing powers to another field, and inasmuch as Brother J. C. Chrestensen, who is a high priest, has been appointed to labor in Eastern Oklahoma, we, the undersigned, suggest the advisability of his being placed in charge of the district as president.

We therefore appoint him to fill the vacancy caused by the removal of Brother Harp, such appointment subject to ratification of the next district conference.

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERCK M. SMITH,
For the First Presidency.
W. M. AYLOR,
Missionary in Charge.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 2, 1914.

Notice of Appointment.

Brother R. T. Walters was appointed to labor in the Nodaway District for the conference year. This action was agreeable to the Quorum of Twelve in Council after the adjournment of conference.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Quorum Notices.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS PRIESTS.

We will be in session some time during the conference held at Mission Branch, June 5 and 6. Would like to see and hear from all of the members of the quorum, and invite all visiting priests to meet with us. We desire reports from all members. As none have reported in March, as the by-laws prescribe, do not neglect this duty.

Meet with us if possible, let us get in touch with each other and exchange views, that we all may be edified and strengthened, and be made better able to occupy and perform the work allotted us to do.

Your fellow servants in Christ Jesus,
CHRIS B. HARTSHORN, President.
FREDERICK E. BONE, Secretary.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA PRIESTS.

At our last district conference F. M. Sheehy organized a temporary priest's quorum, Emery S. Parks being elected as temporary chairman, Mark Fonda, secretary pro tem. The seven priests present were: Harley V. Bates, Leroy Harris, Fred Lawn and Mark Fonda, of San Jose; Will Dawson, of Sacramento; Elmer Aylor of Stockton; and Emery S. Parks of San Francisco. Brother Sheehy instructed us to advertise in the HERALD and Ensign before reunion, which will be held at Irvington, California, where the permanent quorum will be organized. I would like the names and addresses of all the priests in the district so that application blanks can be sent to each, all may become charter members, and be informed of the benefits derived from quorum work.

A program is now being arranged.

Character Note Hymnal.

To the Saints of the South, and All Who Are Interested:
Did you see the notice in HERALD, volume 61, number 17, page 414, concerning a character note hymnal?

I found a demand for something of this kind in the South. Now is your chance. Let everybody write the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, stating just how many copies you will pledge yourselves for.

A good plan would be for every branch to appoint some one to solicit pledges, and report to the publishing house the number secured. Now is the chance to get what you have wanted, if you will only work for it. I presume it would require at least 2,500 copies to justify this expense.

Died.

MONAHAN.—Eliza J. Monahan was born in Ohio, March 22, 1838. She was baptized by H. J. Thurman, at Joplin, Missouri, about five years ago. She came to Pomona two years ago with her youngest daughter, Sister Mattie A. Leslie, who cared for her faithfully until the Master called her home, April 22, 1914. While she suffered affliction, yet she was patient and kind, and held the love and esteem of all who knew her. Her smiling face and silvery hair will long be remembered by Saints and friends as well as by her family of two sons, four daughters, several grandchildren. Sermon by R. F. Slye, of San Bernardino; interment in Pomona Cemetery.

PETERSEN.—Christen Petersen was born in Denmark, March 17, 1833; died at his home in western Iowa, April 28, 1914. He came to America with his family in 1880. United with the church soon afterwards, and remained a faithful member until death. He leaves wife, two daughters, three sons. Funeral from Methodist Episcopal church, Hazel Dell; sermon by D. N. Chambers, assisted by J. A. Hansen; interment in Hazel Dell Cemetery. There was a large attendance.

FAULK.—Margaret Faulk was born April 19, 1832, in Conecuh County, Alabama; died April 22, 1914. She was baptized by G. R. Scogins, March 19, 1876, and lived in the faith until the end. Five children mourn her death; two others and her husband preceded her to the other side. Sermon by C. J. Clark.

WEST.—Frances E. West was born March 24, 1855, in Santa Rosa County, Florida; died April 19, 1914. She was baptized March 19, 1868, by T. H. Waddell, the first missionary of the Reorganization to visit this country. She has been a faithful Saint ever since. Her home has always been open to the elders. She was married to Brother L. F. West, May 19, 1870. Nine children were born to them, seven of whom, with her husband, are living. Two brothers, John and James McArthur, also mourn her death. Brief services were conducted at the grave by C. J. Clark.

BAULDIN.—Mable Alice Bauldin was born at Raymney, Morshire, England, February 9, 1897; died at Welland, Ontario, March 10, 1914. She was baptized at Hamilton, Ontario, 1912, by Charles Hannah. Father, mother, two brothers, and one sister survive her. She was an accomplished singer; loved the songs of Zion. Her lovely, sweet disposition made for her many true friends. Rich and elaborate were the floral offerings. As we looked upon her sweet, silent form a peace pervaded our soul, and we thought, if so beautiful in death, how much more beautiful would the resurrected body be. Sermon by G. C. Tomlinson.

WILSON.—Edna May Vredenburg Wilson, was born October 20, 1880, at Pisgah, Iowa; died at Elk Point, South Dakota, May 5, 1914, after prolonged illness, typhoid and pneumonia. She married Bert A. Wilson, July 1, 1905. Two sons were born to them, Charles E., deceased, and Leroy E. Sister Wilson was a daughter of Brother and Sister Charles Vredenburg, Pisgah, Iowa. She leaves husband, little son Leroy, father, mother, five brothers, four sisters, a host of relatives and friends. Funeral in Saints' church, Pisgah, Iowa, in charge of Joseph Lane; sermon by Alma Booker.

WHITE.—Mary A. White was born at Pocassell, Massachusetts, December 16, 1842; died at Independence, Missouri, April 24, 1914. She married James Byron Brown, June 7, 1864, four children being born to them, Lillian W.; Mary A.; Nettie A.; Byron W., the latter, with the husband, preceding her in death. December 2, 1877, she married Brother Valentine White, two children, Bertie L., and Alma D., being given them, the latter dying in infancy. Sister White was of a cheerful, active disposition, and aided acceptably in the church with her musical and other abilities. The husband, two daughters, Sisters Lillian W. Hammer, and Mary A. Closson, and the son, Bertie, were present at her demise, which was very peaceful. Funeral from the church, April 26; sermon by E. L. Kelley. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

OLSON.—Flora May Olson born May 21, 1894, near Danway, Miller Township, LaSalle County, Illinois; died March 6, 1914, near Sheridan, Illinois, aged 19 years, 9 months, 15 days. She leaves father, mother, three brothers, Alvin, Lester and Roy. The first two brothers reside in Aurora, Illinois, the last in Miller, Illinois. One brother and one sister preceded her to the other and better world. Funeral by F. M. Cooper.

HUDDLESTON.—Amanda Jane, daughter of Samuel and Susan Brown, was born in Sumner County, Tennessee, December 24, 1852; died April 9, 1914; married James P. Huddleston, March 9, 1879; was baptized in 1889, and remained faithful to the end. She suffered long and patiently and was anxious to go. She was a loving wife and a kind and considerate neighbor. Services at the home by Reverend Walkup, interment in K. P. Cemetery, Deepwater, Missouri. She leaves husband, sister, Sister Harriet C. Sedoris, of Independence, Missouri, nieces and nephews.

June Century.

The Century will begin in June the publication of a series of stories by George Bronson-Howard, written around the French hero of historic romance, Francois Villon, who inspired Robert Louis Stevenson to write what good judges call his greatest piece of fiction. The romance and excitement of the commencement season is said to fill a story called "Digging up Sam" by Maria Thompson Daviss, author of "The melting of Molly," "The tinder box," and other love stories. What the Scandinavians have contributed to America will be described in a paper by the authority on immigration, Professor Edward A. Ross, who, in The Century, has been taking up the various nationalities that make the American race. As Professor Ross is a member of the faculty of the University of Wisconsin, he is probably even more familiar with the Scandinavians, who preponderate in that part of the country, than with any other nationality.

Book Reviews.

TEACHING SEX HYGIENE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—By Doctor A. B. Lowry, Forbes and Company, 443 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, price 50 cents. In this timely book the whole question of instructing children in personal purity is thoroughly discussed by the most noted writer on sex hygiene. The various opinions and present status of the problem of sex education are fully set forth. The author's views on the relation of the school and the home to the subject and the suggestions given for method of instruction make this an exceptionally helpful book for teachers, parents and all interested in child welfare. The Journal of Education, (Boston) says: "Dr. Lowry's books combine medical knowledge, simplicity, and purity in an unprecedented way. They are chaste and void of offense to the most delicate natures. The volumes are written with scientific accuracy and clearness. Every teacher should have a set."

RELIGION AND LIFE.—Such a discussion of religious matters as Doctor Elwood Worcester, of the Emmanuel Church, Boston, has given us in his book, Religion and Life, Harper and Brothers, Franklin Square, New York City, holds our attention because through its simplicity and straightforwardness it compels us to realize the truth that religion is a reality and a vital force in life. The same spirit that inspires, on the one hand, work for the improvement of the country churches and schools and, on the other, the writing of such a treatise as Professor's Royce's The Problem of Christianity is strongly manifested in Doctor Worcester's book. It is a spirit of faith and of practical sense. Religion and Life, therefore, is not a book that can be ignored as of remote theological interest: its appeal to modern consciousness is too direct for that. Inquiring with undoctinal boldness and candor just what the teachings of Jesus really were, Doctor Worcester applies them to modern conditions and personal problems, not seeking to persuade us that they afford an instantaneous, specific relief for every ill, but convincing us that when we act in harmony with them we move along the lines of real progress. Significant of the general point of view of the book is his doctrine regarding prayer, which is recognized as an actual power in the universe. Social betterment, too, can be brought about only as religion and science work together. In all matters the slow progress of human knowledge and the puzzling inconsistencies and limitations of human life must be frankly recognized, but not regarded as decisive or final. Although it may be perfectly true that not all men are capable of what is called conversion or change of heart, we are not to conclude that no such thing exists. Religion and Life gives us a forward-looking viewpoint, inculcating a sane and hopeful faith which does not mean giving up of rational or scientific thought, but encourages the use of all means toward greater knowledge and the betterment of man's estate. After all, the most convincing agreement roots in personal experience. "I ask the reader to believe," writes Doctor Worcester, "that when I describe the effect of religious belief upon human life I am not speaking of that which I do not know. There is no peace so deep as the peace of God, and the normal effect of this costly possession is the heightening of all our physical and spiritual faculties, across to all that is deepest and most beautiful in human nature, and an eager desire to extend to others the benefits we have received."

WHAT IS THE MARRIAGE SERVICE?

Our attention is again called to the somewhat anomalous peculiarity of some of the marriage services we hear have been used in the everyday fashionable world. For instance: The reverend gentleman who performed a marriage ceremony which is to pass into history, after using one of the popular church services, concluded something like this, allowing us the privilege of paraphrasing slightly: As a servant of the church, and acting by virtue of the authority of the people of the State and in the name of the church, I pronounce you MAN and wife.

A bystander or a reader of the published notice of such marriage may be pardoned if he stops a little in thought and makes inquiry of his knowledge of history and memory of things transpired heretofore around him, as to what the woman in the case has received from this ceremony. What is her status in society? what her position with the man so solemnly proclaimed as a man and her as a wife?

The fact that the character of this service comes to us as a relic of the old Church of England service does not remove the difficulty. All the bystanders, invited guests of such a ceremony, and all who read of such a ceremony being performed know that one party of the service was a man and the other was a woman. Was there anything hidden in the mysterious pronouncement of this minister that the individual presumed to be married was a man? Does it not come to us as a relic of days written of by Charles Reade in ironical and iconoclastic temper when he presented the at that time existing laws of England touching the marriage service which was of this anomalous character that the man marrying a wife in England could marry another in Scotland or elsewhere, and the wife of the latter marriage could not plead in the courts against him for violating the marriage covenant, as she obtained no standing as a wife by such ceremony? Or, if married to a woman in Scotland, he should wish to marry one in England the marriage in Scotland could not be pleaded in bar of his marriage in England.

In this particular we would recommend to the readers of the HERALD, who may be curious, to read Shakespeare's play called, "The taming of the shrew," wherein is portrayed the character of a wife under the administration of the laws when Shakespeare wrote. Of course we give credit and respectability to the status of the woman after she has been publicly proclaimed a wife to some one who may have chosen her for the domestic position, and hail with pleasure the increasing respect for the woman as the equal with man before the laws and in the highest development of civilization; but it sometimes almost develops a shiver when we hear or read of that peculiar expression by the gentleman of the cloth, or some judge, or justice, or clerk of court at the close of the service, "I pronounce you man and wife."

The readers of the HERALD may congratulate themselves, as we congratulate them, that when the domestic relation was introduced into the church by revelation and the church placed upon record in 1835 before the world for all time that they were authorized to recognize the equality established by creation as recognized by the Apostle Paul, the man is not without a woman, and the woman is not without a man in the Lord, and hence the bond and obligation of marriage is mutual, and when the one becomes the wife the other becomes the husband and there is both sense and wisdom and strength in the man of God using the expression: In the name of Jesus Christ and by virtue of the authority of the people of the state, I pronounce you HUSBAND and WIFE. This pronouncement leaves no open door for the bringing in of the abuse of the marriage covenant to belittle the claims of the wife upon the society and the resources of her husband; but makes him a party in equal responsibility not to violate the bond and sacredness of the unity thus established. The words husband and wife mean something in this ceremony, and we should hope for the consistency which we should maintain as to our faith and confidence in God and in his revelation that the idea of the wife simply being a chattel or a piece of property, that has come down through the Dark Ages, should no longer find countenance among us; we should give these words their full meaning and thus acknowledge with the Apostle Paul that the man is not without the woman, and the woman is not without the man in the Lord.

More than once since we began our ministry have we heard that very singular pronouncement, "I pronounce you man and wife," where the conditions seemed to warrant the intrusion of the thought that there was a striking injustice placed upon the woman's position in such pronouncement. To us it has seemed to be a travesty—almost a mockery—and we wonder that it has so long been held as a part of the ceremony.

We should gladly hail the day when there shall be a revision of these old-time Church of England rules and regulations and a newer code touching the proper relations of the parties be brought prominently before those who witness the ceremony.

The closing paragraph of section 111 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants states that the parties standing together before the minister, the man on the right and the woman on the left, shall be addressed by the minister as he shall be led by the Spirit; and the question should be asked of the parties if they both mutually accept each the other as companions in wedlock, husband and wife, promising to keep the bond and legal obligation they have assumed, keeping themselves for each other and from all others during their natural lives together; and when they shall have answered yes, he shall say, "I pronounce you husband and wife," and shall add, May God bless you to keep your covenant inviolate as long as life shall last you both. This certainly regards the legal obligation as binding upon each alike, not one law for the man and another for the woman; he is pronounced the husband and she the wife.

Is it not time for us to call attention to the sacredness of this obligation, and point out the apparent fallacy of those formulas found in the prevailing books of discipline and canon prayer? We certainly think so.

NOTES ON THE BOOK OF GENESIS---PART I

CREATIVE POWER PRESENT AT THE BEGINNING

Science positively affirms creative power.—Lord Kelvin.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.—Genesis.

The controversy regarding the origin of life and the cosmic order has been long and involved. Between the theory of intelligent creation by design and the theory of a "fortuitous concourse of atoms" (chance) there can be no compromise.

A great many men have assumed that science in some way has discredited the leading postulate of Genesis, i. e., that creative power was present at the beginning of things. Others have assumed that science can neither affirm nor deny the presence of creative power.

So far from denying creation, leading scientists are inclined to affirm. They are not even content to remain neutral; but go as far as theology could reasonably ask them to go.

In an address before the Christian Association of University College, London, during 1902, Lord Kelvin, referred to by one writer as the "Prince of scientists," delivered the following remarkable utterances:

I am in thorough sympathy with Professor Henslow in the fundamentals of his lecture; but I can not admit that, with regard to the origin of life, science neither affirms nor denies creative power. Science positively affirms creative power. It is not in dead matter that we live and move and have our being, but in the creating and directing power which science compels us to accept as an article of belief. We can not escape from that conclusion, when we study the physics and dynamics of living and dead matter all around. Modern biologists are coming, I believe, once more to a firm acceptance of something beyond mere gravitational, chemical, and physical forces; and that unknown thing is a vital principle. We have an unknown object put before us in science. In thinking of that object we are all agnostics. We only know God in his works, but we are absolutely forced by science to believe with perfect confidence in a directive power—in an influence other than physical, or dynamical, or electrical forces. Cicero, by some supposed to have been editor of Lucretius, denied that men and plants and animals could come into existence by a fortuitous concourse of atoms. There is nothing between absolute scientific belief in a creative power and the acceptance of the theory of a fortuitous concourse of atoms. Just think of a number of atoms falling together of their own accord, and making a crystal, a sprig of moss, a microbe, a living animal. Cicero's expression, "fortuitous concourse of atoms," is not wholly inappropriate for the growth of a crystal. But modern scientific men are wholly in agreement with him in condemning it as utterly absurd in respect to the coming into existence, or the growth, or the continuation of molecular combinations presented in the bodies of living things. Here scientific thought is compelled to accept the idea of creative power. Forty years ago I asked Liebig, walking somewhere in the country, if he believed that the grass and flowers that we saw around us grew by mere chemical forces. He answered, "No; no more than I could believe that a book of botany describing them could grow by mere chemical forces." Every action of human free will is a miracle to physical and chemical and mathematical science.

I admire the healthy, breezy atmosphere of free thought throughout Professor Henslow's lecture. Do not be afraid of being freethinkers. If you think strongly enough you will be forced by science to the belief in God, which is the foundation of all religion. You will find science not antagonistic but helpful to religion.—Christian Apologetics, pp, 25, 26.

Contrary to the belief of some, even evolution, at least as expounded by the great apostle of evolution, Darwin, affirms creative power at the beginning. It is true that Haeckel, who professed to interpret Darwin, wrote:

Darwin gave us the key to the monistic explanation of organism. . . . Mechanism alone can give us a true explanation of natural phenomena; for it traces them to their real efficient causes—viz, to blind and unconscious agencies.—Riddle of the Universe, pp. 264, 265.

But Darwin himself attempted only to account for changing forms of life; the origin of life itself he did not presume to explain, but plainly and unequivocally attributed it to a great Creator, as the following will show:

The birth both of species and of the individual are equally parts of that grand sequence of events which our minds refuse to accept as the result of blind chance.—Descent of Man, vol. 2, p. 396.

There is a grandeur in this view of life, with its several powers, having been originally breathed by the Creator into a few forms or into one; and that whilst this planet has gone cycling on according to the fixed law of gravity, from so simple a beginning, endless forms most beautiful and most wonderful have been and are being, evolved.—Origin of Species, p. 429.

Like Lord Kelvin, Darwin rejected the thought of a "fortuitous concourse of atoms." He could not admit the possibility of life and cosmic order as the result of "blind and unconscious agencies."

Science, according to Darwin, admits an initial act of creation by a great Creator, resulting in one or more forms of life.

Evolution may in time make further concessions. Professor Frank Cavers, D. Sc., professor of biology at Hartley University, Southampton, says:

As to the alleged "conflict" between science and religion, I believe you will generally find that the science which is pressed into service by agnostics and atheists is many, many years behind the times, and that these writers and lecturers have only a second-hand smattering of the biology of forty or fifty years ago. Science forges ahead pretty rapidly nowadays, and in regard to evolution, for example, many of Darwin's theories have fallen to the ground. In fact, the whole question of evolution is in the melting pot now, and it is not easy to foresee what will come out as a result of current research on the difficult problems of variation, heredity, etc. The man who ventures to dogmatize on such subjects can not be, and is not, taken seriously in the world of scientific experts; while those who take upon themselves to deny the existence of an intelligent First Cause (or to negative any of the other teachings of Christianity) can not possibly claim that they do so in the name of science.—Religious Beliefs of Scientists, page 77.

Science, according to Lord Kelvin, positively affirms creative power. "If you think strongly enough you will be forced by science to a belief in God," he affirms.

So we may continue in our previous conviction that the leading Bible postulate, "In the beginning God created," is scientific, and is the true basis not only of religion but of science as well.

It is true that while science may recognize the presence of creative force, known to religion as God, concerning the nature of that creative force science is "agnostic," as Kelvin says (i. e., not knowing), excepting as knowledge may come from a study of nature. God is known to science only through his works. Thus limited, a very imperfect knowledge is all that can be hoped for.

But it is impossible to hold any deep-rooted or lively belief in a great Creator who has brought such beings as men and women into existence without sooner or later coming to the conclusion that he would most likely both from choice and necessity communicate to them some direct knowledge of himself. Here begins the function of revelation. Those who accept the initial postulate, "In the beginning God created," will find in a further reading of the Scriptures a progressive revelation of God as a personal Creator.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

WIRELESS TELEPHONY.—The London Times reports that on March 29 a tenor singing at Laeken, near Brussels, was heard by wireless telephony in Paris, a distance of two hundred and twenty-five miles. The Public announces that wireless telephone messages were on May 13 exchanged between New York and Philadelphia, ninety miles apart, said messages being at the same time heard by a wireless operator on a vessel fifty-five miles out at sea.

WOULD DESTROY JERUSALEM WALL.—As a feature of the modernization of Jerusalem, Zion's Herald (Boston) states that the ancient walls of Jerusalem "are now being offered for sale as building material." A storm of protest has arisen in many quarters, both secular and religious. While it may be necessary, as authorities state, to remove parts of the wall to permit modern improvements, leading periodicals like the Outlook, cry, "Why destroy all?" The Churchman (New York) expresses the hope that "the effort of some of the citizens to preserve portions of the wall will be a success." Voicing the sentiment of many, the Outlook says:

The walls are picturesque; they contain memorials of earlier times; they offer opportunity for further discoveries. Hence it is not surprising that the rumor of an offer by the authorities to sell the walls for building material should have called forth much adverse comment. This is specially noted in Jerusalem itself, where, so we are informed, a number of the foreign consuls have united in protest.

CONDITIONS ATTENDING BALKAN WAR.—The Carnegie Commission investigating causes of the Balkan War and conditions attending and following same have completed their work, and submit an extended report. As leading causes the commission found; Weakness and want of foresight on the part of Turkey; powerlessness of Europe to impose on a constitutional Turkey the reforms it had introduced into absolute Turkey; consciousness of increased strength which alliance brought to the Balkan States. The commission reports barbarous acts and inhuman reprisals performed alike by all the contestants upon each other; and atrocities committed on noncombatants surpassing in many instances crimes of the Dark Ages. Everywhere the commission met desolation, wretchedness and social and moral disintegration. This report closes:

The consequences of the recent war, economic, moral and social, are dreadful enough to justify any honest effort by any person or by any nation to alleviate the really distressing situation.

MEXICAN WAR.—After a desperate stand and much fighting in the vicinity of Saltillo and against strong Constitutionalist forces under the direct command of General Villa, the Federalists have evacuated Saltillo, retreating southward toward San Luis Potosi. Fighting is reported near San Luis Potosi, with odds in favor of the Constitutionalist. The siege of Mazatlan on the western coast of Mexico continues, with the Federalists fast losing strength and likely to be taken. The return of Villa with his forces to Torreon makes uncertain his next move.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—Conditions in Mexico continue unchanged. Following several preliminary meetings of mediators and representatives of Mexico and mediators and United States representatives, the first conference of mediators and representatives of both countries occurred on the 23d, at the request of the Mexicans. The Washington administration is reported as continuing efforts to persuade the Constitutionalist to send representatives to the conference. The mediators are said to have suggested the retirement of Huerta, and a provisional government of the commission form pending a constitutional election.

COLORADO STRIKE.—Thousands of firearms have in response to the order of the 2d been turned over to the military authorities. The Colorado legislature adjourned on the 16th, after authorizing a one million dollar bond issue to pay the expenses of the militia in the late difficulties. This legislature passed enactments to close the saloons during disorder, to regulate the carrying of firearms, and to submit a constitutional amendment allowing compulsory arbitration in industrial disputes. In a communication to Governor Ammons, President Wilson has expressed disappointment over what he considers inadequate action of the legislature. The President indicates that the federal troops are in Colorado only to maintain order until the State has time and opportunity to resume sovereignty and control, and suggests that beyond this the State of Colorado has no constitutional right to throw herself entirely upon the Federal Government when it is within the power of her legislature to take effective action.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

CHILDREN'S HOME.—We call attention to an announcement by the executive committee of the trustees of the Children's Home appearing in the miscellaneous department of this issue. Our home for children was built by divine command. It is a worthy institution, and should have the support of the Saints.

AN IMPOSING GATHERING.—The Jackson Examiner for April 17, published at Independence, Missouri, where the late General Conference of the church was held, in commenting on the conference says:

This General Conference is composed of several hundred earnest, upstanding, thinking men and women. Its sessions are governed by strict parliamentary usages and business is disposed of promptly. Frederick M. Smith, who presides at most of the sessions, is one of the best parliamentarians and presiding officers to be found anywhere. He knows his business and is also informed as to every detail of the church management. . . . Altogether it is an imposing gathering, and those who have never witnessed the sessions of a great working body would be well repaid by attending some of these sessions.

NEWSPAPER SPACE GRANTED.—The Onaway (Michigan) Outlook recently granted space, first page, to an announcement of a series of ten sermons by Elder Alvin R. Ellis, subject, time, and place being given. Elsewhere in the same issue and over the signature of Elder Ellis appears a comprehensive statement of the faith and practices of the church, together with the differences between the Reorganized and Utah churches. Many newspaper men are willing to furnish space to those of our representatives who approach them in a business-like way, and present their announcement and manuscript in proper form. Such opportunities to place the faith of the church before the world should be and are being improved by our brethren.

WESLEY'S IDEAL.—John Wesley is reported as having said that a Methodist is:

One who loves God with all his heart, and soul, and mind, and strength. He rejoices evermore, prays without ceasing, and in everything gives thanks. His heart is full of love to all mankind, and is purified from envy, malice, wrath, and every unkind affection. His one desire, and the one design of his life, is not to do his own will, but the will of Him that sent him. He keeps all God's commandments, from the least to the greatest. He follows not the customs of the world; for vice does not lose its nature through its becoming fashionable. He fares not sumptuously every day. He can not lay up treasures on the earth; nor can he adorn himself with gold and costly apparel. He can not join in any diversion that has the least tendency to vice. He can not speak evil of his neighbor any more than he can tell a lie. He can not utter unkind or evil words. No corrupt communication ever comes out of his mouth. He does good unto all men; unto neighbors, strangers, friends and enemies.

THE ETERNITY AND UNIFORMITY OF LAW

The law of the Lord is perfect.—Psalm 19: 7.

To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.—Isaiah 8: 20.

And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been, things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.

All kingdoms have a law given: and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also, and conditions.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 9.

The subject under consideration is one we approach with extreme caution, for we know it is a theme of great magnitude, and should receive thorough study and deep research. To delineate such a question one needs to be a lawyer who understands the ethics of earthly law, and a scientist who knows his ground, as well as a theological student who is instructed in the proofs of Christianity.

The alluring principle of curiosity, or perchance it may be a strong desire for knowledge implanted in the finite mind, may be the incentive prompting the venture to go forward and make some observations of the royal domain. Man, it is said, is formed for action as well as mere contemplation, so it is hoped this initial effort may stimulate greater activity and the progress in this direction. In the mind of a critical judge it may be an evidence of ignorance on the part of the author—we hope not; but rather that of a prelude to nobler endeavor, breaking down some of the barriers that have annoyed many, transporting us to the perpetual approaches that lead to God.

The term law in its intrinsic sense has many complexities and subdivisions; it therefore has been generously defined. We define it under three existing headings: political or statutory; the natural law, commonly known as the law of nature; and God's revelation to mankind, represented in the true Christian religion.

STATUTORY LAW

This term has a wider range than that line of jurisprudence pertaining to courts. In a sense statutory law has become general, for it not only has a bearing on social conduct, but on international life in various phases. We know statutory law is based on experience that has become crystallized by generations of understanding and usage. In this we have a field of great magnitude in character which hardly is circumscribed by latitude or longitude. Primarily, however, statutory law has to do with the written law of nations. It is the common will declared pertaining to social relationship. Such is the expressed written rule or will of municipality, state, or nation which is in harmony with the national character, and which thus becomes the fiat of combined national intelligence.

The ancient Cicero declared, "True laws are right reason conformable to nature,—universal, unchangeable, eternal; whose commands urge us to duties, and whose prohibitions restrain us from evil." The depth and broadness of this definition we can but appreciate, coming as it does from the greatest orator and rhetorician of Rome, as well as one of her illustrious statesmen.

The eminent Blackstone wrote regarding law, that it is "the rules of human action and conduct."

We gather then that this law appertaining to man truly represents the science of correct conduct, and pertains to the relationship of men to each other in society, that makes them good citizens of earth. It is therefore a standpoint by which man is advised, regulated, and governed. Such law is not always compatible to the divine mind, yet it seems God has decreed we shall obey the same, for we find this instruction:

Honor the king.—1 Peter 2: 17.

Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor.—Romans 13: 7.

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 42: 22; 95: 2.)

NATURAL LAW

I hold we have a very imperfect knowledge of the works of nature till we view them as the works of God; not only as works of mechanism, but works of intelligence; not only as under laws, but under a Lawgiver, wise and good.—James McCosh.

Nature's laws are unmistakably true and reliant. They are inflexible and inexorable. To some extent they are written in the hearts of men, for they are obeyed on volition.

This law speaks from the rocks and mountains, the murmuring brook, the seasons, the sunshine, the rain and its attendant fruitage. In myriads of forms we observe the application of universal law. This law must ever be considered of value and assigned its place in the judgment and conscience of man. It deals with those laws that are common to all and are as nearly as can be determined independent of restrictions of time and place. This kind of law in common parlance is distinguished from statutory law.

When we deal with this subject we have before us a vast area of information to consider. The subject is so profound it is hardly possible to treat it exhaustively. The graduation is not one of a lifetime. In the generalizing, systematizing, as well as the verifying of the different phases of nature's law we have forged the concrete terms of philosophy and science. Philosophy is not altogether synonymous with science, yet both signify the pursuit of knowledge on scientific grounds. Natural philosophy is that science which sets before us for contemplation the nature, causes, and effects of the material works of God. Philosophy is to some extent speculative, while the sciences are more specific. Science is knowledge of the principles of nature and their use. It therefore is purely a matter of intellectual study, research, and observation. At most our understanding of the subject is very imperfect, and too often the premise is no more than conjecture.

REVEALED LAW

Law in theology, a term variously used, includes in its broadest sense all the revelation God has ever given to man, whether doctrinal or perceptive. By a more restricted meaning, however, it is made to apply differently. In conventional modification, and properly, too, we refer to the "Law of Moses," "the ceremonial law," "the law and the prophets," "the moral law," "the law of Christ," etc., each referring to its necessary part of the whole God has given. In toto revealed law appertains to the laws originating with God and transmitted to the finite comprehension of men through the medium of the Holy Spirit, for, as we know, "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Revealed law, therefore represents to us rules of action, precepts, and commandments coming from the authority of God Almighty, which, to reach certain results, we must obey. The method God employs to govern rational beings is therefore by law, and this is what we designate as his moral government among men. In the right consideration of this wondrous scheme, divinely instituted, we see surrounding it the glory of its truth and the sanctity of its holiness, fully justifying its claims, and by which there has radiated the true light of the world, theoretically, morally, temporally, and spiritually.

It is obvious that some of the great political principles contained in the Law of Moses are basic features of political law to-day, and it is from this source we glean a summary of moral obligation unsurpassed by recent legislation. For by its simple statements, "Thou shalt not kill," "Thou shalt not steal," "Thou shalt not commit adultery," etc., it has furnished a basis for some of our specific forms of criminal jurisprudence. These abominations, condemned here, have disgraced ages and nations. No nation, even the foremost of ancient time—Babylon, Egypt, Phœnicia, Carthage, Greece, and Rome—but whose legislators have abetted and whose philosophers have defended these very crimes. True we have the illustration of the institutions of Lycurgus in ancient Sparta as pertaining to purity of manners, and the dissertations on the same subject by Plato in his ideal of a perfect republic, but these are the exception. These illustrations of early piety by these heathen characters are more than offset by the sensuality of the Epicureans; the immodesty of the Cynics; the suicidal servitude condoned by the Stoics; and the blood-thirsty fights of gladiators held in the arena at Rome and defended by high authority. The moral standpoint of the time was at a low ebb, and there was apparent demand of such law. The variation of moral life as erected by the weak and fluctuating authority of human opinion of those days has demonstrated to later generations the need of a clear exposition of law to impress the prohibitions contained in the ten commandments in the regulation of human conduct. We have evidence that such did have some consideration at least, of which the legislators and sages of the east gave evidence when they formed their laws and wrote the principles of their philosophy. Considering these important facts of the early superiority of this law we contend that a moral system so plain, so grand, so sublime, so far-reaching in its consequences, promulgated at so early a date, to such a people, and enforced so effectively in a manner no human power would undertake and with success gives evidence of God's almighty sovereignty.

In the gospel of Christ we see still greater evidences of a divine original. While the former covenant enjoined and sought to promote morality and virtue by the positive injunctions of the decalogue, in the gospel of Christ there was inculcated the two great principles on which depend all true and acceptable piety and virtue. On these two commandments—love to God, and love for man—hung the law and the prophets. Here we have illustrated the eternal and unalterable precept of uprightness that is of unceasing obligation to all men. The measuring of our love to God is thus ever determined by the love we hold for our fellow men.

A larger and more extended injunction of duty and service is commended in the gospel than in the Mosaic code, for therein all overt acts are correlated with motives of the heart. Not only moral renovation, but spiritual regeneration of the very soul by spirit force is contemplated in the gospel system. It demands that we pardon the offences of others if we wish a pardon of our own. This law sets forth every relative and reciprocal duty of parents and children, husbands and wives, masters and servants, rulers and subjects, friends and enemies; and not only does it enjoin equity, justice, and honor, but inspires sublime and noble charity and a boundless effusion of tenderness and brotherhood for all men,—which feels the throb of their hunger and distress, and gives the actual succor needful to maintain life. This law is superior to all other religions, for no other is so consistent with itself, so congruous with science, and the common sense of humanity. We certainly affirm it is infinitely productive of more real contentment, peace, and good will than any other religion which has entered into the hearts of men. What could be more consistent than a conditional salvation? Really is there any principle of the Christian faith, (Hebrews 6: 1-2) that is unreasonable?

Some can not comprehend religion as a strength, guide, and comfort; but only as a source of intellectual combat in angry and heated argument. This law was calculated to bring peace, and whatever engenders hatred, persecution, and reviling, however correct at least in letter, is wrong in spirit, for "the letter killeth but the spirit giveth life." Let us also remember, "For what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."

It is a pity that religion so worthy, so suited to the circumstances of our nature, so consonant to all the dictates of reason, so enticing to the dignity of rational beings, so laden with genuine comfort and felicity, should be rejected and despised by any of God's creation.

LAW IS ETERNAL

Law emanating from God, whether natural or revealed, must partake of the attribute of its author. The dignity of this subject appears when we grasp this truth. True, there are many things shrouded in mystery, but this does not destroy the facts of that which is known. How far science will go into the religious realm we do not know, but there will yet remain a region still to be explored by both. In the knowable of the respective kingdoms we find law is the governing factor. In fact a universe without law is inconceivable.

The infinite God is a law unto himself. It is said he could swear by no greater; he therefore swore by himself. On the face of creation is written the unmistakable evidences of order, system, and law. If a law governing such never changes, that law is eternal. The facts of the universe must be coexistent with the universe itself. Law is continuous with life. Laws in the natural world are not operators themselves, but the modes of operation followed, directed and controlled by a higher power. Each kingdom of nature has its own set of laws. In fact law appears everywhere. We find it in the estate of beauty. It is law that restrains the wheat from ripening in the frozen snow, and forbids the robin's song in the leafless trees of white shrouded winter. The word chance plays no part in the domain of creation and continuity. Everything is so ordered it has definite principles, and never by chance. Rain and snow with us are commonplace, yet they have a long and interesting history. The miracle of the seed gives evidence of an enduring law. The fact of the rose is evidence of the law governing that brought it into existence. Man's existence now as primarily six thousand years previous is reason enough that the same law governing now was operative from the beginning. If matter in one form or another is eternal, by no analogy of reasoning can we separate the fact of the laws governing such, for the very process by which we endeavor to squelch law would destroy matter also.

UNIFORMITY OF LAW

This question we discuss with extreme diffidence. We are cautioned the road has been traveled oft before by able reasoners. In this quest for something reliable, the old question again comes up, Does the Bible agree with science? This question we can not evade, neither do we desire to do so, for therein are involved issues of deep significance to our faith and hope. We know the word science is a mystic word to some, and frightens others to silence when told the Bible narrative is wrong for it "clashes with science." We will try to use a little common sense as we move along this old beaten track.

We go to a definition of the word science to get some relief, and find that it is, "A name for such portions of human knowledge as have been more or less generalized, systematized, and verified." (Chambers.) The root is from the Latin scientia, which means knowledge, and from scire which means "to know." The term "more or less" in Chambers as above given indicates that the conclusions by far are not absolute. Herbert Spencer defines it, "Science is partially unified knowledge," and Sir Oliver Lodge said in Hibbert Journal, volume 1, "It may be that science only sees one half, because it is blind to the other half." We may properly infer, then, that what is popularized as science too often is nothing more than certain deductions and conclusions made in the following theories evolved by research and observation. It should be remembered that when scientific theories are urged against Christianity the foregoing definitions of Lodge and Spencer may leave the findings of science far from conclusive.

If we are to bring about a harmonious blending of revealed religion with the theories and conclusions worked out by some so-called scientists, we would have to answer negatively to the question, Does the Bible agree with science? This depends, of course, on what we call science.

To show that such so-called scientists occasionally make rank blunders in their profession in carrying out their deductions I cite the following: A number of years ago while boring in the delta of the Nile, a party found a piece of pottery at a considerable depth. Calculations were made as to the length of time it would take to accumulate such a deposit over this pottery, which was estimated at thirty thousand years. It was then calculated as a scientific fact that man had been on earth that period. This pottery was heralded and recognized everywhere, and was exhibited in the various cities in Europe as an evidence of the superiority of science over the Bible account of creation. It was finally taken to Rome, where it was found to be pottery of comparatively modern make. This find was recorded in the first edition of Lyell's Antiquity of man, but from recent editions it was expunged, and now it is nearly forgotten.

Flint implements were found near the Delaware River in a deposit of gravel said to have been left during the great ice age. This "evidence" with many was considered conclusive that man existed here for many thousands of years anterior to the account of Genesis. Recent conclusions, however, have altered that verdict, for these flint implements were not found in the undisturbed gravel beds of the ice age at all, but in a lot of loose debris where the Indians of modern times went to make arrow points, etc.

For years it was maintained by science that writing was not known by man at a period claimed by the Bible in the days of Moses. Now in the British museum can be seen the Tel-el-Amarna tablets, as well as the huge black stone containing written laws of King Hammurabi, and both antedate Moses.

Like the Dean of Westminster who declared in 1904, "Science was progressive; it was always ready to modify its conclusions in presence of new facts," so say we.

Professor Sayce says, "In fact, in Assyriology, as in all other branches of science, there is no finality."

Many other retractions by scientists could be cited to show that the defect is not in that which God has revealed, but in man and his finite mind and imperfect knowledge of matters.

We do not wish to be too severe or drastic in our conclusions in this matter, for we know, that in science when rightly considered, we have a strong proof of the claims of Christianity. Some in the elucidation of science have failed to combine with it just and legal views of religion, and attention to its practical acquirements. In the consideration of these great questions they have kept Deity carefully in the background, or banished entirely. We believe when science is properly considered in relation to its higher and ultimate ideals, it will be nothing more than a search into the power, wisdom, benevolence, and overseeing providence of God himself. To be blind to this fact is evidently to be adverse to the overtures of correct reasoning and true philosophy.

We hardly think it possible that the inquiring mind can contemplate the awe-inspiring and astonishing display of wonderment and munificence throughout all the wonderland of creation, and not be led into the exercise of greater love and reverential adoration to the Master mind over all. Such feelings help furnish a reliable basis for all true religion. Is there any clear-minded man that can walk down through this mighty pantomime of nature without feeling the emotion of adoration for the wise and just provisions proving the evidence of a Creator?

There is little doubt the setting aside of all evidences of God from some of the textbooks of science, and nature study has fostered a spirit of irreligion and infidelity. Surely this philosophy as well as religion itself requires that the prodigious displays of nature be traced to their first cause, or as we might express, "from nature up to nature's God." Why should religion alone be made accountable to science? Is not science equally accountable to religion? The revelations of nature and the revelations of God are akin, for they are linked inseparably, and when rightly understood there is beautiful harmony. We dread not the light of science—we hail it as a boon of material value. In fact when rightly comprehended it is a part of the constituency of the perfect order. United they stand, but divided they fall. The truth of revealed religion must harmonize with the system of nature. The glow of mutual light will ever shine towards each other, as the inherent qualities of God are unfolded. When our dimly-seeing eyes discern more clearly we will find all truth to be harmonious. The boundaries of knowledge have been too narrow. The single concept has been taken in either case, when both would have been strengthened by the other.

Much has been said and written on the "evolution" theory. This speculation as some scientists have taught it denies the account in the Bible of the creation of man, shutting out the fact of a Creator and a creation. This view is not concurred in by all scientists. The extremists say man has been "evolved" from a lower type, such as a monkey, a baboon, and then from something still lower—as a frog, for instance, and the frog from "marine animals resembling the larvæ of existing Ascidiæ," (see Descent of Man, page 160), and this from some vegetable or organic matter, from some inorganic crystal, springing spontaneously from that which has no life, as other exponents of the theory have written. In order to justify the correctness of this conclusion from their viewpoint, I quote Sir Oliver Lodge, found in Ideals of Science and Faith: "Taught by science we learn there has been no fall of man; there has been a rise. Through an ape-like ancestry, back through a tadpole and fish-like ancestry, away to the early beginnings of life, the origin of man is being traced."

Doctor Ray Lankester, lecturing at Oxford, June 14, 1905, speaks of "the development of man from a lower animal ancestry—a not very powerful, semi-erect ape. . . . Animals were in their turn shown to have developed from simplest living matter, and this from less highly elaborated compounds of chemical elements differentiated at a still earlier stage of evolution."

And, too, we might include:

When you was a tadpole and I was a fish
In the Paleozoic time,
And side by side on the ebbing tide
We sprawled through the ooze and slime,
Or skitted with many a caudal flip
Through the depths of the Cambrian fen,
My heart was rife with the joys of life,
For I loved you even then.—Anonymous.

While this theory has gained some credence with thinking men, with all due deference to them, we desire to stop here and remark: With all the high attainment in the arts of civilization, with the scientific lore gained by our scientists and medical practitioners, with the knowledge of chemistry and the medical laboratories at their command, they have been unable to make artificially from dead matter one little, tiny live germ cell. Upon this point we are forced to believe the fact of creative power. It is beyond the power of man, in fact it is contrary to the law of nature which God has ordained that living matter can be made from that which is dead. Their ipse dixit on this matter is of the hocus-pocus variety, pure and simple, for they can not demonstrate it, and their "spontaneous generation" theory partakes much of the nature of maybe's, and never can have a permanent footing in science.

Another fact we wish here to emphasize is that the earliest remains of man found at Gibraltar, Belgium, Clichy, France, as well as those of the mound builders, show man to be human—decidedly so—and possessed of superior brain power, intelligence, taste, skill, longevity of life, muscular power and fine physique. The facts are conclusive, man has always been man, for no evidence of the "missing link" has been found, fossilized or otherwise. True, there was taken from the gravel beds of southern England a few years ago a peculiarly formed jawbone, supposed by scientists to represent man in his early antiquity or transition stage; but this is subject to doubt, for it may have been that of a well-formed gorilla, or even an imbecile man of early date. Even to-day we have freaks among our own kindred, and if some future generations would secure a skull or even a jawbone of such they might conclude we were all a generation of semihuman derelicts. To say the least, to build such a theory upon the hypothesis of the mere fraction of a jawbone of doubtful parentage should at least be received with a grain of salt.

J. D. Whitney's discovery of the Calaveras skull one hundred and thirty feet in the gravel underneath a bed of lava in California is used to prove great antiquity for man; but if it does it also proves the evolution theory a far-fetched proposition. To put that skull back to the Pleistocene epoch would be to give that period a degree of intelligence not supported by the evolution theory.

Bret Harte, in his poem entitled, "To the Pliocene Skull," fixes it up in his own mind satisfactorily anyway:

My name is Bowers and my crust was busted
Falling down a shaft in Calaveras County.
But I'd take it kindly if you'd send the pieces
Home to old Missouri.

Such is not difficult of explanation to the students of the ancient Nephite record, that tells of the earthquakes and convulsions of nineteen hundred years ago in this country. (See Ancient America, pages 160 and 176; also Book of Nephi 4: 6-15.)

Strange, is it not, if the evolution theory is correct, man has had an ascending instead of a descending scale? Truly, as Professor Tyndall says, as quoted in Ideals of Science and Faith, "Those who hold the doctrine of evolution are by no means ignorant of the uncertainty of their data"; and as was stated in the Literary Supplement of June 9, 1905, which says, commenting on those who had given some editorials on evolution:

Never was seen such a melee. The humor of it is that they all claim to represent science. . . . Yet it would puzzle them to point to a theological battle field exhibiting more uncertainty, obscurity, dissension, assumption and fallacy than their own. For the plain truth is that, though some agree in this and that, there is not a single point in which they all agree. Battling for evolution, they have torn it to pieces; nothing is left—nothing at all, on their showing, save a few fragments strewn about the arena.

I certainly think that upon the score of the evidence we have, there should be no fears or doubts in resting our case.

We accept the definition of evolution which means to evolve, unroll or unfold as a flower from its bud. The evolution that calls for an advance from a condition of ignorance to that of education and refinement; from savagery to civilization; from the intuition at adoption by baptism into the kingdom of God, to that of "going on to perfection" we wish to say is heartily sanctioned in the faith of Christianity. The progress from babyhood to manhood is one of evolution. The grandest evolution is that of changing this "vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body," (Philippians 3:21) which is done by adding the Christian graces mentioned in 2 Peter 1:5-8. The partaking "of the divine nature" (2 Peter 1:4), the "beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Corinthians 3:18) furnishes us with the keynote of this unfolding. We "evolve" by the cultivation of the mind and heart and finally we have the nature of God, for "it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him." (John 3:2.)

For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.—1 Corinthians 13:12.

That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:8.

If there is any one thing in the Bible considered absolutely unscientific and out of harmony with true law it is the record of the long day of Joshua. (Joshua 10:12-14.) It should be borne in mind that this Bible account was never called in question by any contemporary writer at the time so far as we know, and they were the best capable of judging. We have corroborative testimony from other sources that it was a fact. Jasher the upright (Joshua 10:13) wrote a separate account of it. Josephus, although some centuries later, says of it, "Now that the day was lengthened at this time, and was longer than ordinary, is expressed in the books laid up in the temple." (Book 5, chapter 1, paragraph 17.) We have some evidence from other nations that the circumstance was true. The ancient nine volumes of Herodotus, the father of Grecian history, speak of it. The legends of Egypt contained a record of a long day. Chinese accounts tell us of such a day in the reign of the Emperor Yeo. In Past and Future, November, 1902, Rear Admiral Palmer tells of a traditionary record in ancient Mexico that gives account of this same circumstance. So to dispute the Bible on this point is to go against quite a formidable array of historical testimony, to say nothing of the evidence from an astronomical point of view, which suggests that something of the kind did occur, for a day has been inserted into the world's history.

We might spend considerable time in calling up other points quibbled over, such as Jonah and the whale, the immaculate conception, the miracles and resurrection of Christ, and a number of others, but space will not admit. These points of attack are all strongly fortified with evidence. We have no fears if we can only get the evidence well in hand.

In giving scientific reasons as to just how miracles are done, together with the law that governs in such matters, we may be deficient; but it should be borne in mind there are many other questions that are rated commonplace that we can not explain. Can anyone explain why it is that from the inert apple seed grows the tree that produces the beautiful maiden blush on the apples that it yields? Can any of our scientist friends tell why from the pulseless radish seed there comes a wondrous change as a result of the wooing of the rain and the happy kiss of the sun? Had we perfect knowledge such divine alchemy might be explained as commonplace. The greatest fault now is our lack of knowledge, and not until we merge into that condition of perfection can we sit as critics on the profundities of the things of God and his creation.

All law is uniform, so far as God and nature are concerned, for the reason all law originated with God. There is no such thing as a plurality, such as truths, but it should always be known in the singular, such as truth; for one truth is only a part of another truth which goes to make up the canopy of all truth as it is resident with God.

The earth rolls upon her wings; and the sun giveth his light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night; and the stars also giveth their light, as they roll upon their wings, in their glory, in the midst of the power of God. Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms, that ye may understand? Behold all these are kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any of the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:12.

The sublimity of this truth we can only partially realize. Here we see eternity and uniformity of law so clearly demonstrated we need not comment.

CONCLUSION

The utility of law, then, is apparent to all who will consider. Of all avenues of knowledge to which the finite mind can be directed, none is of more vast importance to man as a moral agent, methods of deliverance and consequences of moral evil and his eternal destiny, than is the service and worship of this Creator who is the essence of all law. God's law has many virtues—in fact they are legion. Think of what it does for man! It divests mankind of a mean and unmanly spirit and brings dignity to the human character. Its ancient advocates who practiced its virtues were known for their constant fortitude and unparalleled interpidity. They expounded their cause before princes and rulers with profound dignity; they suffered the greatest persecutions readily; and even the most excruciating torments they underwent rather than relinquish or betray their trust in that which they had espoused and were conscious was true. Paul, when he stood before the Roman governor, Felix by name, as a prisoner had the boldness to speak on "righteousness, temperance and judgment," thus rebuking him for his notorious conduct and the vices he practiced, until the profligate Felix "trembled." (See Acts 24: 25, and Chambers Encyclopedia, Article "Felix.")

The agencies for good which this law has produced are the greatest evidence of its divinity. It has struck a powerful blow, wherever received, to the absurd system of polytheism and pagan idolatry with all their demoralizing and obscene rites. It has brought a doctrine and practice, not only reasonable but pure and dignified. Its portals are open to the lowly of earth. An artisan or humble tiller of the soil instructed casually in its doctrines holds more just and perfect facts of God, his laws, his attributes, than the most thorough and finished philosopher of heathendom. This eternal law in its broad application seeks to blend humanity in a common brotherhood. This law is the greatest educator against evil and sinful bondage. It emancipates man from evil. It teaches purity, holiness, justice, honor, probity, and deep spirituality. It condemns ostentation, lust, pride, and all forms of evil. In the first ages of Christianity, as to-day, such virtues as rational piety, humility, moderation, self-denial, meekness, patience, brotherly kindness, active benevolence, and charity are eminently conspicuous. No law has held out so strongly the hope of immortality and given such correct information on what is man and his destiny. It points out the way by which pardon of sin can be obtained and teaches deliverance from moral evil of every description. The bulwark of defense by which it is surrounded no infidel phalanx can surmount by fair tactics and onslaught. No one who neglects to study these mighty revealments of divine law, whether formerly set forth "at sundry times and in divers manners," or reiterated by seers and sages of latter days, will ever be able fully to perceive and love the true excellence of that religion which heralds good will to all men who obey its holy mandates.

When this law shall be divested of its false drapery, with which its pretended supporters have sought to adorn it; when it becomes freed from the corruptions human folly has woven into its sacred institutions; when all Christendom who claim its privileges throw off petty bickerings and truly repent and honor its doctrines as formerly revealed and again resounded in the angel's message of latter days (Revelation 14: 6, 7); when Zion shall arise and shine and put on her beautiful garments, sanctified by the lives of her votaries; then, and not until then, shall all who experience such transitions and become subject to the Prince of Peace be enabled to read their titles clear and understand fully this law and its divine Author, immortal, immaculate, and uniform.

May this incentive of a higher ideal take hold of us; may we indeed be transported to loftier altitudes, to a higher and more rarefied atmosphere of spiritual efflorescence. As the new-born babe bursts the womb of its confinement to enter a sphere of wondrous enchantments, so may those who obey his holy law sense the ineffable sublimity and grandeur of this cause,—the restoration of latter days.

May we move forth to all important transactions of character and life and duty as pageantry laboring in a royal nobleman's cause, that shows superiority of him that served God and his law, in contrast with him that served him not.

S. S. SMITH.

PROTESTANT ACTIVITIES IN 1913

[The following with reference to leading Protestant activities for 1913 is quoted from "The Religious Rambler," in The North American (Philadelphia).—EDITORS.]

The epochal events range all the way from the smashing of the ecclesiastical machine in the general assembly of the Northern Presbyterian Church and the radical reorganization of the Congregational denomination to several extraordinary missionary occasions, of which the chief is the actual union of all the home and foreign mission boards of North America for an "every-member canvass" next March.

Aside from an array of definite actions of this sort, the year just closed has been remarkable as a period of readjustment, of a feeling around on the part of the churches for a more efficient service, and for a new front toward the new times. The idea of social service has made steady progress. The spirit of cooperation on the part of all religious and charitable agencies has grown apace. Even the colleges and the country churches have been getting together for a common ministry to the people.

THE RELIGIOUS SPIRIT

In discussing present tendencies in religious life and work with leaders and specialists in many parts of the land, I have found them in agreement upon the rather startling proposition that two strong and distinctive currents flow through the life of to-day. One of these is the markedly religious spirit in the whole body of the people.

Politics, social service, and literature all show a notable seriousness, and even a real spirituality. The best-selling novel of the year has been The Inside of the Cup, which is really an essay on contemporary Christianity. Of the output of general religious volumes, there has been a surprising array. Beyond question, the mood of to-day is fundamentally religious.

DECLINE OF ATTENDANCE

In contradistinction, there is apparent an equally clear popular current away from the church. Church attendance is on the decline. This is a nation-wide phenomenon. It affects rural churches and those in the great cities. It is not uncommon for edifices capable of seating one thousand or one thousand five hundred persons to have less than one hundred worshipers at a regular Sunday service.

This is alarming to real leaders, who perceive that the welfare of every individual church is bound up with the welfare of all. Some lesser men, individualists, are resorting to sensational methods to get audiences for themselves, after drawing their crowds from other churches, and heedless of the general decline in church attendance so long as they can report large congregations.

During the last few months there has sprung into wide favor the idea of a "go-to-church Sunday." This is really an adjunct of the church advertising plan, which aims to keep people going to church every Sunday. The avidity with which this method has been seized shows that pastors realize that church attendance is basic to the life of the organization. If you can not get people to church, you simply can not do anything else with them. Church attendance underlies all benevolent projects.

NEW PUBLICITY IDEALS

The last year has also made a permanent place for itself in religious history by the widespread introduction of the new ideas of publicity, especially in the form of paid display advertising by the united churches of a community. This goes hard with many congregations. They have been so long used to sitting as beggars at the back gate of the newspapers that the idea of walking upright and self-respectingly into the front office, like any other big business concern, is strange to them.

All unconsciously, many churches have demanded the special consideration that is given to weaklings. They are slow to realize that in this new era they have got to get out and make good in the world of affairs. Henceforth the churches will increasingly have to justify their immense expenditure for plant and preacher by making an adequate return upon their investment.

The "cost expert" is abroad in the land, and his searching investigations are showing that the most expensive thing about a church is an empty pew. The signs are that the new publicity, with its "go-to-church" objective, will receive even more attention in 1914 than the every-member canvass.

SOME NOTABLE CONVENTIONS

Several notable conventions marked the year 1913. All were conspicuous for their new breadth of view and quickened interest in social problems. . . .

It (the Congregational Church) virtually reorganized itself. It parted company for ever with the old conception of individual congregational independence, and tightened up its loose denominational ties. For the first time in its history it adopted a creed. The benevolent boards were put under denominational control. A general secretary was elected whose functions are virtually those of a bishop.

The Northern Presbyterians made their part of the historic three-assembly, Pan-Presbyterian meeting in Atlanta famous by wrecking the venerable ecclesiastical "machine" discrediting the ecclesiastical politicians, and manifesting a spirit of democracy and insurgency that will be felt for long years to come.

The triennial general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church was marked by a refusal to consider a change of name for the church; by a vigorous interest in missions, and by increasing democracy in methods of representation and legislation.

CENTENNIALS AND MISSIONS

After counting up the many millions of pieces of special literature, from big books to picture post cards, sold and distributed upon the occasion of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of David Livingstone last March, the missionary leaders ventured the assertion that no centennial of any human being's birth was ever so widely observed as this.

Two other notable missionary centennials were kept during 1913, that of Henry Martyn, the brilliant young missionary to India and Persia, and the recognition of one hundred years of missions in India. This occasion is being kept in both America and India.

Most notable of all the missionary developments of the year (not forgetting the momentous events in China) was the organization of the united missionary campaign. This finally brought together all the different home and foreign mission boards of the United States and Canada.

So the new year opens with a spirit of self-examination, a spirit of social responsibility, a spirit of unity, and a new sense of alertness on the part of the churches. There is abroad a widespread expectancy—1914 should be a greater year than its potent predecessor.

ILLITERACY AND DRINK IN RUSSIA

The political reaction in Russia is largely accounted for by the material and moral condition of her people. The masses are still illiterate or all but illiterate, and the drink evil is growing in a way that fills even conservative men with alarm. The Czar himself in a recent rescript issued apropos of the retirement of the semiliberal premier, who is also finance minister, referred in grave terms to the ravages of alcoholism and the necessity of immediate measures against the curse. Progress is hardly possible under such conditions. There is no national sentiment back of it, and the forces of liberalism are too weak to make headway.

With regard to illiteracy and elementary education in Russia a recent dispatch gave the following information:

According to the latest annual report of the minister of public instruction, there are only ten universities, 733 professors and 36,147 students in the Czar's empire, with a population of 160,000,000. The United States, with 90,000,000 inhabitants, has 493 universities and colleges, 12,278 professors and 130,000 students.

With regard to elementary education, there are 76,454 schools, 160,627 teachers, of whom 46,400 are priests, and 5,035,387 pupils in Russia. In the United States there are 16,000,000 pupils in the elementary schools. According to the United States standard, there should be 32,000,000 pupils in the elementary schools of Russia instead of the existing 5,000,000. These figures explain the illiteracy of the masses of the Russian people.

It should be added that perhaps two fifths of the teachers in the elementary schools are themselves practically illiterate. Therefore of the so-called graduates of these schools a very considerable proportion must be classed with the illiterate, or, at any rate, the ignorant and politically uneducated.

To the curse of illiteracy that of drink is directly and closely related. The government has monopolized the liquor trade, and originally this was a temperance measure. It was supposed that government saloons and wine rooms would tend to discourage excessive consumption of intoxicants. The facts, alas, have proved that bureaucrats in need of money—as well as of graft for personal use—will stimulate drink and sacrifice health and morals for the sake of revenue. Local officials, with the support of the central bureaucracy, have encouraged intemperance and fought the effort of the friends of order and thrift. Temperance societies have been harassed in every way.

At last the Duma and the Council of the empire have taken a hand in the controversy. Count Witte, one of the original advocates of state liquor monopoly, made an earnest plea in the latter body for vigorous action to check alcoholism. A bill restricting sales of liquor, abolishing saloons in various public places, and aiding temperance work is pending in Parliament. Its passage is expected in spite of the apparent gains of reaction in the cabinet. The fundamental trouble lies, however, in the whole attitude of the bureaucracy and the ultra-conservative elements. To these drink is preferable to agitation and unrest, and popular education is to them another name for revolutionary propaganda. A truly progressive cabinet with a majority in the Duma back of it could do much, but Russia at present has neither. And matters are growing worse in this respect rather than better.—The Chautauquan, March 21, 1914.

What Can the Elder Do?

About two months before the assembling of the last General Conference, the president of the Woman's Auxiliary society received a letter from a member of the presidency of a certain quorum of elders. The letter invited her to be present with them in one of their quorum meetings in the approaching conference, and to read to them an article prepared for the occasion which might enlighten them on the subject of the relationship of the Woman's Auxiliary for social service and the elder.

The letter said: "We wish you to answer two questions in your communication: First, How may we as a quorum assist or cooperate with your department of God's work? Second, How may we increase a closer feeling between us?"

The Response

Responding to this courteous invitation, Mrs. B. C. Smith, accompanied by several sisters, met at an appointed time with the elders, whose quorum had issued the invitation, and read the following paper:

"Dear Brethren: Having been requested to address you on 'The relation of the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service and the elder,' I must first explain the position assumed by the auxiliary.

"This society was first organized under the name of the Daughters of Zion, because it was felt that there was a work to be done for the church, a work that belongs to woman, and that she must do it. If it is done well, the church prospers; if not, the church languishes; for, as "the nation can rise no higher than its homes," neither can the church rise higher than its homes; and the home is where this work is to be done. Our homes should reflect all the teachings of the gospel of Christ, but, in very many instances, they do not, neither can they, unless they are established upon right principles; and it is the purpose of this society to help the sisters to qualify themselves to be better home makers.

"It was soon discovered that the work of the home maker is not limited to the individual home; but, to make the best success, it must reach out to the neighborhood and to the community, for the conditions there contribute largely either to the injury or the welfare of the home.

"To provide for the operations of the broader view of the work before it, the society decided to change its name and constitution to cover all features of woman's work, classifying it under departmental heads to be presided over by superintendents especially qualified for their individual work, all working under the supervision of an Advisory Board, the executive body of the society. The name chosen is the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service, of the Latter Day Saints; and the six departments are Home and Child Welfare, Literary and Educational, Sewing and Aid, Domestic Science, Young Woman's and Eugenics. Also, at this time an appeal was made to all societies of women working in the interests of the church to unite under the new name, that we might all work together in harmony, helping each other as we can in the united effort to assist in building up the kingdom of God.

"This society does not presume to claim any privileges not justly belonging to the sisters. It simply assumed the part of a helper. It recognizes the church as the head, and the priesthood as its spiritual advisors. To them it looks for encouragement, sympathy, counsel, and advice—in a word, for support. Since women are a part of the body, and such an important factor in the development either for good or for evil of the rising generation, have they not a right to expect it? Does not the interest of the church demand that they receive it? The different quorums of the priesthood recognize the advantage of council meetings and meetings for research. If the sowers of the seed derive benefit from such meetings, surely those who nourish and cultivate its growth have equal need of exchange of thought and ideas, and should be encouraged along these lines.

"For a number of years the conference has voted to sustain this organization, and, in so doing, has recognized it as a branch of church work. The society has appreciated this recognition. It has given us a measure of confidence in the performance of our work. But this is not all that is needed; so we embrace with gladness this opportunity of suggesting to your honorable body how we may labor together for the advancement of God's work.

"First, we suggest that your members make themselves acquainted with our work by an examination of our constitution and leaflets of instruction, that you may know our purpose and plan of work. Then, as far as possible, read what we present to the body in our departments in the church papers. When an opportunity presents itself to visit the meetings of the sisters, do so. We do not think you should always wait to be invited to do so, especially if you are an officer of a branch. It should be your privilege to know just what is being done in all lines of work where you preside.

"Do not go with the purpose of criticizing and finding fault, but with kind suggestions and helpful counsel and a word of encouragement where possible. Thus will a feeling of confidence be established between the priesthood and the sisters, and a desire be created to cooperate for the best interests of the church.

"The society has always recommended that the sisters counsel with the presiding officer of the branch before organizing a local, thus giving the officer an opportunity of advising or suggesting any precautions he might think necessary.

"The opinion of the elders has great weight with the sisters in most instances, and a word from them has influence either to encourage or to discourage the work of the auxiliary. It may surprise most of you to learn that in some instances the work of the auxiliary has been greatly hampered by the attitude of elders toward it. We ask you to use your influence to help the society, and, inasmuch as the auxiliary is trying to unite the women's societies under one general management, we ask that you will kindly give this movement your support.

"That we may each fully sense our mutual dependence one upon the other and learn to work together in harmony with God's law, to help bring about his righteous purposes, is the wish of your sister in the conflict,
"MRS. B. C. SMITH."

The Conference with the Elders

Following the reading of the paper given above was an hour or more of animated conference, the elders speaking of conditions met by them in their fields of labor and asking questions concerning what should be the procedure under given circumstances, and the sisters giving such information as they could concerning the auxiliary work, its aims and methods of working.

Of all the great variety of meetings which go to make up General Conference, none which we were privileged to attend was more profitably spent. Earnestness, courtesy, spirituality, prudence were all manifest. The theme was the work of women in the church, especially in the home. Not a moment was lost in the meeting. Many were eager to speak, to ask perplexing questions, or to give testimony. The end of a very interesting meeting came all too soon.

We do not know what the elders said among themselves as they disbanded, but the little group of auxiliary workers said as they separated that much good might result if other quorums of the representatives of the church would follow the course of the one that had invited the sisters to confer with them on the important subjects that pertain to women's work in the church. For the Woman's Auxiliary is different from other organizations of the church in this respect, in that their conventions are held at the time when General Conference is in session and many who are deeply interested in their work have not opportunity to be present, being engrossed in other important work which they can not leave.

When the mountain could not, or would not, at least did not go to Mohammed, the latter went to the mountain; so, the elders not being able to attend the conferences of the Woman's Auxiliary, the next best thing was for representatives of the society to go to the elders. This was what was done upon the occasion of which we have written.

As stated, it was by request of the elders. The reception was most courteous and kind, and the meeting was mutually pleasant and profitable.

As the Elders View It

One of the most interesting, and we believe most profitable meetings held by the quorums of elders in joint session was the one participated in by the officers of the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service. Woman's place in the work of the church is being recognized, and the work of the auxiliary needs but to be better understood to be more fully appreciated. We feel satisfied that the influence of the elders present at this meeting will be used in many fields to the furtherance of the work of the Woman's Auxiliary.

What There's Time For

Lots of time for lots of things,
Though it's said that time has wings.
There is always time to find
Ways of being sweet and kind.
There is always time to share
Smiles and goodness everywhere;
Time to send the frowns away,
Time a gentle word to say,
Time for helpfulness, and time
To assist the weak to climb;
Time to give a little flower,
Time for friendship any hour;
But there is no time to spare
For unkindness anywhere.—Jewels.

The Art of Teaching

There has long been an impression abroad in the land that the calling of the preacher is peculiar, and above that of the teacher. That is the impression we get from the average Sunday sermon.

As a rule, preaching is labored, having been prepared with the aid of books written by learned theologians, rather than a heart to heart talk with the people. Sermons thus prepared are secondhand at very best; and in spite of the efforts of those who preach them, the secondhand stamp is noticeable. Those who listen may not have read the thoughts in books, yet somehow such preaching fails to go to the heart as do sermons that come from the heart. No man can transmit to others the learning of men greater than himself as effectively as he can that which he has so thoroughly mastered that it has become a part of himself.

The great commission was to go and teach all nations. That did not mean to go and preach once or twice a week; it meant to teach the people according to their ability to understand. The Christian world seems to be satisfied with preaching, while the Master commanded that the people be taught. It is one thing to preach and quite another thing to teach.

The church is no longer a school in which the people are taught how to live, how to act one toward another, and what society ought to be. The result is that the people have come to regard religion as a thing apart from their lives, and not of them. There are Sunday Christians in plenty and to spare, but of everyday Christians there is a dearth. Is not this due in part to so much Sunday preaching and so little every day teaching?

The most effective preachers who have ever lived were those who addressed the people from the heart out. They told them what they wanted to know, and told it in such manner that they could understand. The Master taught the ignorant fishermen, and they understood and were edified. To what extent would those Galileans have been benefited by the average Sunday sermons of to-day? A sermon that does not come within one's easy comprehension does not interest him, at least it does not appeal to him with such force as to cause him to mend his ways, as to give him different views of his relations to the social world. It is the ability to impress the people with what is expected and required of them in their dealings with each other that leads men to action.

It is the widespread impression that religion is a thing of life apart, and not an essential part of profitable life that is at the bottom of all our social troubles. Were the people taught, not merely preached to on Sundays, but taught from infancy to mature age that to deal justly, to be kind and generous, and to revere the powers above, social affairs would soon assume or approximate the conditions contemplated by the Master.

FAYETTE CITY, PENNSYLVANIA.

ROTAN, TEXAS, April 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: Western Texas is a hard field of much opposition. My difficulty has been in securing a place in which to preach. When meetings were announced sometimes a few would come out and sometimes not anyone. I have in past endeavors tried to introduce the restored gospel by giving out tracts, etc. I have not done any public preaching since last conference. My health does not permit of very active services in this great cause.

Pray for me that I may be able to do my duty in the work of our heavenly Father, and lead many into the fold of Christ. I desire to be true and efficient in the hands of God in the upbuilding of the kingdom.

Anyone having tracts for free distribution may help by sending me an assortment. Your brother,

SWIFT CURRENT, SASKATCHEWAN, April 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: We are living in Swift Current, Saskatchewan. There is only one family of Saints here, and one other sister. We suppose some of the elders travel over this line sometimes, as it is the main line from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts. When any of them pass through we would be very glad to have them stop off and stay with us, and inquire into what could be done in this place in the way of preaching.

We are going to start the home class Sunday school work here next Sunday. I have tried to get in touch with the home department Religio work, but have not heard from those I wrote to concerning the same. We would like to get the Religio work started also.

I think some good might be done here in the way of preaching, as I think there are some who are honest enough to embrace the gospel if they heard it preached.

We miss the church very much, indeed, and the association of the Saints. If an elder could conveniently drop us a line before coming we would be glad to meet him. Brother Schrank lives at 122 Fifth Avenue East, and would be glad to show you where we live, as we are further out and our house is not numbered. We expect to get the daily Ensign to-day with the conference news. Your sister in the true gospel,
P. O. DRAWER 905. MRS. T. M. IRVINE.

EROS, LOUISIANA, April 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am trying as a teacher of this Eros Branch to do my duty to see that the Saints do their duty. The band of Saints here is in very good working condition. We are trying by the help of God to hold out faithful, and to endure to the end.

I know by experience that the latter-day work is the true way whereby man must be saved. Dear Saints, let us be up and doing at all times, trying to live this grand and glorious work. Our blessed Master has promised to bless and save us all if we live up to his laws and commands. I am trying to do right. I desire the Saints to pray for me in my work that I may not fall short, but that I may press on and be a light to guide the young in my declining years.

Some of the Saints here seem slothful, while others are doing all they can to build up the work. May we all continue until Christ comes to make up his gems. Oh, may we all be able to stand with the redeemed.

May all be united in the bonds of love, is the humble prayer of,
Your brother in Christ,

W. L. WILLIAMS.

EROS, LOUISIANA, April 9, 1914.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a welcome visitor at our home. We are always glad for each number because of the interesting letters of our beloved brothers and sisters.

It gives us great encouragement, dear Saints, when we compare the early days of persecution to the advantages of the Saints of to-day. We certainly should be thankful to our God and always be alive to our duties, pay our tithing, deal fairly with our fellow man, tell the truth, use economy in all things, pay our just and honest debts, be useful in all things.

I am very poor, and it seems that it is all I can do to make an honest living for my family. But God said, Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added; so I am trying to do my duty as well as I know how.

The Saints here have revived to a great extent. Brother W. H. Fuller has preached some very fine sermons here of late. We had a good prayer meeting last Sunday. We were blessed with the good Spirit.

Satan has tried in various ways to overthrow me in the past five years. Certain ones have done all in their power to get me to leave the church, but I thank the Lord I am yet a Latter Day Saint. The older I grow the more I love the work.

Realizing that God has sent his holy angels to this sinful world and reestablished this grand and glorious latter-day work, may we become more perfect. God is our friend, and if God be for us, who can be against us? May we be patient and endure all things. Away with vain weeping. Let us sing songs of hope and cheer, that we may encourage others to grow strong of heart.

Dear Saints, remember me in your prayers.

Your brother in the faith,

J. L. GRyder.

LEEDS, ENGLAND, April 9, 1914.

Editors Herald: When I of myself tried to live right I found myself very weak. I struggled along as best I could, leaving all my companions, and after a hard struggle, my last and most faithful chum. I would not go near the city after I had finished my work there, but went for walks in the country. I took others with me and we used to enjoy singing hymns, etc.

There came a time when I took to studying to prepare myself for an examination which would better me in my work and enable me to rise higher in the matter of education. I had let learning and everything else slip in the search for pleasure, so I found I had to start at the very bottom in order to grasp the least sense from the books which I read. About this time my grandfather was injured by the prick of a nail in the foot, and because of the wound not being properly attended to or because of his advanced age, gangrene set in and he was confined to his bed. He was seventy-three years old. He had always tried to live a righteous life. So I thought I would go and read to him from the Bible, which I delighted in doing now and then.

I was persuaded about this time to go to a mission. I had often refused, saying I would not be a hypocrite. I had determined that when I did go I would read the Scriptures and learn what was contained therein. I went to this mission fearing lest some one who knew me might see me enter. Knowing what I had been and the life I had lead, I was self-convicted and knew I was not worthy to assemble and be classed with those worshipping there.

I commenced to read the Scriptures and asked God that I might be able to understand the teachings contained therein. I sought him as a little child, desiring to use the light received to his honor and glory. I read to understand, and when not comprehending made it a matter of prayer and study until I did understand. In this way I progressed, giving up my previous studies and keeping my mind on the teaching, Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. I read some passages many times, and when not remembering what I had read I would reread.

In this way I read the Scriptures, and so secured a general knowledge of the Bible, in so much that when the men at my work tormented me because of my having turned over a new leaf, and asked me what they thought to be certain difficult scriptural questions, I was able to answer and show them their error. I believe that this was God's way of teaching me, that I might be more and more confirmed in the knowledge of the truth. It seems that I was being led continually, as a father leads a child, teaching and reproofing it. Even at the present time whatever happens seems to be for my instruction. So I make the best of it and try to learn the lesson or be reproofed thereby.

One point of difference between myself and the men with whom I worked was as to the personality of God. I contended that God was a personality, and not everywhere. Having been in the church in my youth, I was able to recall my former teachings and explain this matter to them. As I quoted from the Scriptures to prove what I said to be true, telling them at the same time to prove all things, holding fast that which is good, they were not able to deny my interpretations.

All this time I was receiving instructions in one way and another, and finally there came a time when it appeared to me as though I received only an outline of Christianity at the mission. I asked God for further understanding, because although I had gone almost through the whole Scriptures, yet I had no understanding regarding heaven. I asked God regarding the matter and something seemed to tell me to go back to the church. I did so, and one morning I received such light and understanding that it seemed to bring me to a knowledge of the truth and the way. I attended more and more, each time receiving more light. I still receive learning and understanding from constant communication with the Saints, and the word of God.

I finally thought about reading the Book of Mormon, and it opened my understanding to such a degree that I knew it was God's revealed word to his people, containing light, understanding, and life. I then read the Doctrine and Covenants. I was deeply confirmed in the teaching of the church, telling my father and mother and all with whom I came in contact of the glorious work of latter days.

About this time the Sunday school superintendent and his assistant left, and I was asked if I would take the place of the assistant superintendent, which I did. This was after I had renewed my covenant and had declared unto the church my righteous intentions, and received a remission of my sins. I became a new creature in Christ Jesus, and my desires were to help others and to build up the church, and the Saints.

The superintendent of the Sunday school was Brother Walton who had come to us from Birmingham and had secured work in Leeds, which unfortunately only lasted a short time. At the end of a period of unemployment he secured work again in Birmingham, which, of course, deprived us of his services. I was asked to take charge of the Sunday school and consented, and am at present occupying in that position, working with might and main. Before taking charge of the Sunday school I was called to the priesthood, which calling I am filling to the best of my ability. Though young in years, I can truthfully speak of God's guidance.

I have just been reading the HERALD for March 25, which contains an article on "How may a pastor hold the interest of his people and keep them in good spiritual condition." My experience as a priest and missionary has taught me that we must speak and preach as we are led by the Holy Ghost, in accordance with the needs of those who assemble to hear God's will regarding things of this life as well as of the life to come. It is not by our wisdom or understanding that we speak, but as God recognizes the needs of his people.

May the Lord add his blessing to the efforts of all, in my prayer and desire in his holy name.

HERBERT STOCKDALE.

CARPENTER, ALABAMA, April 9, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have just finished reading the magazine number of the HERALD, and the Autumn Leaves, and I think them just fine. I would that everybody could read them and enjoy them as I do. It causes me to want to do something or say something that would be encouraging to some one, but I realize my weakness and inability.

I love the gospel. While it might be truthfully said that I have not done anything to prove this love, yet I have done the best I could under the circumstances, or it seems so to me. I do not wish to excuse myself in any way, yet I know that none of us live as good as we ought. I feel that I have made many mistakes in my past life. And I have suffered a great deal (spiritually) for these mistakes. I hope and pray that the Lord will forgive me and yet grant the blessings that I have so long prayed for.

I being the only one of my family that belonged to the church until last summer, when my oldest daughter joined, it has been a hard struggle for me, especially as my dear companion has been and is yet such a bitter enemy to the church. I have spent much time in prayer for her, and still hope and pray that she may yet see the light of the gospel and accept and obey it. I hope and pray and ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that I may be permitted to see my companion and children come into the church. This has been my desire and prayer for a long time. I long to see the time when we as a family can all bow around our family altar and worship God together, and all enjoy the blessings that the Lord has in store for his people. I know that if we live for them we will receive them.

I become very much discouraged sometimes, as everything looks so dark to me. But I read in the church papers what others are doing and of the good meetings they are having and am encouraged and try to hold out faithful.

I am deprived of any church privileges at present, as my occupation is so confining that I can not get off to go to church or Sunday school. I am truly thankful to the Lord for his loving kindness and the many blessings that I have received. He has blessed us with a good portion of health and strength.

Dear brothers and sisters, I have had many testimonies that this is the true church of God. I have no doubt as to its divinity. I only doubt myself, whether I will be able to hold out faithful or not. My whole desire is to live right. The more I read and study, the more I love the work.

I think the work is gaining ground in this part of the country. Brother Hale W. Smith has been preaching some at Bay Minette the last week or two, but I did not get to hear him, as I could not be there. I hope to be able to attend the reunion at Pleasant Hill this summer.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all God's people for myself and family, that we may yet be able to enjoy the blessings so long prayed for.

Your brother in Christ,
J. E. WIGGINS.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA, April 10, 1914.

Editors Herald: When last I wrote to the HERALD, over two years since, we were living at Wilburton, Oklahoma. One year ago last November we came to Sperry. During the three years we lived at Wilburton we had the privilege of attending the meetings often. It seems very lonely here.

We have Saints here, and some years ago had a good branch, but for various reasons the interest waned. Yet the gospel seed had been sown in their hearts, so that when Brother Bootman came last August and held a series of meetings, some interest was manifested. The February conference was set for this place, and Brother E. D. Bailey, with some help from others, moved our little church, which was at Rock Creek, about three miles in the country, to town, and fixed it up for the conference, all complete, lighted with natural gas and ready for the business of the conference.

We had some grand preaching. Among the ministry was Brother W. M. Aylor, who we believe is spending his whole strength of heart and mind for the cause of the Lord. He preached every night and twice on Sunday for about two weeks to a crowded house. The people seemed so interested he wrote Brother James E. Yates to come and continue the meetings. He closed on Tuesday night and Brother Yates reached us and began on Sunday night following.

Brother Yates filled the place of Brother Aylor ably, continued the meetings three weeks longer, and baptized nine, some of whom I think will be good workers for the Lord. One of these was Brother Fred Burshears, one whom I have longed to see come into the church. I have prayed many times that he might see the light. I believe he will be a good worker, especially in the Sunday school and in the singing.

We are holding Sunday school every Sunday, with prayer meeting in the afternoon. When no one comes out from Tulsa to preach at night we have singing. The Saints here seem to have resolved to live more for the cause of the Lord, and do better in the future than heretofore. We need some good elder who could preside over the branch. Brother Bailey's home is here, but his business calls him away so he can not be with us every Sunday.

I am not able to attend church often, yet it does my heart good to live in the branch. I am an invalid from rheumatism. I have been on crutches for over two years. Still I try to bear my afflictions and trials with patience, realizing that the greater our trials in this life the brighter the crown in the next.

I ask the prayers of all the earnest Saints that I may continue faithful to the end. I trust that when the Savior comes we will all continue faithful, so as to receive the reward of the faithful.

Your brother in Christ,
JAMES H. BUSSELL.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, May 1, 1914.

Editors Herald: I suppose some are looking for the fulfillment of my promise to write up my trip to conference.

It seemed at first thought to be quite an undertaking—to break up housekeeping and come from California to Independence to Conference, but it was not, though I did settle down with a sense of relief and restfulness after boarding the cars in Santa Ana, knowing that the preparations were ended, and I was really started on my journey.

I was met at Los Angeles by my brother, H. J. Davison, who conducted me to the station. We had not been long in the waiting room till daughters Dora and Addie and granddaughter Hazel and baby came to visit with us while we waited for the overland train. We took the Southern Pacific Rock Island route.

At Colton there was a halt of about twenty minutes that was pleasantly spent in the company of Sister Hendrickson and daughters, who came for a few minutes of friendly chat, and to add some dainties to our already well-filled lunch boxes, supplied by the Santa Ana sisters. We also had the pleasure of meeting Brother Crumley and others.

The whole trip was one of keen enjoyment, though there was little to greet the eye except the great stretch of desert, sometimes rough, and sometimes smooth. Fortunately there was no wind to stir up the dust. The air was quite cool. My brother was a pleasant traveling companion. A few hours before reaching El Paso we passed the awe-inspiring brown canvas city where the United States Army was encamped on the plains, ready for a call to action. We hope that call will never be given.

It was refreshing to the eye, after passing out of those barren regions, to see the great stretches of farming lands of Kansas, so clean and green, where the plow had not been. It looked artistic, too, to see many broad fields fenced with osage orange hedges. Farm land was far more plentiful than woodland. Trees were not seen except in little clumps in the immediate vicinity of the dwelling places.

We arrived in Kansas City at 10.30 p. m. Lightning was flashing and thunder rolling, and as we boarded the electric car for Independence the rain came down freely. Passengers were alighting in the rain all the way along; but when it was our turn the storm had ceased. Brother Holmes thought it best to go to the Order of Enoch House, as it was then near midnight, and no lights in the city. We had no sooner reached the porch than the wind and rain commenced again. This Order of Enoch House is a fine accommodation for wayfarers.

We were very kindly greeted, and provided for for the night, and breakfast, albeit I did not take mine till near 9 a. m. The stillness of the house in contrast to the shaking of the cars was so soothing that neither the breakfast bell nor rapping on the door disturbed me in the least. Brother and Sister Gurwell are most excellent Saints, the right ones for that right place. Brother Holmes soon came in and assisted me in taking my suit case and other encumbrances to the hospitable home of Brother and Sister Horace Brown, where I stayed till conventions commenced, then at my neice's, Sister Addie Kentey, who lived near the church.

And now of the conventions and conference, what shall I say? They were good, very good, but to a looker on, the conventions, especially the Religio, did not manifest that push and animation that characterized them some years ago. But there is a good reason for that, in that they have attained to about everything in the way of organization and helps that the mind can conceive of, and yet, in both, there were advance moves adopted, so also in the conference, which tells unmistakably that the work is onward, is attaining to the things that make ready for the greater spiritual growth.

The aged prophet sat in his place back of the stand. He spoke several times feelingly and to the point. He seemed to grow stronger each day. It was beautiful to witness the deferential regard bestowed upon him by his son, who is to be his successor. It was beautiful, too, to look upon that vast assembly, to witness the perfect order, the interest and the prompt action. The revelation called forth some touching instances. The choir was a point of interest. The music rendered by it is said to have been beautiful.

I would like to make a pen picture of what to my mind stands out in bold relief among the beautiful things witnessed at conference. It was at the opening of one of the business sessions, consequently the choir was not in place. The singing was led by the prophet's daughter, not a young girl, but one in the glory-years of womanhood. She, like many others in the congregation, was without hat or wraps, her attire light and gracefully fitting. She stood on an elevation a step higher than those on the rostrum, just back of where the First Presidency sat. These, only, remained sitting during the singing. The hymn was her father's favorite, "Redeemer of Israel," in which the whole congregation joined to swell the soul-stirring music. Her time beating was not rigid or formal; with her gilt-tipped, glittering baton in one hand, and leaning slightly forward with outstretched arms, plump and bare just below the elbow to the wrist, she swayed them artistically to the rythm of the music. All self-consciousness seemed to be lost in the inspiration of the occasion. To my riveted gaze the picture thus presented was that of a hovering cherub, above the heads of the chosen servants of God; while her voice, together with those of the assembled hundreds, rang out with the soul inspiring words,

"Fear not and be just; for the kingdom is ours,
And the hour of redemption is near."

Yes, without the hearing of the ear, just the things that my eyes beheld, together with the many kindly greetings of Saints, some of whom I had known and very many of whom I had not known, were well worth the money expended to take me to conference. Then there were the enjoyable prayer and testimony meetings. But on account of the great number who wanted to speak, the time allotted to each speaker was so very brief one could not say much.

I thought many times if the people would adopt one of the customs of the natives of the islands, it would save much time and friction, at such times as when two commence to speak at once and one has to sit down again. The natives often do not wait till one sits down, but, if eager to speak, they stand up before the first speaker closes, quietly waiting their time. I have seen three on the floor in the same manner, and each speaks in his order without disturbing the other. More anon. EMMA BURTON.

COPENHAGEN, DENMARK, April 10, 1914.

Editors Herald: In a letter from Brother P. Muceus published in the HERALD for March 18 is found a statement that is liable to lead to a misunderstanding. The brother in expressing his gratitude to all who have contributed means for our mission paper, Sandhedens Banner, mentions among others: "and to the Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska reunion for their collection, about seventy-five dollars." The collection of said reunion was one hundred dollars in all.

Of this amount twenty-five dollars was turned over to pay off an indebtedness incurred by getting out some Swedish songbooks, as will appear in the report of the bishop's agent for that country. Brother Muceus is right in so far as having received from that collection seventy-five dollars for the Banner, but the entire amount obtained was one hundred dollars.

As the money was intrusted to my care, I desire to make this explanation. H. N. HANSEN.

Editors Herald: I am alone in the true faith here. The people here are Methodists and Missionary Baptists. I was baptized September 11, 1894, near Poplar Bluff, Missouri.

I have had many troubles and trials to pass through since then. The gospel has been a great help to me. I am thankful that I heard and obeyed the same. Brother C. O. Duncan was the first one I ever heard proclaim the angel's message. It has been nearly two years since I have heard a true sermon.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all.

SARAH GLASENER.

GRAHAMDALE, MANITOBA, April 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: By a letter in the HERALD last September I reached one dear Saint and one sinner. I love this glorious gospel. I loan what books and papers I have, and do what I can to interest people in the gospel.

Only to-day a noble lady and her daughter, of culture, reared in the Roman Catholic Church, tell me that they have been watching me during the whole winter, and that they have become interested in our church. They are going to Winnipeg shortly, and expect to be baptized. Still another, a highly respected young man, has been studiously investigating this glorious gospel. He has plied the writer with some very searching inquiries. He goes to Winnipeg on the morrow. I gave him the directions to the Saints' chapel at Saint James.

Dear Saints of the Winnipeg Branch, we would like to have an elder come here in the near future.

Sister Payne, of Beloit, Wisconsin, is enroute to her new home here, which her noble husband has just established within a quarter of a mile of the railroad. We are considerable distance from the post office, but are promised a new town with a post-office to be located a mile from the Pyne home at an early date.

I hope to be worthy of recognition, and ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints. May sweet peace be unto each.

W. M. YOUNG.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA, April 20, 1914.

Editors Herald: During Brother Yates' stay here the latter part of February and the first two weeks in March I was in very poor health. I prayed every night for about a week, asking the Lord to let me know if I should have Brother Yates administer to me. My eyes are very weak with ulcers, and at times I can hardly go out in the sunlight.

One morning I was told to go to prayer meeting at 2.30 and have Brother Yates administer to me. He administered and all the pain left me before I left the church. I was well for about a month, and then I began to feel bad again, and had to go to the doctor. I am feeling some better now.

I am trying to do all I can in the church work, but my eyes are so bad I can not do much. My desire is to do all I can as long as I can for the upbuilding of my dear Father's kingdom here on earth. I humbly ask the prayers of the Saints of the Prayer Union that I may receive that which I lack in doing right.

With love to all,

MRS. WILLIAM ABLES.

BLAIR, NEBRASKA, April 23, 1914.

Editors Herald: After weeks and months of great sorrow and loss and in the seclusion of home, perhaps I owe something to friends that are living.

Some of my people have gone into the Utah Church. Others are anxious about me, and think I may be changing my belief. I am very generous to the Utah people. They seem near to me. They fill a place in the creation of things that I do not understand, and it leaves grave doubts in my mind as to the relation that they bear to God. God alone is able to enlighten me and them.

These Utah people are very bitter against us. Elders of the Utah faith are very boastful. They claim to have cared for all the records and kept the church together, taking all the Saints to a safe place, so that Satan could not prevail against them. They usually end with, If we had not, what would have become of the church? You people did not do anything to save it.

I am not disturbed by their boasting. My vows made to God in the waters of baptism are sacred to me and time makes them more so. I know the Brighamites took everything they could get their hands on, even while the church was in its mourning, and they never gave anything back. They did not stop to mourn at all. They mutilated the blessed records, changed the ordinances, and obtained revelations supposed to be from the Lord, but in direct opposition to other divine revelations already given to the church of Christ. I do not think I will trade a certain thing for a very uncertain thing, however great the uncertain thing may be to look at.

Let us hold fast the faith our fathers have cherished. If any have lost the way, let them turn themselves about and ask for the old, old path, not the broad, beaten track of the world, easy to see and easy to travel; but the straight and narrow way that leadeth to life. The Spirit and the bride say, Come and drink of the water of life freely. Along this narrow path we may find some thorns and some pebbles, but all is not hardships. There are very bright and happy hours along the way. We must, however, drink of the same cup with the Savior to be counted worthy to live with him.

The gospel remains unchanged. Religion, pure and undefiled, may yet be found upon the earth. The pure gospel must be preached. New perils threaten us, but under the enlightenment of the Spirit let us move along in our sacred work. A mansion awaits the faithful, and the pure in heart will inherit the earth. There is no reason why we each of us can not be both. Though a widow with two children, I wish to do my part. My home is 310 State Street. Saints are welcome.

Your sister,

MARY A. CARTER.

LANSING, MICHIGAN, May 15, 1914.

Editors Herald: As one of the missionaries appointed to labor in Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, I wish to say that the missionaries appreciate very much having the Saints in the field where they labor, especially the isolated ones, cooperate with them in making new openings, and in preaching where there are old ones, when it is thought advisable.

If the Saints know of places anywhere in this district where missionary work is needed, please write the undersigned at 1227 West Lenawee Street, Lansing, Michigan. We will do the best we can to respond to all calls made upon us.

Fraternally yours,

J. D. STEAD.

FAIRVIEW, MONTANA.

Editors Herald: Having been appointed by General Conference to labor in Eastern Montana, I take this means of asking all the Saints who wish any preaching in their locality to address me at Fairview, Montana.

In my travels I often find Saints who would like to have the elders come, but they think their accommodations are not good enough. Now, dear Saints, do not let this hinder you.

This gospel must be preached in all the world for a witness, so the more we labor to this end the sooner our dear Lord will be with us.

Yours in the gospel,

R. NEWBY.

BESWICK, MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.

Editors Herald: In our district on Wednesday, April 15, we had a farewell meeting to say good-bye to our Brother Weate who has left England for America. Our brother has been a member of the church for over twenty years. He is an elder and has just vacated the offices of district president, district superintendent of Sunday school, and district president of Religio, of which he was first president in our country. He goes to his wife, three sons and one daughter, and leaves one daughter, Sister Schofield, wife of Brother James Schofield.

We had a pleasant evening together, during which words of consolation were spoken by several of the brethren, including our mission president, W. H. Greenwood, district president, J. W. Taylor, superintendent of Sunday school, W. R. Armstrong, president of Religio, E. Maloney, and Brother J. Bailey. In the course of the evening, Brother J. W. Taylor on behalf of the district presented him with a gold mounted fountain pen as a token of our esteem, love and remembrance. Brethren W. R. Armstrong and E. Maloney presented him on behalf of the district Sunday school and Religio societies with a traveling rug.

Our brother will be sadly missed by the younger portion of the church among whom he has labored mostly. We all wish him Godspeed, and pray that our eternal Father will guide him and watch over him on his long journey. As we sorrow because of our loss, there are those who will rejoice at meeting again with one they love. The prayer of the entire district is for our brother's safe arrival on the other side of the water.

Your brother,

4 PARCEL STREET.

H. BARRINGTON.

YEOMANS, SASKATCHEWAN, May 1, 1914.

Editors Herald: We have held services all winter at Radville. We have had very interesting normal class, Religio, Sunday school and preaching, in all of which we felt the good Spirit with us. Much good has resulted, as is always the case when two or three meet in the name of the Lord. We hope to hold services at Greatwest Schoolhouse this summer.

We pray that the Lord may be with his children. Some have moved from the branch. We pray God's Spirit will be with us to such an extent that those who remain may accomplish much good.

Sometimes we think we have discouragements, but we must know God works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. We thank God for leading us to this country. I saw in a dream this land before I beheld it with my natural eye. When we came here there were no Saints nearer than fifty miles. We soon called Brother Alvin Knisley. He was the first. He was here last summer to visit old camping grounds. We now have several branches and a district.

Most if not all are contemplating removing to Zion when God sees fit to grant opportunity. We all firmly believe this to be near the hastening time.

May God grant us the Spirit to abide the celestial law, that we may abide his celestial glory, is my prayer.

FLORENCE TOOVEY.

Society Islands

We are pleased to again write a few lines in regard to the work of the Master in the South Sea Islands. Prior to our trip to the island of Kaukura, two hundred miles from Tahiti, where our conference convened this year, we printed one thousand Sunday school books for adults and five hundred for children, also bound about two hundred volumes of our monthly mission paper into year books for the year 1913.

On March 20, Brother Savage and the writer together with seventy-three natives left Papeete upon a small French steamer called Saint Francis, bound for Kaukura. We stopped at two islands on our way. At Makatea about thirty-three Saints boarded the steamer for Kaukura, and at Rairoa about thirty more came aboard, and when we reached Kaukura the steamer landed over one hundred and thirty Saints for the annual mission conference. We arrived in Kaukura on March 23. Between that time and April 1, representatives from most of the branches of the mission arrived.

Beyond question this was the largest gathering of the Saints the writer has been privileged to witness since his arrival here, and was said by the natives to have been the largest conference in this mission since before the great tidal waves and storms of 1903 and 1906. The Sunday school and the Religio conventions preceded the conference.

One of the impressive features during one of the Sunday school and Religio programs was a song composed and sung by the Saints of the island of Amanu, concerning the death of Brother Lake, which manifested their great respect for him who now lies under the waiting cocoanut palms on that lonely island. As a token of their respect of our brother, several of the natives have expressed a desire to build a monument in memory of him upon the hill of Tiona in Tahiti.

On April 4, the new chapel in Kaubura was dedicated. The committee in charge of the dedicational services reported that there were one thousand and fifty-seven people there at the time of the dedication. These services passed off smoothly, and unity seemed to prevail among all. The new chapel is a well-built structure, very neat, and a credit to the island of Kaukura as well as to our church in this mission.

Immediately following these services a great feast was observed. Fifty or more hogs had been roasted in the native ovens and were laid out upon the ground in front of the native assembly house. These were distributed among representatives of the various branches, several hundred loaves of bread, together with other food. It was a great sight to see so many hogs baked whole, and spread out upon the ground. A special table was prepared in the center of the native assembly house at which the governor of the Tuamotuan Islands, a Frenchman, highly respected by the natives, also other Frenchmen were seated with Brother Savage and the writer.

During our stay there the governor expressed his great pleasure in the fact that no trouble of any kind had arisen, and that he had seen no one intoxicated. He commented upon this as a record for such a large gathering of natives.

The conference began on Monday, April 6. Short prayer meetings were held every morning before business sessions, which began at eight o'clock. The writer and Brother Savage were selected to preside over the conference. Brother Savage was also chosen as foreign secretary. In his report will be found all of the important minutes of the conference. Unity because of the fact that our brethren who had lately been rebaptized into the church were there, and their voices were again heard in conference, which made our hearts rejoice beyond expression. There were two sides to many of the questions considered by the conference; when put to a vote, however, said questions were unanimously settled.

We trust that the Lord will greatly bless this mission and that the activity in church work the present year may equal that of last year. I was informed by the Utah Church officials here that they baptized from twenty to thirty members during the past year, with from ten to thirteen American missionaries in the field, while the Reorganized Church with only two foreign missionaries in the field during the whole year, baptized over two hundred and twenty into the church. We were assisted, however, during the past year by Brethren Pitt, Griffiths, and Miller, who spent about two months here.

That Zion's interests may be advanced in all nations is the prayer of your brother and Christ's servant,

PAPEETE, TAHITI, May 2, 1914.

J. CHAS. MAY.

[The letter of Brother H. W. Savage, referred to in the above letter of Brother May, will appear in the HERALD of next week.—EDITORS.]

I can not always see the way that leads to heights above;
I sometimes quite forget he leads me on with hands of love,
But yet I know the path must lead me to Immanuel's land,
And when I reach life's summit I shall know and understand.

—O. P. Wiles.

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral

To the Saints and Friends in Mission Number 1, Comprising Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta; Greeting: It has pleased the powers appointing to return me to your mission for the conference year. I am thankful to my heavenly Father for his power and love so wonderfully manifested throughout the mission during the year that has just passed.

There have doubtless been times in the experience of many, when discouragements have met us in the way and threatened our peace; but notwithstanding these experiences, it is indeed gratifying to know that under these conditions when we have taken God unreservedly into our confidence the needed strength has been supplied, and good has resulted therefrom. These assurances should comfort and cause us to know that God is with Israel and his cause will ultimately triumph.

In harmony with conference appointments the following will be observed:

Lamoni Stake: J. R. Lambert of the patriarchate will minister to the Saints as far as his health will permit. Eli Hayer will labor as he has in the past. M. M. Turpen will be placed in Appanoose County, with Centerville as an objective point, with the suggestion that he be chosen president of the branch. J. F. Mintun will labor as missionary in the stake, particularly the eastern part; while Columbus Scott does similar work in the western part and the counties in Missouri.

Fremont: Patriarch C. E. Butterworth after July 1 will arrange to minister in his office and calling both in Fremont and Southern Nebraska districts. Edward Rannie in Fremont District, with whom will be associated H. N. Pierce, the latter to do work in Southern Nebraska District when advisable.

Pottawattamie: Joshua Carlile and E. F. Robertson will labor here, with the understanding that Brother Robertson shall devote the greater part of his time in Council Bluffs and the immediate vicinity, and that Brother Carlile, when expedient to protect the interests in the eastern part of the district, will arrange for Adair and Cass counties the best we can with our present force.

Little Sioux: Alma Booker to labor in Sioux City and vicinity, William E. Haden in Harrison and Monona counties.

Des Moines: J. M. Baker, the city of Des Moines. J. L. Parker and David J. Williams will work together during the summer months northeast of Des Moines, while E. E. Long gives attention to Polk, Boone, and counties north. In connection with the above instruction will suggest that those appointed to labor in Des Moines District confer with president of district, O. Salisbury. I deem this wise because of his extended acquaintance with the district and its needs.

Gallands Grove: C. J. Hunt will labor as he feels directed. J. B. Wildermuth and David R. Chambers will do missionary work as the interest may develop. Will advise more particularly later.

Eastern Iowa: Albert Welch will be associated with L. G. Holloway in the early part of the season. Daniel T. Williams will also labor in this district; and will ask that he keep in touch with minister in charge.

Nauvoo: Gomer R. Wells in Burlington and vicinity. C. E. Harpe, E. B. Morgan and James McKiernan are familiar with the needs of the district, and will therefore labor accordingly. More particular instructions will be given after I reach the district.

Southern Nebraska: W. M. Self will receive assistance from H. N. Pierce.

Northeastern Nebraska: Paul N. Craig in the city of Omaha, and to render such service as the branch requires, likewise to provide for new openings and missions in the city. William Shakespeare and Alvin Knisley will labor separately throughout the district. Will suggest that Brother Shakespeare confer with Brother M. A. Peterson, president of district.

Central Nebraska and South Dakota: Levi Gamet, J. F. Grimes, O. R. Miller and J. W. Smith; J. W. Smith to labor more particularly in South Dakota and to receive assistance from J. F. Grimes and O. R. Miller when thought advisable.

Western Nebraska and Black Hills: R. Etzenhouser to continue as in the past. O. B. Thomas and C. W. Prettyman to associate in tent work as possible.

North Dakota: The missionaries will continue as in the past, as they are familiar with the needs. Brother J. W. Peterson will confer with William Sparling.

Minnesota: Brother B. S. Lambkin will continue as in the past. L. E. Hills who has been appointed to Minnesota will labor in Minneapolis until the reunion in June, where more specific instructions will be issued.

Saskatchewan: J. J. Cornish to labor as in the past. Birch Whiting may continue as before. Those who are just entering the active service, J. A. Beckman, Elwyn R. Davis, and Horace Darby, will confer with Thomas J. Jordan, president of district.

J. A. Dowker will be associated with Nelson Wilson in Winnipeg and vicinity.

Alberta: I deem it wise that Daniel Macgregor give as much time as possible to Edmonton and Calgary and the near-by branches, William Osler to proceed as in the past. Brother Fred Gregory may labor as heretofore, giving his attention more particularly to that part of Alberta adjoining Saskatchewan.

In connection with the foregoing I have to say that I will be pleased to receive information from time to time relative to the needs of the field, so that we may cooperate in our procedure, that good may result and the design of our Master be accomplished.

Do not forget to report promptly at the appointed dates—July 1, October 1, January 1, March 1. I will be glad at any time to give such help and encouragement as may be necessary for the onward course of the great work of Christ. Trusting that we may work together in the Spirit of our Master, I am,

Yours in bonds,

JAMES A. GILLEN,
Minister in General Charge.

Needs of Children's Home

STATEMENT AND NEEDS.

"And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church that widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor."—Doctrine and Covenants 82: 2.

We are desirous that the financial policy of the Children's Home may be in harmony with that of the church. Consecrations of the church are made to the bishops of the church who are the ones to care for such consecrations and disburse properties and means according to needs.

The trustees for the Children's Home have selected as their treasurer a bishop who is duly authorized under the law to receipt for contributions made the home. It is further the business of the bishop who has this specific work in hand to inquire into the needs of the home and supply from the funds which come into his hands for the benefit of the home. We make these statements to indicate to the Saints the disposition of the management of the home to keep in line with the spirit, as well as the letter of the law, governing the temporalities of the church.

The treasurer informs us that there is not sufficient funds at his disposal to supply the needs of the home without running it in debt. The home must not be run in debt, and to keep out and at the same time permit the home to continue its mission requires that the friends of the home make special offerings and consecrations to the institution. This should be a continuous effort each month. The necessity exists for a greater response along the line of special donation of offerings to the home. The question to you individually is, What can I do now? Send your donations to the home of Bishop Joseph Roberts, Lamoni, Iowa, and you will be duly receipted.

HEMAN C. SMITH, President.
OSCAR ANDERSON, Secretary.
JOSEPH ROBERTS, Treasurer.
Executive Committee.

Died

BABER.—Mary M. Hammond was born July 3, 1855, at Blanchardville, Wisconsin; died April 24, 1914, at Dow City, Iowa. She married Richard T. Baber, October 24, 1871. To them were born ten children, four having preceded her to the other side. She leaves husband, six children, one brother, two sisters. She was baptized April 21, 1872, and remained faithful during life. Her summons came quickly, but she was ready.

GREEN.—John H. Green was born at Nortonville, California, August 13, 1876; died at his home in Sacramento, California, March 31, 1914. He married Elizabeth Boyle, June 18, 1909. To them were born a daughter and son. He did not belong to the church, but was an honest, upright man, beloved by all who knew him. The Masonic Lodge took charge of funeral; interment in East Lawn Cemetery. Beside wife and children, he leaves mother, two brothers, W. A. of Sacramento, and J. C. of Portland, Oregon, two sisters living in Sacramento, Sisters M. A. Hook and S. C. Dawson.

GLORE.—At Kansas City, Missouri, May 15, 1914, Sister Sarah Alice Glore, eldest daughter of Brother and Sister George W. Roach, aged 29 years lacking 4 days. She was born in Delphi, Carroll County, Indiana, May 19, 1885; was baptized in Independence, Missouri, May 10, 1903, by H. O. Smith, November 21, 1910; she married Mr. John R. Glore, of Kansas City, in which city she has since resided. She is survived by husband, parents, one sister, Alta Burniece, now Mrs. Ralph Barnard. She was of a retiring, industrious disposition, and her early demise is regretted by all who knew her. Funeral from Saints' church, Independence, May 17, sermon by W. H. Garrett, interment in Mount Washington Cemetery.

THOMPSON.—At Independence, Missouri, May 8, 1914, Dorothy Alberta, second daughter of Brother George F. and Sister Samantha Thompson, aged 7 years 1 month, 8 days. She leaves parents, two sisters, three brothers, with other relatives. Funeral from Stone Church, May 10; sermon by W. H. Garrett, interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Book Reviews

THE STORY OF MORMONISM.—This is the title of a book recently published by the Deseret News, Salt Lake City, Utah. The author is Doctor James E. Talmage, B. Sc., F. R. S. The book is divided into two parts, the first being devoted to the story of Mormonism, and the second to the philosophy of Mormonism. Several pages in the first part are devoted to celestial marriage and the inception of plural marriage. The book of course is written from the standpoint of the Utah Mormon Church.

UNIVERSITY SERMONS.—This volume contains a series of sermons by Henry Sloane Coffin, minister in Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, and associate professor in Union Theological Seminary, New York City. Published by Yale University Press, New Haven, Connecticut, price $1.50. The subjects taken up include, Three stages in religious experience; the finality of Jesus; the claims of the church upon Christians; the religious finality; a Christian thought of God; the reality of God; religion, a load or a lift. These discourses were delivered in the chapels of Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Columbia, Brown, New York and Chicago universities; also Williams, Dartmouth, Wellesley, Vassar, and Mount Holyoke colleges. They contain some very excellent thought and will be of interest to those who care to get in touch with contemporary religious thought in theological circles of the institutions of higher learning.

The Fact Remains

No amount of misrepresentation by the peddlers of alum baking powders, no juggling with chemicals, or pretended analysis, or cooked-up certificates, or falsehoods of any kind, can change the fact that has been found by the official examinations to be of the highest leavening efficiency, free from alum, and of absolute purity and wholesomeness.

Royal Baking Powder is indispensable for making finest and most economical food.

Don't Get Into Debt on a Rented Farm

Get into the dairy business on your own farm. I can put you in touch with the owners of fine prairie lands of rich soil from 300 to 400 miles west of Omaha, which can be bought on very easy terms at from $15 to $40 per acre. You are sure to make money by modern dairy practice, because the silo is the solution of the dairy problem and feed crops are heavy on these lands. If you haven't money at first to build a silo, dig one. Good farmers with proper equipment and feed can secure cows on time.

These owners make these special terms to dairy farmers, because they know that a good dairy farmer will make money by corn-silo dairy farming and will soon clean up his obligations. Then hogs and poultry fit right in and round out the profits. These 160-acre tracts are located among improved farms in established communities.

Give me your name; let me help you become the owner of a dairy farm.

NOTES ON THE BOOK OF GENESIS---PART II MAN'S PLACE IN THE WORLD

In the preceding number we developed the fact that the book of Genesis is supported by science in its declaration affirming the presence of creative power in the beginning.

The next great proposition noted is the place assigned to man in the physical universe.

And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.—Genesis 1:28.

It was given to man to multiply and replenish the earth, to subdue and have dominion. Though inferior in size and strength to many of the animals, and poorly endowed by physical equipment to meet them in combat, man has fought his way upward to supremacy and dominion in a physical sense; though it is too true in many instances that it is a dominion based on fear.

Most animals have their natural habitat, more or less restricted in area; but man makes his home in arctic and tropic regions alike, and fills the whole earth with his commerce and activity.

When we consider the comparatively primitive condition of man at the time when these words were written, so long ago, in the age of the hand pruning hook and the threshing floor, we realize that their greatest fulfillment has come since then. They were in a large measure prophetic even at the time when written by Moses, and of course much more so when first uttered. Since then man has subdued oceans and made them the highways of his commerce; he has overrun continents and made them his gardens; he has not only extended his dominion over animal and plant life, but over the forces of nature as well; he has chained steam and electricity and gasoline; and now on great wings threads the upper realms of ethereal air. He kills the tiger in battle; flies higher and faster than the eagle; outruns the antelope upon the plains; sports with leviathan in the great deep.

Yes, he even weighs and analyzes the planets and maps the course of the wandering stars.

His preeminent dominion in mundane affairs is evident alike to those who hold to the ancient traditions and to the modern school that holds to the idea that man came up to his present state through "hap and hazard," as is set forth in William Watson's poem:

In cave and bosky dene
Of old there crept and ran
The gibbering form obscene
That was and was not man.
The desert beasts went by
In fairer covering clad;
More speculative eye
The couchant lion had,
And goodlier speech the birds, than we when we began.
A soul so long deferred
In his blind brain he bore,
It might have slept unstirred
Ten million noontides more.
Yea, round him darkness might
Till now her folds have drawn,
O'er that enormous night
So casual came the dawn,
Such hues of hap and hazard Man's Emergence wore!

MAN'S MORAL STATUS

But alas, though man has obtained dominion to a large extent over the animal world and over the forces of nature, he has never yet obtained complete dominion over his own moral nature (excepting of course in individual cases which are the exceptions that most dramatically prove and demonstrate the rule).

And yet his happiness and ultimate success depend upon such conquest of self. And right here appears the next great proposition of Genesis. Man was given many privileges, blessings, and opportunities, but there was one thing that he was told that he must not do on penalty of death. The narrative of the garden and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil from which he was not to eat is considered historical by some, by others it is regarded as allegorical, while still others suggest that it may be both historical and allegorical.

The lesson is the thing we must not overlook. The prohibition was there; though probably the injunction was more in the nature of a warning than prohibitive or negative legislation. Man was morally bound to rule his own spirit and obey, or suffer the consequences. He chose to violate the moral obligation or law, and suffered the penalty.

He still finds many blessings and privileges to be freely enjoyed, with certain laws also in force requiring him to be abstinent, temperate, and moral. He still chooses to violate the natural and divine restrictive laws and as a result the curse comes upon him and his garden of Eden is ruined. He can not redeem himself.

The logic of Genesis is repeated every day. On this point we quote from a sermon by the Dean of Canterbury, Reverend Henry Wace:

From this statement of man's worldly destiny, observe how the sacred writer or compiler passes at once with unerring instinct to the one point on which the fulfillment of that destiny depends—I mean to man's moral position. He describes man as placed in a world full of all manner of trees, pleasant to the sight and good for food, the tree of life also in the midst of the garden. Men are bidden to use them all, subject to one condition—a moral obligation laid upon them by their Creator to abstain from certain enjoyments which are allegorically described as the knowledge of good and evil. So it is this day. Every child starts in the world amidst a paradise of things pleasant and good; but the first thing it has to learn is that it is under a moral obligation to abstain from some of those pleasures; and if a man indulges in them his higher life, his real life, will be destroyed. He will find a curse attaching itself to all his work and all the results of his labors. The first great lesson, in short, that a man has to learn is that his material happiness entirely depends on his recognition of his moral obligations, and his obedience to that voice of his conscience which is the voice of God. A great nation and a great city like this may have in it all things that are pleasant to the sight and good for food, mental and physical, but history bears witness in the loudest tones that they will all turn to dust in our mouth—"vanity of vanities"—unless they are used under that sense of moral restraint which the divine voice has impressed upon them.—Christian Apologetics, pp. 33, 34.

THE FALL

The question of the fall of man occupies a prominent place in Christian theology. That fall necessitated the advent of Jesus Christ and his life, death and labor among men to redeem them from sin and death.

The idea that man actually fell is challenged by many liberal thinkers. It has no place in their theology or philosophy; consequently they see no need for redemption or regeneration. Reasoning from their viewpoint the mission of Christ is shorn of its glory and robbed of its meaning.

Yet to us the fall of man is a self-evident fact. We have but to keep our eyes open to see evidences of it every day and all around. The possibilities of human nature are revealed in the good and the great,—Jesus Christ, Abraham Lincoln, Gladstone, and thousands of others strong and good and upright.

Humanity in the mass and as individuals is living far below the level of human possibilities as shown by those characters. But there is another and more startling comparison. To say that man has in many instances fallen to the level of the beasts would be bad enough; as Swinburne said, "Light loves make beasts of men"; but alas we can not stop there, for individuals, cities, nations have fallen below the level of beasts.

We quote from James Foster Scott, B. A. (Yale), M. D., C. M. (Edinburgh University), in The Sexual Instinct, its Uses and Dangers as Affecting Heredity and Morals:

By sinking to a depth of infamy far below the level of any examples to be found among the brutes, the unchaste members of the human family have transmitted the filthy venereal diseases through the ages, while the lower animals are exempt.—P. 83.

Lascivious gratification of sensual desire, which transgresses natural laws and actually aims to violate them, is a marked perversion which places those who indulge in it in a class by themselves below the level of the brutes.—P. 138.

The brutes are far purer in their desires and cleaner in their methods than the lewder part of humanity.—P. 79.

Thus if we grant that man was created in the image of God and only a little lower than the angels and crowned with glory and honor, we are filled with horror at the depth to which he has degraded himself. While if we admit that he came into existence through the animals by processes of evolution and started on a level with them, still there is evidence of his moral fall. For passing by all other moral issues and mentioning this one only, that of sexual morality, one vital and fundamental in importance, we observe to our shame and sorrow that man has descended to depths of debauchery, filth, and venery never dreamed of by the brutes, and as a result whole communities and nations have perished from the face of the earth and the very existence of the race itself is threatened.

In this connection we think of Sodom, Pompeii, Cairo, and cities of the orient, but we need not go so far afield or so far back in history; the evil is here and now, in the occident, and in the twentieth century.

The fall of man is a self-evident fact. The redemption of man is a self-evident necessity. Civilization and education are not sufficient to redeem man (unless we include, under the term education, gospel education). These evils flourish and attain their worst forms in advanced civilizations, and affect school and college centers and the circles of the wealthy, educated, and so-called refined and cultured.

The mission of Christ to earth with a plan of redemption, reconciliation, and regeneration was based on an actually existing necessity. That necessity is yet evident, and should be as clearly discerned by philosophy and science as it is by theology.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE INDIAN AND LIQUOR

Commissioner Cato Sells recently issued a letter to each of the six thousand employees of the United States in the Indian service, in which he discussed the evil effects of alcohol among the Indians. He said in part:

I believe that the greatest present menace to the American Indian is whisky. It does more to destroy his constitution and invite the ravages of disease than anything else. It does more to demoralize him as a man and frequently as a woman. It does more to make him an easy prey to the unscrupulous than everything else combined.

If I say nothing more to you that leaves an impression, let it be this one thought: Let us save the American Indian from the curse of whisky.

We have a force of men engaged in the suppression of the liquor traffic. That is their special business. But it is my business and it is your business to do everything we can, without injecting ourselves offensively into the work of others or assuming a duty that is not properly ours, to create an atmosphere and suggest conditions that will be helpful in this respect, and, above all, to be a personal object-lesson inviting the Indian to banish liquor, rather than to be guilty of anything that may cause him to look upon one of us as a justification for doing that which leads him to the destruction caused by the use of whisky.

Commenting on this letter, the Des Moines (Iowa) Capital, for March 27, says:

The foulest blots upon civilization are those which tell of the manner in which so-called Christian nations have permitted the sale of liquor and opium to races and tribes of people which had no knowledge concerning its proper use.

England doping the orientals with opium and America saturating the aboriginal occidentals with whisky are two spectacles of the manner in which commercialism has been permitted to keep genuine moral sentiment in the background.

The Indians of America are the wards of this Nation. They are deserving of the best treatment and care of which modern enlightenment is capable. The Indian has enough handicaps to overcome in the way of racial and other prejudicial obstacles to his advancement, without being exploited in the interest of commercial greed.

It is fitting that there should arise among the men in the administration of the Nation those who seek to recall the Government from the laxness of the past in the matter of allowing the Indian to be debauched with liquor furnished out of the greed of the white man for gain. It is well that the press rally to the support of such men. It is to be hoped that the Government and its employees will make amends for what has been allowed in the past, wherever and whenever such is possible.

Latter Day Saints can unreservedly lend influence to the wholesome sentiment expressed by Commissioner Sells and the Des Moines Capital, since the constitutional teaching of the church is that liquors, in any form, are not good for man, be he red or white, civilized or uncivilized, wards of a superior people, or those unto whom the well-being of an inferior race has been committed.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

IRISH HOME RULE.—For the third time in as many sessions of the English Parliament, the House of Commons has passed the Irish Home Rule Bill, and the same becomes law independently of any action by the Lords. This bill was finally passed on May 25, by a vote of three hundred and fifty-one to two hundred and seventy-four. Certain amendments, the nature of which were not announced, have been prepared by the victors, and the submission of which to the House of Commons is promised. It is hoped that these amendments will be acceptable to the opposition, and helpful in maintaining order and peace in Ulster.

SINGER IN SUIT.—Homer Rodeheaver, choir director for "Billy" Sunday, is made defendant in a fifty-thousand-dollar breach of promise suit brought by Miss Georgia W. Jay, of Chicago, who represented that in breaking off their engagement of three years, Rodeheaver gave as the reason that his career in winning souls was more worthy than their betrothal and marriage.

FOR UNIFORM DIVORCE.—The general assembly of the Presbyterian Church of America on May 28 in session at Chicago passed a resolution favoring action leading to uniform divorce laws in the various States.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—It is stated by the press that the mediation parley at Niagara Falls has developed the following plan for settlement of the Mexican difficulty: A provisional government to conform to the Mexican constitution, consisting of a provisional president and four cabinet members, all appointive. General Huerta would, if the plan were carried into effect, resign, and the Secretary of State under the constitution would automatically succeed him. The provisional government would then put electoral reform measures into force and arrange for the election of a permanent president. Under this arrangement the United States would be expected to back up the new government with moral and active support and formal recognition. Vera Cruz would be evacuated, at which time salutes would be exchanged. So much for the United States and Huerta. But the Constitutionists are to be reckoned with in any event of mediation. Latest reports state that General Carranza has requested that Constitutionalist representatives be allowed to participate in the deliberations at Niagara Falls. All parties express themselves as hopeful of the final outcome.

SAD DISASTER.—On the morning of May 30, shortly before the break of day, and within fifteen minutes after being struck by the Danish collier, Storstad, heavily loaded and bound for Quebec, the Empress of Ireland, en route from Quebec to Liverpool, went down in the Saint Lawrence River in the vicinity of Father Point, nine hundred and sixty-four of the one thousand three hundred and sixty-seven passengers, and two hundred and two of the crew of four hundred and thirteen being lost. The collision occurred in a heavy fog as the Empress lay with engine quiet and her officers taking every precaution to avoid a collision with the Storstad, the vessels having shortly before the fog sighted and signalled each other. Rescue crafts reached the scene soon after the call for help from the Empress wireless operator, and with the Storstad joined in the work of recovering survivors from the icy water. The sinking of the Empress followed so soon after the collision that boats could not be lowered, nor could passengers have entered them if lowered. This disaster saddens the entire world.

KIDNAP CLERGYMAN.—Reverend Louis R. Patmont, a prohibition advocate, kidnaped at Westville, Illinois, on March 31, was found in an abandoned house near Columbia, Illinois, May 23, bound, and rescued by laborers only after chewing a gag in pieces and calling for help. Reverend Patmont says that on returning from a "dry" meeting at Westville he was overpowered, tied and gagged, and taken to a cellar some miles away, where he was confined until two days before being taken to the building where found. He adds that his kidnapers on leaving him at the house where found threatened to return and burn the place. Reverend Patmont states that he can identify his captors. He charges that they were in league with saloon and liquor men, for whom they acted. An investigation is pending.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

ADVANTAGEOUS ARTICLE.—At the request of an editor of the London (Canada) Advertiser, Brother Owen W. Cambridge of that city some time ago prepared an article for the Advertiser setting forth the rise of the latter-day work, the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, the persecution and martyrdom, the departure of Utah, the work of the Reorganization, etc., together with a brief epitome of the faith. A comprehensive history of the London Branch is given, and a cut of the London church accompanies the article. This writeup has a prominent place in the Advertiser, and should be advantageous to the work.

PITTSBURG SAINTS AND ANTI-MORMONISM.—The Saints of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, have shown alertness and most excellent management in the way in which they have brought about cooperation between representatives of the anti-"Mormon" crusade and themselves. Doctor James S. Martin, general superintendent of the National Reform Association, and general director of the crusade against the evils of the Utah Church, was announced to lecture in the Saints' church, Realty and Tonapah avenues, Beechview, May 17, on the subject, "The menace of the Utah Mormon Church." This effort was extensively advertised by handbills distributed in the residence districts, posters on poles, in display windows, and on street cars, announcements in the papers, etc. The handbills distributed by our people included the following:

Our Christian neighbors are invited to hear this able speaker, assisted by other prominent men, and to cooperate with us in the adoption of a resolution protesting against the abominable doctrine of polygamy, and to urge national legislation against its practice in the United States. The Beechview congregation is not connected in any way whatever with the Utah Mormon Church. We have consistently opposed their pernicious doctrines for over fifty-three years with all our might, mind and strength, and since the year 1861 have sustained in the State of Utah and elsewhere an aggressive missionary campaign against the evil doctrines of that church. We stand for social purity in the home and a righteous church.

MISREPRESENTATION TURNED TO GOOD.—In willingness to correct misleading statements and misrepresentations previously appearing in both, the Haverhill Evening Gazette, March 13, and the Haverhill Herald, March 14, Haverhill, Massachusetts, published articles by Elder William Anderson, at that time laboring in the city. These papers had in reporting the meetings of Brother Anderson referred to our people as of the Utah Church. Brother Anderson in his article gives a brief history of the latter-day movement, including the Utah apostasy. Attention is called to our work at Haverhill, and altogether the incident, as reported by Sister Susie Hayer Jordan has worked to the good of our cause.

ONLY SAFE COURSE.—In an address to the graduates of the naval academy, Secretary of the Navy Daniels is reported as having said:

The day was when grog was served to sailors as a part of their daily ration, but it would be impossible in our generation of better ideals and more temperate lives. The day has not yet come, however, sad to say, when excessive drinking does not now and then mar a noble character. . . . Let me say to you, my young friends, that while there are many good and true men who drink temperately, there is only one safe course for the young man who would be master of his soul, and that is to abstain from the use of intoxicating drinks. I hope I may be pardoned for saying that the saddest day in my official life was the one when I had to deny a diploma to a young man who had put to his lips that which steals away our brains.

Men are coming more and more to the wisdom of the words of the revelation to Joseph Smith, received and published in a day when alcoholics were thought to be wholesome, in which words are set forth the fact that strong drink is not good for man.

Did You?

Did you give him a lift? He's a brother of man,
And bearing about all the burden he can.
Did you give him a smile? He was downcast and blue
And the smile would have helped him battle it through.

Did you give him your hand? He was slipping down hill,
And the world, so I fancied, was using him ill.
Did you give him a word? Did you show him the road,
Or did you just let him go on with his load?

Do you know what it means to be losing the fight,
When a lift just in time might set everything right?
Do you know what it means—just the clasp of a hand
When a man's borne about all a man ought to stand?

Did you ask what it was—why the quivering lip?
Why the half-suppressed sob, and the scalding tear's drip?
Were you a brother of his when the time came of need?
Did you offer to help him, or didn't you heed?

—Kansas City Post.

Help for the Weary

Bear ye the burden of others,
Help them along the way,
Where the Savior is leading
From day to day.

Tell them the wonderful blessings
Jesus is waiting to give;
If we will love one another
Soon with his love we shall live.

Be ready to lift up the fallen
By some kind word we may speak,
Or lending a helping hand
To those by trials made weak.

If our trials sometimes seem greater
Than others have to bear,
Then let us gather the sunshine
Of God's love by faith and prayer.

Then soon the day will be dawning,
And many with him will be blest,
Safe on that bright glorious morning
In the heavenly mansion of rest.

MRS. FRED PEASLEY.

A Little Nearer Day by Day

Through all vicissitudes of life,
'Mid evening's calm, or noonday strife;
'Midst raging torrents' turbid stream,
Or by yon mild pellucid beam,
Grant, Lord, my wand'ring feet may stray,
Nearer to thee, my God, this day.

Surrounded by earth's chiefest good,
Or in the desert solitude;
When loved ones gather from afar;
Or, when like yon dim polar star,
Lonely I track my silent way,
Grant me the boon yet while I pray—
A little nearer day by day!

I can not draw the falchion now,
Nor speed the archer's swift-winged bow;
Yet I may soothe some aching breast,
Or hush some trembling child to rest;
Thus by such silent deeds to be
Daily a little nearer Thee!

I can not scale yon mountain height
Nor dare the eagle's lofty flight;
I dare not lift thy banner high,
As those that march to victory;
Yet I may ease the weary load
Of some poor straggler on the road,
Or point some lingering feet the way
That leads to everlasting day!

And when at last, thou King supreme,
There dawneth that last awful scene
When stands on high the great white throne,
Before it all mankind bowed down,
I may not dare to draw me nigh
That scene of august mystery,
Yet, loving Savior grant, I pray,
That I may see thy face that day.

No more my earth born soul aspires
The martial camp or kindling fires,
Where warriors armed and watchful stand,
A noble, valiant sentry band;
Yet I may lead some foot to stray
Nearer, my God, to thee this day.

Lightnings and fury thunders scare
My trembling heart, nor can I dare
The ocean's great tempestuous deep,
Where thousand, thousand loved ones sleep.
Yet let my wand'ring spirit stray
Nearer the Sheltering Rock this day.

F. R. TUBB.

Now I Lay Me Down To Sleep

The fire upon the hearth is low,
And there is stillness everywhere,
While winged spirits here and there,
The firelight shadows muttering go,
And as the shadows round me creep,
A childish treble breaks the gloom,
And softly from the further room
Comes, "Now I lay me down to sleep."

And somehow, with that little prayer,
And that sweet treble in my ears,
My thoughts go back to distant years,
And linger with the loved ones there;
And as I hear my child's "Amen,"
My mother's faith comes back to me.
Crouched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hand again.

Oh, for an hour in that dear place!
Or, for the peace of that dear time!
Oh, for the childish trust sublime!
Oh, for a glimpse of mother's face!
Yet, as the shadows round me creep,
I do not seem to be alone—
Magic sweet, of that treble tone,
And "Now I lay me down to sleep."

INSPIRATION

Webster defines inspire thus: To blow into or upon. To breathe into. To infuse by breathing. To infuse into the mind; as to inspire with new life. To infuse or suggest ideas or monitions supernaturally, to communicate divine instructions to the mind; as, the prophets were inspired.

We gather from these first definitions that a person may be inspired by or with various influences and substances. But this paper is to be devoted to divine inspiration and the strange mixtures and complications connected therewith; the prime object being to help draw a more correct line between the inspiration of God and the inspiration of devils who may appear as angels of light.

PURPOSE OF DIVINE INSPIRATION

There is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding.—Elihu.

And all scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.—Paul.

Intellectual development is, therefore, the aim of divine inspiration.

DO WE NEED DIVINE INSPIRATION?

A very religious man, with failing eyesight, whose wife had been a helpless invalid for many years, was supporting his family by making rails for fifty cents per hundred. He was attending meetings near Boston Mountains, where one night I discussed the subject of divine inspiration from many viewpoints. The next day this man said to me, "I don't see that we need any of these things in this enlightened age of the world." Such cases as this puzzle me.

This question actually sounds stupid when we realize how exceedingly little we know, compared with the boundless universe of things that we do not know, and without divine inspiration can never know.

A mere glimpse at the rude ignorance of the Dark Ages should convince all that divine inspiration is essential to man's development: the ghastly tortures of the inquisition; no chance to get a knowledge of the truth; no perfect pattern after which to fashion their manners; no infallible standard to be measured by or to aspire to; no guide to escort them through the bewildering maze of their own ignorance; no guard to protect their uncertain lives; no divine finger board to point the way; no Bible that they were permitted to read.

Buried beneath their everlasting confusion and uncertainty, deplorable indeed was their miserable condition! Compare the stolid condition of those dark ages with the advancement the world has made in art, in science, in invention, and in universal knowledge since 1829, only eighty-five years since the restoration of the gospel with its gifts of inspiration, and we see at once that divine inspiration is accomplishing much for the uplift of humanity.

MECHANISM OR WORKING PRINCIPLES

The mechanism or working principles of divine inspiration are clearly set forth in the signs that shall follow the believers, such spiritual gifts as wisdom, knowledge, faith, discernment, prophecy, casting out devils, angelic ministration, miracles, tongues and their interpretation, the gift of healing, and that most excellent of all gifts, charity, which is perfect love. In this we readily discover that divine inspiration is only another term used to convey the idea of revelations from God. In still other words these gifts are between God and his creatures. Men have sought out and partially developed certain methods of corresponding with each other: such as messenger boys, mail service, telegraphy, telephone, and wireless system. But these are all crude constructions compared with the inventions of heaven.

VARIOUS LINES OF COMMUNICATION

What human messenger would think of competing with angels? "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to administer for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Yes, indeed! Wireless telegraphy, with its powerful transmission of electric waves and its corresponding induction coils at various stations, is said to be the most wonderful discovery of the human family. But God had the material, the laws, and the principles in existence before they were discovered. And God is the creator of inventors, who are much superior to their inventions. The wireless, at best, is only a clumsy illustration of the divine transmission of thought waves that have always been in operation in heaven; and God has made of every normal man and woman a first-class individual receiving station; but he has made the attuning process an individual work; and just in that degree that individuals put away selfishness and develop love of truth, love of humanity, in just that proportion do they vibrate with thought waves from the great heavenly transmitter.

The mind of the inventor should at least be as receptive of thought waves as any induction coil that he can invent is of electric waves. When we, (the church as a body), make a personal application of the gospel, and develop its graces, we should not only receive the vibrations of love, or thought waves of congenial companions, but should be made conscious at all times of the transactions of the interior department of heaven, through being made one with Christ as he is one with the Father. Thus:

The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.

For man will have regained his lost dominion.

Every sanctified child of God will be an individual receiver of thought waves of perfect love from all parts of the universe. All the sons and daughters of God will again have occasion to "shout for joy," because we will all see eye to eye and know even as also we are known.

Such, dear reader, are some of the blessed conditions to be brought about only through entering into partnership with Jesus in the gospel of divine inspiration: the message of peace and plenty.

STRANGE MIXTURES AND CONFLICTS

that so often bewilder and frighten us are all due to our faulty, degenerate, or undeveloped natures. They are not to be attributed to any weak point in the divine plan; but rather to our lack of faith in Jesus Christ as the only faultless representative of the Father's will. We have not yet developed that degree of faith that moves us into his ways. We can not reach perfection in a single step, but must grow in grace and in the knowledge of God.

And during this period of growth, this transition from our low estate to the finished product, it is our common lot to be deceived and to make mistakes. We may illustrate a few of these mistakes as follows:

First. It is possible that at times God words the message given; but in nearly all cases he simply inspires his servants with the ideas only; he makes known to them certain truths, and they are left to express them in their own clumsy language; it becomes their duty to clothe the ideas in their own imperfect, awkward, human vocabulary. And as a perfect message can not be expressed in an imperfect language, we have one key to numerous complex conditions that arise.

Second. Our traditions are sometimes stubborn things; they become very tenacious. We have been schooled from infancy in certain errors that become a part of our very natures, and we may give expression to these errors many times, not discerning that they are out of harmony with the truths made known to us by inspiration.

When Peter preached to the multitude on Pentecost he told them by the gift of inspiration that the promises of the gospel were "unto all that are afar off"; but his tradition (that the Gentiles were not to be saved) stuck so closely to him that eight years later it required a vision thrice repeated, plus a direct command by the Spirit, to convince him that he should go down to Cesarea in response to the call of Cornelius.

He knew full well that God had no respect for Jewish ceremonies and traditions, but it was so hard for him to wean himself from them that twenty years later it became needful that Paul should withstand him to the face and preach to him a great sermon.

The higher lights of the church, as well as the membership, both in ancient and modern times have found themselves not immune to error; they lay no claim to infallibility. While it is the office work of the Spirit to guide into all truth, yet God's people in all ages have been from time to time left to their own judgment and have made mistakes.

This is said to be the only difference between the divine and the human: the former is not subject to error, while the latter is. No one realizes so keenly the constant need of the Comforter as those in the closest touch with him.

Third. There is much similarity in the methods of inspiration from various sources, so that honest, truth-loving, prayerful people have been mistaken in the source of messages received, as the following will illustrate.

A father and son were separated by many hundreds of miles when a mental message reached the father that the son was in deep trouble, and the nature of the difficulty was clearly made known. He at once wrote to the son, giving encouragement, counsel, and advice. A return letter proved that no mistake had been made. Years have passed, and the father does not yet know how the message came, whether it reached him direct from the troubled soul of his son by transmission of thought, or if indirectly through the agency of angels or other divine means.

We know that intelligent messages are received from God, as also from congenial companions. And we also know that the unanimity that Jesus required, "one with me as I am one with the Father" is necessary in order to make this possible; but we do not always know just how the message travels. The principle of life, like electricity, can not be analyzed by man.

Infinite propositions are only vaguely grasped by the finite mind.

Fourth. To-day, I was reading Griesback's translation of Acts 9:7, and I discovered the probable cause of this age old contradiction of Acts 22:9. The word for word translation reads as follows: "The and men those traveling with him, stood dumb, hearing indeed the voice, no one but seeing." Now if the last comma had been set two steps ahead, that is after the word one, instead of after the word voice, the passage would sound better, and no contradiction would have occurred. Who may know how numerous and how damaging the intricacies that have arisen from faulty punctuation of otherwise divinely inspired sentences? As an illustration of what improper punctuation will do for a sentence, I quote by memory the following from an old grammar: Lord Palmason entered upon his head, a white hat upon his feet, a pair of white top boots in his hand, a cane upon his brow, a withering frown saying nothing. The reader may easily correct the punctuation and secure good sense.

Fifth. At times we are beset by obstacles that appear insurmountable, confronted by obstructions that are mountain high; we can see no way over or around them. The most natural thing we can do at such times is to humbly ask God for light and help; and just at the supreme moment, when the storm is sweeping us down upon its filthy torrent, and black despair settles upon us like a pall, a bright thought occurs to us, and like a drowning man catching at straws, we grasp the thought and use it vigorously, by which the crisis is met and we succeed.

How natural it is for us to believe that thought came to us by divine inspiration! Recreant indeed the one who would not give God the glory; for we know our prayer has been answered. But we do not know from what source, nor by what means; for this very thing has occurred many times with those who were not in the right. And they have been quick to use it as evidence that God was with them. Therefore, not until we know what thought is, and how thoughts originate, not until we know who is the father and transmitter of thoughts that are breathed into us, and by which we are inspired, can we hope to mount above making mistakes.

We see only a few of the less important, inanimate things of nature; but the more important, such as cohesion, attraction, ether, electricity, life, intelligence, and that still more mysterious quantity that seems to associate with intelligence and give action to life, that something that we call thought, the animate and mightier forces of nature we may not look upon. Will the good Lord help us to become better acquainted with the things we most use? Oh, how we yearn for the time when we may know also as we are known!

So we plod along, diligently applying the only principles that give us an intelligent hope of the knowledge we so much need.

Sixth. The contradiction of ages, which places all others aside, and productive of more evil than all others combined, is

COUNTERFEIT REVELATIONS

Not, however, being received at the present time; oh, no; for any of the quorums of the church in their order, if called to pass on those revelations would readily detect the prints of the cloven hoof. But what wonderful enchantment time doth lend! I refer to those bloodcurdling commands accepted by ancient Israel after their idolatry, polygamy, and ravenings for blood had separated them from God. "Therefore he took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also."

We refer to those revelations which ordered the massacre of thousands of innocent little children, of whom Jesus said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," those revelations that commanded the indiscriminate slaughter of helpless mothers, of non-combatants, the aged, and crippled, "of all that breathed." These documents were compiled into the nation's history by the scribes; they were said to have been given by the Lord God of Israel.

These historical records were preserved and during the Dark Ages they were canonized by Catholic priests and pontiffs; thus they became a part of our Bible. We think this act was as it should be, was right; but when this same authority fostered the doctrine of plenary inspiration into the minds of the Christian world, they did wrong; for God should not be held responsible for the works and words of devils and wicked men. But this doctrine has a bulldog grip upon all forms and types of the Christian religion to-day; so that without a single exception some of the ministers of every church still hold up to the world those blood-hungry heroes of apostate Israel as God's favorites; they praise the frightful deeds of "brave Joshua," and in the same discourses glibly tell of the peace message of the lowly Nazarene. This double standard is hardly noticed by people with strongly developed religious inclinations, but it becomes a serious matter with natural critics, and thinking students; they are puzzled and become disgusted with such impossible teachings. This is rightly said to be "an age of questioning." "The Bible is to-day literally the storm center of hungry questioning."

And no perplexing question of the age has a stronger tendency to drive the masses from the religion of Jesus, into Spiritualism, Agnosticism, or Christian Science than this brazen contradiction so warmly cherished by the churches. The fourth dimension theory of Waldemar Kaempffer is no more inconsistent, nor half so hideous.

Can we as a church longer afford to drag along in this old, muddy rut? Can we afford to still hang on to the statements and opinions of the scribes as of equal value with the testimony of Christ, since no intelligence on earth nor in heaven can harmonize them? As an individual I can not afford it. And all revelations purporting to come from God that uphold a rank violation of the testimony of Jesus Christ are at once branded as counterfeit revelations. Thus we are able to give a rational reason for the hope we have to friend or foe, to Agnostic or Atheist, to barbarian or critic.

We may err in judgment; we may make serious mistakes; we may be deceived, and start astray; but the frequent cycles of the gospel, with its safeguards, will soon straighten us up if we are humble and prayerful and temperate; and our experiences may be turned to good account. D. R. BALDWIN.

AN INFALLIBLE REMEDY

Is it true that there is a way out of bondage for every penitent soul? Is it true that every drunkard can be cured; every sensualist healed; every wayward one reclaimed; every criminal transformed; every degenerate regenerated; every bad habit broken; every vice stopped; every evil propensity controlled; every weakness overcome?

Is there an unerring remedy for these ills, and a sure means of release from the bondage of sin? Inasmuch as these are averse to the Christlife, and destructive to the peace and tranquility of the home, destructive to the unity of the church of Christ, and enslaving in their nature, and knowing that to a very great extent the entire human family is enthralled in the forces of these adverse conditions, weak, sick, and faint, crying out in the depths of their souls for deliverance, the question again arises, clothed in the earnestness of deepest anxiety, Is there such an infallible remedy?

A STAR OF HOPE

If you have lost your way, my brother; if you have been caught in the jungles of desire; if the serpents of lust or intemperance have coiled their slimy forms, around you; if the demons of habit have chained you to the rock of despair; if the darkness and remorse of sin have fallen upon your soul, don't lose sight of the fact that though all the world forsake you and despise you, God loves you.

My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world.—John 2: 1, 2.

This faithful Defender, this unerring Conciliator, is the offspring of God's love to the human race, for "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." This is tantamount to saying that every one willing to meet the conditions can be transformed, realize the higher life, and enjoy its freedom, peace, and power.

NEED OF WILL POWER

Then first of all we must stop the willful violation of law. One man said, "You might as well try to get free from pain with your hand in the fire as to try to get freedom from the effects of sin while continuing in sin." We recognize the fact that the moral degenerate finds himself materially handicapped in the fact that the forces of will power are all but gone; and as I was preaching upon the streets of the city of Winnipeg, and had before me the living pictures, the real evidences of the weakening and degenerating forces of vice, my heart was called out in pity, and lost its power to censure, when I realized how weak and erring I had been in my past life, though not reaching the depths of despair represented in the brother before me who had not been so fortunate as I, in that he had not found some congenial soul who had been touched by the power of the love of God to help him into the pool, and who was yet struggling in the sea of despondency, grappling for freedom.

One of these unfortunates called me to one side after hearing a plea for the assertion of the will power and the forces of manhood in the effort to make a new man out of himself and said, "Brother, I am one of these moral degenerates who has lost the power to control. In the name of God, can you tell me how to get hold of myself? I married a bright, kind, and accomplished girl, started a happy, pleasant home, but drink has robbed it of its sunshine; the happy wife is now the crushed mother of a ragged, half-fed child; the love light has gone out of her eyes, all because I tampered with the demon of drink, until I lost the power of control and sank to the depths of helpless despair. Can you help me out?"

The Globe said: "A man who is worth saving will save himself." Not too fast, my brother. We are willing to admit that, generally speaking, the man who really wishes to escape the booze route may do so by keeping on the other side of the street and letting rum alone. The trick after all is to have the desire to escape. The minute a man really sees that to take a drug to make him feel light-headed and silly is an asinine proceeding, that minute he will leave it off, if he is of much good. But that does not change the fact that some poor unfortunates have reached a condition of bondage where the ebb of moral force is so low that they are all but helpless.

Are we not, as professed followers of the Christ, just a little like Jeremiah, who in his prayer confessed, "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps," and then asked: "O Lord, correct me, but with judgment; not in thine anger, lest thou bring me to nothing." And after asking that his corrections be made in judgment, (and judgment is justice) not in anger, recognizing that if in anger his works might be brought to naught, in the weakness of his human soul he asked God to "Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy name."

THE NEED OF CHARACTER

Realizing how hard it has been for us to overcome our besetting sin, and how as yet some are manifestly weak and largely in bondage to this day, do we not sense the fact that the crying need of the day is more men of character?

That Christ within is the only specific for hereditary degeneracy, evil tendencies, and perverted desires. And that this is not a power which is infused by the magic, incomprehensible force of an unseen power, but the result of the real, active, life-giving forces of the law of Christ.

And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.—1 John 2: 4, 5.

Does this not sound like knowledge, and fairly shine with the light of the possibility of becoming perfected under the force of the commandments or law of Christ? What the world needs to-day most of all is the gospel of Jesus Christ, "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus," that produces real freedom from the sins and vices of the world to which the flesh is heir. And the crying need of the times is more consecrated men and women, who have drawn from the force of this perfect law the strength of character, who are willing to make sacrifice, of time, talents, and possessions to the end that the knowledge of the gospel of Christ may be spread in the earth. The "Modern Thought" method has proven inadequate to the emergency; one writer said:

I used to think men could save themselves. I know better now. For years I tried the "new thought" method of, "I will be what I will to be" on myself and others and found it very helpful in correcting and in improving the natural man. I can not commend it too highly, but it won't take the place of regeneration.

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh," and you can not change its nature by force of will, autosuggestion, or ethical culture; but "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit," and to the spiritual man goodness is natural and virtue spontaneous. The world is groping in darkness, looking for light. May God help all to find the "straight and narrow way" that leadeth to life and liberty.

We have in the world several types of men. The first, according to evolution, was the man of brute force and physical strength. The second, lineal descendant of the first, was the man of noble birth who boasted of his ancestral superiority. The third was the man of possession who estimated all men by their bank accounts and business sagacity. The fourth was the man of ideas; he said:

Though I could reach from pole to pole,
And grasp creation in my span,

I must be measured by my soul,
The mind's the standard of the man.

THE INFALLIBLE REMEDY

But what we need most is a successful combining of all these to make of us and for us the new man after the type presented in the great example, the Son of God. Nineteen hundred years ago, God gave to the world an unerring teacher, a perfect example, a faultless leader, whose first annunciation to a dying world was, "I am the light of the world," and revealed to the world a new type of manhood, the man of character. Character must be built. Character requires the efforts of years. It is the result of inherent tendencies, force of environment, habits, thought and volition.

Jesus Christ gave to the world the only infallible remedy, the gospel of righteousness, the one correct rule, the best and only true law of life and salvation. No wonder Paul said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation." In it is found salvation for every man. It presents the one perfect rule for the government of an ideal home, and the ordering of a perfect life; it represents to us in detail the specific law of regeneration, and promises the powers of spiritual illumination and revealed wisdom, the force of character so necessary to the leavening of the degenerate lump.

APPLYING THE REMEDY

The query arises at once, how I can get the sin sick soul to apply the remedy? How can I create faith within the individual, in the efficacy and power of the gospel as the unerring remedy? Doctor Arnold said: "As there can be no goodness of life without goodness of principle, so neither can there be any goodness of principle, that deserves the name, without its being shown in goodness of life." This is the world's attitude toward every known science, the science of religion being no exception.

Does this not reveal to us the fact, there is more in being than in doing? It is my judgment that the crying need of the times is more preachers; men to take in hand the active work of the field. But most of all, we need to make of every member of the body of Christ, every professed believer in the efficacy and power of the principles of the gospel of Christ, as the unerring remedy for the ills of the world, a living, moving, daily demonstration of the goodness of the principles we advocate. Certainly, in our own little sphere, it is not the most active people to whom we owe the most; among the common people whom we know, it is not necessarily those who are busiest, not those who meteor-like are ever on the rush after some visible charge and work.

It is the lives, like the stars, which pour down on us the calm light of their bright and faithful being, toward which we look, and out of which we gather the deepest calm and courage.

It seems to me that there is reassurance here for many of us who seem to have no chance for active usefulness. We can do nothing for our fellow men. But still it is good to know that we can be something for them; to know (and this we may know surely) that no man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, gentle, pure, and good, without the world being better for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodness.

We recognize that eternal vigilance should be the slogan of every member of the church; energy and consecration is an eternal force, absolutely essential to the progress of the great latter-day work, yet the first and foremost duty of every believer in the efficiency of the restored gospel to cleanse and save the world from its present bondage is to see that in the place that we occupy we need no reformation.

Life's pathway is strewn with opportunities of service for every man and woman, and God will not hold us guiltless for neglected opportunities, and especially will he hold us responsible for not "being." It is within the reach of possibility for every man and woman to be a star, whose beams of power are truth, virtue, temperance, charity, meekness, patience, endurance, faithfulness, outward demonstrations of the Christ within.

There are thousands of drunkards to be cured; let them see there are curative properties in the message of life. There are millions of sensualists to be healed; demonstrate there is healing in the fountain. A world of wayward ones surround you waiting to be reclaimed; demonstrate the power of the word of reconciliation. Hundreds of criminals are seeking transformation; demonstrate the transforming power of the word of life. Ten thousand times ten thousand men, boys, women, and girls are under the curse and bondage of acquired habits; they need a living example of the power of the gospel to save and conquer the filthy, distasteful habits. Let the forces of cleanliness shine out of your life as an attractive power that entices to a better standard. It is cowardly men or women who bedim their light by indulging in filthy habits; it is a disgraceful act to set an example before the youth of the age, that would encourage them in acquiring habits distasteful and degenerating, which tend to moral decay, and weakened manhood. Demonstrate to the world that every vice can be stopped by stopping your own; show to the world that every evil propensity can be controlled, by controlling yourself.

And in the words of Knox Little, "Always the important question is, and ultimately we must realize that it is not what we do or what we know, but what we are. Blessed, most blessed they, who waken wide-eyed and early to the fact."

TEACHERS' STRIKE IN ENGLAND

In the last few years Great Britain has seen and endured many grave strikes, but a teachers' strike in a whole county is an unpleasant novelty even there and now. Herefordshire has been the scene of this conflict. The teachers closed seventy schools in one day by "walking out" and easily enlisted the support of their pupils, who were doubtless glad to suspend their studies and indulge in mild disorders; processions, noise, mischief, excitement were not an unwelcome "relief."

The teachers demanded five hundred dollars per annum, or an increase of fifty dollars. That so slight an issue could not have been settled by conference and discussion seems strange at this distance. But the educational authorities adopted a "No surrender" policy, while the national teachers' union encouraged the strikers by promises of funds and moral support.

What has particularly disturbed the average citizen of the county is that the teachers promptly adopted the most modern methods of bitter industrial warfare. They placed pickets on duty; they saw to it that the headmasters did not take their posts; they resorted to coercion.

What's society coming to? respectable men and women are asking each other. Perhaps the real answer is that society is too slowly coming to common sense ways of avoiding strife or ending it. Strikes of public servants are particularly objectionable, but in France and elsewhere ways of preventing them have been found. Legislation and proper machinery are necessary, but, above all common sense and justice on both sides.—Chicago Record-Herald, February 15, 1914.

ILLITERACY IN THE UNITED STATES

Discussing illiteracy in the United States The Chautauquan for March 7 says:

Here are the actual census figures which at once indicate our problem and the by no means unsatisfactory progress we are making towards its solution:

	ILLITERATES OVER TEN YEARS OF AGE
	1900		1910
Whites .....	3,200,746	6.2	3,184,954	5.0
Negroes .....	2,853,794	44.5	2,228,087	30.4

The reduction in negro illiteracy in the decade covered by the figures is distinctly encouraging. And, clearly, that is the direction in which the greatest effort must be put forth. White illiteracy is almost entirely confined to recent alien arrivals and to remote and isolated mountain regions. The immigrant is anxious to educate his children, but his own illiteracy is often incurable. With our heavy "new" immigration it is hardly to be wondered at that there should be considerable white illiteracy. As to the isolated regions, a great deal can be done by the county and municipal authorities. One capable and energetic woman has eradicated illiteracy in a Kentucky county in a very short time. The way to do it is to work hard and to be sympathetic and persistent about it.

BULLETIN OF CHURCH STATISTICS

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America furnishes statistics for the churches of the United States of America, gathered and arranged by H. K. Carroll, LL. D., in charge of the Government Census of Churches in 1890. In explanation of these statistics Mr. Carroll says:

NOTES OF EXPLANATION

The territory covered is that of the United States only. Many denominations have ministers, churches, and communicants in foreign countries. These are not included in these tables.

Denominational official reports are used where there are such. Where there are no published reports, the best denominational sources are sought for information and where exact returns are not to be had approximate figures are furnished. In the few cases in which information is refused or can not be obtained, the census figures for 1906 are inserted.

Estimates are given in a very few cases for the increase of the year, where denominational returns are not available until two or three months after the beginning of the year.

Most of the numerous Mennonite branches do not attempt to gather any statistics. Therefore the census returns of 1906 were used, except for the Mennonite Brethren in Christ. Now, the results of a thorough canvass of all branches made in 1911 by a cooperative effort of representatives of seven branches are available, and the figures are all for 1911, except the Mennonite Brethren in Christ, which are for 1913.

A word of explanation concerning the figures for the Roman Catholic Church in the column of communicants should be given. The "Official Catholic Directory" gives only "population," which includes with communicants the unconfirmed baptized; that is, children who have not been admitted to their first communion. The rule adopted in the census in 1890, and followed in 1906, deducts fifteen per cent from Catholic population and sets down the remaining eighty-five per cent as communicants. It should also be said that the figures for "population" are for a large number of the dioceses' and archdioceses' estimates, given in round numbers, as, for example, Baltimore, 260,000; Boston, 900,000; Cincinnati, 200,000; but every year sees an increase in the dioceses giving more exact returns, as Santa Fe, 140,573; New York, 1,219,920; Albany, 201,246. The editor of the Catholic Directory believes that the total "population" is understated by nearly two millions.

The figures for Jewish members are misleading. The denomination furnishes no statistics. Nothing later than the census of 1906 is to be had. Even so, it is obvious that there must be more than 143,000 (the census figures are less than these) adults connected with Jewish congregations. But, technically, only the heads of families are counted as members. The "Jewish Communal Directory for Greater New York for 1912" gives a list of 274 congregations in the greater city. Of these only 109 gave figures for members. Temple Emanuel has a membership of 150, with seating capacity of 2,300. Temple Israel of Harlem reports 550 members and 1,468 seating capacity. The Jewish population of Greater New York carefully estimated by several methods, is set down by Doctor Joseph Jacobs at about 900,000. The Jewish population of the country is estimated by other authorities at about 2,000,000. The adults who are practically members of congregations should therefore be four or five times greater than 143,000.

No response has been received to repeated requests for information for 1913 from the Christian Science Church or Christian Catholic Church (Dowie). The figures of the former for ministers and churches are for 1912; those for members are for 1907.

The statistics of the Church of the Latter-day Saints are those of 1912, as furnished from the office of the Presiding Bishopric in Salt Lake City. No returns have been received for 1913. Some explanations given officially are presented herewith:

"1. The number of churches or congregations is the same as the number of wards. Each ward is a complete unit of the church or congregation. . . . There are now 713 wards, and this is practically the number of congregations of Latter-day Saints residing in what we term the Rocky Mountain District, which includes the State of Utah, Idaho, Arizona, a small part of New Mexico, Colorado, Nevada, Oregon, and Wyoming."

There are, in addition to the above, seven missions in the United States for which satisfactory information could not be given.

"2. Of the 335,191 members of the Church (1911) . . . residing in these wards (Rocky Mountain District) 83,126 are children under eight years of age. Latter-day Saints have their children baptized when eight years of age. They then become regular members of the church."

The total membership, including children, September 30, 1912, was 382,000. Deducting 86,000 for children under eight years of age, estimated, there remain 296,000 as the number of regular members.

"3. Our church organization is such that it is very difficult for us to give you the number of ministers. There are no regular ordained ministers of the church in the ordinary sense of the term. Those who hold presiding offices in the wards and stakes, which are the church communities of the Rocky Mountain region, and those who are preaching the gospel as missionaries in the United States number about 1,960. . . . The greater portion of the male members of the church hold the priesthood and are subject to call at any time to assist in conducting affairs of the church locally and to preach at the regular meetings of the church."

In the Rocky Mountain District there were in 1912: High priests, 9,409; holding office of the seventy, 9,028; elders, 23,161; total, 41,588.

4. There are 62 stakes in the Rocky Mountain District. A stake is an ecclesiastical division, generally corresponding to county lines. Stakes are divided into wards, or churches.

THE SHOWING FOR 1913

The gains for 1913 are considerably larger than those for 1912 in number of communicants and in churches. The net gain in the latter is due chiefly to the surprising advance reported for the Lutheran bodies of 1,455. Except for the unaccountable falling off reported by the Southern Presbyterian Church, the increase would have been more than double that of last year. Of the total net gain, besides the 1,455 of the Lutherans, the Methodists report 496, the Baptists 388, and the Roman Catholics 375. The loss of 742 credited to the Disciples of Christ is probably due to incomplete returns.

Six new churches, on the average, for every working day of the year can not be interpreted as discouraging.

The net increase of communicants is widely distributed. The Methodist bodies get nearly 220,000 of it, the Methodist Episcopal Church having the largest gain for many years; the Roman Catholic Church comes next with 212,500, then the Baptists with 64,608, the Presbyterians fourth with 45,649, the Lutherans fifth with 36,120, and the Disciples of Christ sixth with 21,824.

The net gain is, on the average, one and eight tenths per cent, which is a fair increase. If only those denominations which report increase be included in the reckoning, the only fair method, the percentage would be considerably larger—approaching two per cent. As a matter of fact, 618,000 is reported as the net increase of bodies aggregating about 33,000,000.

Mr. Carroll gives the number of ministers, churches, and communicants together with loss or gain for the year 1913 of each of the churches and factions in the United States. It is impracticable for us to give these figures here. In the following "Table II" we have the summary of the items appearing in the first table, just referred to.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS

Take Care of the Buds

In the quiet nursery stood a little white crib, the tiny occupant of which was the object of the young mother's thoughts as she walked slowly down the garden path; for the baby is the center of its mother's thoughts for a long time both before and after its advent to earth.

In the garden where this particular mother walked, a man was at work, spraying the trees. When asked why he was doing this work so early, when the buds scarcely had a start and the time of fruit was still far distant, the man replied, "Ah, this is the time! The bud is the most important part of it all. If you want the fruit perfect, you must take care of the bud."

And the mother-heart took in the lesson, applying it instinctively to the tiny bud of humanity whose care was her sweet labor. The gardener had remarked that it seemed there were enemies continually against which he had to fight to save the fruit; and as the mother thought the lesson over she realized that the tender human buds, like that within her keeping, are threatened by many conditions that will mar their perfection, except they be guarded with care.

"If you want the fruit perfect, you must take care of the bud."

Take Care of the Mother

Margaret Soundstrom writes in the Mother's Magazine: "If the mother is to pilot safely the young life intrusted to her care, she must keep herself in perfect condition, physically as well as mentally. Who has not seen an infant twitch and jerk its little body while nursing, stopping now and then to give vent to a nervous little cry? It is invariable that we find the mother of such a child a tired, nervous woman, whose condition is reflected in the sensitive nerves of her little one. . . . The child's birth has left the mother's nerves in a very weakened condition, and time and rest alone can restore them to their natural state. . . . Complete restoration and health can be considerably hastened through sleep. The mother should have ample time for sleep; she should retire early, and lie down for a short nap at least twice a day. It is surprising with what ease a well-rested mother can train her child into regular habits of sleeping and eating. An overtired, exhausted mother has just the opposite effect upon her child; her little one is restless during the day and wakeful at night."

In the light of these facts, it is the duty of the household, of which the father is head, to see that the mother is not overworked. Many deplorable conditions that assail the young arise from the fact that many mothers are too hard worked to do their best in their most important mission, the care of their children.

If you want the fruit perfect, you must take care not only of the bud, but also of the tree. In the best interests of the children, mothers must have opportunity to be at their best.

In cases where the father alone can not surround his wife with the favorable conditions she and the children need, the responsibility is shared by others. Here the church, the state, the nation have duties to perform. These can not afford to permit life, in its initial stages, to be dwarfed or blighted by leaving mothers and children under conditions unfavorable to proper development.

WHAT A LITTLE PLAY TIME DID

The Golden Now tells a story of a mother whose work was driving her on one of the hurried days that come into the homes of us all. This mother was tired and consequently irritable, and when she entered the living room and found the children quarreling and their playthings scattered about in confusion, she involuntarily commanded them, "Stop this minute, and put the playthings in the box!"

As they began to obey, still crying, a better thought came to her and she said, "Wait a moment, children. Let us all lie down and rest. Come, and mother will play with you a little."

For half an hour she lay upon the couch with the little ones cuddled close. They sang little songs, said childish rhymes, told little stories, laughed and had a good time. Then they all rose from the couch, the children gathered up the scattered toys and the mother went back to her work.

It paid to rest a little and play with the children.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS OF GOD

In one of our modern revelations of the will of God, we are admonished to teach our children at an early age to pray.

Have you ever heard children warned that, if they were not good God would punish them? Have you heard the Lord represented as a stern, strict judge who will surely mete out punishment to evildoers?

The first conception of God that should be instilled into a child's mind is that of goodness and love. It is God's love for us, his kindness to us that lead us to love him. Instead of trying to frighten children into obedience to God, we should lead them to love to do what our kind heavenly Father directs us to do.

We should talk to them of the goodness of the Lord to us. We should point out to them the manifestations of his loving care over us and of his great power. If we are genuinely devout in our hearts, it will be manifest to the children, and our faith will beget faith in their hearts. There may be exceptions to this, but it is the general rule that children are affected by the example of their parents.

If we would have our children pray and walk uprightly before the Lord, they should witness devotion and uprightness in us in their impressionable years, and that which they witness should be of the genuine sort and not in form only.

HASTY JUDGMENT

In common with us older people, children are often the victims of hasty judgment. They are often regarded as untruthful when the fault is not in their intentions but in their inaccurate information or power of expression.

The story is told of a little girl of four years who was at a Sunday school picnic and was enjoying the treat of an automobile ride. The gentleman who was giving the children the treat asked her if she had such a ride before, and the child answered that she had not but that she had had a ride in a balloon.

Being sure that she had never had the latter experience, the gentleman reproved her, but the little girl insisted that she had ridden in a balloon. Afterwards, when her grandmother, with whom she lived, heard what the child had said, she added her reproof for what seemed to be an intentional untruth. Finally, when the child described the circumstances attendant upon her balloon ride, it proved that she meant a ride in an elevator.

We should not be hasty in condemning little children. A calm investigation of their stories often will reveal a misunderstanding either on their part or on our own.

What to Feed the Baby

A short time since, in a little circle of the child welfare department, a young mother inquired anxiously, "Will you tell me what is the right food for a baby like that?" and she pointed to a toddler running about the room.

Walter Peet, M. D. in the Mother's Magazine for April has an article in which he gives advice on this subject. From it we glean a few suggestions concerning the food of children of the age indicated above.

Prefacing his directions, this professional man asserts that there are more children in the United States who are undernourished as the result of ignorance than there are as a result of poverty. He says the average parent has one idea with regard to the feeding of their children, and that is that they should have enough to eat. They do not sufficiently consider whether the food is of the right kind to be nourishing and whether it be given at the right times.

Doctor Peet says milk should constitute an important part of the child's diet up to tenth year, that there are few children who can not take and digest milk. He says: "No food which we have has so high a nutritive value as milk, and it is easily digested and assimilated. Great care should be taken to have it clear and fresh. The mistake is often made of supplying children milk that is too rich. It is a decided error to get for any children the rich milk of a Jersey herd and give it as though it were of ordinary quality. For children who have difficulty in digesting milk, it should be diluted with one part of water to four parts of milk. The average normal child should have from one and one half pints to one quart of milk per day, but the allowance should not go above this.

About the tenth month the glands which supply substances that digest farinaceous foods become active. At this time, without delay, farinaceous food should be added to the milk. At this juncture, bottle-fed children are often actually starved even though they have plenty of milk, because the milk does not contain all the elements needed in the child's system.

Oatmeal is rich in the constituents needed at this time. It is a body builder and promotes growth, but the woody fiber in it is indigestible in the system of a young child, and the meal should therefore be cooked carefully and be strained before being given to the child. Strained, it is one of the best foods known. A tablespoonful of oatmeal jelly should be added to every second bottle of milk at first, then to every bottle, and later it should be increased to two ounces to every bottle.

"Mothers should not begin with farinaceous foods in summer, as they may cause fermentation and diarrhoea. Milk, supplemented by cereal gruels, should be the child's food until the end of the first year. At the commencement of the second year, begin to give the child soft-boiled egg mixed with crumbs of stale bread. Begin with a small part of one egg twice a week, gradually increasing until you give the entire soft boiled egg at a feeding. Later, give this three times a week.

"As soon as the child has teeth enough, give it a dry crust of stale bread to chew on, being careful, however, to see that it does not choke. Stale bread is very digestible, and the chewing develops the mouth and jawbone. Also give stale bread broken in milk as a variety. Bread is one of the most nutritious foods. Three fifths of it consists of solid nutrient.

"At the end of fifteen months, you should be giving the child pure milk, oatmeal, soft-boiled egg three times a week, a crust of stale bread twice a day and a little bread and milk. You should give little or no sugar, which, although a most valuable food, interferes with digestion and causes constipation at this period of the child's life. You may now begin to give fruit, in the form of orange juice and pulp of prunes, an hour before a meal. They may even be given in infancy, if there is much tendency to constipation.

"No raw vegetables or salads should be given to young children. All cereals should be most thoroughly cooked in order that they may be easily digested. Oatmeal is the best, but rice, hominy and wheat grits are good, as are preparations of corn starch, arrowroot, barley flour, etc. They should be cooked and served with a liberal supply of salt and milk.

"Fresh bread, hot bread and rolls, griddle cakes and fresh sweet cakes should be withheld from children under seven."

Prayer Union

SUBJECT FOR THE SECOND THURSDAY IN JUNE

Parents' Day.—Prayer for our families and for the families of each other; for the conversion of kindred; and that we all may have a greater growth in spirituality, and a greater sense of our responsibility, that the homes of Saints may be model Christian homes.

Lesson, Galatians 4: 1-7; memory verse, Galatians 3: 26.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

In our last issue, the subject for the first Thursday in June was not given. The omission was caused by the illness of Sister Kearney who contributes them to the column. We should remember this faithful sister who so interestedly supplies these subjects and readings. May her efforts be productive of great good.

Sister Nellie W. Hardy writes from Rockland, Maine, requesting prayers. She expected to undergo an operation for cancer, in the first stages. She desires to be spared for the sake of her family. She should be remembered.

Letter Department

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, April 27, 1914.

Editors Herald: Last conference year I labored six months or more in Kansas and Colorado. Most of that time I was associated with our congenial Brother S. Twombly. We got along fine, and had some splendid meetings. I wish that we could work together again this year.

There is a fine family near Penoka, Lincoln County, Kansas, by the name of Adfield, who are ready to obey, at least Mrs. Adfield is; she so wrote me. That place should be looked after.

In February I held a series of meetings in the Third Saint Joseph Branch, running over three Sundays. There was a fine attendance, with good interest. The last few days I was there I took a severe cold. A fever developed. My pulse was very weak, temperature 104. If it had not been for the splendid care given me by that good mother, Sister A. A. Richardson, and family, and the mercy of God, it is doubtful whether I would be here now. I wish to remember my old friend Doctor Herbert, who is a fine man. He visited me three or four times without being called, charging me nothing. He did all he could for my benefit.

After our splendid General Conference closed the Fourth Kansas City Branch requested me to hold a series of meetings in their church. I am still here; have fine attendance and splendid attention. Will continue over three Sundays. It seems that they intend to keep me in Kansas City this summer, for three other branches want me to hold meetings when I close here. I have promised to visit the Des Moines and Eastern Iowa districts this summer, and will do so as soon as I can.

May God bless all his people and speed the day when troubles will be ended, and trials be no more.

In bonds

J. S. ROTH.

WEATHERBY, MISSOURI, home address.

UTE, IOWA, April 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: It will soon be four years since any of us here have had the sacrament. We wish that some missionary might come with a tent and hold meetings. We are few in number, some of us weak in faith, all of us poor in this world's goods, yet if an elder could come we would do our best to make him comfortable while with us and would bear his expenses. If a tent meeting could not be arranged, we would try to secure a building. I believe if meetings were held here prejudice could be removed. I am sure it would benefit the few of us who are already in the fold, and hungering for spiritual food.

The majority of the people here are Catholics. There are some Christians, Methodists, and Baptists. There is much sin and evil here. Towns near us have saloons and many go to these places for drink, and leave their homes miserable and destitute. Poverty and sickness are on every hand.

When last I wrote my health was very poor. I am much better now, and able to do my housework and care for my children. I have put in a nice garden, which I hope to be able to tend. All praise to God for his blessings. I wish to thank the dear Saints who have held me up to the throne of grace. I feel that my improvement is in answer to the prayer of faith. One dear sister inclosed two dollars in her kind letter to me. She did not sign her name, and I have not been able to thank her. May God bless you, dear sister. Please write me again. We are in much better circumstances than when I wrote before. My husband has work.

The time is rapidly approaching when one without the mark of the beast can neither buy, sell, nor obtain work. With wars and rumors of wars, earthquakes in divers places, labor and capital in conflict, surely this must be the beginning of the time of great trouble when the wicked are to rise up against the wicked and slay each other from the face of the earth. How can the righteous escape unless they have faith in God and comply with his commandments? How can we who do not wish to take up the sword escape except we flee to Zion for safety? And how are the poor to flee to Zion if there is no place in Zion for them? We must have work to support our families. None of us wish to be supported without work.

The call will not go out for the Saints to gather to Zion until all is made ready. Let us put on the whole armor of God and move forward in the good work, each one doing his part. God will then add his blessing and Zion will become Zion indeed.

Yours in the cause we all love,

MRS. SADIE BURCH.

CULBERTSON, MONTANA.

Editors Herald: I am one of the weak ones. I love this great latter-day work, and I want to do all I can to advance it. I have not made the progress I should. I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may overcome the things that hinder me from doing the will of my heavenly Father. My prayer is for the onward march of this great work.

JOHN I. WARD.

EVANSVILLE, INDIANA, May 4, 1914.

Editors Herald: All our lives we have been among the isolated Saints, so now, since we have sold our home at Tell City, Indiana, our great desire is to move where we can have regular church privileges. We would like to correspond with Saints at different points in Missouri as to prices of land, taxes, etc. Would also be glad to hear from Saints in the South. Thanking all in advance who do me the favor of writing, I am,
Your sister in Christ,
211 East Delaware Street. MARY E. ROWLEY.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, May 5, 1914.

Editors Herald: Our branch, the Second San Antonio Branch, is still alive. We have Sunday school at 10 a. m., preaching at 11, prayer and testimony service at 3 p. m., and preaching at 8, prayer service Wednesday at 8 p. m., sacrament, prayer and testimony service the first Sunday of each month. We hold our Religio on Friday at 8 p. m.

None of the missionaries have visited us since the last General Conference. Our district president, Brother Glaud R. Kuykendall, was sent away from us to Eastern Texas. Our vice president and Bishop's agent, Brother D. S. Palmer, was sent to Texas.

I notice in the HERALD of April 29, 1914, a report of a debate held March 2 to 13 at Sparta, Michigan, between Brother J. F. Curtis and Elder William Ellmore of the nonprogressive wing of the Church of Christ. The report says Mr. Ellmore tried hard to show that there was no total apostasy by dwelling on "Let the wheat and the tares grow together till the harvest." (Matthew 13:30.) Now I think it would not have been a difficult matter for Brother Curtis to have shown that the wheat and the tares were not to grow together in the church, but that they were to grow together in the kingdom of God after it was set up and until the harvest.

MILLET, ALBERTA, May 5, 1914.

Editors Herald: In this part of God's vineyard, Western Canada, there has been some grand work accomplished for the Master.

It has occurred to me that a club might be started or organized so that our people could get in touch one with the other, that those who desire to do so might correspond with each other. This can be done it seems to me through our church papers. Such correspondence would be a comfort and a help to many, especially to Sunday school and Religio workers, as they could express their troubles and joys in a private letter better than in any letter to be read by all. I know of many who have passed pleasant hours reading and writing letters from and to others whom they may never meet in this life. In this way Saints sometimes become acquainted with those living in the same city or within a few miles, whom otherwise they would not have known.

Since obeying the gospel I have had much to be thankful for. Although many times I have not lived as close as I should to Christ, yet I have been blessed. There is nothing that will give the joy and pleasure or cause the world to respect one in the same way as when one obeys and lives up to God's law as preached in latter days. I have found nothing in other churches which would give this comfort and bring this respect. I was reared in other churches, having spoken many times in the Methodist pulpit, and having attended and taken an active part in other churches and other church work.

Seeing much to cause me to doubt, I suppose that the doctrine of the Saints also was of like character. I found myself in Winnipeg without money and in poor health. I went to the immigration office to inquire for work and was told that unless I went out ninety miles they had nothing to offer me. I pawned my watch and went where directed, in which place I met Latter Day Saints. I fought against the truth for two years, even so much so that the man I worked with considered me headstrong and stubborn. But God, who led me to this place, led me to obey in due time. Since then I have seen the Winnipeg Branch grow, and the Edmunton Branch spring up in two years' time where formerly only a few members were living. This was made possible because the Saints pressed onward and upward.

I have been helped many times in hours of temptation by God's great mercy and the prayers of the Saints. We all need comfort and the prayers of each other. Let us work together and press onward to help build up God's kingdom.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

GEORGE W. WINN.

CLAY LANE, CLAY CROSS, DERBYSHIRE, ENGLAND,

May 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the letters of the many brethren and sisters in different parts of the world. The different experiences of the Saints in this great and marvelous work are encouraging. How thankful we should be that we live in the day and age when the gospel is again upon earth with all its privileges. When living up to its light we know we can offer up our prayers to our father, who is willing to listen to the pleadings of his children.

The work is alive in this part, although it seems to be moving slowly. We have just added eight to our number, six of our Sunday-school scholars and two adults, who will make fine people if they live up to the gospel privileges. When we look at the world and see how they are seeking after the pleasures of this life, picture shows, theaters, the dance and other amusements, we appreciate the work of the Lord the more.

We will soon be out upon the streets preaching the gospel. In this country we have better privileges in this matter than some do in other countries. We can go on the streets without being ordered away by the authorities. We have a good Sunday school and have started a meeting on Monday nights for the young. We call this movement the Sunshine Band. We enjoy pleasant occasions together. Last Monday night several papers were read, written by different scholars, which were good, one being written by a nonmember of the church. This person attends regularly and I think will soon join the church.

If D. Edmunds of Bevier, Missouri, reads this, would he kindly write me.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

H. HOLMES.

GLOUCESTER, ENGLAND, May 7, 1914.

Editors Herald: It is with the greatest pleasure that I give an account of how I became acquainted with the church. At Gloucester last January I met an atheist. I went to his meetings. Some of his sayings seemed true, but I could not reconcile myself to the thought of there being no God. I became uneasy, but I went again, and while there I was spoken to by Brother Meadows, who bore testimony of the love of God to him. Like many others, however, I thought the age of miracles was past, but thank God it is not so. A friend accompanied me. I said to him, Lets give the whole thing up [religion]. "No," said he, "let's go on our way."

Brother Meadows knew my friend and asked him to one of the meetings. He went. On Monday he told me what it was like. He said, "There is a God after all, and the Saints claim to have the gifts of the gospel like the Saints had when Christ was on earth." I thought this too good to be true. My friend said the Saints were nice people, and for me to come and see for myself. So I went, and went again. I prayed to God as Brother Trapp asked me to do. This brother said that God would give me the assurance that this was his church. Time went on, and for about a month I tended each meeting. Finally the desire to be baptized became so great that I told Brother E. J. Trapp I was ready. I was baptized at Cheltenham, Gloucester, by Elder Thomas Jones, and was confirmed by Elders Thomas Jones and E. J. Trapp. I was told by the Spirit through Elder Jones that if I were faithful I should speak in tongues and prophesy.

Before coming into the church I had always been in ill health. I was told that if I would serve God faithfully he would bless me. It is now four months since I became a member, and I can honestly say that I have not enjoyed such good health before. It may be of interest to some to know that I was reared in the Catholic Church.

Yours for truth,
WILLIAM MARK STOKES.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, May 9, 1914.

Editors Herald: I enjoy and appreciate the many letters, articles, and editorials of the HERALD, which have brought to me both sorrow and joy in the Spirit of God. I sorrow with those who sorrow and rejoice with those who rejoice. My heart goes out to those who are afflicted and suffer, and I pray that the day may be hastened when there will be no more sorrow or sickness.

We continue fighting for the Master in this part of the vineyard. We endeavor to keep in the straight and narrow way. Satan is ever alert, so it behooves us to watch as well as pray. I am trying to keep my light burning and to refrain from anything that would harm the work of God, which I prize more than all else in this world. The time seems to be at hand when as people of the Most High we must flee to Zion or take up the sword against our neighbor. May God help us day by day to remain free from the evils of this world.

I thank all for the good I have received from their efforts in the HERALD, and pray that God may bless all my brothers and sisters.

Your brother in Christ,
W. G. ELLIOT.

LAPPEARL, ALBERTA, May 10, 1914.

Editors Herald: I consider the HERALD the best religious paper I have ever seen. I agree with the Editorial policy of the HERALD. According to my understanding there is positively no hope outside of the church of an economic system that will be for the building up of God's people. False creeds and appeals to the selfishness of humanity will not in any way bring equality, because equality can only come when humanity throws away selfishness and learns to love each man his brother as himself.

I read not long ago in a book of sermons issued by the Gospel Trumpet Company a statement by one of their ministers to the effect that there were thousands of people in hell who would if now on earth jump over the benches and get saved immediately. Their idea of hell seems to be that it is a place of fire, where men die not but live on in torment so that God can avenge himself on their persons for evermore. They also teach that a person may enter heaven no matter what he has done if he has only one minute in which to repent.

One of their members told me of a certain man who had been murdered, whom he thought probably went to hell. The murderer had time left to repent, and, consequently, according to this man's idea, is worthy of the same reward as those who have lived uprightly all their lives. Such a creed I consider to stand in the way of character building. In the first place the idea of hell-fire drives out love both for God and mankind, while the doctrine of deathbed repentance gives the individual license to commit any crimes in the catalog, and when death stares him in the face he tries to be sorry for his sins and consequently expects to escape that imaginary awful place he believes to be hell.

If people were taught that they must answer for their sins they would be more inclined to walk uprightly. Jesus in speaking of forms of religion said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." I know that many who believe in hell-fire and deathbed repentance do not grow in godliness. There is a work for all before the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. This work must start in the church and under God's jurisdiction. The gospel of Jesus Christ appears to me as the most reasonable thing and the only safeguard. It builds character in those who follow its precepts and are willing to be led by the Spirit.

I can truthfully say that I have enjoyed the Spirit during the last two or three years more than ever before. Although I have met with some trials and severe disappointments, yet I am still trusting the heavenly Father to lead me ever on in this great latter-day work. I am isolated from church privileges this summer. The HERALD is ever with me, and is always read. This church has been the means of making me what I am, although there is room for much growth.

I expect to attend our conference this summer. Some of the Saints in the branches about here seem to be alive to the work, while others seem spiritually dead, some of whom do harm to the cause.

I love this gospel whether I can attend church or not. I hope in the future to be where I can meet with the Saints every Sunday if at all possible. I love the people of God. I hope that the church may grow stronger year by year, and that it shall fulfill its entire mission.

Wishing the HERALD and its editors every success, as I wish for all the Saints,

Your brother in Christ,
J. E. DORSETT.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA.

Editors Herald: I am a new member of the church, having not heard the teachings of the Saints until last February. Brother Aylor came to our little town bringing to us the glad tidings of great joy. After remaining a short time he sent for Brother Yates, and through his preaching I received the light and was not disobedient to the voice of God but accepted the true gospel. I thank and praise God for the true church for which my soul had longed. I had been a member of several churches and had become disgusted and did not fellowship with any, knowing they were not keeping the commandments of our blessed Lord.

I wandered in the wilderness forty odd years. My only sorrow is that I did not find the true way earlier. I trusted God in all things and had trusted him for twenty years in the hope that he would heal my body. When there was sickness in my family we could not call for the elders for we did not know of any, but I many times sought the Lord, remembering the words in Mark 16, "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

In obeying the precious gospel I have found the blessed church, as fair as the sun, as clear as the moon, as strong as an army with banners. I feel the responsibility resting on the Saints. I desire to walk uprightly and build permanently in love, as Christ also has labored and given his life for us. When I remember that our lives are to be hid with Christ in God, rooted and grounded in the love of the Father, that we may there abide and comprehend the breadth and depth and height of the love of God, bearing in our bodies the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Christ might be made manifest in us, my heart burns within me in the hope of the beautiful gospel of latter days. We are called upon to walk worthy of the vocation whereunto we are called, with all lowliness, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing each other in love, and endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace.

For many years my heart has gone out for the welfare of God's children. I have realized that the time had come when men would not endure sound doctrine, and that also because of iniquity the love of many had waxed cold. Let us pray as never before, for the coming of the Savior is nigh and eternity is looming in sight. I hail the day of the blessed Mediator, and long to quit the walks of men to enjoy the presence of our Savior. Let us add to our faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity: for if these things be in us and abound they make us that we are neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; but if we lack these we are blind and have forgotten that we were purged from our former sins.

I wish to thank the dear ones who brought the light of the gospel to me. We esteem them highly for their work's sake. I wish to bring my tithes to the storehouse that the Lord may fulfill his promise to pour out a blessing. I ask the Saints to pray for my family that they may obey the gospel. I am alone in the faith.

While the missionaries' wives find it hard to give their husbands up to the work of the ministry, they should rejoice that their husbands are willing to go, and that they are permitted to make such a sacrifice for Jesus. If their husbands were not in the kingdom it would be much harder.

Let us live our profession and be partakers of the fruit of the Spirit so that we may bear it to others. May the Lord bless his children, is my prayer.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. S. M. BLACK.

Extracts from Letters

H. J. Davison, 40 Central Road, Somerville, Massachusetts: "I have been assigned to local work, and will probably be in this place for the ensuing year should health permit. Kind regards to the Staff."

Orman Beverage, Vinal Haven, Maine: "Many are apt to judge from outside appearances. Jesus said (John 7:24), 'Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment.' If we were more careful to study each other's failings, and would try by kindness to help overcome them, it would be much better for all. If we walk in the footsteps of the Savior, we are in a better position to judge righteously. Oh, how I long to see the time when we shall all be united as one. We need always to pray for one another, as there is strength in unity."

Society Islands

Our mission conference is over. About seven hundred and fifty people, from various islands, gathered on Kaukura Island to take part in this conference and the auxiliary convention; some to gain money by selling goods, baking bread, etc., etc. One Frenchman had a moving picture outfit, which venture failed, and he went home about $200 poorer, though a much wiser man. With the visitors and the people of the island, we had a total of ten hundred and fifty-seven people here.

The Sunday school and Religio conventions were held April 1 and 2, with a review of both on the 3d. The French Administrator visited us April 3, and was formally received in our large assembly hall by the whole population.

A new church, twenty-four by sixty feet, was dedicated on Saturday, the 4th, at 8 a. m. This ceremony was begun by hoisting a French flag to the top of a tall mast which had been planted for the occasion. The flag was saluted by eight guns, while a native anthem was sung. This was followed by prayer, then a hymn, and then the native chief of the island turned the key in the door and the writer opened the door; the people followed in and the ceremony of dedicating the church was conducted in the usual manner. Brother May preached.

Having received a suggestion from the administrator of the Tuamotus to the effect that insomuch as this country is infested with many contagious diseases, and insomuch as our common cup in the sacrament is talked about in official circles here, as a vehicle of disease, that it would be better for us to do away with the common cup ourselves than to wait for the law, since it surely will be forbidden if we do not stop it ourselves. We called a mass meeting of the priesthood on Saturday afternoon, April 4, and explained this matter to the brethren, and asked if they were willing to accept the suggestion from the administrator. The brethren agreed that it did not make any difference which way the sacrament was served just so the priest gave it to each member; so it was agreed that we try a new way on the morrow, the above suggestion having been received by a unanimous vote of the priesthood.

These brethren requested all of the members of the church who wished to partake of the sacrament on the following day to bring his or her own cup, bowl or glass. The cocoanut water, which is used here in place of wine, was put on the table in pitchers and bottles, and when it had been blessed the elders in charge poured out the portion for each priest acting. The priests in turn received the pitchers from the hands of the elders and poured from the same into the cups of the elders in charge, and served the congregation likewise. The sacrament was received by all with apparent satisfaction. Many expressed their pleasure, and not one complained. It was agreed by the priesthood meeting, that if all went well and satisfactory, they would go home and use the individual cup in the sacrament meeting in their own islands. We are pleased, and satisfied that this plan is better for the people here and everywhere else. May the light come more abundantly and make us one indeed, even as these were blessed in that sacrament meeting.

The mission was in conference from Monday, the 6th, till Thursday, the 9th, holding two sessions per day without meetings in between. We had a prayer meeting of one half hour duration each morning. We had about the best representation this year that we have had in conference in this mission for years. While some subjects were discussed longer than necessary, it may well be said there was no harm done, and much good. The spirit of unity prevailed all through.

We have reports from sixteen branches; two did not report. Reports by the native brethren are more or less guesswork, and we are unable to get anything like an accurate report of what has been done. We know there were two hundred and twenty-five people baptized this year in this mission. Seventy of these are people who were expelled from the church because of certain troubles which arose in 1905 and 1906. That leaves us about one hundred and fifty new members. There are eighty-two elders in this mission. Have thus far failed to learn how many members there are.

It was decided in conference that we build a new church in Papeete, Tahiti, this year; also an assembly hall to accommodate large congregations. The church will be thirty by forty feet and the assembly hall will be about sixty-six by sixty-six feet, octagonal, built on the back of the church with folding doors between so that both buildings may be turned into one to accommodate more people. Brother J. C. May, the writer, Tetaku and Pori were elected as a building committee. All the branches in the mission are expected to help build these buildings, as this is the headquarters of the mission, and we have very few people in this branch, but many visitors from the other islands coming and going all the time.

We have $700 cash on hand, so the foundation will be laid as soon as possible, and if operations come up to calculations we hope to be able to finish the work in a year. A committee was appointed to invite Brother F. M. Smith to come and dedicate the new chapel next June if it is finished at that time.

A letter from Sister Lake was read, requesting the conference to remove the body of Brother Charles H. Lake from Amanu to Tahiti. Some little discussion followed. A motion to leave the body of Brother Lake where it is till the Lord shall come and raise it up was carried by ninety-four to eleven. The native brethren have great respect for the name of Brother Lake, but they seem to think it is not just right to open a grave and move a body.

It was resolved, That the conference sessions, quorum meetings, etc., shall be listed and posted in the assembly building for the information of all concerned.

Bishop's agent Tetaku reported total receipts for the year, $996.35; total expenditures, $519.80; balance on hand, $476.55, includes a part of the Tarona chapel fund, etc. This is French money, valued at ninety-six per cent of the value of American money.

There were eighteen bishop's agents, and twenty-three missionaries sent out from this conference. The committee on ways and means for the district reported the consumption of thirty-one barrels of flour, thirteen hundred and thirty-four pounds of sugar, and sixty-six hogs, which food was distributed among the branches.

The little French gunboat Zelee arrived at Kaukura, April 6, with a government inspector reviewing the Tuamotus. The commander of the Zelee, the administrator of the Tuamotus and the inspector came up by request of the brethren and met the congregation. The regular order of business was dispensed with to allow speeches of formal greetings to be exchanged with the French officials. The inspector complimented the church very highly for forbidding the use of intoxicating liquors, commenting on the absence of indications of drunkenness among our people.

Altogether we had a very nice conference gathering. And we are glad that the French officials have had an opportunity to see for themselves that we try to make good citizens and to keep the people sober and clean.

Respectfully submitted,

H. W. SAVAGE.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

The attendance at Sunday school on May 10 was nine hundred and thirty-nine, with ninety visitors and one hundred and six teachers. The afternoon prayer meeting was full of inspiring and profitable service rendered by many. Sister Leobold gave a very interesting testimony of her great joy experienced in leaving the dogmas of the Catholic Church and creeds of men for the work of God. Brother Winegar, a young, to be often called upon to supply public speakers at the hands of J. F. Curtis and J. W. Rushton.

A rabbi of the Baptist persuasion, who is investigating the true doctrine of Christ as taught by us, addressed the Sunday school on May 17. He is a Russian Jew, and of a teachable, progressive spirit. In the evening the Saints had the pleasure of listening to a most instructive and comprehensive sermon on "The kingdom of God," by our young missionary, Alvah Christensen. He bids the Saints farewell, soon to start for his new field of labor in the Society Islands. May God be with him "till we meet again."

It seems to be the happy lot of our people, both old and young, to be often called upon to supply public speakers as well as singers. So at the local option meeting recently, quite a few of the brethren were in evidence on our side of the liquor question. To mention some of the visiting orators to the center place, we had the pleasure of hearing yesterday one of the eloquent delegates to the general assembly of the Presbyterians, Doctor Douglass, of South Carolina. The Chautauqua will be here later on, so one may see that we here are a very literary class, and we generally catch everything of the progressive sort that is going on, possibly brought about by such efficient and faithful boosters as our Brother James L. Gray and Brethren Garrett, Harrington, et al. There certainly are many attractions held out to the Saints. Besides those mentioned, the church here contemplates engaging in every forward step possible toward the betterment of both old and young.

We already have six mission churches within four miles of Independence, together with excellent ministerial service from several of the local brethren.

Dear Saints, remember us in your prayers, ye who have been baptized "as in days of old, into one Shepherd, and one fold."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Chicago (Central) Illinois

It is with great pleasure that the writer announces spiritual interest and progress in this branch. We are glad our Brother David E. Dowker is here to continue his labor in this field. We feel that he has done a great work among the Saints here, and that his influence is for good. We aim to support our brother in his undertakings, as they are all for our best good and to our interest.

Sunday, May 24, we were favored by the presence of Brother F. G. Pitt and companion, Brother Pitt being the speaker at the morning service. The sermon was directed by the Spirit. Brother D. E. Dowker occupied the pulpit in the evening.

We are sorry to state that Brother Philemon Pement has been hindered from taking up the work in the mission appointed him, Quebec, by an accident which happened on Wednesday, May 20, in which he sustained a broken limb. Under the administration of the elders our brother has been wonderfully blessed. We ask that the Saints remember him in their prayers, that the Lord will continue to bless him.

6309 South Honore Street.

Conference Minutes

SOUTHERN INDIANA.—Met May 16 and 17, Louisville, Kentucky, J. W. Metcalf and Charles H. Fish presiding. Branches reported net gain of 16. Next conference was ordered to meet at Wirt, Indiana, at 10 a. m., October 17, and reunion at Derby, Indiana, some time in August, time and date left to district president, secretary, and missionary in charge, same officers being authorized to appoint a committee on arrangements from Derby Branch. Officers elected: President, Fred A. Rowe; vice president, Charles H. Fish; secretary, Edwin Perry. Address Brother Rowes at 315 North Thirty-second Street, Louisville, Kentucky, until further notice. The presence of the Spirit was very evident in all the prayers and testimonies of those participating in the sacramental service. Edwin Perry.

Pastoral

To the Saints and Friends of Arkansas and Louisiana; Greeting: As the appointing powers have seen fit to again appoint me to this field, and as I have also been appointed assistant minister in charge of Arkansas and Louisiana, I take this method of reaching those who have an interest in the spread of the gospel. I would be glad to hear from you. If you want any preaching in your part of the field, just drop us a few lines and we will do all we can to reach you as soon as possible.

Brethren John Harp, E. A. Erwin, J. W. Dubose and the writer are the only ones appointed to these two large States, so we have a large field. Therefore, we need all the help we can get. The local ministry throughout the field are specially invited to give us all the help they can in the way of preaching. Let those who hold the priesthood magnify their calling, that all may be workers together with God in carrying out the great work of building up his church and spreading the angel's message.

The Master has said he gave some apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors, some teachers, some deacons, etc., for the work of the ministry, and for the perfecting of the Saints. All are called to labor, not called to sit down and wait for the other fellow to do the work. If some one else does our work he will get the crown. We should remember that the Lord has said, See that no man take thy crown (Revelation 3:11). So let us all be up and doing, that we may be worthy of the crown when the crowning day shall come. I trust that we may all labor to make this the most successful year that this part of the great field has ever had.

Let me say further that I am acting as bishop's agent, under the appointment of Bishop Ellis Short. I would be glad to receipt you for any amount of tithing, consecration or free-will offering that you may want to give for the aid of the church and the spread of the gospel. Now who will be the first to call for a receipt?

May the Spirit of the Master be with you all.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

PITTSBURG, KANSAS, 109 West Adams. J. T. RILEY.

Being requested by minister in charge J. F. Curtis to act as his assistant in charge of Southern Wisconsin, we would like to hear from you wherever there is a need and demand for services and help of the missionary force. Would be especially glad to hear from the isolated Saints and friends so as to be able to open up the work in new places and to spread the good news of the angel's message as we may have opportunity.

The appointing powers have allotted us four missionaries, Elders F. M. Cooper, J. W. McNight, A. E. Gratz, and the writer who will be glad to meet the calls for labor so far as possible, with the help of the Master.

We want to hear from you any time in regard to your needs and the opportunities in your locality.

PLANO, ILLINOIS, Box 400. LESTER O. WILDERMUTH.

To the Saints of the Virginia and West Virginia Districts: Having been appointed assistant minister in charge of your districts, I take this means of getting in touch with you. As God has said, we are colaborers with him, so let us all work together for the Master.

If any know of places to hold meetings write me at Clarksburg, West Virginia, 404 Stealey Avenue, then you will have done your part. We will try and furnish the preaching, which will be our part. We may leave the rest with God, and feel assured that he will do his part. Let us not be slothful in business, especially God's business.

Yours for the building up the kingdom of God,
LEON BURDICK.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission; Greeting: My colaborers of the general ministry will labor this year in the following districts and States:

Robert Newby and A. R. Ritter in Eastern Montana; A. J. Moore and G. W. Thorburn in Western Montana; J. A. Bronson in Spokane District; S. H. Gray in the city of Spokane; G. W. Winegar in Western Idaho; J. T. Davis in Central Idaho; T. C. Kelley in Eastern Idaho; A. V. Closson and B. L. McKim in Northern Utah and that part of Idaho belonging to the Utah District; W. H. Kelley in Central Utah, south of Salt Lake County; J. M. Stubbart and A. J. Layland in Wyoming; J. D. Curtis and A. T. Higdon in Western Colorado; J. R. Sutton, F. A. Russell and J. F. Petre in Eastern Colorado; J. B. Barrett in Denver and vicinity for the present.

Please remember, brethren, that the quarterly reports are due July 1, October 1, January 1, and the annual report March 1. It would be well for each to secure blanks at once from the Herald Office. My home address is 1420 West Walnut, Independence, Missouri; field address, 336 South Fourth East Street, Salt Lake City, Utah. I hope soon to be in the field, and the quarterly reports may be sent to my field address.

We shall be glad to have the cooperation of the local ministry in services, making new openings, etc. Let us labor together in the Spirit of the Lord, and for the sole purpose of building up his kingdom.

I feel sure that the Saints of this mission will give the efforts of the ministry their moral and financial support, as they have done in the past, and remember the financial side of our work by contributing to the general fund of the church, according as the Lord may bless them.

I shall be glad to hear from any of the Saints as to the opportunities for labor in your localities and shall do my best to supply the needs, hoping for a successful year in the Master's service, I am your fellow worker,

PETER ANDERSON.

Addresses

G. R. Wells, 1206 South Twelfth Street, Burlington, Iowa.

Free Quarterlies to Missionaries

The Senior Religio Quarterly will be sent free to all General Conference appointees and general church officers who desire it sufficiently to make request of President J. A. Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa, giving field address or permanent post office. Request must be renewed each conference year. J. A. Gunsolley, president of Zion's Religio-Literary Society.

Correcting Pastoral

Through oversight no reference was made in my pastoral to the assignment of Elder H. J. Davison to the Eastern Mission. The Boston Branch recently selected him for its president, which action meets with my approval.

PAUL M. HANSON, Minister in Charge.

Died

TOTLY.—James C. Totly was born February 27, 1846, in Hickman County, Tennessee, died at Los Angeles, California, May 5, 1914. Funeral at the home of his daughters, sermon by W. A. McDowell, assisted by V. M. Goodrich.

WILSON.—Elder Henry Wilson, for years partially paralyzed, died at Heavitree, Exeter, England, April 26, 1914. His home was at the disposal of all. He was ordained soon after joining the church, and practically held the position of branch president till a few months since. For years he walked by the aid of two sticks, and on occasions of baptisms has walked several miles to witness increase in Christ's flock, often the result of his own labor. His life was upright. The gospel was his beloved topic. His memory is cherished. He was of bright and cheerful disposition. His death is keenly felt by his widow and children.

SUTHERLAND.—Charles W. Sutherland was born September 22, 1869, at Galesburg, Missouri; baptized by Morris T. Short, May 11, 1879. Deceased was well known and respected for his interest in church work, particularly among children and young. With his brother he organized the first Sunday school of the church in Webb City. During the last few years he was very ill; his once bright mind became deranged. When release came, May 20, the angel of death was the bright messenger who led the captive soul out of darkness and bondage into the light of liberty. Service conducted by J. W. Rushton, whose remarks were listened to by a very large gathering of mourners and sympathizers.

MATHEWSON.—At the hospital for the insane at Anoka, Minnesota, May 16, 1914, Sister Mary Eliza Mathewson, aged 53 years, 7 months, 8 days, immediate cause of death being pernicious anemia. Deceased was born at Stillwater, Minnesota. When about fifteen she came with her parents to Cormorant, Minnesota, where, December, 1881, she married Lloyd Mathewson. To this union were born six children, four boys, two girls; all living. Funeral services at Cormorant, attended by many relatives and friends. Sermon by Penn Martin. Sister Mathewson has been mentally deranged for many years, and death came as a sweet relief. Loving memories of former days touched all hearts, and tears filled nearly every eye.

MCGOWAN.—Menervey McGowan was born November 18, 1834, died at Fanshaw, Oklahoma, May 4, 1914. She was baptized October, 1904, by J. D. Erwin, from which time she lived a good and noble Christian life. Services by E. A. Erwin, assisted by J. M. Smith.

Book Reviews

The McMillan Company, New York, offers a new work in United States history, by John Spencer Bassett, Ph. D., professor of American History, Smith College, with maps, 8 vo., $2.50. While Mr. Bassett has given a prominent place to political institutions, regarding them as "the most conscious expression of the national will and determining the form of the story," he has laid the chief emphasis in his narrative (following McMaster in this respect) upon the habits and social progress of the people, thus imparting to it the stamp of modernity and bringing it into line with those historical works which concern themselves as much with economic affairs and public interests as with battles and heroes. The volume opens with an interesting account of physical environment, which, though neglected by many writers, has largely influenced the trend of history. Climatic conditions, rivers, and harbors, minerals, forestry, and crops receive careful treatment in the opening pages. Then follows an account of the Indian—his origins, customs, intimate life, religious ideas, and culture—an illuminating chapter full of interest for the general reader. The oft-told story of the colonies, the war of the Revolution and of 1812, and the Mexican and Civil wars are described with more detail than is usual in a compendium of history. A notable and valuable feature of the volume is the bibliographical list (Continued on page 536.)

Those who wish to obtain from Socialist sources a statement of the attitude of Socialism toward marriage, motherhood, and the home, will be pleased to get in touch with this book. It is written in Spargo's usual clear and pleasing style. The frontispiece is taken from Stephen Sinding's work of art, entitled, "The captive mother."

SELECTED SHORT STORIES.—This is one of the series entitled, Merrill's English Texts, published by Charles E. Merrill Company, New York City. This particular textbook is edited by Claud M. Fuess, Ph. D., instructor in English, Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts. The aim of the book is to present specimens of the short story at its best. Especial effort has been made to include the work of English, French, and American masters of the short story in such a way as to illustrate different methods of construction and style. The selections are arranged in approximately chronological order, so that the evolution of the literary type may be traced from the time of Scott to that of Kipling. The list of authors includes Sir Walter Scott, Washington Irving, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Charles Dickens, Robert Louis Stevenson, Francois Coppee, O. Henry, James Matthew Barrie, and Rudyard Kipling.

NOTES ON THE BOOK OF GENESIS--PART III

THE COVENANTS

Saint Mark introduces his testimony with these words: "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ"; but the beginning of the revelation of the gospel of Jesus Christ is in Genesis.

The first great postulate of Genesis is that God was present in the beginning as a creative force. Lord Kelvin, as we have seen, declares that "Science positively affirms creative power." And he says further, "If you think strongly enough you will be forced by science to a belief in God, which is the foundation of all religion." Thus far science and religion are in accord.

He says further, however, that while the existence of God is recognized, he is to science an unknown quantity, and that scientists are in that regard atheists (not knowing), as they can only know him in his work.

But it is impossible to believe in God for any length of time or with any degree of sincerity and fervor without beginning to believe in him as a being concerned in the moral welfare of humanity and capable of self revelation to man. Here begins the function of religion. As another has written: "Belief in a personal God involves belief in a written revelation."

The book of Genesis opens with an affirmation of the creative power and activity of God. He is more than a mere force or principle; he is a personal God. And very shortly he is presented as a God of revelation and one who enters into covenant relations with men. The importance of that idea thus early presented in Scripture can hardly be overestimated.

He made covenant with Noah and later with Abraham. And the Inspired Version gives us the information quite explicitly that following the fall and the expulsion from the garden of Eden he revealed himself to Adam, and also entered into very intimate relationship with Enoch; Enoch and his people reaching a degree of perfection that could only be obtained under gospel economy.

This is sustained in a striking manner by a statement made by Sir Robert Anderson, K. C. B., LL. D., before the Christian Association of University College, London:

But believing, as I do—and Professor Fairbairn, of Oxford, has stated it with great definiteness—that belief in a personal God involves belief in a written revelation, it is incredible that thousands of years should have passed before the days of Abraham without God having given a revelation to his people. If criticism has led us to discover that the Book of Genesis is a divinely accredited record of earlier revelations, this, instead of impairing its authority, seems to me only to confirm that authority.—Christian Apologetics, p. 43.

God entered into covenant relationship with Abraham and chose him to be the father of the faithful, and his children to be the chosen people. This however was not an evidence of partiality or favoritism, it was the beginning of a world movement; and Abraham was not chosen to be the recipient of personal favors alone, but to be the instrument through whom others might be blessed. "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. . . . In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."

Here was laid the foundation for the final great commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." The descendants of Abraham at times became narrow, bigoted, ignorant, and intolerant, and forgot the terms of the covenant and its responsibilities; but under the flooding light of the gospel dispensation the world-wide significance of it came home to the apostles, and Peter cried:

Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. The word which God spake unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all).

On this subject we quote again from Reverend Henry Wace, Dean of Canterbury:

Is it not the most potent fact in history, that its whole course has been determined by the influence and the action of the Jewish race, culminating in the life and death of the Son of David? Is not the key to all history to be found in the opening verse of Saint Matthew's Gospel: "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the Son of David, the Son of Abraham"? Have not our Savior's life and death and resurrection, and the church which he founded, been the central influence of history? and does not the course of history at this moment depend more upon the action and the influence of the Christian nations than upon any other factor? Can we, as Christians, fail to recognize that we see before our eyes the realization of the promise preserved in this ancient record: "In thy seed shall all nations of the earth be blessed"? But if this be so, who told that ancient writer that profound historic variety? Who revealed to him beforehand the fact that this lonely patriarch was the beginning of an influence which would permeate the world, which would transform its laws and mold its civilization; that forty centuries after that time Abraham would be the very type of religious faith; that the psalms of his descendant David, and of the other sweet singers of Israel, would mold the religious life and thought of the leading races of mankind; and that his greatest descendant would be known by the name of the Savior of the world? . . .

That point is not merely that there is but one God, but that that God has definitely and distinctly entered into moral relations with men; that in the persons, first of Noah, and then of Abraham and Abraham's seed, he has established between himself and man the most sacred of all relations—the relation of a covenant. It is by covenants, and the mutual faith which they involve, that civilization is mainly characterized. It is by covenants that marriages and families and armies and states are created; and God himself entered as a living personal force into human life, when he chose out, first one man, and then one nation, and then one church, to be bound in covenant with him, to enter into mutual pledges, confirmed by definite signs—by circumcision and the passover, by baptism and the Lord's supper; so that every Jew carries the mark in his flesh of his personal relation to God, and every Christian bears on his forehead, and receives in the symbols of bread and wine a perpetual witness, not merely of his belief in one God—not merely of his devotion to his Savior—but of the personal relation in which that God stands toward him, and of his being as directly in covenant with his God and his Savior as he is with his wife or with his earthly sovereign; with the sole difference that the bond is infinitely more vital, more penetrating, more permanent, or rather, that it is eternal. There is nothing more precious in the Book of Genesis than that it reveals this system of covenants as the basis of God's dealings with mankind, and as the central influence by which he disciplines and guides them. The roots of the gospel, as Saint Paul clearly asserts, were thus laid in the history of Abraham; and the rest of the Bible, both the Old Testament and the New, is but a history of the manner in which that method has been applied, maintained, and continuously developed. God's character and God's ways began to be revealed in these patriarchal histories. They are an essential part of the whole revelation, because they are its starting point and its germ; and we can no more dispense with these narratives, if we would understand God's will and God's ways, than we can neglect the roots of a tree if we would understand its growth.—Christian Apologetics, pp. 36-39.

How significant the presentation of God as a self-revealing, covenant making, personal Deity. How splendidly did he fulfill his promise to bless the nations of the earth in the seed of Abraham. Review the long roll of prophets, poets, seers, and kings that came through this lineage; and the profound influence that the literature of his descendants has had and still has upon the history of the world and the lives of men.

Finally, greatest of all came Jesus Christ, who has ministered to and blessed all nations, of whom Isaiah wrote:

Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever.

In his remarkable book, In the Mind Maze, Edgar Lucien Larkin, Director of the Lowe Observatory, Mount Lowe, California, and member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, says:

I do not hesitate to write this: There is not a great scientist now living not aware of the existence of Mind in the sidereal universe—a Dominating Mind.

This dominating mind is God. Science detects and affirms evidences of his existence. Religion gives a revelation not only of his existence but also of his nature and his will. Such a revelation is found in the Scriptures, beginning with Genesis. A higher revelation was given in the life, character, and teachings of Jesus Christ. It is not alone sufficient to believe that he is. There is a true philosophy in this statement:

"He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Hebrews 11:6.

MORE ABOUT THE KIRTLAND BANK

Many slanderous stories have been circulated regarding the unfortunate failure of the so-called Kirtland Bank. Once in a while, however, one writes on the subject who is disposed to give the promoters due credit for honesty of intention in the conduct of this business venture. The May Numismatist, the official organ of the American Numismatic Association, Brooklyn, New York, contains a very interesting article from Waldo C. Moore, entitled, "The Kirtland bank bills." The following extracts are taken from this article:

By the articles it will be discovered that instead of being a banking company, it was named, "Kirtland Safety Society Anti-Banking Company." Under this name the business was transacted. The articles show an honest effort to benefit their temporal condition. That there were men of large means engaged in the enterprise can not be gainsaid. By reference to the sixteenth article, it will be seen that the fourteenth article was to always remain in force.<sup>1</sup>

The enterprise was launched at a time when such ventures were very risky. A spirit of speculation ran rampant throughout the land, which brought about widespread ruin, in which many well-established institutions went down; and this society could not hope to survive under so long a period of national paralysis.

<sup>1</sup>Article 14 provided that "We, the individual members of said firm, hereby hold ourselves bound for the redemption of all such notes."—HERALD EDITORS.

Those who were in the best position to know about the society's affairs have determined that these men were making an honest effort in the enterprise. . . .

When this unchartered institution failed in August, 1837, the members found themselves unable to redeem their pledges. This condition gave rise for criticism and suspicion in regard to their honesty of intention. But, unlike stockholders in numerous other companies, they later, without legal process to compel them, adjusted their business to the satisfaction of their creditors, redeeming practically the entire outstanding circulation. The following excerpts from a letter dated October 27, 1838, addressed to the public and signed by John W. Hawden of Painesville, Ohio, are copied from the Milennial Star:

"To whom it may concern: This may certify that during the year of eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, I had dealings with Messrs. Joseph Smith, jr., and Sidney Rigdon, together with other members of the society, to the amount of three thousand dollars, and during the spring of eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, I have received my pay in full of Colonel Oliver Granger, to my satisfaction. . . . And I would further state that the closing up of my business with said society has been with their agent, Colonel Granger, appointed for that purpose; and I consider it highly due Colonel Granger for me here to state that he acted truly and honestly in all his business with me, and has accomplished more than I could have reasonably expected. . . . And with good management he has accomplished and effected a close of a large amount of business for said society."

Mention of the Kirtland bills is made in Scott's Paper Money Catalogue under the title of Uncurrent Bank Bills, wherein are listed the $1, $3, $5, and $10 notes, the $2, $20, $50, and $100 notes not being mentioned. Another mention of this historical issue occurs in Mr. Coover's "List of Ohio Bills," published in the Numismatist for June, 1906, and here likewise the $2, $20, $50, and $100 bank notes are missing.

Upon careful investigation the Kirtland notes are found to be extremely rare—in fact, they are almost, if not altogether, unprocurable in any condition, and at any sacrifice. This condition, of course, was brought about because of the fact that every bill presented for redemption in 1838 was cared for; therefore the scarcity. So far as can be ascertained no complete set exists in the cabinets of any one collector or museum. It seems at this date impossible to locate any $20 or $50 specimen. The $100 note seems to be unique, the only specimen known is in the cabinets of the Western Reserve Historical Society, Cleveland, Ohio.

While preparing his article Mr. Moore interviewed members of the church as well as prominent non-members resident in Ohio, and elsewhere, the latter including members of the staff of the Western Reserve Historical Society, and prominent business men, consequently he was in a position to write fairly and impartially, as well as intelligently.

It will be noted that he concluded: First, that members of the church who promoted the Kirtland Bank did so with honest intent; second, that the venture was undertaken at an inopportune time and failed during the widespread financial ruin that soon followed; third, that the society afterward made an honest and successful effort to settle up its affairs in Ohio; fourth, that the scarcity of Kirtland Bank bills is due to the fact that those presented at the time of settlement were redeemed. ## CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

PRESBYTERIANISM AND SOCIAL EVIL.—The report of a special committee appointed to investigate the disappearance of young girls and made May 28 to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of America in session at Chicago, contained the following:

The whole condition of social impurity is involved. It seems entirely safe to assert that at least one hundred thousand persons are devoting their time wholly to this unthinkable iniquity in the United States. Some features of our modern life which contribute to the increase of the social evil are just now assuming alarming proportions. One of these appears in the vulgar tendency of modern fashion. Our standards expressly forbid all "immodest apparel." Many of our women are going to such extremes of dress as to shock even the least prudish. Another factor is the increasing craze for excitable and unchaste amusements. The dance has become the subject of indescribably vulgar jokes, and the moving picture shows are calculated to inflame the thoughts and emotions of the young.

PROHIBITION POSTPONEMENT.—It was recently stated in these columns that according to report, antisaloon leaders had agreed to a postponement until the December session of consideration by Congress of the bill to provide for national prohibition of the manufacture, transportation or sale in the United States of alcoholics for beverage purposes. Antisaloon authorities deny these reports and say that they have been circulated by liquor interests to discourage petitions and correspondence encouraging immediate action. The Anti-Saloon League did oppose making the bill a party measure by caucus action, but has not ceased to urge and work for its passage at the earliest possible date.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—The Constitution-ists have been informed by the mediators that they will be admitted to the mediation conference on the following terms: They must suspend hostilities, and accept the measures already agreed to by the American and Mexican delegates. General Huerta is said to have accepted in principle the pacification terms announced in our issue of last week. Huerta, to prevent the delivery of a vessel load of arms and ammunition en route for the Constitutionalists from New York City to Tampico, proposed to blockade the port of Tampico. Report says that the Washington administration has announced that this blockade will not be permitted, Rear Admiral Badger being instructed to prevent the same. The administration has informed the mediators that this action is not considered in violation of the agreement to suspend hostilities. It is urged that it is desirable to prevent Tampico from being indefinitely closed, and the oil fields in the vicinity from being subjected to the danger of destruction by continuous military operations; and that a blockade might create serious international complications.

MEXICAN WAR.—Supplies have repeatedly been cut off from Mazatlan, the Constitutionals having prevented their landing, they being in control of the surrounding territory, and bombarding vessels in the harbor. Minor Constitutionalist victories are reported in the vicinity of San Luis Potosi. Colima, a strategic point in southwestern Mexico, is reported taken by the Constitutionals. The only thing preventing the immediate advance against Mexico City is said to be the destruction of the railroads by the Federalists.

EMPRESS-STORSTAD INCIDENT.—Complications have arisen in the matter of the collision of the Empress of Ireland and the Storstad, the crews of each in the coroner's inquest holding the other to be at fault and responsible for the collision. The Storstad crew deny the statement of Captain Kendel of the Empress, and say that the latter was in motion at the time she was struck. The Canadian Pacific Railway, owners of the Empress have brought action against the Actieslakabet Maritime, owners of the Storstad, to recover damages in the amount of two million dollars. The Storstad owners have filed a counter claim for fifty thousand dollars damages. An official inquiry to fix the responsibility for the disaster is announced to convene the 9th.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

PURITY LITERATURE.—We call attention to an announcement in the advertising department of this issue of the HERALD offering literature recommended by the Social Purity Board of the church and to be distributed by the Herald Publishing House. The proper instruction of the child in matters of sex is necessary if he shall conserve his physical powers and cultivate the highest moral force and spiritual capacity. The literature suggested by the Social Purity Board is helpful to parents along these lines.

ABLE REPRESENTATION.—Brother W. H. Mannering some weeks ago took advantage of certain developments, and in announcing regular and special meetings to be held in Phoenix included facts with reference to true succession in the presidency of the church and in the matter of church succession as established by the courts. The statement of Senator Burroughs, as made before the Senate and appearing in the Congressional Record, referring to the Reorganized Church as the true successor to the original church and the worthy citizenship and Christian integrity of the Reorganized Saints, is included in the announcement and article by Brother Mannering. This article is brief, clear, and definite—just such matter as is desired by newspaper men. Save for a few typographical errors on the part of the paper, it ably represents our position.

THE CHURCH OF HUMANITY.—We are in receipt of a number of copies of The Truth about God and Life, published by the Church of Humanity, and edited by its president, W. H. Kerr. These papers unblushingly state that Mr. Kerr has "discovered" the following, included in an affidavit by him before a notary public:

I, W. H. Kerr, truly discovered and know it to be true that the universe contains no real God, that man contains no soul, and that life, mind and consciousness ceases for ever in each person at death, and I never shall voluntarily deny nor repudiate these truths.

This wonderful discovery of nothing suggests the following motto for homes, schools, and offices:

There is no real God;
Man has no soul;
Life ends for ever at death.

We note in passing that this periodical appears as a monthly. In the issue for March, 1914, volume 7, number 10, from which we have quoted, it is stated that the Church of Humanity has an enrolled membership in the United States of over three hundred. Mr. Kerr's discovery seems not to have found a responsive chord in the bosom of mankind, undoubtedly for the same reason that his motto is not decorating the walls of the offices, schools, and homes of America.

LIQUOR MAN'S SOPHISTRY.—A lecturer of Chicago, working in the interests of license and the saloon, is reported as saying: "There are three places in which prohibition has been a success, Turkey, the penitentiary, and hell—in each of which man is a failure." Authorities state that legal prohibition does not exist in Turkey, that the Mohammedans refrain from spirituous liquors from religious motives. Men in the penitentiary and in hell are there because of failure before incarceration, the downfall of many of whom is directly traceable to the licensed saloon. Like other sophistries intended to favor liquor and the saloon, this statement is without fact and impotent.

CLERGYMAN ANSWERED.—In the Daily Journal of Meadville, West Virginia, for April 11, appears a reply by our Brother A. J. Terry to a sermon on "Mormonism" in which the clergyman mentioned seems to have spoken in a way prejudicial to our cause. Brother Terry sets forth clearly the differences between us and the Utah people. He emphasizes the fact that no member of the family of Joseph Smith followed the Utah leadership, but that they all, in the Reorganization, have been foremost in opposing the teachings and practices of the West. Attention is called to the General Conference then in session at Independence, and the statement is made that there is no longer excuse in the light of our activities, court decisions, etc., for those who would mold public opinion to class us with the people of Utah.

Hymns and Poems

In Remembrance

Again the evening star of life we see,
And as it fades,
"Not yet, O Lord, not yet," our anxious plea
E'en as its last faint, glimmering rays dissolve
In night's dark shades.

And now alone once more we stand and wait
The scenes before;
Oh, why will not these weaker fears abate,
Since that we loved, yes, loved so long, so well,
Is ours no more!

Our life, our loved ones, nay, we can but see
They're his alone,
At whose command the worlds were caused to be;
And we shall know his blessing when we say,
"Thy will be done."

The Highest Ideal

Suggested by reading the late Sam Walter Foss's poem entitled, "The house by the side of the road."

Should we live, as you say, by the side of the road,
And be but a friend to man,
We hardly should follow the worthiest line,
Or live by the noblest plan;
For to tread in the paths of the sweetest of lives
That ever this old world trod,
We rather should choose, than the plaudits of man,
To merit the plaudits of God!

And to live by the side of the road alone,
And be but a friend to man,
Is too dull and slow in this work-a-day world
To honor the loftiest plan;
For ofttimes the one who would do the most good,
And bless and brighten the race,
Receives but the hatred and scorn of the world,
Not honor or treasure or place!

My friend, the hist'ry and lives of the past,
From Jesus to humble John Brown,
Will show when the world takes a higher plan,
Some martyr has laid his life down;
It has taken the toil, the sweat and the blood
That the best of our kind may give
To lift from the mire this stubborn race,
That the Christ-life within may live!

The picture you paint is too easy by far
To show forth the noblest in men;
'Tis a struggle and battle and sacrifice, too,
Not to "smile" at the door of your "den";
Truth's suffering army of brave pioneers
Have marched down the steps of the past;
They have conquered disease and cannibal lust,
Discovered new lands so vast;
But they had more to do in the ages' swirl,
Than to live at their ease and plan.
How the days should go by in "the house by the road," While being "a friend to man."

—Douglas Dobbins.

Husks

She looked at her neighbor's house in the light of the waning day—
A shower of rice on the steps, and the shreds of a bride's bouquet.
And then she drew the shade, to shut out the growing gloom,
But she shut it into her heart instead. (Was that a voice in the room?)

"My neighbor is sad," she sighed, "like the mother bird who sees
The last of her brood fly out of the nest to make its home in the trees"—
And then, in a passion of tears: "But, oh, to be sad like her;
Sad for a joy that has come and gone!" (Did some one speak, or stir?)

She looked at her faded hands, all burdened with costly rings;
She looked on her widowed home, all burdened with priceless things.
She thought of the dead years gone, of the empty years ahead—
(Yes, something stirred and something spake, and this was what it said:)

"The voice of the Might Have Been speaks here through the lonely dusk;
Life offered the fruits of love; you gathered only the husk.
There are jewels ablaze on your breast where never a child has slept."
She covered her face with her ringed old hands, and wept and wept and wept.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Kathleen Mavourneen

Kathleen Mavourneen, the gray dawn is breaking,
The horn of the hunter is heard on the hill,
The lark from her light wing the night dew is shaking,
Kathleen Mavourneen, what, slumbering still?

Oh, hast thou forgotten how soon we must sever?
Oh, hast thou forgotten this day we must part?
It may be for years, and it may be for ever!
Oh, why art thou silent, thou voice of my heart?

Kathleen Mavourneen, awake from thy slumbers;
The blue mountains glow in the sun's golden light.
Ah, where is the spell that once hung on thy numbers?
Arise in thy beauty, thou star of my night.

Mavourneen, Mavourneen, my sad tears are falling,
To think that from Erin and thee I must part!
It may be for years, and it may be for ever!
Then why art thou silent, thou voice of my heart?

—Crouch.

A Prayer

Dear Lord, to thee may we faithful be,
And thy goodness daily may we see;
Give us grace and wisdom too,
With loving hearts thy will to do.

May we have patience day by day
To help us o'er life's rugged way;
May thy sweet Spirit be our guide,
While we in the narrow path abide.

May we pay our tithes and offerings, too,
And the necessary duties may we do
Vanish vain pride from out our mind
And ever to the poor be kind.

Thanks for the gospel and thy love
And thy rich blessings from above,
Which give us peace and comfort here—
Thy obedient children need not fear.

Oh, how sweet to be thy child,
Ever true and pure and mild,
Clinging to the gospel plan,
Helping others all we can.

Dear Lord, help us thus to do
And be faithful unto you.
May our lives before thee shine,
Blessed with love from thee divine.

AND YET THERE IS ROOM

(Sermon delivered by Elder L. F. P. Curry, at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday evening, February 15, 1914. Reported by Elizabeth France.)

Let me read from the fourteenth chapter of Luke, beginning with the twelfth verse:

Then said he also to him that bade him, When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed, for they can not recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. And when one of them that sat at meat with him heard these things, he said unto him, Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God. Then said he unto him, A certain man made a great supper, and bade many: and sent his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for all things are now ready. And they all with one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused. And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused. And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I can not come. So that servant came, and showed his lord these things. Then the master of the house, being angry, said to his servant, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind. And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room.

We always like to take privileges to ourselves, and so we will take one here—not to interpret this which has been read as the theologian would, but after a manner that we wish to ourselves. The theologian would tell you, perhaps, that this referred to the kingdom of God, and that in that kingdom there is an abundance of room for every man. He would tell you, doubtless, that the Lord in his own time intended to compel men, the maimed, the halt, the poor and blind to come into his church and be saved.

ROOM IN THE HARBOR

There is a friend of mine to whom I am indebted for this story, who is a man rather given to spending his summers abroad and in various sections of this country. This man who excused himself because he had married a wife is in much the same condition as my friend, who had married a rich wife—and that makes possible many things; probably, among others the spending of his summers abroad and on the seacoasts of our country.

This man had a yacht, and as he sailed from a point near the northern line of North Carolina going southward, a terrible storm came up and he said to the master, "Is it not possible for us to run in somewhere and get out of this storm?" The captain of the yacht said, "No, there is not a harbor anywhere until we get forty miles down the coast." But, despite the storm, they made the harbor.

The next morning as my friend went down to look over the ships which had gathered in over night he found vessels of every kind, bark, sloop, schooner, and steamer, which had made their way in during that blow, while out in the harbor mouth there were a number which had failed to make the entrance; they were wrecked there and were being broken and battered to pieces on the shore. As he looked about the harbor he saw there was room yet for more ships which might have come in; those which had been wrecked outside might have entered—there was room for them.

THE CHURCH A UNIVERSAL REFUGE

When the suggestion was made that I might speak here to-night the president of the stake also mentioned, or hinted rather, at the possibility of there being many young people present. He said the evening is the time when the young gather in. I wish to look at this question of there being room from the standpoint of the young person. (I admit I could not look at it from an older man's point of view, because I am not an old man. I must necessarily adhere to those things I know.)

If I am to announce a theme for what I have to say I might put it in these words: The church is a universal refuge. Is there room in the church for men and women troubled and tempest driven by the storm of world affairs?

Just a few days before I came West I was called into a house where there was a case of scarlet fever developing and which promised to be severe. The people who were interested in this young lad, who was being stricken with the malady, were worried and troubled. As I reached my home one evening, after ten o'clock, I found the call there that I should go at once to them. On reaching the place at a late hour I was invested with a long robe to protect me against the fever germs. The Spirit of God was present as I administered to the boy, and as I went away I thought, What a refuge it is that these people here can place their trust in God and go to him and find in him a harbor of safety. The guardians of the lad themselves, on a later evening, were also administered to, and because of that administration I feel assured the fever did not attack them at all, while to-day the whole family is in sound health.

ROOM FOR THE DOUBT-DISTRESSED MAN

A friend of mine, a good fellow, but one who thinks deeply about spiritual matters and who is not satisfied with common explanations—and I love him for it—raises all manner of doubts and harrows himself from morning to night, sometimes, over questions occurring to him about our work. Sometimes these questions get the best of him, and then he spends weeks and weeks in darkness. On one of these occasions it seemed that the Spirit of God had left him for ever, and in the agony of his soul he cried out, "O my God, hast thou forsaken me?" Some of his friends in the branch were praying for him. On the very day when it seemed he had reached the crisis in this state of darkness and doubt, by reason of their prayers, because they upheld him to God, his friends gained for him a spiritual blessing,—one that dissipated all those clouds of doubt. The man to-day is firm and strong in the work; all his questions have been answered; they have been solved; he is firmly secured and anchored in the refuge of the church—his harbor of safety.

And yet, I may say, after I have mentioned these two classes of people, and yet there is room.

We often find the man who is seeking earnestly for spiritual light, a man who is a Christian, who has accepted the cross and who is doing his best according to his light to lead a just and upright life. I know a man, two men like that, who are now members of our church. When they were young—in their twenties—there came into their neighborhood a Latter Day Saint preacher, an old man with a long beard. (The king's English to him was something to be toyed with and broken up.) Because these two youths liked fair play they saw to it that that old man was not persecuted beyond that which he could stand. They procured a place for him to preach, and dressed up a soap box for a pulpit. On that improvised stand the venerable elder spread his Bible and preached to them out of the word of God. The two were convinced. Because of the preaching of that old gentleman, whom, out of a desire for fair play they defended, they found the harbor of refuge. And yet there is room.

OUT OF DARKNESS INTO LIGHT

Once, when I was of tender years—you may question just when that was, and it was not so very long since, of course—it seemed to me that religion was a thing to be laughed at, to be scorned. It seemed to me that the men and women who went to church were fools. It seemed to me that my own father and mother—however much I may have loved them—were sadly mistaken. And so in my wisdom I endeavored to show them the way.

There came a time when it seemed that the light of God was not for me; when the religious truths of God were never to be accepted by me; I was on the highroad to infidelity. As I pondered over spiritual matters, as I listened to the stories which were told of the church, marveling and wondering that people could accept them, it seemed to me that the angel faces would never smile, that for me the morning would never come—if the acceptance of these things was the morning I would never see it. For me there seemed to be no room in the kingdom of God, because that kingdom was made up of a mass of apparent contradictions and statements I could not accept—all of which the people who accepted them called truths, but which, in my enlightenment and wisdom, I felt must surely be error.

But, because of the love of God, because of his mercy, that state changed, and the angel faces did indeed smile; they allowed the light to come into my darkened mind. Instead of there being doubt, instead of there being denial, instead of there being infidelity, I reached that harbor of safety, and I found in the church that there was room for me.

A young man whom I know very well, in his school days took to reading Tyndall, Huxley and Darwin. (I promised I would not mention those names to-night, but I have.) It was not long until he was out of the church—gone completely, every shadow of faith he had ever had was shattered. That fellow became a thoroughgoing atheist. To him nature was God, not the expression of God, but God himself. Now he has turned a new leaf, if I may call it such; he has come to the light; the atheism has disappeared; all his doubts, all his denials have vanished; his questions have been answered, and to-day he, too, has found room in the kingdom of God.

SPIRITUAL POWER PLUS EDUCATION

During last spring I became a crank on the subject of education. Everywhere I went I talked about education. If called on for informal and impromptu speeches, I talked about education. I was always ready; it did not matter how long they gave me to talk, I talked up to the very last minute on education.

One good brother, on a certain occasion, said to me, "What we want is not education, it is spiritual power. That is the thing that is necessary. It is all very well for you, Brother Curry, to say we need education; it is quite true; but we need spiritual power worse and we must have it. Then, if the Lord wishes to give us education, we will take it."

Now, that man was emphasizing a point which the Lord wishes to have emphasized in the church. If I had gone on harping steadily about education at every opportunity the consequence would have been that the people of the branch or the other branches in which I spoke would have come to believe that education was everything to me; that education represented the ideal of the church; that education minus spirituality was what we were standing for.

I was not telling all I knew about my theme, even if I did talk a long time, but what I did come to say after this, related to both education and spirituality. That man simply made me emphasize the point with his contention that we should have spiritual power above all things. We need spiritual power, vigor, force, energy, which will aid us to use our education in converting the souls of men, leading them to truth and building them up in that truth. If I had continued emphasizing the idea of education, the chances are that the people would have come to think that that was the object of the church's existence. But, because that man and I made our sermons and our talks about the things on which we were each cranks, both were bringing out things the Lord wished to have emphasized. Education plus spirituality,—that, to me, is ideal.

ROOM FOR THE WORKERS

Now, there is room in the church for both classes of men: those who insist on the one point of view, and those who strongly emphasize the other. We need the men who do that very thing, who speak from their individual viewpoint; we need those men who go out and preach on the street corners, laying stress on the first principles of the gospel.

To my mind, the time has come when we must show the world that this gospel we have so vigorously proclaimed will solve its questions, its social problems and will change conditions. When we feel it is necessary to preach the ideas pointed out, we are not making prominent things we should not, but are bringing out points that should be dwelt upon. These men on the street corners, in the halls and public places here and there, speaking about the first principles, the elemental things of the gospel, and those higher truths which bring us to perfection—these men are necessary. Each is preaching according to his point of view; each is working according to his gift and his calling. And yet there is room.

If we leave those who are brought into the church without other training, other education, they will be lost. So we must have the primary teacher; the teacher of intermediates; the man who devotes his life to the young men; the woman who devotes her life to the young women. There is room for all these. But after we have brought them all in and have set them at work we must say, "And yet there is room."

SOCIAL PROBLEMS

The religious and social problems we are facing were perhaps never so pressing as now. In the city where I came from, one morning there was a little boy who was seen by a friend of mine getting something out of the garbage cans at the market houses that he might have his breakfast. There is an Episcopalian church, also, in my home town, which conducts a parochial school. Every morning except Saturday and Sunday, those in charge send out in the "Hill District" a carriage which gathers up the children. On reaching the parish house the first thing is to wash them, and verily some need it. The next thing is to have a germicide sprinkled over them—and, believe me, some need that too—and, lastly, to clothe them. Morning after morning a few of those who were clothed came back in rags. What did it mean? Simply that some home, some squalid household up in the "Hill District" was so poor that the clothes from those children's backs had to be taken and sold in exchange for food. Some little fellow would have to go about with wornout shoes, with torn stockings, with a coat and trousers in an almost unrecognizable state, that his family might have food.

These incidents represent social problems which the world must meet. And if this church is coming to the point where she will urge her solution on the world she must have men and women who understand conditions, who are thoroughly conversant with them that they may labor intelligently. There is room, I tell you, for such people, and the church is crying out that they may come.

Last week we were permitted to hear a couple of rather rare treats. One was a lecture on biology, which was rather convincing, but not very amusing. More recently, we heard a kind of refutation of that lecture on biology, which was rather amusing, but not very convincing. These typify the apparent clash between science and religion.

RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

The religious problems which the world is facing to-day are serious indeed to Christian men and women. Is it an accident that we have men denying the immaculate conception of Jesus Christ? Is it an accident that we have men saying there never was an Eden, there never was a fall of man? Is it an accident when they say that the shedding of the blood of Jesus Christ was not necessary, that his crucifixion, his terrible suffering there on the cross of Golgotha, was beside the point? Is it an accident that the beliefs which these denials imply are being widely accepted? Are they not the outgrowth of that which has been seething in the minds of men, and has now found expression in all of these denials of the truths the churches have looked upon as fundamental?

If these questions are to be answered, and answered in a thorough manner, there is nothing which can do it save this church of ours. Are we too narrow, or too dogmatic in saying that our church, alone, can meet these questions and answer them in a way that will convince? *We think we are not.

Strange as it may seem, the places where those questions are being asked are the churches whose ministers are themselves affirming their truth. And if we, having greater light, having a more intense development of religious truth, can interpret that truth, can convince men that it is truth, can show to them that these things which they have feared were insurmountable obstacles to its acceptance are not real obstacles, but are only spots that fleck the glass, obscuring the view for a little time, but soon to be wiped away—if we can do this then our church surely will take its place among the religious institutions of all time, preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ in its purity. These problems will then be set aside. Men, honest in heart, everywhere will come into the church and will be built up in that truth which she offers. And yet there is room.

THE WORLD IS WONDROUS LARGE

"This world is wondrous large: seven seas from marge to marge, and it holds a vast of various kinds of men. The wildest dreams of Kew, are the facts of Khotmandhu, and the crimes of Clapham Chaste in Martaban."

That is the way we must view it. The world is wondrous large; and our church is meant to be a world church. It is meant to be a universal refuge; a universal harbor, where ships of every kind may come in from the high seas where the storms rage, where the winds blow, and where destruction is threatened,—may come in and anchor in safety. And yet there is room.

When we pass from that harbor, when we drift to and fro without compass, without chart, even without a pilot who knows the ways and currents of the coast, what pain there must be in the heart of God! What grief there must be in his mind when he sees these, his sons and daughters, sailing away from that place which might be their refuge, that place which contains room for them! What pain and grief! Yet, he will turn, and in mercy, in pity, in love will say, "And yet there is room." There is room for us.

RELATIONSHIP OF PATRIARCHS TO OTHER OFFICERS

[Read by Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith before the Quorum of High Priests during the late General Conference.]

When the request was made by the Quorum of High Priests for two articles from the patriarch, I requested Brother H. O. Smith to write one along the line of the spiritual influences attending this office. I wrote to others of the Order of Evangelists who were older members of the order, asking them to write on the question of the relationship of patriarchs to other officers, but they did not feel disposed to write the article. I then decided to write this paper myself. Hence you will have the views of two of the new members of the Order. I frankly state in the outset that I appreciate keenly my inexperience along this line of work.

Our position in the church is a peculiar one, and upon careful investigation we are made conscious that it is made more so by virtue of the fact that there is a little difference made between the presiding patriarch and the other patriarchs. I call attention to the thought that the presiding patriarch becomes a general officer, and that his duties are extended, or rather, the limitations of his labors are extended to the whole church; while the other evangelical officers, besides the presiding patriarch, are restricted to districts where they are appointed. Although the relationship to other officers would unquestionably be the same within the restricted limits.

In Doctrine and Covenants 125:3 the patriarch is declared to be an evangelical minister, which would indicate that he holds what may be termed a double office, or that the word patriarch and evangelical minister would necessarily have to be held as referring to the same office. In outlining the duties we have the following: He is to preach, to teach, to expound, to exhort, to be a revivalist, to visit the branches and districts as wisdom may direct, and invitation, request, or the Spirit of God may determine and require. He is to comfort the Saints, to be a father to the church, to give counsel and advice to individuals who may seek for such. To lay on hands for the conferring of spiritual blessings, and if so led, to point out the lineage of the one he is blessing.

We note a line of work here that must fit in between the missionary force and the local force, necessarily requiring a very considerate, thoughtful, and careful recognition of the rights of both the missionary arm and the local force. The relationship becomes all the more peculiar in view of the further explanation that the patriarch is not subject to the control or direction of the missionary in charge, only so far as the teaching of false doctrine or being in transgression is concerned. He shall labor in connection with the branch and district officers. He is not to meddle with branch or district affairs, nor listen to complaints of individuals, nor enter into trouble unless it is forced upon him, in which case he must recognize the branch officers, securing the information necessary, with witnesses, etc., and turning it over to the branch, district or other officers. Nor is he to take charge of branch or district.

He may be called upon by quorums for counsel or advice, which would indicate clearly that he would occupy the unique position of counselor. He would stand as a spiritual adviser to the church, and in his capacity as a father to the church would have the right to exercise these functions, as a father, by giving advice and counsel if needed.

As a preacher and teacher, he should exhort the Saints and revive them. Not having the burden and care of branch work, he would be in a position to give spiritual advice and direction better and evidently more acceptably to the membership, as a whole, than those who would occupy in positions as branch officers, who by reason of executing the law necessarily antagonize some of the membership.

This relationship as a counselor, by reason of his experience and spiritual standing, would make his relationship with either arm of the church exceedingly close. As a revivalist it would be his business to comfort and strengthen and build up the cause of Christ, working in perfect harmony with the local officers, whether branch or district or both. There would be no need for any friction between him and the missionary force, as he would be the one who would follow up the work of the missionary and seek to care for and build up and to more fully establish what the missionary has done. He would be free to enter into the spiritual realm, and to seek to bring light and spiritual instruction to the membership; to answer questions, advising and counseling, both in private and in public, also instructing and counseling the officers. The work if understood must become a source of comfort and strength to the church, and in this way the patriarch must supplement, strengthen, and uphold the work of the missionary and local officers in the church.

Few understand the need of this order in the church and what it is intended for. As a minister in charge for several years, we have been made conscious more and more of the need of a spiritual officer who can visit the branches and work with them and strengthen and advise, counsel and instruct, educate and supplement, and hold what has been gained by the effort that has been put forth by the missionary force in the field. It has been quite evident to some of those who are laboring in the field as missionaries that some of their efforts are lost because of the lack of some one to follow up after the branch has been organized and while it is still young and weak, that it may be instructed and held together and strengthened, which the missionary force could not do and at the same time push the work into new fields. In doing this work the patriarch is supplementing the missionary force and is a help and a strength to the local force. He can not help but be appreciated when occupying in his proper place, and when the benefits of his work begin to make themselves apparent to the church. Hence the relationship between this order and other officers of the church must be close and mutual. As a father, there must be an intense interest on the part of the evangelist along every line of work in the church.

There has been in the past very severe criticisms that have hindered and have injured, in some cases, the influence that should have been wielded by those occupying in the office of evangelical minister or patriarch, largely, we believe, because of failure to understand or comprehend the import of the true position as occupied by the officers in this order. In some instances it seems that there has been the thought that all one had to do was to give blessings. On the other hand, there has been, upon the part of others, a disposition to make light of the blessings and ridicule them, which has a tendency to destroy the usefulness and purpose for which God gave them. While there may be those once in a while who will abuse their privilege and not use the wisdom that should be used, for this the whole order should not be depreciated and their influence weakened because of the failure of one now and then to do his duty, and to prove himself equal to the requirements made upon him. Were we to use the same method with other officers of the church we would soon discover that it would be detrimental and injurious to the whole body and injure the work that God has established.

I am conscious that the full duties of the order have not been fully understood and that we have before us, to a large extent, the work of education necessary to bring the church to realize the true duties of the patriarch; and I may say to you brethren now, as president of this order, and general evangelist to the whole church, I shall place the duties first that have been outlined by the Master himself, viz: that of preaching, teaching, expounding, being a revivalist, visiting the branches and districts, comforting the Saints, being a father to the church, and giving counsel and advice to individuals who may seek for such, counseling with quorums, and the giving of patriarchal blessings as one of the last named in the duties. I have held for years and still hold that the first and primary work of the patriarchs is that of reviving and preaching and building up the branches, comforting the Saints, counseling, advising in the interest of development of character in the individual and the church as a whole. He should also promote the spirituality of the membership in a particular manner.

Hence the relationship to other officers would be that of a spiritual counselor, and adviser, one to whom the officers may go for counsel and advice, who by virtue of his calling should not be partisan, and not having to execute the law could give the counsel sought without bias.

In conclusion, I believe the time is come for a more hearty cooperation and coordination between ministers in the church, that there may come to the whole church a greater confidence as a result of greater unity among the officers, as promised in Doctrine and Covenants 122:8.

THE INDIAN

[The following extracts are from The Vanishing Race, a book written by Doctor Joseph K. Dixon.<sup>o</sup> Doctor Dixon was head of the Rodman Wanamaker Expedition of Citizenship to the American Indian, visited every existing North American tribe, and talked with all living chiefs of note.]

The life of the Indian is one vast and glittering mosaic of rite and ritual. His warfare, his dress, his medicine, his ceremonies, his wooing, and his dying are all of them expressive of a dominant idea that pervades his life and controls his purpose. He lives constantly and absorbingly in a mystic land. He is beckoned by unseen hands and is lured into the realms of mystery by the challenge of voices silent to all other ears. His dress is studded with resplendent colors significant of the green earth, the blue sky, and the cry of his soul is for a place in the great beyond. Like the high priest of old, he wears on his breast the fiery filaments of his faith.

The Indian sits in the tabernacle of the mighty forest or on the heights of some deserted and wind-swept mesa, beats his tom-tom or drones song upon song, prays to the Great Mystery, pleads with the fires of the sun to give him strength and life and health, and calls the sun his father. The whispering winds tell his tale to the clouds. He peers into the depths of the stars, watches the aurora as the death dance of the spirits, answers the high call of the thunder as the voice of the Great Mystery, utters the cry of his soul to the lightnings—the arrows of taowity—communes with the rivers and the lakes, the moon, and the legion of wild beasts, and all of it with a pitiful longing that his days of fasting and his vicarious devotion may bring upon his life and his tribe the favor of the gods.

These primitive men hold time and money and ambition as nothing. But a dream, or a cloud in the sky, or a bird flying across the trail from the wrong direction, or a change of the wind will challenge their deepest thoughts. To the Indian mind all signs are symbolic. Their ceremonies are as complicated as any of ancient Hebrew or Greek tradition. The Indian aspires to be a great hunter, he seeks fame as a noble warrior; he struggles for the eagle feathers of distinction, but his greatest longing is to become a medicine man and know the Great Mystery. All medicine people of the tribes carry on their necks, or in a pouch at the belt, some sacred thing used in their magic practices—the claw of a bear, the rattle of a snake, a bird's wing, the tooth of an elk, a bit of tobacco. Every Indian carries his individual medicine, and his medicine is good or bad according to his success. If he finds a feather at a wrong angle in his path, his medicine is bad for that day. The Indian fasts and dances and chants, using his mind, his spirit, and his body as pliable instruments in the making of his prayer. He finds in the veritable exhaustion of his body the spirit path made clear for his dreams, until the very stars seem as the eyes of the gods, and the sighing of the pines comes to him as the rustle of eagle wings to bear his spirit to loftier realms. Instead of the common acceptance that the Indian has no religion whatever, every single act of his life carries with it some ceremonial function, and his whole being is surrounded by a shining host of ceremonial spirits. The Indian goes with prayer thoughts to the water. His bath is a sacrament.—Pages 10-13.

The door of the Indian's yesterdays opens to a new world—a world unpeopled with red men, but whose population fills the sky, the plains, with sad and specter-like memories—with the flutter of unseen eagle pinions. A land without the tall and somber figure worshiping the Great Mystery; without suns and snows and storms—without the scars of battle, swinging war club, and flashing arrow—a strange, weird world, holding an unconquered race, vanquished before the ruthless tread of superior forces—we call them the agents of civilization. Forces that have in cruel fashion borne down upon the Indian until he had to give up all that was his and all that was dear to him—to make himself over or die. He would not yield. He died. He would not receive his salvation by surrender; rather would he choose oblivion, unknown darkness—the melting fires of extermination. It is hard to think this virile, untamed creation has been swept like hurrying leaves by angry autumn gusts across the sunlit plains into a night without a star.—Page 4.

ANCIENT FORMS OF GOVERNMENT AMONG INDIANS

NOTHING BUT DEMOCRACIES IN NORTH AMERICA WHEN DISCOVERED

Thus we see that both in societies with no very distinct organization and in societies where female control and descent prevail there is not that lawlessness and unchecked violence which we might assume. In fact, there might easily be found governments inferior to those of many of our Indian tribes. The Iroquois confederacy was a marvel. It consisted, ultimately, of six distinct nations, or tribes, each of which was represented in the great council of the confederacy. Each of these tribes had a local government for local interests; each had a council, the membership in which was elective. Representation was by gentes, each gens selecting its own members. The council of the confederacy was patterned after the council of the tribes and consisted of members elected from each tribe. In the council meeting all matters of importance to the Confederacy were discussed and the representative of every tribe had the power of negating the action voted by all the others. After a matter had been fully presented to the council the representatives from each tribe withdrew and discussed the matter from the point of view of their own tribe. If here a single member objected to the action planned, it necessitated a negative vote from the full representation of the tribe to which he belonged; but a negative vote from one tribe settled the matter adversely, no matter if the other five believed it advisable. It can easily be seen that a man would think long before allowing his personal interests and personal opposition to block decisions of importance.

We are in the habit of thinking of democracies as being necessarily the crowning, final form of government. As a matter of fact, there was nothing but democracies in North America when it was discovered by the white man; and also, as a matter of fact, a democratic government is a simpler, less developed form in some ways than a monarchy.

The statement that only democracies existed in North America at the time of the discovery may surprise some readers. All of us have heard much of the mighty Aztec empire and of the Mexican Montezuma—its ruler. But Montezuma was only the head war chief of a confederacy of three Indian tribes. What has been said of the Iroquois confederacy will assist us to understand this structure.

The whole governmental organization was based on kin. Mexico City was a great pueblo not unlike—not totally unlike—the Pueblos in Mexico to-day. When this pueblo began, the little tribe of the Aztecs, much reduced in numbers, consisted of but four gentes. Thus the new town was subdivided into four quarters, on a Gentile basis. As the tribe thrived it grew; gens after gens became unwieldy and divided into new gentes until at last there were about twenty of these, still grouped into the four quarters, which might now be called, properly enough, phratries. Each of the four quarters of the city had considerable independence in local affairs; each had its own god, religious house or temple, and governmental house; each had its council with executive officers. The council was based on kin and each gens had representation. The four quarters together made up the town or tribe. The affairs of the tribe were decided and controlled by the council of the tribe which represented all the quarters and their subdivisions. It did not interfere with the affairs of individual gentes, but decided matters in dispute between gentes and dealt with outside affairs. In functions it was at once directive, arbitral, and judicial. Its presiding officers were the Foreman in Council ("the wise old man") and the War Chief ("big warrior"). So far we have pure tribal government.

Now, when the Aztecs gained in strength and power they united with such neighbors as they could not crush into a confederacy which finally extended its sway over a wide region. The two tribes with which they united were the Aculhaus of Tezcoco and the Tecpanecas of Tlacopan. The union was chiefly for conquest. Matters of confederate interest were considered and decided by a council of the confederacy; this was representative, comprising members from Mexico, Tezcoco, and Tlacopan. The "Chief of Men" was the elected executive officer of the confederacy. He represented it in all foreign affairs and possessed great though delegated power. He could be deposed for cowardice or other good cause. It was this Chief of Men who is commonly called the Emperor of the Aztecs; it was he who as Montezuma II met Cortes. He is best called the great war chief of the confederacy. There was a second great dignitary in the city of Mexico, the cihua-coatl, or "snake woman." Elected by the council for life, or during good behavior, he was the supreme judge, voicing the decisions of the council. When the Chief of Men led the confederate forces, the snake woman was at the head of the Aztecs; he was the tribal war chief. The terms of the confederacy required that its great war chief should always be an Aztec. Either of the three tribes might wage independent warfare, and all of them enjoyed independence in local government. Gains secured by confederate action were divided according to set rules of partition—two fifths to Mexico, two fifths to Tezcoco, and one fifth to Tlacopan. This curious confederacy, a masterpiece of barbarous politics, deserves careful study; it shows what firm concentration of power and consolidation may be secured even in purely tribal society. Morgan and Bandelier have shattered romantic ideas of the "Empire of the Montezumas," but have brought clearly to view something far more interesting.—Some First Steps in Human Progress, by Professor Frederick Starr, of the University of Chicago, pages 235-238.

LESSONS FROM EUROPE AS TO THE SOCIAL EVIL

The new conscience, in dealing with the ancient evil—to use the words of Miss Jane Addams—has had no greater obstacle to overcome than vague but strong feeling that the Old World, and Europe in particular, has tried everything and found segregation of fallen women, with police regulation, examination and medical inspection, to be the least objectionable or least dangerous solution of the problem. Those in this country who urged suppression instead of segregation—which is a euphemism for the toleration of plague-spots in the hearts of our cities and towns—were told that they were advising futile and impossible policies that were prompted by good sentiment and complete ignorance.

Abraham Flexner, a well-known student and writer, was commissioned by the Bureau of Social Hygiene to make an investigation of the social evil in Europe and to report on its status and its treatment by governments and public sentiment. Mr. Flexner spent a year in Europe, visited eleven countries, made careful inquiries and personal investigations, and has given his results in a bulky volume. John D. Rockefeller, jr., writes an introduction to the volume.

There is much in the report that is encouraging and reassuring. Its conclusions, briefly summarized are these—that segregation of vice is everywhere a total and acknowledged failure, that it is being abandoned in favor of a policy of elimination; that police regulation regulates nothing, while corrupting the police; that stringent legislation has stamped out the white slave traffic, as an organized affair; that new ideas and sentiments, similar to those now working with us, are making their way in Europe, not only among men in authority, legal or moral, but among students and young men. The volume is full of quotable material, but space can be found for some short extracts only. First with regard to the new sentiments just alluded to. Mr. Flexner writes:

Though no quantitative evidence of improving morality can be given, various movements supply proof that opinion is undergoing a change which must in the end affect conduct. Custom once practically constrained the French student in the Latin quarter to swim with the current; now it has become possible to lead a blameless life without incurring contempt for his idiosyncrasy; an impassioned literature appealing to the German student has made its appearance. The woman's movement will unquestionably destroy the passivity of German women in respect to masculine irregularities. The task of developing continence in nations habituated to indulgence is one of inexpressible difficulty; but it may be fairly said that now, for the first time, it has been deliberately faced on the Continent by a small but earnest band of men and women bent upon the purification of life.

Dealing with the discredited policy of regulating vice, the author says:

This, then, is the final and weightiest objection to regulation for our sins: and not for ours only, but for the sins of as espionage, not that it is unnecessary as a political measure, but that it obstructs and confounds the proper attitude of society towards all social evils.

The statement in the report that the traffic in women has been destroyed is taken by some to mean that no such organized traffic has ever existed. The two statements are of course far from being identical. Exaggerations were perhaps indulged in as regards the extent of the traffic, but they did no harm. Even now there are procurers and white slavers, and in every city of importance the social evil has strong commercial and political backing. The movement for suppression of the social evil, and especially of the centers of filth and poison known as the segregated districts, is not receiving the support it ought to have from the great organs of publicity. If the Flexner report stimulates their zeal and interest in the matter, and leads to a more general attack on the short-sighted and ignorant policy of segregation, which is still supposed to be "European," the gain to morals, decency and health will be great indeed. Meantime progressive civic bodies and medical associations will find valuable ammunition in the report in their campaign for legislation and honest administration.—The Chau-tauquan, February 14, 1914.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS

"To Every Man His Work"

We will admit that the man who would be a farmer should study agriculture, perhaps not in college but on the farm itself.

We all know the doctor should study medicine, the lawyer, law, and the schoolmaster, pedagogy.

Have we stopped to think that child-study is as important to parents as the study of agriculture is to farmers?

There are many books on the development of children the reading of which is helpful, but nothing will quite take the place of "observing" the children and learning at first hand the manner of their development.

Most of us hurry along, our minds intent on pressing work, and we fail to give sufficient observant thought to the manner of our children's growth and development.

"To every man his work." There is no more important work than the care of children. It should have due attention.

Where Are We Giving Our Best?

It is asserted by many students of social conditions, and with good ground, that the average American husband nowadays is compelled by the fierce competition in business to give the best that is in him to his down-town work, and the question is asked, If his wife does not offset this by making that which is not material her special work, how can the family be directed to higher planes of living?

Where and to what are we giving our best thought and attention? The highest development of our whole being is taxed when we do for the generation that is to follow us that which will prepare them for their future tasks.

Working Women

According to statistics, there are six million working women in the United States; that is, there is that number of women who help their husband and father to bear the family expense. The average wage of these women is six dollars per week.

It is because the father's toil is so poorly paid that the mother also must leave her home and add her exertions outside of the home to provide for the family the necessities of existence. When she must go, the home can not escape the results of the neglect of a mother's duty to her children.

Perhaps she does not go out of the home, but brings work into it to be done by herself and the children, as is the case in multitudes of instances in the great cities. This may be slightly better than going out and leaving the children, but it is not the best condition, or one with which our civilization should be content.

And those overworked women who toil at tasks aside from those of their own family are not the only ones whose condition is to be commiserated. There are millions of "working women" not numbered as wage earners, whose time is so fully occupied with pressing toil in the home that they have little time for recreation, or meditation, or even the rest prescribed by those who teach scientifically that a woman's time should be divided into periods of work, rest, recreation, reading, etc.

These latter are just average mothers in our average homes, who are shut out from their opportunities by the present inequalities between capital and labor. The average earnings of the fathers of families are so inadequate to the needs of the household as to prevent the development of the inner and better life.

Poverty is not conducive to spiritual development, even as its opposite, wealth, is not. "Give me neither poverty nor riches," was the prayer of the wiseman. Our divine Master had need to warn the poor of Galilee that the good seed of the word of truth is in danger of being crowded out of human hearts by the thorns of "the care of this world and the deceitfulness of riches."

When we give the greater part of our time in thinking of physical needs or of physical pleasures, we rob our better selves of that share of attention which is needful to lift us up into higher life.

When a large part of the people are compelled by material conditions to neglect this higher aspect of life, those conditions call for remedy. The temporal law of the church suggests the manner in which the remedy is to come.

"The Women of Leisure"

Josiah Strong, in his Studies in Social Christianity, commenting on the story of Mary and Martha in the gospel of Luke, says the Master's praise of Mary certainly was not due to the fact that, for the time being, she was a woman of leisure, but because, in her time of leisure, she sat at the feet of a divine teacher and learned of him; and the reproof administered to Martha was not because she was accustomed to giving service, but because she was "cumbered about much serving."

Leisure is not in itself an evil, nor in itself a good. It is good or evil according to the use made of it. Upon this point, Doctor Strong says: "There can be no question that, whether leisure be good or bad, society should not be divided into a leisured class and a working class. If leisure be good, all should have some of it. If leisure be evil, it is certainly a misfortune that there is a class called the leisured class."

"In studying the problem, however, we must recognize the fact that there is a leisure class and must know who they are. Generally speaking, they are the wives, daughters, and dependents of the wealthy, sometimes including the wives and daughters of the better-paid professional class. This is in itself disastrous. That this class has large opportunities is perfectly true, and that some of them make noble use of their leisure is also true, but it nevertheless remains a fact that no life should be made up of leisure, and that no class should be set apart as a leisured class."

The writer quoted specifies as besetting sins of the leisured class artificiality and affectation and a temptation to self-indulgence, a life of display and mere butterfly existence. He says, "Most examples of fast society and of living for dress and fashion alone belong to the class of wealthy leisured women. They are setting a pace which hard-working women strive to copy, misleading many a young girl to folly and often to ultimate undoing. A further danger to woman's being in a separate class of leisure is that she does not come into acquaintance with real life. Hers is to some extent a parasitic life, and it develops, therefore, the dangers of a parasite. She often sees the good money does, but does not know how money is made. She sees the evils of poverty, but does not understand its causes."

"The possibilities of the leisured class are admittedly great. Leisure gives opportunity to study and learn, and to break away from any false lead. Many leisured women are doing this. They are entering settlement work, charity work, social-reform work, and in all these are learning the real problems of life and of their wise solution. Out of this knowledge is coming and should come that wise action which their leisure makes possible.

"In this line lies the great opportunity of the woman of leisure. Leisure should mean opportunity for action, no-blesse oblige; and leisure means new duty. What American social life will be depends to a very large extent upon the leisured class."

"It Ought Not to Be So with You"

Those conditions of marked contrast between poverty and opulence which Doctor Strong deprecates in the world should have no counterpart in the church. There should not be among us a leisured class of wealth and an overburdened class of poor. The whole tenor of the teaching of Christ is opposed to such conditions.

We read of that church which was established among the Nephites: "There were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift."

The poor of the church can not rise to what they wish to be, and their children have not proper opportunity to develop as they might, while conditions of poverty press too heavily upon them.

"Give us neither poverty nor riches"; but give to each of us opportunity to be free to develop God-given powers.

Prayer Union

SUBJECTS FOR THE THIRD THURSDAY IN JUNE

Prayer for our missions and missionaries in all places, especially remembering the Lamanites; also remembering our missionaries at Jerusalem and on the islands of the sea, that the Lord will sustain those he sends to those difficult missions.

Lesson, Book of Nephi 13: 38; memory verse, Book of Nephi 9: 83.

Letter Department

VINAL HAVEN, MAINE, May 17, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have received much help in reading the HERALD and other church papers. Five of these papers come to my home. I look for them regularly, as there is always something in them to cheer us on and to encourage us in that there are others fighting to spread the good news.

It is three years this month since I became one of the body of Christ. These seem the shortest years of my life, and I must say that they have been the best. I heard the gospel first from Bishop R. C. Evans in the Majestic Theater, Toronto, Canada. I went many times to hear him sound forth the angel's message. I did not realize when I first heard him that some day I would be preaching the same good news. I was ordained a priest one year after I was baptized, at Stonington, Maine, and have been preaching every week since.

We are looking forward to the coming of some of the elders this summer to help us. We have many friends for the elders when they come. There are a few members on the island. We hold sacrament the first Sunday of each month and meeting at night. The schoolhouse is beginning to fill up again. When the good weather comes we will have Sunday school and Religio. I started another meeting in another schoolhouse Wednesday night. The schoolhouse was almost full. We have three schoolhouses that we can use whenever we want them, and have prospects of securing a hall in town when one of the elders comes. We are determined to let the people know what we believe if we have the opportunity.

I have found in the short time I have been in this work that it is sometimes necessary to introduce the subject of religion. It is well to become acquainted with the different rituals and creeds and thus be in a position to contrast the teachings of others with those of the Bible as we understand them. We need not fear to work in the cause of Christ; the harder we work the brighter the way becomes. I know that this is God's work, and that if we are willing to move out he will always be with us and that to bless.

Your brother in Christ,

ARCHIBALD BEGG.

LITTLES, INDIANA, May 18, 1914.

Editors Herald: After enjoying a feast of good things at the General Conference I returned to my field of labor on April 23, with Elder F. A. Rowe. Our first stop was Princeton, Indiana, where we made our home with Thomas Oxley. We held a few meetings in the Marsh Creek Schoolhouse, near Brother Oxley's, but did not have much of an interest. We went to Littles on the 27th, where we held a week's meetings and had fair interest. Elder F. A. Rowe then left for Birdseye, Indiana, the writer going to Rumbletown, where he held a week's meetings with good interest, then returned to Littles on May 11, where he continued the meetings up to last night.

As it is a busy time the crowds were small through the week. We had a large crowd on Sunday, when the writer spoke three times with good liberty. On this date we had the privilege of leading two precious souls into the waters of baptism. There are some good Saints in this place who know how to make the elders feel at home, and who are willing to help all they can in this great work. God bless them for their kindness in remembering the elders.

The writer enjoyed his labors with Elder Rowe the short time he was with him. Brother Rowe is an earnest worker, and the writer believes he will do a good work in the district.

God grant that we may all be earnest workers, do our part, and let our light shine so as to lead some into the right way.

As ever in gospel bonds,

JACOB G. HALB.

AUSTRALIA.

Editors Herald: In reading the letters in the HERALD and other church papers I receive great enlightenment, strength, and comfort from the testimonies and advice given. I have often wished I might do more for the Master so that others might receive like blessings through my ministrations.

Without the help of papers, pamphlets, books, etc., how could the world advance? And how could we prosecute the work in which we are engaged, even the spreading of the glorious gospel for the salvation of men? By this means we may let our voices be heard in far-off lands as well as at home, in reciting what God has done for us. Our message may be as seed sown that brings forth fruit which we ourselves may not see until the triumph of the kingdom of God, and the day of rewards. If our efforts have been the means of saving souls and bringing them to Christ we shall have starry crowns.

The first I ever knew of this church was by picking up a tract on the road. In reading it I could see truth, and with me truth has first place. Shortly after this I heard an elder preach a few sermons. I was satisfied that he presented the truth. My work at the time took me into various communities. I did not hear any more preaching for over a year. I happened to be in the same territory again, and as the same elder was preaching in the house of a friend with whom I was staying I heard once more the gospel news. At the close of the meeting I was led to ask the elder to baptize me.

Since yielding obedience to the gospel I have had other experiences which have confirmed me in the conviction that this is the work of God. Before joining the church I had lived a hard life, not knowing the love of father or mother or true friendship. I was cast out into the world at six years of age to make my living as best I could. I had very little teaching of any kind until after joining the church. I have had many trials to contend with.

As there was no branch near I could not hear the faith of the church for which I ever longed. Time went on; work brought me near a branch for about three months. I attended the services as often as I could. At that time I was struggling for a living without a friend. On returning home after the last meeting I attended in this place I was alone and surrounded with darkness. In tears I raised my eyes to heaven and asked God to be my friend. Since then I have learned what it means to trust God. I was finally stricken with sickness. After three weeks I sent for an elder who came and administered to me. This was the means of bringing me into the company of Saints who were living near whom I had not known. A brother who was a teacher at the time on being told about me came with his wife to visit me. These people have remained friends to this day, although we are separated, they being now in America.

I have received blessings untold, and many trials have proven blessings in disguise which have been the means of great help to me. God has stood by me and guided me so that I should not fall. In two instances I have witnessed the sick almost instantly healed. Under the gifts of the gospel I have been able to warn a brother of trials that would come to him, and to promise that he should preach the gospel in other lands. This has all come to pass.

Jesus said (John 7:16), My doctrine is not mine but his that sent me. If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine. These words are true and faithful. Brothers and sisters, if you are struggling under trials which cause you to doubt or become careless, go to God in prayer and ask his help and trust him. He will help you even as he has helped me.

Yours in the one faith,

T. JAMIESON.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, May 23, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have been appointed to labor in Central Nebraska, and fully expected to arrive there for action early. But I am held up, and from present knowledge I may say that I can not be there for service for at least two or three months yet, unless our heavenly Father intervenes.

I have been lame for more than a year, and it is so painful any more for me to stand on my feet that I am forced to lay by for repairs. I have been told by competent physicians that I must stay off my feet for three months if I wish to get well and avoid a serious and dangerous operation. I was to go on the operating table recently, but have been advised to move slowly along that line.

Having on hand so much surplus energy and health in every other part of my body, it is quite trying to have to wait for a "member" which I can not very well leave behind. I ask the dear Saints everywhere to pray for my speedy recovery.

Hopefully,

O. R. MILLER.

ECHO, OREGON, May 23, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am not a subscriber to the HERALD, but will be soon. I have lived in the Willamette Valley, in Oregon, for two years. There is a small branch at Portland. I am on my way back to Des Moines. Iowa is my home State.

I got three HERALDS of Brother Rosedell of Salem, Oregon, and read the article, "When will peace come to the earth?" It caused me to think much. I also read the encouraging letters.

Dear Saints, it will not be long till I am back with some of you at Des Moines, and Independence, Missouri, and can feel at home again. I became weak in faith about three years ago and drifted away somewhat from church duties. But I have repented, and come in humble prayer and asked God to forgive me and pardon all my sins. I am trying now to live right in the sight of God and man. I hope and pray night and day that I may be faithful until the end.

Dear Saints, I am bothered with the tobacco habit. I know it is contrary to God's will for me to use this filthy weed. I ask every Saint who reads this to pray for me that I may lay this habit aside and never touch tobacco again. I know God is striving with me, and I sincerely believe he has a greater work for me to do. I am

YATES CENTER, KANSAS, May 24, 1914.

Editors Herald: We are a family of Saints living apart from any of the true preaching. We wish to know if there are any of the same faith living near us. If so we should be glad to hear from them. We live seven miles west and one north of Yates Center.

We moved here from Oklahoma the first of the year. We left a nice branch of the church, with Sunday school every Sunday, and preaching occasionally. Since moving here we have heard none of the true gospel. We would be glad to have some of the missionaries come and preach for us. There are several different churches here and they have preaching every Sunday, but after one has heard the preaching of the true gospel other preaching is not satisfying.

There are nine of our family, and all except the baby have been baptized by Elder Hubert Case. We are striving to live up to the gospel plan, but the temptations are many, and the flesh is weak. We need the help of preaching and the companionship of Saints, but we realize that the church is doing its best with the amount of funds it has. Since, however, the Bible says the gospel shall be preached to every creature, we hope that it may be preached here soon. And may those who hear the gospel see the need of it in their lives and embrace it.

Since we left Oklahoma, Brethren Case and Arber have been doing some good work there. We are glad to see our friends come to the truth, and hope they may be earnest and true workers for Christ. Hoping that if there are any Saints near Yates Center they will see this, we are

GROVE, OKLAHOMA, May 14, 1914.

Editors Herald: In starting out on my ministerial work I arrived at the Lamanite branch, at Elder J. D. Kelley's, near Grove, Oklahoma, finding them all well, and sound in the faith.

Together with Brother Kelley, we held a nine-day meeting at the Buzzard Schoolhouse, having good crowds and good interest. While here I baptized a fine young man by the name of R. Walter Bradley. I find the Saints here anxious for gospel service, giving their assistance freely, with strong desires for better results in the future. I was made glad in my efforts in preaching the gospel to this people.

Closing our meetings on the thirteenth, together with Brother Kelley, we are now going to Brother Harnie's, near Wyandotte, Oklahoma, to hold a series of meetings, to continue as long as interest will permit.

Brother Kelley wishes to offer a part of his time in the gospel service. Together, we desire to build up the work and tell the angel's message to the world. We will continue our labor in these parts until the district conference at Fairland, June 5.

Yours in the love of the gospel,
A. T. GRAY.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, May 16, 1914.

Editors Herald: We are preparing to take our leave from here in order to reach our new field of labor at the earliest possible date. The universal expression is, "We don't see why you couldn't have been left with us another year;" and again, "We don't see why you had to be taken away." Amid this sentiment we are obliged to bid farewell to those who have become endeared to us by reason of the service we have tried to render them. The chief reason I believe for the Saints deploring our departure and appreciating our labor is that we have not made ourself a mere iconoclast, but have continuously done work intended to be constructive in nature, endeavoring always to build and reveal the beauties of a Christlike life and character; what it means for us, for the church, and for our fellows; that the mission of Christ is to save and not to destroy; and so our association has been appreciated.

Personally, we can see no value in simply destroying the idols of another if we give them nothing in return; and we are persuaded that if we give them the necessary spiritual food they will forsake their own idols. To us this is the better way. One of the main reasons for this is that like must always attract like. Therefore, if we show too much of the aggressive spirit, we can expect to have the combative spirit returned, and our would-be Christlike service is precipitated into a mere strife of words with no profit; but if the spirit of kindness and love actuates our lives and service, the spirit of love and gentleness on the other hand can be appealed to, and we can then lead the better nature of those who differ from us into better things.

What virtue is there in precept unless the life of the teacher confirms it? What good can come from the preaching of Christ unless the life, the character, and the deportment of the preacher bespeaks a oneness with him? If we reflect his life and breathe the spirit that actuated him we will be gentle and charitable with the erring; and in place of trying to completely destroy them, we will gently lead them on, and through the spirit of kindness, of love, and of truth, teach them the way of life, that they may walk therein and find rest to their souls.

The thing peculiar to man is that you can lead him, but never drive him; you can draw him out, can never pour into him the thing that he is not willing to receive. And so we believe that by proper methods our work would bring far greater results than it often does; for if in the Christ spirit we appeal to our fellows we will draw out the better nature within them, and thus be able to lead them to better things. But if we try to force them to receive by trying to pour it into them they will rebel, the spirit of fight will be aroused, and as a result the evil nature within them will be appealed to, and in place of lifting them up to God we will have driven them further away. We take the position, therefore, that we should be very tolerant, and in all things exercise the spirit of love, kindness and good will in dealing with our fellow men.

Our address hereafter will be 127 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Hopefully,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

WEST JONESPORT, MAINE.

Editors Herald: This writing is done from the engine room where my noon hour is spent. The spirit of quiet and solemnity comes over the plant after closing down for lunch, and reigns supreme. Often I am refreshed by the spell, and especially if the duty of the day is hard from causes common to the life and responsibilities of an engineer.

The unexpected is always happening, and while the attendant may be competent in every respect as yet known by the profession of his choice, the lack of knowledge in the unknown is the spirit of unrest. And the unknown is always happening, as one of the strong evidences that man has not yet learned to perfect or apply a perpetual working in the great system of law of which he is an important part. Broken laws have broken results, and no respect of person.

I have been sorry many times in the discharge of my duty, as it makes me a servant directly or indirectly to all whom it may concern, that my knowledge was not equal to the unexpected which many times brings out all the efforts of man to overcome. And why? Because of the interest in the company or man who has hired our services; because of our duty to the entire crew who can not work unless the mill runs its power; because we are held responsible to discharge the duties of an engineer, it being our calling in life.

The folly of discontent has prompted me many times to leave my job. By looking at other positions from my standpoint I have thought it a pleasure to discharge duties which seem to be but pastime, but which have later been demonstrated to be a drag. I fully believe that all men are appointed to special duties and callings in life. The importance of a wise choice will largely shape the course of success or failure.

All duties, whether of mental or physical nature, exhaust no small degree of force to accomplish normal results in production. All value is indestructible, and in the changing of substance from mind to matter each mind produces its best value. Therefore I thought it a mistake to leave my position for another in which I might have (as I have sometimes thought) an easy job. I have learned from experience that the production of man is determined by the plane upon which he lives, and is returned to him over visible and invisible course, directly or indirectly.

Though weary in body, I am happy in writing to-day. Hopes of the future are so well-established by past and present facts that faith has the assurance of substance hoped for, or evidence of things unseen by natural forces. I delight in the gospel law and am made unspeakably happy at times.

I now write from my room. The day is beautiful. My dear old mother has been dead one year. Words fail in speaking of her great kindness to me. As in life I loved her, in death she is not separated from me. She was a dear good mother and ever constant friend. She was first a member of the church under the leadership of G. J. Adams, known as the church of the Messiah. She was rebaptized by President Joseph a long time ago, and passed to the beyond with the hope of glory and Zion's redemption, and that in due time she would come again with the Saints. I know of her love and kindness, especially to the poor. I have reason to believe and know that from her bosom came the light of love. Perhaps her greatest sorrow was the wayward steps of the world, due to the peculiar compound in will and self, and self-love and selfishness, which she had taken into consideration. She has been dear to me in counsel and by the unseen value of prayer. While I had become very successful in the discharging of my duties and calling in the industrial world, she called me many times to her side that I might take heed to counsel.

I am sitting at my desk to-day only a stone's throw from the very pier where the good ship Nellie Chapin cast off her fastenings to the whistle of the tug Delta and towed to sea, spreading her canvas to the breezes, bound for a land perhaps more earnestly sought than any other upon the earth. Only a few hundred were seeking, compared with the great multitude of the past and present, the land of promise.

There is an interesting tale in regard to this colony and its experience. I was but a small lad at the sailing, and can remember well especially those who returned, who were much lower in purse, though wiser in experience. The disastrous failure of this people perhaps is better realized by the participants than can be here described. However, my mother never seemed to be sorry that she had listened to the preaching of Mr. Adams in regard to many of the principles of truth, and with the writer fully believed that the honest in heart, no matter how blinded by seducing spirits, will eventually find favor with the true and living God whom they seek.

Later as time rolled on, came the missionaries of the genuine original Latter Day Saints. Among the first, if not the first, was Josiah Ells, in his straight English boots. He was the guest of my mother and father. Memory of him has not gone out from those who met him. His funds were short or low, and he did much walking from town to town. God only knows what a man he was. How well he realized that it was God whom he served.

Many others came, among whom was one Elder Frank M. Sheehy, wearing two left shoes because they could be had at a reduced price. But the goods that he had for the people had not been reduced in price nor value. He was a legal, authorized agent for clean linen, pure and white. He has been advertising these goods since that date, with the same guarantee. Many have been finely dressed from that great department of beauty, and are standing ready with a new song on their lips and a golden harp in hand. I can not begin to tell you of the past, present and future of that delightful story coming to this people, a part of whom are located on the north shore of the Moosabec, under the shade of the fir and cedar, and facing the sun at noon.

I am tired to-day; stranded but not broken, wrecked but not lost. What can I do to find rest? If I rest at all it will be in the daydream of the ideal, and the hope of Zion's beauty let me see. For the earth shall be for the inhabitants thereof. Zion and Jerusalem, as the cities of his people, arise, put on strength, for the dust is laid low by the latter rains, and Zion by love and confidence may put on her clean linen. But remember, it is bought with a price, pure golden eagle goes with works, the value of production coming in from the industrial world, where the God of the laboring man prospers those of toil who will give unto Zion her rightful substance. And when she is made strong, then shall there be no poor nor hungry of her numbers. Who is it that loves God and is content to see his brother in grave distress and need? Take, oh take the labor of my hands as an evidence of love, of faith, as a testimony and a witness together with the expression of my lips and with my heart which can truly say they love Zion.

As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up. And if I be lifted up, says Jesus, I will draw all men unto me, and he that is of the light will come to the light. But who is able to be baptized with baptism of the just? Carnal men they are who say that they love God and do not the things contained in the law. Remember with the doctrine of eternal judgment is thy salvation. Who then shall stand within the gates, or sit without waiting? I am pleased to know, but oh, how sad to rely upon the doctrine of eternal judgment. Herein is God's great love expressed for his first love, in that he has called and has held out his hand. Who is he that considers the law of self-love that he may have self-preservation? Or who is he that considers the law of selfishness, as herein is man's destruction?

Do Saints really speak the truth when they say they know the Christ, and do not walk in the light and love of the law? The system of Christ becomes perfect to us by works only, not by lip service alone, but by law.

Though not well in body, in spirit I am exceedingly happy, and my testimony is proved. Jesus lives. May God bless all, is my prayer.

Sincerely yours,
F. L. NORTON.

News from Missions

Hawaii

In consulting those in charge, a trip around the Island of Hawaii was thought advisable. This was new territory, with only five Saints living on the island. Brother Waller wrote and told us to go, nothing doubting, as our wants would be provided. So Brother McConley and I left Hilo March 25, to walk around Hawaii, a distance of two hundred and thirty-seven miles. We took with us a change of linen, our books, gospel charts, consisting of, The organization of the church, the gospel ladder, the apostasy and restoration, the gospel dispensations as recorded in Matthew 20: 1-15 and Luke 20: 9-16, a Book of Mormon map, and a large map of the United States, showing the land of Zion, etc. We also had two large Japanese umbrellas, as the rainfall in Hawaii is very heavy at times. Twenty-four inches of rainfall have been recorded in as many hours. So we went prepared for it.

Our charts and maps we explained to all who would give us an audience. Sometimes it would be to a single workman in the field, and sometimes to a crowd of fishermen by the sea. We had been advised not to go to Keauhou, a little fishing village on the seashore, two or three miles off the main road, but when we came to the path that led down the mountain side to the village, we felt directed to go there. We found the men and women mending their nets. We took out our books and charts, and they left their work and sat down on the stone wall beneath a large tree and we told them of the restored gospel. While lifting my voice to God in prayer I thought of the many times our Savior had in like manner told the gospel story to the fishermen of Galilee, and I felt thankful to be engaged in the work of Christ. The Spirit was present in power, and many were glad that we came. They gave us a nice lunch, showed us the place where Kamehameha III was born, and wanted us to visit them again soon.

We were privileged to visit many places of historic note including "The Hale O Keawi," a city of refuge used by the ancient Hawaiians as a place to obtain justice when in trouble. These people practiced circumcision. Many other laws of the Hawaiians were similar to the laws of Moses. This is evidence to me that the Hawaiians are of the house of Israel, and that the Book of Mormon is a record of their forefathers. We also visited Captain Cook's Monument near Kealakekua Bay. Mr. Kamaouha, a native, rowed us across the bay to the monument. We had a very pleasant time.

We were well cared for during our trip, and were made to realize that God will provide for those who are engaged in his work, if they trust him. We opened up the work in many new places where much good may be done in the future. May the work of God prosper, is my prayer.

In gospel bonds,

Australia

It has been some months since I wrote last. I have been traveling around in the mission, getting acquainted with the Saints and the condition of the work. I have very favorable impressions of the people and the country. Of course there are some things existing here which I do not think are to the interests of the country. There are too many strikes, in the first place. In the second place, there are too many holidays. The country is large and the population is small, about five million for a land nearly as large as the United States.

Judging from the newspapers and the speeches of the powers that be, Australia to an Australian is the greatest country on earth. Of course, I consider it the same as when I hear some little men talk—it seems to be a sort of protection of nature for them.

Another source of weakness to the country as a whole is that each state seems to be working against every other one. The country is divided off into five separate states, namely, New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, South Australia, West Australia. And the same spirit seems to predominate in the cities, toward each other. However, this land is a great country, and there are great possibilities ahead. I like the free, independent spirit which the Australians possess. They copy more after America than England, and they manifest a manly spirit toward America.

We surely appreciate the fine, saintly spirit extended towards us as missionaries. The people seem anxious to be taught and apparently appreciate our efforts in that direction, so this is very encouraging to us. They seem to be imbued with the spirit that all are one in Christ Jesus, no Jew or Gentile. All nationalities are accepted and appreciated if they do what is right, and this an omen of future success and prosperity.

I have been among the various principal branches, with the exception of the extreme points of Adelaide, Brisbane, Freemantle, and have been heartily received by officers and Saints, and the Lord has abundantly blessed our efforts to regulate and set the work in order, also in preaching the word. We are greatly enthused and elated over the bright future that seems to be before the church in the fact that the Lord is raising up many young men and women who are intensely interested in the work of the Lord, and who seem desirous of taking an active part in building up the kingdom of God. Some of these young men will make their mark, and be the means in the hands of God of doing a good work. If it were not for these young people, we would not have much hope for the future. It is wonderful how the Lord has been working with these young people and preparing them for future labor. All they need is proper instruction and encouragement, and we intend, with the help of the Lord, to keep them to the front, and later you may look for good results.

Brethren Miller, Haworth, John Jones, J. H. N. Jones, Bishop Lewis, Gammidge, Longfield, Robinson, and Patterson, are the ministerial force at work in their respective fields. Brother W. J. Haworth, editor of the Gospel Standard, the Australian missionary paper, has been in poor health for some time. We request an interest in the prayers of the Saints for him. It would be a great loss to this mission if Brother Haworth is permanently disabled from serving in the missionary work, as he is one of our most able ministers.

Brother Miller has been very successful since laboring here, and is making his influence felt for good. He is small of stature, but blessed with a big mind and voice, and is getting to be one of our big preachers. The Lord surely knew what he wanted in this mission when he sent him along with me. I wish we had about five hundred such men in this mission. My, wouldn't we make things hum! Bishop Lewis is laboring in West Australia, and accomplishing much good there. He is a jovial, kind-hearted man, and has the faculty of making friends for himself and the cause wherever he goes. Brother John Jones, president of the New South Wales District, is another fine spirited man, and a worker from the word go. J. H. N. Jones, operating in Newcastle District, is one of our refined preachers, and wields a good influence. We are proud to be associated with such able, and good ministers. W. H. Gammidge is now laboring in Adelaide. He is an expert worker among the young, excelling in Sunday school and Religio work, and is also blessed with the gift of song. Good reports have come to me from his labors there.

Brethren Corbett and Stewart, presidents respectively of Balmain and Leichardt branches, in Sydney, gave us hearty support, and are the right men in right places. Brother Williams, a young man, is president of the Hamilton Branch at Newcastle, and is a growing man. He is ably assisted by other young men there. Old Brother Haworth is at the head of the Wallsend Branch; his associate officers are Ollie Jones, Roberts and Hopkins, all three recently ordained and possessed of the spirit of their office and calling.

The conference held here in Melbourne on April 10, 11, and 12, was a great success, with large attendance and spiritual meetings. I visited Phillip Island recently, baptized some there and organized a branch of twenty-one members, and the prospects are bright for gathering in more souls there. We ordained three of Brother John Graydon's sons to the offices of elder, priest, and teacher. He has two other sons who are equally interested with their brothers in the work. The parents surely should be proud of such sons. These young men are lovely singers, and will make a record for themselves in the Lord's work, if they are humble and prayerful.

On the way going and returning, I stopped at Hastings, the oldest branch in this district. The work there is at a very low ebb, at present, only six or seven attending the services. Brother Kippe, president of the branch, is one of our most faithful members, and is true to his calling. A number of the Saints who were once active have moved away, others are spiritually dead. Brother Wooley, an elder, is a member of this branch, but lives about five miles down the bay. He heard the gospel during the days of Glaud Rodger.

We heard many expressions of praise for the work done by Brother Rodger from those who were acquainted with him. T. W. Smith and wife, Brother Burton and wife, and James W. Gillen all did good service here. And in recent years, J. W. Wight, C. A. Butterworth, Paul M. Hanson, Gomer R. Wells, A. C. Barmore, John Kaler, E. F. Robertson, J. W. Davis, Brother Pitt and wife are had in remembrance by the people. Brother Pitt did a good work here and left a good influence behind him, as an evangelical minister. Our prayer is that the Lord will continue to bless our brother in his important work. The Saints often speak of Brother and Sister Pitt, and often laugh over Sister Pitt and her rocking chair and the American pork and beans.

We are pleased to hear reports of those who have preceded us, which is evidence to us that the labors of the missionaries are not forgotten, and that, in turn, if we are faithful, our efforts will also count.

You can be sure we are anxiously waiting to hear what was done at General Conference, and hope the sessions were peaceful and directed by the spirit of wisdom. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion and the prosperity of the cause of Christ, I remain,

Your brother in gospel bonds,
GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

News from Branches

Lamoni, Iowa

Lamoni presents a rather untidy appearance to the visitor nowadays. Our streets are torn up with the work of the excavators in the installation of our modern sewer system. With the successfully operated, municipally owned water system already in operation we shall appreciate this new move toward improvement.

Our fine new school building is nearing completion and will be ready for occupancy by the beginning of the school year. When finished, this will be one of the finest and best equipped school buildings in this part of the State. It is the present plan to house the high school and a part of the grades in the new building, the rest in the brick building on the west side.

Baccalaureate sermons, recitals, commencement exercises and other interesting school happenings have received much attention of late. The high school graduated a class of nineteen, then more recently Graceland College presented a class of twenty-five, mostly from the commercial department.

Elbert A. Smith delivered the baccalaureate sermons for both the high school and the college to large and appreciative audiences. Daniel F. Lambert, of Lamoni, was the speaker at the Graceland commencement exercises.

On May 23 and 24 a successful two-day meeting was held at Oland, Missouri, Branch. Elders F. A. Smith and J. W. Wight were in charge. Elders J. F. Garver and C. B. Woodstock represented the social purity work.

A cement platform has been erected in the church park and the usual evening services will be held outdoors as has been the custom in the past. This makes a very pleasant place for the meetings.

Flint, Michigan

The work in Flint is going steadily onward and upward. We are having good interest among the outsiders. We have regular meetings at our little church on the hill.

Our Wednesday night prayer services are well attended and a splendid interest is shown by the young. At one of the services mentioned a lady rose to her feet and said that she had been a member of a certain church for thirty-four years, and had never heard the gospel of Jesus Christ until she heard it at the Saints' church. The next week she was baptized, and at the confirmation the power of the Spirit of God was made manifest in the gift of prophecy, the meeting being a very spiritual one from beginning to end.

On Sunday the 31st Elder William Dowker of Lamoni, Iowa, was with us and preached both morning and evening. Services were marked by attention of both the Saints and friends, in spite of the heat and pest of insects.

We have a good Religio and good attendance and teachers, good music and programs. The young men of Flint Branch have taken up a line of work that is calculated to make them better able to defend the work, of which the HERALD will hear more as it progresses.

Wishing the Saints everywhere success in God's blessed work.

Brooklyn, New York

We expect to have a few special events this month at the Brooklyn church. June 4 our Sunday school participates in the Sunday school Anniversary Parade. This is the big yearly Sunday school city day. June 14 Children's Day will be celebrated, with services and exercises for the children the entire day. June 28 we hold a local Sunday school-Religio institute. This will be of especial interest to members of these two departments of the work. Local talent will be a distinctive feature, but speakers from other places will be on hand to help enliven the occasion.

Our choir is doing excellent work these days, under the leadership of Sister Ephraim Squire. Our general chorister, A. N. Hoxie, jr., gives us a visit every week, which stimulates the choir to greater diligence. His sacrifices in our behalf are greatly appreciated by all concerned.

E. B. HULL.

Let us gather up the sunbeams,
Lying all around our path;
Let us keep the wheat and roses,
Casting out the thorns and chaff;
Let us find our sweetest comfort
In the blessings of the day,
With a patient hand removing
All the briers from the way.

—Mrs. Albert Smith.

That never come home at night;
And hearts have broken of harsh words spoken,
That sorrow can never make right."

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral

To the Saints of Eastern Oklahoma District; Greeting: Having been chosen by the missionary in charge and First Presidency to labor in and preside over your district (subject to ratification of the next district conference, of course) I beg leave to report that I am now in the field for active labor.

This field is very large, (fifty or more counties) and the laborers few, hence I shall ask for the hearty cooperation of the local ministry and branch officers in filling appointments, old and new. I also desire to keep in close touch with the missionary force, that we may be able to meet all emergencies. Come, let us get acquainted, that we may work hand in hand for the uplift of mankind and the salvation of souls in and out of the ark of safety.

Please write me of your wants and needs. My home address is Tigris, Missouri, field address Wilburton, Oklahoma, until further notice, having made that my headquarters. Branch presidents will please report to me later.

Your colaborer in gospel bonds,

J. C. CHESTENSEN.

Quorum Notice

MICHIGAN ELDERS.

Michigan Quorum of Elders will meet at Port Huron, Michigan, June 27 and 28, during the reunion. We would like to see a large gathering of elders from all over the State, and especially invite those not enrolled with us to send in application. We wish the permanent address of the following: Alexander Emery, E. D. Tribley, Charles E. Grant. Anyone knowing the address of any of these please notify.

W. L. BENNET.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, 71 Antoinette Avenue.

Conference Notices

Alberta will meet with Michigan Branch, July 4 and 5, convening at 9 a. m., the 4th. Those coming on Grand Trunk Pacific will get off at Chauvin, Alberta; those on the Canadian Pacific at Macklin, Saskatchewan, where they will be met. Branch clerks send or bring statistical reports. Clyde C. Walrath, secretary, Edgerton, Alberta.

Northern Wisconsin will convene July 4 and 5 at Chetek, Wisconsin, last two days of reunion. Branch presidents should supply priesthood in the branches with blanks for reporting. Let us have a full report. Statistical reports should be properly filled out and in the hands of the secretary before conference convenes. B. C. Flint, president, Evansville, Wisconsin; Leroy Colbert, secretary, Chetek, Wisconsin.

Saskatchewan will meet with Iowa Branch, July 11 and 12. Buy single fare tickets and get at the same time a standard certificate. All trains will be met at Duro on the Grand Trunk Railway and at Haultain on the Canadian Northern Railway. The branch sends a cordial invitation to everyone to come. Sleeping rooms and meals will be provided. Grace Beckman, district secretary.

Northeastern Missouri will convene at Higbee, Missouri, June 27, at 10 a. m. Brother Rushton will be with us, and will hold special meetings for the priesthood. Send all reports to William C. Chapman, Higbee, Missouri. William C. Chapman, secretary.

Convention Notices

Northern Wisconsin Religio will convene during reunion at Chetek, Wisconsin, possibly the forenoon of July 3, if arrangements can be so made. All interested in Religio work come prepared to get busy. Locals should try to be represented. Report early. B. C. Flint, Evansville, Wisconsin, president; Mrs. Mildred Zerbel, 1017 Franklin Street, Appleton, Wisconsin, secretary.

At Port Huron reunion the Sunday school and Religio will engage in this general outline of institute work: June 20, 2 p. m., training for service, succeeded by following departmental conferences: Program committee, social committee, lookout committee, relief committee, library work, good literature work, music. Each morning at 7.15 the following lines will be the special subjects under discussion: Good talks, papers, and debates. Live wires both of the district and other parts of the vineyard, have been provided for all these meetings. General discussion in which you can take part will be had at each service. Monday, music and cradle roll; Tuesday, teaching and the teacher; Wednesday, library and home department; Thursday, sociality: what, why, when, where; Friday, teachers, officers, workers' meetings: why? V. D. Schaar, 1119 Fourth Avenue, Detroit, Michigan, William F. Sage, 1303 Third Avenue, Detroit, Michigan.

North Dakota Religio will meet at Logan, North Dakota, Tuesday afternoon, June 23. Bertha Graham, secretary.

Minnesota Sunday school will convene at Clitherall, June 12. Local secretaries please take notice, and have reports in promptly. Alta Kimber, secretary.

Alberta Religio will meet with Michigan Branch, July 3, 9 a. m., to elect officers and transact business. Let all locals be well represented. Ruth A. Walrath, secretary, Edgerton, Alberta.

Reunion Notices

Western Oklahoma reunion will be held at Eagle City, Oklahoma, in the Wakefield Grove, one half mile west of the depot, July 31 to August 9. We are trying to cut down the expense, and desire all who can to bring tents; those who can not should send orders to Lemuel Dyke, Eagle City, Oklahoma, by July 1. Cooperative boarding tent will be run by the Woman's Auxiliary, and we wish the cooperation of all who come. We are not to have hired cooks, thus saving that expense, and the Saints have agreed to donate all the vegetables they can, also milk, etc. We believe the meals will cost less than ten cents. Plenty of pasture. Eagle City is on the Frisco Railroad, near the center of the district. T. P. Powell, district president, Hubert Case, minister in charge.

Toronto reunion will be held in the beautiful reunion grove at Low Banks, Ontario, July 4 to 20. The success of last year warrants us in enlarging the new dining hall and new kitchen. The grove has been improved greatly. Meals: adult tickets, 21 meals, $3; children, 6 to 15 years, 21 meals, $1.50; under six, if accompanied by parents, free. Tents 10 by 12, 5-foot walls, sold in Toronto at $30, may be purchased from us for $17 cash, if ordered by June 15. Straw tick, 25 cents. We sell combination bedstead and springs for $2.35. Tents may be rented at $5 for the entire reunion. We have invited the missionary in charge, president of district and other speakers. Sunday school and Religio work will be conducted. Missionaries coming will please notify Bishop R. C. Evans, 35 Huron Street, Toronto, not later than June 15, so that tents may be provided. Those wishing tents or other reunion articles will please notify Brother Evans by that date.

Eastern Oklahoma reunion will convene with Shawnee Branch, Avery, Texas, July 24, continuing ten days. We are expecting good speakers of the missionary force. We have secured a nice grove in east Avery. Tents: 10 by 12, $3; 12 by 14, $3.50; 14 by 16, $4. Order not later than July 10. Avery is located fifty miles west of Texarkana, on the Texas and Pacific Railway. B. F. Pollard, for committee.

Two-day Meetings

Two-day meetings will be held at the places and on the dates indicated: Coleman, Michigan, June 27 and 28; Whittemore, Michigan, July 4 and 5; Houghton Lake, Michigan, July 11 and 12. Everyone invited. George W. Burt, district president.

Two-day meetings will be held at Wheeling, West Virginia, June 20 and 21, first service Saturday at 2.30 p. m. Apostle R. C. Russell is to be with us. We invite all to attend. Samuel Martin, branch clerk.

Autumn Leaves Wanted

I would appreciate it if anyone having the following numbers of Autumn Leaves would drop me a card stating the number or numbers they could furnish me: August, 1901; January, 1902; June, 1903; March, 1909. Myrtle Holsworth, Pittsburg, Kansas.

Notice of Appointment

By concurrence of the Presidency, missionary in charge, and Presiding Bishop, Elder R. J. Parker has been appointed to Northern California, Oakland objective point. Those concerned please take notice.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary First Presidency.

Independence Summer Vacation Bible School

Independence Branch has decided to hold another Daily Vacation Bible School, to begin June 29, and hold for five weeks. G. E. Harrington was selected as manager, Sister Emma Criley as director of the school. We have decided to hold an institute for three days, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, June 17, 18, and 19, from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. All throughout the stake interested in the summer school work are invited to attend, and get such information as will enable them to begin the work elsewhere. This work should be begun in some of the large branches of the stake, and if there are those who have a desire to engage in it they may write the undersigned for such information as we can give concerning the same.

G. E. HARRINGTON.

Funeral services conducted at Saints' chapel, Bevier, Missouri, May 22, 1914, by W. B. Richards and F. T. Mussell.

June (Travel) Century

Not only a goodly number of travel articles, but seven stories, and a great many pictures, including full color reproductions of paintings and Century color-tones, go to fill the 168 pages of the June (Travel) number of The Century, the cover of which is a landscape by George Inness, jr., printed in full colors. Arnold Bennett gives a narrative of personal adventure under the title "From the log of the Velsa." It seems that his holidays are spent in a small auxiliary sloop in the North Sea and in the waters of Holland. The illustrations are painted by his traveling companion, E. A. Rickard. The biographer of Mark Twain, Albert Bigelow Paine, in "The car that went abroad," tells of the successful carrying out of a plan to take the whole Paine family on a European trip in a small automobile at a very low cost. "A painted city of the Spanish main" is a bit of colorful description by Julius Muller. E. F. Benson, author of Dodo's Daughter, described "The Dewan-i-Khas, or hall of private audience," at Delhi. Fiction of the number begins with a graduation-time love story by Maria Thompson Daviess called "Digging up Sam." There follow "The old soldier," by Eden Phillpotts, the scene of which is laid in Dartmoor; a story of sentiment, "The old road," by Marion Pugh Reed; "Sweet pea," the tale of a polo pony, by Rodman Gilder; a story of which a negro is the chief character, called "The Ishmaelite," by Elsie Singmaster; a story with a thrill, "The seventh glass," by Frederick Arnold Kummer. There are pages gathered from the great sculptor's diary under the title of "Rodin's notebook," "Reminiscences of Tolstoy" by his son, Count Ilya Tolstoy; a paper on the

Social Purity Literature

Proper instruction and training of the child has come to be an intelligent factor in the creating of a people physically strong and morally clean. To this end the Social Purity Board of the Church recommends the following:

A Pure Life—By C. B. Woodstock, paper, 5 cents each, 50 cents per dozen. An interesting presentation of the purity problem.

Herself—By E. B. Lowry, cloth boards, $1. Chaste, matter-of-fact information by a woman physician. Interesting, refined, clear; a book for every family library.

Himself—By E. B. Lowry, cloth boards, $1. A companion volume to Herself. Wholesome in tone, refined in character, complete in detail.

Perfect Boyhood—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 20 cents. Just the book for a boy from ten to fifteen years of age. Contains what boys ought to know and no more, all told in a straightforward, wholesome manner.

Perfect Girlhood—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 20 cents. A companion volume to Perfect Boyhood, unexcelled for girls from ten to fifteen years of age.

Perfect Manhood—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 30 cents. A chaste, practical, scientific explanation of man's reproductive nature.

Perfect Womanhood—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 30 cents. Containing vital information, counsel, and inspiration for women. It is sane, safe, practical.

Guide to Sex Instruction—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 50 cents. Vital facts of life for all ages. Five books in one. Essential in many homes.

How to Tell the Story of Life—By T. W. Shannon; paper, 20 cents. A valuable book for parents who desire to properly instruct their children.

Spooning—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 15 cents. A vital social problem intelligently solved. Should be read by all young people.

Book Reviews

POEMS AND BALLADS.—By Hermann Hagedorn, The Macmillan Company, New York City, 66 Fifth Avenue; $1. This little book of poems contains considerable verse of more than ordinary interest and power. For instance note the following verse from the poem entitled, "Death and the Lord":

"Poor Jesus Christ! A gift to me
 They snared him, scourged him, nailed him high.
 Yet there are times I seem to see
 His face, and wonder, Did he die?"

Also this from his short poem entitled, "Song."

"There is a music in my head.
 By day and night it dins:
 A far away, sweet, silken thread
 Of ghostly violins."

Two Weeks or More in Colorado
 —as Inexpensive as Home

You will be surprised to learn how little it costs to spend two weeks or more in Colorado. I have corrected many wrong impressions about Colorado's Hotels and Boarding Houses and my road, "The Burlington," (C. B. & Q. R. R.) now gets out a booklet showing how reasonably and pleasantly one can spend a vacation in Colorado. "I would love to go to Colorado on my vacation this summer, but the Hotel prices are so high"—used to be the expression of many. Five minutes' talk convinced them otherwise. Colorado has her share of elaborate Hotels, but Colorado has lots of comfortable boarding places where the rates are as low as $8.00 a week—clean surroundings, and wholesome appetizing fare.
 I would like to give you a copy of our booklet. It will give you an entirely different idea about Colorado's Hotel expenses, a complete list of Hotels and boarding houses, their locations, rates, conveniences, elevations and other information. In addition, it gives full particulars on Colorado—its attractions and points of interest.

THE COSMOGENY OF GENESIS 1

In connection with the series of "Notes on Genesis" just closed, we reproduce here certain extracts on the Cosmogeny of Genesis that may be of interest:

Consider first the cosmogeny of Genesis 1.

Geology has already established some propositions that are universally acknowledged to be correct.

First. The earth was once covered with water, and everything was at a very high temperature.

Second. Owing to rapid evaporation of water from the earth's interior heat, dense clouds formed in the upper atmosphere which excluded the light from the heavenly bodies, and darkness was upon the face of the deep.

Third. After a time there were upheavals of the earth's crust and the continents began to appear.

Fourth. As cooling proceeded, precipitation would diminish the density of the overhanging clouds, and light could penetrate them enough to make a distinction between day and night, and to permit the existence of low forms of vegetable and animal life, long before one could locate the heavenly bodies.

Fifth. Vegetable life appeared before animal life.

Sixth. Low forms of animal life followed the first appearance of vegetable life.

Seventh. Following these, the higher forms of animal life appeared.

To say nothing of any others, here are seven propositions, reached by purely scientific methods, and yet they are clearly stated in the first chapter of Genesis. The writer of that chapter must have known something in general of the subject that he was writing upon. . . .

One of the most seemingly absurd things in the order of events as recorded in Genesis is the appearance of light before that of the heavenly bodies. But, as stated in proposition four above, no one could dispute that in the natural order light could penetrate the clouds enough to make a distinction between night and day long before the sun, moon and stars could be located in the heavens. The only question is as to how long this condition could have continued. Men assume that it must have been very short. But this assumption is contrary to all other assumptions regarding cosmic processes. It may have been long enough to admit of all the events recorded in Genesis 1. Men, even now, might learn something from one whose wisdom in this matter has been so wonderfully demonstrated.—The First Chapter of Genesis as the Rock Foundation for Science and Religion, by Albert L. Gridley, pp. 5 to 8.

It is unnecessary, for such a purpose as the present, to enter into the disputes which have prevailed as to the exact correspondence of the order of creation as recorded in the first chapter of Genesis with the discoveries of modern astronomical and geological science. The wonderful thing is that that account should be, at the very least, so near the truth, that there should be any possibility of dispute about the matter. Take all the other cosmogenies that have been found in other ancient records, including in particular those Babylonian records which are at present attracting so much attention, and which of them is there, respecting which the idea could be for a moment entertained, that there was any material correspondence between them and the records of modern science? Yet it was possible for a man of science, sufficiently distinguished to have been the president of the British Association,<sup>1</sup> to state, less than ten years ago, that "it would not be easy even now to construct a statement of the development of the world in popular terms so concise and so accurate" as the first chapter of Genesis.—Reverend Henry Wace, Dean of Canterbury, in Christian Apologetics, pp. 31, 32.

May I say one passing word about the cosmogeny? Most of us remember the great encounter between Mr. Gladstone and Professor Huxley in the pages of the Nineteenth Century upon that subject. Now this is a matter that I have gone into very closely, and the only point upon which Professor Huxley seemed plainly to show that there was a conflict between the clear results of scientific research and the first chapter of Genesis was shown afterwards to be a mere blunder. In the pages of the Nineteenth Century he expressed his admiration for Professor Dana and his willingness to sit at his feet upon this subject, and Professor Dana wrote to the Nineteenth Century that he agreed with Mr. Gladstone, and not with Professor Huxley.—Sir Robert Anderson, K. C. B., LL. D., in Christian Apologetics, p. 43.

Of the two books from which we have quoted we may add that the first, The First Chapter of Genesis as the Rock Foundation for Science and Religion, is published by Richard G. Badger, Boston. The second, Christian Apologetics, may be obtained from The Tabard Inn Book Store, 1302 Filmore Street, Philadelphia.

WE ARE ACCUSED OF CREED REVISION

Some weeks ago we devoted several pages to an examination of certain changes that have been made in denominational creeds. We did this in response to a challenge made by a certain clergyman that we point out even one creed that has been changed or modified on one important point.

Now comes a writer (formerly a member of the church) in the Evening and Morning Star, who seems very anxious to "get back" at us. Assuming that certain changes have been made in the Doctrine and Covenants, or rather that the Doctrine and Covenants does not agree with the Book of Commandments, and assuming that the Doctrine and Covenants is our church creed, "their creed book," as he says, this writer accuses us of having changed our creed.

He concludes his letter thus:

Cast the beam out of thine own eye, thou hypocrite, said Christ, and then thou can see clearly to cast the mote out of thy brother's eye, in his creed changing.

We cheerfully retort that we cast the beam out years ago; also we cast the hypocrite out, as our critic well knows, and as the church records show. How can we better designate one who finds no flaw at all in the church for years while he is a member, and then suddenly when expelled for good cause and after he fails in every effort to remain in, professes to discover all manner of evils and iniquities, concerning which he was conspicuously silent while supported by the church.

Our critic evidently is like the man who had one story which he always told on all possible occasions. With it he was instant in season and out of season. It had to do with the firing of a gun, and if he could not drag it in by any other means he would slam the door and then jump and exclaim, "Was that a gun? That reminds me of a story about a gun."

We were talking about creeds. When he could keep still no longer our critic jumped up and exclaimed, "Who said Book of Commandments? That reminds me," etc. Evidently he hoped that in the excitement of the diversion readers of the Evening and Morning Star would not stop to think that the Book of Commandments was not a creed, and the Doctrine and Covenants is not a creed. The Book of Commandments may be a good enough hobby for one to ride who has ridden it so long that he can not stand on his own legs, but please do not put it through its paces as a creed.

The Book of Commandments was not a creed. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants is not a creed. Hence the little argument falls as flat as a punctured tire. The divine statement is, "The principles of my gospel, which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel." Though the Book of Doctrine and Covenants contains many valuable revelations, it is not and never was our creed; the Bible and Book of Mormon are recognized as containing the fullness of the gospel and doctrine of Jesus Christ which we are to believe and teach. We have never modified, changed, or abandoned a single gospel principle or doctrine therein set forth.

Probably our nearest approach to a formal, written creed is that document known as The Epitome of Faith in which are set forth in orderly manner the leading tenets of our faith. It has been generally accepted and published by the church (though not exactly as a creed) for about seventy-two years. No leading principle of faith contained therein has ever been changed or repudiated by the church, neither during the days of Joseph the Martyr nor by the Reorganized Church.

It will be seen, then, how futile is the fatuous argument of our opponent that we have revised our creed. He may well ponder the mote and beam text of his own citation.

So far as the Book of Commandments is concerned, as we have previously stated, it was not a creed. But even if terms were to be so distorted that it might be labeled a creed, if properly adopted by the church, the facts are that it was never adopted by a General Conference, a General Assembly, or any quorum of the church. So even if it were charged, the church and the church officials are not guilty of creed revision. No church can be held to a creed that it has not adopted. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants stands upon quite a different footing.

UNENVIABLE CLASS OF LECTURERS

As an illustration of the utter disregard for the truth on the part of a class of lecturers against what they are pleased to call "Mormonism," we note statements by Mrs. D. C. Wells, missionary worker, made before a missionary institute of the Presbyterian Church at Toledo, Ohio, and appearing in the Toledo Christian Commonwealth. Mrs. Wells said:

I am fully aware that there are two divisions in the church, the regulars, under the present leader, Joseph F. Smith, and the Josephites, being followers of the son of the original Joseph Smith.

This woman must know that the courts of the country have with the evidence submitted found the Reorganized Church to be the "regulars," or the successor to the original church. If she has read to any extent the literature of the church she must know that the Reorganized Church is the only true custodian of the teachings of the early Latter Day Saints.

The Commonwealth also reports Mrs. Wells as saying: "In the Book of Mormon and in the first sermons of Brigham Young polygamy is commanded."

Now our missionary friend does not have access to the first sermons of Brigham Young, preached before the exodus to Utah. And if she did have them they would not refer to polygamy in any sense, much less command it. She must know that the first public statement promulgating polygamy was made in Salt Lake City in 1852, several years after the exodus.

Again, polygamy is not commanded in the Book of Mormon, but is positively forbidden, and in the strongest language, as witness:

Riplakish did not do that which was right in the sight of the Lord, for he did have many wives and concubines.—Ether 4: 48.

David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. . . . Hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women.

As already indicated Mrs. Wells can not be in ignorance of the facts with reference to the points herein referred to unless her investigation has been superficial and for her information she depends upon others, of unscrupulous methods. In either instance, however, maliciously misrepresenting, or unwittingly aping the misrepresentations of others, she aligns herself with an unenviable class of lecturers. Posing as a Christian missionary and as an informant in all matters denominated by herself "Mormonism," as a crusader she might well borrow consideration from charity and dignity from truth.

We mention Mrs. Wells and this incident only because she and it are representative of a class—fighting the truth, they fight not with the truth; their strength lies in such injury as may be inflicted with error. Zealous as are their efforts, they are worthy of a better cause. J. F. GARVER.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.—On the 13th in biennial convention at Chicago, Illinois, the General Federation of Women's Clubs indorsed woman suffrage by an overwhelming majority. The Illinois Supreme Court by a majority of one has sustained the Illinois woman suffrage law recently passed.

TRUST LEGISLATION.—Three bills embodying the administration trust legislation passed the House on the 5th by an overwhelming majority and were sent to the Senate for consideration. Amendments to these bills exempt labor and farmers' organizations from prosecution as trusts, and forbid the injunction in labor disputes.

CANAL TOLLS REPEAL.—On the 10th the Senate amended the Tolls Repeal Act formerly passed by the House, providing that the passage of the act should not be construed as a waiver of any rights of the United States under the treaty with Great Britain or the treaty with Panama. The next day the Senate passed the repeal act as amended, by a vote of fifty to thirty-five. On the 12th the House accepted the amendment by a vote of two hundred and sixteen to seventy-one, and sent the bill to the President.

MOVIES FOR CHURCH.—Educators, social and religious workers have completed plans for weekly moving picture service in four hundred churches in as many cities throughout the United States, beginning October 1. Palestine, Europe, and America are to furnish sources for pictures and picture plays. This venture is intended to help solve the amusement problem for the churches served.

MEXICAN WAR.—Active hostilities continue. Strategic points are reported taken by the Constitutionals in the vicinity of Mazatlan, where a general assault has been begun. Federalists near San Luis Potosi have been routed in minor engagements. The Constitutionalist armed steamer Culiacan is reported destroyed by the Federalist troop ship Guerreo near Guaymas, Sonora, the 11th. Strained relations between Carranza and Villa are said to have reached a critical stage when ammunition from the Antilla, purchased with funds furnished by Villa out of the money obtained under his personal campaign, was delivered to other divisions of the Constitutionalist Army.

UNITED STATES AIR FLEET.—It is reported that the United States Government will strengthen the aeronautical branch of the Army. Thirty aeroplanes are said to have been ordered. The United States has heretofore made no systematic effort to build up an air fleet comparable with similar fleets of Europe.

MEXICO AND UNITED STATES.—The Huerta government countermanded the order to blockade the port of Tampico, and on the 12th the ammunition carried by the Antilla and for the Constitutionals was unloaded at Tampico. Sixteen hundred cases of ammunition and two aeroplanes were immediately started north by special train. President Wilson has directed in an executive order that no vessels bearing ammunition for Mexico be cleared from American ports, and that the embargo at border points be enforced. The Washington administration accepted in principle the pacification plans suggested by the mediation conference. Under these plans a secretary of foreign affairs would be appointed. Huerta would then resign, and as provided by the Mexican Constitution would be succeeded by the foreign minister, who would become provisional president. The parley continued, the discussion being over the one to be appointed, and the manner of appointment. The Mexican delegates insisted that Huerta be permitted to appoint. The American delegates declined to accede to this arrangement on the grounds that it would be tantamount to recognizing Huerta, and would not be acceptable to the Constitutionals. They insisted upon the appointment of a "foremost Constitutionalist." The Mexican delegates consented to the selection of a prominent Mexican with Constitutionalist sympathies, not actively identified with the revolution. On the 12th a protocol was signed, providing for a provisional government, the character to be determined later, and which would be recognized by the United States. Against the urgings of the United States that the Constitutionals be permitted to participate unconditionally in the conference, the mediators stand firm in the position that the Constitutionals must first suspend hostilities and accept what has been agreed to in the conference. Ignoring the terms on which the mediators have determined to admit them, so far as statement and reply is concerned, Carranza has appointed three delegates to the conference. Whether they are finally to be sent and received, and upon what terms, is yet to be seen.

WELSH DISESTABLISHMENT.—For the third time the House of Commons has passed a bill to disestablish the Anglican Church in Wales. Twice vetoed by the Lords, this bill now becomes law.

THE "WILD WOMEN" OF ENGLAND.—Professor Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley announces that we are moving toward a maternal rather than a paternal government. In view of the activities of the "wild women" of England some are led to ask, "What kind of mothers will these English be?" Militant suffragettes have continued their destruction of property and assaults on individuals with increased activity. Recently suffragettes entered several art galleries and injured or destroyed six or seven valuable paintings. An attendant in the Dore Gallery, London, attempted to prevent such an outrage and himself was hacked mercilessly with a hatchet. His assailant declared that militants had been "too ladylike." Two Belfast editors were beaten up by Amazons, one of them so badly that he was taken to the hospital. Ancient historic churches were burned and church bells, more than four hundred years old, destroyed. Other historic and valuable property was burned by "arson squads." An attempt was made to blow up the viaduct which carries water from Loch Katrine to Glasgow. Fifty-seven militants arraigned before a magistrate in London attacked the judge and pandemonium ensued in the court room. A woman arose in his Majesty's theater and denounced the king, who was present. When guards attempted to remove her it was discovered that she had chained herself to the seat, and her tirade was continued while the chain was being filed in two. Screaming and fighting women interrupted the services in Westminster Abbey. The daily destruction of plate glass and the defacing of buildings goes on. It is alleged that public sentiment has thus been turned against the cause of woman suffrage, and that real friends of the cause deplore such conduct. People ask, If women go to such lengths of folly and violence to gain a point before they have the vote what will they not do to carry a point after the vote is granted? Deep concern is felt because these outrages have so exasperated the people that it is feared the militants can not much longer be protected against mob violence.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

QUITTING NEAL.—A member of the editorial staff was telling his little boy a long story. Finally the boy grew tired of the story and said, "I am going, now." "But I am not done with the story," the father urged. "I am," the little fellow answered, and took his departure. R. B. Neal, of Pikeville, has started several papers against the church. But none of them have lived very long. Invariably his subscribers have said, in effect, "You may not be done with your paper; but we are." Thus the Helper died. Thus the Sword of Laban perished; and being revived for a few months by a saline injection and the pulmotor, died again most miserably. And now appears Neal in the Word of Truth, June, 1914, with this pathetic wail: "The Word of Truth family hasn't given me much encouragement about reviving the Sword of Laban, it to be sanctified wholly to battling Mormonism." Probably, not believing in present-day miracles, readers of the Word of Truth do not think that the Sword of Laban could be "sanctified." At any rate they notify Neal, "You may not be done with the thing; but we are."

MAKE IT UNANIMOUS.—In discussing an election at a neighboring point at which the "wets" hope to make "wet" a place now "dry," the Deseret Evening News says: "Close the saloons as pest holds, and the drink habit will be much easier to combat." It would be interesting to know if the News intends this sentiment to apply to Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution, the Smoot Drug Company, et al.

REORGANIZED SAINTS COMPLIMENTED.—Ex-Senator Dubois of Idaho in an article in the Gem State Rural and Live Stock Journal, entitled, "The case against the Mormon Church," in which he severely arraigns the Utah Church for its practices, distinguishes between that church and the Reorganized Church, and compliments the Reorganized Saints in the following language:

It is fair and just for me to say that there is a branch of the "Mormons" called the "Josephites" who ought to be separated clearly from the Brighamite Mormons. The "Josephites" claim that they are the custodians of the church as it was founded. They claim that Brigham Young interjected doctrines into the church which the "Mormons" did not accept in the beginning. However this may be, the "Josephite Mormons" with their headquarters at Lamoni, in the State of Iowa, and wherever they are, no matter in what part of the country, are among the best of our citizens in all respects. They do not believe in polygamy; they never practice polygamy; they discountenance it. They do not believe in church dictation in political affairs. They are the same as other church organizations, and to their religion no one has any objection.

THE BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS

At a very early day the authorities of the church recognized the necessity of an organ through which the position and doctrine of the church could be promulgated and defended; for the press had almost universally given its powerful influence to the opposition. Books and periodicals were distributed widely, all more or less unfair to the movement inaugurated through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery and others.

"EVENING AND MORNING STAR"

Hence it was that so soon as the place for the future city was determined steps were taken for the establishment of a printing press upon the consecrated spot. Almost immediately after those who engaged in the dedication of Zion had returned to Kirtland, a conference was held in which William W. Phelps was instructed to stop at Cincinnati, Ohio, on his way to Missouri and purchase a printing press and type for the purpose of establishing and publishing a monthly paper called The Evening and the Morning Star. This move was made necessary by instruction given in July before, while they were yet in the land of Zion, and in the same revelation in which the location of Zion was pointed out. It read as follows:

And again, verily I say unto you, Let my servant William W. Phelps be planted in this place, and be established as a printer unto the church; and lo, if the world receiveth his writings (behold, here is wisdom,) let him obtain whatsoever he can in righteousness, for the good of the Saints. And let my servant Oliver Cowdery assist him, even as I have commanded, in whatsoever place I shall appoint unto him, to copy, and to correct, and select, that all things may be right before me, as it shall be proved by the Spirit through him. And thus let those of whom I have spoken, be planted in the land of Zion, as speedily as can be, with their families, to do those things even as I have spoken.

In a very short time after Phelps had purchased the press and taken it to Independence, it was decided in conference at Kirtland that Joseph Smith should prepare the revelations and send them by the hand of Oliver Cowdery to Independence, Missouri, to be printed.

So particular was it that these things should be preserved in safety that the voice of inspiration directed that another should accompany Oliver Cowdery who would help him both to protect the writings and money intrusted to him, and assist in preparing material for publication. The instruction reads:

Hearken unto me, saith the Lord your God, for my servant Oliver Cowdery's sake; it is not wisdom in me that he should be intrusted with the commandments and the moneys which he shall carry unto the land of Zion, except one go with him who will be true and faithful: wherefore I, the Lord, willeth that my servant John Whitmer should go with my servant Oliver Cowdery; and also that he shall continue in writing and making a history of all the important things which he shall observe and know concerning my church; and also that he receive counsel and assistance from my servant Oliver Cowdery, and others.

May 1, a council held at Independence, Missouri, ordered that three thousand copies of the Book of Commandments be published as soon as possible and that William W. Phelps, Oliver Cowdery, and John Whitmer should review and prepare such revelations as should be deemed proper for publication for the press and that William W. Phelps should correct and print the hymns which had been selected by Emma Smith.

It will be seen that the new publishing house was very early accumulating work enough to keep it busy. The first issue of the Evening and Morning Star appeared under date of June, 1832, and in the first number the publication of the revelations began. In July the first issue reached Kirtland and of this event Joseph Smith wrote:

In July we received the first number of the Evening and Morning Star, which was a joyous treat to the Saints. Delightful, indeed, was it to contemplate that the little band of brethren had become so large and grown so strong in so short a space as to be able to issue a paper of their own, which contained not only some of the revelations, but other information also, which would gratify and enlighten the humble inquirer after truth.

So embittered was the public mind against the truth that the press universally had been arrayed against us; and although many newspapers published the prospectus of our new paper, yet it appeared to have done more to calumniate the editor than give publicity to the sheet. Editors thought to do us harm, while the Saints rejoiced that they could do nothing against the truth, but for it.

The purpose of this paper can be determined by reference to the following extract from the prospectus:

The Evening and the Morning Star, besides the secret of the Lord, which is now with them that fear him, and the everlasting gospel, which must go to all nations, before the Holy One shall stand upon the Mount of Olivet, and upon the mighty ocean, even the great deep, and upon the islands of the sea, and upon the land of Zion, to destroy the wicked with the brightness of his coming—will also contain whatever of truth or information that can benefit the Saints of God, temporally as well as spiritually, in these last days, whether in prose or poetry, without interfering with politics, broils, or the gainsayings of the world. While some may say this paper is opposed to all combinations under whatever plausible character, others will know that it is for an eternal union whose maker and supporter is God; thus all must be as they are, inasmuch as they that plow iniquity and sow wickedness reap the same; but wisdom is justified of her children.

From this press, also, may be expected as soon as wisdom directs many sacred records, which have slept for ages.

This periodical was issued monthly until the first volume was completed in May, 1833; and two numbers on second volume, viz: June and July had appeared when it came suddenly to an end by mob violence. The printing office, and dwelling house of William W. Phelps, the editor, razed to the ground, the press broken, the type pied, the book work, furniture, and other property destroyed on July 20, 1833.

The Evening and the Morning Star was then transferred to Kirtland, Ohio, where its publication was resumed on the December following by the firm of F. G. Williams and Company. The mob permitted Davis and Kelley to take the press. They moved it to Liberty, Clay County, and commenced the publication of a weekly paper called the Missouri Enquirer.

Subsequently it was moved to Saint Joseph, Missouri, and the Gazette was printed on it for a time. Thence it was taken to Denver, Colorado, where probably its existence as a press terminated. Davis and Kelley paid to the attorneys of the Saints three hundred dollars, which was all they ever realized from a property which cost about three or four thousand dollars.

BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS

The Book of Commandments was still in an unfinished condition when the press was destroyed, and with other papers the sheets were scattered in the streets. Some of these scattered sheets were gathered up by private parties and preserved, but the volumes are on account of these circumstances very scarce. These when compared with original manuscripts were found to be very faulty, and hence the book has never been republished nor indorsed by the church.

It was at first anticipated to have them ready for distribution earlier, and July 2, 1833, instruction was given by the authorities at Kirtland to consign them to Newel K. Whitney and company, Kirtland, Ohio, care of Kelley and Walworth, Cleveland, Ohio. This instruction probably did not reach them until after the destruction, and if it had it would have found the work not ready for shipment. It was evident that the book was never completed, for the instruction was to close with the Appendix, which does not appear in any Book of Commandments which we have ever examined. The last revelation in the Book of Commandments is dated September, 1831, while the Appendix bears the date of November 3, 1831.

The last sentence in the Book of Commandments reads: "For verily I say that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim." As this revelation was subsequently published in the Doctrine and Covenants the sentence read: "For verily I say that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim, wherefore they shall be plucked out." So the Book of Commandments ends in the middle of a sentence.

The Evening and the Morning Star for May, 1833, contains the following upon which we base the above deductions:

Having given, in a previous number, the preface to the Book of Commandments now in press, we give below, the close, or as it has been called, the Appendix. It affords us joy to lay before the Saints an article fraught with so much heavenly intelligence, having previously published many from the same book for their instruction.

We hope that while they read it they will remember that it is a voice from him who spake as never man spake. We hope that while they are blessed with revelation upon revelation, with commandment upon commandment, and with precept upon precept, they will remember to do them. We hope that while they are thus blessed with the precious word of their Lord from heaven, in these last days, to fulfill that which was spoken in days of old, they will hearken to his counsels and lend an ear to all his precepts.

Indeed it is a source of joy to us to know that all the prophecies and promises which are contained in them, which have not been fulfilled, will come to pass. The Saints may lift up their heads and rejoice, for their redemption will soon be perfected. Soon the curtain of heaven will be unfolded, as a scroll is unfolded after it is rolled up, and they will see their Lord face to face. In view of these coming scenes, they may lift up their heads and rejoice, and praise his holy name, that they are permitted to live in the days when he returns to his people his everlasting covenant to prepare them for his presence.

The book from which this important revelation is taken will be published in the course of the present year, at from twenty-five to fifty cents a copy. We regret that in consequence of circumstances not within our control, this book will not be offered to our brethren as soon as was anticipated. We beg their forbearance, and solicit an interest in their prayers, promising to use our exertions with all our means to accomplish the work.

It will be further seen from the above, written two months before the press was destroyed, that it was not then anticipated to publish the book so soon, as before expected. The promise was only made to publish it sometime in the course of the year.

Prior to the destruction of the press, however, some of the sheets of the book, just how many we do not know, had been sent to Kirtland, Ohio, and had received some attention. In a letter signed by the First Presidency, dated June 25, 1833, occurs the following paragraph:

The following errors we have found in the commandments, as printed; Fortieth chapter, tenth verse, third line, instead of corruptible, put corrupted. Fourteenth verse of the same chapter, fifth line, instead of respecter to persons put respecter of persons. Twenty-first verse, second line of the same chapter, instead of respecter to, put respecter of. Forty-fourth chapter, twelfth verse, last line, instead of hands, put heads.

It has been assumed that this is tantamount to an indorsement of, at least, all that preceded this in the Book of Commandments, for Joseph Smith would have made other corrections when these were made if the publication did not meet with his approval.

This assumption is not safe. Everyone acquainted with printing knows that some mistakes are easily detected by a casual reading while others are only found by careful comparison. Sentences or even paragraphs might be added or omitted without detection while the substitution of one word for another would be detected at once. There is no reason to conclude that the person who made these corrections had original manuscript before him, but the contrary. Nor is there any evidence that Joseph Smith had read these printed sheets at the time the criticism was made. Though his name in connection with those of Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams is signed to the letter, it was Sidney Rigdon who wrote the letter. He said, "I, Sidney, who write this letter in behalf of the Presidency," etc. If Rigdon, after a casual reading made these criticisms, Joseph Smith, in reading over the letter, would recognize the apparent correctness of his statements without reading the proofs and would sign the letter without further inquiry.

The criticisms made are of that character that one would make after a casual reading, especially one of Sidney Rigdon's temperament and training.

The following are the sentences criticized, with corrections in brackets:

Verily I say unto you, ye are clean but not all, and there is none else with whom I am pleased, for all flesh is corruptible [corrupted] before me.

All flesh is mine, and I am no respecter to [of] persons. For what man among you, having twelve sons, and is no respecter to [of] them.

Again I say unto you, that it shall not be given to anyone to go forth to preach my gospel, or to build up my church, except he be ordained by some one who has the authority, and it is known to the church that he has authority, and has been regularly ordained by the hands [heads] of the church.

This kind of errors is easily detected without reading by copy. It is further evident that Rigdon did not have copy, for his corrections are not all correct. When compared with the original it was found that he was correct in regard to the second and fourth instances cited above, but the first and third were found to agree with the originals. They therefore appear in Doctrine and Covenants of 1835 just as printed in the Book of Commandments. The criticisms of Rigdon did not reach Missouri in time to receive attention in the Book of Commandments, but subsequently the originals were obtained, and the corrections made by Rigdon, with others, were made in the 1835 edition so far as he was found to be correct. These criticisms also bear internal marks of Rigdon's mind. Take for instance the first one: It will be conceded that the word corruptible is the best rendering, and more in harmony with the context, but those who have been students of Rigdon's productions in those days will agree that from his standpoint all flesh was corrupted, hence he made the mistake of thinking that it should read that way.

That our contention that the Book of Commandments was not completed when the press and contents of The Evening and Morning Star office were seized by the mob is correct further appears from a notice of the Doctrine and Covenants, published in the Messenger and Advocate for August, 1835, and which reads as follows:

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS

By an article entitled "General Assembly," in this month's paper, it will be seen that the Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Latter Day Saints, is nearly ready for sale. At any rate it may be expected in the course of a month, as one thousand copies have already been delivered to the binder.

Since the commencement of this work, even in Missouri, where, just before it was ready to come out it fell into the hands of a mob, our anxiety and exertions have been unabated, to put in the possession of the Saints, and all who feel a desire to be saved. We have greatly desired that this little sacred volume might go into the world, that the inhabitants thereof might know what the Lord was about to do in the last days. We know that the word of the Lord is sure, and never fails, and, as faithful servants to him, living in the hope of a glorious resurrection with the just, when the righteous arise to meet him in the cloud, we bear testimony that the revelations therein contained are true and faithful.

This is signed P., supposed to be W. W. Phelps, who was closely associated with the work referred to in Missouri. If it had been known to the church generally that the book was finished and in circulation Phelps or no one else at that early date would have said: "Just before it was ready to come out it fell into the hands of a mob." This statement with the testimony following is very significant, and makes our contention on this point doubly clear.

The "General Assembly" spoken of in the above extract as published in the same issue of the paper is the minutes of the General Assembly of August 17, 1835, from which we quote largely in this article.

TESTIMONY OF OLIVER COWDERY

But the testimony of Oliver Cowdery, one of the committee to prepare the revelations for publication, and one of those engaged in the printing of the Book of Commandments, puts the matter entirely at rest, and justifies the church in setting the Book of Commandments aside as unreliable, because of being imperfect. The fourteen numbers of The Evening and Morning Star printed at Independence, Missouri, were reprinted at Kirtland, Ohio, under the editorship of Oliver Cowdery. The revelations contained in the reprint differing from the same revelations in the Book of Commandments, Oliver Cowdery made an explanation as follows:

On the revelations we merely say that we were not a little surprised to find the previous print so different from the original. We have given them a careful comparison, assisted by individuals whose known integrity and ability is uncensurable. Thus saying we cast no reflections upon those who were intrusted with the responsibility of publishing them in Missouri, as our own labors were included in that important service to the church, and it was our unceasing endeavor to have them correspond with the copy furnished us. We believe they are now correct, if not in every word, at least in principle.—The Evening and the Morning Star, vol. 1, p. 16, (reprint).

He further says:

We have again inserted the articles and covenants according to our promise in a previous number, for the benefit of our brethren abroad who have not the first number of the first volume. As there were some errors which had got into them by transcribing, we have since obtained the original copy and made the necessary corrections.—The Evening and the Morning Star, vol. 2, p. 196, (reprint).

In speaking of the Book of Commandments and the first print of The Evening and Morning Star, he says:

There are many typographical errors in both volumes, and especially in the last, which we shall endeavor carefully to correct, as well as principle, if we discover any. It is also proper for us to say that in the first fourteen numbers, in the the revelations, are many errors, typographical and others, occasioned by transcribing manuscripts, but as we shall have access to originals, we shall endeavor to make proper corrections.

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS

The last quotation is from The Evening and the Morning Star for September, 1834. It doubtless voiced the universal sentiment of the church, for there was no objection of which there is any record. It is further apparent that it was the universal conviction that the Book of Commandments did not properly express the revelations of God to the church, for on the 24th day of this same month of September a general assembly was called, and by unanimous vote a committee consisting of Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon, and Frederick G. Williams was appointed to arrange the items of doctrine of Jesus Christ for the government of his church. This committee was instructed to compile these items from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations which had been given to the church, or should be given until the work was completed.

The result of the work of this committee was the presentation of the Doctrine and Covenants to another General Assembly held in Kirtland, Ohio, August 17, 1835. This was presented first to the quorums severally, and then to the assembly, and every vote was unanimous in favor of accepting the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. It of course received the indorsement of the committee, Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon, and Frederick G. Williams. This included the revelator through whom the revelations were received, and his two counselors, and one of the committee who arranged the revelations when published in the Book of Commandments. He was immediately followed by the other two members of that committee, William W. Phelps and John Whitmer, each testifying that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants was true.

John Smith, for the high council in Kirtland, Levi Jackman, for the high council in Missouri, Leonard Rich, for the seventy, Newel K. Whitney, for the bishopric in Kirtland, John Carroll, for the bishopric in Missouri, John Gould, for the elders, Ira Ames, for the priests, Erastus Babbitt, for the teachers, William Burgess, for the deacons, each bore record that the book was true, and reported a unanimous vote of the quorum he represented in its favor. The Quorum of Twelve Apostles not being present sent their testimony in writing, which was read to the assembly as follows:

The testimony of the witnesses to the book of the Lord's commandments, which he gave to his church through Joseph Smith, jr., who was appointed by the voice of the church for this purpose: We therefore feel willing to bear testimony to all the world of mankind, to every creature upon the face of all the earth, and upon the islands of the sea, that the Lord has borne record to our souls, through the Holy Ghost shed forth upon us, that these commandments were given by inspiration of God, and are profitable for all men, and are verily true. We give this testimony unto the world, the Lord being our helper, and it is through the grace of God, the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, that we are permitted to have this privilege of bearing this testimony unto the world, in the which we rejoice exceedingly, praying the Lord always that the children of men may be profited thereby.

Thomas Gates reported that the assistant presidents of the day, his associates John Young, William Cowdery, Andrew H. Aldrich, Job S. Lewis, and Oliver Higley, all men whose gray hairs told of the approaching end of earth life, had unanimously received the book as true, and he bore testimony of its truth. The version of the revelations as presented in the Doctrine and Covenants comes to us supported by this array of testimony; while to assume that the Book of Commandments contains the correct version of the revelations is to do so without a single witness to support us, and against the testimony of the very men who prepared and published it; and to further assume that all these men entered unanimously into a conspiracy to defraud, and that they all solemnly lied in the name of the Lord.

This article in substance was published in April, 1912, in the Journal of History. A certain sheet attempted to reply, but in doing so entirely ignored the above point, forgetting that if we reject the testimony of these witnesses we thereby impeach the very witnesses upon whom we depend for the integrity of the Book of Commandments. To claim that Oliver Cowdery, William W. Phelps, John Whitmer and others who did the work on the Book of Commandments would enter into a conspiracy to defraud and solemnly lie in the name of the Lord in 1835 when bearing testimony to the Doctrine and Covenants would certainly throw discredit upon their former work on the Book of Commandments in 1833; but to accept the honest acknowledgement that mistakes had entered into their former works, typographically, through copying manuscript, and otherwise, is but extending to them proper courtesy and respect.

David Whitmer is quoted as saying that the Book of Commandments was completed before the press was destroyed. The most charitable conclusion we can arrive at regarding David Whitmer is that in his old age he had forgotten the date of its appearance. At the time of the General Assembly at Kirtland in August, 1835, he was president of the High Council in Missouri, which council was represented at the General Assembly by one of its members, Levi Jackman, who testified to the Doctrine and Covenants in behalf of the council. The record reads: "Elder Levi Jackman, taking the lead of the High Council of the church in Missouri, bore testimony that the revelations in said book were true, and the said High Council of Missouri accepted and acknowledged them as the Doctrine and Covenants of their faith, by unanimous vote."

The revelations referred to are without question the revelations contained in Doctrine and Covenants. David Whitmer is included in this "unanimous vote" nor did he in his long life ever protest, or claim that he was misrepresented by Levi Jackman.

LEADERSHIP

(Read before the First Quorum of Elders, Independence, Missouri, by Hale W. Smith, counselor to the president of the quorum.)

We claim that God has called each of us into his vineyard to labor therein for a little season. No one should attempt to prune the vines unless he understands how to prune. It is equally true that no one ought to labor as an elder in Israel except he knows the various duties of such an office. We should seek more earnestly to understand our work, so that when we use our pruning knife or our grafting tools we will discover in after years that our work has been effectual.

As elders we should be leaders, and not leaners. We should seek to discover what constitutes true leadership. Some want to be first, and if not first they will not be second. It is said of Nero that when riding in the outskirts of Rome and asked by one of his generals how he would like to be father of the family living in a dugout in the side of the hill, he replied with all the dignity he was able to muster that he would rather be father of that humble family than to be second in Rome. Some are inclined to be like Nero. If they can not be president of a branch they will not be priest.

Remember we hold our eldership because we have been obedient Saints and faithful members of the church of God. Our priesthood depends on our membership, and not, as some would contend, our membership on our priesthood. When an elder is tried and convicted of unchristianlike conduct his membership is taken away, and with it goes his priesthood.

Elders have more responsibility than the membership, and with the responsibility comes added sacrifice. The more given the more is required.

NEED OF EFFICIENCY

A close study of conditions to-day in the political world; a careful survey of the economic realm; a look into the religious sphere of activity reveals unrest, a crisis, and calls out with no uncertain sound for true leadership.

Every organization in the world to-day is crying not for more members, not for more social machinery, but for more efficient members and for better social machinery. The crying need of our quorum, as well as the church, is more efficient elders.

The church is not looking for elders with the spirit of former social reformers who killed those who differed from them, or the political leader who hurled epithets of lead against his opponets, or the religious leader who was willing to discredit and brand as lies the words of his opponent just because he represented a different theological school; the church is looking for elders who after the victory is won can forgive the opponent; or if defeated bow to the wish and will of the majority, right about face, and pull with them with might, mind, and strength.

We want elders as leaders who use the principle of attraction rather than compulsion and of love rather than hatred; who will help the weak and not exploit them; who will insist that fraternity be more than a rhetorical flourish; who by their actions show that love will beget justice rather than charity.

THE MAN IN THE CAB

Do we realize how dependent people are upon our views, actions, etc? We see a man with stern face sitting in his cab watching the throngs hurrying hither and thither. Little do people consider him. In a few minutes he will hold hundreds literally in his hand. If the train is delayed many curse him.

Perhaps they forget, because they travel so much, the men who make travel possible. They settle down in their seats and listen to the click of the car wheels which make them feel secure, and place their trust in human faithfulness. Little do they realize that a rotten tie, an ill-driven spike, a switch set wrong, or a lamp which refuses to burn may send not only the engineer but hundreds into eternity. Men say they travel over steel rails while in reality they travel on men's consciences.

Let us remember the success arrived at, the heights reached by the people to whom we minister depends on our ability to keep the track clear and solid while they are drawn upward to the ideal in life.

Invention has made engineering mere play when it comes to automobiling. To-day anyone who has money enough, or who can borrow enough to buy an automobile may have sensations of facing death. Many will not share the fate of the automobilist when he goes into the ditch, but the engineer has no such limitations. He is at the mercy of mankind, nature, and his time card. A whole trainload of people are at stake. He can not think of himself. The inevitable may bring him face to face with eternity, because of another's mistake. He must be the first to suffer. If he errs, there is no one to share his blame. He is the incarnation of responsibility that can neither be shared nor shifted.

We see the man in the cab in the church. We find him in the priesthood. Like the man in the engine the elder is blessed with talents God has given him; with the responsibility placed upon him by the voice of God and with the consent of the church, he gains wealth and honor, but always at the cost of being master of the lives of others who follow after him.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF LEADERSHIP

Leadership is a lonesome job. Being lonesome is the cost of power. The higher up one climbs the less likely can one hope for companionship unless willing to be content in going slower, while the masses catch up. True leaders must wait with patience. The heavier and more immediate the responsibility the less can one delegate tasks or escape mistakes. The private soldier may share in all victories, but the commanding officer alone bears the weight of defeat.

The captain of industry, on whose foresight and energy the prosperity and livelihood of thousands depend; the political leader who must bear the brunt of defeat, which others have caused; the employer who shares his success with many, but must face bankruptcy alone—these are no mere children of good fortune. Like the man in the cab, they stand face to face with responsibility, burdened with the fate of many.

The next time you look up from your accustomed place in the quorum to complain that we are not progressing as fast as you think we ought, or complain against your leaders, remember the man in the cab. If you envy your leaders think of the loneliness of their responsibility, and the risk they face while you are at ease.

THE BETTER WAY

I notice a tendency on the part of a few elders to denounce the sins they see in other people. I presume they think they are not acting according to their religious convictions unless they are exposing faults. It seems to me the better way would be to discover the possibilities in people, the good lying dormant, and bring out that good so as to drive the faults away. Just as light coming into a room will drive darkness away, so good will overcome evil, because good is greater than evil.

Elders as leaders ought to be filled with contagious faith in God that seeks first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness; that can stir the membership of the church to moral discontent in order they may be brought together in a service where they will sacrifice one for the other.

May we hope, long, and pray, for elders of ability; men who have sound physical constitutions, who have the requisite common sense and self-control to care for the body, thus insuring its best working efficiency; men of mental powers and proper habits of study, determined not to stagnate the intellectual powers. These should have the ability to appreciate and the will to employ the best methods of study. This is more important than the most coveted university degree. They should be men possessing the ability to express sympathy and friendship.

We trust your war will be unceasing and untiring against all social evils, against the things which destroy a nation's conscience. We trust your efforts will be successful. May the God of high heaven rule and overrule in your behalf is the earnest wish of your servant.

HALE W. SMITH.

I believe, from the study of God's word, that in the future God will greatly accelerate the movement of converting. But I am convinced also, from the study of the word, that before that comes to pass, there will be a marvelous increase in the speed of transportation on the earth. I believe that, in the providence of God, though the method now be entirely hidden, men will yet travel on the earth at the rate of fifty miles an hour.—Sir Isaac Newton.

Choice and service—in these are the whole of life.—Mark Hopkins.

Of General Interest

COMPETITION IN WELL DOING

One result of the public interest in the remarkable profit-sharing plan proposed by Mr. Henry Ford and described in The Outlook recently has been the recognition of the large number of other profit-sharing or welfare plans already in action. We hear so much of the rapacity and cold-bloodedness of large corporations that it is most agreeable to read this kind of news.

For instance, we find that several large corporations have recently been competing for prizes awarded for what may be called industrial humaneness. An incorrect and rather absurd statement in a Boston paper that the New York Telephone Company had recently received a Nobel prize for having been the year's most prominent exponent of care-taking and welfare work for its employees led The Outlook to ascertain the real fact, which is that precisely such a prize has been awarded to the New York Telephone Company, not, of course, under the Nobel foundation, but at the International Exhibition of Safety and Sanitation held in New York last month. In point of fact, the company received two medals in recognition of this kind of work, while the Southern Pacific Railroad received the Harriman Memorial medal as the American railway "most successful in protecting the lives and health of its employees and the public." Forty-two corporations, we are told, competed for this distinction. At the same time, the Seaman medal for progress in the protection of occupational diseases went to the United States Steel Corporation. All these companies and many others are evidently vying with one another not only for prizes but for results. The New York Telephone Company's exhibit, for instance, is described as elaborate and unique, and included a telephone switchboard in actual operation and a reproduction of a typical operators' sitting-room. We note also that the company has just adopted in New York City a plan for making additional payments to operators who remain in service for two years or more, and has reduced the working day from nine to eight hours, while at the same time increasing the wage scale.

All this is, of course, largely intelligent self-interest, but very much of it is also generous and intelligent appreciation of the workers' faithfulness and their needs. The New York Telephone Company, for instance, argues that the public it serves must have the highest possible grade of telephone service, and that therefore the standard of efficiency of the operating force must be kept at the best possible point. Its liberal treatment attracts such operators; the public benefits and the telephone service in New York City is the best in the world. But no one can read the little pamphlet issued by the company, which gives true stories about the intelligence and heroism of "the girl at the switchboard," or read the description of the arrangements for the comfort of the operators in another pamphlet, without seeing that not merely self-interest but friendliness and sympathy are involved in the company's welfare work. Intelligent altruism may be, and evidently in very many cases is, combined with human friendliness and helpfulness.—The Outlook, February 21, 1914.

AROUND THE EARTH BY WIRELESS

The stations in New Jersey and Wales form part of what is to be a gigantic telegraphic girdle of the earth. Other stations in Egypt and India, and at Yokohama, Honolulu and San Francisco, are either under construction or in contemplation. With perhaps two exceptions, the intervals are to be traversed by wireless methods. Between San Francisco and the New Jersey station, the usual telegraphic processes will be employed; and possibly also between Wales and Egypt. Upon completion of the seven or eight wireless stations, it will be possible to send a message from anyone around the earth and back again to the point of starting.

Most of the stations will be duplex—that is, the station will work with the nearest one on the east and also with the nearest one on the west. There will thus be four portions to each of these stations—two transmitting and two receiving installations.

At New Brunswick the number of aërials to be supported amounts to thirty or more, requiring a double line of towers. When it is remembered that eighteen or twenty enormously tall towers are required for a complete one-way station, and that the majority of the seven are to be two-way stations requiring a double number, it will readily be seen that the construction of a wireless world circuit is a considerable undertaking.

However, all that we have been considering is really only a part of the construction necessary. Operating buildings must be erected; and, because the stations are ordinarily distant from built up regions, extensive accommodations for the operating force must be provided. Thus, at Belmar, a small hotel is being erected besides one or two dwelling houses in addition to the operating building proper. The number of men employed at New Brunswick will be small for the reason that the human operation of the transmission to Wales will be chiefly done at Belmar. The operating keys for the wireless transmission of messages to Wales will indeed be located at New Brunswick; but these keys will be automatically worked by telegraph wires controlled by operators at Belmar station.—From "The 'Wireless' Girdling of the Earth," by J. F. Springer, in the American Review of Reviews for March.

THE CONSTITUTION OF COMETS

Great diversity of opinion has prevailed on the subject of the physical constitution of comets. It has been maintained, by different astronomers, that the nucleus of a comet is solid, is liquid and is gaseous. If we agree with Schiaparelli and see a relation between comets and the swarms of meteorites, it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that a comet is a cloud of solid particles, and we return to the theories of Professor Newton, who regarded comets as veritable "sand-banks."

What are the dimensions of these constituent particles? We do not know; we can only say that in all probability they vary in size from a grain of dust to a body of several cubic yards. However this may be, the particles are certainly separated from one another by great distances, and, speaking on a small scale, we may liken a comet to a number of particles about the size of a pin's head at distances of some hundreds of yards.

Each particle carries with it a gaseous envelope formed principally of a substance furnishing a spectrum analogous to that of the hydrocarbons. Under the action of the sun, and perhaps through some electrical effect, the envelope becomes luminous or phosphorescent. This view of a comet's structure explains the fact that even the feeblest stars may be seen through the cometary cloud, without suffering either appreciable diminution in brightness or refraction.—Scientific American, March 7, 1914.

UNIVERSITY GROWTH IN TEN YEARS

Colleges and universities, like other institutions, are undergoing readjustment, for life constantly makes new demands of them. Educators are not satisfied with present educational policies, and the voice of the critic is heard all over the land. Still, as The Independent observes, after quoting interesting registration statistics from a scientific periodical, the fact is that the decade 1903-1913 has been a decade of growth and progress for our colleges and universities. They are doing more and better work than ever before; they are becoming more and more democratic and more and more efficient and vital.

During the ten years the attendance at the leading universities increased sixty-eight per cent—more than three times as fast as the population. New courses have been provided to meet the conditions and requirements of the time. Research work has been extended and improved. Summer, evening and correspondence courses have been introduced. Some colleges have "peopleized" themselves to a remarkable degree and are educating thousands who long since passed the "school population" stage.

Some universities have passed others in the race, owing to geographical and financial conditions, but all have advanced. Here is a table showing how the leading universities now rank as regards attendance:

Columbia .....	9,929	Wisconsin .....	5,890
California .....	7,071	Harvard .....	5,627
Chicago .....	6,834	Cornell .....	5,612
Michigan .....	6,008	New York .....	5,508
Pennsylvania .....	5,968	Illinois .....	5,259

Statistics show that the West, whose passion for education is proverbial, sends a larger proportion of its boys and girls to college than the East, where things are assuming a fixity and rigidity utterly unknown to the more progressive, responsive and plastic West.—Chicago Record-Herald, February 25, 1914.

EFFICIENCY ENGINEERS ON STATE GOVERNMENT

About a year ago the governor of Kansas created something of a sensation by sending a message to the legislature advocating commission government for the State as well as for its cities and counties. He admitted that he merely intended to start a campaign of discussion, and that immediate results were not to be looked for. The discussion of ways and means of making state government simpler, more efficient and less costly, has proceeded since in a fruitful and interesting way, and it will be further stimulated by the report just made to the Iowa legislature by "efficiency engineers" that were appointed two years ago to study the same question. The Iowa document is in truth noteworthy in more respects than one. It is a sign of the times and illustrates the trend in political thought.

Concentration, simplification and responsibility are lacking in state government, and Iowa efficiency engineers recommend radical changes calculated to supply the needed elements in the requisite degree. They hold that the governor alone should be elected, and that all executive department heads should be appointed by him. The heads so appointed should form an executive council, of which the governor should be chairman. The engineers also recommend the purchase of supplies for all departments by one agent; a legislative reference and bill-drafting bureau; sweeping reductions in the number of legislative employees—clerks, secretaries, janitors, etc., and, in general, the deliberate adoption of a businesslike policy in the transaction of the public's business.

In the judicial department the engineers would introduce corresponding or greater changes. They would have only one elective office, that of chief justice. They would vest in the chief justice the power of appointing all other judges, and the tenure of

If such advice is given in Iowa, what may we not expect in more active "sociological laboratories"? It is evident that changes in state government are coming, and that they will embody the principles of the short ballot, of simplification and consolidation.—Chicago Record-Herald, March 10, 1914.

The Staff

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON

"Awake, Saints, Awake"

We are wondering if the dead silence on the part of the readers of The Staff, so far as contributions are concerned is indicative of a total lack of interest in the department. We are confronted with the (to us) unique experience of having reached the time when the Staff copy should be sent in without having received a single line of contribution of any sort. But we are not, as yet, totally discouraged, trying as we are to believe that the neglect of opportunity is more due to the sleeping condition of the people than to a settled indifference to the work of the music department in particular. At any rate we are going to struggle along awhile, upon this theory, before we decide to give up, all the while hoping and praying that something will develop that will arouse our singers effectually, and cause them to see, with seeing eyes, their opportunities, and seeing, improve them!

Christ's parable of the virgins is one that often impresses us strongly with its deep significance. The virgins evidently symbolize the church members. Does it not startle you a bit to reflect that half of them were sleeping?

Fully fifty per cent of us then, if the parable be prophetic, will not be awake when our Lord comes! And what assurance has any of us that we will be of the rejoicing number! Are we, right now, awake or asleep?

Stir yourselves singers, musicians and composers, of our band, and take stock of your talents. How are you using them? Are your endeavors worthy the gifts? Are you justifying God for having bestowed upon you so liberally? Above all, do you sincerely feel that you are complying with that oft repeated command, Cultivate cultivate, cultivate the gift of music and of song? In a communication to some young Saints at a reunion, they were told of their delinquency in this line, and were given to understand they would not be able to abide the trials and temptations to come upon them unless they complied with this command. Let us awake! Let us look above us, and make our opportunities, if there be none in evidence, at once.

Let us organize the children into singing classes, the young people into choruses, the older ones into choirs; let us have orchestras and bands, no matter how crude or simple to start with. They will enlarge, develop, refine and some day will help swell the grand chorus of praise to God who rejoices in the happiness, prosperity and development of his people.

Later. Just received word that our General Chorister has sent in a June message direct to HERALD Editors. Thank you, Brother Hoxie;—it is surely "help in time of need."

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 1300 West Electric.

General Chorister's Message

This last week of May practically winds up the musical activities in the professional world, and many have hied themselves to country and seashore homes to rest and play. But the papers devoted exclusively to musical events contain announcements of many a teacher of prominence keeping studios open for pupils, many of whom are teachers who find it necessary to brush up and acquire a further knowledge of their work. We are glad this is so. I believe everybody should have a vacation, but two weeks is plenty to rest mind and body, and the thought of twelve weeks of inactivity, while it sounds good, is a great setback to students interested in their work. There is no better time to stimulate the musical interests of the church than the summer time.

The wonderful possibilities of the general choir movement was suggested and even planned upon reunion grounds; and experiments at these occasions were the foundation of our work together to-day. Our many reunions should be and are the gathering place of choir leaders and members, and you should get together, talk ways and means of making your local efforts bigger and better. Each leader should rally his forces together and sing. There is nothing better than hymns for a starter to rally the crowd together, and if the district has responded to the choir movement, the anthem book, published yearly for just such work, is used with a most telling effect. In a few months at the most we hope to have appointed in every district reliable, energetic, enthusiastic, spiritual district leaders, who will plan the music for conventions, conferences and reunions, and arrange for large ensemble work.

The proper kind of music will attract and hold the curious stranger who draws near to the gate to listen to the heavenly strains. Its peculiar power makes the hardest of them all feel kindlier toward us as a people, and toward the message of Jesus Christ. The sweet, filtered strains of music, as they echo among the hills gave me strength to pray for a victory, which was later won.

Getting together as often as good judgment directs, a half hour before a preaching service, and always after for a while, brings much comfort and peace to a camp of Israel. It would be splendid to inaugurate an institute on music at your reunions. The general choir movement, local and district choirs, vocal and instrumental talks, biographical sketches of the old masters, and modern composers furnish many themes for a morning hour. There is no end of interesting things to discuss. With very little effort much good can be done and great interest awakened. What district will be the first to write us that this suggestion has been carried into effect? I have never known such wonderful opportunities as are within our reach—if. Shall that little word come between us and success?

ALBERT N. HOXIE.

The Yawn Exercise

[The following, from the Golden Age may prove both interesting and beneficial to some of our singers.—A. A.]

In answer to a number of questions as to my yawn exercise I write the following in the hope that it will do my readers a world of good.

We now come to the question of increasing our tone power through opening the resonating cavities; and here let me apparently digress while I tell you a little incident applicable to this portion of our subject. A good friend of mine, a manufacturer of steel bells, one day in conversation asked me why a violin gave such a powerful carrying tone from its little thin strings, while his steel bells, possessed of infinitely more vibrating material, did not give an adequate tone result. Upon my stating that the violin had resonating cavities for reinforcement of tone and the bell had none, he at once said, "If I can get resonating cavities to confine, modify and reinforce my bell tone, I shall get a larger and more beautiful tone. Is it not so?" I replied that unquestionably he had hit upon a great idea, and he apparently dismissed the subject, to bring it strikingly to my mind, a year later, when inviting me to dine with him, he told me he had a surprise for me. He took me into the drawing room, remarking, "I have had the whole scheme copyrighted," and there on the table were the original steel bells, which he struck with a little hammer, they giving the same tone as before. Then he moved the bell scale and placed it over a device resembling a heterogeneous mass of tubes, some large, some small, some long, some short. Again he struck the bell with the hammer and the increased volume and beauty of each individual bell tone was startling. To go into the scientific why and wherefore of this would necessitate the vocabulary of a Helmholtz or a Tyndall. Suffice to say, he had simply added resonating qualities to the original tone, and this is exactly what happened in the human throat.

Let me put it to you in another way: If you were playing upon a church organ and put your finger upon C you have two ways of increasing the tone, one by the swell thus producing a dynamic crescendo, and the others by pulling out all the stops and so gaining added resonance, harmonics and undertones. Now we gain all of this vocally by simply opening the throat.

The exercise that I use to accomplish this, in all that it implies, is simply yawning, and the results produced by this yawning exercise are so great that I am going to give a special explanation of its marvels. We have gone into this subject from the standpoint of normal voice production and possibly I should leave it just here, but voice production is dependent on normal health, therefore I feel that I do not really digress in touching on the pathological significance of the yawn.

I believe it is a theory accepted by the medical fraternity at large, that all illness, not organic, is largely due to congestive conditions, which can be alleviated if not absolutely removed by proper exercise. The good doctors are largely giving up their drugs and coming to the old Dame Nature's methods. Let me give you an instance of what this exercise can be made to accomplish. I wish to preface it with this statement: At the Hotel Dieu (the great throat hospital) in Paris, where I believe there are one thousand two hundred patients at one time, the head surgeon informed me that at least two thirds of them were placed upon a regimen consisting of yawning and diet.

I trust you will pardon my giving this leaf from my own personal experience. I had a pupil who had chronic catarrh of the throat, and who was put upon this yawn exercise with the most gratifying results. One evening at her home, where, besides my pupil and her family physician, there were a number of musicians present, all were speaking of her extraordinary cure. It was during this discussion that the doctor spoke up and indicating his patient, said, "This lady was given up by us doctors as an incurable case, and it is only fair that I, as her physician, should acknowledge this. Furthermore I should like to know what her vocal teacher has done to bring about this result," and then and there very courteously asked me to give an explanation of the method employed. He agreed with my premise that "all diseases not organic are chiefly the result of congested conditions, which can be removed or alleviated by local exercise." The yawning has opened all the resonating cavities, allowed Nature's fierce flame, oxygen, to kill the germs generated by the mucous fermentation.—Albert Gerald Thiers.

Emporia Lifts up Its Voice

[This notice should also be encouraging to our people. A. A.]

Emporia, Kansas, held a spring music festival last week. Before doing so Emporia looked into its city directory and finding its pages teeming with the clans of Jones, Williams, Lewis and Hughes, decided to make some use of them.

Music in any community rests primarily on prosperity. But it also depends to some extent on whether the community is made up of people whose hearts sing while they work, and whose lips begin to sing only when prosperity is spelled out by the balance in the bank.

Cincinnati has music festivals because it is populated largely by Germans, the tribe that produced Schubert, Schumann, Bach, Mendelssohn, Wagner and a score of others who have made the world's music. Lindsborg, Kansas, sings the "Messiah" every year because the people who settled Lindsborg are both pious and musical, even to a marked degree.

THE WELSH AND SONG

Coming back to Emporia, one reason why Emporia is holding spring music festivals is because the people whose names are Jones, Williams, Lewis and Hughes are Welsh, or of Welsh descent; and the Welsh not only have notably high, clear and sweet voices, but they also have an ancestral tradition of song. If the German has his saengerbund, so does the Welshman have his singing organization. One existed in Emporia at one time, but in late years it has given way to the choral society which sings oratorios—and which now is decided on having an annual spring music festival.

Emporia is full of Welsh people. One city ward has practically nothing else; and over the entire city there is a great deal of Welsh solidarity. Six years ago, when Frank A. Beach came to the head of the music department of the State Normal school at Emporia, an annual musical program was given. The programs were not very ambitious at first. The chorus that first year was composed of forty-eight persons. Last year the ambition of the school was to be recognized in the production of the oratorio, "Elijah," and of the opera, fully costumed, of "The Chimes of Normandy."

This year Mr. Beach decided that it was time to do something sufficiently distinctive to give some account of Emporia's growth in the appreciation and knowledge of music. William Allen White of Emporia came to the same conclusion at about the same time. The Kansas editor drove home his idea with articles and editorials in the Gazette. Here was a lot of talent—a lot of Welsh talent, was the idea, though not expressed—and it was time that Emporia should get some good of it.

Last Tuesday night, the first night of the festival, Emporia went to the Albert Taylor Hall at the normal school and was surprised at itself. Fifteen hundred Emporians sat out in the pit and heard three hundred other Emporians under the leadership of Mr. Beach and of W. H. Westenburg, head of the normal's violin staff, sing and play the impressive music of Charles Gounod's oratorio, "The Redemption." Choruses, orchestra of forty pieces and principals, all were of Emporia. And forty of them had Welsh blood in their veins.

The next morning a Welsh contingent assured Mr. Beach that Welshmen would not be lacking for the performance of "Elijah," which is already being planned for next year and other years thereafter.

THOSE WHO SANG

Of course it wasn't just Emporia's Welsh who sang; it was all Emporia. Emporia College, a sectarian institution, gave thirty voices to the production. Besides the large number from the normal school, there were business and professional men, society women and six negroes. The orchestra's concert master was a lawyer. Among the physicians were a first violinist, a principal soloist and a cornetist, who is a woman physician. The wife of a local "rich man" was a violinist. A large part of a family took part with the mother and daughters at the violin and a son at the 'cello.

THE ORATORIO

The three hundred persons in the Emporia chorus and orchestra started work on the oratorio in January. The oratorio form, which is used now wherever community musical festivals are heard, was in the beginning like all dramatic forms, a handmaiden to religion. The drama grew out of the miracle play—churchly enactments of scriptural tales—and so did the oratorio. The priests in the early Middle Ages found, after some experiment, that they could drive home the Scriptures a little easier with the help of some accompanying music. In time, of course, this grew into a distinct form until Handel and Hayden developed the formal type with antiphonal choruses flinging their volumes of sound against each other until they were merged, and with fuges—choric flights where the separate parts mount higher and higher like eagles after each other in the air. Through all of them run magnificent religious themes, dramatized more or less according to the temperament of the composer. The titles of "The Messiah," "The Creation" and "Elijah" tell their own tales.

"The Redemption" was written when Gounod was living in England during the Franco-Prussian War. It was dedicated to Queen Victoria and performed first at a festival in Birmingham in 1882. It is distinctly French in manner, and is a departure from the oratorio of previous history, being more dramatic and descriptive. Gounod, always an expert in orchestration, made a striking use of his orchestra, not merely to obtain technical contrapuntal effects, but to compose a music full of warmth, harmony and color. It is perhaps lacking in the austere depths of the music of Handel, but it is a more modern kind of music, and by no means easy for nonprofessionals to present.

The oratorio tells the story of the passion and the death of Christ, his life from the resurrection to his ascension, and the spread of Christianity through the apostles. It was told in Emporia by two narrators, E. J. Lewis, a tenor, and Carl Lindgren, basso, and by Doctor B. E. Garrison, who took the part of Jesus, and by the large choruses. The two narrators in this piece work very much in the same manner as the chorus of a Greek tragedy, with similar movements of strophe and antistrophe. The presentation in Emporia abounded in fine dramatic climaxes—the scene on Calvary, the crucifixion, the incident of the two thieves and similar parts of that time's history. When the choruses reached the "Unfold, ye portals everlasting" and finally the ending fuge, with a choir in the gallery hurling the melody to the trumpets on the other side of the hall, which in turn passed on the sound to the great chorus, where it rose in swelling volume—it bore a by no means difficult resemblance to a great crying of the clans in the mountains.

Next year Emporia plans to sing the "Elijah," and to make it as annually inviting as Lindsborg has done with the "Messiah." And the Welsh are all going to have part hereafter.

Sang "Messiah"

[The following notice of the good chorus work being done in our neighboring town can not but be inspirational to us. Let us not despise the "day of small things." Make the beginning, however small, and keep at it!—A. A.]

LINDSBORG, KANSAS, April 13.—This city, the musical mecca of the West, closed another week of recital, concert, praise and song service with the rendition of Handel's "Messiah" Easter Sunday. Thousands of music lovers from all parts of Kansas and from surrounding states, many of whom came for the week, attended each day, including the three renditions of the great masterpiece.

The "Messiah" this year was under the direction of H. E. Malloy, whose work with the chorus and orchestra was highly commendable. He held the reputation of former years to its full height and added new laurels by the increased volume, clean attack and marked expression peculiar to this conductor. . . .

The Sunday night rendition of the "Messiah" by the chorus and orchestra was a fitting close to the week. The "Messiah" soloists were chosen out of the ranks of the students in Bethany College. The parts were taken by Irma Lewis, soprano, of Yates Center, Kansas; Inez Harris, contralto, of Deer Creek, Oklahoma; J. U. Woodside, basso, of Gueda Springs, Kansas, and Arvid Wallin, tenor, of Lindsborg, Kansas. These soloists deserve special praise for the pleasing manner in which they handled the parts.

Governor and Mrs. Hodges were guests at the "Messiah," and in the intermission Sunday the governor made a short address.

The little city of Lindsborg, nestling snugly in the valley of the Smoky River, has its private piques, its internal strifes, political church and kindred other differences the same as other communities, but on the subject of the "Messiah" its people are a unit. No community on earth is more closely allied on any one subject than Lindsborg and its immediate vicinity is to that of the "Messiah." In 1881, Carl Swenson, president of Bethany College, which was then in its infancy, imbued with the spirit of religious devotion, organized a chorus of fifty voices, obtained the score to this great work and placed the singers under direction of his wife. Together they worked incessantly, holding frequent rehearsals in their home and in homes of members of the chorus and faculty until they were able to give the first rendition. Out of this grew this year's—its ninetieth rendition—mighty chorus of five hundred and fifty voices, augmented by an orchestra of forty pieces.

New York and Philadelphia District

We have had no recent reports from Scranton as to the recent musical activities, but we know that where a crowd of Welsh singers are among a branch of Saints the musical end of the work will not suffer from lack of interest. We have heard accounts of the brass band, and the interest it has awakened in street work especially. Keep it up boys!

The Brooklyn choir is awake and doing fine work, although the Thursday night rehearsals do not commence until after the Religio session. It has been my good pleasure to have this choir under my direction the greater part of the winter. The Brooklyn choir is not Welsh, but English, mostly, and they love music. Their willingness to respond has made my winter's experience a pleasant one in many ways. Sister Squires, the leader, has welcomed our assistance, and in her untiring efforts has rallied the interest. Stick-to-it-ive-ness runs in the Squire family, and we are glad to note that the big boy of the family is getting to be some fiddler. Some day, when we are all together, I am going to tell you a story about Brother Harris, who has three members of his family in the choir. If I forget it remind me, for it is too good to be lost.

We are still busy in Philadelphia. Two young men, now members of the church, have been added to the choir rolls this month. Brother Montgomery, whose efforts are always appreciated, helped us of an evening with his cornet. Miss Schwartz and Miss Steele rendered a duet we shall never forget. The choir has almost broken the record for attendance, although the last Sunday in the month nearly smashed the record—the other way. Holidays are a little hard to get over. Altogether we feel rather happy about the work of the month.

Sister Ethel Kinnaman, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, who has been studying with Percy Hemus, the famous New York baritone, sang with Pryor's Band for one week commencing May 23, at Willow Grove, Philadelphia. A party of Saints and friends heard with great pleasure her initial effort, and were delighted with the wonderful progress she has made in the musical world. Her voice is a rich contralto, wonderfully well balanced, with a warmth and color seldom found in one so young. It is not necessary to be a prophet to prophesy for her a well rounded out future. May great success be hers.

It was with pleasure we welcomed the return of Brother and Sister W. N. Robinson from their wonderful trip abroad with the Hotel Mens' Association. The splendid ovation accorded Sister Robinson, as mentioned in last month's issue, was but a forerunner of many more demonstrations and honors as the trip progressed. We are not at liberty to mention them in this column, but it was with pleasure that I stood as an onlooker, unobserved, and heard many words of genuine appreciation of Sister Robinson's gift, as the final good-byes were said. Mrs. Robinson was fortunate in having as an accompanist W. Bonoist, who is in constant demand by the greatest artists of the world.

Prayer Union

SUBJECT FOR FOURTH THURSDAY IN JUNE

Prayers for our Sunday schools and Religio societies; for the Prayer Union, and for all auxiliary departments in the church, that each may be blessed in its work for the general uplift.

Lesson, Matthew 6: 1-4; memory verse, verse 22.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Sister O. B. Plum, of Centralia, Manitoba, requests prayers. She is suffering with an infection from an ulcerated tooth, and doctors tell her that she will have to submit to an operation on the cheek bone. May this sister be remembered.

In Evidence of the Truth

The deeper interest recently awakened in the members of the church is doubtless due, in a great measure, to the fact that the late General Conference passed off so pleasantly and profitably, nearly every business session being governed by the spirit of charity. Then added to the blessing just named was the energizing spirit manifest in song, praise, testimony, preaching, lectures and the pleasant association of delegates and other members gathered from many countries to the center stake of Zion. These blessed tidings of good cheer have been carried to thousands of the homes of the Saints by the delegates as well as by the weekly visits of the HERALD and the Ensign, and a prosperous year in all lines of church work should follow.

There are so many good things, as we believe, that we have and that are coming to encourage us in our work that all should exercise greater faith in the gospel so sacred and true, being ready, willing, and even anxious to comply more fully with the temporal law than ever before, paying liberally of their tithes, offerings, etc.

FIND GOLD ORNAMENTS

For many years there had been talk of building, and several attempts, by different nations to build the Panama Canal, but all failed. Finally the United States by act of Congress decided to complete that great project. Their decision pleased us, believing, as we did, that the builders could not use the pick, the ax, the spade, the steam shovel, etc., in making a water way of so many miles in length through that country without uncovering and presenting to the reading world more archæological evidences that the historical accounts in the Book of Mormon are true, and that the angel Moroni did visit Joseph Smith the Prophet. In this belief we were not disappointed.

One point in evidence by Logan Marshall in his book, The Story of the Panama Canal, page 70, is as follows: "It is estimated that gold ornaments were uncovered to a value exceeding $400,000 in the space of five or six years. They were sold for weight, or value in coin, and went into the melting pot." Wonderful, indeed! But no surprise to students of the Book of Mormon, for the sacred record gives account of the ancient inhabitants of that country becoming very numerous, having great wealth in gold, etc., and that they had "workmen, who did work all kinds of ore, and did refine it; and thus they did become rich." (Helaman 2.)

Over $400,000 worth of gold ornaments were found, sold by weight and "went into the melting pot," says Professor Marshall. That being true, it is probable that many dentists have bought of that precious metal; and it is also probable that some of the aching teeth of the Anti-Mormon Association will have some of that Nephite and Lamanite gold pounded into their heads, as well as quietly placed in their money purses,—a double cure for troubled minds. And when these same men lecture against the Book of Mormon they may be wearing and gazing at their audiences through gold-bowed spectacles, rimmed with ore mined, refined, and worn by some of the accredited characters of prehistoric civilized times, who helped to make the history, and who lived the blessed gospel principles outlined in the sacred volume they are laboriously trying to expose and disprove.

Not only gold ornaments have been found in the Panama country, but temples, places, and parts of ruined cities of former ages have also been uncovered by workmen in recent years, all of which is foretold in the book referred to, "the sealed book" of Isaiah 29.

The expenditure of the $300,000,000 in building the Panama Canal will, doubtless, be the means of taking thousands of land speculators, and colonizers into that tropical country both north and south of the canal, who will in time subdue the land and build roadways, which work will bring to the world's reading tables additional evidences of a wonderful civilization that flourished there centuries before the coming of Columbus. Hence as a church we are being benefited directly as well as indirectly by that great expenditure of money by "Uncle Sam."

A PREHISTORIC CITY

The special favors just mentioned have been supplemented by an expenditure of $20,000 by the Yale National Geographic Society, under the able management of Professor Hiram Bingham, who with a company of archaeologists and other workmen discovered and uncovered the ruins of an ancient capital city in Peru, South America, of about two hundred edifices built of white granite and including palaces, temples, etc. The expedition did their work of uncovering the city about two years ago, and Professor Bingham furnished the National Geographic Magazine, April, 1913, of Washington, District of Columbia, with a graphic account of it, together with over two hundred fine photographs of the buildings claimed by him to have been built over two thousand years ago. One question arising in the minds of the men who uncover the ancient temples on this continent is, What has become of the sacred textbook, or any part of it, used by the highly civilized people who held religious services within those hallowed walls? Echo answers them, Where? But every Latter Day Saint could, with the Book of Mormon as his guide, answer, hence the scientific and literary world must come to us for the coveted information.

ESTABLISHING THE TRUTH

There have been during the past few years books written against the faith of the Saints, making special effort to discredit their claims for the Book of Mormon and the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, the martyr. But while our enemies have spent hundreds of dollars publishing their stereotyped falsehoods, there have been tens of thousands of dollars expended by the United States Government and private corporations proving the sacred claims of this church to be true, and that the gospel of Christ restored to earth by a holy angel from heaven which we teach is the world's great need to-day.

As a church we are very grateful to the army of willing workers who have such treasures of money, time and talents, and who are spending some of them in our behalf, although they do not know it.

Saints, it will only be a few more years till the evidences in proof of the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon will be so wonderful and inspiring that we will appreciate the following words in hymnology better, if possible, than ever before:

"Book of Mormon, hid for ages
On Cumorah's lonely hill,
Written by those ancient sages
Whom Jehovah taught his will;
Glad we hail it,
Fullness of the gospel still."

Search the Scriptures

In the fifth chapter of John's Gospel we find a statement made by Christ as follows: "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." (I. T., verse 40.) I think this is an admonition to which we should give more attention than we do at times, and when we do so remember the statement made in Acts 17: 11, "These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so."

How shall we search the Scriptures and find out whether these things are so if we do not make use of the Inspired Translation? for in the King James Translation there are many mistranslations, and so we may many times be misled. When Christ said, "Search the Scriptures," he meant the Scriptures as he gave them to us, for in them we have the truth, and the truth is to make us free.

The Lord has said in latter-day revelation, (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4) "Truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come." Not as it is mistranslated, but as it was or as God gave it.

I find that the Saints and even the elders in their letters and articles use scripture from the King James Translation, and the statements as given in the King James Translation sometimes misrepresent God, the apostles, and the plan of God, when we could just as well use the Inspired Translation. I have often seen these mistranslations used in our church papers. I will not take up the valuable space in your paper to give them all, but wish to just give a few:

John 4: 23, 24, King James Translation: "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." Here we read, "God is a spirit."

In the Inspired Translation we find this scripture in John 4: 25, 26, which reads as follows: "And the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship him. For unto such hath God promised his Spirit. And they who worship him, must worship in spirit and in truth." Here we read in place of God being a spirit that he promised to true worshipers his Spirit.

Some have at times referred to Romans 7: 15 and also other verses in the chapter. The fifteenth verse King James' Translation reads: "For that which I do I allow not; for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I."

The Inspired Translation reads: "But now I am spiritual; for that which I am commanded to do, I do; and that which I am commanded not to allow, I allow not." The 16th verse, Inspired Translation, reads: "For what I know is not right, I would not do; for that which is sin, I hate."

As the Inspired Translation renders this passage it is reasonable, the other is not.

Some have referred to 1 Corinthians 12: 31, King James' Translation, which reads: "But covet earnestly the best gifts; and yet show I unto you a more excellent way." The Inspired Translation reads: "I say unto you, Nay; for I have shown unto you a more excellent way, therefore covet earnestly the best gifts."

Why not do as Christ said, Search the scriptures; and as the Bereans did, "search the Scriptures to see if those things are so." And as Paul said to Timothy, (2 Timothy 2: 15) "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth"? Those who do not have an Inspired Translation of the Bible, can get one at the Herald Publishing House for one dollar.

Our desire should be to walk in the greater light, and to enjoy all God has for us to enjoy, that we may become a blessing to our fellow men. We can be the greatest blessing when we walk in the greater light; then let us study that we may be able to see light in God's light and truth in his truth, and make the same known to others.

I sometimes think there is almost as much of a difference in the Inspired Translation and the other translations of the Bible as there is in the Latter Day Saint Church and the other churches; and if it is of importance to unite with the Latter Day Saint Church, I believe it to be of great importance for us to study the Inspired Bible, for Christ did not only say, "Seek the kingdom of God," but also, "The righteousness of God," and that is in the Scriptures as given by inspiration. Search for truth and live it; be a light and a blessing.

JACOB G. HALB.

The Necessity for Analysis

In recent issues of the HERALD we were given very good illustrations of the real need for the application of the principles of analysis upon any published article or item before we essay to criticize publicly that article or item. We refer to certain editorials and criticisms of editorials concerning labor conditions in the United States.

Analysis of a subject means the separation of the subject into its constituent parts or elements; and further, a careful consideration of each part or element in its relation to the other parts, and to the whole subject. If an individual who wishes to criticize any published article or public speech will first apply the principles of analysis to it and be guided by the result he will then be prepared to criticize justly, and may offer his deductions confidently; for, if based upon true analysis, they will stand.

In the case of the editorials and criticisms mentioned, had the principles of true analysis been applied to the editorial, the criticisms would not have been offered, for the simple reason that such analysis would have resulted in a better understanding of the true position of the editors. There is nothing in the editorials referred to that reflects the slightest animosity to the cause of labor.

LOVELAND, IOWA, May 24, 1914.

Editors Herald: The HERALD pages give much encouragement and comfort to me. I enjoy the letters from the Saints all over the land. Sometimes I get quite discouraged with myself and the church privileges I have. Our branch is very small and young. When I read some of the letters from Saints who do not even get to hear a sermon or see one of God's servants for maybe a year or more, I feel that I ought to be thankful for the privileges I now have. We can attend Sunday school and every service if we are well, as we only live about one fourth mile from the schoolhouse where we hold our services each Sunday afternoon.

I have experienced God's love and kindness. I took quite seriously ill this spring. I was very weak and suffering greatly and hardly knew what to do. I knew I had to have help soon or I could not live. I did not want the doctor. The elders were what I wanted. I felt that if they could come and anoint my head with oil and administer to me I would get well.

But I did not make my wants known, for there were no elders close, and I knew we would have to phone for them to come on the train. We live on bottom land, and the frost was just coming out of the ground, so it was almost impossible for a team to travel the roads just then. I realized what an effort it would be to get the elders here and back to the train again, so I did not ask for them, but trusted in our Father above.

My fever kept getting higher, and I grew weaker. My mother was with me at the time. She was so worried and kept saying and wishing I would have the doctor come out. I finally gave my consent and he came and gave me six different kinds of medicine. I got better, but I felt dissatisfied. I felt that I should have had the elders. So I took my case to the Lord in prayer; he knew my heart and my desire, also the condition of the roads.

A day or two later God visited me in a miraculous way. I never told the family of this incident, but refused taking the medicine. I made up my mind that so soon as I was able to get outdoors I would empty it out. The doctor left a tonic which he said I must take. I only had taken about one half at that time. I had the pleasure of emptying the rest out. I gained day by day, slowly. Now I am strong and well and can work as hard as I ever did.

I realize my weakness and shortcomings very much, and wonder how it is the Lord is so good to me, weak as I am. But it is my desire to live right and do right, although I make many mistakes. I have the promise in my blessing that if I am faithful, when hours of trial and trouble come the angels will be with me and I will be able to sense their presence. I feel that I have had that privilege more than once. I ask an interest in the prayers of all, that I may be more faithful in the future than I have been heretofore, and that I may prove a true wife and mother. I remain,

A sister in the one gospel,

MRS. GRACE HOYT.

WINTHROP, ARKANSAS, May 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: After returning from General Conference, I went over to Blocker, in Pittsburg County, Oklahoma, and had a fine meeting with good interest. This is where Brother W. D. Jaggars and wife live. They are fine Saints. The father of Brother Alexander Powell, of Hartshorn, lives here. He and I are conducting a meeting here at Winthrop at missionaries of Eastern Oklahoma will do well to look after this place.

I returned home to Wilburton, packed my grips, and in company with J. M. Smith started for Arkansas and Louisiana. Brother Smith accompanied me as far as Fanshaw, Oklahoma. We had a two-day meeting there, and I baptized three fine little girls. Brother Smith is to labor in that field this year. May the Lord bless him.

My first stop in the great State of Arkansas was Grannis. Brother Ed Clinton lives here. He has a fine family. They treat the elders so kindly that it makes us feel as if we were at home. Brother Clinton has done much for the church, how much will never be known until the Master comes and he and his family receive their reward. Elder Youmans also lives here. He is doing all he can to hold the work up. I met Brother Dubois and Brother Harp here. Brother Dubois is an energetic young man. He had been at this place about three weeks. Five had been baptized since he came, and last Sunday morning we went over three miles of the rockiest road I ever saw to the creek and Brother Dubois baptized six more good people. Brother Harp seems to think that an elder who travels over hills and valleys of this country and fights mosquitoes while preaching the gospel is entitled to a great reward.

Brother Harp with his good humor keeps everybody laughing, but he does not fail to tell them of the beautiful gospel. He and I are conducting a meeting here at Winthrop at present. Brother J. T. Riley has done fine work in this country. All remember him with kindness. We are stopping at present with Brother J. E. McLain, whom I knew in Texas. He and his good wife are doing all they can to hold the gospel up.

This is the land of red strawberries. We have enjoyed several dishes of the same.

May the Lord bless his great work everywhere this year. Remember us in the lone pines of Arkansas.

Your brother in the gospel,
E. A. ERWIN.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 1, 1914.

Editors Herald: I can not fail to note that the church is trying to do much with little, and that the little does not reach. I do not know of anything that the church is attempting that is not good, or that there is no place for according to the gospel. Some things may appeal to some more than to others. There is evidently scope for our sympathy, our faith, our benevolences, our spiritual activities, in the various departments of church work. If we can not or do not wish to extend special help to all, we may doubtless do so to some.

The Saints' homes, Sanitarium, Children's Home and College are all more or less worthy of support according to the view we take of things. All are intended for good; all are accomplishing some good.

In recent contact with the Sanitarium, the needs of this institution present themselves and make their mute appeal. Patients may be treated without money and without price if unable to pay. Those who have are willing to contribute to help maintain this institution. Necessary furnishings for such an institution do not drop down from heaven. Doctors and nurses no doubt are put to it to provide for all the needs and wants. Helpless invalids need wheel chairs and other aids. Much linen, many sheets, etc., are always in demand. I see what this institution is trying with all willingness to do, and I see some, possibly only a few, of its unsupplied needs, and wherein it is limited.

It is somewhat pathetic to me to be brought in touch one way and another with what the church is trying to do on slender resources, at least so far as the treasury is concerned. But if all the tithes, (surplus?) were in the storehouse, who can doubt that the Lord would do the rest? There is little doubt in my mind that there is enough and to spare in the hands of the membership to meet the present needs.

Who can take care of the future, provide the rain, rebuke the devourer, give physical help and spiritual power, so well as the Lord? I am sure if we would diligently examine and faithfully judge ourselves, every individual his own case and conditions, we would discover in many instances that we have not done or are not doing what we could.

The worthiness of this work and the present needs, not only those of a spiritual character or of the missionary work, but those arising in the effort to provide for our own, temporarily, physically and mentally, should challenge and enlist or arouse our sympathetic appreciation, and cause us to arise to the occasion and do what we can to meet the needs, and do it now. If we do it now the Lord will bless us now. Now is the day of salvation. Yours in the faith,

M. F. GOWELL.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, June 5, 1914.

Editors Herald: As the deacon of the Owen Sound Branch, I wish to write a few lines on behalf of Owen Sound Saints. We appreciate the HERALD. We find much pleasure reading all the precious things it contains. The sermons and letters bring joy, peace, and much assurance that God's hand leadeth all the way. We are holding aloft the glorious gospel banner.

Appreciative audiences of nonmembers worship with us at all services, Sabbath school, Religion, prayer and preaching especially. But as in all gospel ages many are hearers only, and not doers. Yet we have this assurance that the preaching of God's word will not be in vain. (1 Corinthians 15: 58.)

The greatest joy in my life is when I enter the church services and there hear the gospel preached in its fullness and purity as in days of old, by the power and influence of God's Holy Spirit. Oh, dear Saints, were it not for the gospel my life would be a blank. It is the pride of my life. I want to continue finding something to do for Jesus. He being deeply interested in his own plan of redemption, if we do our part we may be assured that all things will be accomplished.

We desire that the evil one follow after us rather than for him to take the lead. If he does, we are satisfied he will become distant and fall by the wayside helpless. For that unwavering faith and works that shine more bright and clear unto the end of time, we solicit an interest in your prayers.

With love and best wishes for all the Saints,

Your brother in the gospel conflict,
BURNEY GALBRAITH.

FORT TOWSON, OKLAHOMA.

Editors Herald: We have moved to the above-named place. This is a good opening. Elder Bussel preached a few times here on his way to Texas, and had fine interest. The people are calling for more of that kind of preaching. We attend all we can and are going to give out tracts, books and papers to those who seem interested.

Ever since coming into the church we have had faith in the Father, and have felt that his hand was over us. We have been blessed by his Spirit in warming our neighbors. And the best method I have found by which to warn my neighbors is to live a life day by day in a manner becoming a Saint of God. Such a life calls for a full consecration of self. But under the Spirit we enjoy it is nothing to give up this world and its ways. The things of this world have nothing in Christ, says the apostle.

I enjoy reading the many cheerful letters and articles of the HERALD. I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. M. M. AARONS.

Extracts from Letters

V. M. Goodrich, Los Angeles, California, in private letter to Elbert A. Smith: "I am pleased to tell you of the good meeting we had yesterday at sacrament service. The Lord truly met with us. The gifts were poured out profusely and in great power unto the moving of the congregation to tears of joy and gratitude, several of the newer members never having witnessed the power of God in the 'gifts.' I was one to be spoken to, bidding me to be of courage and of good cheer, that the Lord had truly sent me here, and that he would watch over me and my labors. Brother Schade, the presiding priest, was also spoken to, being commended and encouraged. The Saints who were 'making an effort to serve God' were commended and those who were 'indifferent' were strongly reproved. The Saints were told by the presiding officer at the beginning of the service that if they would 'draw nigh to God he would draw nigh to them this day;' and after several fervent prayers were offered, the Spirit filled the house and our souls were filled with joy and the peace of heaven was upon us. The Saints were greatly strengthened and I believe we all are greatly encouraged. The work seems to be opening up in a new way in the city. I was called to administer to an Armenian, Mr. Mushagan by name; he was paralyzed in one half of his body. There was instantaneous healing. He is a minister of a little flock of his nationality, and he requested me to preach for them, saying he would furnish an interpreter. I have preached twice for them, and they seem to be receiving the work very kindly. They have a small church and about fifty members, many of whom can not speak English. I expect to follow up this work to see what can be done. While my health is still improving, I am not entirely well, but hopeful. The family is in normal health. Trust this may find you and yours well. With saintly love and trust."

S. W. L. Scott, Windsor, Ontario, in private letter to Elbert A. Smith: "I am lifting up the ensign in this Canadian city of twenty-three thousand population twice on Sundays and each evening during the week to a very fine attendance. Brother R. D. Weaver has been busy here, but took his departure this morning for Chatham. I see no material difference in the king's domain and that of Uncle Sam. Intelligence is here, and also the automobile; people buy and sell and manifest loyalty to their government and its respective parties. The proverbial pleasure seekers are here, and opportunities numerous in that particular line. The Saints are here too, and engage in the struggle toward their ideals, in common with Saints throughout the world."

Clinton District

We are now having a new experience; i. e., doing missionary work in Missouri, under General Conference appointment—an experience we have long desired. We are only getting acquainted with the field now. It is a very busy season with the farmers, so there is not much opportunity of doing anything in the country yet.

We have preached at Butler, Rich Hill, Nevada, and Walker. We have found a number of good Saints at all these places. Rich Hill impresses the writer as being a splendid place for Saints to locate who have means to come to the "region round about" Zion. It is surrounded by a beautiful country. The Saints there have a commodious chapel, and there is room and welcome there for good, live workers. Why not center our interest to some extent in such places as this instead of all rushing into Independence?

At Rich Hill I was joined by Brother Walter A. Johnson, a priest, just newly appointed to the mission field. He is a young yet very humble, and discreet in his conduct. If he continues faithful we believe he will become a fruitful worker in the gospel in days to come. It is good to see young men coming forward at the Spirit's call to give their lives and talents to the gospel cause.

There is a splendid prospect of a bountiful wheat harvest, notwithstanding the army worm invasion. They have about all disappeared from this immediate section now.

The work in this Clinton District is new to the writer, and we ask the Saints and friends who know of opportunities for new openings to assist us by giving notice of such places. If the isolated ones will make an effort to secure for me places for preaching in their localities, we will try to respond. We may be addressed at Holden, Missouri, box 144.

While we are especially interested in the work in this district, we have not forgotten the Saints and the work in the Southern Indiana and Kentucky and Tennessee districts. We think of all, and pray God's blessings upon all, and upon the efforts put forth in those places this year.

Praying for the welfare of the church in all lands, we remain
Yours in gospel work,

H. E. MOLER.

WALKER, MISSOURI, June 7, 1914.

Southern Indiana

We are here in the little town where M. R. Scott lives, with a tent that we have hired, preaching every night to good, interested crowds. We have been here since the third, and have not so much as seen Mr. Scott. Some are talking of being baptized. We hope to get the truth fully before the people. It is the talk all around town that we are having good meetings, so we have hope of enlightening some. The pastor of the Methodist church came out one night and wished us success. He said that M. R. Scott had done a great deal of damage to the true gospel work in this part of the country.

I do not know how long we will have the use of this tent. It belongs to some Holy Rollers here. They are attending our meetings and seem to be interested. They took us home with them to dinner on Sunday. Brother L. C. Moore is helping me here. He is a live wire.

I left a splendid opening at New Middletown, where I held twelve meetings. We will try to get back to that place the latter part of August. We are hopeful of getting into many new places this year. We trust that we shall have the prayers of all the Saints to that end.

We are still your servant at the battle front, wielding the sword of truth.

J. W. METCALF.

HOLTON, INDIANA, June 9, 1914.

News from Branches

Saint Louis, Missouri

Our sacrament meetings since last report have been soul cheering and well attended, and the discourses delivered by the ministry edifying and uplifting.

Our election of branch officers resulted in placing those in charge who will, we trust, have an interest in the welfare of the branch. Our local men, with Brother T. J. Elliott as our pastor, are to be commended for their untiring efforts in advancing the work.

The Sunday school and Religio are in good condition; our young people enjoying the lessons, programs and association.

The rite of baptism was administered at 10.30 a. m. the morning of June 7. After prayer by Brother Archibald and a verse of hymn 299 was sung, our pastor, Brother Elliott, immersed in the liquid grave Brother J. M. Hampson. The confirmation which took place at the sacrament service was very impressive, the blessed Spirit of the Master being present to a marked degree. Brother Hampson will be remembered by some as the undersigned's employer. He has given the work a thorough examination, and, as are all honest seekers for truth, was convinced of the divinity of the work. He was not left to depend on the arm of flesh, but was directed in his search by our heavenly Father. He testifies as feeling very happy and as one who has found his home.

One of our district missionaries, Brother W. A. Smith, was with us at one of our Sunday morning services and gave us a fine Latter Day Saint sermon. We hope he will soon come again.

Your sister in Christ,

2739 Greer Avenue.

ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

Kewanee.—Convened at Peoria, Illinois, May 30 and 31, in the Odd Fellows' Hall, 622 Main Street, J. F. Curtis and Charles L. Holmes presiding. Statistical reports: Kewanee 135; Millersburg 90, loss 3; Joy 84, loss 11; Twin City 81, loss 24; Buffalo Prairie 74, gain 3; Dahinda 63, loss 8; Mathersville 47, gain 1; Rock Island 30, organized January 25, 1914; Peoria 54; Canton 58. Owing to district president O. E. Sade being under quarantine because of smallpox there were no reports from him, nor from branch presidents, except D. S. Holmes and William Willetts. Bishop's agent, Charles L. Holmes, reported: Total receipts, $1,395.32; expenditures, $801.01. Charles L. Holmes reported that he and O. E. Sade had visited Canton Branch as directed by last conference, but after looking the situation over had deemed it inadvisable to disorganize. Have not visited Media as yet. Secretary reported that after consultation with general recorder she had awaited further action before making purchase of new record. She was authorized to purchase loose-leaf system. Matter of giving letters of removal to scattered members of Henderson Grove Branch was referred to district secretary and president for attention and correction. Officers elected: O. E. Sade, president, with permission to choose assistant; Mary E. Gillin, secretary; Charles L. Holmes, treasurer; Carrie Holmes, librarian; Henry Ziegenhorn, recommended by Buffalo Prairie Branch, was ordained to office of elder, by J. F. Curtis and Charles L. Holmes. Sherman Hartsock, of Moline, Illinois, was called to the office of elder by Apostle J. F. Curtis, and the matter was referred to his branch. Hannah Hardy, from eastern Illinois, was baptized by J. R. Grice and confirmed by F. A. Smith and David Holmes. Preaching by F. A. Smith, J. F. Curtis, C. E. Willey. A pleasant, quiet, peaceful spirit attended the sessions, and all seemed to feel benefited and encouraged. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, 115 Clark Avenue, Peoria, Illinois.

Convention Minutes

KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE.—Sunday school and Religion met with Louisville Saints, May 15. In the afternoon business was disposed of, and at 7.45 p. m. a joint session was held. Katherine Schmitt, secretary Religion.

The Bishopric

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT

Notice is hereby given to the Saints and friends residing in the Western Colorado District that M. L. Schmid, 326 Main, Delta, Colorado, has been duly appointed bishop's agent in and for said district, and authorized to act in this position within said territory, according to the rules and regulations of the church in the administration of the law of finances.

We take pleasure in commending Brother Schmid to the Saints and friends of the district, and trust that each one may feel interested in helping him along in his efforts for good in the Master's cause. We suggest that if Brother Schmid is not able by reason of his work to visit all points of the district each will feel sufficiently interested to communicate with him.

May each strive to overcome, and move forward in the work of the Lord so that the good work may be seen of those who are looking for evidences of the truth of the gospel as set forth in the message of Jesus to the world. Ever praying for the advancement and progress of the gospel of peace and good will to men, I am,

Very respectfully,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 9, 1914.

Pastoral

To the Ministry, Saints, and Friends of British Isles Mission; Greeting: The General Conference of 1914 having sustained the writer, it becomes his duty to address a few words to you.

My first word is to express pleasure in reading of the experiences of the church during the sessions of the late conference. The reception of the revelation by the church is a step in the right direction (spiritual progression) which I trust we may all have faith to receive. The instruction of the Lord is vital. The spirit of mistrust is of all evils the very worst that could take possession of us, because you can only show forth your faith in God, by the amount of confidence you have in your fellows.

The following organization will be the order, and official propaganda for the conference year now before us:

Bishop R. May, London; John Judd, London; J. W. Taylor, Manchester District; G. W. Leggott, Northeastern Manchester; W. R. Armstrong, East Manchester; T. Taylor, Leeds and Bradford; J. R. Greenwood, Stafford; James Baty and H. Greenwood, Manchester District; John Bailey and E. Maloney, Farnworth; Jas. Schofield, Denton and Hyde; W. H. Chandler, Warrington; W. Ecclestone, Leicester; J. E. Meredith, Birmingham and Malvern; John Schofield and Albert Kendrick, Birmingham; Charles Cousins, John Holmes, Earnest Wragg and Joseph Holmes, Sheffield District; T. J. Picton, Neath; John Pughsley, Aberaman; J. G. Jenkins, Western Wales District; E. J. Trapp, Gloucester; James Bunt, Plymouth and Exeter; N. Dewsnup, Denton and Hyde; W. H. Greenwood.

As a word of encouragement, brethren, let me remind you that last year was a record experience for our mission in point of baptisms, so that we may comfort ourselves with the thought that we are in line with the general church.

The times and conditions are ever changing; this is true both in the church and the world. The pace is ever increasing. Nation vies with nation. War is rife almost everywhere. These are the times that soldiers are needed. The soldier is a fighting man. The soldier of Christ is called upon to fight; not only against sin, and wickedness in high places, for he is called upon to defend truth and principle everywhere. Your fellow soldier may fall by your side, as the soldier in battle; but you must still face the foe and continue the fight to the end. Victory is promised to each soldier only along right lines. Principle must be maintained, truth defended, and love demonstrated by each individual soldier in order that the fighting line may be kept intact, that the mighty victory of love, purity of life, and holiness of purpose and conduct may be gained by each soldier.

Will the Saints kindly remember that the bishop of the mission is working for a record year. You have collectors in each branch, and we look for increased support this year. Let the spirit of mistrust be put away as the Lord has exhorted us, and let us put our mites together. In this way unity will be realized, and our burden made light.

I am very anxious to carry out my purpose and plan this year. To do this I shall need all the support that you can give me. We have had now for the last two years some twenty-seven men working as self-sustaining missionaries in this mission, and we have never been able to keep half of them fulfilling their missions. Now this year we are determined that these men shall fulfil their duty, according to the terms of their appointment. And thus shall we find out the true worth of the self-sustaining ministry.

I therefore plead with you to assist us to the best of your ability. The benefit will be yours, for the Saints are bound to be blessed by the interchange of thought that we desire to promote throughout the mission.

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD, Minister in Charge.

MOSTON, MANCHESTER, 23 Cicero Street.

consin, or E. A. Townsend, president, 1048 Ninth Street, Beloit, Wisconsin.

Utah will convene at Malad, Idaho, July 18, at 2 p. m. Sessions will be held in the evening, and in the morning, afternoon, and evening of the 19th. Excursion rates are effective on July 18 and the Saints are urged to take advantage of same and come to conference. Ministerial and other reports should be forwarded to G. J. S. Abels, Ogden, Utah, on or before July 11. C. A. Smurthwaite, vice president.

Convention Notices

Saskatchewan Sunday school will meet July 10, with Iowa Branch, near Saskatoon. Trains will be met at Duro for Grand Trunk Railroad and at Haultain for Canadian Northern. C. R. Bowerman, secretary.

Minnesota Sunday school will meet at Clitherall, June 19, instead of June 12, as reported last week. Alta Kimber, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Chatham will be held July 4 to 13 at Erie Beach, Ontario, a beautiful resort on Lake Erie, twelve miles south of Chatham; good recreation grounds and a delightful spot for camping. Many prominent men of the church will be present. Grand Trunk, Canadian Pacific, Wabash, and Pere Marquette railroads connect with Chatham, Wallaceburg and Lake Erie Electric Road which runs direct to Erie Beach. For tents apply to Stewart Lamont, 66 Lydican Avenue, Chatham, Ontario. Full particulars later by posters and cards to all branches of district. J. C. Dent, secretary, Bothwell, Ontario.

Independence Stake will meet at Pertle Springs, near Warrensburg, Missouri, August 13 to 24. Rental prices for cottage rooms: $5 for each end room; $4 for each middle room. Rooms have in them bedstead, mattress and some bed clothing, but we advise each person to take their own bed linen and clothes. Tents as follows: 10 by 12, 3 foot wall, $2.25; 12 by 14, 3½ foot wall, $2.50; cottage tents, 10 by 12, 6 foot wall, $3.50; 10 by 14, 6 foot wall, $3.75; 12 by 14, 6 foot wall, $4; 12 by 16, 6 foot wall, $4.50. Cottage tents can be curtained to make two or three rooms if desired. It is necessary that we have all orders for tents in by July 15, for the firm must know by that time how many tents we may need so they can reserve them. All orders for tents, cottages, etc., and all inquiries, should be made of the undersigned. Early orders will help the committee to expedite matters. J. A. Tanner, 811 Lydia Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

Portland will convene July 20 within the city limits, Estacada, Oregon. Estacada is reached from Portland by street car; round trip excursion is being arranged for at 75 cent rate for the reunion. Reunion convenes immediately after conference held the 18th and 19th. For tents correspond with G. M. Appleman, 1914 Washington Street, East Portland, Oregon. For information regarding grounds, write R. S. Coop, Estacada, Oregon. We are expecting missionary in charge and mission patriarch, also Brethren Shippy, Cook, and Barmore of the missionary force. This will be a good place to take your family for their summer outing. We trust your interest in this reunion will bring success to our cause, and that all may be comforted and cheered by the presence of the Spirit of our Master. N. T. Chapman, president.

Those attending Northern Wisconsin reunion will be F. G. Pitt and wife, recently from Palestine and Australia, with stereopticon views of their travels. Brethren F. M. Cooper, L. Fike, L. H. Houghton, A. L. Whiteaker, B. C. Flint and local force. F. A. Smith will be present with scribe. J. A. Gunsolley will attend or furnish substitute for Sunday school and Religio work. Date June 26 to July 6. Leroy Colbert, secretary.

Clinton, Missouri, will be held at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, July 31 to August 8. Judging from the record of past reunions held at this place, the Saints may expect a grand time. More complete announcement regarding tents, etc., will appear later. Willis W. Kearney, for committee.

Des Moines, Iowa, will be held at Rhodes, Iowa, on the main line of Chicago Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railroad, August 21 to 30 inclusive. Tents will be set up August 20. Rental price: 7 by 9, $1.50; 10 by 12, $2; 12 by 14, $2.50; 14 by 16, $3.50. Cots: single, 35 cents; double, 50 cents. Mattresses: single, 25 cents; double 35 cents. Chairs, each 10 cents; tables, each 25 cents. Prices on other camp furniture furnished on application to secretary. Tents set up, 25 cents extra. Dining tent on grounds, meals 15 and 20 cents. Grounds only four blocks from depot. James A. Gillen, F. A. Smith, missionaries of the district, and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, the latter in charge of Sunday school and Religio work, will be with us. Des Moines District Doers, an organization of young people, are arranging pleasant outdoor games for recreation between sessions. Send all orders to J. L. Parker, secretary committee, 1307 Maple Street, Des Moines, Iowa, not later than August 1.

Kentucky and Tennessee will convene July 18, at Foundry Hill, near Whitlock, Tennessee. Those coming by train notify R. M. C. Ross, Puryear, Tennessee. We expect R. C. Russell and other speakers. Everybody invited. S. E. Dickson, secretary.

Died

WINN.—Emma E. Winn was born June 7, 1884, near Corydon, Harrison County, Indiana; died May 19, 1914. She was baptized June 3, 1905, by William H. Kelley, remaining faithful until death. She was afflicted from childhood. She leaves father, mother, two brothers, two sisters. Services at the home, L. C. Moore in charge.

SMITH.—Stella J. Smith was born June 21, 1893; died June 3, 1914, from tuberculosis. She united with the church, September, 1909. She leaves parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Smith, brother and sister. Service at Missouri Valley, June 5, at 2.30 p. m.; sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by J. R. Fry. She lived a noble life. Many friends mourn her early demise.

CLARK.—Leslie B. Clark, son of Charles A. and Lydia B. Clark, was born at Galien, Berrien County, Michigan, October 29, 1883; died at Lansing, Ingham County, Michigan, May 24, 1914. He was a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, uniting with the church by baptism on October 1, 1893, remaining true to the faith from that day to the hour of his death. He was an attorney, being a member of Berrien County Bar. He has served in many positions of responsibility and trust. At the time of his death he was chief clerk of corporations in the office of the Secretary of State, at Lansing, Michigan. In every work in which he labored he was always successful. His pleasant disposition won him many friends wherever he was known. Although he died in young manhood, he lived a full life. He is survived by parents, one brother, Doctor S. A. Clark, of Sound Bend, Indiana, a sister, Miss Winnie Clark, of Galien, Michigan, one uncle, Bishop E. A. Blakeslee, of Saint Joseph, Michigan, four aunts, many other near relatives, and a host of friends. Brother Clark met his death in an automobile accident at Lansing. The funeral was held at the parents' home in Galien, Samuel Stroh, of Coldwater, Michigan, officiating. Many attended the funeral from far and near, showing the high esteem in which the young man was held.

Book Reviews

THE SOCIAL EMERGENCY.—Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston, New York, Chicago, by William Trufant Foster, with an introduction by Charles W. Eliot. There never has been a time when the hygiene and morals of young people were more upon the public conscience. The question of sex education in the public schools is but one evidence of this. Frank but sane discussion of the whole problem is imperative, and this the present book offers. President Foster has here brought together essays by several authors on the various aspects of social hygiene, and on the proper means of forming an enlightened public opinion concerning the measures which society can now, at last, wisely undertake against the vices and evils which in the human race accompany bodily self-indulgence and lack of moral stamina. The Social Emergency is a sincere effort, first, to supply the needed knowledge of terrible wrongs and destructions; and secondly, to indicate cautiously and tentatively the most available means of attacking the evils described. It is an attempt to enlighten public opinion on one of the gravest of modern problems. The book is intended for parents, teachers, ministers, and other persons who have to answer the questions of children and youth about sex relations, or deal sympathetically with the victims of sexual vice. It is intended to arouse public sentiment, spread accurate knowledge, check rash enthusiasm, and promote well-informed and resolute action.

THE PROGRESS OF EUGENICS.—This new book, by Doctor C. W. Saleeby, (Funk and Wagnalls Company, New York City,) is a challenge to all who claim an interest in the uplift and improvement of mankind. It puts the new science on a higher, a diviner, and yet a more human level than some of its exponents have occupied or have claimed for it. "Every human being," says this author, "is composed by the conjugation, fusion, or conception of two cells, one derived from each parent. What those cells bring and are is the 'nature' or 'heredity' of the new individual. When they unite they form a single cell, which would be only just visible to the naked eye, though it has never yet been seen. This is the new individual. All the influences which play upon, feed, mold, stimulate, aerate, poison, or otherwise affect the new individual, from the moment of conception to the moment of death, constitute its 'nurture.' How much this term means in the case of a human being, who not only breathes, as all living things do, but also reads, as no other living thing does, we must never forget." And whoever reads this book will never forget it.

THE BIBLE IN THE MAKING.—This is the title of a recently published work by J. Patterson Smyth, B. D. Litt. D., D. C. L., Archdeacon of Saint Andrew's, Montreal, late professor of pastoral theology in the University of Dublin, published by James Pott and Company, New York City, price, net, 75 cents. An attempt to outline the historic steps involved in the making of the Bible, in the light of modern research. Of more than ordinary interest to students of Bible literature and history. The special divisions of the book are: The making of the Old Testament; the Apocrypha; the making of the New Testament. The following statement concerning the making of the New Testament will be of especial interest to Latter Day Saints, in view of their belief regarding modern revelation and the attitude assumed by the world at the time of the advent of the Book of Mormon: "The first thing that strikes one in the making of the New Testament is that, like that of the Old, it was unconscious, unintentional. When we come to Apostolic days we find the first Christians with their complete Holy Bible which we now call the Old Testament. And to one who really thinks himself into their position, the wonder is, humanly speaking, that there should ever have come what we call the New Testament. For these early Christians had no more notion of making a new Bible or adding to the old one than we have to-day. They had, as we have, the word of God, believed to be completed, regarded by them and quoted by Christ and his apostles as the Bible of divine authority. They wanted no other. It would have seemed to them sacrilegious to add to it even if they thought of such a thing, which they did not."

SOCIALISM; PROMISE OR MENACE.—Hillquit and Ryan Publishers, Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York City, price $1.25. One of the most interesting magazine discussions ever held was that recently carried on through the pages of Everybody's Magazine between Morris Hillquit (affirming Socialism) and John A. Ryan, D. D. (denying it). This discussion has now been published in book form and may be obtained as above noted from the Macmillan Company. The following subjects are thoroughly discussed pro and con: The Socialist industrial state; the philosophy of Socialism; Socialism and morality; Socialism and religion. Anyone who desires to be posted on the subject of Socialism either as an advocate or an adversary should not fail to read this book.

A Vacation on a Ranch

this summer will do you more good than a barrel of medicine. Get out into the open, close to nature and have the time of your life. Rest, relax and recreate. Ride over sun-flooded trails in the hills; row on silvery lakes; fish in shady brooks; tramp down winding paths among the trees; loaf in soft valleys of green; stroll in the moonlight; eat of the fat of the land and sleep like a babe. Such a vacation pays tremendous health dividends. You will come back feeling like a different person.

In the Black Hills of South Dakota, in the Big Horn Mountains of Wyoming, in the Buffalo Bill country, along the Cody Road into Yellowstone Park, there are countless places where you can spend just such a vacation and at a very moderate cost. The Hot Springs (S. D.) teem with life-giving and disease-curing qualities, while down at Thermopolis, in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming, is a hot spring, the waters of which are as an anti-toxin to hundreds of ills that beset the human race.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

EUGENIC LAW SUSTAINED.—The Wisconsin supreme court has sustained the constitutionality of the Wisconsin eugenic law, reversing the decision of the Milwaukee County circuit court.

ENGLISH PLURAL VOTING.—The Plural Voting Bill, formerly passed by the House of Commons and vetoed by the Lords, has the second time passed the House. This bill provides for "one man, one vote," as against the present law, which allows a man to vote in as many places as he has residences and tax paying qualifications.

DANISH POLITICS.—A bill abolishing property qualifications for electors of members of the Danish Senate, and extending the vote to women has passed the lower house. This bill would take from the king the right to appoint twelve of the sixty-six senators. Conservative senators with the twelve appointees of the king effected a deadlock over the bill, and the king dissolved the Senate.

TRUST LEGISLATION.—President Wilson in a statement to the press calls attention to a conspiracy on the part of certain interests to hasten an adjournment of Congress and block antitrust legislation. The Pictorial Review Company, of New York, and the Simmons Hardware Company, of Saint Louis, are named as aggressors. The President declares that he will use every means at his command to combat this deliberate campaign by the interests, and to have the pending bills passed by the Senate at this session.

BALKAN DISORDERS.—A renewal of hostilities between Turkey and Greece is threatened. One hundred Greeks are said to have been massacred at Fhokia near Smyrna. Thirty-eight hundred refugees from this point have reached Salonica. Greece protests against this treatment of her citizens, and relations between the countries are strained to the breaking point. Protesting against the rulership of Prince William, of Wied, nominated by the powers, Musselmen insurgents on the 15th and 16th attacked Durazzo, the Albanian capital. Government troops under the personal command of Prince William repulsed these attacks. Blue jackets from the international fleet off the coast were landed. Reinforcements were sent to Durazzo, and conditions are reported improved.

MEXICO AND THE UNITED STATES.—On the appointment of Constitutionalist delegates, the mediators informed them that they would not be admitted to the conference unless an armistice were declared and internal as well as external phases of the Mexican problem accepted in the scope of mediation. Constitutional representatives advised the United States delegates that the Constitutionlists could not agree to an armistice, and that only a man prominent in the Constitutionlist ranks would be acceptable to them as provisional president. In the interests of permanent peace and popular government in Mexico, the Washington administration continues to insist upon a Constitutionlist for provisional president. Huerta and his advisors decline to accept such a man, and demand a neutral.

MEXICAN WAR.—The Constitutionlist gunboat Tampico was sunk on the 16th by the Federalist Guerrero, leaving the latter the only warship on the west coast of Mexico. The Constitutionlists under General Natera are reported from Mexico City as repulsed at Zacatecas with heavy losses. A break between Villa and Carranza seemed imminent on the 13th when following the refusal of Villa to send five thousand of his troops to the assistance of General Natera, with the statement that he was going to Zacatecas himself, Carranza appointed Natera in command of the division of the army formerly directed by Villa. Villa resigned; his generals refused to accept another as their leader. Villa arrested the civil officers appointed by Carranza in territory he, Villa, had taken and appointed others in their stead. Latest advices state that Villa's resignation has not been accepted, that he denies a split between himself and Carranza, and that with enlarged powers he intends to proceed on his way to Zacatecas, and thence to Mexico City.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

THE MEXICAN PROBLEM.—The fundamental cause of the present revolution in Mexico is said to be agrarian. An interesting discussion of Mexican conditions together with the development of the revolution will be found in the Of General Interest columns of this issue of the HERALD.

LAMONI ORDER OF ENOCH.—E. L. Kelley and E. A. Blakeslee of the Presiding Bishopric, F. M. Smith and E. A. Smith of the First Presidency, James E. Kelley of the Twelve, and Bishop A. Carmichael met with the Lamoni Stake Bishopric and Stake Presidency at Lamoni, Iowa, Thursday evening, June 18, in a preliminary meeting for the purpose of organizing an Order of Enoch. Other meetings were held Friday and Saturday, and articles of association were drafted and adopted. A mass meeting was held at the Brick Church Sunday afternoon, at which addresses were made by Bishop E. L. Kelley and President F. M. Smith, and names were received for membership. A meeting was then called for Monday evening to effect an organization and elect trustees. The articles of association were modeled on those adopted by the Order at Independence, the name selected being The Lamoni Order of Enoch.

EPISTLE OF JOINT COUNCIL OF PRESIDENCY AND TWELVE

The last General Conference was in some ways an epoch-making one. The systematization of the routine work and the critical analysis of the church's polity and methods regarding finance and institutional work promise a more systematic regulation of our church affairs, and yet there was not any diminution of spirituality in the devotional services. In the debates on the conference floor a characteristic feature was restraint, always an evidence of real power. Then the pleasing innovations in the public services, the morning lectures and the musical features may be taken as evidences that our church is responding to the spirit of progress and seeking to interpret our special message in the ways of modern thought and interest.

The church can advance only when it can accurately interpret and sense the mission of Christ and by the Spirit of the Master offer that which will indeed supply the immanent needs of the race. It can then assist in the solution of the current problems and with invincible zeal capture the outposts of the enemy and plant the banner of truth on the new continents in which the race may develop new enterprises.

Our annual conferences are an index of our growth, and if our legislation witnesses a clearer vision of our privileges in God and of our duty to our fellows, our methods of analyzing and treating modern problems and our very impatience at times, are properly understood and gauged, then we may secure in these the conclusion of development; or, if we do not understand God better and we fail in discharging our duty to our fellows in meeting their needs of to-day and solving, be it never so weakly and falteringly, their questionings, and our impatience is petulance or the result of narrow-mindedness, then conversely we are being left behind in the onward march of events.

The history of all times shows that religion has been the torchbearer, leading into new realms, though the churches may often have brought up the rear and not infrequently with scoldings and fulminations. People have at last shown an unmistakable impatience with the churches and their attitude in this regard, and as a consequence ours is in jeopardy. To be authoritative, our church must not only have a history, a constitution, and a book of laws, but she must be radiant with prophecy, and upon her head there must be the diadem of stars,—not the "evening stars" but the "morning stars." It is very suggestive that the mystic John in his vision of the church's glory should have seen her crowned with stars, for the crown of stars can be lost by failure to respond to full duty. The church must ever travel in advance of the hosts of night leading into the dawn, yet she must never allow the sun to dim her crown in noon light, for then she fails in her calling as the expression of him who is the "Bright and Morning Star."

We are surely right in concluding that our experiences in the recent conference are "growing pains" and not the pains of dissolution. The growing demand for solidarity and the socialization of interests and the drawing together of the church ministry in the unity of quorum action, are encouraging signs.

The conventions of the several auxiliary societies tell the same story and the invitations extend to the chief executive officers of the church to help in the selection of officers for them and their work, was a commendable step. So with the conference action regarding the college, the Sanitarium and the church's fiscal department, all are proofs that we are striving to "labor together"—we trust—"with God."

In order to meet the new conditions and prove ourselves capable of survival, we offer the following suggestions and ideas:

COOPERATION OF LOCAL AND MISSIONARY FORCES

There must be closer and more friendly relationship in the work of the local and general ministry; the old feuds must be buried and the old lines of demarcation must be lost in the overflowing service of "all for each and each for all." The missionaries can do better and more permanent work as they develop cooperation with the local ministry, and instead of working independently of the district and branch presidents, secure their counsel and advice as to the best places in their district or vicinity, and when such work is accomplished report the results to these officers and assist in providing for the nursing of such interest until the fruit is produced or improved. The local ministers should in turn collaborate with the missionary force instead of finding fault with them. Let us remember that every officer is demanded in the work of extending the kingdom and its interests. The local men by systematic work under the direction of the local men in charge as district presidents can help to make effective the work of the missionary brethren, while on the other hand the missionaries can develop and bring to fruition the work of the local men. Proselyting is always an important feature of our ministry, but it is not all; the work of shepherding and educating is at least quite as important.

We would suggest to the missionaries that when unsatisfactory conditions exist in branches or districts, before taking steps to deal with such matters officially the cases should be presented to the minister in charge; this will insure unity of action and strengthen the work which might be done.

REPORTS

We call attention to the need of being prompt in making out and sending the reports. This is a matter which has not had the attention of the missionaries as we should like, and we respectfully solicit your cooperation in this matter: secure the report blanks which are provided from the Herald Publishing House and get the habit of being prompt in reporting.

DEBATES

While we do not encourage debating, where such an experience can be avoided without injury to the cause, still we believe that we can afford to ignore the attacks made upon the church by irresponsible persons and particularly those men who have made such work a sort of profession. Silence at times is more effective than the thunder of denial. But if a debate must be held, then have the propositions drafted and submit them to the minister in charge for approval. Should another man be desired to affirm or defend our position, then remember it is only courteous and proper that every man should be allowed to state his own affirmation.

CRITICISM VERSUS CONSTRUCTIVE MESSAGE

In the preaching of the word we would strongly urge the brethren to cultivate a constructive message. Criticism, speculation, and negation all have their legitimate place and opportunity; but children asking for bread must not be given stones, the pilgrim on the highway of life needs hope, comfort, and direction. Speculating upon those matters about which we have no knowledge may be interesting to students; but to a world perishing for truth it is cruel and foolish to use time and opportunity in such work. We would also counsel against the attacking of other church or religious ideas or work. It is always harder to secure the confidence of a person when he has been treated unkindly. Christ as the true model of the preacher was invariably tolerant and kindly disposed to others, and willing to give full credit to all who were not associated with him. He told what he knew; and told it in such a way that all understood him, and felt that they needed just what he had to offer. His ability to take the forgotten, the insignificant, the neglected, and transmute them into spiritual values was the secret of his perennial power with men.

FORENSIC SPECULATIONS

We do not fully know the mysteries of divine providence, but all men can understand love, kindness, and sympathy. The immaculate conception as a doctrine eludes our methods of explanation, but we all understand that it symbolizes the revelation of the divine through the human. So with Calvary and the atonement; thick clouds surround the ineffable tragedy, though libraries have been written, and we have the sublimated wisdom of two thousand years to draw upon, still we are "lost in wonder, love, and praise" as we remember "that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son," and "while we were yet sinners Christ died for the ungodly." We know not the elements of value, we are ignorant of the real factors, and the event can not be reduced to a common denominator. We all know that the spiritual principle in the atonement is that dynamic by which the worst is sloughed off and the best evolved through the ministry of the best to the worst; the sympathy of the rich to the poor; the service of the strong for the weak. In this God-like attribute the goodness of the world is produced and the happiness of the race generated and the foundations of heaven laid. But with all this we are not bankrupt in service, grace, and uplift; for life itself is the profoundest of mysteries and an authoritative voice in science to-day with humility and yet with faith admits "that we may as well admit that of origins, even of a pebble, we know nothing."

Let us refrain from pouring into the wounds of a sick and lame humanity the acid of doubt and speculation, and fill in the places with emollient of courage, faith, and love. It is well to remember that unanswerable argument for Christianity is the healing of the sick, the casting out of evil, and the development of the golden age while we are still in the age of brass.

LOYALTY

A matter of deep concern is the need for exercising restraint in our criticisms of our fellow ministers. While we are human none of us will satisfy everybody. Men will make mistakes and in their weakness obscure the good and noble which otherwise would be in evidence. We have our conferences and quorum sessions, and the church is peculiarly liberal as to the opportunities which all have to make complaints and initiate an investigation regarding any man, and this should be done if necessary, but it is impolitic and cruel to insinuate against the conduct and character of our fellow workers.

This is equally true of the church institutions as the college, Sanitarium, and homes. We may not all agree as to the need, or desirability of such places, nor with the methods adopted in running or sustaining them, but the church has legitimately originated them and seeks to provide for them and secure their successful operation. To take advantage of our position as ministers in the field and to discourage the Saints sustaining them is treachery to the common weal. Minorities are always entitled to respect, but it is not respect to allow minorities to either openly or surreptitiously thwart the will of the majority.

FIELD WORK

We take occasion to call attention to some criticisms which have been made because of some of the missionaries having their wife traveling with them in the field, and in cases taking the family as well. It does not seem to be a wise thing to do this, and in most cases such a burden placed upon the majority of the members of our church is easily an imposition. If it is desirable to move families into the field (and there can be no doubt but what this course in many instances would be advisable, and we may say that we shall try to work to the appointment of missions with the understanding that such appointment is for a period of three years at the least) it would then be desirable that the family be located at some point which would be convenient and strategic and the family could be utilized as a means of strengthening the work.

ENGAGING IN OTHER WORK

There are criticisms made of those who seek to augment their finances by using time and energy in working and canvassing and engaging in what might be called secular employment while engaged in the service of the church and drawing ministerial allowance. We trust that this notice will be sufficient to all and that in future all who are engaged by the church as missionaries will devote themselves to their ministry and not try to discharge their ministerial services while engaged at the same time in secular employment. If we attend strictly to our duty and seek to make ourselves efficient as workers in the ministry, then we have enough to keep us active to prepare for the calls which are made upon us. If we are not engaged in tracting, preaching, or the other duties which are demanded from the missionary, then the time is demanded for study and meditation. And we earnestly impress upon all the brethren the growing need of education, and there is not any doubt but what the spare time we have can be well used in systematic reading and study.

METHODS

As to the methods which may be employed for the dissemination of the gospel, we urge the advisability of system and concentration in our work. To seek to cover too wide an area territorially is unwise. It is better to establish two or three points and by steady work develop them thoroughly.

We mention open-air preaching and this appeals to us for the reasons that it saves money in renting halls, and brings us into association with a larger number of people. To have regular appointments once or twice a week at a given place will develop an interest which will be surprising to those who have not tried it. But again, open-air preaching to be effective needs care, persistency, and study. Attractive street preaching demands a knowledge of those questions which are agitating the public mind, and ability to show in what way our gospel message can meet the issues. Our Lord himself was one of the most successful open-air preachers the church ever had.

Tracting and making a house to house canvass to get into personal touch with the people seems to be a field which has not been cultivated by our men generally. To make a practice of putting in two or three hours a day in this sort of work is very profitable and it is not sufficient to make a call and leave the tract but to use the tract as a means of providing an interview and of making another call. While at the present our report forms do not make provision for such statistics we should like all to state how many open-air sermons have been preached and also how many tracts have been distributed and how many conversations on gospel themes have been engaged in.

EFFICIENCY DEMANDED

It will be noticed that at this conference several of the brethren have been released from missionary appointment and such release is not because of any reflection upon their character, but for ill-health, home conditions, and in some cases the brethren were not able to perform the labor which is demanded at the present time. To retain such on the list is not just to the church in general and gives our missionary list a fictitious valuation. It is much better to have the brethren who either have become incapacitated because of advancing years or declining health liberated from the stress of missionary activity; or if the times are demanding a quality of labor they are not capable of supplying, then to relieve them so as to fill their places with men better qualified should not be looked upon as an arbitrary act, nor as an unkindness. Then there are some we feel sure can render good service locally and do much to assist in building up branch work who have not proven a success as missionaries.

Release therefore, of this kind is not looked upon as a disgrace, but is merely an attempt on the part of the quorums responsible for the appointment of missionaries to bring the best material we have at our disposal to meet the conditions as we find them. Nor does it mean that our brethren are thrown aside with callous indifference to their needs. The Bishop will not withdraw what support may be needed by all until opportunity comes for such brethren to meet their own necessities. To those who have watched the development of the church during the last twelve years, it will be recognized that the precedent has been established by the releasing of members of the Twelve who for various causes other than wrongdoing were required to leave the quorum and other men put in who it is fair to presume were considered as capable of rendering more efficient service in that line adapted to the conditions which prevailed at the time.

THE GATHERING

The gathering of the scattered Saints to Independence, Missouri, as the center place is a matter which is filled with possibilities of good and evil. To bring about the fulfillment of the old-time prophecies and to crystallize the apocalyptic visions of the kingdom of heaven and Utopia has been the ambition of many peoples of different times, and there is no religious movement which has not specialized on some phase of this fascinating subject, with more or less enthusiasm. It has been a very important part of the propaganda of the latter-day work to bring this about, sometimes with more zeal than judgment. Whatever else may be involved in the subject it is essential to have in mind the fact that the gathering involves the location, the people, and the conditions under which the people live.

While we believe that Independence is the place which is designated as the starting point of this movement, it is clear that it is not expected Zion will be confined to this one place; but from this center place there will run out what might be called the colonizing streams to other places which are termed "stakes," until all the earth "shall be full of the glory of the Lord." It is therefore clear that we can not encourage the idea which some seem to have that a mere change in location from one place to another is all that is required to make Zion for anyone.

The people who dwell in the place very largely will be responsible for the conditions which will prevail there. It is now an accepted principle in sociology that the higher and more cultured a community is in development, the fuller and wider is their power over surrounding conditions. Where people are under the control of their surroundings such government by environment is in ratio to their negligence or their ignorance, consequently the old Israelitish prophet was right when the people prayed, "Awake, O arm of the Lord! Awake!" he responded, "Awake, awake, O Zion, put on thy beautiful garments." The people can make the desert bloom with fragrance and fruit or they can become the abject victims of untoward conditions.

For people to come to Independence and either refuse or be unable to bring into the place the vitalizing power of superior intelligence, morality, and consecrated zeal out of which the warp and woof of the communal fabric shall be made, is to develop shoddy conditions which would be no better than those from which we seek to escape. For this reason we can understand why our modern revelation should insist that "Zion is the pure in heart,"—a state or condition of life in which the community is characterized by purity. The influence which will produce the Zionistic qualities is primarily inward, and that inward influence will shed its effect upon the outward until in the poetic language of the Psalms, "the glory of the Lord, our God, shall shine" through the collective life of the people.

It is well to keep in mind also the fact that people in Zion need to eat, drink, wear clothing, and have shelter, besides enjoying all the conveniences of modern life. It is therefore necessary to have those who besides being diligent and industrious shall be skilled in all the arts and crafts of life.

To build up a city which is worthy of man to-day is no small task and to build a city in which the presence of God shall be found, as well as being a home for man, is a task that should call for the highest and best that is in us. To go to Zion to escape work and secure an easy retirement in a sort of celestial suburb, is a moribund concept, not worthy of our glorious civilization, to say nothing of our Christian idealism. We shall need people whose main desire is to glorify the name of God in the best and noblest service to their fellows; men who will be honest in time, service and produce; people whose glory will be the amount of good they can do, the amount of collective happiness they can generate, and not a people who are contented to reduce the dream of Zion to a colony of almshouses or a workhouse built on the "apartment plan." It will demand a clearer vision of God, a more divine humanity and a demonstration of the power there is in our religion to take the raw material of nature and charge it with spiritual power and out of things of earth erect the heavenly city.

It may seem utopian to talk about carpenters, plumbers, and all sorts of working men who shall use their craft and ability in this consecrated manner to bring about the purposes of God; but history shows us that this is the divine process all the way through man's march from the slavery of ignorance and rebellion to the empire of order and dominion. This is the chief problem to-day in our attempt to build up Zion, and we need this class of people imbued with this altruistic spirit who will make their daily labor the avenue through which their religious impulses shall find expression.

And in this connection a matter of immediate concern is the time when persons should move to Independence, how they should move, and at whose direction. It is clear that this should not be left to the caprice of individuals. Some one must guide, advise, and direct in this matter. The command is, "Let all things be prepared beforehand." What things, and how?

To begin with we must have learned to live our religion where we are and be in a position to secure letters of commendation from the branch officers as to our spiritual conduct; and from the bishop or agent as to our fidelity to the law of temporalities. Next, we must be reasonably sure that our removal will not be hurtful to the church's interest where we are residing, and as reasonably sure that we will be of advantage to the church in Independence. It would then be in order to find out what opportunities there would be for securing employment in or around Independence, so that there would not be a double loss in that the party could not work to as good advantage to his own interest and consequently to the interest of the church. It is intended that the Bishopric shall be the ones who shall direct in these matters; and we strongly urge that parties who have the desire to come to Independence or the regions round about will correspond with the stake and Presiding Bishops and secure all the information possible before moving; and should matters not be favorable at the moment, then be patient until the proper authorities with full information at hand can inform such ones when there may be an opportunity to move with advantage.

All who are in touch with the church and the movements in which we are interested will know that those in charge are very earnestly seeking to develop the social and economic policy of the church upon a sane and safe foundation. To act hastily and ill-advisedly would bring disaster to all concerned. So for these reasons we especially caution those who contemplate moving to be sure that all things are prepared.

At the present there are not many industries or factories in Independence which can provide employment and many persons have to travel to the city for their daily work and back again at night. Wages in these parts do not differ materially from those in other places; and the conditions of living here are about equal with other parts of the country. Economy and frugality must be exercised in Independence just as much as elsewhere. So the church in wrestling with this gigantic problem needs the sympathy and help of all the members, and we do not desire that the efforts being made shall be embarrassed by any unwise act in this particular regard.

Fraternal and saintly cooperation is a present demand. Let us meet it prayerfully and faithfully.

Your servants,

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency,
JOHN W. RUSHTON, Secretary Twelve.

THE GOSPEL VINE

(Sermon by Elder A. C. Barmore, at Lamoni, Iowa, May 3, 1914. Reported by Elizabeth France.)

As a basis of the sermon I invite your attention to the first eight verses of the fifteenth chapter of Saint John:

I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me, and I in you. As a branch can not bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned. If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples.

THE AUTHOR OF PEACE

Now the first thing that occurs to my mind this morning is a thought as to what this portion of Scripture does not mean. As Latter Day Saints, when we have gone out to represent this work to the world, we have come in contact with a great many misconceptions as to the meaning of the Bible. And one misconception that has prevailed in regard to this portion of Scripture is that when Christ said to his disciples, "Ye are the branches," he meant by the branches the various religious denominations. If that were really true, then the Apostle Paul was mistaken when he made this statement to one of the churches, "For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints." (1 Corinthians 14:33.) That was true in regard to the churches of the Saints in New Testament times.

But for the various religious denominations, Paul's language would have to be altered to suit the present situation, and would need to be, "God is not the author of peace but of confusion, as in all churches of the saints."

We believe that one of the reasons so many are skeptical in regard to the important subject of religion to-day is because they have seen too many lo heres and lo theres among those who profess to be the followers of Jesus Christ. We know that wherever Christian missionaries have gone they have been told, by the Chinese, the Japanese, and all the various heathen people of the world, "Agree among yourselves and then come and tell us what Christianity is."

When the Savior prayed concerning his disciples, he said, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." (John 17: 20, 21.) Just to the extent that we find division in the ranks of those who profess to be Christians, just to that extent will men be doubtful concerning the divine mission of Christ.

We come as individuals claiming, as we go to those countries, to represent the church of Jesus Christ as it existed in the times of the New Testament, that it is one body. Hence the Apostle Paul declares, "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free, and have been all made to drink into one Spirit."

When we come together in prayer services or communion services, when we mingle together as the people of God, we can realize that we are drinking together into the one Spirit. But when we consider the various religious denominations of to-day we can not come to any such conclusion. We realize there is contention, there is discord; one does not rejoice in consequence of another's honor; one does not weep in consequence of another's distress. Indeed, some of the religious denominations of to-day would not shed a tear if many of the other religious denominations should be entirely extinguished. And I am satisfied that the great majority of them would not mourn if we as a people should come to grief.

So you see, then, there is not the unity existing that God intended should exist among his people. There is a statement often quoted from the teachings of John, indicating God's willingness to cleanse men from all the sins of which they may be guilty. And you remember that the quotation as given is, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." As Latter Day Saints we insist upon a consideration of the text as a whole, which reads, "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

We believe that the fellowship referred to here is primarily the fellowship existing between the members of the church upon the one hand and God himself on the other. "If we walk in the light as he [God] is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." This in consequence of the fact we are in harmony with God. But on the other hand, we can not be in harmony with God unless we are in harmony with each other. There is a principle in mathematics to this effect, that two things which equal the same thing are equal to each other. If we are in harmony with God we must be in harmony with each other. So it would do no violence to the text to quote it as it is sometimes quoted, "If we walk in the light as he is in the light we have fellowship one with the other, (or each with the other) and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin;" that is, by reason of the fact that we are living in harmony with each other as members of the church.

To my mind the great fact of unity with God is considered first of all, and in consequence of that unity with God upon the part of his people, there must of necessity be unity among themselves.

Now with these few thoughts by way of introduction, we desire to consider the words of this parable.

First of all, as we understand, we have here an indication as to the relationship existing between God and Christ. Second, the two powers that operate upon men: good and evil. Third, the method by which we become branches of the true vine. Fourth, what it means to abide in the vine, in other words, to continue in the gospel of Christ.

RELATION BETWEEN GOD AND CHRIST

You will observe that Jesus says, "I am the true vine and my Father is the husbandman." This conveys to us the thought that Christ is in a position subordinate to the position occupied by God. When we go out into the great religious world, we hear people preach and pray in such a way as to indicate that their prayers are directed primarily to Christ. They try, apparently to rule God out of the plan of redemption. And some have gone so far as to say that when Christ came here and offered himself as a sacrifice for sin that he reconciled God to the human race. Hence we have in one of the old hymns these words, "My God is reconciled; his pardoning voice I hear." But Latter Day Saints have altered that hymn and have made it read thus, "To God I'm reconciled."

We make the claim that the atonement originated in the mind of God. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3:16.) Again, the Apostle Paul declares, "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." (Romans 5:8.) Again he says, "When we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." (Romans 5:6.)

All of these texts convey the idea that the atonement originated in the love of God for his creatures. When Jesus says, "I am the vine and my Father is the husbandman," he conveys the idea that God supplies all the elements, all the materials required for the success of his work. "The Father loveth the Son and hath given all things into his hand." Upon one occasion he prayed, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight." (Luke 10:21.) Evidently Christ is himself included as one of the babes to whom God had made a revelation of his will.

The Apostle Paul affirms that "It pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell." (Colossians 1:19.) Again we read, "For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." (Colossians 2:9.) So that in Christ we have a compact, personal representation of all there is in God, so far as the salvation of the human race is concerned.

THE TWO POWERS

After our Savior's resurrection from the dead he said to his apostles, "All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth." And Christ did the work that he accomplished on earth, and is doing the work that he is now doing, by reason of the fact that God by the inspiration and the power of the Holy Spirit is back of the work in which he is engaged.

We pass on now to the next thought. Jesus says, "I am the true vine." What does he mean by the "true vine?" According to the original language it means the fruit-bearing vine, the productive vine, as distinguished from the vine that has blossoms without bearing fruit. In all countries we find trees that are not fruitful; they have flowers but produce no fruit. The true vine not only bears fruit, but bears the right kind of fruit. Now before we can bear fruit that is acceptable in the sight of God it will be necessary for us to be brought into harmony with Christ. We find that men by nature have drifted away from God, and so we are told in one place, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." (1 Corinthians 2:14.) Again we read, "The carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." (Romans 8:7.)

So when we think of Christ as the true vine, we think of some one else as the false. We could say without doing violence to the text, "I am the good tree." But the fact of a good tree implies the existence of a bad tree or an evil tree. So we come back to the beginning and are told of a certain man that was placed in a beautiful garden and was given the care of that garden; and of all the trees of the garden he was permitted to eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil he should not eat. For, said the Lord, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." We recognize this man as Adam. After a while another being presented himself, commonly called the Devil, often referred to as Satan the old serpent. And he said, "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt not surely die, but shall be as Gods knowing good and evil." Man put forth his hand in disobedience to the command of God and partook of the forbidden fruit, and in consequence entailed sin with all its results upon the human race.

Naturally we do not find ourselves inclined to engage in the service of God. There must be some power superior to ourselves exercised in order to bring us into harmony with him. You may remember that in the poet Pope's essay on man, in referring to the disposition of man he makes in substance, the remark: His blood has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood. We may resent this as an insult to the race to which we belong, but after all it is true. We do not know how many things of a murderous, criminal character have happened in the course of history as man has come down from the flood until now.

Upon one occasion when Lord Beaconsfield, whose name was Benjamin Disraeli, and you will remember he was a Jew,—when he made his first effort in the House of Commons in England, there was a man who ridiculed him for his religion, for the race to which he belonged. Beaconsfield said in reply, "My ancestors were worshiping the God of the Bible when the ancestors of my opponent were naked savages roaming through the woods." It is true, the ancestors of Beaconsfield as a Jew were engaged in the worship of the God of whom we read in the Bible, when the ancestors of the Gentile nations of to-day were heathen people. When we see, then, all we have passed through since the beginning, need we wonder that we find so many things in man that are antagonistic to the gospel of Christ?

When we go out as missionaries to represent this latter day work and we affirm that God has spoken again from heaven, has declared his will to mankind; when we tell the people that God and Christ and the Holy Ghost are one, and that God has only one church, they lift up their hands in holy horror and tell us we are unchristianizing the world. And they further tell us that all the miraculous blessings we read of in the times of the New Testament have been done away. As a result we see vindicated before our eyes continually the truth of the apostle's words, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

THE HOLY TRINITY

One of the most common errors that has obtained in the world to-day is the conception that has prevailed in regard to what is commonly called the holy trinity. We are told there are three in one, and yet there is one in three. In other words, three times one makes one, and once times three is one. And when we ask men to explain it, they tell us it can not be explained, but we are expected to believe it.

Now can you imagine such a thing as God, Christ, and the Holy Ghost being amalgamated into one person? I remember when I was a boy I heard a man preach a sermon in which he stated the triune thus: "We have one head, one trunk, and extremities, one man. We have the roots, trunk and branches,—one tree; we have the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost,—one God."

Now is that the true conception of the Godhead, or the Trinity that these three are amalgamated or identified with each other in the sense that the members of a man constitute one man, the parts of a tree make one tree?

We turn to the writings of the Apostle John and find him referring to unities which he claims prevail in heaven and on earth. He mentions one unity that exists on earth, and then calls our attention to another unity which exists in heaven. He says, "There are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one." That is the exact language. "These three agree in one." And in substance he affirms that there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, and he says, "These three are one." (1 John 5:7, 8.) In the sense that the other three are one, "they agree in one"; there is unity of purpose. And so Latter Day Saints have maintained from the beginning that we have three united in the consummation of the same glorious work.

We are told that when Christ presented himself to John on the banks of the River Jordan for baptism, at first John forbade him, saying, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" Jesus explained in reply, and John consented to baptize him. And we are told as he came forth from the waters of baptism the Spirit of God descended from heaven in the form of a dove and abode upon him, and a voice from heaven said, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Now we see three agreeing in one: Christ coming up from the banks of the Jordan, the Holy Spirit descending from heaven in the form of a dove, and God himself in person and by voice, and with organs of speech back of the voice, declaring, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."

THE OLD PATHS

Then again, the Savior, in the prayer before referred to, indicates the kind of unity that exists in the Godhead, or the Trinity. He says, in substance: Now, O Father, grant that these that thou hast given me may be one, as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.

If Christ intended to convey the idea that there is an amalgamation of the persons in any real or literal sense between himself and his Father, then there must be the same amalgamation between himself and his disciples. To think about such a thing is something like a story that came from the lips of a clown. He said, "Suppose all the trees in the world were made into one great big tree, and all the mountains in the world into one big mountain, and all the seas in the world into one great big sea, and all the men in the world into one great big man, and all the axes in the world into one big ax; when that big man took that big ax and chopped down that big tree from the top of that big mountain, and it fell over into that big sea, wouldn't there be a terrible crash!" This is about as sensible as the idea that the unity between God and Christ is an amalgamation of person. Christ prayed for unity among his disciples, and the unity was exactly the same kind of unity that exists between himself and the Father.

So we see after all that these interpretations that men have put on religion or theology are entirely foreign to the conceptions or representations that we find recorded here in the word of God. We have then to call men back to the old paths wherein is the good way. We have to call their attention to the plan we find recorded here. The gospel records it as the means which enables us to break off our allegiance with Satan and to establish an alliance or covenant with God.

And so Jesus says, "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." The Apostle Peter tells us, "Seeing that ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever." The word of God which cleanseth from all sin is the word to which we give obedience in our acceptance of the principles of the gospel when we become members of the church. In other words, our purification is by "obeying the truth."

And when we go back as far as the writings of the Psalmist David, we find in the 19th Psalm this statement: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Blackstone and other commentators on law give as the first definition, a rule of action. And no matter how far we pursue the thought, we come back to the primary definition that law is a rule of action.

We are required to do something in order to realize the conversion and forgiveness referred to in the word of God. It is not a question of belief only. We know many people say that the only thing that is required of us as a means of salvation is faith in Christ.

I am going to use an illustration here: Now suppose a man should say in these days, "I believe in President Wilson." Does he mean, "I believe that President Wilson was born, is alive, and that the time will come when he will die and in the future he will be resurrected from the dead?" In other words, does he mean he believes in the fact that President Wilson exists here upon earth? You should know he does not mean that. But in view of his position, he must mean, I have confidence or I have faith in the political policy of Woodrow Wilson as President of the United States.

When a man says, I believe in Jesus Christ, in view of the position that Christ occupies before the world, he must mean more than the acceptance of the historical facts connected with his existence on the earth. He must mean, I believe in the gospel that Christ taught; I believe in the principles that he announced as essential to the salvation of mankind. And it is only by an application of those principles that we can become the children of God.

You are aware that every scion must grow somewhere, and before it can be grafted, it must be taken away from where it grew. We have before us the old Adamic tree, the false vine. Satan was the husbandman who induced Adam to sin; he is the one that introduced this old Adamic nature in all God's creatures. He is the one that is back of the work he did in the Garden of Eden. And just as far, God is the husbandman back of the true vine and he furnishes the inspiration required to do good, so Satan on the other hand supplies the inspiration that prompts men to do evil.

Now how can we escape the natural results of having been born of a degenerate race?—because our race is degenerate. "All have sinned and have come short of the glory of God." There is only one way. We will have to be broken off from the old Adamic tree. We must cease to bring forth the fruits of the flesh.

FAITH

The first thing required is faith. So the Apostle Paul tells us, "Without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, "[That is the first thing necessary, 'that he is'] and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." (Hebrews 11:6.) There is no use in coming to God unless we believe in his existence and in his willingness to answer prayer.

Some years ago Colonel Ingersoll said that the various churches of to-day engage in prayer because of what they call the reflex action. The reflex action means the benefit they get from prayer as an exercise. He said, "That reminds me of a man who tried to lift himself by the straps of his boots; he knew he could not succeed, but expected to get some good exercise." The trouble was all the power he exercised was within himself.

Now when a man prays without expecting any answer to his prayer he is praying because of the exercise he gets as the result of prayer. But we believe that prayer is more than that; it means that God is willing to reply to our petitions. He is willing to elevate us, to lift us up. I am sure that Latter Day Saints do not pray like a man I heard of. He prayed something after this fashion: "Oh, God (if there is a God), bless my soul (if I have a soul), keep me from hell (if there is a hell), and save me in heaven (if there is a heaven)." Do you believe that God will answer a prayer of that kind? I do not, because there is doubt implied in every part of that petition.

Upon one occasion Jesus said, "Whosoever shall say unto this mountain, be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith." (Mark 11:23.)

When I was a boy in school my teacher and the grammar I studied taught me that "whosoever" is a compound relative pronoun, and is equal to he who, or anyone who. Now let me quote that text with that thought in mind. "Anyone [he who] shall say unto this mountain," etc. Does not that apply to everybody?

Suppose we try to restrict some other text of the same kind. For instance, the third chapter, sixteenth verse of John, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Could you induce any of our modern religionists to admit of a restricted consideration or application of that text, by which it should be made to appear that it had no reference to anybody who lived now, but only those who lived in New Testament times? If we admit the word whosoever has its logical meaning in one text, we must admit the same with reference to all other texts in which we find that particular word.

But many people pray something like the old lady you have heard of who had a mountain before her door. She had to pass around that mountain to get water at the spring on the other side; and it disturbed her. One day she prayed, as she believed, in accordance with the instructions of Christ. And when she finished her prayer she lifted her eyes and said, "Just as I expected; it's there yet."

That is the trouble with the religionists of to-day; just as they expected; the same old malady, the same old pain, the same distress is "there yet." But Latter Day Saints expect when they call on God in prayer that the pain will be removed; and so it is in proportion to the exercise of faith on their part. They have realized the truth of our Savior's words.

REPENTANCE

After they have exercised the required faith, the next principle is repentance. It means to break away from our sins by righteousness. In other words, if we have learned to do evil we should cease to do evil and learn to do well. In other words, be broken away from the old Adamic tree. We have the scion; what shall we do with it?

BAPTISM

The Apostle Paul says, "So many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death." By baptism, then, we graft in this scion or branch.

We are told in another place, "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." This we find in the third chapter of Galatians. Some say that faith in Christ will make us the children of God. We do not require anything else. "Away with baptism, confirmation, with everything else that you Latter Day Saints insist upon. They are not necessary." But in the next verse the apostle declares, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." So after all it is the faith that prompts us to receive the gospel of Christ, to be baptized into Christ and to put on Christ, that makes us the children of God.

We understand that Christ and his church are one; that is, they are united or mutually engaged in the great work of redeeming men and women, of bringing them back to that God against whom they have sinned. When we are identified, then, with Christ, we are identified with the church. Some say we can be converted and be fit for heaven, and yet we are not ready for union with the church; we have to wait six months and then be baptized. But is it not true that everywhere, wherever we go we are told that by baptism we are initiated into the church? Does the blood of Christ circulate in his body or outside of his body? I understand that the law of nature requires that my blood shall circulate within my body. If an artery is severed and not tied up it means that that blood being expelled from my body—I do not say circulating outside my body because it is not circulating—if it passes outside of my body it means death. And yet everywhere we are told that the blood of Jesus Christ does pass outside of the body and cleanses men and then they become identified with the church.

But the Apostle Paul affirms we are baptized into Jesus Christ and into his death. That is, by baptism for the remission of sins we celebrate the death of Christ on the cross when he shed his blood for the remission of the sins of the world. And baptism is referred to as being for the remission of sins because it celebrates the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, which is the means by which God brings men back to himself. We are united with God by reason of obedience to the gospel that is based on the atonement of Christ.

Any man who is familiar with grafting knows that inserting a scion is not all that is required. There is a right way, a way to unite the scion or branch with the trunk of the tree in such a close way that life begins in the ingrafted branch. So there is a right way of giving obedience to the gospel. Paul said to the Romans, "God be thanked, that ye are not the servants of sin [the King James Version says, 'God be thanked that ye were the servants of sin'], for ye have obeyed from the heart [not in a lifeless or spiritless manner, but 'ye have obeyed from the heart'] that form of doctrine which was delivered you. [Evidently the principle of baptism referred to in the same chapter.] Being then made free from sin ye became the servants of righteousness. . . . ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." (Romans 6:17, 18, 22, I. T.)

LAYING ON HANDS

We believe as the people of God there is another principle following this. Mere acceptance of that principle in a formal way does not give us the blessing of spirituality. And so Paul wrote to Timothy, "I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands."

I remember when a boy I knew a young man who was seriously injured; he came very near being killed; a number of bones were broken, including one of his wrists. And when he recovered consciousness he took hold of his wrist and said, "How glad I am that I belong to the church." There may be something or nothing in this. If we have lived as we ought to have lived, we shall certainly be glad we belong to the church; but we will not receive the blessings of the Spirit of God just because we have been baptized and have received the laying on of hands; and that is exactly why the Apostle Paul affirmed, "Stir up the gift of God [by righteousness and prayerfulness] that is in thee [legally] by the putting on of my hands."

The Lord is evidently dissatisfied with the plane occupied by the church, because he so frequently says, "Come up higher." There must then be a higher position for us to occupy as children of God. And you will observe that Christ insists upon our abiding in the vine as much as he insists upon our being baptized. Please observe: "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." "If ye abide in me;" what does it mean? Do we abide in him?

The Apostle John declares, "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." Then to abide in the doctrine of Christ means to abide in Christ; and to have Christ abide in us means for his words to have place in our hearts and in our lives.

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." We are striving to prepare ourselves for the celestial kingdom, for what the Apostle Paul calls the glory of the sun. And to attain to that condition we must bear much fruit; and Christ tells us exactly how we can do so. "Herein [that is, in this way] is my Father glorified." And if ye bear much fruit, the thought is, ye shall be my disciples.

IN CONCLUSION

Now, in conclusion, I call your attention to the words of the Apostle Peter in Second Peter, first chapter, where he says:

According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue. Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

When we ask the average Latter Day Saint as to how we escape the corruption that is in the world through lust, he will doubtless reply, "By the acceptance of the gospel; by faith, repentance, and baptism by immersion for the remission of our sins." And of course I agree that is correct.

How do we become partakers of the divine nature, when by the acceptance of the principle of laying on of hands we obtain the gift or the baptism of the Holy Spirit? You will observe here that Peter says, "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having [that is, before that] escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." So that, in other words, Peter is referring to our obedience to the first principles of the gospel. He does not distinctly mention the first principles but evidently had these principles in mind.

And after introducing himself in this way, he continues by saying: "And beside this." Beside what? Our obedience to the first principles of the gospel. If a boy has three apples in his hands and says, "I have four beside these," everybody understands him to mean that he has seven; that is, he has four more additional apples to these he holds in his immediate possession. "And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to your virtue knowledge." Faith, then, is not the only thing required. We must add something to our faith. Virtue is not sufficient for us; we must add knowledge.

I remember reading a statement once from Colonel Ingersoll to this effect: "Ignorance is a poor pedestal to set virtue upon." Horace Mann has said, "Virtue is an angel, but is a blind one and she must ask knowledge to show her the way that leads to her goal." Literally there is no such thing as a blind angel, but virtue is blind in the absence of knowledge. And so Peter says:

And to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound [it is not only a question of manifesting these virtues, but they must abound], they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins.

He has not only failed to progress; he has not only failed to grow in grace and knowledge of the truth, he has retrograded, he has degenerated, he has gone back; he has forgotten that he was purged from his old sins.

We often sing,

With joy we remember the dawn of that day, When led by the Spirit the truth to obey, The light dawned upon us, and filled us with love; The Spirit's sure witness, sent down from above.

Is it possible for Latter Day Saints to forget that time? Yes, they will forget it when they lose the Spirit of God, which they obtained by obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Peter says, "Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure." We are only candidates now; we are not yet elected, and we must give diligence to make our calling and election sure. "For if ye do these things, ye shall never fall." If you do not do these things you will fall. That is the logical conclusion. But if we do them an entrance shall be ministered unto us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Now I can not express a better desire for Latter Day Saints or anyone else present this morning or elsewhere in the world, than to express the hope that by obedience to the requirements of the gospel, by prayer, and by fasting, by purity and righteousness of life taken as a whole, they may be able to surmount all the difficulties in their way, may be strengthened to ascend the heights and reach the high spiritual plane, that gospel table land, on which they will find written the glittering and valuable word, Overcome.

CAUSE OF MEXICAN REVOLUTION

The leading cause of revolution in Mexico is understood by many authorities to be agrarian. For many years the Mexican peon has been exploited by his more powerful countryman, under a semi-feudal landholding system, the abolishment of which is thought to be essential to permanent peace in that revolution-ridden country.

Mr. John Reed, correspondent for The New York Sun, and for some months among the Mexican revolutionists, gives the following survey of events since the overthrow of Diaz, showing that the rebellious have centered in one common cause, the wresting of the land from the peon class:

The correspondents have spoken of the Madero revolution, the Orozco revolution, and the Zapata revolution; but there is and has been only one revolution in Mexico. It is very necessary at this time that the American people should know what the revolution is about.

It was at first purely and simply a fight for land. During the last twenty years of the Porfirio Diaz regime the landed aristocracy of Mexico, created originally by the Spanish land grants, slowly and definitely absorbed the open cattle-ranges, the communal fields around the towns, the village commons, and, lastly, the small independent farms that had been held sometimes by one family for three generations. Then the big haciendados banded together and secured the passage of the Land Law of 1896, which permitted the denunciation of all property in the Republic not secured by a legal title. Since most of the small holdings were occupied by illiterate peons, too ignorant to know anything about titles, and since in many cases their occupancy of the land had been undisturbed for generations, great tracts of fertile country passed into the hands of the haciendados. And for the tenants evicted by the aid of Federal soldiers there was no alternative but to become slaves on great estates and no hope for the future. . . .

It was and is nothing but a revolution of the peons. And the first man who proposed any plan, no matter how inadequate, to remedy the land question was followed. Zapata rose in arms a year before Madero did, demanding confiscation and distribution of the great estates among the peons, and political autonomy for two great States. Madero's proclamation to the Mexican people from prison at San Luis Potosi inflamed the peons only because he promised to acquire the big land monopolies and reapportion them among the poor. But when his Government was established in Mexico City, either he became conservative, or, because of political pressure, he was unable to carry out his plans, or the time was too short; anyway, the situation remained the same, and the peons became discontented. . . .

First Zapata abandoned him and raised the standard of "War for the land"; then Orozco issued the plan of Tacubaya, in which he promised the peons free farms. In the twinkling of an eye the turbulent North rose in arms, but Orozco betrayed the peons. He had been bribed by the big landowners to embarrass Madero, whom they feared, and never intended to settle the land question at all. When the peons learned that, they abandoned his red flag by thousands and returned, hopeless and disheartened, to their homes. Zapata, who had acknowledged Orozco as President of Mexico, renounced him. And that was why the Orozco revolution failed.

When Carranza proclaimed himself "First Chief of the Revolution" on the death of Madero, he cleverly indorsed the principles of Madero as set forth in the plan of San Luis Potosi, but all the emphasis upon the restoration of constitutional government in Mexico. Either because he was afraid that if he made promises he could not fulfill them any more than Madero could, or because he did not believe in the wholesale distribution of land to the peons, Carranza avoided the question entirely. He said that after the Constitutionalist government was established and order restored in the country, he would see what could be done. Zapata promptly denounced him, his party and his plan, and declared that Carranza did not intend to make any radical changes, and it is perfectly true that the peons are only secondarily interested in the restoration of constitutional government.

But Villa, with or without the approbation of his chief, went ahead confiscating the estates of the great landowners and dividing them among the people. For instance, in the State of Chihuahua he gave outright sixty-two and a half acres to every adult male, to be inalienable for ten years. He knew that many of them, especially the younger generation were so sunk in lethargy because of the slavery of the haciendas as to have lost all feeling for individual proprietorship of their farms; he calculated that if they were not allowed to gamble away or sell their properties for ten years the ancient independent love of working the land would return. It is significant that Zapata promptly joined Villa, and is now in accord with him, although he still renounces Carranza.

Supporting the above is the following from The Mexican People; Their Struggle for Freedom, a book by L. Guterrez, just published by Doubleday Page and Company:

The main issue of the Mexican revolution is land. The man behind the gun—the fighting peon—knows no other issue, neither does the man behind the man behind the gun—the working peon, who keeps his brother in the field. The peon, fighting or working, is a man of one idea. For him life resolves itself into the full personal ownership of a patch of land whereon he may raise corn, pasture his cow, and grow his vegetables. For this he has struggled almost continuously for exactly one hundred years, and the last few years of warfare are but the final rounds of a campaign which began with the great-grandfathers of the present generation.

June

Over the shoulders and slopes of the dune
I saw the white daises go down to the sea,
A host in the sunshine, an army in June,
The people God sends us to set our hearts free.

The bobolinks rallied them up from the dell,
The orioles whistled them out of the wood,
And all of their singing was, "Earth it is well,"
And all of their dancing was, "Life it is good!"

Communion with Nature

The birds sweetly singing while building their nests
Proclaim to the world the time that's the best.
The flowers in the garden, the grass on the lawn,
Take up in sweet chorus the winged choir's song.

The doors now are opened, King Winter has fled,
And nature's green mantle about us is spread.
How sweet is the call of the woodland and lake;
Fond mem'ries steal o'er us of joys in our wake.

Quite gladly we follow the scent of the flowers
To nature's own palace, the green, leafy bowers;
And vain the attempt of the poet or art
That would leave from this picture a maiden apart.

Before us the calm, placid lake is o'erspread
With warm, dancing sunbeams sent down from o'erhead.
A boat firmly anchored at foot of the pier,
Seems anxiously waiting our footsteps to hear.

The beauties of maiden and nature combine
To make of this landscape a painting divine;
The rays of the sun from the oars brightly glisten;
Our souls, deeply drinking sweet music, now listen.

'Twere rude at such times that words should be spoken,
For then is the spirit's communion soon broken.
And what is man's glory, his honor, his pride,
Compared with the music where angels reside!

'Tis then life seems good—our world loses sorrow,
Its joys are complete we ne'er wish to borrow;
'Tis then the Divine which brings to us joy;
Our souls reign triumphant, our sorrows destroy!

'Tis well for all men, be they great, or but small,
To hearken to Nature, to heed her sweet call;
For if souls be attuned with each other and God,
They will see marv'lous beauties in each pebble and clod.
SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI.                      AUSTIN M. DOBSON.

The Tease

June is in the meadows!
June is on the hills!
Everywhere, everywhere,
The merry laughter thrills!
Gone are all the discords,
Everything's in tune—
Wonders, wonders,
Wrought by winsome June!

From the darkest corners
Flowers are peeping out.
Who'd have thought, who'd have thought
This could come about?
Boughs that would not listen
To a word from May Overflow, overflow,
With sweetest bloom to-day!

And oh, this burst of glory
In gardens, one and all!
Splendor, splendor,
By the roadside wall,
Brightening the ledges
Graved with ocean's rune—
Roses, roses,
Come to welcome June!

All the little laddies
And lassies fair and wee—
Tiptoe, tiptoe—
Bubble o'er with glee!
What are they expecting,
So merry and so wise,
Looking, looking,
With their shining eyes?

Ah, June holds Vacation
With her rosy hands!
Laughing where she stands,
Holding back the treasure
Awhile, the saucy tease!
Coax her, coax her—
"Please, please, please!"
—Minnie Leona Upton, in Saint Nicholas.

Out-of-Doors

Just to be out-of-doors! So still, so green!
With unbreathed air, illimitable, clean,
With soft, sweet scent of happy, growing things,
The leaves' soft flutter, sound of sudden wings,
The far, faint hills, waters wide between.
Breast of the great Earth-Mother! Here we lean,
With no conventions hard to intervene,
Content with the contentment nature brings,
Just to be out-of-doors!

And under all the feeling, half foreseen,
Of what the lovely world will come to mean
To all of us when the uncounted things
Are kept aright, and one clear music rings
In all our hearts! Joy universal, keen,
Just to be out-of-doors!

—Charlotte Perkins Gilmore.

God Keep You

God keep you, dearest, all this lonely night;
The winds are still,
The moon drops down behind the western hill;
God keep you safely, dearest, till the light.
God keep you then when slumber melts away,
And care and strife
Take up new arms to fret our waking life,
God keep you through the battle of the day.
God keep you. Nay, beloved soul, how vain.
How poor is prayer!
I can but say again and yet again,
God keep you every time and everywhere.

—Madeline Bridges.

JULY READING.—GYMNASTIC EXERCISES OF THE MONTESSORI METHOD

Doctor Montessori calls our attention to the fact that the legs of the new-born baby are small and weak, out of all proportion to his body and arms. She proves scientifically that this continues during early childhood up to the age of six or seven.

AID FOR WEAK MUSCLES

Because a little child's legs are weaker and tire more quickly than the rest of his body, he needs the exercises of his ordinary active play and others, some of which he can take without bearing his full weight on his lower extremities. The doctor suggests a little fence on which a child may walk along sideways, supporting a part of his weight with his arms. We have seen the rail of the baby pen used in this way by a little child learning to walk.

Doctor Montessori also advises the use of a swing with a seat so wide that it supports the child's legs as they lie stretched out in front of him. The swing is hung before a board or wall, and the child keeps himself in motion by pressing his feet against it as he swings up to it, thus strengthening the muscles used.

An attitude often taken by a small child in which he lies across a chair and kicks his legs is recognized by the doctor as an instinctive effort to develop the lower limbs.

This physiological information accounts for the weariness and sometimes fretfulness of the little child who begs to be carried when out for a walk. It also makes one pity the little fellow who must run to keep up with the walking gait of the long and strong legs of his father.

"As soon as the child can walk, an effort should be made to teach him further and more definitely the art of equilibrium of his body. When we walk we continually balance our weight so that we do not fall down, and the more accurately and unconsciously we do this, the better we walk. Now, bodily poise is one of the very important factors in bodily grace, and even in strength, certainly in comfort. The average child does not balance his body well, instinctively. He needs training, and he is eager and anxious for it."

THE CHALK LINE EXERCISE

A long chalk line drawn on the floor is one means used to furnish an exercise for this need. The children are asked to see how closely they can follow the line without stepping off. At first the smallest ones are not able to do it at all. By practice they learn so that they can walk very slowly along the line, then gradually they increase in ability until by the time they are four or five years old they can run swiftly without varying from the line. The poise thus acquired will be noticeable in the sure steps and direct course of the child in crossing a room.

Cracks in the floor were used for this exercise by Miss Stephens, who held a summer school in a barn. Each child chose a crack where he could walk or run as he pleased, being unhindered by the others. The seams in a carpet would answer the same purpose.

WALKING THE TWO BY FOUR

For out-of-door play, a long piece of "studding" or "two-by-four" laid on the ground will afford the means for a modification of this exercise. The child tries to walk along this without falling off and finds in doing so "a diversion as endlessly entertaining for a child of three as the most dangerously high fence rail for an older child, and the never-failing zest with which a little child practices balancing himself on this narrow 'sidewalk' is a proof that the exercise is one for which he unconsciously felt a need." As he acquires poise and strength he may vary the exercise by walking backward, with eyes shut or in other ways that may suggest themselves.

ROPE BALANCING

It is a difficult feat for a little child to stand on one foot while making any movement of his body. A loose rope end hanging where he can grasp it will keep him from falling over, and he will be delighted to try different motions that may be suggested to him while his balance is thus assured. If the rope end is lacking, the hand of father or mother may steady him while he practices standing on one foot or learns to cross one foot over the other without falling down. With this help he may also be taught to walk backwards, which is held to be valuable exercise for him. Being a reversal of the ordinary process of walking which he has so recently learned, he will seem helpless at the first trials but will soon master it and will take great pleasure in practicing it.

SPRING BOARD AND LADDER

"A very tiny spring board, ending over a heap of hay, is another expedient for teaching three- and four-year-olds that they need not fall in a heap if their balance is quickly altered. If this simple device is too hard to secure, a substitute which any woman and even an older child can arrange for a little one is a long, thin board with plenty of 'give' to it, supported at each end by a stone, a brick, or a block of wood. The little child bouncing up and down on this and jumping himself off into soft sand, or into a pile of hay, learns unconsciously so many of the secrets of bodily poise that walking straight soon becomes a foregone conclusion. . . .

"Small, low see-saws, the right size for very young children, are of great help in aiding the little one to learn the trick of balancing himself under all conditions; and let us remember that the sooner he learns this all-important secret of equilibrium the better for him, since he will not have the heavy handicap of uncertain, awkward, misdirected movements, and he will never know the disheartening mental distress of lack of confidence in his own ability deftly, strongly and automatically to manage his own body under all ordinary circumstances."

A ladder laid flat on the ground so that the children may step between the rungs provides another form of exercise of benefit to them. They have here the measured step and the practice of lifting the foot over an obstruction. Moreover, they will find in it "lots of fun."

A short ladder with rungs near enough together to make easy steps for short legs may be set up and the children be allowed to climb up and down on it. Here they have the opportunity to rest a part of the weight on the arms while exercising the muscles of the legs, at the same time gratifying the desire to climb possessed by almost every child, and for whom the ladder has an especial fascination. There may be a pile of hay at the base of it to break any possible fall, which, however, is very unlikely to occur.

WATER PLAY

How many children have been scolded and punished for playing in water! But whoever thought of employing this interest as a means to give muscular training and entertainment at the same time until Mrs. Fisher tried it with her own little girl of three years and then wrote about it in The Montessori Mother. She could not allow the child to continue dabbling her hands in the water where she found her in the house, but on that warm summer day she could give her water to play with out on the grass, protecting her dress with an oil cloth girded about her. She says, "When I really came to think about it, there is nothing inherently wicked in playing in water. . . ."

"The child in question, provided with pan of water, and various cups and jelly-molds of different sizes, which I snatched at random from the kitchen shelf, was in a state of silent bliss. She filled the little cups up to the brim, she lifted them with an anxious care which no exhortation of mine could have induced her to apply, she drank from them, she poured their contents into each other, discovering for herself that the smaller ones must be emptied into the bigger ones and not vice versa, she filled them again with a spoon. At first she did all this very clumsily, although always with the most painstaking care; but as the days went on with repetition of this game, her dexterity became astonishing, as was her eternal interest in the monotonous proceeding.

"Now she is not only kept quiet and happy for about an hour a day by this amusement, and she has not only learned to fill and handle her little cups and jelly-molds very deftly, but the operation of drinking out of a water glass at the table is of a simplicity fairly beneath her contempt. I smile to see our guests gasp and dodge in dismay as, with the reckless abandon of her age, she grasps her water glass with one hand, not deigning even to look at it, and conveys it to her lips. But as a matter of fact, no matter how hastily or carelessly she does this, she almost never spills a drop. The control of utensils containing liquids has been so thoroughly learned by her muscles in the long hours of happy play with her little cups that it is perfectly automatic."

The sand pile with various receptacles to fill is a possession which no child should lack. Building and molding with the sand are also valuable occupations.

THE BABY BALL

Most children of three are too young to throw or to catch a ball, but the ball may be suspended from a long string, and the effort to grasp it will assist in developing power to receive and to throw the ball, at the same time calling forth a variety of movements with the zest of play.

SHARING THE HOUSEHOLD WORK

"Fortunate, indeed," says Mrs. Fisher, "is the child whose mother still cooks and sews and bakes and washes and allows her children to aid in these processes."

A little child who wishes to watch the work on the molding board should not be driven away, but should be comfortably stationed and encouraged to watch what is done. In any work in which it is possible for the child to take part, his efforts to assist should be welcomed.

So many times the mother sends away the child, or takes the work from his hands because she can do it more quickly or better when the time would be well spent in making use of his willingness to help. From their earliest years children should share with their parents in the work of the home. The Lord encourages us to work with him, telling us that the work is intrusted to all. On the same principle we should deal with our children, encouraging them to share with us the burden and responsibility of the home, each according to his ability.

What the little child can do he should do both for physical and for spiritual development.

For many of the suggestions in this article credit is given to The Montessori Mother and The Montessori Manual, by Dorothy Canfield.

Prayer Union

SUBJECTS FOR THE FIRST THURSDAY IN JULY

Prayers for the church and lay members, that all may be earnestly engaged in building up Zion to the ideal conditions of oneness and equality indicated in the revelations to the church. Pray that each member of the church may be clothed with that charity which will lead him to speak evil of no one, but that each may regard the reputation of a brother or sister as his own.

Lesson, Malachi 3: 8-18. Memory verse, Malachi 3: 10, 11.

IN APPRECIATION

Sister Eleanor Kearney, who prepares the readings which furnish the subjects for prayer, writes thus in her last letter: "I think the Saints have remembered me in their prayers; for I have gained much strength and feel quite well, notwithstanding the very warm weather. The Lord is merciful to me, thanks to his name. Love to all the household of faith."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

A sister, "known unto the Lord," who does not give her name, sends in the following request: "Dear Saints: My request is to pray for a young man not of the church who has a worldly disposition, but who desires to do that which is good. Pray that he may turn from worldly pleasures and associates and take more interest in church affairs. Pray also that God may lead him into the true way, as he believes another faith. Please pray for me that I may keep God's commandments, that my sins in past life may be forgiven. I have been a member of the church for only a short time."

Sister W. R. Graham, of Bethune, Saskatchewan, requests prayers for her companion. He has suffered with an afflicted leg for forty years. He is advised that he may have to have it amputated. This brother should be remembered.

Sister Ella Amidon asks the prayers of the Saints. She has what the doctors pronounce stone cancer. She has been operated on once, and is now offered no hope by nine physicians who have examined her. She has only lately joined the church, but has great faith. She desires to live to bring her husband into the church, and to assist in every good work.

America's Problem

America's problem is the conservation of the child. The floodgates of evil influences over the boys and girls of our land are wide open, while the enormous liquor traffic upheld by the laws of our Nation stalks untrammelled through our cities and the places sometimes frequented by our boys. The moving picture shows, the wine gardens and the saloons are but snares to entrap their unwary feet. Where the boy goes, the girl goes also.

There are the objectionable places of amusement, the vitiated press, the social evil, with its familiarities of the sexes, the toleration of loose marriage laws, the nonenforcement of law, the following after the fashions of the underworld—these all are stones of stumbling, and tear out the foundations of our land.

The liquor dens are owned by the white slave operators, the saloons can not run without the boys and girls, and multiplied thousands yearly are going wrong and going down. And when they do go wrong, nine tenths of the parents are responsible.

This nation is guilty of the sin of wastefulness. While we maintain the conservation of our birds and forests, our fisheries and water supply, what is paramount in the line of conservation lies beyond all this.

Right citizenship is needed in America, and from the standpoint of the home, the church and the Nation, the girls and the boys are our treasure. We can not appreciate too much the forward steps taken in pure food laws. Nor can we do too much to preserve the life of the child. The coming of the death angel is not the saddest thing in America. The saddest thing is when a girl or a boy goes wrong, and goes down.

When our little six-year old child begins to go to school, it is never just the same again: it has to meet what it never met before, and it is a good thing that the parents are beginning to look into the subjects that confront them, and if possible improve the conditions that surround the child from its earliest years.

Among the noble women who are giving their attention to these matters, is Mrs. Etta S. Shaw, who on Sunday the 7th inst. addressed an appreciative audience at the Stone Church. Independence, Missouri. The above are a few of the stirring thoughts presented.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 8, 1914.

As a Member Sees It

For a long time there seems to have been and is yet a difference of opinion as to the why and wherefore of the church debt and who should pay it. Never before was this more fully and forcibly demonstrated than at the late General Conference at Independence. I refer entirely to the argument over Graceland College debt.

Now I would like to say what I think is the chief cause of this one particular contention. I firmly believe the principal reason for this difference of opinion is this: It is the result of the teaching and instruction of some of the elders sent out as missionaries to different districts.

I will give you my reason for believing this. We members look up to and expect the traveling elders to know everything; as a rule we expect them to tell us "everything" when they come among us to preach. As good Saints we should be interested in "everything" concerning this church (even to paying its debts), consequently we ask them about this and that, and some of us take it all down as law and gospel, like a bird swallows a worm.

I myself have been influenced by the counsel of some and refused for several years financial support to Graceland; but one time I met a godly brother whom I felt would not hold any knowledge from me I should have. I was praying for light. I propounded this question to him, "Why did God suffer a mistake to be made in the building of Graceland, and thereby burden the members with a debt we were not responsible for, and then the church expect us to pay it?" He explained to me so thoroughly that ever since I have been helping as I could to pay that debt. If all the elders who are sent out to feed the sheep and lambs of the church would so instruct, there would be more unity of opinion, and all debts would be more nearly paid than now. What difference if mistakes have been made at first (if there were)? Haven't we been told by the Lord to pay the debt? That should settle it for all time with any right-minded Saint. I would like to ask some of those sent out to teach us the law whose fault it will be if members do not do their duty along this line?

My observation has been that after these elders have gone the visit nearly always bears fruit, more or less; and sometimes the conversation goes like this, "Why, Sister So and So says Elder So and So's family are well to do, and I know his wife is extravagant. She paid ten cents a yard for hair ribbon for their little girl and one of the children wears shoes. Why, we can't afford that, besides she is just as able to work as I am. They don't need the money—better help some poor Saints."

Results: Some long cherished plan of said member is worked out with the money (thus saved) and none of it goes to the church for any purpose,—neither for debts nor for elders' families.

You see the viewpoint is wrong both ways. Who is to blame? I have heard just such conversations among members, and have seen the results of such reasoning. Then why is the church not on a better financial basis, and the elders families better cared for?

A MEMBER.

June 8, 1914.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, June 4, 1914.

Editors Herald: As to-day is the last day for the school year at Graceland College, we are thinking of the college and its work. This has been a sad and disappointing year to us, as our two daughters had to bring their sick brother home from Graceland in Lamoni. It seemed that he never would get better there. He has had two relapses since he came home and is still sick in bed. The first Wednesday after reaching home he was taken worse. I was impressed to send for Doctor Clark. The doctor told Tommie that his heart was enlarged, that he had leakage of the heart, and that his lungs were badly affected, but that if he would be careful and take good care of himself he could outlive it.

That night we had prayer meeting at our house. We had a spiritual time. After the meeting Tommie was administered to. He was greatly blessed. The doctor was astonished at his improvement. The following week he was around and beginning to look like himself. We were having unusual weather for California, cool and cloudy, so Tommie took cold and had a relapse.

We are building a new church. We are all thankful and happy to know we will have a house which we can call our own in which to worship. We have been renting a hall since we sold our little church. Tommie was feeling better and went to help on the church. He was not strong yet, and that night he suffered very much all night. Brethren McDowell and Burton came and administered to him the next day and he was much blessed. At this time I had a spiritual dream which indicated to me that we were in the Lord's hands, and that he would do all things for our good.

It disappointed our girls to have to leave Graceland. They do not murmur, but a mother can tell of their disappointment. I wish to thank the officers, teachers, deans, and pupils of Graceland for what they have done for mine, the sacrifices they made, and the many times they fasted and prayed for our Tommie and his sisters.

Brothers and sisters, we know that Graceland is doing a great work for our young, but we do not realize how much it is doing, through the noble young men and women Graceland is sending out. Through all our trouble our children are thankful they were able to be there the short time they were. Those who feel that the work of the college is not worth the effort and means expended should remember these things. Let us go to and make the college one that shall be known the world over, and a place where our young may be imbued with the spirit of the latter-day work.

Thirteen years ago I wrote to the HERALD, telling about going to Oakland with Sister Gauld, of Reno, now deceased. The Oakland Saints will remember how they fasted and prayed for me. After the sacrament we went to Sister Dayer's where she and I were administered to by Brethren Keeler and F. B. Blair, at which time I was healed of three cancers. The doctors were waiting to operate on me the next day. My prayers before leaving Reno to be administered to were that life would be spared to me that I might see my husband and children baptized. I have seen them all buried with Christ in baptism. I have prayed all these years that my children might enter Graceland College. That prayer was answered. So I know that we are in God's hands. Tommie seems better and I feel that all will be right now.

If J. Arthur Davis reads this he will remember the time when he and Brother J. B. Morgan were on a mission to Nevada and came to Lovelock sick and homesick. I am thankful to know that the Lord sent them to me. I had fought the gospel hard for five years. I had been raised a Presbyterian.

Thanking one and all, and ever praying for the upbuilding of Graceland College and the work in general, I am,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. J. S. STAUTS.

GLASGOW, MONTANA, June 4, 1914.

Editors Herald: We left Saskatchewan, Canada, the first of March and come to this city of over two thousand people, who are in darkness in regard to the gospel.

Brother R. Newby has been here. He came May 26. I told him my house was ready for him when he was ready to present the gospel to the people. Sister Luta Davis, Sister May Elsworth, my three children and I went to our neighbors and invited them out to hear our missionary. He preached five successive evenings to quite an audience for a private house. Some of the people were very much interested. A Lutheran minister attended three evenings. I told him when Apostle Anderson came we were going to bill the town and that then I would try to get one of the churches. He told me in a friendly way we could not get one, and suggested we secure a hall.

A gentleman by the name of Walker has offered his grove. We went out to see him. He appears to be a very nice man, and quite friendly to our cause. The grove will be a nice place in which to raise the gospel tent. It is only three quarters of a mile from Glasgow. So if our missionaries see these lines they may know that our light is not under a bushel.

I have been distributing tracts to some of the people I have met since we came here. One nice lady is very much interested. I gave her R. C. Evans's Autobiography, Joseph Smith, Who Was He, and a copy of the Book of Mormon, and she says she is much interested in them. She would rather read them than attend to other duties. She was out twice to hear Elder Newby. Her husband was out once. I was surprised to see her husband there. Although a good man, he is not much of a churchgoer. She was pleased with the sermons. They live in the country and could not attend regularly.

Sister Mary Floyd arrived here from Jerusalem about May 12, safe and well. She said she had a pleasant voyage. She came in nineteen days. Her son met her here in Glasgow. They met several of like precious faith, attended all of the services, and seemed to enjoy themselves with the Lord's people here. They did not think of meeting our people here. We surely enjoyed their company while they were with us. Brother Floyd has a half section of land out near Opine. Judging by what I hear he has a first-class piece of Uncle Sam's land, only one mile from a town site. If Jerusalem Saints see this letter they may know that Sister Floyd and son are among friends again. Some of our people are located near them, so I have been informed.

The Lord is scattering his people in different parts of his vineyard, that they may let their lights shine by distributing tracts among their neighbors, working up an interest, and securing the work of the missionary. That is what we are doing at this place.

There is some good land left in Montana. It is going fast. If the Saints are doing well where they are, they should not seek to do better. It takes no little sum to improve a piece of land in this country. If any intend to come this way they should come and see the country before moving. There may be more hardships to pass through than they bargain for.

I have bought two lots and am going to build a small house, for I have come to help spread the gospel here among this people. We are looking for our missionaries some time this summer. We will scatter the good seed in the form of tracts, so when our reapers come they may gather out the wheat from among the tares. We are commanded to warn our neighbors. If we do not our lights are under a bushel, and when we meet our Master we will be under condemnation.

So, dear Saints, you who are not at work, wake up, for the hastening time is upon us. Wickedness is great on the earth. We can let our lights shine by paying our tithes and offerings, so the Lord can call more servants into the field. The harvest is great, laborers are few.

From one in the faith,

CAROLINE SANDAGE.

GREEN COVE SPRINGS, FLORIDA, June 4, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have just been reading the letters in the HERALD. I enjoy them very much. Being isolated, I could hardly get along without the church papers. Brother Slover's visit and preaching in February was much enjoyed by us. I want all who read this to pray that my husband may see the light and be one with us.

One of my neighbor ladies reads all my papers. She says they are the best she ever read. We hope that they may be brought to see the light. My health is very poor, and I ask the prayers of all that I may be better, if not healed entirely.

Any of the missionaries who can come will be welcome at our home.

Your sister,

MRS. E. D. GUEST.

News from Missions

Southern California

Since the late General Conference the work in various ways has been moving so rapidly and steadily that there has hardly been time to write about it.

A very remarkable prayer meeting was enjoyed at the sacrament service in Los Angeles the first of this month, the house being filled with the good influence and power of the Spirit. The gift of prophecy was present, through Brethren Spencer and Goodrich. Brother Goodrich and Brother Schade were both spoken to, their work commended and they encouraged to press on with faithfulness. The promise of success and care in time of necessity was given. The Saints were much built up in spirit and good results were seen in the following Wednesday night prayer meeting.

Brethren Roy F. Slye and W. A. Brooner are already busy with the tent at Pomona. Evangelist W. A. McDowell is at present holding special meetings in San Diego.

Brother Fred Adam and the writer were at San Diego last Saturday and succeeded in getting the order of court authorizing the sale of the church lots to Brother Clark, which has been hanging for nearly three years. In the meantime the buyer of two of the lots backed out, so another will have to be secured before the church gets the money. Some technicalities in the title will have to be worked out. Both enjoyed a visit with the San Diego Saints Sunday.

The San Diego home class Religio was formally organized into a local Sunday evening by the writer. Splendid feeling prevailed, together with the influence of the good Spirit. Something over twenty names will be shown as charter members. Sister Ruth Knapp; Secretary, Alden Johnson; Treasurer Sister Anna B. Clark. A touching vote of appreciation was tendered Sister Tina Salter, who has been the president of the Religio work and is about to move to Santa Ana.

Two young men have been added to the ranks at Long Beach by baptism, also a valuable addition in the arrival of Brother C. C. Smith and wife of the Oakland Branch.

Bishop's agent Fred Adam and writer visited the San Bernardino Branch Saturday and Sunday a week ago, attending their Sunday school picnic in Devils Canyon, and occupying in the church morning and evening to good congregations, and at mission services at Redlands in the afternoon. Brother George Wixom is certainly making good as branch president, and the branch officers are showing a good working organization. Brother T. W. Williams was there and occupied the Sunday previous, a large number of nonmembers were out to hear him, and one very intelligent gentleman was sufficiently impressed that he is now investigating the church work.

The Sant Ana Saints are diligently working on their new church which is rapidly being erected. Brother Paulson was there about two weeks assisting in its construction. The sisters are rendering substantial aid. Their latest move was to secure the contract to do the cooking for the cafeteria at the coming reunion. Under the name of "The Economic Catering Club" they have been serving several banquets with success. While the work at reunion will be done at the expense of their attendance at the meetings and foregoing the recreational pleasures, they feel the one hundred and seventy five dollars it will add to their building fund will be sufficient reward. We would suggest that the Santa Ana brethren fall in line to do the heavy work of the kitchen so that all may have part of the enjoyments as well as the financial benefits.

The annual meeting of the district committee and stockholders meeting of the corporation for handling Convention

Park was held June 9. All arrangements were completed for reunion Henry F. Backer, W. E. Badham, William Schade, Fred Adam, Nathaniel Carmichael, R. T. Cooper and George H. Wixom were elected as the board for the ensuing year, with Fred Adam president and the same secretary for another year.

Probably the most interesting news of the district is the work started by Brother V. M. Goodrich among the Armenian and Russian settlements of the city of Los Angeles. Some time ago Brother J. W. Inman's sister-in-law told her father, who had been stricken with paralysis (one whole side was paralyzed) that our elders had power like those of olden times, with the result that Brother Goodrich was sent for.

He administered and the man was healed. The man's name was John Muschagan, and he is one of the preachers of the Armenian church.

Brother Goodrich preached in their church and residence. Last night another preaching service was held in the church. About one hundred people were in attendance, including a few of our members, Armenians and Russians. The preaching was done through two interpreters. Brother Goodrich did the preaching, using the Old and New Testaments, clearly setting out the coming of the restored gospel, quoting Doctrine and Covenants as the Word of the Lord, ushering in the fulfillment of the prophecies in an invincible manner. Brother Goodrich read or spoke in English for the Americans present, then Mr. Ferreahean translated it into Armenian for the Armenians present, and Mr. A. Melet, the school-teacher, translated from the Armenian into Russian for the Russians. It was inspiring to see the angels message going out in such a manner, and one involuntarily wished the gift of language might be enjoyed to speak in their own tongues. These people are Bible students, and their questions clearly show they are familiar with the Bible, as well as a good degree of education and intelligence.

Mr. Ferreahean proved to be a very valuable translator, as he manifested a surprising familiarity with Book of Mormon history, and could answer many questions with readiness and more forcibly than to have depended on getting everything from Brother Goodrich. Both interpreters were atheists, but were perfect gentlemen, and their deportment indicated a faithful translation and true presentation of the word to their people.

At the close we sang, "'Tis a glorious thing to be in the light," and they responded with two songs, one of which was about the millennium and Zion. The leader of the Russians then made a date for a preaching service in their church for Friday night of next week.

What it may lead to no one can tell. May God's grace help that all that can be done may be done. R. T. COOPER.

News from Branches

Omaha, Nebraska

"As we go through life, let us live by the way in the truest sense of the term."

Bishop E. L. Kelley gave us good instruction Sunday, May 31, and spoke in Council Bluffs in the evening.

Others occupying the pulpit of late have been Elders J. M. Stubbart, M. A. Peterson, A. E. Stoft and James Huff.

The sessions of the Northeastern Nebraska District conventions and conference were quite interesting and spiritual, considering the small attendance. How many miss the joy and peace of service and sacrifice in the Lord's work? Sister Blanche I. Andrews did her usual efficient work in the auxiliary line. Columbus was represented by Sister Elizabeth

Watkins, whose family with a few others have upheld the work in that city for a long time under trying circumstances. Sister Alice Watkins was district Sunday school secretary for a number of years. Missionaries present were Elders W. E. Shakespeare, Paul N. Craig and Alvin Knisley. Elders Knisley and Shakespeare held street meetings after the conference with good audiences, and trust many became interested.

Sister Amy E. Parr, of Nebraska City, worshiped with us Sunday morning, June 14, en route to Europe. May many blessings attend her, and much good be accomplished in the Master's cause. Sisters Nellie Grover and Pearl Lytle, of Blair, were also with us that glorious June Lord's Day, after so many showers to freshen the air.

"Let me find in thy employ,
Peace that dearer is than joy;
Out of self to love be led
And to heaven acclimated,
Until all things sweet and good
Seem my natural habitude."

Independence, Missouri

Now that the gospel work is carried on in the various missions in this vicinity, attracting the attention of many of the Saints who desire to help along their newly begun efforts, the numbers at the Stone Church are somewhat depleted, especially at the evening services.

Decoration Day the Saints of Enoch Hill who had prepared for a picnic gave excellent services in that direction, and many availed themselves of the opportunity to visit that beautiful spot, just south of this city, and enjoyed a fine dinner, and a well-arranged program. Brother G. E. Harrington delivered the oration, and Bishop Bullard was master of ceremonies. Sister Charles Fry did good service at the Aid Society's table, and refreshments were supplied in abundance.

The Decoration Day recreations, which were varied in character, did not tend to deter the Saints in their early hour worship on the following day. So on Sunday morning there were seventy-five out to the prayer meeting, and a goodly number at the morning church services.

On Sunday, the 7th, about four hundred were present in the lower room at sacrament service, over which President F. M. Smith presided, Brother Joseph being present in the audience; he bore in a touching manner no uncertain testimony to this glorious work.

A disastrous hailstorm occurred here Thursday, the 11th. Churches and schoolhouses were damaged. Our Stone Church was struck by lightning. Nearly every window on the north side of streets was broken. Short Street, where Brother Joseph lives, and a few others were not harmed. The stores and offices in town present a sorry sight. The hailstones were extraordinary in size.

That we live in the day of God's judgments the Saints verily believe; and where to go to escape we know not except to him in humble, devoted living. One long hoped for blessing amid the wreckage cheers our well-nigh despairing souls; and that is all nature is revived, and the fields and gardens after the downpour are refreshed and are sure to take a new start.

Pastoral

To the Saints of Toronto District; Greeting: Having been appointed assistant minister in charge of the above-named district, we invite the hearty cooperation of all the Saints, in the great work committed to our trust. We especially ask all those holding priesthood authority, to assist us in prosecuting the work in the district, inviting all to go to work, and thrust in their sickles and reap, for there is work for all.

We trust that everything foreign to the gospel may be laid aside, and our labors be mutual that the great work of God may be prosecuted with vigor, and that souls perishing for the want of the "bread of life" may be brought into the kingdom of our God. We have a small missionary force this year, but we will try and reach out as far as possible.

G. C. Tomlinson, by direction of J. F. Curtis, minister in charge, will labor on Manitoulin Island and near-by points until cold weather. Henry Ribble will labor in the vicinity of New Liskeard, covering what territory he can. Grant Saint John will labor in the eastern part of the district, in conjunction with Brother Pement, when the last named labors in Toronto District. The writer will look after the interest of the work in the western part of the district, Hamilton being the objective point.

We would be glad to hear from those desiring missionary work in their respective vicinities, and especially in new places. Let us all put on the whole armor of God and fight manfully against the forces of the enemy of all righteousness, with no other purpose than to bring about a better condition, and thus promote the great work of the Master. Let us hold up the hands of those in charge of the various departments of the work, and thus give God our best and truest labor and love.

My home address is South Boardman, Michigan, Box 45, Mission address, 66 Barnesdale Avenue, South Hamilton, Ontario. With love and best wishes for all, I remain,

Your humble servant,

W. D. ELLIS.

A New Book of Sermons

The Gospel Messenger

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c.

of Rorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He married Martha J. Roundy in August, 1872. To them were born seven sons and seven daughters, three of whom died in infancy. The eldest daughter died recently. He was left a widower March 14, 1901. He leaves mother, 2 brothers, 1 sister, 10 children, a host of friends. His life was a blessing to the community in which he lived and an example worthy of following. A larger and kinder-hearted man it would be difficult to find. His heart, his hand, and his house were always open to those who stood in need, and especially those of the household of faith, as every servant of God will bear witness who has labored in this part of the country. He was one of the manliest of men. Neighbors sought his counsel with the utmost confidence in his judgment. He was a peacemaker. The vast concourse of people who attended his funeral was a strong testimonial of the high esteem in which he was held. He was buried in the Gallands Grove Cemetery by the side of his faithful wife. Bishop Hunt had charge of the service, Charles Derry speaking, from the words, "The righteous hath hope in his death."—Proverbs 14: 32.

A Vacation on a Ranch

this summer will do you more good than a barrel of medicine. Get out into the open, close to nature and have the time of your life. Rest, relax and recreate. Ride over sun-flooded trails in the hills; row on silvery lakes; fish in shady brooks; tramp down winding paths among the trees; loaf in soft valleys of green; stroll in the moonlight; eat of the fat of the land and sleep like a babe. Such a vacation pays tremendous health dividends. You will come back feeling like a different person.

In the Black Hills of South Dakota, in the Big Horn Mountains of Wyoming, in the Buffalo Bill country, along the Cody Road into Yellowstone Park, there are countless places where you can spend just such a vacation and at a very moderate cost. The Hot Springs (S. D.) teem with life-giving and disease-curing qualities, while down at Thermopolis, in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming, is a hot spring, the waters of which are as an anti-toxin to hundreds of ills that beset the human race.

IS THERE TO BE A NEW STANDARD OF MORALS?

IF SO WHAT WILL IT BE?

For centuries past a double standard of morals has existed in society. Woman has had one standard; man has had another, and a much lower standard.

It is argued that this condition has come down from primitive times when woman was in subjection to man. According to this theory men as the dominant class made both standards. With characteristic selfishness and with the predilection of humanity to be more rigorous and exacting in judgment of others than in judgment of self, man forced upon woman a very exacting standard and retained one for himself that allowed him many privileges, and being the ruling factor in the family and in politics alike he could force obedience to his will by attaching heavy penalties. This double standard is to be seen not only in legislative enactment but also in the unwritten law, which is no less binding and exacting.

This condition still prevails to an extent. Men may indulge unnoticed in conduct that would forever disgrace a woman in public opinion. A young man may smoke, drink, swear, and visit houses of ill fame, and to a large degree escape the penalties that society would impose upon a young woman for similar conduct. Men constantly do things, and justify themselves in the doing, that they would not tolerate for a moment if attempted by their wives, sisters, or sweethearts.

But now comes a change that is rather alarming in its possibilities. To use a popular expression, "Woman is being emancipated." For the first time in history she is approaching a position of equality with man so far as privileges are concerned. Education has come to her with its enlightening and emancipating influences; industrial fields are open for her to occupy, relieving her from dependence on domestic occupations; and finally equal suffrage has been secured in many localities and is impending in others.

All of this brings with it new freedom, and with it comes too often a lowering of the old moral standard. Perhaps this is inevitable. But the startling question is, Will this lowering continue, or is it but temporary and incident to a period of readjustment?

Such an adjustment must take place sometime. Any standard that is forced by a ruling class upon others is essentially arbitrary and artificial and can not permanently endure. It has its origin in selfishness and class legislation and can only be maintained by oppression. Paradoxically some still argue that to keep women pure we must keep her in bondage.

But Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The only standard that can be considered permanent and enduring and enlightened is that standard that is deep-rooted in one's own conscience. Neither men nor women will permanently honor a standard that is forced upon them by a selfish, dominant class that at the same time is living below that standard themselves.

We may assume that under her new freedom woman has discovered the injustice of the double standard, and its artificial and arbitrary nature. Her present moral retrogression is her protest against such a system. And undoubtedly there is a moral retrogression in many places.

Many prominent society women now smoke and drink and gamble. Thousands of girls of the larger cities "sow their wild oats" in the same sense that wild oats are sown by young men,—they are "wise" and think they know how to escape the consequences, but as with the young men in question, the graver consequences of personal demoralization can not be escaped, even though public exposure and ostracism are avoided.

Cardinal O'Connel of Boston declared in a recent sermon:<sup>1</sup>

We need be neither prude nor Puritan to see and to realize that something is passing in the heart and the mind of the women to-day which is leaving them hard and unwomanly, and that year by year this transformation goes on until, if it continues, there will be neither home nor family, nor normal womanly nature left.

In a speech in Carnegie Hall, Chicago, some months ago, Rabbi Wise said:*

There is much about the manner and the matter of womanhood to-day that suggests a lowered attitude toward life.

The report of the Vice Commission of Chicago, 1911, says:

Many groups of girls go to summer parks without their parents or other friends; they start together, but are separated, and in many cases accept invitations from perfect strangers, "to go in and see the show." The possibilities offered to men for becoming acquainted with young girls in this way and taking advantage of them are endless.

Some young girls go regularly to these parks. They come with the price of admission and carfare, and as they have no money for amusements, seek a good time at some one's expense. A girl may "have a date with some man," or she will "pick one up." The man knows what is expected of him, she knows what is expected of her, and if she fails to fulfill her part of the bargain, he feels justified in using force. The girls often seem to have no idea of chastity, and as a matter of business make the first advances. They belong to a class of people who seem nonmoral rather than immoral. And yet these great amusement parks which offer the only recreation many can procure are a necessary part of city life, and they are here to stay. All that is immoral should, therefore, be strictly eliminated from them.—The Social Evil in Chicago, page 267.

Vice commissions of other cities make similar reports. An investigator for the "Moral Survey Committee," of Syracuse, New York, reports one pretty, nineteen-year-old waitress in a restaurant who readily "made a date" with him at a notorious resort. When he turned on her and asked why she went out with men when she had regular employment, she made the significant reply: "What's the difference? It's in the air." (The Social Evil in Syracuse, p. 57.)

It seems certain that a single standard is coming. Conditions that supported the old double standard are passing out of existence. Woman can not be restored to her former state; nor would that be desirable, for as we have said a standard that rests on a forced and arbitrary basis can not in the nature of the case endure. The issue may as well be fought out now as one hundred or five hundred years from now.

The startling questions that confront humanity are: Will woman lift man to her level? Or will man drag woman down to his level? Or will the two meet on a plane somewhere between the two standards as we now have them?

The integrity of the race is at stake. Man assumes that he is the stronger of the two. If that is really so and he succeeds in dragging woman down to his standard the future indeed will be dark. With the evil heritage of drunkenness and sexual debauchery now handed down on the paternal side, doubled by the addition of an equal heritage of intemperance and prostitution from the maternal side, the very existence as well as the moral and physical stamina of humanity is threatened.

Men may continue to will or wish woman to be high and holy in life; but he has no longer the power arbitrarily to enforce such will upon her unless at the same time he will himself come under the rod. If he refuses to come to a higher standard himself his actual life will drag woman down despite any abstract wish or will that he may entertain concerning woman in general.

The only hope for men and women is for a high moral standard based on a knowledge of the truth and exercised under the dominion of perfect Christian liberty. They must have a standard that is deep-rooted in their own personal convictions and not one that is imposed upon them by any ruling class. Such an enlightened standard is possible under gospel administration. Jesus sets men and women free and at the same time gives them that moral standard which will preserve and ennoble the race as well as the individual. The standard is the same for men and women.

In all probability we shall see the two classes, the good and the bad, draw farther and farther apart. There are many noble women who are pure and have been pure not because of deference to public opinion or any edict of any ruling class but because of righteous convictions of their own. But there are thousands of others who are at heart immoral and will go down, ever down, dragging many with them to ruin.

There are thousands of men who in their hearts have felt that the lower standard was beneath them, that they should subscribe to something higher. They have not always had the will to live up to their convictions; but the convictions are there. An aroused public sentiment and a growing sense of the seriousness of the situation may cause many to rally to the higher standard.

But there are other multitudes who are brutal, beastly, and recognize nothing more compelling than the behests of passion. These will continue to drag woman downward. Of such the apostle wrote, "Wicked men and seducers shall wax worse and worse."

This is indeed the hastening time in more than one sense. Great social changes are going on with remarkable rapidity, often not even sensed by the masses of men and women. It remains for the Saints to strengthen their moral sinews, keep themselves unspotted from the vices of the world, and ever observe that high and holy single standard of personal righteousness and purity that is binding upon men and women in Christ Jesus.

CURRENT EVENTS

CHURCH UNION.—Discussions on the part of prominent men in each denomination and certain common interests, such as pension funds for ministers and the cooperation of divinity schools, point to a union of New England Unitarianism and Congregationalism.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.—Captain A. N. Hoyland of the Norwegian navy promises secrecy in wireless telegraphy. He claims to have devised a machine for transmitting printed messages in the manner of typewriting. The sending devices may be changed to include seven hundred and twenty different code arrangements.

TO CONSERVE POWER.—A bill to conserve water power still remaining under Federal control has been reported by the House Committee on Public Lands. This bill provides that leases be made for no longer than fifty years, leaving with the Government the regulation of services and prices. Leases may be made to States, counties or municipalities as well as to private concerns.

IMPORTANT COURT DECISIONS.—In a decision handed down last week, the Supreme Court of the United States upheld the right of the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish a zone system for rates, and the long and short haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Law. The Supreme Court also holds that interstate pipe lines are common carriers, and as such must transport oil for all patrons under rules established by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This last decision in effect is corrective of the practices of the Standard Oil Company, which practically controls the pipe lines of the country.

HOME RULE AND SUFFRAGE.—An amending bill embodying the Government's offer of temporary exclusion for Ulster counties so voting was on June 23 introduced in the House of Commons. The bold, determined landing of additional guns and ammunition on the Connemara Coast has been protested by Unionists and Tories to the amusement of the Liberals. Despite the continued landing of arms, comparative quiet reigns in the matter of Irish home rule. Breaking from his former position in which he persistently declined to deal with the suffragettes, Premier Asquith, under pressure from the suffragettes, has given audience to representatives of English working women.

A BOUNTIFUL HARVEST.—The Department of Agriculture announces that thirty-five States of the United States will produce crops this year greater than the average for the past ten years. The farmers of the country will harvest nine hundred million bushels of wheat, an increase of one hundred and thirty-seven million over the crop of last year. Other-grains promise like increase. Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska alone will realize $225,000,000 to $300,000,000 from the year's harvest. One half the world's total average production of wheat and two thirds of the world's supply of cotton, together with other bountiful crops, are expected to relieve the country from the slight business depression of recent months, especially if the present congress passes anti-trust legislation contemplated, thus placing business centers at rest in the matter of legislative agitation and uncertainty.

MEXICAN WAR.—Following a four-day struggle, described as "the most hotly contested battle of the present revolution," the Constitutionalists under General Villa on June 23 captured Zacatecas from fourteen thousand Federal soldiers, behind carefully planned fortifications, and who suffered "the most crushing defeat of the revolution." The Constitutionalists took five thousand prisoners, twelve cannon, nine military trains, six thousand rifles and three car loads of cannon and rifle ammunition. The surviving Federalists retreated southward, from whence skirmishes are reported. The taking of Zacatecas places more than half the territory of the republic in the hands of the Constitutionalists. The present Constitutionalist plan is to move the three divisions of the army on toward Mexico City, the eastern under Gonzales to attack San Luis Potosi, the western under Obregon to strike at Guadlajara, the central under Villa to move against Aguascalientes.

MEXICO AND UNITED STATES.—The United States and Mexican delegates and the mediators have signed a protocol under which the United States and the mediating powers are to recognize the new provisional government, and diplomatic relations are to be resumed between United States and Mexico. The only outstanding provision of the protocol is that the international problem between United States and Mexico is to be declared adjusted on the establishment of the provisional government. The selection of a provisional president and the organization of the new government is left to an informal conference of representatives of the Constitutionalists and the Huerta delegates representing the Federalists at the mediation conference. Representatives of the Constitutionalists in Washington are of the opinion that Carranza will appoint delegates to this informal conference, which would meet at Niagara Falls. Without formal adjournment, the mediation conference awaits the outcome.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

TWO KINDS OF SOPHISTRY.—Daniel Sommer in the Apostolic Review for June 2 remarks that by sophistry "the no hell doctrine is made plausible by its advocates through magnifying God's goodness and mercy and disparaging his justice." We hold no brief for the "no hell" people, yet may be permitted to add that the kind of never-ending hell preached by Elder Sommer is made plausible only through magnifying the justice of God and disparaging his goodness and mercy.

NEED OF FANATICISM.—The editor of The Christian World and Evangelist, New York, with others, thinks that the church and the world need a few fanatics, men like Wesley, Wycliffe, Calvin, Luther, and Paul, "that there may be a revival of religion." He quotes a certain New York minister as saying, "Would to God we had a few fanatics in the church just now!" and adds:

Perhaps if some great fanatics should arise and attack our modern lust of pleasure, our sham religious life, our smug respectability, our sin underneath our fine clothes and good manners, there might be a real revival of religion which would not only save our souls, but purge our business, our social life, our politics, our international relations of the rottenness and corruption at their heart.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF EMMA BURTON.—Sister Emma Burton has written her autobiography and the manuscript is lodged with the Church Historian, Brother Heman C. Smith. This autobiography will be published on condition that sufficient orders are received to warrant the expense of publication. The book will approximate four hundred and fifty pages, and will sell for one dollar, cloth binding. Those desiring to secure this autobiography please write to Sister Emma Burton, 620 West Fifth Street, Santa Ana, California, placing their order with her, but not inclosing any money. Money may be forwarded later on condition that the book is published and when it is ready for mailing.

A CASE IN POINT.—We are often impressed with the thought that success in almost any enterprise is at the behest of some easy stroke of fortune, the sudden scintillation of genius which enables a man to accomplish the result of a long service by a species of intuition and quick transposition; but we more frequently discover that true success has been the result of careful study and persistence in following the accomplishment of the desired purpose. Here is a case in point: A young man resident at Independence, Arden Legeman, son of Brother and Sister Legeman, some three or four years ago conceived the notion that he could make a study of wireless telegraphy by methods of his own. He erected a tower which answered the purpose of his study, and began his effort to secure recognition in the field of that science. He has succeeded well enough to attract the notice of those engaged in the wireless business, and began by receiving and sending messages by and with the consent of the authorities, and putting himself in touch with the authorities of the Government. He passed an examination and was later sent to San Francisco, supposedly to be put in charge, with others, of the wireless station, or on one of the big battleships. We give this illustration of what may be done by a persistent following of a purpose to reach a successful end. No young man need despair if he is willing to put himself to the trouble of developing the phrenological bump recognized in the common talk of the scientists as that of stick-to-it-iveness. We commend the idea to those of our young readers who are willing to undertake valuable service to themselves and humanity. The service which this young man enters may expose him to the dangers incident to war, and yet he is not expected to use arms or to shed blood. His work will be to note the result of those electrical impulses which modern science throws hundreds of miles through the air. He of course will not be in command, but possibly may be of valuable assistance in avoiding disaster by his watchful carefulness and his skill developed by persistent effort.

A REMINISCENCE.—There lately appeared in the papers an item of news recording the collision at sea between the American liner, the New York, and the Pretoria of the Hamburg-American line, by which, except for the presence of mind and quickness of judgment of the commander of the first-named boat, there would have been a disaster like the one which occurred recently in the Saint Lawrence River when some thousand persons were drowned. The account shows that while the steamer was damaged below the water line, she was able to get to New York under her own power. The reading of this item recalled to the senior editor's mind the fact that it was on the New York that he and Brother R. C. Evans some eleven years ago, crossed the Atlantic to England. When the editor heard the item read it caused his heart to jump for a moment as he remembered the trip across on that same boat, which so far as he was concerned he could have called a pleasant trip but for the fact that his companion suffered from seasickness to quite an extent, marring the pleasure of the trip for both. It recalled also to mind that when going over there was on board a certain colonel from New York, with his family, and who stated that during the war with Spain this boat was in the service of the United States and one stormy night was in collision to such an extent that one side of the ship was badly raked, but by what it was done or how badly the other vessel may have been damaged they could not see, as it was a night of storm and darkness. The colonel told this story upon it being suggested that there might be danger of collision, and he told the story to illustrate that there could be such a thing. We are pleased to note that the steamer escaped without loss of life to any on board.

THE CHURCHES AND THE PRESENT AGE

Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.—Psalm 133: 1.

The writer has for some time past been interested with regard to the churches and the present age. It is almost the universal experience with religious bodies that there is a decline in church membership; and a great deal of consideration is being afforded by leading men of the various organizations as to the way in which it may be possible to get the people to take more interest in their spiritual welfare. No doubt many reasons are propounded for this decline, but it is quite evident that the age is much occupied with material conditions, as we can see by the widespread workers' discontent and the many strikes resulting therefrom. If the people are to be won for Christ we must do something to arouse them to the sense of duty towards their Creator, that they may thus realize they can not live "by bread alone."

NEED OF COOPERATION

Cooperation is the essential law of life. But when we study the religious ways of the people for the last four or five centuries, the result shows a multiplicity of sects and denominations which have striven for superiority and to gain converts for their particular bodies. This has meant continuous rivalry, but in these days of advanced education, people are becoming to think for themselves, more particularly the proletariat class, who have certainly had a lot to do with the swelling of congregations. It is now widely understood that divisions are not at all conducive to the general well-being of the people, and all must learn to cooperate to a common end. The churches are awakening to this fact, and recognize the necessity of sinking many of the differences which have caused separation and division on religion. We who have given credence to the claim made by the Prophet Joseph Smith can certainly see the wisdom of the desire on the part of these devotional bodies to come to an understanding with a view to cater in a cooperative spirit to the religious needs of the people.

The Anglican Church is complaining greatly of this religious indifference on the part of the people, and to evidence that the matter is receiving serious consideration, the bishop of Lincoln, England, in a letter read to all the churches of the diocese, said:

No follower of Christ can view without pain the rabid differences that have split up into sections the whole body of those who profess to call themselves Christians. We see the Greek Church of the East wholly severed from the Latin Church of the West. We see the Church of Rome avoiding all contact with the reformed churches. We see our own Church of England, which is Catholic and reformed in one standard, midway between Rome and the Puritan bodies, and aloof from both. We see even Puritan bodies severed not only from us but from each other, so that even in our quiet villages we may find old Methodists vieing with Baptists and Congregationalists and all this the more or less uniting in rivalry with the church.

No wonder that reason as well as sense of charity are leading men to recoil from such absurdities and consider what steps can be taken towards reunion. The Anglican bishops, assembled at Lambeth, have readily discussed the problem of reunion and laid down four first principles which the Church of England could not surrender but all consider to be an essential basis of reunion, viz: 1. The Bible as the revealed word of God. 2. The Nicene creed as the summary of the faith. 3. Baptism and holy communion. 4. The historic episcopate.

For myself, I would abide by these fundamentals. No reunion would be worth the name which rested upon ambiguous wording or emotional sentiments and neglected the facts of differing principles, differing ideas of worship, differing types of character and conduct.

After saying that he is far from thinking that a reunion is near, the bishop says:

Towards healing the divisions, churchmen can take pains to show courtesy and kindness towards people who differ from them. Cooperate in all matters pertaining to the social and moral welfare of the people and abandon "party" labels. . . . I imagine that if we could get our knees together . . . we should forget our differences in our sense of the divine presence. Such thoughts, such feelings, will not make us worse, but they will make us better Christians.—The Yorkshire (England) Post, March 3, 1914.

WHERE THE CHURCHES FAIL

From the foregoing we can gather the trend of the Anglican Church, and the difficulties she is faced with. It is true her congregations are diminishing. There is not a week that goes by without one's attention is drawn to newspaper articles on the decline of the church, and suggestions thrown out as to the ways and means by which the people might come back to the church. Socials and other entertainments especially to encourage the young have been tried. These, however, bear too worldly a character and are not a success so far as the spiritual welfare of the people is concerned. We must get people to realize that their duty towards God is a matter of serious, conscientious devotion, and that it can not be effected in the way of administering for worldly pleasures. As Lord Bacon says in his essay on Unity in Religion:

Religion being the chief band of human society, it is a happy thing when itself is well contained within the true band of unity. . . . The true God hath this attribute, that he is a jealous God, and therefore his worship will endure no mixture nor partner.

DIVERSE SYSTEMS

Again, considering the religions generally, we come across such a vast number of different creeds and forms of worship, each claiming to be of divine origin, that a reasonable and thinking mind might turn away in disgust. It is astonishing to note the divers systems which lay claim to be the true form of Christianity. Two opposing forms can not be right, but it is possible for one of them to be nearer the goal of truth than the other.

The Roman Catholic Church, as we know her, claims apostolic succession. This succession can only be substantial when it can be authenticated that regular and uninterrupted transmission of ministerial authority has been enjoyed by a succession of the ministry from the apostles down to the present. The claim of Roman Catholics does not receive the approbation of the Anglican body, nor does the Church of Rome receive the indorsement of the Anglican Church. The time has certainly arrived when if the churches are to hold their own and get the people to take more interest in their religious affairs, good and clear statements about religion must be made. In November, 1911, the Reverend H. Mayne Young, in a sermon delivered in Westminster Abbey, among other things dealing with the present age, said:

The day is not far distant when, unless the Church of England restates and remodels her creeds so as to meet the requirements of the age, she will be left stranded on the shores of time, while the tide of this modern life will leave her further and further behind, a sad warning of an iron-bound system of worn-out dogmas and lifeless traditions.

Here, then, in 1911 and 1914 we see statements made by those in clerical office in effect that the churches are recognizing their serious position and the religious indifference of the people, and learning that the forms and creeds which constituted the foundation of the various denominations do not appeal to the people of these times.

In the Catholic Times of March 20, of this year, in an article entitled "Doctor Gore and the Anglican position," dealing with the drift of the church, are found several statements which are certainly very striking, such as:

CHURCH FEDERATION

Anglicans admit the existence of a Roman drift. There is also another drift which affects the Anglican Church, and the tendency is very plain—the drift towards indifference and unbelief. During Sunday services in the Anglican places of worship many seats are vacant. . . .

A large number of the Anglicans who belong to the low church party look forward to the time when some sort of compromise will bind together the Church of England and the dissenting sects.

On many points of doctrine the low church Anglicans are at one with the dissenter, and now when they see the difficulties caused to the Church of England on the one hand by the falling away of members and on the other by the high church party to which they are strongly opposed, their idea is that the church should be strengthened by a better understanding with the dissenters. Only in this way do they hope that Anglicans and dissenters will be able to continue their work and to resist the unbelief which is threatening on all sides.

Doctor Gore of Oxford, in a speech regarding the Korean Mission, spoke of the evidence of a wish on the part of Protestant religious societies to federate. . . . There is a widespread welcome given to the idea of a Protestant alliance.

From the above, it is quite evident that serious consideration is being given to bring about a union in sentiment and unity in practice on those points which have so long served to keep apart Christians; and until these differences are removed there can be no hope of godly union and concord.

THE GOSPEL STANDARD

We find that at last the churches are beginning to recognize what Joseph Smith so earnestly gave forth in his commission and Latter Day Saints still declare, that any sort of creed-form or ceremony will not do. There must be a standard whereby the work of Christian education can be carried on, and above all, the showing an example of a higher level of endeavor after holiness of life.

The gospel of Christ has been restored to the earth in its entirety, and while the churches may try to come to a standard by which it might be possible to carry on their work in a cooperative manner, it would be well for us to put forward our best efforts in furthering the cause we represent, and to show that unity in principle can be attained when the pure and undefiled religion of Christ is preached and put into practice.

Religious competition must pass away, because the divisions are threatening incalculable loss to spiritual life. Humanity is one, and there must be a single aim for all men, a work to be achieved by all. Religion should consist in the vital and intrinsic union of all members and professors of the common faith. It is impossible to think of it existing for the individual alone. Associated effort and combination for the attainment of a given purpose is a glorious truth. The promises of religion are not confined to the next world, but are to be enjoyed in this. That faith which is enjoined upon us is a living faith, and "faith without works is dead."

The advent of Christianity was announced as: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards man.

DEBATING

There are several phases that should be considered in canvassing the question of debating, especially when it relates to the work of the church. Each debate must be governed, very largely, by the conditions with which it is surrounded.

In my opinion to hold a debate successfully it will be necessary, first, to arouse interest in the community touching the subject under discussion, especially if it be a matter of religion. This necessarily would arouse antagonism, which would manifest itself in a disposition to question the position occupied by the aggressive party.

When these conditions have obtained, and a demand for a debate has been created, a debate would be a proper thing, if conducted in the right spirit and with the object and intention of gaining light and information, and would be productive of good. If the proper spirit is not maintained, it would not matter which side is victorious, so far as argument is concerned, there would be more or less ill feeling aroused that would partake of the nature of prejudice to a large degree, which would be productive of genuine harm.

To undertake to carry on a discussion for the purpose of creating an interest, I consider an error. Whoever seeks to accomplish this will meet with more or less disappointment, and the cause in which he is engaged will suffer loss to a greater or lesser extent. With reference to the good derived by the church through the discussions held by its ministers there is nearly always a diversity of opinion. While in many cases debates have been productive of considerable good and have brought the work to the attention of many who would not have seen it, and have broken down a great deal of prejudice, even where necessity for a debate has been strong and an attack has been made upon us. The proper spirit must be manifest upon the part of the disputant, and the debate must not be allowed to degenerate into a battle of wit, or personal abuse. These are neither educational nor becoming to ministers of the gospel, and whenever ministers, of whatever denomination, stoop to them they injure the cause they are supposed to represent.

THE PROPOSITIONS

In conducting a debate one of the most important things is the wording and agreeing upon propositions. The propositions should state clearly and definitely the belief of the church and the individual who affirms them. Under no circumstances should a proposition be accepted which is susceptible to more than one meaning, or that would misrepresent in any way the true position of the church represented. As I view the matter, propositions of a religious nature should be considered from the standpoint of the church and its official statement of belief and doctrine and not from the standpoint of some individual opinion. This important feature is sometimes overlooked, and the one who affirms finds himself practically defeated in the very beginning, and he is compelled to face the fact that he has been placed at a serious disadvantage. No matter how capable he may be, nor how well he may handle his arguments and evidence, he can not get away from the fact that his proposition is not representing him correctly, and that he is at a disadvantage. Should an opponent desire to be the least bit technical or unscrupulous he can take advantage of such a condition so effectually as to make it almost impossible for the affirmative to properly defend his position, or to overcome the handicap that has been placed upon him because of an improperly worded proposition.

THE PRINCIPAL

This feature having been carefully guarded, and the rules agreed upon, which should be rules of honor more than anything else, the next important step is the selection of a principal. This oftentimes is a difficult question, and in our work, in which we believe faith must perform its work to a very large extent, and in which inspiration plays a very important part, we need not lay so much stress upon the special qualifications for debating as we otherwise would. But he must be an individual who is capable of expressing himself clearly and forcefully, and one who is gifted with some degree of wisdom and tact, and willing to apply himself very closely to study, and above all, one who is willing to put his trust and confidence in God and be humble; and by earnest prayer and by a careful, considerate conduct not only obtain the confidence of the people, but the favor of God, that he may receive the necessary inspiration that will carry with it conviction to the hearts of those that hear him, and enlarge his powers of perception and loose his tongue.

He should be able to control his temper, and be quick to see any point he can make or that his opponent can make, and should weigh well each point as to its merits, for the people must be taken into consideration. It is not simply a question of victory over his opponent that must be looked after in a debate, but the education and the enlightenment of the hearers. To make this satisfactory there must come, from some source, to the individual who stands for the church in the debate, that peculiar inspiration and understanding of the needs of that people, their acquaintance with the question under consideration and their ability to receive, as well as the idea of meeting and defeating an opponent.

CONDITIONS DIFFER

Experience has taught us that in different parts of the country we find different conditions among the people and the line along which one man would meet with success in one community would bring him defeat in the estimation of another community. Consequently we take the stand that in the selection of a principal in a debate we must not only consider the individual, his ability and education, temperament, spirituality, etc., but we must take into consideration the locality in which the debate is to be held, and the wants of the people who will attend the debate. We should make our selection of a principal from this standpoint if we would meet with success in debating along church lines.

While in one community a brother could use the best of language and be exceedingly refined, polished and eloquent in his argument, and meet every demand, in another community this very refinement and polish would not meet with the approval of the people; and if his opponent had been inclined to be rough and very sarcastic in all probability he would be considered the winner. Our polished and refined brother would be looked upon as a loser in the conflict. Maybe another man who was not nearly so capable who would use similar tactics to the opponent referred to, and who would not use nearly as good grammar and would resort to a rough line of argument, sarcasm, and witticism, he would be acclaimed the best debater.

From this standpoint it is easy to be seen that the question of debating and the benefit that comes from it are quite difficult problems. While in many cases, as we have said before, there has been much prejudice broken down, and there have been many that have become interested in the work through debates, we have discovered that in nearly all of these cases, which we have examined, there has been an interest aroused first, antagonism to our work which demanded the defense of the work, which resulted accordingly in good.

We have known numbers of other cases, in our own experience, where overzeal has led those interested in the work at a given place, to insist upon, and finally work up a debate which has not accomplished what has been desired. The Saints were disappointed and displeased in many cases, and found fault with the brother who stood in the breach and defended the work, while in the estimation of your writer the fault did not lie nearly so much in the defender as it did in the fact that there was no demand for a meeting of this character. The result did not accomplish what had been desired, and consequently the brother suffered unnecessary criticisms, the work not being benefited, and in some cases injured to some extent, and the people to a large degree discouraged.

Thus I think that the question of debating should be considered more carefully than in some instances in the past, especially if we would reap the results and accomplish the good that has been sought in the holding of debates. While it is true that some men are qualified by nature better than others and enter into this line of work better equipped than others, yet we still feel that the conditions previously named must be considered and taken into question in the selecting of a principal to meet the emergency when it shall arise.

THE REDEMPTION OF ZION

Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord.—Isaiah 1: 18.

This has been the disposition of our heavenly Father through all the ages. He is still the same, and stands ready to reason with any man; even as he did on that notable night when the ruler came to him to learn the plan of salvation. He works after a fashion which should appeal to all classes, and would appeal to all classes, if it were not for the cloud of darkness which is hovering over the minds of men. God made man in the beginning; and the peculiarities of his makeup are known to the Creator. By reason of disobedience man fell, and suffered great loss. But the pure mercies of God abounded for man, and in the infinite mind of the Creator the plan of escape, the salvation of the race was devised. Since God is all wise and a perfect being, we may look for perfection in his designs and his works. As for man he was pure in the beginning, but became corrupt. As for the plan of redemption, it was perfect in the beginning and is still perfect and the same.

God has prepared eternity for us. He it is that will judge us. He it is who has given the law—the plan for our redemption. It is a perfect plan. Nothing can compare with it. It meets with his approval; and we can not afford to trifle with those things ordained of him.

LET US REASON TOGETHER

Through all the ages the appeal of God has been, Come, let us reason together. Israel, stop! consider your steps. Halt! Judah, go not into Egypt; the hand of the destroyer will be there. He counseled his chosen people, yet they heeded not his warnings. He advised them to have a judge, they desired a king. They cherished a monarchical form of government and worldly display. They had their kings, and many things that were grievous to them, and which were the fruit of their sowing.

It is the disposition of our heavenly Father to reason with us and to warn us, as the Good Shepherd should. Some might think that compromise is included in the word reason. Some can not reason without compromise, and that in their favor. But so far as the law of God is concerned, this rendering of the word reason would be misleading. God did not and will not compromise with his people.

First: He is unchangeable. He does not experiment. His law is a perfect code, and does not need to be frequently revised as the works of man.

Second: If he should compromise, a change in the law would be evident. Should he yield in one particular, other requirements would become grievous. If he should yield, rebellion would follow and no one would have respect for the laws. For example: In Mexico there is a serious rebellion—why? Because dictator as well as subject has lost respect for the laws. Rebellion will continue until coercion is used, and they are compelled either by internal or external force, to respect the laws which should bind the states, and hold them in union.

GOD'S WAY BEST

Why is God's way better than man's way? The "Infinite and Allwise" is able to devise a better code of laws than the finite. The Creator can in all things surpass the workmanship of his hands.

It was Isaiah who said, As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and Come unto me, eat and your souls shall live. But Israel would not. Very often they were disobedient; they reaped as they had sown, and a bountiful harvest. They reaped those things which were full of vice, and those things which ensnared and destroyed them.

As he said he would, God caused that they should depart from the land. Not in great processions with gay banners, not with an outstretched hand as they came into the land; but in servitude did they go, and as bondsmen. All this was the fruit of disobedience, coming after they had been warned. We should receive instruction from the example and their mistakes.

WEAKNESS OF HUMANITY

After Judah had been punished in bondage for many years, she was permitted to return to the promised land. The conditions were the same: all depended upon her good behavior. We see a repetition in the history of this people. As soon as they were permitted to rebuild the walls of their city and were secure from their enemies rebellion arose in their ranks and in high places. The Prophet Ezra lamented because of their transgressions. They had forgotten their God. They looked to their idols again. They again looked upon strange women. Well might the humble prophet lament for them.

There is a prevailing weakness in humanity. Prosperity bringeth pride—pride turns into rebellion, oppression of the poor, and idolatry.

Such are the conditions we find in the lives of many so-called honest people. When enemies surround them, when sickness and famine are in their midst, then will they feel after their God and pray for a deliverance. Their prayers are answered, they are delivered, their sick child is healed, they are prospered in business. Business sometimes crowds the humble prayer from the family circle, and neglect and pride enter.

Oh, Jerusalem! how often would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her brood but you would not,—in other words, how often would I have blessed you, but you would not come to me when I called you. God's people had forgotten the hand that bore the lash. They had forgotten the hand of the oppressor. They had gone in other ways. They had forgotten the simplicity of God's reasoning.

LATTER-DAY ISRAEL

Yes, we censure them, and well may we. But let us remember that history repeats itself. It has repeated itself in our generation. While we may not like to think of these things, yet we should always profit by the mistakes of those who have gone before us. Where men have fallen through the ice should be a danger place to us. Where God's people have suffered loss and defeat in the past should be as a danger sign to us, where hangs a light which is red.

To latter-day Israel was given the land of Zion as an inheritance. Every blessing once offered to ancient Israel was offered to them. The land in like measure was fruitful, and yielded in abundance. God was not slow to answer their prayers, or slack in revealing his mind and will unto them. Many were careless, and with them God was not well pleased. He saw danger points along the line, and warned them of such. They heeded not his warning. Through the Prophet Joseph came these words:

There is even now already in store a sufficient, yea, even abundance to redeem Zion, and establish her waste places, no more to be thrown down, were the churches, who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice.—Doctrine and Covenants 98:10.

There is much to this quotation. The proposition confronting the church in 1833 was the redemption of Zion. This is a leading thought with us. In 1833 an abundance was in store. But Zion has not been redeemed. She was thrown down, for a season. Why was she thrown down for a season? Those churches who called themselves after God's name were not willing to hearken unto his voice. I understand the thought that we should receive from this passage to be: Those individuals who compose my church are not willing to hearken unto my voice; they do not regard as they should those things which they have received. Those who are worrying about the redemption of Zion should take this thought home with them and say, "Lord, is it I?"

THE REDEMPTION OF ZION

Another thought: If there was enough in store and an abundance in 1833, why is not Zion redeemed to-day? Is it a question of dollars and cents? Dollars and cents alone will never build up Zion. There is more money in the church to-day than in that day. What is the trouble? listen! "Zion is the pure in heart." It is true, money will be needed, and much of it. But we must do as the Savior has said, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Where shall we establish God's righteousness? In our hearts—then the things needful will be forthcoming.

The one "mighty and strong" is doing a great work—he is setting in order the house of God. The people are being educated to a greater knowledge of the gospel. They are learning that there is no other way, and that he who would assist in this great work must consecrate himself; in fact, must become "pure in heart."

First, let us set our homes in order. Then the chosen of the Lord will be able to set the house of God in order. Let us search those commandments which we have received. More than that, let us keep them. As Paul said: "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." (Hebrews 12: 1.)

There is an old story of two sailors, who, for the sake of a good time, left the ship at its moorings and went ashore. They lingered some time, as most sailors do. They returned, as most sailors do. They went to their small boat which was tied to a pier. Jumping in they began to row for all they were worth. No progress was made. They became angry at each other, each declaring that the other was shirking. By and by they became sufficiently sober so that one noticed that the boat was tied. "Jack," he said, "we forgot to untie the boat." The boat was loosed and with effort they reached the ship.

Some may wonder to-day why we are not progressing more rapidly. Might not some be still tied? We are afraid to venture forth. Some may be trying to serve two masters. Each must ask the question of himself, Am I progressing as I should; if not why not? Have I made a complete consecration to the work? Let us cut loose from the shore, cast forth on the deep and prove the Lord. When each of us does this, surely God will not withhold that great blessing which he was ready to grant unto us in years gone by.

NEW BIBLE FOR JEWS

The reproach so long directed against the Jews that they contribute little toward the interpretation of their own Scriptures in the modern world will be wiped out by a great work just completed. English-speaking Jews, says The American Hebrew (New York), will be able now to refer to a standard edition of the Bible in English, "with every confidence that nothing in it will clash against Jewish thought or Jewish sentiment." This edition, the work of a committee of seven eminent Jewish scholars appointed by the Jewish Publication Society of America and the Central Conference of American Rabbis, has been seven years in preparation, and supplants the old Leeser version, hitherto the only one available for English readers. The American Hebrew speaks with pride of the new position in the theological world that the work entitles the English-speaking Jew to claim:

The appearance of such a Bible at once places the Jews of America, theologically speaking, on the same level as the two great branches of the Christian Church, which are represented by the Douay Version for the Roman Catholics and the Revised form of the King James Version for the Protestants.

Such an event as this marks an epoch in the annals of English-speaking Jews. By this act they take their place in the ranks of Jewish scholarship of the past and the present which has always centered about the Bible. The band of translators add their names to the long series of Jewish translators of the Bible from the Septuagint to Saadia and Mendelssohn down to Zunz and his companions, who did the same thing for German Jews some eighty years ago. It must not be forgotten that in the English-speaking world Isaac Leeser, single handed, gave to the English-speaking Jews of America a version of the Scriptures, which for its time, was quite a worthy contribution to Jewish scholarship. But his time was scarcely adapted to the minutiae of Semitic philology, or of Jewish traditional exegesis, not to speak of the somewhat colorless English in which his version was written. With all due gratitude to Leeser's version, the Jewish community of America will welcome the new version of the Scriptures just completed with equal gratitude.

The essentially American nature of the work is pointed out by the New York Evening Post in speaking of the organization of the revision committee:

Leading Jewish scholars of England had been invited to cooperate in the undertaking, but declined; not because they undervalued it, but because, as they said, the King James Version and the Revised Version of the Old Testament (as it is termed) would suffice for their purposes when accompanied by explanatory leaflets already prepared. Thereupon the full committee commenced regular sessions at frequent intervals for the purpose of revising Professor Margolis's translation, and these have been kept up month by month, year by year, until yesterday, when the final one was held in the Seminary in West One Hundred and Thirty-third Street, and Doctor Adler was able formally to announce that the work was completed.

There is still a possibility that many changes will be made as the new version goes to press, for the proof will be scanned minutely. It is expected that from six to nine months more will pass before the first edition is printed, bound, and ready for distribution. . . .

No attempt has been made to touch upon the New Testament. The committee has confined itself to translating and revising the Hebrew text, which ends with Chronicles.

In making his translation, Professor Margolis kept before him all the best of existing translations, including the King James, the Vulgate, the Septuagint, the Syriac, the French, and the American revised versions. With these he freely consulted all of the best commentaries, both ancient and modern, and in revising his translation the full committee followed much the same practice, for their task was not merely to make a faithful translation from the Hebrew, but to render it into the best English style of which they were capable. In a general way, it may be said that Elizabethan English prevails.

None of those constituting the committee cares at present to indicate any of the alterations which will distinguish the new version from other renderings of the Old Testament into English, for the reason that further changes are expected while the manuscript is going through the press. But it is understood that not a few will be seen when the work is finally printed. Wherever possible, the dignity and phraseology of the King James Version has been followed, but advantage has been taken of modern textual accuracy as printed in the Revised Version of 1885.

Where poetry has been encountered, whether in a book of poems or occurring here and there in a book of prose, it will be printed in lines indicating verse form at a glance. Chapter headings will not be used.

The translators contemplate for the new version a wider utility than the confines of one sect imply, and in their work had in mind the needs of this wider audience. This purpose is dwelt upon by Doctor Kaufman Kohler in his after-dinner address celebrating the work. He said:

It was . . . a wise step taken by our Board of Editors in following as closely as possible the standard of the Authorized Version, thereby to preserve the classical English diction with all the vigor and rhythmic beauty which only the inspiration of genius could produce and at the same time safeguard the uniformity of the translation. As students we might have displayed in many instances greater originality; as workers at a Bible for the people, we gladly yielded in favor of a translation which created the God-fearing, liberty-loving race of men that made England and North America what they are. Only in one respect we approached our work as students equipped with the ammunition of modern research. Just as the Revised Version, the work of modern English and American scholars, represents, aside from a few Christological features that have still been left here and there, the advanced scientific character of modern Bible exegesis, so does our translation, the result of independent studies with especial consultation also of Jewish tradition and Jewish authorities, offer to the Jewish world the Scriptures in modern English upon a thorough scientific basis free from any sectarianism or any Jewish bias. It is a Jewish Bible only in so far as it takes cognizance of the synagogue usage regarding the order of books and the divisions of the Pentateuchal Sabbath portions and their Hebrew nomenclatures. Aside from this, it presents itself as the translation of the Scripture pure and simple, and we confidently expect that non-Jewish scholars will use it with profit in future revisions of their own versions, since as Jewish students we frequently succeed in penetrating deeper into the spirit of the Hebrew original than did translators less conversant with the Hebrew diction.

Thus our work is truly a peace offering to both the Jewish and the non-Jewish world. Being the result of a harmonious cooperation of the representatives of the two wings of American Judaism, the conservative and the reform wing, it will, we hope and trust, form a bond of union between all the branches and divisions of American Israel to bring about a greater consolidation of its spiritual interests, and at the same time serve as a link to entwine us also with our God-seeking non-Jewish brethren throughout the English-speaking world. Yes, as Jewish students we are mindful of the word of our sages: "The disciples of the wise will increase the world's peace, for it is said, All thy children will be taught of God, and great shall then be the peace of thy children, the up-builders of the divine kingdom of truth."

The personnel of the committee is as follows: Doctor Cyrus Adler, president of Dropsie College, Philadelphia; Solomon Schechter, president of the Jewish Theological Seminary, of New York City; Doctor Samuel Schulman, of Temple Bethel; Doctor K. Kohler, president of the Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati; Doctor David Philipson, of the same institution; Doctor Joseph Jacobs, professor of English in the Jewish Theological Seminary and editor of The American Hebrew, and Professor Max L. Margolis, of Dropsie.—Literary Digest, February 28, 1914.

THE LORD'S RETURN

[The fulfillment of the promises of God to the Jews, the second coming of Christ and the millennial reign have been themes common among Latter Day Saints since the introduction of the work in 1830. At one time not accepted, these things yet future are now believed in and taught by many. HERALD readers will find the following interesting in this connection.—Editors.]

"If Christ came to Chicago," was a much-quoted phrase made famous by William T. Stead as the title of a book that challenged the Christian world. But if Christ had come to Chicago during the days of the International Prophetic Conference which met at The Moody Bible Institute last month, he would have received a joyous and expectant welcome from the eager, reverent, whole-hearted Christian disciples who made up the great audiences of that remarkable meeting. They gathered there because they believed in the imminent coming of the Lord Jesus Christ for his waiting church. They came together because it was on their hearts, by so doing, to give a public testimony to their belief that the Lord's return is the "Blessed Hope" of his church in this age,—and to make for the greatest blessing also of his peculiar people and brethren, the Jews, and of the world as well.

It had been twelve years since any general prophetic conference as this had been held in North America. And it was not known, in advance whether an invitation to meet for study and prayer on the subject of the second coming of Christ would be responded to in large numbers or not. Yet the opening session of the conference filled the one thousand seven hundred and forty sittings which the large auditorium of the Moody Church provides. The following evening the numbers who sought to attend were so large that an overflow meeting had to be held. And the evening after that two overflow meetings were necessary. Even at ten o'clock in the morning (the sessions ran during forenoon, afternoon, and evening of three days) the church gave the impression of being almost filled. And a writer in The Congregationalist says that the "surprising feature of the audiences was that, of the two sexes, men far and away predominated." Twenty-nine states and five provinces were represented by those in attendance who registered.

The most conspicuous and outstanding impression that those audiences made upon me was their happy, radiant consciousness of fellowship with God, and the peace and joy that seemed to flow about their lives, as they considered together in address and prayer their inviolable possessions in the Lord Jesus Christ, and their God-covenanted assurance of his personal return to receive them unto himself.

"Was it extreme?" asked a friend after my return from Chicago. If by "extreme" one means unbalanced, unscriptural, unreasonable and speculative theories about the second advent, with an attitude toward the whole subject that unfits one for practical usefulness in this present life, the conference stood for none of these things. If by "extreme" one means going the whole way in unquestioning and unqualified acceptance of the inspired truthfulness of the word of God as given in the Scriptures, and in the fearless declaring of the historic faith of the Christian Church as it has been expressed through the centuries, then the conference was extreme. There was no lukewarmness about it; there was no intimation that the beliefs of the first Christian century need to be modified to fit the needs of the Twentieth Century. The revelation of God to the inspired writers of the Bible was accepted as unique, final, authoritative. The position of the conference is expressed in the resolutions which were set forth as a "conference testimony." They are given in full on this page.

The word prophetic in the name of this conference means that the conference was called to give Christian people a special opportunity of considering those Bible teachings in which holy men of God, acting under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and our Lord himself, foretold events that vitally affect us all, and that are yet to come to pass. That the promises of God concerning the Jews which have not yet been fulfilled are to be fulfilled here on this earth; that this earth's "golden age," or the millennium, will be entered upon only after the Lord Jesus has personally ushered it in by his promised return to the earth; that this second coming of Christ by no means marks the end of the world, but only "the end of the age"; that a clear recognition of the teachings of the Bible concerning these matters vitally affects our present-day life and duty,—it was this sort of "sound doctrine" that characterized the Chicago conference.

The official call to the conference was signed by the moderators of the Northern Presbyterian Church and the United Presbyterian Church, by the presidents of Xenia Theological Seminary, the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, and Wycliffe College (a Church of England Divinity School in Toronto), as well as by the deans of Bible institutes and others widely known as Bible teachers or writers; and this call stated that "the signers of this invitation are a guarantee that the conference will not offer an opportunity for modern prophets to ventilate their speculations, to fix dates, or to mark out a detailed program of the future; but . . . to employ the true principles of Scripture interpretation; to warn against present-day apostasy . . . to present the most majestic of all motives for world-wide evangelism." And the conference held true to its promise. While there are details of interpretation in the study of the Scripture concerning our Lord's return on which there is difference of opinion among those who look for his appearing as the great hope of the church and through it of the world, nevertheless the fundamental platform on which the conference stood would meet with general agreement even by those who differed with some of its details.

A very rich program of Bible teaching was spread before those in attendance. Each forenoon Doctor Charles I. Schofield led in a study of "The doctrine of the last things,"—as found in the prophets, the gospels, the epistles and Revelation. Doctor Schofield's notable work in his Reference Bible (the Oxford University Press) has made a new book of the Bible to many; and there was abundant evidence of the riches of his lifetime study in these sessions under his personal guidance. Other speakers included Canon F. E. Howitt of Hamilton, Ontario, President Robert M. Russell of Westminster College, Mr. A. C. Gaebelein of New York, editor of Our Hope, Doctor James M. Gray, dean of the Moody Bible Institute, Doctor R. A. Torrey, now dean of the Los Angeles Bible Institute, the well-known evangelist Doctor L. W. Munhall, and several others. Such topics as "The Lord's coming the key to the Scriptures," "The doctrine of the Lord's coming as a working force in the church and the community," "The approaching world crisis," "The Lord's coming a motive for personal holiness," suggest the variety in the central theme of the program. . . .

One of the liveliest periods of the conference was the symposium on the topic, "The doctrine of the Lord's coming as a working force in the church and community," when a group of pastors from the Rock Mountain Bible Conference at Denver, Colorado, gave their testimonies. They seemed to be wholesome, red-blooded, energetic, sane sort of folk, brimming over with good spirits, reveling in the opportunity of an active and practical ministry, blessed with good sense of humor, and showing a recognition and use of the things that make for efficiency now in this present life. Perhaps if the average church-goer had been told that he was to hear the report of a group of "Premillennialists" his mind's eye would have pictured a very different type from these men. For the word premillennial has come to be associated with all sorts of vagaries and unscriptural positions; whereas, when it is rightly understood, it refreshes the whole life, often giving one a new Bible and sometimes even a new Christ. (And let it be plainly understood that the position of evangelical premillennialism has no connection with or toleration for that unscriptural and dangerous doctrine known as "Pastor Russell's" "premillennial dawn" theory.)

The story that the men of the Rocky Mountain Bible Conference told was a remarkable one,—especially the account of the time when they agreed with each other to present on the same Sunday morning, from their various pulpits, the subject of the second coming. They were not prepared for the unexpected interest shown in the mere announcement of the theme, nor for the size of the audiences that thronged to hear them.

In the closing session of the conference Doctor Torrey spoke on "The Lord's coming in relation to personal holiness," and Doctor Gray led in a consecration service based on Paul's Spirit-given invitation: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, an acceptable, and perfect, will of God." This message was followed with prayer for the filling of the Holy Spirit. The people separated full of joy and gladness for the manifestation of God's presence throughout the whole conference, which had been indicated in the spirit of unity and love that prevailed, the oneness of testimony among the speakers, the atmosphere of prayer, and the conviction that the blessings received would bring forth fruit, as it is hoped, not only throughout North America, but in the mission fields as well.—Sunday School Times, March 21, 1914.

UNEMPLOYED A GRAVE SOCIAL PROBLEM

America is awakening to a realization of the fact that she has a large standing army of unemployed,—an army probably many times larger than the regular army of which the President of the United States is commander in chief. For those who march in this army, there is no discrimination as to age, sex, physical, or mental condition. All are eligible. A majority of wage earners enter the ranks more or less frequently. In addition to this regular army of unemployed, which marches about the country in search of seasonal occupations, there are troops of volunteer recruits, which periodically swell its ranks.

The army of the unemployed is unorganized. Its companies are either not commanded or poorly commanded. It has some captains, but no generals. It is well known that disorganized army,—an army without a commander,—is a source not of security, but of danger to a community in which it exists. The United States has quartered in every city, in every industrial community, her regular army of unemployed men, women, and children, who are out of work at some season of the year. At times like the present, when the army is swelled by the addition of those forced into the ranks, there is always a large number of volunteers ready for service,—especially about the mess-houses. They are the camp followers who capitalize a condition of abnormal unemployment.

The same men of this country have at last sighted this army. They are beginning to realize that its presence in our midst, disorganized and uncommanded, constitutes one of the greatest social problems which confront this country to-day. Statesmen and students, economists and wise business men, labor leaders and social workers everywhere, are demanding that this problem shall be stated clearly, that the facts in relation to it shall be gathered and analyzed, and that the solution for it must be found. They are insisting that America shall no longer lag behind the rest of the civilized world in this phase of its industrial organization.

In many aspects of industry the United States has caught up and overtaken her sisters across the water; she has studied to her advantage the experience of European countries; she has taken the best which they have to offer and has made it better. But in the matter of dealing with her men and women out of work, she has failed lamentably. With the experience of Germany before her, with England to stimulate her, with little Denmark clearly pointing the way,—America has stood deaf, dumb, and blind to the presence of this great social problem.

To be sure, a few of the more intelligent States, —Wisconsin, Massachusetts, and Oregon,—have made creditable beginnings, not simply in stating the problem, but in finding a solution for it. The larger communities, however,—the most wealthy cities, the big industrial centers which command the ablest talent in most every phase of life,—are just reaching the stage of awareness that a problem exists.—From "Our army of the unemployed," by Honorable John A. Kingsbury, in the American Review of Reviews for April.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS

An Aztec Mother's Letter to Her Daughter

We are indebted to Brother T. C. Kelley for a clipping containing the following beautiful letter written by an Aztec mother to her daughter. The letter is a reprint from Prescott's story of the first conquest of Mexico. It contains much good advice, gently spoken and worthy of the consideration of many mothers and daughters of our day.

"Beloved daughter, very dear love, remember that nine months I bore you; that you were born and brought up in my arms; that I placed you in your cradle and in my lap, and with my milk I nursed you; I and your father are the source of your being. It is we who now instruct you. See that you receive the words and treasure them in your breast.

"Take care that your garments are such as are decent and proper; and observe that you do not adorn yourself with much finery, since this is a mark of vanity and of folly.

"When you speak do not hurry your words from uneasiness, but speak deliberately and calmly. Do not raise your voice very high nor speak very low, but in a moderate tone. Neither mince when you speak, or when you salute, nor speak through your nose, but let your words be proper, of good sound, and your voice gentle.

"In walking, my daughter, see that you behave yourself becomingly, neither going with haste nor too slowly; since it is an evidence of being puffed up to walk too slowly, and walking hastily causes a vicious habit of restlessness and instability. Therefore, neither walk very fast nor very slow; yet when it shall be necessary to go with haste, do you in this use your discretion.

"When you are in the street do not carry your head much inclined, or your body bent, nor go with your head very much raised, since it is a mark of ill breeding; walk erect, and with your head slightly inclined. Do not have your mouth covered, nor your face, from shame, nor go looking like a near-sighted person, nor, on your way, make fantastic movements with your feet. Walk through the street quietly and with propriety.

"Another thing that you must attend to, my daughter, is that when you are in the street you do not go looking hither and thither, nor turning your head to look at this or that; walk neither looking at the skies nor on the ground.

"Do not look with the eyes of an offended person upon those whom you meet, nor have the appearance of being uneasy, but of one who looks upon all with a serene countenance; doing this, you will give no one occasion of being offended with you. Show a becoming countenance, that you may neither appear morose, nor, on the other hand, too complaisant.

"See, my daughter, that you give yourself no concern about the words you may hear in going through the street, nor pay any regard to them; let those who come and go say what they will. Take care that you neither answer nor speak, but act as if you neither heard, nor understood them; since, doing in this manner, no one will be able to say with truth that you have said anything amiss.

"See, likewise, my daughter, that you never paint your face, nor stain it or your lips with colors, in order to appear well, since this is a mark of unchaste women. But, that your hand may not dislike you, adorn yourself, wash yourself, and cleanse your clothes.

"My tenderly loved daughter, my little dove, only one thing remains to be said and I have done. If God shall give you life, if you shall continue some years upon the earth, see that you guard yourself carefully, that no stain come upon you. When it shall please God that you receive a husband and you are placed under his authority, be free from arrogance, see that you do not neglect him, nor allow your heart to be in opposition to him. Be not disrespectful to him. Beware that, in no time or place you commit against him the treason called adultery. According to this, the custom of the world for this crime, if it shall be known, they will kill you. And remember, my daughter, that, though no man shall see you nor your husband suspect you, God, who is in every place, sees you, will be angry with you and will be avenged upon you as he sees fit."

Another Very Old Writing

The most ancient manuscript known is an Egyptian papyrus which bears the title of "The Teaching of the Governor Ptah-hotep" carries us back to the fifth dynasty of Egypt, thousands of years before Christ.

This letter furnishes us some of the thoughts of an old man on many points of manners and morals, some of which may furnish food for thought for the man of the house. These are extracts from the writing:

"If thou art become great, after thou hast been humble; and if thou hast amassed riches after poverty, and hast become first in thy town; if thou art known for thy wealth, and art become a great lord, let not thy heart become proud because of thy riches, for it is God who has given them to thee. Despise not another who is as thou wast: treat him as thy equal."

"If thou be wise furnish thy house well: woo thy wife and do not quarrel with her; nourish her, deck her out, for fine dress is her greatest delight. Perfume her, make her glad as long as thou livest: she is a blessing which her possessor should treat as becomes his own standing. Be not unkind to her."

We offer these two old writings without comment, each reader being left to place upon their contents his own estimates, and to draw from them those points of merit which they may contain for him.

Prayer Union

SUBJECT FOR THE SECOND THURSDAY IN JULY

Parents' Day.—Pray for our families and for the families of each other; for the conversion of kindred. Pray that we may all have greater growth in spirituality; that the homes of Saints may be model Christian homes. Pray for all the sick and afflicted.

Lesson, Luke 11: 1-13. Memory verse, Luke 11: 13.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Dear Saints: I so much desire to be remembered before the Lord by the Prayer Union, as I am afflicted with tuberculosis of the bone, especially in my left foot and lower limb. The trouble is gradually extending to other parts of my body.

On the 27th day of April I was turned out of my buggy, breaking both bones just above my left wrist, tearing the ligaments away from the joint and breaking some of the metacarpal bones in my hand, knocking two knuckles down and straining my hand all over. I still have to sit with my hand and arm on a pillow.

I desire so much to be healed, if it can be the Lord's will. Please, each one who reads this, pray that the Lord may rebuke this disease, and restore my hand and arm to its normal condition. Your sister in Christ,
FARMINGTON, KENTUCKY. MRS. N. ELLA ADAIR.

WAYNE, NEBRASKA, June 21, 1914.

To the Prayer Union: I ask to be remembered in the prayers of all. The Lord has been kind and I am thankful, but I feel that it is urgent that I be made whole from affliction, if we can exercise the faith.

My part in this life has been one of continual affliction. When I was a small child, four years of age, I was severely injured. This with many other afflictions bears heavily upon me, but God is my God and has preserved me.

I ask that the Saints bear me up in prayer to God, and that when I have opportunity to be administered to that God will give the faith that is necessary for complete healing.

Your brother in one faith,
GEORGE ELSON.

In Defense of the Truth

Miss M——; Dear Friend: I am minded to address my defense to you, and I thank you for giving me the opportunity to read the statements in your friend's letter, in reference to the Latter Day Saints, also the tracts and pamphlets she sent you.

WE SHOULD JUDGE RIGHTEOUSLY

I believe your friend and yourself are sincere and honest in your belief. I also think that I am honest and sincere, and my belief has been strengthened instead of diminished by reading what you have permitted me to. You have my permission to send my letter to your friend. She says, "God forbid that I should be their judge," yet she immediately begins to judge us by what our enemies or opposers have written against us. Such a course in the days of our Savior was the popular way of judging him. But was that the right way? No, even one of their own wise men said, "Doth our law judge a man before it heareth him?"

Your friend's concluding argument is that the very name "Mormonism" ought to be enough to keep anyone from becoming interested in their doctrine. So also in the days of Christ and his apostles, the name given the saints by their enemies in derision was considered sufficient proof against them. The name Christian then was enough. To-day people say, Oh! the "Mormons!" That's enough for me. And yet doth our law judge a man before hearing him?

Paul said they of Berea were more noble than they of Thessalonica, in that they examined the scriptures daily to see if the things Paul taught were true. That's all we ask—if only people will examine the Scriptures and see if the doctrine we teach is true. So many will not investigate, and are opposed to giving us any chance to defend our position.

LATTER-DAY APOSTASY

Now I have no desire to defend Utah Mormonism. I may use that term, for they in their own writings have adopted the nickname given by opposers, much the same as the Methodists have adopted the nickname given at first by their enemies. But you were writing to your friend about the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and she tells you that the Latter Day Saints are the same the world over, meaning we are the same as the Utah Mormon Church. Now I beg to differ with her concerning that idea, your friend's statement to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Reorganization is the continuation of the Church of Jesus Christ (composed) of Latter Day Saints, which organization began on April 6, 1830. That organization was broken up after the death of the first president, Joseph Smith, in 1844. Some of the members and officials followed Brigham Young into apostasy, and into a belief in false doctrines, which caused the division and breaking up of the first organization. Joseph Smith, the first president, and as we believe a true prophet of God, was not in any way responsible for this apostasy. History records that a short time before his death the report came to Joseph Smith that a certain man who was a member of the church had been teaching polygamy. Joseph immediately took steps to have the offender cast out of the church. This seems to have been one of his last official acts before he was assassinated by his enemies.

The teachings of Joseph Smith seem always to have been of a pure nature. One of the revelations to him for the church was that if a man even looked upon a woman to lust after her and did not repent, he should deny the faith, and not have the Spirit, and should be cast out of the church. History shows that Brigham Young and his followers, some of them, did begin to lust after women, and did not repent, for they went to teaching and practicing polygamy. They lost the Spirit, which would have guided them into all truth, and did deny the faith, even to believing and teaching that Adam was our God and that Jesus was not begotten by the Holy Ghost, and that blood atonement was a true doctrine, etc. All this along with that accursed doctrine of polygamy caused the organization to be broken up. Hence the need of a reorganization of the scattered members who remained true to the faith and doctrine as taught originally by Joseph Smith.

Those who went into apostasy have fulfilled the prediction in the New Testament wherein it says that in the last days some shall depart from the faith (they would have to have the faith before they could depart from it), and give heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils; and because of this departure from the faith the way of truth has been evil spoken of ever since.

We do not refer to the Brigham Young faction as a branch of the one united church. That is entirely a mistake. There is no unity between the two churches. There may be some things in belief that we agree upon, the same as there are some truths taught by every church in existence. Suppose they do claim to believe in the Book of Mormon and that Joseph Smith was a true prophet. That is no proof that we are the same church any more than their claim to believe the Bible proves they and the Presbyterian church are the same.

THE DENOMINATIONS AND POLYGAMY

The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints has ever opposed polygamy, the Adam-god theory, blood atonement, etc., as doctrines of devils, and abominations in God's sight. We have never believed in church governing in political affairs of the nation. I am glad that the church of which I am a member has never made any such decisions in conference as were made by the Presbyterian Assembly in 1889. The following extract was taken from the Fergus News Record, dated May 27. The session was held at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania:

"An overture from the synod of India asking for a reply to the memorial on the subject of baptizing polygamous converts was considered. . . . The Mohammedan was admitted to the church, and he was allowed to retain both wives and house. Doctor Morrison, representing the synod trial cases and special legislation, held that any other course would rule David out of the church."

I am sure that comes nearer agreeing with Utah Mormonism than any decision the Reorganized Latter Day Saints ever made. Here is another extract taken from Allan's India, Ancient and Modern, pages 601, 602, published in 1856:

"At the following conference the Baptists were represented by eighteen missionaries, the Episcopalians by eleven; Presbyterians by eight; Cathedral Mission, one; Kirk of Scotland, four; Congregationalists, four; total, forty-six. I will omit their names. The following resolution was passed: 'If a convert, before becoming a Christian, has married more wives than one . . . he should be permitted to keep them all, but such a person is not eligible to any office in the church.'"

I am glad such a person would not be eligible to be a member of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church.

We believe the matter to have been well proven in the courts of our land, that Brigham Young was the author of polygamy in the latter days in America. (He may have had Satanic help.) The Presbyterians themselves do not seem to have a very high regard for Brigham Young in spite of above resolutions, yet they seem to think he must have been telling the truth when he tried to lay the blame of that abomination (polygamy) to Joseph Smith.

THE SPALDING ROMANCE

I have read the whole article in The Fundamentals, volume 8, on the subject of Mormonism, and there are too many mistakes in it to have any effect on a true Latter Day Saint. It may be an easy matter to write that Sidney Rigdon was connected with the scheme (Latter Day Saint Church) long before its public organization; easy to imagine and write that Sidney Rigdon must have got hold of the Reverend Solomon Spalding's Romance, and made it over into the Book of Mormon; easy to say that he must have been lying when he said he knew nothing of the Book of Mormon until after its publication. But where are the proofs? The statements of Joseph Smith and those who wrote the manuscript of the Book of Mormon at the dictation of Joseph Smith were that Sidney Rigdon knew nothing of the book or its writings until after it was published.

I have a little tract written years ago, before the famous "Manuscript Found" had been discovered and published, entitled, "The Spalding story reexamined." It begins with a letter taken from the Presbyterian Banner, from R. Patterson to Joseph Smith, dated December 28, 1882. He sends all the evidences he had at that time been able to collect in support of the claim that the historical part of the Book of Mormon was taken from Spalding's writings. And from the letter and reply it seems that Patterson at that time had found no evidence that Spalding ever wrote only the one manuscript, and that seemed never to have been in the hands of Latter Day Saints. Patterson seemed to think there might have been two copies of the same work, but there was no proof of that.

As soon as the Solomon Spalding romance is found and placed for safe keeping in the college at Oberlin, Ohio, and the Latter Day Saints are permitted to copy and publish it, then the story is invented that the Reverend Spalding must have written several manuscripts.

The writer of The Fundamentals assumes that the Book of Mormon was taken from the religious romance where a colony of the lost tribes were brought from Jerusalem. The Book of Mormon is no history of the "lost tribes," and I fail to see how they could have been lost, while they were still at Jerusalem.

This reminds me of a debate I listened to about twenty years ago between a Mr. St. Pierre and Elder Alonzo Whiting. St. Pierre put in most of his time in trying to prove that the Book of Mormon could not be a history of the lost tribes, and after exhausting all his powers of persuasion and rhetoric on the subject, Elder Whiting in his closing speech agreed with Mr. St. Pierre on that subject and told him that no Latter Day Saint that he knew of ever did believe that the Book of Mormon was a history of the lost tribes.

How the writers do laud the "Reverend Solomon Spalding," "a college graduate," "a student of theology," "a minister of one of the Christian denominations." That all may be, but if you had ever read the "Manuscript Found," I am sure you would wonder as I did how an educated man and a minister of the gospel could ever have written such a book.

Let me give you one reference from that work: "Let thy citizens be numbered once every two years, and if the young women who are fit for marriage are more numerous than the young men, then wealthy men who are young and who have but one wife shall have the privilege to marry another, until the number of the single young women and the single young men are equal."

How is that for an educated minister? In contrast to that let me give you an extract from the hated Book of Mormon: "Behold there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none."

BOOK OF ABRAHAM

The arguments used in one tract your friend sent against the Book of Mormon, because of the Book of Abraham, has no weight in my mind, for the Book of Mormon was translated by the gift and power of God. It came in fulfillment of prophecy (see Ezekiel 37: 16, 17; also Isaiah 29), and at the right time, just a little while before Lebanon became a fruitful field. The Book of Abraham was found with some mummies. Joseph had been studying under a professor of languages, and by that method attempted to translate the manuscript of the Book of Abraham. I do not think it matters to us now whether the method taught at that time was a correct way of translating or not, as God never recognized that book in any way, and never granted any gift to translate it. And our church has never looked upon that book as an inspired one.

BELIEVING IN GOD AND CHRIST

The late Bishop Pyle says that "all believers in Christ" are members of the "one true church." If he is correct, then Latter Day Saints are all right, for we certainly believe in Christ; all our prayers are asked in his name.

Like your friend we believe in a personal God, yet we can not believe that his personage is everywhere, all the time, else he would have to be in hell too all the time. But his power is over all, and in due time death and hell and the grave will be destroyed. If we, then, believe in God the Father, and Jesus said we were to pray to him as "Our Father which art in heaven" (not everywhere personally), and if we believe in Jesus as our Lord and Savior, and if we believe in faith, repentance, and baptism, will it hinder us from being saved if we believe in the Holy Ghost (or Holy Spirit) promised believers? Peter's reply to those who were convinced was, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is to you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

Does God still call sinners to repentance? If so, then this promise holds good to our day. And Paul says, Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. And he explains that all these gifts, knowledge, wisdom, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, interpretations of tongues, is the work of that same Holy Spirit divided severally as God wills, not as we might wish.

Now I say if we believe this and do assuredly receive at times the gifts as enumerated above, not that one person receives all the above, but that God bestows the gift as he wills, will this hinder us from salvation? The gifts alone would not save us, for if we had faith to remove mountains and not charity, we would be found wanting. Belief alone is not sufficient for "devils also believe, and tremble." We believe that through the atonement of Christ all men may be saved through the gospel. Our Savior said that he that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them is the one that is building on the sure rock of truth, while those who do not hear nor obey are building on the unsafe, sandy foundation. So then if we hear Jesus we will believe in faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection, eternal judgment.

As to the mode of baptism: They went down into the water, and came up out of the water, is plain enough for me, and means immersion. Notwithstanding the false statements in The Fundamentals, baptism was taught and practiced in the Latter Day Saint Church before Sidney Rigdon had any connection with it.

NEED OF RESTORATION

If there had been no apostasy since Christ's day, there would have been no need of restoration, or reformation either. But I believe both were needed. The reformation paved the way for religious liberty. All who have lived according to the best light given them will hear and receive the greater light, either in this life or in the life to come. So we do not believe all who lived in the Dark Ages, or during the reformation are eternally lost. It is our spirits that accept or reject truth in this life. Our spirits will be just as much alive and capable of rejecting or accepting truth after our bodies are laid in the grave as now. That is the reason Christ could go and preach to the spirits in prison, some of whom had been disobedient in the days of Noah. Our Savior knew they could understand him and accept the message. (See 1 Peter 3: 18-20.)

What a blessed faith, that God's work goes on and on for the salvation of souls beyond this life, so that none are lost because they had no chance to hear in this life; or if they did hear and disobeyed, as in the days of Noah, they may have another chance.

The writer of The Fundamentals says, "Anyone who even claims to be a priest since Christ is a thief and a robber." How about the Catholic Church, with all its priests, from whom the Presbyterian as well as other Protestant churches sprung? Were not Luther, Melancthon, Calvin, Knox, Cranmer, etc., all Catholic priests, all protesting against the evils of the Roman Catholic Church, and seeking to reform the church they were in, but in every instance obliged to start a new church because the one they were members of refused to be reformed, and cast them out with their followers? Hence, so many Protestant churches. They did well to protest and try to reform, and will be rewarded for all the good they did. They could not restore the gospel. Only God could do that, and he had promised to do so by the hands of an angel. And just as wide-spread as the apostasy was to rule—"And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds and tongues and nations."—Revelation 13: 7. Just so wide-spread was to be the everlasting gospel sent. See Revelation 14: 6: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." Both the above statements include everybody. And it was to be after John the Revelator's day, for in Revelation 4: 1 John was called up into the mount that God might show him things to come after his day (or after that time).

Some say they have always had the gospel on earth just as long as the Scriptures of Bible has been on earth. Of course they have had the written word. But Paul said the gospel came not to them in "word only," but also in power and much assurance, and in the Holy Ghost. So, too, can Latter Day Saints testify. As to the majority of people being against the restoration in these last days, even so were the majority against Christ. Only few stood with him. The popular cry was, Away with him; crucify him. It has been the same in every dispensation. Few will investigate. The truth has never been popular, and even professed believers are affected more or less by the opinions of the world. As long as the church remained true to Christ he would remain with it, even until the end of time. But when they depart from the truth, God could not remain with them. See second epistle of John 9: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."

If the Catholic Church had remained true, and God was with her, where was the need of a reformation or a restoration either? But if, as can be proven by Scripture and history, she did depart from God and did not abide in Christ's doctrine, then is she become the "mother of harlots," that is, the mother of churches all claiming to be "the bride," "the Lamb's wife," or the true church.

THE TRUE BRIDE

Now when Christ comes he will find one true church which he will accept as his; all others will find they have not been lawfully espoused and were not his chosen bride. Though every person who has been living to the best light he has had will be rewarded according to his works and be ready to receive the greater light when opportunity presents. There can not be so many lo heres and lo theres and all be right. Some of us must be mistaken, no difference how sincere we may be. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Let us take the scriptures for our guide.

The true wife, or bride, or church, will take his name. There is no other name given under heaven whereby man may be saved except the name of Jesus Christ. Paul says we are "called to be Saints." And these are the latter days, hence the true name is ours,—The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, reorganized because of necessity.

A POINT OF AGREEMENT

I can truly agree with one statement of your friend's which I will quote here: "I believe the Holy Spirit has the same power now as it ever had. The fault is with the Christians not being filled with it. Truly I often deplored the lack of it among ourselves." My experiences are that God's promises are true.

I pray God to lead and guide us all into his truth, by his Holy Spirit.

Respectfully,

MRS. EMMA L. ANDERSON.

Lamoni Order of Enoch

On Thursday, June 18, 1914, at the call of the Presiding Bishop the following named brethren met at the Herald Publishing House to take into consideration the advisability of organizing an Order of Enoch in the Lamoni Stake, in connection with other interests connected with stake work: F. M. Smith and E. A. Smith, of the First Presidency; J. E. Kelley, of the Twelve; E. L. Kelley and E. A. Blakeslee, of the Presiding Bishopric, Albert Carmichael, Manager of the Herald Publishing House; Joseph Roberts, R. J. Lambert, and Oscar Anderson, of the Stake Bishopric; John Smith, J. F. Garver, and R. S. Salyards, of the Stake Presidency.

President F. M. Smith was chosen to preside, R. S. Salyards to act as secretary; prayer was offered by President E. A. Smith.

The meeting was devoted to a discussion of the development of temporalities, after which all present engaged in a discussion of the advisability of taking steps to organize an Order of Enoch, as "contemplated in the law."

The following resolutions were adopted, by unanimous vote: "That it be the sense of this body that an Order of Enoch be organized now in the Lamoni Stake."

"That provision for the plan of the organization, including rules and regulations, be referred to a committee consisting of members of the First Presidency, the Presiding Bishopric, and the Stake Bishopric, present."

It was mutually agreed that a mass meeting of the people of the stake be called for Sunday, the 21st at 2.30 p. m., for the purpose of giving the people an opportunity to consider the question of such organization, that an expression of the people might be had.

The meeting then adjourned subject to call; benediction by Bishop Blakeslee.

SATURDAY, JUNE 20

The brethren previously named, with the exception of J. E. Kelley, and with the addition of S. A. Burgess, met at the Herald Publishing House at 3 p. m., President F. M. Smith in the chair.

Prayer was offered by John Smith.

The minutes of the session of the 18th were approved.

The committee appointed to provide Articles of Association reported. (Publication omitted until the same are issued in pamphlet form. They are practically the same as the articles of the order established at Independence, Missouri.)

After due consideration of the report as contained in the articles, it was adopted, with the articles, by unanimous vote.

The meeting adjourned subject to call. Benediction by Bishop Kelley.

SUNDAY, APRIL 21

A general meeting of the membership of the Lamoni Stake was held in the Saints' church, Lamoni, Iowa, at 2.30 p. m., President F. M. Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and Elder John Smith, president of the stake, in charge; R. S. Salyards was appointed secretary.

President F. M. Smith and Bishop Kelley each addressed the assembly, in which the demands of the present and the developments of the future were outlined, in harmony with the provisions of the law concerning the gathering and related interests of the church.

The secretary read the Articles of Incorporation adopted by the committee composed of brethren before named. Questions were asked, which were answered by the Presiding Bishop.

In answer to question the Bishop stated that to become members of the order it was necessary to comply with the law of consecration by filing an inventory with the Bishopric, in connection with the performance of other general duties relating to membership in the church; that those who desired to become members should so state to the secretary, who would record their names; that the parties would later be permitted to sign the articles, which would be presented to the proper court with due application for incorporation of the order.

It was moved and seconded: "That as a congregation we look with favor upon the proposed organization of an Order of Enoch."

The motion was adopted by show of hands, there being no negative votes.

The chair appointed a meeting for Monday, the 22d, at 8 p. m., at the Lamoni church, to complete the work of formal organization. Benediction by R. S. Salyards.

At the close of the session forty-six persons presented their names for membership.

MONDAY, JUNE 23

Those interested in the Order of Enoch met in the Saints' church, Lamoni, Iowa, at 8 p. m., Bishop E. L. Kelley presiding, assisted by Presidents E. A. Smith and John Smith; R. S. Salyards secretary. President E. A. Smith offered prayer.

The minutes of the preceding meeting were read; also the names of those who had asked that their names be recorded as members of the order. Additional names were then recorded.

Bishop Kelley explained the provisions of the Articles of Incorporation and stated that the object of the meeting was the adoption of the articles and the election of a Board of Trustees.

A motion to adopt the articles was followed by a motion that they be amended to provide that the terms of the Board of Trustees to be elected at this meeting expire at the January meeting of 1915. The amendment and the motion as amended were adopted.

It was moved that the election of trustees be by open nomination and vote. The motion was adopted. The following were then elected as a Board of Trustees of the order:

J. E. Anderson, C. E. Blair, Joseph Roberts, Albert Carmichael, R. J. Lambert, Oscar Anderson, F. B. Blair, J. F. Garver, S. A. Burgess, A. J. Yarrington, E. A. Smith, John Smith.

The meeting adjourned; benediction by John Smith.

Following the session members of the order attached their names to the Articles of Incorporation, which were then formally prepared for record in connection with the application for incorporation.

An excellent spirit was present during all the proceedings connected with the work of organization, and the outlook for the developments expected are considered to be favorable.

LAMONI, IOWA, June 22, 1914.

R. S. SALYARDS, Secretary.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, May, 1914.

Editors Herald: The meeting after our arrival in Independence, when about to leave the Order of Enoch House, Brother Gurwell said, "You must visit our Sunday school tomorrow." I assured him that I intended to do so. Sister Pender, who was near, said she would meet me at the door and conduct me through the different departments of the school.

Sunday was a bright, beautiful day. We went first to the main auditorium and remained till after the opening song. What was it that caused that thrill of ecstatic delight to sweep over me? Not altogether the song, though that was keenly enjoyed, but the blending of all; the song, the time beating, the sea of eager faces, and the interest manifested was a pleasing sight to look upon. They were workers who had joy in their work, under the splendid superintendency of Brother D. J. Krahl. The main auditorium was filled with adults or senior grade classes.

We then moved on to the basement in time to hear just a little from the juvenile orchestra. These were all of the intermediate grade, seventeen with violins, two with flutes, and two other pieces besides the piano. As these scattered to their classes I followed Sister Pender to the primary room. This was a building put up for conference time only. What a school of little tots there was! We did not remain there long, for my guide was in a hurry to get to her class, and I do not blame her.

The lesson was in progress when we took our seats. It was a wide-awake class, and how could it be otherwise with Brother Charles Fry for a teacher. I have been in schools where the teachers did about all the talking, and it was little encouragement for the class to have their lesson well, but that was not so here.

I spent one week in Independence after the close of conference, calling and visiting. One day was spent at the home of Brother Walter Page and family, of California. They have a pretty location near the Order of Enoch grounds. He took the three of us, his mother and sister and myself, in his carriage to the Order of Enoch grounds. These grounds are nicely located. The land looked very pretty, green and smooth, with here and there a large shade tree. The view from the grounds is beautiful to look upon. A brother told me that when Brother Joseph went to view the grounds he stood looking toward the city and was heard to murmur, "Beautiful for situation is Zion," while the tears rolled down his cheeks. And I do not wonder at it, especially if it was in the spring season of the year.

Since the first of May I have been visiting with my sister, Ida Layton, here in Holden, getting acquainted with the Saints and delighting myself in this beautiful country, its grassy rolling hills, and yet not all hills, its profusion of great shade trees and its green hedges, all kept in a flourishing condition by the frequent rain showers. I like California, and I also like a country where the frequent rain showers cool and cleanse the air and wash the dust from all vegetation.

More anon.

E. B. BURTON.

CRANE, MONTANA, June 3, 1914.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a great comfort to me. In reading of Brother Weate's departure from England to America my thoughts went back to my old home once enjoyed, when the Saints and Sister Weate and family were our associates. I never saw her husband. After a few years had passed I had a home, a house of prayer, and the elders often met with us and were always welcome and were made comfortable at our home.

My home is now among strangers and away from Saints; yet my trust is in God and I feel that his blessings are with me. Since leaving Ohio I lived for some time in the state of Washington where I lost my husband. Many Saints will remember me as Sister Green. With my youngest son I hold membership in the Spokane, Washington, Branch, where I left Saints very dear to me.

I am now proving up on three hundred and twenty acres of land in eastern Montana, three miles from the little town of Crane. If the Lord spares me to live I do not think I will spend all the remaining days of my life here. In a great many ways I like the country, but I want my boys to have the association of the Saints. My youngest son had a fine blessing. I do not like to deprive him of church privileges. He takes an interest in the Congregational Church here, but they have no use for our teaching, and are afraid our people will settle here. I am getting some interested. I give them reading and think I could get several to attend meeting if an elder were here and we could get the school-house. We might secure the church, as the people here have respect and friendship for me.

I read the letter of Brother Newby about coming to this place, and as soon as I have a home for him I will gladly have him come. I am anxious to have the people hear the gospel, as well as to enjoy it myself. It will soon be one year since I met with Saints.

I am not able to do much for the cause just now, but my desire is to be more able and to help win souls to Christ. I hope to be found worthy and among the faithful, and desire the prayers of the Saints in my isolated condition.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I remain firm in the faith,
MRS. L. C. GREEN.

FANSHAW, OKLAHOMA, June 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: As I have been appointed to labor in Eastern Oklahoma, the same being a new field to me, please permit me space to say to the Saints and friends of this field who desire preaching, that my field address will be Wilburton, Oklahoma; home address, Cato, Arkansas. If any desire meetings please write me right away.

JAMES M. SMITH.

AVERY, TEXAS, June 14, 1914.

Editors Herald: I rejoice in reading the letters in the HERALD from the Saints. We are trying to do all we can to get the gospel before the people. We have Sunday school every Sunday, though we do not have a church building in which to meet.

We have secured a nice grove in East Avery for the reunion, and have fixed a place there and have our Sunday school there. The Eastern Oklahoma district reunion will be at Avery, beginning the 24th of July and lasting ten days. We want to make this reunion a success. We want all the Saints who can to come and camp on the grounds. There will be plenty of water for stock. All who can not come to camp will be cared for.

We are expecting Brother W. M. Aylor, Brother Christensen, Brother Sheppard, and Brother Smith. Those wishing tents should write B. F. Pollard, Avery, Texas, by July 10. We hope that much good may be done by this reunion in getting the gospel before the people. Dear Saints, let us all come together and do all we can to this end.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am
Your sister,

MATTIE KELSEO.

WINTHROP, ARKANSAS, June 14, 1914.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the many good letters in the HERALD. We have a little band of isolated Saints here. We do not get to hear preaching very often. Only those who are isolated know how we enjoy the occasions when we do hear the gospel.

Elders John Harp and E. A. Erwin were with us from May 26 to June 3. We had a profitable meeting. Brother Harp baptized my wife, for which I am thankful. Others seem interested. This is the first meeting we have had since Brethren W. M. Aylor and J. T. Riley visited us last December.

We hope some of the elders will be able to come and hold meetings here in July or August. We are poor in this world's goods, but will care for the elders the best we can. We feel that we could do much more good if we had a branch here.

I have been a member of the church for nearly two years. I know the work is true. I desire the prayers of the Saints that I may be a faithful and true witness for the Master.

Your brother in bonds,
J. B. SHARP.

Extracts from Letters

Elder F. A. Russell writes from Colorado Springs about the "Billy" Sunday meetings, as follows: "Billy" Sunday is doing things here in town now. I heard him last night on the 'home,' and it certainly was a good talk. He is not using as much slang as in the beginning of his meetings. He is a peculiar character, one that I think can do much to harrow up the ground and get some of the old stumps out. As to his doctrine, well, he doesn't seem to have any, so far. The collection last night was over $1,800 for current expenses. While he was preaching, prowlers were ransacking his headquarters, and they secured quite a large amount of money and jewelry. He can preach harder on sin to-night. I expect to attend as many of his meetings as possible in order to study his methods, etc. Then, too, he says some mighty good things. Of course one has to pick them out of a lot of things not so nice, but that is very often true of other speakers. He has a happy way with him, keeps the people feeling good, and jabs hard at the prevailing sins of the times. Said he, last night: 'Somebody must plunge the sword to the hilt in the putrid sores that are festering the body of the American people to-day! And I guess it is up to me, so I'll do my part.' I may write you more about his work later."

Brother Paul M. Hanson writes from Stonington, Maine, as follows: "On my way East I called at Washington, Philadelphia, and Providence. Brother H. O. Smith and I held a preaching service at the home of Brother George Briggs, in Washington one Sunday afternoon, at which place we now have twelve or fourteen Saints, most of whom are in the employ of the Government. A regular, permanent meeting place is the next thing in order there, for the good of the Saints and as a means of extending the work."

Canada

Your kind epistle of the twelfth instant received ere I left Windsor. Thanks. We preached ten sermons at Windsor, and one at Detroit. Saturday p. m. we drove by auto six miles over a beautiful drive, and baptized a Brother Shaver in the Detroit River opposite Belle Isle, near Lake Saint Clair. While at this point we saw an airship circling near us, dipping the waters and ascending as gracefully as a bird.

A good, live class of Saints are in Windsor, and who worship in a model building, the exact prototype of the Detroit church, only not so large. Brother Albert Bennett has the work in charge there, under the presidency of Arthur Allen of Detroit.

The political kettle is boiling over here just now. The campaign seems to hinge on the "abolition of the bar." Reverend Tolmie of Saint Andrews Presbyterian Church in Windsor has resigned his pastorate with a salary of $3,000 per annum for a salary of $1,500 per annum as the minister of public works, if elected, thus cutting his salary in twain to do provincial work for the king. He is running on the Liberal ticket with two competitors, Lawyer Fleming and Doctor Reume, who wishes to succeed himself as conservative. The religious element enters strongly into the campaign.

We came to Saint Thomas June 18, and entered into the work arranged for by local officers. Have been greeted with fair-sized congregations, so far. The brethren are advertising the services in two city papers, and by bill board.

The weather is cloudy, cool, and heavy, and this lake shore atmosphere is hard on my bronchials and voice. A heavy rain last Thursday broke a long dry spell; two million dollars is the value placed on it for the province by the observatory. Crops look fine all over the Dominion, so the papers say.

This Saint Thomas Branch is presided over by Brother J. L. Berger, and he has able assistants, so that the rank and file is under "jam up" discipline.

We are billed for every evening this week, save Saturday, and over Sunday here at this place. The Saints are all enthusiastic and rally to the call of officers, attending services.

Trust all are well and happy. Remember us also.

Ever your brother,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

SAINT THOMAS, ONTARIO, 32 Flora Street.

Southern Indiana

I left Independence, Missouri, April 22, at 9.30 p. m., Elder Jacob Halb being my guide to my field of labor. We landed at Princetown at 2.30 p. m. the 23d. An effort to interest the people there proved fruitless, although our Brother and Sister Oxley did all they could to persuade them to come out. We visited Littles, Indiana, and commenced services with a fair interest and good liberty. We did some fireside preaching, Brother Halb baptizing some there later. My association with this brother was pleasant. I found him an eager and zealous worker.

My next visit was to Birdseye, where I found the hospitable home of Sister and Mr. Bradshaw and daughter Mattie. These sisters were strong in the faith, and right in for some preaching. I held forth in the Oak Hill Schoolhouse, where I spoke nine times. A stone weighing about two pounds came crashing through the window on one occasion. From this danger the Lord delivered me, as it might have caused my death. This is the place where rocks were thrown and a shot fired through the window while Elder Mosier was speaking, also where Elder H. E. Moler held a debate with an Elder Dennie, I believe of the Christian Church. I visited the Saints and encouraged them. I trust there may be more gathered in at the place.

Upon request of J. W. Metcalf, I attended the Louisville district conference, where I met many new faces, and where a profitable time was enjoyed. I would like to make personal mention of all, but space forbids. Suffice it to say there are many spiritual and devoted Saints at Louisville. May God bless them for good in that city.

Elder L. C. Moore and the writer next visited Byrneville, to attend to some matters of an official nature. We held forth in the church there with fair interest and liberty. We trust our visit has done good. Elder L. C. is certainly a wise and competent missionary, and an agreeable companion in labor. We trust the church may have his services for many years to come.

I have a great desire to visit the isolated Saints, accordingly have visited (other than those mentioned) Carydon Junction, Palmyra, Milltown, Marengo. Have found many scattered Saints and tried to encourage them. Have spoken on the streets several times with encouraging results. At present I am at the home of Brother and Sister Christian Zahnd, helping the brother to cut (cradle) his wheat, and preaching nightly.

Having been elected president of the Southern Indiana District, I would like to hear from the isolated Saints with reference to the prospects of openings in the various vicinities. A letter to J. W. Metcalf, 315 North Thirty-second Street, Louisville, Kentucky, relative to new openings would be appreciated by him. A communication to same address will reach the writer. We trust the local force will put forth an effort to warn their neighbors.

May God bless all in our labors, is my prayer.

In bonds,

F. A. ROWE.

Adjourned to meet with Coldwater Branch, October 3 and 4. G. A. Smith, president; W. P. Buckley, secretary.

Pastoral

To the Saints of Mobile District; Greeting: Having been elected to serve as president of this district, and realizing the responsibility, I take this means of expressing my appreciation of the confidence of the Saints and to ask for their support and cooperation in every way that will be conducive of good.

There is a lack of system and unity in our work. This we must correct. New problems and advanced thoughts and ideas are confronting us day after day. These we must meet and handle judiciously. We need more cooperation upon the part of district and branch officers, and a more united effort in every department of church work. Branch presidents are requested to report promptly, and to feel at liberty to report conditions as they exist, so that if there are matters requiring special attention they may be adjusted. Let the Sunday school and Religio officers cooperate with the branch officers, and if there be any criticism to offer, let it be friendly and given in the spirit of love and meekness, thus proving beneficial.

Let us all remember the divine injunction that no one can assist in this work unless he is humble and full of love. Let us seek to manifest the Christ spirit in all our deliberations, and in fact seek first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness. If you need the district officers in your branch, Sunday school, or Religio work, do not hesitate to call on them. We have some grand promises if we do our part. Let every one learn his duty and do it.

Your brother in the cause,

A. E. WARR.

Conference Notices

Seattle and British Columbia, as per resolution, was to convene August 14 with Westminster Branch, Vancouver, British Columbia. After consultation with Saints of said branch it was decided that Vancouver was the best place to provide for visiting Saints. It was also voted at February conference that we have a reunion in connection with the conference, but the matter was left to the British Columbia Saints. The district officers have after due consultation with Saints of British Columbia and associate officers canceled the reunion. Religio and Sunday school conventions will convene at same place one day previous to conference. Those attending conference will take East Broadway car to Scott Street, a half block from hall. Car is easily identified by window sign 2. We expect our missionary in charge, also Brethren Terry, Budd and possibly Brethren Shippy and Hedding. Branch clerks will have reports sent to district clerk one week prior to conference. William Johnson, 3632 Evanston Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Clinton, Missouri, will convene at Eldorado Springs, August 1 and 2, last Saturday and Sunday of reunion, which begins July 24. Officers are to be elected. Roy S. Budd, secretary.

Convention Notices

Clinton, Missouri, Religio will convene at Eldorado Springs, afternoon of July 31. Send reports and credentials to Lida Budd, Eldorado Springs, Missouri.

Reunion Notices

Spring River reunion will be held in Cunningham Park, Joplin, Missouri, August 7 to 16 inclusive. Tents, springs and cots should be ordered as soon as possible, especially the larger tents, as these have always been limited. Prices: Tents, 10 by 12, $2; 12 by 14, $2.50, cots, springs and meals about as last year. We are expecting J. W. Rushton, E. L. Kelley, S. A. Burgess, I. N. White, William Lewis and missionaries. Auxiliary work will be conducted by district officers or general worker. Singing in charge of Florence McNichols. Let those who can, help along this as well as all lines. Send orders to S. G. Carroll, secretary, 2502 Maiden Lane, Joplin, Missouri.

Clinton reunion, Eldorado Springs, Missouri, date has been changed to July 24 to August 2, as the Chautauqua has the park for the dates previously set. Conference August 1 and 2. W. W. Kearney, for committee.

Eastern reunion will convene at Onset, Massachusetts, July 25. Tents: 10 by 12, $4; 12 by 15, $4.50. Cots: single, 40 cents. Commissary department for those who do not desire to do their own cooking. Order blanks are in hands of bishop's agents of each branch. If outside of a branch, send order direct to me. M. C. Fisher, 2307 Washington Street, Roxbury, Massachusetts.

Quorum Notices

HIGH PRIESTS

We your committee are now arranging for our program to be used at the quorum sessions next spring. We solicit you for subject matter, topics, suggestions, questions, etc. We do not want topics or questions that will become personal in any way, or that will create controversy of a contentious character. Send us matter that will be educational and edifying so that the quorum will be benefited by the discussion of the same.

Respectfully,

J. A. TANNER, for Quorum Presidency.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, 811 Lydia Avenue.

Died

GOULD.—Vera Tinker Gould, wife of Arthur J. Gould and daughter of Emma Walker, of Leon, Iowa, was born December 8, 1895, died June 8, 1914, in Minneapolis. She was baptized May 4, 1905, at Burlington, Iowa, by Elbert A. Smith. She leaves husband, mother, grandmother, relatives and many friends. Her kind and amiable disposition called forth the love and respect of all who knew her. Funeral at the residence of the grandmother, Sister Elmira Tittle, Leon, Iowa, in charge of Joseph Roberts of Lamoni, Iowa. The sympathy of the friends and neighbors was shown by deeds of kindness.

WYNN.—Emma E., daughter of J. M. Wynn, was born June 7, 1884, at Corydon, Indiana, died May 19, 1914, at Corydon. She was baptized June 3, 1905, by William H.

Kelley, and lived faithful until death. Funeral by Elder Moor, of Illinois.

BRENNAN.—John Brennan was born at Ricksgrove, England, January 4, 1866, was killed by his automobile turning over while on his way to Pueblo, Colorado, June 12, 1914. He came to this country at the age of sixteen; has resided in Ohio, Washington, Iowa and Colorado. Married Miss Mary Louise Richards, at Tacoma, Washington, March 14, 1888. Was baptized at Keb, Iowa, in 1893; ordained an elder in 1899 at same place. He leaves to mourn 3 daughters, 1 grandchild. Brother John was held in high esteem. Funeral at his residence, Swink, Colorado, by W. E. Williams, assisted by F. Petre and S. Tripp, interment at Rock Ford, Colorado.

Book Reviews

SHALLOW SOIL.—Sometimes a novel is more than a description of the doings of certain people in any one particular age or place. In the hands of a master a novel may become a cross-section of human life, depicting human weaknesses and heroic qualities, as well as figuring a national spirit or mood. Such a cross-section of modern human life is Knut Hamsun's Shallow Soil, translated by Carl Christian Hyllested. Scribners, New York, 339 pp., $1.35. In big and powerful strokes Mr. Hamsun presents Christiania, and in so doing shows us modern Norway and modern Europe. The younger set of the Norwegian capital he reveals as decadent poseurs, who have no real strength and very little real enthusiasm for their fatherland or for the art about which they are continually prating. Their crowning ambition seems to be to have their works translated into German, or sold in Germany, or to get government jobs. Meanwhile, their lives are made up of petty jealousies and marital infidelities. Such, he tells us, is modern Norway—"shallow-soil" folk.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE AND MOMMSEN'S LAW.—By Charles Francis Adams. Houghton, Mifflin Company, Boston, 50 cents net. The Monroe Doctrine was formulated by John Quincy Adams who was President Monroe's Secretary of State at the time of his famous message of 1823. This fact, with its supporting coincidence, is brought out early in the brief address of Charles Francis Adams made before the American Society of International Law at Washington last April and just now published. The speaker proceeds from this fact of its origin to an interpretation of the Doctrine's purpose and meaning in the light of its real author's diplomatic experience and political knowledge of the Europe at which it was "somewhat defiantly" aimed. The speaker closes his address with a plea for keen-eyed consideration of the Monroe Doctrine, its past usefulness and its present possible abuse.

THE GREAT SOCIETY.—Psychology, once thought to be a purely academic diversion of knowledge, is being more and more harnessed into the service of man's daily needs. Graham Wallas's The Great Society, which the Macmillan Company will publish this week, is said to make a more comprehensive application of the principles of psychology to everyday life than has been done by any other writer upon this subject. The author deals with the general social organization, with especial reference to the difficulties which have been evolved by the developments of industry and the complexities of modern life. It is these developments and complexities, in all the phases of twentieth century life, that the author indicates in his title, The Great Society, and he endeavors to make psychology help in the solving of some of their problems and the straightening out of some of their entanglements.

MODERN MEXICO.—By R. J. MacHugh, published by Dodd, Mead and Company, New York City, $3.50. This book is the outcome of a visit to Mexico during the early part of the present year. The author had recently returned from service as war correspondent in the Balkans, and was commissioned by the editor of the Daily Telegraph to visit Mexico.

A New Edition of the Doctrine and Covenants

By order of General Conference a committee was appointed to correct all typographical errors, also Section 22 of the Doctrine and Covenants. This has been done and the book is now ready. It contains a valuable addition in the form of a new concordance. All the revelations up to date are included. You will need this edition.

A New Book of Sermons

The Gospel Messenger

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c.

Order No. 248a.

A Vacation on a Ranch

this summer will do you more good than a barrel of medicine. Get out into the open, close to nature and have the time of your life. Rest, relax and recreate. Ride over sun-flooded trails in the hills; row on silvery lakes; fish in shady brooks; tramp down winding paths among the trees; loaf in soft valleys of green; stroll in the moonlight; eat of the fat of the land and sleep like a babe. Such a vacation pays tremendous health dividends. You will come back feeling like a different person.

In the Black Hills of South Dakota, in the Big Horn Mountains of Wyoming, in the Buffalo Bill country, along the Cody Road into Yellowstone Park, there are countless places where you can spend just such a vacation and at a very moderate cost. The Hot Springs (S. D.) teem with life-giving and disease-curing qualities, while down at Thermopolis, in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming, is a hot spring, the waters of which are as an anti-toxin to hundreds of ills that beset the human race.

A SCIENTIST WHO SEEKS GOD IN THE UNIVERSE

"The glory of God is intelligence."—Doctrine and Covenants.

Edward Lucien Larkin is author of a remarkable work entitled Within the Mind Maze<sup>1</sup>. Mr. Larkin, be it understood, is director of the Lowe Observatory, Mount Lowe, California, member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science (Saratoga, 1883), member of the British Association for the Advancement of Science (Winnipeg, 1909), National Geographic Society. (Washington, 1907).

During the past few decades many scientists have devoted their attention almost exclusively to matter. They have recognized nothing that could not be analyzed, cut with a knife, weighed with scales. But it is the law of the pendulum to swing back from an extreme. Scientists now begin to recognize spiritual and psychical forces. "Chemical action," "mechanics," "activity" no longer satisfy them as explanations of the phenomena of life and the universe. Thus Sir Oliver Lodge in his address as president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, 1913, declared:

Let those who prefer the materialistic hypothesis by all means develop their thesis as far as they can; but let us try what we can do in the psychical region, and see which wins.—Continuity, p. 101.

While Lord Kelvin declared before the Christian Association of University College, London:

Modern biologists are coming, I believe, once more to a firm acceptance of something beyond mere gravitational, chemical, and physical forces; and that unknown thing is a vital principle.—Christian Apologetics, p. 25.

MIND IN THE SIDEREAL UNIVERSE

Professor Larkin is one of those who believe in the ascendance and domination of mind throughout the universe. He says:

I do not hesitate to write this: There is not a great scientist now living not aware of the existence of Mind in the Sidereal Universe—a Dominating Mind. . . . The brain contains within its majestic throne room, a mind that is very well aware that there exists a Master Mind far more powerful.—P. 346.

He goes even further and affirms that every atom of matter in existence, whether organic or inorganic, evidences the existence and functioning of an intelligent Mind.

ELECTRONS

Formerly the atom was supposed to be the unit of matter. But atoms have now been divided into thousands of parts and these parts are termed electrons and are supposed to be the primordial, indivisible, eternal units of which all matter in all the universe is formed. Professor Larkin thus speaks of electrons:

An atom of mercury is about 300,000 times heavier than an electron. An atom of hydrogen, the lightest body known, is 1,700 times more massive than the primordial, absolute, changeless electron. No imagination, however vivid, can hope to begin a series of imaginings about an atom; how then of an electron? These electrons are pure, negative electricity, and revolve around positive centers of force, and these centers and these revolutions constitute atoms. Atoms unite in absolutely regular mathematical ratios to make molecules of at least eighty-eight kinds, called elements. These unite with each other where there is chemical affinity to form multitudes of compounds, which unite to build the entire universe.—Within the Mind Maze, page 362.

ELECTRONS MOVED UPON BY INTELLIGENCE

Everywhere in his theory of the operation of these electrons, (which is given for what it may be worth) Professor Larkin sees evidences of intelligence,—as they form matter, animate or inanimate, crystals of complicated geometrical designs, plants, animals, planets, suns, brains that think. It is the old wonder that has impressed scientist and layman alike,—the very evident going on around us of intelligent processes. The mere reduction to scientific terms of electrons, atoms, molecules, in no way dissipates the mystery and wonder of it. Again we quote:

I have used the expression "they build up all objects" within the entire range of human experience, human sense aided by the most powerful instruments. This incessant, perpetual and apparently eternal work is in intense activity. Atoms fly together and unite into molecules, and these wheel into place and form the most beautiful crystals with unerring precision and with amazing rapidity. I have watched them by the hour in rapid formation in high power microscopes. All the varieties, shapes and geometrical forms known to mineralogists form without trace of error, no matter how complex, how many sides and angles. And the rates of motion, the speeds of translation through the liquids of solution are beyond imagination. The process of building up structural forms is very impressive to behold or contemplate. Now the power behind it all is directivity.—Pages 415, 416.

Limitless wonders center in the nucleus. Thus: "It was discovered that the nucleus contains a definite number of small (usually rod-shaped) bodies, which become evident during nuclear divisions, and play a wonderful part in that process. These bodies are designated chromosomes. Attention having been directed to these little bodies, continued observations showed that, although they vary in number—commonly from two to twenty-four—in different parts of animals and plants, they are nevertheless, of the same number in all the cells of any particular plant or animal. As a conclusion to this kind of observation, it needs to be said that the chromosomes are regarded as the actual bearers of hereditary qualities."—Locy 254-5.

This is set and fixed proof of Mind manifestation. The mighty word number appears in the quotation. And the "same number" in any particular plant or animal. This is one of the greatest basic discoveries ever made; far greater than that of Neptune, 2,780,000,000 miles from the sun.

Numbering, or counting, is absolutely a process of Mind and that alone. Two, four, eight, twelve, twenty-four positively had to be counted. Every mathematician knows this to be true. More than this,—the fixed number of chromosomes in any fixed cell the base of any set species, type or kind of plant or animal, had to be predetermined before counting began.—Page 423.

In the quotation just closed one very striking evidence taken from among ten thousand that might have been used is given in support of the presence of mind in nature. Counting is clearly a function of mind. To predetermine a certain fixed number is a function of mind, And the counting out of a fixed number of "chromosomes" for each cell in a certain species is no more wonderful than the counting out of a certain fixed number of petals for an apple blossom, or to predetermine the number of petals to an apple blossom. All these things are functions of mind.

ARE ELECTRONS INDEPENDENTLY INTELLIGENT OR ARE THEY DIRECTED?

If electrons are the units that come together intelligently to form matter in harmony with evident design, do they do so of themselves? or are they directed? Are they intelligent? or are they moved upon by intelligence? Professor Larkin discusses these questions in an interesting way:

Since no entities exist whence matter is formed except electrons, Mind either exists within them, or immediately without, inconceivably near, or far away, it matters not how far. For electrons either know of themselves where and when to go, and how to work to build all structural matter; or are directed by Mind either near or afar. If Mind is within electrons they move by a process called activity: if without, they move and build by a process called directivity. Between the meanings of these two words there exists a gulf as wide as infinitude. No two words can be more unlike. For does the Master Mind exist within or without electrons? If Mind is within electrons—they possess infinite knowledge, wisdom, will and volition. For when this desire or will makes impulsion, matter appears in space. If this primeval impulse originates from within, the act implies the existence of an actuator; if from without, a director. Since matter appears as a result the director must be outside of it. If the same result is due to an actuator, then the actuator is within the resulting matter. Then steel and stone contain Mind. The position taken in this book, is that Mind directs from without electrons, for ever from the outside, and directs that they shall assemble and form matter everywhere in cosmic space.—Page 405.

Imagine that the Creator, the Master Mind, desires to form matter from electrons, at any point in this cosmic sphere. A mighty problem arises. Mind exists in electrons enabling them to form mathematically exact crystals, or it is sent or directed to them. The question is, Where does Primordial Mind abide? If two electrons originally know how to build an atom of matter, then they all possess this knowledge; all know how to form into silicon, carbon, gold, vanadium, or any other element. Unless they differ, but electrons are all alike, so far as is known, then they must possess omniscience, a great improbability. If electrons know how to build a crystal, say of silicon, at any one point in the sphere, they might commence there. So might billions of others at as many points simultaneously, quintillions of miles apart. This activity all unknown to each other, theoretically, could convert all electrons into silicon, carbon, iron, copper, or matter in any phase. The entire Universe would then be all silicon, all gold, all iron, all hydrogen, as the case might be. For, unless each electron be absolutely omniscient, it would not know what all others were doing. This is the logical result of inherent activity. Not aware what all electrons were forming, there would be excess or diminution or the proper elements of matter. In this case it might occur that a balance in Nature would not obtain, that so delicate an entity as life might appear in turbulent cosmic wastes on worlds in space.

No, surely activity is not the watchword of Nature. Argue these basic problems as one may there is no escape from the fundamental law of universal directivity. Mind as at present manifesting in the human brain is totally unable to think of itself, or origin of anything whatever; of the Creator, or of the meaning of the words, and of existing things. Yet, since science appeared in the minds of men, there has not been a more persistent demand for an overruling Mind—the Creator, the Master Mind. Electrons are surely and positively directed to build up atoms, molecules and masses called matter. The omnipotent directing force is absolutely and positively Mind. And this assertion can not be upset. It is self-evident and requires no proof. Mentogeny, mind genesis, mind creating, forming, making, directly, building, is the basis of all science to-day. Electrons certainly do not wheel themselves into atoms and these into matter of their own will or volition. They are directed by external force, and this force is mental.—Within the Mind Maze, pp. 357, 358.

All discoveries in recent science lead to one conclusion, viz: electrons act from an impulse without. Man may never secure a glimpse of creative processes, but the idea that there is a Creator, a Creative Mind, behind all existing things, is exceedingly ancient and exceedingly modern. Science demands that existence of this Primordial Mental Cause, even if unthinkable by man's present mental powers.—Within the Mind Maze, p. 368.

PROCESS OF CREATION

Thus it will be seen that Professor Larkin concludes that electrons are directed by that great Dominant Mind mentioned early in his book. He seems to hold that thought forms, "mentoids" as he calls them, mental images, may be instantly flashed to the remotest parts of the universe by the Great Creator, there to take form in matter through the activity of directed electrons. In terms of theology we would say that God willed it so and it was so. On this point we quote:

Mutation requires a mutator; changes, a changer, and evolution an evolver. The word Creator is here substituted. Mind created electrons, and expressed itself in models, forms, or patterns. A mentally formed pattern for the assembling of electrons is as indispensable as are patterns in an iron foundry or in looms weaving fabrics.—Within the Mind Maze, pp. 369, 370.

Mentoids are directors of electrons, the actual builders. Electrons are actuated by external mentoids; they do not, can not act of their own will or force.—Within the Mind Maze, p. 372.

"THE GLORY OF GOD IS INTELLIGENCE"

This conception of God as a Being working everywhere by force of his intelligence,—in the sun, in the moon, in the sidereal heavens, on earth, in men's brains, in plant and animal life,—is strikingly in harmony with the theology set forth in the Doctrine and Covenants:

As also he is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also he is in the moon, and is the light of the moon, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also the light of the stars, and the power thereof by which they were made. And the earth also, and the power thereof, even the earth upon which you stand.

And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space. The light which is in all things; which giveth life to all things; which is the law by which all things are governed; even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 2, 3.

While the further statement, "The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth" (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6) is strikingly supported by the following:

Where exists intelligence must be the abiding place of the Creator. Intelligence is on display within all that part of the Universe within the scrutiny of man with added powers of of telespectroscope, telecamera, sensitive plates, the new ultra-violet light microscope, balance, crucible and retorts. Intelligence acts everywhere in this vast realm. If intelligence, the Master Mind, has one center of radiation, this central Mind is the Creator.—Within the Mind Maze, p. 344.

CURRENT EVENTS SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

A DRY NAVY.—At twelve o'clock on the night of June 30 the order excluding liquors from United States warships and naval stations went into effect. Commanding officers are to be held directly responsible for the enforcement of the order.

WOULD SUPPRESS HEBREW.—Orders issued by the Turkish government against posting notices in Hebrew on the walls of Jerusalem are thought to indicate concern on the part of the authorities over the revival of the Hebrew language in Palestine. Not ordinarily used up to thirty years ago, classic Hebrew is now the common language of thousands of Jews in Palestine.

OF ASIATIC ORIGIN.—In a dispatch from New York, the Chicago Herald states that on returning from an expedition to the Amazon district of South America, sent out by the University of Pennsylvania, Algot Lacey, a Danish explorer, brought with him idols, ceramics, and funeral urns found on an island in the Amazon "which apparently was once peopled by a race of Asiatic origin."

WILSON AND SUFFRAGE.—Addressing five hundred club women on June 30, who ask his aid in obtaining suffrage legislation, President Wilson reiterated a former statement that woman suffrage is a matter to be settled by state and not by federal government. The President is reported as saying further that since the Baltimore platform did not mention woman suffrage he would be reluctant to take it up, though his own views were different.

FERDINAND ASSASSINATED.—At Sarajevo, while on a tour through Bosnia, Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the Austro-Hungarian throne, and his wife, the Duchess of Hohenberg, were shot by a Serbian student, both dying shortly after reaching the palace immediately following the shooting. This act is thought to have been provoked out of dissatisfaction of the people of Bosnia over the recently assumed sovereignty over that country by Austria.

TO REORGANIZE LORDS.—The English prime minister is expected this month to submit to the House of Commons a government proposal for reorganizing the House of Lords. This proposal would include the elimination of the hereditary principle and representation for other churches as well as for the established church of England. The purpose of the Government is to provide a second chamber more in union with the House of Commons. It is not expected that action will be taken at this session.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—General Carranza has notified the mediators of his willingness to participate in an informal conference with representatives of General Huerta in the hope of an agreement and the establishment of a provisional government in harmony with the late protocol signed by representatives of United States and the Huerta government. He asked for time to confer with his generals, the cooperation of whom he must secure before actual and successful participation in the conference. Pending this conference, the mediation conference, on July 2, entered upon an indefinite recess and the United States representatives returned to Washington.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Positions have been taken by the Constitutionalist before San Luis Potosi, with the Federalist forces bottled up in the city. Following the refusal of Carranza to supply Villa with coal and ammunition to enable him to continue the campaign to Mexico City, the latter contending that he should have absolute control of his campaign against said city, a joint commission of military men from the various army divisions went into session, at which it is expected that an adjustment will be reached, recognizing Carranza as commander in chief of the Constitutionalist cause and Villa as chief of the north. Giving as a reason the shortage of fuel for the operation of trains, which in an emergency might make difficult their departure, Sir Lionel Carden, British minister, on June 27 advised all British subjects to temporarily withdraw from the country. Few have followed the advice. Anxiety obtained on the part of the United States Department of State and the British embassy over the arrest and proposed trial by the Constitutionalist of the British vice counsel at Zacatecas for alleged aid to the Federalists in the recent siege of that place. At an election the 5th inst. held in that part of the country controlled by the Federalists, Huerta was chosen president. Indifference was manifest everywhere, with a light vote, especially in Mexico City.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

OFF FOR WORK.—On the evening of July 2 Elder James W. Davis and wife Inez left Lamoni for the West, en route for the Hawaiian mission field where they are to labor. They will visit Omaha, Denver, Seattle and other points on their way. At the same time Elder Heman C. Smith and wife Vida departed for the East. They will visit Cleveland, Washington, New York, Philadelphia and other points. A part of their time will be devoted to research work in the public libraries.

LAMONI ORDER OF ENOCH.—At a meeting of the trustees of the Lamoni Order of Enoch June 30 permanent organization was effected. The following officers were elected: President, Elbert A. Smith; secretary, John F. Garver; treasurer, Oscar Anderson. The three named, with the addition of Albert Carmichael and S. A. Burgess, constitute the executive committee. S. A. Burgess was made legal adviser to the order. These officers hold until the first regular election in January.

SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS.—Elder Ward L. Christy reports a fine interest at Lansdowne, a suburb of Saint Louis, Missouri, where he has been conducting a successful series of tent meetings. Repeated and favorable mention has been made of the meetings by the press, together with reference to the subjects discussed. From these reports we note that the meetings are greatly helped by special music each evening. One of the reports includes: "From every standpoint the meetings are a success."

FAVORABLE CRITICISMS.—We have previously published some adverse criticisms, so possibly may be pardoned if we publish some of a different nature. A brother writes in reference to our editorial in a recent number of the HERALD as follows:

I congratulate you on the answer you made to the Socialist brother in the last HERALD. Though in some respects his criticism may be too true, still in the main, he is too hasty. I think I would not, though a radical Socialist, if I could, make a Socialist paper of the HERALD or Ensign, from a strictly partisan standpoint, at least. We can, however, in our press give due publicity to such lamentable jobs of injustice and oppression as the Ludlow outrage, and urge upon all good citizens of every party to use every influence they can to prevent such outrages in future by doing away with murderous detective agencies and prohibiting their employment by Big Business, or anyone else for that matter. In fact, stand firmly for principle and leave partizanship to the judgment of each man without discrimination for or against any.

Another brother of the same political belief adds the following postscript to his letter:

Ten miles from post office and rural service not yet established has delayed this letter until HERALD for the twentieth is here. Editorial read with much interest. Let me shake your hand, and congratulate you heartily.

In addition to this a third brother writes as follows:

We desire to tell you of the comfort and increase of confidence experienced by us upon reading in HERALD number 20 of volume 61 your editorial under caption of "Another Criticism." While we sympathize in spirit with the brother whose criticism you give and so justly answer—recognizing his cry as only the cry of another one of God's oppressed unfortunates—feeling ourself one of such, yet we understand the justness and basic truth of your position. It is well taken and will stand, being founded on the rock of eternal truth.

Still another brother writes:

Your skillful and sound reply to criticisms on your notes dealing with current events attracted my attention; it all sounded good to me.

DEATH OF SAMUEL SMITH

By a notice published in the Salt Lake Tribune for June 13 we learn that on the 12th Samuel H. B. Smith died at his home in Salt Lake City, Utah, of dropsy. The Tribune gives the date of the birth of this man as August 1, 1838, and Nauvoo as the place of birth. In trying to tell who he was the paper states that he was the grandnephew of Joseph Smith, the founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day* Saints. In this the Tribune made a mistake, for he was the son of Samuel H. Smith, a brother of Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith, and hence was a nephew and not a grand-nephew.

We can not state whether the date of birth given is correct or not, but we had supposed that the emigration into Illinois did not occur till 1839, the expulsion from Missouri occurring in 1838 in the fall. Lucy Smith gives the same date as to his birth, but we have no means of knowing where he was born.

We note the death of this cousin of the senior editor for the reason that he was one of the three remaining male members of the second generation of the direct family beginning with the family of Joseph and Hyrum and their brothers. His death leaves President Joseph F. Smith, of the Utah Church, and the writer, who is president of the Re-organized Church. The first named is seventy-six years old and the latter will be eighty-two in November of this year.

Samuel H. Smith, son of Joseph and Lucy Smith the first, died at Nauvoo, Illinois, in August, 1844, from sickness incurred in privation, worry, and overexertion in getting away from the mob which killed his brothers. He left two daughters, Suzannah B. and Mary B., and this son, Samuel H. B. Smith. The mother of these children had died, and Uncle Samuel, as he was called, married again, and one daughter was born to them. It is understood that the widow married and emigrated to Utah at the time of the exodus, taking Samuel with her, he then being some nine years of age.

The notice of the death of Samuel in the Tribune recalls the fact that time is inexorable in passing, wiping out the families one by one. Joseph F. Smith and his sister Martha were the children of the second wife of Hyrum Smith, and went to Utah with their mother. President Joseph Smith is the oldest son of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and is now the oldest living representative of the family.

This son Samuel H. B. Smith, whose death we mention, reached manhood, was married and had eight children. These were the children of his first and legal wife. The Tribune states that he had raised three families.

The editor and this cousin Samuel were always friendly, the latter coming to see the writer when he was in the East and always calling upon him when he was in Salt Lake City. Their intercourse was friendly, although they discussed their differences frequently and freely. The last time the senior editor was in Salt Lake City, Samuel visited him frequently though he was then in poor health.

It was not until the act of Congress punishing those engaged in polygamy was enforced that there was a break between Samuel Smith and his first wife, but the enforcement of the penalty upon him compelled her in due time to secure a divorce for prudential purposes.

He did not attempt to cover up what he had done, but having paid the penalty before the law of the State he was not again held to punishment, and the common amnesty of the community seemed to pass in his favor, as it proves also to have done in favor of his cousin Joseph F. Smith, now president of the Utah Church, the latter case presenting quite an anomaly; for no longer ago than last fall President Joseph F. Smith traveled through the East and had one of his five wives with whom he is living on his travels as a companion. This woman did not hesitate to announce herself as one of the wives of President Joseph F. Smith. Is there another man in the United States of similar prominence before the public that can or would or could do such a thing?

How long can the commonest rules of the English language be violated and the commonest understanding and meaning of words be outraged to shield men from paying the penalties of local laws based upon this common understanding and rules of language? The looker on is inclined to stop and ask the question, By what rule of common prudence in sociology can any existing community warp the meaning of English words in such a way as to defeat the honest purpose of the law-makers in securing honest living in the State and commonwealth? The lexicographer has defined polygamy as follows:

State, habit, or fact of being polygamous; especially, the having of a plurality of wives or husbands at the same time; usually, the marriage of a man to more than one woman, or the practice of having several wives at the same time; polygamy;—opposed to monogamy.

This has become the common understanding of all people; but the wiseacres down at Washington, whether under the lead of Senator George Edmunds or not, managed to juggle the words in which they framed the enabling act under which Utah became a State, so that the word polygamy which they wished to put into the constitution of Utah as being for ever forbidden, is made to mean simply the marrying, or performing the marriage ceremony by virtue of which a man took two or more wives. In other words, the word simply means the act of performing a marriage ceremony; and the wiseacres in the Mormon Church and their associates in the constitutional convention which framed the constitution of that State framed it so as to mean just the same thing and nothing more; and when the senior editor asked one of the leading men of that convention by what peculiar hocus-pocus the English language could be twisted to bear such a diverse interpretation, he simply shrugged his shoulders and gave a guffaw of laughter and said, "By the help of some of our good neighbors!"

And now the Utah elders wherever they go deny that they are practicing polygamy, because they assert they are not marrying polygamous wives, or they are not performing polygamous marriages, thus making an absolute travesty of the words used to define the liberties of the people.

This cousin, Samuel H. B. Smith, himself passed under the judgment of the law before the courts and was reduced from good financial standing to a degree of dependence by the expenses of defending himself from prosecutions under the act of the legislature making unlawful cohabitation a misdemeanor.

IF YE ABIDE IN ME

If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.—John 15: 7.

There is much comprehended in this brief statement. Let us look into some of the phases of life it reveals to us. Let us consider the emollient truth contained in those simple words, and so apply it that it may allay the irritation and fever of life, and lift us to a higher conception of life, a purer love, and a more perfect vision of the Christ character.

THE MEASURE OF LIFE

A man's life is measured by the things it relates itself to, and before one can abide in Christ he must first find Christ; he must form an acquaintance with him, understand his purpose, become conscious of the inner workings of his life that produce the beautiful exterior attributes. For one to abide in Christ is to place himself continually on the right side of life. We mean by this to find and sense the proper relationship of persons and things, so as to be able always to ask the right thing, because our relationship with the divine has given us a sense and knowledge of right.

Too frequently men presume that to abide in Christ means simply to subscribe to the outer form, the letter of the law, the conventionality of the thing; and so they fail to obtain the results that are expressed in the language of the text. The fault, however, rests with them, but they fail to discover it. Why? Simply because they are self-centered, and no one can even approach unto Christ and remain self-centered, much less abide in him. The emolument of divinity is found only in our service to others, and he who abides in Christ will be a most bountiful partaker thereof.

ABIDING IN CHRIST

Before we can abide in Christ we must form an acquaintance, establish a relationship between the human and the divine; we must learn to take on the divine nature, and slough off the human nature. To accomplish this end we must set into operation a successive process of evolution, that is, we must begin with the fundamentals, and upon the proper fundamental basis establish our point of contact. We must learn that to abide in Christ is to think with him,—every day, every hour and minute, to think with him; i. e., to abide in him in thought, we will readily acquire the art of speaking with him, or like him. Our inner musings and secret thoughts will crystallize into noble, sublime and life-giving words; that which is developed within will begin to manifest itself without. Our profoundest thoughts shall then take form in action. Our words and acts repeated will become habitual; our habits therefore will ripen into a holy life, completely immersed in Christ, continually drawing its life-giving, life-sustaining substance from that perfect source of divine love and wisdom.

The scriptures teach us that God does not dwell in unholy temples. The word holy being a purely religious word has its origin in the word wholly, meaning entire, complete. Reasoning from this basis we would readily observe that God will not dwell in a fragmentary temple; i. e., if the temple of our body is not wholly consecrated to him he will not make his abode with us. And if he is not abiding in us, and manifesting through us his divine life and nature, it is prima facie evidence that we have not set in operation the process of evolution that will lift us up to him, that he might manifest through us his superb excellence. We are therefore not abiding in him, and as a result his word does not, and can not abide in us.

GOD ABIDING IN US

Notice the scope of the language, "If my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." The moral is simply this, by abiding in the divine, the divine in turn will abide in us, and our will therefore will be divine, and being such the thing we ask will be according to our will. We then will do the right thing, and we no longer will do that which is not right. So our asking will be in accordance with truth and knowledge, and that is the thing that shall be done unto us under those conditions.

If, then, our lives do not manifest the Christ spirit we are separate and apart from him, no matter how many external ordinances we might have observed. Let us remember that this condition can never be corrected or changed by railing at outside conditions. We must begin to turn the searchlight of truth within, and to look there for the cause.

The thought is expressed by Ralph Waldo Trine, in these words:

No disease can enter into or take hold of our bodies unless it find therein something corresponding to itself which makes it possible. And in the same way, no undesirable condition of any kind can come into our lives unless there is already in them that which invites it and so makes it possible for it to come. The sooner we begin to look within ourselves for the cause of whatever comes to us, the better it will be, for so much the sooner will we begin to make conditions within ourselves such that only good may enter.

If we enter into a condition of at-one-ment with God, and open our lives to the divine inflow of the spirit of love, so that Christ will not only be manifested but actualized in our very being, then, and then only, will our lives be such that nothing but good can enter therein. Just to the degree that we open our lives to that divine inflow, to that degree will we partake of the divine life. So the supreme test is not what does a man profess, but what kind of a life does he live, what spirit does he manifest.

We have Saint Paul on record as saying: "Hereby we know that we are the children of God, because he hath given us of his Spirit." And again, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." So after all, the words of Christ become the infallible guide: "By their fruits ye shall know them." If the Christ nature has been ingrafted into us we will produce the fruits of Christ in our lives, and if the fruits do not manifest themselves it is evidence sufficient that the graft did not take in our case, though the form was observed.

Let us, therefore, draw near with a pure heart, and a clear conscience, and abide in Christ, that his life and his love may manifest themselves through us.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

THE MODERN MAN IN THE CRUCIBLE

The triumph of so-called Modernism would mean the passing of Christianity as taught in the gospels of the New Testament as a whole. With the elimination of hell, miracle, a personal God, and the eschatology of primitive Christian ideals overthrown, we have the strange product, instead, of so-called modern science, which is suggestive of the renowned Barnum's "what is it?"

They tell us that we are in the midst of a spiritual and sociological renaissance unparalleled in the world's history; that the giant iconoclasts of to-day are smashing the idols of a superstition which the modern man has outgrown and which belong to an age in which superstitious man believed in the existence of demons, angels, healing the sick, raising the dead, and giving sight to the blind through supernatural intervention.

This latest product of the Darwinian evolution is found in the laboratory of the physical sciences, in the leading universities and colleges of the day, in the modern divinity schools, and in the modern pulpit. This remarkable personality, called "the modern man," denies the personality of God and angels but believes himself to be a personality. As he denies the existence of personalities above himself, greater than himself, he at once places himself at the head of the list as the greatest personality in the universe. This will indicate that he has been "going some" since he got his protoplasmic start. What seems to cloud this modern man's vision of his own greatness is the fact that he seriously doubts the continued existence of the greatest personality known, once the laws of disintegration begin to operate on his anatomical organization.

These modern teachers place the gospel of Darwinian and Haeckelian evolution above the Christian system and make it the alpha and the omega in the realm of science and philosophy; yet they confess it has not advanced beyond a mere hypothesis. These moderns, in their emasculation of Christian history, in order to harmonize it with evolution, deny that Jesus was anything more than a mere man. They deny the doctrine of parthenogenesis as applying to Christ. They deny his resurrection from the dead, his frequent visits to his disciples after his resurrection, his ascension into heaven, and his promised return to reign on the earth in glory and power. These so-called modern giants, who do not know whether their modern currency of thought is genuine or counterfeit, characterize the vision of apostolic conception of Christ's return to this world as "a false apocryphism—" the baseless dream of the primitive Christian ideal, an ideal based upon the promise of the Lord himself.

Nature's great forward leap in the production of the modern man has produced a type of mind which, they say, will venerate the personality of Jesus more than did the old religious type but, in spite of these pretensions, they deny the angelic announcement of his birth, Joseph's dreams, Christ's turning the water into wine, his casting out devils, cleansing the lepers, healing the sick, causing the blind to see, the deaf to hear, the lame to walk, the dead to live, the feeding of thousands upon a few loaves and fishes. They say such things are contrary to the laws of nature as interpreted by science; that the New Testament writers who testify to these things were wrong, superstitious, and testified falsely. That Jesus himself was a party to the supernatural pretensions of New Testament history,—was the chief actor in the entire scheme of miraculous frauds—yet he was a great and good man, “whose personality,” says President Emeritus Eliot, of Harvard, “will be revered more by the church of the future.”

This indexes at once the ethics of the modern man, and indicates the thought that men can be good and noble characters and at the same time can be liars, hypocrites, and conspirators, in their efforts to deceive the world. It proves also as the modern man has outgrown the belief in Christian miracles, he has outgrown Christian ethics and represents a new type of being in the intellectual and moral cosmos.

This transformation is in exact accord with the ethical creed of the evolutionist, which says “nothing is fixed,” “nothing is permanent,” “new conditions are always succeeding as the older conditions go out.” “No personal God, as the author of good.” “No personal devil, as the author of evil.” “The human mind decides what is good or what is evil, and as the mind is constantly changing its viewpoint, so good and evil are constantly changing with the mind.” There are no permanent principles of ethics, for right and wrong are determined by the conventionalities of society; and what might be right now will be transformed into a wrong later on by society.

Evolution sets no ideals toward which mankind can advance. In contrast with this the Christ ideal rises in the vision of the soul and appeals to the inherent possibilities of life as it reaches on, and on, through the moral and spiritual evolution of man up to the attainment of the true ideal of life,—“we shall be like him.” No changing ethics or ideals here. The Christian passion, awakened in the soul here, transforming the lives of men so that they conform to the divine life of justice and love is the greatest dynamic force in the universe in directing the soul and pushing it forward to the ultimate attainment of an absolute life of perfection, which embraces all that makes for perfect satisfaction and the true realization of perfect and eternal felicity. This accomplishment is found only in the Christ ideal shining for ever as a fixed sun in the moral and spiritual universe of a purposeful and infinite God.

EVOLUTION OF THE MODERN MAN

In the natural world cause and effect is the basis of all phenomena. If the philosopher discovered the law of gravity by the falling of an apple we must also look for cause and effect in the production of the modern man. As he is the product of abnormal religious environment it makes him an abnormal being, dead on the spiritual side of his nature. He is like his ancestors up to a certain point where the principle of “natural selection” makes him more of a disbeliever in supernaturalism than were they, and this, too, in harmony with his inherent potentialities.

The ancestors of this modern man believed in creation by a personal God, who started each species of organic life on its cycle of existence by special supernatural intervention. They made Jesus a member of the Holy Trinity, and believe that he wrought miracles, arose from the dead, ascended into heaven and will return personally to judge both the living and the dead. They believed in the doctrine of miracles as it related to the past and as it relates to the future, but denied the miraculous principle as it relates to the present. This last condition produced the modern man. Logic and reason would not permit him to believe in the supernatural activities of the divine Being in the past and in the future but that he had suspended the supernatural business in the present. To him if there were supernatural laws which were active in the past, and would be in the future, they should be active in the present under the same conditions.

In this the modern man is more logical than were his ancestors. But the fact remains that the dogma of “no miracle in the present,” in the manner set forth in the New Testament, is where so-called modern Christianity showed its palsied faith in the promises and ideals of primitive Christianity. Degeneracy is as great a fact in human life as is the law of progress; and its disintegrating power eliminated from the realm of spiritual life and realistic experience the power of the gospel as displayed under the apostolic ideal, and which was promised to follow the true believers, conditionally, in the ages to come. But no modern man, nor the ancestors of the modern man, will be able to pluck from the sky of true faith and experience the eternal realities that enrich the lives of true believers in Jesus Christ, to whom “the light grows brighter and brighter until the perfect day.”

Paul, representing the true Christian type, was made conscious of suffering incidental to hunger, thirst, stripes, nakedness, cold, persecution, and imprisonment which, to him, were mere clouds of passing conditions and no part of the enduring realities of the spiritual life and consciousness of which he was possessed. Of its potency he says, For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate me from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

The love of God in the souls of mankind, according to Paul, is the one abiding reality that triumphs over every painful experience, survives all opposing conditions, and sheds its genial rays of regenerating life and power in helpfulness to struggling humanity to reach the higher level of life and love as represented in Jesus Christ, the soul's true ideal. The greatest reality in human personality is consciousness, and the greatest reality in consciousness is the love of God. Quickened by divine love the soul does not only struggle for its own emancipation from sin and death and tears, but it struggles for the emancipation of every other soul from like conditions, and recognizes that its own happiness is not complete until all who will may share together the transcendent glories of eternal life.

We can not see why human selfishness may still exist in another life, but we can see why the love of God should have the right of way in this and all worlds. Divine love in human life means, in the finality, the solidarity of the human race. It unites us by its power into brotherhood and gives us power to overcome the evil and imperfect environments of mortality. It makes human love as broad as human necessity, makes us what we want to be by choice, and enables us to appreciate the utility of truth as against the false and superficial, and accomplishes, at last, the purpose of the infinite Father in bringing mankind up to that state of perfection, felicity, intelligence, glory, and power, which he designed in the creation. It is God's triumph in human life; and man's triumph in God's accomplishment.

THE MODERN MAN'S HYPOTHESIS

The modern man appears to believe some things on less evidence than the assertion that the whale swallowed Jonah; and he doubts some things on more evidence than would be necessary to hang a man in the State of Illinois. On his side the rule of measurement is purely hypothetical. In his estimation, however, hypothesis swamps the entire phase of the spiritual and supernatural claims of the Christian religion. The basis of the theory he advocates, as against Christianity, rests upon two letters, I-F. If is all that he has to offer us relative to man's past, present, and future. He is as certain as the hypothesis will allow that there is no intercommunication between a spiritual world and people in this world. To him that is mere superstition. If he dies with this belief the spiritual environment may become so real and tense in the next world that it will cause him to change the basis of his system from IF to IT.

One very learned type of the modern man teaches that life started independently of antecedent life; that it is the result, not of causation, but of accident. That something (the greatest thing in the universe, —life and intelligence) came from nothing. That dead matter and unintelligent force created out of nothing something greater than themselves, thus making the creature greater than its creator, and the effect greater than its cause. It certainly requires greater credulity to believe such propositions than it does the most stupendous prodigy recorded in Bible history. Every Bible miracle starts something. That life comes from nothing is the irrational and unscientific deduction based upon spontaneous generation.

There is nothing inside of life and experience, scientific or otherwise, that supports the theory of spontaneous generation. All known facts are against the proposition. The thousands of people who know and testify of the reality of spiritual phenomena based upon life and experience present a solid phalanx against the modern man, as impregnable as are the mountains against the shifting winds of the passing day. Uniform facts and experiences must remain such, whether they are believed or disbelieved. A dozen witnesses who know some of the verities of spiritual life are of more vital importance to mankind than a million agnostics who can only say, "I don't know."

Surely the reality of spiritual life and power is a more permanent fixture than are the stars that shine upon us. Science tells us that both sun and stars will cease to shine in a coming time, and when their lights go out they exist in the universe as "dead worlds." Spiritual life and power will never die. It transforms all that it touches. It can even give life to dead worlds, and its throbbing, pulsing energies are carrying forward the purposes of the universe as they exist in the mind of an infinite Creator.

As the modern man denies the existence of a personal God, he believes the Creator to be impersonal, that he is immanent in matter; that he is seen in all the activities of physical being; and wherever there are manifestations of life and intelligence there is God. The cry of the infant is a manifestation of God. The operative forces of nature as seen in chemistry and physics and that permeate the entire universe are God. Thus this modern man is both a monist and a pantheist. We recognize that the laws of chemistry and physics are laws of God in nature.

One of the greatest scientists of Germany says, "Personally, I always maintain that, if there are laws of nature, it is only logical to admit that there is a lawgiver." Who has the temerity to deny that there are laws of nature? As the Maker of physical and spiritual law is separate from the laws which he has made, we must believe that the existence of law represents the act of God, but the act is never the actor.

The existence of law postulates a lawmaker, but it denies that law is its own maker. Thus the modern man worships the laws of nature,—the thing made,—rather than the Maker of the thing made. As the modern man sees God in all organic being he sees what Ernest Haeckel, the German Darwin, saw. "God may be master," says Haeckel, "but he is not Father. To him the individual matters nothing. It is only the selfishness and conceit of mankind that allow them to suppose that God can care here and there for these little creeping things for they are nothing else—on the great canvas of the universe." (Christian Commonwealth, January 21, 1904.)

In the analysis of this modern philosophy it postulates certain things as facts. It accepts all manifestations of life and force throughout the universe as manifestations of God. Thus the act of murder is as much the act of God as is the act of prayer. Wherever there is life, intelligence and force, there is God. There is life, intelligence, and power in the acts of adultery, theft, lying, fraud, and every other evil known in the calendar of human depravity. This modern postulate makes the immanent God of evolution responsible for the acts before indicated, for all life, all force, all intelligence is God. All acts are, therefore the acts of God. The same can be said of all right acts; but this makes the God of evolution a self-contradiction and is "a house divided against itself." As this immanent God of natural physics is said to never have "turned stone-mason in order to write his law on stone tablets," nor revealed a moral law to mankind through the Holy Spirit, we must, therefore, trace his handiwork in the so-called processes of the gradual evolution.

EVOLUTION PHILOSOPHY

The modern man holds that all that man is is what evolution has made him by "natural selection." That whatever man is in his being is what this immanent God of the evolution made him. If it is wrong for men to be selfish, then the act of God was wrong in making men selfish. If murder is wrong, then the act of the God of the evolution was wrong in giving to man the nature and disposition to commit the act of murder. The modern man has no standard of ethics by which he can tell us what is really and permanently good or evil. The fundamental of the evolutionary fundamental is this, "That good and evil are only relative terms, and that the conventionalities of society are to determine what is right and what is wrong." This is the basic law of our modern ethics.

The conventionalities of society in Utah says that polygamy is right. Does that make it right? In some countries the conventionalities of society provide for the worship of idols. Does that make idolatry a true religion? Society once held that the world was flat, then, afterward, said it was round. Did the world change from flat to round to suit the changing whims of society?

The fact remains that God, as represented in the evolution, is as responsible for the evil in man's nature as he is for the good. That the act of the murderer is as legitimate as is the act of the philanthropist, and that society, at different times and in different places, has sanctioned the one as well as the other.

As the modern man denies the existence of a personal God, as well as the existence of angels or demons, he enthrones himself as the highest attainment of the organic evolution.

With all of his greatness, has evolution given him a standard of ethics by which he can stand? Has evolution given man a permanent ideal toward which he can advance? What are the facts? The conventionalities of society—evolution's highest authority—has evolved ethical rules and systems as self-contradictory as is idiocy to intelligence, and these same conventionalities have ordered the destruction of the minor part of mankind who denied that the rules laid down by society were the right rules. Thus the keynote of Darwinism is, "the survival of the fittest," and the fittest does not mean the ethically good, for evolution knows as much about ethics, as held in the sublime principles and ideals of the gospel of Jesus Christ, as does the anthropoid-ape (the modern man's supposed ancestor) about arithmetic.

CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY

The Christian philosophy is the antithesis of Darwinism. Christianity teaches that God is not responsible for man's sinful nature; that man was made free and could act according to his own volition; that freedom is the basis of human responsibility—the basis of all law and government; that man became sinful—a pervert—by his own act and not by the act of God. The Christian believes in angels and spirits, and that some are good and that some are evil; that these angels and spirits, like mankind, are free to act upon their personal responsibility. That an infinite, personal God, who made man and who knew his needs, gave to him permanent and perfect laws under which he could advance and perfect himself; perfect moral and spiritual ideals toward which he could advance "until the perfect day"; that the Holy Spirit, unfolding to human consciousness the reality of the spiritual realm, starts man in the spiritual cycle toward the perfect ideal as found in the perfect Christ.

Christians believe that there are personal intelligences outside of themselves greater than themselves and that these heavenly beings will aid and assist them in their efforts to reach the goal of possibility. They rise in the intellectual world by coming in contact with intelligence greater than their own. This comes to them from without and not from within. This law is equally applicable to man in his moral and spiritual rise. The higher life, that is, God, touches the lower life, that is, man, and the transformation begins. Without that touch, without the divine law and influences of the Holy Spirit, the human race would be engulfed in the abyss of despair, and thrown into the chaos of anarchy and hopeless, aimless, struggle,—a condition in harmony with Darwinian evolution.

THE LIMITATIONS OF EVOLUTION

All the manifestations of human life as measured by so-called evolution are fragmentary, contradictory, and incoherent. If evolution is God, then the work of the evolution, imperfect as it is, represents an imperfect God. He has stamped no decalogue on any part of creation by evolution. Nowhere does he differentiate between virtue and vice. If he gave me the power to love he also gave me power to hate and kill. Man's nature under natural environment responds to both impulses and is not associated with any, "Thou shalt not," or, "Thou shalt." The commandments and salutary laws that lead mankind to higher and better conditions of being are based upon revelation from a personal God to man, and they embrace in the design and divine purpose all the potentialities inherent in man. Man, as defined by evolution, is purely a selfish being. To live, to perpetuate our own kind, and to destroy everything that opposes us is the first precept of evolution.

It is no wonder that the modern man can not see a millennium ahead of him! "The golden age of the apocalyptic vision of the New Testament Scriptures," says this modern man, in the modern pulpit, "was but the foolish dream and mental hallucinations of Paul and other contemporaneous writers of that time, who taught the personal return of Jesus Christ to this world and his reign with his people on a redeemed and glorified earth."

These so-called moderns seem to know more about the future than Paul and all of the ancient prophets who spoke in the name of the Lord under the influence of the Holy Spirit. They deny supernaturalism and the intervention of any power that can foretell what is in the future. It will seem very inconsistent for them to say the Bible prophets were wrong when they themselves do not know what is in the future, and can not know so long as they deny the existence of the only means by which they can know.

As Darwinism claims that mankind has ever been changing from one type of life into another until the ape is transformed into the man, likewise the ethics of the evolutionist is based upon the same idea of change and transition. Listen:

MODERN IDEALS

Let us recognize this fact and its consequences, that ethics grow out of customs, and are not antecedent to them. That they are mere figments of speculation and unrealities that ought to be discarded altogether.—Professor W. G. Sumner, Yale College.

Both marriage and democracy are produced by conditions of society, and both are transitory. When life becomes harder it will become aristocratic, and concubinage may be expected to rise again.—Professor Graham of Yale College.

They (the colleges) teach young men and women, plainly, that an immoral act is merely one contrary to the prevailing conception of society; and that the daring who defy the code do not offend any Deity, but simply arouses the venom of the majority—the majority that have not grasped the new idea.—Harold Bolce, in Cosmopolitan for May, 1910.

In barbaric times the stronger and swifter conquered and survived; and the early social institutions of polygamy, patriarchal concubinage, war and the capture of women favored the survival of ability. But to-day intellectual and economic power contributes not to offspring but to sterilized scholarship, barren selfishness, and social display.—Professor Frank A. Fetter, Cornell University.

When there is an unequal division of the sexes monogamy is not consistent. It is a scientific truth that in cold climates there are more men than women, and, so, as among the Esquimaux, polandry exists.—Professor Erp, Syracuse University.

There can be and are holier alliances without the marriage bond than within it. Every normal man has room for more than one person in his heart. Like politics and religion we have taken it for granted that the marriage is right and have not questioned it.—Professor Charles Zebulin, Chicago University.

Our literature is becoming anti-family: it minimizes its sanctity. We go into the family relations with the same sangfroid that we go to a picnic.—Professor Shailer Mathews, Chicago University, Divinity Department.

It is not right to set up a technical legal relationship, an economic convenience, or a circumstance of social conventionality as morally superior to the spontaneous preference of a man and woman who know, and whose friends know, that they love each other.—Professor Franklin H. Giddings, Columbia University.

The old ideas held their own as squatters, but now the new science is evicting them.—Professor Samuel M. Crothers, preacher of Harvard University.

It is clearly the conviction of progressive philosophers and scientists that incest is not contrary to the laws of nature or disapproved by any fancied ordinances of God.—Professor George B. Louis Arner, Princeton University.

The notion that there is anything fundamentally correct implies the existence of a standard outside and above usage, and no such standard exists. Religion and philosophy are created by custom and usage, and are not, as is popularly believed, the sources and regulators of conduct.—Professor W. G. Sumner, Yale College.

The standards of right perpetually change in social life, these varying standards being found not only in different races but in the same race at different times.—Professor Frank W. Blackmar, Kansas University.

The man who says that Christ was the highest possible being isn't worth working with. Christ was a failure. . . .

The mention of God has gone out of fashion . . . . When Darwin came along with the theory of natural selection, people jumped at it and kicked God out at the windows.—George Bernard Shaw, in address to undergraduates at Cambridge University, England,—Chicago Daily Tribune, May 30, 1911, Chicago Biblical World, Chicago University Magazine, Divinity Department, September 9, 1910.

The Bible is no more and no less inspired than any other writings outside it. Almost all the men and women of our Nation, or of any other get their religion and their politics where they get their astronomy—entirely secondhand. Being untrained they are no more able intelligently to examine a dogma than they are to calculate an eclipse. This, therefore, serves to explain why the college authorities feel called upon to interpret the profound things of religion and life. They believe that they are qualified as experts to take the lead in doing the thinking for the contemporary age.—President Butler, Columbia University.

IN BRIEF

The modern man's religion is circumscribed to the limits of physical experimentation, which neither defines life, nor explains its purpose, origin, or destiny. He stands outside of all spiritual facts and phenomena and is a mere automaton which soon runs out as the product of a purposeless, aimless, evolution that promises nothing for the future. He is also found in a state of transition—of uncertain being without fixed ideals toward which he is advancing; without fixed ethics to govern his deportment. Under certain conditions, to him, polygamy would represent proper social life; where there are more men than women polyandry should be the rule; where the sexes are equal, monogamy should be the standard of marriage.

But aside from all this he sees another condition of social freedom based upon the principles of sexual affinities and the doctrine of "soul mates" as representing the higher phase of sociological advancement.

A majority of so-called modern scientists and schoolmen, who accept Darwinism, are materialists and deny the extension of life into another state of being. Those who accept the spiritual idea of life, like the divinity part of the Chicago University, say:

The thought is further expressed that eternal life may be the succession of race life on the earth and where the good deeds of humanity in this short span of existence may help the lives of those who may follow after.—Biblical World, November 6, 1910.

A late biologist says, "Materialistic assumption of the 'survival of the fittest' is certainly a very brutish doctrine, as it makes the strong to crush the weak."

This same author, in speaking of the uncertainties of modern scientific speculation, declares, "Modern physics tries to tell us that 'all nature reduces itself to matter, to electrons, to ether, and all ether to a hypothesis' so says a mathematical physicist."—Popular Science Monthly, March, 1914.

Entrenched in the ethics of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and enthroned in the realism of concrete spiritual experience, the Christian moves forward toward the goal of his transcendent moral and spiritual idealism. More rational, grander, better, more loving, and purposeful are the principles and forces of the Christian religion in their enrichment and elevation of human life than is the crushing dogma of Darwinism, "the survival of the fittest," which is as conscienceless as the voracious crocodile or the deadly cobra.

RACE THAT EQUALED GREEKS

In writing of his investigation of the wonderful ruins in Yucatan, Ellsworth Huntington says in Harper's Magazine for April that there is every evidence that there was once a city there with as large a population as the entire country now possesses and that these people were the equals of the ancient Greeks.

Various authorities have ascribed to the ruins an age of from one to eleven thousand years. These figures are based on data derived from calendar stones preserved in many places both in Yucatan and in neighboring regions such as Mexico and Guatemala. The stones can be deciphered with considerable accuracy, and exact dates can be assigned to the construction of many buildings. The only trouble is that the dates belong to the various local eras of the different countries, and no one knows when a single one of the eras began. This ignorance affords an ample field for speculation.

There are, however, strong reasons for believing that the ruins date back a long time before the coming of the Spaniards. Two of the strongest of these reasons are that when the Spaniards came to Yucatan, early in the sixteenth century, the Mayas, in the first place, were a slow, mild, unprogressive people, utterly different from the wide-awake, progressive race which alone could have built the ruins; and in the second place they made no claim to any knowledge or even any tradition as to the origin of the wonderful structures among which they dwelt.

Probably the present Mayas are the descendants of the builders of the ruins, although perhaps largely mixed with other invading elements from the northwest—that is, from Mexico. By the sixteenth century of our era, however, they had utterly degenerated from the vigor and originality of their ancestors, and were apparently much more different from them than the modern Greeks are from their ancestors in the days of Plato and Phidias. The modern Yucateco does not begin to have the energy and initiative of the modern Greek, but I believe it is no exaggeration to say that his predecessors were the equals of the Greeks, or any other race so far as real achievement is concerned. I know that this is a sweeping statement, and I shall return to it later.

Here it is enough to point out that the Greeks borrowed much of their culture from their neighbors: the Yucatecos, so far as we can learn, had no one from whom to borrow. The Greeks had at their command the accumulated store of knowledge and of tools from half a dozen great nations; the Yucatecos had only their own culture and their own crude tools to rely on. Each of these two nations was great because it was full of new ideas. We know the ideas of the Greeks not only from their ruins, but from their books. Those of the Yucatecos are known only from their ruins, and yet those ruins show that in art, architecture, and the allied crafts brilliant ideas must have been numerous.

THE SPREAD OF ENGLISH

What the United States has done for the spread of the English language is patent to all. The peoples of the earth come to us and are taught it. On a continent where three million spoke English a century ago one hundred million speak it now.

The part taken by the English themselves in this great work is less conspicuous and less well known. The recently published census of British India throws some light. Of the three hundred and fifteen million inhabitants of that country only eighteen million five hundred thousand are literate in any language, and of these there are now one million seven hundred thousand who have passed a rigid test in reading and writing English. This is a gain of fifty per cent in the last decade and is regarded as a remarkable showing.

But if English is to become a world language, progress in it among the great dependencies of the British crown will have to make more rapid progress. Greater advances are made where the pupils come to the school than when the school goes to the pupils. In the former case the alien must learn; in the latter case the native may—and will, if he has to do business with the invader or expects to gain official employment under him. But such results are vastly less important than those worked among vast bodies of immigrants who have practically no choice in the matter. If English conquers the world, American-taught English in the United States will be the largest factor.—Chicago Record-Herald, March 19, 1914.

THE REDEMPTION OF MESOPOTAMIA

There is a romantic as well as a historical interest attaching to the great irrigation works which are being carried on in ancient Mesopotamia with the object of restoring to that historic and richly-fabled country something of its one-time fertility. Like much of the land in what was once known as the great American desert, the soil and climate of the valley of the Euphrates are such that if water is supplied it shows a wonderful productiveness. In earlier times the inhabitants planned and built a system of dams and canals, the remains of which show no little engineering skill; and it is only because of abuse and neglect that the dams have broken down, the canals have silted up, and this once productive land has been transformed into noisome swamp land or arid desert.

The Turkish Government, prompted no doubt by the excellent results which have been achieved in the valley of the Nile, in 1909 authorized Sir William Willcocks to visit Mesopotamia and report upon the feasibility of constructing a new system of irrigation works. In a report published in the following year, Sir William proposed an elaborate scheme of dams, canals, and other accessory works, the total cost of which was estimated at $75,000,000. The Turkish Government decided to carry through the scheme in sections, and it authorized the immediate construction of a dam across the Euphrates at such a point as would serve to divert a supply of water to an ancient canal known as the Hilla Channel, which formerly supplied water for the irrigation of a large tract of land extending almost to the ruins of the ancient city of Babylon.

The ancient work consisted of a dam across the Euphrates which raised the level of the river sufficiently to pass the desired amount of water down the old Hilla Branch Channel. The work had so far gone to ruin that the Hilla Branch had silted up, and the country which it formerly served so well had reverted to the desert condition. It is interesting to note that the site chosen for the new dam is an endorsement of the wisdom of the early engineers; for the new structure is only about two thousand five hundred feet up stream from the old structure.

The difficulties of construction were increased by the lack of transportation and the absence of fuel. Nevertheless, in less than three years' time, the original channel of the river was closed by a dam, a barrage seven hundred and eight feet in length provided with the necessary regulating gates was constructed, the Euphrates was diverted from its old channel and made to flow through the barrage, and a new diversion was cut from the Euphrates above the barrage to a connection with the old Hilla branch. The barrage has thirty-six openings, each sixteen and one half feet in width. The piers are built of brickwork and the openings are provided with the usual Stoney sluices. At one side of the barrage is a lock twenty-six feet three inches wide, and three hundred and twenty feet long, provided with a pair of gates in the center which divides it into two parts. After the barrage was completed, the ground above and below it was excavated, the new channel for the river, eight hundred and fifteen feet wide, was formed, and the river was made to pass through the barrage by way of this channel.

According to The Engineer, to which we are indebted for the above facts, there has been built, also, what is known as the Habania Escape, by which the waters of the Euphrates, when the river is in flood, may be diverted partly into a lake and partly into a large natural depression in the ground. This will serve to prevent, or at least mitigate, the inundations which in times of flood have converted large sections of the adjacent country into morasses.—Scientific American, April 4, 1914.

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS

Hints for Hot Weather

Doctor J. H. Kellogg of the Battle Creek Sanitarium is authority for the following statements:

Nature has a wise purpose in the change of the seasons. The winter with its crisp, cold air offers an excellent opportunity to build up physical vigor. Breathed in its outdoor freshness, cold air tones up all the bodily organs and functions in a marvelous degree.

The summer, too, brings its benefits. The freer perspiration induced by the heat washes away an unusual amount of body waste and debris, thus making summer time an especial season of cleansing and renovating of body tissue.

Prolonged or extreme heat causes discomfort and debilitation; consequently, it is a prominent desire with most people to keep cool at this season. Extreme heat is a powerful depressant, and under its influence the body becomes more susceptible to the action of germs.

To many it may not have occurred that there is a relation between the discomforts they feel and the food they eat. The several purposes of food are to promote growth, to supply energy, to produce heat, and to furnish material for the repair of the body waste. If the food eaten be such as will cause the vital fires to burn fiercely at the same time when the sun's rays beat down with intensity from without, one is literally "between two fires," and his suffering will be proportionate to the heat produced by each.

The heat producing foods, fats and sweets, should be avoided in the hot season, particularly in the form of rich pastries and confections which have the added disadvantage of being difficult of digestion.

Simplicity of diet is needful at all times but particularly so during the heat of midsummer, when the digestive system should be taxed as little as possible. The hours spent in the enervating atmosphere of a hot kitchen over a hot stove preparing rich, unwholesome, time-taking dishes is conducive neither to the health of the one who prepares the food nor of the eater.

Careful observations have demonstrated that the greater proportion of heat prostrations in summer are among those living upon an unnatural dietary and indulging in liquor and tobacco.

Stimulating foods and drinks of every sort, including tea, coffee, flesh foods and highly seasoned dishes which inflame the blood and fan the vital fires ought to be wholly discarded and in their stead the simpler natural fare of cereals, nuts, fruits, and vegetables be substituted.

The lavish wealth of fruits and succulent foods which summer brings should be taken as Nature's hint of the large place they should fill as summer foods. Those possessing but little nutritive value, their abundant juices and wholesome acids cool, refresh and cleanse the system.

Fruits should be fresh, ripe, and clean. Fruits long exposed in the market often undergo partial decomposition. When this has not actually taken place, the surface of the fruit is often covered with mold, dust and germs of various sorts, often of a deadly character. A thorough cleansing of fruit before eating is always of the utmost importance.

The increased waste of body moisture creates more than ordinary thirst. In no manner can this be better assuaged than by drinking pure water, fresh from the hidden depths of the earth, mingled, if desired, with refreshing juices crushed from the heart of the lemon, the orange, the strawberry, currant or grape.

Iced drinks increase thirst instead of quenching it. If used at all, they should be sipped and retained in the mouth till somewhat warm. Alcoholic beverages are heat producers.

People who are very particular about the purity of their drinking water sometimes cool it with ice which may have been made from contaminated water. It is of as great importance that the ice used should be above suspicion as that the water cooled should be pure. A safer way is to cool the water for drinking by surrounding the vessel containing it with ice for a short time before it is needed.

Cool bathing is conducive to comfort in hot weather. At least during the heated period, a cool bath morning and evening is desirable, and if the heat is oppressive one or more between times.

The cool bath, simple food, and abundant sleep tend to promote health during the heated term.

This is the time to live in as close touch with nature as possible. There is no disease which can not be combated more successfully out-of-doors than indoors.

One of the greatest advantages of the outdoor life is the exposure to the direct rays of the sun. The sun's rays are vitalizing, healing, disinfecting and stimulating to all the vital processes.

Keep out-of-doors all you can; take plenty of exercise in the open air; sleep out-of-doors; keep doors and windows open as much as possible. Give daily attention to cultivating health. It pays.

Sunstroke is a very dangerous accident and is likely to prove fatal without proper treatment, but by the use of cold water, poured from a height of five or six feet and with two or three people rubbing the patient vigorously, we may expect a cure in nearly every case. The rubbing should be continued until the skin is well reddened and consciousness is restored.

The application of cold water alone is dangerous, because it drives the blood inward, but if we apply cold water to the skin and at the same time rub the surface vigorously, the blood is brought to the surface and kept there and the body is rapidly cooled. This simple method was employed as long ago as three hundred years before Christ.

Prayer Union

SUBJECT FOR THE THIRD THURSDAY IN JULY

Prayer for our missions and missionaries in all places. Especially remember the Lamanites, that the preaching of the gospel may be with power and conviction, leading to obedience, and that thereafter their lives may demonstrate its purifying, uplifting power. Include in this the isles of the seas missions. Remember the mission at Jerusalem and those who have been sent there, that they may be protected and be successful in winning many to Christ.

Lesson, 1 Corinthians 1: 18-31. Memory verse, 2 Corinthians 2: 14.

Heroism

It is so fine a thing that he
Who has it knows it not,
Until, in some quick moment
Of his life, upon the occasion,
The deed so brave is done.
Then quietly upon his way he goes,
And why men praise he hardly knows.

Letter Department

DUNEDIN, NEW ZEALAND, May 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure I pen these few lines to you from this part of the Lord's vineyard, to let you know how we appreciate the letters, etc., in the HERALD. We always look forward to receiving the same, and hail with gladness the news from Joseph's land. We have waited in patience for the conference number to see what news it contained regarding a missionary for New Zealand. We were very pleased to see that the Lord had not forgotten us in the islands of the seas.

The Saints in Dunedin can reckon themselves a privileged people to have an organized branch, when there are so many isolated Saints all over America. We were very fortunate indeed to have Brother Pitt and wife with us so that we were able to have our patriarchal blessings and also the fatherly advice Brother Pitt imparted to us. The branch here is not growing numerically. Brethren Hall and Leberz are doing all they possibly can to put this latter-day work before the people. I notice it is the same here as elsewhere, the people are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, and are therefore fulfilling the prophecies regarding the last days.

We trust that Brethren Savage and Hall will do much good while here in New Zealand. The Utah elders seem to have no bother in making converts, especially among the Maoris. They have a very large following in the North Island. We notice that Brethren Griffiths and Miller are doing a vast amount of good in Australia. They seem to be the right men in the right place. Brother F. Whaler of Dannevirne, New Zealand, was over there at their last conference, and as he has been away from church associations for over eight years, it was a grand spiritual feast for him. We pray that the Lord will strengthen him and all the isolated Saints.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, so that all the isolated Saints will be gathered together to live as one happy family, serving and praising God continually, I am,

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. C. BRADLEY.

BYRON, OKLAHOMA, June 12, 1914.

Editors Herald: This is a new opening. I am preaching here on the street. The editor of the Byron Promoter is a young man and a member of the Progressive Christian Church. He is a gentleman of fairness. He published in his paper a synopsis of my sermon showing the differences between our people and the Utah Church.

I reached this place almost penniless and a stranger. I took my case to Him who careth even for the sparrows, and was truly led to the streets to preach. I told the people of my condition and was cared for. Required to go to other places, I leave many honest friends here. May God bless them, is my prayer. I found much opposition at first, but it began to die out. The people came nearer to me and drew nearer to God.

There are many honest souls among the people of the world, and in all churches. The harvest is ripe; let us thrust in our sickles and reap.

Hopefully,

W. P. BOOTMAN.

DAHINDA, ILLINOIS, June 18, 1914.

Editors Herald: A very successful and spiritual series of meetings has just been closed here by Elders C. E. Willey and J. R. Grice, three more being added to the kingdom of God, a man, wife and daughter, who are now rejoicing and happy in the glorious work. The brother has been told in prophecy that he would preach the gospel to the convincing of many at the present time outside the fold. We feel that the work will progress now, and much good be done, if we all work together for the one great cause in Christ Jesus. A few of the sisters are carrying on their part by means of the Willing Workers. The Father is surely blessing our work in many ways.

Oh, that the sisters as well as the brothers may see they have a work to do. May God help us all to work wherever we can, and in every way, to help along his work, that we may be blessed. There are a few careless and indifferent ones here, as in other places. We hope and pray all may grow to see and do their duty more perfectly. Let us have charity and patience with all, and thus grow together in the bonds of love and peace, and the Lord's work is bound to prosper.

We often think of Brethren Thorburn, Goodenough, Arber, and others who have labored with us in the past, and feel to ask God's blessing upon them. May his work grow and prosper everywhere, and all fit and prepare themselves for his coming, which will not be long delayed.

In the faith,

MRS. CHARLES DAWSON.

SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, June 18, 1914.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since any of the elders have paid us a visit until just recently. Brethren Baker and Fulk have been with us, have held meetings at the homes of some of the Saints, and have been holding some street meetings. Some interest has been stirred up, and we are looking for results, provided the good work can be followed up. The Saints all feel much better, and I think they are more determined to live nearer to the Lord than before. All are refreshed and anxious to go forward.

The Utah Church has been making a strong effort in this city, and I am sorry to say have met with some little success. They have been maintaining from two to six men and women here for some time. At present they have six.

We are anxious to have one of our elders stay and labor during the summer and fall, as we think much good could be done. Pray that the efforts put forth in Springfield by the servants of God may be blessed, and the work of the Lord grow and prosper.

Should any of the Saints in Canada, North Dakota, or any of the northern States know the whereabouts of S. C. Wiley, formerly of this place, send the information to the undersigned, as we have been assisting his family in locating him or his sons, Floyd and Fred.

Always praying for the upbuilding of God's kingdom, I am

Your brother in the faith,

Editors Herald: I would like through the HERALD to ask the prayers of the Saints for my husband who is a man of the world, of the worldly world, or what I call the world behind the screen.

Such people have hearts, and sometimes great and good ones. And, Saints, it takes earnest prayers for these people, for the ways of the world are hard to turn from. I have had the experience myself and know how hard it is, also the many things to try us, even when we are endeavoring to do good.

God has wonderfully blessed me since I made a vow to try to be good. Why he withholds this one blessing I can not say. I have prayed often that my companion might turn and live a pure life. But God knows best and sees things as they should be. I am asking this favor, hoping to leave nothing undone that I should do in behalf of my husband. As I am asking your prayers you shall have mine.

MRS. FRED PEASLEY.

CHETEK, WISCONSIN, June 15, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the church for four years. I have never regretted the step taken, for I know it is the way to eternal life.

My husband does not belong to the church, though he believes in and upholds it. I hope to live in that way that he may see there is reality in serving God, and accept the gospel. I ask the Saints to pray for him.

The Northern Wisconsin reunion is about to convene here. We expect a good crowd, and hope some will be brought to the light of the gospel, as we believe there are many honest people in this place.

I ask the Saints to remember me in their prayers, as I am afflicted.

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. LUCY MAIR.

UNITED STATES STEAMSHIP San Francisco, AT
NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, June 21, 1914.

Editors Herald: I desire to know all the Saints better. I am a lonely sailor in the United States Navy. My belief in Christ's gospel is different than that of anyone else aboard this ship.

It is hard to live righteously in keeping God's commandments when two hundred and sixty, or the rest of the crew, know not God. It is hard to bear this life because to whatever part of the ship I go I am sure to hear some one telling filthy stories. Some are about experiences ashore. The navy to my own knowledge is corrupt so far as morals are concerned. I did not realize when I came into the navy what it was.

My home was broken up in 1900, and I have been on the move ever since. I came into the navy in 1911, because of the inducement to see the world, I mean many lands. But I have seen something else—the world's deepest iniquity of the navy.

I heard the gospel before I entered the navy, through Elder George M. Shippey in Canada, and Elder A. Allen of Detroit. But I did not obey. It has been to my sorrow ever since. God has been merciful to me, but somehow I did not obey.

I am not quite twenty-one years old. And why did I not join the fold before? Because of the world's allurements, or temptations. I know only to pray to God through Christ that he will give me that which is of most worth to me, that is, that I may be delivered from this environment that I may obey his gospel and become a Saint and live among the people of God.

I do not know any of God's servants or of Christ's church along the Atlantic Coast. Any who read this letter and who live near any seaport town or city, please let me know their address. We do not know where our next stop will be along the coast. Here are a few of the places we have stopped at: Portsmouth, New Hampshire; New Port, Rhode Island; New York City; Norfolk, Virginia; Pensacola, Florida; Vera Cruz and Tampico, Mexico, where we expect to return in a few days, and Colon, Panama.

I ask all to pray for me, that God may give to me that which will be of greatest worth to me, to keep me from temptation.

I have stopped drink, tobacco and gambling. The only comfort I have now, and which are a great comfort to me, are the Book of Mormon, Holy Scriptures, Church History, four volumes, and tracts and publications which I have just received.

We expect to return to Tampico or Vera Cruz where we came from a few days ago, and probably will stay there six more months.

The object of this letter is to learn where the Saints are, and to warn other boys against coming into the navy. May they obey the gospel before it is too late. I thank God my life was spared in Vera Cruz battle while ashore.

Your brother in love,

B. L. MAYNARD.

EAST SAINT LOUIS, ILLINOIS, June 18, 1914.

Editors Herald: Just a line as touching the work of the Lord, and the wonderful possibilities that present themselves to the missionary force in this time of great need of missionary work in all the earth.

Immediately after the Conference there was an opportunity presented, enabling me to visit my mother, who some two years ago suffered a stroke of paralysis, and who owing to the distance separating us for the last six years I had not seen since her affliction. I also visited a brother whose family I had never seen, though he has children past thirteen years old, which is sufficient evidence that whatever other things I may have done I have not wasted any money going to see my relatives, as these relatives have never been farther than Nebraska from the central place. I have a brother at Kansas City whom I surmise had begun to be ashamed to think I had not been able to visit any of the family for so long, and who came to me about the close of the Conference and suggested that if I would visit mother he would pay the car fare. As that was about the only thing that I knew of that stood in the way, I was not long accepting the kind offer.

Consequently, my wife who had been confined to the walls of the Sanitarium for eight months, got permission of her doctors, and we made the trip together, to see many of our relatives and old friends, and to visit the scenes of our childhood; the places made especially dear because of long associations, and where we first heard the gospel message preached by the old tried and true missionaries of the earlier days, such as R. J. Anthony, M. H. Forscutt, R. M. Elvin, and Thomas Nutt, who came to us when the country was new and the developments of civilization and the whirl of business had not separated, as in these times, a time when the community was more like one family, and the sweetness of association were not so tinctured with the ices of fashion, and the stiffness of strained etiquette. And, incidentally, the place of most striking interest was the place where love ties were formed, and the first nest was builded, where school days were spent, where familiar faces, though evidencing the ravages of time, and the weightier responsibilities of more mature life, still bear the love light of continued friendship. Altogether the trip was pleasant beyond description.

Having not seen the old home for seventeen years, those who knew the wild and reckless boy of the earlier days, were anxious now to hear the returned preacher, to ascertain if any good thing could come out of (Nazareth) Wilbur.

When we were living in this little villiage of about one thousand five hundred people there were seven large saloons in the place; on our return we found nine, with one large brewery. Do you not wonder how a real live wire of a boy, full of frolic and mischief, ever escaped the "booze route" in such environments. I might as well tell you, we had no natural taste for the stuff, and drunkenness was obnoxious to the young manhood. So early as about sixteen I found congenial association with a young lady that was brought up a true Latter Day Saint, and somehow or other that girl kept the strings on me till I was twenty-one, and then I was quite ready to have her hitch me to the post of permanent union. Tiding me through the dangers of "Sodom" and the dangers of the youthful period is due largely to the influences of the wife of my youth.

We held services in the old home town, in the old home church, and had for our appreciative audience old-time, tried and true, banner bearers, and earnest workers that we had known since childhood, such as Elder C. H. Porter and his good wife, who is a daughter of Doctor Anthony, and a cousin of my wife, Robert White and family, ever known for their fidelity to the work, Samuel Broliar, who is about, if not the oldest citizen of Saline County, Nebraska, and who, with his family, has lived on the banks of the Big Blue River, for these many years and has ever been found earnestly supporting the good work of the Lord in this place of great disadvantages. Nearly every American we met was either a relative of myself or wife, and those who were not were such intimate and dear friends that it was difficult to differentiate.

Services were held at the old home nightly for most three weeks. The interest was growing, and the attendance good for that locality, when we thought it advisable to close, in order to get the wife where she could receive attention and help, and to get to the field of appointment. We found that there were so many splendid opportunities for work in the Southern Nebraska District that were especially open to me as a result of my long and intimate acquaintance all over the district, that we almost wished that we had asked to be sent there. Undoubtedly, this field is worthy more active men. The evidences of neglect are seen on every hand.

What a pity to see so many men drop from the missionary force and the field suffering for laborers! As a church, can we afford to lose these men? As a church, are we responsible for the necessity of the dropping of so many laborers? As a church, are we entitled to know the reason why? And if the responsibility lies with the body can we consistently pray the Lord of the harvest that he will send more laborers into the vineyard until we make it possible that those that are sent, and against whom there are no charges preferred may continue to be sent? God has called. We as a church have selected and indorsed the call; we have placed men at the work to which they were called. It is found opportune to drop them, surely not without cause. Shall we await the revelations of the judgment to know who is responsible, if perchance it is the lack of tithes and offerings. Do you think that if God did the calling and we the choosing that God called and we chose more than we could support, while the field languishes and all the world is crying for help? It is my opinion that we should awake to a sense of our duties, rights, and responsibilities, and commence a reformation and a setting in order of the entire institution.

Mr. and Mrs. Brewer, cousins, at DeWitt Nebraska asked that we hold meetings there which we undertook to do, but were bitterly opposed by the resident Methodist Episcopal preacher, who evidenced the quality of his Christianity. He brought out propositions for a debate, but like most of the stealthy, when their tricks are discovered and they are brought to the light, he lost his courage. Here is an opening, and if this work could have been followed up at once I am sure that good would have resulted.

We arrived home in the early part of June, and hurriedly arranged a place near the Sanitarium, where the wife could have rooms to herself, and headed for the field appointed, arriving on the morning of the 14th, the day set for the Saint Louis district conference. It was our first visit to this district, and nearly every face was a strange one, with the exceptions of the missionary force and the familiar face of an old-time friend and citizen of Lamoni, Brother Ed Bell, who, by the way, has developed into a musician and choir leader of no mean standing, and bids fair to make his presence felt in a wider scope than the Saint Louis District.

Following the conference, we began a tent meeting in the Lansdowne Branch, which bids fair to be a success, at least from the point of attendance and publicity. The Evening Sun, the leading daily paper of East Saint Louis, was ready and willing to do anything that was reasonable and fair for our people. Some time ago this paper gave several premiums for a subscription contest. The Saints of the Lansdowne Branch of East Saint Louis, Illinois, entered the contest and carried off the first prize, which was a nice player piano.

This seems to be a field of wonderful possibilities. There are opportunities for many more men than the conference sent us. We have seen and heard so much of the good work accomplished by our former missionary to this field, Elder J. A. Dowker, and have noted the universal love and esteem in which he is held by all the Saints, and we are sure that if he gets homesick in the far-away country of the North and should return home to see his family, he should be permitted to come back to this field and continue his good work. Brother John, you surely labored well.

We have found the Saints here anxious to get the gospel before the people. Most of the local men are up and doing, finding openings nearly every Sunday, which means results for good to the work. For the time being any mail addressed to the writer at 3038 Forest Place, East Saint Louis, Illinois, will reach me. Hoping for the success and triumph of the work in all the earth, I am as ever,

Your colaborer and earnest well-wisher,

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, June 20, 1914.

Editors Herald: We did not have the pleasure of welcoming you this week. This is the first time you have missed us this year, and we assure you you have been missed by us. We have sent many HERALDS to different places, and hope to give out more to enlighten the minds of others. We are very thankful for the knowledge the HERALD has brought us. Even little Raymond, only three years old, when the HERALD is delayed in coming, says, "Mamma, why doesn't the HERALD come?"

Last Sunday was Children's Day at Los Angeles. A goodly number were out. The children displayed their talents to a marked degree, and are to be encouraged for their efforts; for when they grow older their responsibility will not lessen; God will expect greater services when they have fully prepared themselves.

There is quite a little proselyting going on here in Los Angeles and elsewhere. Brethren Slye and Brooner are holding tent meetings at Pomona, with some encouragement. The enemy of righteousness is busy trying to interfere, yet thus far has not succeeded, and we hope will be overcome, and a good work done.

Brother Goodrich is having pleasant surprises in his efforts among the Armenians and Russians in Los Angeles. We understand Brother McDowell is doing successful work at San Diego. The Saints are rejoicing and the Good Spirit has been felt by all to a marked degree. All rejoice that the Lord has manifested that he has been pleased.

The reunion time is near at hand, and we are all I believe hoping and praying that a greater number will be assembled than ever before, and that we may have greater reasons for rejoicing. Our humble prayer is that we may have a refreshing season, and that as of old those who may have grown cold may return with greater zeal, that we may all be one in Christ, for he has said, If ye are not one ye are not mine. All want to be his, I am sure.

As these are perilous times we all long to see the time of his coming, that peace may be established for ever. With love to all, we are

Yours in bonds,
MINNIE AND OSCAR ROCKHOLD.

TINGLEY, IOWA, June 23, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have not been silent because I am less interested in this marvelous work, but because I have been employed in other lines to make my ministrations more efficient, and to supply where I thought it for the time more necessary. There is no time nor place where a slackened interest should appear, and as I grow in years and experience, I can see less necessity for the explosive force of motive power to advance this work. While that form of doctrine that has been delivered to us should be observed, yet we must be more guarded or we will progress into such formalism that the spiritual side of our cause will be largely lost sight of.

There is unnecessary fear being expressed in regard to the world leading our young people away from the spirituality of the message we advocate. This fear does not, in my opinion, exist as does another more potent one, and that is that older people are adopting the ways of the world and through them our young people are being led. The departure of the older ones into worldliness is apologized for by hiding behind what they say that the young people must have in order to have young heads on young shoulders; and so the older members are hiding behind an excuse, when if they would stand by the leadings of the Spirit, and seek to devise ways of interesting our young people, ways not of the world—the young people would be more highly entertained and spiritually blessed, and the older members would not appear so foolish.

The action of the convention last spring in providing and selecting a temperance superintendent was a move in the right direction, and came not too soon, hardly as soon as it should. Now that we are on the right path to assist in the great fight for national prohibition inaugurated by the great temperance forces, the most prominent among which are the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the Anti-Saloon League, we as a church should make our position known as prominently as possible by some of our young men and women becoming experts in this line of work, and associating with these forces in places where they could make their influence the most effective.

Having been associated with the State Anti-Saloon League of Iowa for several years, I have been made aware of the great benefit such association has been to our work; and the slight influence we have been permitted to exert in the forward movement of the temperance cause in that position has been acknowledged to be beneficial to that work. Upon several occasions have I been privileged to hear the approving statement made that when a temperance fight was on men knew where to find the Latter Day Saints. As one prominent worker said to me when deploring the position that some of the ministers had taken upon the question that seemed to be vital to the effective advancement of the temperance work in Iowa, "I know where to find you upon all these questions, and it is some consolation to have a few that I can depend upon at all times." I believe that commendation was a great credit to our work than the individual referred to, for what I am this work has made me.

God knows my early environments and their influence over my life towards intemperance; and how my early home and my dear mother suffered because of it; and how I and those dear to me have been financially hindered in the work of the church and in securing advantages in a social way, conditions that would not have existed had it not been for intemperance in that home. I am as a brand plucked from the burning, and I feel that I can do no less than to assist to avert such experiences in other homes.

I am not favorable to too much of the canvasser's style being used in the work of the church, either in trying to get people to unite with the church or in raising means for its advancement. God's way is to let our moderation be known to all, and to manifest faith that it is not he that planteth or he that watereth that is anything, but that it is God who giveth the increase, as taught by former apostles, and that we should keep out of debt, by owing no man anything. Now that the church has become involved we should pay the debt, and not make so much prominence to the fact that we are trying to be honest to our creditors. The first principle of honesty has not been observed, that of keeping out of debt; and now we should be very punctual in paying the debt, not because God had to command it, but because it is a duty we knew was a righteous one. In using the canvassers' style in trying to raise means to pay indebtedness, sometimes, and quite often, questionable methods are employed, that is, it is very questionable whether God approves of such methods; and sometimes false accusations are employed, unthoughtedly, by saying that which causes heartaches on the part of members who are doing all they can consistent with honesty to themselves and those dependent upon them, when it is said "I know you could do something more than you are doing if you would." Many times such statements are in fact false accusations. Having realized this in several cases, I enter my protest against such procedure in the interest of our glorious cause.

I had a dream a few nights ago, in which I was shown that the time is upon us when men will be appointed by the church to be specialists in locating the Saints in the regions round about and within the stakes already selected, and there must be a cleansing of ourselves, especially in these places, from some of the carnal excrescences that now affect us. I trust that I will assist in bringing myself to a condition as is indicated, one of the pure in heart.

Since privileged in being away from my home, and from the necessary work there and for the quorums, I have been engaged in tent work at Tingley, Iowa. The work has not met with a very hearty response, although I am treated kindly, and those who attend seem to be very appreciative, of the word preached. The disease called automobilis, or something like it, is taking the time, the attention and the means of professed followers of Christ, and this is as bad or worse than moving picture shows and clubs or orders. All have a tendency to detract from spirituality, and active and energetic work in the church. The Saints here are a faithful few, God bless them. On last Sunday night the wind blew such a gale that it became necessary to raze the tent; some of the Saints went to one of the prominent churches here and found only fifteen in attendance, while our attendance would average something like from twenty-five to thirty, and nearly all of them elderly people, some who seldom attend any religious services unless it be a funeral or a memorial service. The spirit has been my support, the seed is sown, and I pray that God will give the increase.

If there are any points where it is desired the tent should be used please inform me or Brother Columbus Scott at your earliest convenience. Several places are wishing the tent, but we wish to minimize the expense by not making transportation expenses very large.

There are so many demands for finances, local and general as well as special, that it is a serious question how to distribute the small stipends that the members of the church have to give; and it is a question of vital importance to the future of this work as to whether these amounts are being properly distributed. I can see but one way for a proper distribution, and that is through one central head, and not for everyone to be his own bishop, as is so largely the case at the present. This work is primarily a missionary work, and I am of the opinion that too much of the funds are being used in local and special ways to the injurious effects of the missionary department.

Those who have given their all to the missionary work can not be expected to be in a position to meet the growing demands occasioned by age and infirmity. While we walk by faith, yet to have in sight a large indebtedness, and then when we by reason of increasing age can not continue as active as we once could, and for that reason can not give the satisfaction that we once could, to be dropped from the missionary work without provision made for the care of dear ones who have thus sacrificed, is causing some alarm, and should be fully explained that others who are fast approaching the age of disability may not see the shadow that now appears on the horizon of many. This I am sure will be provided for in the near future so that some of the present feelings of doubt as to where this thing may lead may not have any occasion to exist even by appearance.

With a bright hope that the ultimate will be glorious, though many shadows now appear, is that for which I am laboring, and have faith that it will appear. I am

J. F. MINTUN.

VIRDEN, MANITOBA, June 23, 1914.

Editors Herald: Your valuable paper is freighted with precious truths of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, in the articles of instruction from many of our bright and able missionaries all over the world and the letters from many of God's people telling of the experiences they have come through as a result of the angel's message. I have found much encouragement and spiritual strength in these letters and articles.

I am a young man twenty-six years old. It is now nearly nine years since I obeyed the gospel. I am what may be called an orphan. When I was between three and four years of age for some cause unknown to me, my parents separated, leaving myself and two younger sisters alone in the world. I know nothing of my parents. For fifteen years I saw no one of my kinsmen. I grew up as a wild, uncultivated plant. But under the guiding hand of Him who is a friend to the orphan I have been led to hear of the precious angel's message. I entered upon the new and everlasting covenant to be renewed and receive grace for grace.

Among strangers I received a common school education, for which I am thankful. My guardian was not a member of any church. I used to attend the Presbyterian Church and Sunday school more for pastime and fun than to learn. I did not care to let people see me reading the Bible or talking about religion. So many made light of religion and of religious people that I did not care to have much to do with it. But I used to take a Bible storybook and read it by myself. I always believed there was a God.

There is one thing I must thank my mother for. She taught me a little prayer which I repeated at night on going to bed. Many times in after years when I was alone or in fear or danger I offered a little prayer to God, asking him to watch over me and keep me from all harm and danger.

of my books. I read it over and over until I was able to repeat it. While I did not always say it before I went to bed, many times I did so. While no one on earth seemed to care for me, I felt that it was good to go to the Lord in secret prayer.

Without a friend to teach me the word of God and hearing many vile and vulgar stories and seeing people do evil, I partook of these things more or less. I was often severely whipped by my guardians for doing things that they themselves did. I remember a Scotch lady who used to talk to me and tell me about God, how he loved everybody and did not like to see his children do that which was wicked. Her talking and reasoning with me did more good than all the whippings I ever received.

When seventeen years of age I met an aunt and uncle who belonged to the church, when I heard for the first time about the Latter Day Saints. Many evil stories were circulated about these people. I was not interested other than being a little prejudiced. I moved with my people to another place where I started attending a Presbyterian Church. I sometimes attended the Methodist services, but seemed more drawn to the Presbyterian. A Presbyterian evangelist held a series of revival meetings which I attended. This was the first time in my life that I made any outward demonstration of a desire to turn from evil and serve God.

While I had not studied the Bible much, yet I could see that there was a difference between the denominations. I used to question in my mind which of these churches was the most closely following the teachings of the Bible. All taught that it did not make any material difference which church you belonged to so long as you were a member of some church and believed that Jesus is the Son of God, and that he died to save sinners.

While attending these revivals I ventured to the penitent form, as they called it, and confessed my sins and that Jesus was the Son of God, that he came down and died for me, and I thanked God that I was saved. While away from the meetings I could not believe that I was converted or saved. There always seemed to be something whispering to me that I was not saved.

At this time I began to argue with my uncle, and undertook to show him wherein he was wrong. In every discussion I went down in defeat. I concluded I would not go to church any more. I began to study the Bible. My aunt sent to the Herald Publishing House for literature, which I read with deep interest. I compared the same with the Bible and earnestly prayed to the Lord for light. With this reading and the instruction of my aunt and uncle I could readily see the similarity of the teachings of the Reorganized Church and those of the Bible. Having heard so many stories about the Saints, I feared to acknowledge the truth, feeling that there might be something deceptive about the work after all. I kept on studying and praying and seemed more and more enlightened by the Spirit. I at last yielded to its pleadings and all doubt fled from my mind. After this my mind was greatly enlightened so that the Scriptures seemed to be unfolded in great plainness. I was eager to yield obedience to the principles of truth.

At this time taking advantage of a harvest excursion from Ontario to Manitoba, I went to Treherne, where I had been informed there was a branch of the church. I met a man on the station platform who was looking for men to help with the threshing. I agreed to work for him. It was a week before I located any Saints. I then located Brother Nelson Wilson, who was in the furniture business at Treherne. The next day was Sunday, a beautiful day, September 16, 1906. With Brother Wilson and wife I went sixteen miles to where the Saints met for worship, where Brother Wilson led me into the watery grave. For the first time in my life I felt

When I was first able to read, there was a little prayer in one that I had done the will of the Lord.

I have failed many times to come up to the standard in moral and spiritual things, but I can truly say that the promise made by the Savior wherein he says that he that will do the will of the Father shall know the doctrine has been verified in my experience. I am glad the gospel has found me. I am striving to march Zionward with the people of God. I was called last January to the office of deacon. I was ordained under the hands of Brethren Christy and Fligg, and have enjoyed the spirit of my office and calling to a marked degree and have been greatly blessed of God. I am at present isolated from church privileges. I request the prayers of the Saints that I may live a pure life in the sight of God and men. May God bless all, and may we have a successful year.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

J. E. MCGREGOR.

Eastern Iowa

The Eastern Iowa district conference met in Davenport on June 13 and 14, and a very profitable as well as a pleasant time was had. There was not as large an attendance as we had hoped for, but those who did attend were full of zeal and did what they could to make the conference a success. We were especially fortunate in having with us our missionary in charge, Brother James A. Gillen, who endeared himself to all and assisted greatly in the transaction of business which will affect the district in the future.

The district has labored under some discouraging conditions in certain localities in the past, but the clouds are breaking away, and we hope to see a brighter day dawn in the near future. In the election of officers Elder C. G. Dykes was chosen president of the district, and Elder I. A. Chamberlain vice president. The reports from different branches show a gain in membership in most instances. Some of our trouble in certain branches is a lack of officers to carry on the work. There are some young men who in time, if faithful, we hope to see engaged in ministerial work for the church.

In our observations we have felt the need of men who are willing to make a sacrifice for the sake of the work. The Lord is calling for humble, devout workers who are ready to lay their life on the altar. Such men when they respond will make the future standard bearers of the gospel to the nations who will accept the message of life.

At the present time we have laboring in this district under General Conference appointment, Brother D. T. Williams, who is sure will prove himself to be an able representative of the church, Brother A. Welsh and the writer. There is a wide field opening up, and we fully expect to see many accept the gospel. In all our work for the church during ten years of missionary labor I believe I am safe in saying that interest has never been better than it has been in some places here in this field. The name of Latter Day Saints is becoming more honored as the people come in touch with the principles which underlie the great latter-day message. Just recently some men who are constantly before the public have shown a marked respect for us and what the church stands for. These men we are sure will ever be ready to correct any misstatement as to what we believe, and in this way do much good in correcting some of the falsehoods put in circulation by those who oppose the truth.

Taken as a whole, my work in the district has been of a very pleasant character. I have found some very earnest and energetic workers, yet we regret to say some are not doing as much as they could. But there is hope that they will make an effort to do more. The weight of responsibility must be felt by men before they will do much.

Some of the branches in the district are getting along nicely. No trouble, and each seeking the welfare of his brother or neighbor. How pleasant to labor under such conditions. In some other branches there are things which give annoyance. But I see progress in nearly every branch where I have been.

Many throughout the district are preparing to attend the reunion to be held at Nauvoo, beginning August 14. The writer also expects to be present at that gathering.

Praying for the onward progress of the work, I am

In gospel bonds,

Central Illinois

I consider myself fortunate to be associated with Brother R. L. Fulk in my missionary labors, together with such a noble band of Saints as I have been privileged to meet at Beardstown, Springfield and Taylorville. I am truly thankful for the fellowship of all.

We brought out the old tent and set it up here in Taylorville about ten days ago. The meetings will continue another week, and possibly longer. Last night the tent was full, with many standing on the outside. The theme for the last three nights has been the restoration. The presence of the Spirit has been keenly felt in our efforts to tell the story. One night in preaching on the subject of the laying on of hands for the reception of the Spirit, the Spirit of God came to us in confirming power, going out to the audience. It is wonderful to stand under the influence of God's Holy Spirit. To him be all the praise.

There is a noble band of Saints here. They have come to our rescue in many ways. The choir, about eighteen altogether, under the able instruction of Brother Richards, have been at their post every night. Their anthems especially have been attractive.

Last Sunday afternoon we had one of the grandest social meetings here that I have ever attended. The songs were sweet, the testimonies grand, and the Spirit came in all its glowing power to cheer, and to encourage. It is good to be a Saint in latter days.

Brother Fulk went to Springfield last Sunday to fill an appointment. The Saints at that place have rented a hall for one service a week, on Sunday. We just recently spent about three weeks at that city. We found plenty to do. The Brighamites are there with about four or five missionaries all the time. We found their trail and exposed some of their deceptive work. The end is not yet. We are trying to make arrangements to go back there and spend five or six weeks, canvassing the city thoroughly. We consider this one of the most important points in the district. We have some good material there also. Brother and Sister Bolt made us feel at home. In fact, all the Saints rendered all the assistance possible.

Brother Fulk wrote a column article which was published in two of the Springfield dailies, showing the difference between the Utah Mormons and the Reorganized Church.

Since coming to Taylorville the papers have been opened to us, which opportunity we have certainly improved. Every day since the tent meetings started a synopsis of the sermons has been given.

With the tent, street preaching, the prayers of the Saints, and printers' ink we intend to fight it out along this line, "if it takes all summer."

Your truly,

TAYLORVILLE, ILLINOIS, June 29, 1914.

A. M. BAKER.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

June 14 was Children's Day. The total attendance of the Sunday school was nine hundred and ninety-seven. At the usual time for morning service the primary and beginner departments gave an interesting program of vocal and instrumental music and readings, supplemented by the presenting of diplomas and a few speeches. At 1.30 p. m., about twenty-six children were baptized, who in the afternoon were confirmed.

At the evening hour the intermediates and juniors assisted by the junior orchestra rendered a delightful service before a large audience in charge of Superintendent D. J. Krahl and his helpers. At the close notices were read from the stand of the Summer Daily Vacation Bible School, to begin on June 29.

A. H. Parsons on the evening of June 21 began a series of lectures on the first principles. The Sunday school orchestra renders very efficient service at the meetings, and merits good support from those who attend their socials, one of which occurred recently.

On Wednesday as usual the faithful sisters of the Aid Society to the number of twenty-five met for steady work all day at quilting. These and the Patronesses of the Sanitarium are doing very acceptable work for that institution, the beneficent services of which are a great help to the many patients who enter daily its sacred precincts. Our worthy and faithful Brother Keck, still there, seems to be greatly improved in health. Several of our afflicted sisters are receiving much benefit.

We wish to congratulate our brethren of Charlestown, Massachusetts, who, on June 17, no doubt enjoyed in our native city the grand civic display commemorating the battle of Bunker Hill and the dedication of its monument, at which your humble servant was present seventy-one years ago.

Battles for the right seem still to be the order of the day; and right here in the beautiful center place of Zion there appears to be within our hearts and the hearts of all right-thinking people a longing and lasting desire to fight for the abolishment of the liquor traffic in our midst.

There are several of our rising, industrious young people who merit our sincere sympathy and support in their worthy endeavors. Among them we mention Brother A. Logeman and his friend, a young man who has been of help to him, Allen Forbes, both of whom are wireless telegraphers, and also our young brother, Julian Warnock, who over two years ago enlisted in the United States Navy, and who will soon be with us. We certainly rejoice to see our young men and women interested in all the noble attainments of life. And now that steps are being taken for the abolishment of the liquor traffic from this community we feel that they will be a power for good in this direction.

And thus we are moving ahead.

ABBIE HORTON.

Pastoral

To the Saints of Oregon; Greeting: Having been appointed to your State I take this means of addressing you concerning the work in which we have a mutual interest. Some of you are living in organized branches, while others are among the scattered Saints. While we have a desire to build up and strengthen existing organizations, yet we must not forget the necessity of making new openings. My calling commits me to the latter-day work, but I am willing to do the former as occasion permits or necessity requires.

My certificate of appointment assigns me to the whole State, and, so far as the missionary in charge will allow, it is my intention to visit all its various parts. This I desire both in the interests of the work and my own education and experience.

I especially invite the attention of the isolated Saints. Please write me regarding the needs of and opportunity for missionary work in your several localities. I do not want any of you to be able to say, "Brother Barmore wouldn't come." I'll come if I know where to go. You must tell me. I have been in your State only once. I crossed over the line into the southeastern part when I was a missionary in California fifteen years ago. Of other parts I am largely ignorant.

My address is 1941 Washington Street, Portland.

In gospel bonds,

A. C. BARMORE.

A New Book of Sermons

The Gospel Messenger

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c.

Died

LAWN.—Rhoda A. Lawn, wife of Elder Jasper H. Lawn, was born in Gentry County, Missouri, December 1, 1845, died at Hollister, California, June 19, 1914. She leaves husband, ten children, and many friends. Her children, married and members of the church, were all present at the funeral. Sister Lawn was a faithful, devoted Saint. It was said by her neighbors who lived by her for thirty years that they never heard her speak ill of anyone nor anyone speak ill of her. What a beautiful record to meet on the other side. She has borne faithful testimony to the truth, her life being in harmony therewith. Services in Methodist Episcopal church at Hollister, C. W. Hawkins, of San Jose, officiating. Interment in Odd Fellows' Cemetery.

A Vacation on a Ranch

this summer will do you more good than a barrel of medicine. Get out into the open, close to nature and have the time of your life. Rest, relax and recreate. Ride over sun-flooded trails in the hills; row on silvery lakes; fish in shady brooks; tramp down winding paths among the trees; loaf in soft valleys of green; stroll in the moonlight; eat of the fat of the land and sleep like a babe. Such a vacation pays tremendous health dividends. You will come back feeling like a different person.

In the Black Hills of South Dakota, in the Big Horn Mountains of Wyoming, in the Buffalo Bill country, along the Cody Road into Yellowstone Park, there are countless places where you can spend just such a vacation and at a very moderate cost. The Hot Springs (S. ### IMMORTALITY

"MORE LIFE AND FULLER, THAT I WANT"

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith delivered at Graceland College at vesper services, Sunday evening, January 18, 1914. Reported by Elizabeth France.)

(Note.—The line of thought followed in this sermon was suggested to a degree by a study of the book entitled, The Assurance of Immortality, by Harry Emerson Fosdick,<sup>1</sup> a splendid work that can not fail to arouse thought and stimulate faith in immortality.)

If in this life only we have hope, we are of all creatures most miserable.

Our Savior, Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

The question of immortality is one that appeals to both heart and brain. I believe that it is an appropriate theme to consider at this twilight hour. Soon or late the twilight hour will come for each of us, when we must give it consideration.

Immortality was formerly believed in by practically everyone. It was generally accepted that man would live after death. I refer especially to those living in Christian nations. Even those who were not distinctly religious believed that life continued beyond the grave.

But to-day we find a change of sentiment, and there are many people who do not believe in immortality. There are many who treat it with indifference, even at times with a degree of flippancy.

MATERIALISM HAS WORST HELL OF ALL

I presume that this attitude of indifference is assumed in some cases in a spirit of bravado, by individuals who feel that having lost faith in immortality they may just as well shrug their shoulders and put the best possible face on a bad situation that they can not cure. But when we come face to face with the loss of loved ones, when in hours of contemplation our spiritual vision is opened, this attitude of indifference breaks down, and even the agnostic expresses a feeling of great concern. Ingersoll, standing at the side of his brother's grave, declared, "In the hour of death hope sees a shining star, and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing."

And Huxley, who was himself agnostic touching this question of immortality, wrote to his friend, John Morley, in 1883, in this language:

It flashes across me at all sorts of times with a sort of horror that in 1900 I shall probably know no more of what is going on than I did in 1800. I would sooner be in hell a good deal, at any rate in one of the upper circles where the climate and company are not too trying.

So it has been reserved for the creed of materialism to imagine the worst hell of all.

Darwin said, "It is an intolerable thought that man and all other sentient beings are doomed to complete annihilation, after such long-continued, slow progress."

REASONS FOR A CHANGED SENTIMENT

There are causes, many of them, perhaps, why men and women have lost faith in immortality. We can only enumerate a few of them. There is a large class who have lost interest in the question because this "present life" absorbs so much of their attention. Jesus said, "the cares of this world"; and since that day the cares of this world have increased an hundred fold. Life is more intense, it is more varied, it is more strenuous, it is more exacting in all its phases; and many individuals permit it to absorb all of their attention. They permit this life to crowd out all consideration of the "life that is to come."

Then there is another class, who have acquired social consciousness as they term it, and they give all their thought, all their ambition to the advancement of society. They do not believe in immortality for themselves. They say they do not care for it. They ask, What does it matter if I die and cease to exist, so long as society goes forward and my children and your children are on a higher plane than we occupy to-day? They look for the conservation of all social, moral, and intellectual gains in society, and not in the individual. That may be a noble sentiment; but it is a short-sighted one, as we shall see before we close.

WHEN DID MAN BECOME MAN?

Then there is another class who have become skeptical regarding immortality because of modern scientific theories, such as the theory of evolution, and psychology and kindred sciences. Now to-night we are not discussing either the truth or the value of these scientific theories. We are simply stating a fact that a great many people have observed.

The theory of evolution tells us that man has come up out of the slime, through the reptiles and the beasts, and men say, Can immortality come from such a source? And evolutionists turn on us and say, At what particular period in this progress did man become immortal?

Now of course the theory of evolution rests upon a hypothesis, like most scientific theories, and we should remember that.<sup>1</sup> But if I were to grant that it is correct in all its assumptions and were to reply to that question I would say, Tell us at what period man became man and ceased to be a beast, and then our answer will be rendered less difficult. Point out to us the individual who became a man while his father and mother were still beasts, then we can begin to surmise where the physical organism of man first became fit to receive the indwelling of the immortal spirit of man.

MAN NEITHER HARP NOR MUSIC

Psychology, by pointing out the very close relationship between brain and mind, has led a great many to believe that when the brain is destroyed the mind ceases. We know what particular part of the brain controls the motions of our hands and our feet, and if that particular part is destroyed we can not move those members of our body. We know what particular part of the brain can think on abstract questions, and if that part is destroyed we can not think. We know what particular part of the brain regulates speech, and if that part is destroyed we can not talk. And so men conclude that if all the brain is destroyed by death the mind is destroyed and man has ceased to exist.

But this question is not altogether new. I read that it was discussed in the death cell where Socrates waited for the hemlock. Some of those who were there with him argued that man was like a harp. His emotions, his thoughts, his deeds were merely the music that issued from the harp, and when the harp was destroyed man had ceased to exist. But Socrates replied that man was neither the harp nor the music; that man was the player who played upon the harp, and even if the harp were destroyed and the music interrupted the man would still exist and might find another and better instrument of expression.

CREED OF MATERIALISM

If we adopt the thought that death ends all, we are in essence adopting a creed and must give reasons for it. It is just as much a doctrine, just as much a creed as the Christian doctrine and creed that the human soul is immortal. Some of those who have indorsed it have defended it just as dogmatically as anybody ever did the other side of the question. And we might just as well face the issue and decide for ourselves the logical conclusions that will follow such a position. We believe that those conclusions will lead us to see that granting the creed of materialism to be correct, the universe is irrational and unjust, and we are the victims of forces that are both unreasonable and unjust. Having struggled upward for centuries untold, and having finally brought into existence personality, something that can feel, that can aspire, that can sacrifice and struggle and die, the most valuable thing in the universe, then these insensate forces blindly destroy the climax of their production.

We must then conclude that the great soul of Abraham Lincoln was sacrificed "out of deference" to the few particles of matter that were deranged by the bullet of the assassin. That great soul was made dependent on and inferior to a few particles of matter.

What would we think of a man who should toil for many years to produce a violin, a perfect instrument, and learn to play upon it a divine melody, and then take the violin and smash it to pieces? We would say that insanity entered in somewhere in that proceeding. What shall we say of the forces of the universe that for centuries have toiled to produce a human spirit that can think, feel, aspire, love, hate, reason, and then at the hour of death smash it all to pieces and start the process all over again with some other individual? As some one has said, "Is God blowing soap bubbles? Did he dip the pipe of his power into the suds of matter and blow the character of Jesus that it might entertain him with its iridescence, burst to his satisfaction and be gone?" Is there then no reasonable process going on in nature to which we can fix our faith?

A LONG LOOK INTO THE FUTURE

Right here we come to that question of the short-sightedness of those who are so willing that their forces and powers shall be merged into society,— <sup>1</sup>Science forges ahead pretty rapidly nowadays, and in regard to evolution, for example, many of Darwin's theories have fallen to the ground. In fact, the whole question of evolution is in the melting pot now, and it is not easy to foresee what will come out as a result of current research on the difficult problems of variation, heredity, etc.—Professor Frank Cavers, D. Sc., professor of biology at Hartford University College, Southampton, in Religious Beliefs of Scientists, p. 77.

OUR SANITARIUM

It is greatly to be desired that every Latter Day Saint should feel that the Sanitarium at Independence is our institution. Could the ambitions of those in charge be known and appreciated all would feel an interest in its success not now felt in many quarters. That ambition is succinctly set out by Doctor Harrington in a letter to the undersigned. He wrote:

The goal is to make this institution that which God intended: a place where God is sought for his direct blessing on the sick, and also for the direction his divine counsel will give to the workers that represent the human part or side of the institution.

Wide as is the field of activity and usefulness of the Sanitarium as at present organized, its activity and sphere of utility could be much widened under proper conditions, to the benefit of many not now reached but who are needing its help. There are many Saints who desire to send to the Sanitarium their tuberculous relatives, while other requests have come to admit cases of mental disorders, some of which, without doubt, under proper observation and treatment would be found to be temporary and curable. Cures in such cases mean lives saved from restraint in asylums. Neither tuberculous nor mental cases are admitted to the Sanitarium now because of lack of proper quarters and facilities for such.

From our Sanitarium should radiate activities tending to inculcate and propagate among our people a better and more adequate knowledge of the laws of health. To do this demands a corps of workers to go into the homes and teach not only the care of the sick but those not sick as well, so disease may be prevented. Therapeutics are good, but prophylaxis is better. Not infrequently there are those who while not suffering from any organic troubles are yet unable to coordinate their activities with the demands of duty, who could by proper rest and a rural sojourn be so recuperated from overwrought nerves that functionizing as a worker and citizen would again become a pleasure.

The foregoing contains a hint of the possibilities before our institution. I shall hope that its supporters and friends will be so many and strong that before long it shall be enabled to enter into broader fields of activity.

Many have already been blessed by its good work. May its good work go on.

Brother Leonard Harrington, now in charge, comes to the institution peculiarly qualified for its work. Along with a splendid training and long study of medicine that has qualified him as a pathologist and diagnostician, he brings a consecration to service that is cheering to us upon whom great responsibility has been laid. We feel that his devotion to the cause we love can not but have a good effect as an example to others who have talents to consecrate to a good cause. We suggest that those of the church who are studying medicine and allied subjects get in touch with Doctor Harrington with a view to broadening the scope of the Sanitarium by saintly coordination of consecrated effort and cooperation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

CONFERENCE AT LAMONI.—As will be seen by notice appearing in another department of the HERALD, the First Presidency has appointed Lamoni, Iowa, as the place for the convening of the next General Conference, April 6, 1915. Satisfactory arrangements have been made for improved railway service.

A MEMORIAL ADDRESS.—Elder H. A. Stebbins was called from Lamoni to Allendale, Missouri, to deliver the memorial address there this year. Lincoln's Gettysburg speech furnished the basis of his sermon. A synopsis of this address appears in The Grant City Star, which represents Elder Stebbins as especially impressing the young with the need of individual honesty, honor and purity that the work of state and Nation may be carried on as begun.

REJECTED BY THE BUILDERS.—The following extract is from the Saint Louis Republic, June 29, 1914, headed "Latter Day Saints Barred."

The Reformed Church of Latter Day Saints, the Christian Scientists and certain other churches were held not eligible to membership in the association Thursday of the International Sunday School Association. The membership question has been before the association for several years, and a former committee urged against affiliation on the ground that the church of the Latter Day Saints placed the Book of Mormon on a par with the Bible.

LONG TRIP FOR BOY.—The following from the Kansas City Journal for June 23 refers to the little son of Brother and Sister J. Charles May.

Samuel Roderick May, four years old, who recently came from Tahiti Islands, is a visitor at Independence. His parents are mission workers for the Latter Day Saints Church in the islands, and they sent Samuel Roderick to this country to spend the summer. The little fellow made the trip of four thousand miles without a "whimper." He came to America with Mrs. H. H. Savage, a mission worker, and then by easy stages with other friends to Independence. He will spend the summer with relatives in Lamoni, Iowa.

SPELLING CONTEST.—A spelling match was held in the dining hall of the Stone Church Tuesday evening, under the auspices of the Sanitarium Patronesses' Society, the proceeds to be applied to the fund for the erection of a laundry plant at the Independence Sanitarium. A large crowd was present, about sixty taking part in the spelling contest. Miss Jennie Clemens and Merrill Etzenhouser pronounced the words and Miss Caroline Stoll assisted as judge or referee. Mrs. A. A. Horton, Mrs. B. M. Anderson and Vernon Lee were the champion spellers, all those on the opposing side having been retired. Among the spellers were newspaper men, doctors, lawyers, educators and merchants.—The Independence (Missouri) Examiner, June 11, 1914.

SOMEWHAT DIVIDED.—Early in his career Alexander Campbell announced the following rule, which to this day is the slogan of both factions of the church instituted by Mr. Campbell: "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; and where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." The difficulty among this people seems to have been to discern with any degree of unanimity where the Scriptures do and do not speak, which difficulty finally resulted in the division of the church. Difficulties continued between the bodies, and within both bodies. To what extent the nonprogressives do not speak where the Scriptures speak, nor remain silent, either, and consequently nurse a multitude of disputations, is indicated in the following paragraph by Daniel Somner, leading nonprogressive elder, and appearing in the Apostolic Review for April 7, leading nonprogressive periodical:

"Facts are stubborn things," is an old and true saying. And it is a fact that in near or about every congregation where certain papers and their friends have flourished, the brethren are divided about "voting and holding office in civil governments," about "attitude of the body in time of prayer," about "relaptism," "right hands of fellowship," "special providence," also about "official eldership," "woman's silence," "literature for Bible classes," "the right to have Bible classes in the meetinghouse," and about "laying on of hands in appointing officers in the church," also about "religio-secular colleges." The Review did not introduce even one of these questions.

The Review may not have "introduced" these questions, but it has generously contributed to the discussion of them. The Review of course holds that those not in harmony with its utterances are unscriptural, and vice versa. And so the never-ending disputation goes on, Scripture or no Scripture.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

SANE FOURTH.—Reported casualties on July 4 show a decrease over previous years. So far as reported there were fourteen killed and three hundred and eighty-two injured.

IMMIGRATION.—Immigration into United States for the year ending June 30 reached a total of 1,300,000, exceeding by 200,000 that of the previous year. This number included 270,000 Italians, 140,000 Russians, 130,000 Poles, and 10,000 Japanese.

THE HAGUE.—The Dutch Government has issued invitations to the nations participating in the second Hague peace conference, asking them to appoint delegates to constitute a committee to formulate a definite program for the third conference. This conference will meet at The Hague, June 1, 1915.

IRISH HOME RULE.—On the 6th, the measure to amend the Irish Home Rule Bill passed its second reading in the House of Lords by a vote of 273 to 10. Immediately upon its passage amendments were offered to exclude the whole of Ulster, without referendum. There are said to be in Ireland and ready for action 84,000 Ulster volunteers opposed by 80,000 Nationalist volunteers. The Ulster volunteers threaten rebellion if the Home Rule Bill is finally passed including Ulster. The Nationalists threaten to take the field if the bill fails of passage, or is passed excluding Ulster. Leaders in Parliament hope for a compromise.

MEXICAN WAR.—General Obregon reported from Guadalajara that on the 8th, opposing twelve thousand Federalists and after a battle of three days, he had taken that city, with five thousand prisoners and all the artillery and ammunition of the enemy. The differences between Carranza and Villa are said to have been at least temporarily adjusted, with Carranza recognized as the commander in chief of all the Constitutionalists, and Villa as second in rank, and in full charge of the campaign against San Luis Potosi and the South. The plan is for the three divisions of the Constitutionalist army to converge at a favorable point and push on toward Mexico City. It was reported on the 8th from Vera Cruz that the family of Huerta had sailed from that place to Puerto, Mexico, presumably to be joined by Huerta himself if flight from the country should become necessary.

MEXICO AND UNITED STATES.—"On to Mexico City" is the answer made to Carranza by his generals and army, consequently the mediators anticipate from Carranza an unfavorable reply in the matter of the proposed conference between Constitutionalist and Huerta representatives. The leaders of the Constitutionalist army are reported as being eager to carry out the "plan of Guadalupe," which is the capture of Mexico City, the establishment of a military government with Carranza at its head, the election of a new congress to enact legislation providing for special election of president and vice president. It will be remembered that execution of the protocols signed by United States and Huerta representatives is contingent upon a provisional government and pacification in Mexico.

IMMORTALITY

"let the individual perish and let society go on." That assumption is all right if we take "a short look into the future." But if we take a "long look into the future" we discover there is absolutely nothing in it that is worthy of our consideration. Because if we look far enough we discover that even as the individual must perish, so sometime, somewhere, the race must perish. The world will have burned out. The race will have expended its initial impulse. And sometime, somewhere the last living man must go down to his grave in a world of graves.<sup>1</sup> Where then are the social gains? Where then are those things we have sacrificed for and bequeathed to society? They are lost. Even as the individual has perished; so the race itself has perished.

ABSORBED BY DEITY

And by the way, there is another class of people who say, "Oh, it doesn't matter concerning the individual. We are simply rays of light that are emitted from the great Creator. We shine here in darkness for a little while, and then go back and are merged into deity"; a sort of mystic idea, borrowed perhaps from oriental peoples. "What does it matter," they say, "if individuality perish, so long as all justice, morality, and truth that are in the individual flow back into the great source and are preserved?"

But remember this thought, these attributes we talk about that we do not want to have blotted out and lost, the attributes of love, justice, and mercy, and kindred noble traits, these are attributes that can be exercised only between and among individual entities. They can not be exercised by one individual upon himself alone. And so when we look far enough into the future and see this old planet nothing but a tomb, all those qualities gone back into God, we have God alone, all love, with nothing but himself to lavish that love upon; all justice, with no one to exercise justice toward but himself.

How much more sublime is the New Testament conception that we are "colaborers with God," that we are and always shall be, independent, ever-existing entities between whom and God there can always be this flow of justice and this continuation of love.

<sup>1</sup>The application of Stefan's law to the calculation of the mean temperature of the earth, at a given latitude, shows that at the latitude of 80 degrees, the temperature was in the neighborhood of 90 degrees Centigrade, when the sun's radius was about one and a half times its present dimensions, i. e., about two million years ago. Thus it would appear that life commenced on the earth in the vicinity of the poles. The same reasoning leads us to the conclusion that in less than two million years, when the sun's radius will be reduced by one tenth of its present value, the temperature on the earth will have fallen below 0 degree, even at the equator.—Scientific American, May 9, 1914.

One of the great characteristics of Christianity that distinguishes it from all other religions is the supreme importance that it attaches to the human soul. Christ died for those human souls. God recognizes them as colaborers with him, and unfolds before them an eternity in which they can serve him in the cause of righteousness.

But if we take this other material view and believe that death ends all, it all appears as great, irrational, unjust tragedy, and there is left no ground for either faith, hope, or charity. We can agree with the thought of that individual who said, "Is God indeed blowing soap bubbles?" For as sure as we live, as it is with the individual so shall it be with the race.

If the individual ceases to exist at death, so sooner or later will the race cease to exist. Then we see that Huxley was justified when he said, "I would sooner be in hell."

BETTER HAD MAN NEVER EXISTED

I will read a selection that expresses a similar idea:

Nevertheless, when, believing in annihilation, one takes account of the long travail of the ages, weighs in his imagination all the agony of struggle and misfortune there, and perceives the inevitable end, when, like a burned-out cinder, the earth whirls back to its primeval chaos, he can understand the meaning of the philosopher who wrote: "Considering the immense and protracted sorrows of mankind, it would have been better if the earth had remained like the moon, a mass of slag, idle and without a tenant."

The thought then is borne in upon us that if materialism is true, and death ends all, then the language that was used concerning the miserable Judas Iscariot may well be used concerning the entire human race. "It were better if he had never been born."

ALL ADEQUATE INCENTIVE GONE

This conception blots out from our philosophy faith, hope, and charity. There is no ground left for faith in God; there is no ultimate hope left for either the individual or the race; and there is no adequate incentive for charity. But the Apostle Paul says, "Now abideth faith, hope, charity." There is the contrast. This other philosophy takes away all hope of reward. No incentive left there. It takes away all fear of future punishment. No incentive left there. And it takes away that which is vastly higher and nobler than either of these, the impulse and the desire to serve, because it offers no adequate incentive to service, indicating as it does that there can be no ultimate fruitage of our service worthy the sacrifices we are called upon to make. Think what will be the moral condition of humanity if finally all become convinced of this philosophy and it is borne in upon their consciousness that such is true. I believe the moral condition of a large part of the world to-day is what it is because so many have subscribed to that thought.

A BETTER CREED

But how much higher and better the thought we have to present. We may say of all worthy men, as Tennyson said of Wellington,

We doubt not that for one so true
There must be other, nobler work to do.

Paul takes up the same thought and says that God has not baptized us with the spirit of fear; and he goes on to add:

But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect.

Instead of looking forward to a dark day when the last man shall die and human thought and activity shall cease and be no more for ever and for ever, we look forward to that great time when we shall come to this innumerable company of angels and the spirits of just men made perfect, the general assembly of the church of the first born.

WHERE REVELATION ENTERS IN

Should any man or woman hesitate in making a choice between these two conceptions, between these two creeds? Ah, but some one says, science has demonstrated that man is mortal, and that death ends all. That is a misconception. Science has never done anything of the kind. Some people assume that science has demonstrated the mortality of man; but, as one writer has said, "No man whose words are worth considering has ever taken such a position." Science has never demonstrated that death ends all, nor yet that life continues beyond the grave. We question whether science can ever demonstrate either position. Certainly we believe that science, in the very nature of the case, can not demonstrate that death ends all. And we doubt the ability of science to demonstrate life beyond the grave. In the very nature of the case demonstration can be made only by those who pass over to the other side, and the moment their demonstration is completed they are removed from the circle of mundane investigators. We can only learn what they have learned as we shall receive revelation from them or from some higher intelligence that knows what is existing on the other side.

Here is where religion enters in. It is not to the discredit of science that science has not settled this question, because it must be settled in some other way. Here is where revelation enters in. That is why Paul says that Jesus Christ has "brought immortality to light." It can not be brought to light in any other way. Jesus revealed it, not only by word, but also by his great experience when he came up on the other side of the grave and said that the keys of death and of hell were delivered into his hands.

NOT OPPOSED TO SCIENCE

But a belief in immortality is not inconsistent with scientific research and enlightenment. This is indicated by the fact that such men as Sir Oliver Lodge in natural science, Professor William James in psychology, Hermann Lotze in philosophy, and William Osler in medicine have been believers in the immortality of the soul. They found nothing in science, neither did many others, who have entered into profound research and investigation, to convince them that man is not immortal.<sup>1</sup>

THE ELEMENT OF MYSTERY

But men say immortality is so mysterious. Yes, indeed, it is mysterious. We can not understand how the spirit enters into man and operates through human brain tissue to think and to feel. But if we take the other view of the situation we do not escape from mystery, in fact it becomes even more mysterious. And that individual who turns from a belief in immortality and takes up with materialism to escape mystery and miracle "is like the individual who jumped into the river to escape getting wet when it rained." He plunges from one mystery into many others. For certainly one of two things is correct: either personality operates through brain tissue, which is sufficiently mysterious; or else brain tissues creates personality and mind, which is infinitely more strange and mysterious. If we adopt the theory of materialism then the matter that otherwise might have gone to make a turnip or a cabbage or a pumpkin when properly diverted and converted into human brain cells, suddenly becomes capable in and of itself of thinking and feeling and sacrificing, and willing to die in the interests of truth.

Is a thought like that capable of gaining our credence? Again I will read an extract from this book to which I have already referred, because it presents this thought so clearly.

But if the brain conceived as the instrument of personality is an enigma, what is the mystery of the brain, conceived as the creator of personality! That is the alternative. Either mind uses brain or is produced by it. If our physical structure is not the instrument on which we play, our physical structure is our originator, and we are creatures whose builder and maker is brain. . . .

Has each cell a mental aspect? If each cell has, how can it communicate its mental power, and arrange with its neighbors so to contribute theirs, that altogether they shall produce an Emancipation Proclamation or a determination to die on Calvary rather than be untrue? The thing is inconceivable.

And when Latimer, burning at the stake in Oxford Square, said to his companion in martyrdom, "Be of good comfort, Master Ridley, and play the man. We shall this day light such a candle, by God's grace, in England, as I trust shall never be put out," the cause was that by a happy conspiracy among the molecules in his Brocca convolution, they had succeeded in pooling their physical aspects and producing the heroic words.—The Assurance of Immortality, pp. 86-91.

Now that is the mystery we are plunged into when we adopt the theory that materialism is all with which we have to reckon. All the natural forces seek the line of least resistance; but the will of man toils upward against obstacles. Is it the product of natural physical forces?

WHAT MANNER OF MEN OUGHT WE TO BE?

We are persuaded that there are better things for us to consider, and in closing we wish to present this thought. If we are in fact immortal, we are at the present time in one sense immortal. That is we have already entered upon an existence that will never have an end. In view of that fact, what manner of men ought we to be? The things that we do now not only affect us here and for three score years and ten, or less, but they affect us for ever and for ever. They will either make or mar. We are laying the foundation on which we shall build and continue to build throughout untold centuries.

Ah, if we could only have that thought burned into our minds! If men could only sense it, they would not live as they live now. Jesus Christ came here with that conviction and always retained it, always keeping it in his mind. He gave us the supreme example of right living. He has demonstrated the manner of life that a man lives who in his heart and his soul believes he is an immortal being who will never die.

In conclusion we wish to call your attention to a little verse from the writings of Tennyson.

Whatever crazy sorrow saith,
No life that breathes with human breath
Has ever truly longed for death.
'Tis life, whereof our nerves are scant,
Oh, life, not death, for which we pant;
More life, and fuller, that I want.

In reply to that great appeal for fuller life, coming up from the human heart, Jesus said, "I have come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

ARTICLES ON THE ATONEMENT

In this number we begin the publication of a double series of articles on the atonement. The reader will quickly discover that the two writers take widely different views of the question. Both write from an independent viewpoint, neither having read the manuscript of the other, though each had a fair general knowledge of the positions held by the other. The one holds that the crucifixion of Jesus is a vital and important part of the atonement and that the shedding of the blood of Jesus was associated with the remission of the sins of humanity; the other, while believing fully that Jesus is the Savior of the world, holds that atonement comes through his life, example, and teaching, and that the crucifixion was no part of the divine plan.

It is probably unnecessary to state that each author is responsible for his own utterances on this as on all other topics, and that the HERALD as the official organ of the church is in no instance compromised by the positions taken by writers of original articles appearing from time to time in its columns. The positions taken by any and all writers must be weighed in the light of unprejudiced reason and tested by the Word of God as it is recorded in the standard books of the church. E. A. S.

THOUGHTS ON THE ATONEMENT--NO. I

BY ELDER J. R. LAMBERT

When one approaches this important subject with a view to benefiting those whom it may concern, he necessarily does so with a deep consciousness of his own finite condition. It needs to be treated in the light of divine wisdom, else we will necessarily go wrong. Human wisdom is not sufficient, as may be easily seen from the following texts:

For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.—1 Corinthians 2: 11-14.

For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom: But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God.—1 Corinthians 1: 22-24.

But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption: That, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.—1 Corinthians 1: 30, 31.

WHAT IS OUR STANDARD?

We agree with the expressed thought that God is, or should be, our standard of belief and conduct. He is the true ideal for the people of God in all matters of belief and practice. In the broadest sense, we may safely say that when we are in harmony with God we are right, but when in conflict with God we are wrong.

Just to that extent that we are in harmony with the divine Being (the God of the Bible), we are right and safe. Just to that extent that we are in conflict with him, we are wrong and in danger. Hence the necessity of becoming thoroughly acquainted with God, so far as possible.

But the important question is, How can we know God except through a revelation of his will to us? Do not all true Latter Day Saints believe that the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants contain a revelation of God's will to his church, and the people of the whole earth? I think so. Is it not a fact that we are committed by the testimony of these books? The writer has thought so, and he still thinks so.

Our opponents affirm with great emphasis that we are committed in favor of the testimony of these three books, the first one being the version as revised by Joseph Smith. They seem to think, when they make these statements, in print or from the rostrum, that they are about to put us in a trap from which we can have no hope of escape. We have been, in the past, entirely willing to indorse the correctness of their statement at once. We have thought, as we think now, that to accept such a statement is nothing more than fair and right, and, further, that a candid and hearty indorsement of this position, so gleefully defined by some of our opponents, will, to say the least of it, bring much greater gains to our cause than to theirs.

ATTITUDE OF THE CHURCH

Ever since the church was organized, in 1830, the Bible and Book of Mormon have been regarded as proper standards of authority by all true Latter Day Saints, on doctrine, conduct, and matters of belief. To these was added the Book of Doctrine and Covenants by action of the church in "general assembly," in 1835, at Kirtland, Ohio. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has claimed and acknowledged the authority and teaching of these books from the beginning till now.

More than this, we should know that the accepted revelations of the church, from the beginning, and by the plainest implication, indorse the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the accepted revelations, given through Joseph the Seer. In a revelation given for a law to the church and to be in force till the Savior comes, dated February, 1831, we have the following:

And again the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my Scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doeth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 16.

Jesus never said anything which even had a tendency to invalidate the Holy Scriptures, neither in former nor latter days. He did say, however, "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."—Matthew 4: 4.

That Jesus believed the word of God was contained in the Scriptures is evident from what he said to the Jews: "Search the scriptures; . . . and they are they which testify of me."—John 5: 39.

Where is it written that "man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God"? In Deuteronomy 8: 3.

Jesus, after his resurrection, reproved his disciples for their unbelief in the following words:

O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken! Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory? And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself.—Luke 24: 25-27.

In that wonderful contest with Satan, at the time of his temptation, Jesus won a glorious victory by an intelligent and continuous appeal to the word of God. "It is written," "It is written," he continued to say, until the contest was ended and the victory won. I do not wonder that Paul, who, as the writer believes, was next to Christ as a minister for God, should say to Timothy, "Preach the word." (2 Timothy 4: 2.)

In a revelation given to the church in 1833, the Lord says:

And I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall forsake all evil and cleave unto all good, that ye shall live by every word which proceedeth forth out of the mouth of God; for he will give unto the faithful, line upon line, precept upon precept; and I will try you, and prove you herewith.—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3.

In Doctrine and Covenants 83: 7, the same grand truth is enjoined, and emphasized by giving reasons why we should live in obedience to every word of God. The opening words read as follows:

And now I give unto you a commandment to beware concerning yourselves, to give diligent heed to the words of eternal life; for you shall live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God.

In the next paragraph of this revelation (paragraph 8), given in 1832, the church is reproved and instructed in the following strong words:

And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, Nay.

They are expressly told that the condemnation would remain upon the children of the kingdom until they repented and remembered the new covenant. The new covenant is defined to be the Book of Mormon and the former commandments. That is, so far as records are concerned, the restored gospel consists of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the commandments which God gives to the church. Why do I say the Bible? Because it is strongly indorsed by commandments of the law which God gave for the government of his church, and for the further reason that he made provision that the King James translation should be revised and corrected by inspiration. The word of the Lord to the church, on this point, reads as follows:

Thou shalt ask and my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15.

All the above evidences show, quite plainly, what estimate the Lord has placed upon former and latter-day scripture.

DIRECT AND DEFINITE ACTION BY THE BODY

Because existing conditions seemed to demand it, the church in September, 1878, adopted the following resolutions:

That this body, representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, does hereby authoritatively indorse the Holy Scriptures, as revised, corrected and translated by the spirit of revelation, by Joseph Smith, jun., the Seer, and as published by the church we represent.—General Conference Resolutions, 214.

That this body, representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, recognize the Holy Scriptures, the Book of Mormon, the revelations of God contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and all other revelations which have been or shall be revealed through God's appointed prophet, which have been or may be hereafter accepted by the church as the standard of authority on all matters of church government and doctrine, and the final standard of reference on appeal in all controversies arising, or which may arise in this Church of Christ.—General Conference Resolutions, 215.

(See action of the conference one year later, at the same place, on the report of the First Presidency on petition and resolution from the Decatur District, Conference Resolutions, number 222.)

The last indorsement of the books by the church in general assembly, so far as we know, was on April 15, 1892, at Independence, Missouri. It was the adoption of a resolution presented by the Twelve, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That we recognize the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants as the only standard works of the church; and it is our opinion that every other book, pamphlet, or other publication, should simply rest upon its own merits, the church being responsible only for that which it authorized to be done, or which it accepts after it is done.—General Conference Resolutions, 368.

Thus we have the answer to the question, Have we, as a church, an authorized standard of evidence?

It is evident that when God provided records for the purpose of representing his will to his people he saw that it would be necessary for these records to perform an important part in connection with the office work of the Holy Spirit. He saw, as we may see, that it would be highly necessary, and important, for the safety, as well as the moral and spiritual development of the body, collectively and individually.

THE ATONEMENT--PART 1

BY ELDER F. A. RUSSELL

DID GOD DEMAND THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS OR THE SHEDDING OF HIS BLOOD AS A PART THEREOF?

One of the lecturers at the late General Conference intimated that in the study of comparative religions we might discover some things which would be "shocking to our religion." Would that be as startling as the likelihood that in the study of our religion we might discover that which would be not only shocking to real Christianity, but dishonoring to both God and Christ? By the term our religion we refer to personal convictions or conclusions on such things as we have heard or read, and which constitute present belief regarding spiritual things. In the consideration of such matter as may be presented in these articles it is strongly urged that each reader shall, as thoroughly as possible, explore the ground which has been included in his religious field, the nature and fertility of which may have been taken for granted. In other words, make a tour of investigation of your professed possessions.

You may have misunderstood the agent, or the agent himself may not have noted carefully the "report of the committee on boundary lines," and may have included in your district territory which does not belong there or omitted some that does. And in fact, he may have given you description of certain very bad land which you were required to "take" in order that you might secure the valuable estate.

It is not impossible that somebody may have taken advantage of your credulity and succeeded in getting you to "fence in," at enormous expense, a great quagmire, and because of certain representations you may now be advertising such quagmire as your most coveted possession. Yet one more thing is possible. A journey, as proposed, may reveal that somebody has diverted the course of a foul stream in such a manner as to cause it to overflow and make great deposits of filth, thus obscuring some of the very best portions of your land. Any one or more of these things if found true relative to our physical possessions would prompt immediate action on our part.

And now will you take a walk and have a talk with me while we examine "our possessions"? Walking, we will move toward and be able to view at closer range the land obtained, and from which we hope to secure that which will supply the inner man. But slip your binocles into your pocket. We will need them. Our time for this journey is limited and we will be unable to reach all the corners, for the field is large. Now, if you are ready, we will proceed, and, if agreeable to you, I propose that we make our way towards that portion which we have been told is the very best and which, for some reason, seems not to be putting forth an abundance. Over there is to be found splendid pasture, I am certain, for on clear days, with the aid of the "telescope," I am able always to see great numbers of sheep feeding there. In fact, I have observed that most of the sheep seem to stay very closely to what appears to be the middle of the field. Our printed description will aid us when we come to sort over the various rumors we have heard about this place, so be sure to bring it.

To some, perhaps many, the foregoing may seem to be a strange introduction to this subject. It is not the intention of the writer to follow to any great extent even that which may have been suggested in the preceding lines only as use may be made of things therein stated with the hope of fastening securely in the mind of the reader ideas later expressed.

OBJECT AND PURPOSE

The object and purpose of this writing is to stimulate broader study and deeper thought. We are inclined to think in grooves which others have made, partly, no doubt, because it saves the "wear and tear" of original thought, but, anyway, it seems much easier. Then, too, if the "groove" be well worn it may be difficult to get out, or even when once free the pressure of sentiment and opinion may send you back. Our object shall be to assist the reader to obtain clearer vision of things pertaining to the work imposed by the Father and undertaken by the Son for the redemption of God's children, to call attention to some things which I believe have been erroneously made a part of the divine plan, and to offer to the hungry soul an opportunity of partaking of the good things of the kingdom of God without being required to profess belief in a thing against which there is a conscientious denial or a persistent mental reservation. (Not wishing to apologize to the editors for borrowing their pet word we, and for other reasons as well, all risk of criticism will be assumed and the "first person pronoun" will be used.)

PLAN

The plan which I have in mind is to submit what seems to me to be just and effectual criticisms against some of the current interpretations of scripture, such interpretations being of that sort as to represent Divinity as being party to events wholly at variance with divine nature, and as such very unwholesome. In place thereof I will offer renderings which are believed to be entirely acceptable to him who is "righteous in all his ways." No attempt will be made to treat the subject exhaustively, but merely to present that which has materially aided some in the solution of that which for years has been spoken of as the great mystery—problem—aye, paradox of Christianity.

STATEMENT

Before offering either criticism or proof I will set before the reader my conclusion relative to the subject at the head of this article and trust him to follow carefully all that is later submitted in order to obtain my reason for such decision. Not all citations can be quoted in full, so it is hoped that each one will carefully examine every passage indicated.

For many years I have been reading in the three books the various passages relative to the crucifixion, the blood, the cross, the atonement, etc., and preaching to the people certain interpretations put thereon by somebody, I didn't know who. Questions came from others, or arose in my own mind like this: Did Jesus have to die on the cross? Did his blood have to be shed? Who wanted it so? Was that terrible affair on Calvary arranged by God so I could be saved? Did somebody have to betray Jesus and kill him, else the whole human family be eternally and everlastingly doomed to hell? Was the shedding of Jesus' blood required by God as part of the atonement?

What did I do when such questions demanded answer? May I guess that I did much the same as you: just pass it off with a wave of the hand and a sigh, saying, "I can't understand why nor how! Never expect to while I am mortal! But it must be so, for the preachers and the books say so!" and went on preaching to the people to "come let us reason together," all the time either the victim of an unawakened intellect or else opposing my own reason and conscience. I was somewhat like the lad who when asked to give three proofs that the earth is round replied, "The teacher says so, ma says so, and the book says so!"

Did God demand the crucifixion of Jesus or the shedding of his blood as any part of the atonement? My answer to that question is NO, and I want the printer to make that word as "loud" as possible! I believe we are now ready to begin.

OUR JOURNEY

There are extant to-day various theories concerning the atonement. Each represents an attempt of some person to reconcile three things, i. e., the teachings of Jesus, interpretations thereof by early or late writers, and their own personal feelings. It may be well to mention some of these theories.

One is to the effect that after the fall of Adam all the human family was in the grasp of the Devil, whose rulership was not greatly to be desired, but from whose control God was able to release them only on the condition that he should give a ransom to his satanic majesty; this ransom to be the giving of his beloved Son to be slaughtered as a sacrifice. While some writers declare this theory appeared during the second century, and for many centuries was the prevailing one, it by no means has disappeared. It is easy to see how such passages as Hebrews 2:14 might be used to support the theory.

Another theory which seems to be quite popular to-day is termed the penal. This places the necessity for the shedding of the blood of Jesus in the divine mind, to satisfy divine justice, satisfaction being obtained by accepting Christ as the substitute for sinners, and inflicting upon him the penalty for their sins. Justice now being satisfied and the wrath of God appeased, the way is open for sin to be pardoned, since Jesus is said to have "taken upon him every individual sin of every man and woman since the fall of Adam."

So far as I have been able to understand the teachings of various ones in the church we seem to have a sort of a mixture of these two theories. Along with them we hear the following: It wasn't the blood that was shed on Calvary that makes our redemption possible and secure, but that which was shed in Gethsemane. It was the blood which Jesus took into the "holy of holies" and there offered for our sins that redeems us. No, God did not require Jesus to be slain. Jesus proposed the crucifixion and planned his own death. Of course he had to be killed! If no one else would do it he would have committed suicide! In any of these do you discover yourself "walking on your own land"?

INTERPRETATIONS QUESTIONED

Presumptuous as it may seem to some, I propose to attack some very common interpretations of scripture for no other reason than because I believe them to be erroneous. That some of the passages cited may appear to justify the interpretation, if isolated, I admit. But that such interpretations are out of harmony with Divinity as revealed in Christ, I verily believe. (Inspired Version, Authorized Edition of Book of Mormon and late edition of Doctrine and Covenants are used unless otherwise specified.)

Most blood atonement apologists lay great stress upon the fact that prophets had foretold the crucifixion of Jesus, that some had, in vision, seen him lifted up upon the cross. Jesus' reference to those things spoken by the prophets, followed by his observations thereon, i. e., "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things," etc. (Luke 24:24, 25), are offered as proof that it was just right that he should be slain, since the prophets had thus said that he would be. In Matthew 16:22 the historian tells us that Jesus said that he "must go to Jerusalem and suffer . . . and be killed," etc.

Error in interpretation is encountered relative to these passages because of failure on the part of the reader to observe the two lines of prophecy running through the books. One line foretells events which, when they transpire, are pleasing to God, and the results blessed of him, and to which he may be a party direct. The other just as clearly foretells events, but is of an entirely opposite nature, but with it we must not attempt to associate divinity in the fulfillment. Always keep this in mind, and the solution of what may have seemed mysterious is often easy. Forget it, and you are frequently involved in endless difficulties. Remember this: Prophecy must not be considered the reason for the occurrence of any event.

Who would ever think of saying that the prophecy concerning the Rebellion, or the Author thereof, was responsible for the death of the thousands slain? In both of the above citations Jesus is simply identifying himself therewith as the Messiah because the things before written were fulfilled in him. God foreknew the sufferings which would be heaped upon his Son, so could and did foretell them; but nowhere do we find God even intimating that such sufferings are pleasing to him. Jesus tells his disciples that they shall be betrayed by parents, et al, and that some of them shall be put to death. (Luke 21:15, 16.) Is God committed to the approval of such actions simply because he has foretold it? Hardly. Did Jesus desire his disciples to be scourged from city to city as indicated in Matthew 23:31? You answer.

No doubt some good brother will say: "Yes, sir, somebody had to scourge them, else that prophecy would have failed." The same is said about the prophecies relating to Jesus, but that is poor logic, or anything else. No prophecy COULD have been given had not God known of the coming events, hence there would have been none to fail. He foreknew, but did not foreordain the crucifixion. How strange that the act of God in simply foretelling an event should be so construed by anyone, now or yesterday, as to seek to make it appear that he *demand*ed the event.

We are cited to Matthew 26: 36-39 and asked, Is it not plain that it was God's will for his Son to suffer? Though a figure, it will be admitted that the "cup" refers to his coming trial. My answer is: If it WAS God's will, Jesus stood in opposition thereto and asked for release from the ordeal, and his submission was not a willing sacrifice. (More on that later.) It also represents Jesus having undertaken a mission the chief feature of which was so utterly unknown to him that even right at the time the "central truth" is to be manifested he wants it omitted. Most assuredly if he had his way in the matter he would never have been killed, for his way would have converted those Pharisees. It nullifies the teachings of Christ, Love one another, as the Father hath loved me, by presenting the terrible picture that after all the Father's love for his Son moved him to plan his death.

I submit a more wholesome rendering, viz: The prayer indicates that Jesus knew no way of escape from approaching danger, so, as was perfectly natural to one possessed of his faith, he asked the Father to help him and to save him, if possible. That prayer was not breathed by a hypocrite! It was real! He was in earnest. 'Tis as if he said, It is my wish, Father, to escape the fury of the gathering mob; but nevertheless, whether my wish is granted or not, THY will shall be done IN ME. I'll be true to the testimony I have borne, though they scourge and crucify me!

Ah, here was the crucial test. Treason or die! History tells his choice, and why need we dishonor God and rob Christ of the glory rightly belonging to him for such choice by saying that God decreed it so? Scarce can I endure the thought long enough to write it! The fifty-first verse indicates that if Jesus had called for them the Father would have sent more than twelve legions of angels. I am unable to say why he did not secure such assistance; but I am able to say that the very fact that God was willing to thus dispatch the angelic host is positive proof that God was not anxious for the success of his enemies.

Matthew 26: 24 is offered by blood atonement advocates. It reads: "For this is in remembrance of my blood of the new testament, which is shed for as many as shall believe on my name, for the remission of their sins." With the interpretation that the "blood" is a part of the atonement, let me remind you that there is then a part of the atonement that does not reach all people, a limited atonement, while in fact Jesus is referred to as being the mediator for the whole world, a propitiation for the sins of the whole world. Mosiah 1: 17 should be read now.

It seems to me that in every place where the blood of Christ is referred to a perfectly rational interpretation is possible. For instance, in the above: Jesus delivered the law of life, obedience to which obtains from God the benefits of his mercy including the pardon or remission of sins. Because of his teaching thus, his blood was shed; and so it becomes perfectly easy and natural according to our form of speech to say it was shed for those who believe on his name.

The spilled blood of Jesus symbolizes the life of devotion and sacrifice which was the sum of his human experiences in his ministry of redeeming love. Who among us eats the bread and drinks the wine commemorating the murder on Calvary? No! No! We "think on nobler good." We think of his fidelity and the wondrous manner in which he glorified the Father by devotion to him, a faithful witness, in spite of the inhuman treatment he was receiving at the hands of his persecutors.

"For this cause came I into the world that I should bear witness unto the truth."—John 18: 37. Because of devotion to such "cause" he was by many despised and rejected, and persecuted wherever he went. Conspiracies were formed against him to kill; he was lied about, and finally through the assistance of a misguided disciple he was captured, rushed through a mock trial and hurried along to the indescribable scene on Calvary.

Is there a man or woman who reads this but feels in their soul to cry out: Oh, that terrible, terrible affair! Then tradition whispers in your ear, "God willed it so!" Your good sense and reason are dethroned, for the spiritual anæsthetic has done its work! May I remind you that just so long as the "disease" remains, just so sure will the pain return when reason and judgment return to reign. With my present concept of God I feel that I would greatly dishonor him if I intimated that he desired, willed, required, or in any sense was pleased with the conduct of those men when they took the life of his beloved Son. God was on the side of Christ in that ordeal and sent an angel to strengthen him. Luke 22: 43. Dare we say that God wrought on both sides?

1 Nephi 3: 87 says the Son was "slain for the sins of the world." I understand that exactly as I do Revelation 6: 9, "Slain for the word of God and for the testimony which they held"; also Revelation 20: 4, "Beheaded for the witness of Jesus."

Nephi 12: 26, 27 is declared by some to be an "unanswerable" in favor of blood atonement. Maybe it is, let us see. On the fly-leaf of the Book of Mormon we read this: "If there are faults, they are the mistakes of men:" Again, Moroni, in finishing the record of his father Mormon (Mormon 4: 97-99), admits "imperfections" in the records of himself and his father, as well as those "who had written before" his father. Among the latter writers was this man Nephi, whose statement is under examination. With Moroni's permission, then, am I presumptuous, or do I dishonor any when I say that "imperfection" certainly might be found in Nephi's record? As proof I need but cite you to Nephi 7: 1, last two lines, and then ask you to compare Nephi 6: 35; Nephi 5: 86, 87; Nephi 5: 105; Nephi 6: 11 with Matthew 7: 33; 5: 42, 43; 6: 14; 6: 38 respectively. Now since we have the correction of these texts set out in the Inspired Version I can do nothing but decide that "imperfection" here exists in Nephi's record, and that the same is "made manifest." Is it not much better to discover imperfection, if it exists, than to do otherwise? Read Moroni 4: 97.

So I believe that Nephi 12: 26-28 contains truth, but so imperfectly stated as to be susceptible of misinterpretation.

It contains a simile or rather a comparison which even extreme blood atonement advocates would not dare attempt to apply. Neither is there reason for barring Nephi's record because of this probable discrepancy, any more than the statements of numberless writers and speakers. Few men are infallible in their record or repetition of sayings. So far as I know Nephi did not claim infallibility for his record. Maybe you are "in the groove," and are taking for granted that all traditions are true. They may or may not be so.

SUPPORTING WORD OF WISDOM

Mike Donovan, who retires at the age of sixty-seven after thirty years as boxing instructor of the New York Athletic Club, gives some excellent advice in an interview which appears in the New York Times, Sunday, May 17. It will be observed that on the question of diet, the use of tea, coffee, tobacco and strong drink, as well as on the question of sleep, he is very nearly in harmony with the instructions contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. We quote as follows:

I think I'd be inclined to put overeating as the most frequent trouble with the average man. Almost everyone eats two or three times too much. Putting overeating first, the other things that cause the poor physical condition of so many men are too little sleep, too much alcohol, too much tobacco, not enough water, badly chosen foods, badly chosen drinks with meals, insufficient mastication, and lack of exercise. . . .

Of course, men think they're having fun—and so they are, lots of times—when they're eating rich foods and staying out late and consuming booze and tobacco to excess, but let me tell you that there isn't anything in life for day in and day out gratification like the feeling of perfect physical condition. The man who is constantly out of sorts, a little under the weather, as they say, whose digestion does not work just right most of the time, and who feels a little heavy during the day—that fellow doesn't know what living really is. So that I make another point there; the results which come from using some will power and giving things up that are pleasant more than make up for the self-denial.

Now, as to this overeating question—I can't put too much emphasis on that. Overeating is what is wrong with half the men who are chained at a desk all day. Some of them eat enough for two strong men doing hard work with their hands. How can a man in a sedentary life expect to stuff himself three times a day and not feel bad? I know men—lots of them—who eat three times too much. Three times—think of it! A man puts three times the load on his digestive machinery he should and then he wonders why he's carrying excess weight around the waist line and feeling dull.

The food that seems to be eaten more to excess than any other is meat. A man whose main exercise is climbing the subway steps will polish off a pound of steak at a sitting, when no man should eat more than five ounces. Then the man who overeats fills up also on rich pastries and cakes, when no man should eat either. Simple puddings are all right, but pastries and cakes—no.

One of the things that causes overeating is the habit of drinking at meals. Let me make this strong—eat your meals dry. If you must have something to drink with your meals drink hot milk, and if you must have tea or coffee make your drink of milk and tea or milk and coffee, rather than tea and milk or coffee and milk.

The perfect way to handle this question of drinking is to drink plenty of water during the day, then you won't need these quantities of liquids with meals. The average man does not drink nearly enough water, anyhow. Every person should drink at least three quarts of water daily. Water purifies the system and is of great help in keeping people well. And when I speak of water I don't mean ice water. Ice water is very injurious.

The water should be taken not less than one hour after or one hour before a meal. Quantities of water should not be mixed with the meal itself. If a man finds on trial that he has got to have something to drink when eating he ought to take hot milk heated pretty well—not boiled, but hot enough to drink comfortably. Tea and coffee are poisonous, but if a man has got to drink them he should dilute them with plenty of milk, so that his drink will be chiefly milk. . . .

I make mention of beer. I do that because so many men feel that they must have something at least slightly alcoholic. Of course my own belief—and I have seen enough in my life to give me a pretty big experience—is that a man should take nothing whatever with alcohol in it. This is no moral talk, you know—I am talking about the physical side of the proposition. You can't get away from this situation—a man who drinks anything alcoholic at all is not as good a man physically as he would be if he didn't take a drop. The man who doesn't drink always has the physical edge on the man who does. . . .

As to smoking, the same thing applies as to drinking. A man is physically better off if he does not smoke at all. . . .

On this whole drinking and smoking question I can't give better advice to any man than I do to my boy. I say to him: "Don't smoke and don't drink and your battle is half won." . . .

One thing is important for the business man to remember—don't eat too fast. Men hurried by their affairs have a habit of bolting food. That is mighty bad and results in lots of digestive troubles. Eat slowly and chew the food thoroughly. A little food well chewed is going to do you a lot more good than a great deal half chewed.

Still another tip to the business man—get plenty of sleep. Lack of sufficient sleep causes a lot of physical trouble. Everybody should take a minimum of eight hours of sleep; I, myself, take ten.

Keep Up Interest

Our message to you this month will be a very short one, but in it is contained much earnestness. It is this: Let not your interest in choir work flag during the warm season. It is easy to be enthusiastic and regular in attendance when there are big things doing, such as a special revival, a conference, or a two-day meeting; but the test of the truly consecrated choir member comes in the summer, when the warm weather is prone to put thoughts of staying away into the hearts of the singers.
