The perfect law of liberty goes to the root of human bondage and misery. It goes down under nations, down under communities, down under families, down under all organization, to the unit, the individual, the man, and says, "You must be born again." It does not lop off the branches of evil, but strikes deep down to the root.

Individual repentance is followed and accompanied by individual regeneration in baptism and spiritual regeneration: born of the water and of the Spirit, as the Master expressed it. Then under the law the individual goes on to perfection, building the Christian character. In this way and in no other way can he become free.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THOSE WHO REMAIN

It is said that in the days of Daniel Webster it was the custom in New England for a family to select one of its number—usually the eldest son—and each member exert every energy to help him succeed. In fact we are told that Webster himself arose to the heights of statesmanship he did through just such methods.

History records many of his acts and recognizes his sterling qualities, but is strangely silent about the forces back of him. But God knew; and they knew; and he knew.

We have a beautiful example of filial love in the life of the Master. He spent a number of valuable years in his home, attending to the duties that would provide for his mother's needs. After the short years of his ministry, when he was facing the cruel death that was to come to him, he still remembered her needs, as we deduce from the following in Mark 19: 25-27:

Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene. When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by her whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son! Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home.

How many of us in recognizing the manifestations of Godlike character, also take cognizance of the forces back of them?

Do we allow our minds to go back of the situation when we feel the inspiration that comes with a declaration of God's truths from the pulpit, and give due credit to the loving wife, the lonely children, the kind neighbors, who have all contributed to that sermon?

We honor those who go to the front and face the enemy, whether they carry a real gun or a figurative sword of righteousness. We admire true courage and the spirit of sacrifice, but we should give due credit to those who remain at home.

God only knows how many talented lives have been obscured and never allowed to fully develop because they were willing to sacrifice ambitions for others.

Life is full of incipient tragedies, which would be fanned into a giant holocaust of human sorrows were it not for the all-comforting and abiding faith in an immortal condition in which soul barriers will be thrown down and the light which has illumined the soul allowed to shine forth in glorious brightness.

Seldom are these sacrifices made grudgingly. Those willing to make them find joy inexpressible in a repression of personal wants and a transference of expression to one or more who shall represent their lives to the world.

How many mother hearts beat fondly to-day as they closely follow and legitimately magnify every good act of a distant son or daughter! God can willingly forgive those slight exaggerations when he sees the monumental height of the sacrifices she has made that her son's or daughter's life might shine brightly before men.

Many a missionary's lonely wife, as she reads and rereads the letters from the husband in a distant field, hopes the people among whom he labors will appreciate his efforts as she would to have him with her. Is his sacrifice greater than hers?

In the land to-day many a family is silently enduring the absence of a loved one who has answered the country's call. Daily, perhaps hourly, they hope and pray that war may be averted and peace prevail. With the keenest heart pangs to fight in addition to other assailing forces, can we say that their patriotism is not as great as that of those gone to the front?

When the child reaches young maturity and bravely goes out to face the conflicts of commercialism, having as a foundation the ideals gained at home, we know full well his victories are not merely personal victories.

We give all praise and credit to the great, silent force back of the firing line; may those who must serve humanity thus have an abundant portion of God's sustaining grace.

EDWARD D. MOORE.

HOLDEN STAKE ORGANIZATION

The brief items of the organization of the Holden Stake reached us by wire. The conference was held at Holden on the 15th and 16th. D. J. Krahl was chosen as president and C. J. Hunt as bishop, indorsing the action of the recent General Conference. No counselors are as yet chosen by these new officers. The stake high council was selected as follows: J. W. Layton, W. S. Macrae, C. F. Scarcliff, B. P. Thompson, F. A. Cool, R. E. Burgess, William Hartnell, Emery Thompson, F. A. McWethy, Charles Gaither, Edward Fender, J. E. Johnson. More details will be given next week.

CURRENT EVENTS

NEW FRENCH LOAN.—The French Government is marketing a new bond issue on American markets, to the total of $100,000,000.

CHINA MORE LENIENT.—The new president of China will allow uncensored news to be sent out from his country now. It is said that he intends to remove restrictions from the native press.

OSBORNE REINSTATED.—Thomas Mott Osborne has been restored to his position as warden of Sing Sing prison in New York. He has been under trial for irregularities in management, brought in by deposed office holders, but none of them were sustained. Osborne is credited with making one of the worst institutions for confinement of criminals into one of the most progressive.

SUB MERCHANT SHIP.—The Deutschland has been officially inspected and now recognized by the United States Government as a merchant ship and having rights such as are accorded ships of that class. It is reported that British warships are waiting outside the three-mile zone to capture or destroy the submarine when it leaves for Germany. It is expected the departure may be taken any day. It will carry a valuable cargo but no passengers.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS STILL RAGES.—There has been an increase in the number of deaths from the epidemic of infantile paralysis. The total for the week were 977 cases, as compared with 772 last week. The continued intense heat has been a serious handicap in the suppression of the disease. Monkeys are being used in experiments to discover means of checking the disease as no reliable and definite remedy has yet been found to prevent fatalities. Cleanliness and calmness, with freedom from flies and filth are generally recommended as the best safeguards. It is a disease of which cases are always prevalent in the land, but which has developed into an epidemic in Greater New York, with a large percentage of fatalities. Cases continue to be discovered in new places all over the country.

MEXICAN SITUATION.—A week of quiet in regard to the trouble with the de facto government in Mexico has passed. Arrangements have been made for a conference by which the United States and Mexico will endeavor to decide: Methods of protection of American territory from Mexican raiders; how to restore order in northern Mexico and suppress Villa and his bands; how long American troops shall remain on Mexican territory. It is expected an international commission, composed of members appointed by each Government will meet in this country and decide these questions. A strong censorship prevails at the border and news of troop movements is carefully guarded. Activities seem to be confined to getting the men into shape for hard service, even though there is no apparent danger of conflict. It is stated by an army authority that fully one half the men on the border will seek release under the "dependent family" provision. This is likely due to the present inactivity. The Yaqui Indians, numbering about 10,000, are up in arms in Sonora and causing considerable trouble to the Mexicans.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The allied offensive on the west front has been hotly contested by the Germans with heavy losses on both sides. Since the beginning of the "drive" the British have advanced at the farthest point a distance of four miles, and the greatest advance of the French about six miles. Neither have as yet reached their immediate objective. The British hope to control Bapaume, seven miles away, and the French lack a mile of reaching Peronne, an important strategical point. There seems to be no cessation of the attack on Verdun, though artillery is playing the biggest part now. The Russians are continuing their gigantic offensive on the eastern front, making some important gains in Austrian territory, but not yet obtaining the railroad center, Kovel, which seems to be the objective. The counter attacks of both German and Austrian forces have inflicted severe losses but have not effectually checked the advance. The Austro-Italian frontier continues to be hotly contested, though no material change has been effected. In the Caucasus region the Russians have captured the city of Baiburt, an important point seven miles west of Erzerum. Another point fifty miles west has also been taken. British troops have raided sixty miles of the country held by the Turks on the eastern shore of the Gulf of Suez. Arabians who have rebelled against the Turkish Government have taken Mecca, the holy city of the Turks. A German submarine shelled a British port, and minor sea and air encounters are reported frequently.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

BISHOP ROBERTS PASSES.—Bishop Joseph Roberts passed away at his home in Lamoni, July 14, 1916. His death was due to internal cancer. The nature of his affliction was but recently discovered as he appeared to be in good health until suddenly prostrated, since the General Conference. Brother Roberts was born January 23, 1873, at Thurman, Iowa. He came to Lamoni in 1908, and June 20, 1909, became counselor to Bishop William Anderson. He was called and ordained to the office of bishop in 1911, receiving his ordination April 16 of that year, and became bishop of the Lamoni Stake. The funeral was held from the Lamoni church, Sunday afternoon, July 16; Elder John Garver in charge, prayer by Elder Heman C. Smith, the sermon being delivered by Elder Elbert A. Smith. By his death the stake lost a faithful, efficient and devoted servant.

ANOTHER VETERAN GONE.—On the evening of the 16th, Elder I. P. Baggerly, of Lamoni, went to his rest. Born in 1840 in Indiana, he was baptized May 28, 1870, and ordained an elder the next day. He labored faithfully as a missionary in this capacity and as a seventy, to which office he was ordained in 1892. Increasing infirmity of body and mind caused a retirement from active service several years ago, since which time he has lived at his home with his companion in Lamoni. Funeral sermon by Heman C. Smith. Details will appear later.

DEATH OF SISTER J. W. WIGHT.—The many Saints who know Sister J. W. Wight, will be pained to learn of her sudden death at the Independence Sanitarium on the 12th. She had undergone several operations on the 10th and passed away before her husband could reach her. Sister Wight was perhaps as well and favorably known in her home community, Lamoni, as Brother Wight is to the church. The funeral occurred at Lamoni, Saturday, July 15, Elder F. A. Smith in charge; sermon by Elbert A. Smith. A more detailed obituary will be published later.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH'S TOMB.—As our readers probably generally know, the body of President Joseph Smith has been resting in a borrowed tomb. The Laurel Club of Independence undertook the work of raising money to purchase a sarcophagus. The sarcophagus arrived from the East last week and was put in place, and the body of President Smith was quietly transferred on Friday. Services commemorating the final placing of his body in its last resting place were to have been held Tuesday, July 18. It came too late for report in this issue, but will be written up by Brother R. S. Salyards.

NEW BOOK.—The business manager is making a pre-publication announcement in this issue of a new book called "Joe Pine." Allow the assistant editor to also add that it is a most excellent story. It is fiction of the type that brings many inquiries to the author, desiring to know whether he really had all these experiences. Of course he didn't, but they are so realistically pictured you feel they must all be actual happenings. That's the way fiction like this affects people. You'll not only enjoy the book, but receive permanent benefit from the perusal.

BUSINESS MEN IN PULPITS.—Just prior to the recent World's Salesmanship Congress in Detroit, the pulpits were occupied by efficiency experts in various lines. More and more the business world is recognizing that the utmost honesty in advertising and business relationship pays best. As one of the speakers put it: "The commercial world has come to realize that harmony and service pay better dividends than enmity and contention. And another: "Reliability is the keynote in the arch of success." Still another representative man is quoted as saying that "the world of industry and trade has journeyed away from deceit and fraud." The trade journals of various lines in current numbers are laying much stress on these principles.

GRACELAND COLLEGE BULLETIN.—We have received a copy of the recently issued Graceland College Bulletin and pronounce it excellent. It begins with a bright, inspirational color on the cover and continues to the close of the students' roster in an excellent combination of sepia and india. It modestly but attractively tells of the work of the college. Read the notice concerning it in the Miscellaneous Department.

DANGER ON THE WATERS.—With ships being sunk almost every day, war squadrons seeking other war craft on the waters and under the waters, we read again with interest the statement in Doctrine and Covenants 61: 1: "Behold there are many dangers upon the waters and more especially hereafter, for I the Lord have decreed in mine anger, many destructions upon the waters." With awful storms on the Gulf, and Atlantic, unprecedented floods in the North, daily drownings everywhere, we see this prophecy given in 1831 literally fulfilled. Even the great bathing beaches on the Atlantic are being infested with man-eating sharks and several lives lost—places where sharks have not previously been seen. The situation is so serious that Secretary McAdoo has ordered the coast guard service with its revenue vessels and life-saving stations to exert every means to drive away or kill the invading creatures. A number of reasons are advanced to explain these unprecedented visits, among them being one that the dearth of ocean vessels has shortened the food supply, made up of waste from the ships and the hungry fishes are seeking food in strange waters. Congress is being asked for five thousand dollars to aid in the search.

OPPOSE JEWISH POLITICS.—Jacob Henry Schiff, known among his race as "the greatest living Jew" recently declared himself as follows:

We hold our Jewry, our flag, as high as our fathers did, but we recognize that we are Americans and we want our children to be Americans. We want our children to love our religion; we want them to be able to read in the original language our laws and our codes, but we also want them to think in English, to read in English, to adopt American ways. . . . Be a good Jew and a good American. But it is not good Americanism to claim separateness, to claim that we are a group of people who must live separate lives irrespective of our surroundings and of the Jewish religion. Anyone who claims such cannot be a loyal American.

On commenting on the events that caused such a declaration the Current Opinion offers this:

Mr. Schiff, however, has not favored the Zionist program for an independent state of Palestine. He has worked for postponement until after the war of the proposed "democratic" congress of American Jews to declare a special Jewish program. For months the Jewish papers, whether printed in English, German, Hebrew or Yiddish, have voiced the sharpest differences of opinion, concerning what the 3,000,000 Jews in the United States ought to do for the Jews elsewhere and how to do it. Jewish religious distinctions complicate the discussion of what is called "a crisis in American Jewry." Outspoken opposition to the alleged "dictatorship" of Mr. Schiff and to the American Jewish Committee has increased. The limit of endurance Mr. Schiff decides is reached when critics in the Jewish press charge him with being a traitor to the Jews because of his pleas for unhyphenated Americanism.

Original Articles

COLLEGE TUITION

The division of educational inquiry of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching which has had so much to do with the standardization of colleges and universities in the United States has just issued its tenth annual report.

Among the subjects investigated during the past year is that of college charges for tuition. No thorough and systematic comparison of the tuition fees charged by the representative institutions of higher learning in this country has heretofore been made.

This recent investigation by the Carnegie Foundation shows that there has been a very material increase in recent years in tuition charged by colleges and universities. Some representative increases in annual tuition that have recently been made are Columbia from $150 to $198; Princeton from $160 to $175; Harvard from $150 to $200; Catholic University of America from $100 to $125.

A rather comprehensive table published in their report shows that the annual rate of tuition goes as high as $250 with the average for the United States $93.97. It shows that fifty-six institutions have recently changed the rate of tuition and their average for 1915 was $110.03; that the rate of eighty-five institutions has been uniform for a number of years at $110.55 per year.

In only three institutions has there been a reduction—Knox College from $60 to $50; Earlham College from $77 to $75; and the University of the South from $100 to $45. The reductions at Knox and at Earlham were accompanied by a corresponding increase in incidental fees. The reduction at the University of the South was accompanied by the abandonment by the bishops of twenty-one dioceses of their privilege of remitting the tuition fees of two students each year.

In many institutions the practice of charging incidental fees is so general that the statement of the tuition fee alone does not indicate what the student will be called upon to pay to the institution. This incidental fee sometimes amounts to considerable, as at Lafayette $55 per year, or at Rutgers, where the amount is $60.

Fifteen of the institutions investigated report no charge for tuition. It is to be noted, however, that these institutions which charge no "tuition" fees require considerable "contingent" or "incidental" charges from all students annually. The idea that State institutions make no charge whatever for instruction is thus largely theoretical.

The above summary from the annual report of the Carnegie Foundation is of considerable interest and value to those who are contemplating a college education for themselves or their children and in comparison with the tuition fee of $45 at Graceland College—our own church college which has recently been fully standardized as a recognized Junior College—shows the liberal provision which the church makes for the education of its youth.

GEORGE N. BRIGGS.

* * * * *

A FEW WORDS ABOUT OUR FINANCES

Through the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, his church has again been planted upon the earth and by it the message of life and salvation is being borne to the people, their joys increased here and their hope of eternal life made sure through obedience. To bring the efficiency of every working factor of this God-given institution up to its maximum should be the aim of each. Jesus taught his disciples, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness." No selfish ambition, desire for wealth nor the careless waste of the material things intrusted to our care should ever eclipse this statement of the Master that our first thought should be the establishment of the kingdom of God. An important part of our work of building up and carrying on the work of his kingdom is the compliance with his financial law.

We may deceive ourselves with the thought that the returns from our labor are ours and we can do as we please with them, but is that true? Not at all. When we work for an individual or corporation we cannot do as we choose with what we have earned; we simply are allowed that portion of the earnings that has been agreed upon, ten dollars or fifteen dollars a week, while the employer may have retained an equal amount or even more, and if we, without his consent, would spend our earthly master's portion, grave consequences would ensue.

Just so, when we engage in the service of God we bargain with him to keep his commandments and abide his law, the purpose being that we might be laborers with him in building up his kingdom, one of the stipulations of the law being that we should impart a portion of our earthly gain for the work of the kingdom. Shall the withholding and using of the Lord's portion be any less of an offense than if we had used our employer's funds? In this sense can the language of the Scriptures be easily understood when the question was asked, "Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings."

AN ACCOUNTING

It is a well-understood gospel principle that eventually we shall all be called before God to give an account of the deeds done in the body. This applies not only to the moral phase of life but to the material as well: "Let no one deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me."—Doctrine and Covenants 118: 4. While it is true that our final accounting as to the manner in which we have used our earthly substance is to be made to God, yet provision is made for an accounting here and now to his servant, the bishop. Doctrine and Covenants, 72: 1: "It is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity. . . . The elders . . . shall render an account of their stewardship unto the bishop." Our capacity to enjoy spiritual blessings or perform greater labor for the Master may be increased or dwarfed by our willingness or unwillingness to respond to the demands of the financial law. Luke 16: 11: "If therefore ye have not been faithful in unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust true riches?"

THE PURPOSE

God is too wise to give a law without a purpose. He doubtless saw that the love of money would develop selfishness and greed, causing many other evils to follow. "The love of money is the root of all evil." To counteract this evil he instituted the law of giving, and by it developed a greater love and consideration for our fellow man, thus expressing our love for him.

"If thou lovest me thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And behold thou wilt remember the poor and consecrate of thy properties for their support." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.) The feelings of the Almighty have always been very tender toward the poor and needy. His children should partake of his nature and be willing to impart for their support. The antithesis of the above would be that if unwilling to give, then we do not love God. 1 John 3: 17: "But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

THE JUDGMENT DAY

In Matthew 25 there is the impressive story telling that when Jesus comes he shall say to the sheep who have been placed on his right hand:

Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the king shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

So, dear Saints, will it be said unto you if you have faithfully performed your part.

HOW TO GIVE

The true spirit of giving is cheerfulness. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." "The Lord requires the heart and a willing mind," and unless we can make our giving a real pleasure we are losing much of the good that might otherwise come from it. The same thought as to the spirit in which we should establish equality in temporal things will apply to the spirit in which we should give. "In your temporal things ye shall be equal and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

SACRIFICE

We have seen people make great sacrifice and endure many hardships and deny themselves numerous pleasures in order to build up their own little kingdom of material wealth. We do not believe that the Lord would ask us to go to this extreme in an effort to build up his kingdom, but there can be no doubt that if we seek first to build up his kingdom that we will have to make some sacrifices along material lines. "Verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people." (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.) Sacrifice and self-denial will develop greater love for the work of the Lord. It will make a stronger will and character. Jesus said: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." There are many pleasures that we might justify ourselves in indulging in, but why not deny ourselves and set aside the funds we would have spent, for the advancement of God's work?

In Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7 the Saints are directed to "both in private and public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants," the purpose being that the church debt might in time be paid. Suppose now that we begin to practice economy and self-denial with the determination that every cent thus accumulated shall not go to swell our savings account but be sent to the bishop or his agent as a special offering in addition to our regular tithe offering.

We ever pray that the Lord may impress us with the wonderful privilege that is ours in being able to assist in his marvelous work.

JAMES F. KEIR.

* * * * *

"There is a vast difference between 'the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe' and the preaching of foolishness to entertain them that disbelieve."—J. E. Yates.

YOU MUST BELIEVE IN YOURSELF

A man is what he makes himself. There is a vast difference in writing big and the possession of big I. It is possible for everyone to write I large in his own way. He may not be able to soar to sublime heights, but he certainly can adjust his wings to the measure of his flight. The lark, though one hundredth part of the size of the eagle, can rival him in his skyward journey and be every bit as great in its own place.

It requires nerve and determination, backed by a strong will power, to succeed. It is necessary to fortify one's self with what Emerson was pleased to call "incessant affirmatives." There is a tremendous force in vigorous affirmation, strength is attained by affirmation to be strong, a determination to reach a desired end.

Without robust belief in your ability to accomplish, you never will accomplish. You must believe in yourself and not depend on others to drag you up the heights to success. Prosperity has nothing in common with a negative mind. Fear makes paupers; it dominates them to such an extent that they do not venture out of their narrow limitations into the broad plane of manly endeavor.

You must demand the best, or it will not come out. You must believe in your bigness. You must stir up the inmost depths to discover all that is best in you.

You have a mission; make up your mind to carry it to a successful issue. You can do this by believing in yourself and relying upon nobody to push you forward.

You no doubt have read or heard the story of the quail that hovered over its brood in the harvest field. When the father and son came to the field the father said, "Son the grain is ripe, we must go to town and get help." The little brood became very uneasy, but the mother quail calmed them saying there was no need of fear as long as the farmer depended on help from town.

Again the father and son approached the field the next day after failing to get help, again the father said to his son, "We must call in our neighbors to help harvest the grain." Again the little brood began to get uneasy, but the mother quail assured them there was no danger so long as they depended on their neighbors.

The third day the father and son approached the field and the father said, "Son, the grain is ripe and must be harvested. We have failed to get help from town. We have failed to get help from our neighbors. We must do the work ourselves." Then the mother quail told her little brood it was now time to move. When a man depends on himself the work will be done.

If you desire ever to accomplish success in life you must depend on yourself. We can do this only when we believe in self. The work of God upon the earth is the greatest work we can do, but when Jesus went into the garden to pray he went alone as he could accomplish the greatest trial in life only when he was alone with God.

So often we become discouraged when we see things go differently than we expect them to, but if the second calm thought does prevail, we can then determine best how to proceed, and that is when we believe in self; then go forward and do that which we can see is needful, helpful and of the greatest importance to mankind.

JOHN ZAHND.

Of General Interest

CAMPAIGN AGAINST HAY FEVER

[It looks as though civic untidiness might be the greatest contributing factor in the pernicious and general disease called hay fever. The American Hay Fever Prevention Association is working through various good roads organizations in an effort to eliminate roadside weeds. The following is briefly extracted from Current Opinion for May. Let the Saints be in the forefront in a movement which involves the health of so many.—EDITORS.]

With the purpose of showing what can be accomplished by organized effort in the prevention of hay fever, the American Hay Fever Prevention Association has concentrated its first efforts in New Orleans. The public there was first educated, says the report of the American Medical Association (written by William Scheppegegrell, M. D., New Orleans), regarding the ragweeds. These were made familiar in a popular manner so that they could be recognized readily. The city of New Orleans, through the public works commissioner, placed at the disposal of the association twenty convicts who cleared the streets and sidewalks of the outer sections of the city of the weeds. This was done in accordance with a map prepared by the topographic committee of the association showing the areas infected with ragweed. The local board of health assisted by enforcing the cutting of weeds in vacant lots and the commissioners of the various parks had the ragweed destroyed in the pleasure grounds of the people. A storm destroyed practically all the leaves and flowers of the remaining giant ragweed in exposed places. As a result of this, and through the efforts of the American Hay Fever Prevention Association, autumn hay fever disappeared in New Orleans several weeks earlier than the usual time. The national organization believes that what has been done in New Orleans can be done in all towns and cities.

The particular pollens causing the disease were for a long time unidentified. The plants which form the type of hay fever producing weeds are the common ragweed and the giant ragweed. In the former, the pollen is not only wind-borne but it is produced in such abundance that a slight blow will dislodge it in clouds, and it is so light that the wind will easily carry it to a considerable distance.

Relief is experienced when the supply of pollen from any cause is diminished or disappears, as on a sea voyage. A continued rain gives relief, and an absence of wind, or one blowing the pollen away from the patient, gives temporary relief. In the vicinity of New Orleans, there is a large area of ragweed (Ambrosia trifida) located north of a certain residential section. A wind from this direction in September causes a marked aggravation of hay fever in this section, which, until recently, was attributed to the north wind. The causative relation of the ragweed was conclusively demonstrated, however, by exposing a number of these patients to the opposite side of the ragweed area during the prevalence of a south wind, when they promptly reacted to the pollen:

Under favorable climatic and soil conditions this weed is found in every neglected field, on roadsides and even in vacant lots in the cities. In more moist lands, however, the giant ragweed takes the place of the common ragweed and is found in similar profusion. These two varieties of ragweed have been found to be responsible for about eighty-five per cent of all cases of autumnal hay fever in the sections in which these weeds are prevalent. Contrary to the popular notion, goldenrod is responsible in a very small degree. As the autumnal hay fever forms the large majority of hay fever cases in the United States, the importance of a careful study of the Ambrosias (ragweed) is clearly indicated.

* * * * *

THE STATE CANNOT GIVE A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

The writer is a strong believer in the principles of Christian education. In fact, so strong is his belief and confidence in its superiority over that of a purely secular education that he has spent hundreds of dollars that his children might have the advantages of a Christian school, when at the same time they could have attended, practically without cost, as good a State school as the land afforded. The preceding is stated to show that what follows cannot be construed fairly as opposition to an education which inculcates instruction in the Christian religion. In fact, no education is complete without Christian instruction. A wise man said, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," Again (Proverbs 2: 1-6), "My son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee; so that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding; yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding; if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures; then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God. For the Lord giveth wisdom; out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding."

But such an education is not within the power of the State to give, and is not to be enforced on anyone. The State is a civil institution, not a religious institution. Those who are chosen to political office are not selected because of their religious faith, but because of their fitness to administer the affairs of the civil government. If this were not so, none but professed Christians would be eligible to hold office. It can readily be seen to what this would lead. The political parties would be turned into religio-political parties. The dominant religious party would of course be in the ascendancy, and the men of that persuasion would be chosen to stand at the head of the State, to administer not only the affairs of the State but also those of the church; to rule not only over the bodies but over the souls of men. This dominant party would also rigidly supervise the religious education of the youth. Then, if the government should change hands, the religion of the government and the religion taught in the schools would be changed.

Another evil necessarily connected with this, would be a State-established religion. No one would be chosen to teach who did not profess Christianity. The State by this requirement would not make Christians, but would evolve professors of Christianity. Some capable teachers who are not Christians and yet are too honest to profess what they are not, would be debarred from teaching. Some who are not Christians and yet not too honest to profess what they are not, would meet the State requirement and could teach. There would be some who would protest against having their children taught a religion they did not believe. A court decision would be necessary, and that would involve the settling of a religious controversy by the civil magistrate. This was common in the Dark Ages—called dark because of religious persecution and the suppression of learning, arising from a union of the church and the state.

A great American once said, "Religion is not in the purview of human government." It has not been given to any man to enforce his ideas of religion on his fellow men; neither has any set of men that right. The true American idea of church and state relation, its contribution to the philosophy of government, is that the State should not seek to control the religious belief of its citizens in any degree whatever. May that principle never be forgotten.—F. W. Martin in Liberty, third quarter, 1916.

* * * * *

Habit is a peculiar chain and is about as long as a life. Its links grow heavier, but never grow less, for if one be cast out a new one must take its place.—Common-Sense.

PEACE TO BRING BIG LIQUOR FIGHT

Officers of the Anti-Saloon League of America have taken steps to hold a world-wide temperance congress at the same time as the conference which will settle the terms of peace after the present war in Europe. William H. Anderson, superintendent of the New York League, said yesterday that the plan was no Utopian dream, but was based upon the action of various Governments now at war in suppressing the sale of liquors.

The time and place of the anti-liquor gathering will depend upon the place and date agreed upon for the peace congress, but the officers of the Anti-Saloon League express the hope that it may be in some city in America, perhaps New York. Although arrangements for the naming of delegates have not been completed, it is possible that the State Department may be asked to invite foreign Governments to send delegates, that the congress may have some official standing.

ACTION IN NEXT TWO WEEKS

The convention was made possible by vote of the national convention of the Anti-Saloon League, recently held in Indianapolis, at which power was given the executive committee to arrange for such a meeting.

To quote Mr. Anderson:

The plan is simple, if unique. The nineteen members of the executive committee have had time to formulate arrangements for definite action, but we will get together, probably within the next fortnight. We will try to get accredited representatives from every civilized nation at the congress.

Then, while the delegates from the great powers discuss boundary adjustments and possible indemnities, our delegates will prepare to internationally outlaw Demon Rum. We want to hitch to the prohibition movement in America the sentiment of the world.

WORLD READY FOR LIQUOR LAWS

To my mind the world is ready for drastic legislation against liquor, and I think the nations of the earth will welcome some plan by which concerted action could be taken. The leaders of the league decided it would be a misfortune to fail, at the conclusion of the war, to effect the crystallization of the temperance sentiment which the exigencies of the mighty conflict have inspired. In other words, it would be folly to assume that absolute sobriety is not so essential to the safety of a nation in time of peace as in time of war.

I believe at the end of this struggle Europe will be ready to fall into line for world-wide sobriety. Europe has learned her lesson, and to some extent, at least, has applied it. Of course, in this country, the saloon is doomed. That should be patent to the mind of any man who thinks seriously.

Reputable newspapers, such as The New York Tribune, refuse space for liquor advertisements. But we are not satisfied merely to suppress the sale of liquor in the United States. We want the entire world to get into the band wagon.

—New York Tribune, July 6, 1916.

Woman's Auxiliary

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

OFFICERS

President, Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, 630 South Chrysler Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Vice President, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, 1515 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri. Secretary, Mrs. W. W. Smith, corner Walnut Street and River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri. Treasurer, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Historian, Mrs. B. C. Smith, 214 South Street, Independence, Missouri.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPARTMENTS

Educational, Helen Silsbee Smith, 2315 Harney Street, Omaha, Nebraska. Home, Mrs. George N. Briggs, Lamoni, Iowa. Child Welfare, Mrs. Walter Sandy, 3431 East Sixtieth Street, Kansas City, Missouri. Relief and Service, Mrs. Edith Cochran, 1107 Powell Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri. Young Woman's, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Where Is Zion?

Our heart was thrilled to-day, when we read in the Ensign, of the recent visit of the president of our church, to the camp of the Federal troops at Nevada, Missouri. The thrill was caused by what he did there. To gather, with the permission of the major in charge, the twenty-one young Latter Day Saints in that encampment out under the shade of a big tree, and there talk to them seriously of the real things of life, of the larger interests of their souls' salvation, to point out to them, as he must have done, that the path to glory is the one marked "duty and right living," and then, also with the permission of their chief, to organize these young men into a branch, ordaining of their number to offices of responsibility and sacredness, was a glorious thing to do, a thing out of the ordinary; and because it was out of the ordinary, it becomes distinctive and meaningful.

And why not? If Zion be the "pure in heart," why not have Zion in the midst of war's turmoil and clangor? Why not imbue these young soldiers of ours with the thought that it is as necessary, and as possible, to live purely in one place as another? Why not make them feel that they are helping to "build up Zion," even in the camp of military enterprise, in just measure that they are able to "keep themselves unspotted from the world"? What greater safeguard and incentive to right living and right thinking than this, could have been offered to these young men of ours, going out from their homes, as they are, at the call of their country?

It stirs our hearts with gratitude, and joy, and confidence, that the vision of our leaders is so broad and far-reaching, that they seek thus to turn every event, every occurrence of life, into one which shall stimulate and encourage our young in the paths of safety. There is something about this "traveling branch" of our church, novel as the idea is to us, that grips our heart in a peculiar fashion, and our fervent prayer is that these young men may sense the full value it possesses for them. May they feel that it will be their safeguard and their shield against the subtle assaults of the enemy of souls, as well as a source of strength, peace, and comfort when face to face with the physical privations which may come to them. And when danger is about them, if indeed we must endure that horror too, may they feel, through the educational influences of the Spirit, that, no matter what may happen to these bodies of their's their souls are safe if they are pure!

The officer in charge of these young soldiers, truly said that the better they were religiously, the better soldiers they would make. Is the statement not true of every other experiment of life? Let us thank God, then, for the refining, uplifting and emancipating power of the gospel and each strive to demonstrate that power in his own person and his own life, that Zion may be redeemed, surely and shortly—"Zion, the pure in heart!"

All reform of modern conditions must come about through the education of the individual. Legislation can only deal with the effects; upon education rests the task of removing the causes. As mothers and women in the church, we should sense this, as never before, and feel that it has become, not only a possibility, but a necessity, for all of us to inform ourselves upon life's questions—to educate ourselves to meet these problems wisely, and to assist in their solution Godward!

The mothers of the young Latter Day Saints who have gone forward at the call of duty, must feel a sense of peace and security in the thought that they have done what they could towards preparing these boys to meet bravely all experiences, and to act wisely under all conditions. They must feel grateful for this "branch" organization among them, in which the young men realize that God is feeling out after them, and will influence their hearts towards him. And all the time we must not cease our activities; we must work and pray, for and with our boys and girls, that together we may work out our destinies with grace to ourselves and them, and glory to God!

Reorganization of Independence Stake Auxiliary

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 5, 1916.

Dear Sisters of the Church: You may be interested in knowing that, at my call, as general president, the women of the four Independence branches effected a reorganization of the stake auxiliary, July 1. This was deemed advisable, due to the action of General Conference which made the division of the stake necessary.

The Saturday morning session was taken up with the conference business. At the close the presiding officer, Frederick M. Smith, announced that the presidents of the general Sunday school and Religio associations with the president of the Woman's Auxiliary, would meet to confer as to the division of time for the afternoon. The representatives of the other auxiliaries generously gave us the choice of time. We selected the second session, and had, therefore, a large and representative number of people present.

The meeting was presided over by myself and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, vice president of our general organization, with the general secretary, Sister Walter W. Smith, acting. The election of officers resulted in the selection of Sister Florence McNichols as president, Sister John C. Schwab as vice president, Sister Altha Deam as secretary, and Sister George A. Gould as treasurer. These sisters have been stanch workers in the Sunday school and Religio, and have proven their ability and willingness many times in the past. We gladly welcome them to the ranks of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The Year Book with its various features was discussed by both myself and Sister Etzenhouser, particularly the outlines of new work suggested for the different departments. A request was made that orders for this book be placed with the executive committee. This invitation resulted in over fifty paid subscriptions before the close of the conference. Some of the sisters ordered copies to present to their husbands, and some of the men ordered with a view of presenting the book to their wives. We, who have been making strenuous efforts to make the Year Book of value to you, felt what we believe to be a legitimate pride or satisfaction, when our Presiding Bishop, Brother Benjamin R. McGuire, arose, and in a brief speech, commented favorably on our work as outlined, and placed his individual order for a copy of the book, recommending, at the same time, that every member of the Aaronic Priesthood do the same, since he esteemed it worthy of their consideration.

President Frederick M. Smith followed Brother McGuire

with the statement that he was not to be outdone by the bishop; that he also could conscientiously indorse the Woman's Auxiliary Year Book. He placed his individual order for a copy, recommending that every member of the Melchisedec Priesthood secure a copy and read.

In answer to a question, we stated that it would have given great pleasure to the executive officers of the society to be able to place a complimentary copy of this book in the hands of each of our ministers, as we need their recognition and support, but that the condition of our general treasury would not permit us to take such action this year. We might here suggest that donations for such a purpose as this, and similar opportunities that the executive officers foresee, would assist us very much in the prosecution of the work. Some of us are personally paying subscriptions to send to a few of our auxiliary workers in foreign lands, that our work may not be unnecessarily delayed for the year.

We ask now, that all of you, throughout the church, will interest yourselves in this Year Book of ours. Place your own orders, and call it to the attention of others who may profit by its perusal and obtain help and encouragement from its suggestions. All orders should be sent to the Herald Office, and the price, twenty cents per copy, postpaid, should be sent with the order. If you are interested in taking up any of the work therein outlined, you may correspond with the superintendents of departments for further information in regard to the studies and activities mentioned. We hope to have your enthusiastic support at this time.

We expect to effect a stake organization at Kansas City, Missouri, on July 8, and another at Holden, Missouri, July 15, and shall expect great results in the future from these organizations.

Sincerely your sister,

MRS. FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President Woman's Auxiliary.

Auxiliary Echoes

The auxiliary work in Lamoni at present is represented by two departments, the Educational and the Young Woman's.

The activities of the latter department have been reviewed recently under Mrs. W. H. Blair as superintendent. Two Oriole circles have been formed, Mrs. Edith Bullard acting as monitor for one and Miss Olive Thomas for the other. The girls are engaging in the work with a great deal of enthusiasm, which has been heightened by a visit from their general superintendent, Mrs. J. A. Gardner. Sister Gardner has been in Lamoni attending to the getting out of the Year Book at the Herald Publishing House.

The branch of our work which started, originally, as the Daughters of Zion and later was designated the Home and Child Welfare Department of the Woman's Auxiliary now comes under the Educational Department as outlined in the new constitution and is known as a child study circle. This circle holds its meetings on the fourth Sunday of each month at the close of the afternoon prayer services. The present course of study will close with the July reading on adolescence, after which we look for a reorganization and a new plan of work under suggestions from the Year Book and our advising officers.

Mrs. M. N. Smith, the superintendent of the Educational Department met with the circle at the April meeting and gave a very pleasing and helpful talk.

Cultural classes have been maintained during the past three years, and at present we have large and interesting classes in literature, psychology and the history of education. These classes enjoy the privilege of meeting in the new high school building.

The class in literature is reading a book on American literature since 1870, written by Pattee. It is the most up-to-date work now gotten out on the modern American writers, and has proved to be intensely interesting. As much reading of the works of the different authors studied as can be obtained is being done by the class. The last half hour of the time is to be devoted to oratory and public speaking in order to bring out numbers for the evening programs which the society gives once a month. The husbands and friends of the members are invited to these programs, and it is thus sought to broaden the interest and scope of the society's activities. A very successful evening program and social affair was given some time ago at Mrs. Fred Blair's, when the program consisted of the story of the Opera Il Trovatore, accompanied by eight numbers from the opera rendered on the Victrola by famous artists.

During the school year this class was taught by Miss Stanley of the high school faculty. Through the summer months it will be conducted by Miss Olive Thomas.

The service rendered by Professor F. M. McDowell, of the Graceland College faculty, acting in the capacity of instructor of the classes in psychology and history of education, is much appreciated by the members of these classes. Their interest has been manifest in the continued good attendance, which, at times, has been so large as to require a number of additional seats in the commodious recitation rooms.

Brother McDowell has succeeded in making these subjects exceptionally interesting. Our general president, Mrs. F. M. Smith and Mrs. B. M. Anderson, editor in chief, have been welcome visitors at these classes.
C. B. S.

What is My Work To-day

(Read at the Saint Louis District meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, June, 1916.)

To search for truth and wisdom,
To live for Christ alone;
To run my race unburdened,
The goal, my Savior's throne;
To view by faith the promise,
While earthly hopes decay;
To serve the Lord with gladness—
This is my work to-day.

To shun the world's allurements,
To bear my cross therein,
To turn from all temptation,
To conquer every sin;
To linger, calm and patient,
Where duty bids me stay,
To go where God may lead me—
This is my work to-day.

To keep my truth unshaken,
Though others may deceive;
To give with willing pleasure,
Or still, with joy receive;
To bring the mourner comfort,
To wipe sad tears away,
To help the timid doubter—
This is my work to-day.

To bear another's burden,
To soothe another's pain;
To cheer the heart repentant,
And to forgive again;

To commune with the thoughtful,
To guide the young and gay,
To profit all in season—
This is my work to-day.

I think not of to-morrow,
Its trial or its task,
But still, with childlike spirit,
For present mercies ask;
With each returning morning,
I cast old things away;
Life's journey lies before me—
My prayer is for to-day!

ESTHER BRUNKHORST,
President Lansdowne Local Woman's Auxiliary.

A Former Auxiliary President Honored

The 1916-17 edition of Who's Who in America, the standard biographical reference book of the United States, just issued, contains the name of Sister S. R. Burgess, for several years president of the auxiliary. She is referred to as the champion woman chess player of the United States, and the Saint Louis Post-Dispatch, commenting on this sketch, says:

"Mrs. Burgess is a graduate of the Central High School, class of 1875, and won the feminine chess championship in 1907. She retained the title in another match in 1908. She is described as an honorary member of the Saint Louis Chess Club, and an active church worker."

In reference to this notice, Sister Burgess, in a letter to the editor, says:

"I have been too busy for chess for a long time, and so was much surprised to be told of the notice in the book and the Saint Louis papers, but I am glad they said I was an 'active church worker', because it implies a living faith. I would rather the world, or whoever reads such an item about me, should know that, having enough intelligence to play a fairly good game of chess, I have also a living faith that makes me proud to be 'an active church worker.' Do not think I am wasting my time on chess; I find better employment in gospel work! I wish my influence might always be such that the sisters of the church might desire, with me, to be 'different' from the world; so that it might be said of us, not 'what do they more than the publicans?' but 'How these Christians do love one another!'"

This is the true spirit of Christ. His "new commandment" was his best and grandest, and none of us must think that it is beyond our attainment right here and now. It is possible for each of us, as it was possible for that early-day saint, Stephen, who, when stoned to death, used words of love and pity as did the Savior, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do!" We can have that love, if we strive to cultivate its beautiful flower, for truly it is the fruit of that Spirit promised us through obedience to the gospel.

Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to thee;
Take my moments and my days,
Let them flow in ceaseless praise.
Take my hands, and let them move
At the impulse of thy love.
Take my feet, and let them be Swift and beautiful for thee.

—Frances Havergal.

Letter Department

Kansas City Stake

Kansas City is the giant city of the Southwest. A great railway center and the gateway to the southwest and Mexico, it has become a seat of wonderful business activity and marvelous development. Both as a mart of commerce and center of transportation and, with its suburb, the central point of Zion, it becomes a point of significant interest to those whose expectations include the land of Zion and its development. It is fitting that in due time a stake should be organized in this great city of teeming thousands of people.

To accomplish this good purpose the membership of the Kansas City branches in Missouri and Kansas, including that of Walnut Park and Englewood, met in special conference, at Central Church, Kansas City, on Saturday, July 8, at 10 a. m. There was a large attendance from the branches and from Independence, and manifest interest characterized the sessions throughout.

Briefly stated: The First Presidency were appointed to preside, the undersigned and Brother O. W. Newton secretaries.

Brother J. A. Tanner was selected to be president of the new stake, with Brother Seth S. Sandy as his counselor, one counselor remaining to be appointed.

Ten brethren, nominated by a council of the First Presidency, members of the Twelve, and other brethren at Independence, were approved to constitute a majority of the stake high council, subject to approval by general high council before being ordained high priests and counselors: Of the eldership, Brethren E. S. Wilcox, J. O. Worden, D. E. Hough, John Tucker, J. A. Harrington, Edward Tucker, C. A. Selbey, L. W. Hayes; of the priests, Brethren Harvey Sandy and E. N. Palmer; two to be chosen later. This council represents a variety of talent, business experience, and devotion that promises success in the consideration of matters coming within its jurisdiction.

Brother W. S. Brown was elected secretary. To the stake presidency and bishopric was referred appointment of a recorder; to the presidency the time and place of the next conference.

Bishop J. F. Keir was appointed bishop of the stake, to act in addition to his duties in the Presiding Bishopric.

The conference adopted resolutions expressing two opinions: That all members of the stake presidency should be presidents of the central unit or branch of the stake; that the stake presidency should nominate presidents of the outlying branches or divisions, after consulting each branch concerning the same.

At the noon hour dinner was served to all members and visitors present, in the church parlors, by a capable corps of sisters and brethren. A splendid spirit of social fellowship gave added zest to the repast.

The afternoon session was occupied by sessions of the Religio, Woman's Auxiliary, and Sunday school association. Brother F. A. McWethy presided at the first, Sisters F. M. Smith and M. A. Etzenhouser at the second; E. E. Corthell at the latter. Each organization elected officers and conformed its territorial limits to the membership of the new stake.

On Sunday, the 9th, the Sunday school met at 9.30. At 11 a. m. President Elbert A. Smith spoke from the text, "He that endureth to the end." Enlistment at the beginning of the Civil War was first thought to be a work of a few months, but proved to be for a long term. Some were killed, some were wounded, some missing, some deserted, so in the army of the Lord, some fall by the wayside, some die; but with all it is a life matter—to the end.

Kansas City was a hard place to plant a stake, and our membership compared to the population made but a peg for a stake; but there were great possibilities if earnest service attended the work "to the end."

At 2.30 the service was in charge of the Presidency; a session of prayer was followed by ordination of Brother J. A. Tanner as president of the stake, Brother Seth S. Sandy counselor, by Presidents F. M. Smith and E. A. Smith. Brethren Tanner and Sandy have the united confidence of the people; they are loved by the Saints and are diligent in their service. It was edifying to hear the Saints of the stake branches pledge their support in cooperative effort to promote the general welfare.

At 8 p. m. President Frederick M. Smith outlined the work to be accomplished in the new stake organization. He asked for unity among officers and members, coordination of general forces, employment of all talents and powers, and consistent system of living with a view to holding aloft the light of the gospel in the great city. He urged efficient, systematic activity of all officers in the priesthood that the truth be urged by proper effort upon the attention of the great body of people resident in the territory of the stake. The effort was worthy the occasion.

A splendid spirit of saintly fellowship attended the conference. It gave reasonable ground for expectation of a forward movement justifying the procedure in organizing the new stake. The many excellent men and women comprising the representation present furnished substantial reason for the conclusion that the devotion of such people under God's grace must eventuate in signal progress of our work in this important center of population. Difficulties, involving many aspects of life and trying situations and perplexing problems are not to be overlooked or underestimated. But if it be remembered that victory is promised and brought to pass through faithful adherence to the spirit and letter of the divine plan, ultimate success, realized by steadily advancing degrees of processional progress, including verification by analytical examination of every step taken, in cheerful reliance upon God in intelligent, faithful service, will be realized. True Saints will not undertake their work without sincere, intelligent, spiritual preparation, based upon moral conscience and prayerful communion with God, in their private lives and in their collective assemblies. They have the strong, common sense to know that the great purposes of Jesus Christ are not to be worked out by senseless trifling nor by visionary expectations not based upon well-defined means designed to reach solid, substantial ends.

By devoted cooperation with God men and women can receive and retain the spirit of love and of power and of a sound mind. It is a wonderful thing to know God and out of that maintained knowledge to keep in touch with his divine mind and will. Men and women are finite, but if consecration and action are bent to just and true service in the spirit of intelligent integrity, we can go forward and obtain grace by which unfortunate, serious errors and blunders may be avoided and sureness and soundness of procedure insure moral, spiritual and economic success.

Men build for God when they build like he builds. He never outlines a plan nor proceeds to erect a structure that leans away from rock-ribbed, solid foundations. God is truth, God is strength, purity, morality, God is common sense, brains, goodness, undiluted, unmoderated honesty—all this and more. Shall Saints be less and build with him? Shall ambitious demagogues "beguile unstable souls" with makeshift devices and alluring schemes and our people "take up" with such—anywhere? Who are, and who shall be "the children of wisdom"? Mathematical exactness, absolute precision in quantities, scientific accuracy in ^{propositions} propositions are features in the work of the great Architect of the universe.

"The laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish."

"Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?"

"Who shall dwell in thy holy hill of Zion?"

Doubtless the preaching of the gospel and the social and economic aspects of church development will attract a great variety of people to our communion—good and not so good; capable and incapable, wise and otherwise; all shades of character; manifold results of traditional make-up will be attached to the body, in local and in general places of assembly. To assimilate these people, to make them over, to evolve and bring them out of the gospel melting pot into new creatures, is the work of the church. This can be done if the church be prepared itself to receive these constantly coming accretions. We believe good women and men are preparing themselves to bear a noble part in the labor "in-trusted to all." It makes big men and big women when Saints measure up to such tasks. Largeness of heart and mind, steadiness, discernment are factors in such a work. The cause is great, the purpose a noble one. The service is rich in contribution and in compensations. "No man can assist in this work unless he shall be humble and full of love," we have been reminded in ancient and in modern holy writ. Upon this basis "the honest in heart"—those who will not be deceived by artificial worldliness and superficial vanities, are basing hope and working hard, working seriously, for success in this new period of the present forward movement, the hastening time.

RICHARD S. SALYARDS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 10, 1916.

When Our Boys are Called to Arms

War is not the business of our church; our mission is peace; peace among ourselves, and to all people. Yet, as good citizens of the Republic, we are obligated as other men are, and cannot escape the responsibilities, even of war.

While, as a church, we oppose war as being a brute way of settling disputes, and an application of might rather than of right, and while many of our men bitterly condemn it as being all of evil; yet there may be exceptions to even this rule. There is such a thing as a just war, and there is such a thing as an unjust peace. There is a militant righteousness, even as there is a passive, deadly injustice. This is no place to argue for war; the Lord looks down upon the horror of it in Europe to-day; yet who would say our nation did not do the will of God when it stamped out the curse of slavery, even though it took oceans of blood, since there could be no other way? And who would say our arm of strength was raised in an unjust cause when we struck the shackles of tyranny from Cuba and made her people free? There are no two periods of American history that will win more grace for our Nation from the God who loves justice above all things else, than our great Civil War and the Spanish War. May there not be such a time again? If our boys are called to Mexico, and can help restore order and government and a just peace to that stricken country, even though it comes at a sacrifice of life, will they not be justified and worthy of all honor?

Our people have always been patriotic. In time of peace or in time of war, they have been among the best citizens of the nation. They could not be otherwise and be true to their calling. The foundation philosophy of the gospel is freedom—freedom from the tyranny of men, of ignorance, of sin. There is no more touching appeal than the one made by the early Saints when so persecuted in Missouri. They said "Our only fault is that we have been good and loyal citizens; we love our country; we love the ideals of our Constitution; we would serve our Nation in every way within our power. In the common defense, in good citizenship we would not be last. All we ask is that we may till the soil and reap the honest fruits of it; that we may build cities and dwell in them in peace; that we may worship God according to our best conscience, granting every other man the same." It is the tragedy of the nineteenth century that their Government so long left them to the unrighteous will of the mob.

But our people were generous to forgive. We gave our men loyally for the preservation of the Union; and many of them came back and proved militant soldiers of Christ. Those who preached carried conviction to their hearers because they were men brave to fight for the right. In the Spanish war our boys were there by the hundreds, and they were of our best boys, too. We have been true to our Government.

There has been no greater indictment of the American people than the taunt that has been stingingly applied to us for two years. While the nations of Europe have been at a death grapple, and every soul of the countries at war has been sacrificing to the last dollar and to the dearest lives, we have been busied with an industry never known before. The wealth of the world has flowed to our land and we have taken toll of the blood of stricken nations. Our land has been glutted with the opportunity for wealth, and our people have said, "Peace, peace at any cost." They have said, "It is better to let a wrong go by unchallenged than to risk the consequence of protest." All this Europe has thrown at us, and said our only thought was money, and our only ideal was gold; that the days when we would champion a cause because it was just, and would act to our own hurt, were past, and that our nation was but a polyglot of sordid self-seekers.

And now the call for soldiers has come. Never for twenty years have there been such scenes. It has been the same the Nation over; from every city and village and country town the citizen soldiers have come flocking to the armories. Hundreds enlisted in a day, every shop and office and store has sent a quota and now one hundred thousand national guards are under arms. These boys have given up a thousand good positions; oftentimes they have given over high salaries for a paltry fifteen dollars a month Government pay; they have left pleasant homes to endure the hardships of camp, but they have done it like men. People have thronged the streets of every town, their hearts have been proud of their boys. That America has lost her patriotism is an illusion that has been shattered on every street corner.

Independence was true to her best traditions. For the first Mexican War she had sent a full regiment over the hot trail on foot to fight; in the Civil War every able-bodied man was in either the ranks of the North or of the South; to this last call she answered with a full equipped battery. We are proud of our boys; they are fine, upstanding fellows.

The night they entrained for camp the whole town turned out. Our city is a beautiful one and our people of the best. Thousands were massed in the streets around the old, public square. A platform had been raised; the band played and the whole battery marched up and stood at attention. The mayor spoke the city's pride in them; and promised the support of the city for them and theirs. He gave them a purse, and the battery was given a flag.

Hundreds waited until midnight for the troop train to come; the boys were almost smothered by their friends, because they were our boys, the boys we had grown up with, and knew, and loved.

We were proud of them. Why? Because they were answering the call of their citizenship and were bearing arms for the Nation. There is a toast, our navy toast, that thrills one even though the philosophy of it may be wrong. It is "Our Country, may she ever be right, but right or not, Our Country." We are a fortunate and a highly blessed people that never yet have our boys been forced to wage an unjust fight, nor shed their blood to enthrone tyranny.

There were twenty-five Latter Day Saint boys in Battery C, from Independence, boys that have been in our Religio and Sunday school; and boys that will be missed. One was baptized just before he enlisted and went to the front. Our own president went to their camp and organized them as a church body, and the commanding officer has grouped them together so that they can hold their church identity.

We can but hate war as war; but we love justice—come what consequences may, and we love our boys who have answered the call. Ruskin analyzed our feelings for us and we know his words to be true: "The consent of mankind has always, in spite of philosophers, given precedence to the soldier; and that is right. For the soldier's trade, verily and essentially, is not slaying, but being slain. This, without well knowing its own meaning, the world honors it for. A bravo's trade is slaying; but the world has never respected bravos. The reason it honors the soldier is because he holds his life at the service of the State. Reckless he may be, fond of pleasure and of adventure; but our estimate of him is based on the ultimate fact—of which we are well assured, that put him in a fortress breach, with all the pleasures of the world behind him, and only death and his duty in front of him, he will keep his face to the front; and he knows that the choice may be put to him at any moment, and has beforehand taken his part, virtually takes such part continually, does in reality die daily."

ARTHUR E. MCKIM.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Greater Graceland Association

(The following article is a reprint from the recent issue of the Graceland College Bulletin. It sets forth the aims and plan of the Greater Graceland Association. The officers are desirous of hearing from any friend of the college who is willing to act as a special representative of the association in his home branch and reunions. If you are willing to boost, write to the secretary, C. E. Wight, at Lamoni, Iowa, at once.)

This organization was perfected on the occasion of the annual Home Coming day, held in Lamoni, April 7, 1915. Its object is the promoting of the interests of the college by every means which shall be found available to increase its efficiency in service and to extend its influence for good.

Active membership in the association is limited to graduates and other old students of the college, together with all who have been members of the faculty or board of trustees. Associate membership is granted to all friends of Graceland who desire to associate in the forward educational movement in the church. There have been over fifteen hundred students in attendance at the college in the years of its service and its staunch friends are found without number throughout the country, wherever it is known. When this body of supporters, who realize something of what the educational, spiritual, and social influence of the college means to the young of the church, shall unite in a progressive movement for increasing its efficiency, great good may be accomplished.

A certificate of membership is issued to all who remit the annual fee of one dollar. This entitles the holder to membership in the association and to be placed upon the mailing list of Graceland College Bulletin, its official publication. The funds of the association are expended upon the order of the annual meeting in ways which shall seem best to serve the objects of the association.

Of the hundreds of students who have gone out from Graceland's walls, many have won honor and fame in the marts of the world, others are called to occupy places of responsibility and trust or are successfully serving in the more humble avenues of life. These students have been scattered over a fairly wide range of years and each one has known only his contemporaries—but there is a common hand of fellowship and loyalty to the school and the ideals for which Graceland stands that unites all in a feeling of just pride in what it has done and in faith and hope for its future.

Not all of Graceland's students have won fortune, but there is not one who will not gladly contribute one dollar or more "for old times' sake" if by so doing he may manifest his loyalty to his alma mater and help to make "Greater Graceland" possible.

The officers are entering upon a vigorous campaign, not only to secure membership in the association which makes financial resources possible, but that in all parts of the country Graceland supporters may be located and given the opportunity of becoming an efficient local exponent of the college interests. The assistance of the missionary force and of auxiliary workers is most earnestly solicited in this movement.

AT REUNIONS

Wherever reunions are held provision should be made for an educational or Graceland day on which special sermons shall be preached and an educational or "booster" program shall be rendered in which the attention of young and old shall be called to the necessity of an education and to the peculiar advantages Graceland offers to the young of our own church. The officers of the association will gladly cooperate with its members anywhere in making arrangements for such a day and will send out literature for distribution.

This is only one of the ways in which this "get-together" effort may be made effective. It is hoped that the quarterly publication of the Bulletin may serve as another means of publicity through which the people of the church and especially old students and friends may keep in touch with the progress of the school. It should serve as an effective means of advertising the college among the young who are planning college attendance. It should serve to bring prominently before the minds of her supporters some of Graceland's imperative needs as they may develop.

An interesting feature of the Bulletin will be the news notes concerning old students and friends of the college. It is planned to perfect a roster of all old students and to publish items of information and interest concerning their lives and work. Contributions will be solicited from those in a position to write with peculiar interest and every effort made to make the Bulletin a representative organ of the association.

The present catalogue is number 1 of volume 10 of the Bulletin issue, there having been nine volumes published under the immediate direction of the college in the years 1904-1913. The editorship of the Bulletin is in charge of the president and the secretary of the association.

During the past year no determined effort was made to secure a large membership. However, aside from providing for an amount of necessary initial expense in printing, twenty-five dollars was contributed to assist in the erection of the wireless station at the college. In the present year membership should pass the one thousand mark. This would not only enlist a large body of able supporters, but provide a fund with which the most worthy needs of the college may be relieved.

For further information address the secretary. The officers for the conference year 1916-1917 are as follows, all of Lamoni, Iowa: President, Charles B. Woodstock; vice president, Floyd McDowell; secretary, Cyril E. Wight; treasurer, J. A. Gunsolley.

The Independence Sanitarium

When I saw the frontispiece in Autumn Leaves for July, 1915, by Frederick M. Smith, and read the following words, "It is the will of the Lord that a sanitarium, a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted be established by the church at Independence, Missouri," (Doctrine and Covenants 127: 1,) tears of thankfulness filled my eyes, that a loving Father had made such a provision for his children. And, since it has been my lot to spend a few short weeks within her walls, I am more grateful than ever before.

Through circumstances over which I had no control, I have during the last few years been compelled many times to have the care of the sick ones round about me, and my association with physicians and surgeons has been such as to cause me to have very little confidence if any, in either. But when one meets our genial Brother Harrington and clasps his hand, and looks upon his noble countenance, he feels at once he is one of the good and pure of heart; kindness is written upon every feature, and as you see him more, your opinion does not change in the least. It is no unusual thing in this age of the world to hear a physician use profane language, and a great many either use "dope" or alcoholics. I speak from what I have seen and heard, and know it is not overdrawn.

While there, a young woman whose mother was to go upon the operating table a few moments later, came in to the sick woman's room and said, "I just went up to chapel and when I heard Doctor Harrington lead in prayer I felt so much better about your going. Surely he is one of God's children." What a privilege to be cared for by nurses of like faith as your own, and those whose lives speak of goodness and purity.

To those who have been isolated, to feel the Spirit of peace which seems to brood over this whole institution like a benediction from the Giver of peace, what a comfort. It was my privilege the greater portion of my stay, to lie in a room just across the hall from the chapel, and how eagerly the sick ones listened to the beautiful songs sung and the prayer offered usually by a nurse or physician. And our minds often reverted to the words:

"Blessed hour of prayer
Blessed hour of prayer
What a balm for the weary!
Oh, how sweet to be there."

The whole staff of surgeons and physicians whom I met are very gentlemanly in demeanor, and one to whom I feel very grateful and of whom I wish to make favorable mention is Brother John Green, a young man who is spoken of by all as a thorough gentleman.

And do the Saints as a whole duly appreciate this place of refuge? It seems to me in a measure they do not. There is a scarcity of linens, sheets, pillow slips, stand cloths, dresser scarfs, and towels.

One morning a little nurse whose face was usually bright and cheery, seemed to wear a troubled look, I asked, "What's the matter with Miss Dimple this morning?" as she had a saucy little dimple in one cheek. And she said, "Oh, I am peevish to-day. Conference time and we are so short on linen. We really cannot keep the sheets and pillow slips just as spotless as we wish." And she added, "If I had one thousand dollars for myself this morning, the first five hundred would be spent for the things that are really necessary right here in this Sanitarium before I got myself one thing."

Dear little girl, giving her time and strength for the good of others, and yet would be glad to do more. And I remarked that I felt sure that if many who came were acquainted with the facts as they were, they would gladly help to relieve the situation.

I remember one sister a few years ago, who in my presence went through the bureau drawers taking out thirty sheets to air. This was the reserve fund apart from those they had in use, and they had a scent about them which reminded one more of an old musty tomb than a thing of such great satisfaction as they appeared to be to the possessor. If several such old vaults like this were emptied of their contents and donated to the Sanitarium, they would soon lose their musty odor, for in daily use they will get the proper airing there.

We hear a great deal about the college but it seems so little is said of the needs of the Sanitarium that few really know of their needs here. If it is the will of the Lord that this should be built for his afflicted children, it certainly is pleasing to him when his people show their appreciation of his wise provision made for them. And who that has been there but must confess that he has been greatly cheered and comforted by the kindness shown by those in charge, also by the administrations received under the hands of the elders.

Now there are few so poor they cannot send a nice pair of pillow slips, a pair of sheets, or a pair of towels all of which, or any, are, as I have it from Brother Harrington himself, "Always necessary and always appropriate. Therefore always appreciated." I think there is no doubt there are many sisters who could this summer make a nice quilt and send before the wintry nights come on. All things of this kind will be duly appreciated.

We realize that those in charge of this institution are only human, therefore let us remember them at prayer daily, that wisdom may be given to all and every one, that they may continue to faithfully discharge the duties incumbent upon them. I can gratefully say that I am much improved in health.

With love to all the Saints,

Yours in gospel bonds,

ELLEN ADAIR.

ARNETT, OKLAHOMA, June 21, 1916.

Cooperation

Since cooperation absorbs a majority of thinking minds, and the subject is by no means exhausted, it may not be out of place to present a few more thoughts.

When I was a child my mother (God bless her) read to me the life work and beautiful teachings of Jesus, and I caught a glimpse of the brotherhood of man as practiced in the early church. Since that time I have been in love with cooperation.

The clear, ringing notes of the gathering, the cooperation of "the pure in heart" that should bring about Zion's equality, which chime forth in the restoration, have been, and still are, the sweetest music that salutes my ears.

We have read so many interesting evidences of the economic benefits of cooperation in our recent papers that the names of the various organizations mentioned are too numerous to repeat here. I desire to briefly add still more conclusive proof of the financial benefits of cooperation.

The writer remembers when Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr.,

was a young man, without capital. Soon after he engaged in the oil industry he discovered that competition was not the life of his trade, and he engaged vigorously in the task of forming a cooperative organization. The Standard Oil Company that towers head and houlders above competition was the result.

The capital of the original company in 1870 was $1,000,000. By a careful system of cooperation they have multiplied their holdings by one thousand and three hundred. So that to-day their securities reach $1,000,300,000. Mr. Rockefeller's individual dividends have exceeded $200,000,000, while their facilities for handling the product from start to finish by far surpass anything that has been developed by the competitive regime.

We also remember the leading millers of Minneapolis and the world brought their wheat direct from the producers, and at times there was sharp competition between the millers. Seeing the folly of this, they brought about a shrewd cooperation of millers and state officials, as a result of which they gave birth to the Minneapolis Grain Exchange. The strength of this cooperative association of but few members rapidly increased, until to-day they fear no opposition from either State or Federal Government; and competition is practically unknown to them, so that they are gathering into their coffers untold millions.

Up to 1901 there had been bitter competition between the manufacturers of steel. Then some of the captains of industry concluded to cooperate. They organized what is commonly known as the steel trust. At that time the value of all their tangible assets was only $682,000,000. The value of cooperation is clearly shown by the fact that in less than six years their property had increased to over $1,000,000,000, and they had increased the tonnage of production of pig-iron per man per day from 1.51 to 2.39; and decreased the cost of production per ton from $1.25 to 82 cents, while their annual earnings have increased under cooperation to over $60,000,000 more than under competition.

As shown by the decision of the United States District Court on June 3, 1915, the Bethlehem Steel Company have by their organized cooperative methods increased their wealth 3.779 per cent; and the Indiana Steel Company has multiplied its wealth 1.495 per cent.

Much space might be filled with similar statistics, but let this suffice, while we engage for a time in deeper reflections.

If we who are engaged in general agriculture and stock raising become live, active members of just those cooperative organizations calculated in their nature and are necessary to the securing of advanced prices for our high-grade or thoroughbred horses, cattle, swine, and sheep, our chickens, our wheat, our potatoes, our onions, as well as our beef, our pork, and our butter, how much time will we get to attend to our general work?

And after we have paid to each of them our dues, how much money will we have left for tithing and consecration?

Again, if each of these cooperative organizations should chance to be as successful as the United States Steel Corporation, or the Standard Oil Company, where would the millions of wage earners and common people land? Their success is builded upon the failure of others. What they gain, others must lose. Their achievements depend upon how much they can squeeze out of the rest of humanity.

I will give one brief illustration. After carefully deducting every cent of the cost of marketing and transporting, my sons find that the real market price of our 1915 wheat crop is over eight hundred dollars more than we are realizing.

Of course there are minor differences in these organizations: some are stock companies, others are not; some are limited in membership, others are not; some pay dividends, while others do not. But all are cooperative in their nature. And since the prime object of every one of them is to influence markets and prices, and since if any one of them fails of this one object, all of their time, labor, and expenses, of whatever nature, is lost, we are justified in broadly classing them under one general head as cooperative organizations.

Now, since God has provided all of his creatures with an abundance of all good things, since the intelligence of one does not depend upon the foolishness of others, or the beauty of one renders others repulsive or deformed; and since the height, the weight, and the strength of one does not cause others to be dwarfed or weak, then why, oh why, should the social joys of one render others wretched?

Are the arrangements of men along social lines in any way worthy of the recognition of the author of the blessed golden rule?

Is it not possible to be wise enough to cooperate on a broad basis that will give all an opportunity to live honorable lives, in harmony with him who is no respecter of persons?

These methods of cooperation so strongly advocated are easily seen to be just what is keeping the most of the people distressingly poor. As they multiply in numbers and prosper, it all the time becomes more and more difficult for the remainder of the people to live.

And yet, since one man with the aid of steam and electricity can accomplish as much work as from five to twenty-five men can with their hands alone, and cooperation proves so much superior to competition, no one can now think of going back to old methods.

Millions of people, in all nations, are now coming to see that the one great fault with modern cooperative methods is the present limitation of membership.

When a few years ago our late President Joseph Smith in a public prayer invoked the blessings of God upon the trusts, as published in the HERALD, it was thought by many that he was in sympathy with the grafting, grinding, oppressive methods of the trusts; but it is now understood that his prophetic nature showed to him the cooperative method of the great trusts was an advance movement, even the beginning of that which will ere long be absorbed by the universal brotherhood of man; when the hours of labor will be shortened, in keeping with the productivity of man's inventive genius, and all will have the privilege to work who want to work: when municipalities, and states, and governments own and operate the great plants where all public commodities will be made to use, instead of being for big profits as at present.

Will it not be wise for us to prepare for some great movement of this kind? D. R. BALDWIN.

GARRETSON, SOUTH DAKOTA, June 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: It might not be out of place to drop a line from this part of the land. I could not say from this part of God's vineyard, as now the Sabbath has turned into a general holiday, fishing, baseball, racing, band concerts and picture shows, and preaching all kinds of beliefs. It is no wonder there are many infidels in the land to-day.

I left Winnipeg March 20, and visited with the Saints a few days. I have been waiting to see if I could find some Saints living close to Pipestone, Minnesota. I want to find some place to preach, as soon as I am able and the weather gets settled. The time is now if we want to please God. We ought to live every day as if it were our last day, and prepare ourselves so we will be able to stand when Jesus comes to the earth.

I am trying to live so I can meet my Savior when he comes. It is my prayer that we may all do everything to please God. Oh Father, help us every day to follow the ways of peace, and to cultivate with delight the art of being kind. Oh teach us how to give a cup of cold water in Jesus' name. Oh Father, keep our lips that they may speak words of love and tenderness, of courtesy. Oh help us to do now the things that need to be done now, making the most of each golden moment as a priceless gift of thy love. Let us serve thee and our fellow men with joy, and with a gentle hand, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A. F. HENDERSON.

ALBIN, WYOMING, June 22, 1916.

Editors Herald: The work is progressing nicely in this part of the field. The branch is less than a year old and has twenty-five members with a prospect of three more next Sunday. Eight have been baptized since I got into the mission field this spring.

The Saints get into their autos and go to different places for meetings, so as to give all a better chance. Some go twenty miles most every Sunday. Last Sunday the Saints here went to Gering, Nebraska, over fifty miles, and got there in time for the ten o'clock Sunday school, after which I preached. Then we had a basket dinner which all enjoyed, after which I was called on to preach again. Then to get a better view of the fine irrigated land around Scotts Bluffs and get a better road, we took a circuitous route for home, some sixty miles.

I have succeeded in settling some troubles that existed, and now all bids fair for success to the work.

I go soon to the northeast part of the State.

Yours in the gospel,

J. M. STUBBART.

SYLVANIA, OHIO, June 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: I would like to have some one in the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District call on a sister who has recently moved to Fort Wayne, Indiana. Her name and address is as follows: Mrs. Harold VanAlstine, 1203 McClellan Street. She has not been in touch with the church very much since baptism, and would like to meet some of the Saints.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM ANDERSON.

TOLEDO, OHIO, 1424 Detroit Avenue.

ON BOARD TROOP TRAIN, July 2, 1916.

Editors Herald: On Thursday, June 29, 1916, Brother Frederick M. Smith visited the Latter Day Saint boys at Camp Clark and in a speech to them suggested the organization of a branch of the church. The suggestion was accepted with pleasure by the boys, and Ellis Short, jr., was elected president pro tem. J. I. Christie was elected secretary pro tem, and Edward Brackenbury chorister.

On Friday, June 30, 1916, Ellis Short, jr., was ordained to the office of elder. On Friday evening the organization was perfected under the supervision of W. S. Macrae. Ellis Short, jr., was chosen as permanent president, and J. I. Christie as secretary. Vere Blair, of Battery C, was then ordained to the office of priest by Brother Macrae and Ellis Short, jr.

The name of Missouri Field Artillery Branch was then given to the organization. The nonelection of a chorister was due to forgetfulness, and Brother Brackenbury will be elected at our next meeting. As soon as possible the letters of all members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints of the Missouri National Guard will be transferred to this branch, and our organization will be completed.

No services were held to-day as a state of anxiety and unrest prevails. We were vaccinated for smallpox and many are beginning to feel the effect. Names of members will be forwarded as soon as a perfect list can be compiled.

Good literature would be appreciated and may be sent to Private J. I. Christie, Battery C, F. A. N. G. M., 1st Reg.

We would also appreciate letters to the branch from everyone who can find time to write, as we have a hard job.

Sincerely yours,

J. I. CHRISTIE, Secretary.

ELLIS SHORT, JR.

LAJUNTA, COLORADO, July 3, 1916.

Editors Herald: If there are any elders or Saints in or near Macomb, Illinois, I wish they would please call on my mother, Mrs. F. M. Towle, 220 East Walker Street, and tell her about this blessed gospel. I have talked to her and prayed for her, too, but she seems to think I am mistaken. I am very anxious to see my people in this work. I can see and feel what they are missing by every day of waiting. It seems to me that the end is too near to be spending our time in being satisfied with what the preachers of the various churches are preaching.

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. SOLOMON TRIPP.

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, June 16, 1916.

Editors Herald: We went from Vancouver to Calgary ten months ago and tried at all times to meet with the people of God, and endeavored in our weakness to help in the great latter-day work. The Saints of Calgary have a nice, comfortable, homelike place of worship, and are often visited by able representatives of the truth.

Last January while Brother Daniel Macgregor was visiting the branch, he announced his Sunday evening topic "The Sabbath question," and the meeting place was crowded with members of the Adventist faith. And at the close of the sermon he announced that he was willing to meet any representative of the Adventist persuasion in public discussion on the subject of the evening. The pastor arose and accepted the challenge.

The debate took place the next Sunday evening in one of the large theaters of the city, fully six hundred people being present. The reverend divine (Doctor Hanson) came with charts and all sorts of paraphernalia, and arose in all his dignity and a big bluff, and tried to palm off on the congregation the carnal law; but when God's servant arose, with his logic and intelligence, filled with inspiration, and so ably met each argument of the opponent and presented the truths of the gospel, you could discern the parson's face grow pale, and he too, as well as all the vast crowd, sat simply spellbound and listened to the words of the inspired teacher of the truth. The theory simply melted as dew before a summer sun. This was indeed a mighty victory in the gospel triumph.

A few days later Brother Macgregor was requested to preach in Didsbury, a town of some seven hundred people, forty-eight miles north of Calgary. He again met the Adventist friends there and a later debate was arranged for, and on May 29 he met in public discussion Elder Wilson, of Edmonton, one of their best men. The proposition signed up was:

"Resolved that Saturday is the only day of worship and rest acceptable to God and binding upon Christians."

Each speaker had one half hour and a reply of ten minutes. The debate was for two evenings, and after it was ended the reverend parson thought he didn't get a fair chance. Brother Macgregor offered to debate the same subject, either in Edmonton where the parson was pastor of a congregation, or at Oyen, Alberta, but he chose two more nights at Didsbury, and it was continued.

Reverend Wilson again began his rehash of the previous evenings, and the audience called for new evidence, but of course he had exploded all he had, and when it was measured by the gospel and God's inspired representative presented it in mighty force and much assurance and made the parson's arguments look so ridiculous, the Seventh-day question fell flat, and the parson sought refuge by saying they would take a vote between those of the Seventh-day persuasion and the Saints (he knowing he had fully thirty or more of his people present and not more than six Saints, as only one family resides there). But a voice was heard from the audience that the congregation would decide if the parson had produced sufficient evidence to prove Saturday as the only day of worship. The crowd numbered from two hundred and fifty to three hundred, and the vote was called and Parson Wilson received one vote, amidst the laughter of all. So the truth won another victory and Brother Macgregor many congratulations.

Praying for the spread of righteousness, I am,
Your sister,

EMILY McMULLEN.

750 Broadway East.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN, June 17, 1916.

Editors Herald: It is some time since you have had a letter from Bay City, not because we have been idle, but perhaps the branch correspondent has rested on her oars a little in this line of work.

The past year has been very successful for Valley Branch, a number having united with the church through the efforts of Elder Hawn and our local ministry. Brother Hawn has been returned to Central Michigan again, and the Saints old and young alike desire to lend their service for the advancement of the gospel here.

Memorial Sunday was enjoyed by all. The veterans of the Civil War and the Spanish American War, also the Ladies' Corps were with us, many of them hearing the gospel for the first time. One old soldier was heard to remark, "He is the first man to give us old fellows a chance hereafter." Great interest was manifested in the doctrine so new to many.

Brother Hawn was called to assist in the several exercises of the day, May 30, and we hope thus to get the gospel before Bay City as it never has been.

We expect to entertain the semiannual Sunday school and Religio convention, June 24 and 25. We wish we might entertain representatives from many branches outside our district.

Very soon we hope to erect our branch tent and once more begin our tent meetings, looking for even better results than last summer.

Wishing all might rally to a world-wide effort to advance the gospel, I am,

Your sister,

E. A. SMITH.

MISSOURI VALLEY, IOWA, June 20, 1916.

Editors Herald: The Little Sioux District held its conference at Missouri Valley, June 1 to 4. There was a good interest from start to close, and as large an attendance as the district ever had. Our new church was full. On Sunday the crowd grew until there was no place vacant. A pleasant and a profitable time was seemingly enjoyed by all. A good spirit prevailed. Elder Amos Berve was chosen district president, W. R. Adams and Joseph Lane assistants. Three were baptized by the president of the branch. Conference meets with the Woodbine Branch, October 7 and 8. Two were ordained to the office of elder; one to the office of deacon.

The Missouri Valley Branch placed the responsibility of presiding over said branch upon the writer of this article last September. He, with the assistance of Brother Alma Booker, started to work with the branch, and as a result we have a church building thirty-two feet wide, and fifty feet long, with an eight-foot alcove back of the pulpit, and a gallery that will seat forty-five over the vestibule. There is a full basement eight feet high, with baptismal font in it. The main room is seventeen feet high from floor to ceiling.

We have been to considerable expense and only number about one hundred in the branch here. You who have labored in work of this kind can understand our position and comprehend all that we are passing through, and especially those who are in the Little Sioux District.

J. S. McDONALD.

LONDON, ENGLAND, June 20, 1916.

Editors Herald: I am glad to report that London is still on the map, although several attempts have been made to blot it off. Very little disturbance has been made of late by the visitation of Zeppelins to terrorize the inhabitants of the city. Were it not for the placards along the streets, and the news boys with their extra editions giving account of the raging battle at the front, also the terrible disasters at sea caused by airships and submarines, London would scarcely realize there was such a conflict going on. In the great sea battle in which so many ships went down, was our young Brother Goulee, who, I am happy to say, was among the fortunate ones who escaped without injury, and is still safe and well.

We are sadly reminded of the real conditions existing as we go along the street and meet what remains of so many fine looking young men, hobbling along by the aid of sticks, maimed and crippled for life, with only a part of their former self left. It is a sad picture, and we think were it not for these and many others who have sacrificed their lives for their country, we in London might not remain so safe and unmolested. One never knows when one of those death-dealing monsters may steal through the darkness like a thief in the night, and awake the peaceful sleeper to find himself buried among heaps of ruins. When one hears the terrible explosion of those frightful bombs that terribly shake the earth, it is a sight and sound never to be forgotten. We are trusting that the overruling hand of Him who holds all power may ere long bring about better conditions, and that not long hence the roaring of the cannons may cease in the distant battlefields. It will be a glorious day when the hope of God's people will be realized, and the kingdom of our God and his Christ will rule supreme from sea to sea and over the broad earth. How different is the outlook when one's mind turns to reflect on the government of God. The dawning of a brighter day looms up to gladden the hearts of God's children. When the mist will have rolled away and the clouds been dispelled, then the glory of God will display a pure and permanent light. Signs of which there is no mistaking bespeak the dawning of brighter days, and the banner of King Emmanuel will be lifted up high, and the principles of righteousness will be complied with, there will be peace on earth good will to men.

As I said we would try and keep the camp fires blazing during Brother May's absence, we have been doing so. We, with Brother Mark May and others, are found at our old place in the park every Sunday, Brother Nelson having been called from his post of duty in the park to the service of his country. Brother Judd has now come to the front and is nobly defending the cause. We have interested listeners. The Saints are now taking more interest in park work. Several sisters are coming out now and doing their part in defending the faith, and we do not feel so much alone as we once did.

We are now counting the days until Brother May's return, and more especially lately since the Utah elders have come to hold meetings in the same park as we are. The people now begin to understand that there are really two churches, and are desirous to know how the division came about. I think they will begin to realize that we are not guilty of the things we have been accused of. It will be a happy day when we can get from under the cloud and be properly understood as not being believers in the polygamic and other erroneous doctrines.

We are glad to report eleven baptisms the last three months, nine of whom are relatives of Sister Charles Clarke of the Ringling circus. She will be delighted to hear this as she has long labored and prayed for this to come about. Surely the bread she cast upon the waters has returned after many days. The other two are Brother Worth's sons. Others are inquiring, and reading church literature. We expect to have more added to our number in the near future. We are hoping that the scales that have gathered over the eyes and understanding of some, will be cleared away, and the gospel light shine in, showing them how good and pure are the principles of the beautiful gospel we are teaching. The two branches, London and Enfield, are working together unitedly. We find that in unity there is strength, and the Lord by his Spirit comforts and encourages his children. The voice of inspiration is heard at times in our midst, to strengthen and confirm our faith and bids us press onward in the conflict against evil, and if valiant for the truth a brighter day will ere long dawn upon us.

As we still read the cheering reports of our brethren who attended the conference, we are thankful at heart, and pray that God may bless the labor of his servants and work together with them in leading souls into the light. As we read of the changes made in the Bishopric, we felt to offer an earnest prayer for our worthy Brother Kelley, who has labored so long and faithfully. Now that he is laying the heavy part of the burden down, may he live long to see the work prosper, and still mingle and labor with those who love and honor him, and also his dear devoted companion, whom to know is to love, will be the prayer of

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. R. MAY.

Upper Clapton, 58 Ickburgh Road.

News from Missions

Southern Ohio

On May 24, just as the whistles of Holden were blowing for twelve o'clock noon, I left in my little motor car for my field of labor in Southern Ohio, accompanied by two of my children, Maud and Ray, who came along to visit the scenes of their birth and former home.

Passing through Higginsville, Arrow Rock, Marshall, Bonville, Columbia, Mexico, Louisiana, in Missouri, Pittsfield, Jacksonville, Springfield and Decatur, Illinois we got along very well until the night of the 26th, when after we had camped at Antioch we were overtaken by a heavy rain that spoiled our smooth roads and good traveling; for we found ourselves in the midst of a country with black, sticky soil. The next day we tried traveling through that mud, but after going about eight miles through deep, tough mud and with the rain still coming down, we camped in the farmyard of a kind farmer, who kindly took Maud into their home, the boy and I sleeping on the hay while we waited for it to cease raining.

But the rain continued, and it was here near La Place, Illinois, that I was made to realize that a kind heavenly Father was taking cognizance of our situation. I had prayed so earnestly that the rain might cease so we could proceed on our journey; and I had great hopes that my prayers would be answered. But in the night I could hear it raining. Then I prayed some more—more fervently than before. Soon I fell asleep, and had a dream that showed me that I could get out of that country without waiting for the mud to dry, that it would be very bad going for a while, but that we could get along and that soon we would come to better roads and good traveling.

The dream impressed itself upon my mind. I told it to the children and to the farmer; but I was somewhat slow to act until a large machine came along going east, and then my courage rose. We got along nicely and we found the roads just as I had dreamed. It seemed that I had seen the same roads before. I could not refrain from speaking of it often, and thanking God aloud for what he had shown us. Before the close of the day we had passed through Montezuma in Indiana, and were now on good rock and gravel roads, and could travel even if it did rain.

Coming through Indianapolis, we stopped at the home of Brother J. E. Warne and ate our first meal out of camp since starting. In the afternoon we followed the old National Road out of Indianapolis toward Richmond. Passing through Richmond we crossed the line into Ohio on the evening of the 29th. At about dark we asked a farmer if he could tell us of a good camping place along the road and he replied, "Yes, but you can camp right here if you wish and put your machine in the barn, and we'll find a bed for the young lady in the house; sorry I haven't room for all of you, but you can sleep on the clover hay in the barn." Weren't we fortunate? It did not take long to thank the man for his kindness and drive in.

We had a pleasant visit with this kind farmer, Mr. Bixler, and his hospitable wife, before retiring. He would have nothing for his trouble. The next day we passed through the beautiful city of Dayton, situated on the picturesque Miami River, Xenia, Jamestown, Washington Court House, Chillicothe, and in the afternoon landed at Limerick, my old home and birthplace, where we visited with Sister T. J. Beatty, my mother's sister, till the next day, landing at Creola at noon, just one week to the hour since we left Holden, including our lay-over on account of the rain, and our stop at Limerick. The trip registered eight hundred and two miles; this included the detours we had to take to get around bridges and road repairs, etc.

Leaving out the mud and rain, we had a pleasant trip, and saw much beautiful scenery. We were made to feel that God was with us, protecting us from many dangers, seen and unseen. A feeling of security would come to us as we would kneel upon the ground under our tent and take "turn about" calling upon the Lord for protection and thanking him for his mercies to us.

The saddest thing of all was to come away from home and leave just my wife and little girl all alone. And the little girl had counted on coming with us until almost the last, and sat in the machine till we were ready to start. We were made sad to know how disappointed she felt to see us go, leaving her behind, after her mamma had decided it would be best for the two not to venture on such a tour.

Since coming into the field we have labored at Wellston, Vales Mills, Ironton and Pleasant Valley. Expect to remain here till the latter part of the week and then go to Duke; from there to the Highland Branch near Sinking Springs.

Our reunion will be at Creola, as we could not secure the grounds at Wellston. July 28, will soon roll around, and we hope the Saints are making preparation to attend this reunion that is held in the district for their especial benefit.

The companies are asking a big rental on the ordinary sized tents this year. Nearly or almost $5 each for the ten days and we pay freight both ways. But we are hopeful of getting the use of Kirtland tents as we can better afford to pay express on their return than to pay so much for some of the companies.

Let all who can, prepare to take their outing at this time. Let us know if you are coming and especially if you desire to rent a tent, so we will know how many to order. Write to us at Creola, Ohio.

We ask the hearty cooperation of all the Saints in an endeavor to build up the work in the Southern Ohio District. Let us hear from you regarding the needs of your branch.

In gospel bonds,

LUCASVILLE, OHIO, June 26, 1916.

H. E. MOLER.

Oklahoma

A few items from this part of the field will let you know we are active. I have occupied at Tulsa, Oklahoma City, near Elkeno, Sperry, Claremore, and this place, and find advancements in all places. One thing very noticeable is an increased desire to comply with the law of tithing among the Saints. If all would do their part we as a church would soon be out of debt, and have a good working balance, as it should be.

I met with the Indians near Elkeno, two weeks ago; had a three-days' meeting. About one hundred came and camped on the farm of Brother Chief Three Fingers. Brother W. W. Chrestensen and writer did the preaching, assisted by Elders Philip Cook and A. W. Sanders. Brother Cook is our Indian missionary and interpreter. I think good was done. They were disappointed in not having our President F. M. Smith with them on this occasion as they understood he would be. We had a good Indian dinner on Sunday. Some of the white Saints brought dinner and spread it with them. We enjoyed the day greatly.

I was called to Claremore the 16th to preach the funeral sermon of Jesse B. Gooch, the son of Brother and Sister H. B. Gooch. Jesse was out with some boy scouts and they went boat riding. Three of the boys and the boat sank; the other boys got out, but Jesse could not swim and went down. Brother Gooch was in New Mexico at the time, one hundred and fifty miles from a railroad, drilling an oil well. It took him four days to get home. While there waiting for the funeral, I had several good talks to the neighbors on the gospel theme, and was invited to occupy in the Baptist church Sunday night, which I did, and received some good compliments and expressions that our way was the best they had heard. We had the funeral at the home. About three hundred attended. Jesse was nearly fourteen years old and an exceptionally good boy. I baptized him about four years ago. The good people of that place left nothing undone to help lighten the burden of this our brother and sister.

I came to this nice little town Friday and began meetings at once, and yesterday, (Sunday) I organized a branch called the Skiatook Branch, with a full set of officers and about thirty members. The Saints here bought a lot with a small building on it and remodeled it, and now have a good place to worship, and feel proud of their chance.

There is much rain in this country this spring. It is hard for the farmers to save their crops. We have decided not to hold a State reunion this year, but each district will have one, so all can have a chance for a reunion. The prospective war with Mexico is causing some anxiety, especially as to whose boy is to be sacrificed. I saw one mother in tears a few days ago. Her boy had enlisted. Many may have to go yet to war before we have universal peace.

Sincerely yours,

SKIATOOK, OKLAHOMA, June 26, 1916.

W. M. AYLOR.

Northeastern Illinois

The conference year thus far has been a very busy one, yet we would not have it otherwise. The fact of being returned to this district for another year was indeed good news of itself. I find it true that we soon become attached to the Saints with whom we labor as well as a locality or district. I felt a pang of sorrow four years ago when first appointed to this district, and thought it doubtful if I could ever find any place quite like Wisconsin where I had labored for ten years, but now I would dislike equally to leave the Northeastern Illinois District and the association I have formed. I can see quite a change in the gatherings now, as compared with my first year here, as many of the then old members have passed on to their reward or are not able to meet with us because of age and infirmities—but on the other hand there has been a reasonable ingathering each year and a goodly number of young men who have sought to study to make themselves ready, and the Lord has called many of them to the work and others have been admonished to make themselves more ready, and that the Master is pleased with the efforts they have been putting forth.

So the outlook is good if these young men continue faithful to the Lord's work. We note with pleasure the good that has been wrought in the lives of some of these young men since receiving their patriarchal blessings, it seemingly being the turning point in their lives, or as the old saying goes, assisted them in getting "off fools' hill" which every boy seems to try to ascend to a greater or less extent. May God bless the patriarchal order in their work. We note with sadness however that there are a few bright young men who in the past have been called to the work, who have suffered themselves to be influenced by the world and the things contained therein, and thus not magnified their calling; some of these have been silenced, and in few cases cut off from the fold of God. In most every case thus called to mind we observe that these brethren have joined secret orders, against which the Lord and the church in General Conference, by resolution have advised against, and it ought to be a lesson to every young man that enlists in the army of the Lord. James was right when he said: "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever will be the friend of the world is the enemy of God." (James 4: 4.)

The district conference convened with the Deselm Branch near Manteno, June 17 and 18, and was a very peaceful and spiritual conference. We were all made glad by a short visit from Bishop McGuire on his way west, and while he did not dwell on the subject of finances as much as some expected he would, he gave a few good broad hints without any kicks, in his sermon on Sunday afternoon that should be remembered by all. In short: that every man is a steward over the things intrusted to him, and God will hold each individual accountable at the judgment day. As district president I find that a great deal of my time is consumed in looking after such work.

One thing I discover with pleasure is that when some case of transgression comes up and the case must be heard, there seems to be a deep-rooted feeling that justice is all that is desired. And I note with great satisfaction that even those found in the wrong are still my friends, and friendly to those that heard the case and to those who testified against them.

I had the pleasure of attending the district conference of Southern Wisconsin at Soldiers Grove and there met many of the Saints I labored among for so many years. From there I went with my wife to answer a call at her aunt's, Mrs. S. K. Foye, at Lime Spring, Iowa, who has been sick for some time and confined to her bed, with a running sore just above one ankle. She desires the prayers of the Saints that she may recover. It was a great satisfaction to her to be administered to, as there is no elder in those parts that she knows of, and I might add here that she would be pleased to have any elder of that district call on them. Her husband, while not a member, is a friend to the cause and loves to recount the days when Brethren C. H. Burr, L. E. Hills and others defended the cause and stayed with them when they lived at Cresco.

We wish to call attention of all the members of the district, to the fact that the reunion is to be at Plano, August 18 to 27 and all should be doing their best to be there. The reunion needs you and you need the reunion. Notice as to prices of tents, etc., will appear soon. We now expect to locate the reunion up town and thus make a missionary effort of it as well as a reunion of the Saints. There are lots of good people in Plano if we can only reach them, but the old site was too far from the town to get the people out to the meetings, while they attended the street meetings held most every night, even if they had to stand to hear. We would like to see several baptisms as a direct result of the reunion, for then we know that every Saint would say it was a success!

We hope that the Saints will not forget to sustain R. N. Burwell, Dalton, Illinois, as bishop's agent, as you have done so well in the past. We take this means of asking all who can to send a donation, too, for the good of the reunion to C. B. Hartshorn 919 North Kedvale Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, secretary-treasurer of the reunion committee. Thus we give the scattered Saints as well as those in the branches an opportunity to make the reunion a success.

I go to Roscoe to-morrow to begin a series of meetings there in a rented hall, procured by the efforts of one of our local men who is laboring as circumstances permit, Elder J. A. Daer. We have several brethren in this district who are laboring as circumstances permit, and thus are backing up the few missionaries sent out by the church. We wish to encourage all of the local men in doing all the outside missionary work possible, Brethren D. E. Dowker, F. F. Wipper and Green are all active in the work. Patriarch W. A. McDowell is now located at Plano and has been giving his services in this district thus far. Brother C. H. Burr, while not under appointment, is filling several appointments for preaching at his advanced age. We are hopeful of results.

Your brother and servant,

EVANSVILLE, WISCONSIN, July 5, 1916. J. O. DUTTON.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

On Sunday, July 9, at the morning service, President Walter W. Smith delivered an introductory sermon based on Paul's saying, "I press toward the mark," etc., and in the evening Brother G. E. Harrington preached a farewell discourse, both efforts being a vigorous, penetrative setting forth of the duties of the Saints and the possibilities of human will power with the Spirit's aid, to accomplish the divine purposes of the latter-day work. To the first speaker three problems were presented for solution: The social problem, the economic condition, and the conflict between science and religion. And to solve these is the work of the Saints.

On Monday and Tuesday, July 10 and 11, Brother C. Ed. Miller, lately returned from Australia, the Society Islands, New Zealand, and Honolulu, also a visit to the Carlisle Indian school in Pennsylvania, was announced for lectures in behalf of the memorial fund.

The Religio with its talented double quartet, is mostly composed of wide-awake young people who go to and from their classes at the tap of the bell, and after the study period is closed, enter upon a literary and musical program which is generally educational and of a very good class. The new officers are: N. F. Tower, W. A. Bushnell, O. K. Fry, and D. Flanders, with normal superintendent, Mrs. C. J. Hunt; temperance, J. Bunt; member of library board, Miss Ruby Short; and good literature committee, Vernon Lee. We had at last meeting, present, 56 seniors, 34 juniors, 11 teachers, 14 officers, and 31 visitors. Eugene Closson, secretary, is a popular young man, and is always at his post of duty.

Our midweek prayer meeting on July 5 was interesting and well attended. The ordination of the stake high council by Brethren E. A. Smith, Israel A. Smith, William Aylor, G. E. Harrington and R. S. Salyards took place. The members of the council are: W. H. Deam, W. Williamson, A. H. Parsons, G. L. Harrington, W. D. Bullard, A. H. Mills, J. L. Gray, M. A. Etzenhouser, C. F. Davis, J. M. Cockerton, A. H. Knowlton and L. Stover.

President E. A. Smith in a few remarks made a short though commendatory address, appreciative of the large number present, and the genial, kindly spirit of this memorable occasion. He also gave excellent words of counsel to those ordained, encouraging them to go forward, inspiring them with the thought that all opposition and antagonism would be successfully met, and then invoked the divine blessing upon them.

We close with a loving word of remembrance to the Latter Day Saint boys of Battery C who with stout hearts have gone forward at their country's call, and we desire to remind them that kindly words have been spoken about them, like those by Brother Israel A. Smith at the eight o'clock prayer meeting last Sunday morning, and that their mothers, wives and friends will never forget to pray in their behalf.

Your sister in the one faith,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

O Lord, where'er thy people meet
There, they behold thy mercy-seat;
Where'er they seek thee thou art found,
And every place is hallowed ground.

—Cowper.

Immortality o'ersweeps all pains, all tears,
All times, and all fears,
And peals like the eternal thunder of the deep
Into my ears this truth;
Thou livest forever.

—Byron.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes

EASTERN WALES.—At Gloucester, June 10, 11, E. J. Trapp, president, in charge. Statistical reports: Cardiff 21, loss 1; Gloucester 56, gain 8; Nantyglo 18. Treasurer reported: Receipts, £9, 14s, 6½d; balance on hand, £4, 3s, 3½d.

Bishop's agent's report for 1915 gave the sum of £28, 7d, collected, which was considered very satisfactory, especially under the present conditions. Officers elected: E. J. Trapp, president; T. Gould, vice president; A. T. Trapp, secretary; J. Smith, treasurer; J. R. Harris, R. Sims, auditing committee. Short addresses were given by our young men of the ministry. Fellowship meeting was held, in which the Holy Spirit was manifested in the gift of tongues and prophecy; exceedingly precious promises were given to the Saints. Adjourned to meet at call of presidency. A. E. Trapp, secretary.

NEW YORK.—Met with Buffalo Branch, June 10 and 11, A. E. Stone and F. C. Mesle presiding. Reports were received from priesthood of the district and statistical reports from Sherill, Niagara Falls and Buffalo. A standing auditing committee of two was appointed, Frank Spinnett to serve two years and William Landes one year. Election of officers: A. E. Stone, president, choosing F. C. Mesle and L. Lewis as counselors; Anna Brothers, secretary; F. J. Updyke, treasurer; F. C. Mesle, librarian; Georgia Spinnett, member of social purity board; Ethel Hageman, district chorister was sustained. Adjourned to meet at call of presidency for an educational conference. Anna Brothers, secretary, 36 Tremont Avenue, Buffalo, New York.

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.—With Lansing Branch, June 24 and 25, being called to order by District President G. A. Smith. Presidency of conference formed by associate; C. W. Forney, secretary-treasurer; A. G. Hougas, missionary in charge, with the district presidency.

Branches reporting: Battle Creek, Belding, Buchanan, Capitol City, Clear Lake, Coldwater, Galien, Grand Rapids, Hartford, Jackson, Knox, Kalamazoo, Sparta. Ministry reporting: J. D. Stead, B. H. Doty, F. T. Field, F. J. D. Earl, W. P. Buckley, S. A. Barss. The appointment by Brother Hoxie of Sister Louise Evans as district chorister was ratified. Owing to the Saints' church being torn down preparatory to rebuilding, conference was nicely cared for in Moose Hall, where all meals were served. A total of 1,350 meals was served. During the session a reporter from one of the city papers was in attendance and gave us a very nice write-up, clearly making distinction between us and the Utah contingency. Reports showed net gain of 34, a total membership of 1,066. There were 8 baptisms and confirmations, and one ordination provided for. Adjourned to meet with Coldwater Branch at call of district president. W. P. Buckley, secretary.

FREMONT.—At Tabor, Iowa, June 10, T. A. Hougas, J. E. Claiborn, and N. L. Mortimore chosen to preside, C. W. Forney as secretary. Branch reports: Thurman 198, Shenandoah 111, Bartlett 43, Hamburg 60, Glenwood 65, Henderson 82, Tabor 66. Ministry reporting: T. A. Hougas, W. E. Haden, J. E. Claiborn, M. W. Gaylord, John Huston, M. M. Case, F. B. Knight, J. C. Harrington, G. E. Omans, C. W. Forney, R. J. Dunsden, William Eylor, S. S. Clark, G. F. Shank. The time and place for holding the next conference left to the district presidency. Election of district officers resulted as follows: T. A. Hougas, president; N. L. Mortimore, associate; C. W. Forney, secretary-treasurer; A. G. Hougas, member library board. Bishop's agent reported $14.12 on hand. Reunion committee reported time for holding reunion August 25 to September 3, 1916, at Council Bluffs, Iowa. four baptisms. C. W. Forney, secretary.

Convention Minutes

ALBERTA.—Religio, at Ribstone, June 30. Owing to bad weather attendance was small. William Osler presided in absence of president and vice president. Reports read from Edmonton, Calgary, Altorado and North End. One new local was organized at Altorado. Officers elected: President, John Benham; vice president, Lloyd Gregory; treasurer, Mary Skinner; librarian, Elsie Burton; superintendent gospel literature, F. Lambert; superintendent home department, Mrs. William Osler; superintendent temperance department, Clyde Walrath. Mrs. Ruth Osler, Mrs. Ruth Walrath, press committee.

Conference Notices

Northwestern Kansas will convene on reunion ground at Rexford, Kansas, August 12 and 13. All ministerial and branch reports should be sent early to district secretary, J. B. Ansley, Osborne, Kansas. F. E. Taylor, president, Portis, Kansas.

Convention Notices

Central Nebraska Sunday school, with the Neligh Branch, August 4, 1916. Bessie Sodersten, secretary.

Northeastern Kansas Sunday School will convene August 10, at Fanning, Kansas. We look for a good delegation. Especially do we invite the superintendents and secretaries of district. Mrs. Emma Hedrick, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Northeastern Illinois, at Plano, August 18 to 27. Our missionaries, including J. F. Curtis, will be there; we expect Patriarch W. A. McDowell, and no doubt others will be present. We now expect to locate the reunion up town as the old site was too far away from the people, and the owner wanted $100 rent this year. Tents as follows: Wall tents; 10 by 12, $3.25; 12 by 14, $3.75; 14 by 16, $4.75; compartment tents, 10 by 19, $6; 12 by 14, $6; 12 by 19, $7. Dining tent operated. Meals by ticket 15 cents, Transient 20 cents, children 5 to 8, half price. Double springs 50 cents each. Send all orders for tents and springs to J. O. Dutton, Evansville, Wisconsin, not later than August 10. These prices include setting up. Auxiliary work in charge of district officers of Sunday school and Religio, and will have ample time for work. Come with the missionary spirit uppermost in your hearts and minds, is our slogan. J. O. Dutton, chairman; C. B. Hartshorn, secretary-treasurer.

Southwestern Iowa, Northeastern Nebraska, and South-eastern Nebraska Districts hold reunion at Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 25 to September 3. Meals served at boarding tent on grounds, meal tickets for the full time at the rate of 20 cents a meal; without tickets 25 cents. Tents at following prices: 10 by 12, $2.75; 12 by 14, $3.25. Order your tent as soon as convenient, stating size, and it will be set up for you. Send orders for tents to S. Harding, 214 Broadway, Council Bluffs, Iowa. The following speakers will be present: F. M. Smith, J. A. Gillen, F. A. Smith, E. L. Kelley, S. W. L. Scott, F. M. Cooper, Hubert Case, and also missionaries of the districts. Street car service from all parts of the city to the grounds. An invitation is extended to everyone to attend.

Kentucky and Tennessee, July 22, at Foundry Hill Branch, two and one half miles from Puryear, Tennessee. All Saints throughout the district please pass the word around and spread it as far as possible. We need cooperation in advertising. Let us make this a banner reunion. There is time enough yet to get the word all over the district. Those coming from a distance notify Joseph Alexander, Puryear, Tennessee, for conveyance. C. A. Nolan.

Little Sioux District, at Logan, Iowa, August 18 to 28. Beautiful grounds adjoining the little city. Plenty of shade, good water, electric lights, good walks to grounds, splendid railroad accommodations. Fine juvenile playgrounds. Principal speakers will be President F. M. Smith, Heman C. Smith, J. A. Gillen, Amos Berve, Frederick A. Smith, J. W. Wight, S. W. L. Scott and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, field worker for auxiliaries. We are planning on good music, and hope to make this a grand educational reunion. Meals served cafeteria style. Cost of tents: 10 by 12, $2; 12 by 14, $2.50; 14 by 16, $3.50; 10 by 14, 6-foot wall, $4.25; 12 by 14, 6-foot wall, $4.75. Cots, 50 cents. These prices include tents erected. Money must accompany orders. Send orders to G. N. Derry, Logan, Iowa. No orders filled after August 9. Welcome is our slogan. W. R. Adams, secretary reunion committee.

Two-Day Meeting

The two-day meeting previously announced for Byrneville, Indiana, August 12 and 13, has been called off. There is not a sufficient number of Saints there that will accommodate the visitors that may come. J. W. Metcalf, associate minister in charge.

Old-Fashioned Camp Meeting

Northeastern Missouri.—The district tent will be located at Menefee Schoolhouse, two miles north of Lagonda, Missouri, from August 5 to September 3 inclusive. There is plenty of shade and a good camp ground adjoining the school yard. Invitation extended to all to come and camp with us and enjoy a week or ten days of a real old-fashioned camp meeting. This is about nine miles south of New Cambria, in the corner of Chariton County, Missouri. We have a live branch here who will extend a hearty welcome to all visiting and tenting brethren and friends. Let us, as far as possible put the camp meeting date from August 19 to 27 inclusive, though if any cannot come that date, the tent will be in operation there during the entire month and you may have a restful time and get the benefit of the meetings any time during the month that you may be able to take your vacation. Bring your tents. C. W. Miller, New Cambria, R. F. R. 2, box 50, is branch president and will furnish such information as may be sought by correspondence with him. Let our auxiliary workers come prepared to take a part in these meetings and thus aid in the development of our cause. A. M. Chase, John Ely, general missionaries in charge of tent, W. B. Richards, district president.

Addresses

J. L. Parker, home address, 2912 Twenty-Fifth Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

Quorum Notices

Notice is hereby given the Second Independence Stake Quorum of Elders that on account of the organization of the Kansas City and Holden Stakes and upon advice of President F. M. Smith, there will be no more meetings of the quorum until new organizations are made, as there will be separate quorums organized in each new Stake. Notice of such organization will no doubt be given you in due time. John Zahnd, secretary.

The Northern California Quorum of Priests will hold their semiannual meeting in conjunction with the reunion to be held at Irvington, California, August 14 to 27, 1916. All members are requested to send their reports to the secretary so as to reach him before August 14. L. E. Harris, secretary, 322 East Saint James Street, San Jose, California.

Attention! Graceland Alumni and Former Students!

Early in August the first number of Graceland College Bulletin under the editorship and management of Greater Graceland Association will be ready for mailing. The Bulletin will be resumed as a quarterly magazine devoted to the growth and development of the college, representing the chief educational interest of the church. Prominent features of this issue will be news from the classroom and campus. The prospect for 1916-1917, Graceland a junior college, Graceland representatives in active church work, news and notes from former students.

The Bulletin will be mailed regularly to all who have paid one dollar for annual membership in the association. The fee should be sent to the treasurer, J. A. Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa. Membership is designed primarily for those who have been students at Graceland, but is open to all who desire to maintain knowledge of the progress of the school and its students. The money receipts of the association are to be expended in ways best calculated to assist in developing and extending the good work of the college.

The news features of the Bulletin will be of especial interest to students of former years. We shall attempt to collect and publish items of location and occupation with other interesting data concerning all who have been students at Graceland. In order that we may secure the items at an early date, we ask all former students who read this to send us a postcard giving the following facts:

1. Name and address.
2. Present occupation.
3. When attended Graceland and course pursued.
4. Married? When? To whom?
5. Children? Ages?
6. Other items likely to be of interest.

To all who send in this data we will gladly send the first issue, whether they have paid up membership or not. We need your cooperation; we shall all benefit from the result. Mail the card to-day!

Until August 20 address C. B. Woodstock, 321 East College Street, Iowa City, Iowa. After that date, Lamoni, Iowa.

A Request

Will the brother who wrote me, making inquiry concerning the Mormons having an exhibit at the World's Fair, kindly write me again, as I have mislaid his letter and have not his name or address, F. G. Pitt, 415 Fifth Street, Santa Rosa, California.

Died

HUNT.—Sister Sarah Hunt, born at Sandusky, Ohio, 1830; died at Grant City, Missouri, June 25, 1916. Married John A. Hunt, in Indiana, 1849. In 1852 they removed to near Amboy, Illinois. In 1865 they located at Allendale, Missouri, where they were baptized in 1887 by H. A. Stebbins. Brother Hunt died in 1910. Only 4 Saints live in Grant City, but there was a large attendance at the funeral. He had been probate judge. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins; burial at Allendale.

BAKER.—Rosseau R. Baker, born July 19, 1839, at Chancy, Ohio; died at the home of his son, George F. Baker, in Fairmont, West Virginia, June 22, 1916. Married Louisa Williams, November 5, 1867. Five children were born to them, 3 sons and 2 daughters, all the children being with him at the parting hour, his companion having gone to her reward 3 years and 5 months before. Baptized February 4, 1883, by T. J. Beatty, and lived to see all his children in the church. Funeral at the home by Richard Baldwin, assisted by Joseph Biggs.

DEVRIES.—John B. DeVries, born in Holland, September 10, 1853; died June 29, 1916, five miles north of Lamoni. Came to this country when about 27 years of age, and made his home in Decatur County, Iowa, except about three years in Missouri. Married Ella Vanderflute, April 2, 1886. To them were born 11 children, Bennie and Jessie dying in early youth. He and wife were baptized August 28, 1894, by Robert

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
The Perfect Law of Liberty	681
Those Who Remain	682
Holden Stake Organization	682
Current Events	682
Notes and Comments	683
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
College Tuition, by George N. Briggs	685
A Few Words About Our Finances, by James F. Keir	685
You Must Believe in Yourself, by John Zahnd	687
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
Campaign Against Hay Fever	687
The State Cannot Give a Christian Education	688
Peace to Bring About Liquor Fight	689
WOMAN'S AUXILIARY
LETTER DEPARTMENT
Richard S. Salyards—Arthur E. McKim—Ellen Adair—D. R. Baldwin—A. F. Henderson—J. M. Stubbart—William Anderson—J. I. Christie—Mrs. Solomon Tripp—Emily McMullen—E. A. Smith—J. S. McDonald—G. W. Newton.
NEWS FROM MISSIONS	699
H. E. Moler.
NEWS FROM BRANCHES	701
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT	702

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor. Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter. Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

A new book that glows with human interest.

JOE PINE

By Elbert A. Smith

The first part is an interesting study of child life on the western prairies, filled with the keenest of humor and naturally seasoned with the pathos that comes in the fight with adversity.

Illustrated

By Paul N. Craig

It includes the sequel to "Joe Pine" entitled, "Called to be an apostle," which portrays the experiences of the young man and his lifelong girl friend both of whom you will feel you have grown up with.

A strong story, well written.

Ready about August 15; nicely printed in large type, on good paper, and handsomely bound in cloth; $1.25 postpaid. Order now.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Lamoni, Iowa

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

M. Elvin. Funeral at residence, sermon from Mosiah 8: 81, by Robert M. Elvin, assisted by James A. Martin. Widow, 9 children, and 1 grandchild were present, also a large attendance of friends and neighbors. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

CLARK.—Mary Clark, born in Kingrosshire, Scotland, in 1841; died at Boone, Iowa, April 17, 1916. Married James M. Clark, January 2, 1865. They came to America in 1871, living at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Baptized in 1872. They moved to Boone, Iowa in 1883, where she remained until death. Leaves a husband, 4 children, 2 sons and 2 daughters, to mourn their loss. Funeral in charge of Clement Malcor, assisted by H. Pratt, the sermon being by the latter, in the Saints' church. Interment in Linwood Park Cemetery West.

CAMBRIDGE.—Mrs. Clara Cambridge was born in London, England, February 27, 1840; died June 24, 1916, at the residence of her son, John, in London Ontario. Baptized April 5, 1875. Like many of our honored members, she was the oldest member of the church in her community. She is survived by 5 sons and 6 daughters, also 1 sister, and 1 brother. She was highly respected by all. Funeral sermon by Elder William Fligg at the Latter Day Saint church.

HILDRETH.—Sarah McIntosh Hildreth, born November 27, 1839, at Mosa, Ontario; died June 12, 1916, at Independence, Missouri. Baptized January 21, 1887, by R. C. Evans at Chatham, Ontario. Married Marvin Hildreth October 18, 1878. Seven children mourn her departure: Mrs. J. R. Sturges, Mrs. C. H. Williamson, Mrs. S. C. Dunne of Independence, Missouri; John Hildreth, Aylmer Hildreth and Mrs. Sam Webber of Chatham, Ontario, and Margaret Hildreth, Detroit. Funeral June 14, at Independence, in charge of Bishop E. L. Kelley; sermon by President F. M. Smith. Interment at Mound Grove.

SMITH.—Stella A. Danielson, daughter of Martin J. and Julia M. Danielson, born in Miller Township, La Salle County, Illinois, March 9, 1884; died at the Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri, June 23, 1916. Married Arthur M. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, June 15, 1904. To them were born 5 sons, 1 daughter, who together with the husband, father, mother, 2 sisters, 1 brother, and a host of other relatives and friends, are left to mourn. Body was brought to Lamoni for burial. Services at Brick Church, Sunday, June 25, in charge of John Smith, sermon by F. M. Cooper. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery. Mrs. Smith was gentle, amiable, patient and pleasant. Her memory to those who knew her is sweet, and her hope of eternal life a constant encouragement to those who loved her.

HINKLEY.—Julia Ann Hinkley, born November 9, 1838; died June 8, 1916. Baptized in 1875 by President Joseph Smith, being a devoted Saint all her life. She was highly respected in the community. Reared a large family to manhood and womanhood, and taught them all the gospel. One son, Louis, obeyed. She was cared for by her son Lester. She rejoiced to know the end was near. She was a long-time reader of the Ensign, and the last one, yet unread, was buried with her. Funeral from the home, sermon by F. J. Ebeling.

WELDON.—Sister Amanda Weldon, born in Sandusky County, Ohio, July 15, 1849; died in San Jose, California, June 28, 1916. Baptized in Humboldt County, California, August 16, 1874, by Bradberry Robinson. Sister Weldon has been a faithful, devoted member of the church nearly forty-two years, and for the past few years she has been through the furnace of suffering. Leaves husband, Elder Samuel Weldon, and 2 grown sons and daughters to mourn her loss. Funeral services by C. W. Hawkins. Interment in Oak Hill Cemetery.

SCOTT.—Mary A. Scott, born September 18, 1835; died at Independence, Missouri, July 1, 1916. Baptized by S. J. Madden, in Elsworth, Kansas, February 18, 1878. She lived in Independence over thirty-five years. She was a loving mother and a devoted member of the church, loved by all who knew her. Leaves 4 children, Jackson, Robert L., Eugene and Sister Seth Farrow, many grandchildren and a multitude of friends. Funeral at Walnut Park Church; sermon by F. C. Warnky, assisted by Brother Boswell. Interment in the city cemetery.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, JULY 26, 1916

NUMBER 30

Editorial

"WHITHER THOU GOEST I WILL GO"

(Funeral sermon of Sister J. W. Wight, preached by Elbert A. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, July 15, 1916. Reported by Winsome Smith.)

Scripture Reading: John 14: 1-18.

Text: Ruth 1: 16, 17.

BIOGRAPHICAL ITEMS

I have arranged some biographical items that we will read in the beginning of our services.

Elizabeth Jane Stewart was born May 8, 1863, at Bald Hill, Granville County, Victoria, Australia. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, December 15, 1881, by Apostle J. W. Gillen. She was married to Brother J. W. Wight, January 26, 1889, at Queensferry, Victoria, Apostle T. W. Smith officiating. She came to America with her husband in 1894, arriving at Lamoni on the third day of April of that year. She passed away at the Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri, at twenty minutes past five on the afternoon of Wednesday, July 12, 1916.

Two brothers and two sisters survive her, all of them living in Australia. She leaves her husband, Elder J. W. Wight, and four sons, Leslie, Cyril, Rupert, and Keith.

(I am especially requested by Brother Wight to state in regard to Sister Wight's death at the Sanitarium that he does not attach any blame to any of the physicians at that place, neither to the institution itself. He feels that it is one of those things that may occur in any institution of that kind. And he also desired me to state that he thinks that she had the greatest care in the way of nursing and medical treatment that could possibly be given to her.)

When Brother Wight requested me to preach this funeral discourse, I began to cast about in my mind for some text that would be appropriate in view of the life of our beloved sister who has departed from us. I recalled the experience that she had in leaving her home, the home of her childhood in Australia, and coming to this far-off country with her husband. And to my surprise a text came to me from away back in the Old Testament Scriptures, language uttered more than a thousand years before Christ was born. It is the wonderful pledge that was made by Ruth to Naomi, as you will find it in Ruth 1: 16, 17:

"For whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God: where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me."

When my mind reverted to that language I knew that I had found the text that I wanted for this occasion; one that would be suitable; one that would be in sympathy with life's experience of our sister.

"WHITHER THOU GOEST"

When in her maidenhood she pledged her love to this man in that far-off country where he had gone on his mission, her love for him and for the church was put to a great test, and the character of that devotion was revealed in the fact that she could have said literally, whether she did or not, "Where thou goest, I will go; and thy people shall be my people; and thy God my God."

"Whither thou goest I will go." She left her native land and never returned. She left her childhood home, her friends there, and her old associates, and came to this new land and to the people of God at this place.

"THY PEOPLE MY PEOPLE"

"Thy people shall be my people." And so she came here to associate herself with his people. And they truly became her people. The Master said on a certain occasion, you remember, that if anyone shall leave father and mother, brother or sister, or friends, or home, for his sake, that he should receive as reward an hundredfold in this life, and eternal life in the world to come.

Of course this language is to a degree figurative and spiritual, yet how literally in many particulars it is fulfilled. She left her brothers and her sisters in the flesh there, but she found hundreds of brothers and sisters here; brothers and sisters in the Spirit who were none the less loyal and true to her, and possibly none the less dear. She left her home, and she found hundreds of homes open for her here. She left her friends, but for every friend that she left there, she found hundreds here who became attached to her because of her husband and his work, and because of her own character and the work that she did among the children of God. So that she received her reward in that way; and "eternal life in the world to come," is the further promise.

"THY GOD MY GOD"

"Thy God shall be my God." It is a splendid thing when husband and wife are one in every sense of the term, and this can be true in the highest sense only when they are one religiously—when they have one God. And that possibly is more true concerning our people, in whose lives religion is a more important factor than it is in the lives of any other people. And we can realize especially how splendid it was that this man who was called to be one of the twelve apostles, and later on one of the patriarchs, should have with him in his life work a companion who could truly say to him, "Thy God shall be my God"—that they could be absolutely one in their church service. She was willing all the time to worship with him at the common altar, and she was always ready to make her share of the sacrifice in the preaching of this gospel, because his God was her God.

I think a characteristic incident was related by Brother Wight when he told how on a certain occasion when he was on one of his missionary tours, possibly in Australia, on his second mission there, there came a time when she was reduced to such straits in the home that there was no food there but bread and salt. But he never learned this from her. It came to him through Brother Pitt. She never referred to it in correspondence or in conversation. She did not speak about those things—that was a part of her sacrifice—that was a part of her devotion. And the secret of it was that she was serving at home the same God that he was abroad preaching, and she depended on Him, and from Him she received her blessings.

You possibly remember when I was preaching here last winter I mentioned the character of some of the German women and the sacrifices that some of them had made during this war; how they took their golden wedding rings to the Government and gave them freely to be melted down for the gold, and they received in exchange iron rings, which they wore away on their fingers. This sister in her maidenhood was willing to forego any prospects of wealth or affluence in this life, and take upon her the iron ring of the missionary's wife. That was the evidence of her love for and her devotion to him and to the work that he represented.

ONE TAKEN AND THE OTHER LEFT

"Where thou diest, I will die, and there let me be buried." I presume it is the desire of many people who have lived long together in this life that they may pass away at the same time, and in a case like this we know that the one who remains would gladly go on with the one who has gone, were it not for the ties that remain and the duties that must yet be fulfilled. Probably in due time Brother Wight will join his companion. In the meantime he has this consolation, that he is given the privilege to bear the heavier burden. It would be extremely hard for her to remain without him, and it is better for her. And so sustained by the religion that he has preached, and in which he believes, he will be able to go on performing the duty that he knows devolves on him, particularly towards the boy who has not reached manhood's estate, trying to fulfill as best he can the functions of both father and mother.

TILL DEATH DO US PART

And finally the pledge ends, "If aught but death part thee and me." That is the essence of the ideal marriage covenant, and though this may be a sad occasion, we feel to say, how fortunate it is indeed, that these two have been able to keep this covenant so sacredly in the midst of a generation of covenant breakers, as pertains to the marriage covenant. We feel that their home has been blessed in that particular far above thousands and thousands of others.

Thus our sister evidently fulfilled the injunction the Apostle Paul makes in Romans 12, where he says: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

THE REWARDS

I have dwelt on the sacrifices that she made, but I do not want you to conclude that I think that because she made sacrifices that her life was hard or unhappy. I believe that a life of sacrifice and service is the only happy life, and that her life was rich and full and blessed of the Lord, because she was able to make this covenant and to keep it faithfully until the day of her death. She gave up, it is true, prospects for riches and pleasures of the world, but she received infinitely more than she ever gave up. She had always the answer of a good conscience, and the realizing sense that she was doing good, that she was engaged in the line of duty; and under these conditions individuals are happy.

She was happy; you know that from your acquaintance with her—happy and cheerful. She received many things that are missed by those who spend their lives seeking for pleasure. Her cup was running over with joy on many occasions and the Lord blessed her with four of the great essentials that go to make up the happiness of every wife and mother in the church of God.

FOUR GREAT ESSENTIALS

She had first of all her church with its religion and its fellowship, and that meant a great deal to her. She had her home with its duties, its responsibilities, its joys. She had her husband, his companionship, his association, his counsel. And she had her sons. She was interested in their education, their upbringing, and their companionship. She had these four things that fill up the life of every true Latter Day Saint wife and mother: her religion, her home, her husband, and her children. And so I feel that I am safe in saying that her life was blessed, that it was full, that it was happy, and that she received abundantly in return for all the sacrifices she made.

It is true that her life seemed to come to an untimely end, yet I have here a little verse that I have thought to read on this occasion, which says:

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.
And he whose heart beats quickest lives the longest.

In conclusion, I want to draw your attention to the statements made in the scriptural lesson.

MANY MANSIONS

First, it says, "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you."

Our sister left home in far-off Australia and came to this land, and a home was provided for her. The same God in which she trusted when she crossed the great deep and came to this strange land, is able to be with her in this further onward journey that she has taken; and for the consolation of those who remain upon this side, there is the promise that in his Father's house there are many mansions. The same God who gave her a home here in Lamoni and softened the hearts of the people to receive her as a sister, can prepare a place for her among those many mansions, and send the loving angels from on high to be with her, to be her friends and comfort and cheer her in that place.

So we would like if we could to bring a word of consolation to those who remain behind. On such an occasion there seems so little we can say of ourselves. We feel the deepest sympathy, but we cannot find any words to express it. We can only grasp a brother by the hand, but we feel our inability to express the feelings that are in our hearts. But Jesus comes to our rescue, and he says, "I will send another Comforter," and I hope and pray that that Comforter may come into the heart of our brother on this occasion, into the hearts of his children, that they may take courage from its presence, and feel that they can go on with the duties of life.

These sons have the remembrance of a noble mother to nerve them and strengthen them for the struggle of life. It remains with them as a sacred trust to so live that they may never bring shame on her memory, that they may ever represent in their lives the counsel and the teaching that she has given them on many and many an occasion. And it gives us a great deal of joy on this occasion to realize that they have already lived in such a way that they have won the confidence of the community, and we shall continue to trust that their lives may be spent in the same service that has claimed their father and their mother, and will bring to them the same joy and the same reward that it has brought to all the people of God in all ages past.

Now may the comfort and consolation and the presence of the Holy Spirit, and the fellowship of our Master be with them to strengthen and direct them, is our most earnest prayer.

CURRENT EVENTS

WELL-KNOWN POET DIES.—James Whitcomb Riley died from paralysis on the 23d, at his home in Indiana, aged sixty-three.

NOMINATED FOR SUPREME COURT.—J. H. Clarke, United States district judge, of Cleveland, Ohio, has been selected to fill the place in the Supreme Court made vacant by the resignation of Justice Hughes.

HUGE SUM.—This week the House of Commons will be asked for the eleventh time to give a vote of credit. The amount of this vote is 300,000,000 pounds, bringing the total for the war up to approximately $12,549,500,000.

EXTENSIVE FLOOD DAMAGE.—The extent of the recent flood damage in the southeastern States and on the Atlantic is very great. Forty deaths are so far reported, a number missing, and property losses will likely exceed fifteen million dollars.

PROHIBITION NOMINEES.—At their national convention, the Prohibition Party on the 21st nominated for president of the United States, J. Frank Hanly, formerly governor of Indiana; and for vice president, Doctor Ira D. Landrith, of Nashville, Tennessee.

GOETHALS RESIGNS.—After his monumental success in completing the Panama Canal, Major General George W. Goethals has resigned his position as governor of the Canal Zone and will retire from active service in the United States Army. He is succeeded by Colonel Chester Harding.

A VICIOUS PROTEST.—While fifty thousand people marched in a preparedness parade in San Francisco on the 22d a dynamite bomb was exploded in the midst of a dense crowd. Five are dead and forty injured, with several buildings wrecked. Warnings had been previously sent out that a protest of this kind would be made against military preparedness demonstrations. The guilty parties have not as yet been apprehended.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS.—The epidemic of this disease reached a total of 30 deaths and 142 new cases in the five boroughs of New York on the 19th. On the 21st it had dropped again so that only 8 new cases were reported, but Saturday's figures gave 39 deaths and 135 new cases. The situation has assumed plague proportions in New York, though it has not developed extensively outside. When we write this the total number of deaths recorded from the disease are 552, from 2,745 cases. Every effort is being made to find a remedy, but nothing entirely effective has yet been discovered.

MEXICAN SITUATION.—The movement of troops from various States to the border with no release for any of those already there indicates a decision to maintain a strong border patrol at least until a satisfactory arrangement is made for peace in Mexico. Villa and his troops, now numbering eight thousand revolutionists, continue to be the gravest factor in the entire situation. It is officially reported that he is directing an attack on Torreon. Carranza troops are making desperate efforts to effect the capture of this notorious bandit. The Yaqui Indians continue on the warpath, having made a number of attacks on trains and troops in western Sonora. Four thousand Carranza troops have been sent into Lower California against the governor of that state who has declared an independent neutrality against all Mexican factions.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Following a lull on the western front, the French have resumed their offensive in conjunction with the British and Belgians, and the allies have made gains of strongly fortified German trench positions. So far as weather conditions allow, the conflict in the Somme region seems to be maintained with great fury. Russian and colonial troops have been reported as taking a prominent part in the engagements. Six contingents of Russian soldiers have arrived in France so far. The Russians have taken another important point in Turkish Armenia, fifty miles from their objective, Erzingan. In their attack on the central powers they continue to make advances at both the southern and northern ends of their line, although they do not seem to have reached the railroad centers, Kovel and Lemberg, toward which they have been pressing. Large numbers of prisoners have been taken by the Russians. The Arabian revolt against the Turkish Government continues to score successes against the Turkish troops. The Germans continue to lose in German East Africa, at the hands of Belgian troops. The Italians have regained most of the territory that had been taken by the Austrians. Violent engagements continue.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

INTERESTING LETTERS.—In addition to the other features of value to our readers, we call attention especially to the large number of letters of local and general character in this issue. We have some interesting matter for all departments, that will appear in early issues.

UNVEILING OF MAUSOLEUM.—In addition to the report from Independence by Sister Horton, concerning the new tomb of the late Joseph Smith, we have an interesting and detailed account by Elder R. S. Salyards which was received too late for this issue. It will appear next week.

GRACELAND ACCREDITED.—In an advertisement in this issue it will be noticed that the Iowa State educational authorities have given proper recognition to Graceland College as a junior college. Missouri authorities were very favorably impressed and will likely soon follow with similar action.

ELDER WALLER TO CALIFORNIA.—Under date of July 16 Elder G. J. Waller wrote on board the Wilhelmina, stating that he was en route from his home in Honolulu to San Francisco. He was obliged to leave before the arrival of Brethren Miller and McConley, missionaries to Hawaii. Elder Waller expects to spend some months on the coast.

SUPPLY EXHAUSTED.—Brother J. N. Cox, of Dalby Springs, Texas, has given away his available stock of pointers for chart work. Those who are still unsupplied should send sufficient scraps of sole leather or tips of horns to make one. Don't send soft harness leather. He says he is getting requests in every mail, so do not be impatient if he doesn't get around immediately. He may have to charge about fifty cents later on, but will endeavor to supply the demand free.

AUXILIARY YEAR BOOK.—There comes to our desk a copy of the new Year Book, issued by the women of the church through their organization The Woman's Auxiliary. Its eighty pages teem with information essential to every progressive woman in the church. Also every member of the opposite sex should be conversant with the opportunities for service the women of the church are offering. If accepted, these privileges will work wonders in developing a responsive intelligence in our entire home life. After a careful reading of the entire book the writer of this cheerfully recommends the book and urges a liberal support of the movement by the purchase of one or more copies from the Herald Office at 20 cents each, postpaid.

Original Articles

THE BOOK OF MORMON --PART I

BY T. C. KELLEY

BRIGHAMITE CLAIMS INCONSISTENT

Inasmuch as many have taken in hand to write on this matter it seemed that I might be pardoned for offering my opinion also.

Brighamites claim that only the righteous are worthy of the privilege of practicing polygamy, and that the wickedness of the wicked disqualifies and bars them from entering into the "sacred relations of plural marriages."

In the second chapter of Jacob, in the Book of Mormon is a statement that should settle the question as to the right or wrong of polygamy so far as believers in that book are concerned. From it I quote as follows:

But the word of God burthens me because of your grosser crimes. For behold, thus saith the Lord, this people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the scriptures: for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of the things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken unto the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none: for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts.—Verses 31 to 37.

JOSEPH F. SMITH'S STATEMENTS

In an article published in the Arena for November, 1902, Joseph F. Smith, president of the Utah Mormon Church, admits that the statement above referred to in the Book of Mormon prohibited polygamy among the Nephites. He says:

They were limited to one wife each.

The Book of Mormon declares that the Nephites of that early period should have but one wife.

But Joseph F. Smith does not think it was because monogamy was and is right and polygamy wrong; on the contrary he thinks:

They were too wicked and abominable to be permitted to enter into those sacred relations and covenants comprehended in the divine order of celestial or plural marriage.

I emphasize this quotation from Mr. Smith's article because of its importance as indicating authoritatively the Brighamite position under the present leadership of that church in 1902.

The reader will readily understand that, according to Mr. Smith, "celestial or plural marriage is all right, that its relations and covenants are sacred," that plural marriage is a "divine order," nothing at all wrong with this system of plural or polygamous marriage, but the whole trouble was with the people: "They were too wicked and abominable" to practice the "divine order."

After giving us this information as to why the Nephites were forbidden to enter into "the sacred relations and covenants of celestial or plural marriage, as aforesaid, Mr. Smith quotes in italics as follows:

For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me I will command my people: otherwise they shall hearken unto these things.

On this he seeks to build an argument to the effect that the Lord might, at any time when he found a people that were not "too wicked and abominable" but were righteous enough "to enter into the sacred relations and covenants of celestial or plural marriage, he would command them to do so, thus commanding them to do "otherwise" than he had previously commanded them; in still other words, God would command some other people to perform, as a sacred duty, that which he had forbidden as a sin among the Nephites.

ORSON PRATT'S SENTIMENTS

The idea is set forth in the language of Orson Pratt as follows:

The same God that commanded one branch of the house of Israel [the Nephites], in America, to take but one wife . . . gave a very different command to the hosts of Israel in Palestine.—Sermon 1869, Salt Lake City, Reply to Orson Pratt, p. 11.

So the Brighamites have argued and still argue that in 1843 the Lord gave a very different command to the Latter Day Saints, than what he had given to the Nephites in B. C. 545; and also to their father, Lehi, several years earlier.

So the Brighamite position fairly stated, is that God will not only permit but command his people to practice plural marriage, provided they are righteous enough "to enter into its sacred relations," and not "wicked and abominable" as Joseph F. claims the Nephites were.

And further, "If the Lord wills to raise up seed, he will, or at least may command his people to practice polygamy in order to do so."

ENEMIES JOIN HANDS

The enemies of Joseph Smith the Martyr eagerly join hands with the Brighamites in their efforts to show that the Book of Mormon statement, "For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me,

I will command my people: otherwise they shall hearken unto these things," opens the way for some future introduction of polygamy; but of course their object is not the same. The Brighamites wish to uphold and sanctify polygamy, which the Book of Mormon characterizes as "abominable," while Joseph's enemies wish to blacken his reputation and destroy his claims as a prophet.

Complete failure results in both cases, but it is significant that in the effort to make Joseph the Prophet and Martyr responsible for the "dogma" of polygamy, Brighamites are walking hand in hand with his worst enemies and bitterest opposers. They sometimes severely criticize us because they say we join in with other people in opposing them. But they cannot point out an instance where we have in any way aided the enemy in his efforts to destroy the good name or reputation of the martyred prophet. We have aided no enemy in his effort to prove that Joseph was hypocritically teaching monogamy before the world and at the same time secretly teaching and practicing polygamy. Brighamites have done and continue to aid the enemy in such work. Is it true that birds of a feather flock together?

POLYGAMY FOR RIGHTEOUS?

But is it true that polygamy is for the righteous and not for the wicked, as Joseph F. Smith and Brighamites generally teach? Does God condemn it as an abomination among the "wicked" and regard it as a "divine order" when practiced by his people? We think not. Indeed it would seem that if any condonement or partiality should be shown, it would be to the sinner who is ignorant of the law, rather than to the righteous man to whom the law is well known.

Further, if polygamy is a "divine order" as Mr. Smith says, how did it happen that the Nephites whom he says were "wicked and abominable," were the first among the descendants of Lehi to try to comply with the divine order? Usually, wicked and abominable people are slow in running after divine things. I wonder why they were so swift in this case?

It would be quite nice too, if some one would tell us why the more righteous part of the Nephites were the very ones who did not strive to enter into Mr. Joseph F. Smith's "divine order."

It certainly stands to reason that the more righteous a man is the more of the divine nature he has, the more godly he is, the more natural it will always be for him to accept the divine order of things. No argument is needed to prove that proposition. Why, then, did the more righteous, yea, the pure in heart, refuse to accept the divine order while at the same time and place the "wicked and abominable" did accept it, and would have entered into it, but God would not permit them to accept the divine order and commanded them to abide in an order which was not divine? Why should this have been?

WAS THE LORD CONSISTENT?

And, too, Brighamites will confer quite a favor on us if they will explain why the Lord gave the same commandments to Lehi, when or soon after he came out from Jerusalem, that he gave afterwards to the Nephites. Surely no true believer in the Book of Mormon will say that Lehi was not a good man. He was very humble and had many revelations, visions and spiritual experiences, that none but the righteous have.

After Jacob had given the commandment concerning marriage to the Nephites, viz:

Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken unto the word of the Lord: for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines ye shall have none, he further says:

And now behold, my brethren, ye know that these commandments were given to our Father Lehi; wherefore, ye have known them before; and ye have come under great condemnation: have done these things, which ye ought not to have done.—Jacob 2: 44.

Behold, the Lamanites . . . are more righteous than you; for they have not forgotten the commandments of the Lord, which was given to our fathers, that they should have, save it were one wife: and concubines they should have none; and there should not be whoredoms committed among you.—Ibid., 54, 55.

This shows beyond all doubt that the command of God to Lehi and others designated as "our fathers," was that they should have, "save it were one wife." And further, that their descendants, the Nephites, knew it. If any Brighamite doubts it, let him read from Orson Pratt's sermon before referred to:

The Lord through his servant Lehi, gave a command that they should have but one wife.—Reply to Orson Pratt, p. 10.

Now, if Joseph F. Smith, president of the Brighamite church, will kindly give us the reason why the Lord gave this same commandment to righteous Lehi, and righteous Nephi, and others who were favored very highly of the Lord, that he afterwards gave to their descendants, who were forbidden to practice polygamy, according to Mr. Smith, because they were "too wicked," and keep in harmony with himself, and his brethren, we will give him credit for performing a miracle in word juggling than which no greater has ever yet been performed.

Lehi was good enough to be called out of Jerusalem and led by the Lord across the sea to the (to him) land of promise; was permitted to see the coming of Christ; saw God in vision; saw the coming of John the Baptist; prophesied of many things; in short, was a man highly favored of the Lord, and yet notwithstanding all the evidences of worthiness, he was not permitted to enter into "those sacred relations and covenants comprehended in the divine order of celestial or plural marriage." Why not? Was he too wicked? Surely not. What was the reason? Let Orson Pratt answer:

There were Nephi, Sam, Laman, and Lemuel the sons of Lehi, and Zoram brought out of Jerusalem. How many daughters of Ishmael were unmarried? Just five. Would it have been just under these circumstances to ordain plurality among them? No. Why? Because the males and females were equal in number and they were under the guidance of the Almighty.—Reply to O. Pratt, p. 10.

Well done, poor old Orson. We certainly thank you. Your position is correct, so far as this quotation goes. Again we thank you. Thus it is seen that leading Brighamites do not agree. Mr. Pratt says polygamy would not have been just at the time of Lehi's coming to America, "because they were under the guidance of the Almighty."

Joseph F. says that sixty-five years later they were "too wicked and abominable."

At both periods plural marriage was forbidden. Mr. Smith's excuse cannot apply to the period of which Mr. Pratt speaks. If we accept Mr. Smith's excuse as correct, we cannot accept Mr. Pratt's excuse as applicable to the time of which Mr. Smith speaks. Mr. Pratt was correct; Mr. Smith was very much at fault, as we have seen. Even an ordinary layman among the Brighamites ought to be able to see that both men cannot be right.

(To be concluded.)

* * * * *

STAKES AND STAKE PRESIDENCY

Very little is written in the history of the church from which satisfactory conclusions may be drawn concerning certain features of stake work, including that of stake presidents and counselors to stake presidents. Mere technical discussions are not satisfactory; to reach correct conclusions we must base conclusions upon the fundamental principles of the law revealed in the revelations of God. The Book of Rules has its place; it records General Conference action based upon understanding of the organic law. If found to be out of harmony with the law, it should be amended. The divine law is our basis to which we make appeal.

The revelations to the church indicate that when God's people are gathered they will be gathered in "Zion and her stakes." The law will be fully administered and enforced there; deliverance will be realized and protection afforded, not under the present combined and temporary government of branches and districts, but in Zion and her stakes. Temples are to be built, the Saints established, baptism for the dead administered, and other important things are to be accomplished in the permanent organizations to be provided "in Zion and her stakes." (See Doctrine and Covenants 91: 1; 93: 1; 107: 11; 68: 4; 98: 4, etc.)

In 1873 the Lord said to the church:

It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people. When it shall be necessary I will command that they be established. Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me.—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 11.

The Saints were first to settle in the regions round about, preparatory in their branch and district organizations, to the ultimate or established condition when stake government would be provided.

Twenty-one years later, in 1894 the Lord said:

That Lamoni, Iowa, having been made by the agreement of the church under the law of the land the principal place of business of the church, it is wise and expedient that it should be considered and declared by the conference to be the seat of the presidency of the church, and in due time be made a stake.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 12.

Lamoni, was then a branch, in the Decatur District. It was to become, to be made, something else—a stake.

In 1901 the Lord directed thus:

My people are directed to establish two stakes; one at Independence, one at Lamoni, Iowa, organizing them after the pattern which is found in the law; a presiding high priest with counselors, a high council, and a bishop and his counselors. These stakes shall be made to comprise the boundaries of the districts as they now stand, the center at the towns and places named; and the majority of the councils that should be chosen should be residents of the places named, in order that there may ever be a sufficient body to transact the business required.—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 10.

The stakes were to be established at Independence and at Lamoni, Iowa. The territory of the stakes was to include the territory of the former districts, but the "center" was to be "at the towns and places named." Each was to be "the city of the stake." Here was to be resident the "majority of the councils," "in order that there may ever be a sufficient body to transact the business required."

The great majority of the people of the two stakes were residents of Independence and Lamoni. A stake is a church in miniature, organized after "the pattern" which governs organization of the church as a whole, a president and two counselors, a high council, and a bishopric.

In the minutes of organization of the stakes, written by the writer, we have these statements:

From the minutes of Independence Stake organized in 1901:

The President [President Joseph Smith] stated. . . . In joint council of the Presidency and Twelve an agreement had been reached to this effect: That the stake when organized would take the place of the district organization; that the presidency of the stake would be the presidency of the Independence Branch so far as presidency was concerned leaving the remainder of the branch organization as it was.

From minutes of organization of Lamoni Stake:

That upon the organization of the stake the president with his counselors become the presidency of the stake, including its branches. . . . The president would also be the president of the Lamoni Branch; other branches would remain intact under the supervision of stake authorities.

President Joseph Smith, following receipt of the revelation commanding organization of stakes, instructed the joint council and the stakes that the presidency of the stake and his counselors would be the presidents of the central branches or seats of the stakes.

This procedure was followed for a time, when agitation arose in one of the stakes, and near the close of the General Conference of 1914 the rule was changed and the Book of Rules (which had conformed to the instructions of President Smith) was changed to permit branches at the seats of the stakes to choose any president they might wish. The action was not considered at length; the amendment was adopted under a time limit discussion.

Some had urged and continued to urge that the rule which provides that the stake presidency shall be the presidents of the center branch takes away the right of the center branch to choose its president; that it is contrary to the law of common consent; that the people therein should be as free as are other branches to select any president they may wish.

We believe fully in the principle of common consent, but deny that it is violated. As stated, stake government is a more permanent form than branch and district government. The central branches as units are stakes, not mere branches; stakes were commanded to be at Independence and Lamoni. The places named were the stake centers; the places where the stake business was to be done; for instance, as stated in 1894, "Lamoni" "in due time" was "to be made a stake."

The conferences in which the stakes were organized were held at the centers of the stakes; the people resident there were consulted. They voted for such organization. Annually or oftener they met in stake assembly; they could at any time refuse to sustain such officers. As the center unit of the stake they enjoyed greater privileges than did and than do the people of the outlying divisions or "wards" of the stake. Wherein were their rights abridged by the rule? They enjoy greater privileges than under the former branch organization.

Another significant point: The center places of the stakes named contain the great body, a great majority of the people of the stakes. To put in a man as a local president, other than the stake president, is to do several wrong things: One is, it puts him directly in charge of the vital point, the great unit which swings or determines the work of the stake. This man has "the nurturing and sustaining" of the large body of the membership to the exclusion of the president, thus making the latter, with his counselors, a nondescript, a mere nominal president, whose center of authority and usefulness is nowhere and his circumference everywhere. He is thus removed from direct active control of the seat of the presidency of the stake. Another sits there; he must roam about and preside in name only; the man directly in charge of the central branch is a bigger man; the relegated stake president must wander around the stake a president in name, but not in fact.

Another: Annual or semiannual elections of president in the city of the stake means temporary government. The work is of especial importance. A man can only make a start in a year; longer time is required to attain desired conditions. He may be thrown out and a new man substituted at the end of a term. It also encourages division, factional strife with numerous candidates.

So far, however, the stake presidents have been elected (with some opposition) by the centers as their presidents. Why? Evidently (and correctly so) because they were the presidents of the stakes. But another omission, a serious error, has occurred here; viz: Sometimes the president has been elected, but his counselors not included with him in the presidency of the central unit of the stakes. Upon what philosophy are men given counselors to participate in their work and then denied their help? What does a presidency composed of a president and two counselors mean? Clearly, self-evidently, that they all as an undivided presidency, are to act together. Shall a man be given the tasks of presidency as a stake president and be left to do the very larger part of the work—that of presiding over the great body at the stake center—alone, unaided by his counselors? Shall the counselors be made merely nominal factors, wandering stars, denied their legitimate places in the work of presiding?

To resume: Stakes are permanent and complete units in church government—a stake is a copy of the general church in organization. The central division or unit is not a mere "branch" with elder, priest, teacher and deacon as presiding officers. It is the center of the stake, the seat of government under direction of the stake presidency and other stake officers. To place a separate presiding elder or high priest in charge of the stake center or branch means, in effect, to go back to the old order and to nullify the ordinance or revelation which provides, as president Joseph Smith instructed, that the stake presidency should preside at the center or seat of the stake government.

I dislike, for some reasons, to add this, but I will; the clear statements of the revelations should be sufficient; however, it is confirmatory of the word: At the session of General Conference of 1914 when the conference amended the Book of Rules, as stated above, I turned to President Joseph Smith and said: "May I ask you a question?" He replied, "Yes."

"When you gave instruction that the presidency of the stake should be the presidency of the center branch of the stake, did you understand that you gave such instructions according to the instructions of the Holy Spirit and in harmony with the organic law?"

To this he replied: "I so understood."

I think this is another case where the Lord gave instructions "but the conferences of my people saw proper to change" the rule, as in Doctrine and Covenants 125:7. The writer feels assured that upon fuller consideration the General Conference will return to the rule originally adopted. To do so, in his judgment, is to base our procedure upon a sound basis.

RICHARD S. SALYARDS.

Of General Interest

WHERE INDIANS RIDE IN AUTOMOBILES

Our destination lay far distant from a railroad. We were on our way to attend the first agricultural fair ever held by the Omaha Indians.

Naturally it could but seem very strange to me that these aborigines of Nebraska should have undertaken such a project. How, in a single generation, had it been possible for the dust of primitive life to be shaken so completely from their moccasined feet? I remember that as a boy I had heard nothing but disparagement of the Indians. They would never amount to anything. They were too lazy to farm. What a pity that good, rich land should have been set aside for them! They were only being pauperized by the Government.

So people said. But here, to-day, among hazy green hills, rich in their standing grain, what must one think of these opulent cornfields reaching farther than eye could see? At intervals we had been passing comfortable farmhouses, with outbuildings, machine sheds, cribs, spacious barns. Glass balls on the lightning rods glittered in the clear sun like sparks of silver fire. You would never suppose these to be the country places of Omaha Indians, if each home had not had beside it another cone-shaped abode—an aboriginal tepee, with lodge poles protruding at the top.

Wise red man, I reflected, to retain the lodge of his ancestors. It is his sleeping porch; clear sunshine and clean air, blessings of Wakanda, still come to him there.

Our attention had been absorbed by what we saw away off in a green hollow among the hills. From a lofty crest of the trail we were looking down into that verdant bowl, where snowy flecks, gleaming white in the sun, outlined a circle; they were tepees of the Omaha Indians. For many miles the native families had been assembling there, to make that their camping ground, while they held this, the first of their agricultural fairs.

Arriving presently among those tribal tents, we found that modernity and the old aboriginal life had curiously linked hands. A foretaste of what it would be like we had already received on the way; for our car had passed a group of Indians, veteran members of the tribe, each of them blanket-draped, his hair in braids and gold circlets in his ears. They were driving a smooth-running limousine.

Yes, indeed, they knew the uses of the automobile, and yet there was one among them—the white-haired member of the party—who was said to have been expert, in the old days, with the bow and arrow. He had hunted the buffalo, we were told, in this very region where now he was luxuriously speeding along in that six-cylinder motor car! When we fell into conversation with him and made occasion, later on, to complain of the mudholes we had slushed through and the decrepit bridges we had crossed, he said, with deliberate emphasis:

"Our county commissioners are white men. They always promise better roads. On their lips they say it, but in their hearts they are—white men."—Keene Abbott in Harper's Magazine for June.

Woman's Auxiliary

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

OFFICERS

President, Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, 630 South Chrysler Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Vice President, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, 1515 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri. Secretary, Mrs. W. W. Smith, corner Walnut Street and River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri. Treasurer, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Historian, Mrs. B. C. Smith, 214 South Street, Independence, Missouri.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPARTMENTS

Educational, Helen Silsbee Smith, 2315 Harney Street, Omaha, Nebraska. Home, Mrs. George N. Briggs, Lamoni, Iowa. Child Welfare, Mrs. Walter Sandy, 3431 East Sixtieth Street, Kansas City, Missouri. Relief and Service, Mrs. Edith Cochran, 1107 Powell Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri. Young Woman's, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

At Last Our Year Book

How pleased we were one day this week to receive the Year Book from the Herald Publishing House! Eagerly we had anticipated its arrival and we are glad to say, our perusal of the materialized form in no way detracted from the expectations which had been raised concerning it. In fact, in neatness of design, ink, color, make-up and material, it transcended our hopes, and we feel a degree of pride and satisfaction in assuring the sisters throughout the church, that they will feel no disappointment when they receive their copies. Best of all, it contains so many helpful ideas; ideas that show the developing period of our women, and their activities in the church. One can see how the desire to equip themselves mentally and spiritually for the great forward movement of the times, and especially of the body of Christ on earth, permeates every phase of the work outlined, and one experiences a degree of satisfaction in noting the really very progressive lines which are therein indicated. We may feel, sisters, in conforming to the excellent plans of our new constitution, that we are not one whit behind the times or the work undertaken by other societies of women in the world, consecrated to the uplift of human conditions.

From the foreword to the closing list of bulletins available for educational purposes, the Year Book is full of encouragement to us. We feel the impetus of the Zionistic ideas which identify our church at this period of its development. We sense the spirit of service, of love and succor which should characterize every true Latter Day Saint. We perceive a broadening out, a reaching after higher things than the petty ones which defined woman's horizon in a past age. We are assured that while our women may make mistakes, those mistakes will be in the line of upward progression, and not of retrograde nature. All growth is more or less attended by upheaval and disturbance, and out of the gropings of woman's mind in the past, is coming light and a footing upon a higher plane, both intellectually and spiritually.

The recent biennial convention of Federated Women's Clubs, held in New York City, was attended by twenty thousand earnest women. A recent writer speaks of these women as being "useful" women, drawing a line between them, as women who do things, and those who exist merely for the purposes of ornamentation. The writer says, "This body represents the other unit in American civilization—a unit no less actively engaged in determining the character, quality, and ideals of this civilization than the Government at Washington. It is in the pioneer stage of development, without salaries for its representatives, without a treasury from which to make appropriations—like the first governing bodies of this republic, when representatives made up in actual service what they lacked in funds for appropriations. . . . The work accomplished by the 'other unit' is homely, plain service to plain people. It is the domestic drudgery of this nation. Men are not and never have been interested in domestic drudgery, whether it is in their own homes or in the nation. Their instinct is to clear out and leave the women to do it!"

It will not be amiss here, to give a brief sketch of what the women of various localities have been doing, as indicated by the reports to this convention. "The Federations of the Northern and Western States are teaching foreign-born children and their parents the American standards of life, sanitation and economics. Nebraska women have a portable school they send to communities in need of it. Dakota women have concentrated upon efforts to lighten the drudgery of farmers' wives. Seven thousand women in Oklahoma are educating teachers; they sent thirty-eight into the schools of that State last year. Arkansas women have organized eleven thousand college girls into an active domestic, educational force, devoted to service in rural communities. Wisconsin clubs specialize upon the health of children, free clinics for babies, and eugenics. Illinois has more women in its clubs than there are soldiers in the regular United States army, ten thousand of whom are giving all their time to social service. New England clubs are engaged in every kind of service by which the immigrant is protected as an immigrant, and by which he is developed into an American citizen. New Hampshire clubs have a fund for educating teachers, who, instead of returning the money spent, pledge themselves to teach for two years among immigrants or in rural communities. . . . The club women of Louisiana, Georgia and Alabama are working for compulsory education laws: they have canning clubs and teachers of domestic economics and sanitation in rural communities. Twenty thousand club women in Texas are working for good roads; they have built rural club houses, established markets for farm women, and offered prizes for the best-conducted rural schools. Kentucky, Georgia, North and South Carolina women are conducting moonlight schools for illiterates. Kentucky has one thousand of these schools, and there is a certain club woman in this State who has taught eighteen hundred men and women how to read and write. These people gather at the end of the day to learn their A B C's. The ambition of these club women is to wipe out illiteracy in the South by the end of 1920. They are not likely to accomplish so much, for in most of these States they face the opposition of politicians to compulsory education. Clubs of Georgia are educating eighty-five mountain boys and girls in an industrial school owned and supported by the State federation. . . . There was not a single report from a Browning Club, not a word about the Maeterlinck bee culture in mysticism. Nobody, it seems, has been studying the origin of Shakespeare's plays!"

All this is significant of the attitude the best thinkers of the world are to-day taking towards service to humanity. The virility of the West, with its clear mind, and tireless energy, is not content to simply dream noble dreams; to be happy, must express itself in action, and gradually the leavening spirit that was in Christ is coming to be felt over those peoples who have, however incidentally, studied the philosophy he offered. Service to others; submergence of self and selfish interests in the broader and more important ones of others; elimination of love of ease, comfort and power, which might hinder the fullest expression of that best love which acts; and the thoughtful consideration of those principles which will the most plainly point out a consecrated worker the lines of efficiency and success in these altruistic impulses—all these are characteristic of the true principles of Christianity as condensed into the significant command, "Love ye one another, even as I have loved you." These are the readings one may find between the lines, both in the reports of the movements of our Federated Clubs and in our own Year Book, now at hand.

The price of the Year Book, as has been stated, is twenty cents per copy, postpaid. Through a misunderstanding or error, the price was printed on the book, "25 cents," but we are glad to know it will be only twenty. Another error that unwittingly crept in, was Sister Lorena Leeka's address, which is 6301 Florence Boulevard, Omaha, instead of "Forest," as printed.

Now may we have a hearty and enthusiastic response on the part of our women, in ordering these Year Books? Many were sold at the organization of the various stakes, and many of the live-wire missionaries are ordering a dozen or so apiece, to dispose of in their fields. Every local should be well supplied, and one could imagine no gift for the price that would be more appropriate for Latter Day Saint women anywhere. Send in your orders to the Herald Office at once, and then, upon studying the book, the plans of the Auxiliary, and the suggestions contained therein, you will find abundant material and encouragement for a most successful year of study and profit in your community, through the united efforts of the women there.

Auxiliary Echoes

The sisters of the Eastern Michigan District met July 1, at Port Huron, and elected the following to office: Lizzie Plato, Capac, Michigan, president; Sister J. R. Grice, Detroit, vice president; Nettie Gault, 1505 West Fort Street, Detroit, secretary; Sister James Gault, Wayne, Michigan, treasurer; O. Engel, 813 Tenth Street, Port Huron, Michigan, press chairman.

The election of department superintendents was postponed until the Year Book comes out with the new plans. Sisters J. R. Grice, and J. Gault gave short talks of their visit to General Convention, and the new president told of the work done the past year, and encouraged the sisters to even better things for the coming season.

We are glad to receive this report, and to note the willingness to fall in with the general movement. How much better than to stand back and prophesy failure? We welcome Sister Engel to the ranks of press workers, and congratulate her upon being first chairman of whose appointment notice has reached us.

Many other locals and district organizations follow the example promptly, and soon we will have a series of bright reports from all over the church, indicating the life and activity of our women in their combined capacity.

Reports to the Late Convention

REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE YOUNG WOMAN'S DEPARTMENT

The Oriole work was in typewritten form only at this time last year. It was accepted with a great deal of earnestness and many orders for the Oriole Book were taken at the General Convention in 1915. The books were printed in June of last year and our receipts for the books alone, up to January 20 were $47.62. The expense of printing and mailing was $49.37. This is $2.95 more than our receipts at the present time, but we have 160 books on hand which will bring us $24. There will be some expense in mailing these, probably less than $3, hence our total receipts will be about $69. We give you these figures that you may know that the Oriole work is self-sustaining, realizing enough from the sale of the books to pay the incidental expenses of the organization. We cannot give you the exact number of books sold as it was necessary to send out a great number to advertise so new a work. Some of our reunion workers have not reported as to the number sold and between 35 and 40 have been left with them. Copies were sent to the officials and heads of departments of the church. Besides paying the expenses of the organization, the girls have paid their annual per capita tax amounting to $30.00.

In about nine months we have enrolled 300 girls and young women, all working for points in home making, church training, physical development and nature study. Up to February 15 we have issued 32 certificates to monitors, authorizing them to organize circles. The enrollment given includes only 29 of these circles as we have not had time to receive reports from others since issuing the certificates. Our membership is represented in the following states: Maryland, Massachusetts, Missouri, Michigan, Iowa, Oregon, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Colorado, Ohio, Washington, California.

We are indebted to Brother J. W. Rushton and Brother Gomer R. Wells for encouraging and inspirational letters which were printed in the Ensign and HERALD. They have done much toward removing prejudice among the older church members and workers. We receive inquiries almost daily concerning the Oriole work, with requests for books, though we have had very little time to push it in new places. The letter from Brethren Rushton and Wells, together with the news items that have appeared in the Autumn Leaves and Ensign, have served us so well as advertisers that we have been too busy answering inquiries and following up books and newly organized circles to advertise further. This ready and earnest acceptance of the work signifies to us that the "Oriole Girls" is filling a very general need. In fact many have said to us that they have wished and waited so long for a movement of this kind and felt sure that it would solve many problems in the education of the girls if the work as outlined in the Oriole Book were conscientiously done. We have the splendid, inspirational cooperation of our president, F. M. Smith, who says that the Oriole plan is adapted to cover the needs that hitherto have not been met.

In July an Oriole pin was offered as a prize to the Oriole girl who would write both the words and the music of a song to be used as an Oriole song. We had several songs sent in, the words of which were very pretty and appropriate but we received only one set of words accompanied by original music. This was written by Sister Madeline Higgins of Kansas City, Kansas, who is partially blind. It was instantly voted by all who heard it as attractive and pretty. The pin was awarded to Sister Higgins without question. We have had one thousand copies printed which will sell for five cents a copy. These are the exact size of the book and made to insert therein.

We have sold over fifteen bolts of the Oriole uniform material (at cost plus postage), so that, in every community where there are Oriole girls, you will find the regulation uniform which distinguishes them and gives them a practical dress for all circle meetings, whether at home or "abroad." Some circles have purchased their own materials in their home town on account of the long distance for mailing.

At the suggestion of Sister Inez Davis, who, with her husband, was in charge of the church exhibit at the San Francisco Fair for a time, a large poster was made advertising the Oriole girls. The upper section was a large hand-tinted picture of an Oriole girl, and on the lower section was printed the words, "Every girl for the church, the home and every other girl."

Sister Della Braidwood, general assistant superintendent, has been relieved from doing much of the general work as she had the local superintendency of Independence, which means much work in so large a branch. Under her supervision lectures have been given on the following subjects: Interior decoration, home economics, and psychology. Other circles in various parts of the country report having taken up the same subjects and others, under specialists.

A secretary was found necessary to the success of the work, hence Sister Maude Peak was secured in November and has been excellent help in taking care of the statistical part of the work as well as a wise counselor. In October, Sister Amy Turner consented to act as chairman of publicity, and since that time has been in communication with every circle up to January, 1916.

After the book was in the hands of the printer we received some very valuable suggestions from Sister Eunice Smith, which we inserted but overlooked naming her among those who had given us help in arranging our work.

The great difficulty with this work, as with every other, is to find leaders. We want mature, sympathetic, youth-loving women to lead our circles. The girls will play, have parties, and various other activities, and while the social feature is a small part of the Oriole work, who can better supervise these activities, as well as the other very important features, than these women? Surely every woman who can justly do so, should take advantage of this splendid opportunity to live with the girls and give them the benefit of her counsel and companionship.

In the future work of the Oriole girls we recommend a closer coordination with the church and its institutions. For instance, President F. M. Smith suggested that, in addition to the points in nursing, which are already given in the Oriole book, those girls who can do so, take further instructions, through correspondence from the Sanitarium, which we have been assured by those in charge, will be furnished. The same suggestion may be worked out with the Graceland College extension course.

We recommend, also, the issuing of quarterly bulletins, taking up one phase of the work each quarter.

It has been suggested also, that each Oriole circle have an official photographer, who shall make a study of kodaking, becoming proficient in this work, collecting and preserving pictures which are of interest historically and in point of excellence.

In serving the auxiliary this year as general superintendent of the young woman's department, general treasurer, and secretary of the general advisory board, whatever credit may be given me I wish to share with my mother Mrs. H. O. Smith, who has been my constant and sympathetic helper in home duties.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER.

February 15, 1916.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS,
LAMONI, IOWA

Death of Brother Roberts

We have some very, very sad news to relate this time. Our dear Brother Joseph Roberts who was a member of the board of trustees of the Children's Home and who was the treasurer, died at his home in Lamoni on Friday, July 14, and on the 16th we laid his body in the cemetery of beautiful Rose Hill, just west of Lamoni, near the spot where the little ones who have died in our home have their resting place.

Brother Roberts was a man of kind heart and loved the children. While on his deathbed and his own body was suffering pain he heard that a good mother was dead and had left six small children. His heart went out towards them and he anxiously inquired how they would be cared for, and seemed more contented when he was assured that provision was being made.

He left four children of his own, but he had made provision before he died for them to have a home. Still they will miss their kind father and feel very sad because he is gone. We hope all the little children will pray for them and their dear mamma, who is in deep sorrow. We will miss him and his wise counsel very much in our meetings. We hope his place with us and the church will be filled soon by some one good and true and who loves the children as Brother Roberts did. We do not doubt but he is safe and happy with the Savior.

We Should be Polite

In our last appearance we gave the children some words of Sister Walker, or as she then called herself, "Frances;" given to little children many years ago, when some of us older people were small, and as they did us good, we hope they will do good to the little ones now. We especially commend these words to the children in our Children's Home. Though some of them may not have mothers of their own, they have a dear, kind mother at the home who is doing all she can for them and we hope the children will be encouraged to read these things, and that they will show their appreciation by being polite to all whom they meet. Our children have had the reputation of being little gentlemen and ladies, and we hope it will always be so.

POLITENESS—BY "FRANCES"

Boys, I want a nice little chat with you this evening, and in casting about for a profitable subject, none of such importance presents itself to my mind, as "Politeness." You are most of you, I presume, in your own homes, surrounded by younger brothers and sisters. Have you ever thought that the characters which you are now forming will stamp the future man, and you can never claim to be a true gentleman, if devoid of the virtue of politeness?

"But," says one, "what virtue is there in politeness? It is a mere form, and I cannot see that anyone is the gainer by it, or the better for practicing it."

Politeness, boys, is not a mere form, and I want to impress this truth on your mind now, that it may abide with you in after years. All genuine politeness must spring from the desire of making others happy, and he who lives in accordance with the Golden Rule has the secret of true politeness woven, as it were, into his whole life.

Many children (and grown persons also, we are sorry to have it to say) think that it does not matter how they behave at home, when there is none but their own family there, for they imagine when strangers or friends happen in, they have only to put on company manners and all will be right. Two grave mistakes, my young friends. You are striving to practice deception, but are deceiving few but yourself. You have read the fable of the animal who dressed himself in the lion's skin, but the ears would make their appearance, and so betrayed the deception. Rest assured it will be so with company manners, for before you are aware of it, some word or action will betray the natural manner, and you will appear in your true colors.

Our heavenly Father has implanted in each one of us, the desire of happiness. Men may seek it from different sources, but he seeks it somewhere. You too, my little friends, are seeking it, and if you want to find a double portion of that happiness which leaves no sting behind it—no remorse—no bitter tears, seek it in the way which God has appointed, and believe Frances when she tells you you will never find it in any other. If you would be happy yourself, strive to make others so, and I promise you you will find what you seek.

And now we will come back to politeness, Love you know is of God, and the beloved disciple says, that we know not God unless we love. Now love is gentle, kind and tender. If you love others you desire to see them happy, and will do all you can to make them so, even when you have to sacrifice your own feelings, your own comforts to theirs. If those you love render you a favor, you show your gratitude both in word and act. Boys, do you love your mothers? "Oh yes," you all answer, while your eyes take a new luster at the very mention of her name. Well, then, let us test your love by seeing whether you are polite to her. Have you ever been known to sit still in your chair while mother went to the well to fill the empty bucket? Have you ever seen her go for fuel to replenish the fire, without interrupting her with the fondness which would shield her from such work, as suited only to men and boys? Have you ever seen her passing from one room to another when her hands were full, without rising to open the door for her? Are you in the habit of receiving from her hands, day after day, the many kind favors a mother is always bestowing, without the kind cheerfully spoken "thank you, mother"? If you cannot answer with a positive no to these questions, then let me assure you, you are letting a sweet cup of happiness remain within your reach untasted, and are laying the foundation of a selfish character. Not only this, but you are depriving your mother of that which would throw a halo of peace and joy about her life and make her brave to fight its battles.

I once read a beautiful little story of an angel visiting the earth to take the names of those who love God. He came to a man who could tell him nothing of himself to lead the angel to think he loved God. "Can't you write my name as one who loves the Lord?"

"No," replied the angel. "Write it then," said the man, "as one who loves his fellow men." When the names were unrolled, this man's name stood first on the list of those whom God loved. And so it is, my young friends. We can confer upon God no favor, for he is far above any benefit we might bestow. How then can we show our love towards him? By loving our fellow men, who are the workmanship of his hands. This love will lead us to seek their happiness. Politeness bestows happiness and should be cultivated by both young and old, but especially by the young, who are forming habits for life and characters for eternity. The Savior promises we shall be rewarded even for giving a cup of cold water to those who love him. Many of these sparkling drops you may measure out in the cup of politeness, and wherever you may fail to exercise this virtue, let it not be at your homes.

Letter Department

Holden Stake

Did I say, Mr. Editor, that the branch organized at Camp Clark was changed to the "Missouri Field Artillery Branch"? Any of our church boys therein may be addressed care of Battery C, Missouri National Guard, Laredo, Texas.

I omitted to state that Sister Alice M. Smith accompanied her father, President F. M. Smith, on his visit to the boys at Nevada; that she also addressed them on behalf of the young people of Independence. Rumor has it that many a young soldier turned his head from "attention" as Miss Alice passed down the line, and that some heads may remain turned. You HERALD readers remember that we have young people among our readers; also that the middle-aged and the old are admonished not to forget the "gladsomeness of their youth."

There is a tinge of Southern life in the delightful hospitality of the people in these new stakes and the writer has greatly enjoyed their fellowship. The flavor of the social life as well as that of the food is finely shaded and delicious. The canons of domestic science include a social side that is manifold and enlivening. Good name in man and woman is the immediate jewel of their souls, and combined with a feast of reason and a flow of soul in the spirit of a great purpose, makes life worth living. Hospitality, courtesy, refinement, are not wanting. It is more than worth while to be pleasing in personality and affable in all the relations of life. To be kind and pleasant is normal; to be gracious lends charm and cheer. To be grouchy, unamiable in any degree, is unchristianlike, unmanly, unwomanly. "Hand Jones a chair," said Lord Chesterfield, on his dying bed, just before he expired, as a visitor came in.

The gospel unfolds the basis of a true life. It is to reveal in personalities dominated, obsessed by its light and power, the normal expressions of a life that is to include perfection of character. Healing souls sick morally, financially, mentally; calling out, unfolding the personalities of those unsullied, unmarred by sin, its processional unfoldments are based upon the philosophy that "men are that they might have joy."

The enrichment of the soul in eternal satisfactions calls out and determines the best of which we are capable. Man, with divine potentialities, inheriting faculties offspring from God himself, is designed to live and be the paragon of all living things under the administration of Him who is the embodiment of God, and in whom are hidden "all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

"Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." One notes with much pleasure that a spirit of consecration is coming upon our people; they are tender in heart, sincere in spirit, earnest, solicitous, devoted, kind. These qualities dominating, they shall influence, as the strongest power known, the world of good men and women whose vision now is obscured by trade, barter, commerce, toil, worldly pleasures that cannot satisfy true souls; and who long for eternal realities in better, larger life.

The world of military power, of pomp and circumstance and vanity—the old order of things—is passing away. To the people of God, with all noble men and women of large, true vision in all lands, is committed the work of ringing in the new evangel of perfect ideals. It includes "all things that pertain to life and godliness." It means renewal, readjustment, the shaking away of the obsolete and the remaining of only the just and true, the good and new. To voice it requires attainment; its revelation means actualized life in Zion modes of living. There is much to learn and more to do. Let us live and learn and be up and doing. Time and the powers of being are very precious. To use the golden gifts of time and talent to the best advantage is the part of wisdom. Said Proctor Knott: "He who dallies is a dastard; he who doubts is damned."

We note that among the people engaged in the great European war there is being developed a consciousness of the seriousness of purpose required to save their national and moral life. These people forgot God and religion, many of them; many "became vain in their imaginations and their foolish hearts were darkened." In their awful distress they are learning "by the things they suffer." They live as was said to modern Israel: In their prosperity they forgot God; in their distresses they feel after him. However, with absinthe, vodka, and other liquors removed from consumption, and with awakened moral consciousness and spiritual needs unfolded, some things are being realized, even through war. Admiral Beatty, wearied with the vigil of patrolling the seas on the lookout for the German navy, urged his people to humble themselves and seek God; that deliverance from the awful stress of war would come only through him.

Thousands are learning what our people believe; viz, that in God, in Zion, the spirit and place of his purpose, is deliverance. Zion is "the pure in heart." There yet remains much of the foolishness, vanity, artificiality, and mere waste of life in pleasure seeking in the lives of the people of the world. America though great and generous, is proud, self-seeking and heedless in too much of her life. Her day of trial will come upon her, perhaps as unexpectedly as upon Europe. It is the part of wisdom that our people among the world, forget not God, but live worthily, that they be counted worthy to stand and to be gathered and fully established in Zion and in her stakes, in due time. But to do right, to serve faithfully, where we are, is the present opportunity and need.

But—the Holden Stake. With quite a number from Independence we proceeded, by auto and train, to Holden, Missouri, on Saturday, July 15. The conference was called to order at 10 o'clock a. m. by President Frederick M. Smith. Brother F. M. Sheehy was associated with him in presiding, the writer and Brother O. W. Newton appointed secretaries.

Brother D. J. Krahl was received and appointed president of the new stake; Brother C. J. Hunt as bishop, both by hearty unanimous vote of the people. Neither was prepared to announce counselors. We are sure the people of the stake will like Brethren Krahl and Hunt, and they will work nicely together.

The presidency nominated to constitute the stake high council: Brethren J. W. Layton, W. S. Macrae, C. E. Scarcliff, B. P. Thompson, F. A. Cool, R. E. Burgess, William Hartnell, Emery Thompson, F. A. McWethy, Charles Gaither, Edward Fender, and J. E. Johnson—a body of fine men. These were duly approved, by united vote.

Brethren Krahl, Macrae and Layton were ordained to their respective offices by Brethren F. M. Smith and F. M. Sheehy. Other members of the stake council will be ordained upon approval of the High Council of the church, as high priests.

Sister Anna Fender was elected secretary, and the recording work made hers for the present, Sister Earl Redfield member of library board. The time and place of next conference were left to the stake presidency.

The auxiliary organizations met at 1.30. Woman's Auxiliary, Sunday school, and Religio—each organized according to territorial membership in the stake. Earnestness characterized all their work, as in the conference.

There was a large attendance of Saints from Knobnoster, Post Oak, and other points in the stake. Dinner was served a la mob in a building adjoining the church. The food was fine, the crowd happy, and all went well. But, the weather was "awful hot," we think the hottest we ever experienced, on Saturday and Sunday. The town creamery supplied cold buttermilk, the Saints ice water and true, genuine hospitality, so we "got along."

There was no gathering on Saturday evening. On Sunday at 9.30 the Holden Sunday school held its session. The school has a good corps of officers and teachers, plenty of scholars, and a good orchestra. The branch has good orchestra and choir. The music was good. At 11 a. m. Bishop McGuire delivered a good sermon, in which he edified the conference. He was liked and well received. Bishop Hunt assisted him.

By the way, Mr. Editor, Brother Hunt said one good thing among others in talking with representatives of the bishopric: That it was good policy to "buy out" other men in business, in moving into the stakes, when possible, rather than to start opposition to them in business, thus avoiding feeling and opposition to our people—a "mighty good" suggestion.

The afternoon session of prayer and testimony was good; the people were blessed in using their privileges.

At 8 p. m. the preacher was the writer. He was assisted by Brother D. J. Krahl, and felt well in the effort.

Brother Krahl followed in a timely heart-to-heart talk to the people about the work of the stake. We shook hands with "everybody," went back to Dave Danielson's and remained over night. Next morning we returned to Independence, well pleased with the people of the Holden Stake. The stake is bound to develop in every good word and work.

The sudden death of Sister J. W. Wight, at the Sanitarium, following an operation, brought a spirit of sadness to the people of Independence. Much sympathy was felt for Brother Wight, who came to the city not knowing of her death until just previous to his arrival. Funeral services were held at the undertaker's parlors on the 14th, Brethren Elbert A. Smith and Frederick A. Smith accompanying Brother Wight and the remains of Sister Wight to Lamoni.

The death of Bishop Joseph Roberts, at Lamoni, following, also brought sadness to many. He was loved and appreciated for his rugged devotion to the cause. His family have the sincere sympathy of all.

We have been entertained at Independence by Bishops Kelley and Short and families. Some of the HERALD readers know them and how they do it.

Yours in good cheer,

R. S. SALYARDS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 18, 1916.

KIRTLAND, OHIO, June 20, 1916.

Editors Herald: Sitting on the porch this pleasant morning, gazing out upon the beauties of nature which appeal to me as never before, I behold the grandeur of nature, the trees and plants in their lovely coats of green, and listen to the talented songsters almost bursting their little throats with praise to their Creator for life and his ever increasing watch-care. It makes me feel more thankful for God's goodness towards us. For surely if he careth for the sparrows and clothes the grass of the fields, how much more will he care for man, the masterpiece of his creation.

As I grow older, and my earthly tabernacle becomes more and more weakened, like Paul of old, I can say that the inner man is renewed day by day, and the comfort of the restored gospel means much to me. If in this life we have hope only, surely we would be the most miserable of all God's creatures, but when affliction comes, and the dark hours of trial and suffering are on us it is then we can look to our Savior and appreciate his nearness to us, and be thankful for the presence of God's Holy Spirit to comfort us and sweeten the bitter cup of affliction with its soothing power.

Our public worship has been discontinued for several weeks, sickness being amongst us. We hope it will be only a short time until the grand old temple doors will again swing open wide and that it will be our privilege to worship therein as in the past. I truly feel I have made some development through the restored gospel, and the blessings of our heavenly Father have been many to me. The hope of life and immortality is like an anchor to the soul. How glorious the promise if we snuffer with our Redeemer. We shall reign with him.

My greatest desire is to be patient even in affliction, and live nearer my Savior each day, that when change shall come I shall have no fear, but rather a welcome for it, and that I shall be worthy to see the shining face of the son of God, and receive the welcome home, "Come ye blessed of my Father."

Ever praying that the Lord will hasten his work, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. MARY LAMSON.

Extracts from Letters

Elder O. R. Miller writes from Hibbard, Indiana, July 8: "I am inclosing two pictures that I took of our tabernacle. This building will later be converted into a substantial church—we hope. Attendance pretty good considering the busy country rush.

"We planned for a big day yesterday. As soon as the Pharisees across the way learned of our plans they got busy and 'aped' us. Music sounded forth from both sides of the street. However, it did not happen that they sang 'Are there any stars in our crown?' and we 'No, not one.'

"Much rain, but the attendance was good in spite of that. Brother Dowker of Chicago was down and spoke morning and evening, I spoke in the afternoon. Dinner served at the tabernacle. A young couple from Chicago, Brother and Sister Floyd McNickle, Graceland College students and lately from Lamoni, were there and furnished excellent vocal and instrumental music. Some are interested and very near the kingdom."

In a later letter he writes: "Taking a little rest now. Farmers busy—weather extremely hot. It has been a continuous struggle. Fifteen of us went to Chicago Sunday. Six were not members. Did them more good than a week of weak preaching! The joint prayer service I refer to especially. We resume our efforts here Thursday evening. Close next Sunday with a big day—or are planning for such, at least. Musicians from Chicago. All day meeting. Basket dinner. Baptism in the afternoon. Five adults have already given names for baptisms. Hoping and praying for more."

Elder E. E. Long writes from Cordova, Iowa, July 7: "We are having a good interest here. One man asked for baptism last night and I think there will be others soon. Brother Jesse Roberts, of Lamoni, just now surprised me by driving up to the door of our 'quarters' in his car. We are living in a schoolhouse. We have our tent in the yard and are using the seats, so the room being empty we took possession."

Sister Edna Cochran, of Vancleave, Mississippi, writes as follows in a letter dated July 11: "The recent storm did considerable damage near here. It was one of the worst that has ever passed through this section. Hay crops and fruit are almost entirely gone. Our barns were somewhat torn up, and the porch of our house blown off, while the shade trees, oaks, cedars, magnolias, and pecans are scarcely more than skeletons now. Every day since the storm has been 'clean-up' day, and we can scarcely see what we have done. We have had heavy rains every day for more than a week. The creeks, rivers, and bayous are higher than they have ever been. We are cut off from a post office so if my letter is a long time getting to you, you will know the reason."

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—The following letter has been received by the HERALD editor from an unfortunate inmate of one of our state prisons. For quite obvious reasons we do not give the name of the writer, but the Saints will be interested in learning that the HERALD has been able to reach one in such distressing and unfortunate circumstances, and that through him it has reached others. The letter reads as follows]:

ELBERT A. SMITH, EDITOR SAINTS' HERALD,

Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir and Friend: I am writing this letter in order to endeavor in a small way, and in fact in the only possible way for me at present, to show my appreciation and tender my utmost and heartfelt thanks to you for sending me the paper since I came to this institution as an outcast of society, a man convicted of sin and who must pay the penalty as many other unfortunates who are known to the outside world as convicts must do.

My full time expires in ———, so after that date you may discontinue sending the SAINTS' HERALD.

I am sure, however, that if I could in any way make you understand what a divine amount of good that paper has given to me here through your kindness, the many weary hours it has assisted me to pass advantageously, that undoubtedly would have otherwise been spent in brooding over my misfortune, that you would rejoice in being able to do this good.

I have not been selfish, however, as upon finishing reading each copy sent me I have passed it to a brother unfortunate who appreciated it as much as I.

Now while I am here I would like to seek some information. Does my having been a convict prevent me from uniting with the church when I have expiated the penalty imposed upon me in payment of my petty offense? If not, it is my greatest desire to unite with this great brotherhood, and I feel that after having a few questions now in my mind, explained to me, that I can live up to this creed without any trouble.

Thanking you once more for your great interest in me, and for kindness shown, and hoping to hear from you in the very near future, I remain,

With best wishes for your increasing success,
Very sincerely yours,

KINDROSS, MICHIGAN, June 25, 1916.

Editors Herald: I am always glad to get the HERALD, and enjoy the contents very much. Would not be without it now for five dollars a year.

I was baptized in 1907. I admit I have not been as faithful as I might have been, but am trying to improve my ways. I have been a tobacco user since my youth. I quit it for a short time after I was baptized, but soon went back to its use again. In fact, I do not seem to have the will power to leave it alone, as I have oftentimes tried to break off the habit. I know it is a filthy, miserable habit, and do not uphold its use in any sense, but I cannot seemingly get away from it, so I would like to ask the prayers of the Saints for God to help me quit its use entirely.

I have read the recent articles in the HERALD on the use of tobacco, and think the matter worth deep consideration.

Your brother for the right,
WESLEY BRADEY.

AVERY, TEXAS, June 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have been in the church nineteen years the 17th of June, and I can truthfully say it is the work of God. I have had many manifestations of the work, and can say it is God's work. I can look back over my past life and see many things I left undone, and I feel sad to think I did not do many things I could have done. But the Lord is merciful to us, and I am thankful he spared my life until I could see wherein I was lacking, and I am willing to try to do all that I can and all that the Lord requires of me what time I am spared to live.

I have my faults and failures, and feel very weak. I feel that among all the Saints I am the weakest, but the God who reigns above knows my heart, and I am proud of that. He knows what I want to do, and I ask him to help me bear my trials and temptations day by day.

I am the mother of eight children, all living except one. I try to teach them the ways of truth. None of them have accepted the gospel yet, but I pray that it will not be long before I can see all who are large enough become children of God. We are told in the Scriptures to study and show ourselves approved of God, as a workman that needeth not be ashamed.

We have Sunday school here Sundays, and the first Sunday in each month we have sacrament and prayer meeting. There are not so many of us, but the Lord said where a few had met together in his name he would be there to own and to bless.

The first Sunday in June, Brother E. A. Erwin was with us, and preached Saturday night. We felt glad to sit under the sound of his voice and to think about twenty-two years ago when he and his brother were the first ones to bring the gospel to this country. He has done much good in this country, and I feel there is a grand reward waiting for him.

I ask all the Saints to remember me in their prayers.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

ADA HANDLEY.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, June 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: I thought I would like to write a letter through the HERALD at this time, as I think it is one way of testifying to the goodness of our God. Although only young in the latter-day gospel, and also a very weak Saint, I, like more of my brothers and sisters, am trying in my weak way to live as God would have me live.

We had a spiritual time Sunday, June 25. We drove out about eighteen miles to attend a grove meeting, and if ever I felt my unworthiness of God's kindness to me, it was at those meetings. Elder Perkins preached in the morning, a soul-inspiring sermon, and Elder W. D. Ellis in the afternoon. The spirit was felt strongly. I felt as if I did not want to leave the place. It was sacred. Elder Belrose, our president, spoke before leaving, and his words were filled with the spirit of love and forgiveness and sacrifice.

Oh, Saints, if we could only live more in love and unity one with the other, what beneficial times we would have. We each one often do and say things against each other in a moment without thinking, or in anger, but we are sorry afterwards from the depths of our hearts, to think we have wounded our brother or sister.

I must also mention about the singing of the hymns that were sung at the grove meetings. One could feel the Spirit of God coursing through his being, at least it was so with me. I believe there is more power in song than many people think there is. Oh, Saints, when we sing, let us not sing for the sake of singing. Let it be from the depths of our soul, not running through as though there was nothing to get out of it but a tune; it is the meaning of the words we need to go straight to the hearts of the hearers, and also the singers. There is wonderful power in singing, if we mean what we sing. May God teach us how to sing to his glory.

I will never forget to the longest day I live the hymn I first heard in a Latter Day Saint hall in England. It was sung with a spirit of love and pleading that I could never forget. The hymn was, "Nearer, my God, to thee." Although I was a stranger, having never been in the place before, and then had gone out of curiosity, I felt a spirit I had never felt before. I went several times to their meetings. They had a missionary there, an old gentleman at the time, and I wanted to know about their religion and what they believed. At the close they loaned me a Book of Mormon to read. I took it home. My husband saw what I was reading. He snatched it away and threw it on the fire. I managed to get it out and gave it back next day to the elder, and never went there again in England. That was where we were living until some years afterwards, when we came out to Canada, and after living about five years in Muskoka we moved to Owen Sound. We had been in town a few years when one night a neighbor came in to see if I would go to a meeting in the Saints' hall. There was a missionary, Elder Joseph Thompson, preaching.

I went with her several times before my husband would go. At last we got him to go as well, and after several meetings and visits from the elder, we were both brought to see the light of the gospel in its fullness, and now the two boys are in the church, but not the woman who took us to first hear the gospel. She thought we were foolish to be baptized in the river in March. She said we would die with a cold, but thank God, we are still alive and able to testify to his goodness, although I have made many mistakes and have come very near leaving the church at times, but I am thankful that there is a merciful and loving Father, and he has looked after me when there has been no one else nigh.

I can truly say that when my earthly father and mother forsook me, the Lord took me up. Blessed be his name.

This is the first attempt that I have ever made along this line, but a few weeks ago I felt impressed to do this, and at last I have mustered up courage and am sending it along.

I earnestly ask the Saints to remember me and my family in their prayers, that we may live as God would have us live, and do what he would have us do, and my prayers are ever for God's people and the uplifting of humankind.

May the Lord bless us all and make us all a blessing, is my prayer.

Yours in the gospel,

LOUISE PARKER.

ANDES, MONTANA, July 4, 1916.

Editors Herald: We find it a great pleasure to read the letters from time to time in the columns of the Herald, telling of the progress of the work of the Master, which we love so much. The Eastern Montana District conference has passed into history and as it was such a spiritual feast of good things we will pass it on that others may read and rejoice also.

We were sorry that Apostle Peter Anderson could not meet with us, but the conference was reasonably well attended by the Saints of the district. Peace and harmony especially characterized all the meetings. The business was done quickly and with a spirit of unity that was good to feel. Some changes were made in the officers of the district. Elder W. R. Hillman was sustained as district president. Brother Hillman we feel has done remarkably well. He is a young man in years, scarcely twenty-five, and only three years in the gospel work, still we can see evidences of growth, and the work in the district has not suffered. We feel he has been in touch with the Great Head.

Elder Eli Bronson was chosen to succeed Elder C. B. Freeman as vice president, and Brother Mark C. Hutchinson to succeed Elder Chester Constance as secretary. All these young men were formerly Graceland students, and we believe they are improving their talents in a way that is pleasing unto the Master, and more will be added unto them.

The prayer services were grand, several speaking under the influence of God, and as their faces lighted with that heavenly glow, it bore witness to all that the Spirit of God was present with them. Satan must have felt sad that he could find no place to enter, as his presence was not made manifest.

Brother J. W. Vail was ordained to office of elder, and Brother Mark C. Hutchinson teacher. Elder Lester W. Bronson led four young people into the waters of baptism. One of them, Sister Gladys Randolph, was our school-teacher here. We have found as a rule if people attend our meetings they become converted to the angel message. We are convinced the honest in heart will be gathered in, and though sometimes we wonder how so many can be so indifferent to so great a thing as their soul's salvation, yet all we can do is to sow the seed, and God will give the increase. How sad many will be when they see what they have missed and have no excuse to offer.

The gospel work looks bright to us. We consider that we know of ourselves that this work is of God; that it has been restored in the latter days, and to-day many are rejoicing as the saints rejoiced in former days. We know the sick are healed, and God communes with men, and though perilous times are here, and the Adversary is trying to entangle all he can in the meshes of sin, still we believe God will care for his own, and not one will be lost that will strive with his mind, might and strength to serve him.

Ever praying for the triumph of truth and right, I am,

A sister in the faith,

MRS. C. B. FREEMAN.

HIGBEE, MISSOURI, July 6, 1916.

Editors Herald: Some are expressing the fact that I have not been heard from through the columns of the church papers for some time, giving an account of my labors. Even at this time I cannot give anything of an encouraging nature, but thought it best to write, anyhow.

Since the conference I have been busy on the records, relating to my work, and in preparing home affairs so that it would be possible to leave for the mission assigned this year, the Northeastern Missouri District. During the time I visited Creston, Boone and Runnells, besides ministering at the home branch in Des Moines, Iowa. There was an interest at each of these places, growing out of past associations, and an urgent invitation to return. In each of these places there is evidenced on the part of a few a willingness to sacrifice for the good of the work and its spiritual uplift, but too many are drifting with the inclinations growing out of what the world has to offer. There is at Creston a unity of action that causes one to feel encouraged.

On June 7 I took leave of home and arrived at Bevier, Missouri, expecting to at once enter into missionary work, but to my sad surprise I found no desire for missionary work to which I could be cited. The weather had been cold and wet, and the work among the farmers was fully four weeks behind. While I have written many letters to the various parts of the mission there is but little encouragement for missionary work. From two or three places I have been requested to come later in the year. I am still hopeful that the Lord, whose work this is, will prepare the way for labor where there are hungering and thirsting souls.

I have found a hospitable and kindly disposed people here among the Saints, but the missionary spirit is at a low ebb at the present time; I still hope that this will be changed, although present prospects are not bright.

I came to Higbee a week ago last Saturday, and found the people interested in the holiday preparations and social affairs, so that I spent a few days with my family at Kansas City and Independence, visiting some of the old friends, but principally to visit with our son with whom we had not been for about three years. While there I attended the first session of the Independence Stake conference, and saw a spirit of earnestness to have all things in the line of progress. After spending the first visit from missionary work, save at my home, since I began this work in 1881, I returned here again on yesterday, and will make an effort to encourage and strengthen the Saints and instruct those who are willing to hear, for a time, beginning to-night.

The mine at which several of the Saints worked closed last Saturday very abruptly, and this is a great blow to the branch and the town, but we hope for the best. About three hundred and forty men are thrown out of employment here, and many are leaving, going in all directions to hunt work.

Anyone seeing this letter who has friends in this mission will please let me know, that I may try to reach them with the gospel. There is a growing desire to be about the Master's business. I realize the hastening time is upon us, and those who will not engage actively will sooner or later lose interest in the glorious work of God and fall by the way.

I want to finish the work God has given me to do, but I see more and more the necessity of inspiration leading in every department of the work, an inspiration that will move alike upon the ones directing and the ones directed, for by such conditions prevailing the Lord who thus has inspired, will go before those whose labors are directed and like a united body we will move on to triumph.

As I view the times in which we live, it requires more watching and praying than at any previous time in the experiences of my brief life. Never was a nation so tried to preserve peace, and the nation's executive so much in need of the prayers of God's people. To overcome evil with good is a thing not considered the proper thing to do. To love your enemies is foreign to the minds of some who claim to be statesmen. This makes it still harder to preserve the lives of our citizens, and much unjust criticism is being indulged in, sometimes by those who should be engaged in the better part of giving due and righteous honor to those in authority.

It is with the deepest gratitude that I learn of the instruction of our beloved President of the church that all should be consecrated, fully consecrated to their work, for this is evidence of what he wishes to be, and I pray that he may be, that he may be an ensample to the flock over which the Lord has made him overseer.

Onward must be our watchword, but with a wisdom born of God, and our greatest haste is sometimes made in going slowly, or till God directs. Sometimes we see things that we think ought to be done, and God sees it as well as we do, but we want it done immediately, and God will direct that it be done in his own time and way.

Praying for the welfare of Zion, and the permanency of her progress, and hoping to keep pace with such progress, I am

One of the laborers,

J. F. MINTUN.

NORTH PLATE, NEBRASKA, July 9, 1916.

Editors Herald: Spearfish, South Dakota, reunion, the first attempt at reunion work for the Black Hills and adjacent territory is begun. The reunion will be held. This is the advance notice for all in the Northwestern Nebraska, North-eastern Wyoming and Southwestern South Dakota districts. All in reasonable distance to take notice, begin preparation, get in correspondence, and help decide the time, which will be in the latter part of September or October, as may be found practicable. Let all suggest dates who choose to.

The Spearfish Saints, (only six families,) last year with some in other parts, put a tent in the field for missionary work in that locality. Since then they have built a very suitable church with full basement, without help as yet. It is now sufficiently complete for the reunion. This excellent exertion on their part should appeal to all of that section of the country, for which Spearfish may be a center, and should enthuse to vigorous pushing of the work in all those parts. This is the purpose of the reunion, and it should be supported heartily by all there, as many other reunions are in most missions.

Because of the few at Spearfish and the much they have done, all attending should go self-sustaining. As many as can should come to camp, providing themselves suitably. All others to provide boarding for themselves. This expense will be small compared with what the Spearfish Saints have already done. A few empty houses are usually available there. The church and basement will be ample for all the services.

This leaves the large tent and the small one available for campers. The large tent can be curtained off into six apartments, the small one accommodating one family. Some no doubt have tents of their own they can bring.

If the scattered Saints in the territory mentioned appreciate this opportunity for themselves and the work, they will rally to our call. A tent campaign will precede the reunion at several places. Let us hear from you who have a place for tentwork. We solicit your correspondence at once, with either or both of the undersigned, about any or all features of the reunion, questions, suggestions, etc.

Those wanting space in the large tent must bring their share of inside curtains. First applying first served.

Having helped when the reunions began in Iowa in 1883-84-85, and in the first ones in Illinois, Missouri, Pennsylvania, Ohio, California, and Michigan, with a small band of loyal workers, and always meeting with success, we again confidently look for success. Failure is not entertained for a moment.

Let us all rally, unite, and cooperate for success at Spearfish. Other notices will appear in due time. Write us without delay. Spearfish Saints will furnish ample and excellent music and invite help from all. Suitable ministerial help to be secured. Some financial aid should be rendered on the Spearfish church. Address both at Spearfish.

G. W. NEWTON.

R. ETZENHOUSER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 10, 1916.

Editors Herald: My wife, daughter and myself expect to leave here on the 18th of this month for San Francisco, where we will take the steamer on the 25th for Honolulu.

We shall have the pleasure of the company of Brother George Harrington, wife and daughter as far as Frisco.

We hope the Lord will bless us in our work on that mission. I little thought when I stopped at Honolulu on my return from Australia, that I would again see the beautiful "Pearl of the Pacific."

I shall like that mission, I think, and trust we shall be used by the Lord to be a blessing to the people there.

Sincerely,

202 Pendleton Avenue.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

BAXTER, MICHIGAN, June 24, 1916.

Editors Herald: Judging from our own feelings, I thought a few words from these parts might be of interest to some.

We are among the isolated Saints and know the testimony of others is a source of strength. We cannot help but feel too, that God is inspiring the minds of his servants to "feed the flock." The question of Zion has been made clearer to us than ever before, and we feel very grateful to our heavenly Father that we are permitted to receive such light and truth.

Our greatest aim in life is to be prepared for whatever may await us in the future, and to be instruments in his hands in helping others to walk the narrow way that leads to life. Sometimes we feel we are not doing as much for the cause as we would like. But when people seem to be perfectly satisfied with what they have, all we can do is watch and wait and let our light shine. Perhaps the seed is growing more than we think.

I think we as a church, also as individuals, should make a great effort to clear ourselves of debt. Bishop E. L. Kelley gave us good advice two or three years ago in regard to not going in debt very much. He said he thought we would see the wisdom of it before another year, which we surely did. Our old plowshares, pruning hooks, in fact any old iron that can be found can be sold, which seems to fulfill the days spoken of by Joel. And I sometimes wonder how many of us will live to see them beaten back to their former state.

I am trying a new plan so as to have a Christmas offering when the time comes, and I believe it is going to work all right. I took an empty spice can and converted it into a bank, and each month I put in ten cents for myself. The children hear me talking and planning on my Christmas offering, and they are beginning to think just about dropping their pennies in the offering box instead of spending them for gum, candy, etc., every time. We long to be associated with the Saints, but pray we might be consecrated and subject to his will.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. ALICE WILEY.

TANGO, MONTANA, June 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: My first knowledge of the HERALD as a messenger of the latter-day work was when Elder Paul M. Hanson passed through Jerusalem, Palestine, on his return from the islands. Such an awakening to the virtues of this church and clearing of our minds (my husband, Rolla Floyd, well-known tourist agent for years, and myself), of the vast difference between this church and the Utah church.

We gave Elder Hanson money to subscribe for the HERALD and Autumn Leaves a year when he told us about them.

For sometime the HERALD seemed to be my only pleasure. Mr. Floyd would sometimes wonder at how I would be lost to all around me when reading it. How often I thought I would like to meet the people who could write such articles.

Well, in after years Elder Griffiths, Elder Pitt and Sister Pitt came to Jerusalem to baptize a gentleman who had become convinced of the truthfulness of this gospel through reading my Book of Mormon, and the HERALD, for I had several years' HERALDS bound, and he would want one book after another; not being able to work gave him more time to read. He had a son in America who is an elder in this church, so he wrote to his son how he would like to be baptized. Elder Pitt was requested to pass through Jerusalem, when going to Australia. The nice old gentleman died before the elders arrived; but his daughter and her two boys joined, and myself.

That was the beginning of the work at Jerusalem and may it go on increasing, is my desire.

It pleases me to read Elder Jenkins's articles, also Sister Pitt's. I always look for their names and those I know in the HERALD, so thought some might like to know I am still among the living, for it seems to me the Saints are the ones truly living, bodily and spiritually.

There is a branch in this neighborhood, called the Jerusalem Branch, so I am not isolated as I feared I would be.

Wishing to be faithful, therefore needy of all your prayers, also knowing some have been answered in my behalf, I remain,

Your sister,

MRS. ROLLA FLOYD.

KIRKSVILLE, MISSOURI, July 14, 1916.

Editors Herald: Having been appointed a missionary, it is possibly one of the unwritten duties to write you a letter. At Worcester we met on every side the excellent record President Frederick M. Smith and his wife had made. They had in a sense introduced us. But what was the better, they had introduced the church most favorably. We were congratulated even before going there upon our new President, in a letter from a member of the university faculty, because of the many friends he, in fact both of them, had made.

While I gave most of my time to study, Sister Burgess proved herself a missionary's daughter and a missionary herself, and made many friends and explained the church to several of them. Some were both surprised and pleased to know the distinction between the two churches, as they had come into contact with the church of Utah in their work. The year proved one of very great benefit.

While the year of study was undertaken primarily, in fact solely, in the hopes of being able to render better service to the church, we were much surprised at our appointment, but could at once see that it should prove another year of great benefit to us. The Boston Saints are a splendid body of people, and extremely hospitable. From April 30 to June 18 inclusive, I missed but one Sunday at services. In fact, there was some studying laid aside to meet with the branch. Business required a trip west, and we are finding it indeed strenuous work to finish here in the allotted time, as we are anxious to be back for the last ten or eleven days of the Massachusetts reunion, and then we look forward with much pleasure to our work in Boston. Our school work prevented our location there before the 15th of June, then it seemed better to attend to this home work, so as to be free to locate immediately after the reunion.

Passing over our very pleasant visit to Saint Louis where we spoke three times and attended to necessary business, besides other church services we arrived at Kirksville in time to assist Elder A. M. Chase in erecting the district tent, and smaller missionary tent, and wiring, seats and details so as to get in shape for the opening on July 7. It is very interesting for us to watch Elder Chase work. He distributed a thousand Angel Message tracts number 1 with the meeting date on each, from house to house and secured a write-up each day in both local papers, with an announcement of the evening topic. The subject was also placarded in front of the tent and part of the time in windows in town, as opportunity was secured.

Sunday, July 9, two of the ministers kindly (?) announced that the "Mormons" had opened tent meetings, right under our shadow. "They call themselves Latter Day Saints" they said, "but that is only a cover; it is all the same thing. It is a most insidious evil and danger. They are dangerous. Keep away and destroy everything they leave. The two great evils of America are alcoholism and Mormonism. The basis and foundation of Mormonism is polygamy." I happened to be attending one of these meetings, so sent up a card with a request for two minutes to make an explanation. It was ignored. As soon as the meetings closed I went up to ask a few minutes at his leisure. He replied he had no time to argue. I was not attempting that. He had a meeting then, so I withdrew, but with the determination to make one more approach or attempt to set him right.

In the early afternoon Elder Chase, Charles S. Chase and I went to call. By agreement Elder Chase did the talking, starting with the letter of Reverend William Paden. We approached him in a very pleasant way. That was on the assumption that he was mistaken, not malicious.

The result was that he came over the next morning and said he found he was mistaken and would make suitable explanation next Sunday morning.

The other instance was not heard of till Monday afternoon. So Elder Chase called him up, made an appointment, and went there that evening before services, with Doctor Charles S. Chase. At first he was insistent. But later promised to look into the matter. And still later called up and said he found he was mistaken, and would make the distinction clear next Sunday. (July 16).

One result was that we advertised for Thursday night a lecture by Elder Chase on "Mormonism." Over one hundred and fifty attended and listened attentively and quietly for over an hour. Many came up afterwards for literature, and all our Latter Day Saints; Who Are They? tracts were taken in short order, as well as a large number of each of the Angel Message tracts. We must comment on the kindly way in which Elder Chase met the situation and its marked success in removing prejudice.

Elder Chase was requested Tuesday night to address the class in Missouri history at the State Normal School, on the Book of Mormon, the organization of the church and its peculiar doctrines on Wednesday, the 12th, during the class hour. He went back the next day to hear the wind-up of the discussion of the troubles in Missouri, and they stood him up against the wall and shot—questions—at him for the hour. So altogether much good seems to be done, and prejudice removed.

Sister Reesman of this place paid for the lot lease, and all the Chase family are valiant in the singing, Doctor C. S. Chase coming from Madison, where he is practicing osteopathy, to help over the week ends. As I do not sing, they have elected me to do the bulk of the speaking, while here, and write some of the news items.

Altogether it is quite an experience, with the Spirit of peace to give strength.

In bonds,
S. A. BURGESS.

July 17.

One of the ministers gave a very fair, brief statement of the differences, with the conclusion, "We do not want to be unfair to anybody." But the other man made a long statement of Joseph Smith's family, each one of whom he made of very low and bad character. Said that he started the Danites by so-called revelations—a very unfair and untrue statement. Then at the end a brief statement that there are two kinds; this kind does not believe in polygamy, "But I have no use for any kind." Reverend Ziegel, who is the Presbyterian minister here, seems unaware that the family of the father of Joseph Smith were proselyted from that church. There seems a bit of humor in that fact.

Public announcement is being made at the tent meetings on the blackboard in front of the tent and in the newspapers that Elder Chase will reply Tuesday night, the 19th. The reply is delayed in order to advertise the answer, so all interested may hear both sides of the question, to wit, the wrong and the right side.

It does seem a pity and a surprising one that in the case of practically every great leader, there have been stories so low and false as to be ridiculous, yet those who prefer that kind, believe. But the strange thing is, that for stories simply nasty it would be hard to excel those gathered by German scholars concerning Jesus of Nazareth. If there is anyone who has ever lived who should be above such stories, it is he.

S. A. B.

Thy foes might hate, despise, revile,
Thy friends unfaithful prove;
Unwearied in forgiveness still,
Thy heart could only love.

—Edward Denny

The spring, like youth, fresh blossoms doth produce,
But autumn makes them ripe and fit for use;
So age a mature mellowness doth set
On the green promises of youthful heat.

—Sir John Denman.

News from Missions

Eastern Iowa

Having been appointed to labor three months in the Saskatchewan District and the balance of the year in the Eastern Iowa District, I left home May 2 and proceeded to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where I found a small band of Saints trying to keep the banner afloat, and presided over by Brother Ralph Motjel. I was comfortably provided for while there and assisted in a financial way when ready to leave. But I was sorry to hear of a number who had grown cold in the work, and who do not attend services. In fact I find some nearly every place I go who are so taken up with politics, patriotism, pleasure, business propositions or other worldly things that they have no time for the gospel, and those things which pertain to their souls' salvation. Jesus told the people upon one occasion that while they had been doing some of the things that they ought to do, yet they had omitted the weightier things of the law. Let us be careful that while we are doing some things that are all right that we do not omit the weightier things of the law.

From Cedar Rapids I went to Waterloo, where I found a few Saints struggling along without a shepherd. With the assistance of Brother Crooker of Des Moines, I organized them into a Sunday school, and trust they will receive a spiritual strength in the study of the lessons, and in meeting together in the service of the Lord.

Next I went to Oelwein where I am sorry to say I found things not as I would like to see them. One great need in some of our branches is a suitable public place of meeting. The private house as a rule is very unsatisfactory to the onward progress of the work. With a united effort on the part of the Saints a suitable meeting place can be provided in most every branch.

From Oelwein I went out in the country where Brother L. G. Holloway had his experience with the Campbellites, as recorded in the Autumn Leaves for June. Here we found a few Saints who are deeply interested in the cause and a number of friends among the outsiders who we trust will soon see the necessity of coming into the kingdom.

Next I went to Strawberry Point where we have no branch organization and only three or four members who are poor in this world's goods and cannot assist much in a financial way. However with some assistance I had received from the bishop I rented a hall, billed the town, and proceeded to hold meetings, but found very little interest. So owing to the expense of the hall, and the size of the crowd in attendance I closed, after holding forth five nights. I was encouraged and helped in a financial way by a young Brother Heild who happened in that vicinity and spent three or four days with me in the interest of the work. We need many more such earnest young men as Brother Heild.

From here I went out into the country and held three meetings in a Methodist church of fifty years' standing, where none but Methodist meetings have ever been held. We have one young sister here, a school-teacher whom I baptized last March. This young lady was formerly a Methodist, and is now letting her light shine so that her father's family and some of her friends are becoming interested in the gospel message.

From here I returned to Strawberry Point and in company with two totally blind sisters proceeded to Muscatine to attend the district conference. It strengthens one's faith to hear those blind sisters bear testimony to the truthfulness of the work, and to hear them thank God that while they cannot see with the natural eye yet they are not blind spiritually. And then it makes us feel ashamed who are blessed with all our senses, when we think how we find fault and complain of our lot.

We had a good conference at Muscatine, although there was a very small attendance. Brother William Sparling was elected district president. He is the right man in the right place, and will do a good work in the district, if he can get the support of the Saints—and he will get their support, as he is well liked by all who know him.

From Muscatine I came home for a week, and will start to-morrow for Saskatchewan, where I expect to attend the conference to be held at Viceroy, and will do what I can in the district between now and October. My Saskatchewan address will be Viceroy, care of T. J. Jordan.

Ever praying for the good of the work, and asking for the cooperation of the Saints, I remain,

Yours in gospel bonds,

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 28, 1916. E. R. DAVIS.

New Mexico

Perhaps some of your readers have wondered what has become of Brother Layland, and why he so seldom writes anything for publication. To such inquirers I will say: It is mostly carelessness on my part, although I might plead lack of time, for a live missionary can always find something to do, and especially is this the case in unorganized territory, where the missionary has so few Saints to assist him in getting the gospel before the people.

Imagine if you can a dreary, desolate looking country, covered with short buffalo grass, interspersed with bear grass whose sharp pointed leaves are very penetrating when they come in contact with a missionary's legs as he travels on foot from place to place in the country where the inhabitants are few and far apart, trying to get a house to preach in, and endeavoring to arouse the people to a sense of their duties to God and humanity.

Or go with me in imagination to the rough portion of New Mexico, to the lava fields, or the burning sands which are to be found in this large State; and near these we find people dwelling in the little valleys, and upon the broad mesas. In order to reach them we have to travel sometimes through that part of the country which is covered with many varieties of cactus, also mesquite bushes, and crucifixion thorn bushes, all of which are covered with sharp thorns. And in many places the country is infested with rattlesnakes, centipedes, and tarantulas. At one schoolhouse where I held preaching services, I went into the little woodshed to get a board, and as I picked up a board a rattlesnake warned me by his noise, and I discovered him not more than a foot from my hand. He crawled under the pile of boards. I said nothing about the snake until the conclusion of the services, when I told the congregation they had better kill the snake, lest he should bite some of the school children. Of course there was some excitement, and when I went out of the house I found they had killed the rattler, and also killed a large tarantula.

Well, I will not write anything more about the terrifying things of this country, lest some of you might conclude the whole country is no good, but I assure you there is some beautiful and desirable country here, and some of the best people it has been my privilege to meet. And although the lot of a missionary in this country is not to be envied, yet I have had many seasons of rejoicing with the faithful few of God's dear children who reside in New Mexico. Since General Conference I have visited and preached in the following-named places: Shelton and North Platte, in Nebraska; also in the vicinity of my home at Cokeville, Wyoming; Trinidad, Colorado; Yankee, Quay, Lesbia, and Tucumcari, in New Mexico. I also visited other places and visited the few Saints residing there, including the Jordan Saints, and while en route from Tucumcari to Jordan, I felt like the darky who said: "Shorely Jordan am a hard road to trabble," for I was traveling with the mail carrier, and the distance was thirty-five miles over all kinds of roads, and it was hot with plenty of sand and dust for variety.

In conclusion I will say, I have done all I could, although I have only baptized five since the first of March. However, I am not discouraged; the work I am engaged in is the Lord's work; and he is able to carry on his work to a successful issue, using such agents as suit him best, be they weak or strong.

May God bless all his dear children and give them victory over the world, the flesh and the Devil, and crown them heirs in his kingdom, is the prayer of your brother,

In gospel bonds,

A. J. LAYLAND.

TUCUMCARI, NEW MEXICO, July 11, 1916.

News from Branches

Independence Stake

About one hundred met for prayer and testimony early Sunday morning, July 16, and many cases of healing were cited.

Brother Krahl having been called to attend the special conference held at Holden, Brother C. F. Davis occupied as superintendent and he invited Elder G. R. Wells who was a visitor, to address the school. The organization, plan and object of Sunday school work was the theme presented, and he gave a very earnest, instructive talk to both teachers and pupils. The oppressively hot weather militates against the usually good attendance of all meetings, there having been present at this time only eight hundred and twenty. The Saints enjoyed a highly educational effort by President W. W. Smith at 11 a. m.

A twilight service on the church lawn was a new and very successful venture instead of the evening hour of preaching, usually adopted, and Elder A. H. Parsons was chosen as the speaker. It was an excellent sermon. The environment was delightful, the fine big maples affording shade, the atmosphere was cool and refreshing, the lovely harmonies of choir and orchestra were enhanced by the vibrant out-of-door surroundings, and the large congregation present made the welkin ring with the joyful hymns of praise.

The message delivered was for peace, and a portion of the text was the saying of the Master "But I say unto you, love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." (Matthew 5: 46.)

Our Quaker minister commented favorably on the procedure, concerning the war going on, of the chief head of the nation, and he gave a very clear illustration of the benefits derived from showing a spirit of nonresistance in our everyday lives. At the close of the meeting Brother Israel A. Smith gave announcement concerning the reinterment ceremonies to be performed at Mound Grove at 3 p. m., Tuesday, July 18. Abide with me" was sung, and Brother Wells dismissed the meeting with prayer.

The remains of our beloved Brother Joseph were a few days ago removed from the vault and on the date mentioned were placed with appropriate ceremonies in the granite sarcophagus which had been prepared for the purpose. It was brought here from the famous Barre granite district in Vermont. The solemn stillness at Mound Grove Cemetery, away from the speeding automobiles on the boulevard, and the rush and bustle of the highways of the busy world, on the memorable summer afternoon of July 18, was, at the appointed hour, broken by the sound of soft, harmonious voices singing the familiar hymn, "Beneath the darkest cloud, God's hand I see," and then the large group of Saints assembled around the honored and massive receptacle, bowed their heads in prayer, which was offered by Brother F. M. Sheehy.

As one lone robin sang from the trees on the near hillside, and nature in all her loveliness whispered in our ears the peace and glory of a home beyond, there came to our memory the words,

"There scattered oft the earliest of the year
By hands unseen are showers of violets found;
The red breast loves to build and warble there
And little footsteps lightly print the ground."

The solemn words spoken were from the lips of those chosen for the occasion, the president of the stake, W. W. Smith, the bishop of the stake, Mark H. Siegfried, and the bishop of the church, B. R. McGuire, who in place of eloquence and grandeur of language, used the plain and simple expressions of love, and appreciation of a career full of faith and loving deeds, and called to the memory of the Saints the noble qualities that had characterized our Brother Joseph's life. Bishop McGuire esteemed it a high honor to receive so sacred a trust in the name of the church, and the sarcophagus, the grounds upon which it rested, and the surroundings would ever be guarded and cherished by every member of the church in all the world.

The beauty and simplicity of the ceremony, of the massive monument, the inscriptions on its surface, and the sacred resting place near by, bedecked with beautiful flowers, of the remains of the loved companions and mother—all filled our minds with holy thoughts of gratitude and peace.

"I know that my Redeemer lives" was sung, and after a few words of prayer by Brother Sheehy, the Saints departed to their homes.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Miscellaneous Department

The Bishopric

Saints of the Lamoni Stake please take notice that R. J. Lambert and Oscar Anderson are authorized to conduct the affairs of the office of the stake bishopric of the Lamoni Stake until further notice.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 20, 1916.

Pastoral

To the Saints of the Holden Stake; Greeting: By action of the General Conference and your indorsement, I have been authorized to labor in your stake as bishop, and I trust our aim and object will be to advance the interests of the Lord's great work. Let our motto be, service and cooperation in harmony with his law. Will you be a helper?

The following branch agents will continue to serve you, receipting for gifts to the church, large or small: A. G. Anderson, Holden; R. B. Henderson, Knobnoster; Calvin Depuy, Lees Summit; C. A. Gaither, Lexington; G. W. Hancock, Warrensburg; H. G. Thayer, Marshall Mission; James Duffey, Post Oak.

If not convenient for you to favor your branch agent with your tithes and offerings, please send it to the undersigned and a receipt will be mailed to you.

My home address is 1026 West Waldo Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Very sincerely,
CHARLES J. HUNT.

Conference Minutes

NOVA SCOTIA.—Met at Amherst, Nova Scotia, July 1, I. M. Smith presiding. Reports: South Rawdon 14; River Philip 12; Williamsdale 16. Treasurer's report showed fund on hand, $18. Auditors appointed to audit bishop's agent's books from 1913 to 1916, were, K. Hyatt and Leander Johnson. They reported $42 on hand, over $500 paid in tithes and offerings during 3-year period, which speaks well for the few scattered members in Nova Scotia. U. W. Greene chosen delegate to next General Conference. Boyd Johnson continued as president of district, Mrs. Leander Johnson appointed secretary-treasurer. Next conference to be the last Saturday and Sunday in June, place left to discretion of president. Mrs. Leander Johnson, secretary.

WESTERN MONTANA.—At Bozeman, June 10, 2.30 p. m., district officers in charge. Reports from Bozeman, Deer Lodge, Warm Spring. Bishop's agent's report read and audited by committee appointed by chair, W. J. Brewer, W. J. Murray, Louise Rees. A good spiritual time was enjoyed by those attending. Adjourned to meet at Deer Lodge in November. William J. Murray, secretary.

Convention Minutes

ALBERTA.—Sunday school, met in the Ribstone Church, June 30. Officers elected: Fred Gregory, superintendent; Ira Benham, assistant superintendent; Minnie Burton, secretary; Lloyd Gregory, treasurer; H. S. Burton, librarian; William Roy, home class superintendent. Sister William Osler elected district chorister. Adjourned to meet one day prior to district conference, same place, 2 p. m. Press committee.

Conference Notices

Northern Wisconsin District, at Chetek, August 23, during reunion. Please let all brethren holding any order of the priesthood report to the conference. Send all reports to Leroy Colbert, Chetek, Wisconsin. L. Houghton, president.

West Virginia district conference which was to be held with the Clarksburg Branch, has been changed to the Harmony Branch on Indian Creek. Change made at request of Harmony Branch who have recently completed their new church, and they also desire to dedicate the same at this time. All concerned concur. Sunday school on September 1, 1.30 p. m. Conference convenes September 2, 9.30 a. m. Purchase tickets for Cornwallis, then take train for Harrisville where all trains will be met with conveyances Friday and Saturday. A number of important measures will be considered at this time. Further information may be had by writing to secretary, as follows: Frank L. Shinn, 404 Stealey Avenue, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

Northeastern Kansas, meets in the church at Fanning, 10.30 a. m., August 12. Samuel Twombly.

Eastern Maine, at Kenebec, August 26 and 27. As per resolution of last conference, this will be along educational lines. Program will be prepared; session on parliamentary law will be provided. Profitable time assured. F. J. Ebeling, president, Jonesport, Maine.

Reunion Notices

Clinton, at East Park, Rich Hill, Missouri, August 11 to 20. We expect in addition to the district missionary force, J. A. Tanner, Walter W. Smith, Bishop Keir, Patriarch William Lewis, Gomer R. Wells, and possibly Sister M. A. Etzenhouser. Tents may be rented of Dr. W. V. Smith, Rich Hill, Missouri, as per Ensign of July 13 and HERALD of July 12. Order early, as we have to ship from Kansas City, Missouri. Straw for bedding furnished free. Good pasture for horses at five cents per head per day. Meals at dining tent on grounds at cost, about 15 cents. W. S. Macrae, Knobnoster, Missouri.

Idaho, at Hagerman, Idaho, August 19 to 27 inclusive. Parties wishing to attend, address undersigned, or William Glaunner, Hagerman, for further information. We extend a cordial invitation to the scattered Saints of Idaho District to come. Conference at the same time and place. Send reports to secretary, Mrs. T. B. Jackson, general delivery, Boise, Idaho. Peter Anderson, 238 South Haven Street, Spokane, Washington, missionary in charge; W. Winegar, Caldwell, Idaho.

Quorum Notices

Pacific Coast quorum of elders will hold their semiannual sessions during the reunion which meets at Irvington, California, August 17 to 27. All the elders should make a special effort to attend these meetings. Send reports up to August 1 to the quorum secretary, H. A. Hintz, Chico, California.

Addresses

Elder Arthur Allen's mission address is 535 East Main Street, Stockton, California.

Correction

In our notice of the McKenzie, Alabama, reunion, we announced R. C. Russell, missionary in charge, would be present. We did that on our own authority, not with his consent, believing that as there was no other reunion in this mission on that date he would be present. He will not be present at the reunion. James R. Harper, for the committee.

Died

LANDIS.—Annie H. Story was born February 21, 1838, in Trumbull County, Ohio; died June 21, 1916. Married William Landis, April 1, 1855. To them were born 6 children, the

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.
Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
"Whither Thou Goest I will Go"	- - -	705
Notes and Comments	- - -	708
Current Events	- - -	707
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
The Book of Mormon—Part 1, by T. C. Kelley	- - -	709
Stakes and Stake Presidency, by R. S. Salyards	- - -	711
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
Where Indians Ride in Automobiles	- - -	713
WOMAN'S AUXILIARY	- - -	713
Mrs. J. A. Gardner.	- - -
THE CHILDREN'S HOME	- - -	716
LETTER DEPARTMENT	- - -	717
R. S. Salyards—Mrs. Mary Lamson—O. R. Miller	- - -
—E. E. Long—Edna Cochran—Wesley Bradey	- - -
—Ada Handley—Louise Parker—Mrs. C. B. Freeman—J. F. Mintun—G. W. Newton—R. Etzenhouser—C. Ed Miller—Mrs. Alice Wiley	- - -
—Mrs. Rolla Floyd—S. A. Burgess.	- - -
NEWS FROM MISSIONS	- - -	724
E. R. Davis—A. J. Layland.	- - -
NEWS FROM BRANCHES	- - -	725
Abbie A. Horton.	- - -
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT	- - -	725

oldest, a girl, died in infancy. Those who remain to mourn their loss are: Mrs. Abbie Fowlk, of Montgomery, Michigan; Granville, of Wolford, North Dakota; Mrs. Nellie Kinsley, of Whiting, Iowa; W. W., of Gordon, Montana; Mrs. Alta Eva, of Swanton, Ohio. She leaves 18 grandchildren, 13 great-grandchildren, and a host of relatives and friends. Baptized in 1879, remaining faithful until death. She had a quiet, loving disposition, thus endearing her to the hearts of all. Funeral at Saints' chapel, at Clear Lake. Interment in the Teeters Cemetery.

POLLARD.—Thomas Jefferson Pollard, born February 14, 1844, at Washington, Arkansas; died at his home in Provo, Utah, July 2, 1916. Married Sarah Ann Dixon, in Adams County, Missouri, February 1873. To them were born 6 children, 3 boys and 3 girls. Baptized and confirmed December 25, 1881, at Richmond, Ray County, Missouri, by T. B. Belcher, and was ordained an elder at Knoxville, Missouri, by J. B. Belcher, January 23, 1892. He leaves wife, 3 children, relatives and many friends to mourn their loss. Funeral services at the chapel in Provo, Utah, July 5, 1916, sermon by H. E. Winegar.

ANDERSON.—Edna Louise, second daughter of Otis H. and Stella Anderson, born February 9, 1913; died July 16, 1916. She leaves to mourn besides her parents, her sister Oma, her grandparents, and many friends and relatives. She was an exceptionally sweet little bud of promise, and a great comfort to her parents and sister. She had been ill only a little over a week. Funeral sermon by T. A. Ivie.

Typewriter Service in Rural Communities

The typewriter is coming into more extended use in rural communities because of the assistance it renders to all classes of people. Here are a few examples of the possibilities of service:

The Farmer: Think of the possibilities of selling produce by the means of typewritten letters sent out to customers? Typewritten letters give the sender a business standing with the people who receive them and also enable the keeping of carbon copies of the correspondence, which many times does away with misunderstandings and lawsuits.

The General Store Merchant: More prompt and courteous treatment is likely to be accorded his orders and correspondence with the City jobber and manufacturer if his letters are typewritten.

In The Home: The boy or girl who is intending to follow a business career can secure no better start than a knowledge of typewriter operating. Children who learn to use the typewriter learn spelling at the same time. The housewife finds it a great convenience in writing recipes and for general correspondence.

The Minister: No Clergyman should be without a typewriter. It is of great assistance in preparing sermons and writing the many letters that a pastor has to write.

Mail us the
Coupon to-day

L. C. SMITH & BROS. TYPEWRITER CO.
903 W. LOCUST ST., DES MOINES, IOWA

Please send me information as checked below:

- Send me free catalog.
- How can I get a Factory Rebuilt L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter?
- What about trading in my old machine?

Name _____

Street or P. O. _____

State _____

Office of the Registrar

The State University of Iowa

Iowa City

July 17, 1916.

President George N. Briggs,
Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear President Briggs:

At a meeting held last week, the Executive Committee of the Faculty of the College of Liberal Arts voted to approve the recommendation that Graceland College be accredited as a Junior College.

Very truly yours,

HCD:GBM

H. C. DORCAS, Registrar.

Graceland College fully meets the requirements of the American Association of Colleges and Universities, thus admitting her graduates to advanced standing in all Colleges and Universities of the United States.

Courses preparing for:

Medicine
Dentistry
Commerce

Law
Engineering
Journalism

Teacher Training and two years of Liberal Arts.

Strong courses in College, Academy, Commercial, Music and Oratory.

Send for catalog to the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

FOR SALE

Two acres of fine laying land all set to young fruit just coming into bearing—new 6 room house, back plastered and finely finished. 2 never failing wells, new hen house 10 x 24½. Located on South State St. Bargain for cash. E. F. Hall, Lamoni, Iowa.

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist

in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

FOR SALE

Bakery and Restaurant for sale at a bargain in a town of six thousand doing a large wholesale and retail business also soda-fountain and ice cream. Come and look it over or address Pure Food Bakery & Cafe, Chariton, Iowa. 30-4t

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, AUGUST 2, 1916

NUMBER 31

Editorial

COMFORT YE ONE ANOTHER

(Extracts from the funeral sermon of Joseph Roberts, Presiding Bishop of the Lamoni Stake, preached by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday afternoon, July 16, 1916.)

Scripture reading: Closing verses of chapter 4 and opening verses of chapter 5, of 1 Thessalonians.

The hand of affliction has rested heavily on this community of late. Several families have been desolated, and the entire community has been made to feel the burden of sorrow. I hope it is not entirely correct, as stated by one yesterday, that those who most need the lesson to be gleaned from such experiences, heed it the least; that those who are inclined to be sober and diligent will be made more serious, while those who are frivolous and pleasure-seeking will not heed that which is transpiring.

We cannot understand why these things are permitted. As we sometimes sing, "We know not why, these things are ordered from on high." We do not understand why one receives a marvelous blessing and is healed, and another does not receive that blessing.

It is still true in a different sense from that in which the Master meant it, that two may be working in the field and one be taken and the other be left. Two may be grinding at the mill and one be taken and the other left. We can only conclude that the one who is taken has finished his work in the field or grinding at the mill, and that there remains still some duty undone, some work yet to do for those who are not called. But concerning those who are taken away we can only conclude that their work has been finished, because God certainly would not permit it to be interrupted prematurely.

You can readily understand that it is a difficult task for a minister to preach a funeral sermon when the departed has been a close personal friend, and that we can only do so by trying to exercise a rigorous discipline over our emotions. Jesus said to his disciples, "Henceforth I will not call you servants, I will call you friends," and by so doing he gave a new meaning to the term friend, as applied to those who are friends in the church in a gospel sense. We may have our friends in the world, it is true, but the friendship that we feel for them ordinarily is not that which we feel for our friends in the gospel, with whom we have a common cause, and with whom we speak a common language that on many points would not be understood by those who are not of the household of faith. Friendship reveals in that connection a deep and significant meaning, such as the Master intended to give it when he used that word. And it has been my pleasure to regard Bishop Roberts for a number of years as a close personal friend.

I have prized him as a friend because of his sterling character as an individual. He was fearless and honest and conscientious and frank, and absolutely plain and unassuming; and I am glad now as I look back that I can reflect that I supported him in his office work, both publicly and privately. I did so because I had the testimony that God had called him to the office that he occupied; because I liked him as an individual; and because I believed that he was qualified for the position in which he had been placed, at least qualified to a marked degree.

In Titus 1 we read concerning the qualities of a bishop: "A bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God; not self-willed."

Our brother was a man of strong body and strong mind. He had an iron will. He had a will that did not balk at any obstacle; but he was not self-willed. When we were contemplating reorganizing the Lamoni Stake he said: "My resignation is in the hands of the Presidency. They may do just as they please in regard to the stake bishopric." He was willing that the counsels of the church should obtain in every instance. And finally when he was prostrated with that grievous malady, and we went out to see him at his home, he said, "Now my only concern is that the will of God shall be done." That is what Christ said, "Not my will, but thy will be done."

"Not self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre; but a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, just, holy, temperate," and you know that it was the delight of our brother to be associated with the men of the church, to be numbered with those who are honest, upright, and pure, clean in their lives and in their conversation.

A lover of good men, sober, just, holy, temperate; holding fast the faithful word as he had been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers.

I just wished to bring this little personal tribute to Brother Roberts as a friend.

Now possibly I will do well if I confine myself to a brief exegesis of the scripture reading that we have had.

The apostle said: "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep." He uses the expression that the Master used about Lazarus when he learned that Lazarus had passed away. He said to his disciples, "Lazarus sleepeth." And so the apostle says the same thing here: "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope."

It is true that at a time like this we must feel a degree of sorrow. We have met some people who contended that if our Christian religion were indeed true, we ought not to weep on an occasion like this. But it is recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12: "Thou shalt live together in love insomuch that thou shalt weep for the loss of them that die, and more especially for those who have no hope of a glorious resurrection."

We would be inhuman if we did not feel and express our sorrow on such an occasion, when we think about the parting that is forced upon us. We feel pain at times even when we are separated from our loved ones for a short time; and when that time becomes indefinite, then our pain is intensified. When we have been so closely associated with them, the tearing asunder of these spiritual ties is agonizing, but Paul tells us that while we sorrow, we ought not to sorrow as those who have no hope. It is quite a different thing when we look forward to a glorious resurrection and a reunion. Quite different than it would be if we thought that all that remained of the personality of the one whom we loved was shortly to be placed in the silent tomb.

"For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep." For, he says, "if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, they who are asleep in Christ will he bring with him."

He predicates our belief in the resurrection on our belief in the fact that Jesus Christ died and rose again, just as he does in the fifteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians, where he says:

If Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?

But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain.

He makes the argument that if we do not believe in the resurrection of humanity, we cannot believe in the resurrection of Christ; and if Christ be not risen, then all the hope that we have in Christianity is in vain.

But he goes on with the argument:

But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

And continues with this scriptural lesson:

For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first.

This is in harmony with the promise that Christ himself gave. He said, "If I go away I will come again." And the angels who stood by, or appeared to those who stood by when Christ was caught up into heaven, said:

Men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.—Acts 1: 11.

And so the promise is made here, that he would descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel. This is one of the doctrines that we as a people have been preaching for a long period of time. And now we are gratified to observe that many of the other churches are taking up this idea that Christ is coming again.

And the apostle goes on to say, that the dead in Christ shall rise first. This is in harmony with the promise made in Revelation 20, where John the Revelator tells us what he saw in his wonderful vision on the Isle of Patmos, and he tells us that this is called the resurrection of the just, the first resurrection which occurs when Christ shall come. And he tells us that the rest of the dead live not until the thousand years are ended, the thousand years of joy and peace under the administration, and guidance and teaching of our Lord and Master. And then following the second resurrection he tells us there comes the eternal judgment, when the dead, both small and great, shall stand before the bar of God, and all are judged out of the books according to the things that they have done in the flesh.

Then we have this glorious promise that those who are asleep in Christ shall be raised up at his coming, and shall have an equal part with those who may be living at the time of his appearing and shall receive him when he returns. And he tells us:

Wherefore comfort one another with these words. But of the times and seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night.

That is what the Master said, and he also said that if the good man of the house had known the time when the thief would come, that he would not have suffered his house to be broken up, but he would have been on his guard. And here he exhorts us that we should watch and pray, that we may be accounted worthy to escape the things coming on the earth, and to stand when Christ shall appear. For when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them.

For years and years the world has been flattering itself that everything was working on toward a period of peace, and that the millennial reign was about to be ushered in; that we were growing better and better all the time. But finally in the midst of that dream of peace, in that era of self-congratulation, there appeared this great and disastrous war, that is devastating the nations of the earth. So that while we mourn over an occasion of death in our community, there are untold thousands of homes broken up constantly in other lands by this awful visitation that has come on the earth.

I met the pastor of a prominent church in one of our western cities some months ago, and he said to me that this world war was the greatest blow that his faith had ever experienced. I thought it strange, because I recalled that when the disciples asked the Master what the sign of his coming should be, he told them they should hear of wars and rumors of wars, for nation would rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom.

Why should our faith be shaken when the predictions that the Master left on record are being literally fulfilled even before our very gaze? Why, it seems that our faith should be infinitely increased, when we see how his promises and predictions are being fulfilled in the very day in which we live.

"But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief."

Now these things do not come upon us unexpectedly; we are warned, and we do not need to stay in darkness unless like the foolish virgins we are content to have our vessels empty and untrimmed, and our lights not burning when the Master comes. But we are exhorted and admonished that we should be on our guard to receive him when he comes. And then the statement is made, "But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for a helmet, the hope of salvation. For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us. . . . Wherefore," he says, "comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also ye do."

And if there is any consolation to be found, it certainly must be found in the word of God, and under the gentle administration of his Holy Spirit. We certainly pray from the depths of our heart that that Spirit may descend like the gentle dew upon the bruised hearts of those who mourn, that they may be healed and comforted. But we should not forget the lesson that is for our consideration in the closing verse of the scriptural reading:

We beseech you, brethren, to know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake.

This, our brother, labored among us and some of us did not know him, and we did not esteem him as we should have done. Hence we should take from that experience a lesson, for some have said that they wished they might have another opportunity to give him the spiritual support and help that he ought to have had from them while he was engaged in his office work. We can never, in this life at least, rectify that mistake so far as he is concerned; but we have others among us who are placed over us and among us as overseers, and the apostle admonishes us that we should know them, and that we should love them, and that we should respect them for the very work's sake. The fact that God has called them and placed them in that position entitles them to our respect and our confidence and our love. Let us see that we learn a lesson here and give our spiritual support to those who may remain behind, and may be called from time to time to labor among us. And may God's blessing be and abide with us, is my prayer.

CURRENT EVENTS

EXTREME HEAT.—A heat wave of unprecedented extent and duration has extended over the Middle West for about a week and thousands of prostrations and hundreds of deaths have occurred as a result.

BABY PLAGUE CONTINUES.—The ravages of infantile paralysis in New York City and elsewhere have continued unchecked, the intense heat acting as an ally to maintain the high mortality rate. More than a death an hour is reported in Greater New York, with cases developing in unexpected places in other States.

MEXICAN BORDER.—Our troops continue training in the extreme heat prevailing at the border encampments. A large number of heat prostrations are reported. It is reported that the arrangements are almost completed for a peace commission to adjudicate the differences between this and the Mexican Government. It seems the Villista troops have again been scattered into the hills.

PURCHASE DANISH INDIES.—It has been officially announced that the United States Government will purchase the three islands in the West Indies now owned by the Danish Government at a price of $25,- 000,000. The purchase treaty only needs ratification by the Danish Parliament, which it is expected will be given. The islands are Saint Croix, Saint Thomas, and Saint John. The value of the islands is largely based on their military strategic position.

AMMUNITION EXPLOSION.—Sixty-nine carloads of war ammunition exploded near Jersey City on the 30th. Three are known to be dead, fifty missing, and sixty injured, with financial loss estimated at $25,000,000. The Statue of Liberty was damaged very materially by the bursting shrapnel. The detonations were felt in five States. The ammunition was stored on an island and was intended for shipment to the entente allies. The cause of the explosion is not known at this time.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The past week has been one of unceasing activity on all fronts. In the west it has been a fierce contest over minor positions, each a key to more important points. The British have gained control of Pozieres, a strongly fortified village and important strategical position in the advance toward Bapaume. Furious German counter attacks are maintained and casualties are very heavy on each side. The French have made some gains along the Somme, but because of resumption of the German attacks on Verdun and necessity of defending it, evidently have not been as active in the allied offensive as might be expected. It is announced that a large number of Turkish troops have been called for to aid the Teutons in repelling the Russian offensive in the east. The latter have taken Brody, a city of about twenty thousand, more than two thirds of which were Jews at the beginning of the war. This place is sixty-two miles from Lemberg, the Russian objective and has railroad connections with that point. German counter attacks on the north end of the line, near Riga, have been quite successful, but in the south, in spite of adverse weather conditions, the central powers have been slowly forced back, with amazingly heavy losses reported. In the extremely mountainous territory at the Austro-Italian front, the fighting continues, with little territorial change, but with seemingly no diminution of ferocity. The Turkish forces in the Caucasus have yielded considerably to the advancing Russians. Minor conflicts between the Serbs and Bulgarians on the Macedonian front are reported.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

NEW TURKISH AMBASSADOR.—Abram Elkus has been appointed to succeed Henry Morgenthau as ambassador to Turkey. In the solution of the Jewish problems in Palestine this office is quite influential, and our readers will follow the activities of Mr. Elkus with interest.

CHANGED ATTITUDE.—Last year the National Educational Association came out solidly against military training. This year they gave assent to such training in schools, provided that "military ends should not be permitted to pervert educational purposes and practices of the schools."

STATUS OF GRACELAND.—Our friends who are informed as to educational affairs, tell us that having met the requirements of the American Association of Colleges and Universities, graduates from our school are admitted to advanced standing in all the colleges and universities of the United States. The latter part of our statement last week concerning this might be confusing, so we are glad to clear it up.

A GOOD HABIT.—Some of the successful church workers have a habit of sending in samples of their advertising. We appreciate the privilege of keeping in touch with the work being done in this line. Oft-times we can pass along a good idea we find used and thus extend the benefits. In some cases we may offer suggestions. In this day of high-class publicity we should receive the utmost for the money invested. It is not enough to advertise—our efforts should bring good results.

MILLION IN A DAY.—The Anti-Saloon League of America, through the Lincoln Lee Legion, is making a campaign, especially through the Sunday schools, to obtain a million signers to the Lincoln Lee Legion Pledge. They have set November 10 as the day, and hope to secure the million signers on that day. The pledge is as follows: "Whereas the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is productive of pauperism, degradation and crime, and believing it is our duty to discourage that which produces more evil than good, we therefore pledge ourselves to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage."

HELP US HELP OTHERS.—The editors have a nucleus toward a collection of published statements in newspapers and magazines favorable to our work. We want to increase this collection materially in the near future and then put the entire assortment out as a loan to those of our missionaries, especially debaters, who need them. It is exasperating to have some person publicly defame the character and reputation of not only our leaders but our entire church membership, when a few well-chosen quotations would so easily clear the atmosphere and demonstrate our true position. Those who now have or in the future may secure such copies, will do our people a favor by donating them to this collection. They will be held on call, and upon request sent out, to be returned for the next one who needs them. We want only bona fide statements from those not members of the church. Send the entire page at least, and ordinarily the whole paper. Address Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.

Original Articles

THE CREEDS OF 1830

To Latter Day Saints there is perhaps no other single part of the history of their church so interesting as that which immediately preceded its official organization in 1830. The visitation of angels, the gifts of dreams and visions, the revelation of a new interpretation of the gospels, these move the imagination and enthrall our attention, for such experiences during a period of twelve hundred years were almost if not quite unknown to men. And of the events of this period, nothing so occupies us as the vision granted to the boy Joseph Smith, when, in answer to his prayer for direction as to which church to join, he was told that "all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; . . . they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof."

In charity we might concede that such a radical statement is made comparatively, and having the revealed gospels in view as a standard. Measured by such a standard as the Scriptures from which the creeds themselves were drawn, the creeds must have been untrue either wholly or in part, and it is according to the degree of their departure from the gospel standard that their condemnation consists. The churches holding revivals at the time Joseph's vision was received were the Methodists, Presbyterians, and Baptists. In criticizing their teachings of about that date the writer does not personally take the liberty of condemning them; that is left for the very statements of belief themselves to do. Doubtless those who preached the doctrines of this church had in them some expectation of doing good, as doubtless, also, had the members involved. But with these matters we have nothing to do. This article does not pretend to do more than merely suggest a line of research which may be followed with profit by those who do not already have notes on the subject, and suggests books accepted by the churches under discussion as authoritative, from which it may be learned definitely just why "the creeds of 1830" were not acceptable to the Lord.

To be thorough, the creeds of all churches existing at that time should be examined and compared with the standard accepted, the Bible; but to do this would carry us into fields foreign perhaps to our interest. At least all creeds prominent in the United States at the time of our study should be considered, but aside from the Roman Catholic, and the Protestant Episcopal, those mentioned above, namely, the Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist, may suffice for our purpose. Those who care to do so may easily broaden the scope of their inquiry, for there are many creeds upon which to draw.

The three churches in which our chief interest lies were virtually offshoots of the Roman Catholic Church, and were begun, as we know, as reformations. Disregarding the matter of their historical origin, we may state that their creeds were subject to condemnation in that, (1) They did not agree in vital essentials with the Bible. (2) They did not harmonize with each other on fundamental points.

THE METHODIST CHURCH

In R. J. Cooke's History of Ritual, we note certain points which were adopted in North America with the liturgy of Wesley's English Methodists in 1784. A liturgy was used which, patterned closely after that of the Church of England, contained statements of belief and responses for public worship. An ordained ministry consisting of superintendents (or bishops), elders, and deacons was had. There seems to be no claim that these ministers held a priesthood, their ordination at the outset of the church being under the hand of those who already believed; subsequently new ministers were ordained by those already in office. What is conceded by the believer about to be baptized is stated in the following questions asked adults prior to the performance of the rite:

Dost thou believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth? and in Jesus Christ, his only begotten Son, our Lord; and that he was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary; that he suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried; that he rose again the third day; that he ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty; and from thence shall come again at the end of the world, to judge the quick and the dead? And dost thou believe in the Holy Ghost, the holy Catholic Church; the communion of saints; the forgiveness of sins; the resurrection of the body; and everlasting life after death?—History of Ritual, p. 214.

It is worth while to note what was accepted and believed in, comparing with our epitome of faith.

The practices of the church to engage our attention were:

1. Baptism of infants; it being held that this was scriptural in that it was carried out by Christ and his apostles.

2. Choice as to the manner of baptism, whether by sprinkling, pouring, or immersion.

3. Adults were accepted first as probationers, and after a period of trial, if satisfactory, as members.

4. Service of the Lord's supper, using as materials unleavened bread and unfermented grape juice. The time of its observance was on Sunday, at stated intervals, and nonmembers were not permitted to participate. An opportunity was given for confession of sins, which amounted to a renewal of baptismal vows. The purpose of this service was to portray spiritually the body and blood of Jesus Christ.

Besides Mr. Cooke's book it might be well to refer also to a History of the Methodists in the United States, by James M. Buckley.

PRESBYTERIANISM

With respect to the Westminster Confession the task of stating the elements apparently opposed to the new revelation is easier, as shall presently be seen. In the first place, a modest remark by Reverend J. E. Rockwell, on page 7 of his Sketches of the Presbyterian Church, published in 1854, offers a key to this phase of our problem. He says, "We profess to be only a branch of his family; a part of that great army which, though divided into sections, has one leader. . . ." Yet in the face of this, he later makes the claim that his church's doctrines and order are primitive and apostolic, the inference being, of course, that it is most primitive and apostolic. His observation puts in a sentence the whole problem of the reason for conflicting creeds, reflecting clearly, the denial of the power of godliness.

The Westminster Confession was adopted by the American Presbyterians in 1729, though not unanimously. In 1788 the four synods, comprising many local congregations scattered along our Atlantic border, were united in a general assembly, forming a supreme legislative body. The Presbyterian form of government assumes a particular congregation is only part of the church to which it is responsible; and authority has been vested in its ministers and officers who constitute its courts and by whom its discipline is administered. It is believed, as previously stated, the form of government approaches most nearly that of the apostles.

Apostles were witnesses to his death and resurrection, and then were to arrange the church in accordance with principles he had established. They had no successors, and could not have. Only one apostle was ordained after the original twelve. (Sketches of the Presbyterian Church, pp. 10, 11.) More specifically, a group of elders, two or more of equal power, rule the congregation, one being the minister who usually by reason of better training and experience enjoys a tacit leadership.

From the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (1888) containing the Confession of Faith as amended from 1805 to the date of publication, we cull some very interesting matter. The church takes an unequivocal stand against modern revelation, saying that "those former ways of God's revealing his will unto his people being now ceased," (Hebrews 1: 1, 2). However, an "inward illumination of the Spirit is acknowledged as necessary for the saving understanding . . . of the word." (John 6: 45; 1 Corinthians 2: 9, 10-12.) (The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, p. 10.) And, with reference to the word "unto which nothing at any time is to be added, whether by new revelation of the Spirit or traditions of men." (2 Timothy 3: 15-17.)

It is declared also that the "Supreme Judge . . . is the Holy Spirit speaking in the scripture." (Matthew 22: 29-31.) (Ibid., p. 16.)

Nothing about the Presbyterian creed is quite so absorbing or startling as those passages which relate its conception of the Deity. Here are the exact words:

There is only one living and true God, who is infinite in being and perfection, a most pure spirit, invisible, without body, parts or passions . . . a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. (Ibid., pp. 16, 17.)

This statement as to the personality of God gives indescribable emphasis to Revelations 14: 6, which says: "Fear God, and give glory to him," a being of reality, and not of unreality, or nonexistence. Then too, over the closing words of the quotation, "A rewarder of them that diligently seek him," the thoughtful will pause, weighing the implication of freedom against the doctrine of foreordination, prominent in the creed of Presbyterianism.

This doctrine is so important a part of the creed that it deserves a full statement in the language of the Confession itself. It is affirmed that "God from all eternity did by the most wise and holy counsel of his own free will, freely and unchangeably ordain whatsoever comes to pass (Isaiah 45: 67; Ephesians 1: 11); yet so as thereby neither is God the author of sin (Psalm 5: 4), nor is violence offered to the will of the creatures, nor is the liberty or contingency of second causes taken away, but rather established." (Pages 20, 21.)

Isaiah and Psalms in these statements apparently disagree, one contending that he creates evil, the other that he has no part in evil. The Presbyterian use of both does not simplify matters.

"By the decree of God, for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, (and others unto everlasting death.) These angels and men thus predestinated and foreordained, are particularly and unchangeably designed (Proverbs 16: 4; Romans 9: 22, 23; Ephesians 1: 56), and their number is so certain and definite that it cannot be either increased or diminished." (John 10: 14-16, 27, 28.) (Ibid., p. 22.)

Some "are predestinated unto life . . . out of his mere free grace and love, without any foresight, or good works, or perseverance in either of them." (Ibid., p. 23.) But "God was pleased to ordain them (the rest of mankind) to dishonor and wrath for their sin, to the praise of his glorious justice." (Page 22.) (Matthew 11: 25, 26; 2 Timothy 2: 20; Jude 4; 1 Peter 2: 8) (Page 24.) Yet, contradictory as it may seem to some, the Confession adds that the calling and election may be made sure. (2 Peter 1: 10.)

We are assured that all are left to the liberty of their own will, but "all things come to pass immutably, and infallibly (Acts 2: 23), yet . . . he ordereth them to fall out according to the nature of second causes, either necessarily, freely, or contingently." (Pages 27, 28.)

The doctrine of original sin is another item of interest to us. That original sin is the source of all evil is not to be doubted, if we are to accept the statement that "from this original corruption, whereby we are utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all good, and wholly inclined to evil, do proceed all actual transgressions." (James 1: 14, 15; Matthew 15: 19.) (Page 36.)

The declaration of Paul's in 1 Corinthinans 15: 40, is denied by the sentence that there is no glory but the one; no sort of salvation but the one; and to maintain otherwise "is very pernicious and to be detested." (Page 58.)

The mode of baptism is open to choice, as it is contended that dipping into water is not necessary; pouring or sprinkling are both acceptable, the following texts being cited as proof: Acts 2: 41; 10: 46, 47; 16: 33; 1 Corinthians 10: 2. Infant baptism is upheld and practiced, there being elect infants as well as elect adults, it is affirmed. The baptized infant is "regenerated" by the rite, a view necessary in order to harmonize with the position taken on original sin. That this doctrine is not as popular as formerly is evidenced by this passage taken from the book "Whither," by Mr. Briggs, published 1889; he says, that in the present century "evangelical opinion has settled to the theory that all infants dying in infancy are saved; and many Presbyterians endeavor to interpret the Confession of Faith to conform to this theory." This, he declares, is wrong. However, it would be difficult to find better proof of the fulfillment of Isaiah 29: 24 that "they shall learn doctrine," than this lament of Mr. Briggs.

Those interested in the historical aspect of the belief in the damnation of unbaptized infants may get valuable matter in Mr. Briggs' book, beginning with page 121. Other books on Presbyterianism worth consulting are:

The Catastrophe of the Presbyterian Church in 1837, by Zebulon Crocker, (1838).

Miller on Presbyterianism and Baptism, by D. D. Miller, (1840). Differences between the Old and New School Presbyterians, by Cheeseman, (1848).

The Theology of the Westminster Symbols, by E. D. Morris, (1900).

THE BAPTISTS

The history of the Baptists in America reveals a principle conceded to be truly in harmony with the spirit of this country; that of absolute freedom of conscience in religious matters. On the first church bell to give the call to morning and evening service in the city of Providence, Rhode Island, the seat of the first American Baptist Church, were inscribed these words:

For freedom of conscience, the town was first planted,
Persuasion, not force, was us'd by the people;
This church is the eldest, and has not recanted,—
Enjoying and granting bell, temple, and steeple.

And it was by the Baptists that the first successful foreign missionary movement was begun, in 1813, by Adoniram Judson, a graduate of Brown University, Providence, Rhode Island, who had gone the previous year to Burmah, India, in the interests of the Congregationalists, but who left them owing to his disbelief in the principle of infant baptism.

There are many points of importance in the Baptist creed, with some of which we agree. Those which, in my opinion, come under the condemnation given at the head of this paper may alone be stated. As to organization, the Baptists believe each local church or congregation to be entirely independent of all others, and each member of equal power; leaders being elected by popular vote. The "church universal" is that of the entire body of those that have become personally partakers of the salvation of Christ; that the New Testament idea of a local church is that of a body of believers who have been regenerated and sanctified. This idea of the constitution of the church does not range the Baptists on the side of those opposed to church union, for they are willing to advance this movement. However, they state that Christian union must be based on a clearer understanding of the word, and not on compromise, adding rather naively, that the church of the future must approximate the Baptist position.

In claiming apostolic succession, Doctor Newman, from whom the previous paragraph was quoted, makes a remark of great significance, page 13, American Church History, volume 3, (1894), when he says: "That a church may make grave departures in doctrine and practice from the apostolic standard without ceasing to be a church of Christ must be admitted, or else it must be maintained that during long periods, no church is known to have existed." On such grounds, then, the Baptists claim apostolic succession, but their position does not appear, obviously, to be one of any great security.

It was on this very question of authority that Roger Williams the founder rejected his own church. Williams believed in the absolute separation of church and state, and it was on that principle that the Providence plantations were incorporated in 1643. Hardly had the little colony been firmly planted before Williams became concerned as to the validity of the administration of baptism, (American Church History, p. 81.) which, the Baptists, is by immersion, and that of the organizers of the church having been at the hands of each other, termed a "believer's baptism." Of the authority to be baptized, to quote Newman, "he doubted whether it could be restored apart from a special (miraculous) divine authorization. He seems to have hoped that such might hereafter be vouchsafed." Williams himself says, apropos of baptism, "I have not satisfaction, neither in the authority by which it is done, nor in the manner."

For many years it was the practice to lay hands on the head of the one baptized for the reception of the Holy Spirit, but this was discontinued in Providence after 1808, according to Benedict.

From the church of the original planting, many others have sprung, and wide variations in creed have crept in. But on these and the foregoing points the following references may be read: A General History of the Baptist Denomination in America, (1813) David Benedict, A. M., 2 volumes, Massachusetts Historical Society Collection of Roger Williams Letters.

Roger Williams, by E. J. Carpenter, (1909).

American Church History, volume 3, Doctor Newman, (1894).

I have not taken the time to point out the specific contradictions to the gospel made by these creeds, relying on the elders to note such contradictions as they occur. There is sufficient evidence here, though it is not thoroughly worked out, to support the statement made at the outset, that "the creeds did not agree in vital essentials with the scriptures," there being lack of priesthood, a denial of the possibility of present-day revelation, an unscriptural mode of baptism in two instances; doctrines and practices strange and untenable, relating to infant baptism, election, foreordination, the constitution of the church, etc., and incomplete official organization. There is also evidence sufficient to support the second statement that "the creeds did not harmonize with each other in essential points," thus indicating the absence from each of them of the Holy Spirit which is to guide into all truth. Moreover, this lack of harmony, which need not be specifically mentioned here, even in summary, shows each creed to be the work of men, and, like human things, full of errors and subject to change.

Both statements in being borne out justify the voice of revelation in its utterance: "All their creeds were an abomination in his sight."

L. F. P. CURRY.

* * * * *

War will never yield but to the principles of universal justice and love, and these have no sure footing but in the religion of Jesus Christ.—Channing.

BOOK OF MORMON ON POLYGAMY---PART 2

BY T. C. KELLEY

MISREPRESENTING THE NEPHITES

But Mr. Smith, in the Arena, misrepresents the Nephites. He says, they were too wicked and abominable to be permitted to practice polygamy. That some of them were wicked, we freely admit, but some were "pure in heart," and if the wickedness of the wicked kept them out of the "divine order of plural marriage" then those who were "pure in heart" ought to have had full liberty to enter into that divine order.

But behold I, Jacob, would speak unto you, that are pure in heart.—Jacob 2: 48; Brighamite edition, 3: 1.

O all ye that are pure in heart—Verse 50. But woe, woe, unto you that are not pure in heart; that are filthy this day before God; etc.—Verse 51.

This shows that some were pure in heart and some were impure or filthy before God that day. Joseph F. tells us that those who were trying to follow the example of David and Solomon were wicked and abominable, so they were the impure in heart, the filthy ones before God. But the pure in heart did not seek to do like unto them of old, they did not desire many wives and concubines, yet notwithstanding their purity of heart, they too were included in the command:

There shall not any man among you, [not even the pure in heart] have, save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none.

That was about the year 545 B. C. There were pure in heart there at that time. There were men and women of the very best character, men who were highly favored of God, such as Alma, Amulek, Ammon, Lamoni, Gideon, Gidgiddoni, and many others whom the Lord wondrously blessed, and not one of these were found to be worthy to practice polygamy. Why not, if being good entitles one to enter polygamous relations? If it does not, how does being wicked stand in one's way?

But there was one Noah, the son of Zeniff, and at the second verse of Chapter 7, Book of Mosiah, we read:

For behold he did not keep the commandments of God, but he did walk after the desires of his own heart. And he had many wives and concubines.

Here it is again, the man who "did not keep the commandments of God" got into the "sacred relations. . . . of the divine order. . . . of plural marriage." While not a one of the many good men and true who did keep the commandments of God, and of whom we read in the Book of Mormon, were ever permitted to enter into that same so-called divine order. Strange, isn't it?

Mormon was good enough to compile the Book of Mormon, Moroni was good enough to seal and hide it up, and neither one of them was permitted to practice plural marriage or have revelation authorizing it. The only thing any Book of Mormon prophet ever had from the Lord was what we have already referred to briefly in the Book of Jacob. This shows that they were restricted to one wife right at the beginning; that the restriction was repeated with emphasis by Jacob in what has been quoted, and it is worthy of note that clear down to the compilation of the Book of Mormon, the Lord never commanded those people "otherwise." Nay, more, even if we should take the testimony of the Brighamites themselves, the Lord never commanded them to do otherwise, than have one wife only, and concubines none, till the year A. D. 1843.

From B. C. 600 to A. D. 1843 is 2,443 years. During this time Jesus lived and labored. He established his church, appointing his apostles, and their mission work was also performed, and "great signs and wonders were done by the hands of the apostles." The Lord worked with them, and with many of his saints, and yet no commandment to do "otherwise" was ever given to them.

During this 2,443 years all the work of the Lord among the Nephites was performed. Christ visited them, talked with them, healed them, blessed them with sundry and great blessings, but never gave them a different commandment than the one given to Lehi, about the time he came out from Jerusalem, and reiterated through Jacob, about sixty-five years later.

I wonder if Joseph F. Smith really believes there were no people during all these years that were worthy in every way as he and his people are now, or have been since they have been practicing polygamy. If he and his fellow polygamists are, and have been practicing because they are better than other people, then I wonder why Lehi and his descendants who were "pure in heart" were forbidden to do the same thing. If Brighamites to-day are justified in their practice of plural marriage because they are more holy than others, why were Lehi and his company not permitted to practice it when "they were under the guidance of the Almighty"?

RAISING UP SEED UNTO THE LORD

"But if I will, saith the Lord, raise up seed unto me I will command my people: otherwise they shall hearken unto these things." What does this mean? Every Brighamite that we have talked with or read after, interprets it to signify that at some future time, when the Lord desired to raise up a righteous seed, he would then command his people to practice polygamy, and so abrogate the command to the Nephites to have only one wife. They claim that in 1843, God changed his plan and "revealed the principle" (of plural marriage) to Joseph the Martyr, in July of that year.

If this be true, we are unavoidably, (and logically), driven to the conclusion that during all the years from 600 B. C. to 1843 A. D., God did not "will" to raise up seed unto himself, for as we have seen, none of his people were ever commanded to enter polygamous relations in all that time. The Lord did not command "otherwise," so it follows that he did not "will" to raise up seed.

But this is squarely opposed to the Book of Mormon, which says:

Wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old.—Jacob 2: 34, 35.

Here is one instance where the Lord willed to raise up seed. How did he do it? Not by commanding plural marriage and calling it a "divine order," but by leading them away from a land and a city where, from of old, men had lived in plural marriage, and other practices which are evil and subversive of moral rectitude. When they had reached this land, he gave the command to Lehi, and afterwards repeated it to the Nephites:

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife."

At the same time he told them:

"David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord of hosts."—Jacob 2: 33.

Let it be remembered that the object the Lord had in view was to "raise up a righteous branch." To do it, if the Brighamites are correct, he would have commanded polygamy; for that is their contention; for, putting it in plain terms, they claim the Lord commands plural marriage when he wants to raise up a righteous seed. Why, then, did he strictly forbid the Nephites from doing that which would raise up a righteous seed? How did it come about that the wickedest class among the Nephites were the only ones among them who desired to do just what, according to the Brighamite view, would raise up a righteous seed? Why were not those who were "pure in heart" and for whom Jacob had no word of censure or reproof, found endeavoring to assist in raising up a righteous seed by plural marriage? If the Brighamite idea is true, the only ones willing to raise up a righteous seed were those who were too wicked and abominable to do so, and those who could have done so were unwilling, and besides were commanded not to do so. This certainly shows the Brighamite position to be wrong. It surely could not be that people who were guilty of "grosser crimes" than pride and haughtiness, would be willing, nay, anxious to enter into a "divine order" and raise up a righteous seed unto the Lord, while those who were "pure in heart" and "under the guidance of the Almighty," were not at all inclined to do so. It is too unreasonable to believe.

Let us now put a statement in the Book of Mormon right with one in Joseph F. Smith's article in the Arena and consider them.

BOOK OF MORMON

Wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. . . . For there shall not any man among you [from whom this righteous branch is to be raised up], have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none.—Jacob 2: 34-36.

I have left out thirteen words of Jacob so the words of the Lord in the quotation will all come together.

JOSEPH F. SMITH

Of "this people," the very ones referred to in the Book of Mormon, Mr. Smith says:

They were too wicked and abominable to be permitted to enter in those sacred relations and covenants comprehended in the divine order of celestial or plural marriage.

They [this people] were limited to one wife.

The Book of Mormon declares that the Nephites of that early period should have but one wife.

The very people that the Lord chose, by whom to raise up a righteous "seed," are pronounced by Mr. Smith to have been too wicked and abominable to be permitted to enter into the divine order of plural marriage.

In other words, they were chosen to raise up a righteous seed, but not to practice plural marriage. In still another form: they were "limited" by a "thus saith the Lord," to one wife, yet they were to raise up a "righteous branch" unto the Lord. There is, therefore, no escaping the conclusion that God's way of raising up a righteous seed is by a system of marriage wherein "there shall not any man have save it be one wife." This conclusion is unavoidable.

SMITH VERSUS PRATT

Harmonizing the two statements following is a feat in the manipulation of words for which we are not able. Who can do it?

ORSON PRATT

There were Nephi, Sam, Laman and Lemuel, the sons of Lehi, and Zoram brought out of Jerusalem. How many daughters of Ishmael were unmarried? Just five. Would it have been just under these circumstances to ordain plurality among them? No. Why? Because the males and females were equal in number and they were under the guidance of the Almighty.

JOSEPH F. SMITH

They were limited to one wife.

They were too wicked and abominable to be permitted to enter into those sacred relations and covenants comprehended in the divine order of celestial or plural marriage.

It will be noted that these two great lights in the Brighamite church are agreed on one point, viz: that the Nephites were limited to one wife, but they are far, far apart as to the reason.

How it could be that they were so very wicked they could not practice polygamy and at the same time be kept from it by the guidance of the Almighty, Lehi and his company being righteous, I cannot see.

A chromo will be given to any Brighamite paper that will publish this article and satisfactorily explain this matter.

(Concluded.)

Of General Interest

CATHOLIC BAN ON DANCING

Conditions in Europe, in part created by the war, are said by a Catholic pastor to account for the ban put upon church dancing by the pope. The entire church in foreign lands, as well as the church in this country, is included in the order of the consistorial congregation. A letter issued by Cardinal Farley, consistent with one issuing from Cardinal O'Connell, of Boston; Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, and thirteen archbishops of America, forbids "under severe penalty all dancing at church entertainments, whether arranged for already or planned for the future." The decree, which appears in the official publication of the Vatican, the Acta Apostolicæ Sedis, seems to contemplate conditions as they especially affect life in this country. It reads:

In the last century in the United States the custom sprang up of gathering Catholic families to balls which used to be protracted to a late hour at night by entertainments and other forms of amusement. The reason and cause given for this were that Catholics might get to know one another and become more intimately united in the bonds of love and charity. They who were used to preside over the gatherings were generally the heads of some pious work, not rarely the rectors or the parish priests of churches.

But the ordinaries of the places, although they entertained no doubt of the upright purpose of those who promoted these dances, still, looking at the perils and losses caused by the growing custom, considered it their duty to forbid them; and therefore in canon 290 of the third plenary council of Baltimore they laid down as follows: "We order also that priests will take care to remove entirely that abuse in which entertainments and balls are held for the purpose of promoting pious projects."

But as often happens in human things, what was very wisely and justly ordered in the beginning gradually commenced to fall into oblivion, and the use of balls again flourished and even spread into the neighboring Dominion of Canada.

Knowing these things, the most eminent fathers of the sacred consistorial congregation having consulted several ordinaries of these places, and having subjected the matter to deep study, concluded that the decision laid down by the third council of Baltimore must be obeyed, and with the approbation of Our Most Holy Father Benedict XV, Pope, they decreed that all priests, secular and regular, and other clerks are absolutely forbidden to promote or foster the said balls, even though if in aid of and in support of pious works, or any other pious end; moreover, all clerks are forbidden to be present at these balls if they happen to be promoted by laymen.

This decree the sovereign pontiff ordered to become a part of the public law and to be observed religiously by all, everything to the contrary notwithstanding.

No other decree issued from Rome has caused so much discussion, reports the New York Sun. The opinion of some is that the effect on the church finances through the suspension of a means employed in many quarters to raise money will be inappreciable, but in other directions the opinion is quite the contrary. It is said that in Chicago alone the edict will curtail the annual church revenue by hundreds of thousands of dollars. The Brooklyn Eagle, calling attention to the "kindly tolerance, even to the encouragement of recreations of young people," by the Catholic Church, thinks it "distinctly unfair to call this the establishment of a 'blue law.'" It goes on to compare the Catholic attitude with that of certain Protestant denominations, particularly the Methodists, who in their recent General Conference voted not to remove from the "Discipline" the express prohibition of dancing. The Eagle says this:

In an article in the Catholic Encyclopedia (published in 1908) Doctor Charles L. Souvay, Professor of Holy Scriptures and Hebrew at the Kendrick Seminary, Saint Louis, treated the subject thus:

"As to social dancing, now so much in vogue, while in itself it is an indifferent act, moralists are inclined to place it under the ban on account of the various dangers associated with it. Undoubtedly old national dances, in which the performers stand apart, hardly, if at all, holding the partner's hand, fall under the ethical censure scarcely more than any other kind of social intercourse. But, aside from the concomitants—place, late hours, decollete, escorting, etc.—common to all such entertainments, round dances, although they may possibly be carried on with decorum and modesty, are regarded by moralists as fraught, by their very nature, with the greatest danger to morals."

Incidentally, it may be noted that without the changing of a word this language might stand as the formulation of the thought of the Methodist and the Baptists, the most aggressive of Protestant denominations. Devotionalism, no matter how divergent in doctrine, has a certain solidarity in its views affecting conduct. The religion of the plumb line is not a subject of argument.

—Literary Digest, June 24, 1916.

* * * * *

Sin is not taken out of man, as Eve was out of Adam, by putting him to sleep.—Wendell Phillips.

NAUVOO LANDMARKS

The old Liberty jail is still standing at Liberty, Missouri. The old building is noted in "Mormon" history because of the incarceration there, during the winter of 1838, of the Prophet Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum. The old Carthage jail where Joseph and Hyrum Smith were killed is also still standing and is now a residence. It is owned by the Utah Mormons. The Utah Mormons own no property in Nauvoo although the Reorganized church owns the old Riverside Mansion here, and the Smith properties are still owned by the heirs of Joseph Smith. They have been going to wreck for years. They should be preserved as relics although they are in almost too bad shape to repair now. Perhaps the city could cooperate with the Smith heirs in keeping these landmarks up. When these and a few more are gone there won't be much of a historical interest here and then we'll be sorry we didn't see to it that some of them were preserved. Some valuable landmarks have already disappeared. If we had them now they would be great attractions.—Nauvoo Independent, July 8, 1916.

Woman's Auxiliary

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

OFFICERS

President, Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, 630 South Chrysler Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Vice President, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, 1515 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri. Secretary, Mrs. W. W. Smith, corner Walnut Street and River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri. Treasurer, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Historian, Mrs. B. C. Smith, 214 South Street, Independence, Missouri.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPARTMENTS

Educational, Helen Silsbee Smith, 2315 Harney Street, Omaha, Nebraska. Home, Mrs. George N. Briggs, Lamoni, Iowa. Child Welfare, Mrs. Walter Sandy, 3431 East Sixtieth Street, Kansas City, Missouri. Relief and Service, Mrs. Edith Cochran, 1107 Powell Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri. Young Woman's, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

The Opportunities at Hand

We are glad to give our readers this week, a sketch of Sister Sandy's talk at our recent convention. It will be remembered that this was given while we were under our old constitution, and the departments referred to by her are not as now adopted and arranged. We would like to emphasize, with Sister Sandy, the fact that our Government is an agency for good, a source of help and information, not always recognized or understood by people generally. A portion of the money paid into the coffers of the country by its citizens is spent in making research work along many, many valuable lines, and the information thus gained belongs to the people at large, at very nominal prices. In fact many valuable bulletins are free for the asking, and some of the leading magazines of the day, are endeavoring to bring this fact to the recognition of their readers. These bulletins are upon almost every conceivable subject, and it is safe to say that it is very unlikely that a problem shall confront you but that you may find help and suggestion by appealing to your Government. Upon domestic problems, in economics, and conversation of resources, it is especially strong, and you may be told how to prune your vines, how to rid yourself of insect pests, how to can your vegetables, how to plant your flower garden, how to buy your meat, how to substitute other foods for meat, how to beautify your home grounds, how to prepare eggs for food, how to determine the purity of well water, how to use and care for milk and a host of other things.

On the intellectual side, we have counsel on such subjects as education for the home, education exhibits at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, reorganization of the public school system, problems of vocational education, the truant problem and the parental school, health of school children, adjustment between kindergarten and first grade, public, school and society libraries, Montessori method and the kindergarten, public school system of Gary, Indiana the reorganized playground, organized health work in schools, vocational guidance, and many others.

We would suggest that you avail yourself, very freely of the opportunities at hand, offered by our Government. Address the United States Bureau of Education, or the Department of the Interior, or the Department of Agriculture, or your own representatives in Congress, according to the nature of the help you desire. We are told to "go in and out and seek pasture," and why should we hesitate to reach out and grasp these extended hands, that information of the very best quality obtainable may be ours for the seeking.

The church also offers us very much, especially in the line of spiritual and moral uplift. We have the series of books giving advice to parents about the special instruction of the child approaching puberty; we have the little talks with the girls and boys themselves, which will present truth to them in the pure and wholesome way in which we so desire our children shall view life; we have tracts prepared with a view of presenting the simple gospel truths in a sequential way:—a gradual unfolding of "line upon line, precept upon precept," in the way that will help us to lay the foundations for the spiritual structure with wisdom and accuracy. So let us all think seriously of these things, acquaint ourselves with the opportunities at hand for advancement and information, and then be not slow to use the means provided in so many directions.

Church and the State Together for the Home

(A talk given by Sister Lula M. Sandy before the General Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary at Independence, April 11, 1916.)

"The purpose of the Woman's Auxiliary is to unite for mutual benefit and to increase love for the sanctuary of the home; to prepare ourselves through study to resist the evils of the world and to become active agents for good; to promote social purity; to cooperate with the church in the moral education of our children; to lend a helping hand to erring ones, and do all in our power to win them to righteousness."

I am quoting from the new constitution that is to come before you at a later time. I do not know who wrote these words, but I do know that they are well written, and express the purpose of our organization as it is.

The time seems to have arrived to take some definite steps in regard to the study work that has been done, and is being done at the present time. Up to the present time each local has been a law unto itself and has arranged its own study work. This, in my opinion, is one of the reasons why we have not made more progress than we have.

The small lesson leaves provided by the home and child welfare department have been ever so good, but they are not enough to hold the interest and keep the organization together, if that is all they have as a program. It might be enough for a small circle who could meet together with very little expense or trouble, but it does not meet the needs of a city organization whose members must spend from thirty to forty-five minutes on the cars, and draw on their purses as well, in order to attend the meeting. I have watched our audiences, and weighed the matter over in my mind, and the only possible conclusion I have been able to reach is this one: If you want a good attendance and good interest, you must have good programs of varied character; and at that you do not always get the desired results.

An objection to the lesson leaf is that it is too much "cut and dried" too well prepared. It does not give the mothers any initiative themselves. For instance, they attend the meeting; the lesson leaves are passed, and the study begins. They have had no way of knowing what the lesson is about, no chance to make outside study or preparation. Next week they may think of something they would like to say about it, but it is too late then. If the program were one of talks and papers the mothers who must make these talks or write these papers must do a great deal of research work, and real deep thinking in order to fill creditably their part of the program. Papers and talks provide means of developing power among our women; it gives them the ability to express themselves—an accomplishment not easy to acquire. Besides, it develops leaders among us, and we are in need of women who can take the lead in this work and push it along faster than it has been pushed.

The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service in all its six different departments centers around one special thing or place. The home and child welfare department centers around this place; the literary and educational department centers here also; the eugenics department has its beginning here; the home economics department has its interest here; the sewing and aid department would not be needed were it not for this place, and the young women's department exists because it is here. What do we call it? Why, the home, of course. All our Woman's Auxiliary work has the home for its reason for existing. Now when we think of the home, just what is our thought? Do we think of a beautiful residence? Do we think of a place where we all can do as we please? Do we think of a boarding and lodging house? a place where we merely eat and sleep? Or, just what is our thought? If it is none of these things, then what is it? Just what does the word home stand for among us, and what is its purpose?

I wish I could give you the vision of the home that I have in my own mind. A home of modest means, well-regulated by a good woman's hand, that place of holiness where, tucked away between dusty city bricks, there is a bit of heaven and a chance for development found nowhere else in the world! Spurgeon tells us that "home is the grandest of all institutions." Another writer says that "one hundred men make an encampment, but it takes just one woman to make a home," and it is a woman, and only a woman, who, all by herself if she chooses, without the help of man, can turn a house into a home. "Home is the resort of love, of joy, of peace and plenty; where supporting and supported, polished friends and dear relations, mingle into bliss." Another writer says "the strength of a nation, especially of a republican nation, is in the intelligent and well-ordered homes of its people."

If this is our thought of the home, let us analyze its purpose for a few minutes. The purpose of the home is to maintain the efficiency of body, mind and soul of the man and woman of to-day, that they may live happy, useful lives in the service of God and man, and to prepare for similar efficiency the man and woman of to-morrow. You notice I say

"body, mind and soul." Yes, it takes the development of all three of these to make a well-rounded, Godlike character.

The home must care for the body by providing it with the proper nourishment and clothing and exercise, that it may come to its highest physical efficiency; it must provide for the mind, that opportunity for development which leads to the highest culture attainable to man; and for the soul, that training to right habits of thought and living, strength of will and self-control, and love which expresses itself in service to others, which marks the true child of God. "A home is no home at all unless it contains food and fire for the mind as well as for the body," and likewise it must also provide food and fire for the soul, since it is the first and most important school of religion: the Lord's ark, the place of salvation for the children of the race. Again Spurgeon says, "when a home is ruled according to God's word, angels might be asked to stay the night with us, and not find themselves out of their element!"

All those in the home help in the development of its members, but the ideals will not be very high, the will power very strong, or the efficiency of the highest, if the mother in that home fails to sense her responsibilities and her opportunities. The greatest men of our nation have paid their tributes to the women who, amid many duties, trained not only the body and mind, but reached down and cultivated the soul as well. It was Abraham Lincoln, our greatest American, who was often heard to say, "All that I am, or ever hope to be, I owe to my angel mother—blessings on her memory!" Is it because our children are failing to get this training in their homes, that we are forced to take up this work in organizations in order to better the conditions about us at this time?

Now you will want me to tell you how the church and the state can help us to solve this problem. We have the home here, surrounded by the church and its influence, though I could not say that the church influence reaches every home alike, by any means, because it does not, but the church wields a mighty influence in the lives of the people. Its influence is larger, deeper, purer than many of us realize, because it is different from anything else in the world, since the Holy Spirit is its abiding comforter in every hour of need.

We have two institutions in our church from which we might reasonably expect to draw help and counsel in our work. I refer to the church Sanitarium here in Independence, and Grace-land College in Lamoni. I asked the heads of these institutions just what they could do to help the mother, and I was met with a hearty response along lines I wished. The women of the church may feel that these institutions, and the men who control their interests, are behind the auxiliary in its work, and ready to give every help and suggestion possible to them.

Many of us know that the State of Missouri, and the United States Government, issue bulletins that are full of splendid information. Some of these we have read, although our opportunity has not been far-reaching in this direction. The Missouri University kindly mailed me copies of bulletins on such subjects as the following: Resuscitation; water, the prevention of its pollution; the prevention of malaria; prevention of typhoid; the relation of sight and hearing to early school life; the prevention of contagious diseases in school children.

The United States Department of Agriculture sent these on foods: farmers' bulletins, numbers 142, 375, 391, 85, 128, 256, 121, 295, 249, 298, 389, 98, 293, 323, 255, 154, 218.

From the Bureau of Education, on education for the home, I got these: Part 1, number 31, 1914; whole number 610 reading course for girls; reading course for boys.

From the United States Department of Labor a splendid book on infant care by Mrs. Max West; care of children, series number 2; Bureau publication number 8.

In closing I want to say a few words about the auxiliary work in general. It may seem a little severe, but I feel that it must find expression at the close of this talk. I know of no words to express the situation at this time except these two: contented ignorance. The contented ignorance of some of our people is astounding! I know of no other place where the banner of education has been so trailed in the dust as in some of the speeches made upon the floor of this General Conference, and I want to urge the women of this auxiliary to get into the proper frame of mind, the proper adjustment with the better spirit and line themselves up with the heads of the church on this educational question, as well as other good lines they may advance. The president of this church is anxious to use the women in his work and this is the place we must occupy if we want a part in the redemption of Zion.

Reading and Real Wisdom

Of John H. Clarke, nominated by President Wilson to succeed Judge Hughes on the bench of the supreme court of the United States, it is written: "He is a bachelor, and has devoted most of the leisure hours of his life to reading." This is an earnest that he has a mind well stored with useful knowledge, as well as a complete grasp of the more elegant things that are set down in print these days. "Reading maketh a full man," now as ever, and no man who is not widely and deeply read may lay claim to that scope of understanding, profundity of knowledge and soundness of judgment essential to determining the right. But is this a sure precursor of wisdom? "Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers," says the poet, "and he bears a laden breast, full of sad experience." Knowledge may be gained through reading; it consists of learning and often takes the form of an unwieldy and sometimes uncorrelated mass of information. Wisdom is not gained by studious application alone. It comes through experience gained by daily association with the world. The sage must know not only the books in his library, but the ways of man as well. He must read the book that is not printed on a press, and understand it, too, or he has not attained to real wisdom. The judge may be learned in the law, "full of wise saws and ancient precedents," but he must also have the human quality that cannot be acquired in the study, or he will lack something. For the law is coming to partake of humanity, and will more and more be tinctured by the flavor of man's relations to man, and less of abstract theory, until "sweet reasonableness" is established in all its gentle sway. It is not enough to have spent leisure hours in reading, for "the proper study of mankind is man."—Omaha Bee.

Letter Department

Unveiling of Mausoleum of President Joseph Smith

On Tuesday, July 18, was unveiled at Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, Missouri, the mausoleum containing the remains of President Joseph Smith. The body had been removed from its temporary place of interment, in the Hulmes family vault, the old casket being substituted by a bronze casket, which was deposited in the new sarcophagus during the latter part of the preceding week.

The exercises were held at 3 o'clock p. m. A company of about one hundred Saints were present from Independence, Kansas City, Lamoni and other points.

Hymn number 206, "Brother Joseph's" composition, was sung; Brother F. M. Sheehy offered prayer. Brother W. W. Smith delivered the address. He outlined the work of President Smith covering the period of fifty-two years of his administration as president of the church. It has been said that he who needs a monument ought not to have one, and one who is worthy does not need one. He needed no monument to call attention to his work; his private life and public service, culminating in the excellence of his character was his monument. But it seemed fitting that his last resting place should be made a mark of appreciation upon the part of a loving people who treasured his service to mankind. His memory was like the fragrance of a long-departed flower, the perfect richness of its perfume is not fully appreciated until the flower has faded and disappeared. So perverse is human nature that most of the flowers are placed upon the grave of departed ones. Not so in the case of this great and good man; he lived to enjoy an unusual degree of acknowledgment from his comrades and colaborers. It must be a source of satisfaction to his family and his many friends that he was loved and revered and manifestations of appreciation shown him while he yet lived.

When the mausoleum was unveiled it would reveal massiveness, simplicity, grandeur in its proportions and its straight lines, thus symbolizing the character of the man whose remains it inclosed. Sublimity was expressed in simplicity, thus exemplifying the traits of the former president and beloved shepherd of the people. The speaker recited the usual dates of birth and death, stating that his environment during his life was that of the church over which he was called to preside. His life and character constituted one of the highest recommendations of the philosophy and religion he taught and practiced.

The speaker pointed to the flower-strewn grave of Sister Ada Smith, wife of the president. He paid a just tribute to her memory as one who had cared for him and whose faithful service had made possible much of the work of his later years. She was a woman of sterling worth, loved by the people who sincerely mourned her departure from earth life. In due time a suitable stone would mark her resting place.

Bishop M. H. Siegfried briefly recited the history of the erection of the mausoleum. The need of a suitable tomb had been considered by the family and friends. Consultation had been with President F. M. Smith and the idea conceived of taking up with the ladies comprising the Laurel Club, of Independence, the raising of the necessary funds. The project was presented to Mrs. J. R. Sturgis, president of the club, who with the club membership, had entered actively into the project and it was to the sisters of the club and other contributors that all concerned were indebted. The result was realized in the sarcophagus as unveiled. In behalf of the sisters of the Laurel Club, the authorities of the cemetery, and the people who contributed, he was pleased to present to the Presiding Bishop, Brother B. R. McGuire, the deed to this property, that it might be held in trust for all the people for whom President Joseph Smith gave his life and service, that all should see to it that the grounds and the monument were preserved, that all might remember that he rested in proper and secure surroundings and was suitably at rest. Bishop McGuire accepted the deed in behalf of the people. He expressed thanks to the givers who made the gift possible. To him it was a suitable time for all present to labor as did President Smith and others with him to bring to the people the saving knowledge that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, and to assist in developing the Zion of God.

Brother F. M. Sheehy then dismissed the assembly with the benediction.

The mausoleum is of Barre granite. The base is 10.9 feet, the main section containing the inscription 8.3; at the top 8.875. The end measures 6.2 at the base, 3.8 at place of inscription, 4.2 at the top. On each side is the name "Joseph Smith," between two laurel wreaths. At one end are the words, "Born at Kirtland, Ohio, November 6, 1832; Died at Independence, Missouri, December 10, 1914"; at the other end, "President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, April 6, 1860 to December 10, 1914."

The mausoleum proper weighs about sixteen tons. The upper block containing the remains is a solid block with hewn space containing the casket, with small screened ventilating spaces at the ends.

Thus rests the mortal remains of President Joseph Smith.
R. S. SALYARDS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 19, 1916.

Yesterday and To-morrow in the Kansas City Stake

While riding on a car the other day, I was thinking of the spiritual uplift that has come to Central Church and all of the smaller branches, in the organization of the new Kansas City Stake.

Before my vision there flashed a beautiful building, which in time would be the finished work of the stake. There came to my understanding this message: For many years we have been working on the foundation of this structure, building it up a little at a time, sometimes wisely and sometimes unwisely, tearing out and rebuilding again when the work was not good. It seems a long time to have worked on this foundation, but it has been long because we have allowed so many other things to interfere, and have forgotten so many times that we were all working on the same great structure, and we failed to build together solidly as we should.

At last, after many years of work and many mistakes, the foundation of the building has been pronounced good, and is declared finished, and the master of all good workmen, our Father, planned the next step of our work. The more difficult the work, the more efficient the workmen should be. Men who could build a foundation might know but little about the construction of the building itself. Many of those in training on the foundation might become efficient workmen, and in the new stake organization we see the efficient of each branch called out and put to work as we lay the corner stone of this great structure. We find our new stake president, general manager of all construction work, and in his counselors the foremen on the building, the twelve high priests will be the superintendents of the different departments of the work, while the various auxiliaries continually furnish new material from which to mold more workmen.

So the great corner stone of the beautiful building was laid in the organization of the stake with much solemnity and consecration. A feeling of oneness and harmony prevailed, showing that the spirit of the Master hovered over us like a cloud, causing many to renew their covenant with the Lord and to express their confidence in the new stake officials, also their willingness to work in harmony with them. Oh, thou Spirit of the Master, all is peace when you enter in, the cares and worries of life fade away, and life seems real, earnest, and worth while.

As we of the stake enter in on our work of building this great structure, all of us must find our definite place in the work, and take our place among the workers on the building. There will be beautiful stone in the front of the building, and plain brick in the sides, and in the rear, there will be highly polished seasoned wood in the interior, and plain pine boards in the basement and storeroom. There will be costly stained glass as well as the ordinary panes, and hardware, plumbing, and lights, and we must not forget the very little things like nails, that small though they are, bind the entire structure together as nothing else can.

We may not be the beautiful stones in the face of the building, or the polished wood in the interior, but we can fill our place, unimportant though it may seem, with tact and graciousness, keeping in mind the work higher up, and by constant study fit ourselves for that work. It is possible that this building may be constructed in less time than it has taken to do the work on the foundation, if as a stake we remember that we are all working on one grand structure, and as workmen are coworkers together with God.

LULA M. SANDY.

Special Call for Literature

Dear Saints, in the beginning of the work in this great city we have come in contact with a special need, and while that is not to be thought strange, yet the all-important thing is to find a means to supply the need. It is this: In the beginning of some very interesting street work we found ourselves deluged with a throng of eager, hungering children, with faces upturned and hands outstretched for food, not natural food, but the kind of spiritual food adapted to the needs of the child spirit, as important as natural food adapted to the physical needs of the child.

In this great city there are hundreds of thousands of children who are confined to the street, with no other playground, and little refining influence. I can get in touch with one hundred thousand of these children within an attending distance of our little church. I have some workers that I know will do effective work with them if we can devise the means to do it effectually. I am going to ask that everyone who has Stepping Stones, and Hopes lying around to please send them to me for a special work with the children.

I am greatly impressed with the need of working for the young minds in this city, and any literature that deals with the gospel in story form interesting to children, I can use, and use to an unlimited quantity.

Saints of the East especially take notice. Saints of the world do not let valuable matter for children lie around your Sunday school rooms and homes doing no good; send them to me, and help in what I am sure will be a very fruitful work. Two million children live, not to the "third and fourth" story, but even to the fiftieth story, in such environments and under such restrictions as to need some help spiritually.

Will you help me feed a few of them? Send all matter to 1312 Park Place.

Yours hastily,

WARD L. CHRISTY.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, 1312 Park Place.

SANDUSKY, MICHIGAN, July 9, 1916.

ELBERT SMITH,

Dear Brother: I will write a few lines addressed personally to you for a twofold purpose. First, I feel I would like to speak an encouraging word to you that may help to comfort along the uneven journey of life. I realize that you are strong and I am very, very weak, but I feel that we all have discouragements, and that it is our duty to help cheer each other on our way.

It has been less than two years since I first heard there was such a church on the face of the globe. After thorough investigation I united with the church and have received great spiritual blessings many times.

I have been reading the HERALD since May. It has done me great good. I wouldn't give it up for anything. I read the articles on tobacco and thought they were fine, but was shocked at our brother's letter in the HERALD of June 21. I was a tobacco user myself when I repented and started living a pure life nine months before I heard of the Saints, and God took the taste of tobacco away from me and I am truly glad. I do not have any desire to spend a cent of money for unnecessary things in this life when it is needed so badly to spread the gospel.

Pray for me that I shall always be willing to submit myself to the will of our heavenly Father, and all that I have to the upbuilding of the kingdom of God's dear son.

Your brother in the faith,

GUY E. MOSES.

Another Call for Literature

As a missionary in a city I am in a position to use a large amount of the right kind of literature, such as books, tracts, HERALDS, Ensigns, and Autumn Leaves. Saints having such literature on hand and desiring to make good use of it may help the work along by sending same to address below. Literature should be as new as possible and in good condition. Parcel post shipments preferred. Cooperatively yours,

A. E. WARR.

MOBILE, ALABAMA, 352 Chatham Street.

LEVERING, MICHIGAN, July 14, 1916.

Editors Herald: I left the Soo a little before Christmas as I have gotten work here at Cecil, and then through the Glad Tidings (which was delayed) I found that Levering had a petition in at the Northern Michigan conference for a branch, so I resolved there must be Saints here.

The Sunday after New Year's, I walked to Levering to find out, and I have found a band mostly composed of women, yet alive to the work. This spring we fixed up a place of worship which was given us by Mr. George Wilson (now brother), up over his garage.

I attended the June conference at Alpena, which was very successful, the Spirit dwelling through both convention and conference.

Then Elder A. R. Ellis came with us to Levering and did some work for the Master. Preached for two weeks and the result was fourteen baptisms. In that number was Brother Wilson. We were glad to see him enter the water. Brother Roy D. Kleckler, priest, is our branch president. I am working here in the stove mill. My address is Cecil.

Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may be ever found steadfast and pressing onward and upward in the Master's work. I am,

Your brother in faith,

JOHN F. WEINER.

DAVENPORT, IOWA, June 17, 1916.

Editors Herald: Since last contributing to your columns from a northern latitude, I find myself at this writing under changed conditions, after having resided in the same district for a third of a century—from March, 1883, to May, 1916. It was with mingled feelings of sadness and hopeful anticipations, that I bade a missionary's farewell to my companion, and after two days' travel, found myself in the new and untried field. I was received open-heartedly, with the characteristic hospitality and good will, of those who have truly and sincerely entered into covenant relationship with the true church of the living God. And I found here as elsewhere, that the love of God shed abroad in the hearts of regenerated men and women, breaks down the icy barriers of cold formality, reaches into the inmost recesses of man's spiritual being, and verily and truly, makes us one in Christ Jesus.

With the exception of one prayer meeting at Davenport, my public ministrations began at the district conference held at Muscatine, and while the attendance was not what it should have been for so large and populous a community, good feeling prevailed in a social way, and all the services were appreciated.

After the usual business sessions of the auxiliaries was disposed of an enjoyable program was rendered, and on Sunday bright and fair, after so many days of gloomy weather, we had good attendance, a few from east of the river, and two Sunday school scholars were immersed in the "Father of Waters" by Brother Dykes.

I stayed over two weeks, holding meetings and assisting to adjust some insignificant matters, which only called for notice at all because of the fact that they had been neglected so long that they had produced that state of raspiness, sometimes exhibited by people, otherwise possessed of good self-control.

I preached one week at Davenport, with good attendance, considering the extremely warm weather and the place of meeting, which latter consists of a basement with small windows below the level of the ground, which gives little chance for circulation of air, and the hottest place I ever was in except the stokehole of an Atlantic steamer. There is to be a branch meeting to consider steps to remedy the defect in some way. It is to be hoped the effort will be crowned with success.

The baptism of one adult and three Sunday school scholars was performed on Sunday afternoon by the branch president, and after the evening discourse by your correspondent, on the basis of the spiritual life outlined in Romans, the confirmation took place with a goodly degree of liberty and power by the three elders officiating, and witnessing to the audience that our heavenly Father does approve of receiving the "little ones" into his fold.

Some of the unpleasant outcroppings of the past I am happy to say were amicably adjusted, the ones in fault making open confession and restitution in a very manly and Christlike way, and it is the sincere wish of all that there is a bright future in store for Davenport Branch, in every way, including a nice, finished church building, filled to its full capacity with happy worshipers.

I wish to say to all concerned, it is my earnest desire to be of service to all the district, so you may freely communicate with me at your leisure. I go from here to Clinton, and to those whom I may not be able to visit for some time, we hope to see a good attendance at the Fulton conference, which will be held October 14 and 15.

Brethren of the ministry especially, let us wake up to the necessities of the situation, meet and confer together as men that have an important mission in life and seek the best means to accomplish it.

WILLIAM SPARLING.

1225 Nicholas Avenue.

CRESTON, IOWA, July 17, 1916.

Editors Herald: By the passing up along the shining way of Elder Joseph Roberts, bishop of the Lamoni Stake, the church below suffers the loss of a faithful, upright laborer in the glorious cause of Christ.

Brought up from childhood acquainted with the gospel, he was prepared for the work he so faithfully did, continuing therein to the end.

A willing, arduous laborer has gone to his rest, after the years of anxious toil; and which, because for the advancement of the Savior's cause, he did with great pleasure.

His labors as bishop were those of mercy and increasing tenderness. A man of courage and good will to all. He was a man of strict integrity, whose highest incentive was the advancement of the Master's cause and the welfare of his children.

A noble life, a noble, a divine calling, a noble purpose, and let us rejoice in his work and emulate his example as an humble-spirited follower of the Christ.

Humbly his and your brother,

COLUMBUS SCOTT.

ALBIN, WYOMING, July 17, 1916.

Editors Herald: The work of the Master still prospers in these parts. The Knisley-O'Neal debate is a matter of history. Saturday evening was the "time of the end." The hopes of the Christians, so-called, were blighted. The debate was gotten up by them to gain back some of their number who had left them and joined our church, and break down our influence in the neighborhood of Bushnell, Nebraska, where the debate was held.

The Lord, in answer to the Saints' prayer, stood by Brother Knisley in a marked degree in defense of the truth, so much so that others besides the Saints could see it, and remarked that the Lord was surely with him. Some began to show their sympathy for the Saints, and their pastor, the Presbyterian minister, went to their homes and plead in tears for them to have nothing to do with us—all to no effect. Then the Christian minister tried his powers on them, with no better success. They are coming our way. One has promised to join, others want to "investigate further." The Saints are all rejoicing over the triumph.

I go now to Ewing, Wyoming, which will be my field address hereafter.

Yours in the faith,

J. M. STUBBART.

WARNER, ALBERTA, July 18, 1916.

Editors Herald: For some time I have thought of relating an experience that occurred during my illness in March, as many of the readers of the HERALD are aware that I passed through a very severe spell of sickness this last spring. About the twelfth day after being bedfast the doctor stated that I could not live (though he came only once to make an examination of my lungs) and that I had a severe case of tuberculosis. I sent for Elder Isaac McMullen, of Calgary. He came and administered to me three times. Seemingly no relief came, but as he left me that morning at three o'clock to make a drive of forty-eight miles to catch a train home, he told me that I would receive a blessing.

At about ten o'clock that morning I seemed to be weaker than at any time previous. My fever was very high, my left lung was very much inflamed, the pain was severe, and while the fever was high, my feet were cold and it seemed as though I could feel the cold traveling up my limbs. I looked at my hand. My finger nails were blue and I thought, Is death coming at this moment?

Brother and Sister Fay were in the adjoining room, and just a moment before had looked through the door to see how I was, and thought I was dying. While in that condition I thought of some promises that had been made to me through the gift of prophecy by the Spirit of God, in years gone by, especially one given through Brother Alexander Smith, and I said, Lord, I am not ready to go.

At this juncture I was lost to my surroundings for a little time; I don't know how long. The first thing I remember was, I saw the roof of the house was opened, I could see the blue sky, and I saw two personages ascending from my room. They were about as high as the roof of the house when I saw them, and I asked, "Can you do nothing for me?" The one on the left turned and smiled, extending his hand towards me and the vision disappeared.

The fever left me at once and the pain in my lungs left at the same time. I spoke right out, saying as much. Sister Fay came to the door of my room and said, "He's a different looking man." From that time I began to grow stronger, my appetite returned and I had no more fever or pain. I think it was in less than two weeks I baptized four very fine people.

I was at the home of Brother Fay while sick. They did all that kind hands could do for me. Also I will mention Brother and Sister Wink, who sacrificed a great deal to care for me, Brother Wink with his means, and Sister Wink coming and staying at Brother Fay's place to care for me. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, and Mr. and Mrs. Bulman, of Warner, did all that kind hands could do to assist me through my sickness, both with money and with the prayer of faith. I had the pleasure of introducing Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Bryant, Mrs. Johnson's mother and Mrs. Bulman into the kingdom of God, and it was truly a day of rejoicing. The Spirit of the Lord was poured out in great measure. A branch was organized that day by district president, William Osler. We do not wish to forget Brother Duncan and William Calder who also were so kind to me during my sickness. Permit me to thank all for their kindness through your columns, and may the good Lord bless them for their kindness to me is my prayer.

I received a very encouraging letter from the secretary of the Quorum of Twelve in which he stated that they stopped a session of business and held a season of prayer in my behalf. I am sure the Lord heard them as well as others who were praying to our heavenly Father in my behalf. I kindly thank them all for their kind remembrance of me. To God be all the honor and glory through Jesus Christ our loving Savior. I am now twenty-five pounds heavier than before I was taken sick.

At the time I was sick they telegraphed for Sister Bootman who was in Kansas City, having just recovered from a very severe operation. I was past the crisis and on the way to recovery when she arrived, but she was able to relieve others of the burden of caring for me and remained with me until we returned home.

At this writing I am domiciled at the home of Brother Johnson. If weather is permissible, day after to-morrow we trouble the water, one more honest soul leaving the world for Christ's sake. Thus one by one the good pieces of material are laid in the house of God.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may have sufficient strength to accomplish all the Master has for me to do. It might be of interest to state that I have a debate scheduled with a representative of the nonprogressive Campbellite, E. M. Bourden, to take place the fore part of November, at Woodside, Montana,

Very sincerely in gospel bonds,

W. P. BOOTMAN.

SALINAS, CALIFORNIA, July 20, 1916.

Editors Herald: We have located here in Salinas and would like to know if there are any of our church members here or in Spreckels, which is a beet-sugar factory town of several hundred people. I should like to find them that we might meet together and study our Sunday school and Religio lessons, and become acquainted.

214 Harvest Street.

Yours in faith,
MRS. FLORENCE McDONALD.

HERSCHEL, SASKATCHEWAN, July 20, 1916.

Editors Herald: Although this is my first letter to your columns, I am none the less appreciative of the letters that we read therein. We came here some five years ago when the town was but a year old. Time has not increased its population to any great extent, but as it is surrounded by nearly five hundred square miles of good wheat and flax growing land, farmers find it to their interest to give it their support. There are three large elevators here that have been shipping grain as fast as the railroads could furnish cars, since last fall. One farmer tells me he has seventy-five thousand bushels of grain yet to ship and with his teams can only haul about forty thousand bushels, leaving thirty-five thousand bushels to hire drawn. This costs him five cents a bushel. Prospects here this year, are as good if not better than last.

The Orangemen celebrated here July 12. We few Saints endeavored to serve dinner and supper, but owing to unforeseen delays could not get dinner in time. At supper hour the crowd passed on to the hotel, but still trusting God, we were presently rewarded by seeing so many of them turn back and enter into our door that we could scarcely accommodate them. We realized about fifty dollars, part of which we used for the rent of our church building, and part in fitting it up for a place of worship. We still have a small surplus on hand.

We certainly feel that we have much to thank God for, and although we are isolated to a great extent we know if we are faithful we will soon be permitted to gather to Zion.

The elders have been here to preach several times. Some have acknowledged the gospel is true, but for unknown reasons have failed to unite with us. We would be glad to have an elder come here to preach any time now, as we have things more in readiness than ever before.

Ever praying for the advancement of the gospel of Christ,
I remain,
H. A. MARTIN.

BUTLER, MISSOURI, July 22, 1916.

Editors Herald: After the adjournment of the district conference which was held at Eldorado Springs, June 15 to 17, I went to Nevada, Missouri, to hold some meetings, and learning there were some Latter Day Saint boys with the National Guard at Camp Clark, I visited them with the idea of looking after their spiritual needs.

Upon inquiry I learned that there were several from Independence in Battery C, and later located Vere Blair in Battery B, M. H. Post, in Company C. Third Regiment, and Albert and Gomer Dempsey, of Nevada, Missouri, in the machine gun company of the Second Regiment. The following brethren were located in Battery C: Ellis Short, jr., J. I. Christie, Edward Brackenbury, Alma Burnham, Halbert Carr, C. Closson, James Dean, Frank Golding, Thomas L. Goodin, Ralph Goold, Emery A. Griswold, W. Leffler, Alma Parker, R. B. Phillips, Layland Sheen, Melvin and Guy Touseley, and Frank Tindale.

In conversation with Brother I. A. Smith, it was learned that Brother Frederick M. Smith would be down Thursday to provide for the well-being of the boys in a spiritual way. Accompanied by his daughter Alice, he arrived at 2 p. m., and a visit to the camp and explanation to the commanding officer met with his hearty approval. The boys were excused from duty and under the shade of a friendly tree listened to advice and counsel from F. M. and Israel, and the proposal to organize them into a branch met with their hearty approval. Two were pointed out for ordination, Ellis Short, jr., to the office of elder, and Vere Blair to the office of priest.

Bishop Short arrived on the night train for a last visit with his son before he departed for the border, and was spokesman in his ordination, returning to Independence on the same day.

Orders had been received for the batteries to load and move to the border the next day and we had to wait for an opportunity to get the boys together to organize them into a branch.

At 9.30 p. m., June 30, we found a quiet place back of the officers' quarters, and within a few paces of the three-inch guns the boys will use in the event of war, we organized the "Missouri Field Artillery Branch."

Ellis Short, jr., was chosen president, Vere Blair had responded to his call to duty and was ordained priest, J. I. Christie, secretary, and Edward Brackenbury, chorister. A good spirit prevailed and we felt that the Master was pleased with the work.

By recent letter from Brother Short I learn they have a Sunday school and have held one sacrament service, and though very busy he was devoting a portion of his spare time to study.

Songbooks, Quarterlies, Bibles, etc., have been supplied them and they are taking up their duties in earnest.

W. S. MACRAE.

WOODWARD, OKLAHOMA, July 15, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have been busy in Woodward and vicinity now for over a month, and while we have nothing very flattering to report, I am glad to say that we have some excellent people deeply interested in our message.

At present I am preaching in the Christian church here. We had to go through quite a system of "red tape" before we succeeded, but two of the directors of that church who had heard me preach insisted that I should have the church or there would be dissatisfaction among them. My attendance is not very large, but I am gradually making friends for the cause here. The hot weather of late militates against our work, because people are not very anxious to go to church when it is so very hot.

I am inclosing one of my handbills that I used for billing the town. We are living in an age of advertising, and it becomes necessary for us to advertise in a way that will attract and interest the public.

I expect to go farther west in a few days, already strong appeals have been made for me to come. I am busy day and night trying to help our fellow men to a better conception of life.

Yours respectfully,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Extracts from Letters

Elder D. M. Rudd writes from Cottage Hill, Florida; "The HERALD is about right. I do not even think that I could make any improvement upon it."

Elder John Sheehy, of Corea, Maine, writes on July 25: "We are having poor weather in Maine, damp and foggy all the time. Blankets are still needed on the beds. We are right on the coast. It surely is a time of excitement, warships are patrolling the coast here continually. Wars and rumors of war, still we are trying to live at peace."

[Many a sufferer from the heat in the Middle West would appreciate even the above for a change.—EDITORS.]

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.

We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

—P. J. Bailey.

News from Missions

Kirtland District

For the last three weeks I have been conducting people through the grand old Temple which was christened "The House of the Lord." On a very large tablet up high in front of this historic building are to be seen inscribed in large golden letters: "The House of the Lord. Built by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Saints, 1834." The building stands on elevated grounds and commands a grand and glorious view of the country for miles around. The visitors love to go up on top of the belfry platform from which point they have a most excellent view of Lake Erie and the magnificent scenery, namely, the mountains, hills and valleys in every direction. Here and there are dotted lovely farms and the beautiful homes of the rich. The millionaires have appreciated the grandeur of the surrounding country and have selected the beauty spots for themselves. You should see the many costly houses and other great buildings that they have built all around the Temple.

The late Mr. Sherwin, the great paint man, had a sunken garden that cost about one hundred thousand dollars. These rich men give our brethren plenty of work to do and are friendly to our people. If it were not for such men, but few of our brethren could remain here, as there are no enterprises here to give them work.

I have often wondered if our people realize that every place that our heavenly Father selected for his people to gather upon, is the finest country, or in other words, the most beautiful spots in all the world. Those of you who have been to Independence, Far West, Nauvoo, and Kirtland, [and don't forget Lamoni.—EDITORS] can testify to the truthfulness of this statement.

It has been my good pleasure through the goodness of God to travel through the Holy Land, the land of promise. I have gazed on the mount where Father Abraham stood when the Lord told him that he would give him and his seed the land of Canaan as an everlasting possession. I have also stood on other historic mountains there, where I had a grand view of the Jordan Valley (Lot's old home), the Dead Sea, Mediterranean Sea, the Sea of Galilee, and very many of the noted mountains referred to in Holy Writ, and where I stood gazing upon these old historic places and reviewing in my mind the many promises that the Lord had made to the children of Israel regarding that land, I then and there decided that so far as I was personally concerned, I preferred to have my inheritance in the land that is the choice land above all lands—America!

I truly thank God that I am living in the land that our heavenly Father has declared shall be the Zion of his people in these days.

I am reminded as I take the visitors through the Lord's house that this wonderful building was erected through great suffering, hard work and much sacrifice on the part of the Saints of eighty-two years ago. And it seems to me that we should deem it a great pleasure to keep it in good repair. It is the only temple in all the world and all Latter Day Saints should be very proud of it and be willing to help keep it in excellent appearance before God and man. It needs repairing and painting very badly at the present time. The Lord has protected it all these years. It has been on fire a number of times, and has been struck by lightning three times, to my knowledge. It is very evident that God has preserved it for the good of his covenant people in these last days, therefore, let us appreciate what he has and is doing for us.

You would be surprised and amused at some of the peculiar questions that some of the visitors propound to us. Most all that come are of the opinion that we are Utah Mormons, so you can readily see that we have ample opportunity to preach the gospel and to remove considerable prejudice from the minds of the many people that visit here. Thousands go through the Lord's house during the summer months. Many ministers, lawyers, doctors, professors, politicians, and in fact we have nearly every class of people in the world among them. Very many of them thank us for the information we give them, and especially for enlightening their minds on the difference between us and the Utah Mormons. Once in a while we run across a woman who thinks she knows it all. I find that the ladies are more prejudiced than the men, as a general rule. However, most of the visitors are good-natured and friendly with us. Last Sabbath I took about one hundred persons through the building. It is a wonderful sight to see the great number of automobiles here some days. It is proper to keep an able minister in charge of the Temple as I know from experience that he can accomplish great good if he attends to his duty.

For the information of many of the Saints who have not been privileged to visit the Temple I herewith give a few items regarding it: It is built of stone, plastered within and without, and has three stories, exclusive of the basement. Has a belfry with a large bell in it, which is about one hundred and ten feet above the ground. The visitors love to go out on top of the belfry platform and some of the fat people have quite a time of it climbing up the stairs, but they enjoy it. The house contains beautiful examples of gothic and colonial architecture, handwork, and early glass pourings. There are over thirty-five hundred panes of glass in the building. The first and second stories are auditoriums, each fifty-five by sixty-five feet on the inside, exclusive of the vestibule on the east and through which is the main entrance to the building, and in which are the two stairways. The lower room was to be dedicated for sacrament offerings, for preaching, fasting, praying, and the offering up of most holy desires unto the Lord. The second room was dedicated for the school of the prophets or apostles. In each of these rooms are eight pulpits, four in each end; those in the west end for the Melchisedec priesthood, and the east end for the Aaronic priesthood. The walls are about two feet thick. The outside of the building is fifty-nine by seventy-nine feet. The third story is divided into a number of small quorum or committee rooms.

The Temple is a great and wonderful building and we very often hear the people express themselves as follows, as they are gazing upon the pictures of the three prophets, "They are fine-looking men, and they had brains, too." "I tell you that young man is nice-looking, and what an intelligent face he possesses." Now you can guess who the young man is. They also say, "I am glad I came to see this great and wonderful building." It is a wonderful house, and let us thank God for it.

Yours in gospel bonds,

KIRTLAND, OHIO, July 16, 1916. GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

News from Branches

Andes, Montana

Our branch here is doing nicely and the attendance is good in spite of the busy season. Quite a number of the Saints attended the Logan, North Dakota, reunion, several going with automobiles, two hundred miles overland.

We have the lumber on the church ground for a large shed, which will be built as soon as there is a lull in the work. We have our little church, of which we are quite proud, and we hope to finish it inside soon. We have a good Sunday school of eight classes, with Brother Mark Hutchinson as superintendent.

The recent election of officers in the branch resulted as follows: President, Eli Bronson; priest, G. W. Anderson; teacher, M. C. Hutchinson; deacon, Vere Davis. The conference held here in June was well attended and a good spirit prevailed.

The rain July 16 made the Sunday school attendance very small and no preaching at the morning service, Elder J. C. Page occupying in the evening with one of his "short and to the point" sermons, which was enjoyed by all.

FLORENCE ANDES.

Independence Stake

According to the Independence Examiner of July 19, this city is growing in population rapidly. The Bell Telephone directory shows ninety more subscribers than when the last one was used four months ago. Of these, seventy-five are new families.

The spirit of patriotism so clearly expressed by the brethren of late through the HERALD columns, (see Brother Arthur McKim's letter, also voiced in the sermon of A. H. Parsons in our twilight service of July 16,) was particularly noted in the excellent reading of Sister Anderson and in the very eloquent Fourth of July speech of Apostle F. M. Sheehy at the picnic which was attended by quite a number of Saints on Enoch Hill.

Brother McKim's fine ability as a writer also has quite recently been recognized by the Scribner Company as worthy of a first prize in a late literary effort, and the Saints here rejoice to witness such an army of young men and women being raised up to fill important places in the church, as instructors and helpers in the new movement.

We can but look with pride at the Juntos and Bereans of the Religio, with their leaders, the Sunday school workers, and the clubs and the classes, and the young musicians with the talented soloist, all of whom are stepping out and occupying where there is need of service. In church service we have lately been pleased to listen to the sweet voices that have graced the choir for several years, and they are always restful and uplifting to the Saints. We mention among those who are talented soloists and who are still working with us, Sisters Myra Brackenbury and Carrie Barbee, and Brethren Resch and Custead. At the lawn service on the 16th we had the pleasure of hearing again, as of yore, a lovely solo by our gifted sister, Mrs. Edith N. Colyer.

Last Sunday, the 23d, there was the early prayer meeting as usual, and the older ones were present; but next Sunday we are expecting their number will be diminished and the younger people will take their places. All this, because of a special invitation given out last Sunday evening by President W. W. Smith.

Our brother preached at the morning service another sermon, bristling with forcefulness and spiritual power, while with all the energy of a mind trained by study and deep observation, he sought to impress upon our souls the necessity of a life, righteous, pure, and Godlike. For a text Brother Smith reiterated the cry of the ancient man of God, "Awake, put on thy beautiful garments, O Zion!"

The early evening sermon on the church lawn was a calm, dispassionate setting forth of our duties and obligations as true Latter Day Saints. Brother Paul Craig stood upon his pedestal like a young Emerson pouring forth in epigrammatic periods the truths of a pure, well-seasoned philosophy. After the discourse was finished, and the shades of twilight gathered, the Saints, with joyous greetings and many an expression of commendation for the preacher's words of chastening, reproof and instruction, separated for their homes.

A fine word view of the McCune Home for Boys was presented, as a lecture, by Professor Taylor, superintendent, in the afternoon. President F. M. Smith and President W. W. Smith were present, also a good sized audience of both men and women.

The Saints were delighted with the apparent success of the institution as a means of bringing comfort, excellent instruction and moral development to many otherwise homeless boys.

Many thanks are due for the means of information provided by our brethren and our kind friend, Mr. Taylor, and for the pleasure of hearing the good news from the McCune home as one of the pleasant spots to be visited in Zion.

We are glad also to hear good tidings from the boys of Battery C at Laredo.

May God's blessing be with all.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Burlington, Iowa

We feel that progress is to be noted in the various departments of our work here. At the last branch business meeting, the branch officers were appointed as a committee, together with one from each aid society, to investigate ways and means and establishing a building fund, as our present quarters are becoming cramped, especially for the Sunday school, which reached a record attendance of 103 June 18.

The members of the two aids were entertained by Sister Sophie Lee May 31, at the log cabin built by the Hawkeye Natives at Crapo Park. An enjoyable afternoon was reported. They met together again July 5, at the home of Brother and Sister Williams, due partly to the postponement by the North Hill Aid of their regular meeting on the Fourth.

Sixteen Burlington representatives attended the conventions and conference at Farmington, Iowa, June 9, 10, and 11. The sessions were live, interesting and more enthusiastic than usual, and the reception given conference visitors by the few Saints residing there was a royal one. We were favored with three bright days in the midst of a rainy season, and all conditions seemed exceptionally good. There were three baptisms during the conference.

We enjoyed a series of meetings by Brother Elbert Smith, June 19 to 25. Rain dampened the ardor of a good many the first part of the week, but the attendance and interest increased toward the close, and the sermons were "meat and drink."

Children's Day was observed with an appropriate program during church service hour, June 18. The numbers were well rendered, and were a credit to the program committee and to the participants.

Six of our workers spent Sunday, July 9, with the Rock Creek Branch, assisting in an "Auxiliary Day" there. Brother Williams spoke in the morning, a good, forceful sermon on the necessity of "feeding the lambs," of saving to the church those growing up within its bounds, and the value of auxiliary work in this connection. In the afternoon, he spoke on the mission and function of the Nauvoo District Builders, Brother Henry Bromann, president of the Burlington local, talked on opportunities for service on Religio work, followed by a short talk on teacher-training work by the district superintendent. A literary and musical program was rendered in the evening.

Since last report, Brother and Sister McIntire have moved here from Aledo, Illinois, and placed their letters in the Burlington Branch. Brother and Sister Wilson from Peoria also have moved to Burlington within the past two or three weeks. We are glad also to have with us for the summer, Sister Blunk and her husband from near Joplin, Missouri. This is Mr. Blunk's second season on the Burlington ball team.

CORRESPONDENT.

Miscellaneous Department

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Spokane District; Greeting: Having been sustained by the Presiding Bishopric, we take this means of acquainting members with the needs of the work, and as this is an age which deals with facts and figures, we desire to present a few for your consideration.

Our district comprises the following counties: Stevens, Chelan, Lincoln, Adams, Walla Walla, Garfield, Yakima, Ferry, Douglas, Spokane, Franklin, Asotin, Okanogan, Grant, Whitman, Kittitas, Columbia, Benton, and Klickitat in Washington, and in Idaho, Kootenai, Clearwater, Bonner, Shoshone, Latah, Lewis, and Nez Perce. The district records show a membership of 506. We are called upon to supply $118 a month, $1,416 a year. Up to the present month we have paid this in full, this year.

We are aware of the fact that each and every one of us is called into partnership with God and Christ in their great work—the salvation of the world. We are all to be collaborators in this project, but do we stop to consider the magnitude and importance of it and that we will have to render an accounting of the efforts we have put forth for its salvation?

Saints, keep these facts before you; meditate upon them, digest them thoroughly, and in the light of God's recorded word to us, let us arise to our duty, impart of our substance for the progress of the work, loosen the hands of God's servants, the missionaries, and we will have a brighter and better year in our district than we have recently known.

There are many whose names are not yet recorded on our books, and we would like to see every name there. If more convenient you may pay tithes and offerings to any of the following collectors: Oliver Turnbull, Sagle; J. O. Hower, Gibbs; J. E. Turnbow, Palouse; P. F. Klaus, Figgord; J. H. VanEaton, Leahy; D. S. McDale, Okanogan; Joseph Wilson, Valley.

All amounts will be promptly receipted for, be they large or small. Let us manifest our faith by our works, and leave the result with our heavenly Father.

Your servant for Christ,

W. W. FORDHAM, Bishop's Agent.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, South 238 Haven St. July 25, 1916.

Conference Minutes

EASTERN MICHIGAN.—At Port Huron, July 1 and 2, J. F. Curtis, associated with William Grice and William Davis, district presidents, presiding. Gained by baptism in 8 months, 128. Twenty-four branches of the 29 in the district reported. Organization of new branch at Orion was ordered. Election of officers resulted as follows: William Grice, president; William Davis, vice president; W. J. Rushton, secretary. Conference ratified choice of Lizzie Plato as chorister. Sandusky was chosen as place for next conference. Time of next reunion was left to missionary in charge. Street preaching was an important feature of the conference. There was a division made of the Michigan quorum of elders. The Northern, Western and Central Districts make up one quorum, with A. N. White as president. Eastern and Southern Districts were made into another, with Walter Bennett as president, the quorums to be known as the Northern and Southern District quorums. The Woman's Auxiliary elected Lizzie Plato as president; Sister John Grice, vice president; Nettie Gault, secretary. The conference was greatly enjoyed by all who attended. H. L. MacPherson, J. R. Grice, press committee.

SASKATCHEWAN.—At Viceroy, July 15, 16, and 17, in charge of T. J. Jordan, J. Dobson, and W. J. Cornish, district presigency. Officers reelected: President, T. J. Jordan; first vice president, J. Dobson; second vice president, W. J. Cornish; secretary, Bertha Cornish; treasurer, J. Dobson; librarian, W. E. Dorr; J. Dobson sustained as bishop's agent. Branches reporting: Senlac 20; Rabbit Foot Lake 30; Disley 46; Weyburn 46; Artland 70; Iowa 76; Sunnyvale 76; Minnesota 106. Ten were baptized. Truly it was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Sister Daniel Macgregor and Sister Carl E. Diggle conducted a women's meeting. A priesthood meeting was held. Adjourned to meet in July, 1917. Bertha Cornish, secretary, Senlac, Saskatchewan.

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of the Far West District: Through ill health I have been obliged to take a rest and try to prepare for my work among you, and will soon be able to take up the work as I so much desire.

I expect to be with you at your reunion, and will meet many of the Saints of the district there, and trust we may have a spiritual and profitable time together, and feel sure of this if we assemble together with hearts prepared for the Master's blessing.

I trust the Saints will not forget their obligations to the Lord in a financial way; and pay your tithes and consecrations to your agent, Brother Charles Faul, until other notice is given through the SAINTS' HERALD.

I am sorry there has been a delay in my reaching you, but we cannot always carry out our plans as we wish, but will do the best possible as opportunity permits.

Sincerely, your brother,
RICHARD BULLARD.

Convention Notice

Southern Nebraska Sunday school, at Lincoln, Nebraska, August 11. Henrietta Keller, secretary, Eustis, Nebraska.

Reunion Notices

Central Oklahoma, at Reeding, August 18 to 27. A beautiful grove has been secured, one mile from town. Meals served at boarding tent on grounds. Tents can be had by writing to H. K. Rowland, Piedmont, Oklahoma. All orders should be in his hands not later than August 10. Tents at following prices: 10 by 12, $2.50; 12 by 14, $3. There will be good speakers and good singing. Sunday school work in charge of F. W. Kueffer. Bring along your Hymnals and Zion's Praises. Come, and bring the Spirit of the Master with you. Sunday school convention on August 25. Conference 26th; election of officers. Invitation is extended to Saints of the Western District also to join us. Joseph Arber, district president.

Northwestern Missouri, at Stewartville, Missouri, August 18 to 27, in B. J. Dice's beautiful grove. Prices of tents: 10 by 12, 3-foot wall, $2; 12 by 14, 3-foot wall, $2.50; 12 by 16, 6-foot wall, $3.50. Cots furnished at reasonable costs. Straw free. Meals furnished at reasonable price. Do not expect the committee to furnish bedding, but bring it along. The committee will continue to help the reunion to be a success. We ask those attending, to assist, B. J. Dice, president; Charles P. Faul, secretary.

Southern Wisconsin, at Monona Park, Madison, August 25 to September 3. Meals at dining hall 15 cents, children under 8 years half price, transients, 20 cents. Tents are a little higher in price this year, but we will try to keep the rates as close as possible to those of other years. We can furnish either wall or cottage tents 10 by 12, at $2.25; wall, 12 by 14, or cottage, 10 by 15, at $2.75; cottage, 12 by 19, at $3.50; also 14 by 21, at $4. We recommend wall tents in preference to cottage tents. Double springs, 50 cents, straw for ticks, 10 cents. Have orders for tents in by August 20 if possible. Address the undersigned at Evansville, or, Ervin L. Lenox, Soldiers Grove, R. F. D. In addition to the district force, we expect as speakers, J. F. Curtis, J. O. Dutton, F. F. Wipper, and possibly others. B. C. Flint, press committee.

Lamoni Stake, stake reunion grounds adjoining the city of Lamoni, August 18 to 27. Plenty of shade and good, cool water. Saints of other districts invited. Good speakers, good social meetings, good auxiliary programs, good music—everything good. Tents: Low wall: 10 by 12, $2; 12 by 14, $2.50; 14 by 16, $4; high wall: 12 by 12, 2 rooms, $4; 14 by 14, 3 rooms, $5. Other tents will be furnished and prices quoted, on application in person or by letter. Order at once to insure satisfaction. Tent orders will be sent in August 10 to 12; later orders will be sent subject to possible delay. Address R. J. Lambert, chairman tent committee, Lamoni, Iowa. Single meals at dining tent, 25 cents; 10-meal ticket, $2; 21-meal ticket, $3.50. J. F. Garver, chairman.

Two-Day Meetings

At Iosco Branch, August 12 and 13. All coming by train will be met at Marks with teams. At Glover, August 19 and 20. At Houghton Lake, August 26 and 27. At Saginaw, September 2 and 3, in hall on South Hamilton Street, two blocks south of Court Street. George W. Burt, president, Beaverton, Michigan.

Addresses

Bishop C. J. Hunt, 1026 West Waldo Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

W. E. Peak's mission address is, Joy, Illinois, Box 32.

Laurel Club Notice

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

You will notice elsewhere in these columns that the sarcophagus of the late President Joseph Smith has been erected and accepted by the proper church officials, but since we still lack about four hundred dollars towards the amount necessary to pay for it, we further extend the opportunity to any and all who would like to assist us in making up this small balance.

We should like to publish the name of every Saint as giving some amount, either great or small, and to those who have promised but whose subscriptions are yet unpaid, we will state that since Sister Miller has accompanied Brother C. E. Miller on his missionary trip, all donations should be forwarded to Sister Joseph Sturges, 573 North Pleasant Street, Independence, Missouri.

We also urge upon you the necessity of remitting just as soon as possible, as the bill is now due and payable.

MRS. JOSEPH MATHER, Vice President.

New Edition of Popular Tract

In putting out a new edition of the tract, Latter Day Saints; Who Are They, by T. W. Williams, it has been made one of the Angel Message series and is Number 9.

It makes a much more presentable tract now, with larger print and in convenient size.

Those who have used so many of this number in the past will appreciate the new issue. To those who have not read or distributed it we will state that this has been one of our most popular tracts in creating an interest in our work by general distribution. Number 1010, 32 pages, price 10 for 25c; 100 for $2.15.

Architects

In order to fully prepare ourselves for rendering services to the communities in which we live and to the general church, it has been advised that the architects unite, forming an association.

With this in view, we would like to communicate with all practicing architects, architectural designers, engineers, draughtsmen, and students, and all professionals in the allied arts, to arrange for a meeting in the future when definite action will be taken. Each one should earnestly desire to help in this movement and join the body organized to prepare for doing the architect's particular part in the world's greatest work.

Address Henry C. Smith, 41 Wisconsin Avenue, Somerville, Massachusetts, and you will be notified of further action.

Died

MARTIN.—Jerome W. Martin, born at Sisterville, West Virginia, April 12, 1840; died at his home in Spokane, May 12, 1916. Baptized July 15, 1903, by A. J. Smith. He was a faithful Saint, blessed with patient endurance, and enjoyed the fruits of the gospel life. Funeral sermon by R. Newby to a crowded house of friends, relatives and Saints.

DUNCAN.—Charles Matthew Duncan, passed from this life at his home in Eatonville, Washington, July 15, 1916, aged 70 years, 1 month, and 10 days. He leaves wife, 5 daughters, 10 grandchildren, 1 great grandchild. He was born in Mercer County, Illinois, but the last thirty years of his life were spent in Washington. Funeral from the Methodist Church, sermon by J. M. Terry, assisted by the Methodist pastor, Reverend Reese. Abundance of flowers and a large number in attendance at the funeral showed his standing in the community.

SEELEY.—Anna Phillips Seeley, born August 1, 1880; died August 17, 1916, at Kingston, Missouri. Married Jesse Seeley, October 4, 1897, who with 2 children, Ruth and Fred, also father, mother, 4 brothers, 2 sisters, and a large number of friends, mourn her departure. She was baptized June 7, 1908, and was a faithful Saint, a leader in her circle. The Kingston Branch has lost one of its valuable members whose place is hard to fill. Funeral in charge of John Ford, sermon by William Lewis, before a large audience.

BAGGERLY.—Elder Isaac P. Baggerly, born in Clark County, Indiana, December 21, 1840; died at his home Lamoni, Iowa, July 16, 1916. Married Miss Frances Parton, March 15, 1863. Nine children were born to them, 8 of whom with their mother, survive him. Baptized and ordained an elder in 1870. In this office he served until 1892, when he was ordained to the office of seventy. He was for several years a missionary under General Conference appointment, and remained in active service until disabled by the affliction that terminated his life. Funeral sermon by Heman C. Smith, at Saints' church assisted by John F. Garver. Interment was at Lone Rock, Missouri.

MOORE.—Emma Moore, daughter of Brother and Sister Grant Moore, born April 16, 1910; died July 21 1916. Funeral in charge of G. M. Steele, sermon by Elder Hight, burial at Seiling Cemetery.

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we love is still.
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.

BROWN.—Pearl B. Brown, born November 16, 1878, at Ludlow, Kentucky; died July 24, 1916, Independence, Missouri. Baptized by R. Etzenhouser, July 12, 1896, at Plainville, Indiana. She leaves a husband, 1 daughter, Velva, 3 sons, Arthur, Leonard, and Richard, father, mother, and 4 brothers, Joseph, William, Charles Burton, and Benjamin Harbstreet, all of Davis County, Indiana. Funeral at Stone Church, sermon by George Jenkins, interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LORENSON.—Lena Lorensen, born at Dalba, Denmark, March 29, 1864; died at her home near Bedison, Missouri, July 7, 1916. Came to America in 1881. Married Rasmus Lorensen, April 26, 1883. Baptized by W. E. Peak, April 26, 1891. Was a firm and faithful Saint, always willing to assist in forwarding the good cause that she dearly loved. Husband, and 2 children, T. W. Anderson and Flossie Heffin, who were taken to raise by Brother and Sister Lorensen when quite small, mourn their loss. Funeral in charge of E. S. Fannon, sermon by O. W. Okerlind. Interment in Swinford Cemetery.

Autograph Edition of "Joe Pine"

As a special favor to those who order early, we have induced Brother Elbert A. Smith to help us in issuing an autograph edition of the new book written by him, which is soon to come from our press.

From our first edition we are specially binding two hundred that the author will personally autograph. These will be issued to the first ones who order, until they are gone. No extra charge will be made—they are given as a premium for early orders.

You and your children will especially prize these copies that contain not only this most excellent story, but a real signature of the author. Send $1.25 to-day. We expect to fill the orders some time in August. The first two hundred get these copies.
A. CARMICHAEL, Manager.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.
Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filing of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
Comfort Ye One Another	729
Current Events	731
Notes and Comments	732
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
The Creeds of 1830, By L. F. P. Curry	733
Book of Mormon on Polygamy—Part 2, by T. C. Kelley	736
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
Catholic Ban on Dancing	738
Nauvoo Landmarks	739
WOMAN'S AUXILIARY
Lula M. Sandy.	739
LETTER DEPARTMENT
R. S. Salyards—Lula M. Sandy—Ward L. Christy—Guy E. Moses—A. E. Warr—John F. Weiner—William Sparling—Columbus Scott—J. M. Stubbart—W. P. Bootman—Mrs. Florence McDonald—H. A. Martin—W. S. Macrae—J. E. Vanderwood.	741
NEWS FROM MISSIONS
Gomer T. Griffiths.	746
NEWS FROM BRANCHES
Florence Andes—Abbie A. Horton.	747
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT
	748

Change in Prices

The Board of Publication, through its manager, regret to advise the Saints that on and after September 1, 1916, there will be a change in the prices of the various books, tracts, Sunday school and Religio supplies issued by the church. We will fill all orders until that time at the old prices. This change does not affect the prices of our periodicals, such as HERALD, Ensign, etc.

The cause is, no doubt, well known to all. All materials used in the manufacturing of books, etc., have gone sky-high and the end is not in sight yet. Some of our productions have been put out at a loss for several years and we have refrained from changing prices so as to aid in getting our literature before the world.

With the sharp advance in material it is now absolutely necessary for us to advance prices, which we hope will be temporary only, though some of our books and tracts no doubt will have to be advanced permanently unless prices go below what they have been.

We sincerely hope that we shall not be obliged to raise the prices of our publications, though hundreds of papers are being discontinued, and others are raising their subscription price.

The only way we can do this is by your aid. Subscribe for the church papers and thus show your loyalty to the Master by doing what you can to keep our publications on their feet financially.

The manager believes that it would be a good idea to get in touch with the various Saints through this column, and hopes to have several more chats in the near future. The publishing houses of the church represents no small aid in disseminating the gospel. Let's get together and push.

A. CARMICHAEL, Manager.

Book Reviews

THE GIFT OF IMMORTALITY.—By Charles L. Slattery, D. D. Houghton, Mifflin Company, New York City. $1 net; shipping weight 1 pound. The fourth of the Raymond F. West Memorial Lectures, delivered at Leland Stanford Junior University. An exceptionally good book on a subject ordinarily hard to popularize. The author begins by stating that there are three roads by which one may approach the belief in immortality: the first is the road of argument, the second that of imagination, and the third is the road of practical experience. The author chose the latter and most effectively illumines the path that leads into the beyond. Perhaps all our readers believe in immortality, but the reading of this book should revivify that belief and make of it a reality so teemingly prolific in the new visions that they can do naught but seek to extend that glorious faith. Without being spectacular, the author skillfully charms the intellect and leads it to the most pleasant conclusions regarding the vital subject of a future glorious life. The book will not be sketched. One may try it, but soon he finds himself obsessed with a determination to read it all. The writer of this review, with dozens of other books and magazines demanding attention, not only read the entire book, but spent considerable time and will spend more, studying it. It should be widely read. Can there be any more vital subject than the future of our souls?

August "Cartoons Magazine"

Cartoons Magazine contains not only the work of the best of the world's cartoonists, portraying current topics, but the illuminating comments are exceptionally valuable. The original policy of the magazine was to publish a collection of the best cartoons that had appeared in current publications during the month, without comment, but we are glad to note the change. A digest of the news from the most representative journals of the world, profusely illustrated with the cartoons from about sixty famous artists in that popular line affords a combination hard to resist. In these days of foreign turmoil and domestic excitement we should seek to perceive the undercurrent of public thought and nothing is better than these pictured truths. A copy will convince you.

The August "Century"

Last Autumn Serbia was cut to pieces. When the Teuton invasion came down from the North, thousands of Serbians made the long and disastrous retreat from Kraguievatz and Nish over the icy mountains of Albania to the Adriatic Sea; other thousands died by the roadside. Fortier Jones made the entire journey with the Serbians. The whole story of this thrilling adventure would fill a book; Mr. Jones, in "Glimpses of Serbia in retreat," contributes to the August Century five little scenes, vividly written, from the tragedy of this second Belgium.

Richard Washburn Child, the well-known short-story writer, recently visited Russia to find out for himself what the war is bringing to the surface in that mysterious country. He discovered that the Russian women of to-day possess a calmer and clearer vision than that of the men. In his article "The better half of Russia," he tells all about it.

A remarkable literary experiment is "The wheat harvest," by Grant Showerman, who has attempted to picture the farm life of old days through the actual eyes and in the actual words of a boy of ten, without facetiousness or mature reflection.

"A Cretan snake goddess," by Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, will interest all who care for art and archæology.

Beginning with the August number, The Century will contain each month an article on banking and financial subjects by H. V. Cann. Mr. Cann is a practical banker of long experience in Canada and the United States, who is at present connected with the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

Other features of the August Century are: "Figureheads of the old square-riggers," a series of photographs by Edith S. Watson; a further instalment of "The leatherwood god," by William Dean Howells; poems by James Oppenheim, John Drinkwater, Charles Hanson Towne, Ruth Comfort Mitchell, Gladys Briggs Cluff, and Richard Butler Glaenger; "The

FOR SALE

Two acres of fine lying land, all set to young fruit just coming into bearing—new 6 room house, back plastered and finely finished. 2 never failing wells, new hen house 10 x 24. Located on South State St. Bargain for cash. E. F. Hall, Lamoni, Iowa.

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist

in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

FOR SALE

Bakery and Restaurant for sale at a bargain in a town of six thousand doing a large wholesale and retail business also soda-fountain and ice cream. Come and look it over or address Pure Food Bakery & Cafe, Chariton, Iowa. 30-4t

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

belfry at Ypres," an etching by Paul Verrees; "My tailor," by Stephen Leacock; a series of caricatures by Gluyas Williams; "Current comments," etc.

Save Every Scrap of Paper

If you ever had an idea of going into the waste paper business, now is the time for you to begin. There is a paper shortage and every kind of paper, from wrapping paper to fine writing paper, has increased in price tremendously. A rise in the price of paper has brought about a corresponding increase in the price of waste paper and rags of every description. Don't let a scrap of paper of any kind as big as your hand get away from you. See whether you can't get some waste paper, old magazines or newspapers from your neighbors. It is all worth money and you can sell it for a good price. You can sell paper in small quantities to your local junk man. But you can usually get much larger prices if you gather it in larger amounts, bale it, and sell to large dealers or paper mills or to the paper-box factories. If you cannot locate a near-by paper mill or dealer, you can usually find the address of one by going to your local printing office and finding out where they sell their waste paper. If there is a board of trade in your town, they will supply you with a list of dealers in paper stocks.—The American Boy.

Typewriter Service in Rural Communities

The typewriter is coming into more extended use in rural communities because of the assistance it renders to all classes of people. Here are a few examples of the possibilities of service:

The Farmer: Think of the possibilities of selling produce by the means of typewritten letters sent out to customers? Typewritten letters give the sender a business standing with the people who receive them and also enable the keeping of carbon copies of the correspondence, which many times does away with misunderstandings and lawsuits.

The General Store Merchant: More prompt and courteous treatment is likely to be accorded his orders and correspondence with the City jobber and manufacturer if his letters are typewritten.

In The Home: The boy or girl who is intending to follow a business career can secure no better start than a knowledge of typewriter operating. Children who learn to use the typewriter learn spelling at the same time. The housewife finds it a great convenience in writing recipes and for general correspondence.

The Minister: No Clergyman should be without a typewriter. It is of great assistance in preparing sermons and writing the many letters that a pastor has to write.

Mail us the
Coupon to-day

L. C. SMITH & BROS. TYPEWRITER CO.
903 W. LOCUST ST., DES MOINES, IOWA

Please send me information as checked below:

- Send me free catalog.
 How can I get a Factory Rebuilt L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter?
 What about trading in my old machine?

Name _____

Street or P. O. _____

State _____

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, AUGUST 9, 1916

NUMBER 32

Editorial

A WARNING CRY FOR OUR TROOPS ON THE BORDER

Although all may be quiet along the Rio Grande, as long as our regulars and militia are stationed there, yet they remain liable to the physical and moral perils that in camp life act as the enemy within the gates. So well recognized is this fact that as soon as we began to mobilize troops for defense on the Mexican border, editors recalled in divers strains Kitchener's famous dictum, when the first British contingents were setting out for Flanders, that the two worst foes of the soldier are intoxicants and immorality. But obvious as the evil is, governments are limited in their means to cope with it, so that the intervention of the International Young Men's Christian Association as an auxiliary force among war prisoners or men in camp in Europe and Mesopotamia is viewed somewhat as a godsend. This we learn in the August number of The Missionary Review (New York), which reminds American readers of their duty to have an interest in the work of the organization for their own men along the Mexican boundary. "Your son or brother or friend may be in danger," remarks the writer, "and this greatest peril in war must be met by the prayers and sacrifices of Christians at home." Indeed,

"The most deadly and permeating peril is one not mentioned in the newspapers or war histories, and not often referred to in letters or reports. It is the peril that no government has ever yet laid adequate plans to overcome. It is a greater danger than lack of food and clothing; it is harder to combat than cold or heat; it is tenfold more deadly than bullets; it is worse than typhus epidemics. Although it may not necessarily kill or maim, it as certainly destroys the efficiency of the soldiers.

"One tenth of the troops passing through a certain port in Europe on their way to the front have been incapacitated for service because of diseases contracted in that port. They were there on an average of only two weeks and had previously passed satisfactorily their physical tests."

The fight of these men for character was lost before they struck the first blow for their country, and we are told that "a Christian officer on being compassionated because of the number of his men who had fallen in an exposed position in battle, replied that that loss was nothing compared with the loss of those men who had fallen through sin." Turning homeward, the writer observes:

"This danger which besets the soldiers makes a veritable hell in the vicinity of the camps, not only of Europe, but of America. Before the troops arrived at the Mexican border, human vultures and vampires had preceded them to lie in wait for the boys and young men. In these camps, the drills and minor duties do not occupy all the day, and ennui and nervous desire for excitement and amusement often lead the young soldiers into thoughtless excesses that involve awful consequences.

"One hundred and fifty thousand American troops are called to the Mexican border. They are composed mostly of young men, some of them still in high school and not seasoned in character. If they yield to temptation thrust in their way they will bring back in their bodies and souls the deadly results that will spread disease and death."

Two things must be done, we are advised. First the Government must engage in a work of "moral sanitation and do, all in its power to keep away immoral as well as physical contamination from the camps"; and secondly, Christians and those most interested in the soldiers must "provide for them healthful surroundings and occupations wherever possible." The tribute of "wonderful" is paid to the achievements of the International Young Men's Christian Association in Europe and Mesopotamia, directed by Doctor John R. Mott, and we are informed that similar effort is being undertaken for American troops on the border by Mr. Fletcher S. Brockman, associate general secretary of the organization. We read:

"Fifty buildings are needed as social centers in as many camps, and at least one hundred secretaries. These buildings provide writing material—a great boon—and reading matter, games, music, refreshments, and amusements. Moving picture machines are required for the long evenings, and athletic contests must be arranged. Special secretaries and evangelists are being enlisted to go from camp to camp directing the activities of the men and holding religious meetings and forming Bible classes.

"This is constructive work, the importance of which is inestimable. The Young Men's Christian Association asks only two hundred thousand dollars to establish and conduct this work up to January 1—a paltry sum compared with that spent on baseball and football or in actual warfare. Great Britain alone is spending that amount in twenty minutes. The Governments could well afford to supply these social centers and workers—for military efficiency—but they do not. It is well that they should be supplied by Christian men and women at home, and controlled by Christian leaders."

The foregoing article is from the Literary Digest for July 29. It shows a clear perception of a danger, a very grave danger, that menaces the soldier in camp life.

It is a danger not often thought of, perhaps, by the average parent, who may shudder at the thought of a bullet or a saber cut that may lay his boy low, but does not realize the danger of a moral wound that may ruin his whole life and make it worse than death.

But a realizing sense of this danger led President Frederick M. Smith, the minister in charge, and other church officials immediately concerned to organize the Latter Day Saint boys going to the front from Independence, Missouri, into a branch. It was felt that such a branch organization would keep the boys together, give them a moral anchorage, and keep them out of many temptations to indulge in low deviltry.

The move was hailed with pleasure by the officers in command, who said, "The better the man the better the soldier," and assisted Brethren Smith, Macrae, Short and others in every way possible that they might do their work of organizing and instructing the boys—the boys of the new "Missouri Field Artillery Branch."

The work of these men in so organizing these boys has been criticized. Query: Does it behoove those of us who may not have done anything directly to protect these boys from the dangers pointed out to criticize those who have been zealously concerned for their safety and have taken this, the only means they saw available to help them during the period of their service and save them to the church? Why not wait and withhold criticism until we see how the matter terminates? And in any event it is better to make an honest effort and fail than to make no effort.

Again, the choice of men for ordination is criticized. But may we not reasonably trust the judgment and spiritual direction of those responsible church officials who were on the ground to select the best available material rather than the judgment and direction of those at a distance and not in touch with recent developments? Again, it may be well to suspend judgment and give the young men chosen a chance to "make good," as the expression is.

We sincerely hope that the Missouri Field Artillery Branch may be a means of saving the souls of those young men who are enrolled on its record.

May the young men who have been set as leaders in this novel organization prove true, and resisting temptation in every form, keep their charge well and prove successful in safeguarding those intrusted to their care.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A WARNING

From repeated inquiries coming to us by mail and in conversation we learn that some of the Saints, because of undue agitation of the question of the gathering, have become disturbed and restless, and some even in the "regions round about" have been disposed to sell their property and flee to the city of refuge. As a result of this undue agitation several of the Saints have already made ill-advised moves and have suffered as a consequence. We therefore once more admonish the Saints to heed the warning, "Let all things be prepared before you" in going up to Zion. The gathering must not be accompanied by haste which is likely to mean inadequacy of preparation. Let us once more call attention to the advice so frequently given to counsel with the proper church officials before moving.

Much harm has been done by unwise movements. Branches have been left without officers by the officers moving to Zion, while Saints have left the means of livelihood and come to Independence only to suffer want because the way had not been prepared before them. The gathering must take place, and is gradually being brought about; but cooperation of all concerned is necessary, and the Saints contemplating coming to Independence or the regions round about should carefully and prayerfully consider the move, consult freely with those pointed out in the law as the proper ones to consult and wait till the Lord shall have clearly opened the way for coming.

Let us be alert, but let us be wise.

Fraternally yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

President.

BENJ. R. MCGUIRE,

Presiding Bishop.

CURRENT EVENTS

CASEMENT DIES.—Failing to obtain a reprieve of his sentence as a traitor, Sir Roger Casement was hanged in London on the 3d, for his participation in the recent Irish insurrection.

HEAVY WHEAT DAMAGE.—Black rust and blight have made such ravages in the spring wheat section, including Minnesota, the Dakotas, and parts of Canada, that the loss is estimated at from 65,000,000 to 85,000,000 bushels. Since June the price of wheat has advanced more than thirty cents a bushel. In two days the price advanced eleven cents on the Chicago Board of Trade.

BRITISH BLACKLIST.—Diplomatic notes have been exchanged between the United States and Great Britain concerning the action of the latter in maintaining a list of American firms against which a commercial boycott is maintained. The reasons advanced are that these firms have violated the "trading with enemy" policy of Great Britain. No settlement has been effected, following an official protest by our Government.

OVER ONE THOUSAND DEATHS.—Since June 26 there have been 4,680 cases of infantile paralysis in New York City, 1,025 of which proved fatal. While this is a very serious scourge, our contemporaries are pointing out that its spectacular nature gives this epidemic undue prominence. It is stated that there were 50,000 deaths of children from diarrhoea last year, and 11,000 from diphtheria, practically all of which might have been prevented with proper feeding, care and skillful attention.

RAILROAD STRIKE IMMINENT.—The result of the vote of the brotherhood of trainmen is being tabulated and so far is overwhelmingly in favor of a strike if the railroads do not concede the demands. On the 8th the decision of the trainmen is to be announced through their committees. It is announced that if all other means fail, President Wilson will make a personal appeal to both sides to avert what would be a nation-wide calamity. By virtue of the authority given them in the vote, the labor leaders have full power to decide for the railroad employees.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Perhaps the most desperate fighting since the attack was made on Verdun, February 21, has occurred this week, the village of Fleury being the center of the conflict. Following two days of the most desperate attack and counter-attack, the positions held are comparatively the same. The allied offensive on the Somme River has been almost dormant during the week, except for occasional minor attacks. On the Russo-Teuton front the Russians seem to have been checked and none of the important centers sought have been taken. Field Marshal von Hindenberg has been placed in supreme charge of the German forces in this region, and seems to have established a strong counteroffensive. Many air battles on the Somme front and in Belgium are reported. A number of German Zeppelin raids on the eastern English coast have occurred during the week, with conflicting reports as to damage done. Fighting has been general on the Italian front. Turkey reports a repulse of the Russians in Armenia.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

VALUABLE SUPPLEMENT.—With this number is issued the official minutes of the General Conference. Every Saint not already acquainted with these details should take time to secure at least a working knowledge of the business done at these highly important gatherings. We hope to see the day when the auxiliaries may issue similar publications.

CONSCIENCE FUND.—Each year the United States Treasury department receives a number of contributions from people whose conscience troubles them sufficiently to cause them to give up money wrongfully obtained from the Government. During the past year the amount so received totaled $54,923.15, making the grand total of such receipts since 1811 of $498,763.54. No efforts are made to learn the identity of the contributors, and no separate fund is maintained, but the records of the totals are kept.

REUNION TIME.—During the month of August a large number of reunions are to be held. Already a number have passed into history and still others will be held later. Untold good comes from these gatherings of the people of God. Inspiration for the duties before us, increased devotion to a cause we know is just, a renewed determination to surmount all obstacles are common results of these gatherings. These are legitimate. Let us resolve that the efforts to instill these emotions shall not have been in vain.

FOOLS, "BY ONE OF THEM."—The Sackcanuck, of Toronto, Canada, edited by L. Rogers, has a paragraph headed "Six Hundred Fools," which reads as follows:

Frederick M. Smith, President of the reorganized Latter Day Saints, declared before a convention of the 600 delegates assembled from all portions of the world in Independence, Mo., that he had a revelation from God. By this revelation he announced that E. L. Kelly, the aged presiding Bishop of the Mormon Church, should be allowed to retire, and James K. Maguire, a real estate dealer of Brooklyn, N. Y., should become presiding Bishop.

The real estate dealer, we suppose, will be a young man full of energy and vitality. The Lord having spoken, of course, the 600 delegates hadn't a word to say.

IF OMENS WERE TRUE.—Explosions of dynamite, nitroglycerine, shrapnel and other war munitions stored on Black Tom Island in New York Harbor cost a number of lives and resulted in property loss estimated at fifty million dollars. New York and Jersey City and shipping in the harbor were subjected to a prolonged though haphazard bombardment perhaps comparable in a degree to an actual hostile attack. The famed Statue of Liberty, supposed to represent or typify the spirit of America, was quite seriously damaged. If we believed in omens we might conclude that America is to suffer in some way from this manufacture of war munitions to assist in the slaughter of humanity. But in that event we might draw comfort from the report that though the statue was bombarded and damaged the light continued to burn.

Hymns and Poems

(SELECTED AND ORIGINAL)

The Reunion Spirit

(A sketch drawn from my experience during my only day's attendance at our reunion in 1915.—MRS. A. E. COBB.)

Again we come as writers tell
From civic scenes of greed and lust,
Old Israel-like in tents we dwell
To seek fruition of our trust.

Another year if not misspent
Has added to our mental store,
And here beneath our gospel tent
We've met to con our lessons o'er.

These temple spires from seedlings spring,
 This woodland, nature's name exalts;
 These hills and dales with praises ring,
 God meets us here despite our faults.

These yearly meetings as a rule
 May well be termed a special course,
 Preparing for a higher school
 Where knowledge flows from truth, its source.

Ah! Brother Smith again appears,
 I see his dear old beaming face;
 It's lightly marked by print of years,
 Of accident, it bears a trace.

But thanking God for his escape
 We soon forget the frightful scar,
 We see his eyes in normal shape
 Love-lighted as they always are.

His jovial nature shows outright,
 His hearty handshake does one good;
 His kindly smile, with joy alight,
 Bespeaks the bond of brotherhood.

Why! He seems wearing brand new clothes
 More white than those he had before,
 And sure am I that these are those Same priestly robes that Jacob wore.

They suit his style and fit him well,
 And unto him they've been assigned,
 His mission work they plainly tell,
 For patriarchs they are designed,

He, soldier-like and army trained,
 In battle has undaunted stood,
 Development thereby attained
 Has fitted him for fatherhood.

Well, passing on more friends to greet,
 I find them chatting, full of cheer;
 This camp communion is a treat—
 May it be ours each coming year.

Dear Lord, stretch forth thy potent wand
 And change us into better Saints:
 Unite us with a firmer bond
 And cleanse our hearts from earthly taints.

Helps us to garner truths sublime,
 Do upright deeds, keep conscience-free:
 Let glad reunions come in time
 And last through all eternity.

LAMONI, IOWA.

MAGNOLIA, IOWA, July 8, 1916.

Editors Herald: I enclose a poem prayer, by dear old Sister James Caffall. I visit her often, and her pure, humble devotion to all good is an inspiration. She is nearing ninety-one years of age. She gave me a copy of a poem for my keeping. I requested her consent to send it to you for the HERALD, though she feared it was not worthy. But when we consider her life of "sacrifice for the work's sake," her noble life, her many friends, the humble desire expressed, and being indited at ninety years of age, I think it will be appreciated.

Cordially yours,
 ALMA M. FYRANDO.

A PRAYER

Oh God, my heavenly Father,
 In prayer I call on thee
 Will thou not hear and answer
 My prayer and comfort me?

I am very old and feeble,
 I am in my ninetieth year
 One eye is blind, the other dim,
 Oh, hear my humble prayer.

And grant, dear lord, the little sight
 That I enjoy to-day,
 May not be taken all from me
 Until I pass away.

Bless me with peace, that blessed peace,
 That cometh from above.
 And bless me, Lord, with wisdom,
 Humility and love.

Oh, faithful may I ever be,
 While here on earth I stay;
 And then I know all will be well,
 When I am called away.

For all who enter paradise
 Are free from every care.
 All is sweet peace and happiness;
 There is no sorrow there.

Oh, blessed home of peace and rest;
 I am longing to be there,
 To meet my loved ones gone before,
 And their sweet voices hear.

I long to take them by the hand,
 I long to see their face,
 To put my arms around them,
 And them again embrace.

But I've a hope that by and by,
 If faithful I endure
 Unto the end, that I will then Meet them to part no more.

This thought doth cheer my heart, dear Lord,
 Help me to live more pure,
 Help me to love thee more and more
 And to the end endure.

Oh hear my humble prayer, dear Lord,
 I ask it in the name
 Of Jesus thy beloved Son,
 And answer Lord the same.

And I will praise thy holy name
 While in the flesh, and when Thou call'st my spirit from this earth,
 I'll praise thee better then.

ELIZA CAFFALL.

MAGNOLIA, IOWA.

Original Articles

CONCERNING GRACELAND

To the Church: It affords us special pleasure to announce that the Graceland College Board of Trustees has placed our highest institution of learning, founded and organized by the church for the educational advancement of the church, on such a basis that it has been officially recognized by the State University of Iowa as a fully accredited junior college. Due to the very close relationship existing between the Iowa State University and the other colleges and universities of the United States, through the organization known as the American Association of Colleges and Universities, it places Graceland College on the list of fully accredited junior colleges throughout the country, so that her graduates will be admitted without examination to advanced standing, with full two years college credit, in any university or college in the United States.

The State Department of Education, under whose supervision the work of the preparatory department comes, has officially accredited Graceland Academy also. Thus our educational institution is fully standardized in all of its departments.

The church at large, as well as the college authorities, is to be congratulated on this recognition. This has been made possible largely because of the support given by the church in General Conference and throughout the field during the past several years. This support has been recognized by the university officials, and now that Graceland offers courses equal to those in any of our colleges or universities of the land there is every reason why our young people should attend in increasing numbers every year. The instruction there is of a very high order, as has been repeatedly attested by her graduates who have attended other institutions of learning for their advanced courses. The personal contact and close supervision possible in a small college is very greatly to the advantage of the college students just entering upon their college course. Graceland is fully equipped with a splendid library and adequate laboratory facilities. The religious and moral environment surrounding the young people who attend there is a very great advantage to them, and we are addressing you at this time not only to invite your attention to the advanced position taken by our own church college, but to call the attention of the young people of the church to the special advantages and opportunities offered at Graceland. From the academic standpoint her advantages in the work she attempts are equal to those of any of the other higher institutions of learning in this country, and in addition the other advantages are very superior.

Graceland has been and will continue to be supported by the church as one of her very important auxiliary institutions, and now that she has been recognized by the highest institution of learning of the State of Iowa as a fully accredited junior college, in order to make her of the highest service to the church, our young people who are looking forward to a college education, should be urged to take advantage of our own church institution.

In so far as Graceland has failed in the past it has been due to the lack of proper support on the part of the church at large. The institution of learning of any society cannot hope to fulfill its mission without the cooperation of all interests. The small church colleges of the country have been very potent factors in furthering the religious life of the particular denominations represented, and this has been true because of the loyal support on the part of the membership of those denominations. We cannot hope to succeed in the highest degree unless our own organization supports its own institutions. And now that Graceland is prepared to give our young people work equal to that of other institutions of learning we are joining in this letter to urge the very earnest cooperation on the part of all concerned. The success of the institutions of the church means the success of the church itself. The financial support to make Graceland a success must come from the church and its members. This is true of all other denominational colleges of the United States. We are no exception. Every student who can be induced to attend Graceland College reduces the expense to the church that much. Not only is it a financial saving to the student himself to attend Graceland College because of the greatly reduced cost to him there as compared with other higher institutions of learning in this country, but it is also a saving to the church.

We urge the most hearty cooperation on the part of the church at large in the support of our own higher institution of learning.

With best wishes for the success of Graceland College under its new opportunities and asking for a most loyal support on the part of all interested, we are,

Fraternally yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

BENJ. R. MCGUIRE,
Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 1, 1916.

* * * * *

Many men fail to get anywhere because they have the idea they were ticketed for the station they have reached. This is a great mistake. There are no stopping places along the way of life. A man may go back, or he may go forward, but from the cradle to the grave he must keep going.—Common-Sense.

WORDS

A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver.—Proverbs 25: 11.

This is a good text to remember when the experiences of life flow on like a song, and when the clouds of adversity lower and everything seems to go wrong.

A word fitly spoken. It is a good text to apply when the young man declares his affection to the lady of his choice, in his suit for a life companionship—and later on, when the honey of the honeymoon has become pretty well mixed with the vinegar of common workaday experience.

In the former case the word must be fitly spoken to the young lady, else she will never give him the opportunity for a later case in which to say things either fittingly or unfittingly.

There are more people who seem to have the knack of saying things fittingly to each other before marriage than afterwards—at least this is true if we reckon for the average of any considerable length of time afterwards.

But the "apples of gold in the pictures of silver" may be observed to be always in evidence when words are spoken fitly, and always at a great distance, or entirely out of sight, where words are spoken without regard to timely fitness. There are possibilities when a word fitly spoken to a king upon his throne might make or break an empire, and the same rule of speech applied to the bulldog which one meets in the neighbor's yard, may determine as to the future wearing or present tearing of a perfectly good pair of trousers.

So a great deal depends, sometimes, upon the fitness and structure of a word; and whether speaking to dogs or with men, even the tone of voice is a considerable item for consideration, and in the determining of results.

Words fitted for peace, declarations that "we are for peace with honor," etc., may be delivered in such a tone as to provoke war rather than peace, whether we apply the principle to a curtain lecture between husband and wife, to national politics, or to a dog fight.

In all such cases the result of the word unfittingly spoken will be that the delightful "apples of gold in pictures of silver" will be entirely wanting, or broken and shattered. There cannot be any conversation which is expressive of intelligence, that can possibly be so trivial as to be above, or apart from the scientific law of cause and effect as applied to the word fitly spoken.

This being true of the most common conversation, how very important must be the application of the same rule of fitness of speech when the preacher stands to declare

THE WORD OF GOD

A seasonable word in the pulpit has double power.

The weight of any certain truth is made powerfully effective by associating it with present items of occasion which immediately appeals to the perception and sensibilities of the congregation.

But the word of truth which would be fitting for a funeral occasion, might not be especially inspiring for discourse upon the occasion of a church wedding, and an exegesis of the scriptural cause for recognized divorcement might spoil a beautiful wedding picture of "apples of gold" and cause the bridegroom to exercise the first of his newly-acquired dignity as a married man, by giving the preacher a threshing.

Words have power to kill; to kill love, respect, peace, fraternity, spirituality, and even life itself; therefore the minister who uses words in the pulpit (even though all true), without respect to timely fitness and appropriateness is as dangerous as a simpleton at a picnic with a loaded gun.

Latter Day Saint preachers with plenty of zeal untempered with the discretion of the fitness of things, which discretion is sometimes not obtained in other than the school of experience, have killed what might have been a prolific interest in their preaching, by serving up strong meat, when their hearers were only in a condition to digest milk—some of them skimmed milk at that.

Being one of said preachers, the writer can speak with the certain knowledge of experience upon this point, and declare himself guilty of delivering ill-fitted sermons, and of thus thrusting himself at times, where he could only get a glimpse of the "apples of gold" at a very, very long range.

True words are but little more safe to society when jumbled and missent by indiscreet preaching, than real bullets from a true gun in the hands of an indiscriminate marksman. A popgun makes a great noise, but is not very dangerous; a squirtgun may smear their mud and even obstruct the vision, and the mud may be washed off again and again, but a real gun must surely be handled with care, for when it shoots there is something more than noise or fog.

So it is with handling words of truth which mean life unto life and death unto death; these are proper weapons in a gospel sense for man and are to be used fittingly, but chaffy, vain, empty, popgun words, may be left for childish grown-ups to practice with, without doing much permanent damage, but those who become men in the knowledge of the truth should "put away childish things."

BY WAY OF CONCLUSION

We repeat that words may kill; and add, that the word fittingly spoken will engender more abundant life.

Herein lies the task of the preacher; and the man who, comprehending this fact, always goes into the pulpit with the intelligent and definite purpose in view of nuturing, cultivating and protecting such life as may appear in the souls of his congregation, and of engendering by the fitting word of truth, a more abundant spiritual life, will not fail to be timely; and the "apples of gold in pictures of silver" as his reward for earnest, effective labor, will mean far more to him than a mere poetic phrase, and the delights of his joy in the fruitage of his gospel message will be rich and real.

Truth, timeliness, discretion, these three fittingly joined, cannot be broken.

JAMES E. YATES.

* * * * *

THE CALL OF GOD

(Synopsis of a sermon by E. F. Robertson delivered at Lamoni Stake Conference Lamoni, Iowa, June 18, 1916.)

This morning our scripture lesson will be found in the fiftieth Psalm; we will read and make a little comment as we go along. "The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun to the going down thereof."

Here we are told that the Lord hath spoken, that a call has issued from his lips, and that the call is to the earth from the rising of the sun, which we deem to be the dawn of light upon it, unto the going down thereof, which in our judgment is the closing scenes upon it in its present condition. There follows an announcement covering the same period: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined."

WHAT DOES ZION MEAN?

The term Zion has a deeper significance to Latter Day Saints than to any other people on the earth at the present time. I have looked up the meaning of the word in my Bible dictionary, which says it means a place lifted up, a high hill, a stronghold, etc. But when we take up our Inspired Version and other latter-day revelations we learn that it was a word having a great significance to the people of God ages before it first appears in the King James Translation as the name of a certain fortification near the city of Jerusalem that was captured by the armies of David from the Jebusites.

In the first part of Genesis (I. T.), we are told of Enoch, his labors, his city, and his people, the word Zion being given as the name of the city and people, we are told that these people were so faithful in keeping the commandments of God that each man loved his neighbor as himself, that he who had an abundance of material wealth consecrated of his surplus so that the less fortunate were all provided for and there were no poor among them. Enoch and his people were translated and taken to heaven because out of them the divine attributes of love, faith, virtue, wisdom, truth, etc., were permitted to shine.

At a later time we read in the same book of the great high priest, Melchisedec, who was king of Salem and keeper of the storehouse of the Lord. Being a priest and a king, and ruling over the country which was afterward possessed by the Jebusites, it is not unlikely that he sought to attain to the same high standard of righteousness in his dominion that had been reached by Enoch and his people, and that it was with the desire that they might also reflect the divine attributes that he used the word Zion as a name for his principal stronghold. Truly, "A mighty fortress is our God, a bulwark never failing." Melchisedec ceased to reign, the Jebusites ruled, but that name still attached to the stronghold generations later when it was conquered by David, though it was evidently the Zion of the days of Enoch and Melchisedec of which he speaks in this verse, "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." May we, who constitute the Zion of latter days, not fail to develop within ourselves the divine attributes that it may as truthfully be said of us because of the love, faith, virtue, truth, brotherly kindness and other godlike characteristics we manifest that out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God is shining.

ACCEPTABLE SACRIFICES

Passing to the fourth and fifth verses we read: "He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." As we observe by reading the first verse, the call is from the rising of the sun to the going down thereof, or from the dawn of human history to its close, while here we learn the purpose of the call to be that saints of all ages and of all climes who live on the earth or have passed into the heavens might be gathered together—those who "have made a covenant with me by sacrifice," it would seem that no one will be permitted to mingle in that throng whose covenant has not been so made. In verses eight to thirteen he tells the children of Israel that they are not to be reproved for lack of faithfulness in the offering of bullocks, he-goats, etc., but while they had done this they had forgotten that the whole earth belonged to the Lord and that he could not be enriched by the offerings they made. Verse fourteen declares that thankful hearts and obedience are acceptable sacrifices and will be honored of God, and entitle us to his protection in the day of trouble.

At this juncture our attention is called to Paul's language, as recorded in Romans 12:1: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

We do not wish to depreciate the value of tithes and offerings, nor of the giving of our temporal possessions for the advancement of the interests of God's work; but would emphasize with all our might the thought that those who have made a covenant by sacrifice who will form the throng that is to be gathered unto God will be those who have offered their bodies a living sacrifice. Here the question may be raised as to how such an offering should be made.

UNREASONABLE SACRIFICES

When I was traveling in the East, a few years ago, I visited Jerusalem and the Holy Land, and one day as I was climbing the Mount of Olives my attention was called to a certain convent and I was told that the girls who entered there had first to renounce all the possible pleasures of the earthly life, to be laid in their coffins, to have their funerals celebrated and that when they had once passed behind those walls their lives were to be given to the punishment of their bodies and they were never to breathe the air of the outer world again. In the valley of Cherith, where the ravens carried food to Elijah, I saw a monastery and was told that the monks who entered there had to make the same renunciation.

These people are making their bodies a living sacrifice but I do not believe it is acceptable unto God because it is not a reasonable service. The best explanation of a reasonable service that I have been able to find is made by King Benjamin in the Book of Mormon, he says, "Remember that ye are only in the service of your God when you are in the service of your fellow man." You cannot serve your fellow-man when behind cloistered walls, therefore you cannot render a reasonable service to God. Viewing from another angle this same truth, John, the beloved disciple, declared, "If a man say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar, for he that loveth not his brother whom he has seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" God is reflected in everything that he has made, and every normal man possesses in some measure his attributes. If I hate my brother whom I have seen, in whom the attributes of God are reflected, though it be ever so dimly, while professing to love God, my works prove my profession to be a false one.

If, then, I wish to offer to God a reasonable service, and can only serve him by serving my fellow man, it follows that the powers of my being must all be consecrated to the good work, the faculties of my nature must all be employed. My eyes will be looking for things that are beautiful and true, will be seeking the helpless and my hands will be employed in doing deeds of love, my ears will be listening for words of truth and purity and will be turned away from the obscene and vulgar stories and words of slander and untruth so often poured into them. My tongue will repeat only such things as will promote love, peace and mutual confidence among the people of God.

GREAT RESULTS FROM A LOWLY SOURCE

In my missionary travels it once fell to my lot to visit a poor little hovel—I know not how better to describe it—a small hut made of rough slabs split from logs and stood up side by side, with no effort to chink up the cracks; within, on a couch, I found a man, a poor shut-in, who for years had been unable to stand on his feet. I talked to him about the gospel and found him an eager listener. I visited him again and again, and one day when I called in company with another brother he said to us, "I am convinced; I believe this work is of God, and if you brethren have the courage to carry me down to the lake and baptize me I have the courage to go." We waited until the shades of night had gathered, for we feared interference if we took him through the town by daylight. We carried him down into the lake and baptized him, returned with him to his hut, confirmed him, and left him rejoicing in the gospel. This man had no money, he had no lands, he had no material wealth or earthly goods, he was dependent upon others for his daily food, but he was able to make a sacrifice, a joyful sacrifice, an acceptable sacrifice. There were good people living in the same village who would not listen to any of us preach, who were blinded by the craftiness of men and filled to that extent with prejudice that they would not welcome one of us into their homes. But some of them thought it their duty to visit the poor shut-in, and in doing so came in contact with the living influence of the gospel of Jesus Christ, were made to realize that this man's religion had power in it that theirs had not, began to investigate, and it was my privilege to see in that village a Latter Day Saint Sunday school numbering nearly all the children in it, a Latter Day Saint church house, and a large crowd of interested and earnest investigators—the direct and indirect fruits of the work of one who had neither physical strength nor earthly goods, but who was willing to make of his body a living sacrifice, fully and willingly consecrated to the grand work of God.

THE CALL OF GOD

What a glorious thing to contemplate! the call of God to the heavens and the earth, to all nations, tongues, and people, to all races and generations, to those who have made a covenant with him by sacrifice. Enoch will come with his shining hosts, Noah with the faithful few with whom he condemned the world, Abraham, the father of the faithful, Moses, the servant of the Lord, with his faithful following, Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant, whose sacrifice was most perfect of all, the apostles of the Lamb, and our own martyrs and saints, all who since the dawn of time have composed the Zion of God, reflecting him to the world in his mercy, love, justice, truth, and power.

May all who are here present participate in the great and glorious gathering is my prayer in Jesus name, Amen.

Of General Interest

THE WORLD'S GREATEST SPINNERS

If perfection in textile art were the measure of a people's culture, ancient Peru would rank with the great civilizations of antiquity. For, whether we judge by fineness of texture, purity of design, or harmony of color, her great art is rivaled only by the highest standards of Asia. And her technique of fabric construction, comprising as it does every method elsewhere known and certain crafts apparently unique, is in advance of the textile science of any single people.

Two years ago, at the suggestion of Doctor Clarke Wissler, Curator of the Department of Anthropology, and Mr. C. W. Mead, Curator in charge of Peruvian Collections of the American Museum of Natural History, the writer commenced a technical examination of Peruvian fabrics along lines pursued in the evaluation of modern textiles.

Coastal Peru from the Pacific to the Cordillera Mountains is one vast desert. The only arable soil is in the valleys of her few snow-fed rivers. An intensive agriculture, aided by the most marvelous system of irrigation which the ingenuity of man ever devised, was barely sufficient to support the great population of ancient times. Every foot of ground on which the scantiest crops could be raised was used. The dead were seldom buried in tillable soil. They are found in stone-heaps, or in the deserts surrounding the ancient centers of population. In these regions rain falls scarcely once in a man's lifetime. To this condition and to the presence of certain nitrous substances in the soil we owe the preservation of these matchless fabrics. Some have been discolored by copper stains; the exhalations from the bodies have destroyed the dyes and rotted the fibers in others; but the great majority come from the graves as fresh and beautiful as when they were first taken from the looms.

This ancient people used four kinds of fiber—cotton, wool, human hair, and a species of hemp known as maguey. They carried spinning to the highest perfection the world has ever seen.

Their fabrics range from rough cotton sleeping mats to gossamer veils and exquisite tapestry; their technique, from simple embroidery and painting to the complex gauzes and brocades. All these methods, carried to varying degrees of perfection, occur in Peru, together with a species of fancy weave somewhat like modern Jacquard work. Perhaps the most astonishing discovery of all is a few fragments of pile-knot fabric, oddly reminiscent in its surface appearance of the same class of work in the Orient.

The exact age of these textiles is a matter of conjecture, but modern knowledge assigns them to an antiquity commensurate with their development. It must be obvious that such a degree of skill could not be the result of merely a few centuries, but must represent a culture as ancient as anything we find in Asia or Egypt.—M. D. Crawford in Harper's Magazine for July.

The Staff

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

Vacation's Over

We offer this month a paper we have had for some time, written for our column by Mrs. B. A. Ruegnitz, better known to Lamoni people and Graceland students of some years back, as Miss Ida Stemmer, who was for two or three years in charge of the Graceland School of Music. Mrs. Ruegnitz is a finely trained musician, and a student of "men and affairs" as well, and this interesting paper on the heart side of the life of one of our favorite composers will show the clear insight she has into the experiences of life as recorded in history and events. Mrs. Ruegnitz remembers kindly the people she met in Lamoni, and their memories of her are also very warm and tender. We trust she may write for our columns again, and assure her that her contributions will always receive an interested and appreciative perusal.

The heated period of relaxation will soon be over, and we hope our singers and musicians everywhere have, during their vacations, planned a most useful and enthusiastic "campaign of music" for the coming year. Last Sunday we heard one of our apostles assert that no one in this church is justified in cultivating any gift God has given him, unless he also places that gift and the results of that cultivation in the service of God. This is true of our musicians; above many others, we have grand opportunities for serving God with the gifts he gave us, and the power they exert for good is inestimable by us. Let us be wholly consecrated; let us not make mental reservations; let us not decide to just give the church the fragment that is left of our time and efforts after the world has gotten its share; let us feel, rather, that our joy is only complete when our talents and our time are spent in serving our Master, no matter how humble or obscure or unnoticed the serving may be. "Not a sparrow falleth but its God doth know"; how much more surely, then, will a truly consecrated effort receive notice. Law cannot be broken, and the laws of rewards and justice must be fulfilled; and one is, that effort and service develop character—and is there a richer compensation than that, think you?

Robert Schumann's Love Affairs

The story of the courtship and happy marriage of Robert Schumann and Clara Wieck is worthy of a high place in the love literature of the world. They are the ideal lovers of musical history; even the story of Robert Browning and Elizabeth Barrett is not more tender, constant or beautiful.

Clara Wieck was not, however, Schumann's first love. He was well-experienced in the affairs of the heart before he entered upon that great passion of his life, one, at least, of these having been so serious as to result in an engagement of marriage. When he was seventeen, he wrote to a school-mate about some girl "on whose eyelash" he was "ready to die!" "Liddy, a narrow-minded soul, albeit the perfection of female beauty," and "Nanni, truly a most glorious girl!"

But Nanni soon vanished, and in another year the ideal girl was pretty Clara Kurrer of Ausberg, where Schumann stopped on his way to Munich. Clara seemed to have been engaged to another, but that made no difference to Schumann, whose passion in this case at least, was of the sort that looked for no outcome. Even upon his return to Leipsic as a university student, he dwells upon the picture of the charming Clara "that sweeps before my eyes in my waking and sleeping moments."

But "absence makes the heart grow fonder"—of somebody else, and Schumann, making a tour of Italy, met, in Venice, "a beautiful English girl, who seems to have fallen in love not so much with myself as with my playing; for all English women love with the head. I mean, they love Brutuses or Byrons or Mozarts or Raphaels." This affair did not turn out well. "Alas! my heart is heavy. She gave me a spray of cypress when we parted. Accursed reminiscences!"

Five years passed, and then came the more serious episode of Schumann's engagement to Ernestine von Fricken. This girl was the adopted daughter of a wealthy nobleman. Like Schuman himself, she was studying the piano with Friedrich Wieck, and when they first met, he was twenty-four, and she but sixteen. They speedily discovered a fondness for each other, and their romantic interest was doubtless stimulated by the fact that they stood as god parents together for one of Wieck's children. Schumann wrote to his mother in glowing praise of the girl, whom he describes as one of the two "glorious beings of the fair sex who have lately appeared in our set." She is, he says, deeply attached to him and to everything artistic, and is uncommonly musical—in short "just such a one as I might wish to have for a wife."

Old Wieck saw what was going on, and was evidently pleased, for his own fifteen-year-old daughter was approaching the impressionable age, and he did not want to part with her. Captain von Fricken came to hear of his daughter's love, and he wrote to Wieck, asking about it. This was in the summer of 1834. Wieck replied with undisguised satisfaction, disclosing the true state of affairs. In the autumn the young people became engaged. On September 5, they met at the house of Schumann's mother in Zwickan for the formal betrothal, after the German fashion, but the ceremony apparently did not take place, for not until November, it seems, did Captain von Fricken give his consent. Ernestine finished her studies with Wieck and went home, keeping up a correspondence with her lover. The engagement, however, was of short duration, for it was broken early in 1836. Some writers make a mystery of this occurrence, but the reason is plainly stated: Clara Wieck had supplanted Ernestine in the affections of the young musician. There is reason to believe that the latter did not take the change as lightly as Schumann seems to have done.

Wieck had two daughters, but it was Clara, the younger, who took Schumann's fancy, partly due, no doubt, to the fact that she was very highly accomplished at the keyboard. As a child of ten, she had created a sensation as a pianist, and one can readily understand how Schumann, himself posing as a player, would be drawn to her. He describes her as "one of the most glorious girls that the world has ever seen."

In the early letters we see love blossoming, while the lovers are yet unconscious of its existence. He writes to her: "You are to me, not a sister or a girl friend, but a pilgrim's shrine! While you have been away, I have been to Arabia for fairy tales likely to please you. In my dreams I sometimes hear music—it must be yours!" In a letter to his mother a year later, he wrote: "Clara, who is as fond of me as ever, is the same wild and fanciful little person, skipping and tearing about like a child one moment, and full of serious sayings the next. It is a pleasure to watch the increasing rapidity with which she unfolds the treasures of her heart and mind, as a flower unfolds its petals."

Alas! there was the obdurate father who, as Schumann said, had an original method of stabbing—he drove in the hilt as well as the blade! While willing to retain Schumann as a pupil, Wieck would not hear of him for a son-in-law. He had higher ambitions for his prodigy daughter! Imagine him writing to Schumann: "I don't quite know what I mean to do with Clara, but—hearts! What do I care for hearts?"

Yes, but hearts have a way of asserting themselves. Schumann's means were very slight and he strove to increase them by changing his residence to Vienna. It was lucky for him that Clara Wieck was as much in love with him as he was with her, for she promised to wait, hoping that Papa Wieck would relent. He did not relent, and the lovers wrote to each other constantly, their letters breathing the purest of affection.

"I sometimes feel," says Schumann, "As if my heart were crossed by a thousand narrow intersecting paths, along which my thoughts and feelings race up and down, and in and out like human beings, asking 'whither does this way lead? And that? And that? And all the ways?' and the answer is always the same: 'To Clara!'"

In 1839 Schumann returned to Leipsic. Two years went by, Wieck remaining unyielding. Clara had, in the meantime, been decorated by many of the European courts, and Schuman felt that he ought to have some additional distinction. Accordingly he applied for the degree of doctor of philosophy at the university in Jena, and received his diploma in 1840. Still Wieck was obdurate, and Schumann resorted to the courts, and was, by law, permitted to marry Clara against her father's will. He was thirty and his bride twenty-one, and he felt perfectly justified in the step he had taken.

Doctor Spitta says: "So far as anything human can be, the marriage was perfectly happy. Besides their genius, both husband and wife had simple domestic tastes, and were strong enough to bear the admiration of the world without becoming egotistical. They lived for one another, and for their children. He created and wrote for his wife, and in accordance with her temperament; she looked upon it as her highest privilege to give to the world the most perfect interpretation of his works, or at least, to stand as a mediatrix between him and his audience, and to ward off all disturbing and injurious impressions from his sensitive soul, which day by day became more irritable. The deep joy of his married life produced the direct result of a mighty advance in his artistic progress."

In 1844 Schumann moved to Dresden, with the hope of restoring his shattered health. There he met Wagner and Hiller. For a time his former vitality seemed to be restored to him, but his friends could not fail to notice his increasing eccentricities. He realized his condition perfectly, and often suggested that he be placed in an asylum. One night he imagined that the spirits of Mendelssohn and Schubert had visited him and presented him with a theme for variations. He attempted to write these variations, but never finished them. In 1854 he jumped from a bridge into the Rhine with the purpose of committing suicide, but was rescued by a boatman.

Two years before his death he was confined in a private asylum near Bonn, and the wonderful soul that had done so much to add beauty to the world, faded gradually away. The end came July 29, 1856, in the arms of his loving wife, the tragedy and pathos of it softened by that fact, and the thought that the fourteen years of his married life had been so happy and helpful.

After Schumann's death his old friend Hiller, wrote: "What a love adorned thy life! A wife, gifted with a radiant crown of genius, stood at thy side, and thou wert to her as the father to daughter, as bridegroom to bride, as master to disciple, and as saint to the elect, and when she could not be with thee to remove every stone from thy feet, then didst thou feel, in the midst of dreams and sorrows, her protecting hand from the distance; and when the angel of death had pity on thee, and drew night to thy anguished soul, in order to help it again toward light and freedom, in thy last hours thy glance met hers, and reading the love in her eyes, thy weary spirit fled."

IDA STEMMER RUEGNITZ.

Only Waiting

Tune: "What a friend we have in Jesus."

We are waiting, only waiting,
It is just a little while
Till we see the heavenly mansions
And receive the Savior's smile.
At the golden gate he's standing
With a willing, outstretched hand,
Waiting to receive his children
As they reach the shining strand.

We are waiting, only waiting
'Till we lay our burdens down,
Till the heavy cross is lifted,
And we gain the promised crown.
Now the burden grows more heavy
As we nearer reach the end—
Jesus grant us strength and patience,
As beneath the cross we bend!

We are waiting, only waiting,
Till we join our loved ones there;
Till we leave the cross behind us,
And their blessed peace shall share.
Dream we see their shining faces
Hidden now beyond the veil,
And we know they're waiting for us,
With a love that cannot fail.

We are waiting, only waiting,
Till we clasp their hands once more;
Till the veil is rent between us,
And our earthly wand'ring's o'er;
Shall we hear the Savior's welcome?
Yes, if we have done our best—

"Thou art numbered with the faithful, Enter in, and take thy rest!"

ERMINA PERKINS KEARNEY.

[We thank Sister Kearney for this little song, and think it is a good idea for our poets to send in words that can be sung to some of our old and favorite tunes. It would enlarge our repertoire of social hymns, without the heavy cost attaching to the publication of music.—EDITORS.]

A True Tale

While working with Jean de Reszke, learning the fundamental principles of tone production, Charles Bowers, the New York vocal teacher, recalled a well-known biblical quotation in a dream which presented it to him in a new light. The familiar saying was, "Faith, hope and charity, these three, but the greatest of these is charity." The new idea was as follows: Faith for resonance, hope for openness of throat, charity for the control of breath from the diaphragm. This could well be used by every vocalist as the golden text for voice production.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS,
LAMONI, IOWA

Children's Home News

Since our last appearance the board of trustees have by regular election chosen Brother Richard J. Lambert as treasurer of the board to succeed our beloved Brother Joseph Roberts. Brother Lambert has been associated with Bishop Roberts as his counselor, and is therefore quite well acquainted with the details of this work, and he is thoroughly reliable. Those contributing to support of the home, please take notice and send to the order of Brother Lambert.

The board also filled the vacancy occasioned by the death of Brother Roberts by the selection of Brother Floyd McDowell. Brother McDowell is one of the Graceland College faculty, a worthy and competent young man. His love for children is fast developing into adoration through the gentle influence, and guiding hand of a little one who has recently become a prominent member of the executive committee in his own home.

Sister Rebecca Sage formerly of Saint Joseph, Missouri, who recently passed away, left to herself a lasting monument of affection to our children, by making the Children's Home the residuary legatee in her will. The president of the board appeared before the probate court of Saint Joseph on May 31, and received possession of, for the home, a nice four-room, nearly modern cottage, quite well furnished, worth approximately two thousand dollars. The board will decide at once what disposition to make of the property. It will doubtless give the home much relief and comfort.

There has recently come to our table a copy of a neat periodical called The Iowa Orphan's Plea published at Ottumwa, Iowa, by The American Home Finding Association in which we note what they call "Our new method of handling infants."

It consists of an arrangement for those desiring to receive children filing their application describing the kind of a child wanted, and those who have charge of children needing homes filing application to have them received giving description. The board compares the two lists and where they find an agreement of desires notify both parties to meet at the home where the transfer is made without the child coming in contact with other children, and saving the expense of keeping children, employing assistance to care for them and so forth.

What would our patrons think of such a plan?

Please let us hear from you. Of course there must always be exceptions, as there are cases of emergency where children must be cared for, awaiting the opening of a place suitable.

Love the Children

Little cherub, are you happy,
Full of harmless mirth and song,
Warmly loved, and truly loving,
Joyous as the day is long?

I could pray that nought might hinder
Peace from reigning in thy heart,
Nor a shade of sin or sorrow,
Cause it ever to depart.

But I know that storms will gather
Soon, around thy youthful brow,
And those eyes be dimmed with tear drops
Which so gayly sparkle now.

Parents, love your tender offspring,
Kindly teach them, gently chide,
Lead them, early, to the Savior,
And by pure example guide.

Then, when after years the spirit
Bends beneath its weight of care,
He will think of father's counsel,
And remember mother's prayer.

Should an orphan pass your doorway,
Welcome him with warm caress;
Love the child that has no mother,
Kindly treat the fatherless.

For the orphans lot, dear reader,
Is a weary one at best;
Every heart has untold sorrow,
Every spirit feels unrest.

Lady reader, have you children?
Love them; 'tis your duty to,
But remember, other mothers
Love their babes as well as you.

While thou seest a fellow mortal,
Doomed to wander, watch, and weep,
God hath said, "what e'er thou sowest,
Know that thou shalt also reap."

—Marie Braby.

Is thy cruse of comfort wasting?
Rise and share it with another,
And, through all the years of famine,
It shall serve thee and thy brother.

—Elizabeth Charles.

Woman's Auxiliary

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

OFFICERS

President, Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, 630 South Chrysler Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Vice President, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, 1515 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri. Secretary, Mrs. W. W. Smith, corner Walnut Street and River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri. Treasurer, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Historian, Mrs. B. C. Smith, 214 South Street, Independence, Missouri.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPARTMENTS

Educational, Helen Silsbee Smith, 2315 Harney Street, Omaha, Nebraska. Home, Mrs. George N. Briggs, Lamoni, Iowa. Child Welfare, Mrs. Walter Sandy, 3431 East Sixtieth Street, Kansas City, Missouri. Relief and Service, Mrs. Edith Cochran, 1107 Powell Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri. Young Woman's, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

A Word to the Wise

We wish to sound again, a note of earnest warning to mothers of young girls, as well as to the young girls themselves; and, from the reading of the following letter from one of our good brothers—a letter telling of circumstances of very recent happening—one can readily see that the danger is not confined to extremely young women. Please read the letter carefully and make a point to call the attention of all the women about you, to the dangers which lurk everywhere for the young and inexperienced. The pity of it all is that this ignoble thralldom is so often forced upon women. It is not that they would choose the short path to destruction; they would recoil from such a proposition were they considered in the matter; but, taken unaware, rendered unconscious, to awake in the terrible bonds of sin and pollution—how can we guard against this? Only by constant watchcare, constant thought, to be surrounded only by influences for good, to go into crowded places in the city, only when attended by your own people, and by avoiding going any place likely to be contaminated by the presence of these workers for evil. It is true, one is never safe; on train, in store, or lecture hall, everywhere, the dread snake of sin and vice rears its ugly head; but oh, we must pray for wisdom and guidance, that our own may escape the fearful net whose captives receive such bitter wages; swift, sure, and sorrowful! The letter follows:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 25, 1916.

We have heard of the "white slaver and his poisonous needle." Here is an actual case, close enough to our people to show that women, especially parents who have young daughters, cannot afford to be careless.

Sister —— told me this afternoon that her young married sister went to Fairmount Park yesterday as chaperon for two young girls at a picnic. She is a good-looking, attractive, young woman, and as they were standing watching a game of some kind, the two girls at a distance of about ten feet from her, she felt a very painful sensation on her upper arm. She turned and saw a fairly large, well-dressed man near her, smoking a cigar, and she thought at first that the pain was caused by the burning end of the cigar. She clapped her hand over the painful spot with a slight exclamation, and the man appeared very apologetic, and with an "Oh! pardon me!" pretended to brush cigar ashes off her sleeve. The muscles now began to stiffen and she turned to the girls near by with, "He burnt my arm with his cigar. No! it was the poisoned needle!" as she recalled what she had heard about the methods of the white slaver.

The words had hardly been uttered when she felt the power of speech had gone and a fainting sensation caused her to fall into the arms of the two girls above mentioned, who of course were in a state of consternation. Seeing the lady was accompanied by friends the man turned and hastily disappeared; but had she and her friends been separated sufficiently, he would doubtless have taken charge of his "fainting sister," called an auto, and before her girl friends could have known it, she would have been whirled away to the crowded city. As it was, fortunately, they saw one of her near relatives as she was regaining consciousness, who helped the girls care for her until her husband came for her, from Independence with an auto. He and other relatives shudder as they think of this dastardly attempt on their loved one, who suffered agonies while coming out from under the influence of the powerful drug administered. Though only a pin prick is visible on the surface, the arm and muscles of her shoulder and neck have been painfully sore since.

This case is going to make the Saints here and in Kansas City more careful than ever. Let the Saints everywhere, be more "separate" from the worldly pleasures, and build up the Zion of God, where, amid the "pure in heart" such happenings will not be possible!

Her Gifts

She held in her hand, so fair, so fair,
A pure white flower with perfume rare;

It had planted been, with care and love,
Tenderly guarded by God above;

In beauty it bloomed, so pure and sweet,
Worthy to lay at the Master's feet!

She held the gift with a careless air—
This pure white flower, so fair, so fair,

And noticing not its woeful plight,
She dropped it low in the dust one night!

A rough foot crushed, in that fateful hour,
The gift God gave for a maiden's dower!

Alas, and alas, too late she bent
To rescue the gift that God had lent;

Trampled and bruised in the dust it laid,—
A broken heart was the price she paid!

She held in her heart a friendship sweet
God gave her to make life more complete;

A golden friendship he knew 'twould be
And gave her the key to its mystery,

That she might lock it within her heart
Till it formed of her life a very part,

To comfort, console, and counsel too,
When all things else might seem untrue.

With a careless hand she threw away
The key God gave her to keep for aye,

And opened the door of her heart so wide
The golden friendship escaped outside,

And fell, to be trampled, bruised and bent
And lost, for aye—by her own consent!

Too late again, she essayed to clasp
The boon which slipped from her heedless grasp;

And she cried, "Alas! how could it be,
I have held God's gifts so carelessly!"

"For the flower he gave, and the friendship sweet, Lie crushed and dead, in the dusty street!"

ERMINA PERKINS KEARNEY.

Come Up Higher

"Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us."

Dear Sisters: I am wondering what progress we are making in "coming up higher." I am wondering if it is not time we interviewed ourselves on this serious matter and gave it prayerful consideration. We all know that the invitation, the call, has been given repeatedly by the Spirit, in various places, "Come up higher; my people!" We also know that the Lord never says anything simply for the sound of the words; there is always a real meaning, and a real need, for all that is said by him; and although he is "long-suffering and of tender mercy," yet he has said, "My Spirit will not always strive with man."

How much depends upon our complying with the request, the "bid" or how great the individual loss, and loss to the work, by not heeding the call, we cannot know. If the Lord could have blessed his people or manifested his power just the same without this coming up higher, the oft-repeated call would not have been given. To the thinking mind it is evident that we, as a people, are not yet in a position to receive all that our Lord and Master desires to bestow, and it is apparent that some weights—I will call them that—are holding us down, which will require effort to cast off. It is utterly impossible to ascend higher in the scale of righteousness and not manifest material and visible change in us individually. One cannot come up higher and still be the same in all ways as before the call was given and heeded. Something must be left out—something laid aside. We cannot take our ungodly habits with us nor can we start from the third or fifth round of the ladder, if there remains something below that which should have been removed. Let each look into her own heart and see if there is not something there that should be eradicated, something in her life to do, or be undone, before she feels free. Do we lack the courage to undertake it? Do we seek to excuse ourselves from it?

Let me give you an instance from real life. A sister began to feel dissatisfied with herself for not keeping the Word of Wisdom better. She drank both tea and coffee. After some battles with herself she put away coffee and allowed herself but one cup of tea daily—in the morning. Of course she felt better, thinking that just one cup would be excusable. Presently she had a dream. A stranger entered her house, with book and pencil in hand, and asked her if she were a tea-drinking Saint. She confusedly told him that she took only one cup of tea in the mornings. His reply was, "Are you a tea-drinking Saint, or are you not? Yes or no!" She was forced to say, Yes. He wrote it down in his book and went out. How she hated to see it recorded that she was a tea-drinking Saint!

In the morning, when thinking over her dream, she resolved to place herself in a position so that, if another should come with a similar question, she could unhesitatingly answer, "No." She wrote her dream to a sister who also loved her cup of tea, but who also wanted to quit the habit and be free, but to whom it had seemed a great sacrifice, for she feared with the giving up of her tea, she would lose all relish for her food, besides having two or three days of sick headache during the transition, which she dreaded. Hitherto, whenever she passed the time for having tea, her head would ache. The dream appealed to her as strongly as to the one to whom it was given; still, she hesitated and clung to her cup of tea. Finally, there came a time when she wished, or volunteered, to give it up for just twenty-four hours, expecting a headache. But when the time had passed and had proven that the Lord so entirely sustained her that she had felt no symptom of headache, she joyfully said, "good-by, tea!"

That was many years ago, but she still holds to her purpose, enjoying freedom from both the habit and the headache, and enjoys her food just as well as before. In her heart she thanks God for the help he rendered.

Yes, sisters, he will always help when we truly want to overcome.

More anon,

EMMA B. BURTON.

How Woman Profits by Turmoil

The change and the increase in the activities of the women of Europe may be deplorable, but they are far from being negligible. When the history of this decade is written, many a chapter must be given to the achievements of woman. Whether for better or for worse, woman has cut new niches for herself in the social edifice and has set herself permanently therein.

The eagerness with which the women of the warring nations undertook man's employments at the outbreak of hostilities, and the ability with which they have accomplished their work is a vindication of feminism.

It is always in periods of political and social unrest that woman perceives her best chances of seizing upon a little more freedom. In the past few years of China's political agitation, the women of that country traveled farther on the road to liberty than they had gone in all the previous centuries.

In Mexico, in the midst of the present political turmoil, woman is emerging from a seclusion and dependence which have amounted almost to subjection. Only recently, seven hundred delegates convened in the first congress of women ever held in the republic of Mexico.

These women were largely of the middle class; they belonged to a social stratum much neglected in a commonwealth made up of the very rich and the very poor; they were hampered by conservative Spanish traditions on the one hand, and on the other by ideas of woman's inferiority inherited from the Indians and the peons; they were instructed under a religion which does not sanction divorce; they lived under an enervating southern sun; nevertheless, they felt the world-wide pull of the feminist movement, and they responded to it.

They could not resist because feminism (of which suffragism is only a part) is not a revolution.

It is a process of evolution, and neither race, nationality, nor the hostility of man can stop it.—Omaha Daily News, July 8, 1916.

Menus for Little Convalescents

Every mother knows how difficult it is to tempt the convalescent child to eat, for at this time the best loved dishes are apt to be scorned. But if the childish liking for fun is kept in mind, and various surprises are devised for the little patient at mealtime, the chances are that the youngster, in the pleasure of the moment, will eat with unmistakable relish such nourishment as is desirable for him to have. Or if he can be so amused as to think he is playing a game when in reality he is eating a meal, it will be a wonderful help along the road to quick recovery.

Even the busy housewife, with a little imagination and ingenuity, can evolve surprisingly novel ways of serving the plainest nourishment, which the small boy or girl would promptly decline if served in the ordinary way. Bread and milk is much more interesting if brought in two tiny fish-bowls, the milk in one and in the other bread sticks, those tiny hard cylinders of all crust, which children usually like to break into pieces, drop into the milk and fish out, finding them so good to eat.

If the toast to be eaten with the bowl of milk is cut into strips and built into a log cabin for one meal and cut into fancy shapes, arranged on a pretty Japanese napkin on a plate for another, a surprising amount will often disappear. The bread may be cut before toasting with a cookie cutter, and various animals as well as hearts, stars and other odd shapes, which will appeal to almost any child, are to be found in these tin cookie cutters, and they cost but a trifle. Even so commonplace a thing as a baked potato may contain a bit of scraped beef to surprise the youngster when it is opened, and it would be fun for almost any little patient to discover that what seemed to be a hard-boiled egg is in reality a mold of blanc-mange.

Breakfast is often the meal which requires the most coaxing and bribing in order to have the smallest portion of it eaten, but even the cereal, if a little attention is paid to its arrangement by providing an odd little sugar bowl, pretty cream pitcher and cunning dish from which to eat it, can be made much more acceptable. The soft-boiled egg will look far more attractive in its egg cup if a funny face is penciled on it and it is topped with a paper foolscap, or the egg may be laid in a nest of excelsior in a pretty little basket or bowl.

A glass tube or a bundle of straws costs very little, and yet they will often make a glass of milk, orange albumen or cup of broth disappear. A little crockery jar is admirable for serving a small portion of broth; the straws sticking up in it insure investigation. Children like individual dishes, and they are often so delighted with a little covered dish from which to serve the broth, bread and milk and slightly stewed oysters that it is received eagerly, especially if they have a pretty sugar spoon as a ladle and a fancy little shallow bowl as a soup plate. A small casserole, slightly high and narrow, or a cunning little bowl with cover, resembling a tomato, answers the purpose of the soup tureen. Indeed, small, oddly shaped baking dishes, casseroles and ramekins will all prove useful in tempting the convalescent child to eat, for when baked custards, creamed chicken or even simple mashed potato and boiled rice are served in them they look so attractive that they are hailed with delight and eaten, when otherwise they would be promptly refused.

To play hotel and order his meals is fun for a small patient, and what he is allowed to have can, with a little ingenuity, be fixed up to resemble what he has ordered. Or a picnic can be made of the meals, his luncheon being brought to him in a fancy basket, with picture plates of heavy paper, picture paper napkins, etc., and if the basket also contains a surprise the fitful appetite of the child will often be tempted in spite of himself. Another meal can be served entirely on dolls' dishes, and little girls can often be amused by having one or more dolls to the spread.

An occasional meal prepared in a small chafing dish where he can watch it will interest a child in his food and amuse him for some little time. All kinds of egg dishes may be prepared in this way; the milk for the toast heated, the cocoa made, the bit of chicken creamed, or a couple of tiny fish boiled, to the great delight of the convalescent child, who will probably eat every mouthful.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Our New Stake Auxiliaries

We have gathered a few items concerning the organization of two of the stake auxiliaries, which we will pass on for the benefit of our readers, until such time as their press chairmen shall furnish us with more detailed information regarding their activities.

The Kansas City Stake Auxiliary was organized with Sister Lula M. Sandy as president, Sister T. T. Grabske as vice president, Sister S. S. Sandy as secretary, and Sister Alma Warren as treasurer. The selection of a press chairman and the superintendents of departments has not been made as yet, owing to the absence from the city of some members of the executive committee.

Since the organization of this stake auxiliary, the officers have organized a large study class that is being well-attended. It is known as the "Story-telling class," and they will have a course of twenty lessons in story-telling. The instructor is Sister Pearl Simpson; the president, Sister Dan Tucker; and the historian, Sister Price. Other activities are under way, which show that the new stake officers are alive to the needs of the work, and we will await further reports from this enthusiastic society, with a great deal of interest.

We have no news about the Holden auxiliary, except the following which was in the Ensign "The stake organization of the Woman's Auxiliary was effected by electing Mrs. D. J. Krahl as president, Mrs. J. W. A. Bailey as vice president, Mrs. I. M. Ross as secretary, and Mrs. Fred A. Cool as treasurer." May we hear of further activities of this organization?

Seattle Auxiliary

Brother Terry's letter in the Ensign, tells that the Woman's Auxiliary of the Seattle Branch is to hold a bazaar and serve supper, on September 18, the day following the grand rally of the branch in their effort to finish paying for their church home. It is good to hear of the work of the sisters, and their commendable zeal should be rewarded by satisfactory financial results.

Summer Commandments

Thou shalt not continually pour iced water, or iced drinks down thy throat, if thou wouldst keep thy stomach in condition, and avoid nausea.

Thou shalt not eat three heavy meals per day, when the weather is hot, for such food keeps the body heated.

Thou shalt eat meat but once per day and only sparingly then.

Thou shalt make up thy summer menu very largely of vegetables and fruits.

Thou shalt be unusually slow and deliberate, chewing thy food carefully, for digestion's sake.

Thou shalt not go out into the hot sun just after a hearty meal, but rest awhile in quiet.

Thou shalt not eat heartily after violent exercise, while thy body is exceedingly hot.

Thou shalt eat very sparingly when traveling by land or water, if thou wouldst keep well.—Philadelphia Record.

Letter Department

A Letter to President F. M. Smith

[Under date of June 20 a worthy brother, well-known to the church at large, wrote the following letter to President Frederick M. Smith. We have decided in this case to suspend our general rule against publishing private personal spiritual manifestations, and print this letter. While we do not attempt to pass upon its spiritual merits and authenticity, we have felt to give it to the HERALD readers, and they may extract from it such comfort, edification, or warning as they may determine that it contains for them.—EDITORS.]

Dear Brother: I am urged to write to you of the experiences which have come to me since leaving home, as you have been the most prominent one claiming my attention.

I left Kansas City on the 9.30 p. m. Saturday train for this place, taking a chair car, resting some during the night. As the light of the rising sun shone through the car windows, my soul began to expand in admiration to God for his goodness to all his creatures, and the intensity of joy which filled my soul is indescribable, as my mind dwelt upon the provisions made by a loving Father for his creatures, especially for his covenant children.

It is not my purpose in writing this to try to describe my experiences, for probably an hour, but opening my handbag, I took out my Book of Mormon and was directed to the second and third chapters of Alma, and as I read, the Spirit of revelation rested upon me and my mind was illumined as the voice of the Spirit said, as I read of the sad condition of the church at that time, "The condition of my church to-day is mirrored in the history you are now reading, the conditions of my people are now as then." I can never forget the feeling of sorrow which came over me at these words; and as I read on it was made so clear to my vision that I could never doubt the truthfulness of the words spoken to me.

I read on under the same influence, and joy began to take the place of sorrow as God worked upon the man he had placed over his people, and he went forth among the people of the church, instructing them in the law of the Lord, and the sequel being a change from spiritual darkness to a most blessed condition of spiritual life. The same voice that had spoken to me bade me write this experience, and I took out my pencil and paper and wrote, but I have not had the courage to write you till this morning, and this through my experience through the past night.

The voice said, "Tell my servant, Frederick M., to go forth among my people and I will clothe him with the power of my Spirit, as he shall teach my law to my church, for he must lead in humility, in faith, in love for my people, for I have called him to represent Jesus Christ as the good shepherd among my people, going before them as a leader, and kindly assisting the weak, poor and aged of my people, as well as to strengthen the young, leading them to pastures of spiritual verdure and in this work he shall be a tower of strength to my church."

I have with great reluctance undertaken this task of writing, thinking it might be considered presumption on my part, but the experience of last night and the early morning has urged upon me what appears as a duty.

I retired to bed about 9.15 p. m., very weary in body (as I am physically run down), and soon had presented to me in dream a building which upon entering I found to be in a condition nearing collapse. The walls were bulging outward and the bricks were separated from the mortar and the beauty of the structure was to a great extent spoiled. I said, "Surely this building will fall unless some support is immediately given it. It needs a new beam to take the weight of the dislocated parts, or it must fall."

I again fell asleep and dreamed the same dream exactly as I had seen it before, but I said, "Shall we not have to tear down the part that is bulging out, and rebuild?" But was answered, "No. We must first get into position the large beam, and then we will attend to the replacing of the loose bricks and we can in that way rebuild, but we must have strong mortar or cement," as that used in this part of the building was weak and would not stand the strain.

I again fell asleep and the same dream was repeated, only we seemed to agree that a stout rod of iron must hold the structure together, this to be fastened to the large beam which was now put in place. There was a great effort put forth to first secure the beams, for there were others, or one other which was secured by the rod of iron. The wall then began to straighten and there was greater activity manifested among the workers. I again fell asleep and dreamed. I was still in the building, and to my relief I saw the bricks had been securely replaced, and the wall was plumb, and the danger of the structure had passed.

I was then again awakened and I lay wondering what the dream indicated, when immediately my mind was directed to my experience on Sunday morning, and was informed that this that had been shown me was the condition of the church, pride and divergence from God's plan had brought about the disfigurement of the building, representing the church. This had brought about the serious danger as now exists in the church, which calls for immediate attention. The beams most prominent were Frederick M. and Elbert A. Smith, with others united and held in place by the rod of iron, representing the word and law of God, which must bind and hold in place intended by the builder, the parts necessary to secure safety and salvation to the children of God.

I feel now ease of mind and assurance that I have performed my duty, although as I stated, with great reluctance till I received this remarkable experience during the night and morning. I feel the glow and light of the Spirit as I write, and leave this for what value it may be to you.

I will add, I am here to recuperate, but my heart is in my appointed field of labor, but am at present physically unfit for service, but will get to work as soon as I am able. This atmosphere will help me I feel assured.

Dear brother, my heart goes out in prayer for you, that you may be fitted for the great burden and responsibility resting upon you.

Very sincerely your brother,

True to His Promises

The HERALD comes freighted with good things each week, and is hailed with pleasure. Indeed, so much has been written and said in its columns that all vital subjects seem to be well treated upon, but it is well to stir up the pure minds of the Saints occasionally, so writing and preaching are still needful.

I wish to go over a few points that are plainly written in the word of God as to the duty of Saints, and by the name Saint I mean all who are converted to the angel's message in these the last days.

In Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1, 2, the Lord tells us in answer to a question that he requires all of our surplus properties to be placed in the hands of the bishop, as the beginning of tithing, then one tenth of our increase to be paid until such time as another surplus is gathered, then to consecrate this surplus, also, and right on indefinitely, "seeking first to establish the kingdom of God and his righteousness," rendering a life of service, holding out faithful to the end.

In Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2, the Lord has said: "If any man shall take of the abundance which I have made and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."

Again, in section 75: 3, "Nevertheless in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."

We have, in the foregoing, a duty prescribed, a reward for doing this duty, and a penalty for not doing this duty.

I will remember some circumstances which took place in the Open Head Branch, in the Florida District, during the last years of Brother M. M. Turpen's labors in this mission, which thoroughly demonstrates the truthfulness of God's promises to his children.

The Open Head Branch was composed of about twenty-five members, and most all of their names were on the bishop's agent's book, most all were converted to the law of tithing, and most all would take part in the weekly prayer meetings, Sunday school, etc.

On a certain prayer meeting night, Brother Turpen happened to be with us, and as the meeting began to get good and spiritual, Brother Turpen arose to bear his testimony, and he had only said a few words when the Spirit rested upon him, and he began to speak in tongues, and at the close of the tongue, he said, "And thus sayeth the Spirit," and he gave the interpretation. Oh! how grand was the feeling that pervaded the room, and how grand were the promises to us, only those who were present will know.

The purport of the tongue was that the Lord was well pleased with us, and if we would continue faithful we would be blessed.

The writer was the only elder in the branch, and for three times in succession the gift of healing was given me with great power. I wish I had space to relate these cases of healing. In one case the administration was enwrapped in a vision to both the one administering and the one administered to.

Subsequent chapters could give the decline and downfall of the branch, and the scattering of the members, as well as the blessings of God being withdrawn, and the sufferings of the disobedient.

Oh! dear Saints, the Lord is not slack concerning his promises, neither is his arm shortened that he cannot reach us. If there is a branch of the church that has not been enjoying "the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit," it is because the Saints have not come up to their temporal duties. The Lord has said: "When you do what I have commanded you then am I bound, otherwise you have no promises."

Oh! dear Saints, can we abide a celestial law, and save our souls in the celestial glory, or will we let this the greatest of all opportunities slip by us, while we worship our little worldly goods? Cease to love your possessions, consecrate of your properties, for this is part of the "coming up higher" that we have been so often admonished to do.

In bonds,

S. D. ALLEN.

MUNSON, FLORIDA.

Deceptive Appearances

I have just been thinking of a little incident that happened during my nursing career. Trivial enough at first sight, but oh, the lesson!

One sunny afternoon in the fall, I took some of my patients for a ramble across some wild moor land and up a steep hill all covered with purple heather. Half way up, we rested, and my attention was drawn towards a small green leaf of a plant close to where I was sitting. On close examination I saw what proved to be a small common fly that had been caught in the leaf like a rat in a trap. Such a fearful buzzing and commotion was going on, and the insect was doing its best to protest against and escape from the vise that held it.

That pretty green leaf was a deadly trap, to catch unwary insects. When open, the surface of the leaf was covered with very fine, silky-looking hairs that lay flat, but when an insect lighted on top, the leaf would gradually begin to close up into a kind of deep cup, and the hairs stood on end to prevent any possible escape. The result was death to all poor atoms of life that happened to fall into the trap.

Now then brethren, isn't that just the way and the tactics of the Evil One? How sweet and nice it is to taste of something that we have been forbidden to touch. The ball room, the dance, the cinema show, etc. These are the silky hairs that cover and gloss over the poison underneath. Once fairly in the seductive delights of the many attractions, the leaf begins to close and what then? Too late the victim realizes the result of its own folly, fairly caught in the snare it tries to escape, but in vain. Only the help of another can set the victim free.

The precious gospel of Jesus can lift the fallen and broken-hearted to better and higher things. The dawning of another brighter day is near, and Christ will come and say, Give an account of thy stewardship. What have you done, or what are you doing with your life? Your life is full of talents. What are you doing with them? Are you robbing God of his own, by wasting the time in heedless pleasure? Are you? If so, wake up and get about your business, the Master's business, and render an account of yourself. Begin now.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

FLORENCE WRIGHT.

LONDON, ENGLAND, 58 Ickburgh Road, Upper Clapton.

BEECHWOOD, NEW SOUTH WALES, AUSTRALIA,

May 30, 1916.

Editors Herald: Last year the New South Wales Sunday school and Religio conventions met at Bulahdelah Branch to conduct the business of the district and to receive the needed strength to go through another year.

The conference held three months before had divided the district into two, to be known as the Northern and Southern New South Wales Districts, respectively. This had all been worked out before Brother G. T. Griffiths was called home. Following the division in church matters it was only natural to expect a similar division in Sunday schools and Religio, but the advisability of this was questioned by a great many. I traveled one hundred miles to be present, and with three other delegates had great difficulty in hiring a car to reach our destination on account of the holiday rush of passengers. I almost hoped that by the time I reached Bulahdelah the business would be over and thus save me the trouble of casting a vote about which I felt uncertain. As the hum of the motor car forging its way over those hills rang in my ears it sang only one tune,

"A little farm well tilled,
A little house well filled,
A little wife well willed," etc.

Now this annoyed me beyond measure to think that I was on my way to church services and was trying to get my thoughts into deep channels; I had often heard that triplet sung, and recognized the humorous side in it, in fact to my mind it was bordering on the ridiculous. However, I might say I arrived in time to hear the business, and when the vote was called for I was only too agreeable to cast mine "for" the division and one thought after another appeared before my mind in favor of it.

We have passed through our first year and on Good Friday morning a representative gathering met in Sunday school convention in the neat little church so recently erected by the Saints at John's River, in the Northern District. I believe it was a great incentive to many who though unable to travel far to attend such meetings, were brought into close touch with the work, and I feel sure an able body of young men and women will be raised up to help carry the burden and bear the heat of the day. Ability has been lying dormant I believe, that will be brushed up until it shines clearly and with the Holy Spirit's help must in time reflect the divine nature; they will add to their faith, "knowledge."

I think that the life of Moses is a great study in learning how God permitted him to be raised in the palace and to receive an education to fit him to be a leader of such a people under such peculiar circumstances. And so we notice in these last days many instances where God has caused his people to be led into different avenues of life, that their knowledge has been put to use in his service. How wonderful are the ways of God!

We feel grateful to those brethren who travel from home and loved ones to assist us in this land, and without any exception we feel that the heart ties are being strained when we give them the parting hand. Brother Griffith's work here will live long in the memory of the Saints. We would very much have liked him to represent us at the late conference, but he thought it too much to ask, considering his various duties.

Conference news has just reached us and how our hearts went forth in gratitude to the "One who doeth all things well" when we read of the revelation given, but do we expect anything else? No! for we read, "The same, yesterday, to-day and forever," and although distance divides us in person, we hope to be among those loyal to our beloved president and by our prayers lift him up to God continually.

We learn also that Brother Miller has been sent to another mission and we hope that he will continue to be a successful ambassador for Christ.

As we strive to do our little in this work it becomes all the more dear to us and while we think of the future of this district, with comparatively all new officers, each striving to do his or her own part, we feel we can only sow the seed and trust that "It will be fed and watered

By God's almighty hand."

We hope by his help to show an improvement in this "little farm" from year to year and by putting our limited ability into practice we may learn to become "wise stewards."

Ever praying for the advancement of the church in all its departments,

Your sister in the gospel,

ANNIE J. PARKER.

SNOWER, MICHIGAN, July 6, 1916.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have written a letter for your pages, not because I have been idle, for I never want to be idle, but there are so many others to occupy.

We are still holding our Sunday school in the old Brown Schoolhouse; and Brethren Heriman, Gombridge and Guy, of Snover and Shabbona have meetings every Sunday evening.

While at our district conferences and two-day meetings where they serve meals, I see our good sisters serve meat. I was wondering if our dear sisters knew they were putting a temptation before their brethren and sisters.

Now when the Lord gave us the Word of Wisdom I believe he knew what he was saying, and if we would like to please him we would only eat meat in times of winter and famine as we haven't had a famine we should use it only in cold, and sparingly.

Suppose we are keeping the Word of Wisdom at home, then go to a two-day meeting or conference and the meat is before us. We haven't had any for some time, so we think a little won't hurt us, and we indulge. Have we pleased our Savior? Then would we or could we expect the blessings we would get if we pleased him? When we come together in unity and love we can expect blessings.

As an example, the wild and fierce animals of the forest eat meat mostly. I knew a young man not of the church, who would not eat meat as he said it made him bad-tempered and he wanted to fight when he ate meat. I think we would all rather be mild than fierce.

I have demonstrated to my own satisfaction that tea, coffee and meat are hurtful to the health. While my own system is sensitive to those things and I feel the effects, I think it would also weaken the more hardy and make them a prey to sickness. How many have felt the twinging pains of rheumatism? Meat causes more rheumatism, I believe, than anything else.

Some might think it hard to serve a good meal without meat, but at present prices for meat, the same money put in fruit, such as oranges, bananas, or canned goods would serve more and be healthier, and make us happier because we would know we had pleased our God, also when we feast less on the earthly we can feast more on the heavenly.

Hoping I hurt no one's feelings and that this will be received as it has been given, in the spirit of love, and ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Your sister and well-wisher in the gospel,
MRS. E. G. MAXWELL.

LEICESTER, ENGLAND, July 10, 1916.

Editors Herald: We would be pleased to let all our friends know, through the HERALD, that we are still holding on to the truth, though many times we find it uphill work. We still believe our cause has the approval of God. Our branch still meets together every Sunday and holds forth the truth. Several of our young men have been claimed to do service for the country. We pray our heavenly Father to watch over them, and return them to our meetings again. We are sorry over this terrible war. We hope it will soon come to an end. We try to be patient and calm in our feelings, knowing that our Father in heaven is watching over us. The outcome of it all may be to open the way for the gospel message, when many will be gathered out of all nations, and so make ready a people to receive Christ when he returns to earth.

We all trust our Brethren May and Greene will have a safe passage to this land.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
WILLIAM ECCLESTONE.

WOODBINE, IOWA, July 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: Will you allow me a little corner in the HERALD to express my unfeigned thanks to the many friends who have so kindly remembered me on the ninetieth anniversary of my birth? No, I cannot give expression to my gratitude! but I want to show my willingness to do so. But how can I thank God who has enabled me to live so as to have been in any degree a blessing to others, so as to lead them to express their approval of my feeble efforts and their loving remembrance of the same? I pray God to help me live so that my life may be as heavenly incense to him, that I may meet (I will not say merit) his approval when my life's work here is closed.

Again I thank the dear Saints for their brotherly and sisterly love. It strengthens an old man's heart, and assures him that love is not banished from earth, if one half is bound with hatred's iron chains!

Gratefully yours,
CHARLES DERRY.

KIMBALL, NEBRASKA, July 22, 1916.

Editors Herald: A debate was held on church propositions from July 10 to 16, at Bushnell, Nebraska, between Elder Alvin Knisley and a Mr. O'Neal. All passed off very smoothly, O'Neal having about the same rehash and our worthy brother commanding the same good spirit that attends the faithful. The powers of darkness cannot successfully oppose such work.

Our church and its beliefs were assailed with some of the purported testimony of Joseph Smith's wives, but when our brother showed that all of this testimony bore the stamp of Brighamism, and could not be supported, I believe O'Neal felt it.

Our congregation was composed of all classes of people. Those that seemed to rejoice the most were about twenty of our new members. All feel strengthened in the work. We have never seen a greater outlook for the outpouring of the Spirit, and we all rejoice in the victory. The good seed sown is already germinating, and we perhaps shall reap a harvest later. We have lost nothing, but believe we shall gain much. One young lady has asked for baptism. She is a very prominent member in the Presbyterian Church. I am glad that we as a church have such able defenders of the cause.

I would like to say to all of like faith, let us make a greater effort in trying to keep the full law, that our noble brethren on the firing line may go forth unhampered, and spread the gospel to the world, rather than being hindered by the unrighteous living of the members.

As a branch we are still growing, though young, and greatly scattered over several counties, making us drive twenty to thirty miles each Sunday. We all expect to go over to Wyoming next Sunday, which will cause the writer to drive one hundred and thirty miles. We all have automobiles, so it does not take long to cover the ground. We expect to meet with Brother Knisley on his homestead. We are a happy people and enjoy ourselves, and hope to go on to perfection.

Brother Stubbart has been with us, and acted as chairman in the debate. He has now left for other parts of his field.

Ever praying for the triumph of the truth,

Your brother,
H. H. ROBINSON.

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN, July 22, 1916.

Editors Herald: We have just closed an excellent conference at Port Huron for the Eastern Michigan District. The attendance was good and interest excellent. We tried street preaching as an aid to interest in the conference, and on Friday evening Elder J. F. Curtis spoke to a crowd of about two hundred people, of which a goodly number followed to the services at the church.

On Saturday evening while Elder Richard Weaver was preaching to a crowd of about two hundred and fifty, a Salvation Army band came along and tried hard to drown "poor Dick's" voice. But he stayed with it and finished his sermon, winning applause from the audience. It surely must have been mortifying to the intruders. Of course we had the crowd on our side, even though they were of the world. Men like to see fair play. When we use a little wisdom in our street work we almost always get them with us. Treat other people fairly and squarely, no matter how they try to hurt us and the work we represent. The good people will see this and will be on our side nearly every time. A little persecution now and then helps to advertise—let it come; we can meet it and win out.

In the prayer services the Saints manifested an excellent interest in prayers and testimonies, and comforting words were given to the Saints through the Spirit of the Lord.

The reorganization of the Michigan quorum of elders into two quorums will perhaps be of much benefit to the eldership in the districts concerned.

We are pleased to note the activity of the women of the district in their organization, and note the excellent trend of the discussions had by them.

At each evening's service on the street there was a good attendance, growing larger each time, and we feel that it was an excellent aid to the interest in the conference.

H. L. MACPHERSON,
J. G. GRICE, Press Committee.

GALES FERRY, CONNECTICUT, July 23, 1916.

Editors Herald: Our HERALD came yesterday, and last evening I read it with interest. Allow me a few words concerning the subject of our young men going to the front, and the arguments sometimes used in an effort to justify them. The commands of our God, as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3, read:

"For I have decreed in my heart, said the Lord, that I will prove you in all things whether you will abide in my covenant even unto death that ye may be found worthy; for if ye will not abide in my covenant ye are not worthy of me! Therefore renounce war and proclaim peace, and seek diligently to turn the hearts of their children to their fathers and the hearts of the fathers to the children."

The fifth paragraph plainly commands the Saints not to fight or endeavor to get even with anyone who may smite them or their families, but bear it patiently, even the second and third times. And if our enemies come against us the fourth, we having warned them in God's name not to come against us or our children, then (and only then) are we justified in even defending ourselves. And God said that even if they come against us the fourth time and we spare them, he will reward us for our righteousness (which we manifest in still not retaliating).

The sixth paragraph reads something like this: And again this is the law that I gave unto mine ancients that they should not go out unto battle against any nation, kindred, tongue or people, save the Lord commands them. And if any nation, tongue, or people should proclaim war against them, then they should first lift up a standard of peace unto that people, nation or tongue, and if that people did not accept the offering, neither the second or third time, they should bring these testimonies before the Lord. Then (and only then) the Lord would give unto them a commandment and justify them in going out to battle. And the Lord would fight their battles and their children's battles and their children's children's until they had avenged themselves on all their enemies to the third and fourth generation. "Behold this is an ensample unto all people, saith the Lord your God, for justification before me."

But perhaps some brother may say, "Doesn't the Book of Covenants also say he that keepeth the law of God hath no need to break the constitutional law of the land?"

Most certainly it does, but our Constitution says that every man may worship according to the dictates of his own conscience.

Before the War of the Rebellion it was a crime to harbor or give food to a poor black man who had run away from a heartless master. And in the days of Daniel it was a crime for him to pray looking towards Jerusalem. And the three Hebrew children broke the law of the land and braved the fiery furnace because like Peter of old, they feared God rather than men.

A few years ago my old Uncle Noah Whipple was summoned to court as a witness. He was a powerful man of great stature, with a commanding personality and a voice like many waters. When it came time for him to testify the judge said, "Mr. Whipple, hold up your hand and be sworn." But his hand didn't go up. A second time the judge commanded him to hold up his hand and be sworn. Then Uncle Noah towering above them, and in tones that filled them with awe, said, "Judge, the Scriptures say 'Swear not at all.' Whom shall I obey, God or man?"

The judge said, "We will take this man's testimony."

Now brethren, this war and tumult in Mexico was primarily caused because the common people have been and are being exploited by a lot of rich men and corporations, Villa himself being one of those who is being wronged.

A year or so ago he was honored and called General Villa. His greatest ambition was to see every one of his Mexican brethren have a little cabin, a piece of land, and a cow. As he began to see a change in Carranza's policy, he like Bryan, pulled out, and still fought on for his ideal. He longed for us to recognize him and his followers as the de facto government, but instead we recognized Carranza and tried to keep arms and ammunition from reaching Villa. We had no trouble with Villa until we practically turned him down.

Our honorable President, in a recent speech, mentioned how a lot of rich gentlemen were exploiting the Mexican people, and said he shouldn't help them by making war against Mexico.

God said we were to lift up a standard of peace three times, and after that we are to wait for him to give the command and fight the battle for us.

I write this not for controversy, but that it may help some wavering mind to arrive at a righteous conclusion.

With love and fellowship to all called to be Saints, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

NORWALK, CONNECTICUT, July 23, 1916.

Editors Herald: We want information concerning the following members. If any members knowing their whereabouts will kindly inform me, it will be greatly appreciated: Rumak Vincent, born August 30, 1838; Mary T. Calvin, born August 11, 1868; Marion W. Pierce, born May 4, 1857.

HOMER BUTTERY.

NAVAJO, MONTANA, July 23, 1916.

Editors Herald: As I feel just a little lonely to-night, I thought I might feel comforted by writing a short letter to the HERALD which I enjoy so much.

Sometimes when we feel forgotten and we read some of the letters in the HERALD from dear Saints in more secluded parts, we feel that we should not complain, but become more active in our service for the Master who did so much for us.

We have a Sunday school of thirteen baptized members, and a total of thirty, nearly all being in the primary grades, and we feel the lack of wisdom to train such tender plants, so that they may become strong and able to help carry on the good work.

Elder Snuggins, from near Outlook, comes out once a month and administers the sacrament and we feel more encouraged by his visits, but it would be grand if we could only have some one stationed here to lead us on.

Brother Tutty, from Outlook, Brother Rippley and myself attended the conference held at Viceroy, Canada, and we came home much strengthened from the association of the Saints, and their fine sermons and prayer meetings. I would judge with my inexperienced eye that there were two hundred in attendance. It was the first time I ever attended a conference, and trust that I may be permitted to attend many more, and I would advise any who feel weary and downhearted, to mingle more with the Saints, and ask for their prayers, which I feel now are much availing.

I ask your prayers that I may be given strength to do my part in a way that is pleasing to my Master, and that I may endure to the end.

Your sister in the gospel,

NELLIE DECK.

RIVERTON, IOWA, July 24, 1916.

Editors Herald: I thought a few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard might interest some of our readers. I went to Adel, Iowa, to visit the scenes of my boyhood, where my parents died, and to visit mother's grave. I had a good visit. On both cars and autos I distributed tracts, and also did some private preaching. I saw one man who bought a Book of Mormon from me when I was there three years ago. He likes the book. I think an elder could do good here, and could get the people out to hear him. Our branch has started to hold Sunday school and branch meetings.

It is almost too hot to write, as the thermometer registers one hundred in the shade.

That the work may move onward, is my prayer.

L. C. DONALDSON.

KIRKSVILLE, MISSOURI, July 24, 1916.

Editors Herald: We are still at work and still in the "Land of Zion." Our tent meeting at Macon, Missouri, commencing June 4 and ending July 2, was a success, the attendance averaging at least, sixty at each service.

Brother John Ely and I began the meetings and did the brunt of the work, but Brother J. F. Mintun came up from Bevier and gave us four good sermons. The audience seemed to appreciate them as well as we.

The Saints of Bevier came to our aid both financially and by attending occasionally, coming by auto truck—two score or more at a time—and when we were giving a "get-acquainted social" came not only in a body—two truck loads—but contributed the main body of cake that went with the cream, also contributing to the program their full quota. It is a joy to be associated with such coworkers in the gospel.

Two were baptized here and one child blessed, and more are "near to the kingdom." We hope to go back there for more work this fall or winter, meanwhile the local brethren of Bevier are looking after that point, under the district presidency, I believe.

The local papers there, Herald and Times-Democrat, dailies, treated us very liberally, giving us space for news of our activities in each issue.

The result of the donations made us by the Saints of Bevier, Macon, Higbee, and other points in the district, together with one collection taken each week, and fifteen dollars cleared in our social, met the expense of the tent at Macon and paid the way to this point.

We have only a few Saints here, but Sister Reeseaman and Sister Turner and husband financed the tent to the extent of paying for the rent of lot and lighting expenses, so we put the canvas church upon High and Jefferson streets and commenced our meetings July 7.

Brother Ely was at Independence, Missouri, when we did this, going home for the Fourth, but Brother and Sister S. A. Burgess were with us, so we did not lack for help, either in the manual or mental work.

As Brother Sam could be with us only from July 5 to 17, inclusive, we used him as the speaker as many times as he would consent, willingly, to occupy. He spoke for us eight times in all (giving us of his usual excellent discourses, helpful for all and especially for those who may have been troubled by the specious pleas of infidelity. As for Sister Burgess (our daughter Alice), it seemed like old times to be together in the missionary work once more and to have her help in the music. Her solos and the duets with one or another of the family, including Doctor Charles Chase who came in for the two week-ends they were here, also the quartets by the Chase family seemed to be very much appreciated by our audiences, as also were the solos given by Doctor Charley.

Sister Burgess stayed with us till the 21st, so we had a little more of her than we could otherwise, but the parting time came at last and was just as hard as usual. The night of the 20th, at the close of the service she held a reception (not on the advertized program), for the ladies crowded around her to express their appreciation of the music and to wish her "Good-by and Godspeed."

Brother John Ely came in from Independence the 15th and is taking his share of the work as usual. He is a willing, careful worker; it is a pleasure to be associated with him in this campaign.

At the commencement of our campaign here we used our hektograph and printed notices of our tent meetings on the margin of a thousand "Angel Message Tracts, number 1, What did Jesus Preach" and put them in the doors and porches of the houses here, also secured entry to the two dailies, writing up the notices of our meetings each day.

Two of our local ministers took occasion to advertise us the first Sunday as Mormons, but we had a talk with them and both agreed to set the matter right the following Sunday. In the meanwhile I gave a lecture on Mormonism, July 13. The tent was full and as many standing or sitting on the outside.

Of course we took pains to know what kind of apologies were made for this misrepresentation of us and our work. One minister was manly about it and acknowledged his mistake, but the other failed utterly, both in the spirit and in the matter, so we advertized an answer to him the following Tuesday night. That, too, was well attended, though not so largely as the "Lecture on Mormonism." All of these things have served to advertise us here, and we are, I feel, breaking down prejudice. Whether there shall be any immediate additions to the church here, I cannot tell as yet, but some are believing.

Our next point will be at the Menefee Schoolhouse, near Lagonda, Missouri. This is the meeting place of the Menefee Branch, Elder C. W. Miller, president.

We expect to put the tent up there and commence meetings August 6 and continue there till the first Sunday in September. By and with the consent and cooperation of the district officers and local branch, we are extending an invitation to the Saints and friends of this district, also to any others who may so desire, to come and camp with us. We are setting the time of July 19 to 27 for a regular "Old-fashioned camp meeting," so bring your tents and camping outfits and let us spend a week or ten days together. There is plenty of shade and the Saints will make us welcome.

If any can do so, and care for a whole month of outdoor life and evening meetings, they will be welcome to come. For information as to the privileges of pasture, etc., write to Brother C. W. Miller, New Cambria, Missouri, R. F. D. 2, box 50.

Lagonda is in the northeastern corner of Chariton County and is a country store, ten miles south of New Cambria. We will be glad to meet you at this gathering.

Ever working and praying for Zion's redemption,

Your brother in Christ,

A. M. CHASE.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, July 28, 1916.

Editors Herald: Sister B. E. Moyer, of Sacramento, desires the prayers of the prayer union and Saints in behalf of her son Joseph, who has been committed to an asylum. He is now much improved; and while not a member of the church, his mind seems to be occupied with scriptural matter in an inspirational manner.

His mother desires his complete recovery, and that he be led to accept of the gospel and assist in bearing it to the world.

Your brother in Christ,

T. J. LAWN.

2710 D Street.

Extracts from Letters

P. R. Burton writes from Taylorville, Illinois, under date of August 2, 1916: "I can say with pleasure that the hot wave broke here last evening with a cool refreshing rain, which was much needed. The work here is growing, seven being added by baptism Sunday, the fruits of a tent meeting at a near-by town."

News from Missions

Kirtland District

Just a few lines from this part of the vineyard to let you know that we are still at work and interested in the angel message of latter days.

Having been appointed to labor in the Kirtland District, and having purchased a small house and lot and moved here in February, I was glad of the appointment, there being some repairing necessary to be made and I wished to be able to do this without interfering with the Master's work.

Some of the brethren suggested that we try to raise money enough to purchase a tent to be used in the interest of the work in the Akron and Barberton branches. After consulting with the district president, A. R. Manchester, and minister in charge, G. T. Griffiths, the effort was made with grand success, Brother Ernest Bush taking the matter in hand. The Saints here all know when Brother Bush undertakes anything it succeeds. In a few days he had obtained enough to purchase a tent twenty-four by thirty-six feet, and opera seats enough to seat it, three in a tier. Brother Royal Rhoads donated two of the latest improved gasoline air pressure lamps. With these we think we have one of the best equipped tents in use.

We made our first effort here in Barberton, pitching the tent about June 15, and the writer occupying each evening, except Saturday, for four weeks, with the exception of two nights, Brother Griffiths occupying one evening, and Brother Herbert Rhoads the other. During this time six have been baptized. Brother John McCoy baptized one, Brother Rhoads three, and the writer two. All of them are fine people, and we feel they will be a great help to the work here, especially Brother and Sister Weddel, both being talented singers.

At the close of the fourth week, the weather being extremely hot, and the Saints very busy, we thought it best to give them a week's rest, as most of them had been faithful in attendance. So we closed our meeting Sunday night, July 16. During this time the writer preached each evening except two, in the tent, and on Saturday went to Canton, about twenty-four miles distant, and preached in the evening on the street, staying over night and meeting with the Saints there in their Sunday school and social meeting in the forenoon, and at 1.30 p. m. preaching in the park. We have been having good crowds and good interest on the street, and quite a good hearing at the park. Some are becoming interested and making inquiry about the strange doctrine they have been hearing on the street and at the park. Some have begun to come to the church to make further investigation. We always announce the meeting place, 1514 East Tuscarawis Street, and invite the people to church, and then take the street car for Barberton for night services.

So you see we are losing no time in the Master's cause, and my heavenly Father has been blessing me with the best of health and good liberty in presenting the word. My voice has held out well, and have had no throat trouble this summer, as I usually have in my outdoor work. All praise be to his name.

While I have been thus busily engaged in the Master's work, I have done some manual labor also. I have painted my house, dug dirt, hauled and filled in around the house, planted two lots in potatoes and garden stuff, and have been hoeing potatoes, picking potato bugs, carrying water to water the garden, and many other things too numerous to mention. Mr. Editor, if you could see my complexion just now, you would not think I had ever stood behind the sacred desk, but would think I had been behind a plow and in a potato patch all my life. But nevertheless, we have enjoyed it all, and hope to be able to hold out until the potatoes are in the cellar, and the cabbage into kraut, then we will settle down and wear off the tan, leave home for the mission field, and do the best we can.

As ever in gospel bonds,

JAMES C. MCCONNAUGHY.

LAUNDALE, OHIO.

Oklahoma

The church papers become more and more invaluable to all lovers of gospel truth, impressing the thinking mind with the idealism of the choice of the best reading matter, for I feel safe in making the observation that there is none to excel and few to compete with the printed matter in our various church books and periodicals.

Chancing to pick up in my travels, the HERALD for past two weeks, I was delighted to read the spicy letters of the church secretary, Elder R. S. Salyards, touching the reorganization of the Independence and Kansas City Stakes, and the graphical way in which he told us those things for those who were denied participation in such auspicious gatherings.

Upon reading, we almost felt like shouting, laying emphasis upon the amen, to all that was done there, and the beautiful setting, as it appealed to us, accompanied by that Spirit, that gave us the assurance that it was indeed a forward move, viz, the redemption of the Zionie condition.

Leaving home and loved ones (and more than once have we been told we must have got used to it—leaving home—but it is a common experience with all I believe, of the missionary force, we never get used to it, and often after years, it only becomes harder, for after all "home is home,") in the middle of May we came back to our field of labor and have continued since in the following places: Tulsa, Skiatook, Sperry, Terilton, Enid, Reeding, and one day at an El Reno Indian meeting, where we made our maiden effort to that people, Brother W. W. Chrestensen and the writer preached on Saturday, Brother Philip Cook as our interpreter.

Leaving there I went back to Reeding where we had an appointment, and where we are to hold our district reunion, August 16 to 27.

My next stop was at Ripley, where also Brother Aylor joined me, after two days visit and consultation together, with reference to the work, I left for Stroud, but failed to reach there, owing to high waters, so wended my way to Oklahoma City, where for a few days I tried to break the bread of life. While there, pursuant to the action of our late conference and branch, respectively, we ordained Brethren F. W. Kueffer, and Wilson S. Huff, to the office of priest and teacher, R. M. Maloney assisting in the ordinations, thus completing the branch with a full staff of officers. We also baptized two there, and as a branch they are doing very nicely.

June 21 found me at Union Hill Schoolhouse, eight miles from Lexington, where reside Brother and Sister J. W. Balantyne. I held forth for nearly two weeks, with good interest and crowds, resulting in the baptism of Sister Jump, who has passed her seventy-sixth year, having been like one of our members in caring for the elders at her home in Texas, just lacking the regeneration in which she now so much rejoices.

Following this effort I went to a schoolhouse near Washington and stayed at the home of Brother Bledsoe and family, where we had a very enjoyable meeting, baptizing two more, notwithstanding the extreme heat. There, as in some other places, we have found it a little difficult to get as good an interest as we would like, from the fact that it is a very busy season with nearly all. Corn and cotton are looking fine, while the small grain was very light this year.

This finds us on our way to another new opening south from Depew. Prospects are good for the work in this district. We ask the hearty cooperation of the Saints in an endeavor to build up the work. As bishop's agent I shall be pleased to receipt for small as well as large amounts, sent to me at my home address, 1517 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Hopeful of greater success, we are still laboring to see forward movements in this hastening time.

In gospel bonds,
JOSEPH ARBER.

Is thy burden hard and heavy?
Do thy steps drag wearily?
Help to bear thy brother's burden;
God will bear both it and thee.

—Elizabeth Charles.

News from Branches

Independence Stake

Two hundred were present at July 30's sunrise meeting, and Brother Walter Smith was pleased with the hearty response of the young folks. Brother Israel A. Smith joined him in presiding, and among those participating were a goodly number of the younger brothers and sisters. Brother Walter felt the directing of the Holy Spirit, and at this meeting and also in the Sunday school he made a strong appeal to the boys and girls that they might through fasting and prayer awake to a better service. He related a very early experience of his own when fifteen years of age, and a wonderful manifestation of the Spirit was his to enjoy.

The new Superintendent, Brother Davis, is ever ready and alert in making suggestions for improvement in Sunday school work, and we are needing just such live-wire service in all departments of our auxiliaries. The writer has fully realized this fact in her twenty year's work as secretary of the society now called the Woman's Auxiliary.

The morning service was by the president of a college of osteopathy. In the evening the speaker was Brother W. A. Smith. His subject was "Paul before Agrippa."

The Sunshine Band numbering forty, with their genial leader, Sister Fern DeTray, enjoyed a picnic yesterday, and to-morrow the nurses' class with their friends, will take an interesting and enjoyable trip to Leavenworth.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

August 2, 1916.

Miscellaneous Department

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

Saints of Northern California; Attention: We want everyone who possibly can to attend our reunion beginning on the 17th. It will do you good, and we want to meet you and assist you to do what you ought to do to bring forth the fruits of a life in Christ. There are two distinctive parts to life: the material and spiritual, both equal. It is just as necessary to "honor the Lord with your substance" as it was to join the church. Who am I that made man, saith the Lord, that will hold him guiltless that obeys not my commandments?

"Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause [is the gospel a good cause?], and do many things of their own free will . . . for the power is in them wherein they are agents unto themselves."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

Be wise unto salvation. Are there two ways to get salvation? Do we not all want it? Is it not the preeminent thing before which all other things are but secondary? What we want is to all work together. Fear not to do as commanded. The Lord does not ask us to do that which will give us distress. Let us move fearlessly—have faith in God.

If we do not bring forth the fruits of the gospel what will life amount to? If you plant fruit trees and they have no fruit on them, would they be a success? "If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love." How will it be if we do not? "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." (John 15: 10, 14.)

I'll be at the reunion with inventory blanks and receipt books—if the Lord will.

C. A. PARKIN, Bishop Northern California.

579 Fifth Avenue.

Conference Notices

Western Colorado, at Delta, August 26 and 27. All parties expecting to attend either convention or conference, please notify Delta Branch clerk, Mrs. Edna Schmid, on or before the 19th, so she with the committee, can make proper arrangements for board and lodging. Amos T. Higdon, president; M. L. Schmid, clerk.

Western Maine, with Little Deer Isle Branch, August 12 and 13. This is to be an educational or spiritual, and not a business conference. George H. Knowlton, president.

Eastern Colorado, at Wiley, September 2 and 3. Branch secretaries please make reports to me by August 20. Coral E. Willis, secretary, Wray, Colorado.

Convention Notices

Northern California Religio, at Irvington, August 21, 10 a. m. District officers are requested to be present, also every local officer and member that can possibly attend. It will be time well spent. Send reports in now. E. A. Opsal, president, Chico, California; L. Day, secretary, 735 Twenty-first Street, Oakland, California.

Western Colorado Sunday school, at Delta, Friday, August 25, 2.30 p. m. M. L. Schmid, superintendent; Gladys Hubbard, secretary.

Southern Nebraska Sunday school changed from August 11 to September 15, at Lincoln. Henrietta Keller, secretary, Eustis, Nebraska.

Two-Day Meeting

At the Wilmont Schoolhouse, near Vanderbilt, Michigan, August 26 and 27. Trains from north and south will be met Friday afternoon at Vanderbilt on Michigan Central Railroad. An enjoyable time is expected. Fill your lunch baskets and bring them with you. Arthur E. Starks, district president.

Charles E. Erwin Take Notice

J. C. Chrestensen, of Haileyville, Oklahoma, desires to ascertain the whereabouts of Charles E. Erwin and wife. He has important news for them.

Died

SHINN.—Benjamin Franklin Shinn, died June 28, 1916, at Dameron's Hospital, Stockton, California, aged 69 years, 1 month. He had been a sufferer for years. An operation seemed to relieve him, but he died six days after it, passing away peacefully. In his early days he united with the Baptist Church in Missouri, being a native of that State. God's country, he often called it, and talked of returning there. He had for years attended only the Latter Day Saint Church. He was married twice. Leaves wife, Hulda Black-leach Shinn, 3 daughters of his first wife, Mrs. Myrtle Lewis, Mrs. Sadie Davies, and Mrs. Pearl Markle. He enlisted in the Civil War March 2, 1865, at Trenton, Missouri, and was mustered into service as a private in Company D, 51st Regiment Infantry Missouri Volunteers. He had a G. A. R. funeral and was buried in the G. A. R. plot at Stockton, California.

SCHMIDT.—Henry G. Schmidt, born June 3, 1834, at Baden, Germany; died July 29, 1916, at the home of his daughter, Sister Louise Heckendorf, two miles northwest of Stewartsville, Missouri. He was a faithful Saint, blessed with patient endurance. Six children survive him, 5 sons and 1 daughter, wife and 2 children having preceded him to the better land. Funeral in charge of A. W. Head, sermon by T. T. Hinderks at the Dekalb Church. Interment in Dekalb cemetery.

August "St. Nicholas"

One experiences a sense of exceptional pleasure in looking through and perusing a number of St. Nicholas, a well-edited magazine for young people. To list the many excellent features would take much of our space and then fail to do justice to the magazine. In addition to eight strong stories and articles, the other features include: A further installment of "The boys' life of Mark Twain," by Albert Bigelow Paine; The Watch Tower, Doctor S. E. Forman's review of current events; poems by Carolyn Wells, Robert Emmet Ward, E. L. McKinney (illustrated by Reginald Birch), and others; inset pictures by Lydia Field Emmet, Clifton Meek, L. J. Bridgman, and others; Nature and Science for Young Folks, with five illustrated features; for Very Little Folk; The St. Nicholas League, etc.

FOR SALE

Two acres of fine lying land, all set to young fruit just coming into bearing—new 6 room house, back plastered and finely finished. 2 never failing wells, new hen house 10 x 24. Located on South State St. Bargain for cash. E. F. Hall, Lamoni, Iowa.

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist

in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

FOR SALE

Bakery and Restaurant for sale at a bargain in a town of six thousand doing a large wholesale and retail business also soda-fountain and ice cream. Come and look it over or address Pure Food Bakery & Cafe, Chariton, Iowa. 30-4t

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

THE SAINTS' HERALD

CONTENTS

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.
Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter. Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

EDITORIAL:

A Warning Cry for Our Troops on the Border	-	753
A Warning	-	754
Current Events	-	754
Notes and Comments	-	755
HYMNS AND POEMS	-	755
Mrs. A. E. Cobb—Eliza Caffall.	-

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

Concerning Graceland, by F. M. Smith and B. R. McGuire	-	757
Words, by James E. Yates	-	758
The Call of God, by E. F. Robertson	-	759

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

The World's Greatest Spinners	-	761
THE STAFF	-	761

Ida Stemmer Ruegnitz—Ermina Perkins Kearney.	-
THE CHILDREN'S HOME	-	763
WOMAN'S AUXILIARY	-	764

Ermina Perkins Kearney—Emma B. Burton.	-
LETTER DEPARTMENT	-	767
NEWS FROM MISSIONS	-	773

J. C. McConaughy—Joseph Arber.	-
NEWS FROM BRANCHES	-	774
Abbie A. Horton.	-

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT	-	774
--------------------------	---	-----

Autograph Edition of "Joe Pine"

As a special favor to those who order early, we have induced Brother Elbert A. Smith to help us in issuing an autograph edition of the new book written by him, which is soon to come from our press.

From our first edition we are specially binding two hundred that the author will personally autograph. These will be issued to the first ones who order, until they are gone. No extra charge will be made—they are given as a premium for early orders.

You and your children will especially prize these copies that contain not only this most excellent story, but a real signature of the author. Send $1.25 to-day. We expect to fill the orders some time in August. The first two hundred get these copies.
A. CARMICHAEL, Manager.

Office of the Registrar

The State University of Iowa

Iowa City

July 17, 1916.

President George N. Briggs,

Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear President Briggs:

At a meeting held last week, the Executive Committee of the Faculty of the College of Liberal Arts voted to approve the recommendation that Graceland College be accredited as a Junior College.

Very truly yours,

HCD:GBM

H. C. DORCAS, Registrar.

Graceland College fully meets the requirements of the American Association of Colleges and Universities, thus admitting her graduates to advanced standing in all Colleges and Universities of the United States.

Courses preparing for:

Medicine
Dentistry
Commerce

Law
Engineering
Journalism

Teacher Training and two years of Liberal Arts.

Strong courses in College, Academy, Commercial, Music and Oratory.

Send for catalog to the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, AUGUST 16, 1916

NUMBER 33

Editorial

"WHAT BEHOLDEST THOU?"

When the heavens opened and an angel came down and stood beside Nephi, he was asked by the heavenly messenger: "What beholdest thou?" (1 Nephi 3: 54.)

Nephi not only looked again and again at the wonderful panoramic vision spread out before his eyes, but he was frequently asked to explain his impressions.

It was a wonderful thing to have the veil lifted from his eyes that he might see, but with the seeing came a serious responsibility, the proper discharging of which meant much to generations to follow. Readers of the Book of Mormon will recall how Lehi was shown a vision in which were many wonderful things, yet his account of it was not altogether clear—he evidently only partially understood what he beheld. Later his son Nephi was shown the same scenes, and how different are their accounts. He not only asked to see the same things, but desired the interpretation of them. It was granted. Upon his return to the camp he found his brethren quarreling over the things their father had related. From his experiences Nephi was able to clearly explain and appease their anger. He had so thoroughly understood what he saw that he could clearly elucidate it.

"THIS GREAT SIGHT"

When Moses was keeping the flock of his father-in-law in Midian a strange sight greeted his eyes:

The angel of the Lord appeared unto him in the flame of fire and out of the midst of a bush: and he looked, and, behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed.

This man, skilled in the learning of the Egyptians, was not so wise that he could afford to pass on and ignore this phenomenon. He said: "I will now turn aside, and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt." And with a simple, interrogative attitude, he did turn aside and ascertain not only the non-combustibility of the bush, but that God wanted to use him to deliver Israel from bondage. God required a man with the attitude of interested observance. There were several million slaves in Egypt, among which were perhaps thousands with as good physiques as Moses had. No doubt their eyesight was as strong and their hearing as acute, but the one he chose as their leader had something more than they. A mighty chasm of difference lay between them, so far as availability was concerned. What was it?

A VAST PICTURE

Before the eyes of the world to-day, collectively and individually, is spread a vast picture. Civilization with its modern wonders brings to our view nations in commotion, seas dotted with ships from every land, some carrying monstrous weapons that tear and maim and kill. Rapid transmission brings us news dated earlier than the time our own clocks record. Lightning-like transportation speeds products of every industry and art to our very door. The sea is stirred and we see a submarine emerge, having crossed the vast Atlantic in safety by the ability to travel under water. The air resounds with pulsations and an aeroplane sails by. Hundreds of high-speed methods of conveyance are waiting to serve.

The high-speed presses in a thousand shops are rumbling to spread before our eyes the latest thought and picture from the greatest minds and the most wonderful situations.

It is all-bewildering when we seek to view it as a panorama. There are so many facets to the gem of civilization we are apt to be blinded with its brilliance. Yet should it be so? Shall we not seek to comprehend its strangeness and what it leads to?

Should a heavenly messenger suddenly stand beside us, saying: "What beholdest thou?" what would we say? Is it possible that in our humiliation we would reply as would have befit an Egyptian slave: "I do not know"? Is it possible that having spied a sunbeam of God's intelligent supervision of the universe, we can delude ourselves into believing we bask in his glorious noonday of truth? Are we justified in hiding our heads in the sands of extensive knowledge about us and admitting we comprehend not its insistent message?

"COME UP HIGHER"

Pleadingly and persistently the call of God to his Saints has been to "come up higher." You know what it means to ascend an eminence: Your horizon is extended; limitations are largely relieved; there is an exhilaration not enjoyed before the ascent. Yet there are those who, while ordinarily mentally well-balanced, are obsessed with an insane desire to hurl themselves down from a dizzy height to the ground below.

In seeking to obey the call to come up higher in spiritual, moral, mental, or physical planes, is it to be expected we shall lose our poise and be less useful to our fellow men in doing so? God forbid.

Whether we apply the metaphor literally or figuratively, attainment of great heights should bring exceptional privileges—not privileges to be selfishly used, but to be employed in better serving others.

The privilege that God may give us, then, to perceive all these wonderful culminating events in the world's history brings its natural responsibilities.

Is it not required that we see, and understand and then impart the result of those operations? Surely, God and man could expect nothing less of us.

LEARNING GOD'S MYSTERIES

Ambitious characters are often impatient, almost resentful, at the limitations God places upon them, and the mysterious ways in which he reveals his laws. Yet it is the logical way. We pity the child who frets and worries because his teacher does not tell him outright how to solve his problems. We know the mastery of difficulties by serious personal thought is the only way the child can really and satisfactorily learn.

Yet, the wonder really is that God lets us know so much, seeing the use we put it to. As children of a most wise Father, we must of necessity learn by many laborious processes. Having learned thus, there is no forgetting; it is an inseparable part of our immortal being.

Perusing the peculiarly worded prophecies of the Scriptures, we may wonder, "Why could not God have inspired these men to say the same things definitely and clearly without any chance for misunderstanding?"

He could have. It is feasible but not reasonable. God could supply us with manna and quails and otherwise provided for our physical existence if he cared to, but the edict: "Man shall eat bread by the sweat of his face" has meant much to the development of man. It is as true of our mental and spiritual development—if we may speak of them separately. We must really comprehend, and the mere telling of the facts is not necessarily comprehension.

We understand that into our immortal condition we enter with those things that have become a part of our beings—the real character. We only make our experiences such by serious thought and assimilation.

Let our attitude be: "We have seen strange things to-day," (Luke 5:26), and "I will now turn aside, and see this great sight" (Exodus 3:3).

WHAT DOES SEEING MEAN TO US?

There is a wonderful difference in the impressions of different people in viewing the same sight. One man on seeing the beautiful Yosemite Falls in their magnificent descent marvels at the handiwork of God, and more sincerely reveres his power as revealed in nature and in man. It is an inspiration to that man. Another, upon viewing the same scene, remarks, in monetary sacrilege: "What an awful waste of power. If that were confined to turbines it would light my home city and have pure water enough left to supply every inhabitant." The god he worships is power—expressed in terms of dollars and cents.

A man passes along a street and sees a pure-minded, beautifully formed woman. His mind is inspired with tenderness and solicitude. He thinks of noble women and the great, impelling influence a pure woman is when associated with a good man. Subconsciously he thanks God for such women. Angels rejoice at such thoughts.

Another man may see the same woman and instantly his mind associates her with lewd acquaintances of his. He pictures her in their position. He is incited to evil deeds. The Devil laughs in unholy glee at such meditations.

So it may be in world vision or some trifling problem at our finger tips that we will be required to answer the query: "What beholdest thou?" We may have to answer to multitudes or the innocent child at our knee; to the great Judge of all or to the whisper of an accusing conscience.

LEARNING TO OBEY

One of the requisites in a child's development is obedience. At first he must obey specific injunctions. We state simply definitely what we want and expect a definite response. Too many things at once of a general nature will confuse and hinder. But as he grows older and wiser we say: "You see this piece of work and know how it should be done. I trust your ability and judgment." He enjoys our confidence and by it learns to use his own initiative. Specific directions are only incidental.

The young man or woman who can do the most things well without the necessity of close supervision is the one who is in demand everywhere. It is the ability to see the various aspects of the task and apply his ability and help others do likewise that raises him to the highest eminence the position affords.

Wouldn't the demand we sometimes hear that God state unequivocally what he wants us to know and do, if complied with, be a reversal of the process of learning? Yet if we will learn in no other way it may be it will be required at our hands. We certainly have sufficient written to keep us profitably engaged until new developments arise. The question is, Do we understand sufficiently well what we have? When I read concerning the redemption of Zion should it inspire me to a personal effort or should it say to me: "They ought to be doing something"? If a servant of God in the pulpit or at the fireside vividly outlines to an audience the path of duty, should I feel that I can see it more clearly, or should my attitude be, as we have heard it succinctly expressed, "Give it to them; they need it"?

There are certainly times when we must see the rapid fulfillment of many of the prophecies. Action—intelligent action that comes from mature thought—is required of each of us. Are we ready?

God designs that his people, of all people, shall see what is before them, understand so far as they will seek to, and with his aid extend his gospel by precept and example to the ends of the earth.

May it be so.

E. D. MOORE.

CURRENT EVENTS

HOME RULE DEFEATED.—The reappointment of Baron Wimbourne, as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, indicates at least a temporary check in the realization of home rule in Ireland.

CHILD LABOR BILL PASSES.—On the 8th the Senate passed a bill to prevent interstate commerce in products of child labor. The vote was 52 to 12, and the measure had already passed the House. Action was had at this time upon the insistence of President Wilson.

MEXICAN SITUATION.—Very little has been heard from this source of late. The governments are negotiating for an appointment of a board of commissioners from each to discuss arrangements for a permanent settlement of the difficulties, but as yet nothing definite has been accomplished.

WHEAT SOARS AGAIN.—Following persistent reports of crop losses in the United States and Canada, wheat has taken another upward turn, making a net gain of about fourteen cents a bushel in one day. It was quoted at one dollar and fifty cents a bushel on the Chicago Board of Trade at one time. Flour prices are advanced as much as eighty cents a barrel, and in many cases flour salesmen have been called in because of the rapidly increasing price of flour. The drought and consequent black rust have largely effected the crop shortage. Other cereals are likewise affected, and meat prices are also advanced.

RAILWAY STRIKE IMMINENT.—After about a week of conferences with railway officials, the four brotherhoods of trainmen involved, and the Government arbitration board as the triangle, it is thought at the time of this writing that a favorable settlement is not likely. The workmen refuse arbitration as the Newlands Act now stands, and with a practically unanimous vote of 400,000 railway employees in favor of a strike if necessary, the outlook for a settlement is not bright. It is expected that President Wilson will be appealed to in case a settlement is not effected otherwise.

PARALYSIS PLAGUE CONTINUES.—All records have been broken in New York City with 183 new cases of infantile paralysis in one day and 57 deaths. The Government has appropriated $135,000 to help check the disease, while every energy is being bent in that direction, yet so far without effectual results. The disease seems to be spreading somewhat in the other States. For instance, there are 52 cases in Iowa, 42 in Chicago, and similar numbers elsewhere reported. New York schools will not open until November 1 at least. One of our own large reunions has been postponed to another date because of a case of the disease at the place where the meetings were to be held. Delaware has declared a quarantine against all children under sixteen years of age coming from Pennsylvania, New Jersey, or New York.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Perhaps the most spectacular feature of the week's war events has been the taking of Gorizia by the Italians. This is a strongly fortified position on the northeastern frontier of Italy, and is the key to Triest, one of the principal objective points of the Italian campaign. It is reported that eight thousand prisoners were taken and that following the capture of this point considerable advance has been made beyond it. The allies at Saloniki have begun a drive on the Bulgarian forces in Macedonia, with intense artillery bombardment. It is said that the allies have about 700,000 troops at this point, including 100,000 Serbs. As yet definite details have not been reported. On the 7th a strong attack on the British forces guarding the Suez Canal was made by the Turkish forces, and it was repulsed with heavy losses, said to aggregate 14,000 prisoners and the driving back of the Turks to the distance of some twenty-three miles. The German possessions in German East Africa have nearly all been yielded to British and Belgian forces in that territory. The French retain possession of Thiaumont, after having lost and regained it several times. The attacks in the Verdun region have been furious during the week, with gains seemingly in favor of the French. Along the Somme front the French have taken some important trenches, in some places to the depth of nearly four miles. Air fleets continue to take an active part in the campaign in this region. The British have made some advances beyond Pozieres toward Bapaume. The net gain of the present Russian offensive in Eastern Galicia since the beginning of the drive is said to be sixty-one miles. Lemberg is more seriously threatened by the recent capture of Stanislau, an important point with railways running in five directions, which constitutes a strong base for a Hungarian invasion. It is reported that there are 750,000 Turkish troops aiding the Austrian forces near Lemberg. The Russians have captured a number of villages and have taken many prisoners along the southern end of this line. In the north the Germans have successfully held their ground. British censorship is much less strict of late, and more extensive comments are to be had in German newspapers reaching America.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

DID YOU RESPOND?—In our issue last week were two special calls for literature. The brethren can use it in unlimited quantity and it should be furnished. We noted a pleasing response from the Lamoni Sunday school which we hope was duplicated in dozens of others. It is not too late yet; look up the letters and see if you can help the good work along. Your efforts may be the means of interesting a number of boys and girls in the gospel life, which will make them better men and women. A movement is on foot to coordinate the work of literature distribution by making it a definite part of the church and Sunday school work as well as Religio. It should be so.

FOUND AT LAST.—"Positive Proof" that Mormonism is a fraud and the Book of Mormon a fable. Including a careful comparison of the Book of Mormon with the original Spalding manuscript, which shows twenty-two points of identity! By Reverend J. E. Mahaffey. Price fifteen cents. There you have it. Exhausting every legitimate means of attack there are still sporadic attempts to disinter this old affair that was so effectually buried years ago, it was thought even a hyena wouldn't dig around it. He offers nothing new. It is the same old stale stuff, with his witnesses testifying that the names Nephi and Lehi and Nephites and Lamanites are mentioned. One says, "I find nearly all the same historical matter, names, etc." The book is not worth noticing only that it is so exceptionally glaring in its misrepresentations. A copy of the famous "Manuscript Found," can be had from this office for twenty-five cents if you want to look for these twenty-two points of identity. You will do better than the average if you find any.

THE RIGHTS OF OTHERS.—Sometimes our reunions and other church services are confronted with the problems arising from contagious diseases. While at first thought it might appear that we all have a right to go and come as we please to public meetings, yet when to do so endangers the health and happiness of others, the right ceases to exist. Good sense would indicate as much, yet in addition we have the laws of the land which in many of the States specifically state that those having such diseases as scarlet fever, whooping cough, mumps, etc., shall be debarred from attending public gatherings. At least one reunion that we know of is issuing a rule to this effect so that those who would willfully violate the rights of others may be kindly warned beforehand and save embarrassment. There can be no doubt that it is often a hardship to be thus restricted, but it is a sacrifice we should make willingly when it comes to us. The statement in our Book of Covenants is that "he who keeps the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land." One of the great commandments upon which the minor ones are based is, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

"AUTUMN LEAVES" FOR AUGUST.—It seems too bad that any of our readers should miss the good things to be had in Autumn Leaves. The magazines of the day are valuable—we need them, but we certainly need first the publications our own church puts out. Autumn Leaves has a personality of its own, and personality in anything cannot be expressed. We might give a few hints to suggest it, but by reading and thinking for yourself you will appreciate what we would say if we could. "Called to be an apostle" by E. A. Smith with another excellent chapter. An article on "Shakespeare, the man," by David W. Hopkins; "The same old yarn," a missionary experience by J. W. Wight; "The Hebrew and his heritage," the prize oration at the Graceland College annual contest, by Frank B. Almond, suggest a few features. Then both sides of the woman suffrage question are given by Mrs. D. J. Krahl and E. G. Hammond. Then there is poetry, some selections, the Young Woman's Department, Religio's Arena, and the new Sunday School Department. A big array of good things in every number. A dollar a year brings twelve big numbers.

The more carefully I observed, the more deeply I thought and the more thoroughly I tested alcohol in actual practice, the more firmly I became convinced that it very rarely does any good and very often much harm.—Western Medical Times.

Original Articles

EDUCATION AND INSPIRATION

ARE THEY DIFFERENT?

For many years there has been a misunderstanding among our people in regard to education and inspiration. How much does one need the other? Where do they meet? Is one alone sufficient?

DO CHILDREN LEARN BY INSPIRATION?

When a child is born it is unlearned and uninspired. We believe its spirit came from God who created all, from an inspired atmosphere, yet it will cut, burn, or injure itself with no thought of pain inflicted, and will repeat the act, not comprehending that pain was the result.

So it is watched until its mind has developed enough to receive education. Suppose God sent inspiration to the infant concerning the dangers, could it be used? If so, how? Having no mind developed, through what could the inspiration work?

We have no record of any wonderful demonstration of inspiration by the Christ in his infancy; is it not possible that the Son of God taking upon himself a mortal body must await the maturity of the brain which commences to develop when the child begins to observe? There is an authentic testimony of the wonderful wisdom shown by the Christ at the age of twelve, if there had been any remarkable exhibitions prior to that time would they not be recorded?

Follow the child through the years of development and see how much knowledge is gained by experience, for experience is the greatest teacher. As it discovers it must not touch a hot stove, learns how to walk, to go up and down steps, to feed itself, to build a house of blocks, is it not being educated?

Christ was inspired at the age of twelve. When our children are twelve do we cease to teach them, depending upon inspiration to perfect their education? If not, let us be consistent and be willing to learn from books (thoughts, conclusions, and experiences of others) at any age in life, imploring God's direction in the choice of reading matter.

CAPACITY FOR INSPIRATION

We do not mean to say that the man who has spent twenty-five years in continuous study of books has a greater capacity for inspiration than the man who never learned letters; to the contrary, the book-learned man may readily quote authority upon many subjects and yet have an undeveloped intellect in that when he is asked to express his opinion upon a subject; he will quote some one else, not having reasoned within his own mind and reached a conclusion. It is thinking that develops the intellect.

Take for instance the case of a very young child who was sitting on the floor watching shadows flit across a patch of sunlight. After a while he looked at mamma and pointed repeatedly to the smoke rising from the chimney of the house next door, and then to the shadow. That child had thought and started his intellectual development. Without schooling he would become a thinker, perhaps like unto the fishermen chosen by our Master. In the silent watches of the nights as they tended their nets, could they not have pondered upon the laws that governed the solar system and all creation; the life, nature and habits of the fish; the happenings of the day, thereby studying the social problems of their times, recognizing the injustice of conditions, realizing the great need of the poor for sympathy, comfort, advice and help, thus developing their power to observe reason, and think? while many of the so-called educated Pharisees passed all such unseen and missed these golden opportunities?

BROADMINDEDNESS

There are many people all about us who never think deeply. A white-haired elder was boasting once, saying a woman was of no significance, counted nothing in genealogy; and referred to the method in the Bible and in England of the tracing from father to son. When he had nearly finished he was asked, "How was Christ of the seed of Abraham and of the house of David, since God was his father?" This man was a thinker, but not broad-minded; allowing his personal ideas to blind him.

Many of us have met narrow-minded, bigoted, walking encyclopedias, but they do not represent education.

The broad-minded man is one who realizes that there are many fields of learning over which he has not traveled; but he does not belittle them as does the illiberal man, because he has not seen their beauty.

How can we become broad-minded? No human being, be he ever so ignorant or illiterate, can obey the gospel of Christ, have his Spirit as an abiding Comforter, living the gospel principles, thereby becoming worthy of receiving a daily portion of it, without becoming educated.

LEARN THE WAYS OF OTHERS

If circumstances will permit, mix with people, meet their inner selves, listen to their troubles, patiently, sympathetically and lovingly, thereby learning the working of the human mind and working yours overtime trying to find a helpful thought that will suit that stage of development. You will see at work the laws that mold characters, broaden your knowledge of life and man. Let people learn to trust you with their sorrows. Sometimes one is so overburdened it is necessary to tell some one but guard all confidences as sacred trusts. Personal contact with the souls of human beings is as great a source of knowledge of life and its workings as travel is of countries and customs.

The Bible tells us we are to learn and develop until we come to the fullness of the stature of Christ. We may be specialists but we must be broad-minded. We may have no knowledge of botany and have no natural desire to study along that line, but we would be narrow-minded indeed to think the study a waste of time. Knowing nothing of it, how could we judge wisely? We criticize our opponents for unjustly judging us when they know nothing about us.

THE LITTLE THINGS

Never lose an occasion to learn. If circumstances hinder you from procuring a scholastic education, watch carefully for the lessons of each day. Not all miners have found large nuggets, but many have become rich by perseveringly gathering tiny specks found in the midst of worthless dirt. If they had sought only nuggets, they would never have accumulated the sacks of gold dust. Anyone painstakingly gathering gold dust is certain to appreciate and grasp a nugget.

Several years ago I knew a young lady who had nearly finished public school. She was the daughter of an earnest, zealous man who held the Melchisedec priesthood, had been sent to Sunday school regularly from childhood, and when asked how Christ died, said, haltingly, "I don't know." When asked if it was typhoid fever, a railroad accident, or what? again drawled, "I don't know." On the other hand there are some men and women of renown who, with less opportunity, have by determination and perseverance gleaned an advanced education.

Many of us have met elderly people who were crude and quaint in their manner of speech, which plainly said they had always dwelt among the extremely poor and unlearned, yet they commanded our respect and admiration because of the words of wonderful wisdom that flowed from their lips.

INTERWEAVING INSPIRATION AND EDUCATION

The gospel being the grandest, truest topic we can produce, interwoven as it were, with the brilliant and effective language the learning of the world can produce, interwoven as it were, with the brilliant thread of inspiration. If it were all inspiration, it would dazzle those unaccustomed to its splendor and thus only a blaze would be seen, conveying no instruction or helpfulness,—only a phenomenon. If that same inspiration is interwoven with an unclean, uneven thread, would not the wretchedness of the material be more apparent? Is not this glorious gospel worthy of the best in us—even in our language.

Education, commonly speaking, is knowledge acquired from any source other than divine; be it by conversation, meditation, observation, reasoning or reading.

Inspiration is the Holy Ghost quickening and illuminating the human mind. "It shall bring to your remembrance the things I have told you. Take the things of the Father and reveal them unto you."

"THROUGH WHOM CAN I SPEAK?"

Several years ago my mother was very ill. Three weeks before her death, I dreamed it was Sunday and mother was dying. Then I passed through a severe ordeal, nothing seeming clear until Tuesday night, and I stood on the porch and said to myself: It is Tuesday and mother is gone. I awoke, thought about it, fell asleep and dreamed exactly the same again, awoke and meditating, concluded when she did die it would be on Tuesday. I slept and dreamed a third time. Sunday evening I was told over the phone that she had been dying all day Sunday and they did not think she would live until morning, so I hastened to her. At five o'clock Monday morning I was sure a few minutes would bring about the end. Being alone with her, I told the Lord how I had spent years trying to understand when I received information from him and when from intuition or by the laws of natural ability. I had done my best, and had thought those dreams meant something, they came so straight. Now Sunday was passed and she could not last until Tuesday. I felt rebellious and then while sitting by mother, I saw myself standing in front of myself holding a beautiful white lily, carelessly flipping it back and forth, bumping it upon objects. Sometimes I looked at it rather carefully, then tenderly smoothed its petals. Suddenly my senses were quickened and I saw what an exquisite, tender blossom it was and I wondered that I had not utterly destroyed it in my ignorance of its delicacy. As I stroked the petals, my human hand seemed like a saw, so coarse and rough. There seemed to be an exquisitely white, milky fluid held in the form of the lily by the finest and thinnest skin. A voice said: "You have thought unto yourself, this was a gift given unto you by the laws of nature, but verily I say unto you, it is not so. It is a rare and precious gift, given unto you of the Father. You must study its nature, the laws governing it, how to care for and use it." After a pause the voice said, "Through whom can I speak?" Then before me was placed a sieve, covered with a red cloth. Into this was poured beautiful, sparkling, clear water, but it came through pink. Then a blue cloth was placed over the sieve and more of like water which came through colored. Then a white cloth was put in place of the blue and the water remained clear.

Does not this explain itself? If our brains are not educated or developed and our hearts not pure, the pure inspiration of God cannot pass untainted through us.

A WISE USE OF OUR TIME

Since life is short we must use our time wisely. In seeking education we need inspiration to direct us, and cannot afford to spend several years chasing something, only to learn it is a bubble. Again, without inspiration we cannot be sure of always keeping our feet within the narrow path; wisely meeting the advanced thoughts of many of the writers of to-day, with their accompanying force; seeing much that is superior to the average, we may ourselves fail to detect the undercurrent of harmfulness, choose the beautiful and true and leave the rest; why should we read such books? They are here; thousands are reading them; you meet a good soul being led astray by that undercurrent while he is grasping after the better part; can you help him if you do not know the other person's line of argument?

Much of Ralph Waldo Trine's writings is fine if it is viewed always through the knowledge of the gospel, but he writes, "open unreservedly to the voice." Personal experience has taught me that procedure is not safe.

"LET ME SEE"

My hobby is studying spiritual things. About eight years I wished very much to know something and had prayed and prayed for knowledge. I thought, I will be like Jacob, in that I will wrestle until I get the knowledge I seek. Hours passed and as I was intently concentrating, hurling my soul against the power of space, I was saying, "Let me see; let me see." A voice at my right and a few feet above me in the darkness, said, "See? of course you can see whatsoever you desire." Instantly I detected it to be from Satan.

I said, "No, sir, I want to see very much, but if my Father does not wish to show me I refuse to allow you to do so." If my desire had prevailed I would have become subject to his power, to some degree at least, perhaps forever.

AS WELL WITHOUT THE SPIRIT?

I once knew an influential missionary who said he could preach a good sermon without being conscious of any of the Spirit; he left the impression that if one had his subject well in hand, he could do as well without as with the Spirit; forgetting that inspiration assisted him in understanding the Scriptures, formulating the array of argument getting the subject in hand. Soon he began to slip into the background from active service and now we are grieved that so bright a light sheds its rays upon us no more. Is God trying to teach him that man of himself is nothing? No man be he ever so talented can effectually preach the gospel of Christ without the help of the inspiration of God's spirit.

A short time ago a very bright young lady in her senior year in high school exclaimed, at the close of a half-hour talk by a woman, of things not learned in books, "I feel as if I know nothing when I hear her talk." Can we not learn booklore is good but not sufficient. We need it; in fact in the world of to-day we must have it, because our lives are not long like Adam's or Methuselah's, stretching out over hundreds of years, allowing us time to learn most things by methods other than reading. To-day ten men spend their entire life studying one science. Each writes the conclusions he has reached, then one man studies their works and gives to us in book the best ideas gathered from the life work of those ten men. Why not take advantage of this?

NEED OF HUMAN AID AS WELL

A few years ago Brother Kelley wrote in the HERALD calling to our young men to offer their services to the church for a couple of years before marrying. When urged to offer himself, a young priest held back because of lack of liberty of speech. His morals and appearances were above reproach; his language was good, but not fluent. The Spirit spoke and told him in time God would loosen his tongue and he should preach with power and much assurance. At the time I saw beyond him a golden cloud in the midst of which was a green slope upon which were gathered two or three hundred people (I did not notice their color) listening spell-bound to this same young priest preaching with power and fluency from the flexible Bible placed upon a crude, temporary stand. He sent his name to General Conference and was appointed to go with an older man. In about three months he was recalled at the request of the older man.

He offered no explanation on returning home, so I said, "Did he not coach you?"

He unwillingly replied, "He did not."

"Did not he help you study or to formulate your material?"

"No."

"Do you mean to tell me he read and studied by himself and left you to do the same?"

"I never saw him read or study."

"How did he put in his time?"

"Oh! walking, talking, eating, sleeping."

At Lamoni, I met a woman who was from that district. She said as a man the people liked the priest better, only the older man was a more gifted speaker. If that man had had some inspiration, he would have helped the lad, and not have sent him home because he did not "bloom" over night.

GIVE ROOM TO THE SPIRIT

It is our privilege to have a portion of his Spirit with us most of the time. If this is the case we may by unquestioningly obeying its still small voice become a master of psychology or logic and be ignorant of the fact, knowing none of the known laws of either. There are no heights to which we may not climb, but we have no time or energy to waste in anger, envy, criticism, hatred, or jealousy; no place in our brains in which to hoard the memory of unkind words or acts. True, some of the strongest of these have left scars, but even a scar grows dim with time if it is left alone. Of course if we repeatedly scrape off the new skin the scar becomes deeper. Don't cause God's laws of inspiration to spend years trying to get your brain cells healed and cleaned of rubbish that it may find room in which to work. Don't let the little sore eat deeply. We must forgive all men for everything. God will forgive whom he will and will forgive us as we forgive others.

Why bless your heart, if we bear abuse, ridicule, condemnation, or sarcasm without retaliation or explanation, we are being educated, developing a calm, serene patience that realizes, "Water will find its level." "He that serveth me in secret him will I reward openly." No one can permanently injure us but ourselves.

If inspiration is with us it will lead us to overcome the use of slang, as a man must give account for every idle word. Truth and accuracy will develop within us. Our desire to be truthful will make us accurate in saying just what we mean or hear. The sense of justice will grow within us when we try to do unto others as we wish to have them do unto us. We will not be tale-bearers since they cause contention and Satan is the author of contention, also, "Blessed is the peacemaker." We will not slander our neighbor because we will be very busy trying to love him as ourselves. We will not be proud of worldly goods, because they were either given to us by our parents or by God in that he gave us health, strength, and ability to earn and save; of our talents or genius, since they are God's gifts without which we would be like others; nor of our education, which was made possible by our financial condition or because of a thirsting for knowledge powerful enough to surmount every obstacle. Nor will we be vain of our church positions which are dealt us by God's direction, by reason of our natural fitness or qualifications, accompanied by righteous desires, knowing many a member's life and work is just as worthy.

We will have charity because we will be honest enough to own we do not overcome all our weaknesses in a few weeks. We will become orderly, because "order is heaven's first law"; clean, because, "cleanliness is next to godliness."

BOTH ARE ESSENTIAL

In conclusion let us caution that all the education in the world cannot fill the place of inspiration, while inspiration in the true sense will compel one to become educated. One may have an abundance of education and not a particle of inspiration, but it is impossible to have an abundance of inspiration and no education. Since one cannot receive inspiration without a degree of education, is it not logical to conclude the greater amount of intellectual development the greater capacity for inspiration?

LAURA HARRINGTON.

* * * * *

TYPES WORTHY OF STUDY.—PART 1

BY GUSTAVE ERICKSON

THE TABERNACLE

What lone, mysterious abode is this,
Surrounded by a wall of spotless white;
By day an altar in the wilderness,
A silent watcher on the plain by night?

Who dwells within its consecrated veil,
To secular and alien feet denied?
Who answers, when the priest, white-robed and pale
Sprinkles the blood by "bulls and goats" supplied?

Think you that He of name omnipotent
Required for naught these oft-repeated rites,
Or gratified mere vanity by scent
Of incense, 'broided robes and altar lights?

Nay, verily! The curious tapestries,
The vessels wrought of silver, copper, gold,
The ceremonious modes of sacrifice,
All "better things" of gospel times foretold.

And happy he whose reverent gaze discerns
What types and shadows could but dimly trace:
His offering on the golden altar burns,
He solves the mysteries of the "holy place."

Upon the blood-stained mercy seat he reads
Atonement sealed by him who went before,
And from the open heavens the Father speeds
The riches of his love and grace to outpour.

—F. B. Hennings.

God took Moses up on the mount and gave him an illustration of the manner in which things were to be made. "See," saith he, "that thou makest all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount." (Hebrews 8:5; Exodus 25:40.) In order that the types might all be exactly performed, the usual penalty for any violation was death. (Exodus 25: 43; Leviticus 10: 12.) A realization of God's care in guiding and directing all the details ought to lead us to examine closely and search carefully for the meaning of those types.

At Sinai, where it was given, we see Israel's camp. Let me picture before you, that the camp you see represents the condition of the world of mankind in sin, needing atonement and desiring it and its blessings, however indistinctly it shows its cravings and groanings, as expressed by Paul, in Romans 8: 19, 22, "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now, waiting (though in ignorance) for the manifestation of the sons of God."

The camp of Israel surrounds the tabernacle and its court on all sides at a respectful distance. As we approach from the camp to the "holy place" we notice that there is but one "gate" to enter the "holy place," or court; the type thus testifying that there is but one way of access to God—one gate; Jesus. "I am the way. . . . No man cometh unto the Father but by me." "I am the door." (John 14: 6; 10: 9.) The court, the justified condition of the believer, is entered by the three first principles of the six mentioned in Hebrews 6: 1, 2; faith, repentance from dead works, and baptism in water, a true picture of the spiritual condition of the disciples of John the Baptist. Those who wish to experience a change of nature, and become partakers of the divine nature, have to comply with the principles in full, which of necessity includes, as Paul continues in the last-mentioned scripture, the laying on of hands by an authorized person for the reception of the Holy Ghost. Yet, into this condition, also, we still come through Christ Jesus our Lord, who not only opened for us the "gate" of justification through faith in his blood, but who also opened the door (the first veil) unto the tabernacle, a new way of life.

Hence the two apartments of the tabernacle, the holy and the most holy, represented two stages of the new life to which we are begotten by the Holy Spirit. "The holy" represented the present condition of those begotten of God through the word of truth. (James 1: 18.) These, as heavenly-minded "new creatures," though still in the flesh, "have their real (inner) life" and walk with God within the first veil of consecration, and beyond the intellectual sight of the world and the unconsecrated believers. These enjoy the inner light of "the golden candlestick" while others are in outer darkness. These eat of special spiritual food, represented in the unleavened bread of presence, and offer incense at the golden altar, acceptable through Christ Jesus.

"The most holy" represented the perfect condition of the saints, who, faithful unto death, gain the great price of our high calling, through a share in the first resurrection. (Revelation 20: 6.) Then, beyond both veils the fleshly mind and the fleshly body, they will possess glorious spiritual bodies. The Saints in the condition of the holy by faith look forward through the next "veil" into the "most holy," catching glimpses of the glory, honor and immortality beyond the flesh; which hope is an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, entering into that which is beyond the veil. (Hebrews 6: 19.) And if we would actually enter through the "holy" into the "most holy" we must follow our "leader and head, the high priest of profession, i. e., the high priest of our order of priesthood—the royal priesthood." (Hebrews 3: 1.)

Having complied with the first principles as stated in Hebrews 6: 1, 2, and followed the advice of Paul in Romans 12: 1 of a full consecration, we have passed the veil of human-mindedness—counting the human will as dead, henceforth not consulting it, but the will of God only, and seeking first the interest of the kingdom of God, that his will may be done on earth as it is in heaven.

As the passing of the first veil represented the death of the human will, so the passing of the second veil represented the death of the human body, and both are needed to complete our sacrifice. Both fleshly mind and fleshly body must be left behind before we can enter into the "holiest of all" perfected as partakers of celestial bodies: for flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. (1 Corinthians 15: 50.)

(To be continued.)

Of General Interest

THE CRIME PROBLEM

Whose is the crime problem? It seems to me that problem and the responsibility to solve it lies equally with the home, the schools, the churches and the civic body.

The crime problem is, first of all, a family problem. By training, by culture, children develop into almost any kind of adult the training will produce.

The first teacher is the parent. Like parent like child, and the finished product, the man or woman. The parent can direct the child pupil to almost any desired attainment. The great trouble is that so very many parents want a superior man or woman from the child with the least effort on their part in training. The child will learn from some one. Eyes and ears being open, he will see and hear what is produced within their range. Who is to determine what shall be seen and heard? It should be the parent, till the child is past the critical age. It was allowing good dog Tray to run just anywhere with just any kind of dogs that got him into trouble.

Many men and women who to-day fill our penal institutions got their initial lessons in crime from the careless or criminal teachings of fond parents.

Parents, both father and mother, should be the real chums of their children, keeping their confidence by living true lives themselves and by loving correction instead of harsh punishment.

Then there should be a link reaching out to and meeting with the school. The teachers need the support of parents in order to get the best moral results from the pupils. Too many parents are turning over to the teacher the moral training of the child, and without even telling her they have done so. The child usually gets his lessons on morals from other sources than either parent or teacher, and then we wonder why they are not perfect men and women.

Linked with the home and the school in the effort to bring to perfection and preserve a safe man is the church. Each of these should be actively engaged in this work from the infancy of the child to full manhood. The powers of evil are ever at work, and not one day should be lost. Denunciation and cruel treatment do not effect cures. Boys and girls do much the same as they see their elders do. If parents do not have time for the better things of life, how can we expect children to have a healthy appetite for such?

With the home, the school and the church functioning as they should and can, it becomes a simple and easy task for us to administer justice. If our social conditions are not what they should be, let each—parents, teachers and Christian workers—cast about for the cause of failure. Provide for the right and safe disposition of the time of the young and you have a safe man or woman. Neglect this and you will more than likely have a criminal.—L. A. Wilsey in The First Friend.

* * * * *

A RITUAL OF CITIZENSHIP FOR THE INDIAN

Secretary Lane, of the Interior Department, has long been an earnest advocate of the policy of making Indians citizens just as fast as they can exercise citizenship intelligently. When citizenship is bestowed, individual rights and responsibilities replace tribal allegiance and wardship to the Government. The transition is a solemn and important step for the Indian, and it should be marked with fitting ceremony. The American Indian has a natural liking for symbolism and ceremonial. Accordingly, the Secretary has devised what seems to us a remarkable and impressive ritual, used the other day when at Yankton, South Dakota, nearly two hundred Sioux were made citizens and presented with individual patents to their allotted lands. The Sioux themselves, in an invitation to the Secretary to be present, said:

Thirty or forty years ago we were living in wigwams in our primitive ways, with the idea that the Government owed us a living, and therefore we had no thought for the morrow. But in recent years there have grown up, superseding the wigwam, fine dwelling houses, and instead of our ponies being turned out on the prairies to graze we have fine barns with two or three work teams each, with lofts full of hay, cribs of corn, bins of wheat, coops of geese, ducks, and chickens, and where thirty or forty years ago were stretches of wild prairies, now grow beautiful wavy fields of corn and wheat, the industry of us Indians. We have come to know that instead of the Government owing us a living the world owes us that living, and we have started out to collect it.

In opening the ritual Mr. Lane declared that the President had sent him "to speak a solemn and serious word to you, a word that means more to you than any other you have ever heard"; that the privilege of becoming free American citizens was to be "pointed out by symbol and by word so that no man or woman shall not know its meaning."

The entire "ritual" is notable for its sincerity and the charm of its symbolism. Each chosen Indian was called out by his "white" name, and asked to tell his Indian name. Then he was handed a bow and arrow and directed to shoot the arrow. After he did this, the Secretary said to him, calling him by his Indian name: "You have shot your last arrow. That means that you are no longer to live the life of an Indian. You are from this day forward to live the life of a white man. But you may keep that arrow; it will be to you a symbol of your noble race and of the pride you feel that you come from the first of all Americans." Then, calling the Indian again by his "white" name, Secretary Lane said to him, "Take in your hand this plow." As the Indian took the handle of the plow the Secretary said: "This act means that you have chosen to live the life of the white man—and the white man lives by work. From the earth we all must get our living, and the earth will not yield unless man pours upon it the sweat of his brow. Only by work do we gain a right to the land or to the enjoyment of life." The Indian was then presented with a leather purse, a small flag, and a golden-colored badge bearing the inscription, "A Citizen of the United States," and the Secretary impressively explained what each meant. Thus the purse means "that the money you gain from your labor must be wisely kept"; the flag ("the only flag you have ever had or ever will have"), that the Indian must give his hands, head and heart to the doing of all that will make him a true American citizen. In the same way the Indian woman is handed a workbag and a purse and told what are the ideals of the American family and home. The ceremony is repeated with each man and woman, and as it concludes the audience shouts its greeting to the new citizen, hailing him by his "white" name.

There are both romance and common sense in this ceremony. It is a token of notable advance in Indian life and of a new and fine attitude on the part of the Government toward the first Americans.—The Outlook, May 24, 1916.

Woman's Auxiliary

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

"Where the Brook and River Meet"

Tennyson's beautiful tribute to girlhood, paid in the poem of which the above is a fragment, will ever speak in very tender tones to parents of young girls—and others, as well—who, having been denied the treasure of daughters of their own, have taken into their hearts for mothering the daughters of others. Nature seems not always just and indiscriminating in the distribution of her gifts and favors, and often the yearning of one heart for offspring seems to be entirely ignored, and to others the treasures are lavished in unwelcomed or burdensome profusion! We have noticed, however, that very often these women whose heart hunger for children has never been satisfied, are the ones who most truly and accurately value a little child. They look with eyes spiritually discerning, upon the meaning—here and beyond this earth life—of these fresh young lives, the guiding and unfolding of which are too often left to careless hands.

We speak of these things just now, in connection with the presentation, in this issue, of a message from Sister Gardner, superintendent of the young woman's department of our auxiliary, and our purpose in doing so is to impress upon the minds of our women, if possible, the very important opportunity which is knocking at their doors—that of taking upon themselves the active work of guiding the many groups of girls which are being organized under the direction and impetus of the Oriole movement, herewith partially explained by its superintendent. The difficulty she and her assistants are meeting everywhere, is the hesitancy upon the part of the mothers or older women, to take upon themselves the care of these circles. Surely it is not that this work is considered inconsequential! Surely it is not that mothers prefer to take their ease, idly wishing that "something might be done" for our young people, and comfortably sitting back in their chairs and leaving it for "some one else" to do that something!

Did you ever stop to think how much of duty and responsibility and privilege and opportunity, is left for "some one else" to perform? We heard a young man recently say, that, several years ago, into his life and thoughts, our late "Brother Joseph" dropped a few words of warning and advice which left an indelible impression. He had remarked that he sometimes felt an urging to take up active work in the church, but that he had always hesitated because he felt that some one else could do things so much better than he could; and "Brother Joseph" said, "My dear young man, you must be very careful not to let 'some one else' win and wear your crown!"

Could not that warning be repeated to our women, to-day, in regard to the young girls? In every branch of this church there should be active circles of these young women who have banded themselves together with ties which will prove of the utmost value to them all through their lives, instilling principles of loyalty and comradeship, of industry and clear thinking, making them capable of choosing wisely and well their paths through life, avoiding pitfalls, learning to look at every experience with right judgment, and making of them better daughters, better sisters, better friends and better Latter Day Saints. We repeat, these circles should be in every branch of this church where there are young girls, and where there are women to be found who are farsighted enough, and consecrated enough to their church and their God, to put themselves out some little bit, in order to supervise and direct these enthusiastic young souls in their restless search after true happiness.

Shall these women longer hesitate? Will they longer hold back and say, "I am too busy; let some one else take up this work"? and then, perhaps, spend more time on some piece of beautiful embroidery or lace than would have sufficed for several meetings of the Oriole girls? Nay, nay, sisters; "This is a day of sacrifice for my people," in very deed, and if it requires some sacrifice on your part to step out with these girls, and with them seek the beautiful in life, cultivate the highest of ideals, and together praise and worship the God of us all, is not the result worth a thousand times all the effort and sacrifice necessary? You will find something coming into your lives, which will enrich them to an extent impossible by countless pieces of lovely handwork in your homes, which, too often, have for their inception, a deep-seated (hidden, perhaps, but nevertheless present) desire for praise and personal vainglory! Are we not speaking truth? Will you not, in seeing the force of these statements, look about you at once, and see what you can do for the young girls about you? If there is a group of girls you can gather together, and talk to them of the possibility of combining their love of enjoyment with a love for real service, of uniting beauty and efficiency, of turning into real and lasting account their natural and heaven-given love of activity and variety, why will you not do it at once, and "start something" in this line in your community? Write to Sister Gardner for instructions and suggestions, and receive the help so gladly given, and then, in turn, get busy, and in one year from now, we will vouchsafe that a retrospect of events will have demonstrated to you as well as to each of the young lives under your care that there is both joy and development in service which is whole-heartedly given and consecrated to God and the children whom he loves!

The Young Woman's Department

ITS AIM AND PURPOSE

The purpose of this department has been mentioned in the Year Book of the auxiliary. Our object in coming to you again is to give you a more complete outline of the work we hope to accomplish.

Everyone will remember a time when all that seemed necessary to make a successful worker in the church or in the home, was a willing heart, the strength to do, and an opportunity. And we admit these are very necessary qualifications now. With these qualifications and a consecration to God's work, a wonderful service may be given to the world, but in this day of demand for efficiency and skill, with all the opportunities for self-improvement and preparation for the various avenues of service to the world, whether home maker, church worker, social worker, business woman, etc., a young woman would not be doing her full duty if she did not make use of every educational advantage.

When a woman reaches that point in her life when she realizes that she is not sufficiently informed to work out the problems that necessarily come with the home, church, or business life, she must meet the emergency through laborious preparation, because of untrained faculties, or abandon her cherished plans to another who may have prepared for just such problems.

Some one has said, "Hell is disqualification in the face of opportunity." Hence we say again that the purpose of this department is to stimulate and encourage every girl and young woman to qualify for her objective work so that when opportunity knocks she will not suffer the experience of a willing heart and an unprepared and inefficient mind and body.

In speaking of "work" and "service" we keep in mind always that everyone who really counts works at something, either in the home, church, in business or in the professions, and that only as efficient and happy workers can we be of any real value to the world.

MAKING THE CHOICE

The statistics given out by students in economics and sociology, show that 8,000,000 girls and women in the United States are earning wages. The United States Census Bureau lists 303 fields of wage earning and out of that number 294 have been and are still held by women. This fact proves that a part of the life of the average woman is spent in the industrial or business world in competition with men.

It is desirable that every girl should hope to attain a high if not the highest point of efficiency in her work. For this reason it is an advantage to a girl to study herself and her natural ability while she is yet in school. Even a girl's school or college course, if chosen wisely, may offer the best of training for her future work. Other conditions to be considered are the time and place in which she lives and her home responsibilities and demands.

A girl is fortunate indeed to have the friendship and association of a mother or some good woman to influence and advise her in making the choice of a vocation. Having this in mind we recommend and urge individual study or the organization of classes under the leadership of competent women.

An excellent textbook which is specially adapted to the use of girls is by E. W. Weaver, which may be purchased from the Herald Publishing House for 75 cents. This book contains a complete classified list of vocations with special instructions on how to prepare for any one of the list. It also gives plans for a course of study that will provide practical knowledge; special references are suggested.

"VOCATIONS FOR GIRLS"

THE HOME MAKER

The preparation for the industrial or wage earning period of a girl's life occupies an important place since a knowledge of some special work or profession is certainly an asset to any girl. However the greater part of the average woman's life is spent in the home, and a woman's highest ideal is that of home making. Apart from this it may also be considered as a business proposition, and from either viewpoint the efficiency of the home maker is multiplied by thoughtful training and preparation. We emphasize the fact that a girl's education is not complete until she acquires a practical knowledge of the qualifications necessary for a successful wife or mother and an efficient home-keeper.

Therefore we urge that our girls take advantage of our home economics department in charge of Mrs. Bertha Mader, and the child training under Mrs. Lydia Thomas Wight. These sisters are consecrated and competent trained teachers.

PHYSIQUE—POISE—DEPORTMENT

A few days ago a sister in conversation with another asked the question: "What is the first thing a young girl should study outside of her school work?" The only reply was that she thought "a young girl should first know all about her own physical nature, how to care for herself that she might conserve her health and bring into her future work, whatever it may be, a perfect physical development." The other sister answered that "so many girls need the cultural development that puts them at their ease in company, makes them interesting conversationalists, teaches them etiquette, manners, courtesy, etc."

It is true that a good physique, which is evidenced by a clean skin, clear eyes, steady nerves and sensible dress, balanced with poise, courtesy and intellect is a combination that produces a successful and interesting young woman.

One means by which we hope to assist each girl in making her choice and in her preparation for it, and in the acquiring of those necessary qualifications for a womanly woman, whatever her special work may be, is through the organization known as the

ORIOLE GIRLS

The object of this organization is to assist the girls to prepare themselves for richer and more useful living by the proper care of their bodies; by learning those things concerning nature which are important for them to know; by industry which is a special gift whereby knowledge may be applied; by loyalty to home life and those nearest them; and by praise whereby they give love, joy and service to the world as birds bring beauty and joyousness to meadow, brook and forest.

In the Oriole work every girl may, with the help of a consecrated woman who is called the monitor, work out quietly her own preference, or the work for which she is best fitted; or, in other words, by attaining a certain degree of efficiency in various lines, she may be helped to find herself and her future vocation.

The Oriole work is carried on in circles of twenty girls or less. Over each circle is placed a woman, either young or old having ability and character to inspire the girls to high ideals. She should understand and appreciate the value of such knowledge as is to be acquired in the Oriole work. For instance, the points of merit as follows, for which different colored beads are awarded: Praise—which means the attendance at church services, the use of talents in church work, the study of church books, visiting the sick, etc. Beauty. This group provides for requirements in the development of the physical nature and the conservation of health, etc. Home building includes practical points for improving home life by proper methods of cooking, caring for the home, conserving the financial interests, contributing to the social life of the home, etc. Field and forest provides for the outdoor life, suggesting points for the study of trees and flowers, bird and animal life; practical gardening and some experience in camp life. Industry provides points for the industrial or vocational training of a girl, suggests points for the legitimate use and care of an income, gives points for making certain grades in school work and encourages service to the church and the community. Loyalty suggests our attitude toward the organization called the Oriole Girls, our fidelity to the church, the home and to the nation.

By making a given number of these points a member is graduated from one rank to another in the following order: Songster, second rank builder, first rank builder. Besides the points of merit mentioned above a girl is required to pass a certain number of tests, the combination of which will make her a more consecrated Latter Day Saint, a more competent sympathetic home maker, wife or mother and a truer friend and neighbor. We wish we had space to illustrate by giving some of the points here. We will content ourselves, however, with the hope that you will send for an Oriole book at once and read it thoroughly. Then, as Brother Gomer Wells has said in pleading with the teachers of Sunday school classes of young girls; "Will you listen while we urge you to regard this Oriole work as your opportunity to enlist your girls in the best kind of team work." We urge you to include all girls, in or out of Sunday school or Religio classes.

When you have read the book and comprehended the purpose and scope of our work, and the sincerity and joyousness of the responses the girls are required to give in taking the ranks you will feel like sending "the sound the earth around." You will urge all girls to join, and if you are a consecrated, sympathetic, girl-loving woman you will respond to the call to become a monitor.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER,
General Superintendent.

The new Oriole book will sell for twenty cents and will contain the song and additional suggestion for work, outline for home department.

What Some Women Are Doing for Girls

In a recent club bulletin we read of what the women of one city in Nebraska are doing for girls. This is, of course, only one instance among the many, where devoted women are doing what their hands find to do, to make the lives of young girls both safe and happy. Too many pitfalls are ever present; too many girls every year, through ignorance or carelessness or unpardonable neglect on the part of women who might have prevented the tragedies, are going down the swift road to ruin and despair. How long will heaven permit the terrible weight of this sin to rest upon the earth! Shall we not rise in the might and power which are latent in the hands of the virtuous and consecrated women of this Nation, and do what may be done to remedy conditions? Shall we not see also, that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," and every girl into whose mind is instilled, by way of precept and example, or kindly words and loving counsel, high principles of right thinking and right living coupled with the armor which knowledge, both of good and evil, will insure her, becomes a girl saved from sin, and to righteousness?

It is to the service the women of York, Nebraska, have rendered to girls, that your attention is called, because of its helpful ideas, practical ideas which you, too, in your community, my put into operation. It first started with a series of social evenings in the assembly room of the public library, conducted by women who had a real desire to be helpful to girls. To these social evenings, held every two weeks, came groups of young women who were engaged in business life or who were attending school, and who welcomed the opportunity of spending the evening amidst such pleasant surroundings. The next year a modest seven-room house was rented, which was made a center for girls away from home, or those deprived of home environments. The movement developed, step by step, the women taking up what seemed to be the demand next at hand. The dining room was fitted up with good lights as a study hall, and was a boon to girls whose small rooms were neither well-lighted nor ventilated. The piano in the parlor was a source of pleasure and profit to girls who otherwise would have no opportunity to touch one, appealing especially to girls who had had a small education in music, but who were likely to be deprived of practice through the demands of business life. Averaging one evening a week the young women entertained young men, sometimes in groups of twenty or more, sometimes four, and sometimes the "just two"—and who shall say that this is not a natural God-given right? This latter privilege was secured by arranging with the matron in advance for the use of the living room.

Special days were always observed. Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's and the like, "open house" was held all day and evening for girls who had no other engagements and could not be at home with loved ones. Games, refreshments, recreation—all helped to make the girls feel that somebody cared, and their appreciation was often expressed with tears in their eyes. Good fellowship, music, comradeship, counsel, protection, were always ready for the girl who needed any of these. A basket ball team, fancy work classes, instructions in water color and simple Christmas gift making, a chorus of girls' voices—all these were provided by the women of the club which maintained and managed this house, and many of the club women gave hours of devoted attention to the needs of the girls in this place. An employment bureau was another helpful feature, where girls wanting employment left names and addresses and through a little advertisement, the women who needed such help were brought into contact with the girls. The hostess slept in the house, other rooms were rented to girls at nominal prices, one room being left open for emergency cases—for girls passing through the city or for a working girl convalescing from an illness, and the like. The use of the kitchen was given for cooperative housekeeping for some girls who might otherwise not have been privileged to get an education. Reading matter, current magazines, a victrola, portfolio of art, etc., were contributed by club women as well as money for operating expenses. Cannot this plan be carried out by earnest women in any town or city where there are unprotected girls? We think so.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

Joseph Roberts

The following preamble and resolutions were written by direction and with the indorsement of the board of trustees of the Children's Home and express the feelings of the board in regard to our great loss, but words cannot portray fully our feelings. In every emergency that arises we feel like we ought to consult Brother Roberts; though his successor Brother Floyd McDowell is proving to be a wise counselor, and an earnest advocate of the necessity of the good purposes of the home.

He is engaged in educational work, and it was determined at the last meeting of the board to place him on the committee on education where with his colleagues, Sisters Lucy L. Resseguie and Callie B. Stebbins, he will bring much good to the institution.

Anyone having appropriate books for children, to donate, or who would be willing to subscribe to suitable periodicals please communicate with this committee at Lamoni.

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father to call to his rest our beloved brother, Bishop Roberts; therefore be it Resolved, That as workers together with him upon the board of trustees of the Children's Home we shall miss not only his presence but his wise counsels. For in the sphere in which he occupied, Bishop Roberts was a great man, one truly a friend to the widow and orphan. It is as such that he will be remembered by those who have had the opportunity to work with him.

We knew him as one, who, while he was tender, kind, and considerate of the feelings of others, yet had the courage of his convictions and would unfalteringly voice and do what he believed to be right, regardless of criticism.

Resolved: That as the board of trustees of the Children's Home we sincerely and sorrowfully sympathize with his family in their loss of a husband and father, and offer them whatsoever consolation that Christian affection and earnest prayer can afford.

The Board of Trustees

At the death of Bishop Joseph Roberts there occurred a vacancy on the board of trustees of the Saints' Children's Home, and also in the treasurer of the association. Bishop Roberts had been a member of the board of trustees for a number of years, and had become treasurer of the association since his election to the board.

At the occurrence of the severe sickness of Brother Roberts, because of his inability to act longer, the board chose R. J. Lambert to act during the time of Brother Roberts' inactivity. This appointment ceased at the death of Brother Roberts, which occurred July 14. At the next meeting of the trustees the chairman stated that there was a vacancy in the board which should be filled until the next sitting of the church in General Conference, and the board made choice of Professor F. M. McDowell for the position.

This choice seems to all who have expressed themselves upon the matter to be a very happy one, as the brother has made studies along lines which should be of especial benefit to the institution. His experience in teaching and in public life should be of benefit to the board and to the church, and we trust his services may be accepted by the supporters of the home at once, thus giving him a chance to magnify this call to the work.

The position of treasurer was filled by the selection of R. J. Lambert, who will act until the next organization of the board of trustees, which will occur in April, 1917. The supporters of the children will therefore take notice and make their remittances payable to R. J. Lambert, of Lamoni, Iowa, from whom they will receive receipts for each and every remittance. In case you do not receive receipt for your aid to the home, no matter whether it be in money or in clothing, it will be well to address a communication to him, that he may take the matter up for investigation.

It had been the policy of the board of trustees to have all moneys and donations of other sorts received by the treasurer, and this policy will continue, and for this reason all donations should be sent to him.

The sources of revenue from which the home receives its support are not many, neither are they entirely sufficient, and the trustees are sometimes compelled to enact a policy of saving in expenditure which should be abolished because it does not tend to the best good of the children who are inmates of the home. Any aid you may be able to lend to the institution by the contribution of means should be sent direct to the treasurer, and not to the Presiding Bishop, for the reason that it will be sooner available for the purpose intended, and this is desirable at this time of year especially.

Some improvements are needed at the home at the present time, and with an empty treasury, we are at the mercy of the people of this community in which the institution is situated, who have been very long-suffering and liberal in the days that are past, but who should not be imposed upon and asked to carry an obligation for us.

The Lord has blessed and is blessing the country in which Latter Day Saints are most thickly located with an abundant crop, and we want the children under our care to have their share of the abundance, and the Lord has intended that they should have it.

RIJOLA.

Letter Department

The Gathering from the Isles

In compliance with a desire often felt, I write these few lines upon the subject of the gathering, confining my words principally to that portion of the Lamanites in this part of the world, that is, the islands of the sea.

Shall there be a general gathering of God's people to one place, viz, Zion and her stakes?

I have heard the argument made that the gathering may be understood in a spiritual sense, that is, those living in distant lands may continue there, but send up their representatives from year to year, to the land and center place of Zion. The advocates of this theory may think, because it is said that every man shall live under his own vine and fig tree, that the same must be said of the coconut tree, consequently men must live where the coconut tree grows, or abandon the coconut trees and the product thereof. The same line of argument will exclude the date, fig, banana, orange, rice, lemon, chocolate, vanilla, etc. Consequently when the Saints are gathered and the wicked destroyed, according to the argument, good-by will have been said to lemon cakes, chocolate cakes, cocoa, vanilla ice cream, etc. This argument may continue that since those things are good and gifts of God, that man will manifestly live where they grow, cultivating them, gathering fruit, sending it up to the storehouse to be distributed among the people.

I will answer all this by saying that I believe, as taught in the books of the church, and again in the Voice of Warning, that the prophecies of the Scriptures are to be taken literally, that is, the prophecies relating to the gathering are to be taken in a literal sense, and especially those relating to the gathering of the remnants of the Lamanites. The Book of Mormon is plain on that point. These that live here on these little dots of land in the midst of the mighty deep, have had their lineage pointed out as of Manasseh, and from general observation of their customs, it is almost certain that they are also of the Lamanites; hence they will surely realize an inheritance upon the land of America, according to the promise of the Lord to them.

I do not hesitate to say that in my opinion the gathering in a strict sense will be temporary only, and that after the closing scenes of this world and the coming of our Lord, the Saints will again spread over the face of the earth. The earth will have then been cleansed and blessed, the curse will have been removed: instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree, and instead of the parched plain shall be the fertile valley, etc. The great central point, the New Jerusalem, Zion and her stakes, will remain, the ocean will go back to the north country, the lands will be joined, and the physical geography of the earth will become as it was in the days of Peleg, before it was divided. The climate, zones, seasons, may or may not be as they are now. The same God that rained down "manna" from heaven, that bathed the earth in a flood of waters; that opened up the Red Sea, that caused boats without sails to sail across the Pacific Ocean, by whom the whole face of the land northward was changed, can also change climatic conditions, and grow Missouri oranges if he so desires.

As to the cause of the gathering: Manifestly one of the main and leading causes is for protection when peace shall have been taken from the earth; when every person must take up his sword against his neighbor or flee for safety. Another great reason is: In a gathered condition there will be ample opportunity and proper environment for spiritual and intellectual development. Listen to the voice of revelation:

"And ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect, for mine elect hear my voice and harden not their hearts; wherefore the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place, upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts, and be prepared in all things against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked; for the hour is nigh, and the day soon at hand, when the earth is ripe; . . . and the wicked shall not stand." (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 2.)

We see from this quotation that there is to be a gathering of all God's people, i. e., of Ephraim and Manasseh, to one place upon the land of America, for the causes just stated.

Is some one about to say: But the South Sea Islanders live almost on the equator, and cannot stand the winters in Zion? I will say the temperature here is about eighty degrees the year round. I remember having met some Mexicans as far north as Kansas City, and they seemed to be in the best of health. God has provided for just such a contingency by causing certain changes in the blood to correspond to the changes in climate. I am persuaded that my own blood has "thinned out" during my two years residence in this climate. I have become "acclimated," and I didn't drink any sassafras tea, either.

In the light of the Lord's command in Doctrine and Covenants 108: 2-5, we should not be timid on that point:

"Yea, verily I say unto you again, the time is come (1831) when the voice of the Lord is unto you, Go ye out of Babylon; gather ye from among the nations, from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."

Some one may say this means spiritual Babylon. Very true, it also means that. Verse four also says: "Let not your flight be in haste." Now we see clearly that it means a literal and physical flight. Read on, verse three:

"Send for the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off, unto the islands of the sea; send forth unto foreign lands. And, behold, and lo, this shall be their cry, and the voice of the Lord unto all people: Go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, and that her stakes may be strengthened."

Let us still further examine the causes why these people should be gathered, that they might have uplifting influences of proper environment. At the present time they do not have the environment that should assist them, as those do where public opinion, manly and womanly pride, and the law, forbid immoralities. In this country theft is severely punished, while bigamy, polygamy, and the like, go scot free, in the majority of cases.

The work here has not the assistance of the demands of a highly civilized society. It is impossible to successfully teach children the tender and delicate sensibilities of life, when they are continually shocked by what they see and hear. It is impossible to make any headway in teaching modesty as long as the people dress as they do. It is hard for one or two missionaries to establish morals as long as ninety-nine vile sailors follow them up and upset all their work. The quickest way to teach people to sit on chairs and eat with knives and forks is to introduce them to society that does so. I tried to correct their singing; but, poor people, they did not understand, as they had never heard a choir sing, as we sing, in their whole life.

We daily fear news of the great war, that will tell us that America has gone into the war, which would mean for us the stoppage of shipments of food from America, almost the last open market. There are but two foods produced here of any extensive value: coconuts and fish. It is said that the work of the Lord will be cut short in its time. Perhaps just such a contingency as that would be the way in which the Lord would perform it.

There has been a lack of interest among the natives in the subject of the gathering, but a notable increase in interest has been felt during the last few days, since we were invaded by the army enlistment officer, and some of our brightest and most promising boys have been called and will soon leave for the trenches. I understand six hundred more are to be taken away immediately. How many will the Saints have to furnish? Perhaps a hundred. Those called are of the priesthood.

I might point out hundreds of reasons why these Saints should be gathered, but I will let these suffice.

In looking at the practical side of the question, it may properly be asked, What can they do? Will they work? How shall they live? From my acquaintance with them, I think they would be able as soon as they arrive to labor as farm hands, teamsters, boat builders, fishermen, second class carpenters, shop hands, lumber workmen, painter helpers, building laborers, building excavators, janitors, watchmen, plumber helpers, packing house employees, etc.

Of course there are not many fisheries, and not much boat building in Jackson County, but there is in California, and on the Pacific Coast. That might become a relay station, where they could begin to become acquainted with American ways and the language while they were becoming acclimated. In the modern city of Papeete, where they have been brought into contact with modern machinery, commerce, and manufacture, they have quickly adapted themselves to conditions, and are found in all lines of business, including bookkeeper's clerks, etc. However, few live in that city, and many will not come in contact with civilization for a generation or two, if it is finally to come to them.

Will they work? I think they will, with new incentives. At least we should not send up the idler, but seek the more industrious and apt. There are some industrious ones that are qualified at present that would be delighted to go, I am sure.

As to preparation: "But verily thus saith the Lord, Let not your flight be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you." It is commanded that the land of Zion be redeemed by purchase. This people are abundantly able to purchase lands for agricultural purposes. I suppose upwards of $75,000 passes through the hands of these Saints yearly, the income of the coconut industry. I am reliably informed that they have spent more than $10,000 at a feast at a church dedication gathering. So you see money is not scarce when they want something. A bishop could no doubt do a great many things in this mission in regard to the gathering.

As to the difficulties: There are of course difficulties in the matter. There were also difficulties in the way when the Saints were ordered from Jackson County and told not to return; but those difficulties have been overcome to a great extent, and the gathering goes on.

There is at present an American law that prohibits a native of Oceanica becoming a citizen of America. It does not, however, prohibit them entering and acquiring property.

It is a matter of speculation what attitude France would take should her subjects actually begin to leave the country in this time of a shortage of men.

Again, a difficulty might be encountered at the quarantine station at San Francisco, as a large percentage of the people are physically unsound, not disabled, but unable to pass the examination.

Still another difficulty might be their reception by their brethren in Zion. A number have asked me if the Saints there would look down on them because of the blackness of their skin.

"And he that goeth up, let him not look back lest sudden destruction come upon him." Will they look back to the land of sunshine and balmy air, where food grows riot, without the aid of the husbandman's plow? Will they be satisfied with the daily grind of the industrial machines? Some would and some would not, I presume.

The Lord has the work of the gathering in hand, and we are but helpers. He will remove the difficulties that we cannot, and will prepare the way before them, and I think hedge it up behind them, too. Let us read:

"And then shall the work commence, with the Father, among all nations, in preparing the way whereby his people may be gathered home to the land of their inheritance. And they shall go out from all nations; and they shall not go out in haste, nor go by flight; for I will go before them, saith the Father, and I will be their rearward" (Nephi 10: 7, 8).

In conclusion: I desire to state that it is my opinion these Saints are to be gathered with the rest; that it was permissible in the sight of God that we begin actual work in respect to this remnant relating to the gathering, as early as 1831, that their gathering should be finished before the storm of the wrath of God breaks in all its fury to the destruction of the wicked; that their temporal preparation should not be procrastinated until the summer of the gathering is past, the harvest ended, and the order of the day is sudden flight or perish.

Let none think me impatient in this matter, or attempting to advise, for I know those to whom this work is intrusted as stated in Doctrine and Covenants 122, are aware of their calling.

While awaiting the help of the Lord, and the direction of the church, my soul shall cry to them: "prepare ye! Prepare ye! Make all his paths straight, for your redemption draweth nigh! Rejoice and be exceeding glad!"

A. H. CHRISTENSEN.

PAPEETE, TAHITI.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, July 26, 1916.

Editors Herald: In my travels I have come across some of the Saints and they ask if I am the sailor boy who wrote to the HERALD while in the navy about two years ago, and why I do not write again, letting the Saints know what has become of me; so I now write again.

It has been about a year and a half since I wrote. I am still clinging to the rod of iron. I received my honorable discharge from the United States Navy, December 1, 1915, and went to Detroit and found a number of wide-awake Saints here, with a branch and two or three missions.

Since coming to Detroit I have had some very severe trials through false spirits, which tried to make me leave, but through answer to my pleading prayers I have been brought through, and seem to know false spirits.

I am receiving my sunshine and blessing now, because I have been blessed with a good Latter Day Saint companion, in answer to prayer also, and have been married a little over a month. God's work comes first to her, after her home.

They have just organized a new branch in Detroit, the Second Detroit Branch, at the corner of Crane and Louis Streets, and have elected me secretary of the branch, home department superintendent, and senior teacher of the Religio.

We have street preaching every Saturday at 8 p. m., corner of Michigan and First Streets, and Sunday afternoon at 4 p. m., with good attendance. After the speaker finishes, we have to answer questions for about an hour.

So Detroit is moving, and I hope I am too. It will soon be two years since I came into the fold. Brought two young men into the church while in the navy, and only heard about a dozen sermons while in the service, and have had house talks with strangers since I came to Detroit last December, and have stood much fire from the enemy.

Hoping others will push forward likewise,
923 Sylvester Street. Yours in the gospel,
B. L. MAYNARD.

ADKINS, TEXAS, July 26, 1916.

Editors Herald: The conference and reunion of the Southwestern Texas District, which lasted from the 7th to the 16th of this month, might be of interest to some. The most perfect harmony that we have ever witnessed was the leading feature from the first day till the last. The management in general was intrusted to Brother E. L. Henson, together with the district presidency.

Reports from the two San Antonio branches and the Banderita Branch and a number of ministerial reports were read. Pursuant to the advice of Brother W. M. Aylor, Brother H. H. Davenport resigned the presidency of the district, and Brother Henson was chosen to that office. The First San Antonio Branch was selected as the place for holding the next conference. It was also agreed that we should have a reunion next summer.

Besides quite a number of the local priesthood of the district, we had with us Brethren D. S. Palmer and Glaudd Kuykendall. These two, together with Brother Henson, did most of the preaching.

We are glad to report two baptisms, as well as a general spiritual feast as the most important results. There are others of this community (Pipe Creek) who are "almost persuaded." God speed the day when they shall be "altogether" persuaded.

Your brother in hope,
CARL F. WHEELER.

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK, July 28, 1916.

Editors Herald: I believe it is some time since you have had a letter from Niagara Falls, New York, "The Electric Power City of the world."

The Saints here we are glad to report as being alive and busy, religiously speaking, that is, the main branch body.

The past year has been one filled with its discouragements but also with its many joys, and we feel that the Lord has been very mindful of us. Elder A. D. Angus, patriarch of Philadelphia, has been with us several months during the year, and has convinced all that his office is indeed to be a father in Israel, and he is fully entitled to the honor, as his work here has been the means of breaking up many dark clouds and causing the sun's rays to shine through. We trust he will return soon. We would also mention Brother A. E. Stone.

Elder A. B. Phillips, missionary in charge in absence of U. W. Greene, has not been able to give us much of his time, but the favorable reports of his work throughout the district causes us to hope he will soon visit us. We also will have with us in the district missionary force, our well-known, forcible speaker, Elder James Pycok, of Humber Bay, Ontario.

The district conference in June met at Buffalo and was a success, and we are preparing for a rousing educational conference at the Falls in October. Brother Chown and Spillsberry are a committee to put in conveniences in the church basement which are badly needed, and we are giving the building a coat of paint, but that is the temporal side, and we feel though of vast importance, yet we have rejoiced to see some who have been inactive in past years succeed in the gospel cause, and we will hear from some of them in the future.

Our Sunday school is a decided success under the leadership of Brother Dansforth of La Salle, and his assistants, while the Religio work has passed into the care of the younger members of the branch, and we anticipate an increase in activity under the new president, Brother Eugene Dixon, who while young in years, has abundant latent capabilities.

We baptized nine into the fold recently, among whom were two brothers, a sister and brother-in-law of the writer. This was a pleasure, as we had almost given up hopes of seeing them come into the family of Israel. We are pleased to note others are interested and some have mentioned baptism.

We are sorry to lose our brother Lindley, of the Canadian side of the river having been associated a good deal with him during the past year, and while he was president of his branch, but he has answered his country's call and will soon leave for the scene of carnage where so many of our Canadian boys are doing their little bit for the British Empire on the plains of Europe. We wish him a safe return and trust his noble manhood and integrity of spirit will be the means of helping many comrades in the great war struggle.

To the Saints passing by here, our church is located at Willow Avenue and Seventeenth Street. Several families live in the immediate vicinity. Yours in bonds, 1553 Willow Avenue. W. J. LANDES.

RICHMOND, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, July 2, 1916.

Editors Herald: You and others will note my new address. Would like also to draw your attention to Gospel Quarterly, volume 24, number 1, intermediate grade, page 24, on which appears the following: "The Aaronic priesthood has continued down to the present day." We understand that to mean that during the apostasy since Christ though the Melchisedec priesthood was "taken away" the Aaronic priesthood "has continued." If that is so we should like to know with whom and where. [We have referred this matter to those responsible, and it is admitted to be an unfortunate oversight, such as will creep into the best of publications.—EDITORS.]

In Brother G. T. Griffith's Interpreter we read that both priesthoods were taken away. What are we to teach? Could you tell us? It is difficult for us in this far-away (from headquarters) land to correct errors or get light from the authorities on such contradictions.

The work in Australia is moving steadily if slowly forward especially along educational lines which is no doubt good if accompanied with commensurate spiritual gain. There is, to my mind, danger along this line, for history is replete with examples where churches have solaced themselves, though spiritually dead, with the fact that they are educated, and there is everywhere in the world manifest a spirit which is satisfied "with enticing words of men's wisdom," rather than with "manifestation of the Spirit and of power." (1 Corinthians 2:4.) We must as a people, cling very closely to the latter which we have so long enjoyed, and take care that the former is used but as a means to that end, and not as a thing itself. We may become highly educated and be like Samson, minus the hair and strength, if we do not watch Delilah—worldly wisdom.

Our work in these states is to my mind interfered with and retarded by this great war in which we are engaged as a part of the British Empire. Most folks think of nothing but war, and even the parsons are in some instances quite bellicose in their utterances. It is a daily sight to see the walls of churches plastered with flaming posters picturing the soldier clad in khaki and carrying the rifle with bayonet fixed and with words attached urging men to enlist. Preachers of the so-called gospel of peace are proclaiming war, and thus the weight of so-called Christian influence in most Protestant churches instead of making for a settlement of the present lamentable conflict are urging and inciting its continuance. They say, "We are out to fight to a finish and crush German militarism," but a very superficial student of the Bible might glean from its sacred pages the wholesome truth that Satan cannot cast out Satan—or he will not—else how could his kingdom stand? We propose to crush militarism by creating it in our midst. Must not Satan laugh at such folly, and angels weep!

If the revelations of God count for anything the world at the end of this war will be deeper into the meshes of militarism than ever before, and universal training seems to be within measurable distance.

I could not urge peace at any price as a citizen, but I cannot conceive a condition which could justify a minister for Christ, as such, urging the wholesale destruction of mankind when the Master said, "I came not to destroy but to save men's lives." Our church, small as it is, has many members at the front, but up to date only one has met his death, Brother Elvin Layland.

I should mention that the Roman Catholic Church as a body is making more for peace by its attitude of noninterference with recruiting, combined with the reciting of prayers for peace which offend neither friend nor foe. We are trying to manifest a saintly attitude towards the war spirit without exposing ourselves to the suspicion of disloyalty. It is a kind of dual attitude "rendering unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's."

We are hopeful that even through this dire calamity which has befallen the world that good may come as meat "out of the eater," and that Zion may have a more effectual opening in the near future.

Trusting we may be able to continue in the right way, I am, as ever,
Yours in bonds

J. H. N. JONES.

80 Richmond Terrace, July 2, 1916.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA, July 24, 1916.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since we wrote. The reason was not on account of lack of news, or because the work is not advancing here; it is because we have been too busy with picnics, socials, and special meetings.

Brother Swen Swenson was with us on his way to his new mission field in Washington, and preached to good audiences.

D. A. Whiting, district president, visited Minneapolis Branch the first part of this month, remaining here a couple of weeks, visiting among the members, also preaching to us.

At our Wednesday evening prayer meeting sixty were present. Unity seemed to be the slogan of the hour.

The Brighamites are making a strenuous effort in our city of late, holding meetings in Richmond Hall, on the old forts of the Reorganized Church. They have street preaching almost every evening in the down-town district, both by men and women preachers. We wish the church could send a missionary to Minneapolis and Saint Paul, the two cities representing nearly one million people. There should be a missionary for a place that size.

The Minneapolis Saints feel a keen touch of sympathy in the death of Sister J. W. Wight, owing to the fact that Brother Wight became endeared to the Saints here through his efforts of the past, many of the members of our branch receiving their patriarchal blessings under his hands. We know that Time, the great healer, will do what mortals cannot, and our prayers are for the grief-stricken brother and family.

Those visiting our branch of late are, Brother and Sister Mollason of Dakota, Miss Genevieve Whiting of Clitherall, Minnesota, and Elder Day of Bemidji. Brother Day is thinking of locating here permanently. He favored us with two good sermons the 23d.

Our Sunday school picnic held at Glenwood Park Saturday the 22d, was well attended and enjoyed by all.

1719 Sixth Avenue North.

MARIE BENNETT.

BURR OAK, INDIANA, July 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: As no letters have been written from this part of the country it seems to fall on me to lead the way. I am a child ten years old, but as the Scriptures say, "A little child shall lead them."

About a year ago Brother O. R. Miller came to this place and preached five sermons in the Adventist church, or church called the Church of God, and also five sermons at Hibbard, Indiana, in the church called the Evangelic. They closed the door on him in both places and persecuted him. He saw that there were many here who were hungry for the true gospel. He succeeded in getting the schoolhouse for a short while only, and then the door was closed on him there. Then he preached in a private house for a while. I was the first to give my hand for baptism. Twenty others followed me during his service. There were three other members before, so that brought the total number up to twenty-four. We had no place to worship, only in private houses. We have our prayer meetings every Wednesday night, and they have been well attended. Many times the Spirit of the Lord has been with us. We also have Sunday school every Sunday morning at ten o'clock, and it is well attended. We also have Religion on Sunday evening.

As we have no place to worship, we concluded on June 13 to build a tabernacle, Brother O. R. Miller being with us at that time. We got busy and in three days and a half we had our tabernacle ready for service. Brother Miller began a series of meetings on June 18, and continued till June 23. During this period he baptized four more, bringing the number up to twenty-eight, and many more seem near the kingdom. I wish we were organized as a branch so we could have a minister with us at all times. This is a good place to spread the gospel, and everything looks very promising. We are growing while other churches that persecuted us are withering away as the fig tree, as Jesus says every plant that our heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up.

Pray for us that we may continue to grow and let our branches spread from sea to sea.

I remain,

Yours in the one faith,

HESTER A. TAYLOR.

CANYON, TEXAS, July 28, 1916.

Editors Herald: Canyon is a school town; the Northwestern Texas Normal School is here, and this season of the year the teachers are attending the summer school and summer institute work. Our work is new here, I being the first one of our men to preach in this town. One family here has read the Ensign for years and it is through their kindness that I am here.

Canyon, like many other towns, has a variety of people in it; good, bad, and indifferent are to be found here—and I believe the latter are greatly in the majority. Indifference is the hardest thing we have to meet in our work among men. The clergy of the town, however, are not indifferent; but are using every means possible, in an underhand way, to keep the people from hearing me. It would not be at all difficult to overcome the false ideas people have, if we could only get their ears—but that is the great problem. However, I will plant a little seed and perhaps it will grow and bear fruit after a while.

In this little town is found the Baptist Church, the Methodist Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Christian Church, progressive and nonprogressive, though the latter have no edifice; the Christian Scientists, and a few Catholics. There are also a few Theosophists, as well as a few agnostics.

I find the students of theosophy the most open-minded, and the most tolerant of others. The Baptists seem to be the most narrow and intolerant; there are more of them than any other denomination in this town.

On last Wednesday evening I for the first time had the privilege of attending a Christian Science prayer and testimony meeting. Their reader, a neatly dressed woman, stood on the rostrum; another lady presided at the piano. A hymn was sung, and then the reader opened the Bible, read a psalm, and several extracts from the writings of Saint Paul. She then laid the Bible aside and took up Mrs. Eddy's Science and Health, or Key to the Bible, and read from it what she called the correlative passages. Another hymn was sung, and then the reader announced, "We will now have a season of silent prayer, followed by the Lord's prayer." All bowed their heads, closed their eyes and remained silent for about two or three minutes. The reader then began quoting the Lord's prayer, and all joined in and repeated it in concert. Following this the reader said: "We will now hear testimonies concerning our experience and Christian Science." A number of earnest testimonies followed. The subject of physical healing seemed to be the one theme.

The entire service was orderly and beautiful, and a spirit of quietude and rest seemed to settle over the worshippers. Their scriptural lesson was beautiful; the thoughts from Mrs. Eddy were also suggestive of high ideals, and I couldn't help but reason in my own mind as follows:

Christian Science has a grain of truth in it. These people have found that truth; it has been a help to them; their lives have been made better by it, it is therefore an aid to them. But right here we are confronted with another problem: they mistake the little truth found in their system of worship for the whole truth, and in place of being enlarged in their lives, they are narrowed down. Their peculiar belief is all they are willing to hear, and they are quite intolerant of others as a result thereof.

The only way to reach this class of people, as I see it, is to admit they have truth; let them know we are glad of that, and are their best friends. Let us then show them that we have all the truth they have, and some more truth besides. Let them see that the whole truth makes us broad in our views, tolerant of others, and ready to recognize the good in all.

Respectfully,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

HILLSBORO, IOWA, July 29, 1916.

Editors Herald: As I rejoice so often in reading the HERALD letters, I thought I had better drop a line or two for its pages, although I cannot write as well as some, or express myself as I would like to.

I can say without any doubt whatever in my mind, that I know this work is true, and when I begin to examine myself before this pure and great gospel, I feel that I am one of God's weakest children, and at times almost feel that because of my many mistakes in the past I have been more of a hindrance to the work than a help. Still, through all these mistakes, my kind heavenly Father has not forsaken me. I rejoice more because I have been made to know more about Jesus and his wonderful love for sinners.

Just a word to those who are young in this gospel. I would like to warn you lest you be overtaken by sorrow and grief. It is a dangerous thing to go into this work of the latter-day gospel with one eye, that is, be sure that you are ready to give up all the worldly folly and pleasure. Just so sure as you try to hold onto a little dancing and card playing, or fishing parties with outside worldly people, Satan is very cunning, he has many ways to lead away God's people, and if we are not living close in accordance with his divine plan so that his Spirit is ever burning in our hearts, we will not know when the enemy is upon us.

I praise God with all my might, mind and strength for his abundant mercy to me. I can see and understand more fully his ways, even though I have been sorely chastened. I thank God to-day that I can truly say in all truthfulness that I no longer desire sin; but do not mistake and think I am boasting.

I want to say in passing that Brother L. G. Holloway has been preaching in Salem, and north of Hillsboro, and he has made friends and converted some. All whom I have heard speak of him, with the exception of some who do not want to believe anything, say his preaching is the best they ever heard, and most of the people who have said this to me are the best members of some of the other churches around Salem. There are many who will welcome him back again.

The heat in this part of Iowa has been very great, and Brother Holloway has been laboring on through it all, faithful and wise to his calling.

My prayer is that we all as Saints of God, may live up to our high calling and be worthy of the name in Christ Jesus. Dear Saints, remember me often in your prayers, that I may prove a faithful and wise servant in helping to build Zion. I often wish I were a good writer, so I could explain the many beautiful experiences and visions I have had in this work as I sit down all alone and think and meditate upon these experiences. I marvel many times that Jesus has revealed himself to me in many different ways, and I have always been warned before I am to pass through a trial. I could never get through talking or writing about this wonderful work. My husband often tells me he wishes I would talk about something else once in a while.

I hope that what I have said will help some one, as the letters from the HERALD have helped me. I do not believe I could get along without the dear HERALD. The only fault I find with it is that the sermons and letters are all too short. For fear the editor will not receive lengthy letters, I will close. I ask your prayers for my dear sister, who has been in the State hospital four years, and seems to be getting worse all the time. She has two dear little girls and they need their mother. Thank God, sometime, somewhere, we'll understand.

My prayer is that God's mercy may go out to those everywhere so sadly afflicted, and his loving arm reach out around all weak and fallen humanity, and the standard of this gospel be set up that will stand forever in Jesus' name.

Your true sister in the faith,
ZULIAH CLAWSON.

EAST AUBURN, CALIFORNIA, July 31, 1916.

Editors Herald: My heart has many times been caused to rejoice and I have been strengthened and encouraged by reading the letters published in your columns, and I now offer my little mite, praying that it may encourage some.

I left Independence the day after conference adjourned, coming as far as Sterling, Colorado, my old home and birthplace, where I had a week's visit with my parents and my grandmother. They have been the only Saints living there for many years, but their faith in the latter-day work is as firm as ever. On account of revival services in the local churches, I did not attempt holding any meetings, but we did have a very good sacrament service at father's home.

From Sterling I went to Denver for a week, where I visited my wife's folks. Reader, if you know how one feels on returning to the home branch after a long absence, you will understand my feelings on meeting with the Denver Saints. It was there I did my first official work and just to enter the little church brought back pleasant memories, and to look into the faces of the Saints there again was indeed a privilege. My stay there was all too short and it was with sincere regrets that I bade them good-by, realizing that I would perhaps never meet some of them again in this life. But I can truly say, "Blest be the tie that binds."

Leaving Denver on the Union Pacific after a long, dreary ride I reached Ogden, Utah. There I met Brother N. L. Booker, our Ogden missionary, and his genial companion, with whom I stayed one night before continuing my journey to Twin Falls, Idaho. Then I visited some of my relatives who had been isolated from the church for many years and were just hungering for some real gospel food.

One of the undertakers kindly offered us the use of his chapel and services were announced. I sent an announcement to be read in the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, but neither one permitted it to be read. This was the first time our people ever held meetings in Twin Falls, and the pastors of the above churches did not seem overjoyed at the occasion. It was found that there were a number of Saints in and near the town and these together with the Saints from the Filer Branch rallied to our support and we had an interesting series of nine meetings. Brother J. T. Davis, conference appointee for that section, was able to come over and assist in the latter part of the meetings. I baptized two, blessed three babies, left several investigating, and the Saints feeling good.

I left Twin Falls May 16 and reached home at Chico May 18. It then became necessary to plan on breaking up housekeeping, preparatory to leaving for our island mission and we were going through this agony for several weeks.

By advice of the missionary in charge I decided to remain in California until after the Irvington reunion, and my companion decided to make a visit to Colorado in the meantime. A farewell social was held in the Chico church on June 23, at which time a purse was given my companion, and on June 26 she left for Colorado and other points east.

Shortly after my return home, I was joined by Elder Cady and we have been busy in gospel work, except when my time was taken up with packing, etc.

We held meetings at Nord, with only a fair interest. The dance platform out there seems to have captured the crowd. Some said they were convinced that we had the truth and they would join later. They are surely making a mistake in postponing.

We went to Oroville and camped in our twelve by fourteen tent and held cottage meetings with fair crowds for ten days. As a result a man and his wife were baptized. On returning to Chico, we held out-of-door meetings at Sister Scott's, six miles in the country, for a week, and three young people were baptized.

From Chico we went to Sutter, July 12, where we stopped with Brother O. E. Ensley, six miles from town on a dairy ranch. Though a very busy man, he has been magnifying his calling, preaching every Sunday evening in the schoolhouse. We secured the moving picture hall at Sutter for Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday nights and planned to hold forth in the schoolhouse Saturday and Sunday.

There was a good interest and things were going nicely when I took sick with malaria. I was down for a week and Brother Hawkins, our district president, came up and advised me to leave there. So I did as soon as I was able and left Brother Cady to continue the meetings. I am now a gentleman of leisure, trying to get back in shape to help at the reunion.

If nothing prevents, we plan to sail for Honolulu on the Ventura, September 5. I wish to thank the California Saints for their many kindnesses to us while in this mission and ask that we be not forgotten in their prayers while in the islands.

With bright hope for the final triumph of the work,
In gospel bonds,

M. A. MCCONLEY.

Extracts from Letters

B. H. Doty writes from 350 Rectory Street, London, Ontario, to Church Recorder C. I. Carpenter, on August 3: "Inclosed please find two more certificates of baptism; will send more in the near future. The leaven in working and the honest in heart are being won."

Elder H. J. Davison writes as follows: "Branch affairs moving along nicely. Brother F. G. Pitt spoke for us Sunday evening, August 6, and Brother Waller, of Honolulu, the preceding Sunday morning. Two baptisms of late."

Nicotine and other alkaloids of tobacco induce toxemia that destroys normal physical balance, decreases control of the individual and are factors in creating an unsatisfied craving that, especially in neurasthenics, is satisfied by alcohol and later by a drug.—The Medical World.

News from Missions

Central Nebraska District

We are free to say that the work in this field, like all others, needs more laborers. The work is needing good, earnest workers everywhere. We have calls coming in all directions. "Come here and preach," is the word, till we cannot fill the calls here and go there.

We have been laboring among the Sioux Indians at Santee, Nebraska, with the district tent. There have been from thirty to one hundred in attendance. They seem to be somewhat moved upon by our preaching, especially when the stick of Joseph was referred to as a history of their forefathers, and the origin of their people. It was something new for them to think about. These Sioux Indians are an educated class and very intelligent, insomuch that we could talk to them in English. There was no need of an interpreter, as they could all talk very fluently the English language. We had a very nice visit with them, especially a Brother Crasley and family, and there were quite a number of white people among them who were interested, too, so we are not discouraged. Brother Gamet is still with them and will continue there until our district conference convenes, which will be August 4, 5, and 6. Then we will take up the work again among them if the interest still continues.

We believe there is a good work to be done among this tribe. The Saints of the district are lending a helping hand at various points, so we are expecting to see some improvements all along the line of our work in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

We are pleased to note the energy of the Woman's Auxiliary. We have four societies organized, and they are trying to do what they can for the benefit of the work of the Lord. We also held a reunion at Comstock, which was a great help to the Comstock Saints and to others in attendance. The Lord made his power felt for the good of his people, and some said they were sorry when we had to leave the association of the Saints.

So we are laboring for the cause of Christ, and we feel that if we are faithful we shall succeed in this district, that the work may be on a better footing than it has been. We are praying for the seal of God's approval on our labors.

In gospel bonds,

W. M. SELF.

News from Branches

Detroit, Evergreen Branch

July 30—the warmest day in years, nevertheless we can report a good attendance at the main church at the morning services. The Sunday school is flourishing under the leadership of V. D. Schaar and his able assistants, Alma E. Grant and T. Oliver Stewart. Brother Schaar, though a very busy man in secular affairs, finds time to labor for the Master in this, one of the very important departments of the church. He was lately ordained to the priesthood and we feel that he has a very bright future before him, if faithful.

The writer occupied the morning preaching hour with good liberty, using for a theme, the preparation for the gathering of the Saints. It is necessary that we be pure in heart, if we shall dwell in Zion.

We were agreeably surprised to see so many present at the street meeting in the afternoon. Our street meetings are well attended as a rule, and have already borne fruit, making an increase of attendance at church services both morning and evening. Our people are awakening to the fact that if we are as zealous in our work, having the true gospel, as others are who have so little, we shall accomplish much in the way of enlightening the world. The orchestra must not be forgotten, as they have rendered very valuable service in our street work. As a city missionary I can say that it is a pleasure indeed to be associated with such a band of earnest, devoted young Saints who are willing to render all the aid they can.

Brother William Anderson of the Northern Ohio District was the speaker at the evening service. We trust that Brother Anderson will not have a bad opinion of the Detroit people because of the small attendance Sunday evening, for we can assure him that such is not always the case; however, those present enjoyed the discourse. The themes was the importance of our work. The many reminiscences of the past, Brother Anderson having spent a part of his early life in Detroit, made it interesting indeed. One point that was especially forcibly impressed was that prayers and kind words often win the erring back to the fold.

The work in Detroit has an upward tendency and we trust that we shall still continue to advance until the goal shall be obtained.

The pleasing feature of the work here is that the officers are very congenial with each other, those of course do not hinder those who are willing to take up their cross and fight the battle manfully.

Brother Curtis, the missionary in charge, was present recently and organized a new branch in Detroit on the east side known as the Second Detroit branch. W. F. Smith was chosen to preside, Alexander Barss presiding priest, Clyde Gault, presiding teacher and a Brother Watson deacon. They have a lovely little church, and all in all the future looks bright for them.

Besides the two branches named here we have a mission on Russell Street, also at Pontiac. If their progress continues they will also, in the near future, be ready for organization. The first mentioned is in charge of Frank Cooley while the latter is under the leadership of Millard Riley. Both are earnest young men, doing their best to keep the work moving.

Brother Miller of Cleveland, Ohio, was a caller at the home of V. D. Schaar on Monday.

J. R. GRICE.

202 Colburn Place.

Independence Stake

Two of the young brethren, Paul Craig and George Hulmes, presided at the early prayer meeting Sunday, August 6, at which nearly three hundred were present, and also at the Sunday school. Two of the junior members of the executive staff were in charge. This is according to the new order of procedure, the older giving place to those who are more efficient and zealous and enthusiastic.

In the early years of the stake Sunday school association the older men and women who were officers and teachers, carried on the business of the conventions, but now the working force is composed of young Saints, and much improvement in means and methods is in evidence. With Brethren Davis, Knowlton, Gardner and Eastwood, together with Sister Altha Deam and an active force of teachers and committees, cheered onward by an army of instrumentalists, our success as a Sunday school is sure and lasting.

The same is the case with the Religio: In the beginning

Brethren Robinson, E. Etzenhouser, and A. L. Newton and Charles Mills, and others who were leaders, and Sister Horton who was a critic and secretary, were all old folks, but now with just a little sprinkling of gray heads, the society is managed and controlled by young ladies and gentlemen, like Sisters M. A. Etzenhouser, Flo McNichols, Ada Cochran, Minnie Warnock, and L. E. Hills, and Brethren Moore, Lloyd, Closson, Etzenhouser and Gardner.

The morning sermon was by Bishop M. H. Siegfried. Should the work laid out by our brother be accomplished by the Saints, the whole world might be a pure witness to the fulfillment of the prediction (which he took as a theme for his discourse) "Out of Zion the perfectness of beauty, God hath shined." He urged the giving in of inventories, the paying of tithes and offerings and the rendering of a consecrated service to God and our fellow men.

In the afternoon sacrament meetings were in the upper and lower rooms, two brethren were confirmed, and two babies blessed by Presidents F. M. and W. W. Smith.

At seven p. m. the line of automobiles began to form on the avenue bordering the west lawn, the Saints to gather and occupy the seats provided, the choir resumed their wonted places on the platform under the spreading trees of paradise, so called, and the violins in skillful hands were played, and high-sounding tubas blared forth in praise and melody (as brought forth by the four Turner brethren of the orchestra), as their part in the opening of the service.

The text taken by the speaker, Brother W. W. Smith, was selected from Paul's letter to Timothy, and the subject "Present revelation" was chosen at an opportune time when several who were investigating our doctrine were searching into this very subject, and they commended highly the sermon.

Among our visitors lately here was Brother Joseph's son-in-law, Brother Alex McCallum, whose home town is Englewood, and whose business interests frequently call him to the mountains of New Mexico. He is full of enthusiasm for the latter-day work, and is an earnest witness to its truth and divinity.

At the last business meeting among the more important things attended to was the provision made for the children's instruction during the time of the forenoon church service. They will have a special talk or sermon given for their benefit, and church work will continue in both upper and lower rooms. There are efforts being put forth by the new administration on many lines, changes are taking place, and the Saints are looking forward with bright anticipations of a more prosperous and gratifying future in a service that is pure, good and true.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes

SPokane.—Semiannual conference met with Valley Branch, July 1 and 2, F. D. Omans, J. A. Bronson, and Peter Anderson in charge. Branches reporting: Spokane 309, Sagle 59, Gifford 49, Valley 34, Leahy 28, Palouse, no report, (27). Total 506, net gain 49. There were 28 written priesthood reports. Bishop's agent's report read and adopted. Report of reunion committee read and committee continued. Officers elected: President, F. D. Omans; vice president, L. P. Summers; secretary, W. W. Fordham. D. H. Anne was recommended for appointment as bishop's agent. Auditing committee, W. W. Wood, W. W. Fordham. District rule 2 amended to read "at call of presidency and minister in charge." Percy Pearl Rud was called to office of elder by J. A. Bronson. One baptism. Spokane chosen as next meeting place. W. W. Fordham, secretary, South 238 Haven Street.

WESTERN WALES.—At Gilfach Goch, June 10, 1916, W. H. Greenwood in charge. District president and vice president reported, also the following branches: Gilfach Goch, and Aberaman. Elders J. G. Jenkins and J. Pughley reported in writing, Elders John Thomas and Dewi Lewis, verbally. District treasurer reported and accounts audited. Previous officers of district reelected. All the authorities of the church were sustained in our faith and prayers. A hearty vote of thanks was given the Gilfach Goch Saints for their kindness in caring for the conference. Priesthood meeting Monday in charge of W. H. Greenwood. Adjourned to meet at Llanelly at the call of the president. David Lewis, secretary pro tem.

Convention Minutes

FAR WEST.—Religio convened with the Third Saint Joseph Branch July 15 and 16, 10 a. m., in charge of Vice President J. E. Hovenga. The routine business of the convention was transacted. Resignation of President R. R. Fifer was accepted, and Vice President J. E. Hovenga was elected president. Thomas Fiddick elected vice president. Saturday evening session and Sunday sessions were occupied jointly with the Sunday school association in the discussion of different departments of the work of the two societies. The music furnished by the Second Saint Joseph Orchestra, was a feature of the convention. Adjourned to meet with Alma Branch near Lexington Junction, Missouri, January 20 and 21, 1917. E. J. Armstrong, district secretary.

NODAWAY.—Sunday school summer convention and institute July 22 and 23. Postponed to this date from July 9 and 10 on account of the funeral service of Sister R. Lorenson, which was held on the 10th at the place of meeting, the Union Church, Bedison school. Sister Arletta Ross was selected as district cradle roll superintendent. The sum of $2.50 was set aside for home department work. Fay Gates is home department superintendent. Interesting sessions were held and much good accomplished. Next convention in Guilford, January 6 and 7. Salena Torrance, secretary.

Conference Notices

As the date for Pottawattamie conference at Booker will be the closing Sunday of the reunion, it has been thought best by the officers to change the time to October 8 and 9. All interested please take notice. J. Charles Jensen, secretary.

Northeastern Nebraska, September 9 and 10, at Decatur. Branches are requested to report as early as possible. All are urged to come and help in the work of the Master. Brother J. A. Gillen expects to be with us. Carl T. Self, president, Omaha, Nebraska; Odessa Jensen, secretary, Blair, Nebraska.

Reunion Notices

Little Sioux reunion has been postponed from August 18 to 28 to September 15 to 25. Program will be carried out as previously arranged. Our large new tent has arrived. Grounds in fine shape. Come "all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and we will give you rest." W. R. Adams, secretary.

Kewanee, at Matherville, Illinois, August 25 to September 3. Prices of tents: 10 by 12, $2.50; 12 by 14, $2.75. We have only a limited number ordered so it will be necessary to send your orders in immediately. We are unable to get mattresses at reasonable prices, but there will be meals at the dining hall for 20 cents. Alfred C. Needham, secretary, 424 Forty-fourth Street, Moline, Illinois.

Quorum Notices

Annual meeting of Northeastern Illinois Quorum of Elders for transaction of business, August 21, at Plano, Illinois, during reunion. If advisable and convenient, other sessions of the quorum will be held during the week of reunion, P. G. Fairbanks, secretary, 4039 West Van Buren Street, Chicago, Illinois.

As has been previously mentioned in our conference minutes, the two Michigan quorums of elders were divided. The Northern Michigan quorum, composed of the elders in the Central, Western and Northern districts will meet at Boyne

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.
Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
"What Beholdest Thou?"	777
Current Events	779
Notes and Comments	780
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
Education and Inspiration, by Laura Harrington	781
Types Worthy of Study.—Part 1, by Gustave Erickson	784
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
The Crime Problem	785
A Ritual of Citizenship for the Indian	786
WOMAN'S AUXILIARY
Mrs. J. A. Gardner.	787
THE CHILDREN'S HOME
Letter Department	789
A. H. Christensen—B. L. Maynard—Carl F. Wheeler—W. J. Landes—J. H. N. Jones Marie Bennett—Hester A. Taylor—J. E. Vanderwood—Zuliah Clawson—M. A. McConley.	790
NEWS FROM MISSIONS
W. M. Self.	796
NEWS FROM BRANCHES
J. R. Grice—Abbie A. Horton.	796
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT
	797

City, October 28 and 29. We request that as many of our membership as possibly can attend the meeting, and arrange for our further quorum work. Allen Schreur of Gaylord, is acting as secretary pro tem until our next meeting. We hope you will all try to come, that we may have a profitable meeting. E. S. White, president.

Eastern Montana

To the Saints of Eastern Montana District; Greeting: At the district conference last June the undersigned were appointed a committee to secure funds and purchase a tent for the district. We feel there are many that we cannot see personally who would be glad to assist in this effort. We will want to hold reunions in our district, and a tent can be used in the towns to good advantage for preaching. So anyone that feels willing, can send his donation to B: D. Stratton, Fairview, Montana, treasurer of committee and bishop's agent, or to me at Andes, Montana.

JAMES C. PAGE, President.
L. W. BRONSON, Secretary.

August 2, 1916.

Two-Day Meetings

At Crosswell, Michigan, August 12 and 13; at Bay Port,

Michigan August 19 and 21; at Caseville, Michigan, August 26 and 27; at Lexington, Michigan, September 2 and 3. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Come and bring the Spirit of the Master with you, and as many as can, bring well-filled baskets. William M. Grice, William Davis, district presidency. [This notice was delayed in reaching our hands.—EDITORS.]

Sparta, Michigan, August 26, 27, in K. of P. Hall, on Division Street; Clear Lake (Ray), Indiana, August 26, 27. Trains met at Ray; Halls Corners (Ray), Indiana, September 9, 10. Trains met at Ray; Belding, Michigan, September 23, 24. Everybody invited to attend. Come and help make these services a success. Speakers will be provided for. All who come to Clear Lake or Halls Corners please notify W. F. Shaub, R. F. D. 1, Ray Indiana, so that provision for you may be made. G. A. Smith, president, W. P. Buckley, secretary.

Addresses

Field address of Hubert Case is 2106 Miami Street, Omaha, Nebraska. Home address, Lamoni, Iowa.

C. Edward Miller, Mission House, Miki Lane, Kalakana Avenue, Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii.

Requests for Prayers

Brother E. C. McCain, of Lock Number 4, Pennsylvania, desires the prayers of the Saints for himself, as he has been afflicted with consumption for about three months. He is unable to work and has a sister to support. He is a young man and feels that if the Lord heals him he can be of some help to the work. May he be remembered with other afflicted Saints.

The Saints' Homes

at Lamoni are in need of a man to handle the outdoor work at Liberty Home and care for a small dairy herd, this work including general farm work to quite an extent. A house man is needed at the Saints' Home, whose duties are to care for the furnace and help about the house and grounds, also aid in the care of the men in the house. Address A. J. Yarrington, Lamoni, Iowa.

Laurel Club Notice

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

You will notice elsewhere in these columns that the sarcophagus of the late President Joseph Smith has been erected and accepted by the proper church officials, but since we still lack about four hundred dollars towards the amount necessary to pay for it, we further extend the opportunity to any and all who would like to assist us in making up this small balance.

We should like to publish the name of every Saint as giving some amount, either great or small, and to those who have promised but whose subscriptions are yet unpaid, we will state that since Sister Miller has accompanied Brother C. T. Miller on his missionary trip, all donations should be forwarded to Sister Joseph Sturges, 573 North Pleasant Street, Independence, Missouri.

We also urge upon you the necessity of remitting just as soon as possible, as the bill is now due and payable.

MRS. JOSEPH MATHER, Vice President.

To Our Missionaries

We want to work in conjunction with you and for your interests.

The publishing concerns of the church wish to emphasize the fact that they are intensely interested in the work of proselyting. That is one of the main reasons for their existence.

The primary work of our church is to "teach all nations." We would be pleased as your business representative of the publishing interests of the church, to receive any suggestions that you think would make toward effectiveness in aiding to reach the people.

In this day of "strenuous efficiency" success can only come through the closest of cooperation.

We must learn to both preserve and conserve our energy. It can be done only by putting ourselves on a business basis commensurate with the time.

Send us the names and ages of all persons baptized by you, giving proper address. Mark those whom you would like to have receive the HERALD and Ensign and we will send both of these papers free for a month.

We are allowed to do this by the postal authorities, provided we mark the copies sent, "Sample Copy," otherwise we are not allowed to send any of our papers free.

Every paper not sent as a sample copy must be to a bona fide subscriber.

That this proposition may work as effectively as possible, be sure to give the names and addresses correctly. See that both are spelled properly.

Yours for progress,
A. CARMICHAEL, Manager.

Died

DODSON.—William Dodson, born in Ohio County, Kentucky, September 2, 1835; died at the residence of his son, N. T. Dodson, South Independence, Missouri, July 18, 1916. Married Rebecca Hooks, September 16, 1860, at Beaver City, Utah. Baptized at Council Bluffs, Iowa, October 7, 1865, and has officiated as priest and later as an elder. For a number of years he resided at Lamoni, Iowa. His wife departed this life about 6 years ago. He leaves 3 sons, 1 daughter, 18 grandchildren, 12 great-grandchildren, 3 sisters, one of whom was present at the funeral, Mrs. Nancy Clulo, of Logan, Iowa. Another is living in California at the present time. Also 2 brothers survive him. Funeral at South Side Independence Church, by George A. Gould and E. L. Kelley.

SAMPSON.—Elder Matthew William Sampson, born at Madison, Wisconsin, June 23, 1851; died at Denver, Colorado, June 30, 1916. He was a faithful Saint for over forty years and served the church as priest and elder, living in Fremont, Nebraska, and Denver, Colorado, most of that time. Leaves wife and 3 daughters, 2 sons and 1 daughter preceding him. Services in charge of Denver Branch officers, sermon by Ammon White. The large attendance of friends, Saints and neighbors testified of the high esteem in which he was held. Interment in Mountain View Cemetery, Denver.

WILSON.—George W. Wilson, born April 19, 1847, at Richland County, Ohio; died July 31, 1916. Cause of death was heart failure. Married Miss Lovina E. Blackman, February 1870. Six children were born to this happy union, 4 sons, who were all present on this occasion, and 2 daughters who have both preceded their father to their resting place. Funeral service conducted at his late home in Battle Creek, Michigan, R. M. Young preaching the sermon, assisted by David D. Young. Abundance of flowers and number in attendance showed his standing in the community.

SODERSTADT.—Alfred Luff Soderstadt, son of John and Mary Luff Soderstadt, born at Independence, Missouri, March 10, 1916, died July 31, 1916, at Independence, Missouri. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Funeral from Second Independence Church, sermon by Walter W. Smith, interment at Mound Grove Cemetery.

CARLSON.—Armintha Carlson, nee Martin, daughter of Robert A. and Fidelia Martin, born June 13, 1870, in Meggs County, Ohio, near Albany. In 1875 with her parents she went to Schuyler, Nebraska, and later to Glenwood, Iowa. About 1888 in interest of health she went to California, later going to North Platte, Nebraska, thence to Perry, Iowa, where she met C. J. Carlson, to whom she was married. In 1904 they moved to Greenwood, where she died July 24, 1916, after a very short illness. Baptized January 15, 1901, by C. J. Peters. Leaves husband, 2 daughters, aged 10 and 12 years, 1 sister, 2 brothers. Funeral services at Christian Church at Greenwood, Missouri, Elder Depuy in charge, sermon and prayer at grave by President Frederick M. Smith. Interment in Greenwood Cemetery.

BARNHARD.—Lula Barnes Barnhard was born at Salem, Missouri, October 12, 1881, died at Independence, Missouri, July 26, 1916. Baptized April 14, 1895. She was true to the Master until death. Married November 11, 1900, to Alfred Barnhard. To this union were born three sons. She is survived by her parents, Brother and Sister W. R. Barnes; four sisters, one brother, her husband and three sons. Funeral at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri. Sermon by Walter W. Smith. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

GRACELAND COLLEGE BONDS

In order to place the finances of Graceland College on a better basis, those having the financial responsibility of the same have thought best to issue bonds to the amount of $35,000.00.

These bonds run from July 1, 1915, to July 1, 1920, and bear 5 per cent interest, payable semi-annually.

They are offered to the Saints and to any investor as a first-class investment.

These bonds are secured by a first mortgage on real estate valued at about $62,000.00.

Each bond is valued at $100.00. We earnestly invite the attention of any having money to invest to investigate this proposition.

You will be not only putting your money in a safe place (as the whole church is back of these bonds as well as secured by mortgage) but you will be helping the work of the church.

Address all communications to

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Lamoni, Iowa

HOUSEKEEPER WANTED

I want a good Latter Day Saint woman who has had experience with children to keep house for me. I have four children, ages three to fourteen. Live two blocks from L. D. S. church in a good branch. Will pay good wages to right one. Address lock box 114, Perry, Iowa, for particulars. 33-3t

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist

in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

FOR SALE

Bakery and Restaurant for sale at a bargain in a town of six thousand doing a large wholesale and retail business also soda-fountain and ice cream. Come and look it over or address Pure Food Bakery & Cafe, Chariton, Iowa. 30-4t

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, AUGUST 23, 1916

NUMBER 34

Editorial

THE RIGHT OF FREE CHOICE

There can be no doubt that God wants us all to have a fair chance to choose between right and wrong. He will not coerce us, but freely states the facts in the case, setting before us the curse upon the one hand and the blessing upon the other.

But the Devil is opposed to a free, fair canvass of the situation, to be followed by a deliberate, uninfluenced choice. He begins his opposition even before one enters the church and keeps it up until the end of life. There is only one course of safety and that is to earnestly ask God that we be granted perfect freedom to direct our course unhindered of the Adversary.

Our attention was forcibly attracted to this matter by the experience of a young man coming under our personal notice. He became much concerned about the gospel, after hearing it preached for some time, and felt that he should be baptized. Then began a peculiar struggle. He felt that it was his duty and at times he ardently desired it, yet something held him back, though he could give no definite reason for hesitating. He said afterward that there were two voices urging him not to be baptized while one urged him to move forward and obey. He came to talk with us on three successive days. Depressed, distracted, torn, he struggled to say yes, and could not.

He came to us the second time after walking the streets the greater part of the day and a part of the evening before, and still he could not decide. As he was unable to give any reason why he could not move forward as he wished, only that some intangible power held him back, we kneeled down in our little sitting room and earnestly prayed that he might have freedom to make his choice.

We remembered a picture in a certain number of the Review of Reviews. It portrayed a scene in Russia where the mob was lined up on one side of the street and on the other were the officers and soldiers. They faced each other in grim silence. A line of lighted candles in the roadway between them marked the dead line over which none dared to cross while the leaders discussed the situation and came to a decision.

It seemed to us in this case that God drew a dead line between this young man and the devils that coveted his bright young soul and lighted there a little candle of prayer and said, "You must stay back until this boy has time to make his choice, and then if he decides for you, you may come and take him."

It did not take him long to make his decision, and within two hours he was baptized.

He came to see us the third time on the following day and he was not downcast then. He did not look sad then. He did not look undecided then. He was exuberant and light-hearted, because the perfect law of liberty had given him freedom.

O friends! let us remember the court where justice is dispensed. God will see that no power overcomes the man who earnestly craves a fair show in the fight for life, but God himself cannot and will not save the man who deliberately turns away and chooses evil.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE SECOND CHILDHOOD

"Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 18: 3.

"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."—John 3: 3.

Not only must we be born again, but we must begin over, on the plane of a little child. It matters not what intellectual attainments we have or what our social standing may be, the acquirements are that we become as little children religiously and develop as a child develops.

A study of childhood is interesting. Each child with his peculiar personal characteristics is a separate problem in the home life.

No matter how much fond parents may expect of their children in precocious development, certain elemental processes of growth, mental, spiritual, and physical, must take place. By being born into the world, with its laws to govern, the child becomes subject to those laws. While we may at times consider these unwritten statutes as restrictions that hamper our every movement, we later learn that their influence is necessary to proper and symmetrical growth and final maturity.

In the new birth into the kingdom of God we come within the realm of laws that affect our entire lives as thoroughly as those under which we grew up as physical beings.

Psychology gives us valuable information concerning the development of the child mind, but it enlightens us very little as to the development we must attain as a child of God. But to us the principles are much alike.

According to the revelations of God to the church and our own natural observations, the two should go together: As a child develops to physical and mental maturity, he should at the same time do so spiritually. But constantly are men and women of mature years accepting the decree of the Master: "Ye must be born again."

To voluntarily enter the realm of spiritual childhood means a readjustment of our lives so that we may develop normally. There can be no sudden transition in the spiritual development any more than in the natural. We must learn obedience by the things we suffer in spiritual childhood as well as the other.

When we receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit and are forgiven our sins, we have a door opened to a new life; which does not necessarily imply that we have entered in and learned to occupy.

While we are finite we may never entirely comprehend the change that takes place in us at the new birth, but our observations tell us that no new sense is given us. Our temperament is the same. We have no new faculty. Yet there is a wonderful change of some kind.

We realize that there is a regeneration from a divine source. We now see more clearly and understand more definitely. Some of the activities that formerly were a pleasure are now repugnant to our finer sensibilities. We see in our old associations a superficiality that we had not before perceived—but rather than hating we have sympathy and pity. In the children of God we see manifested traits that overshadow rough and uncomely exteriors and make them appear in the new and soft light of God's love, of which we have partially partaken.

What should be the attitude of the family of God's children to the new members?

In our family life the announcement of a new brother or sister occasions a peculiar joy and tenderness beautiful to study in the conduct of children. The natural boisterousness of boyhood is calmed and diverted by the presence of the tiny bud of promise that comes to make its home with him. In normal families the responsibility of a new member in the family is cheerfully shouldered and made a joy rather than thought of as a burden.

Should our attitude toward a newborn child in the family of God be different? Should we expect an immediate development into maturity? We should not. While there are burdens in caring for the spiritual needs of the new members among us, there are many compensating joys. The pleasure of training the little child of God (though he be grown up as a man) so he may learn to creep, then walk, then run in the arena of spiritual development, is a pleasure we all enjoy.

But the child of God, if he grows naturally, will not always be a toddling infant. Some day he may be a gangling youth, developed in some ways as a man, and in others yet a child. Fortunately the divine plan of organization in God's true church provides for an all-around growth that will bring the child into well-balanced maturity. The various opportunities of auxiliary work, and different grades of the priesthood lead him on, step by step, to the goal of universal service to God by serving his people. Yet, in our eager but misdirected zeal we often mistreat our spiritually adolescent brother or sister. We may easily expect too much and condemn if we do not get it. We should be as considerate of him and his feelings as we are of our boy or our girl who are peeping into the realms of manhood and womanhood. It is a critical period.

Because an innocent child that we know makes a mistake, are we hard-hearted enough not to forgive him? We would not be so foolish.

Because an innocent child of the kingdom does not do as we think he should, would we be so inconsiderate as not to forgive? Surely not.

None of us has reached the perfection that lies before us as a goal, and realizing this fact, we should be highly considerate of our brothers and sisters who are younger in the work than we.

The decree is that we shall become as little children. Peter, after he had passed through some of the earlier stages, wrote to the saints that they should "As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." Paul exhorts the Ephesians: "But speaking the truth in love, may grow up unto him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."

There is much wisdom in the plan which demands a new birth, but let us also recognize the same value in the development required following our new start in the church of God. We are none of us so old or so advanced in attainments that we cannot stop to aid the efforts of those who have become as little children and now seek to attain "the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

EDWARD D. MOORE.

FOR THE BOYS OF THE CHURCH

At the special call of the President of the church at the last General Conference in Independence, a movement was started in behalf of the boys of the church in which is proposed an organization within the church, wholly directed and controlled by our own church men. In fact a distinctly Latter Day Saint organization for Latter Day Saint boys and others who may wish to affiliate.

The undersigned committee held a meeting to consider this matter in Independence, August 13. Presiding Bishop B. R. McGuire was present, as were representative men from the First and Second branches of the Independence Stake, and also from a majority of the branches in the Kansas City Stake. Much earnest enthusiasm was manifest in discussing the situation, as to the needs, character and program of such a movement. Such an organization is needed within the church—and needed now. Work is now under way which will result in a definite plan to present at the next General Conference. We want to get in touch with the men of the church who are interested and in sympathy with boys. Write to any member of this committee, give us the value of your experience with boys, tell us what your problems are and your success or failure in solving them. Suggest a name and a program for the organization.

Every man in the church who loves a boy should respond to this S. O. S. call. The Oriole movement is meeting the demands of the girls, now what about the boys? Presidents of branches are earnestly asked to write us. By August 25 we should have five hundred letters before us with your advice and suggestions. This is a man's business. Be one of the five hundred.

Committee:

Walter W. Smith, 223 South River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri.

W. O. Hands, 4517 Gillham Road, Kansas City, Missouri.

J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

CURRENT EVENTS

POOR CROP CAUSES WHEAT RISE.—A Government commission has recently investigated the rapid rise in price of wheat and has concluded that it was due to crop damage and not to price manipulation, as had been charged by many.

ISLAND PURCHASE NOT RATIFIED.—The contemplated purchase of the three islands comprising the Danish West Indies, has not been completed on account of opposition in the Danish Parliament. It is said that the opposition is so serious that the Parliament is in danger of dissolution and that a new election may be necessary. International complications have affected the consideration of the purchase.

EQUAL BALLOT NEAR IN ENGLAND.—Premier Asquith, of England, lately converted to woman's suffrage, and who has been an effectual barrier to its attainment in that country, announces that a new appeal for franchise privileges must include woman's right. On all sides this announcement is taken to portend favorable legislation for woman's right to vote.

VIOLENT STORM IN TEXAS.—On the 18th a violent wind and rain storm swept over Texas and the border, at Corpus Christi and Brownsville, the latter being an important encampment of the American National Guard. Four and one half inches of rain fell, and the wind attained a very high velocity. Wires were down in every direction, but reports are coming in to the effect that practically the entire National Guard encampment has been wrecked, with much discomfort following. Some lives are reported as having been lost in the wrecking of the shipping along the coast. Property damage is very large.

RAILWAY TROUBLES NOT SETTLED.—Following a week's conference with President Wilson, the representatives of the railway employees and the managers of the railways have not reached a definite settlement. President Wilson proposed that the eight-hour day be granted employees, and that the demands for extra pay for overtime be deferred until an investigation was made by an impartial committee. The men have agreed to this proposal, but the managers oppose it. Following this, President Wilson made an appeal to the presidents and higher executives of the railways, and at this writing they are assembling at Washington to listen to an appeal from President Wilson for an amicable settlement of the difficulty. As one means of offsetting the additional expenses incurred by the railways should the eight-hour day be granted, President Wilson has intimated that a raise in freight rates might be allowed. Both sides are marking time in Washington, awaiting the decision of the matter.

SHIPPING BILL PASSES.—After a long, hard fight, the Government shipping bill has passed the Senate by a vote of 38 to 21. It had already passed the House. The measure provides for the selection of a Government shipping board to purchase and operate merchant ships. It is sought to rehabilitate the American merchant marine, and $50,000,000 are appropriated for this purpose, to be raised by the sale of Panama Canal bonds. The recommendations embodied in this bill have been proposed and discussed in one form or another since the European war began in 1914, which disclosed most effectually the weakness of the American merchant marine.

ARMY BILL VETOED.—The big national defense

bill that provided the appropriation of $661,418,000, and the building of 157 warships within three years, and an increase in the enlisted men of the army to 74,700, being one of the greatest authorizations of the kind ever passed in any country, has been vetoed by President Wilson because of certain provisions in the revised articles of war exempting retired army officers from punishment and trial by court martial. There are said to be other objections, however, these are urged by authorities as the strongest ones. The bill has been reintroduced with these revisions eliminated. This bill has occupied the attention of Congress for a considerable length of time and much national interest centers in it.

UNABLE TO CONTROL PARALYSIS.—A national conference of health authorities from most of the States was held in Washington on the 17th to consider methods of controlling infantile paralysis. Nothing definite was developed, except the decision to cooperate in checking the epidemic by quarantine and similar preventive measures. No cure has been discovered for the disease, and its causes are still unknown. There is little change in the situation. New cases and a considerable proportion of deaths have occurred, about as they have in the past weeks. It is reported that there are over eleven thousand cases at present throughout the country. Other public schools besides New York City are seriously considering the postponement of the opening of school.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Following the fall of Gorizia, the Austrian stronghold recently taken by the Italians, the latter have continued their advance toward Trieste, an important Austrian city. It is reported that Germany has come to the aid of Austria in the defense of this place, and that the Italian armies are within ten miles of the city. On the Saloniki front the Franco-British troops, aided by the Serbians, have continued their attack on the Bulgarian forces on the Serbian frontier, heavy artillery bombardments being maintained, some villages changing hands, with no decisive victories on either side. On the Verdun front the Germans have tried a number of times to retake the village of Fleury, but have not succeeded in dislodging the French. Both the French and British on the Somme have continued at intervals during the week to make violent attacks on the German line, and have in a number of instances advanced from four hundred to five hundred yards along the front of over one to three miles. Many serious counterattacks by the Germans are reported, though the final result seems to have been a number of minor gains by the allies. Maurepas and Clery, French villages in the hands of the Germans, have been endangered by the recent advances of the British. It is estimated that a million shells a day are thrown into the German trenches on this front. Portugal has recently announced that she is ready to enter the war on the side of the allies. The Russian forces in the east are advancing from Stanislau, toward Lemberg, having advanced to within thirty-five miles of that Galician capital. The Teuton forces seem to have compelled a halt at this point. The Russians have taken much territory during the last week, including an important pass in the Carpathians, which will allow an extensive invasion of the plains of Hungary. On the south end of their line in Bukowina the Austrians seem to have successfully repulsed Russian advances. In the Caucasus the Russians have repelled the Turkish forces at several points, while stubborn fighting is reported north of Bitlis. Near the Suez Canal British forces continue their pursuit of attacking Turks. Submarine warfare seems to have taken a new impetus, and at least two British light cruisers have been lost from submarine attack.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

FOR AND AGAINST EQUAL SUFFRAGE.—The August number of Autumn Leaves contains an article by Brother E. G. Hammond, an eastern lawyer, entitled "Against equal suffrage," bearing the subtitle, "The consent of the governed." Brother Hammond argues that one body with two heads would be a monstrosity, that man is the natural head of the family, and may very properly perform the function of voting for the family. From his viewpoint the family would be regarded as the voting unit.

In the same number there appears an article entitled "For equal suffrage," with the subhead, "Woman's forward movement," by Sister D. J. Krahl. She regards the individual as a voting unit, and sees no inconsistency in the double vote coming from a family, one from the man and the other from the woman. Her motto is taken from Tennyson:

The woman's cause is man's; they rise or sink
Together, dwarfed or godlike, bond or free.

These brief but concise and pointed arguments for and against equal suffrage are interesting, and should receive a careful reading.

In the same number there appears a report of the oration winning first place in the oratorical contest at Graceland College for 1916. The oration is entitled "The Hebrew and his heritage." The editors consider it quite remarkable in character, and one worthy of a wide reading. The successful orator, Brother Frank Best Almond, is an Englishman who came to us by way of Canada, and is now attending Graceland College. His remarkable knowledge of the church and its ideals and history is worthy of comment, in view of the fact that two short years ago he knew nothing of the existence of such a movement.

A GOOD PLAN.—At a business meeting of the congregation of the stone church Monday evening, Walter W. Smith, the new presiding elder, announced his selection of Israel A. Smith as one of his counselors. He also recommended that a meeting for children, to be conducted in simple language adapted to their comprehension, be held immediately after Sunday school, instead of expecting them to attend the main congregational service. The recommendation was adopted and provision will be made for carrying it into effect.—Independence Examiner, August 11, 1916.

LAMONI REUNION OPENS.—The Lamoni Stake reunion opened last Friday under very favorable auspices. About one hundred tents are on the grounds and something like four hundred campers. And of course there is a very large attendance from town of those not camping. Of the ministry present we note the new Stake Presidency, John F. Garver, E. J. Giles, and Paul N. Craig; Hubert Case, Heman C. Smith, J. W. Wight, L. G. Holloway, Columbus Scott, Elbert A. Smith, and others whose names just now escape us. The Saints at Lamoni have a very lovely camp ground, a tract of twenty acres that has been purchased for a permanent reunion site. It is conveniently situated south of town, covered with beautiful elm, oak, and walnut trees, making one of the most delightful spots for such a gathering that we have ever seen.

BOOKS NEEDED.—Sister Estella Wight, librarian of the general church library, at Lamoni, has suggested at various times that some very necessary books were lacking in that collection. In talking it over it was decided that a suggestion from her might be the means of putting to good use some of the many books that because of removals, natural scattering of grown-up families, etc., are practically unused, and doing nobody good. Her statement is in the Miscellaneous Department. You may be able to improve the situation.

CHANGE IN PRICES.—Note the list of changed prices of church books and publications in this issue. By ordering now you can save some money. The increase is caused by the rapid rise in price of all printing materials.

A GOODLY CLASS.—Eighty-seven students—forty-eight men and thirty-nine women—were graduated from The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago at the close of its summer term, August 10. They represented twenty-three States and thirteen foreign countries.

At the same time certificates of the correspondence department were granted to eighty-eight persons who live in twenty-four States and three foreign countries. The instruction is free to all worthy Christian men and women.

Original Articles

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH.—PART I

(A sermon preached by Elder William Lewis at Cameron, Missouri, February 27, 1916, on the occasion of the fiftieth baptismal anniversary of himself and wife. Reported by their daughter, Miss Ruth Lewis.)

Dear brothers, sisters and friends: My object for presenting for your consideration some of the experiences realized in my fifty years of Christian career, is to strengthen your faith in God and in his word and to encourage you in his service, for what he has done for others, under similar conditions and circumstances, he will do for us. Peter said, when he heard the experience of Cornelius, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation, he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted of him." (Acts 10: 34, 35.)

My parents united with the church in South Wales, England, and were among the first to join in the early forties. It may not be amiss to give you a brief history of their experience before presenting mine. The first missionaries were sent to Wales in the days of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and the gospel spread with wonderful rapidity. It is said that some one or more from every family in Wales united with the church, and had it not been for the abominations of Brighamism that were taught after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the Latter Day Saints' Church would have been the largest in Wales. About six months prior to the dogma of spiritual wifery and polygamy being taught publicly in Wales, there was a rumor that such was taught and practiced by the Mormons in Utah (Salt Lake City). The Saints in Wales did not believe the report and they looked upon it as persecution; so they published tracts proving from the Bible, Book of Mormon and Book of Doctrine and Covenants that no person representing the true Latter Day Saint Church would be allowed to teach or practice that evil. From house to house the tracts were liberally distributed, and the elders and members alike denounced the charge. The faithful effort of the Saints put a stop to the rumor.

It may be well to explain, for the benefit of some strangers, that during the life of Joseph and Hyrum Smith there was but the one church known as the Latter Day Saints, and the Saints in Wales were members of said church; but, after the death of the Martyrs, many factions sprang up, presided over by various leaders, Brigham Young, Sidney Rigdon, J. B. Strang and others. Brigham Young and his followers had the largest following and the Saints in Wales cast their lot with the Brighamite faction.

For a short time all went well; hundreds and some thousands united with the church, but to the sorrow of the faithful Saints of not only the little land of Wales, but the whole British Isles, the abominations of Salt Lake Mormons were introduced as the word of the Lord in a cunning way and in secret by missionaries sent forth by Brigham Young, in the year 1853. These false teachers, some of whom had been on a mission to Wales before but were not then tinctured with spiritual wifery, polygamy, Adam-god and blood-atonement dogmas, but as soon as they arrived in Wales, they called all the district and branch presidents and officers together and said: "We have strong meat for you to feed the flock; we, the priesthood, are the living oracles through whom the Lord will feed the flock; what we say is to be law." They went so far as to teach that they were above the books and also advised that the Saints were not to seek for spiritual gifts, that when the Lord would speak it would be through his living oracles, the priesthood.

Prior to this, it was revealed by dreams, visions and prophecy, that there were iniquities in high places and the Saints were admonished to beware of false teachers and to stand by the law. What a pity they did not do so!

Father came home from that dark and gloomy council, heartbroken. He informed mother that the church had gone to the bad. He was in charge of the branch at Glen Neath, Wales, and was requested by the missionary in charge to preach polygamy. He replied, "No; I shall not, for it is not in harmony with the law; it is of the Devil." So, with thousands of others, my parents withdrew from that faction. I believe that in Smucker's History of the Mormons, the statement is found that "when polygamy was introduced first in the British Isles, one third of the Saints left that faction." Better it was to step down and out than to approve of the abominations! But how much better it would have been had they remained in the church and cast out all the apostates; this they could have done. They should have informed the missionaries who came to their shores preaching false doctrines to "repent, or go home."

Well, in 1856 my parents came to this country, and the first opportunity they had, in 1865, they united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Prior to uniting with this church, while wandering as sheep without a shepherd, they lived honorable, upright lives, and I am proud of the record they made.

When in my sixteenth year I was in very poor health; several doctors were consulted, but none did me any good. I read the words in James 5: 14, 15, "If there is any sick among you, let him call for the elders of the church and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil, in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." The words came to me with much force and I made up my mind to call on the minister, thinking that "elders" referred to in James were the various ministers. I mentioned the matter to mother, and with tears in her eyes, she said,

"My dear boy, it will do you no good to call in the minister."

"But, mother, the Bible says that the elders, or ministers shall anoint the sick with oil, and the Lord will raise them up."

"Yes, if you can find elders who have faith, but the ministers teach that healing the sick was only to be in the days of the apostles."

Young and inexperienced as I was, I could not believe that the promise made by James and the Savior was only for the sick in that age, in the apostolic age, for Jesus said, in Mark 16: 18: "These signs shall follow them that believe; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

THE FIRST SERMON

The first sermon I heard preached by a minister of the Latter Day Saint Church was by one who was limited in education, but what he said was supported by the Scriptures. He quoted John 7: 16, 17: "My doctrine is not mine but his that sent me; if any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." The speaker explained that this promise was still in force, that the Holy Spirit, with its gifts and blessings as enjoyed in former days, were enjoyed in this age and that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was in harmony with the organization named in the Scriptures, having apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, elders, bishops and deacons; also that this church was the same in doctrine, faith, repentance, baptisms of water and the Spirit, laying on of hands for ordinations, confirmation, blessing of children, healing the sick; also resurrection and eternal judgment.

I listened with interest to this sermon—short as it was—delivered by one uneducated for the ministry, one who labored in the coal mines daily. The message stayed with me, and I began to read the Scriptures with renewed interest as I had not done before.

On Sunday morning, February 25, 1866, cold as it was, the ice being several inches thick, I was baptized at Brookfield, near Youngstown, Ohio. I was then in my nineteenth year. I had implicit faith in the divinity of the ordinance of baptism, and in the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit, and while the elders had their hands upon my head in confirmation, I fully expected the Holy Spirit to come. I had read of Peter and John laying hands upon those that Philip had baptized at Samaria and that the Holy Spirit had come (Acts 8: 17.) Also that Paul laid his hands on the twelve that he had baptized and the Holy Spirit rested upon them and they spake with tongues and prophesied (Acts 19: 6), but I was very much disappointed, for I did not receive the Holy Spirit. During the meeting many testified that they knew the work was of the Lord; the gift of tongues, the interpretation, also prophecy were enjoyed, and cases of healing were mentioned. You may be surprised when I tell you that for six months I had not received what I considered a testimony. I had heard two little girls about twelve years of age prophesy; they were too young to practice deceit, if they had wanted to. You remember Philip had four daughters who prophesied (Acts 21: 9); just how old they were we do not know. I have thought if some four sisters should prophesy in our hearing, our suspicions would be aroused, and we would say, "Too much of a family affair. Why bless four in the same family with the gift of prophecy and not bless one in other families?" So I thought, "Why am I left without a testimony all these months?" Still, I had faith that I would receive a knowledge as Jesus had promised.

"IS YOUR CHURCH APPROVED OF GOD?"

During this time a circumstance occurred that caused me to get discouraged. A gentleman invited me to spend noon hour with him; he wished to ask a question of importance. I wondered what the nature of it was. He was a member of the Congregational Church and was past middle age, while I was young and inexperienced. I wanted to go, and yet I dreaded it, for I was but a babe in the church. However, I called on him. Scarcely had I arrived in his presence when he asked: "Do you say that you know that the Latter Day Saint Church is approved of God?" The Saints in that neighborhood were wonderfully blessed. Brother W. W. Blair said that the Brookfield Branch was one of the most spiritual he had seen in his travels. The experiences and testimonies of the Saints had caused many to think along lines they had not thought of before, and this friend was much disturbed. I would have given my weight in gold, if I had had it, if I could only say, "Yes, I know this is the church of God, and his son is Jesus the Christ." But, I could not so testify at that time, so I avoided the answer by leading out along other lines, but he urged that I answer. I called his attention to John 7: 17, that knowledge was promised, and I had confidence in my brothers and sisters that they would not say the work was of the Lord, if they did not know it. He answered, "What do you say?" I replied that from a scriptural standpoint I could say it was of the Lord.

"But have you received the Holy Spirit? Have you enjoyed any of the spiritual gifts?"

I answered, "No; not yet; but I believe with all my heart that this is the church of God and I hope to receive spiritual evidence of the divinity of the same."

"Stop, stop," he replied; "I believe that the Congregational Church is approved of the Lord and have for over twenty years, but I cannot say that it is. I have enjoyed myself in the service, but never witnessed any of the gifts; in fact, we do not believe they are intended for us in this age; at least, we do not seek nor look for them."

"Well," I answered, "the Latter Day Saint Church is the same as it was in the days of the apostles; it is the same in organization, doctrine, gifts and blessings. I have heard the gift of prophecy and tongues and the interpretation, but I have not received any one of the gifts. Paul says, 'For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another, knowledge; to another, faith; to another, the gift of healing; to another, the workings of miracles; to another, prophecy; to another, discerning of spirits; to another, divers kinds of tongues; to another, interpretation of tongues.' (1 Corinthians 12.) All are not to be blessed with the gifts, but all have the promise of the Holy Spirit as recorded in 1 Corinthians 12: 7. And in addition to this, some are to have dreams and visions." (Joel 2: 28.)

He then said, "So you have not received any one of these gifts?"

I answered, "No."

"Well, is it not possible that those that have are deceived, for John said that many false spirits have gone out into the world and for us not to believe them?"

"Yes, I have read that, but John does not say that we are not to believe any spirit, but he says, 'Try them, for many false spirits have gone out'; not that all spiritual manifestations are false, neither are all true."

My lunch hour was gone, so I had to go back to my work.

The next day was Sunday and I was very much discouraged. Several months had gone and I had not received what I had hoped and prayed for. I said to my father, "Why is it that I do not get a testimony of this work?" He was surprised and answered, "Why, have you not received any?"

"No; I have not."

"You may expect too much; how does the church from a scriptural standpoint appear to you?"

"All right, but I do not know that the Bible is true, neither can I say that there is a God or that Jesus Christ is his son."

"Well, I hope you are not drifting into infidelity; you certainly have received some light?"

"Yes; I have better understanding of the Scriptures than I had before coming into the work, but I think that is because I read and study much more; but I do not understand why I do not receive a testimony, so I can say, like you and mother, and others, that I know that God approves of this church. I have always believed it since I heard the first sermon."

Father then advised me to continue humble and prayerful, that the promises of God could be relied upon, and that I should have a knowledge satisfactory to myself.

Yes, the testimony came, not in a way I expected, but in a way that God, in his wisdom, saw was for my best good. The testimony received has been a solid rock for me to stand upon during the fifty years of my Christian experience, even when the weaknesses of the flesh have exerted themselves, for bear in mind that Paul has said: "The flesh is at war with the spirit and the spirit with the flesh." We have the world, the flesh and the Devil to contend against when we are striving to be Saints, but it is a profitable experience. Even in the darkest hours, when severely tried, almost persuaded that I was so insignificant and unworthy to move out in the work, and almost ready to go back into the world, this marvelous experience has come to my mind, and I hope it will reach every heart of those present, because it is true, and it is in fulfillment of the promise of Jesus, the Christ, when he said, "It must needs be that I must go, but I will not leave you comfortless; I will send you the Comforter, the Holy Spirit; it will bring to your mind things that are past, things that are present, and things to come; it shall bear witness of me." (John 14.)

THE TESTIMONY

I was down in the coal mines—not a very desirable place, but it was honorable and legitimate—and I was wondering and meditating as to why and how long I was to be left without a testimony, and there came one of the grandest testimonies of my life. I am safe in saying this, for I have had hundreds of them, but there came to me at this time, one of the most effectual and grandest testimonies that ever I could ask, and when it came it was the Spirit of God, and it rested upon me as a mantle, and truly I was baptized with the Holy Spirit as real as with the water, and the words of Jesus were comprehended and understood as they never had been understood before, for he said, "I will send you the Comforter." It came as a comforter, and let me tell you, brethren and sisters and friends, if I never had heard of God nor Jesus Christ, I was now prepared, by virtue of that experience to testify that there was a God and that Jesus was his Son. I knew it as well as I knew that I was living. It was not hearsay; it was not imagination; but it was the Spirit of the Lord, and a revelation to me. And when some of you who are present to-night and are outside of this work, when you do come in, and come in in humility and with faith in God, what he has done for others, under similar conditions he will do for you.

That testimony came to me—talk of rejoicing! I cannot express it! My heart was lifted up in praise and gratitude to God, and when the Comforter left, the promise and knowledge that Jesus is the Christ and that this church is his has always remained with me. I could say as Peter said, "Thou art the Christ." And, by the way, God is no respecter of persons. You remember Christ asked of Peter; "Whom do men say that I am?" "Some say that thou art John the Baptist, and Elijah, or one of the prophets." "But whom do you say that I am?" and Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Remember the language of Paul, "No man can say that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Spirit," and when Peter confessed that Jesus was the Christ, Jesus said to him, "Blessed art thou, Simon Peter; flesh and blood hath not revealed this to thee [in other words, "the Scribes and Pharisees or ministers from their pulpits have not given thee the knowledge,"] but my Father which is in heaven hath revealed it unto thee by the spirit of revelation," and that same spirit has revealed it to thousands of others, and while all may not receive a testimony that Jesus is the Christ or may not receive the various gifts, there is a comforting thought, as expressed in 1 Corinthians 12: "The Spirit is given to all" who are worthy, but not in the same way.

Now, I was satisfied with the work—the church. I did not lose any time, but I called upon my friend who had inquired if I knew that God approved and recognized this church, and I said to him, "Levi, I am prepared to tell you now that I know that God recognizes the church called Latter Day Saints. He asked "How do you know it?" I told him as I have told you. He said, "William, I don't think you would tell a falsehood; that is why I wanted to have a private conversation with you; but I will tell you that you have been deceived." Oh, what a mistake! Where was the faith of that man? My experience was in fulfillment of the word of God, and he should have received it with joy and gladness, and if he had, he could have "known of the doctrine" for God is no respecter of persons.

Well, now, that was my first experience, so far as knowing of the divinity of this work. The time is passing, so I must hurry. I said to my wife before the service, "I believe I will stop that clock; fifty years is a long period to cover in an hour; a great many things should be said that will have to be omitted."

My wife was baptized in the month of May, the same year that I was, 1866, in the days of our courtship. Two years later we were married. I suggested to her to-day that she occupy part of the time this evening and tell some of her experiences and testimonies, "For in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall everything be established." She asked to be excused, giving as a reason that she could not do the subject justice; many of the experiences I shall mention she has enjoyed with me. Those of you who wish, may consult her, and while she has not the confidence in herself to take part this evening, I know if you visit her at the home, she will entertain you and interest you by telling her experience along gospel lines.

OPEN VISION

While in the Brookfield Branch, the place of my baptism in Ohio, I had an open vision. It was in 1867. In Joel 2: 28, he was authorized by the Spirit of God to make this promise, Your sons and daughters shall prophesy, your young and old shall have dreams and visions, etc. There is a difference between dreams and visions. To have a dream you usually go to sleep; to have a vision, you can be wide-awake.

I attended the young people's prayer meeting of that branch; we had been warned by the gift of prophecy to be very careful, that Satan was striving to get a foothold, and unless we were very watchful and humble and prayerful, we would be scattered as chaff with the wind. Mark you, a body of people whom God had recognized, who had enjoyed the blessings of God to a marvelous extent, whom the Lord in his loving-kindness had warned that the adversary of our souls was at work, and that they would go into barren and unfruitful fields if not careful! This surely was not good news, and it was in one of these prayer services that I had the first open vision, while some were praying. I am sure that it did not take as long for me to see it as it does for me to tell it.

I saw two pools or ponds filled with fish; in one was large fish, but there were only one or two that were fully alive. There was no water in that pool, and some of the fish were so far decayed that there was nothing but the bone or skeleton; others were just gasping for breath. On the left side of that pond, there was another pool about the same size. This one was full of small fish and plenty of water, and the fish were lively. That was all of the vision.

I arose, and said to the brother in charge, who was acting teacher of that branch, "Brother James, I have had an open vision," and I told it fearlessly, fearless of consequences, and gave the interpretation. "The large pool represents the priesthood; the little fish represent the membership, and in particular the young Saints." There were quite a number of young people in that branch. Inside of two years ten of the priesthood went out of the church; they were in iniquity addicted to strong drink, at this time, and they tampered along lines that grieved the Spirit of God, and it withdrew from them and they died spiritually, and that branch became disorganized, and truly, as it had been predicted, they were scattered to the four winds. I was back there last summer, 1915, after an absence of forty-five years; there is not a Latter Day Saint in that neighborhood. The little church building that we built at quite a sacrifice is still there, and I tried to get it to preach in. Not that I was anxious to be heard, but in order to tell this precious gospel that has done so much for so many, lo, these many years, but I did not get the church.

What I have related to you was a spiritual experience and was in fulfillment of the prophecy of Joel.

(To be concluded.)

* * * * *

TYPES WORTHY OF STUDY.—PART 2

BY GUSTAVE ERICKSON

In continuation of the matter relating to the antitypical meaning of "the court," "the holy," and "most holy," it is of importance to know something of its actors, and their significance as types.

LEVITES AND THE PRIESTHOOD

Israel, as well as the tabernacle priests, Levites and sacrifices were a type, and what was there done in symbol with and for Israel is being carried out through the marvelous work of Jehovah on a higher plane, the latter being the reality of which that was the type or shadow.

As Israel typified the world, so the tribe of Levites typified the "household of faith," or all believers in Jesus and his ransom. The priesthood, one body under one chief or high priest, was typical of "the little flock," who, with their "head" or high priest, are a royal priesthood, who, after the present time of sacrificing, are to be kings and priests unto God, and to reign on the earth. (Revelation 5: 10.)

Before the underpriests, the members of the body of Christ, the royal priesthood, will be united to their head, and begin their reign, they must "suffer with him," sharing in the antitypical sacrifices. (2 Timothy 2: 11, 12.) The Apostle Peter shows who were typified by the Aaronic priests, when, addressing those who were sanctified, he says: "Elect unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Christ an holy priesthood to offer up sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. Ye are . . . a royal priesthood." (1 Peter 1: 2, and 2: 9.) They are all servants of the truth, in that they are all called according to the gifts of God unto them. (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8; Hebrews 3: 1.) In consideration of the inauguration of the typical priesthood, we notice that the tribe of Levites (typical of all the justified believers) existed before the priesthood was instituted. So in the antitype the "royal priesthood" existed before that time, being of the "Melchisedec priesthood," before his time called "the priesthood of the Son of God."

THE ANOINTING OF THE PRIESTHOOD

Under the law they were anointed to their office with a peculiar ointment, called the "holy anointing oil," used upon none but the priest, and unlawful for anyone else to have or make. (Exodus 30: 25-33.) This typified the Holy Spirit of adoption whereby we, the real "royal priesthood," are sealed as sons of God. Aaron, the typical high priest, represented Jesus, the head, and the church as member; of the body—the great antitypical high priest. Being but a sinful man, like others, Aaron had to be washed in order to fitly represent the purity of the antitype, Jesus, who knew no sin, and his church, cleansed through his precious blood, and the washing of water by the word. (Ephesians 5: 26.)

After being washed, Aaron was clothed with the holy garments of "glory and beauty" (Exodus 28), and lastly the anointing oil was poured on his head (Exodus 29: 7.) Each article of this glorious apparel was typical of qualities and powers of the great Deliverer, head and body, as Jehovah discerned them, looking down into the future to the time for "the manifestation of the Sons of God," and the fulfillment in them of his promises. True, our Lord Jesus is the seed of promise from the beginning to Adam, yet God foresaw and has foretold the larger seed spiritual, which will include the church with the head. (Galatians 3: 16, 29.) And the apostle points out that an earthly seed of Abraham will also share the work of blessing the world, yet spiritual Israel is the true seed, as it is written, "The son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman." (Galatians 4: 22, 31.)

Concerning the natural seed of Abraham, and as proving that they will not be members of the priesthood who will do the blessing, the apostle says:

As concerning the gospel [the spiritual part of the covenant] they are enemies for your sake; but as touching the election they are [still] beloved for the father's sake. For the gifts and callings of God are not things he will repent of. For this is my covenant to them, there shall come out of Zion [the spiritual church] the deliverer [this great high priest, the servant of the covenant, Jesus, the head and the "little flock," his body], and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob."—Romans 11: 26-29.

Doctrine and Covenants 108: 6 says: "Richer blessing on the head of Ephraim and his fellows." After the body of Christ completes the spiritual "seed," that additional promise to Abraham respecting an earthly seed must have a fulfillment: the fleshly seed must become great "as the sand by the seashore," heavenly seed, being likened to "the stars of heaven." (Genesis 22: 17.)

(Concluded.)

* * * * *

THE FUTURE CHURCH

It is evident to the student of religious conditions in the world that there is not any church that attracts the common people in great numbers; they stand aloof from it, and this is not altogether because they are indifferent to things religious or have no interest in the purer things of life, as the following facts will show.

Laws on the State and Nation are constantly being passed for the welfare of the people. Asylums for the blind, deaf and feeble-minded, are found in every State; laws are in operation to protect the workman in factory, mill and mines, and transportation service. In nearly all the States children are not allowed to work in factory, mill or mine. In school and on the playground everything known to modern science is done to preserve their health. Widows' pensions are quite common. Homes for orphan and delinquent children are found in most of the States. In many of the States the children in the public schools are supplied with books during their school life. Juvenile courts are quite common, saving young offenders from contact with the common and hardened criminal. The saloon is rapidly being banished from the Nation. Congress has recently passed a law for the purpose of helping farmers get homes; our laws for the betterment of the people are almost numberless.

In various societies, public institutions, and in private ways there is a great army working for the good of old and young; free wards in the hospitals and various societies reach the poor and needy that otherwise would have no care; there is hardly a sorrow or misfortune that comes to old or young but what there is a society or some private way of reaching them. All these things indicate that in the great mass of humanity there is the spirit of the good Samaritan that is seeking to express the spirit of service in deeds of kindness and good will.

This work is done by separate groups in and out of the various churches and not by any one society or church. All those things are a part of the gospel of Christ, and the church that has the right doctrine and correct organization is the one that will succeed.

What will the future church be like? It will have the true doctrine and proper organization; it will care for the widow and the orphan; it will see that every boy and girl has an opportunity for an education and start in life prepared for its responsibilities; it will help the worthy needy secure homes; it will scatter sunshine as far and wide as its influence can be felt; it will see that the sick are not neglected; it will not permit the mother with her little babe to be a beast of burden and wear her body out to the neglect and injury of her little one; it will help make the home a clean, sanitary, healthy, cheerful and happy place for old and young; it will be a place where love will manifest itself in deeds of kindness and good will, it will be warm with the love of God; it will be like the beautiful sunshine, warming the hearts of all with whom it comes in contact; it will drive sorrow and tears away, and make many lives as sweet and beautiful as the rose.

That is the church of the future. Let us hasten the day of its coming.

EDWARD RANNIE.

Of General Interest

POINTERS FOR PREACHERS FROM A MODERN ADVERTISING MAN

A minister on a Pullman car fell in with a stranger who said that preaching was his line, too. "What denomination?" asked the minister. "Advertising," came the answer, without a smile. After which introduction Halford E. Luccock, the minister, drew from his unnamed traveling companion a sparkling advertising homily which appears at length in the dignified Methodist Review. "Good preachers for centuries," quoth the advertising man, "have been working on principles that are just being put into shape by the science of advertising, if you will allow such a high-sounding phrase in connection with what has been a very uncertain business. It is simply that both of us are working on different aspects of the same fundamental art—creating a use and demand for a particular thing. You are pushing religion and I am pushing soap, among other things; but that does not alter the fact that the rules of the game are the same. And for that matter," he added with a twinkle, "religion and soap are not such distant relatives, either."

From a "quaint" preacher in Vermont this advertising man declares that he learned some of the best things he knows about advertising. "I've watched him," said he, "and I've watched that little town for twenty years, and for the real business that he is at, creating a steady and growing demand and use for the thing he is projecting—the Christian religion—any advertising expert in the country can take off his hat to him. For the thing was actually used in that town. For persuading people about religion until they come to the 'buying point,' a good many 'up-to-date' advertisers in city pulpits are mere tyros, sir, mere tyros, compared to him."

Belief that the points of a good advertisement and of a good sermon are just about the same adheres to this advertising man. The purpose in each case is to get something believed, remembered and acted upon. The most elementary thing of all, usually learned through costly and humiliating experiences, is the fact that to secure effective publicity for anything, you have to study the article and really know all the ins and outs of the thing you are talking about. Mr. Advertising Man confesses:

I remember one particularly fine series of advertisements I did for an agricultural implement firm. They were really bright. The only trouble with them, as my client very gently pointed out to me, was that they showed such little acquaintance with farm labor that any farmer would laugh at them. It seemed too bad to discard such clever writing for so prosaic a reason as that! Last year, when our firm took a contract to advertise Portland cement, I spent a whole month learning how it was made and digging up some points why that cement was the best to buy. I believe I could have made the stuff myself when I sat down to write the ads. It paid, too.

Much strong preaching Mr. Advertising Man has heard, but he also hears a lot of it in the course of a year's travel that makes him think some of the men do not thoroughly know their article. For instance:

Since the war began I have heard at least fifty sermons on war and peace and you would be surprised to know what a confused blur those fifty sermons make on my mind. A few stand out clear as a sunbeam, but put them all together and you have something about as clearly defined as a composite photograph of the Presidents of the United States. It looks decidedly as though a good many men had never really dug out what Jesus actually taught about war and peace, or what the Christian message really is in confused days like these. Flaming eloquence is a poor substitute for clear knowledge of fundamental Christian teaching set forth so directly that a wayfaring man, like myself, though a fool, again like myself, need not err therein. . . .

Then some men seem to only know in spots the things they are set to project. When they have preached on the texts, "Servants, obey your masters," and, "The powers that be are ordained of God," they have swung their whole circle. They are missing a whole lot of what we advertising men call "good talking points" on the social side of Christianity—points that have a strong appeal and drawing power in that they make Christianity appear as a real part of what men want. I have listened to other sermons when for the life of me I could hardly tell whether the preacher was recommending "righteousness, joy, and peace in the Holy Ghost" or some particular brand of literary criticism to be applied to the fourth chapter of the book of Daniel. Of course, the effective study of an article goes further than the thing itself. It includes the materials of which it is made, the history and development of the business, and above all, the services it can perform. "What can it do better than anything else in the world?" is a fair question that both of us have to be able to answer on the spot, and answer convincingly.

Right along the same line he adds that there is a vast amount of money wasted in advertising that is too vague and general to produce results. If a man is advertising Carter's ink, he does not merely say, "Use ink"; but, "Carter's ink is everlastingly black." So of sermons, many preached every week are interesting enough and true enough, but wasted because vague.

The appeal is not tied up closely enough to a particular thing—the definite acceptance of Christianity. A man might listen to a great many sermons and get the idea that the Christian message was simply—"Be good." Gerald Stanley Lee calls it "teasing men to be good." If you have no more definite message than that you might as well save the money your space costs. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved" is a message which covers all that is implied in the vague and general "Be good," but it brings a thousand-fold more in inquiries and results.

Of course the other big side of the problem is to know the man one is talking to. How will this article strike Mr. Prospective Customer? and not, How does it strike me, the advertising manager, or the president of the company? Just so, How will this sermon strike Brown the grocer, and little Sallie Green? and not, How will it strike the professor of systematic theology at the seminary? Our Advertising Man proceeds to tell of another man who was advertising a washing machine and was unable to procure any response.

One day he tried to put himself in the place of the typical buyer. As soon as he did this he concluded he would have to try a washing machine before he would buy. So came into being the well-known "30-days free trial" appeal, which proved a big success. I have to do a great deal of that kind of pastoral work" if I am going to get results. Whenever I find that my inquiries are few, or that the cost of each inquiry is going up, it usually means that I have slowed up in my outside work and so am losing touch with the man I want to reach. I imagine it is much the same with you. The preacher who never rings door bells during the week rarely rings the bell when he shoots in the pulpit on Sunday. That is why I rate that country preacher up in Vermont as a past master. He not only knows everyone, but he know among just what mental neighbors in men's minds every sentence he says will have to lodge and what obstacles it will have to pass to get in at all. So he always talked to us as one who had a feeling for our infirmities, mental as well as other kinds.

The biggest thing, though, that advertising has to say to-day, according to this advertising preacher, is that "sensational" advertising is, with very few exceptions, poor business.

That is something which has cost us millions of dollars to learn, but we have learned it. Most preachers have always known it, but some are still laboring under the delusion that attention is a thing to be valued in itself. Attention, in itself, is worth just about nothing at all. It must be favorable attention. It is comparatively easy to attract attention, if one is satisfied with any sort of attention; but it accomplishes nothing if the advertiser is regarded with derision or suspicion, as he will be when he adopts freakish or sensational schemes. Deceptive headlines, tricks of all sorts, have no persuasive value when once the reader becomes aware of the deception. If you will read the back pages of your magazine carefully you will notice that "smart" writing in the advertising business is waning, and for a very solid reason: It doesn't pay. What you as a preacher must achieve, as well as I, is not to have a man say "What a clever piece of work!" but to have him feel, "That is something I want." Much advertising has been too "cute" and clever to succeed. It may be of use temporarily for a cheap article, but even there it arouses suspicion. A few years ago a firm with a three-thousand-dollar automobile to sell adopted a catchy and breezy style of advertising with great financial loss. It might have been useful in connection with a five-cent cake of soap, but a man with three thousand dollars to put into an automobile is not going to be led to invest by sensational headlines. I have often thought of that in church when listening to some self-styled, up-to-date preacher "smartly" discussing some sensational topic. A man who really takes Christianity is getting an expensive thing. Its initial cost is great and its upkeep calls for a large outlay in work and sacrifice and money. It takes more than bizarre headlines and spectacular performances to hold him. He has to be won and held by what we call "reason why" copy—straightforward and sincere. . . . I know several ministers who think that by sensationalism they are keeping abreast of the times in the business world when, as a matter of fact they are away behind the times. The trained advertiser, while always reaching out for a fresh and strong point of contact, has put mere sensation aside as a childish and expensive toy.

The Advertising Man also remarked that he has a nephew who has just gone into the ministry. The nephew agreed to telegraph every Saturday night his sermon for Sunday in a fifty-word night letter. "I told him that if he couldn't put his point into fifty words it wasn't sharp enough to stick anyone with. He says it has done him lots of good; I know the telegrams increase in clearness and force."

From costly business experience the Advertising Man gives a warning against "leaks." A firm may advertise a good product in a strong, convincing way, but it is wasted if the man reached does not have an opportunity to take the goods while he is interested.

I have listened to many a genuinely moving appeal to people to become followers of Christ, sermons that had a real grip to them, but absolutely no opportunity was given to do the thing the preacher asked them to do—register a decision. When a man listens to a number of appeals like that, without a chance to act in a definite way, they will lose their power with him after a while, and I believe that is what has happened in many cases. When you ask men to accept Christianity, give them a chance to do it. I shall never forget going to church with a shoe salesman years ago in Cincinnati. As we were coming out of the church he said to me, "It was a lucky thing the preacher didn't call for a show-down this morning. I would have gone up sure!" He called it "lucky," but I knew in his heart he was sorry.

—Current Opinion, July, 1916.

* * * * *

No mother who stands upon low ground herself can hope to place her children upon a loftier plane. They reach it, but it will not be through her.—Julian C. R. Dorr.

SOME LITTLE PESTS LOOK LARGE

"Girard," in the Public Ledger, Philadelphia, very interestingly presents the subject of disease and flies, mosquitoes and fleas as follows:

THE THREE MISCREANTS

The big things to-day were the little things yesterday. The little things to-morrow are the big things to-day. On a yesterday not long ago the fly was a household pest. It was a trivial little nothing. To-day the fly is a monster, slaying thousands of human beings in a summer. Yesterday the mosquito was only a joke. To-day it has risen to the magnitude of the prime menace of the tropics. This innocent of yesterday we now know carries malaria and yellow fever in his pouch of death. Who in India yesterday dreamed that fleas killed ten, yes, fifty times as many people in that mysterious land every year as did the dreadful Bengal tiger? But to-day India knows that the flea riding upon the back of a rat brings certain death to countless homes in the guise of bubonic plague. Three tiny creatures, the fly, the mosquito, and the flea, for centuries waged Verdun battles against the human race, and the human race didn't know until to-day!

THE FLY

That one venerable mother fly which four months ago laid one hundred and twenty eggs in a Philadelphia stable has already become the great-grandmother of a more numerous army of flies than there are people in the city of Philadelphia.

Letter carriers who bring your mail to the door in time for breakfast are less punctual than these companies, battalions, regiments, brigades, divisions and corps of flies in the calls they make upon you and your neighbors.

The flies carry far more important packages than the mailman because upon their feet are invisible tuberculosis germs, brought in from the street gutters and put in your baby's milk, and typhoid placed upon your own bread and butter.

We once looked upon the spider which invited the fly to "walk into my parlor" as a cold-blooded butcher. But the spider has more sense than humans, because he kills the fly, which we neglect to do, and so permit the fly to kill us.

THE MOSQUITO

The immortal Major Read and his little band of brave experimenters slept in dead men's beds, reeking with the horrors of yellow fever. It was unpleasant, but perfectly safe.

Elsewhere in the same hospital in the cleanest and whitest beds lay other men who were visited by the mosquito which had first called upon a yellow fever patient. These were the men who ran all the risk, since the mosquito gave them yellow fever.

Think of it! Less than twenty years ago those experiments were made in Cuba, since which time the mountainous terror of yellow fever in the hot countries has dwindled into a molehill.

Major Read and Doctor Gorgas simply taught us to kill the mosquito lest it kill us, and be mighty quick in making up our minds to do it.

THE FLEA

I read an official report when in Bombay that during the preceding year tigers had killed one thousand persons in India. You shudder at the fearful ravages of this king of the jungles. But at the very time I was in Bombay the fleas were killing three hundred persons every week in that one city alone. Nevertheless, the anticruelty crank would almost jail you for daring to kill a poor little innocent flea!

Those fleas, as I have said, were riding upon the backs of rodents and depositing the devastating bubonic plague in thousands of homes throughout India.

The insignificant and negligible thing called a flea yesterday has to-day replaced the tiger and the deadly cobra as the vast menace to 300,000,000 people in India.—The Medical World, August, 1916.

* * * * *

RICHEST PEOPLE IN THE WORLD

The richest people per capita in the world are going to be even still richer, through official action of Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane. The Osage Indians' wealth is estimated at $20,000 per capita in the Indian office. New leases running for five years, and possibly until 1931, just approved by Secretary Lane, will increase the average annual income of more than 2,000 allotted Osages, from between $900 and $1,000 per annum. The Osage Indians' lands in Oklahoma are rich with oil, gas and other minerals. Announcement was made at the interior department that Secretary Lane has approved oil leases disposed of at the recent auction sale, embracing lands belonging to this tribe, thereby concluding the transactions in connection with new oil and gas leases covering 680,000 acres of land that were included in the former so-called "Foster lease," which expired in March of this year. The 680,000 acres of land involved was held under the "Foster lease" by about 160 sub-leases in areas ranging from 40 to 300,000 acres. Under this lease the tribe received one eighth royalty on the oil produced. The land thus utilized embraced about one half of the area of the Osage reservation, the entire surface of which has been allotted to the members of the tribe in severalty. Under an act of Congress, however, all oil, gas and other minerals in the land, are reserved to the tribe until 1931, unless otherwise directed by Congress. It is estimated that the annual income to the Osage tribe under new oil and gas leases, based on the same production as during the past year, will aggregate at least $2,500,000, in addition to the $2,233,000 received in cash at recent sales, as against about $500,000 heretofore received annually under the old lease.—Washington Star.

* * * * *

A COW AS AN ALLY OF THE DRYS

Leading scientists of the Pasteur Institute have discovered that cow's milk is one of the most powerful stimulants known. It keys up the human system without interfering with common sense and clear judgment. Milk has been the only "bracer" used for months by the French soldiers in the trenches and it is said that a liberal use of it before going into battle has had such wonderful effect that the French Government is urging its sale in preference to other soft drinks when the men are off duty. "As mild as milk" is a phrase now quite out of date. Tell it to soldier and civilian, to pugilist and pacifist, that their old friend, the cow, furnishes a stimulant as vitalizing as the product of distillery and brewery is devitalizing. The discovery will mean much to the farmer and the cattle raiser, to the captain of industry, to the working man and to everybody who desires to conserve his personal liberty to health, safety, happiness and prosperity.

* * * * *

FORT BUILDERS OF OLD PERU

The great fortress of Sacsahuaman near Cuzco, Peru, is the most stupendous example in America of what prehistoric man could accomplish. Its builders had no better tools than stone hammers and fiber ropes, and understood no more advanced mechanical principles than the lever and the inclined plane. Many centuries ago, long before the days of the Incas, a primitive people constructed the walls of this fortress. Like the inhabitants of ancient Greece, they were aware of the strategic value of salients and reentrant angles, a knowledge which had been lost in Europe before the era of the first crusade.

The ancient builders constructed three lines of salients extending on terraces, one above another, for a third of a mile across the back of a hill which overshadowed the city of Cuzco. The terraces are faced with colossal boulders, some of which weigh more than twenty tons, and most of which were brought from quarries in the mountains a mile or two away. Several stones in the lower tier, at the points of the salient, are over twenty feet in height.

Notwithstanding the difficulty of handling and placing in position such enormous and extraordinarily irregular blocks, they were fitted together with great precision. No cement was used in the construction, the strength of the walls being due to the very irregularity of the blocks and the method in which they were locked together.

It is almost incredible that a primitive people should have had the courage and the patience to carry out such an enormous undertaking.—National Geographic Magazine.

Woman's Auxiliary

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

OFFICERS

President, Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, 630 South Chrysler Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Vice President, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, 1515 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri. Secretary, Mrs. W. W. Smith, corner Walnut Street and River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri. Treasurer, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Historian, Mrs. B. C. Smith, 214 South Street, Independence, Missouri.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPARTMENTS

Educational, Helen Silsbee Smith, 2315 Harney Street, Omaha, Nebraska. Home, Mrs. George N. Briggs, Lamoni, Iowa. Child Welfare, Mrs. Walter Sandy, 8431 East Sixtieth Street, Kansas City, Missouri. Relief and Service, Mrs. Edith Cochran, 1107 Powell Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri. Young Woman's, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

The Child in the Home

We once heard a woman say that to her mind there were four positive essentials in the equipment of any home, these four being a piano, a bathtub, a sewing machine and a baby! Stopping to consider a moment could we add to, or subtract from this brief summary? The piano feeds the hunger of the soul for art, the bathtub for cleanliness, the sewing machine for utility, and the baby—well, what side of a woman's nature does a baby not satisfy? Loving, clinging dependency, an inspiration for all that is best and highest, a child in the home is the most beautiful furnishing or adornment possible to conceive. Wealth may be withheld, luxury unknown; toil may be daily present, and sacrifice and privation ever there, but with the presence of a child, joy, sunshine, hope for the future, and a deep and abiding fountain of thanksgiving in the heart are assured; and with it all, an opportunity for constant growth towards God.

That every child has a right to be well born is a fact none would care to deny; that all children apparently, have not equally, a materialization of this right is also evident in the light of everyday observation. The inequality of means, of education, of culture, has its influence in determining what the status and opportunity of a child shall be. But, leaving out of the question the influence of the above forces, may it not be possible for every child to have, equally with all others, an equal heritage of love, of appreciation, of consideration and recognition? May not the environments of the children in our midst be those of purity of thought and action, as well as purity and cleanliness of body and surroundings? May not our homes externalize to our children our love for them, our concern for their souls' welfare, and our appreciation of the value to expanding minds and bodies which may be found in cheerfulness, cleanliness, order, and harmony.

What can be expected of a child born to the fate of being reared in a home devoid of happiness—a home uncleanly, a home shiftless and disorderly, where the veritable truths of the spiritual realm are unknown, untalked of, and unexpressed in daily life? Will the child not reflect the home and its atmosphere, unconscious and unrecognized though it may be, far more surely than he will the perfunctory advice or counsel or teachings received therein? Will it be enough to say to a child, "You must always speak gently," and then, when things irritate or disappoint us give vent to our own feelings of annoyance or exasperation? Is it enough to tell a child that Christ taught, in his Sermon on the Mount, that a peacemaker shall be called a child of God, and then allow discord and strife to enter into the home and the relations of its inmates? Nay, we must try to live and to be what we wish the child to absorb and to become, for example is ever the most successful teacher.

Sister Sandy presents this week the first of her series of articles dealing with the welfare of the child. She very thoughtfully starts with home conditions, making a plea for an atmosphere there of health, cheer, and encouragement for the child. Our readers will watch with pleasure, the unfolding of this series, and will appreciate the care, the study, and thought our superintendent is putting into her department in the auxiliary, in her effort to be of real use and helpfulness to us all.

Making Home Attractive

The home is the peculiar province of woman, and, in the shifting of many institutions in the progress of the world, the home has not escaped change. The homes of to-day are very unlike the homes of yesterday, where our grandmothers reigned: thrifty, economical and self-sacrificing. There no idleness existed; neither were extravagances to be found. To-day we have extravagance on every hand, and many homes presided over by either drones or butterflies!

But, however conditions may change, underlying principles remain the same, and when women once awakened to this fact, let us hope their obligations and responsibilities will be met as is befitting the women of this Nation and particularly, the women of this church.

We are in a new day, with new conditions, new resources, and new demands. The foundation of the home is, to-day, as of old, marriage; and the word still suggests refuge, rest, and security; but while this is perhaps its first and highest mission, the home may come to mean even more than this. It may reach out beyond its own boundary and become the bulwark of social power, its influence and service being invincible weapons against danger and temptation. It may become also, a strong antidote to sin. It may be an aggressive force for good in the community; it may create a wholesome and healthy atmosphere in which children may grow and develop, and learn to look out upon life with clear eyes; it may be made to be an uplift and inspiration to the discouraged—a revelation and a stimulation to the ignorant.

Society is organized on a basis which recognizes the right of women to be supported by the other sex; she is expected to make her return as mother and home maker. When she fulfills these duties she earns the privilege of support by husband and protection by the State. When she declines to fulfill this mission, or when, through no fault of her own, she fails to do so, society and State have a right to expect of her an equivalent of service in other lines. Our girls must feel that there is before them, a definite task for which they must be trained and fitted, by knowledge, study and experience. When they do feel this, we are sure it will not be long until the charge of idleness, frivolity and uselessness, can no longer truthfully be made against them.

Women need more concentration, more definiteness, in their work than they have had, and especially, do they need more interest and idealism in their home making. For all the progress a woman may make in art, science and education generally, there still remains no culture so needed, so well worth while as the ability to make a true home—one where love reigns supreme; and when a woman can preside in such a home unhurried, undismayed by circumstance, always in harmony with her surroundings, the atmosphere of that place is truly a foretaste of joys to come.

One essential to intelligent home making is a knowledge of its economics. This word frightens a great many people, but looked at squarely it is easily understood. Economics is the science that affects production, distribution, and consumption of wealth, or, in short, political economy. Cooking is but one of its branches; elimination of unnecessary expense another, the necessities and enjoyments of the table, another. The understanding and control of the cost of living is, perhaps, the weakest point in the training of women. The economics problem, and that of conservation of our resources, are two very important questions before our Nation, to-day. In every line of activity the high cost of living is calling forth serious study of conditions. Many women understand very imperfectly the science of the intelligent spending of money, and have but a very hazy idea of the value their cooperation in handling the family income would be to their husbands.

The homely art of sewing, darning, mending, and the skillful making over of garments not yet past their usefulness, is a distinct loss to this generation. Were it practiced more, it would do much to solve some of the financial worries which come to all of us. Too, a better sense of order should be studied, and its development encouraged; true fitness of things and their harmonious arrangement have their places in our home education. Food should be made to meet many needs; it should be satisfying, attractive, containing the right ingredients and proportion for the support and nurture of body and brain, and yet brought within a fixed and legitimate expenditure. It must also be suitable for the occasion, and meet the demands of hospitality.

When the material things have received careful attention, each home maker is confronted with other questions to decide: the educational, mental, and spiritual forces which shall enter into the home atmosphere. She must also decide how she may spend her leisure time wisely and pleasantly. There is one place where a woman's right to work is never questioned, and that is in her church. The women's societies are recognized generally as very necessary and useful adjuncts to church activity, but their work in this connection has not yet been carried to its highest possibilities. No other part of the church equipment has exactly the same opportunity nor the same field of endeavor. Each woman should undertake a definite line of outside work, in church or society, to which she can give careful study and thought, thereby broadening her outlook, and increasing her powers and influence for the benefit of others. Our crying need everywhere in the woman's work, as well as elsewhere, is for leaders, and how shall we qualify except by experience? Women who can organize; women who can speak publicly; women who can use their gifts of music for its many forms of expression; women who can tell a story, or explain clearly what they know, or see, or feel,—these are the women the church needs to-day,—capable, broad-minded, sane, healthful, able to stand on their own feet, and do their share in the world's upbuilding! In doing this, they have a part in the building of Zion as well!

LULA M. SANDY,

Superintendent Child Welfare Department.

School Dresses

Already I hear busy mothers planning the new fall school dresses for their girls, and discussing ways and means of making over old ones that they may still be in style. Let me pass along to you an idea recently presented to me.

It was that of a busy little mother, with girls of several ages to provide for, and she carried it out very successfully. She adopted a uniform style of dress, for them all, from the kindergarten to the high school child, using a full skirt, (often pleated, for variety) and a "middy" blouse. Such frocks were easily made and easily laundered; were not hard to refit over for a younger child when outgrown by an older; never needed remaking on account of changing styles; and were always in the best of taste, both as for utility and beauty, for school purposes. Variations were possible in collars, cuffs, ties, etc., and in the details of bottom finish.

Very much is being said and written just now, about uniformity and economy in dress. It is being discussed by women's clubs all over the country. We would do well to keep in touch with the many helpful suggestions offered through our daily papers, magazines, and elsewhere, and be quick to adopt sensible ideas, not being afraid to be leaders in our communities, in this movement towards refinement, appropriateness, beauty and economy in clothes.

Can we not help each other by exchanging ideas we have found practicable? Write me of the schemes and plans you have successfully carried out, and I will be glad to arrange a way that all may be benefited by your experience.

Yours in a common interest,

BERTHA L. MADER.

[Sister Mader is the superintendent of our Home Economics Department, and her address is 1509 Poyntz Avenue, Manhattan, Kansas. She will be glad to help you in any of your home problems concerning sanitation, household management, decorations, sewing, etc., and we would urge you to take advantage of her desire in this direction. She will contribute, from time to time, little suggestions similar to the practical one presented above, and the column readers will, undoubtedly, feel the convictions of good taste and sensibility which permeate her conscientious and thoroughly well-equipped education along these lines.—A. A.]

Auxiliary Echoes

The women of the Omaha local auxiliary combined business with pleasure when they repaired on the afternoon of August 2, to Hanscome Park, one of the many beautiful "breathing places" of this city. There a reorganization was effected, the new constitution and by-laws for locals as adopted by the general society last April being unanimously approved following a thorough explanation of the new departments and policies by our president, Sister Helen Silsbee Smith. It was with great regret that we were compelled by the force of circumstances at the same time, to relinquish Sister Smith as president of our local, her removal to Denver making her release necessary. She will be greatly missed by the Saints of the Omaha Branch in general, and by the women, and members of her Religio class in particular, as her work among them has always been cheerful, efficient, and influential.

Sister Ruth Schoolcraft was elected president of the new organization, with Sister Marmoy assisting her in the capacity of vice president, and Sister Lillian Wrenn to act in the double capacity of secretary and treasurer. The executive committee lost no time in getting together and outlining work and methods, and before the picnic supper was over, they announced the selection of Sister Grace Wallace as press chairman, named other committees, and hinted at other plans. We are looking for a renewal of life and interest incident to the coming of cooler weather, and the anticipation of the fall and winter campaigns of effort and accomplishment.

The Oriole girls are evincing much enthusiasm in their work, and it is no unusual thing to hear one explaining what she is doing to gain this or that point of merit. The larger girls have named their circle the Fontanelle, after the Indian chief of the Omaha tribe who did so much in an educational and political way for his people. The smaller girls also chose an Indian name, Hiawatha, and said they were also going to choose individual names—Indian names of birds, they thought would be appropriate. The activities of these circles will contribute inestimably towards their permanent good, establishing comradeship, thoroughness and devotion among them, stimulating and encouraging in good and altruistic endeavor, and binding them all closer to the church and their Maker.

Sister Gardner desires to have it understood by readers of the column that she will be glad to assist any of the reunion or convention workers who may wish to have upon their programs something in regard to the work of the Oriole girls. She will supply suggestions and material, and we can assure you that these will prove to be very attractive spots upon any program. It is desired that our people, men and women both, should thoroughly understand the aims and purposes and methods of this organization, that they may do what they can to establish it and its influence among the young women of their locality.

An Oriole Banquet

It was the good fortune of "ye editor" a few weeks ago to be a guest at a happy "affair" enjoyed recently by the Oriole girls of Council Bluffs. The occasion was the first anniversary of their organization, and in celebration of the event the three circles of that place joined in a banquet. The long table was spread in the basement of the church, where streamers of black and orange, the Oriole colors, and shades over the lights, of the same combination, made festive the animated scene. Crepe paper napkins had the Oriole emblematic device in the corners, and favors at each place were cleverly-constructed little birds' nests filled with candy eggs, and presided over by sedate-looking though very gorgeous orioles bearing the names of the diners. A huge "birthday" cake held the position of honor in the center of the table, its one candle burning valiantly throughout the dainty two-course repast, over which the fifty girls, presided over by their devoted and thoroughly sympathetic monitors, made merry.

Let us assure you that fifty girls in Oriole costume, surrounding a festive board where all is gayety and animation, is a pretty sight indeed, and when we look into the eyes of these young girls, and see reflected there all their yearning desires to grow in grace, in knowledge, and in favor with their God, and sense the charm of their fresh young lives, so marked by joyousness, good will, kindness of thoughts and beauty of face and form, we can but thank God for them, and send up to him a most loving and earnest prayer for their guidance and protection, that their charm and purity may be kept as priceless treasure—"unspotted from the world"!

Talks were given by the local superintendent, Sister Nellie Hansen, and by the three monitors present, Sisters Christensen, Smith, and Scott, as well as by several of the girls themselves, who responded, pleasantly and interestingly, when called upon, giving account of many things accomplished and enjoyed during the past year, and expressing many things planned and hoped for in the year ahead. We, also, tried to voice some of the thoughts which were surging through our mind, inspired by the scene and the contemplation of these beautiful young lives so consecrated to the church, each other, and their own best selves.

The names of these circles are, the "Daisy," composed of the youngest girls, the "Happy thought," those next older, and the "Zenith," the girls who are soon leaving their happy "teens" and whose comradeship and good times were written of so cleverly by one of their number, in the Autumn Leaves for August.

Their election of officers for the coming year, demonstrated their satisfaction with the ones who have served them during the past one, for they were all reelected. When the pleasant meeting was over, the tables were cleared in a twinkling, the dishes washed and whisked into cupboards, and the room tidied for the services of the Sabbath next day; all as if by magic, due to the joy in nimble fingers and willing feet, and when the good-bys were said, it was with sighs of satisfaction and (oh youth!) already an eager looking forward to next year, when there will be two candles upon their birthday cake!

Letter Department

More Wonderful History

ELDER ELBERT A. SMITH,
Lamoni Iowa.

Dear Brother: The Standard Dictionary of Facts edited by Henry Woldmar Rouf, M. A. Litt., D. D., C. L., of the Frontier Press Company, Buffalo, New York, has in it a short sketch on Mormonism. The story of Solomon Spalding is rehashed and the latter part of the story gives one the impression that Frederick M. Smith succeeded Joseph F. Smith, president of the Utah church, deceased. So Joseph F. Smith is dead, and the Utah church does not know it, and F. M. is president of the Mormon church and he does not know it. I think you had better apprise him of this fact, for the Standard Dictionary of Facts says so. This is the latest edition published this year, 1916. I am inclosing the whole story just as it is written by them.

In gospel bonds,

HENRY CARR.

ELKTON, MARYLAND, August 3, 1916.

True Patriotism

When the call went out for soldiers to defend our country against an enemy, and the militia were called out, I am sure that the red blood in every American citizen's veins burned within him, and he chafed at the bonds that held him and the conditions that made it necessary for him to remain at home. We as American people are noted for our loyalty to our country and have a heritage of bravery from past generations, who fought valiantly that we might have a country, a nation, a flag that we should be proud of. It is up to us to uphold the honor of that nation, and to keep that flag spotless. How can we best do that? By being a soldier? Yes. It is the duty of every American, especially the members of our church, to show their patriotism by enlisting and fighting in the army. The army of the right. While others go out and fight in order to keep out an enemy, or to punish one who has trodden on us, let us stay at home and fight. How? Live the kind of life that we should; set an example for others. Fight uncompromisingly against wrong. A liar in the community is as great an enemy as a foreign soldier with a gun. One saloon in town can kill more men—doubly kill them, physically and spiritually, too—than a whole company of the enemy might.

Every year cigarettes kill or disable as many, if not more than have been killed in the present European war so far this year. These things and a great many more that I could mention are greater enemies and will do more harm than Mexico or any other unfriendly country.

When our country calls, thousands rally to fight an enemy of flesh and blood; but how many men have enrolled to fight against these enemies that do more harm every year than those outside? Then let us all do as we should. Enlist in an army for the suppression of evil, and fight strong and hard. Then we will all be doing our country a greater service and be as great patriots as the best soldiers that ever lived.

ELLIS SHORT, JR.,

LAREDO, TEXAS.

President Missouri Artillery Branch.

Meeting the Opposition

Perhaps you would like to hear something from this part of the Lord's vineyard. The Saints here are trying to keep the faith amid the usual difficulties experienced in nearly every branch or district: human weakness, worldly enticements, differences of opinion, outside opposition, lack of charity, etc. Perhaps we shall always have these things to meet. Sometimes we are led to ask ourselves, Why do we believe in this restoration of the gospel? Why can we not unite with one of the popular churches of the day and escape the sneers, scorn and ostracism accorded Latter Day Saints? Why endure the opprobrium of being classed with the Utah Mormons by willful or ignorant writers? Is it because we are like them? Nay, verily, they too refuse to hear us. The Utah Mormons cast us out of their synagogues the same as all the popular churches of the day. In this they are all united.

These things we have to meet every day, the world over. Why can we not give it all up and be as other people? Why be so hated of all men?

I am sure every earnest Latter Day Saint desires to be guided by the sure word of God. In Psalm 73: 24 we read, "Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory." And in Luke 11: 28, "Blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it." Also in Luke 6, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" "Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like. He is like a man which built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock; and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it; for it was founded upon a rock."

Ah, then, that is why we cannot give up or be shaken: because we are founded on the word of God, the rock of eternal truth. Did not Jesus say, "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake. If ye were of the world, then the world would love its own"? So dear Saints, let us seek to learn God's truth, so we may not be shaken or turned from the truth by any wind of doctrine.

At one time a friend, a spiritualist and a medium, sought to enlighten my mind. He said to me, "There is no personal God. It is all folly to pray to God in times of affliction or trouble. God never heard or answered a prayer, and never will, for there is no personal God." I felt sorry for him and prayed in my heart when he first began to talk to me, that the right answer might be given me. So I replied, "Well, I have never tried to investigate spiritualism very deeply, but I read an article, written by a noted medium, in which he stated that Christ was the greatest medium that ever lived."

"Oh, yes," my friend replied, "we all believe that."

"Well," I said, "your greatest medium tells us to 'pray to our Father who art in heaven,' and the whole prayer denotes a personal God. Who is our heavenly Father if I cannot believe your greatest medium? I'm sure I shall not believe you lesser ones."

There is always something in God's word to uphold the doctrine if the Spirit brings it to our minds at the right time.

At one time a friend who believes in Christian Science wished to tell me why she believed that way, and she told me of being healed through prayer. I said, "Do you believe it was God who healed you?"

"Why, of course I do," she replied.

Then I said, "Well, I believe that is one truth that all Christians should believe, that God can hear and answer prayer and can heal the sick. In our family we have often been blessed in answer to prayer, and often had the like experiences you tell of through sending for the elders, as we are commanded in James 5:14, 15, 'If there be any sick among you, let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up.'"

She looked for a time, as if in deep thought, and finally said, "But do you people believe in present-day revelation?"

"Certainly," I replied. "You know Paul tells us in 1 Corinthians 12, 'Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant,' and he mentions the word of wisdom, the word of knowledge, faith, gifts of healing, working of miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, interpretation of tongues, all as gifts of the Spirit. The healing of the sick is only one of the gifts of the Spirit promised to believers. Through healing the sick God reveals his power to heal sickness. Through prophecy, he reveals his power to foretell coming events. He can reveal his will through visions, dreams, words of wisdom, or knowledge, but to me it is all present-day revelation in a way, or God's revealing his power or truth through some of the gifts promised the believers. But all by the same Spirit. Oh, yes, we believe in present-day revelation. I do not think we need to antagonize any truth which others do believe in, though some seem to make a hobby of some one truth. Yet no one is required to throw away any truth they have believed in in order to accept the true gospel of Christ. But many, like Apollus, need some Aquila or Priscilla to expound the way of God more perfectly to them in this day of so many lo heres and lo theres."

May God's people all gain a knowledge of the Scriptures, that we need not be deceived ourselves, and that we may try to help others. There are some who are near and dear to me and who do believe in the "restoration of the gospel" in these last days, who have sought to overthrow our faith in the "Reorganization" of late years. My own father died in the belief that the faction led by Alpheus Cutler, after the death of the martyr, holds all the authority recognized by God on earth to-day. And a little over two years ago, one of their members, a relative of mine, walked several miles on a bitter cold day, to carry a copy of part of a dream he had dreamed, which had been written down (and which I afterward heard their chief elder say he took the same as a revelation from God) to my eldest brother, Arthur Whiting.

Now when anything like this occurs should we never give it a thought or should we seek to compare it with the word of God, and see if we are in the faith or not? It does not help others to turn their belief aside, as a thing of naught, or to ridicule them. To my mind it is better to go "to the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this it is because there is no light in them." If they had not stated in their public meeting that they did take this dream the same as a revelation of God, we need not pay so much attention to it. Here is a copy of the portion of the dream as given to my brother:

"Extract from a dream given to Roy Whiting, December 27, 1913. I thought Uncle Lewis was sitting in the highest glory. He said, 'Tell Arthur to come back into the true church. Also tell Arthur that young Joseph has no authority from God to lead the church.' Uncle Lewis was sitting where he could see the three glories, and he said, 'I can't see any of the Josephites in any of them. Alexander Smith is in torment.' Then it seemed Uncle Lewis and the Savior were walking in a beautiful garden, all vines and trees and flowers. Uncle Lewis was pleading for his children. The Savior said, 'I will give you permission to send a message to Arthur. Tell him young Joseph is not of me. I have established my priesthood in the earth, in the order of Melchisedec, and it will never be taken off the earth. Isaac Whiting holds this authority.'"

There was more to the dream, but this is all that was particularly to Arthur.

In Doctrine and Covenants, 83:7, we read, "And now I give unto you a commandment, to beware concerning yourselves, to give diligent heed to the words of eternal life, for you shall live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. For the word of the Lord is truth."

Now to examine the above dream in the light of God's word. First, would the Savior be likely to look down upon the earth in 1913, and seeing a man of over eighty years of age, call him young Joseph? Any of the Cutlerites might, for they have called him "Young Joseph" from the time of his father's death in 1844. Nearly seventy years is time enough to acquire the habit. But I doubt the Savior calling him that.

Next, Uncle Lewis (my father) could not see any of the Josephites in either of the three glories. Now, the last resurrection that we know anything about, was at the time of the resurrection of Christ. And if we turn to the Book of Mormon, 18:42, "Now concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection, behold, it has been made known unto me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body; yea the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life. And then it shall come to pass that the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise, a state of rest, a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care, and sorrow, etc., while the wicked are cast out into outer darkness."

My father died nearly seven years ago. If he is righteous he will be in paradise, resting from all care, sorrows and troubles; will he then be pleading for his children, and worrying over them? The whole seven of them joined the Reorganization, though one passed to her reward nearly five years ago. And is paradise the highest glory, or celestial glory? It is not a state of rest, between death and the resurrection? Do they attain to the celestial glory before their resurrection? In the vision, Doctrine and Covenants 76, we see that among those of the terrestrial glory will be the honorable men of the earth who are blinded by the craftiness of men. Yet my father as represented in the dream could not see one of the Reorganization there. It is possible there is not even one honorable person in the Reorganization, who, if the Cutlerite faction is right, has been deceived by the craftiness of men? I should have to think there had not been an honorable person, who had been blinded by the craftiness of men, among the Cutlerites, providing they are deceived. But when we come to read of the telestial glory, as portrayed in the vision, we find they received not the gospel of Christ. They have been thrust down to hell. They will not be redeemed from the Devil until the last resurrection. They receive of the ministration of the gospel through the terrestrial, but will not be resurrected till the thousand years are ended, hence could not attain to the lesser glory after the millennium.

So I take it as impossible for my father to see into the telestial glory, to see who would be there; but if he could, according to the dream, we could none of us attain even to that after paying the debt to the uttermost farthing, in hell. I asked their president of the high priesthood if he thought that our belief in the restoration of the gospel, and in the Book of Mormon, and that Joseph Smith was a true prophet, and our trying to live up to the doctrine of Christ, would make us so much worse than the rest of mankind (if we were deceived as to the authority) that we could not even attain to the telestial glory, while other honorable men of the earth who had been deceived, could attain to the next to the highest glory.

One of their number told me he understood the dream to portray the three glories as they are now. I told him they of the telestial glory would not attain to that glory till after the thousand years' reign.

Another of their members told me she understood the dream to portray the three glories, as they would be hereafter. "Then," I replied, "the honorable people of the earth who are deceived will be in the terrestrial, while liars, sorcerers, adulterers, etc., after suffering the vengeance of the eternal fire, may attain to the telestial, and that glory 'surpasseth all understanding.'"

Suffice it to say that when we go to the books we cannot accept the claims of the Cutlerite faction. They claim to believe Joseph Smith, the Martyr, was a true prophet, yet when he anointed his son Joseph, while yet a child, and blessed him and prophesied that he would yet hold the same position in the church that he himself held, they reject that prophecy, even though they know that Alpheus Cutler was present and a witness to that blessing, and in spite of the fact that for fifty years the later Joseph Smith did hold that position.

Also in section 107, paragraph 18, we read that the Lord says of Joseph the Martyr, "For this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall be put upon the head of his posterity after him." For as the Lord said unto Abraham, so the Lord said unto Joseph Smith, "In thee and in thy seed shall the kindred of the earth be blessed."

Now if the kindred of the earth have ever been blessed through Abraham and his seed, it has been through the gospel, and if the kindred of the earth have ever been blessed through Joseph Smith, it has been through the gospel, and the fact that the sons of Joseph Smith put their life work in the spread of the gospel of Christ, and now the grandsons of Joseph Smith are engaged in spreading the gospel of Christ among the kindred of the earth, is another proof to me that Joseph Smith was a true prophet. But the Cutlerite faction reject this truth.

The Book of Covenants says in this same section 107 that the church was to give Joseph and his seed after him place in that house, that was to be built for the boarding of strangers, from generation to generation, so that the strangers who came there searching for truth might receive the counsel of those whom God had set as plants of renown, and watchmen on the walls of Zion. Whether the church as a body ever complied with this demand of the Lord's or not, that does not change the fact that God had set them as plants of renown and watchmen on the walls of Zion. And many are rejoicing in this day in the fulfillment of prophecy along this line.

I see my article will be too long if I try to note down every fulfillment of prophecy. They are plain to be seen whenever people are willing to see them.

I had the pleasure of attending the Saints' reunion at Clitherall, Minnesota, of late, and think the Saints are coming nearer to a unity of the faith. The prayer meetings were good; so were the sermons by Brethren Lambkin, Swen Swenson, Carlisle, Alonzo and Lurett Whiting, and others. The work of the auxiliaries is gaining ground, though it may be impossible for all out on the frontiers to take the interest that can be accomplished in large stakes or districts.

May the Lord bless all his people and all the honest in heart.

Your sister,
EMMA L. ANDERSON.

BEMIDJI, MINNESOTA.

PONDERS END, ENFIELD, MIDDLESEX, ENGLAND,

July 24, 1916.

Editors Herald: Inclosed is my subscription for HERALD for another year, and I should like to express my appreciation of the many excellent articles therein during the past year.

Though far from the general church headquarters, the Saints at Enfield oftentimes find a confirmation of thought and expression in the pages of the HERALD, with possibly additional light by reason of the writers' experience and spiritual power; we are therefore able to rejoice in the working of the one Spirit.

Praying for the onward progress of the work, I remain,
Yours in the gospel,

CLARE LILY TATMAN.

SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA, July 25, 1916.

Editors Herald: When we last wrote we were about to leave for Stockton to hold a series of meetings. We arrived there and found accommodations for housekeeping with a very nice lady to whom I talked gospel many times, she becoming so interested she would tell her neighbors all I told her, and thus many of them attended many of our services and were well pleased. We had fairly good success in the meetings there and trust that good was accomplished. We next visited Sacramento where we again stopped for several weeks, this time keeping house, where we greatly enjoyed our little home. We decided to move on to Chico, where the Saints have a fine church and good attendance, especially in the Sunday school and Religio, and where a series of meetings was arranged for. We were made very welcome at the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Hintz, with whom we remained a few weeks. While a great number of outsiders did not attend, yet all felt well repaid for the efforts, for the members seemed revived and strengthened. It was decided to get out a few hundred advertising cards, and Master Dean Hintz and myself distributed one hundred of them one morning—calling at the homes nearest the church—and I talked personally with forty-seven men and women. Had splendid success, and felt blessed myself, as a result. I am satisfied we as sisters in the church could do much in that way if we would make the effort. I did not observe many of those visited present at the services, but some attended and we feel that the talks and explanations as to our work may bear fruit in the future.

After the close of the meeting in Chico, we left for Santa Rosa, and the change of climate was greatly appreciated, for it was unusually warm the day we left, and all along the route, until we came within a few miles of our destination. Upon arrival, we were kindly cared for at the home of Sister Short, and where our headquarters have been, and Elder Pitt has tried to do all in his power for the work at this place. The Saints meet in a pleasant hall on Sundays, with meeting during the week at the home of Brother and Sister Case. Our labors have been divided between here and Windsor, a small village a few miles distant, where we have some loyal members. A series of meetings was held with good results—one lady obeying the gospel and many others seemingly interested. While in Windsor we stopped with Sister Archer, well known to many of the traveling missionaries. Sister Misener and Sister Luther Bell also shared their hospitality with us while in Windsor.

Our services over here, we continued on to Ukiah, a city about three hours ride from Santa Rosa. There, we were welcomed at the home of Mr. and Sister Landrum, who reside a short distance out of the city. Services were arranged for and a little advertising done, and we had splendid success right from the beginning. Nonmembers attended the first evening, and continued until the close, and three ladies especially attended almost every service, and expressed themselves as having greatly enjoyed it, and wished their minister could have come and heard, for they felt certain he would have requested Mr. Pitt to preach in their church. Brother York is president of the Ukiah Branch and we feel there is a future for the work there if each will do his duty. We had intended continuing our stay, but deemed it unwise until cooler weather. While at the Landrum home we decided to try native life, so slept out in the open under the trees, and with the stars shining brightly above us and with all nature quiet and peaceful, the words of Shelley came to my mind as never before: "Ah, how beautiful this night, the balmiest sigh which vernal zephyrs breathe in evening's ear, were discord to the speaking quietude, that wraps this moveless scene."

We enjoyed our outdoor life hugely, and regret that our travels make it impossible to continue such. We returned to Santa Rosa, where we are now comfortably domiciled with Brother and Sister Case, and where we may remain until the Irvington reunion, soon to convene.

We have just recently had the privilege through the kindness of a dear one, of visiting the wonderful Yosemite National Park, and it was indeed a privilege as well as a great pleasure to us. We spent a week in Camp Curry and cannot speak too highly of the service and accommodations of that famous camp. There were camp fires each eve and concerts, and many times we were asked to take part. Several came at different times and requested Elder Pitt to sing in the evening, saying, "We do enjoy hearing you sing, for it is so good to hear one who puts his soul into it." A lady said to me, "Your husband sang the 'King's business,' last eve, and I said to a friend, 'That gentleman must be engaged in the Master's business I know, the way he sings it,'" so she asked me. There were usually from eight hundred to one thousand guests there during our sojourn. The camp looked up to Glacier Point which towers an almost perpendicular wall three thousand, two hundred feet above the camp. This, we called our back fence. The soil is sandy and carpeted with a heavy layer of pine needles. The coldest of pure spring water from the foot of Glacier Point is piped throughout the camp.

We went for trips to Wawona, where we just missed the holdup by a couple days, where one bandit held up five large touring cars, with many guests from the East on their way to the valley. We also visited the Tuolumne big trees, and they are wonderful. Our auto drove through one of these giant trees.

On our trip from El Portal, which was in an auto, with four others, we passed several deer on the mountain side, and they seemed not to notice us as we drew near. We also had the privilege of coming in contact with a mountain bear. We were out of the auto resting, and here it came down the path. We were told not to fear it, for it was on its way to dinner where was a near-by camp. It was so close to us we could have touched it but I preferred not to.

We also visited Yosemite Falls, Bridal Veil Falls, and Happy Isles where rush the waters from the beautiful Merced River, as it winds through the valley in and out of forest and meadow, smooth and placid or wild and swift in tumbling cascades and roaring waterfalls. Sheer granite heights of towering spires, cliffs and domes or snow-capped peaks rise one after the other, with many waterfalls from three hundred feet to half a mile in height, offering pictures of supreme beauty at every turn.

We feel grateful indeed for our recreation and pleasure afforded us while at Yosemite, and while there we took advantage of every opportunity to spread the gospel. I visited with many. One couple were owners of a cafeteria in San Francisco. We met them at the camp fire one evening, and they seemed very much affected in hearing the Gospel story for the first time, and requested us to come and tell them more when we visit the city.

One morning I visited with two ladies at the breakfast table, and they asked me what business my husband was in. This gave the opportunity to explain, and they became very enthusiastic, one lady remarking, "That is the very religion I have been searching for for several years, for I once had a friend who believed as you do, and she told me of the anointing of oil for healing, as mentioned in the fifth chapter of James, and it is most wonderful that here I now have heard what I have wanted all these years." As I talked with them, and by the way, I forgot to eat (and did not have an inclination for that matter, when I had a gospel talk on hand) but as I continued, Elder Pitt came in for me, saying, "Hurry, for we are all ready for our trip," and one lady spoke and said, "Do not take her away, Mr. Pitt, for she is sewing seed here this morning that may bear fruit in Atlantic City." Those were her exact words. These are two experiences of many.

While we regretted in a way spending a little time in recreation yet it is our first since coming into our mission a year ago, and we both felt greatly benefited in the change and rest, and feel that some good may have been accomplished, and we trust that fruit may result therefrom.

With best wishes to all,

Your sister in the gospel,
ROSA PARKS PITT.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, July 29, 1916.

Editors Herald: According to promise, and desiring to let the Saints of our immediate acquaintance and others who may be interested know something concerning our western trip, we take this means of furnishing the information we have to convey.

Our leaving Independence was not quite so easy as it at first appeared to be (at least with reference to the writer). Especially did we feel it when beholding the loving interest shown us by the Saints at the depot as we boarded the train that was to carry us away from them for a long time. After brushing the tear aside, and waving a farewell as far as we could see our loved brothers, sisters and friends, we entered our coach.

We were made to realize that those near to us believed it necessary to keep the body in good condition by the abundance of fruit and other eatables given us. In a short time we were made to realize this more emphatically as we moved from train to train.

It was somewhat amusing to see us counting our grips, baskets, etc., more so when we piled in the tourist sleepers and realized the limited space apportioned us. Several amusing incidents occurred on the way; but one instance which would have made a circus clown grin was when we tried to squeeze into a couple of berths on a sleeper going to Salt Lake City.

A lady had preceded us who, like ourselves, had a grip or grips and was quite comfortably situated till we came in. Imagine six people, thirteen grips, baskets, etc., with no other place than on the seats or under the seats to place our luggage. Of course we unloaded, which was quite amusing, and interesting to this lady for a time; but about the time we had the grips to the right of her, grips in front of her and grips under her, that amused smile faded away.

About this time the conductor took a hand in giving us some advice, instructing us to make it comfortable for this lady. When Brother Miller told him it was up to him to make satisfactory arrangements for all concerned, the conductor left, and the lady interceded and secured a berth in another part of the car. Then we breathed easier.

We were soon to behold mountains cleft in twain, the "Royal Gorge." An open observation car was furnished the tourists. We with others took in the scenery. All agreed it was sublimely magnificent. One place we passed was a crevice in the rock which we were informed was about three thousand feet into the mountains. Rocks split, lying at different angles, high and low with a variety of coloring, made the scene charmingly grand.

We must not overlook another amusing feature of our trip. It was in the early part of our travel, shortly before arriving at Denver.

Nothing unusual had occurred up to this point. One of the male members of this company having an unquenchable thirst to satisfy, called for the lemonade sirup put up by his wife in a jar before leaving. He, believing the lid properly adjusted, proceeded to remove the same, when to his sorrowing astonishment, a speedy separation took place, the jar descending to the floor while he was still possessor of the lid. Of course there was a distribution of the coveted liquid finding its way in various directions over the floor, much to the dismay and the amusement of the company. However, his difficulties increased as he attempted with a few newspapers to erase the mess from the floor, which by persevering he succeeded in doing to a considerable extent. But believing it might look better, he decided that the remaining newspaper should cover up the smear, accordingly the papers were placed and held fast, as you may suppose. There will be another story to tell when the trainmen try to remove the paper.

At Denver we were met at the depot by Brethren Ammon White and Bishop R. Bullard, and a Brother Bruno. Brethren White and Bruno each had motor cars. Brother Bruno took the Miller family; Brother White, Bishop Bullard and ourselves. We took in some of the sights of the city, then to the home of Brother White, where Sister White had prepared a nice meal for us. Following the supper we went out in the motor car with Brother Ammon to see more of the city. Brother White showed his skill in handling the machine, for in about a half hour's ride he had shown us the beautiful parks and drives of the city, its streets, and buildings of interest. Its finely paved streets, beautiful and well-kept lawns, cool air, and surrounding mountainous scenery, made a splendid impression on our minds. Here the wife called up over the phone, our nephew, son of Brother and Sister Clow of Independence, who came and took wife to his home for a brief visit. We were pleased to meet Alfred, who some day we hope to call a brother in the gospel.

After our ride around the city we were taken to the church to prayer meeting, as it was Wednesday evening. The church is a fine looking building, and well situated. There we worshiped with the Saints. Divine influences were felt, and an inspired message came to the missionaries through Brother Bullard, prophetic and encouraging. Another was given through Brother White to Brother Bullard. We tried to impress the Saints with the confidence we had in the great work of latter days. After meeting we were made acquainted with Brother Walling, president of the branch, Brother Shupe, two daughters of Sister Powers, and a sister-in-law of Brother McConley, and others.

Next morning, after eating a tasty meal prepared by Sister White, we proceeded on our journey to stop off at Salt Lake City. We greatly appreciated the kindness shown by Brother and Sister White.

Brother Miller had written Brethren A. V. Closson and Bert McKim of our stopping there, so when we arrived they were there to meet us. Brother Miller, wife and daughter, and our daughter Evaline, stopped over night at the Windsor Hotel, while wife and I went to the home of Sister Rogers, where we met Sister Hudson and son Edwin and daughter Emma. Sister Roger's son Vere sang for us. He has a splendid voice. Our visit there was a source of considerable pleasure. Sister Hudson was the wife of Elder Hudson (now deceased) who was formerly president of the Salt Lake City Branch of the church, later was president of the Armstrong Branch. We should like to hear of the descendants of Elder Hudson moving in the line of his work.

While here we did the customary act of visiting the temple, tabernacle, museum, assembly hall, and seeing the Hotel Utah, Deseret News Building, Zion's Cooperative Store, and a few other places of interest. Had a short visit with Brother Smurthwaite, who is wide-awake and interested in the work. We also met a grandson of Brigham Young who exhibited a very courteous manner toward us. We think the city a fine one, and were much impressed with the intelligence and energy expressed upon material lines.

Wife and I, in company with Brother Closson, visited our fine little church. It appears to be in a nice location. Brother Closson is trying by examples of industry to cause proper consideration to be given our claims. The work has improved some since his coming. We understand Brethren McKim and Winegar were operating a tent service some distance from the city.

After kindly assisting us to the train we bade Brother Closson good-by, realizing that his was a trying situation. Going over the Western Pacific, we came in view of much splendid mountain scenery, so many places where the gold miners had worked. In the Sacramento Valley we were warmed up considerably, the thermometer registering one hundred and eight in the shade. We were told, however, that in San Francisco we would be cooled off, which we found to be true.

We arrived at San Francisco, Sunday evening, about sixty-three, and were met by Brother and Sister Parkin, who directed us to their nice church; quite a good many were present. Religio was in session, which was shortly adjourned, and introductions became the order. Here we met Brethren Lincoln, Parks, Lawn, and Elder G. J. Waller, Sister Waller, daughter of Brother Waller, Sister Hallings, I think, and Sister Griswold, and others. There was an atmosphere of pleasantness existent. The opening service was impressive. They have quite a nice choir of singers and Brother Parks plays well on his trombone. Brother Miller did the preaching, and it was good.

After meeting we made further acquaintances, then proceeded with Brother and Sister Parkin to their nice home, where we were well cared for. We were surprised to see men wearing overcoats. The women were wearing heavy coats and furs, and we would have felt more comfortable with additional clothing.

Here is where our company separated, Brother Miller and family to take boat for Honolulu, and we train for Los Angeles, later to San Diego. We regretted we were unable to bid our fellow traveler, good-by, on account of uncertainty of arrangements. We were close run for time on our tickets, so we thought it advisable to leave that day, otherwise we should have stayed till they left.

Sister Miller, her daughter Vera, and Brother Parkin came to the depot when we were leaving for Los Angeles. We arrived at Los Angeles, Tuesday morning, about nine o'clock and were met by Brother R. T. Cooper, whom we were very much pleased to see. Entering his motor car we were soon on our way to a place previously arranged for us during our stay here, which we discovered should be till after the reunion, occurring near here late in August.

We have excellent apartments in the Badham flats, owned by Brother W. E. Badham, who welcomed and has treated us kindly.

On the next day after our arrival we were called on to administer to Sister J. W. Rushton, with whom we had a nice visit. She is much better now.

We attended the prayer meeting at the church Wednesday evening, met several of the Saints and participated with them in the meeting. Brother T. W. Williams requested the writer to assist in caring for the meeting. I am to speak here next Sunday evening.

We enjoy Los Angeles. It is a beautiful city. It is kept exceptionally clean. Its streets are well paved, lawns are numerous, and kept in excellent condition. Trees in abundance, flowers in profusion, and fruits to your heart's content.

In conclusion, we wish to say that our trip was the most enjoyable and agreeable ever had. Our company was congenial, Brother Miller being an experienced traveler, taking the initiative at all the depots, looking after checking grips, sleeping accommodations, etc. He did his work well. We regretted it was necessary to separate, but being on our Master's business we must not permit separations to cause us to fail to prepare and do our work as desired by him.

With love to all mankind and especially the children of God, I am,

Yours, hopeful of doing some good in our new field of labor.
G. E. HARRINGTON

TABOR, IOWA, August 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: Perhaps there are those who would be glad to read a few lines from this part of the vineyard.

I reached my field the last part of April, have enjoyed my work very much so far. I have labored eight years in this part and I shall never forget the blessed association of the dear Saints here. I have been cared for tenderly.

The work is onward in this field; a beautiful spirit seems to prevail. Our last quarterly conference, (which was held in June) was one of the best I have ever attended in this district. I feel that a good work shall be done in this field this conference year.

I have baptized twenty-one so far in this year's work and many others are waiting to investigate a little further and study over the great gospel plan. So you see we cannot help but be happy in the work. I believe I never felt better in the great service and surely feel that the future outlook for the church is bright indeed.

The first of June, I reached Bartlett, Iowa, where I met an untiring band of dear Saints working hard to have a place to worship in. For years and years they had been meeting in a schoolhouse and often this was made very uncomfortable for them, so with this faithful band I labored for over six weeks and am glad to tell you I was permitted to see the little church home completed.

I believe it is one of the best little buildings in this part of the State, it is indeed a credit to any town. I am also glad to tell you that it is clear of debt: About one half of the cost was subscribed by friends of the work, not members of the church. We have a happy band of Saints here.

I now leave them for other parts in answer to many calls for preaching. It is certainly encouraging to a missionary laboring for a blessed, loving Savior who leads, guides, directs and cares for his dear ones while the missionary is away from home and loved ones there. Ever praying for the onward move of God's glorious work.

Sincerely,

W. E. HADEN.

KENOSHA HOSPITAL, KENOSHA, WISCONSIN,
August 11, 1916.

Editors Herald: I wish to reach the Saints in general and particularly those of Wisconsin. I am a nurse in training at the Kenosha Hospital in Kenosha, Wisconsin. I have a vacation of sixteen days beginning with August 27. Not knowing exactly what to do with those first seven days and having for a long time wished to become acquainted with the Saints of Wisconsin, I thought I should take this opportunity. If you are anywhere within a half day's journey from Kenosha would you mind writing to me?

If I seem to be inviting myself pray excuse me, but you see you don't know me and until you do I am sure you are missing a great deal.

It is over a year since I heard anything of Latter Day Saints, so please write.

In anticipation,

MARJORIE TAIT.

HOPEWELL, VIRGINIA, August 13, 1916.

Editors Herald: I asked you to please publish my letter [which we did not receive.—EDITORS.] I sent you about three or four weeks ago, as I wanted not only to let my brethren know I was still in the faith, but also willing to help get the gospel started in this town and State. I see by the minutes of General Conference that Virginia, the State where some and many of our best presidents came from, is not mentioned, and I presume there is not a church in the whole State.

I have made the offer to furnish a building to preach in, also to see that the preacher is cared for while here, but as my letter was not published, it has not met with response. The offer still stands.

I have made and lost more in a year in Hopewell than in any other place I ever was in. I came here with less than fifty dollars in goods and money. Made about two thousand dollars, and lost about eight hundred in the big fire, and have close to a thousand dollars in cash, besides about two hundred dollars in goods and money due me. There is a good chance here for a working preacher, and plenty of places open to the preaching of the word. But I am no preacher, but can do some to advance the cause of Christ here. I am in my sixtieth year. I lost my album with all my pictures. With other things, the picture of my dead wife. Can Sister A. White send me Mary's picture?

I feel we are near the second coming of the Lord, and I want to be ready to meet him when he comes. My relatives are nearly all gone to the beyond, but I am blessed with good health and I hope to live so I can meet him at his coming. This is a great manufacturing place of war munitions, and I call it little Europe, as most every nation on earth is here.

I will try to answer communications if they will inclose card or stamps with letter. Our fire loss was close to four millions, but they are putting up better buildings now than before. Have building all seated to preach in, but no preacher to preach.

With love to all the Saints, I am,
Still in the gospel,
WILLIAM C. CUMMINGS.

News from Missions

Eastern Montana

One's thoughts are many, to put them all in writing is impossible, and to try to put even the best of them in writing I find to be not an easy task—at least for me to do so is not easy. But we are going to make an effort that you may know we are trying to be true to the trust imposed upon us as a minister for Christ and a representative of his church.

While the church in these parts is not large, it is not what a man of Russellism said the other day, when he was asked if he would meet one of our representatives in discussion, "Why the Latter Day Saint Church is shot all to pieces. They have found the gold plates that Joe Smith wrote his bible from." I heard him lecture upon the subject, "A good resurrection for the world," in which he took the position that all the wicked world came forth in the resurrection at the beginning of the millennium, would be given a thousand years to reform and be judged by the record made during that time, so this present life counts nothing. He also said that God looked upon the present war in Europe, where millions are being killed, with no more censure than a mother putting her children to bed at night. This is surely as Brother Ralph Farrell said, meat out of season and meat indigestible.

I am finding it very difficult to leave wife alone with three hundred and twenty acres, with stock and growing vegetation, to prosecute the missionary work, so feel we will have to make some change if I am left free to go. The land is ours now, so we are free to go.

I find the Ford car very convenient so far, to get around with in this country. We cannot go to one tenth of the places we receive requests to come to, and when I hear of brethren finding it difficult to get places to preach I wish they were in this field to help us out. That is one difficulty we do not have to contend with. Letters are coming to us and the district president constantly, saying, "Come or send an elder." But of course it is only in a small way we can labor when we go, preaching in the small homes of the Saints or country school-houses to a dozen to twenty-five listeners, but after all in our work it is the personal contact that counts most.

We have a large field in this district, nearly half the State of Montana, and the members are scattered. The district was organized only two years ago, and we have four branches, located at Andes, Fairview, Outlook, and Opheim, with a total membership of about one hundred and sixty. There is close to that many more members in the district that have their membership outside.

The last conference held in June with the Culbertson Branch at Andes, was attended by about one hundred, and was in every way up to any district conference we have attended where the district was older and membership larger. The bishop's agent's report showed collections of over twelve hundred dollars in six months.

Possibly the greatest hindrance to our message's progress in these parts is that the people have the dollar sense largely developed, so they will pay little or no attention to anything they cannot see an opportunity to make money out of.

We hope to persevere to be on the side of right as nearly as possible, and be ready to assist every advanced step the cause of Zion may make herself ready to take. I am at present preaching near Outlook to a better turnout than we usually have in this country. Some seem quite interested. One of the roughest men of this community, Earnest Skagg, became interested in the gospel this spring, made complete reformation and obeyed, and it is wonderful to see such a kindly face he has now from what it used to be. He was told in March by expert doctors that he could not live thirty days. Five months have gone and he is now able to attend my meetings.

May God bless the dear HERALD and its readers, and I would to him that every Saint was a reader of its pages which contain such strength to the soul of man.

JAMES C. PAGE.

OUTLOOK, MONTANA, August 2, 1916.

News from Branches

Independence Stake

It is reported in the Examiner that under the direction of W. W. Smith a complete religious census of this city was taken August 10. The work was well organized, it stated, and one hundred and sixty men with instructions, left the headquarters of the stake and promptly at eight o'clock the work was finished and will be tabulated for the use of the church.

Listen, ye students of Graceland! A marriage license was issued in this city Monday, August 14, to Miss Laura B. Kelley and Doctor John R. Green, of Independence.

After a long spell of oppressive heat, and all nature was drooping from lack of moisture, the first rain for nearly three months arrived Sunday night, the 13th, and the voices of the brown thrush and woodpecker in the trees over on the Temple Lot began to be heard again. The downpour began at ten o'clock and the fall was 1.88 inches.

The number of troops gathered at Laredo is said to be nine thousand, and there is no lack of attractions some of which are supplied by the Y. M. C. A. A social for the benefit of Battery C Boys was given last evening on Sister A. L. Yingling's lawn in this city, at which about seventeen dollars was raised from the sale of refreshments. Much good is being done by the club.

Although many are away from home, on Sunday the meetings were well attended. At the sunrise service Brethren Guinand and Lloyd presided. There was an unusual number of children present; but although their number was increased, there was not the desired interest manifest, so they were gently reminded of this by a few of the elders who gave them good advice. But the young people had an ideal service all their own, during the hour of morning preaching, which consisted of a story-telling exercise by Sister Walter Smith, and special music rendered by Sister Israel A. Smith. Brother Israel presided. The meetings in the upper and lower rooms proceeded at the same hour, and although during the prayer of Brother Tucker, and also at intervals, the voices of the children were heard, everything went on harmoniously.

Brother Walter's discourse was based on a text taken from Doctrine and Covenants 32:2: "There were no poor among them." He began by stating that the people apparently are waiting for something, they know not what, and God is waiting for a people to listen to him. He presented the idea of the Saints' duty being to attain to a self-sustaining condition, and of their being more self-reliant.

His sermon was optimistic withal, yet full of sharp and cutting truisms. The great desideratum is mental equipment, the power and will to use the faculties with which we are endowed, to work for direction not correction, and for efficiency, not going through life unobserving and untrained. The richness of earth and heaven is in our hands.

At the twilight meeting a large crowd assembled and every ear and eye were opened to hear and observe what the speaker, Brother T. W. Sheldon, had to present. He spoke with emphasis upon the appealing theme of "the gospel of the kingdom," and though the air grew cooler and the night damp, freighted with welcome raindrops gathered fast, the Saints remained till the time came for closing.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Temporary Catalogue

Beginning September 1 and until further notice the following prices will be in force.

Note particularly that we have renumbered all our books, tracts, etc. Be sure and order by the new number.

General Conference appointees and regularly appointed agents will be allowed ten per cent on all books excepting those marked "Net," on these no discount will be allowed.

No discount on Herald, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, Journal of History, Stepping Stones, Zion's Hope, Tracts or Quarterlies.

Order of the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, or Ensign Publishing House Independence, Missouri.

By ordering of the house nearest you, you will save postage for the publishing concerns.

THE SAINTS' HERALD.

$1.50 per year in advance.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

$1 per year in advance.

JOURNAL OF HISTORY.

$1 per year in advance.

STEPPING STONES.

Price 50 cents a year in advance; in clubs of five or more to one address, 40 cents a year. Sample copy free. All subscriptions in advance.

ZION'S HOPE.

Single copies, per year, 30 cents; six months, 15 cents, in clubs of five or more, 25 cents per year for each subscription. Canadian subscription as follows: Single copy, per year 50 cents; in clubs of five or more, 25 cents each. All subscriptions in advance.

ZION'S ENSIGN.

Per year, in advance $1.00
Six months, in advance50
Three months, in advance25

BOOKBINDING.

Saints' Herald, Autumn Leaves, and Journal of History.
Per volume, cloth $1.50
Leather back and corners, cloth sides 1.75

INSPIRED TRANSLATION.

No. 1. Cloth $1.50
No. 2. Full leather 1.85
No. 3. Morocco, gilt edge 3.60

No. 4. Flexible binding, gilt edges 4.40

NEW TESTAMENTS.

Inspired Translation.

No. 5. Cloth $.50

No. 6. Cloth sides, leather back75

HOLMAN BIBLES, King James' Translation,

796x India paper, bourgeois type 8vo. Teachers' Bible. Self-pronouncing, containing helps as in number 4775, but omitting questions and answers. Size 5½ by 7⅞ inches, and only 1½ inches thick. Sealskin, divinity circuit, calf lined to edge, silk sewed, round corners, red under gold edges.

Price $10.50

Add 35 cents for thumb index.

4775 Fine grain genuine morocco, divinity circuit grained leather lining to edges, silk sewed, silk headbands and marker, round corners, red under gold, self-pronouncing Teachers' Bible. Printed on fine white paper from sharpest and clearest bourgeois type. Easier to read than any other large type Teachers' Bible. Contains all the new copyright helps to the study of the Bible, such as a teachers' new ready reference handbook, a new, practical, comparative concordance, a new illustrated, self-pronouncing bible dictionary. Four thousand questions and answers, fifteen new maps printed in colors. Price $6.00

Add 35 cents for thumb index.

812 R. L. The Ideal Self-pronouncing, Red Letter Teachers' Bible. Printed on fine white paper from the sharpest and clearest bourgeois type plates made. Easier to read than any other large type, red letter Teachers' Bible. Size 5½ by 7⅞ inches. Containing all new helps, etc. French seal, divinity circuit, grained lining and fly leaves, headbands and marker, round corners, red under gold edges.

Price $2.90

Add 35 cents for thumb index.

4712 Large type, self-pronouncing, Teachers' Bible. Printed on same paper and with same type as number 812 R. L., and containing same helps and same size. Egyptian morocco, divinity circuit, round corners, red under gold edges. With head bands.

Price $2.50

Add 35 cents for thumb index.

9111 French Seal, divinity circuit, gold back and side title, round corners, gilt edges.

Price $1.20

1302 Self-pronouncing Text Bible without references or helps. Minion 24 mo., size 3⅞ by 5¼ inches containing six colored maps of Bible land. Morocco grain cloth, gold side and back titles, round corners, red edges. Without index.

Price $.75

SELF PRONOUNCING TEXT BIBLE.

(Without references or helps.)

No. 1102 $.60

No. A24130

NEW TESTAMENT.

No. A324. Cloth, small size $.22

No. A300. Cloth, large size30

NEW SELF-PRONOUNCING PICTORIAL SUNDAY SCHOOL BIBLE.

No. 4181. Price $1.50

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS' EDITION.

No. 05454. Price $3.10

OXFORD CONCORDANCE BIBLE.

No. D4272X. Price $4.00

No. 03454X. Price $4.35

OXFORD TEACHER'S BIBLE.

No. 04458. Price $2.35

No. 04459. Price $2.85

BLACK-FACED TYPE TEACHERS' BIBLE.

No. 0805X. Price $5.25

OXFORD SELF-PRONOUNCING TEACHERS' BIBLE.

No. 04523. Price $2.60

ALASKA SEAL.

No. 04540. Price $4.60

OXFORD TEACHER'S BIBLE.

No. 04401. Price $1.20

OXFORD TESTAMENT.

No. 023. Price $.30

No. 024. Price35

BOOK OF MORMON. Authorized Edition

No. 11. Cloth $.90

No. 12. Full leather 1.30

No. 13. Imitation morocco, gilt edges 2.25

No. 14. Morocco, gilt edges, flexible 3.50

Large Type Edition.

No. 16. Cloth, leather back and corners	$2.15
No. 17. Full leather, gilt edges	3.65
No. 18. Flexible, gilt edges	5.80
DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.
No. 21. Cloth	$.65
No. 22. Full leather	1.00
No. 23. Imitation morocco, gilt edges	2.05
No. 24. Morocco, gilt edges, flexible	3.25
MORMONS BOG. (Danish.)
No. 31. ¼ leather	$1.50
No. 32. Leather	1.85
No. 33. Leather, limp	2.00
No. 34. Leather, flexible	3.50
DAS BUCH MORMON. (German.)
No. 36. Cloth	$1.50
BOOK OF MORMON DICTIONARY.
No. E41. Paper cover	$.25
No. E42. Cloth	.40
No. E43. Leather	.65
BOOK OF MORMON PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY.
No. 46. Paper	$.15
BOOK OF MORMON VERIFIED.
No. 47. Paper	$.05
10 for	.45
THE BOOK OF MORMON VINDICATED.
No. E48. Paper, 25 cents; 5 for	$1.00
No. E49. Cloth	.50
BOOK OF MORMON LECTURES.
No. 51. Cloth	$.75
SAINTS' HYMNAL.
Words and music.
No. 61. Leatherette, 35 cents; 10 for	$3.29
No. 62. Cloth, 50 cents; 10 for	4.40
No. 63. Cloth and leather	.60
No. 64. Full leather	1.25
No. 65. Flexible, gilt edges, each	2.00
Words only.
No. 71. Paper, 20 cents; 10 for	$1.65
No. 73. Cloth, 35 cents; 10 for	3.25
No. 74. Flexible, gilt edges, each	.85
ZION'S PRAISES.
Sunday School Song Book.
No. 81. Cloth, each 50 cents; 10 for	$4.40
No. 82. Full leather, each	1.25
No. 83. Flexible, gilt edge, each	2.00
SONG OF ADMONITION. A song of seven verses.
No. E86. 10 for 5 cents; 100 for	.30
SONGS OF ADMONITION. Containing four songs.
No. 87. Each 3 cents; 10 for	$.25
THE SWEET GOSPEL STORY.
No. 88. Words and Music	$.25
THE EVANGLIA LOST.
Duet for soprano and tenor, or two female voices.
No. E89. Per copy	$.10
HESPERIS.
No. 96. Cloth	$1.00
No. 97. Edition de luxe	2.50
HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
Vol. 1.
No. 101. Cloth	$2.00
No. 102. Leather back and corners	2.50
No. 103. Leather	3.50
No. 104. Gilt edges	4.00
Vol. 2.
No. 106. Cloth	$2.00
No. 107. Leather back and corners	2.50
No. 108. Leather	3.50
No. 109. Gilt edges	4.00
Vol. 3.
No. 111. Cloth	$2.00
No. 112. Leather back and corners	2.50
No. 113. Leather	3.50
No. 114. Gilt edges	4.00
Vol. 4.
No. 116. Cloth	$2.00
No. 117. Leather back and corners	2.50
No. 118. Leather	3.50
No. 119. Gilt edges	4.00
EUSEBIUS' ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.
No. 121. Cloth, each net	$1.50

THE WORK OF JOSEPHUS.

No. 122. Cloth, each net	$1.50
YOUNG PEOPLE'S HISTORY.
No. 126. Cloth, each	$1.00

MISCELLANEOUS WORK.A MARVELOUS WORK AND A WONDER.

No. 133. German edition, paper	$.30
APOCRYPHAL NEW TESTAMENT.
No. 136. Cloth, net	$1.25
APOSTASY OF THE CHURCH.
No. E141. Paper, each	$.05
ARCHÆOLOGICAL COMMITTEE REPORT.
No. 142. Cloth	$.75
AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF BISHOP R. C. EVANS.
No. 143. Cloth	$1.00
BRADEN-KELLEY DEBATE.
No. 152. Cloth	$2.00
CHRISTIAN SABBATH, THE
No. 161. Paper	$.25
No. 162. Cloth	.40
COMPENDIUM OF FAITH.
No. 163. Cloth	$1.00
No. 164. Leather	1.25
No. 165. Flexible	2.00
CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE.
No. 166. Cloth, net	$1.50
COURT PROCEDURE.
No. 167. Paper	$.15
DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON PROVEN BY ARCHÆOLOGY.
No. 176. Cloth	$.60
DOCTRINE AND DOGMAS OF UTAH MORMONISM EXPOSED.
No. 177. Cloth	$1.25
DOCTRINAL REFERENCES. Bible.
No. 178. Paper	$.05
No. 179. Cloth	.10
DOCTRINAL REFERENCES. From Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants.
No. E185. Paper cover	$.10
No. E186. Cloth	.15
No. E187. Leather	.30
FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM, THE.
No. 196. Paper 25 cents, 5 for	$1.00
FALL OF BABYLON, THE.
No. 197. Cloth	$1.25
GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS.
No. 206. Paper	$.40
No. 207. Cloth	.60
GOSPEL MESSENGER, THE.
No. 208. Cloth	$1.00
HURLBUT'S STORY OF THE BIBLE.
No. 211. Cloth, net	$1.50
INTERPRETER.
No. 212. Cloth	$.50
INSTRUCTOR, THE.
No. 216. Cloth	$1.00
No. 217. Leather	$1.25
No. 218. Flexible	2.00
LECTURES ON FAITH.
No. 226. Limp cloth	$.25
No. 227. Paper, 15 cents, 10 for	1.20
MANUSCRIPT FOUND, THE
No. 231. Paper	$.30
MANUAL OF THE PRIESTHOOD.
No. 232. Cloth	$.35
MEMOIRS OF W. W. BLAIR.
No. 236. Cloth	$.75
OBJECTIONS TO DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS ANSWERED AND REFUTED.
No. 251. Paper	$.30
No. 252. Cloth	.50
OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL, THE.
No. 253. Cloth	$1.00
OXFORD POCKET CONCORDANCE.
No. 255. Leather, each net	$.80
THE OPINIONS OF SIXTY-FIVE LEADING MINISTERS ON ISAIAH 29:11-24 AND EZEKIEL 37:15-22.
No. 256. Each 15 cents; 10 for	$1.20
FROM PALMYRA TO INDEPENDENCE.
No. E261. Cloth	$1.00
No. E262. Paper	.60

PARSONS' TEXT BOOK.

No. 263. Cloth	$1.00
PATRIARCHATE: THE CALLING AND DUTIES OF PATRIARCHS.
No. 266. Paper10
No. 267. Cloth20
SABBATARIAN THEORIES A DELUSION.
No. E281. Paper20
No. E282. Cloth30
JOSEPH SMITH DEFENDED.
No. 286. Cloth75
JOSEPH SMITH AND HIS PROGENITORS.
No. 287. Cloth	$1.00
JOSEPH SMITH, WHO WAS HE?
No. 288. Cloth75
SMITH-PELOUBET'S BIBLE DICTIONARY.
No. 291. Cloth, net	$1.60
SUNDAY, THE TRUE SABBATH.
No. 296. Cloth, net75
THE BOOKS AND UTAH MORMONISM IN CONTRAST.
No. E301. Paper, 10 cents; 3 for25
THREE BIBLES COMPARED.
No. E302. Paper, 25 cents; 5 for	$1.00
No. E303. Cloth35
THE TRUTH DEFENDED.
No. 304. Paper50
No. 305. Cloth75
TRUE SUCCESSION IN CHURCH PRESIDENCY.
No. 306. Paper50
No. 307. Cloth75
VISIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH THE SEER.
No. 311. Paper, each 15 cents; 10 for	$1.00
VOICE OF WARNING AND INSTRUCTION TO ALL PEOPLE.
No. 312. Paper, 15 cents; 10 for	$1.00
No. 313. Cloth, limp20
WHAT IS MAN?
No. 316. Cloth75
YOUNG'S ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE.
No. 321. Cloth, each, net	$6.00
SOCIAL AND PERSONAL PURITY SERIES.
FIRESIDE TALKS WITH OUR GIRLS.
No. 331. Limp cloth35
OUR BOYS.
No. 332. Cloth55
HIMSELF.
No. 333. Cloth, illustrated, net	$1.10
HERSELF.
No. 334. Cloth, illustrated, net	$1.10
YOUR BABY.
No. 335. Cloth, net	$1.10
HOW TO TELL THE STORY OF LIFE.
No. 341. Cloth40
No. 342. Paper20
GUIDE TO SEX INSTRUCTIONS.
No. 343. Vellum de luxe cloth	$1.25
No. 344. Paper50
PERFECT MANHOOD.
No. 345. Vellum de luxe cloth75
No. 346. Paper30
PERFECT WOMANHOOD.
No. 347. Vellum de luxe cloth75
No. 348. Paper30
PERFECT BOYHOOD.
No. 349. Vellum de luxe cloth40
No. 350. Paper20
PERFECT GIRLHOOD.
No. 351. Vellum de luxe cloth40
No. 352. Paper20
SPOONING.
No. 353. Paper15
BEATRICE WITHERSPOON.
No. 360. Cloth	$1.30
OUR MISSIONARIES IN BIBLE LANDS.
No. E361. Heavy paper covers50
No. E362. Cloth Boards75
THE INDIAN MAIDEN.
No. 363. Cloth60
THE HAPPIEST CHRISTMAS AND THE SILVER THIMBLE.
No. 364. Cloth40

BOOK OF MORMON TALKS.

No. 365. Cloth	$.60
THE GOSPEL STORY AND FOOTSTEPS OF JESUS.
No. 366. Cloth	$.60
SADIE AND HER PETS.
No. 367. Cloth	$.60
TALKS ABOUT JOSEPH SMITH.
No. 368. Cloth	$.60
HIS FIRST VENTURE AND THE SEQUEL.
No. 369. Cloth	$.60
JOAN OF ARC.
No. 370. Cloth	$.60
THE MORMON GIRL.
No. 371. Cloth	$1.00
THE TWO-STORY BOOK
No. 372. Cloth	$.55
IN THE SHELTER OF THE LITTLE BROWN COTTAGE.
No. 373. Cloth, illustrated	$1.25
PETER BOSTEN.
No. 374. Cloth	$1.00
WITH THE CHURCH IN AN EARLY DAY.
No. 375. Cloth	$1.00
THE PLEASURES OF THE WORLD.
No. 381. Paper	$.25
TRUANTS.
No. 382. Paper	$.25
GRACELAND RECEIPT BOOK.
No. 401. Paper, net	$.30
THE MARY FRANCES COOK BOOK.
No. 402. Cloth, net	$1.20
Postage20
EASY STEPS IN SEWING FOR BIG AND LITTLE GIRLS.
No. 403. Cloth, net	$1.50
Postage20
BOOK OF MORMON MAPS.
No. 501. Set of six	$.20
BIBLE ATLAS.
No. 502. Bound in leather, net	1.00
No. 503. With text, net	1.50
THE POATES COMPLETE ATLAS OF THE WORLD.
No. 511. Cloth, net	$1.50
No. 512. Semiflexible leather, net	2.00

CHURCH REQUISITES AND SUPPLIESBLANKS.

No. 521. Baptism and confirmation certificate books with stubs each	$.30
No. 522. Blessing of children, certificate books, with stubs, each	$.30
No. 523. Certificate of Transfer, found in books of 25. With stubs, each	$.35
COURT PROCEDURE BLANKS.
No. 525. Per set	$2.50
MINISTRY AND BRANCH CARDS.
With name and address, etc., on one side and Epitome of faith on the other side.
No. 530. Per 250	$2.00
MARRIAGE CERTIFICATES.
No. 535. Pkg. of 10	$.25
POST CARDS. Colored of the following: Herald Pub. House, Independence Church, Lamoni Church, Saints' Home, Graceland College.
No. 540. Per pkg. of 10	$.25
No. E541. Post Cards—Quotations from Book of Mormon.
1 for	$.02
10 for10
100 for90
BLANK PREACHING NOTICES.
No. E545. 50 for 30 cents; 100 for	$.50
APPLICATION FOR ENROLLMENT IN QUORUMS.
No. 550. Pkg. of 10	$.05
REPORT BLANKS.
No. 560. General report blanks, 10 for	$.10
250 for	1.75
500 for	3.40
1,000 for	6.00
No. 561. Branch President's Report, 10 for12
No. 562. District President's Report, 10 for15
No. 563. Branch Statistical Report, 10 for50
LOOSE LEAF BINDER. For all standard size blanks, (8½ by 11) Sunday School and Religio.
No. 570	$1.90

BRANCH TITHING CARDS.

No. 575. 10 for 10 cents; 100 for$.55

MISSIONARIES' DIARY.

No. 580. Price$.50

No. F581. Extra fillers for one year15

MINISTERIAL DIARY. For the different offices.

No. E585. Price$.10

PRIESTHOOD LICENSES.

No. 590. Elder's, 10 for$.15

No. 591. Priest's, 10 for15

No. 592. Teacher's, 10 for15

No. 593. Deacon's, 10 for15

QUORUM LICENSES.

No. 600. Elder's, 10 for$.15

No. 601. Priest's, 10 for15

No. 602. Teacher's, 10 for15

No. 603. Deacon's, 10 for15

RECORD BOOKS.

No. 610. Branch record, leather back and corners $2.00

No. 611. District records, leather back and corners $3.00

MINUTE BOOKS.

No. 615. Leather and canvas, net$1.25

LOOSE LEAF RECORD BLANKS.

No. 620. Size 5x8, 100, 40 cents; 1,000 for$3.50

No. 621. Size 8x10, 100, 50 cents; 1,000 for 4.50

INDIVIDUAL NAMES. A charge of 15 cents will be made for putting your name on any book. Two or more books for 12½c each.

LETTERS OF REMOVAL.

No. R58. 10 for$.05

NOTES FOR RELIGIO WORKERS. (See Sunday School Supples. S63.)

QUARTERLIES. (See Religio Quarterlies.)

RELIGIO QUARTERLIES.

No. R100. Senior grade, per quarter 8 cents; per year$.25

No. R101. Junior grade, per quarter 6 cents; per year$.20

RELIGIO'S ARENA.

A department in "Autumn Leaves," the official organ of the society. Subscription price in advance$1.00

REPORT BLANKS.

DELEGATE CREDENTIALS.

No. R140. 10 for$.10

DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT TO GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT. (Semiannual.)

No. R141. 10 for$.15

Instruction Leaflet C, "How to do it," explains items on form 50-D. No. R142. 10 for$.15

DISTRICT TO GENERAL SECRETARY.

No. R143. 10 for$.15

DISTRICT TO GENERAL VICE PRESIDENTS.

No. R144. Per dozen$.10

LOCAL HOME DEPARTMENT SUPERINTENDENT TO DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT.

Form 50-C. No. R145. 10 for 15 cents; 100 for$1.25

GOOD LITERATURE.

LOCAL TO DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT.

No. R146. 10 for$.15

GOOD LITERATURE.

DISTRICT TO GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT.

No. R147. 10 for$.15

LOCAL TO DISTRICT SECRETARIES.

No. R148. 10 for$.15

LOCAL TO DISTRICT VICE PRESIDENTS.

No. R149. 10 for$.15

SECRETARY'S RECORD. (See District Secretary's Record.)

WORKERS' HANDBOOK.

No. R170. Paper, each 3 cents; 10 for$.25

Catalogue of Religio Publications

ARENA, RELIGIO'S. (See Religio's Arena.)

BOOK OF MORMON DICTIONARY.

Paper$.25

Cloth40

Leather65

BOOK OF MORMON LECTURES.

No. 51. Cloth$.75

BOOK OF MORMON NORMAL LESSONS.

No. R20. Cloth35

BOOK OF MORMON PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY.

No. 46. Paper cover, each$.15

BOOK OF MORMON TALKS.

No. 365. Cloth$.60

BOOK OF MORMON VERIFIED

No. 47. Each 5 cents; 10 for$.45

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS.

No. R30. 10 for$.15

DISTRICT SECRETARY'S RECORD BOOK.

No. RE40. Each$.25

DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON PROVEN BY ARCHÆOLOGY.

No. 176. Cloth$.60

GOOD LITERATURE REPORT BLANKS. (See Report Blanks, Good Literature.)

HOME DEPARTMENT BOOKLETS.

The work of the Religio home department fully described; good to put into the hands of new prospects. Order of F. F. Whipper, Plano, Illinois, Box 218. Paper, each 5 cents; per dozen, 25 cents; per 100$.75

LOCAL SUPERINTENDENT'S RECORD.

No. E51. Per dozen 5 cents; per 100$.35

MEMBERSHIP CARDS.

No. E52. Per Dozen 5 cents; per 100$.35

MEMBERS' QUARTERLY REPORT ENVELOPES.

No. E52. Per dozen, 5 cents; per 100$.25

VISITORS' RECORD. Form 50a, for local officers.

No. R53. Each 5 cent; 10 for$.45

LEAFLET OF INSTRUCTION A, "HOW TO DO IT."

Explains the duties of the home department visitor, and how to keep the record. Accompanies 50-A.

LEAFLET OF INSTRUCTION B, "HOW TO DO IT."

No. R54. 10 for$.10

LEAFLET OF INSTRUCTION AND TESTIMONIALS.

No. R55. 10 for$.10

LEAFLET NUMBER ONE. HOW TO ORGANIZE.

No. R56. 10 for$.10

LEAFLETS ON RECREATIONS AND AMUSEMENTS.

No. R57. 10 for$.10

Sunday School

BIBLE ATLAS.

Paper binding, each$.25

BIBLE ATLAS.

No. 502. Each$1.00

BIBLE DICTIONARY. SMITH-PELOUBET'S.

No. 503. With descriptive text, each 1.50

No. 291. Cloth$1.60

BIBLES. Write for Catalogue.

BINDER. (See Loose-Leaf Binder.)

BLANKS, REPORT. (See Report Blanks.)

CARDS, ABSENTEE'S.

No. S1. Per 100$.75

CARDS, FANCY.

No. S2. Large, five kinds, per 50$.75

No. S3. Small, ten kinds, per 100$.50

CARDS, MEMBER'S

No. S4. Per 100$.75

CARDS, SCHOLAR'S.

No. S5. Per 100$.75

CARDS, TEACHER'S.

No. S6. Per 100$.75

CARDS, TITHING.

No. S8. 10 for 10 cents; 100 for$.55

CARDS, "TO OUR VISITORS."

No. S9. Per 100$.75

CARDS, VISITOR'S.

No. S10. Per 100$.75

CHRISTMAS BOOK NO. 1, OUR.

No. S11. Paper cover$.30

CHRISTMAS RECITATIONS.

No. S12. Paper cover$.15

CLASS RECORD. (See Teacher's Class Record.)

CLASS RECORD ENVELOPES. (See Envelopes.)

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS.

No. S13. Per pkg. of 10$.15

CONVENTION BLANKS.
(See Report Blanks.)

CRADLE ROLL DEPARTMENT

CRADLE ROLL.
No. S14. Each	$.60
CRADLE ROLL CERTIFICATE.
No. S15. Each	$.02
CRADLE ROLL INVITATION AND ACCEPTANCE CARDS.
No. S16. Each	$.02
CRADLE ROLL LEAFLET OF INSTRUCTION.
No. S17. Per pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.35
CRADLE ROLL RECORD.
No. S18. Each	$.15
No. S19. Birth Offering envelopes. 10 for 5 cents; 100 for	$.45
No. S20. Birth offering receipt cards. 10 for 5 cents; 100 for	$.45

DEPARTMENT SECRETARY'S BLANKS. (See Secretary's Loose-Leaf Record.)
DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE. (See Bible Dictionary.)
ENVELOPES, CLASS RECORD.
No. S28. Each	$.02
ENVELOPES, OFFERING. (See Offering Envelopes.)
GOOD BEHAVIOR TICKETS. (See Tickets.)
GOSPEL QUARTERLIES. (See Quarterlies, Gospel.)

HOME DEPARTMENT

HOME CLASS ASSORTMENT.
No. S38. Per pkg.	$.25
LEAFLET OF INSTRUCTION No. 2.
No. S39. Per pkg. of 10	$.08
MEMBERSHIP CARDS.
No. S40. Per pkg. of 10	$.05
Per 10040
RECORD ENVELOPES.
No. S41. 10 for	$.04
Per 10025
VISITOR'S RECORDS.
No. S42. 10 for	$.15
Per 100	1.25
HURLBUT'S NORMAL LESSONS. (See Normal Lessons.)
LEAFLET OF INSTRUCTION FOR HOME DEPARTMENT. (See Home Department.)
LOOSE-LEAF BINDER.
No. S58. Each	$1.90
LOOSE-LEAF SECRETARY'S RECORD.
No. S59. Loose-Leaf Binder	$1.90
No. S60. Per set of 1015
Per 100	1.40
No. S61. Per set of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.40
No. S62. Department sec. blank, per pkg. of 10	$.18
Per 100	1.50
NOTES FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL AND RELIGIOUS WORKERS.
No. S63. Leaflet, each 5 cents; 10 for 35 cents; 100 for	$2.50
NORMAL LESSONS, HURLBUT'S.
No. S72. Paper binding, each	$.35
No. S73. Cloth binding, each50
OFFERING ENVELOPES.
No. S74. 25 cents per 100; per 1,000	$1.40
PRIMARY AND JUNIOR SONGS. (See Songs.)
PROMPT ATTENDANCE TICKETS. (See Tickets.)
PUNCH. (See Secretary's Punch.)
QUARTERLIES, GOSPEL.
No. S100. Beginner grade per quarter, 5 cents; per year	$.15
No. S101. Primary grade per quarter, 4 cents; per year	$.12
No. S102. Junior grade per quarter, 4 cents; per year	$.12
No. S103. Intermediate grade per quarter, 4 cents; per year	$.12

No. S104. Senior grade per quarter 6 cents; per year	$.20
RECORDS. (See Home Department Visitor's Record.)
RECORD ENVELOPES. (See Home Department Record Envelopes.)
RECORD FOR SECRETARY. (See Loose-leaf.)
RECORD, SECRETARY'S. (See Secretary's Record.)
RECORD, TEACHER'S. (See Teacher's Class Record.)

REPORT BLANKS

FOR CONVENTION WORK.
No. S120. Per pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.25
DELEGATE CREDENTIALS.
No. S121. Per pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.25
DISTRICT SECRETARY TO DISTRICT CONVENTION.
No. S122. Pkg. of 10	$.15
* Per 100	1.25
DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT TO GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT.
No. S123. Per pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.25
DISTRICT TO GENERAL HOME DEPARTMENT.
No. S124. Per pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.25
DISTRICT AND GENERAL LIBRARIAN.
No. S125. Per Pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.25
DISTRICT TO GENERAL LIBRARIAN.
No. S126. Per pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.25
LOCAL SUPERINTENDENTS TO DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT.
No. S127. Per pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.25
LOCAL TO DISTRICT HOME DEPARTMENT.
No. S128. Per pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.25
LOCAL TO DISTRICT LIBRARIAN.
No. S129. Per pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.25
SCHOOL TO DISTRICT SECRETARY.
No. S130. Per pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.25
LOCAL TO DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT. Cradle Roll Department.
No. S131. Pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.25
DISTRICT TO GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT. Cradle Roll Department.
No. S132. Pkg. of 10	$.15
Per 100	1.25
SCHOLAR'S CARD. (See Cards.)
SECRETARY'S PUNCH.
Each	$.30
SECRETARY'S RECORD.
No. S150. Paper Binding	$.50
SONGBOOKS, CAROLS.
Each	$.25
SONGS, PRIMARY AND JUNIOR.
Each	$.40
SONG STORIES FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.
Each	$.15
STEPPING STONES.
Single copies, per year 50 cents; in clubs of five or more to one address, each	$.40
TEACHER'S CARD. (See Cards.)
TEACHER'S CLASS RECORD.
No. 160. Paper	$.06
Per pkg. of 1050
TICKETS, GOOD BEHAVIOR.
No. S167. Per 100	$.15
Per 1,000	1.00
TICKETS, PROMPT ATTENDANCE.
No. S162. Per 100	$.15
Per 1,000	1.00
TITHING CARDS. (See Cards.)
ZION'S HOPE.
Single copies, per year 30 cents; in clubs of five or more, in advance	$.25

ZION'S PRAISES.

- No. 81. Cloth boards, each 50 cents; 10 for$ 4.40
- No. 82. Full leather, each 1.25
- No. 83. Flexible leather, gilt edge, each 2.00
- Your name stamped in gold on the leather binding, each book, 15 cents; two books with same name,$.25

I. THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

- 1001. Series 1. What did Jesus do? 10, 15 cents; 100$1.30
- 1002. Series 2. Faith in God, Is It Scientific? 10, 15 cents 100$1.30
- 1003. Series 3. Repentance. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.30
- 1004. Series 4. Baptism in water. 10, 20 cents; 100$1.60
- 1005. Series 6. Baptism of the Spirit, 10, 20 cents; 100$1.60
- 1006. Series 6. Laying on of Hands. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.30
- 1007. Series 7. Immortality and the Resurrection. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.30
- 1008. Series 8. The Eternal Judgment. 10, 15 cents 100$1.30
- 1009. Latter Day Saints, Who Are They? 10, 25 cents 100$2.15
- 1010. Nos. 1001 to 1008, inclusive. Per set 15 cents; 10$1.25

II. THE FOLDER SERIES TRACTS

- 1051. Brief history of the church. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.10
- 1052. Brief history of Joseph the Martyr and First Presidency. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.10

IV. MISCELLANEOUS

- 1100. Cowdery Letters. 1, 5 cents; 10, 35 cents; 100$3.25
- 1101. A Plea for the Golden Rule or answer to Mormonism, the Islam of America. 1, 5 cents; 10$.45
- 1102. Trial of the Witnesses to the Resurrection of Jesus. 10, 30 cents; 100$2.50
- 1129. Open Letter to the Clergy. 10, 25 cents; 100$2.30
- 1130. Decision of John J. Philips, Judge in Temple Lot Case. 1, 5 cents; 10, 40 cents; 100$3.65
- 1132. Kirtland Temple. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
- 1133. Our Defense. 1, 5 cents; 10, 40 cents; 100$3.65
- 1134. Necessity for a Reorganization of the church. 1, 5 cents; 10, 32 cents; 100$2.80
- 1135. Plural Marriage in America. 1, 5 cents; 10, 35 cents; 100$1.85
- 1136. Joseph Smith in His Own Defense. 1, 5 cents; 10, 40 cents; 100$3.65
- 1137. The Whole Gospel Briefly Set Forth. 1, 3 cents; 10, 25 cents; 100$2.15
- 1150. The Apostasy and the Restoration. 10, 10 cents; 100$.70
- 1151. The Church in Court. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
- 1152. The Church of Jesus Christ. 10, 30 cents; 100$2.25
- 1153. Equality. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
- 1154. The Plan of Salvation. 10, 21 cents; 100$1.85
- 1155. Was Joseph Smith a Polygamist? 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
- 1156. Spiritualism Viewed from a Scriptural Standpoint. 10, 21 cents; 100$1.85
- 1157. Why I Believe the Book of Mormon. 10, 20 cents; 100$1.60
- E1158. A Glimpse at the Government of God. 10, 30 cents; 100$2.75
- E1159. The Book of Mormon; Evidences of its Divinity. 10, 20 cents; 100$1.85
- E1161. Creed Making. 10, 25 cents; 100$2.00
- E1162. Future Punishment. 10, 20 cents; 100$1.85
- E1163. Good News. 10, 20 cents; 100$1.85
- E1164. Reasons Why. Shall We Hear Them? Revised Edition. 10, 20 cents; 100$1.85
- E1165. Joseph Smith: Was He a Prophet of God? 10, 20 cents; 100$1.85
- E1166. Twelve Reasons Why I Believe the Book of Mormon. 10, 25 cents; 100$2.00
- E1167. Who Was Joseph Smith? 10, 30 cents; 100$2.75
- E1168. Why I Became a Latter Day Saint. 10, 20 cents; 100$1.85
- 1180. The Apostolic Office. 10, 20 cents; 100$1.80
- 1181. The Bible vs Polygamy. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
- 1182. Corner Stones of the Utah Church. 10, 18 cents; 100$1.60
- 1183. Crooked Paths. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35

- 1184. Eternity of the Marriage Covenant. 10, 15 c; 100$1.30
 - 1185. The Factions on Polygamy and Spiritual Wifery. 10, 10 cents; 100$.90
 - 1186. The Nature of Man, Is He Possessed of Immortality? 10, 20 cents; 100$1.70
 - 1187. The "One Baptism." 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
 - 1188. The "One Body," or the Church Under the Apostleship and Under the Apostasy. 10, 11 cents; 100$1.00
 - 1189. One Wife, or Many? 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
 - 1190. Reply to Orson Pratt. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
 - 1191. The Sabbath Question. 10, 11 cents; 100$1.00
 - 1192. Teaching in Contrast. 10, 20 cents; 100$1.60
 - 1193. The True Gospel. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
 - 1194. The True Way is the Gospel Way. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
 - E1196. "Items of Teaching Found in the Book of Mormon." 10, 15 cents; 100$1.20
 - E1197. Is Water Baptism Essential to Salvation? 10, 15 cents; 100$1.30
 - E1198. Latter Day Saints; Who Are They? 10, 20 cents; 100$1.85
 - 1210. Baptism. 10, 11 cents; 100$1.00
 - 1211. The Basis of Brighamite Polygamy. 10, 10 cents; 100$.82
 - 1212. Can Belief Alone Save? 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
 - 1213. Errors and Inconsistencies Concerning the Presidency of the Dominant Church in Utah. 10, 10 cents; 100$.95
 - 1214. Faith and Repentance. 10, 10 cents; 100$.82
 - 1215. The Narrow Way. 10, 10 cents; 100$.82
 - 1216. The Old Jerusalem Gospel Restored. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
 - 1217. Polygamy. Was it an Original Tenet of the Church. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
- PRICE LIST 6
- 1219. Reorganization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. 10, 10 cents; 100$.90
 - E1220. Seventy-one Theological Questions. 10, 10 cents; 100$.90
 - 1221. Joseph Smith; Has He Succeeded His Father, the Seer, in the Presidency of the Church? 10, 12 cents; 100$1.05
 - 1230. The Church or Kingdom of God; What Is It? Whence Comes It? 10, 6 cents; 100$.60
 - 1232. How to Enter the Kingdom. 10, 7 cents; 100$.60
 - 1234. Message to the Indian. 10, 10 cents; 100$.70
 - 1235. Polygamy Not a Doctrine of the True Church of Latter Day Saints. 10, 6 cents; 100$.55
 - 1236. What We Believe. 10, 8 cents; 100$.57
 - E1237. What We Believe. Epitome of the Faith of the Church. 10, 10 cents; 100$.85
 - 1238. Which is the Church? 10, 6 cents; 100$.60
 - 1239. Who Then Can Be Saved? 10, 6 cents; 100$.60
 - 1250. The Gospel and Epitome of Faith. 10, 4 cents; 100$.28
 - 1251. The Kingdom of God. 10, 3 cents; 100$.20
 - 1252. The Pure Gospel of Christ. 10, 4 cents; 100$.28
 - 1253. Truths by Three Witnesses, and Epitome of Faith. 10, 4 cents; 100$.28
 - 1254. What is Truth? True Orthodoxy? and an Evangelical Church? and Epitome of Faith. 10, 4 cents; 100$.28
 - 1255. Epitome of Faith and Doctrine of the Church, and Kirtland Temple Suit. 10, 4 cents; 100$.28
 - 1256. Prophecy of the Rebellion. 10, 3 cents; 100$.25
 - 1257. The Atonement of Christ and the Final Destiny of Man. 1, 15 cents; 10, $1.30; 100$.90
 - 1258. All Brighamite Roads Lead to Polygamy. 10, 10 cents; 100$.90
 - 1259. Duplicity Exposed. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.30

III. FOREIGN

DANISH TRACTS

- 1500. Brighamismen Afsloret; Elder Brigham Young—som Leder og Profet. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
- 1501. Plural Marriage in America. 10, 35 cents; 100$2.90

GERMAN TRACTS

- 1600. The Principles of the Gospel. 10, 15 cents; 100$1.35
- 1601. The Epitome of Faith. 10, 10 cents; 100$.60

SPANISH TRACTS

- 2000. Epitome De La Fe. 10, 6 cents; 100$.60
- 2001. Restauracion De La Iglesia. 10, 6 cents; 100$.60

SWEDISH TRACTS

- 2020. En Inbjuding Til Guda Rike. 10, 6 cents; 100$.60
- 2021. Den Gode Herdens Rost and Kristi Lardom. 10, 10 cents; 100$.82
- 2022. Plural Marriage in America. 10, 35 cents; 100$2.90

Miscellaneous Department

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Central Texas District: A spiritual conference and reunion has just been held at Cookes Point. Much good was received, both spiritually and socially, by those who attended. I was disappointed that I had to leave before the reunion was over, and feel that I missed much by having to do so.

Having been elected vice president of the district, and also being appointed bishop's agent, I want to so arrange my work that I can travel through the district at least once this fall, and talk with every member upon our duty, financially, to the church. Jesus says that we should keep all of his commandments. One of the important ones is our financial obligation we have with our heavenly Father. I hear some one say, "Oh, I really haven't any tithing to pay, it is too small an amount to be called that."

Dear Saints, do you know that the gospel will be preached to all the world and Zion redeemed by means of the concerted obedience of the small tithpayer to this commandment in the gospel? It is not any large amount of tithing that anyone pays that will cause this glorious gospel to spread the work in this hastening time; but the large number of small amounts given willingly by each member according to the law. Let us not forget the word of the Lord in Malachi 3:10, and prove him and see if he will not pour out his blessings upon us. According to latter-day word, let us all labor together, both in the ministry and in the affairs of men, for the accomplishment of the work God has intrusted to all. The cooperation of those who labor in the business affairs of the day is as essential to the carrying on of this work as that of the ministry.

May God bless us all in our work, whatever it may be, and may we give him the praise, the honor, and the glory. Those authorized to receive and receipt for tithing and freewill offerings in this district are Elders B. F. Spicer, president of the district, Sam Hay, and R. T. Spiller.

May we all work together for the betterment of the cause we have espoused.

A. J. BANTA.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, August 14, 1916.

Convention Notices

Eastern Colorado Sunday school, at Wiley, September 1. Send credentials to Sister Louisa Fishburn, 2242 Emerson Street, Denver. Agnes Massey, district secretary.

Eastern Colorado Religio, at Wiley, August 31. Election of officers. Blanch Sampson, secretary, 930 Emerson Street, Denver.

Addresses

Address of John A. Grant changed from 157 Antoinette Street, Detroit, Michigan, to 33 Brighton Avenue, Highland Park, Michigan.

Requests for Prayers

A sister requests the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her husband that he may be enabled to see the right and refrain from doing the wrong which engages much of his time now. It is a grievous trial to her, but she has much faith in the prayers of the Saints in the matter, as she has in the past received help by this method.

Miss Ekline Miller, of Xenia, Ohio, R. R. 9, a young girl who is very seriously afflicted and in destitute circumstances, desires the prayers of the Saints, that she may recover and be enabled to care for herself. She is not a member of the church, but is interested in our faith.

Conference Notices

Central Illinois, at Snicarte, September 2 and 3. Those coming from Pana, Taylorville, and Springfield take the Chicago, Peoria, and Saint Louis Railroad from Springfield at 3 p. m. September 1, for Bath. Some of the Saints have boats and will take the Saints from Bath to Snicarte. William W. Bolt, secretary, 1516 East Side Grand Avenue, Springfield, Illinois.

Books for Church Library

The General Church Library has been gradually enlarging the list of books upon its shelves, but the process of establishing a good serviceable library is a slow one and the number of books is far less than it should be. Occasional donations from friends have been gratefully received, and such purchases of valuable books have been made by the Library Board as were thought would be of greatest service, and which the limited funds at its disposal could furnish. There are a number of standard books which should be in every library which are as yet conspicuously absent in this. It may be that in your home libraries you have extra copies of some of these. Will you look over your library and see if there are any you could spare for the church library? Among quite a large number which we would like to obtain, we give the following short list which we especially desire: Works of Nathaniel Hawthorne, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Charles Dickens, Sir Walter Scott, Victor Hugo, Thomas Carlyle.

Of poetical works we should be glad to obtain any of the following: Works of Robert Browning, Samuel T. Coleridge, Tennyson, Whittier, Longfellow, J. G. Holland, Keats, Jean Ingelow.

Wanted

If any of the Saints have a copy of the "Early Writings," by the late Mrs. E. G. White, 1847 edition, they care to loan or sell, the same will be a great help to me. Address, James D. Schofield, Lamoni, Iowa.

Died

BATCHELDER.—Nathan F. Batchelder, born near Fillmore, Washington County, Ohio, October 18, 1854; died at his home at Lottridge, Ohio, June 29, 1916. Baptized November 19, 1911, by F. J. Ebeling. He was afflicted with deafness and never heard much preaching, but was a great reader, and was an able defender of the gospel. He leaves wife, 2 sons, 2 daughters, 2 sons having preceded him to the life beyond. Funeral in Methodist church at Torch, Ohio, in charge of the I. O. O. F. Lodge of Coolville. Sermon by D. J. Hannah, before a large and attentive audience, being the first Latter Day Saint sermon preached in that community.

BLASTOW.—John W. Blastow, died at Little Deer Isle, July 30, aged 70 years, 3 months, 28 days. Funeral August 1, Sermon by George H. Knowlton.

BUTTERFIELD.—James T. Butterfield, born at Farmington, Maine, May 5, 1836; died at the home of his son-in-law, Doctor W. P. Bush, of Berkeley, California, August 1, 1916. He leaves a large number of relatives and friends who rejoice in the fact that even though late in life, he obeyed the gospel ordinances and passed away in the faith. Funeral sermon by H. J. Davison. Interment at Hollister, California.

CRUM.—George Frank Crum was born at Plano, Illinois, November 30, 1886. Died at Hayward, California, July 18, 1916. He is survived by his father, Frank, three sisters, one brother, and his wife, Florence Crum. Funeral service in the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri. Sermon by Walter W. Smith. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

MOORE.—Emma, daughter of Brother and Sister Grant W. Moore, born April 16, 1910; died July 21, 1916. She leaves to mourn their loss, father, mother, 5 brothers, 4 sisters. One brother, little Johnnie, preceded her to the beyond last October. Funeral in charge of George Steele, sermon by Asa Hight, interment in Seiling Cemetery.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

FOR SALE

Two acres of fine lying land, all set to young fruit just coming into bearing—new 6 room house, back plastered and finely finished. 2 never failing wells, new hen house 10 x 24. Located on South State St. Bargain for cash. E. F. Hall, Lamoni, Iowa. 31-tf

TRUANTS. A one-act Religio comedy by John Preston. Three men (or boys) and 3 women (or girl) characters. Plot concerns a number of Religians who through some excuse or other have stayed home from meeting. The way it works out is amusing. Adapted to any audience or occasion. 34 pages, attractive cover 25c

WITH THE CHURCH IN AN EARLY DAY. The development of the latter-day work is put into story form, and offers the reader an opportunity of getting into intimate, personal touch with events. "Frances," has put life into her book; but the "human element" is saved from dominance by the spirituality of the work. No. 243, cloth 75c

Typewriter Service in Rural Communities

The typewriter is coming into more extended use in rural communities because of the assistance it renders to all classes of people. Here are a few examples of the possibilities of service:

The Farmer: Think of the possibilities of selling produce by the means of typewritten letters sent out to customers? Typewritten letters give the sender a business standing with the people who receive them and also enable the keeping of carbon copies of the correspondence, which many times does away with misunderstandings and lawsuits.

The General Store Merchant: More prompt and courteous treatment is likely to be accorded his orders and correspondence with the City jobber and manufacturer if his letters are typewritten.

In The Home: The boy or girl who is intending to follow a business career can secure no better start than a knowledge of typewriter operating. Children who learn to use the typewriter learn spelling at the same time. The housewife finds it a great convenience in writing recipes and for general correspondence.

The Minister: No Clergyman should be without a typewriter. It is of great assistance in preparing sermons and writing the many letters that a pastor has to write.

Mail us the
Coupon to-day

L. C. SMITH & BROS. TYPEWRITER CO.
903 W. LOCUST ST., DES MOINES, IOWA

Please send me information as checked below:

- () Send me free catalog.
- () How can I get a Factory Rebuilt L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter?
- () What about trading in my old machine?

Name _____

Street or P. O. _____

State _____

Will You Let Graceland Help You?

Graceland
Needs
You—

You Need Graceland—

Why Not Come?

Hundreds of other young people have let Graceland help them to a better education, a broader all-round development, a clearer conception of life.

Graceland will help you, too, if you'll let her.

There's a distinct reason for Graceland's existence. Founded with the idea of furnishing a clean, wholesome, spiritual environment for those desiring to gain an education, she has more than fulfilled every expectation.

The instruction is of the highest possible grade, with a library of over 9,000 volumes, good laboratories and other facilities. The work of the Junior College prepares for all professional courses: Law, Medicine, Engineering, Journalism, Commerce, etc., also for admission to the third year of standard colleges and universities. Other departments are: Academic, Business, Normal, Shorthand, Typewriting, Piano, Voice, Oratory, Preparatory. Send for a copy of our new catalog, giving full details. It's free for the asking. Right NOW is the time to send—before you forget.

Graceland is fully standardized and officially accredited by the State University of Iowa, thus admitting her graduates to advanced standing in colleges and universities throughout the United States without examination.

College year opens September 7, 1916.

Address---The President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa

HOUSEKEEPER WANTED

I want a good Latter Day Saint woman who has had experience with children to keep house for me. I have four children, ages three to fourteen. Live two blocks from L. D. S. church in a good branch. Will pay good wages to right one. Address lock box 114, Perry, Iowa, for particulars. 33-3t

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist

in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

Wanted

A first-class barber, to take charge of a shop in a good Oklahoma town, none but L. D. S. need apply, for particulars write to Elder Walter W. Chrestensen, 2225 Empire St., Joplin Missouri. 34-1t

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, AUGUST 30, 1916

NUMBER 35

Editorial

STAKES AND CORDS OF ZION

"Lengthen thy cords and strengthen thy stakes."

The term stake as applied to an organized body of worshipers in a particular district is peculiar to Latter Day Saint terminology. It is in fact unique in that particular. True, it is used by the people of Utah, more commonly called Mormons, but it belongs in fact properly to the nomenclature of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Our Utah friends use it, but it does not belong to them.

The Reorganized Church having been designated by the civil courts and recognized of God as the true successor to the "old church," as it is termed, falls heir to the terminology of the "old church"—the church presided over by Joseph Smith the Martyr—just as truly as it fell heir to the property of that church, represented in the Kirtland Temple. The term is ours by right; the Utah people have appropriated it, as they have done many other things.

The use of that term appeared early in the history of the church. It is used in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in section 68 in a revelation given as early as November, 1831. Of course it is understood that the expression is figurative but it is a very pleasing and suggestive figure, when we trace out its meaning, and had its origin at least as far back as Isaiah.

In Isaiah it is written:

Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities; thine eyes shall see Jerusalem, a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken.—Isaiah 33: 20.

Here Zion, the Zion of that time and land, namely Jerusalem, is compared to a tabernacle, a tent, supported by stakes and cords. In like manner the Zion of our day, the potential New Jerusalem, the Zion of our time and land, has her stakes that are to her a support.

The figure reappears further on in Isaiah:

Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitation; spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes.—Isaiah 54: 2.

The figure, thus sanctioned by biblical usage, is carried down to our own times. Indeed God himself uses it in modern revelation just as he did when speaking through Isaiah. The expression loses none of its picturesque force now when most men live in houses. We tent often enough to catch its full significance. So to-day wherever we have a large body of people gathered and organized after a certain prescribed form it is spoken of as a stake—stake of Zion.

Of late years we have been attempting to lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes of Zion. We have driven four stakes: One at Lamoni, Iowa, one at Independence, Missouri, one at Kansas City, and one at Holden. With the reorganization of the Independence Stake into three stakes, and the reorganization of the Lamoni Stake presidency, added strength should come to the stakes of Zion. These communities of Saints "round about" must prove a source of great strength to Zion, supporting and strengthening her, bound to her by the strong cords of fellowship and love under the gospel administration.

But some one may say, "We do not yet have Zion." Surely we have Zion in the process of making. Rome was not built in a day. Neither are heavenly cities built in a day. Several centuries were consumed in building and perfecting the city of Enoch. We have Zion in process of erection. In erecting a tabernacle one of the first steps taken is to drive a few stakes and stretch a few ropes so that when the tent is erected it will have immediate support. And as the process of erection goes on other stakes are driven and other cords fastened in place.

Every member of a now existing stake should endeavor to strengthen that stake, that it may stand, and be a support to Zion. Are the stakes ready for the strain? Will they be uprooted, or will they stand firm? Let all unite to drive them deep into the soil and establish them permanently. The strength of the stakes is the strength of the people, spiritually, and, we may add, financially.

Let the officers of the stakes work zealously and wisely and all the people support them in their labors, that we may "lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes of Zion."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

LAMONI REUNION REMARKABLE

The Lamoni Stake reunion closed Sunday evening. It is not too much to say that it was far ahead of any reunion ever before held in the Lamoni Stake. The early morning prayer services may truly be said to have been pentecostal in character, so freely was the Spirit poured out, and so numerous were the gifts bestowed for the comfort, edification, and warning of the Saints.

This continued during the entire reunion, all the prayer meetings being of an extraordinarily high order and the gifts being manifested at all of them, with the exception of the first or opening meeting.

The high degree of wisdom, light, intelligence, and spirituality accompanying these services cannot be described. So striking was it that the local Methodist pastor, Reverend Partridge, who was present, said that he felt that he must testify that God was "wonderfully blessing his people," and that "some of the droppings were falling" upon him. He said he felt that if he did not speak the very stones might well cry out.

The Saints were wonderfully encouraged, and felt that these meetings presaged a great spiritual revival in the stake, possibly throughout the whole church. The attendance at all services was very large, particularly at the Sunday services.

The new stake presidency, consisting of Elder John F. Garver, with his two counselors, Elders E. J. Giles and Paul N. Craig, moved forward into their new work in fine shape and the people rallied to their support with love and confidence in a way to truly warm their hearts.

The Saints of the Lamoni Stake have permanent reunion grounds south of town. These grounds include something over twenty acres of rolling woodland and are very beautiful since they have been improved. The tented city was indeed a lovely sight. At the afternoon services, Sunday, subscriptions were pledged for the purpose of raising funds to extend and improve these grounds. Something over thirty-four hundred dollars was subscribed, to be paid in three yearly payments. It is desired to bring the amount up to forty-five hundred.

More attention was given this year to recreation for the young people and children. Swings, trolleys, croquet grounds, tennis courts, and quoits were in evidence. Special services were held for children, including daily sermons within the range of their understanding.

The Lamoni Saints very properly feel encouraged and enthused and will begin to work for the success of their next annual reunion. We have given this much space to this report owing to the unusual character of the meetings and the prominence of the reunion, representing as it does one of the leading stakes.

E. A. S.

THE STRIKE

The latest information points to a strike by the railroad employees.

It may be that our readers will not receive this issue or later ones on time, resultant from the above act.

We are hoping that before such a dire calamity comes something may intervene to settle amicably and justly the differences between employer and employee.

Should the governmental authorities require the mail trains to run, no doubt our subscribers will get the HERALD on schedule time, but this remains to be seen.

We should endeavor to do the best we can under the circumstances, and we feel assured that the readers of the HERALD will make full allowance for the nonappearance of their paper should it fail to appear on schedule time.

A. CARMICHAEL, Manager.

CURRENT EVENTS

"DEUTSCHLAND" RETURNS.—Leaving Baltimore on the 1st, the German submarine Deutschland arrived at the mouth of the Weser in Germany on the 23d, loaded with rubber and nickel.

MEXICAN BORDER.—It is reported that the National Guard will remain on the Mexican border until such time as it can be withdrawn without endangering the lives and property of border settlers. No date is given for the probable retirement of the troops. General Pershing informs the United States Government that Francisco Villa is no longer a factor in the situation, being a mere fugitive with little following. The harvest coming on in Mexico largely relieves the famine situation. President Wilson has appointed the following men as the American members of the peace commission to undertake settlement of the difficulties between the two nations: Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, Judge George Gray, and Doctor John R. Mott. The Mexican members are on their way to New York for a conference.

RAILROAD STRIKE.—After another week of conferences with the railway heads and the men who represent the employees in the four brotherhoods of trainmen, no settlement has been effected and the latest word we have is that a strike may be called on Labor Day, the first Monday in September. If a strike is not averted HERALD readers may not receive their copies of the publication promptly. Read the notice of the manager in this issue. The following plan presented by President Wilson, has the approval of the employees, but seems to have been rejected by the railroad heads:

1. Acceptance by the railroads of the eight-hour day.

2. Abandonment by the employees of their demand for time and a half for overtime and acceptance by them of pro rata overtime.

3. Abandonment by the railroad managers of their insistence that the entire controversy be submitted to arbitration under the Newlands act, or by a special board to be appointed by the President.

4. Appointment of a commission to investigate the operation of the eight-hour day, to determine its cost to the railroads, and to make recommendations within six months concerning the collateral problems involved and the payment of time and one half for overtime.

EUROPEAN WAR.—On the Saloniki front the engagement is developing into an extensive combat. The Bulgarians have made a number of successful attacks and have in many instances entrenched themselves preparatory to strong defensive measures. Many Greeks are volunteering to aid the allies. A number of Italians have been landed to aid the allied forces. Following this action, Italy has declared war on Germany, a state of affairs which has nominally existed for some time. In the Gorizia region the activities seem to have been mostly confined to artillery duels. In the Alpine region the Italians claim to have scored some important gains over the Austrian forces. The Russians have been checked in the Carpathians and fierce battles have ensued over the possession of the passes into Hungary through the mountains. The Germans have strongly resisted the Russian advance and have been successful in checking very materially the previous onrush of the Russian arms. In Turkish Armenia the Russians have retaken some important positions and repelled a strong Turkish drive. However, the Turks report a number of important gains at some points. On the Somme front the week has been marked by strong local attacks and counterattacks with the result in favor of the allied forces. Some important villages have been taken which make the advance toward the allied objectives more favorable. Rumania has entered the war on the side of the entente allies, one of the most important events for months. It is said this country has 800,000 well equipped soldiers.

Hymns and Poems

(SELECTED AND ORIGINAL)

[The following poems were written for The Camp Cricket, the newspaper of the recent Lamoni Stake reunion, and since they portray the reunion spirit so well, we print them in the hope that they may prove of general interest.—EDITORS.]

Golden Service

There were two little maids with faces bright;
With soft, gentle hands and footsteps light,
Who stood 'neath the shade of a big, brown tent,
On a wonderful mission of service bent.

And softly one called 'cross the sunshine to me:
"They are all fast asleep; come over and see."
And hushed by their small, lifted fingers I went—
There were three sleeping babes 'neath the shady, brown tent.

And the mother went free—unburdened by care
For an hour with the Master, in singing and prayer.
"Oh, are they not sweet?" asked the maidens of me,
And I said: "Just as sweet as such sweet things can be."

And I smiled as I thought of all that it meant:
The maids and the babes in the shady, brown tent.

VIDA E. SMITH.

On Zion's Hill

Here in the old south wood
Where God has planted the trees,
Scattered at random, in groups,
Or singly, or in troops,
As seemed to him to be good,
Breathed on them with his breeze,
And watered them with his flood,
Where sunshine and shade are blent,
Just as Heaven may will,
Pitch we our gospel tent
Safely on Zion's Hill.

Yes, call it Zion's Hill,
Tented and canvas crowned,
Guarded by great elms 'round,
Where Jesus speaks to us still,
Words of wonderful worth,
And heaven is near to earth.
Here drink we our fill,
Daily, on Zion's Hill.

Sweet is the Spirit one meets
At the hour of prayer each day,
Or in the winding streets
Where happy children play.
Splendid the sermons heard
When the preacher has his hour,
Filled with a holy power,
Proclaiming the Master's word,
Declaring the Master's will,
By which our hearts are stirred,
So often on Zion's Hill.

Happy the songs at night,
When the young people sing,
In their enchanted ring,
Around the camp fire's light.
Camp angels they, so bright,

Minus the orthodox wings—
But where the angel that sings
Better in words or tune
Under the stars and the moon,
In the night so calm and still,
On the slope of Zion's Hill?

This should be true of all:
Long will our hearts recall
The days that we have spent,
And the glory we have felt,
The while that we have dwelt
Under the gospel tent,
At one with God's own will,
On Zion's holy hill.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Night on Zion's Hill

Softly the evening comes and with the twilight is creeping
With gentle and loving fingers to soothe the old hill to sleeping.

The sky now mellows, and softens, with many stars it is teeming,
Hushed are the voices of birds, in their nests they are drows-ily dreaming.

The lights of the camp throw a gauzy glow o'er the city of whiteness,
Where Saints dwell near to each other, and God and glory brightens.

Softly yet sweet and far-reaching the bell for the service is pealing,
And soon before God and his throne a great congregation is kneeling.

Then comes the prayer of the ones who are bending devoutly before him,
To the throne of his grace, lo, it comes from the hearts who adore him.

Then lifts the voice of the choir like an angel band serenad-
ing,
And the hearts overflow and with joy blent with music the air is pervading.

Sweetly the songs steal forth, and infinitely sweet and tender,
Our hearts here unite with the Lord's, of all gifts the wonderful sender.

MAY NEEDHAM.

The Call

Near to the earth, my ear close-pressed,
I heard the sweet, woodland call
Of bird and of bee, of flower and tree
And from sunny skies over all.

And the call I heard, shall I tell it to you,
This message that came so sweet and true?
It was this, as told me by bird and bee,
By whispering bough of sheltering tree—
A call for service to me and to you,
To love and to help, to be and to do,
To be always faithful and true.

Under the widespread, sheltering folds
Of canvas brown came another call,
By prayer and by tongue, by sweet praises sung,
The message came to us all.
And the call I heard, need I tell it to you?
As it came to us so sweet and true?
Oh, 'twas this as told by praise and by prayer,
By the voice of God's servants speaking there,
The same glad call of the woodland fair—
A call for service to me and to you,
To love and to help, to be and to do,
And to nature and God be true.

ESTELLA WIGHT.

Our Work is Done

(A valedictory poem in The Cricket.)

The time has come;
Our work is done.
There is no way
To stay the day
When we must part
Into whose heart
Has come a glow
That while below
Will still increase
To give us peace.

From here we'll go—
'Twas always so—
To work again
Among the men
And women, too,
So firm and true
Whose brain and brawn
Will carry on
This work we love
To heights above.

The hours we've spent Beneath this tent
Will always be
To you and me
A mem'ry sweet
That will compete
With every wrong
That keeps a song
Of victory
From you and me.

Resolved are we
To ever be
So strong and true
And thoughtful, too,
That when the call
That comes to all
To leave this sphere
And friends so dear
To us doth come
We'll hear: "Well done."

EDWARD D. MOORE.

Is the heart a living power?
Self-entwined, its strength sinks low;
It can only live in loving,
And, by serving, love will grow.

—Elizabeth Charles.

Original Articles

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH.—PART 2

(A sermon preached by Elder William Lewis at Cameron, Missouri, February 27, 1916, on the occasion of the fiftieth baptismal anniversary of himself and wife. Reported by their daughter, Miss Ruth Lewis.)

BITTEN BY A RATTLESNAKE

In the year 1870, six families of us moved westward to Nebraska from Ohio, in order to take up a homestead. We were inexperienced and none of us knew much about farming. Two of the six families were members of the church. Now, remember the sixteenth chapter of Mark: "They shall take up serpents and they shall not hurt them." Jesus did not say that they should go out where serpents were located, take them up and say, "I am a disciple of Jesus, and this poisonous serpent is not going to hurt me." Jesus did not mean to convey that thought, but he meant as we find in Acts 28:5, when Paul had been shipwrecked and was cast ashore. It was cold and he gathered kindling to start a fire, and there came out of that bundle of sticks a viper, and it fastened itself upon the hand of the Apostle Paul, and the natives expected that he would fall dead, for whoever was bitten by one of those poisonous vipers died from the effects of the bite. But, to their surprise, Paul quietly brushed it into the fire and said nothing about it, and the natives watched, but no harm came to Paul.

That was in fulfillment of the promise made by Jesus: "They shall take up serpents," that is, accidentally; "they shall drink poison," not intentionally, "but it shall not hurt them." I shall relate an experience that proves the truthfulness of the promise of Jesus.

In 1870, in Platte County, Nebraska, twenty miles northwest of Columbus, in company with John Jones (who is still living in Saint Joseph, Missouri, and a member of this church), I was bringing up wood out of a ravine, near Shell Creek, and as I stooped to pick up some of the wood, I was bitten on the right hand by a rattlesnake. We reached home, which was two miles. John, who was only a lad of twelve years, hurried into the house and informed the folks that I had been bitten by a rattlesnake. My wife was the first to reach me and insisted that I come down off the load of wood, so she could bandage my arm, hoping to stop the circulation of blood, in order to keep the poison from going up into the body. I was rather indifferent; I had no fear of any serious result, and probably acted rather unwisely. However, wife tied a bandage above the elbow, as the swelling was fast going up the arm.

This happened on Thursday afternoon. My wife, her mother and sister and her brother John, with several of the neighbors, were considerably alarmed, and many remedies were suggested, such as the application of bluing, cold mud or clay. One of the neighbors suggested that I take some whisky and get intoxicated. I replied that I had read that a drink of whisky, or the "Devil's tea" as the writer called it, was worse than the bite, and I would not take it. Another reason I had for refusing, was that a young man in the Irish settlement, ten miles below us, was bitten by a rattlesnake; he was put under the influence of whisky, and while he lived he was bloated like one having a bad case of dropsy. Another person was treated in a similar way, and the effects of the snake bite and whisky, as long as we lived there, were in his system. We lost a valuable horse and cow from the effects of poisonous serpents.

I made up my mind that I would not take the whisky. We had some olive oil in the house and I applied it quite freely. It had not been blessed, but from the time I applied the oil I had no pain. In a short time my arm up to the elbow where it was bandaged, had swollen until the flesh covered the bandage, but the swelling did not go any further up the arm.

Saturday evening, Brother George Masters, father of Sister H. O. Smith, now living in Independence (and I presume she has heard of the case), called at our place. He held the office of a priest. He inquired if I had been administered to. I answered that I had not as there was no elder nearer than Columbus, which was twenty miles from us. He answered, "Well, you are an elder, and under the circumstances you should anoint your own arm and pray." I said that the oil had not been consecrated and under the circumstances I had hesitated to present it to the Lord. He suggested that we have a season of prayer, after which I presented the oil unto the Lord and asked that he would bless it and that his Holy Spirit, in its healing virtues would accompany the anointing, which prayer was answered to our joy. The next morning the swelling had all disappeared and the bandage dropped off of my arm. The swelling surely must have disappeared very quickly, for the skin was quite loose, and had not gone back to its natural condition when I awoke.

In this circumstance you notice that the application of the oil after it had been blessed or set apart, was more effectual. I am also persuaded that the prayer offered by Brother Masters was the prayer of faith, and I have been very grateful that he called at our home in the hour of need.

After this circumstance had occurred, one of our neighbors called to see me, and he remarked: "I heard that you were bitten by a rattlesnake."

I answered, "Yes."

"What did you do?"

"I applied several home remedies, but they did not seem to do any good."

"Did you take any whisky?"

"No, I did not."

"Let me see where you were bitten."

But he could not see any sign of the bite and remarked, "Why, man, I don't believe you were bitten by a rattlesnake, for if you were and did not take any whisky nor have the doctor, you would be a dead man."

I answered that John Jones, my brother-in-law was with me; we killed the snake and he could see it if he would go to the place, telling him where it was. He went off saying that it was not a rattlesnake. I did not feel like telling him how I was healed. If I had said that I had sent for the Catholic priest and that he had placed some holy oil on me and prayed for me, he would have believed, but if I had stated the true facts, as I have told you, he would have treated it lightly, and it would have been "casting pearls before swine." Not that I accuse him of being of that stock, but he belonged to that class that believed that God did not recognize the prayers of any but the ministers, or priests, of his church, Catholic.

"IF THEY DRINK ANY DEADLY THING IT SHALL NOT HURT THEM," SAID JESUS

A sister, daughter of Brother and Sister Keown, then living in Saint Joseph, (1907) by mistake took two heaping teaspoons of insect powder in a small glass of water. As soon as she had swallowed the contents, she noticed that the taste was not like what she had been accustomed to take for medicine just before retiring at night. While wondering if a mistake had been made, she had a vision, and she saw in bright, golden letters, "INSECT POWDER." She hurried out of her bedroom and asked her mother if she had any insect powder in the house and where she kept it; the mother said she had, and told where it was. "Well," she replied, "I have taken two teaspoonfuls by mistake, and there is no time to lose. Something must be done; send for the elders." Her father came to our house, as we were only two blocks away, and said to me, "Come at once; by mistake my daughter has taken poison." On my way to their home I wondered if I had better call the doctor and have him bring the stomach pump, for many lives had been saved by its use. I knew there was no time to lose, but I went on to the house and the sister had her hands up to her throat and remarked that it was closing and sore. I inquired how she came to take the poison, and she said it was by mistake and she related the vision. Up to this time I had been wondering about the doctor, whether or not to call him, but when she related the vision, I felt that the power that had so kindly revealed to her the mistake, would take care of her. She was in God's hands. I gave her a large spoonful of olive oil and anointed her head and throat and placed my feeble hands upon her head and prayed. Before I had taken my seat, some six steps from where she was, she arose and said, "My throat is better and I am healed."

The next morning, Monday, I went to the house and I found her rejoicing and getting ready to do a large washing, judging by the amount of clothes in the basket and the wash boiler on the stove.

After relating the above incident, a gentleman remarked that he could believe that the lady had had the vision, if she had had it before taking the poison, for that would have been a preventive; but the idea that the Lord gave the vision after the mistake was made did not seem consistent. Had she seen in large, golden-colored letters, "INSECT POWDER" just as she was about to take it, there would have been no need to send for the elders or doctor, and would in his mind been sufficient evidence that God's hand was in it, but as the young lady told it to me, and I have related it to you, the gentleman did not believe it. I replied, if the vision had not been given to her, she would not have known that a mistake had been made and she might have died. I thought it was very kind of the Lord to show the mistake, so she could do something to prevent serious results. If the Lord had not healed her after giving the vision, there would be some reason to doubt it, but the fact that he did heal her, to me shows that it was the hand of God.

Let me ask you, Why did the Lord not prevent the many persons from losing their eyesight? He could have done so, then there would have been no need to restore it. If you say because the Lord wanted to manifest his power, then the same can be said of the case of this young woman. We read in Daniel 3; 25, that the "king saw in the fiery furnace one like unto the Son of Man." Why did not the king see the Son of Man before casting the three lads into the fire? Would it not have been a preventive?

A CHILD'S FAITH

Another circumstance which taught me a valuable lesson was the case of a little girl, Ruth Krahl, the daughter of Sister Betty Krahl, now Sister William Clay. When living at Stewartsville she was taken very ill and suffered much pain: in answer to prayer and the ordinance of administration she was healed; this pleasant and profitable experience was indelibly stamped upon the mind of the child and begat in her mind faith in prayer, as the following will show. One midnight, Brother William Clay came after me, stating that Ruth was quite sick. I went, and after anointing and prayer, her mother asked, "Ruth, are you better?"

"No; they did not do it right." The child had not forgotten the former blessing and fully expected the same results at this time, but she was disappointed, and in her childish way gave vent to her feelings. These words came to me with force, and I asked, "Lord, in what way have we not done it right? Is it possible that we have treated the ordinance as a form? Too much haste, and not sufficient time taken to have a season of prayer before administering?" I said to the family, "Let us pray," and if I remember correctly, Brother and Sister Clay united with me, and scarcely were the hands taken off the child's head, when she said, "They did it right that time." She was blessed. May that childlike faith ever abide with us, and let us, who are called to the bedside of the sick, go in humility and spirit of prayer, appreciating the privilege and the honor we have and not lose sight of the sacredness of the ordinance, and all that we do, may we do it for the good of those that we pray for and to the honor and glory of God!

Now, let me tell you a few experiences along temporal lines.

While living in Nebraska, twenty miles north of Columbus, in 1873, the grasshoppers destroyed our corn and all the garden vegetables. I went to Ohio to work in the mines. I was working in what was known as the Woods coal mines, near Church Hill, not far from Youngstown. It was during the panic, and thousands of men were out of employment; mills, factories and mines were closing down. I had borrowed thirty dollars to pay my railroad fare from Columbus, Nebraska. My wife and three small children were left on the homestead with not much food. They also needed clothing badly and other things; the rumor was out that the mines in which I was working were going to close down, which caused me much worry. I was impressed to seek for work at what was known as the Sodom mines. I mentioned the matter to Brother Williams, the pit boss, who had so kindly promised me employment before I had left home. I told him I was strongly impressed to seek for work at the Sodom mines. He advised me to stop where I was and to be contented, that I would be just as sure of work where I was as in any of the mines that were working. Still, the impression was, "Make the change." I was very much disturbed. One night, after retiring, thinking of home and loved ones and of the possibility of me being without employment and in distressed circumstances, in debt, and out of work, no means to return home, I surely did need more than human direction, for some advised me to make the change and others to remain where I was. I offered a silent prayer in the hour of extreme need, and the needed light came in a plain and simple way, and there was no mistake in the direction. I saw in a dream two boys, one from each mine, standing before me. The boy from the mines in which I was working held in his hand a piece of dry bread; no butter, cheese, meat, nor jam, nor apple butter; the other boy held in his hand a rich looking piece of apple pie; a voice said, "Take your choice." I reached for the pie.

The next morning my way was clear, and I was just as confident that the dream was divine and that it would be safe to follow it as if an angel had stood by me and said what I should do, or if I had heard God in an audible voice speaking to me.

At this time I was staying with my sister, Mrs. J. W. Morgan; I told her that I was going to make the change, but said nothing about the dream. I called on Brother Williams, the pit boss, and informed him that I had concluded to go to work in the other mines, but would not go until he had a man to take my place. He spoke very unkindly and said, "You can go now; plenty of men who will appreciate the favor of getting the work, which is more than you have done, after holding a position for you several days." Part of the statement was true; I certainly did appreciate his kindness, and I disliked to leave without his consent, willingly. However, I made the change and in two days afterwards, Brother Williams made it a point to see me for he knew well that he had spoken harshly to me. He said, "Well, you have been very fortunate in making the change, for I just received word that the mines will only run one or two days a week." That would be just enough to give the men work enough to buy bread. Yes, I was fortunate, for I worked every day for five months, and was able to pay my debts, support my family, pay my way home and had a little money left. Had I not made the change, dry bread would have been all I could look for! Comforting and precious is the directing hand of the Lord. May I never forget or fail to appreciate his Fatherly care!

Another incident that to me was a blessing and not only at that time, but since, that I will relate:

I had been in the creamery business for several years, but concluded to turn it over to other hands and go into the missionary field. Those in charge of the business got discouraged and were running behind. A friend made them a loan of one thousand dollars, hoping that would help them pull through. I was on my mission in Scranton, Pennsylvania, when word was sent me that I had better come home and see what was best to do, which I did. We concluded to sell out; having failed to sell privately, we advertised a public sale, which did not bring sufficient to pay off the indebtedness. All that we had was gone, and some of the machinery was not sold as it was not up to date.

Later I was again appointed to labor in Scranton,

Pennsylvania. The church would pay my way, but my wife and daughter—if they went—would have to pay their own fare. I wanted them to go with me and make that our home while in that field, but we had no means to go. Their fare and freight on a few articles of household goods, which we wanted to take with us, would be about sixty-five dollars; I saw in a dream where I was searching for money; I found several bills; some were ones, twos and fives. I finally had a handful, and I was much pleased, for the money was not lost by anyone, but a friend had placed it there for me and it was really mine. I awoke and the dream had so impressed my mind that for a time it seemed that I had the money. I related the dream to my wife; she remarked that to dream of money was a sign of bad news or bad luck. I replied that to dream of losing it might be, but to find it was good news.

Well, the next day passed; I thought that some one might purchase the machinery that was left, but, no sale nor any prospects of selling. We were stopping with the friend who had made the loan of the one thousand dollars referred to and had only received the three hundred back; all had retired for the night but this friend and I. He knew we were worried because of the unpleasant circumstances that we were in and through no fault of our own. He inquired, "How are you going to get along?" He also asked about some other matters. When I replied that I did not know just how we would get along yet, he handed me the sum of three hundred dollars. I said, "No, no; I will not take this; you have already lost too much, and I insist that you keep the money." Then the dream came to me, and in it I had found the money which a friend had placed there for me. I told him the dream. My wife and I and my daughter went on our way to my mission field; our daughter was given a short business course, purchased a typewriter, etc. All of this we could not have done had it not been for the kindness of our friend, and because of that noble act we have been able to render valuable service to many, for from that time our daughter has been my faithful stenographer, rendering valuable service in that line of work, and we hope the end is not yet!

Truly, "God moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform," and we can add, "Our just needs to supply."

REMARKABLE EXPERIENCE AT A REUNION

If my memory serves me right, it was during one of the last reunions held at Harveys Grove, near Maysville, Missouri, about the year 1895. One morning early, just at break of day, in the latter part of August, there appeared a very large and dark cloud in the west, with sharp and fierce lightning and harsh, roaring thunder. There were only a few of us on the camp ground as it was just the beginning of the reunion; shortly, great clouds of dust were seen and the noise of the approaching storm caused a fear to come to the hearts of the campers. Leaving our tents we gathered under the canopy of the large tent, fearing that the worst had not yet come. There was on the ground a merry-go-round that was there during the soldier's reunion and Odd Fellows' picnic, and on the west were the large tents of the Maysville Chautauqua, which had just closed the day before. Suddenly a freight car on the railroad came east, driven by the strong wind, passing the camp ground. One of the brethren ventured out to inform the agent of the car as it was near time for a passenger train to come from the east. Corn was laid low as if a roller had gone over it; several trees were broken down, and the tents on the Chautauqua ground were all blown down; also the merry-go-round tent went down with a crash. It was not over five hundred feet from our tent. To our joy not one of the reunion tents was disturbed; the storm raised between our tents and the merry-go-round and came down again just outside of our tents on the east. Both east and west were visible signs of the effects of the storm, while not one tent of the campers was disturbed. When the storm was at its worst and the faithful few had taken shelter in the large tent, there came to us all a spirit of peace, and that of fear was removed, and many expressed themselves that "though we shall be cut down in death, with such a heavenly feeling it would indeed be sweet," and there came to me the circumstance under which Brother Peter Madison lost his life. On his way to Saint Joseph, Missouri, he turned into a shed for shelter from the storm, when a flash of lightning caused his death. I said, "If there was with our brother and missionary the sweet peace that we have been permitted to enjoy, it was well with him." I have read of martyrs praying and singing when tortured by wicked hands, and it is no longer a mystery to all who have enjoyed the Spirit of God, for whatever may be the conditions and surroundings, if we die or live in the Lord it will be glorious. Like Paul and Silas, bound with chains and fetters, they sang praises unto the Lord, and Stephen was stoned to death, yet prayed for his enemies.

A MARVELOUS CIRCUMSTANCE

in which five gifts of the Holy Spirit are manifested: First, vision; (see Joel 2: 28). Second, discernment; third, speaking in tongues; fourth, interpretation of tongues; fifth, the gift of healing (see 1 Corinthians 12) also the power of darkness by a deceptive dream that poisoned the mind with unbelief.

In the month of July, 1876, wife was seriously ill. We were living on a forty-acre farm about seven miles north and a little west of Stewartsville, Missouri. Medical aid, home remedies and administrations failed to restore health, I had a dream in which I called on one of our neighbors, Brother Jacob Faul, a brother to Charles P. Faul, and I gave him a description and dimensions of a kitchen safe, with part of door to be glass, and asked if he would go to Stewartsville and purchase it. After I awoke I remembered the dream and as the description and dimensions I gave applied to a casket more than a kitchen safe, I concluded wife was going to die and that Brother Faul would be asked to see about her burial. That was the interpretation I gave the dream. From that time I had no faith in prayer for her recovery. When others prayed for her I would think of the dream, and I got very much discouraged. I could not see that life was worth living. We had three little children, and the thought of a home without a mother was sad in the extreme. My father was staying with us at the time. He had noticed that I was very despondent and not as anxious to have prayer for my wife's recovery as I had been. He did not know why the change had come. Finally, I related the dream and said, "Wife will not be with us many more days." For a moment he was silent, thinking of the dream and the interpretation that seemed to have no other meaning than that death was to take from us one so near and whose service was so much needed. Suddenly, he arose to his feet and said, "William, Mary is not going to die. That dream is not of the Lord but of the power of darkness; it is deceptive; don't worry." Still, I did not cast the dream aside.

My wife also had a vision; she saw the house surrounded with darkness and a dark looking person spoke to her and said, "Mary, come." She was standing on the doorstep looking east; she answered, "No; not yet a little while." From the east she saw two white or gray horses coming towards the house at a rapid speed, and as they approached the darkness disappeared, and she returned to her bedroom and saw her body upon the bed. She knew that a separation had taken place, but did not know just when, yet she did know when she returned to the body. She woke me and told her remarkable experience; she was so weak that she could not speak above a whisper, and the words came very slowly. I listened with much interest to every word and was watching to see if I could get something to strengthen my faith in her recovery, for I was a captive of the powers of unbelief, made so by the deceptive dream. I could see a little ray of light in the words that she was not going yet, and especially in the horses approaching the house when darkness gave way; the horses and their color, as the book of Revelation says, "Represents power and authority."

The next day word reached some of the Saints that wife was very low and would not live to see another day. Brother James Kemp, who is still living, will remember the incident. He in company with Brother Albert Bishop, Sister Bishop and Mother Faul came to our home as fast as the team of horses could bring them from the south and east, as seen in the vision. Truly it was a time long to be remembered. Upon their arrival, five prayers were offered in four separate languages. Father prayed in Welsh, Brother Kemp in English, Brother and Sister Bishop in Swiss, and Mother Faul in German. While I do not understand German I followed Sister Faul in her earnest prayer of faith, that is, I understood her prayer. Notwithstanding those earnest, spiritual prayers, I was still a captive of unbelief, until the administration. Father anointed with oil, praying in Welsh as he never had in English; the Holy Spirit rested upon him and he spoke: "Mary, from this time forth you shall be made whole and shall accomplish much good and shall live for very many days." Forty years, fourteen thousand, six hundred days have come and gone, and still she lives, thank the Lord! She arose from her bed immediately and went out into the garden with the sisters. When the Spirit spoke that wife should be made whole, I cried out, "Thank God," and I was free from the power of unbelief, which is one of the strongest weapons of Satan. The message was delivered in the Welsh language, so to all that did not understand, it was speaking in tongues; in the confirmation, Brother James Kemp gave the interpretation, word for word, and the Lord, true to his promise, sent forth the healing power. Great and precious are the blessings of God! Cunning, deceptive and misleading are the powers of darkness!

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD

I see the hour is past and I have just begun, but there is one incident that I should have mentioned in my opening remarks, but will speak of it now. At the time my parents were baptized in Wales—which was before I was born—strong and bitter persecution against the church was raging. The gospel made very rapid progress; had it not been for the evils of Brighamism, that came into the church, a very large percentage of the Welsh people would have united with the church. It is said that in North and South Wales, prior to the introduction of polygamy by Brigham Young and his followers in that land, which was in the early part of 1853 (it was first taught publicly in Salt Lake, August 29, 1852) that there were nearly forty thousand Saints in Wales.

Owing to the rapid progress the church was making, the ministers of the various denominations held counsel and decided that if any of their members opened their doors for the elders of the Latter Day

Saint Church to preach in, they would be considered weak in the faith and would be brought before their respective church. Grandpa Roberts, mother's father, was a deacon in the Baptist Church. He was opposed to this harsh rule, but for the sake of keeping peace and to be submissive to the majority, he closed his door that had been open for the elders to preach. However, he had my parents rent two of the rooms and they had preaching in them. Grandpa would sit in his own room, with the door open and listen to the sermon. He was brought up before his church and he informed them that his daughter and husband paid rent for their apartments and had as much right to have their minister preach as he would to have his.

In 1856 my folks came to this country, to Scranton, Pennsylvania. Later they moved to Ohio and in May, 1867, on Sunday morning, while we were all at breakfast, six children and our parents, mother said, "I had a remarkable experience, and I was not asleep. About three a. m. my father appeared at my bed; I knew it was he, and he asked, 'How many years since the angel brought the gospel to Joseph Smith?' I was surprised to hear him ask that question, for while he was friendly to the Saints he was still an active worker in the Baptist Church. While I was trying to answer his question, he answered it and said, 'You know when all the churches closed the doors against the elders, I arranged for you to rent part of the house, so your ministers could hold meetings.' I said yes, that I remembered the circumstance. He then said, 'After a long and prayerful consideration I made up my mind to be baptized, but I heard of the evils that were taught and that of polygamy, so I concluded I had better remain where I was, but, some of you will have to be baptized for me.'"

He was living in Dowlas, South Wales and we were near Youngstown, Ohio, something over four thousand miles apart. I said, "Mother, grandpa is dead." In about thirty days we received a letter from Wales, giving the time of his death, which was only about twelve hours prior to his visit with mother. I believe that he came direct and made his wishes known. I have always believed in the doctrine of baptism for the dead, and this experience has strengthened that belief. The incident came at a time when it was of much encouragement to me. I was young in the work, only about fifteen months, and not very well informed as to the claims of our church. I knew it was recognized of God but there were a number of the followers of Sidney Rigdon, who related some experiences that I could not at that time understand, for it is evident that in those factions men and women who lived good, upright lives, were blessed, that is, when they lived up to the light they had, but when the claims of the Reorganized Church were presented and made clear to them and they rejected the truth and believed the dogmas of those factions, they would not be blessed. Jesus said, "This is the condemnation, that light hath come into the world and ye love darkness more than light because your deeds are evil."

The statement, "Some of you will have to be baptized for me" gave to me the assurance that this church was the proper channel; that it is to be done. I have given you the details in order that you might get the full benefit of the vision.

In conclusion, let us appreciate what God has done for us and continue faithful unto the end. I have not been able to give a tenth of what the Lord has done for us, but I appreciate your presence and thank you for the interest manifested.

(Concluded.)

* * * * *

TYPES WORTHY OF STUDY.—PART 3

BY GUSTAVE ERICKSON

THE UNDER PRIESTS—THE BODY

We see the body again individually typified by the under priests, who each wore a "bonnet," covering his own head, to indicate that he was not the head of the priesthood, but merely a member of the body. God gave Jesus to be the head over all things to "the church, which is his body." (Ephesians 1: 22, 23.) It is for this reason that Paul insists that a woman's head should be covered, as indicating that she is not the head, the husband and wife being typical of Jesus and his bride—the church of the firstborn.

The under priests were robed in linen garments and wore girdles. Their robes represented the righteousness of Jesus Christ imputed to us, and their girdles represent us as servants of righteousness.

The high priests wore very similar garments during the time of sacrificing (the day of atonement), and put on the glorious garments after making atonement.

THE PRIEST'S ANOINTMENT

As Aaron had the holy oil poured upon his head, so our head, the Lord Jesus, was anointed with the antitypical oil—the Holy Spirit—when he was thirty years of age, on the banks of Jordan, at the time of his consecration. There he was anointed with the oil of gladness above "his fellows," as head over all his joint heirs. A measure of the Spirit is given to every member who thus consecrates; but Jehovah gave not the Spirit by measure unto him, for he dwelleth in him, even the fullness. (John 3: 34, I. T.) The anointing oil ran down to the skirts of his (the high priest's) garments, thus representing how all the members of Christ's body are to be partakers of the same anointing after their head. "The anointing which we have received of him, abideth in you." (1 John 2: 27.) We thus see that Aaron, robed and anointed, represented the entire Christ—the complete seed of Abraham, in which God is to bless all the families of the earth. (Leviticus 10: 7.)

CONSECRATING THE PRIESTHOOD

Leviticus 8: 14-33. The consecration of the priesthood was typical of the consecration of the will of the Lord Jesus and his body, the church, to the will of Jehovah—the obedience of Jesus even unto death, and the obedience of the members of his body suffering for righteousness' sake "even unto death" with him. The whole body, represented by Aaron's sons (as well as the head, represented personally by Aaron himself) is by the antitypical sacrifices, consecrated for their future work as kings and priests, to restore and rule over and bless mankind. That some who consecrate to sacrifice, and thus join the "royal priesthood" will not reach the future royal service is also shown in these types, as well as expressly declared in the New Testament. One class will be saved as by fire, "coming up through great tribulations," but missing the prize for which they started out in consecration, because not sufficiently appreciative of their privilege of sacrificing as priests—not sufficiently zealous to "suffer with him," the high priest. These are the foolish virgin class.

Another class of those who consecrate as priests, which will not gain the royal blessings promised to these priests, will be destroyed in the second death. These clearly brought to our notice (Hebrews 6: 4-6; 10: 28-31; 1 John 5: 16) are pictured also in these types or shadows of the tabernacle service. Aaron's sons at first represented the under priesthood, but two of these were destroyed typically—corresponding to the two classes above described, both of which fail, as respects the royal priesthood; one of them suffering the second death, the other saved from it, so as by fire, tribulation, purgation. And as Aaron and the two remaining sons were forbidden to make lamentation for their brethren, who were thus cut off, this signifies that all the faithful of the priests will recognize the justice of the divine decisions and will bow to them in humble submission saying, "Just and true are thy ways, thou King of Saints." (Revelation 15: 3.) Indeed it brings a blessing to the faithful, leading them to greater zeal, saying, "Let us fear, lest a promise being given us of entering his rest, any of us should seem to come short of it." (Hebrews 4: 1; Leviticus 10: 1-7.)

THE SIN OFFERING

Leviticus 8: 14-33. There we read that the bullock for the sin offering was brought "and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head" of it, thus saying, This sacrifice represents us. From that moment all that happened to the bullock represented what was to be done to Jesus and his body, the church. The bullock was delivered to the "law" (represented by Moses) to meet its demands against Israel, typical of mankind in general. To meet the demands of the law it had to be slain—"and Moses slew it." He then applied the blood to the horns of the altar. The "finger" of the Lord thus pointed out that the altar of earthly sacrifice was acceptable to God by reason of the shed blood (the life given) and that all who realize the power of the altar (horns are symbols of power) must first recognize the blood which sanctifies it. The blood poured at the base of altar showed that through the blood of the sacrifice (life given) even the earth was purchased back from the curse "Unto the redemption of the purchased possessions." (See Ephesians 1: 14.)

(To be continued.)

Of General Interest

FOR A "CHRISTIAN" BIBLE

Apply the blue pencil liberally to the Bible and we shall have not only a "Christianized" version, but also one that will more effectually show "the power of Jesus to affect human society." This is the prescription of a writer in The Biblical World (University of Chicago Press), who asserts that precious as are "those echoes of God's voice in the souls of men who lived long ago," nevertheless the "truth of development requires that we cherish only a measured regard for the past, that we study its messages and weigh its standards by the accumulating light of a God who is never done with the revelation of his wisdom and grace, and that we hold truly sacred from yesterday only that which can promote the life of to-day." But at the same time, we are advised, while the law of development demands that we eliminate from the Bible all that has clearly become obsolete, we are also summoned to the task in no less impressive manner by that which is central in our religion, namely, "loyalty to its Founder." This personal allegiance releases us from all standards lower than the gospel and imposes the solemn obligation that every writing of the Old Testament and the New be "brought to the standard in Jesus" and appraised as regards religious value according to their agreement with that standard. The first notable characteristic of such a Christian revision of the Scriptures, the writer tells us, will be homogeneity. It will not be "a national library, but a book of religion; not, as now, a book of religions." Moreover, after such a revision,

"It cannot be consulted as a source of information on the secular history of the Hebrew people or their antiquities, their religious laws and sacrifices, or their social and domestic life. It will not yield two or more essentially different conceptions of religion. It will thus lose in variety, but gain immensely in clearness, intensity, and force. Then, in the second place, the new canon will be authoritative. Whatever authority can inhere in a written document will inhere in this for the disciples of Jesus, since it consists only of his revelation and that which is truly akin to it. The quality of authoritativeness will belong to the entire canon—we cannot say to all parts alike, for the degree of kinship between the revelation in Jesus and other parts of the Bible where kinship is rightly recognized is not always the same. If the highest spiritual authority belongs to the largest, most enfranchising, and most spiritual conceptions, then obviously we cannot claim identical authority for conceptions that differ widely in their measures of truth. It will remain true, however, that the new canon, by virtue of its formative principle, may claim a religious authority above that which belongs to our present Bible as a whole."

What is more, the new canon will be relatively brief, for the oldest collection of the Master's words, we are reminded, would fill about seven pages in the Standard American Revision, and all his authentic teaching about twenty-six pages. The historical material of his life, as distinct from his teaching, would fill about eighteen pages, which would make some forty-four pages of teaching and life-record combined. From the New Testament, "exclusive of the first three gospels," the writer goes on to say, we have matter "akin to the revelation in Jesus" to make approximately ten pages, and from the Old Testament that which would make approximately about thirty-eight pages. Consequently, the new Christian canon of scripture would consist of about ninety-two pages of the size of the American Revision. Therefore it would be about "one twelfth the size of our Bible," and "it may not be unreasonable to believe that the new canon would gain in power in the same proportion in which it would lose in bulk." The writer claims among the benefits of the Christianized Bible that young people graduating from Sunday school will no longer come forth with "only the meagerest and most hazy notions of the first principles of the gospel," because their thought has been directed to so wide and diverse a field that it has "nowhere penetrated beneath the surface." Furthermore, when we think of God as Jesus did, we shall no longer speak of him as a "man of war" who marches at the head of his chosen hosts in campaigns for the enslavement or extermination of other tribes and peoples," nor shall we speak of him as "a jealous God" or a "local and partizan God." In a word, we are told, "conceptions of God that are not found in the Christian standard and are not akin to it will be unhesitatingly rejected." Then we come to a passage that will no doubt provoke dissent:

"Again, with the emergence of the Christian standard from the rest of the Scriptures there will come a different view of the Master. We shall no longer see him through the medium of Greek philosophy or of the popular Messianism of his own time; no longer speak of him as having preexisted, as having been the active agent in the creation of the world, and as having revealed himself in a measure to the prophets of the former age; no longer regard him as having lived a dual life, or as standing over against God with a consciousness essentially unlike that of other men; no longer think of him as wielding any extraordinary power save such as flowed naturally and inevitably from the pure fountain of his inner life of faith and love; no longer think of him as the object of worship, but only as the unique pattern and the inspirer of the acceptable worship of God; no longer see in him and his work a special law of redemption, but rather a perfect and unique illustration of an eternal law, operative from the beginning of human history, operative at present, and to be operative to the end of the history of sinful man; no longer think of him as standing outside the kingdom of God in the world to come, but rather as a member of that kingdom, its glory, and its crown."

Another point of significance about the Christianized Bible, the writer goes on to say, is that by its standard "we shall no longer think of the church as contemplated by Jesus, much less as founded by him," and that we shall "no longer strive with one another for the predominance of this or that form of church government and worship, recognizing that all alike are of purely human origin, and desirable or undesirable according as they promote the spirit of the gospel.—Literary Digest, April 29, 1916.

Woman's Auxiliary

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

"Come; Let Us Reason Together"

Sister George N. Briggs, superintendent of the home department of our Woman's Auxiliary, herewith presents some possibilities of work in this field. The department is intended to cover the phases of woman's work when she unites with others for the accomplishment of any specific object: entertainment, recreation or community welfare. It is not intended to represent her work as she studies; that is taken care of through the educational department; but as she is busy in community accomplishment, in some of its many varied forms.

That which may be accomplished by any group of women for the betterment of their homes, their neighborhood, their city, state or nation, may come under this head, as well as the more ephemeral organizations whose objects are, simply and only, amusement and entertainment. Every woman should have the social side of her nature well developed, and many a woman, struggling along in painstaking and exacting care of her home, has found stimulation, encouragement and sunshine in mingling with others of her kind, in even purely social organization. It has awakened her to the fact that she is part and parcel of the world, and that her domain does indeed extend beyond the confines of her own walls. She is neighbor as well as wife; citizen as well as housekeeper. She begins to sense the joy of contact with other mentalities, and in many instances, the process has gone on until she has found her true balance—a corner in the activities of the world which she and she alone can fill, accomplishing something which will be of lasting benefit to many.

This is the object of classifying our activities in this way. There are many women who are wives and home makers, who are not mothers. The problems peculiar to the latter class, concern not the former; and yet, should we, in our zeal to arouse mothers to the sacredness and importance of the work entrusted to them, overlook the needs and the possibilities for service which lie in the direction of these other women whose hands have not been called to minister to childhood's necessities? Of course not; and so we have this special department of the home, where all women interested in the uplift and idealization of the homes of our country, and the happiness of their inmates, may find much to do. Sister Briggs is earnestly studying the needs and the possibilities of this branch of service, with a view of being able to render efficient and wise assistance to each of you who may apply to her for suggestion. If you see wherein you may unite with other women of your vicinity in accomplishing good in any direction, and if you are uncertain as to just how you may go about it to organize the material and force at hand, write to her, at Lamoni, Iowa, for the counsel and suggestion which will be so gladly and heartily forthcoming. Remember, that "in unity there is strength," and wise measures often result from "reasoning together."

An "Activity" Department

We women think we have so little time for anything outside our regular routine of work, but the real fact is that every woman does spend her leisure time some way, and if we can control that way, make this Woman's Auxiliary work our recreation and rest from the actual routine of our house, etc., we will no doubt see results. The work as outlined for women in the Woman's Auxiliary Year Book gives us an opportunity to organize the activities of our spare time, make of them something more enjoyable to ourselves and at the same time of worth to all who make up our community.

Distinction is clearly made in the Year Book between the educational department and the activity departments. The educational department seeks to outline a method of preparation for the activity lines. We should, then, not be satisfied to carry forward the educational work only, as that is simply the means to the attainment of the end sought—which is service. The activity departments are of the utmost importance, if we would reach the goal toward which we are all striving—that of actual work done for the uplift of mankind.

The home department is one of the practical departments of the auxiliary work, in which some neighborhood reform, improvement or uplift, is contributed to by the efforts of the club. Anything of the practical nature, however, which is grouped under the home department (such as social gatherings, and observances of special days, recreation, and entertainment, or attention given the preservation of healthful and sanitary conditions, etc.) which can be carried out by the educational department or any other department already organized, might sometimes be more practicable and possible than to wait for a special home department organization. The important thing is that the necessary and desirable thing for the community be accomplished, and it might be wisdom to use the means at hand if possible, rather than to complicate by too complex organization.

It is emphasized in the Year Book that it is not necessarily the local that has the largest number of clubs, or is organized the most completely so far as number of departments go, that is doing the most good, but it is the local that is covering the particular needs of its community, even if it all be done in one club organization. Any line of activity that is covered by any organization in the community or small town, such as the civic club, the parent-teacher association, the community center, the commercial club or school board should be given the support of the women, but if any such organizations are lacking, and such lines of work uncared for, the women could then organize under our home department and do the needed work.

The educational society here in Lamoni, in addition to the conducting of study classes the past two years, has accomplished the practical work of canvassing the town to raise money to support a lyceum course providing eight high-class evening entertainments for the community. We have also given lectures and social evenings and entertainments—this in the way of providing legitimate entertainment and amusement for the young and older people. We also cooperated with the other institutions of the town in an effort to censor moving pictures.

We hope to perfect our organization and accomplish more in the future, but in the meantime will try to put in operation the means at hand for community betterment.

GRACE K. BRIGGS.

Art and the "Movies"

Makers of moving pictures, convened at Chicago, express much indignation that any effort should be made by the authorities to curb their activities. One speaker indignantly calls attention to the fact that in the art galleries hang many pictures that are not approved of by the prudish. This is true, but the fact should not be pleaded in extenuation of offenses elsewhere committed against decency in the name of art. It is unfortunately true that the pornographic or meretricious play, in drama or film, draws most liberally from the public, because people, variously moved by curiosity or libidinous instinct, will press to see such scenes. To prohibit these is not prudery, but prudence. If a critical observer will only casually scan the programs of the day, he will find much of reason for a more strict oversight of the producer's activity. It is not a question of art at the moving picture houses, but of cleanliness. Here are gathered the indiscriminate assemblages, in which a large percentage is made up of children and adolescents, incapable generally of interpreting what is portrayed on the screen. If they are to be taught sex lessons, the instruction should be given at home or in the class room, and not under the circumstances where it is most frequently obtained. Censorship that will procure clean pictures will help the business, and will not harm either art or artist.—Omaha Bee.

"Laying Aside Every Weight"

Dear Sisters: I feel to continue my subject of letting go of the weights which are hindering us. The sister I spoke of in my former article, enjoyed her freedom from the use of tea and coffee for some time, and then discovered that another cross presented itself. It was her love for light reading. She was not an extensive reader of fiction, but she had a keen relish for it, and would rather read a good story—a "love-story"—than to eat her dinner—provided, of course, she knew she could get her dinner later on! The worst of it was; she did not read it as the writing of another—a mere story—but she lived it, through her vivid imagination, as her own experience. No, she did not read trashy novels, or trashy stories; just merely the kind of reading that many, many others indulge in, and she excused herself to her own conscience by recounting the many good people she knew who made a practice of such reading. She also would argue to herself that there were many good things in those fictitious works, and that there was often a good moral which would fasten itself upon her mind in a more forceful way than if she found it in literature setting forth truth only.

Some way these arguments did not, at last, satisfy the awakened inward monitor; she felt conscious that in giving her time to read a fictitious work she lost ground spiritually—at least she failed by so much, to advance. She felt a sense of loss—at least a loss of time—at the finishing of every book, thinking that it was only a story with some good things in it. Still, it was such pleasant entertainment for her, and she had such excellent opportunities to indulge in the alluring pastime, that it became a real cross to her when she made up her mind to give it up. It was this "coming up higher" idea that disturbed her; and she would also recall the scriptural "He that overcometh shall wear a crown." Then the other side would argue, "One wants a change once in a while"; and the monitor would follow with the thought, "If Saints cannot get along in this life without a change to something that is ungodly or unprofitable, are those Saints in a condition to abide a celestial glory?"

This was a serious thought for her, and helped, more than any other in her decision to lay aside that particular weight that was hindering her advancement. She did not make a vow, even to herself, that she would never read any more fiction, but she did overcome the desire to spend much time doing so. Seldom now, does she look into any such works, and her taste for reading matter has undergone such a radical change, in consequence of her desire to use her time profitably, that she is only interested in things really good. Popular magazine stories were the first weights to go. At Christmas time she looks through some of the best of these magazines, of which so many are at hand, until she finds a real, good, "homey" Christmas story, and she reads and enjoys that one. She feels to thank God for the help he has given her in taking away the taste for light and inconsequential reading, and she feels to assure every sister that he will always help when his children earnestly desire it—when they really set themselves to do, conscientiously, what presents itself as duty or privilege.

EMMA B. BURTON.

The Children's Home

James Whitcomb Riley on Children

Miss Zona Gale wrote an interview with Mr. Riley, which the poet himself liked very much, and it was printed in the Success Magazine. In part it follows:

"I have just stayed a child," he said; "but so have they—only they don't know it."

I confess that I for one had not known it, but before I left my seat at his hearth I had received from him the priceless gift of the resurrection of my childhood, as no mere mementos could have given it to me. I had laughed with him and wept with him over little loves and tragedies and hopes of the long-buried child who used to be—and yet I had told him nothing definite about that child. He knew.

HAVE CHILDREN'S HEARTS BUT DO NOT KNOW IT

"It is sad," he said, "that people go about with the hearts of children, and never know it, especially when one reflects that the consciousness of that child's heart in oneself, and the respect and love for it in others, are all that are needed to make sweet the world."

"Everybody hasn't a child's heart," I said; "why, I know a man——"

"I know," said Mr. Riley, "but, no matter how old or evil or crabbed he is, he is a child still—and people unconsciously use that fact in managing him. Why, the methods of business and of diplomacy itself are based on the fact that men and women are children."

All this was before he talked of the little shadow children. When he did, I understood, I think, something of the store of richness from which he draws to write of "Little Orphant Annie," and his other little children who people everybody's home. But, more than this, I found—while he talked of the shadow children—of what a poet's heart is made.

Meanwhile he talked about little live children.

"You hear a great deal," he said, "about managing children, and the people who haven't any children always think that they know the most about it—I for instance. But there are such a lot of other people's children whom I love to think belong to me that I am sure I know how to manage them—and I am sure for another reason, too. I never go about alone in the world as just Riley—the Riley I am now. There is always beside me the little lad who used to be I, and I can think his thoughts, and live his hopes and his tragedies now, just as much as I could when I looked like him.

"We have great times together—this little lad and I—and we are never more intimate than when some other little child is near us. Why, I have sat here by the fire, or by somebody else's fire, and have seen a little strange child come into the room when it seemed as if he must know how much alike we were, and that I must go and talk with him right away. But I never did go to him right away, or call him to me. Why? Because the little lad I used to be was at my elbow, and I remembered very well how he used to like to have people treat him. Was it the people who made an affectionate rush at him and caught him up and covered him with kisses who won his heart? No, it was the people whose hearts he thought he had won.

"So with this little strange child in the room, I would sit still and pretend to be talking with the grown-up people. But I never ceased to be conscious of him for a minute—only I wouldn't have let him know that for the world. I wooed him instead as subtly as ever lover wooed a sweetheart—and, when you consider it, a lover woos as if his sweetheart were a child, undervaluing what is too easily won, and overestimating what is hard to possess. . . . So I would hold out my hand to the child with all the absent-mindedness I could muster, and I would keep on talking. The little strange child would watch like a little shy rabbit, and come a little nearer, and a little nearer, and finally he would be standing with my arm around him, and all the while I would be talking to some one else, and not seeming to pay him the slightest attention. Then at length he would begin to make timid efforts to attract my notice, and finally—I would let him. After that we would be fast friends.

IMAGINATION PRICELESS TRUST

"No," said Mr. Riley, with eyes that smile while his mouth draws serious conclusions, "how does that differ from the way grown-up people manage grown-up people? The only difference is the degree of cleverness in disguising the method. In any case children of all ages from five to three-score and ten can be managed alike."

"How people ever can forget," he added, in a moment, "how they can ever possibly forget the time of life when everything was real to them—that is the mystery to me."

"When they knew not their spelling book from the fairies, neither their soul from both," I quoted.

"And when their imaginations made every situation as real to them as breakfast or arithmetic," he added, "and the infinite pity it is that thousands of children are allowed to grow up with their morals, and their hair, and their grammar in perfect condition, and their imaginations never nourished at all. Why, the imagination of a child is one of the most priceless trusts a family can have—and what do they do with it, most of them? Laugh at it, shame it, scorn it, look askance at it, even punish it! Now, how can they do that if they remember their own childhood? They don't remember—but how can they forget?"

LITTLE ONES HAVE THEIR OWN TRAGEDIES

"The child with an imagination is a being apart, and should be treasured and trained and treated accordingly. What tragedies are enacted over and over again in homes because this is not realized! 'A child is a child,' seems to be the rule, 'and must be brought up as a child.' As a matter of fact, a child is not always a child. Sometimes it is a thousand years old, and knows things of which its parents never have dreamed. If only the grown-up people who have the daily say about such child's affairs could know the holy charge which they have in that child's delicately-strung, little mind! But they usually don't know—and the old tragedy of the child with the artistic temperament born in a home where it is not known is lived through with the old pitiful result.

"Do you remember that wonderful poem of Josiah G. Holland's—the name of which I have forgotten, but the tremendous import of which I never shall forget—about the little child born in witchcraft times? The baby was filled with this curious, intangible spirit that wove for it a little world of its own, where it lived and dreamed and talked with strange, wonderful people, and knew wonderful things. And it would come in from its day in the meadows with its cheeks flushed and its eyes big with the miracles it had seen and heard—and it would tell its mother and father what had happened to it, out there alone among the flowers, and the Puritan father and mother were horrified. 'Lies, lies!' they cried; 'you have seen nothing, heard nothing!' They could not comprehend the wonder of a child, born into a cold, practical household, and at length it got whispered about that the child was a witch. In the end the child died of a fever, and those righteous parents never knew what they had had, or what they had lost.

IMAGINE THEIR DREAMS

"Ah, well, witchcraft days are not over, so far as many of us are concerned. Here and there is born a little child whose soul is of the essence of which dreams are made, and it is pitifully seldom that anybody knows it. Instead of encouraging the child to dream, and instead of throwing in his way every possible help to stimulate his fancy, 'lies, lies!' everyone cries: 'you have seen nothing, heard nothing.'

"You can pick out these children if your eyes are trained, and your heart, too. In hospitals, in children's homes, in schools, on the street, you can scan little faces for 'the trace of any dream,' and almost always you will find one. And the little cripple children—somehow nature seems to give them the most of this exquisite, elusive quality, because they have lost everything else. Don't you know how they look?—how their eyes get big and are always awake to something nobody else hears? And their mouths—don't you remember how sometimes those two front teeth will get big, and what a curious smile seems always ready to creep over their faces?—eerie little creatures, peopling a world of their own, where everybody is strong and beautiful, on the very borderland of the world of beauty itself. They know!

"But all children know more or less. They are nearer to the unseen than any of us, and if only that inherent largeness of fancy could be stimulated they would live nearer the unseen all their lives. Even the plainest and most matter-of-fact little child, who has very few dreams, really lives very near an unsuspected world of fancy. Some of us love some of these little children very much."

Letter Department

On the Way to New Zealand

Being duly provided with passport and other necessary documents, the wife, Orrin J. and myself left Independence, Missouri, on the afternoon of May 19. Took train for Spokane, Washington, at Kansas City, Missouri, at six p. m. same day. Arrived in Spokane Monday, 22d, and spent the week visiting with my sister, Mrs. Charles Harrison, and looking up the Saints of that place.

I found them at their prayer meeting in their neat little church on the east side. If you are going there look in the directory and find where the church is, as I did. Some other branches could learn a lesson from this, get into the directory when you have place of worship and let the people know where you are, and also advertise your meetings in the local paper. I found a fine lot of Saints in Spokane and felt encouraged in meeting them. I preached in their church Sunday morning and evening May 28. I found among them the evidence of good work done by Brother T. W. Chatburn. His work left fond memories of him.

We left Spokane on May 30 for Oakland, California, where we visited for three weeks with my wife's mother and sister and the others of the Saints of that place. Preached a few times there and San Francisco while making final preparations for our departure June 21 on the Maitai, which sailed on time or nearly so, only being a few hours late on account of members of the crew who deserted and joined the American army. I did not blame them, for it is better to be shot than burned to death. The firehold is awful in the tropics. Weather was not bad, but the wife and boy did not enjoy it as they have on other occasions.

After reading continually for several days on deck the reflected light from the water proved too strong for my eyes and I suffered severe headache from eye strain all the rest of the way down here. I consulted an optician after I arrived here and after wearing shaded glasses for a few days I fully recovered.

Most all traces of the German bombardment have been removed and Papeete is as peaceful in appearance as any American town, and though a thousand men have gone from here to the front, business goes on about as usual. We found the missionaries in Papeete enjoying good health and very diligently laboring on. Am glad to see a marked degree of improvement in Sunday school and Religio work. The natives used to recite in concert by classes and I had tried in vain to break that habit. But being always moving from branch to branch regulating and adjusting difficulties, I could not stay in one place long enough to get them into the habit of individual recitations; they preferred to answer questions in concert in a sing-song tone of voice and did not get the good of the thought. Any change from the established custom must become a habit with the natives if you expect them to keep it up when you leave them. Brother Ellis has kept continually, persistently at them for two years here in Tahiti and they have nearly got the habit in the Tarona Sunday school. We trust that the other branches will take the habit from this one. In fact the other two branches in Tahiti are doing very well.

Sister Ellis is doing a splendid work here teaching the children music, both in singing and playing the organ. We hope the next missionaries will be able to follow this up so the lessons given now will not be lost on them. Sister Ellis says the natives here are very much slower than American children but not hopeless by any means. It is somewhat inspiring to go to church here and hear the natives sing with the organ to good music instead of the unearthly howling with which they tormented us all those years of our previous sojourn among them.

The new church looks fine when compared with others of the day and your writer cannot help feeling a little proud when he thinks of having had a hand in inspiring the movement, drawing the plans, etc. We only had the foundation up when I left here, and Brother Alvin Christensen conducted the work to the finish and did a good job decorating inside. He and his wife and baby left for a trip in the Tuamotuan archipelago just two days after we arrived here. They went to Hikueru where the natives will begin diving for mother-of-pearl shell August 1. If all goes well with them they will be gone several months and will visit some of the branches in the eastern district. I know how to sympathize with them, for I have seen that life. Four years out of five in the mission was spent in the outer islands and I know it is no place for a white woman with a baby. It is a life of sacrifice, and with so few apparent results from one's work it is sometimes very discouraging. Still, every new man goes in with perfect confidence that he can do great things, the greater part of which plans he must surely see crumble and fail.

I know how to sympathize with Brother Ellis who is compelled to grind away in the printing office from day to day as the weeks pass by, always looking forward to some time when he shall be able to get out among the natives and preach and regulate affairs in the branches. With getting out the Sunday school and Religio Quarterlies he has been swamped in work and he and I have been very busy getting his paper out to date. As soon as we get out the July number and squared around a little we are going to take a trip to the other islands, he and his wife to Kaukura, Niau Manihi, etc., and I to Rairoa and Tikahao. We had intended to stay but one month here in Tahiti, but have been advised to wait another month as the spring weather will be better than going to New Zealand in midwinter. There is plenty to do here and it would be much better if we could have a regular printer here in addition to the present force. As it is, the two missionaries cannot keep up the branches where the work is established without thinking of going out to other islands who have not heard the gospel at all. This reminds me of the extent of my own mission before me, with one million white people and nearly fifty thousand natives. Surely we of all people with the good news we have should live very near the gospel plan in order to obtain the wisdom and power we need to reach all unwarned people. Address us: General Post Office, Wellington, New Zealand.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

H. W. SAVAGE.

PAPEETE, TAHITI, July 29, 1916.

Twilight Church Service

The architecture of men at best is but a poor substitute for nature. There is no building so massive but that it is a frail structure compared to the native hills; no spire so slender and graceful as the young tree; no wall painted with such pictures as is the sky. There is little wonder that man has always been akin to nature, and has, in his fresh, first faith, seen God in the earth, and sky, and the resistless elements around him.

Our twilight services at Independence are a present application of an old principle. Men worshiped God before they builded churches, for as Bryant says:

"The groves were God's first temples,
Ere man learned to hew the shaft and lay the architrave, Ere he framed the lofty vault to gather and roll back the sound of anthems,
He knelt down amidst the cool and silence, and offered to the Mightiest,
Solemn thanks and supplication."

Every good impulse lends itself to the service out-of-doors: The music in the fresh, sweet air is doubly full of melody; the prayer gathers to itself the mystic influence of the evening hour; and the sermon is reinforced at a hundred points by impulses that are called out by the beauty of the place and by the touch that nature alone possesses.

There is a quiet about the congregation as it gathers, that promises much for the service. Family by family and by pairs and alone they come, and by seven the beautiful lawn is a congregation out-of-doors. The lawn is broad and slopes to make a natural elevation for the chairs, and it is cool and clean.

As the evening service begins, the sun is just going down. The great, stone church stands just back of the congregation, solid and imposing. A little group of trees are at the speaker's stand, and there the locusts have gathered in full choir and orchestra, and make the air vocal with their song. To the west along the entire horizon is the great city, and as night comes on, a thousand lights appear. Above is the ever-changing sky. The sun in going down leaves some wondrous tokens of his beauty there.

Whatever is truly beautiful is truly good, and the preacher's lesson is already half taught for him before he takes his text. Happiness is fertile ground for good thoughts too, and our Sunday evening services are happy services.

Full orchestra and choir are not lacking even here, and the music is an inspiration and a delight. When the soul is open to good it is ministered to by every circumstance, and draws its happiness from simple things. We have no elaborate ritual, but we have a deep fountain of idealism, and it stirs us as no hollow form could.

The sermons, too, have been happy in form and in presentation. There is a definite unity carried out in every service. The message brought has been a needed one, and told with compelling interest. The ministers have drawn largely from the inspiration of their audience, and their thoughts have been simple-spoken, but convincing.

A thousand Saints gather under the open sky to worship, "and there is none to molest them or make afraid." It is a fact fruitful in thought: a generation ago men who dared believe only what we openly profess, were driven out of this same Zion, and their name was as a reproach and a signal to arouse the enmity of every man.

It's good to get out into the clear air and take account of God's goodness. If these little vesper services have done nothing more, they have brought a renewed sense of his nearness to us: that in the grass and trees and clouds we see his handiwork, and in the fellowship of man, his goodness made manifest.

ARTHUR E. MCKIM.

Aboutt der Var

[Brother Nosivad, which of course is not his name and who isn't so Teutonic as his letter would indicate, says some things in the following personal letter that our readers should have the privilege of perusing, so we publish it with apologies to him.—EDITORS.]

Misther More Editor: You say you want me to write somedings for dot baper der HERALD aboutt mine vork. Vell, I will wrilde but it is aboutt somedings else.

Ven I reet der Doctrine and Govenants vere it say for der Zaints to renounce var; I tot dot meant vhen dere vash a var; but ven I reet dot leetle baper vot day brint in Sion, I learn somedings. Dey say dot it means to renounce var when der ain't any. But when der ish a var or ven dey dinks der is a var comin, den der Zaints should shump inter it der first ting, and dare names up get by der beeples. Now dot vash all right, unt I vas so glad I reet dot leetle baper. Unt I vonders how I vas so foolish to dinks dot it meant to renounce var ven der vas von. But dot leetle bapers, he makes him all right. Now it vash as clear as der Mesoory Rifer. I was so glatt dot I reet dot leetle baper.

But von ding more I vant to wrilde. Did you hear of dot man Misther Thomas Rotten, vot der poys calls Tommy Rot? Phair ish he now? Did he go into de var shust to get kilt already? or did he flee to Sion for safety yet?

Von ding do bussel me, pi gracious. Ven der Tommy Atkins man he go to der var, he goes to kill some podys. But vhen der Tommy Rot man he go into der var, he goes shust to get kilt heself. But all der same he take dot gun along mit. Dot vash der conundrum.

Now dish is to be brinted von tousand years till I be det yet. I no vants der Zaints to know how foolish I vas to pelieve dot to renounce var meant ven der vas a var instet of in der dimes of beace, ven der vas no var a cumin. I vash so glatt I reet dot leetle bapers.

Unt beside, if dish vas brinted it might stir up der var in der whole vorld; unt mabee dare vash some fool Zaint in Shermans dot pelieve dot he should not dake up her sword mit his nabor, unt so he flee to Sion for safety first, and ven he get dare he meets all der Zaints and der Tommy Rot men a marchin to de var mit guns unt swords. Unt den he stans and dinks—and dinks—and dinks—"Vell, vell, vell! Dot flee pishness ver all shust von pig choke, unt I vas von pig fool—I go pack home again unt I dake up dot sword dot I leff behint unt I keel some podys right avay quick—you pet."

What you dinks?

Der motto for der fool Zaint:

In Doctrine Govenants I musht stop
Der preat of life a praken,
For chust so sure I get him right,
So sure I bees mishtaken.

SEMLOH J. NOSIVAD.

Do We Need a Chair of Religious Education?

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, August 1, 1916.

GRACELAND COLLEGE,
Lamoni, Iowa.

Attention of the Faculty: I desire if possible to take up a systematic study of the Bible and all things pertaining to the work of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Thinking that perhaps your institution may have a prepared course which could be studied and questions answered by mail, as is done in other lines of study by other correspondence schools, I ventured to address you upon the subject.

If it so happens that you do not give attention to such instruction by correspondence and textbooks, will you be kind enough to advise me where and how I may be able to make such arrangements? Should you be in a position to give this matter attention through the medium of your college, I think it is possible I may be able to obtain other correspondent students for the course in this locality.

Thanking you in advance for the courtesy of an immediate and complete reply covering the matter, I remain,

Very truly yours,

EUGENE CHRONE.

424 Main Avenue.

LAMONI, IOWA, August 7, 1916.

MR. EUGENE CHRONE,

424 Main Street.

San Antonio, Texas.

Dear Brother: Your letter of August 1, addressed to Graceland College faculty, was referred to me for answer. I regret to say that the college has no course in theology, so cannot handle your case and meet your needs.

An effort was made at the late conference to establish a chair of religious education, but it was voted down. I hope, however, that in time such a chair will be established. If you simply desired to ask questions and secure some information, we might put you in touch with some one who could answer your questions and cite you to proper literature to study, but I take it that you want to enter into a thorough study of church history and doctrine under a tutor, and I am at a loss to know how to meet your needs. I hope that the time will come when we may be in a position to meet the requirements of such students as yourself, who desire to attend college and obtain a thorough knowledge of our doctrine, history, and methods of work, or who desire to obtain the same through a correspondence course.

Sincerely yours,

ELBERT A. SMITH.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, August 10, 1916.

BROTHER ELBERT SMITH:

Your letter is indeed a disappointment to me, as I had set my heart upon this course of study; however, I trust the day is not far distant when a correspondence course under the supervision of efficient instructors in theology may be arranged. I believe there are many sincere souls who would be delighted to avail themselves of such an opportunity. In the meantime, Brother Smith, please accept my sincere thanks for your courteous response to my letter, and permit me to wish you a participant of all God's blessings.

Cordially yours,

424 Main Avenue.

EUGENE CHRONE.

NEW WESTMINSTER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, August 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: I am so much encouraged by reading the many letters in the HERALD that I feel I should try at least to help fill its pages. The summer has been cold and wet. Last Sunday it was hot and at night we were visited with heavy thunder and very sharp lightning and heavy rain, the worst in many years.

Nearly all the young men are gone to their colors, to kill and be killed. It reminds me of the Book of Mormon times. As soon as they got proud and began to get away from God and his teachings, troubles always followed, and so it is now.

We are trying to reach the people here, by going from house to house and handing them one of the new gospel tracts, and telling them who we are and what we teach. A great many people look at the cover and when they note we are Latter Day Saints they hand it back to us, and tell us they want nothing to do with us. Sometimes we are told to be sure not to come back. They say we have been around before and say we are Mormons from Utah, and a bad people. That remark is what we expect to get from anyone who doesn't know the difference between our church and the Brighamites, or Salt Lake Mormons, known as Latter Day Saints also.

It makes us feel sad, and we tell the people we don't blame them until they know the difference. So we get busy and tell them. At some houses we talk as long as half an hour, and it is very surprising to see how few people there are who know the difference.

We explain the angel in Revelation 14: 6, the book from the dust in Isaiah 29, the man who went to Professor Anthon, of the fourteen years of Joseph Smith's life, the rapid growth of the church, etc. Then comes the sad part, his death, the scattering and division, the latter evidently fulfilling the prophecies of Jeremiah 17, 1 Timothy 4, etc.

In the last days the corrupt would leave the Lord, go to a salt land. That is what Brigham Young did. He left this church with a small part of the church and went to a salt land. A desert, a parched place in the wilderness. I say that when we consider ten thousand Saints who are possessed with a spirit that would go and be rebaptized into another church and select Brigham Young for its prophet and guide, we ought to lift up our heads and rejoice, that we were not deceived.

I do rejoice that I am in the church that God established through Joseph Smith, and not the one that left the faith and went to a salt land.

Wherever we go and find that the Mormons or Brighamites have been, they have left the impression that we are all one, and if pressed very hard they insist we are the apostates and not worth consideration.

One elder of the Utah church (he knew I was a member of this church) asked: "Do you think that Brigham Young was not inspired by God when he could go to Utah and build such a beautiful city and lead such a people who are now over one hundred and fifty thousand in number, and accomplished such a marvelous work?"

I answered: "My friend, that is nothing. You believe in the Book of Mormon don't you?"

"Surely I do."

"Well, the smartest general, the man who built the finest city, and towers on the highest walls, who had the biggest praise by his followers, was King Noah, and he was the wickedest man in the history of the Book of Mormon. He is an unsafe guide."

He laid his hand on my shoulder and said: "Mr. Reed, you ought to be a Mormon."

Dear brothers and sisters, let us be found active in the service. Don't let us forget that we cannot serve God and Mammon—no time for both.

My earnest prayer is that God will bless his church and all those who have charge of his work. Next Sunday is our turn to go to Vancouver, twelve miles away and take the bread and wine. I do feel glad I may help in this way, and thus serve God by helping my fellow men. I am proud of the Saints here and in Vancouver. They are few but good. May God bless the honest in heart, is my prayer.

Your brother,

W. C. REED.

DAVILLA, TEXAS, August 2, 1916.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have written to you. Will take this way to let Saints and friends know that we are still in this life and contending for faith once delivered to Saints.

We have lived in Texas almost ten years, and have had the privilege of seeing only one Latter Day Saint, Sister Florence Bloom, of Webb City, Missouri, in that time. I have been attending Sunday school and church at the Christian Church, also belong to their ladies' aid. Several times their Sunday school superintendent has called for some one to read a good piece after Sunday school, and I read several from our papers. I have loaned the Sunday school paper, Autumn Leaves and HERALD to several families that I thought would read them. Have my Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Voice of Warning, and twenty-nine sermons of Brother Luff, loaned to some of their members in the country, but haven't had a chance to talk with them since to see how they like them.

There were very few of them that had ever heard of Latter Day Saints before, so I hardly ever said anything about my religion, but tried to live it before them, but every once in a while some of them would ask my opinion on different things, how we believed, etc. They would always open their "Aid" with prayer, and would always call on me to repeat the Lord's prayer.

A week ago last Saturday, they commenced their summer meeting, a Mr. Roberts of Thorndale preaching. A young lady (fine singer) was in charge of singing. I met Mr. Roberts the first evening. He just thought I was one of his members. And Sunday at their Sunday school he was sitting where he could hear the classes recite. I answered so many more questions than any of the rest that he began to inquire about me, and found I was a Latter Day Saint. Some of his members told him I did more than any of their members, and that if they had forty like me they would take Davilla for Christ. They didn't understand the Bible enough to talk to me, but knew he could. So the first of the week I was where he boarded, and he began by asking what church I belonged to. He understands our doctrine pretty well, has a Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and some of our books; also Utah church books and papers, but he is more acquainted with them than ours. He has had the Utah elders stop at his home, also saw them administer to sick, etc.

If I understood him right, I was the first Latter Day Saint he had met. We talked until church time at eleven a. m. I have to wash and work for the support of myself and six children, so didn't get to attend morning service. But he told some of his members that he wanted some of them to go with him to see me that evening, that I was too smart a woman to fail to get, and that I knew some things about the Bible. I told them to come on, all of them, I would just love to tell them; while he was telling his side I would get to tell mine too. But they never came.

The next morning I attended morning service. He spoke on 2 Corinthians 12: 13. Told them how the Latter Day Saints believed it and his side, and also the Apostolic people. In some things he grouped us together, said we had no power to heal the sick, said they perhaps would have gotten well sometime anyway. He told them a little about us "believing the Book of Mormon and present revelation," and read in Revelation where no man was to add to the words of this book, etc. He told them that the Latter Day Saints didn't believe or teach polygamy and that we were among the best people, and that we were the hardest people on earth to meet and that we could make a good stand from Scriptures, and "if you think they are easy to overthrow you are mistaken." He did it all in the kindest way, and told them to never "judge anyone until you hear them, and if you want to find out what they believe send to their publishing house, not their enemies, and try to convince people by kindness that you have something better."

I was glad he told them all he did, for it got his people interested in the Latter Day Saints. It would take me some time to tell and explain all that he did. I was where he was stopping another morning and we talked for an hour. He is the kindest man one could meet. He said when he got through that I was a good Bible student and there were not many who could meet me and my Bible, that he was satisfied I was a good Christian and he was sorry he couldn't show me where the Latter Day Saints were wrong for they needed me. He asked how long I had been a member. When I told him ever since I was fifteen he said, "Well, if one is taught anything when that young it is hard to change them." But I told him from the time I could remember until that time, I had gone to the Methodist Sunday school, and that my mother and father believed in the Latter Day Saint Church at the same time I did; that I had studied the Bible and the first I heard what the Latter Day Saints taught, I was just foolish enough to believe the Bible.

Well, church time came, and he said he would come down Tuesday afternoon to talk some more, but he never came, there were so many wanting him to come. They got thirty additions to the church. He preached one night on faith, one on repentance, one on baptism for remission of sins, and eternal judgment. The other churches don't like doctrinal sermons. When they all saw me stay in the Latter Day Saint Church, when they knew there were none of our people here, and that I stood alone, that I believe a great many truths like they do, they have begun to think there must be something to it. They say I am a better Christian than they are. I told them if I had received more light I ought to live better. One sister told me, "You think you have something better than we. Well, you have been so good to listen to us. Now I want to hear your side. I am coming to see you soon and let you tell me the whole of it, for the whole truth is what I want." Another said, "You must have a good religion. I wish I could hear your people preach, but I never did have the privilege." She said there are so many who never have the opportunity who maybe would believe it, too. She said it in such a sorrowful way that it was impressed on me as never before.

The harvest truly is ripe, but the laborers are few. If we as Saints only could realize the great responsibility resting on us as Saints of God. One of their members told me she dreamed a queer dream; that herself and some other members were trying to get some certain place by climbing over a mountain. She thought that was the only way to get there, but they were trying to climb by putting their fingers and toes in the side of the mountain, and that some one came up and said they too were going to that same place. She told the person, "You will never get there, for we can't climb this mountain." But the party pointed them to a smooth, hard road by the side of the mountain, the straightest road she ever saw, but they never knew it was there before. Then she awoke. I pray that I may so live as to point them to the straight and narrow way that leads to eternal life.

These Christians came to me and offered their help when they knew I had to support my family but I told them all I asked was some one to give me work and my heavenly Father to give me health and strength. But last Friday they came with a load of groceries, etc., and some cash. I thank my heavenly Father for his watchcare and the friends he has raised up to me in my distress. May I prove worthy and be the means in his hand of showing many the way of light. If I had the means I would send Reverend Roberts some of our tracts and get some to give out here, but it is impossible at present. If any of our people are at Thorndale, Texas, they would receive courteous treatment from Reverend Roberts. He is pastor there at present.

Your sister in Christ,
MERTIE JONES BROWN.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, August 5, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have been very much pleased with my new field of labor so far. My meetings in Omaha were well attended, and the interest was excellent. The Omaha choir is great, not for numbers but for efficiency. They have a splendid band of workers in this little city.

Brethren Shakespeare, Lane, Baker and the writer have held meetings among the Omaha Indians, seventy miles north of here. Interest is good; so far we have led seven into the waters of baptism, and more names have been given. We now have more than forty members among them at Macy, where we hope to organize a Lamanite branch before many months.

The hot weather has been terrible here this year. Our small force of mission workers are in the field and busy. There is more activity among local men here than any place I have ever worked. We are surely glad to see this onward move.

My address will be 2106 Miami Street, Omaha, Nebraska, for a few months to come.

Your coworker,
HUBERT CASE.

COFFEYVILLE, KANSAS, August 6, 1916.

Editors Herald: I am an isolated Latter Day Saint, but find much comfort in reading the Ensign. We recently noticed the news of the death of Mrs. Ernest E. Moore, of North Dakota. It is sad to think of the troubles she had to pass through before her death, in giving up her only baby girl by fire, and under heart-rending circumstances. May God bless and comfort the bereaved ones. I would like to hear from some of the sisters of Mrs. Moore. I am a daughter of Mrs. Mary Hawkins who was the wife of Christ Ode, he being a brother of Mrs. John Bierline.

We have lived here six years, and after many trials and troubles can thank our heavenly Father that he has blessed us in many ways. We now have a little home free from debt. It is comforting to think that we can come to our heavenly Father in time of trial, and that he will always hear us, and not turn us away comfortless. Some of the dear sisters have written to me and I have very much enjoyed the letters. I would like to have some one let me know where the nearest branch is.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. JACOB BOEGLER.

PARIS, TENNESSEE, August 8, 1916.

Editors Herald: I reached my field of labor April 28. Since that time I have endeavored to visit most of the Saints. I have met with Saints at Paris, Mays Hill, Foundry Hill, Bethel, Oakland, High Hill, and Lynnville. The Saints met for the reunion at Foundry Hill, July 22, continuing until July 31. A pleasant time was enjoyed by all. The attendance was not so large as upon former occasions. Apostle R. C. Russell was present, and his cheerful disposition and firmness for order had its influence for good and comfort of all. The kind-hearted Saints who live in the South, provided plenty to sustain the outer man. Ripe tomatoes, melons and vegetables in abundance, and ice cream figured to the comfort of all during those warm days. The prayer meetings were characterized by a goodly degree of the Spirit. A goodly number of the local priesthood were present, whose names may appear later in the minutes.

Just a few words relative to my observations. I find there is a lack of local spiritual men holding the priesthood. By reason of this shortage many Saints fail to get their proper portion of spiritual food. Some of those holding this sacred office do not observe the law governing their several callings, hence some have not been "accounted worthy to stand," and have fallen.

Relative to the membership. Many have not heeded the counsel and advice of those sent in their midst, and procrastination is evidenced. Many are just where they were years ago. It is impossible to set branches in order. The next best thing to do is to "set our homes in order." The lack of this is one of the abnormal conditions that is working more injury to the Saints than any other one thing that we might mention.

"He that observes not his prayers in the season thereof shall be held in remembrance before the Judge of my people." So we observe that many are judged unworthy of the Spirit, or in other words, there is no "oil" in their lamps. So we find many "sleeping." Oh, may our counsel be heeded and everyone awaken to their duty and be very prayerful.

The Spirit has testified to me since I have been in this field, that some would be destroyed if they did not keep the law, or specifically speaking, "the Word of Wisdom." I know that some of the Saints have had their last warning. May the Lord help us who have been called out of darkness, to put on the whole armor of light.

I would feel that I had done an injustice to the church if I did not mention a prevailing evil in this district, and that is the tobacco industry, and habit. I would advise it to be an enemy to spirituality and to financial prosperity. Some may not be willing to admit this at present. May the Lord move upon the proper authorities that we may all see alike relative to such important questions.

Malaria fever is beginning to spread in these parts. The writer administered to two on the 7th who were thus afflicted. May we be protected from these diseases. The writer has not had a sick feeling since he has been in the field and we are thankful to the Lord for health.

We are holding meetings in a tent about eleven miles east of Murry, Kentucky. Some are interested. We have consulted the "powers" as to our visiting the old people, Brother and Sister Benjamin Rowe, of McBain, Michigan, during the holidays next, so we will arrange to visit some places we haven't seen for over nine years, during December and January.

Hopefully in the conflict,

F. A. ROWE.

IRONTON, OHIO, August 8, 1916.

Editors Herald: Our reunion was held at Creola, July 28, to August 6. It has been some six or seven years since the Southern Ohio District has attempted to hold a reunion alone, and naturally we have labored under some difficulties, but we feel sure that the Lord has blessed us in all our meetings, and it is the sincere prayers of all in charge that the reunions may be revived and thus strengthen the branches of this section.

The following workers have been in attendance and have striven diligently to set the truths of the gospel before all, exhorting the Saints to be faithful, attend all church services and live pure in all things whatsoever their environments: G. T. Griffiths, W. H. Kelley, T. D. Harnish, A. B. Kirkendall, H. E. Moler, and J. G. Halb.

Services of some kind have been held each day, either preaching or social, and those who came will be greatly benefited.

While our number was not as large as had been expected, all say that from a spiritual standpoint the reunion was a success. The young Saints at Creola are to be commended for their faithful attention to the musical department and also the sisters and brothers who labored so hard that all who attended might be pleased. At the close of the conference it was voted to continue next year, although we do not know as yet where the reunion will be held, but are trusting in the One who is stronger than we.

A. M. KINSTLER.

TANGO, MONTANA, August 9, 1916.

Editors Herald: There is a little mistake in the letter you published for me, dated June 27. The name of the branch about four miles from here is called the Golden Valley Branch, which my son and wife and myself have been able to attend fairly often. I signed my name a sister of the Jerusalem Branch, as I have not taken my letter from the Jerusalem, Palestine, Branch, for I hope to return there as soon as the war and other circumstances will allow, in order to attend to the property over there.

I do not mind the mistake especially except that I do not want the Golden Valley people to think I am trying to take the glory of their work.

Faithfully,

MRS. ROLLA FLOYD.

IOWA CITY, IOWA, August 14, 1916.

Editors Herald: We wish to pen a few lines to HERALD readers to give an account of ourselves and incidentally to commend our great Iowa University as a splendid finishing school for our young people. Our summer spent here in study within its commodious walls and under the guidance of master minds has truly been a joy and an inspiration. We have found many noble men and women on the faculty and are happy to include as a personal friend and instructor the new president-elect, Doctor W. A. Jessup, a worthy type of a man and educator in whom our commonwealth may well put its trust.

Brother Richard C. Kelley holds a responsible faculty position here, and has won the confidence and respect of his colleagues. A year ago he was united in marriage to Sister Anna Zimmermann, of Philadelphia, and together they have established a home in which is felt the spirit of the gospel. During the summer our little group of Saints has met each Sunday evening in the Kelley home for prayer or other service. The effort was humble and yet the experience has been grand for all of us. Last night Brother H. H. Gold preached. He will go soon to take up his new work as superintendent of schools at Neola, Iowa.

This is also the home of Sister Benc and husband, and their two noble boys, Arthur and Charles, both of whom are old Graceland students and who complete their university courses the coming year.

Sister Lillian Zimmermann, of Philadelphia, has also been a summer student and a great help at our services where she was ever ready to respond with her gift of song, in prayer, or in able testimony. Other young Saints from various localities have been present, have contributed their part and, we are sure, have gone away blessed. We trust some effort may be made to keep up regular gatherings of the Saints here during the school year.

It would be a splendid thing if the young Saints who are to come here for the year would early make the acquaintance of Brother and Sister Kelley. Their hearts are full of love for the gospel and their home may often be found a haven of sympathy, a source of needed inspiration and strength.

While this is a great school in so many ways, we are still convinced that Graceland is by all means the place for our young people during their first two years of college life. No other school, large or small offers them during those most important formative years that which is to be found in the close association, advice, and instruction of strong, noble, faculty men and women of our own faith. No other school has the religious tone and atmosphere as a background for all its work that is characteristic of Graceland.

We shall be glad to return and resume our own humble labors in Lamoni.

Yours in gospel bonds,

CHARLES B. WOODSTOCK.

PAONIA, COLORADO, August 13, 1916.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure I write of our little Sunday school at Paonia. There are but a few of us in number, but we are striving to serve the Lord to the best of our knowledge. We do not have the privilege of hearing the gospel preached very often, just once a year, and we feel like we are being neglected. But the two elders who were sent to the western slope mission have about all they can do to preach two weeks in all the places they are supposed to. It seems as though it would be better to have more of them sent to the western mission and then each place could have more of the gospel.

We have Sunday school every Sunday at ten o'clock, and song practice Wednesday evenings.

We have had the pleasure of meeting and hearing Brother Higdon the past two seasons, and he surely preached some good sermons while with us, and we are looking forward to the time when he can be with us again. I for one can say that I thank God that Brother Higdon was sent here, because I believe I would not have taken the interest in the church again as I have the past two years, if I had not heard him, because everything seemed so much plainer than ever before. As my husband is not a Latter Day Saint it seems hard at times, but I am praying that I may see the day when he is.

Some of us are going to try to be at Delta to the conference August 26, 27, and 28. As we are all poor, it is hard for us to meet as often as we would like with the Saints at Delta.

Asking the prayers of all the Saints, that I may hold out faithful to the end, I am,

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. STELLA SCHONEMAN.

LA JUNTA, COLORADO, August 16, 1916.

Editors Herald: I held a splendid meeting at Burlington, Colorado, the first part of June. Four were baptized there, and several others near the water of obedience. Brother Shumate and family are doing what they can for the good of the cause, also Brother Muntor and family, and some others. But the Devil is busy also, doing his dirty work.

I also held forth in the Denver Second Branch. There is a noble class of good Saints there. Brother Nearn is president, and has splendid helps in Brother Bartlett and others. One addition was made there by baptism, Brother Nearn officiating. That branch is orthodox to the bone.

I took a run up to Wyoming, but found no chance for gospel work. I stopped in Colorado Springs with Brethren Brown, Liggett, and our old standby, W. T. Bozarth, who are all firm in the "faith once delivered to the Saints." It would take a mountain of heresy as large as Pikes Peak to move them from the solid rock of the three books.

I had a fine time in using the iron and soda waters of Manitou. They are God's medicine. The nights at the mountains are delightfully cool to sleep.

I began a series of meetings here in this new branch last Sunday. The attention is fine and the crowds all that could be expected. Brother W. W. Williams, formerly of Hiteman, Iowa, is in charge, with Brother Tripp, one other old standby. This is a hot country, and oh, the mosquitoes! Many of them weigh a pound. See?

From here I will work for Bristol and Wiley, then back to Flat Top, Burlington, and homeward by the time it gets colder.

The good Lord has blessed me greatly in my summer's work so far. The Saints who are living up to the "rod of iron" are happy in their warfare. May God bless the faithful and confound all error.

This is a good country to raise mosquitoes without incubators.

My hope is in the redemption of Zion.

In bonds,

LAMONI, IOWA.

J. S. ROTH.

News from Missions

Arkansas

I have just spent ten days at once among the finest reunions ever enjoyed in this south land. The reunion was at Fort Towson, in the southeast part of Oklahoma. There is no branch at this place, but a few noble Saints live near there, Brother F. Chapple and wife and two daughters. He spared no time nor means to make the reunion a success. Brother Charley Frank and Brother Frank Davidson and Goosbey and A. Fodge, who live near Fort Towson, did all they could to help the reunion. About one hundred Saints were camped on the ground. Everybody seemed to enjoy health and a spirit of peace and happiness. Not only was the Spirit of God enjoyed in all the meetings, but on the camp ground day by day.

Brother J. C. Chrestensen was in charge. He did his work well. Brother H. O. Smith, patriarch, who gave about forty blessings, J. M. Smith, J. M. Simmons, J. W. Jackson, G. C. Thompson, B. F. Pollard, Ed Kelsey, and the writer were the speakers of the reunion. We averaged a crowd of about five hundred, and on Sunday night it was said a thousand people were on the ground. On the evening of the 9th Brother J. C. Chrestensen baptized seven noble girls, and on the evening of the 13th the writer baptized eight fine people, five men and three ladies.

Twelve years ago I went to Fort Towson to try to open up the gospel work. I asked a preacher for the only church there was in the town, and his answer was that he was going to send to Kentucky after a pair of bulldogs to run my sort out of that town. I obtained an old storehouse and some of the good people helped me seat it, and I had seven days of fine meetings. I was then shown that some day a good work would be done in that country. The man with his bulldogs is gone, but the gospel is still in Fort Towson, gathering the good, honest-hearted people into the kingdom of God.

I am now in the Ozark Mountains in Cercey County, trying to tell the beautiful gospel to the people. The gospel was introduced in this country two years ago by Brother S. W. Shupe and wife, who thus did all they could to get the angel's message before the people in the country. I have been on the gospel battle field twenty-two years. I never saw the prospects for the preaching of the gospel better than it is now. Perilous times are on us. Men's hearts are failing them for fear, and are looking after those things coming on the earth. The judgments of God are here. The end is near. Zion must be built up. So let us be up and doing. Saints' lift up your heads and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all that may read this letter, that I may be spared a few more years yet to tell the beautiful story.

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

BAKER, ARKANSAS, August 18, 1916.

News from Branches

Independence Stake

While all Europe is in war, and the world is in a tumultuous whirl of vice, trouble and pleasure-seeking, with all the strikes, storms, political strifes and epidemics, and martial and religious upheavals, it is nothing to be surprised if to our very doors approach unforeseen influences not for our peace.

Even the Saints come in contact with such, but our peace and safety, through humble prayer, and sustaining the efforts of those in charge of affairs, are made sure.

Among those visiting the Saints here was Ellis Short, jr., who is attending his father who has lately been quite ill, also Brother Eugene Chrono from San Antonio, Texas,—a gentleman who has expressed a high appreciation of our work both in church and Sunday school.

Brother Israel A. Smith gave an excellent discourse at the morning church service and our pastor, Brother Smith, spoke at the lawn meeting on the subject of repentance, before a large audience.

Brother Israel's theme was the origin of man, entering into the deep problems which interest the students of biology, the science of life as applied to the teachings of the Scriptures. His quotations were from 1 John 5:12 and 1 Corinthians 2:6-15; and he also read from Drummond on "Growth."

While the afternoon prayer service was going on the Sunshine band attended a meeting held at the home for girls, distant a mile or two, and a good time is reported. The opening day for the city schools will be September 11. About this time next year the new high school building will be completed.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes

MINNESOTA.—At Clitherall, Minnesota, June 17 and 18. Reports: Audubon 142, Bemidji 66, Minneapolis 133, Union 189. Officers elected: President, D. A. Whiting; Leon A. Gould and Charles Lundeen counselors; secretary and treasurer, Lester Whiting; member of library board, Alta Kimber. Brother S. Sloan, of Knife River, was ordained elder. Recommendation for organization of a branch at Knife River was carried, subject to approval of missionary in charge. Adjourned to meet at Clitherall, time being left to presidency. Lester Whiting, secretary.

PORTLAND.—At 10 a. m., July 22, J. W. Rushton, assisted by M. H. Cook, C. E. Jones, G. M. Shippy presiding. Officers reported verbally and in writing, and other official reports were read and accepted. Reports indicated that many had been added to the church. L. B. Shippy was ordained to the office of priest, C. O. Young to office of deacon. Sunday school and Religio held local sessions. An instructive study hour for teachers and preachers was conducted by J. W. Rushton, and priesthood meetings were held. Three afternoons of the reunion were devoted to institute work under the direction of Sister C. E. Jones. Summer school work was superintended by Sisters L. B. Shippy and C. E. Jones, and as a result the specimens of work done were shown and the results were pronounced good. The following were elected as permanent reunion committee: C. E. Jones, manager; L. B. Shippy, secretary; G. M. Appleman, treasurer. The conference agreed to buy a folding organ to be used in missionary work. Two infants were blessed and two baptisms were performed during the services. The Oriole girls were much in evidence during the reunion, there being about twenty-five in attendance and having their own tent. We are much encouraged over the success of our past reunion, and hopeful and enthusiastic concerning prospects for a greater one next summer. George O. Dodge and Sadie E. Ward, press committee.

Conference Notices

Holden Stake, at Holden, Missouri, September 16 and 17, convening at 10 a. m. The ordination of those selected for ordination as members of the stake high council will be attended to. F. M. Smith, F. M. Sheehy and B. R. McGuire, have arranged to be present. Forward reports and credentials to the secretary, Mrs. Anna Fender, Holden, Missouri. David J. Krahl, president.

Convention Notices

Northeastern Nebraska Sunday school and Religio at Decatur, September 8, 9 a. m. Mrs. M. A. Peterson, secretary, 2708 North Twentieth Street, Omaha.

Has Sufficient Literature

I desire to thank the many Saints who have so heartily responded to my call for literature. I will state that I now have an abundant supply. Others contemplating sending will please wait until further notice. A. E. Warr, 352 Chatham Street, Mobile, Alabama.

Two-Day Meetings

At Beaverton, Michigan, September 16 and 17. First services held in new church. All that can should come. Those coming from the north and east will be met Friday night with autos at Gladwin. George W. Burt, district president.

Requests for Prayers

A sister in Texas who is afflicted with tuberculosis desires the prayers of the Saints that she may be blessed with health and allowed to serve the church wherever she can do the most good.

Died

HOLMES.—Amie D. Cole Holmes was born at Racine, Missouri, March 10, 1872; died at Independence, Missouri, July 31, 1916. Baptized at Orting, Washington, March 22, 1896. She was a patient sufferer, and was ready to go when the call came. She died firm in the faith of the resurrection through Christ. Funeral at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri. Sermon by Walter W. Smith. Interment at Mound Grove Cemetery.

GOODE.—Fannie Elizabeth Goode, fourth daughter of Frank and Amelia Koehler Goode, born at Independence, Missouri, May 16, 1912, died from a gunshot wound received by accident while at play in Independence, Missouri, July 26, 1916. "We walk by faith and not by sight." Funeral services at Second Independence Church, sermon by Walter W. Smith. Interment at Mound Grove Cemetery.

BLACK.—Paul Nelson Black, oldest son of James C. Black and Sister Maud Strickland Black, born in Sublette Township, Illinois, June 14, 1895; was instantly killed by lightning July 19, 1916, near Hereford, Texas. His friends knew him as a sober, truthful, trusty, and faithful young man. Parents and 2 younger brothers, Leo and Orra, are left to mourn. Burial in Farwell, Texas, Cemetery.

MYERS.—Agda Melvia Myers, daughter of Brother and Sister William Washington Myers, born March 15, 1888, at Deloit, Iowa; died July 15, 1916, at Lamoni, Iowa. Baptized March 18, 1906, and remained a faithful member until death. Sister Agda taught school for a number of years, continuing in that work until stricken with her last illness. She was loved by all who knew her. Leaves to mourn their loss, father, mother, 1 brother, many relatives and friends, but as the poet has said, "To live in the hearts we leave behind is not to die." Services in charge of J. B. Barrett, sermon by Charles E. Harpe. Interment at Deloit Cemetery.

DYE.—Florence E. Dye, born March 12, 1892; died at Myrtle Point, Oregon, July 9, 1916. Baptized by C. E. Crumley, August 1913. She was killed by an automobile, death being almost instantaneous. The late Myrtle Point Reunion was in progress at the time. The reunion tent was being occupied by professors from the State University, and the Saints' church was without seats because of the reunion, so the Dunkard people kindly loaned their church for the funeral. Sermon by A. C. Barmore. Interment in Coquille Cemetery. Sister Dye leaves father, James Dye, 1 sister, 3 half sisters and 3 half brothers.

MORRISON.—Elder Walter Morrison, born August 23, 1831, at Traquair, Peebleshire, Scotland; died August 11, 1916, at Holstein, Ontario. Came to Canada in 1854. Baptized November 23, 1879, by J. A. McIntosh. Ordained teacher January 18, 1882, by J. A. McIntosh and J. H. Lake. Ordained an elder, June 2, 1883, by J. H. Lake, R. C. Coburn, S. Brown. Brother Morrison was president of the Egremont Branch for a number of years, and was well known to the traveling ministry and others, as "Auld Wattie." Under his roof Saint and sinner were welcomed, and many of the notable men of the church tarried with him. Funeral in charge of O. B. Perkins, assisted by James McLean.

SMITH.—Mrs. Sabina A. Smith was born December 5, 1845, at Boydsville, Kentucky; died June 14, 1916. Married Hezekiah Smith January 14, 1863. To this union were born 8 children, four surviving: Amos, of Mayfield, Kentucky; Hester; Mrs. James Huff, and Mrs. A. M. Baker, of Koskonong, Missouri. In April, 1874, together with her husband and one sister, and 5 other friends, she was baptized by John H. Hanson, in Graves County, Kentucky. This was the first daylight baptizing of the Reorganized Church in that State, and was witnessed by at least thirty people. The first baptizing was done at the midnight hour, only a few hours before the party passed to his reward. Sister Smith was a cousin of the late Elder J. C. Clapp. Her father and mother, David and Sarah Crider, were members of the church in the days of the Martyr, Joseph, and were among the many to lose their homes in Far West, Missouri, when the Saints were driven from their homes on account of their faith. The Saints' Harp presented to the deceased in 1873, is well preserved and several songs were sung from this book at her funeral. Elders A. M. D. McGuire and J. F. Cunningham officiated at the funeral services.

HAXTON.—Emma J., wife of John H. Haxton, was born April 6, 1847, died July 29, 1916. Her birthplace was Waukegan, Illinois. They were married thirty-five years ago. They came to California fifteen years ago. She has been a member of the church for twenty-five years. Funeral sermon by T. W. Williams from the Los Angeles church.

WAY.—Henry Way was born October 8, 1838, at Cleveland, Indiana; died August 10, 1916, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Nellie Williams, near Eldorado Springs, Missouri. Baptized by T. W. Smith, in 1875, at Oak Lake, Minnesota. Ordained an elder at the same time and place. Was quite extensively known as a man of God, with great faith and experience in the church. Leaves to mourn, 3 daughters and many relatives and friends. Sermon by R. T. Walters; interment in Coal Hill Cemetery.

CRANDALL.—Otto Holcomb Crandall was born at Panama, Iowa, March 4, 1883; died at the Saint Agnes Sanitarium, August 7, 1916. He grew to manhood in Dow City. Survived by his mother, Mrs. I. W. Beems, of Harlan, Iowa; 2 sisters, Mrs. Harry Bulla, of Denver, Colorado, Mrs. George Davis, of Omaha, Nebraska and 1 Brother, Oscar, of Omaha. Services at Dow City; sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by Alfred Jackson.

DODGE.—Mary C. Dodge, daughter of William and Rebecca Sauter, was born in Canton, Ohio, April 25, 1893; married Harry Dodge on March 20, 1915; died July 31, 1916. Leaves husband, father, mother, 2 sisters, also a son three days old. Baptized about two years ago and lived the life of a faithful Saint. Death came suddenly and unexpectedly. The service was attended by a large audience who had never heard a Latter Day Saint sermon before. Sermon by J. C. McConaughy.

HARRISON.—William Henry Harrison, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, died August 21, 1916, aged 75 years, 1 month, 20 days. Baptized in 1874 and has been connected with the Philadelphia Branch since that time; a faithful worker and devoted husband. Services at the church in charge of J. August Koehler.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor. Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Stakes and Cords of Zion	833
Lamoni Stake Reunion	834
The Strike	834
Current Events	834
HYMNS AND POEMS	835
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
Fifty Years in the Church.—Part 2, by William Lewis	837
Types Worthy of Study.—Part 3, by Gustav Erickson	842
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
For a "Christian" Bible	843
WOMAN'S AUXILIARY	844
Grace K. Briggs—Emma B. Burton.
THE CHILDREN'S HOME	846
LETTER DEPARTMENT	847
H. W. Savage—Arthur E. McKim—Eugene Chrone—W. C. Reed—Mertie Jones Brown—Hubert Case—Mrs. Jacob Boegler—F. A. Rowe—A. M. Kinstler—Rolla Floyd—C. B. Woodstock.
NEWS FROM MISSIONS	853
E. A. Erwin.
NEWS FROM BRANCHES	854
Abbie A. Horton.
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT	854

The Conditions of Labor in American Industries

Under this title Funk & Wagnalls Company are soon to publish an authoritative collection and synthesis of the results of recent federal, state, and other investigations and studies of wage earners in the principal industries of the United States. It will show their wages, their hours of labor their sanitary conditions, the wage earner's health and that of his family, the family income, the family expenditure, mortality statistics, and the various factors governing health and efficiency. The distribution of wage earners will be shown, according to race, industry, geographical divisions, etc., with the extent of labor union membership. In short, the book will be an unbiased scientific statement of facts, written in a non-technical style, and of special value to the business man, to students of economic questions, to the social worker and the labor unionist. As a textbook for university and college classes, in economic and labor problems, it should meet a wide need. Its authors are W. Jett Lauck, formerly associate professor of economics in Washington and Lee University, who has done extensive work in connection with the U. S. Immigration Commission and the U. S. Tariff Board, and Edgar Sydenstricker, also an expert investigator and researchist along economic lines. Mr Lauck is at present Director of Applied Economics, at Washington, and Mr. Sydenstricker is now Public Health Statistician of the U. S. Public Health Service. They were both admirably fitted for their joint labors in preparing this new volume.

GRACELAND COLLEGE BONDS

In order to place the finances of Graceland College on a better basis, those having the financial responsibility of the same have thought best to issue bonds to the amount of $35,000.00.

These bonds run from July 1, 1915, to July 1, 1920, and bear 5 per cent interest, payable semi-annually.

They are offered to the Saints and to any investor as a first-class investment.

These bonds are secured by a first mortgage on real estate valued at about $62,000.00.

Each bond is valued at $100.00. We earnestly invite the attention of any having money to invest to investigate this proposition.

You will be not only putting your money in a safe place (as the whole church is back of these bonds as well as secured by mortgage) but you will be helping the work of the church.

Address all communications to

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Lamoni, Iowa

FOR SALE

Two acres of fine lying land, all set to young fruit just coming into bearing—new 6 room house, back plastered and finely finished. 2 never failing wells, new hen house 10 x 24. Located on South State St. Bargain for cash. E. F. Hall, Lamoni, Iowa. 31-tf

HOUSEKEEPER WANTED

I want a good Latter Day Saint woman who has had experience with children to keep house for me. I have four children, ages three to fourteen. Live two blocks from L. D. S. church in a good branch. Will pay good wages to right one. Address lock box 114, Perry, Iowa, for particulars. 33-3t

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist

in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

Wanted

SAINTS' HERALD for January and March, 1863. Anyone having above numbers and care to dispose of them correspond with 35-3t
HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

The Woman's Auxiliary Year Book

FOR 1916-1918

This book contains necessary information for those engaged in the Woman's Auxiliary work of the church. Every sister should get one. Price 20c. 35-tf
Iowa, or Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri. Order from your nearest house to save postage.
Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, postage.

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, SEPTEMBER 6, 1916

NUMBER 36

Editorial

WAR POSTERS

The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light.—Jesus.

The Outlook for August 30 has an interesting note on "Advertising and the war." It seems that the British Government has undertaken to advise the people by poster. Some of these posters, especially those which have to do with the conservation of resources, are interesting.

The people of Great Britain are engaged in a great war. The Government realizes that in order to win this war the people must conserve their strength and their finances. Hence the paternal admonition.

When reading the extracts from these posters that we shall presently give, please remember that we as a people are also engaged in a great war. At least we borrow from military parlance and call it a warfare, and the use of the term is sanctioned by the custom of inspired writers and preachers in all ages.

If we are to succeed it will be necessary for us to conserve our resources. Shall the children of this world display more wisdom, more devotion, more consecration to the cause that they have espoused than we are willing to display in the cause that we profess to love so dearly and to which we obviously owe so much?

In one poster the British public is told:

New clothes should only be bought when absolutely necessary; and these should be durable and suitable for all occasions. Luxurious forms of hats, boots, shoes, stockings, gloves, and veils should be avoided.

This is good advice for British subjects engaged in an exhaustive warfare. Is it not equally good advice for subjects of King Emmanuel, most of them only moderately well to do, and with a great work to accomplish that will need every dollar that they can spare?

Another poster says:

You are helping the Germans when you use a motor car for pleasure, when you employ more servants than you need, when you waste coal, electric light, or gas, when you eat and drink more than is necessary for your health and efficiency. . . . Save money and lend it to the nation and so help your country.

The man who wastes needed money helps the enemy. That is a startling thought. Shall we ponder it and see just how much there is in it? No one cares to help the enemy. Yet from this viewpoint, it is no wonder that the enemy encourages these thoughtless and wasteful expenditures for folly and pleasure.

The Lord has put up some war posters for our consideration, from time to time. As for instance: "And again, thou shalt not be proud in thy heart; let all thy garments be plain." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12.)

Or this, even more pointed and brief: "Be clean, be frugal." (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 9.)

And again:

Avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or of places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continued onward progress of the general work; and both in private and in public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants; and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body. And the Spirit counseleth the church in this regard.—Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7.

He who runs may read! Are we willing to heed the paternal counsel that God has given? Is our allegiance less binding upon our consciences than that of worldly governments, even after we have given all due credit to noble and legitimate patriotism? Are we any less interested in saving men's souls than others can possibly be in killing their bodies?

Are we willing to conform to the divine standard of living: according to "needs and just wants"? These queries are suggested to us by these war posters.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

If God would permit me to live my life over again, and allow me to put in or leave out whatever I pleased, I would not dare leave out a single trial or trouble, because in so doing I would leave out some of the best things in my career.—Governor Seymour, of New York.

"CHRISTIAN" SELF-COMPLACENCY

Our Christian (Disciple) friends are very gifted along certain lines. At the points where they are strong they are very strong, and it would be almost hopeless for ordinary people to compete with them. But then, there is this consolation, along those particular lines ordinary people would not care to compete with them.

For instance, in the matter of fond self-congratulation, who could hope, or care to compete with these Christian friends? Long practice has made them well-nigh perfect.

Here are two specimens. In the Apostolic Review, organ of the so-called "Non-progressives," for August 8, appears the following over the name of the well-known W. G. Roberts:

The Apostolic Review, published at 904 Udell st., Indianapolis, Ind., is the most valuable paper in the world. . . . The Review is by far the best paper in the world.

We have quoted exactly, even observing to reproduce the abbreviations and the lower case s in street—because by far the very best paper in all the world must be something of an authority on even such minor matters as that.

There are many very excellent papers and magazines on the market; but the best of them all, yes by far the best, long Christian miles and leagues ahead of all competitors, is the Apostolic Review, of Udell st., Ind.,—there can be no doubt about the matter, for it is announced in a regular edition of that paper.

Some people who have a very good opinion of themselves admit the existence of equals, but here self-congratulation is carried to that fine point where it becomes supersuperlative. How lonely the Apostolic Review must be.

Again, in the same paper for August 1, R. B. Neal, formerly of Pikeville, now of Grayson, Kentucky, says:

I am prepared to compare both character and reputation with any Mormon seer, elder or evangelist living or dead.

He includes all Latter Day Saints under the term Mormon. Even our enemies admit that many very good and pious, though as they believe deluded, men have belonged to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and have preached its doctrines far and wide.

The Kansas City Journal rendered a very generous tribute to the goodness and greatness of the late President Joseph Smith. But this man is not afraid to match characters with any of them, living or dead, because he knows just what an awfully good fellow he is—in a class with the Apostolic Review.

It were a shame to interrupt his rendition of his original solo, "How good I am!" If he can get past

God with it in the day of judgment it will be all right with us. But let not "him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off."

Men are not saved by a comparison of merits with other men, but by a growth toward the character of Jesus Christ—and an important attribute of the Christian character, true Christian, not "so-called," is humility.

This challenge from the best man in the world published in the best paper in the world might make considerable stir, only for the settled conviction in the average breast that really good and great men do not climb up on an eminence and challenge the living and the dead to produce an equal.

The living elders, seers, and evangelists of the church are busy making their record, they are content to await the final verdict at the bar of judgment; the dead elders, seers, and evangelists have made their record beyond recall, and gone on to their rest. They will not be disturbed by this challenge, for we have no reason to believe that the Apostolic Review, excellent paper, is much read in paradise.

E. A. S.

CURRENT EVENTS

ARMY BILL SIGNED.—After Congress had eliminated the objectionable features of the Army and Navy Bill providing an enormous fund for national defense, President Wilson signed it.

TROOPS MOVE.—Orders have been issued to fifteen thousand of the national guard on the Mexican border to return to their homes. Included in this number are some of the Missouri forces, but it has not yet been learned whether the Battery C boys of Independence are in that number.

MEXICAN ELECTIONS.—Throughout all of Mexico except in the capital, municipal elections have been held. Later state and national elections will take place, altogether giving an important aspect to the situation in that country. Villista followers in small numbers are reported as having made attacks in various localities, though with little definite results.

WAR MOVE LOWERS WHEAT.—When the news came that Rumania had entered the war on the side of the allies, wheat prices dropped in this country as much as eleven cents in one day. Other cereals followed to some extent. This flurry was caused by the possible opening of the Dardanelles, allowing export of wheat from Russia and the Balkan States.

LITTLE CHANGE IN PLAGUE SITUATION.—It was thought that with the coming of cooler weather the scourge of infantile paralysis might die out, but so far there has been little change in the number of new cases and resultant deaths. Several places in the Middle West have postponed the opening of school for a time, awaiting developments. The chief remedy in use at the present seems to be the injection of the blood of those who have recovered from the disease, which has an immunizing effect upon those receiving the treatment.

RAILWAY STRIKE.—Following an exciting week in which it was daily predicted that a railway strike covering the entire United States would result, legislation has been enacted by Congress allowing an eight-hour day to the four brotherhoods of trainmen involved in the recent industrial trouble, and which has served to avert the strikes. The new plan takes effect January 1, 1917. The President signed the bill on the 3d, and soon thereafter messages were sent out, canceling the strike order which had been issued, and was to have taken effect on the 4th had not the eight-hour day been granted.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Following Rumania's entrance into the war, her troops invaded Austrian territory in the west and a number of important cities in Transylvania are reported as being taken, also an advance is reported crossing the Danube into Bulgaria, with an important Bulgarian city falling into Rumanian hands. Prohibition of the sale and use of all alcoholic liquors in Rumania immediately followed the proclamation of war. After Bulgarian troops had seized the town of Malik in Albanian territory, the latter country sent a contingent of soldiers to aid the allies at Saloniki, practically indicating a declaration of war on her part. Bulgaria and Turkey have both declared war on Rumania. Severe fighting has occurred on the Macedonian front, with little change in positions as a result. Some Greek positions have been taken by the Bulgarians because of lack of opposition of Greek forces. Sympathizers with the allies in Greece are indulging in strenuous measures to induce the Government to enter war on the side of the allies. A squadron of twenty-three war craft and seven transports of the allied fleets has anchored at Pireaus, the Greek port of Athens, and are reported as having taken possession of the German and Austrian vessels anchored therein. On the western front, following a week of rather unimportant engagements, in which little advance was made, and the Germans making strong counterattacks, on the 3d the allies made important advances into German lines, and several villages and a large number of trenches are reported as having fallen into their hands. Minor engagements have occurred on the Austro-Italian front. The principal news from the Gorizia region is that violent artillery bombardments have characterized the activities. A nocturnal raid on England by German Zeppelins with a fleet of about thirteen airships, caused considerable consternation and damage in the eastern counties of England on the 2d. They were only able to reach the outskirts of London. Russian activities have been resumed, after a brief lull, with some important gains in Galicia. On the north the Germans have made strong and successful resistance.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

FAVOR ABSTAINERS.—A new life insurance company is being organized in Des Moines to give special concessions to those who do not use liquor in any form. The risk is said to be much less with men in that class.

LIBERTY TO JEWS.—The next session of the Russian Duma which convenes in November will vote on a bill that proposes to give the Jewish subjects in the empire full rights of citizenship. The measure already has the support of the majority party of that body.

WHY NOT?—One of our correspondents says it is a great convenience to find the name of the local church in the telephone directory. Have you seen to it that yours is there? The pastor's name at least should be used with the information that he represents our church.

HAVE LOANED HUGE SUM.—Since the beginning of the European war in 1914 the United States has loaned a total of $1,469,950,000 to foreign nations. A rough estimate gives the value of American securities owned abroad as $2,000,000,000, which are sold to European account. Based on a five per cent basis, this would yield an annual income to American investors totaling $175,000,000.

LEAVING NORWAY.—In a letter from Arendal, Norway, which is published in this issue, Elder Peter Muceus states that he and family will leave for New York on the Fredrik VIII September 29. They expect to make short stops at eastern points, and proceed to Lamoni, where, for the present at least, they will make their home. They have been in that country for fifteen years.

MORMON CHURCH CHOIR RELEASED.—Following the appointment of a new choir leader for the famous tabernacle choir, the first presidency of the church released every member of the choir to allow a complete reorganization. Each member will be required to pass a test before being admitted. The choir was organized about sixty years ago and several years ago made a tour of the East, and included in their itinerary, Independence, Kirtland and similar historic places.

MOTION PICTURES.—At the recent national convention of motion picture exhibitors held in Chicago, the following resolution was passed, after a heated discussion:

Resolved, That it is the unanimous sentiment of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America that exchanges shall not lease films to churches, schools or others that shall interfere with any exhibitor without the organization thus exhibiting first obtaining the consent of the exhibitor in that vicinity. The reasons advanced for this action are that since the exhibitors are taxed by government, state and city, in addition to being required to live up to health and fire ordinances, the churches should be required to do likewise if they wish to exhibit.

CITY OF CHURCHES.—The Independence Examiner prints the results of the religious census recently taken under the direction of Walter W. Smith. In that summary we note that there are 825 Latter Day Saint families, while the largest number of any other denomination is 353 Methodists. The number then runs down the line as follows: Baptists, 309; Christians, 282; Presbyterians, 166; Roman Catholics, 97; Utah Latter-day Saints, 18. There are a number of other churches represented with smaller numbers of families. Not affiliated with any church are 341 families. They secured the religious affiliations of 2,456 families.

SUCCESSFUL REUNIONS.—In this number will be found a number of favorable reports from reunions held in various parts of the country, indicating that they have been a most successful feature in church work. We are also pleased to note the excellent methods of advertising adopted by a number of them and that those who have been spending considerable for advertising expect to do still more next year. Properly directed advertising is as good an investment in this line of work as in any other. In Centralia, Washington and Wichita, Kansas, we hear of special liberality on the part of the daily press. Some of the districts are already developing plans for next year's work, which portends success.

FIVE MILLION CLUB.—This organization is composed of voters who subscribe to the following pledge: "I will give my vote and support to such candidates and party as stand, by state and national platform declaration, for the prohibition of the liquor traffic." More than a million have enrolled, and promoters of the movement are confident that in less than four years they can "kill John Barleycorn in the United States." Religious, civic, and political organizations as well as prominent men and women all over the United States are uniting in the movement. They hope to enroll the "five million" principally from rival political parties and thus secure national prohibition.

"ENSIGN" CHANGES EDITORS.—With the issue of August 31, comes the announcement that Brother Charles Fry will no longer act in the capacity of editor of the Ensign. He retires from the editorial work to devote his time to church duties in the Spring River District, of which he is president and in which there are great opportunities for the service for one of his ability. The editors selected to succeed him are Elders Walter W. Smith and Israel A. Smith. The former has had a wide experience in church work and the latter was formerly assistant editor on the SAINTS' HERALD. We appreciate the good work Brother Fry has done and commend the efforts of the new editors to the Saints, believing there will be no occasion for disappointment.

Hymns and Poems

(SELECTED AND ORIGINAL)

Faith of Our Fathers

(To the tune of "Saint Catherine.")

Faith of our fathers, holy faith,
That knows God still doth love us all;
He still doth know our faith and prayers,
He still doth answer when we call.
"Faith of our fathers, holy faith,
We will be true to thee till death."

Faith of our fathers, known of old,
Repentance follows still the same,
Baptized then 'neath the wat'ry wave,
Confessing thus the Father's name.
"Faith of our fathers, holy faith,
We will be true to thee till death."

Faith of our fathers, still the same,
Confirmed beneath his servant's hands,
We seek the Spirit's guidance now,
To help us heed all God's commands.
"Faith of our fathers, holy faith,
We will be true to thee till death."

Still visions strengthen hope and faith,
And angels visit at our need,
With dreams and prophecies fulfilled,
His guiding Spirit still doth lead.
"Faith of our fathers, holy faith,
We will be true to thee till death."

MARCELLA SCHENCK.

On His Blindness

When I consider how my light is spent
Ere half my days in this dark world and wide,
And that one Talent, which is death to hide,
Lodged with me useless, though my soul more bent
To serve therewith my Maker and present
My true account, lest he returning chide,
"Doth God exact day labor, light denied?"
I fondly ask. But Patience to prevent
That murmur, soon replies, "God doth not heed
Either man's work or his own gifts. Who best
Bear his mild yoke, they serve him best. His state
Is kingly; thousands at his bidding speed
And post o'er the land and ocean without rest;
They also serve who only stand and wait."—Milton.

Original Articles

WHY WE BELIEVE IN THE RESTORED GOSPEL

TEACHINGS OF CHRIST AND HIS MINISTRY

Christ and his ministry taught a message of tremendous importance. It was a divine message and contained divine promises to be realized by those who would believe and obey. This message was the gospel, which included commandments and "ordinances of divine service," all of which were unalterable. A ministry called of God was authorized to proclaim the gospel and administer its ordinances. (Christ's church had an inspired ministry chosen by God; as shown by John 1: 6; Romans 10: 5; Hebrews 5: 4; John 3: 34; 15: 16; 1 Corinthians 1: 26.)

This inspired ministry comprised various offices, each established of God and having its own duties. The offices of apostle, prophet, seventy, evangelist, bishop, elder, pastor (or priest), teacher and deacon, belonged to the priesthood, which served in the name of the Lord (by direction), and were a part of the organization of the church of Christ. (The minister held only such office as God designated: Ephesians 4: 10-16; 1 Corinthians 7: 17; 12: 28; Luke 10: 1; Philippians 1: 1; Acts 13: 2; 14: 23; 1 Peter 2: 5.)

A BODY DIVINELY ORGANIZED

The church was a body divinely organized according to the pattern of heavenly things: "See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern." (Hebrews 8: 5.) It was called the "body of Christ," the "Lamb's wife," and the "household," "of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." (Ephesians 3: 15.) The church being his, Christ gave it his name. This name no man could change, for it was not man's church. The members of the church of Christ were called Saints. (Ephesians 4: 12; Philippians 1: 1.) Those who should be saved were united to the "one body," which was directed by Christ, the living head. (That only one church is authorized by Christ, with which all true followers unite, is proven by Acts 2: 47; John 17: 21; 1 Corinthians 12: 13; Ephesians 4: 4; 4: 16; 1 Corinthians 1: 10; Matthew 7: 14; 2 Corinthians 11: 2; Philippians 1: 27; 3: 16; Psalm 127: 1; 1 Timothy 3: 15.)

He who would enter into this divinely organized church must believe, repent, and be baptized for the remission of sins by one of these ministry sent of God. To be baptized is to immerse, being the meaning of the Greek word baptize, used in the Scriptures. This was the only method taught in the days of Christ and his apostles. (Baptism is commanded, and is for remission of sins: John 3: 5; Matthew 28: 19; Mark 16: 16; Acts 2: 38; 10: 48; 22: 16; 1 Peter 3: 21. Baptism is immersion: Acts 8: 38, 39;

Mark 1: 10; Colossians 2: 12; Romans 6: 4, 5; John 3: 23; Ephesians 4: 5; see Mosheim, Cent. 1, IV. 8.)

THE GIFTS TO FOLLOW BELIEVERS

So long as the church followed Christ, the gifts of the Holy Ghost were freely given to the faithful members, fulfilling the promise made to such as would keep his commandments. Thus was built up an inspired church that received revelation from God, angel messengers, prophecy, visions, healing, tongues, (speaking in other languages by the power of God, Acts 2: 4; 19: 6), and interpretation of tongues. Unspeakable joy filled the souls of the faithful, for God bore witness to the divinity of the message of Christ, which promised eternal life and celestial glory to his saints.

These heavenly gifts were a part of the gospel, and were to continue in the church so long as it should be preached and obeyed in its fullness. Christ, the divine head, was in communication with his body and directed it, so that it might "grow up unto him in all things," and become "a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." (Ephesians 5: 27.) To enjoy these great blessings, however, it must "be obedient in all things." (The gifts of the Holy Ghost are essentials of the gospel, and necessary to the true church: Mark 16: 15-18; 1 Corinthians 12: 7-13; 1 Thessalonians 1: 5; John 14: 15, 16, 25; 15: 26; 16: 13; Revelations 19: 10; 1 Corinthians 14: 1; Acts 2: 39; Romans 12: 6.)

The church struggled on amid bitter persecution from the very beginning. The religious classes felt too good, or were too proud, to associate with a people whose leader was reported to be a "gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners," (Luke 7: 34) of whom it was charged that he was a sinner, a blasphemer, a deceiver, unlearned, born of fornication, possessed of a devil, and a lawbreaker; whose followers and teachings were "everywhere spoken against," even by learned and devout religious leaders. To make matters worse, some who united with the church lived immoral lives, or brought in false doctrines, causing unstable souls to be led away. The apostles noted the rise of false teachers in the church with alarm. Within the first century history records the rise of scores of heresies in the church. The saints were warned to beware of the errors and hold fast the true doctrine, without which they could not be saved. (These warnings are plain and ominous: Galatians 1: 6-8; Jude 3; 2 Corinthians 13: 5; 2 John 9; 1 Timothy 4: 16; Revelation 2: 4, 5.)

THE APOSTASY

As the years passed into the centuries, many false teachings were accepted by the ministry and membership of the church. As the admonitions of the Lord to return to the true faith began to be less and less heeded, the gifts of the Holy Spirit became rare and were gradually withdrawn from the church. Thus doctrine and ordinances taught by Christ were changed or abandoned, and the church began to fulfill prophecies which had foretold the great apostasy. In time the church no longer represented the pure message as taught by Christ, but largely taught doctrines and commandments of men. (A few of the prophecies predicting the departure from the faith are: 2 Peter 2:1; 1 Timothy 4:1; 2 Thessalonians 2:3; John 12:35; Matthew 11:12; 2 Timothy 4:3; Amos 8:11; Revelation 13:7.)

The gospel in its purity being no longer taught and observed, the church began to court worldly honor and approval of men. She thus became a human and inglorious church, rejected of God. This was inevitably the result of a perverted ministry and message. Jesus had warned the church: "If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered." (John 15:6.) As apostate Israel was cut off, so Paul had also warned the church that, if unfaithful, "thou also shalt be cut off." (Romans 11:22.) Finally John was shown in vision the terrible change that would complete the apostasy of the church. This is portrayed in Revelation 12, which presents the church in the likeness of a woman clothed with the sun (the gospel), the moon under her feet (Mosaic law fulfilled), and upon her head a crown of twelve stars (apostolic office). She was driven into the wilderness (confusion, disorganized state), after which the dragon made war with the "remnant of her seed." This was to result in the fearful condition shown in the next chapter: "It was given unto him to make war with the saints, and overcome them; and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations." (Revelation 13:7.)

Following the woman into the wilderness, where she had fled in her endeavor to avoid persecution, we behold her become an harlot, "arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication." (See Revelation 17:3-5.) When the heavenly robe, the glory of the gospel sun, was thus cast aside for the purple garment of fornication, worldly power and honor, the Dark Ages, so well known to history, spread like a pall over the earth. Its horrors are too many to detail here. Instead of the doctrine of Christ, the doctrines of men and of devils multiplied, and obscured the truth. History has named this period, the midnight of the world.

PERVERTED TEACHINGS

Eminent historians show that before the end of the sixth century the light of the church had become darkness. The glorious church of Christ no longer existed, but in its stead arose the church of the world. The ceremonies and teachings substituted for those of the gospel, were at best but cheap counterfeits, hollow forms, and empty delusions, but being taught by the clergy, the people believed them. Some of these were even borrowed from heathen customs and traditions. Others were introduced without a semblance of scriptural sanction. Thus baptism was changed to sprinkling. Blessing little children (too young to believe and repent) by laying on of hands, practiced in Christ's day, was rejected; and infant sprinkling, improperly called baptism, was instituted. Offices of the ministry were changed, or abandoned; and instead of being called of God, as the scripture requires, men were chosen by teachers of heresy, to preach man-made creeds. The ministerial office was sold for money also, as history proves. Not only were the doctrines and organization of the church altered, but even the name of the church was changed to one not authorized of God. The doctrine that all shall be judged according to their works, was so perverted that many became infidels rather than believe in an unjust God, so grossly was he misrepresented. Infants who died without being sprinkled (which they termed baptism) were said to be forever lost in the torments of eternal flames.

The church also taught that God is "without body or parts," and incomprehensible. Jesus taught that, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God," etc. According to the Bible, God has both body and parts. (See Genesis 1:27; Philippians 2:6; Hebrews 1:3; Exodus 24:10.) Jeremiah evidently foretold this false worship when he said: "The Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit. Shall a man make gods unto himself, and they are no gods?" (Jeremiah 16:19, 20.) The heathen worship gods of metal, wood, and stone. Such gods had no power, but they were gods, hence did not completely fulfill this prediction. It remained for Gentiles, of which the church was composed, in the awful darkness of apostasy, to define and worship as God that which in fact did not exist. No wonder the reformer, John Wesley, said the gifts of the Holy Spirit were no longer to be found in the Christian church because "the Christians had turned heathens again, and had only a dead form left." (Sermon 94.) "Not only heresies, animosities, fierce and bitter contentions, but actual open sins. We meet with abundant proof that in all the churches the tares grew up with the wheat, and that the 'mystery of iniquity' did ever work in a thousand forms." (Sermon 96.)

Marsh's Ecclesiastical History says: "Before the close of the sixth century the world was at ease, and superstition had made most rapid strides. The great mass of ministers were excessively ignorant, and, led away by the strongest fantasies, did little but delude and destroy the people." (Page 213.)

Mosheim's Church History says that during the seventh century, "True religion lay buried under a senseless mass of superstitions and was unable to raise her head." (Book 2, p. 445.) Of the same century Marsh says: "The world was sunk in Egyptian darkness. The cultivation of the human intellect was abandoned. . . . The great mass of the clergy were incapable of reading the apostles' creed." (P. 225.) Dozens of historians testify to conditions as bad, or worse than those already mentioned. To detail all would surfeit the reader.

THE REFORMATION

After many centuries of this spiritual and mental darkness, the reformation arose. It consisted of unsuccessful attempts by various persons to reform the church. Each reformer then proceeded to organize a new church. Thus arose various Protestant churches. Naturally each one who formed another church believed that the church out of which he came was not accepted of God, hence not the true church of Christ. It is a terrible sin to leave the true church of Christ and form another. God forbade his church to be divided. (2 Corinthians 11:2.)

In order to form the church of Christ, divine direction is essential; otherwise the church formed would be but the work of man. Had the reformers been commanded or directed of God to restore the true church, they would not have formed several churches differing in name, organization, and teaching from each other; for this is contrary to God's word. But they did not claim that God commanded them to do so. Each proceeded according to his own fancy; and not one of them formed a church in harmony with the New Testament pattern. The Dark Ages had so befogged all with human traditions and precepts, that they placed in their creeds many of the errors of the apostasy; hence arose a confusion of churches, having teachings in conflict with each other.

The reformers were largely dissatisfied with their own work, however, and some believed that God would in due time restore his church as it was before the apostasy. D'Aubigne says: "Luther perceived that the ancient and primitive church must, on the one hand, be restored in opposition to the papacy." (History of the Reformation, vol. 3, p. 80.) John Wesley said: "What could God have done which he hath not done to convince you that the day is coming, that the time is at hand when he will fulfill his glorious promise, and will arise to maintain his own cause, and set up his kingdom." (Sermon 71.) Roger Williams left the church he had founded and wrote that "these imperfections in the church in its revived condition, could be removed by a new apostolic ministry alone." (See Hireling Ministry.) He believed that, "the apostasy of anti-Christ hath so far corrupted all that there can be no recovery out of that apostasy till Christ shall send forth new apostles to plant churches anew." Many other statements by various reformers and ministers of leading denominations might be quoted. They show not only the need, but the expectation of these men, that God would restore his church in his own way and time.

The unchangeable God does not work according to the imperfect methods of man. "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." (Isaiah 55:8.) The need of restoring the gospel and the church of Christ, has been plainly shown, but is equally clear that man's ways are in vain. Human creeds do not lead to the "one of faith." The sacred record shows that in all ages God has guided his people by angels and prophets. By angels God sent messages to Abraham, Lot, Moses, David, Elijah, Daniel, Zacharias, Joseph, Peter, Cornelius, Paul, John and many others. Angels are "all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." (Hebrews 1:14.)

THE RESTORATION

According to Bible prophecies, the gospel must be restored in the latter days. This restoration, so long foretold, must be ushered in by an angel, in harmony with God's way through all the ages. The great event was foreseen by the beloved Apostle John: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." (Revelation 14:6, 7.)

That we are now living in the "latter days" or hour of God's judgments, is quite generally believed by devout students of the Bible and history. We are therefore in the age when this angel should come and restore the gospel. It is then to "be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." (Matthew 24:14.)

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, of Latter Day Saints, bears witness to all the world that the promised angel with the restored gospel has come. The church has been reorganized according to the New Testament pattern, with its ministry of apostles, prophets, seventy, and other officers, set in "the body" by divine call. It has never formulated a human creed, but calls upon all to believe, repent, and obey the old Jerusalem gospel which is the power of God unto salvation. The Spirit of God is bearing witness to those who receive this message—the restored gospel, and faithful believers are again receiving the ancient gifts of the Holy Ghost in fulfillment of Christ's promise: "My doctrine is not mine but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." (John 7: 16.)

The "principles of the doctrine of Christ" (Hebrews 5: 12; 6: 1, 2), are once more made plain as they were taught by the ancient apostles, and many other gospel teachings are brought forth from the obscurity caused by centuries of spiritual darkness.

SENDING OF PROPHETS

The Bible shows that when people strayed from the Lord in past ages, he sought to lead them back to the one faith by sending angels and prophets with a message of admonition to them. In every age God's faithful people had prophets among them. They ceased only when men refused to obey him. The church of Christ was no exception to this rule; and those who have taught that there have been no true prophets since John the Baptist, have not stated the truth. Years after John's death there were prophets in Christ's church. We have already seen that prophets were set in the church as a part of its regular organization. Paul was certainly a prophet, and prophesied of many things to come. Amos 3: 7 says, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." The angel informed John that "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." (Revelation 19: 10.)

The word clearly teaches that by the spirit of prophecy and by angels, Jesus, the head, will direct his body, the church. So Paul by the Spirit, cautions the church: "Wherefore, as the Holy Ghost saith, to-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." (Hebrews 3: 7, 8.) Jesus also, by the Spirit, and by angel, spoke to the church: "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. . . . Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. . . . I, Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches." (Revelation 3: 13, 20; 22: 16.)

The spirit that rejects these gifts in the church, is of unbelief, and not of faith. It is the work of the dragon—the anti-Christ—to oppose those having "the testimony of Jesus," which "is the spirit of prophecy." (See Revelation 12: 17.) Without the spirit of prophecy to guide, the church is of human origin, and not the church with which Christ is identified as its living and directing head. (Prophets and prophecy are essentials of Christ's church: Acts 13: 2; 21: 10; 1 Corinthians 12: 10, 28; 14: 39; 1 Thessalonians 5: 20; John 16: 13; Revelation 10: 11; 11: 3; Matthew 10: 41.)

Matthew quoted Hosea 11: 1 and Jeremiah 31: 15, to prove Christ's mission; but though the Jews do not accept this interpretation, the Christian sees why these verses thus apply. Determined unbelief locks the mind against an earnest desire for the truth. The prophecies of a restoration in these latter days are as definite and plain as are those used by the apostles to prove their message. Peter prophesied of the age, "when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3: 19-21.) Jesus will not come, we note, until there is a restitution and a refreshing from the Lord. This refreshing evidently includes a restoring of the Holy Ghost, hence the gospel restoration, which is to be brought by an angel, (Revelation 14: 6), to be preached as a witness of Christ's coming, (Matthew 24: 14).

LATTER-DAY PROPHET

When a boy of scarcely fifteen years, Joseph Smith earnestly announced that an angel had appeared to him and informed him that he should join none of the creeds of men, for they were wrong. Some years later, to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery appeared an angel, announcing that he was John the Baptist, come to authorize the preparatory work of the gospel restoration. Sent by the authority of God, the church was in due time restored through their instrumentality, and the old-time gifts of the Holy Ghost confirmed the faithful believers in the message.

That John the Baptist appeared to these men, is consistent with prophecy. Not only was he Christ's forerunner anciently, but he is also to precede the Savior's second coming and "restore all things." (Matthew 17: 10-13.) Jesus said that John was "more than a prophet," for this reason: "For this is he of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee." (Matthew 11: 10.) The Greek word here translated messenger, is the same as is translated angel in Revelation 14: 6, and elsewhere. The Douay (Catholic) version renders it angel in both places. Malachi 3: 1 is the verse quoted by Jesus, and refers to Christ's second coming. Jesus' statement therefore was to the effect that John is more than a prophet because he is the angel who should come and prepare the way before the Lord's second advent.

Of the Savior's coming at "the end of the world," Isaiah 62: 10, 11, says the way is to be prepared; the stones gathered out of the highway (way of salvation); the standard (gospel) is to be lifted up; and his work (the restoration) is to precede his coming. All this shows a special work of God in the last days. The gospel restoration fulfills these predictions as nothing else could. The Lord's work, "his strange work," is to come just before "a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth." (Isaiah 28: 18-22.) This is in the last days (see 2 Thessalonians 1: 7-10; 2 Peter 3: 10-12; Isaiah 24: 5, 6; Malachi 4: 1). The strange work will cause people "to understand doctrine," (verse 19, marginal reading); but some will incline to be "mockers." (Verse 22.)

God's work has met with persecution in various ages. Jesus pronounced, "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you!" (Luke 6: 26.) No one can honorably condemn a message which he has not fully heard. Neither can it be judged according to prevailing opinions, or popular beliefs. If so, the message would not be needed. This message is addressed to all who love righteousness and truth.

A. B. PHILLIPS.

* * * * *

TYPES WORTHY OF STUDY.--PART 4

BY GUSTAVE ERICKSON

In continuation of the subject considered in Leviticus 8: 14-33, we read the 17th verse: "But the bullock, and his hide, his flesh. . . be burnt with fire without the camp."

Thus the Christ complete—head and body—made a "sin offering," suffering the destruction to which the world was doomed, and from which by this sacrifice, it will ultimately be delivered—the merit being in the sacrifice of our Lord Jesus, we his "brethren" being privileged to fill up a measure of his sufferings as "members of his body," as Paul says: "Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church." (Colossians 1: 24.) But while the royal priesthood is destroyed as a vile thing in the eyes of the world, as represented by the burning of the bullock without the camp, God accepts the heart devotion which prompts the sacrifice, which says, "Lo, I come to do thy will." "I delight to do thy will, O my God."

This was represented by the offering on the altar of the fat and parts of the inward life-producing organism, as a "sweet savor" unto the Lord. Other features of the same consecration was shown by the two rams mentioned in verses 18 and 22. Aaron and his sons laid their hands on the first ram for burnt offering, thus indicating that it represented them. It was killed, its blood was sprinkled upon the altar, and Moses "cut the ram into pieces, and washed the inwards and legs in water and burnt the head and the pieces and the fat." Thus Jesus and his body, the church, are being presented, member by member, before God on the altar, yet all are counted together as one sacrifice. The head was laid on the altar first, and since then all who are "dead with him," and cleansed as in the type by the washing of water—through the word—are reckoned as laid with the head upon the same altar. The burning of the offering on the altar shows how God accepts the sacrifice as "a sweet-smelling savor."

The second ram, "the ram of consecration," showed what effect the sacrifice will have upon us, as the first showed how God receives our sacrifice. Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram of consecration showing that it represented them. And Moses slew it and took its blood (consecrated life) and put it upon each separately, thus showing that our consecration is an individual work.

"And he put it upon the tip of the right ear, and upon the thumb of the right hand and upon the great toe of the right foot." Thus by our consecration we are enabled to have the "hearing of faith," and to appreciate God's promises as none but the consecrated can. Our hands are consecrated, so that whatever our hands find to do we do it with our might as unto the Lord. Our feet are consecrated, so that henceforth we "walk in newness of life," "walk by faith," "walk in the Spirit," "walk in the light," and even as we received Christ, so "walk in him."

The choice portions of the ram, its "inwards" and "fat" represented our heart sentiments, our best powers. These were taken in the hands of the priest and "waved"—passed to and fro before the Lord—representing the fact that a consecrated offering is not given to the Lord for a moment, a day or a year, but that we consecrate to continually keep our affections and powers uplifted, never ceasing until accepted of him as having finished our race. Upon the "wave offering" while in the priests' hands, were laid three cakes from a basketful. The first unleavened cake, represented the actual purity of Jesus as a man and the purity of the church as men, or justification—for the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us, so long as we are accepted members of his body (Romans 8: 4), and, "by one sacrifice he perfected forever them that he sanctified." (Romans 10: 14.)

The second unleavened cake, mingled with oil, represented the indwelling Spirit of God—sanctification. The third, a wafer, represented our hope and faith to the exceeding precious promises of glory, honor and immortality. Without these elements it is impossible for our consecration to be complete, justification (purity), sanctification by the Spirit, through the belief of the truth, and faith in the promised glorification. The anointing oil mingled with the blood was sprinkled over them (verse 30) teaching that our consecration is accepted only because we are justified by the precious blood of our Redeemer, thus we are told that we are "accepted in the beloved" only. (Ephesians 1: 6.)

In verses 33 and 35, the seven days of consecration showed that we are consecrated to God's service, not for a part of our time only, but for all of it. Seven in scripture is a complete number, and signifies all or the whole of whatever it applies to. "Seven seals," "seven trumpets," "seven plagues." It therefore behooves all true Saints to see that they "be dead with him," having our every ability waved before God, that he may accept and make use of our talents to his glory; for soon the work of self-sacrifice and suffering with him will be over, and the glorious work of blessing mankind and fulfilling the covenant of God will commence. Yes, the antitypical consecrating of the antitypical priest will be complete, when this gospel age has fully ended, and if we fail to be among the priests now, during the time of consecration, we cannot be of them, when they begin the service for the people in the kingdom, when these same priests (now despised of men, but a sweet savor to God) will have the title of king added, and will with their head Jesus rule and bless all nations (see Revelation 20: 6). Do we earnestly desire to be among those who will sing to the praise of our great High Priest, "Thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth"? If so, we will be fully consecrated now, for it is only "if we suffer with him, that we shall also reign with him." (2 Timothy 2: 12.)

"And he said unto them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." (Luke 9: 23.) Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1, tells us that every steward is required to render an account of their stewardship, both in time and eternity, so let us not be deceived, but constantly exhort one another to faithfulness, as "verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people." (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.)

In Revelation 12: 3 we read: "And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron; and her child was caught up to God and his throne." Now that this man child not only represents our high priest, Jesus, but also saints, the under priest, is shown in the type of the sin offering, when in Leviticus 8: 14, the high priest Aaron, and his sons the under priests, laid their hands on the bullock after which Moses, who here represents Jehovah, slew it. By thus laying their hands on the bullock they signified that the bullock represented them, and they in turn were the type of Jesus and his saints, who as the man child was caught up to God. This picture includes all saints prior to 570 B. C., when the woman (residue of church members) fled into the wilderness for one thousand two hundred and sixty years (see Revelation 12: 5), when God through the angel mentioned in Revelation 14: 6, restored the church.

For further light on this and other important subjects, Saints not informed should read A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, by Elder Daniel Macgregor, or The Fall of Babylon, by Elder W. J. Haworth, long in charge of the Australian Mission.

Praying that the subjects treated may be a boon to some other Saint, as it has been to me, I conclude, with love to all the Saints.

(Concluded.)

THE SURE HELP OF GOD

How many men are held back by one weak nerve or organ? How many are shut in, and limited, and just fall short of supreme success because of an hereditary weakness, handed on by the fathers! How many made one mistake in youth in choosing the occupation and discovered the error when it was too late. How many erred in judgment in their youth, through one critical blunder, that has been irretrievable, and whose burden is henceforth lashed to the back!

In such an hour of depression, Isaiah assembles the exiles, and exclaims: "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people. Though your young men faint and be weary, though the strong utterly fail, yet God is the unwearied one; with his help thou shalt take thy burden, and mount up with wings as eagles; with his unwearied strength thou shalt run with thy load and not be weary, and walk and not faint."

For this is the experience of persecution and the reward of sorrow, bravely borne, that the fainting strength of man is supplemented by the sure help of the unwearied God.

The thought of the unwearied God is the true antidote to despondency. The ground of optimism is in God. The Godless man is always the hopeless man. Look up to-day; be comforted once more. Work henceforth in hope. Live like a prince. Scatter sunshine. Let your atmosphere be happiness. If troubles come, let them be the dark background that shall throw your hope and faith into bolder relief. God hath set his heart upon you to deliver you.—Newell Dwight Hillis.

Of General Interest

A CALL FOR CURBSTONE PREACHERS

A new influence in forming public opinion is the "curbstone forum" of our larger cities, and the church might well adopt it as an additional medium for the spread of the gospel of Christianity. This proposal is warmly urged by The Churchman (Protestant Episcopal), which tells us at the noon hour and in the evening in New York City one may hear "soap-box orators" haranguing eager listeners on such topics as socialism, pacifism, single tax, birth control and woman suffrage. Some talkers devote themselves to evangelical effort, but they are in the minority, and this journal, which would seem to be addressing the Protestant Episcopal clergy in particular, holds that the church "cannot afford to ignore these curbstone universities which the enemies of Christ have found useful for their purposes." We are told of a street speaker of "more than ordinary ability" who roundly denounced "all churches and their ministers—rabbi, priest, and pastor"—described the Bible as a "book of absurd myths," and referred to "God and his divine Son in such blasphemous terms that even a nondescript street audience seemed to cringe before them." Across the street, at the same time, a pathetic little band of the Salvation Army, with a mere handful of people about them, were "valiantly seeking to hold the fort against the assaults of the atheist, who, whatever his limitations, succeeded at least in drawing the multitude about him and in making them listen." We read then:

Those whose faith may have been shaken or whose hearts may have been hardened by these blasphemous harangues could presumably find real guidance and enlightenment if they sought it at the hands of those whose ministrations were so contemptuously denounced. They might find help in the services of the churches. But the ministers are not really accessible to people of this kind; most churches are open only on Sunday, and their services are not, as a rule, designed to meet the needs of the doubting and unbelieving. But why should we wait for the man in the street to seek out the church or its ministers in order to learn the truth of the religion proclaimed by the Christ or the Apostle Paul? Their congregations were assembled on the street corners. Are his servants of to-day better than their Master, that they must have gothic architecture and brass pulpits and exquisite music as the only accompaniment of the gospel tidings? Would it detract from the dignity or power of God's message if it were proclaimed to these street throngs who, like the Athenians of old, spend their time in nothing else but to hear some new thing?

The especial season for outdoor oratory is the summer, when people congregate in the streets or in and about the parks, and "all that is needed is for the church to provide the speakers," and it is advised that—

They should be men of special equipment and resourcefulness, as their hearers are keen of mind, ready of tongue, and naturally contentious. They should know the average mind, understand its intellectual and emotional range, and be able to fit the message to their capacities. The church possesses many an eminent and capable layman who could be drafted for this work and who would win the respect and attention of the passersby because they would instinctively realize that he had no ulterior motive for the advocacy of his message.

The preaching mission demonstrated the emphatic need for the work of the popular evangelist. The curbstone forum offers a compelling opportunity for the utilization of his services in all our large urban centers. Here is the church's chance to seek the outsider, the careless, the indifferent, the lapsed, the sad and weary, and minister to the hungry sheep that look up and are not fed with aught save that which serves to increase their sense of detachment and isolation, their feeling of discontent and prejudice. Many of our larger churches supply special and attractive preachers for their summer services indoors. Will not these gifted ones realize the needs of the vast curbstone congregations outdoors and feed the bread of life to their heart-hungry, world-weary souls, and refresh their parched and thirsting spirits with the water of life?

The outdoor evangelist is also reminded that "while his audience may be inclined to be cautious and captious, it is a caution and a captiousness largely born of ignorance." Controversy is useless. Facts must be provided, but "facts related to the primary emotions and primitive reasoning of the untutored mind," and we read:

The preaching of the social aspects of the gospel cannot have a more sympathetic hearing than from those to whom experience has failed to demonstrate its healing influences. The field is unlimited for a successful planting of the good seed of the gospel of the brotherhood of man as well as of the fatherhood of God.

Our Lord, the greatest preacher of his age and of all ages, did not disdain the open forum. He spoke in synagogues, but far oftener chose the roadside, the hillside, and the lakeside, as his pulpit. And some of his most striking sermons were delivered, as to the woman at the well of Sychar, to a congregation of one. He always gave his best, no matter whether his hearers were few or many, friendly or hostile.

Another characteristic of his preaching was its constructive character. Unlike the Baptist, he indulged seldom in polemic or denunciatory discourses. He wept over Jerusalem. The typical street preacher more often pulls down than builds up. The Lord fed his hearers with truth and won his converts more often by its sweet reasonableness than by any implication of the fear of the wrath to come.

Here are the examples and the inspiration for the Christian preacher in and out of the formal pulpit and the conventional routine of churchly ministration. Let him imbibe the inspiration and follow the example that moved his Master, and we shall see the dawn of a new pentecost wherein many shall be added to the church daily of such as believe, even at the street corners, through the mere sounding out of the message of the gospel of salvation, spoken with a loving and yet considerate intelligence, and in the power of the Holy Spirit.

—Literary Digest for July 22, 1916.

* * * * *

"The highest mountain in the world is Mount Calvary."

THE INDIAN

The Supreme Court of the United States has on several recent occasions held the Indian to be part of a foreign settlement in America, subject to his own laws and not to the white man's laws.

This is in keeping with the general policy of a hundred years, a policy handed down to us by the French with the cession of Louisiana.

Probably in many ways it is just as well to permit the Indian to govern himself in his own way. On most of the reservations he is not yet ready for the white man's code.

But in general the policy of treating the Indian as a foreigner has been vicious and absurd.

It has involved this country in all sorts of indirections in its treaty making and in all sorts of deliberate fraud. Not an important treaty with the Indians was ever entered into in good faith, and not one has been observed.

The English in Canada have treated the Indian as a ward of the Government. He has been cared for, dealt with honestly, and protected in his rights. The result has been that Canada has had but few Indian uprisings, while our own border has been one scene of strife.

The Reil rebellion in Canada was not an Indian uprising, but an uprising of halfbreeds and discontented French, much more political than racial, not growing out of abuses against the Indians.

The Indian should be made the ward of the Nation with us. Congress should take him over with what little rapacious land hunters have left to him and from now on he should have a square deal. The Indian is making much more progress than those who have not looked into his affairs will readily understand.

The Indian should be made the ward of the Nation his status as an alien in his own land is impossible. He belongs here, and he is entitled to protection.

The Government should adopt him, and recognizing such of his tribal laws as fit the situation, should make him part of the American community.—The Des Moines Register, June 14, 1916.

* * * * *

HELPING FARMERS TO BORROW MONEY

For several years our statesmen have been working upon a plan which will enable the farmer to borrow money upon easy terms and at the same time provide an easy method of paying off the debt. Their efforts in this direction have at last resulted in the rural credits bill which has just been passed by Congress. This bill provides for a system of banks at which farmers who own land may borrow money when they need it for certain purposes connected with the occupation of farming. The new banks are to be known as Federal land banks, and are to be under the control of the National Government. The land banks will lend the money at a rate of interest not higher than six per cent, and will allow the farmer to pay off the debt, both principal and interest, in fixed small sums.

Thus, if a farmer needs a thousand dollars to build a barn, he may borrow it from the land bank and arrange to repay it during a period not shorter than five years nor longer than forty years. Let us suppose that he wants the loan to run for twenty years, and that he wishes to make a fixed payment every year. In such a case, if the interest is five per cent, he pays every year $80.24, and at the end of twenty years he finds that his debt has been entirely wiped out. If at any time after five years he wishes to make larger payments on the loan, and thus pay off the debt more quickly, he is permitted to do so. If the farmers of the country will take advantage of the aid which Uncle Sam's land banks will give them, they will be able to improve their farms and pay for the improvements without suffering the hardships which they now so often undergo when they are burdened with debt.—S. E. Forman, in the September St. Nicholas.

It is not necessary to grind a watch to fragments to ruin it. One little particle of dust in the wheels, and the watch is useless for keeping time. It is not necessary that a man should be invalided, bedridden and broken to miss the fruition of his career. One little clot of blood, one inflamed nerve, and the intellect just falls short. But these occasional moods and luminous hours that come to every person are intimations of what, in the far-off land, shall be a stable condition. Then the intellect is filled with light, like a perfect day. Then the memory will forget no fact, even as a safe holds all the gems and jewels committed thereto. Then the judgment will be as perfect as the needle pointing to the pole. Then the creative mood shall be the habitual mood, and every morning shall be a beaker filled with the wine of life, and the soul will walk across the hours like a young, exultant god.—Newell Dwight Hillis.

It is comparatively easy for the recluse to live in the rarified atmosphere of high spiritual thought. It is also easy for the man of pleasure to swing along to the tune of the gay world. But the really great man is he who can take with him his highest ideals into the jostling crowd, touching all the world, but yet remaining alone, an individuality, a living purpose.—Common-Sense.

Woman's Auxiliary

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

Birds I Have Known

Whether we have ever given the matter conscious thought or not, I believe that one of the chief reasons why we look forward to the coming of spring with such longing anticipation is because we know that along with the first little snowdrops which brave the waning cold of the late winter, come the birds with their cheery, happy songs, and flutterings and flyings among the budding leaves that begin to show the first signs of flowing sap and new life.

The most of us watch with a feeling of sadness the last few belated birds fly away from us in the fall to seek warmer climes, for we know that with the exception of the cheerful little sparrow, and possibly a few snowbirds, we will see no more of our busy little orchard friends until the cold winter has given way to gentler spring.

The English sparrow stays with us the year around. In our eave spouts and in the corners of the porch he builds his nest, and is exceedingly friendly and tame. No matter how cold the wind or blinding the snow, we can hear his little cheery chirp, telling us that spring will come to reward our patience.

But oh! what a thrill of pleasure we feel, when we see the first robin, the advance agent of the spring! He often comes before the snow has left the ground, and then how red his breast appears against the white background. But, although he may have arrived many days or weeks before old winter finally withdraws his forces from the land, we know that mild weather is not afar off.

The robin is a noisy fellow; his voice is loud and penetrating, but never harsh. His song does not often vary, and consists of a few well-defined notes in perfect tune, without a sign of trills or furbelows. He is the first of the orchard orchestra to greet the day; in fact, it sometimes seems as if he takes for granted the fact that it is time to bestir oneself, for his first sleepy and uncertain "cheerup" often comes before the human eye can see a sign of daylight. My, but the parent robins are busy when the son or daughter, which is nearly as large as they, reaches the age when it is able to leave the nest and hop on the ground, for its stomach seems to be a bottomless pit, never full, and never satisfied. The young offspring follows the poor parent bird around the lawn, continually begging for worms; and if the tired parent devours one as a reward for honest labor, what a fuss is made by the saucy babe!

The bluejay is another familiar bird. He is a pirate and a murderer and robber; but in spite of it all, who can help but admire his gorgeous plumage and laugh at his clownish antics? He seems to court attention, for he will take up his position just outside the window where you are sitting, and there he will amuse you by the hour with tricks worthy of a circus clown. He has no song; it would not be fair for one so blessed with beautiful apparel, to also have a fine voice!

What a different disposition has the meek, modestly-gowned Jenny Wren! In her little brown dress she makes no attempt to attract attention to herself, although she is an extremely friendly little creature, and frequently builds her nest in the porch very close to your door. But she is unobtrusive, never asserts her rights, but is content to sit at home with her family, where she sings her babies to sleep with the most exquisite lullabies and extracts from famous operas. One has taken up her abode just outside our window, and each morning we hear her greeting to the day, and half asleep, we imagine we are close to heaven's gate.

Many of you who have spent your lives in the city, have not had the pleasure of becoming acquainted with the meadow lark, with its bright yellow breast banded with black, and its gray and brown back. For this bird is meadow born and bred, and cannot adapt himself to city ways. He builds his nest in the deep grass of the field, and sings his lonely and plaintive song "far from the madding crowd." It is a most beautiful song, too, worthy of the leading place in the finest orchestra, although it is decidedly mournful and in a minor key. One of the happiest recollections of my years at Grace-land is the memory of the early morning walks up the college hill, when the only sound to be heard was the exquisite song of the meadow larks answering each other across the broad meadows.

I had the extreme pleasure of seeing and hearing a rose-breasted grosbeak a few times last season. It has a large ivory-colored bill like a parrot's; it gets its name from a triangle of rose red on its breast. It loves the trees of the orchard or grove, but is not as common as it should be, for I read that its plumage is especially prized for ladies' hats, and so they have been killed ruthlessly. Mr. Chapman says, "There is an exquisite purity in the joyous carol of the grosbeak; his song tells of all the gladness of a May morning; I have heard few happier strains of bird music. With those who are deaf to its message of good cheer, I can only sympathize, pitying the one whose heart does not leap with enthusiasm at the sight of rival males dashing through the woods like winged meteors, leaving in their wake a train of sparkling notes."

We are all familiar with the catbird, with its miaow so nearly like a cat's that one is often deceived. He seems not to have any definite song of his own, but mocks every kind of noise that comes to his notice—from the song of a canary to the squeak of a cart wheel. He is not at all particular about the order in which he delivers his imitations, but sings and trills and squeals and croaks with masterful abandon. He isn't very pretty. He dresses with regard for matching colors, his only vanity being his headdress, which is shaped like a crest. Schuyler Matthews says of him: "He intersperses his melodic phrases with quotations from the highest authorities—thrush, song sparrow, wren, oriole and whip-poorwill! The yowl of the cat is thrown in anywhere, the guttural remarks of the frog are repeated without the slightest deference to good taste or appropriateness, and the harsh squawk of the old hen, or the chirp of the lost chicken, is always added in some mal apropos manner. All is grist which comes from the catbird's musical mill, and all is ground out according to the bird's own way of thinking."

These are a few of my most intimate bird friends, whom I have grown to love from long observation and close association. This is not intended to be a technical treatise, but simply a few personal impressions, for I have always been an interested observer and an enthusiastic lover of our common birds. I leave them with you, with the advice to those who have not already done so, to make friends with the birds, and you will be more than rewarded for your efforts. You will find them free of jealousy, envy and malice, a bit suspicious, to be sure, but you will be surprised to find to what an extent you can gain their confidence after you have proven to them your good will.

HELEN SILSBEE SMITH.

(Read before the Omaha local Woman's Auxiliary at a "bird" program.)

When upon life's billows you are tempest-tossed,
When you are discouraged, thinking all is lost,
Count your many blessings, name them one by one,
And it will surprise you what the Lord hath done.

—J. Oatman, Jr.

Letter Department

Concerning the Seventh Day

[The following discussion will be of interest to those who may be studying the Sabbath Day observance question.—EDITORS.]

Editor Rural Weekly: A short time ago the question was asked in the column of your paper devoted to the use of your patrons for asking questions and expressing opinions, if there were any command in the Bible for keeping the first day of the week as a day of rest.

No, there is no command in the Bible to keep the first day of the week as the day of rest. However, it is a significant fact elicited from history, that the saints in the first years of the church kept the first day. From this fact, it is assumed to-day, that they did have authority to keep it, for none assume that the early saints did that which authority did not warrant them in doing:

It is asserted by some that the rest day was changed by Constantine the Great, in the fourth century, from the seventh to the first day of the week. Constantine at that time did issue an edict restricting labor to some extent, and this applied to certain places. This was only making the law of the land to conform to what the practice of the church was, and had been, through the previous centuries of its existence.

I have before me Wharey's church history, which I purchased from a Seventh-day Adventist minister, and which he used to confirm the assertion alluded to above with reference to Constantine changing the day of rest. This same history also asserts that the first day of the week was kept by authority of divine command; so if I take the book to be authentic as to what Constantine did in the fourth century, consistency forces me to take it to be authentic as to what occurred in the previous centuries.

In this book, page 22, under the head the "First century," we read: "Their public assemblies were held on the first day of the week." On page 35, Justin Martyr, a writer of the second century, and one of the apostolic fathers, is quoted as saying, "On the day which is called Sunday, all, whether dwelling in the towns or villages, held meetings. . . . We all commonly hold our assemblies on Sunday, because it is the first day of the week on which God converted the darkness and matter, and framed the world; and Jesus Christ our Savior on the same day arose from the dead."

Mr. Wharey was a Presbyterian minister of New York City. His work is largely an abridgment of Mosheim's work, and inasmuch as Mosheim's work is credited as reliable, we may give Mr. Wharey's work some credence.

Touching further on this subject: Is there a commandment in the Bible to keep the seventh day, as a day of rest? Yes. We also have it commanded therein, "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth" (Exodus 21: 24). But Christ revokes this latter command when he says, "Ye shall not resist evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn him the other also." (Matthew 5: 39.) Would any Christian assume that because the commandment allowing a tooth for a tooth is in the Bible, that God commanded this law to us in this dispensation?

Again, as referred to in Luke 2: 22, 24, it was written in the law, "Every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord," and a sacrificial offering of either a lamb or two turtle doves was required for every male child of the Hebrew people that opened the matrix. (Read Leviticus 12.) But who would contend that because this was commanded in the Bible, it is of binding force on us?

If we make ourselves to conform to the logic offered in the Rural Weekly of April 9, 1916, wherein it is urged that it is a commandment of the Bible to remember the Sabbath Day and keep it holy, and for that reason we are bound thereby, so also must we make ourselves conform to any other commandment in the Bible. For if the fact that a command in the Bible is sufficient to make it of binding force on us, so also must it be with any others.

All concede that the male child is not to be redeemed by a sacrificial offering, and that the injured man is not licensed to cause a like injury to his opponent, although these things were a part of what was then called "the law," of which not one jot nor tittle should pass, till all be fulfilled. Finding, then, that a portion of the law had passed away, we can rightly assume that the law has been "fulfilled." And that of a truth Paul spoke when he said that Jesus Christ was the end of the law for righteousness.

"For as many as are the works of the law are under the curse."—Galatians 3: 10.

"The law is not of faith."—Ibid., 3: 12.

"The just shall live by faith." "No man is justified by the law."—Ibid., 3: 11.

"Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law."—Ibid., 3: 13.

"If ye be led by the Spirit, ye are not under the law."—Galatians 5: 18.

"Christ has become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace."—Galatians 5: 4.

Now touching upon another phase of this topic, we ask, in the ushering in of gospel dispensation, the new covenant, was the covenant of Sinai, the ten commandment covenant, annulled, cast out or vanished away? This we affirm.

In order to identify the ten commandments as being the Sinaitic covenant I quote:

"And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone."—Deuteronomy 4: 13.

"When I was gone up into the mount to receive the tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant which the Lord made with you, then."—Ibid., 9: 9.

"And he wrote on the tables, according to the first writing, the ten commandments, which the Lord spake unto you in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, in the day of the assembly."—Ibid., 10: 4.

These texts definitely identify the ten commandments as being the covenant, of which one of these commandments is the seventh-day commandment. I have thus definitely treated of this matter in order that there shall be no evasion of the issue set forth by equivocating over what might have been meant by the word covenant, and Sinaitic covenant.

In Galatians 3, Paul, treating on the topic as to whether it was necessary to observe the laws scheduled in the first or Sinaitic covenant, says of Hagar, Abraham's bondwoman, that she was, allegorically, the covenant from Sinai. Now an allegory is the presentation of one subject by the use of another, in the which both are similar in property and incidents. This is as Webster defines, and illustrates as follows: Young men, close the floodgates, the thirst of the meadows are sufficiently assuaged, which meant, stop the music, our hearts have been sufficiently delighted.

Passing from the incident in the Hagar proposition, which is "cast the bondwoman out," to the incident in the Sinaitic covenant, and applying the principle thereto, we understand that Paul teaches the Galatians to cast the Sinaitic covenant out. If he so taught them, so also are we instructed.

The writer of Hebrews treating on this matter, says, "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with Israel. . . . Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the days when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; . . . In that he saith, A new Covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away." (Read Hebrews 8.)

Again Paul treats on this matter in 2 Corinthians 3, and asserts that the glory that was attendant upon this "ministration of death, written and engraven in stones," was to be done away with. Now the glory that attended Moses and this covenant, the commandments, was the Spirit of God that rested upon them, and that glory was to pass from them, whereupon they became the ministration of death. Now, if this covenant ministers death unto us, for so Paul asserts, why should we seek to be under it?

If this covenant then, is to be cast out, are we licensed to steal, lie, bear false witness, commit adultery? Every covenant carries a stipulation that shall obtain between the parties covenanting thereto. So also is it with the new covenant, called in one place "the perfect law of liberty." Under that covenant—or rather in that covenant—are all of the ten commandments, except the one pertaining to the seventh day. And under this new covenant, we are commanded to love those who hate us; to pray for those who despitefully use us; to avoid the very appearance of evil, that we do not covet, lie, steal, nor deceive, for all of these hath their part in the lake that burns with fire.

Are we then without restricting commandments under the gospel covenant? Nay. Nor do we find therein the command to keep the seventh day holy.

GEORGE W. LINDSEY.

BUTTE, NORTH DAKOTA.

Kentucky and Tennessee Reunion

Our fifteenth annual reunion came to a close Sunday night, July 30, after a ten-day gathering of Saints around Foundry Hill Branch, and adjacent counties, to participate in the annual feast where the Saints seem to enjoy themselves. The Foundry Hill Branch has a nice church and a beautiful grove suitable for a reunion, with plenty of shade and a good well which affords plenty of cool water.

We were fortunate in having with us our missionary in charge, R. C. Russell, a man of sterling integrity and excellent ability that manifests such persistent firmness, with such executive ability that beautifully harmonizes with heaven's first law, order. He was chosen to preside over the reunion, and Brother J. R. McClain and F. A. Rowe were his associates. Brother McClain is our district president, and the bishop's agent, a man well qualified to occupy the exalted position that he is called to labor in, well beloved by the Saints, and has spent several years in the service in this field. Brother Rowe has just come among us, and has thus far proved to be worthy of a high tribute.

Brother R. C. Russell did most of the preaching in his original manner, which engendered thoughts worthy of storage in our minds that inspired us all with lofty ideals. Perfect harmony and peace existed among the priesthood, and we felt the impress of the Spirit throughout the reunion, which impressed us of the favor of God upon us. The Saints in general experienced the influence that caused all to be of one mind and purpose.

Many strangers were seen in our midst. Some of these made expressions that they, too, felt the same spirit which was so different from the people of their own affiliation.

No accidents occurred to mar the peace except three injuries among children. One child was burned on the feet by hot water removed from the stove. One little girl fell from a seat and injured her back. Another was kicked on the head by a mule. The parents and Saints exercised enough faith in the Great Physician that the divine injunction was observed to call for the elders of the church, that through the ordinance of administration relief came, and not a service was missed nor was there need of the aid of medical science. All such blessings as these will cause all true Saints to revere the God we love. Many blessings were received in our prayer services that made tears flow softly, and many hearts were touched, which constrained many to resolve to serve God with might, mind and strength, for such expressions of love to us.

A priesthood meeting was called for by Brother Russell, which occurred the 24th. Good subjects were discussed, which were a source of encouragement and aroused us to a greater necessity of a quorum for the priesthood to counsel together for the advancement of the cause. Expressions were made concerning the tobacco question, indicating that the Spirit was moving with us to persuade the people to put it from us and be clean.

The new district tent was purchased in time for our reunion, so we pressed it into service and occupied under it at the reunion, thanks be to the noble Saints and friends who contributed to the fund under the management of Brother McClain for this purpose. Most of the Saints realize a tent is a great aid in getting the gospel before the people during the summer months.

Thirteen were adopted into the kingdom on Sunday the 30th, and are wending their way to a better life.

The preaching was done by R. C. Russell, J. R. McClain, F. A. Rowe, C. A. Nolan of the missionary force, and William T. McClain, S. E. Dickson, John Overcast and Willis Oliver of the local force. Four other men were recently ordained to the priesthood, Brethren Albert Gallimore, and his son Connie Gallimore, Curtis Ross and Joe Alexander. We hope these men will put on the whole armor of the Lord and wade into the trenches to help fortify the work against the opposing forces.

Brother Russell returned to the north region, Brother Rowe to Murry, Kentucky, with the old tent, while Brother McClain and the writer labor in the vicinity of Paris, Tennessee, with the new tent.

This reunion was greatly enjoyed by all who attended, and all went home feeling well repaid for coming, and felt the bonds of brotherhood stronger cemented than before. May the good work go on.

CHARLES A. NOLAN.

PURYEAR, TENNESSEE, August 16, 1916.

Ohio Reunion

Editors Herald: Both of our reunions were a great success. The Creola reunion was very spiritual from first to last, however, we did not have very many of the Saints of that district present. Many more could have been with us if they had made the effort. The old saying that "where there is a will there is a way" is just as true as ever. Well, the Lord was with those that attended by his divine Spirit in a marked manner, and those who stayed away were the losers. Brethren Kirkendall, Fry and Sister Moler with their families did all within their power to care for those that came. We were also able to meet the expenses of the reunion. Brother H. E. Moler and his fine choir rendered some grand singing, I tell you. The outsiders attended the preaching services real well, and the brethren all enjoyed splendid liberty in preaching. The Saints' meetings were of a high order.

The Kirtland reunion which closed last Sunday night was the largest and the best ever held. There were people here from New York State, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Iowa, Missouri, Canada, Ohio and West Virginia. It was a great success financially, as we were able to pay a debt of over one hundred and twenty dollars and have a little money on hand. The spiritual side of the reunion was good, however. The Saints were a little slow in taking hold the first few days, but the last few days were greatly enjoyed by all the Saints, both old and young. The preaching was excellent from the beginning to the end. Of course, there are always some who attend the reunion just to have a good time, and have very little respect for rules and order. This class make it very unpleasant for those who come to the reunion for spiritual blessings. There were one hundred young people present, and about one hundred of the brethren holding the priesthood.

The institute work was up to date, and well attended every day. Brother William Anderson was in charge and was assisted by C. W. Neville. Sister Skeen of Middletown demonstrated to the people that she is a marvel as a Sunday-school teacher. Her lectures were grand and very interesting. She is not one whit behind any of the great Sunday school educators of the present day. She was elected by the reunion to have charge of the institute work next year. Every day there were short lectures on parliamentary practice and priesthood, and great interest was taken in them by the brethren and sisters. Hence, our reunion was educational as well as spiritual. Brethren Becker, Bishop, Booker, Burdick, Anderson, Thomas, Baldwin, Carlisle, Bozarth and many others labored hard to make the reunion a success. Brethren A. E. Stone and Angus were with us and rendered good service.

Brother Thomas led the singing and proved to be an efficient man for the position. The old historic Temple was filled on both Sabbaths with our own people. It had the appearance of a General Conference.

The Presiding Bishop arrived about eleven o'clock on the last Sunday, and in the afternoon he preached an interesting sermon which was highly appreciated by the Saints. He also made many friends. We were sorry that he could not have spent more time with us. It was very much regretted that not one of the first presidency was present, however, we will expect them to be with us next year. We hereby extend an invitation now, so as to be on time. (Presidency please take notice.) The reunion decided to hold the next reunion at Kirtland. General minister in charge and Brethren Becker and J. E. Bishop were elected a committee to arrange the time of meeting and other matters.

Well, the reunion is now a thing of the past, but it was a grand and profitable gathering, and if any person went home minus a blessing, it was his own fault. The Lord favored us with lovely weather. It rained only once, and that was on the last Saturday, and proved to be a great blessing to us, as it laid the dust. We truly feel thankful to our heavenly Father for the rich blessings that he bestowed upon both reunions.

Your brother and colaborer in Christ.

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

KIRTLAND, OHIO, August 25, 1916.

Talk not of wasted affection; affection never was wasted. If it enrich not the heart of another, its waters, returning back to their springs, like the rain, shall fill them full of refreshment;

That which the fountain sends forth returns again to the fountain.

—Longfellow.

Eastern Reunion

The 1916 reunion of the Atlantic States is no more; but we shall never forget it, because it was the best ever held in this mission. And the testimony of old Saints are the evidence that is presented to support the claim. It is very satisfactory to the young ministers, who have heard so often the cry for the "good old times"—the cry that has come from many old members of the church. It is gratifying, to say the least, to hear many of those same older members say that "it is the best reunion we ever attended"; "I never witnessed so powerful a prayer meeting before, in all my experience"; "the most wonderful prophecy I ever heard"; "the best yet"; etc. I say the young minister is much encouraged, because he can take hope at the thought that he is living in the "good new times," and that God has not deserted his people. And this is the way it should be, for God has not deserted his church—he is still blessing it and will to the end of time.

There was present the usual number of tents, the same familiar faces, the division of good and bad weather, and above all a unity among the members and officers (to use a poor phrase) such as few ever witnessed before, according to their testimony. And this unity was the secret of the good spiritual atmosphere that obtained throughout. Faultfinding, disgruntledness, and such ugly brood, were ashamed to come out of the dark, for the light was too bright to tolerate such things. We had a revelation how Saints can live in peace in Zion's city and her stakes; it will be made possible by the power of God rebuking and keeping strife from us.

I have no desire to elaborate details, for such would not be of special interest to those attending or to those out of the mission. The reunion was in charge of the acting mission president, A. B. Phillips, and the bishop of the district, M. C. Fisher. These brethren showed much tact and worked quietly for the good of the body. There was no fireworks of "authority" displayed, only to fall back in dead ashes, as such display always does; yet they were prepared and able to say "no" good and loud if necessity demanded; but therein is the secret of our success, necessity did not demand the negative very often.

I inclose the program of the institute work. This phase of our gathering was pronounced a success by every attendant, as far as I know. To hold one big class that everybody might profit by the papers, talks, lectures, etc., given, was somewhat of an experiment; but I assure you it was a success. Perhaps it would have been otherwise had we lacked the excellent teaching force which it was our pleasure to possess. I cannot mention all, so I refrain from naming any special teacher. It was evident that all were inspired and all gave their service willingly. We have passed (forever I trust) that day when the scholar attempts to instruct the teacher. We should use the best we have and let all be learners. "Always be teachable."

It might be said that we had no outside ministry. The Eastern reunion covers a territory from which came our preachers. Brother Christy and Brother Burgess are fast becoming Easterners; and they like the salt air of the "misty Atlantic," and the fresh fish taken from its briny depths.

This brief item is sent in to redeem a promise and ease my conscience, for I was appointed press committee; but I know it will hardly satisfy many who justly feel that much more should be said about our Eastern reunion. Let such dissatisfied ones write further, perhaps they have more time than I. Will the Ensign please copy?

RALPH W. FARRELL.

Eastern Oklahoma Reunion

I ask just a little space in one little corner of our much noted HERALD of good tidings and happenings that I may tell its many readers of our Eastern Oklahoma reunion and conference. It was held at Fort Towson, and in every way was a grand success, for which all due credit is given Brethren L. Chappell and B. F. Pollard of the reunion committee and a few other good workers. No time nor means were spared in making it the best ever held in the district—and it was, I am told, all brought about by hard work, advertising, and the help of God. Saints and friends were brought together from far and near. The very first Sunday night, August 6, our large gospel tabernacle was full to overflowing, leaving about as many on the outside. This large audience heard, possibly for the first time, the glad tidings of salvation.

I am pleased to state that the Spirit of God attended us in all our deliberations, from first to last. All was peace and joy, without a jar or contention. Attendance was large, interest fine, order good. There was no sickness on the grounds, hence no administrations. The Saints were made glad by reason of former acquaintance to see Patriarch H. O. Smith in attendance. Quite a number of the ministry were in attendance and the preaching was good.

Fifteen were baptized and a number are near the door of the kingdom. Then came the parting with its sorrows, but it was mixed with joy, for we were all stronger in the faith.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

HOLLY CREEK, OKLAHOMA, August 26, 1916.

Southwestern Kansas Reunion

The second reunion of the unorganized territory of southwestern Kansas was held in South Riverside Park, Wichita, Kansas, under favorable conditions. About one hundred Saints were present, besides many visitors. Sometimes there were more visitors present than members. Some Saints came over two hundred miles in their autos to attend. The preaching services were excellent. The prayer meetings were of an elevating nature and the auxiliary meetings helpful. Special attention was given to Sunday school, Religio, social purity, and to the Woman's Auxiliary. Children's meetings were held nearly every day, with from forty to one hundred in attendance. The Wichita choir, with the assistance of Saints out of town, attracted their share of attention. Brethren F. M. Smith and F. M. Sheehy were with us nearly a week, and gave us some good sermons. About twenty-five received patriarchal blessings. Missionaries present were J. Arthur Davis and A. C. Martin, together with E. L. Barraclough, president of our branch, with J. Amend and N. J. Madden and our branch officers doing what they could to make the work a success. Two adults were baptized during the reunion and one since.

Meetings were held in the tent for a week before and for some time after the reunion, and over two thousand dodgers, postals and window cards were distributed. The street cars carried posters on the front, announcing our reunion. The two city papers gave us about a dozen notices. Good meals were served by Sister Barraclough, at fifteen and twenty cents each. The reunion expenses were all met, with thirty dollars left to be used for holding another reunion next year at the same place. This park has paved streets, street cars, electric lights, good shade, well water, city water, swings, free bath and fishing, a dam and two bridges across the Arkansas River.

W. D. KNIGHT, Secretary.

Joint Reunion at Boone, Iowa

The Saints of the Des Moines and Gallands Grove Districts held their annual reunion at Boone, Iowa, August 11 to 20.

The campers on the grounds numbered over three hundred, of whom a little more than sixty were from Gallands Grove District. Sixty-six tents were occupied.

Besides a large number of the local priesthood, there were in attendance the following: J. A. Gillen, minister in charge; Albert Carmichael, who represented the Herald Office; Patriarch W. A. McDowell, of Plano, Illinois; C. E. Harpe and J. B. Barrett, missionaries to Gallands Grove District, and E. E. Long, J. L. Parker, Daniel T. Williams and Thomas Barton, missionaries to the Des Moines District.

Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, of Independence, Missouri, was in charge of the auxiliary work, an institute session of which was held each day. Sister Sara Rodgers, nurse at the Independence Sanitarium, was there in the interest of that work.

The commercial club of Boone helped meet the expenses by a liberal donation, and the collection taken on the last day amounted to $58.60.

A committee to have charge of the reunion next year was elected, subject to approval of the two district conferences, as follows: From Gallands Grove District: J. L. Butterworth, C. E. Harpe, J. B. Barrett, Carl Wina, and Gerrit Jeurgens. From Des Moines District: O. Salisbury, C. Malcor, William McBirney, Charles Richeson, and E. G. Beye.

The committee has been organized with the following officers: Chairman, O. Salisbury; secretary, E. G. Beye; treasurer, Charles Richeson; chairman social committee, J. B. Barrett; chairman music committee, Gerrit Jeurgens; in charge of dining tent, C. Malcor.

This was probably the most successful reunion ever held in Des Moines District. Seventeen were baptized. The reunion will be held in Boone again next year.

R. J. FARTHING, for Press Committee.

ARENDALE, NORWAY, August 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: To my many friends in America I would like to send a few words of brotherly greetings. I have not been able to write to all I met over there last year, but I have felt thankful and glad for the privilege I then had of meeting so many of former acquaintance, and of making new ones. I have felt that it is very good to meet noble men and women and receive the good influence that may be felt from those who love God and strive to walk in the footsteps of the Master. Since then I have striven to be useful here in my native land in building up the Saints in the cause of Christ. To what degree I have succeeded I leave for others to decide; to me the efforts have brought partial satisfaction and have been encouraging. The greatest reward or satisfaction consists in the realization that our efforts are recognized by our heavenly Father whose good Spirit is given in evidence of his approval.

I cannot look back upon wonderful things done since I began preaching the restored gospel in this land. Compared with modern preaching it sinks into unnoticeable insignificance. But putting God's price on human souls, my efforts are worth more than the price of the entire world. Some have learned to understand God, and, because of that, learned to love him, and in their souls have been planted the seed of eternal life that will grow and transform their lives into the likeness of his only begotten Son. It is left with them to finish the fight into a glorious victory or succumb to the opposing power and be defeated.

I am sorry to leave them without a human shepherd, for there is much need of some one to look after the work in Scandinavia, and if it had not been for my family, whose spiritual welfare I feel obligated to care for, I might have remained longer. It is not from any selfish reasons I have worked for and accepted the change; my desire and hopes have been that by this move from being a lonely worker to be associated with abler men and under better influences it would be possible for me to develop greater usefulness in the land of the restored gospel. I have left it to God to judge in the matter, I am in his hand to be used as he may direct.

Having secured passage on the Scandinavian-Amerika Line we sail from Christiania, Norway, September 29, reaching New York about October 10 or 11, on the steamer Fredrik VIII. We may stop in New York a few days and then proceed west to Chicago and then to Lamoni, where we intend, for a time at least, to make our home.

We leave some friends here but hope to find some over there. Those we formerly knew we still love, for the love of God cannot die whether it resides in him or in his children. May we all retain and increase it must be our daily desire to God.

Sister Muceus joins me in sending you all our best wishes. Remember us that we may have a safe journey and land safely in the land we left fifteen years ago.

In gospel bonds,

P. MUCEUS.

MISSION HOUSE, MIKI LANE, KALAKAUA AVENUE,
HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII, August 7, 1916.

ELBERT A. SMITH,
Lamoni Iowa.

Dear Brother Elbert: Inclosed is the article on the gospel wagon. It has been a long time coming, but I trust it is not too late to get it in the Australian number of the HERALD.

I am also inclosing some prints, from which I think you can select a couple that you could use with the article. Shall send you some pictures from time to time, which I think you will be able to use.

I am writing this in my "study." It is inclosed on three sides with screen, to keep out the mosquitoes, which are more of a pest here than flies. It is very agreeable in the shade and we are not affected by the heat as we were at home. While this is the hottest time of the year, yet it is very pleasant and a good breeze going all the time.

We had a rough time of it when we left San Francisco, and nearly everyone on the boat was sick that night, but after that it was very pleasant and we enjoyed the voyage.

There was quite a gathering of Saints at the wharf to meet us, decorating us with wreaths of flowers, as is their custom. They had a motor ready, and we were sent to the mission house, where some sisters were preparing dinner, which we thoroughly enjoyed.

There are ten coconut trees, several banana trees, two mango, and quite a lot of other fruit in our yard, including a date palm just loaded with dates, which will be ripe in a couple of weeks.

We also have a fine crop of immense spiders, which give Vera the creeps, various sizes of lizards which skillfully run over the walls and ceiling, and occasionally a centipede, to let you know you are living in the tropics. But nothing on the island is poisonous, as there are no minerals here.

The mission house is located in something of a Japanese settlement but the foliage is so dense we don't see much of them. We are "new chums" as they say in Australia, and have to learn a lot, but we can adapt ourselves to conditions, so will like both the mission and the people.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

BOZEMAN, MONTANA, August 16, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have never asked for space in your valuable columns before, but I feel to-night as though I would like to bear my testimony to the truthfulness of the angel's message.

I have now spent just about half my life in the church. Twelve years ago I made the covenant with God and never for one moment have I ever regretted the step. But with each passing day I am brought to see the beauty of the gospel, and life would lose all its beauty without it.

Four years ago God spoke and called me into the ministry. It did not come as a surprise to me altogether, as I have known since childhood what would be my life work if faithful. But I have been weak, I'm afraid somewhat neglectful, and have not accomplished what I might have done. But I hope to profit by my mistakes of the past, and if God will help me, and I believe he will, I hope the church shall yet hear from me, and that it shall not be ashamed of the report, either. It is my hope to spend the remainder of my life in the service of the Lord.

I often long for the association of the young Saints. We have a branch here, but there are no young people of our age with which to meet.

In closing I wish to express my hope in the gospel, and that I earnestly believe it to be God's work, and that there is nothing in which we can engage which will pay as large dividends for value received.

Ever your brother in the gospel,

WILLIAM J. MURRAY.

COURTRIGHT, ONTARIO, August 18, 1916.

Editors Herald: Some may be interested in what I am doing as missionary to Chatham District, Ontario. Having been appointed by the conference to labor in the Chatham District with Elder Richard Weaver, I left for my mission the last of April and since that time I have labored at Bothwell, Ridgetown, Kimball and Duthell; the latter being a new opening, we of course met with opposition of the bitterest kind.

First, we received permission to use the Presbyterian church, which was then being occupied by a Baptist minister. Meeting was announced for Monday evening, June 27, but before Monday evening the trustees had changed their minds and sent word that I could not have the church, so a Mr. Robert Tulloch, a nonmember, secured the schoolhouse for me, and we preached to about thirty the first night, continuing each night with increasing crowds until July 9.

During this time talk of mobbing was going around, but we were not molested along that line. One Mr. Brook, a Methodist minister came to hear me one evening, and tried to interrupt, but I made him keep still until I had finished a powerful sermon on Christ's mission to hell, then he was going to reply, but it was only a little cross-firing and no good realized on either side. So he challenged me to debate, but would not sign up the usual church propositions nor defend any church. So I refused to meet him. A couple of nights after this a Baptist minister denounced us as a church, stating that he had buried Joseph Smith before and would do it again. He said that it was a shame and disgrace that Joseph Smith was buried so close to here. Also challenging me to debate, setting date and all before seeing me.

The next day I went to see Mr. Beattie, and wrote up propositions and he signed them. Debate to begin July 24, and last ten nights. I wrote Brother J. F. Curtis to be my moderator, and he came with his debating books. Some nonmembers prophesied right from the start that Beattie would never show up, and behold it came to pass, that an hour before the debate was to start a message came that Mr. Beattie was sick. Nervous prostration, he told Brother Curtis, and I was the cause of his not showing up. If the thoughts were too much for him, what would it have been had he been able to have debated. He has not recovered yet, and is very low, not expected to recover.

I must not forget to mention Mr. Robert Tulloch and wife where I stayed four weeks, and Elder Curtis two weeks, without charging a cent for board. Also the other friends of the community who assisted in money and otherwise. He who rewards will not forget them.

Two children were baptized as a result of our efforts, and some grown people will come in time.

I then had the pleasure of attending the Chatham District reunion at Erie Beach. The water of Lake Erie, the Spirit of the Master and the association of the Saints made it a success. Thirty-three were baptized and three ordinations to the office of elder, the writer being one. About one hundred tents were pitched on the grounds.

Good work is being done by Elder Weaver in his open-air meetings, and missionary work seems to be moving along nicely in this district, with many calls to come over and preach for us.

Hoping that the Master will bless our efforts, I remain,
Your colaborer in the faith,
Home address, Coleman, Michigan. JOSEPH H. YAGER.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, August 17, 1916.

Editors Herald: The Los Angeles Branch is apparently facing a new era. At the recent business meeting the resignation of Elder V. M. Goodrich was accepted and Elder T. W. Williams was chosen to preside in his place. The meeting was one of the most harmonious ever held in this branch. Brother N. Paulsen was honorably released from the office of deacon and was succeeded by Brother Henry Odin. A vote of thanks was tendered both Brother Goodrich and Brother Paulsen for faithful service.

Our missionary in charge and his family are pleasantly located in our midst. Shortly after their arrival, the Saints to the number of about a hundred gave them a social at their home. The evening was spent in song, speeches and recitations. Elder Williams delivered an address of welcome to Brother Rushton and family.

Two weeks ago Elder T. W. Williams was the guest of the pastor of the First Congregational Church of Santa Barbara, having been invited to address that congregation, which he did both morning and evening.

Plans are being formulated for a campaign to spread the Old Jerusalem Gospel more fully here in Los Angeles, and to also awaken our own people to a more active service. Our pastor expects to have to add more pews by Christmas to accommodate the crowd; we hope he may not be disappointed. Los Angeles needs a stirring revival of the strongest type, and it is to be hoped that the strength of our pastor will equal any and all demands of the present time.

That the church in Los Angeles may become a real blessing to more people than it has been in the past is the prayer of Your sister in bonds,

ELLA SWITZER.

UNDERWOOD, IOWA, August 19, 1916.

Editors Herald: The report of the Presiding Bishop as published in last HERALD brings various reflections: One interested in the Lord's work feels encouraged to know that there are men and women who love the Master's cause and are willing to impart of their means that the same may prosper, and continue to move. We may be assured they will not be impoverished by their sacrifices, but be blessed both spiritually and temporally.

While some have done well and presented us with a noble example, there seems to be a large number of Saints who fail to recognize the golden opportunity of becoming colaborers with God, by lending their aid for the advancement of his work.

One thing that appears rather discouraging is the burden of debt. Even now, after repeated efforts to diminish this indebtedness we are paying thousands of dollars in interest; enough to support more than thirty missionaries in the field. I hope the Saints may become aroused to the need of the hour and to the bringing of the church from under this heavy load. It will require a united effort upon the part of all. All who have been blessed with temporal means should esteem it a privilege to come to the aid of the body with a portion of their possessions. Not only ought the debt be canceled, but the Lord's storehouse placed in a position to supply all just needs. I feel confident it can be done if we try.

Furthermore, all of the ministry of the church who must draw from the general fund for support, should be economical in their expenditures and thus make the burden as light as possible; especially as the Lord has seen fit to direct both individuals and the body to avoid unnecessary expenditure to the end that the church might be placed upon a better financial basis.

We need a united effort upon the part of both the membership and the officials, and the opportunity that is ours should be improved without procrastination, that confidence might increase and the cause no longer suffer. Officials should be careful not to be extravagant and not to furnish an excuse for any to withhold of their means.

Remember a goodly number contributing to the support of the work are among those who are poor in this world's goods, and whose yearly income is only a few hundred dollars, at best. It cannot be expected that they will continue their aid unless assured that the means will be used with economy and care.

It may seem out of place for me to write on this matter, but my interest in this work impels me. I have no desire to be a critic or faultfinder, and only hope we may each and all realize our responsibilities.

With hope and best wishes for Zion's future, I am,

Yours in gospel bonds,

H. N. HANSEN.

MUNSON, FLORIDA, August 20, 1916.

Editors Herald: I wish to write a reminiscence of bygone experience in this great latter-day work, and point a moral, or let each reader point the moral as he reads it.

About the year 189—, on a certain Saturday, wife and I had been gone from home to attend church, and upon arriving home just before dark we found two brethren from a distant branch awaiting our arrival and expecting to spend the night with us. They had traveled the most of the day, and soon let me know that they had both come to be administered to.

At the time of family prayer I presented them to the Lord, mentioned their faithfulness, and prayed that the time might come when two or more elders could be gotten together in administration, so the law may be more fully honored and carried out, wherein we are commanded to send for the elders, two or more. I was bishop's agent of the district, and if memory serves me right, one of these brethren paid five dollars and the other one dollar as tithing.

When I laid my hands upon each of their heads, separately, I saw, in vision, an elder walk up on the opposite side and lay on hands also: I had never seen Brother W. W. Blair, but I was made to understand that the elder was he, and the glow of the Spirit permeated my body. I had felt it before, and I felt that they would be blessed.

On retiring I whispered to my wife and told her of the vision and said to her, "If they remain faithful they will be blessed."

On awakening next morning I found that a large herd of cattle had come up during the night and had lain in front of our gate, leaving quite a large quantity of litter on the premises. Our front gate opened out into a large stock range, or woods as it is sometimes called, and stock will often come around a house in summer to lie on the clean, naked earth.

As was my custom I took my shovel and wheelbarrow and proceeded to clear up the litter and roll it into the lot. The two brethren seemed to think that I was in great transgression in breaking the Sabbath, and went away dissatisfied, and neither were blessed. Only a very short while afterward they were both called to join the great number who had crossed over the mystic vale.

Just whether these two brethren had decided to make an investment upon the Lord's blessings and buy a blessing, and displeased the Lord, or whether their loss of confidence in me caused them to lose their blessing, we will never know till the great day of judgment.

Now, for the moral, as I see it. Let us, as Saints, pay our tithes regularly, and not just once in a while when we need a blessing, and let us trust in God and not in man, when we ask to be administered to.

Yours in bonds,
S. D. ALLEN.

ORANGE CENTER, FLORIDA, August 20, 1916.

Editors Herald: Since we are given the opportunity of having letters published in the columns of such a good paper as the HERALD proves to be, I feel directed by the Spirit of God to speak of his blessings and goodness. What I have to say I feel will not be anything new to the readers, as his Spirit worketh among all and he manifests his love and marvelous power to each and every Saint who so lives to receive a blessing.

I am but one of the many weak workers who has made a covenant with God to go on unto perfection. I have consecrated my life and powers within me to further the gospel work. I have been made to know the power of God unto salvation by his Holy Spirit given me to prepare me for my duties in this work. Having been redeemed from the world through the power of the gospel, I feel it but just and right to put forth every effort to win the honest, sincere, but deceived souls. I find the work to be hard and rough at times. It has made me to give up all that I once hoped to be in this world. But the closer I live to God, the ambitions and desires I once had seem to gradually disappear and I am fast forgetting them.

In my patriarchal blessing I am told to speak of the blessings of God at all times and in all places where the Spirit of God and wisdom direct. I was born and raised in Michigan. My people were of the Congregational faith. At the age of eleven my mother died, and now I see and realize the watching of God over me. Truly his eye has ever been over me and protected me during those dark and dreary days which followed. Later the Saints came and held services near our home. My father joined, also three brothers who are now teachers in the church. Through a long and serious illness I was made to realize what I had done by rejecting the truth. Oh, how I prayed that God would raise me up so that I might be baptized. God answered that prayer, and the result is that I am now one of your number.

I have been in the work six years. The first year was hard living alone amongst the world with no Saints near. I helped to organize two Sunday schools, one with the pupils of my school, the other with Saints who later obeyed the gospel. Two years ago father and I came here to Florida. Here I found no Saints and the people very prejudiced, but I have not been ashamed of the work. I have tried to put the gospel before these people and show by my works I am truly a child of God.

I have been working in the union Sunday school. I am assistant superintendent, secretary and teacher of young people's class. Am president of the young people's society, and secretary of the ladies' aid. Father left me this spring and returned to Michigan, and I have had the battle all by myself.

I found Sister Entrican, in Orlando, and through her I got in touch with Brother Enge, of Kissimmee Park. He has come and preached in private houses. Saturday Brother Spaulding came from Saint Cloud, and yesterday Elder Enge baptized five and blessed three children. The Spirit was there in great power, and many were made to feel the truthfulness.

Through dreams and visions I have seen a work to be accomplished in this place. The time now is at hand for me to leave work in the union Sunday school and organize a Sunday school of our own where I will have a right to teach the whole truth. Three of my pupils were baptized and two more told me yesterday they would be sometime soon. So I rejoice this morning, knowing my prayers are being answered, and the work advancing. We are very much in need of finances.

Your sister,
MARIE DIMICK.

HIBBARD, INDIANA, August 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: I inclose an article which gives the gist of a lecture given by one Mr. Danielson of Independence, Missouri. I hear that his father and other relatives have become members of the Reorganized Church. I hastened here to be "on the job" the 15th to hear his effort. I had a few minutes with him before he began his lecture, and he gentlemanly informed me that he would make the distinction if I would ask questions at the close of his lecture. So just at the close of his effort I queried about as follows:

"Mr. Danielson, I am informed that you are from Independence, Missouri."

He replied, "Yes, sir."

"We have about three thousand members there who do not and never have been in sympathy with Utah Mormonism. I am sure a man of your ability has learned the difference between the two churches, and our war on the evil practices of Mormonism. Will you kindly state to this audience some of the vital differences?"

Of course we could not expect him to preach a sermon or deliver a lecture as we would on the subject, but he did very well. He plainly stated that the polygamist revelation (which he had read from) was a production of Brigham Young's. Some of our most bitter opponents were there. I judge that people from Hibbard made about a third of the audience. No doubt some good was accomplished for our cause.

It is about one hundred miles to the Clear Lake Branch in Indiana. Brother Reed, myself and a few others expect to leave here Saturday morning and motor over there to attend a two-day meeting. I will remain two weeks and do some work, and at the end of two weeks attend another two-day meeting near Clear Lake. Brother Reed will motor back for me at that time and we will begin another campaign at the Hibbard tabernacle beginning about September 15.

Sincerely,

OAKLEY R. MILLER.

News from Branches

Detroit, Evergreen Branch

The month of August has certainly been a busy month for the Saints, and especially the priesthood of Detroit. Everyone who is willing to work finds all and more than he is able to do.

The young men recently called and ordained to the priesthood are proving by their works that they are indeed called of God. We notice they are taking their part whenever called upon, and in any capacity within the province of their office are proving themselves true soldiers of the cross. We find them upon the street corners preaching to interested audiences; also going out to neighboring towns and there proclaiming the words of eternal life. Surely such earnest service will bring its reward.

The president of the Second Detroit Branch reports an increase in attendance, and is very optimistic with regard to the future of the new organization. We trust his expectation may be fully realized.

In our last we mentioned Orion and Pontiac Missions which have been under the supervision of the Detroit Evergreen Branch, stating that they were about ready for organization. We are pleased to state that Brother Curtis returned to our midst after the Erie Beach reunion and organized a branch at each place. At Orion Brother Dur M. Taylor was ordained an elder and Brother Davis a priest. At Pontiac Brother Millard Riley was placed in charge of the work. They are a very valiant band at each place and seeking to keep the banner of King Immanuel afloat. We have been especially impressed with the work in Pontiac, feeling that there will, some day in the near future, be an ingathering at that place. The writer has promised to hold a series of meetings there as soon as a convenient place can be located. Up to the present they have held all their meetings in a private house.

Our mission at 1685 Russell Street is progressing nicely under the leadership of Brother Frank Cooley, an energetic young priest, who is doing all in his power to keep the work rolling along. Recently they secured permission from the police to hold street services on Saturday evening near their place of worship, and are given police protection; a good interest is reported.

A goodly number of baptisms are reported for the month, showing that a number have been busy sowing the seed of truth. Three were baptized last Wednesday evening, one Friday and one Sunday. Let the good work go on.

On the evening of the 15th the priesthood of the city were called together to form a general organization, hoping thereby to become more efficient in our work, not only as preachers, but as visiting shepherds seeking to reclaim the lost ones who have grown careless and indifferent. The executive officers together with the presidents of branches and missions met last evening for the purpose of dividing the city into districts and making appointments of laborers, which we hope will have the result desired; i. e., every family or individual living in the city and bearing the name of Latter Day Saint, whose whereabouts we know, visited. Then when this is accomplished we hope to be able to move out with the missionary work, holding cottage meetings in the homes of those who will be willing to open them for such services and invite in their friends to hear the truth.

Elder W. L. Bennett was the speaker at the main church Sunday morning, August 27; Alexander Barss at the east side, and Brother Ullman at Russell Street Mission. In the evening Elder Fred Simpkins spoke at the main church, Frank Cooley at the east side, and the writer at Russell Street. A good attendance reported at each place.

Last, but not least by any means, we must mention the Erie Beach reunion. A goodly number of Detroiters and others from Eastern Michigan District went to Erie Beach to enjoy the feast of good things provided by the Saints of Chatham District. It surely was a feast from first to last. Everyone reported a good time and a number were inducted into the kingdom through the waters of regeneration in beautiful Lake Erie. The exact number baptized was thirty-three. We hope and pray they may all prove faithful to the covenant made.

Besides the food for the spiritual, the natural man was not forgotten and many good things were provided for physical comfort. The Chathamites believe in the old adage, "The best way to reach a man's heart, is through his stomach," and they did it well.

There were about one hundred tents on the grounds, and the best part of it was that we heard of no hitch or trouble of any kind, but everyone worked in his place and all seemed to enjoy the spirit of the occasion, peace pervading every heart.

The delightful bathing beach afforded much pleasure for those who cared to indulge and there were very few who did not avail themselves of the privilege.

This place being a summer resort, had one feature to be coped with—that of dancing; however the effects were counteracted by the forming of an association called the Chatham District Mutual Improvement Association which sought to provide amusement to keep the minds of the young upon other things besides the dance. What! says one, would our young people indulge in such worldly pleasure? Possibly not often, but occasionally one loses the halter, slips from the corral and we find him upon the ballroom floor tripping the light fantastic toe. We heard of one such case one year ago, but this year if such occurred we did not learn of it. This shows improvement and we trust we may one and all continue to improve, that when the next year rolls around we may be worthy of still greater blessings.

J. R. GRICE.

202 Colburn Place.

Independence Stake

Sister M. A. Etzenhouser has returned from attending a number of reunions in the interest of the auxiliaries and she gives a lively report of the young people's awakening in gospel work.

Brother W. H. Garrett returned after having been away for eight months, and his message to the Saints was inspiring and filled us with courage. He and his companion are helpers of worth, because of their integrity and many works of kindness.

The young people and children here have truly found a friend in their progressive and zealous pastor, and by urging them on in their church duties, and inviting the older members to aid also, he and they are doing much good.

Two young men were baptized recently by Elder I. N. White.

On Sunday afternoon President F. M. Smith held the close attention of a large class interested in sociology, also, assisted by Brother Walter W. Smith, presented an outline of future work for all, both men and women, who are interested in spiritual and mental culture and who desire to pursue the studies marked out, such as sociology, psychology, economics, child-nature study, civics, also kindergarten and auxiliary work, together with the science of story-telling, which has been very successfully presented by Sister Walter W. Smith.

The Independence gospel teams, assisted by the ministerial alliance, are getting busy along with the rest of us on religious lines, but the religious census at present still stands: "Latter Day Saints, 825," out of 2,456 families in all, there being about twenty kinds of beliefs or affiliations in Independence.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Miscellaneous Department

The Bishopric

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP

In accordance with the appointment at the recent General Conference, Brother Richard Bullard will now take up his work as bishop of the Far West District. Those who are acquainted with Brother Bullard know of his integrity and worth. The Saints of the Far West District are to be congratulated in having Brother Bullard labor among them. Added blessings will come to the Saints who respond to his teachings. In making this change, we desire to publicly express our appreciation of the splendid work accomplished by Brother Charles P. Faul.

BENJ. R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of the Northeastern Nebraska District: As I have been appointed bishop's agent for this district, in the place of Brother H. S. Lytle, resigned, I wish to call your attention to the change and ask that those not identified with branches close enough to pay tithes and offerings to the one representing the bishop's work in the branch send said tithes and offerings direct to me, at the undersigned address.

I also wish to call attention to our duty to impart our substance as the law directs, for the support of the church, the families of the missionaries, as well as Graceland College, the Saints' Homes, the Children's Home, and the Sanitarium. As October 1 is recommended as a day for special collections of the branches and Sunday schools for the benefit of Graceland College, I hope that each branch and Sunday school may make a good showing for that purpose, and also any Saints that are isolated from the branches that are able to donate for that purpose may send their donations direct to me.

Hoping that we may all feel called upon to do our duties temporally as well as spiritually, so far as this district is concerned, is my prayer. Address me at 4530 South Twelfth Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

August 29, 1916.

JAMES HUFF, Bishop's Agent.

Convention Minutes

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—Sunday school at Fanning, August 11, R. L. Tilden assistant superintendent in charge. Five schools reported. An excellent paper by Mrs. E. S. McNichols was read. Arthur H. Mills gave a very enthusiastic address on music in the Sunday school. Special music by Misses Bertha and Ethel Dittmore. An illustrated talk on historic places in Palestine by Frank G. Hedrick. The next convention meets at Atchison, first Friday in February. Emma Hedrick, secretary.

Conference Minutes

EASTERN OKLAHOMA.—At Fort Towson, August 12, 1916. J. C. Chrestensen, H. O. Smith and J. M. Simmons chosen to preside. Ministerial reports: J. W. Jackson, G. N. Cox, J. M. Simmons, B. F. Pollard, J. E. Kelsey, F. Thompson, E. A. Erwin, G. C. Thompson, J. P. Branon, J. C. Chrestensen. Branches reporting: Grannis and Jacksonville, Arkansas, Manchester, Texas, Wilburton and Haileyville, Oklahoma. J. C. Chrestensen elected president; J. E. Kelsey, secretary-treasurer. Winthrop, Arkansas, chosen as the place for next conference, time left to the district president and missionary in charge. District president authorized to place membership of the old disorganized branches in live branches, as his wisdom directs. Motion prevailed to accept reports of reunion and financial committees and they be discharged. J. E. Kelsey, secretary-treasurer.

Notice of Appointment

To Whom It May Concern: This is to certify that by agreement of the First Presidency and the minister in charge, Elder J. A. Wilson of Toronto, Ontario, has been appointed to labor, self-supporting, in the Toronto District for the remainder of the conference year. Concurred in by the First Presidency.

J. F. CURTIS.

Two-Day Meetings

At Brown City, Michigan, September 9 and 10. Good speakers. Everybody invited. William M. Grice, president.

Reunion Notice

Reunion of Southern Missouri has been canceled because of the extreme drouth that has prevailed over the entire district during the crop season, by order of the committee. Benjamin Pearson, secretary.

Conference Notices

Chatham, with Bothwell Saints September 23 and 24. Bothwell expects to hold the opening of their new church at that time so trust there will a good turn out. Reports and credentials to be received by the undersigned not later than September 14. Branch presidents, secretaries, and other officers please take notice. Anthony R. Hewitt, secretary. Chatham, Ontario, 41 Lowe Street.

Massachusetts, with Boston Saints, at Somerville, September 30 and October 1, at 3 p. m. All reports should be in hands of secretary by September 22. Historical reports are

COOPERATION

To the Saints Everywhere

We want your cooperation. Every book you purchase, every paper or magazine you subscribe for gives some one a profit.

Why not buy or subscribe through your own Publishing Houses and give them the profit?

Our "Book Service Department" was started to serve you. No matter what book you want order through us.

We also have a "Subscription Department" handling all papers and magazines. Just tell us what you want and we will give you prices. Order through

Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa

or

Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Mo.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
 War Posters - - - - - 857
 "Christian" Self-complacency - - - - - 858
 Current Events - - - - - 858
 Notes and Comments - - - - - 859
 HYMNS AND POEMS - - - - - 860
 Marcella Schenck.
 ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
 Why we believe in a Restored Gospel, by A. B. Phillips - - - - - 861
 Types Worthy of Study.—Part 4, by Gustave Erickson - - - - - 865
 OF GENERAL INTEREST:
 A Call for Curbstone Preachers - - - - - 867
 The Indian - - - - - 868
 Helping Farmers to Borrow Money - - - - - 868
 WOMAN'S AUXILIARY - - - - - 869
 Helen Silsbee Smith.
 LETTER DEPARTMENT - - - - - 870
 George W. Lindsey—Charles A. Nolan—Gomer T. Griffiths—Ralph W. Farrell—J. C. Christensen—W. D. Knight—R. J. Farthing—P. Muceus—C. Edward Miller—William J. Murray—Joseph H. Yager—Ella Switzer—H. N. Hansen—S. D. Allen—Marie Dimick—Oakley R. Miller.
 NEWS FROM BRANCHES - - - - - 877
 MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT - - - - - 878

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; E. D. Moore, Assistant Editor.
 Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.
 When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.
 If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us. This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.
 All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.
 All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.
 fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.
 For advertising rates apply to the business department.
 Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.
 Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

not required at this session. Send reports to W. A. Sinclair, M. D., 166 Pearl Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts.
 Nauvoo, at Rock Creek, Illinois, October 14 and 15. Those attending will please go to Adrian, Illinois, on the C. B. & Q. Railroad, where they will be met by Saints of the Rock Creek Branch. All branches requested to have statistical reports mailed to the secretary by October 1. W. H. Gunn, secretary, 3104 Seneca Street, Fort Madison, Iowa.
 Southern Missouri meets with Beaver Branch, October 7 and 8. All ministerial and branch reports should be sent

FOR SALE

Two acres of fine lying land, all set to young fruit just coming into bearing—new 6 room house, back plastered and finely finished. 2 never failing wells, new hen house 10 x 24. Located on South State St. Bargain for cash. E. F. Hall, Lamoni, Iowa. 31-tf

The Woman's Auxiliary Year Book

FOR 1916-1918

This book contains necessary information for those engaged in the Woman's Auxiliary work of the church. Every sister should get one. Price 20c. Order from your nearest house to save postage.
 Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, or Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

TRUANTS. A one-act Religio comedy by John Preston. Three men (or boys) and 3 women (or girl) characters. Plot concerns a number of Religians who through some excuse or other have stayed home from meeting. The way it works out is amusing. Adapted to any audience or occasion. 34 pages, attractive cover25c

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist

in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

Wanted

SAINTS' HERALD for January and March, 1863. Anyone having above numbers and care to dispose of them correspond with 35-3t
 HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

to the undersigned a few days before conference. Those coming by rail should be in Cedar Gap on Friday morning trains. Benjamin Pearson, secretary, Tigris, Missouri.

Information Wanted

The following names are listed on the records of the Manchester Branch, of Red River County, Texas, yet their whereabouts are unknown to the officials thereof. Any one knowing the whereabouts of or information that would lead to their location are requested to correspond with the clerk of the branch, C. R. Caswell, at Manchester, Texas. Amelia T. Stewart, William, Lucy I., Eliza M. and Jessie R. Gregory, Francis J. Johnson, Samuel W. and Mary E. Stevens, Hiram W. Brooks, Leighton Sappington, Jonathan Davidson, Catharine Cravens, Nellie A. and Mattie D. Goodwin, George W. Smith, Etta Donham, Hatchel S. Quinn, Nellie E. Allan, Andrew T. Davis, William H. Woods, Amanda G. Rathburn, Nancy C. and Andrew B. Goolsby, Mattie M. Woods, Walter Curtis and Hattie N. Nix, Emma F. and Thomas M. Dodd, Mattie D. Dserony, J. B. Doldforth, Sarah J. Sanders, Ellen J. Skidmore, Joanna Parks, Margaret A. Bennett, Emma L. Porter, Robert E., Joseph A. and Thomas A. White, John L. Townes, Benjamin C., Florence A., George F. and John A. Shields, Lena Davis.

Typewriter Service in Rural Communities

The typewriter is coming into more extended use in rural communities because of the assistance it renders to all classes of people. Here are a few examples of the possibilities of service:

The Farmer: Think of the possibilities of selling produce by the means of typewritten letters sent out to customers? Typewritten letters give the sender a business standing with the people who receive them and also enable the keeping of carbon copies of the correspondence, which many times does away with misunderstandings and lawsuits.

The General Store Merchant: More prompt and courteous treatment is likely to be accorded his orders and correspondence with the City jobber and manufacturer if his letters are typewritten.

In The Home: The boy or girl who is intending to follow a business career can secure no better start than a knowledge of typewriter operating. Children who learn to use the typewriter learn spelling at the same time. The housewife finds it a great convenience in writing recipes and for general correspondence.

The Minister: No Clergyman should be without a typewriter. It is of great assistance in preparing sermons and writing the many letters that a pastor has to write.

Mail us the
Coupon to-day

L. C. SMITH & BROS. TYPEWRITER CO.
903 W. LOCUST ST., DES MOINES, IOWA

Please send me information as checked below:

- Send me free catalog.
- How can I get a Factory Rebuilt L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter?
- What about trading in my old machine?

Name

Street or P. O.

State

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, SEPTEMBER 13, 1916

NUMBER 37

Editorial

WOMAN'S WORK IN THE CHURCH

(Address before the Sunday school at the Latter Day Saint Reunion at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday, August 20, 1916, by Elbert A. Smith. Reported by Winsome L. Smith.)

Every wise woman buildeth her house: but the foolish plucketh it down with her hands.—Proverbs 14: 1.

I am requested to deal with the subject, "Woman's work in the church."

I find a text that might be appropriate in Proverbs 14: 1: "Every wise woman buildeth her house: but the foolish plucketh it down with her hands."

WORKING HAND IN HAND

I do not expect this morning to differentiate wholly between the work of man and the work of woman. The work of the two is so intertwined that we cannot separate it. The Apostle Paul tells us: "Neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord."

That is the condition, you will notice, that obtains "in the Lord." Whenever you find a system that endeavors to have men and women work entirely separately, without any regard for each other, or one which arrays them against each other at cross purposes, you may know that it is not in the Lord. And whenever you find a home in which the man and the woman are working against each other, or where one is working entirely independent of the other, that is not in the Lord, because "the man is not without the woman, neither is the woman without the man, in the Lord."

ADAM'S APPLE

The work of woman goes back to the very beginning both for good and for evil. In fact, away back yonder in the Garden of Eden, Eve figured very strongly in what is called the fall of man. In fact, the entire blame is frequently placed on Eve.

I heard a story about an old Scotch landlady who was talking to her gardener who was a bachelor. She said, "Mon Tamas, ye ought to get a wife. Ye have a very fine hoose, but na hame. Ye need a wife. Ye remember that the very first gardener that ever lived had a wife."

But Thomas was a Scotchman, and he shook his head and said, "True, true, but ye mon remember that he dinna keep the job very lang after he gettit the wife."

But evidently Adam preferred to lose the job and keep the wife. That is the only explanation that I can find to the statement made in the Book of Mormon that Adam fell that man might be. We are told in 1 Timothy 2: 14, that "Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression." She was deceived, and fell into transgression. Adam, we must conclude, understood what he was doing. But Adam fell that man might be. I do not understand by that that God did not intend from the very beginning that humanity should increase, but Eve, having fallen into transgression, and being subject to the edict of banishment from the Garden of Eden, Adam was willing to go with her in order that the plans of God, as he understood them, might be fulfilled. And so he took part and was driven out of the Garden of Eden in company with his companion.

I say that is the only understanding I can get of that statement, of course I have that understanding subject to correction. If you can give me a better explanation I will revise my understanding, and next year I perhaps can give you another talk along a little different line. But the woman, you will notice, figured very prominently in the fall of man, and she has been with him in every downward step from that day until this.

CHRIST BORN OF A WOMAN

But if it is true that she was to a degree to blame for the fall, it is also true that she has suffered a terrible penalty as a result, and the manifold sorrows and pains of the world have rested on her frail shoulders. Think of the millions of women who are heart-broken to-day as a result of the losses incident to the great war that is going on in Europe. Think of the millions that have suffered broken hearts because they have seen husbands and children led into transgression, into drunkenness and crime of various kinds.

But if it is true that woman has been with man in the downward course, she has also been with him in every step that has been taken towards the salvation and the regeneration of humanity. It is said that as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive. And as woman had her part with Adam in bringing this death on humanity, so has she had her part with God and with Christ in making salvation and life possible to all men, for we read in Galatians 4: 4, "But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law."

And so to the Virgin Mary was given the delegated task to be the mother of Christ, and rear the individual in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, who was destined to undo the work that had been done in the Garden of Eden. So also two women became the first preachers of the resurrection of Jesus.

NOTED WOMEN

When we review the historical work of women we find many noted characters in sacred writ. For instance, there was Sarah, the wife of Abraham. We hear Abraham almost universally spoken of as the father of the faithful. Did you ever hear Sarah spoken of as the mother of the faithful? Yet if Abraham was the father of the faithful, it is equally true that Sarah was the mother of the faithful, and that from her came potentially the twelve tribes of Israel.

There was Hannah, the mother of Samuel, who took him into the temple just as soon as he was old enough to wean and loaned him to the Lord, and he became one of the greatest prophets in Old Testament scripture.

There was Elizabeth, the mother of John the Baptist, who was the forerunner of Christ. There was Eunice, the mother of Timothy, and Lois his grandmother, concerning whom Paul speaks in his letter to Timothy. And there were Mary and Martha, and many others so numerous that we cannot name them.

THE WOMAN BEHIND THE MAN

I believe I told you about talking with an old German brother in the city of Burlington. We were talking about the course of the war, and this old brother said, "Brother Smith, I will tell you why it is that the Germans are so successful. It is because of the vimmens they have back of them,"—the woman behind the man behind the gun.

Well, now there is a great deal of truth in that. You look back of Samuel, or John the Baptist, or Joseph Smith or any other individual who has ever been of any consequence in the church of God in any age of the world, and almost invariably you will find some good woman, a mother who has dedicated him

(Continued to page 885.)

"THE IOWA MORMONS"

Under the above caption, the following letter appeared in the Des Moines Register on August 28. It was contributed by C. L. Cross, of Logan, Iowa, who states in the concluding paragraph that he is a nonmember. His points are so clearly and forcibly made that we are glad to give space to the entire letter, which follows:

According to press dispatches, "Iowa will be the storm center of the great international crusade against the extension of the Mormon kingdom in America.

"Orators and organizers of international fame will come into Iowa to mobilize the Christian and moral forces of the community for a finish fight against polygamy and in opposition to the treasonable teachings of the Mormon hierarchy, and these powers will cooperate with the clergy and laity of Iowa to the end that Mormonism shall not be fostered to any degree in this State."

That an organized church in Iowa is advocating polygamy, or its members practicing polygamy, or its members are guilty of treason against the Government comes as news to western Iowa. It would be gratifying to readers of daily newspapers to have these men of international fame who are going to start this whirlwind in opposition to alleged polygamous practice and treason in Iowa to name and locate the church, to name and locate the guilty men and then invoke the iron hand of the law, instead of trying to organize the clergy and the laity into a moral suasion movement.

Though The Register is and has been maintaining newspaper writers in different parts of the State for many years, in addition to a large force of keen-scented news gatherers and able writers in Des Moines, yet it seems to have remained for these men of international fame as orators, one in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and the other over a thousand miles away in Utah to discover polygamy, arson and treason in Iowa, and to lead a movement to reform, and to save the State. Without a suspicion of mercenary purposes, or a thought of commercializing Utah religion or history of ancestors, one of these men of international fame might have discovered polygamy nearer Salt Lake City than Iowa, if not in Salt Lake City, then perhaps at Cannonville, or its vicinity, and that the conditions there, or in Utah, might be worthy of his undivided time and ambition.

Attendance of services in Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Christian or the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, at different times and places, in a period of fifty years in Iowa, the writer has not heard an advocate of polygamy or treason, but on the contrary he has heard ministers of the gospel in the named churches, denounce polygamy. Though missionaries aided by Presbyterian, Methodist and other church funds have been active in opposition to polygamy, yet by far the most effective among the different churches in opposition to the Utah church, is and has been the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, sometimes known as the Josephites, or Mormon church. This church organization was first to send missionaries to Utah, and this church has maintained these missionaries for over a half century in opposition to the teachings and practices of the Utah church; and, in addition, high and influential officials of the reorganized church were at Washington and were instrumental in the enactment of laws for the suppression of polygamy, and the reorganized church is and has been publishing and circulating in Utah, and other mountain States, and in foreign countries a large amount of printed matter in opposition to the Utah church and its polygamous beliefs and practices.

Like other churches, the reorganized church has a college, fully accredited as a junior college by universities and colleges in the United States. This college has graduated strong classes, and the members have gone to other colleges, and out into the world and are and have been filling places of trust in the rural and city schools, in colleges and in business centers in different States. The reorganized church also maintains a hospital or sanitarium, a home for homeless children, and in addition five different homes for the aged and the feeble. The patriotism of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints was fully attested on the battle fields in defense of the Union in the Civil War; in the Spanish-American War, and Latter Day Saint boys are now among the soldiers of other States at the front patrolling the national boundary line to the southwest. The action of the Latter Day Saint boys receives the approval of President Frederick M. Smith and other church officials.

Latter Day Saints of western Iowa, with a residence of over a half century, engaged in farming, in the mercantile and other lines of business, have been public spirited and progressive, and in common with others here, supporting public schools, aiding in the construction of roads and other improvements, and identified with Chautauquas and other public enterprises leading to the uplift of the community. No one can travel over this part of the State, go into a school, or place of business, or into a home, and point out a Latter Day Saint without having a personal acquaintance first. They are law abiding, rarely in court, and like members of other churches, they are desirable citizens.

According to present plans, the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints will hold a reunion here September 15 to 25 on the camp grounds adjoining Logan on the north. The mayor and the councilmen, members of the commercial club and others are putting the camp grounds in suitable condition for the convenience of those who attend and the broad-minded, public-spirited citizens of Logan and its vicinity bid the members of the church welcome.

The writer is neither a member of the reorganized church nor is he related to any member of the church, but he has known them as neighbors, as pupils and teachers in schools, and as a church organization for fifty years, and he believes that they are entitled to the same courteous treatment accorded members of other church organizations in Iowa. A man should have the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, not according to the dictates of some one else.

CURRENT EVENTS

WILL NOT COMPLY.—It is reported that the Santa Fe Railway will not comply with the new eight-hour law unless forced to do so by the Supreme Court.

TROUBLE IN CHINA.—Armed engagements between Chinese and Japanese troops in the interior of China, following demands made upon the latter country by the Japanese, are reported, and considerable uneasiness has followed concerning the situation.

GREAT CROP SHORTAGE.—Government reports indicate heavy losses in crop production for the season, due to rust and drouth principally. Cereals, fruits, and potatoes are all seriously affected. During August prices increased nine and three-tenths per cent.

CONGRESS ADJOURNS.—After a long session in which a number of important bills became laws, the Sixty-fourth Congress adjourned on the 8th. Appropriations reached almost two billion dollars. Only a few years ago we had our attention called to a "billion-dollar" Congress. We ordinary individuals cannot imagine the meaning of such sums as these.

DECREASE IN PARALYSIS.—Following an upward trend the first part of the week, a sharp decline in number of new cases and deaths from infantile paralysis is reported from New York City.

AEROPLANE MAIL DELIVERY.—The post office department expects to let a contract for aeroplane mail delivery in Alaska. Deliveries will be made twice a week. A net saving of $34,558 per annum will be made.

INCREASED REVENUE.—The interstate commerce commission reports a summary of the earnings of sixty-seven of the largest steam railways and it is shown that they have earned a net revenue of $545 a mile, or $43 a mile more than in July of last year.

SUES FOR A MILLION.—Henry Ford, the automobile manufacturer, has brought suit for damages against the Chicago Tribune in the sum of one million dollars. He charges libel in connection with the events growing out of the mobilization of the National Guard for Mexican duty and his attitude against preparedness.

ENVOYS MEET.—The American and Mexican peace commissioners are holding two two-hour sessions daily at New London, Connecticut but nothing special has been reported concerning conclusions reached in their deliberations.

TAX REPEAL.—Beginning at midnight of the 8th, the internal revenue act which imposed taxes on the following, was repealed by recent congressional enactments: Bonds, debentures, deeds, notes, bills of lading, telephone and telegraph messages, cosmetics and perfumes, and some other similar items. The new revenue bill levies taxes on incomes, corporations, inheritances, munitions, spirits, brokers, amusements and tobacco, and is designed to raise about $205,000,000 annually.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Following Rumania's declaration of war on the central powers, large numbers of troops were sent into the Austrian province of Transylvania, and were quite successful in their advance, taking a number of large cities and a number of villages. They have advanced about seventy miles into Austrian territory. The German forces have united with the Bulgarians, and have effected an entrance into Rumania from the south, taking Turtukai, a strong Rumanian fortress, defending Bucharest, the Rumanian capital, and it is reported that fifty-four thousand men were transferred from the Verdun front to this scene of action. The latest reports are that they have reached a point within sixty miles of Bucharest. A gigantic conflict is ensuing, as the Russians have sent in large numbers of men to assist the Rumanians in defending their capital. Following the weakening of the Verdun offensive, the French have taken the whole German system of trenches in front of that much contested point. The entire Somme front has been the scene of a great allied offensive the past week, extending over an area of thirty miles. It is reported that over thirty villages have been taken since the allied drive began. The British are now within a few miles of Bapaume, their immediate objective, and the French are as close to Peronne. It is reported that Russian forces have entered Halicz, said to be the key to Lemberg, the important Austrian city which is the objective of the Russians. The Turkish forces are frequently mentioned as being active in aiding the Austrians in defense of their line in southern Galicia. It is reported that the Greek forces have recaptured two Kavala forts which had been taken by Bulgarians. No important developments are reported from the Macedonian fronts. On the Austro-Italian fronts there have been minor activities, confined mostly to artillery bombardments. No important advances have been reported. The most important seaport in German East Africa has been taken by the British. In all sections of the war territory aerial attacks are increasing, more and more attention being given to this feature of warfare.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

BATTERY C BOYS REMAIN.—The First and Third Missouri Regiments are to be mustered out of service and resume their status as citizens of Missouri following their return to Nevada, Missouri, but nothing in the orders so far indicates a return of the men composing the Missouri Field Artillery Branch. They are still at Laredo, Texas.

GRACELAND COLLEGE OPENING.—September 8, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, the fall opening exercises were observed at Graceland College. The college starts out for the year's work under very favorable auspices. The enrollment is larger than usual at the beginning, with the prospect that many others will be added by the time the holiday season arrives. The opening address was by Doctor R. M. Stewart, of Iowa University. Mr. Stewart was formerly president of Graceland College, and there were in the audience many of his old-time friends, as well as numbers of individuals who had been students under his administration. They were very glad to welcome him back to Lamoni even for a short season. His address on "The value of man," was both interesting and instructive. He was followed in a short address by President Frederick M. Smith, who has the distinction of being the first graduate of Graceland College; while Graceland College in turn claims the distinction of having thus graduated the man who is now president of the church. An address of welcome was given by Elder J. F. Garver, now president of the Lamoni Stake, and formerly a Graceland College student. Also an address of welcome from Reverend E. F. Partridge, until recently pastor of the local Methodist congregation; and a speech of welcome from Professor Erwin, superintendent of the schools in Lamoni, and formerly a Graceland College student. Several fine musical numbers were also given. The day was ideal, and the crowd unusually large, in fact so many were in attendance that not nearly all of the people could get into the chapel, or even within hearing distance of the speakers.

CORRECTION IN THIS ISSUE.—Through an unfortunate error in the make-up of this number the closing paragraphs of the editorial "Woman's work in the church," were shifted from their natural place on page 887 and are inserted here.

So bear this idea in mind, that of the awakening of women and the supreme value of organization. I want to leave these two points with you, and desire that they shall stick in your mind. I do not need to lambast the man who seeks to minimize the work of the sister, Brother John Garver did that very well for me in the announcement, so we do not need to say a word about that, but I will simply close by saying that to women has been given the supreme honor of being taken as the type of the church.

WOMAN TYPE OF CHURCH

All the way through the Bible you will find the church represented as a woman. That is quite an honor for almighty God to select you as a simile or type by which to represent his church. And every Latter Day Saint woman should try to live so that she may be worthy to be used as that type, and be worthy of the figure of speech that is found in Revelation, where it says: "And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars."

It is the province of every woman in the church to so live that she may be worthy to be a type of that glorified church.

I will leave the subject with you, reminding you once again of the statement made in the proverb that was quoted in the beginning of the talk this morning: "Every wise woman buildeth her house: but the foolish plucketh it down with her hands."

Go ahead and build, and may the blessing of God be with you.

WOMAN'S WORK IN THE CHURCH

(Continued from 882.)

to the service of God, or his wife who has been with him in every time of need, so far as humanity can meet human needs, or some other woman who had been to him a teacher and an incentive.

THE "ELECT LADY"

When we come down to the period of history in which you and I live, or the age that we call the latter-day times, we might mention numerous women who have been of great service to the church. There was Emma Smith, the wife of Joseph the Prophet. She was spoken of in the Doctrine of Covenants as the "elect lady." I presume that some of those people who lived in the city of Nauvoo and saw her going quietly about her business, taking care of the home, even taking in boarders and scrimping in every conceivable way that she might make a living after the death of her husband, I presume some of them wondered why she should be called the elect lady.

But we remember now that after the death of her husband, in one sense, so far as humanity was concerned, the hope of the church was reposed in her care, and those men who were destined to grow to maturity and take up the work of their father, Joseph, Alexander, and David, who were spoken of as "the three remaining pillars still, like the three remaining pillars of the temple on the hill,"—that it was given into her care to raise them and keep them in purity and in righteousness until the church should need them. Thus we begin to understand why she was called the elect lady.

Many a woman having suffered all that she suffered, driven from pillar to post, robbed of her companion, might have felt that she had suffered enough, and might have set her children aside for some other mission, but she evidently kept before them always the thought that they were to be the servants of God, and that they were in due time to take up the work that God had intrusted to their father. And so when the time came on the 6th day of April, 1860, she went to Amboy with "young Joseph," as they called him then, and gave him over to the church, her trust having been fulfilled, and the church received him, and later his brothers, from her care.

I might also mention the fact that the manuscript of the Inspired Version of the Bible was intrusted to her care. God said that he would give his Scriptures, the Inspired Version, and that he would cause them to be kept "in a safe place." When the Utah people went west, they took with them many records from the office of the Presidency, as the papers were left at Joseph Smith's death, but the Inspired Version was kept in the hands of this woman in a safe place until the Reorganized Church was ready to receive it and publish it to the world.

THE MOTHER OF THE "CHRISTMAS OFFERING"

I might also mention Sister Walker, and recount some of the things that she has done for the church. You know how she used her pen for many years in the service of the church. You recall how she was a pioneer in the Sunday school work, and was one of those instrumental in organizing the General Sunday School and Religio Associations. She was editor of Zion's Hope. She founded Autumn Leaves. She edited the Mothers' Home Column in the SAINTS' HERALD. She instituted the Christmas Offering that has kept many elders in the field, and in a thousand ways has served the church, so that we could scarcely say that anyone of the ministry has done more than she has done in her sphere of activity.

I might mention many others, but you can call them to mind, and my time would not permit me to make a catalogue of them.

AS A HOME-KEEPER

The work of woman primarily, of course, is in the home, and there she teaches and instructs and raises those who are to be the church of the future. Forty years ago the church of to-day was under the care of the sisters, in the homes, to a large extent; and the church of the future is under the care of the sisters of to-day. Will they keep their trust as well as the women of the past have kept theirs?

THE MISSIONARY'S WIFE

I might mention the work of woman as a missionary's wife. She stays at home, undergoing privation and hardship and sacrificing the companionship of her husband in order that he may go out and carry the message into all the world wherever and whenever God may send him. The woman in the home, and the woman as a missionary's wife, certainly these women have done a wonderful work for good in all ages of the world.

IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

And then I am reminded of the work of the women in the Sunday school. The great burden of the work possibly falls upon women, as teachers in the Sunday school, because they are natural teachers of children, and they carry into the Sunday school the same mother spirit that they have in the home, and so become preeminently Sunday-school teachers.

I am reminded, too, that the very first textbook that the Sunday school ever used in the Reorganized Church was prepared by a woman. If I mistake not, a book of questions and answers, edited by Sister Walker about the year 1868 or '69, possibly a little bit earlier. And the sisters have taken a very important part also in editing the Quarterlies.

WOMAN'S AWAKENING

So we observe that the women have worked along these lines in the past, but there seems to have come a time when there is a field even broader opening before them. Anybody who has noted current events certainly is aware of the fact that all over the world there has come an awakening of women. It is termed the Woman's Movement, or the Feminist Movement, and is manifested in various ways. The struggle for the ballot is one of these ways, and it is a foregone conclusion that woman is to receive the franchise within a comparatively short time. I am not making an argument for equal suffrage, I am simply stating facts.

In England it is stated by the highest authorities that almost as soon as the war is over women may be given the vote. They almost lost it before the war by some of their extreme conduct, but now during the war by their heroism they have gained it; while in this country I believe all the great political parties are committed in favor of equal suffrage. Mr. Hughes says it is inevitable and the sooner we give the vote to women the better it will be for the country. So I say that it is inevitable, or seems so, that women will have the vote everywhere, practically, in a comparatively short time.

ORGANIZATION

Women are awakening; they are coming forward along every line of activity, even in war, sad though that may be. And there is an awakening in the church among the women.

I want you to bear this thought in mind, the idea of an awakening and a forward movement of women. And then I want to connect with that another idea, which is, that of the value of organized effort. All individual effort is more or less haphazard. I have recounted some of the brilliant individuals of the past, but the time has come when we do not need individual work so much as we need organized work.

The extreme motto of individualism is, "Every man for himself, and the Devil take the hindmost." And the Devil usually does take the hindmost. But the spirit of organization and cooperation is that we shall all move forward together, and we will look out for the hindmost. There may be not so many brilliant individuals, but a better grade throughout the entire body.

TEAMWORK

Brother Frederick M. Smith says that if he never learned anything else from football he did learn the value of teamwork. You cannot win a football game by brilliant individual plays. You have got to win it by teamwork. And the motto of this church must be: "Work together, all for each, and each for all."

Every class that expects to accomplish anything in the world has to organize. All need the power of organization. Labor, for instance, is absolutely helpless in an unorganized condition. Capital is organized. Capital says to the individual laborer, "If you don't like your job you can quit it. If your pay doesn't suit you, you can leave. There are a thousand men who want your place." But capital cannot talk that way to organized labor. The brotherhood of locomotive engineers and the three coordinate railway brotherhoods to-day have the country face to face with a great railroad strike. They are able to command the attention of the railroad presidents, and of the President of the United States, and Congress, simply because they are organized.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

In her work in the church woman cannot afford to overlook the power of organization, of building, of construction, or working together; as the proverb says, "The wise woman will build her house, but the foolish one will tear it down."

Now you women who want to organize in the Lamoni Stake, go ahead and build your house, and build it wisely; and let us trust that there will no one be disposed to pull down her own house with her own hands.

Of course we have had local organizations in almost every branch of the church. We have Mite societies, and various organizations of a helping nature, Patronesses societies and so on, good almost without exception, so far as I know, but they are generally local. They are not coordinated. They are not bound together. They are simply in the evolutionary stage.

Now comes a general organization of women known as "The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service," which has succeeded the "Daughters of Zion," I believe. It is a general organization, organized under the auspices of the church, reporting to the church, and not with the intention that woman should work by herself, but with the idea that through this avenue she can work in conjunction with men in the church. It is the purpose of this organization to gather up and harmonize, and coordinate the work of the women of the church in all parts of the world.

There is a movement on foot to organize here in the Lamoni Stake. They are already organized in other places, and I believe that you cannot do better than to organize and affiliate yourselves with the general work of the church, that this awakening of women and this forward movement may be utilized to the advancement of the cause that we all love so much.

Original Articles

HOW DO WE INTERPRET?

"How readest thou?"—Jesus.

As a people we are committed and bound by the testimony of the three books, the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. This being true, very much depends upon our interpretation of the scripture contained in these books.

If we interpret in such a way as to harmonize with and confirm the facts and truths set forth in any one or all three of the books, we thereby confirm, enlighten and edify; that is, if the books are what they purport to be, and what we represent them to be. On the other hand, if we so interpret as to bring the books in conflict with each other, or any one of them in conflict with itself, the inevitable result is, with those who accept our views, a loss of confidence in our standards of evidence, more or less, with the consequent increased difficulty of believing that any one of the books, the Bible not excepted, contains a true and intelligently worded revelation of God's will to man.

To put it differently, and more briefly, when our interpretation is correct, it will agree with what is said in any one or all of the standard books, on any gospel topic, or the proper use and application of any important Bible word. So it is the safest and best way to bring every claim, new and old, to the supreme test of what is written in the standard books of the church, every one of which (so we claim, as a church) contains a revelation of God's will to man.

A TEST CASE

To illustrate, we will raise the question of the proper use and application of the word soul. Of late, there is a seeming disposition upon the part of some to limit the application and use of this word to the united body and spirit of man, that is, to the whole man. Doctrine and Covenants 85:4 is used as a scriptural basis for such limitation, which reads as follows: "And the spirit and the body is the soul of man," etc.

It is even argued that it is improper to use the word souls with reference to our spirits before they enter or after they leave our bodies. Is this statement correct? Let us see.

The passage itself, relied upon for support, does not necessarily limit the application of the word soul to anything less than the whole man. If it does, then the Doctrine and Covenants conflicts with the Book of Mormon and the Bible, and with itself. We accept the definition, of course, in good faith. It is a good and comprehensive one, and was given, as we believe, not to limit the application of the word soul, but, rather, to furnish us with a larger and better view of God's purpose and power in the redemption of man, through the resurrection of the dead. Permit me to quote more fully:

Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him who quickeneth all things, in whose bosom it is decreed that the poor and the meek of the earth shall inherit it.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:4.

This makes the matter very plain. Man, if obedient to God, will be redeemed in the fullest sense of the term—not only in spirit, but also in body. And, consistently, this very earth upon which he dwells is to be made heaven, his everlasting abode of peace and glory. In this definition, as the writer sees it, God gives us to understand that he places an important estimate on the body, as well as the spirit, though it should be conceded that the spirit is much the greater part of the man who is to be redeemed. In the important work of restoration, it was necessary and important that this information should be conveyed to the church, and through the church to the world. Nevertheless, "it is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." (That is, by itself.) The spirit is the living, intellectual and immortal part of man, which survives the death of the body, and can (and will, if prepared) live in higher and more blissful conditions, in the intermediate state, than it could while veiled in mortal flesh. We therefore conclude, that any position assumed, which says, by implication, that the spirits of the righteous are left in worse conditions after they have left the body than they were before, is extreme and incorrect.

WHAT DOES THE DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS TEACH?

We agree that it teaches that "the spirit and the body is the soul of man," but it does not teach that nothing less than the spirit and body united, may not properly be called the soul. "Therefore, care not for the body, neither the life of the body; but care for the soul, and for the life of the soul," etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 98:5.)

Here is a clear distinction made between the body and soul; and as the word soul does not and cannot be made to apply to the body, it must, therefore, apply to that other and more important part of man, the spirit. If it still be contended that the word soul, as used in this text, applies to the whole man—body and spirit united—then we will read it that way, and see if it will make good sense.

"Therefore, care not for the body, neither the life of the body"; but care for "the spirit and the body," and the life of the spirit and body, etc.

Thus we see that when read in the light of the position we are opposing, it not only fails to make good sense, but it renders the text absolutely contradictory.

This quotation comes from a purported revelation of Jesus Christ. We find the same sentiment, given under similar conditions, for the same purpose, and by the same authority, expressed in Matthew 10: 28, Luke 12: 4, 5. We will quote the first:

And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.

Here again, we have the same plain distinction between body and soul. If soul, in this text, applies to both the spirit and body, it will make good sense when we substitute for it the words "the spirit and the body." Let us try it:

"And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the "body and spirit."

With this rendition, we have one sentence in which Jesus is made to say, first, that man can kill the body, and, second, that he, or they, cannot kill the man of which the body is a component part. Jesus was talking about what his enemies could and would do to his disciples, and what they could not do. They could kill the body, but not the soul. What body? Answer: The body of man. What soul is it which they cannot kill? Answer: The soul of man. If the word soul cannot properly be applied to anything less than the whole man, then, whenever the body is slain one part of the soul is killed, to say the least. Limiting the application of the word in this way, we can too, easily reach the conclusion that whenever the body dies the soul dies with it! For, if the only thing which composes the soul of man is the united existence of the spirit and body, then, clearly, when they are separated the soul ceases to exist.

So we may easily see that

THE BIBLE APPLIES THE WORD "SOUL" TO THE SPIRIT

The only position the writer has ever found which will harmonize with the three standard books of the church, is, first, that soul is the spirit and body, that is, the whole man. But such a man is a soul before the resurrection as well as afterward.

Second, soul is applied to the spirit of man by itself. Paul calls this spirit the "inward" and "inner" man. (Romans 7: 22; 2 Corinthians 4: 16; Ephesians 3: 16.)

The term soul sometimes means the body alone. In each case the correct application must be determined by the context, or its relation to other words. We can afford to stand on this broad ground without any fear of running against a snag.

Through Elijah, the prophet, the widow's son was raised to life:

And he stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried unto the Lord, and said, O Lord my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into [into his inward parts.—Marginal translation] him again: and the Lord heard the the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived.

If I were to say, "When we read that the soul returned to the widow's son in answer to Elijah's prayer, it was eminently proper, for it included the spirit," etc., I would be quite clearly getting the passage out of my way, but this is not always true interpretation. The truth is, we do not read any such thing in the Bible. What we do read is, "And the soul of the child came into him again," etc. Thus we learn that the soul was in him before he died, and came back into him when he was raised to life. Death is the separation of body and spirit. (See James 2: 26.) Therefore the word soul, as used in this text, cannot apply to anything more or less than the spirit which is in man.

John writes as follows:

I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and the testimony which they held; and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?—Revelation 6: 9, 10.

We do not believe that these were persons who had been raised from the dead at the time of Christ's resurrection, and for the following reasons:

1. John says they "were slain," and there is not even a hint that they had been resurrected.
2. It seems far more probable that they were the faithful Christian martyrs who had been slain during the severe persecution that was waged against the Christian church in the days of John.
3. The same class of persons is evidently referred to by John in these words:

And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.—Revelation 20: 4, 5.

Notice, John calls them "souls" before they were resurrected, and he saw these souls come forth in the first resurrection which has not yet occurred. "The souls of them that were beheaded," and "the souls of them that were slain," is very similar phraseology.

4. In another place we find John applying the word soul to the spirit alone: "Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth." (3 John 1: 2.) John virtually admits the soul of Gaius might be in a prosperous condition while he was in poor health. How could this be if soul, in this text, means spirit and body? John used the word just as his Master did.

5. If these souls whom John saw, had risen at the time of Christ's resurrection, it is more than likely they would have been so well satisfied with their condition, that no such question as the one found in the text would have been propounded. There is a vast difference between explaining away a text and giving to it a correct interpretation.

WHAT DOES THE BOOK OF MORMON SAY?

The Book of Mormon is in complete harmony with our interpretations of texts from the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants, but it is still plainer in its statements:

And also, that you may not incur the displeasure of a just God upon you, unto the destruction, yea, the eternal destruction of both soul and body. (The italics are mine.)

As soul and body are here spoken of separately, the word soul does, of course, apply to the spirit. Let us remember, too, that the Book of Mormon was translated by the direct inspiration of God.

Please read Alma 19: 37-65, and thus get the full benefit of all the connections. It is a good practice when we are about to announce our position on any matter connected with the plan of salvation, to take one comprehensive view of what is written in the standard books of the church on the topic under consideration. Such a practice may save us from humiliating mistakes.

Alma refers to disembodied spirits as souls in verses 37, 40, 42, but the same souls are called spirits, in verses 43, 44, 45. We give some of the statements in brief:

And now I would inquire what becometh of the souls of men, from this time of death to the time of the resurrections?—Verse 37.

What becometh of the souls of men, is the thing which I have inquired diligently of the Lord to know; and this is the thing of which I do know.—Verse 40.

Now concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection.—Verse 42.

Behold, it has been made known to me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body; yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life.—Verse 43.

And then shall it come to pass that the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care and sorrow, etc.—Verse 44.

In verses 45, 46, the condition of wicked spirits, in the intermediate state, is also described, after which we have the following:

Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked; yea, in darkness, and a state of awful, fearful, looking for, of the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them; thus they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in paradise, until the time of the resurrection.—Verse 47.

In verse 49, we have the words, "The spirit or the soul," etc.

From verse 52 to the end of the verse 65, we read of "the reuniting of the soul with the body of those from the days of Adam, down to the resurrection of Christ."

Many precious items of instruction are furnished us by Alma in the chapter referred to, concerning the intermediate state and the resurrection of the dead, among which are the following:

"The spirit or the soul," survives the death of the body in a conscious state. If righteous, it dwells in paradise, in a much more blissful condition than while here, in the mortal body.

This conscious entity is called spirit, and, just as plainly, soul. These two terms, when they apply to the "inward" or "inner" man, as they frequently do, are synonymous, and they can be and are used interchangeably. And what makes this position still more satisfactory and confirming to one who has announced his positions on soul and spirit, is the fact that they do not conflict with the teachings of the Bible or Doctrine and Covenants.

TWO OBJECTIONS

These objections are part of the stock kept in hand by mortal soulists. But, no matter, if well taken, they should be accepted; but if not, rejected.

First, we are told that soul and spirit cannot be synonymous because they never came from the same Greek or Hebrew word. That is, nephesh and psuche are never translated spirit, ruach and pneuma are never translated soul.

The strength of this claim is virtually made upon the hypothesis that two different words in the Hebrew or Greek cannot properly represent the same thing, which is not true. And if two different words in the originals are sometimes used to represent the same thing, then their correct equivalents in English may be used to represent the same thing. But, fortunately, right here we are prepared to meet this class of objectors upon their own ground:

Soma is the Greek word for body; sarx, for flesh. Soma is never translated flesh; sarx is never translated body: and yet these two terms, body and flesh, are used interchangeably. "Nevertheless, to abide in the flesh is more needful for you." (Philippians 1: 24.)

Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord: (for we walk by faith, not by sight,) we are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord.—2 Corinthians 5: 6, 7, 8.

The word soul is used very much in the same way as the word man. Paul says: "Also of your own selves shall men arise," etc. Here he speaks of the whole man, body and spirit. (Acts 20: 30.) But in 2 Corinthians 12: 2, he applies the term man to the spirit alone. "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven." Here the word man is applied to the spirit, either in the body or out of the body. Sometimes the word man, is applied to the body alone, and the same is true of the word soul.

Second, it is thought that the souls which John saw, under the altar, could not have been disembodied spirits, for the expressed reason that "white robes were given to every one of them." Or to put it in the words of one able writer: "I do not see what use spirits could make of 'white robes.'"

We have heard this objection before, but never before from the same source. It is well known that the Bible abounds with figures of speech, and the Book of Revelation is full of them. Why not permit John to explain what he means by his reference to "white robes"? He uses the same figure, and sometimes almost the same words, in Revelation 3: 4, 5, 18; 4: 4; 7: 9, 14; 19: 7, 8. Please look them up and read carefully. The last citation reads as follows:

Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of Saints.

Plainly enough these "white robes" represented "the righteousness of Saints." What would be thought of me, were I to express my extreme anxiety to learn, at once, just what kind of an article of dress the "wedding garment" is so that I could have one made without delay, and ready for use when needed?

I believe, too, that John, who was so intimate with the Master, and one of his leading witnesses "in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth," knew how to use the word soul as well as our most intelligent elders.

It is not correct to represent the spirit as only about one half of the complete man, for it is much more than half. Nor is it correct to quote the text relied upon to sustain the view we are opposing, "the resurrection of the body," for it reads "the resurrection of the dead." The spirit is a leading object of redemption, as well as the body, and is, therefore, affected by the resurrection of the dead.

"The spirit and the body is the soul of man"—not something else produced by the union of body and spirit, to which the spirit should be subject. We object to the introduction of this third person into the text.

We believe in "advanced ideas along this line," and every other line, so far as possible, but when we have to ignore or misinterpret an important part of God's word, in order to establish our interpretation of a single text, we are moving, but not progressing.

It is true King James translators made some mistakes, but this fact is poor support for any position, when the consensus of evidence from the same version is against it. More than this, the Revised Version, (which undertakes to correct the mistakes of the King James,) the Douay, Geneva, and Syriac are in general agreement with the King James Version on this soul question.

In 1 Peter 3: 19, we read that Christ "preached unto the spirits in prison." In Murdock's Syriac, which is a translation of the "Peshito Syriac New Testament," we have the following rendering of the same passage: "And he preached to those souls which were detained in hades." Thus we have not only a synonymous use of spirit and soul, but of spirits and souls.

Doctor Roberts, in Compendium to the Revised Version of the English New Testament, page 26, under the head of "Syriac versions," ranks this one among the best. He says: "By far the best of these is the Peshito, (i. e., simple,) which is truly an admirable translation." J. R. LAMBERT.

[Those desiring to investigate this subject further should read What is Man? by the writer of the above. This book is a strong presentation of this general subject. Order of this office or Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri. No. 316, 75 cents. —EDITORS.]

* * * * *

THAT THEOLOGICAL CHAIR

I would not consider the defeat of the proposition to endow a theological chair [chair of religious education] in Graceland College, a defeat of the divine school of the prophets; but, the defeat of a human effort to supplant God's way with something else.

On the face of the defeated proposition as I saw it, there were two errors besides the one suggested above.

First: A proposition to teach theology to those whom God might rather have work for him in some other line. Using the term theology to mean preacher training.

Second: Excluding such teaching from those already in the ministry and whose long experience might put a brake on any heresy attempted in such course.

We might mention also a third which may as yet, dwell among the possibilities but nevertheless among the latent factors of such a suggestion, i. e., instruction by those not chosen of God for that purpose and whose instruction might result from the godless books of the present day rather than from the books and revelations of God.

For at least two generations, this church has stood for a divinely called and equipped ministry. If we have not that, we had no need of existence at all. The specific instruction and fundamental law to the ministry being: "These shall be the teachings as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.) To attempt to preach in any other way is to write "failure" at the very beginning. Perhaps not failure at oratory or homiletics but failure at reaching the heart.

I think I am safe in saying that ninety-nine out of every hundred members of the church accept this statement of the Doctrine and Covenants at par. Some may attempt it in another way and succeed in converting the head but not reach down to the heart. A number of such may gain access to the church and attempt to force all others in their channel, but it will be found that "if ye have not the Spirit ye shall not teach." All other acquirements are of small worth in converting the hearts of men. Giving full credit to all other helps, yet a ministry is not a ministry of God that attempts to teach without the Spirit.

Any who attempt to alter this divine plan, this fundamental doctrine of the church, will certainly need a mountain of sternness and an avalanche of continuity to stem the opposition of the ninety and nine. And should they succeed in changing the fundamental law of the church and bring about a "transition" in practice, the new ministry would no longer be the ministry of God but of men. For "he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God" and not the wisdom of men.

Isaiah speaks of our time and our church where he says: "When the enemy shall come in like a flood the Spirit of the Lord shall raise up a standard against him." (59: 19-21.)

To meet this defense of the Spirit is to swim upstream and meet discouragement and disappointment which few men could stand, and then only for a time.

It is not to be understood that "to teach by the Spirit" necessarily means to acquire knowledge by the Spirit, although the Spirit that "guides into all truth" would be a very wise counselor, enabling the student to separate the wheat from the chaff. A thing written in a schoolbook is no more true in print than in oral teaching and perhaps not so effective.

Who should be better prepared of God to teach properly, and the right thing, than the presidency of the church whom God has ordained to preside over the school of the prophets? (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 39.) But his place is not in Graceland unless he be the president of the school. Then may we have a theological chair in Graceland and not before.

I would be willing also to endow him with the twenty-one hundred dollars suggested in the defeated resolution, providing a like sum may be paid to each of the men who would be spending as much time in other lines as he, in the work assigned him of God. I am not sure but if we are to receive pay in this world, the men who are enduring many more hardships and most of all that dreaded hardship of separation of family ties, should receive more. He, enjoying the comforts of home, and helping to make the dollar spread out, might even require less than the husbandless wife and fatherless children at home without her natural comforter, counselor and protector, rearing the family alone and giving them only the half training they need, the other half of the family being away. If any twenty-one hundred dollars are given, give it to the wifeless and childless missionary whom the church sends out in his unnatural life, exposed as no other men are to temptations of every sort perhaps only to fall in battle.

Perhaps the wife with her tear-stained pillow and ever-increasing credit account worrying out her spirituality in her lonely life of unnatural existence, might feel some little compensation in twenty-one hundred dollars a year.

Surely we need to teach theology. I am anxious to receive such instruction. But why not have the right kind, taught in the right way, in the right place, by the right persons and to the right men? Why not have the school of the prophets? Who would vote for anything less?

Why neglect the men who have been the backbone of the church under the most trying circumstances of human existence? Men who have sacrificed home and all that is dear to any father—the love of his children. Why neglect them to catechize a few boys and girls who may or may not need that kind of instruction and whom God may never call to use it.

The men who have labored long, to whom the Spirit has brought many jewels of truth are not yet past learning. They love the jewels they have and feel these should not be set aside by some bookworm whose theories and stories might not hold in the experiences of life or debatable opposition. Rather than some untried theory, some book learning, let us have the divine experiences of the ages expressed through the head of the church, aided by the tried and true men of the leading quorums.

Primarily, of course, the school of the prophets was for the ministry, but surely what would be good instruction for them would be for the good of all, after it had been thoroughly tried in the school.

I am aware of course that formerly the school of the prophets was a localized institution. From the beginning of the world to 1832 it could not well have been otherwise, but in this age of swift mail service there is no reason why this blessing should not be utilized for the good of all the local ministry in every branch and through them to the membership as well.

Lessons properly arranged, and properly tested, could be sent out through the HERALD and vitalize the whole body and make the church a unit in faith and doctrine and in the redemption of Zion.

Not a theological chair at Graceland for Graceland students only, but a school of the prophets for all the children of God and first of all the ministry. Not a professor as a substitute for the prophet or prophets. Not his humanly selected expert. (?) Not a bookworm. Not man's way but God's.

Then and only then, as I see it, will Zion flourish, the people of God rejoice in one hope and one faith, while looking for the coming of the Redeemer to Zion.

As for Graceland let her continue her good work in her line, but let the theological part be attended to by the church as God has directed.

J. W. PETERSON.

* * * * *

Of General Interest

THE FATHERLAND OF THE JEWS

[Next week we expect to print in this department some interesting details concerning the proposed freedom of the Jews in Russia.—EDITORS.]

Russia has the largest Jewish population of any country in the world. Although their lot has not always been an enviable one under the rule of the czars, the great war has found them loyal citizens of their northern fatherland, willing and anxious to contribute their sacrifices to the success of its cause. According to private letters and dispatches from Russia, many Jews have come forward to enlist; they have opened and equipped hospitals for the soldiers and displayed an eagerness to aid with their goods and their labor. The warmth of their patriotism has been a surprise in Muscovy.

More than half of the world's total Jewish population, or about six and one half millions, dwell within the Russian Empire. The total number of Jews in the world is about thirteen million. The United States and Austria-Hungary, each with more than two million; Germany with six hundred thousand, and the British Empire with four hundred thousand, are the other important homelands of this scattered nation.

THE JEWISH FATHERLAND

Russia to-day might be looked upon as the true fatherland of the Jewish people, as the great body of them live there. This comes primarily because Slavs, more especially the Russian Slavs, have always been the most tolerant of peoples in matters of religion. The Russian church, properly speaking, is not a missionary church. That a Russian should be a member of the Russian branch of the Eastern Orthodox Church, is regarded almost as a law of nature in Muscovy, while the Russian feels that it is just as natural and fitting that a Tartar should be a Mohammedan, and that a Jew should follow the Mosaic creed.

It is true that most of the Jews were originally Polish subjects, and it is said that colonies of them lived in the basins of the Volga and Crimea five hundred years before the birth of Christ. Through the years of their bitterest persecution, the rule of the Poles over the Jews was a light and amiable one, and many hundreds of thousands of them passed to this country.

JEWISH PALE DEFINED

Thus, with Poland, Russia acquired the greater part of her Jewish subjects.

The Czar's Jewish subjects are confined, by law, to a definite part of the empire, known as the Jewish Pale of Settlement. This is an irregular belt of territory, extending from the Baltic to the Black Sea. The Pale includes Poland, Lithuania, White Russia, part of Little Russia, and regions in the Caucasus. A belt of land about thirty miles wide along the international boundary is also exempt. The Pale proper, wherein nearly all of the Russian Jews dwell, comprises the entire territory of Russian Poland, and the Governments of Kovno, Vitebsk, Vilna, Mohilev, Volhynia, Grodno, Minsk, Chernigof, Pohtava, Kief, Podolia, Bessarabia, Kherson, Ekaterinoslav and Taurida.

Kovno, Minsk, Mohilev and Volhynia are the most thickly settled by Jews, who in these Governments constitute about two thirds of the entire population. Some Jews were settled as agriculturists upon the Southern Steppe, and, despite the strict law, wealthy members of the nation are found in business in Petrograd and Moscow.

JEW'S BUSINESS ABILITY FEARED

All disabilities which attach to Jewish birth in Russia fall away with the conversion of one of the race to orthodoxy, but, nevertheless, such conversion seldom takes place. This curtailment of freedom is not a matter of religious persecution, but rather an expression of the Russian's dread of the superior business ability of the Jew.

There are, however, certain classes of Jews allowed by the law to dwell without the Pale: These are students, merchants of the first guild, professional persons, skilled artisans, and such as have served twenty-five years in the army. No Jew is eligible to Government office unless he becomes a convert to orthodoxy.

The Jews' citizenship is of a qualified kind, for the law states that "Jews are aliens, whose social rights are regulated by special ordinances." Taxes on "kosher" meat, on candles for use in the synagogues, on skull caps, legacy taxes and special taxes upon their business are taken by the state. The Russian Jews, on their side, are organized for their protection, take a prominent part in the country's commerce and exercise a powerful influence of wealth.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

* * * * *

LIQUOR VOTE ON SUFFRAGE

While the women of Philadelphia are debating whether Iowa defeated equal suffrage because of the activity of the association of women opposed to suffrage or because of the hostility of those who favor the sale of liquor it might be worth while to introduce the testimony of the liquor dealers themselves.

Barrels and Bottles, a liquor journal published at Indianapolis, frankly gives credit to the foes of prohibition for the defeat of equal suffrage in Iowa.

Furthermore, this liquor dealers' paper with the clinking name serves an ultimatum upon all the women of the United States. They must dispel the impression that they are opposed to the sale of liquor, or they will meet everywhere the fate which overtook them in Iowa.

Women, says Barrels and Bottles, must "counteract and combat a presumption which naturally tends to array against their cause all men opposed to prohibition." The liquor journal continues as follows:

This handicap has again and again prevented the granting of suffrage to women just as it did in Iowa the other day when the suffrage amendment was defeated by a margin so small that it was manifestly only the unpopularity of the proposition in the larger cities where prohibition is not favored that prevented its adoption.

Barrels and Bottles does not minimize the importance of the opposition of liquor men to woman suffrage. It is not a matter to be ignored as affecting only an occasional balance of power. Nay, it is "from a practical point of view, the most potent and significant factor of the whole question." So says the Indianapolis liquor journal.

From the evidence of Barrels and Bottles, then, equal suffrage was defeated in Iowa because of the hostility of those who want open saloons. Equal suffrage will never win until the women convince the friends of the saloon that extension of the ballot will not bring prohibition. The opposition of liquor men is from a practical standpoint the most potent and significant factor in the whole suffrage question.

Why should anyone question the claim of the liquor men that they defeated suffrage in Iowa? They acknowledge it, and they ought to be good judges of their own influence.

Barrels and Bottles is an organ of the retail liquor trade. No such statement as it makes will ever find a place in the columns of a journal devoted to the interests of liquor manufacturers. The manufacturers are too shrewd to admit that the liquor element is fighting woman suffrage. But the retail trade substitutes crudeness for shrewdness, and tells the truth.

The women of Iowa, and of every other State, might as well take notice of the ultimatum. They are invited to make their peace with the liquor element. They are told the only way to get the ballot is to prove that equal suffrage is not the advance agent of prohibition. What are they going to do about it? Surrender?—Des Moines Register, August 6, 1916.

* * * * *

THE SUPERFICIAL AGE

The most striking characteristic of this age—some observers say—is its amazing disregard of the past. We live in the present—of art, of literature, of history. Nobody quotes any more—at least not exactly—and precedent is rarely invoked on any question. Accurate verbal statement of any question is unusual. The daily—that is to say, the hourly editions of the newspapers—the never-ending moving pictures, the rapid-fire book and magazine presses are united to destroy memory and prevent reflection. Discussion is of the topical, the minute, and serious words are a bore. All of which means that in our rebound from old-fashioned pedantry we have fallen into an almost idiotic superficiality of memory and emotion. What is to be the end of all this memory-destroying art? Any man of middle age can test in himself this decay of the faculty of exact reproduction of past learning, past perception. Names of books and of authors are bungled in the telling, figures are given with reckless slovenliness, and only the vaguest outline of any philosophic principle gets representation. No doubt these facts make for the elimination of "the old foggy" and the deification of the moving-picture actress, but it may also be putting out of conversation something we can ill afford to lose. It may be that this superficial habit will eliminate the city boy from the government of the world more completely in the future than in the past. Out of the silences—out of meditation—will come the rulers of the future, of that we may be certain.—Collier's for September 2, 1916.

The Staff

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

Masters of Music

GIUSEPPE VERDI

1813—1901

There was never artist so beset as was Verdi. The Fates seemed to hold him accursed. Granted some little success at the first, he had married, high in hope, and happy in prospects of a successful career. But with the coming of wedded happiness, success had melted away, and Verdi and his young wife were stranded in a great city without money or friends. For some time they lived as they could; now and again he got an engagement to play, or some little piece was sold: always he had hopes of the big success.

A boy came to them, and a girl, and they four lived happily, though they were very poor. Verdi's frail wife had infinite confidence in him, and that kept him strong in belief of himself. At last the opportunity came. He was commissioned to write an opera. He threw his whole soul into it; he worked with feverish interest. His wife scraped the scanty resources together and kept some food on the table. She was not strong and her children were less so. Lack of proper food did them no good. And it was cold, too. They sickened, both of them, and died within a week. This was a terrible blow to Verdi, and stopped all his work. But after a while his wife gently urged him back to it, and he threw himself into the opera as a relief from his grief. At the worst he had his wife yet, and she was the soul of his life.

At last the great day came. The opera was written; it had been rehearsed; Verdi's great effort was going to be produced by the city's best company. Verdi's wife was too weak to go. She was ill abed, but her eyes were bright to-night. Her Verdi was to have the success that so richly belonged to him. Her thin arms trembled as she pressed him to her before he left. Their poor apartments were only a few blocks from the theater, and after the first act Verdi came rushing to her to tell her of the opera's great success. The house was packed; the singers were in great voice; and the audience was wild with enthusiasm. Verdi's wife sank back into the pillows with a contented sigh. She was very weak, but very happy. The second act did not go so well, but fair. The third act was never finished because the curtain was run down amidst hisses and shouts of derision. Verdi was broken hearted. He went home slowly; but when he opened his door all thought of his opera fled from him. He knelt by his wife's bedside and kissed her very tenderly. It was his last kiss, and she died believing Verdi's success had come at last.

Was there ever such tragedy opened a man's career? It would have crushed a lesser man down forever. Even Verdi's strength and purpose were shattered for years. He was a broken-hearted man; disconsolate and without ambition.

But time reacts against the sorest grief; and after a while Verdi began to pick up the scattered threads of his life. The creative impulse was strong within him, and music sang in his brain and insistently urged him to write. His heart beat again with purpose.

Verdi is essentially dramatic in his compositions. He is of the opera exclusively. His race, his temperament, the age in which he lived conspired to make him this and nothing else. After listening to any one of his many notable operatic successes one could not wish it otherwise.

Verdi began life, like most other men of genius, very humbly. His parents were innkeepers in a remote village. But they were Italian in blood and temperament, and they were lovers of music. Giuseppe when but a little boy had a passion for it.

Poverty brought him as an apprentice to a merchant at Busseto, and as Fortune planned it, that merchant was a musician, a member of the municipal association. By such small circumstance Fate shape the lives of men. Verdi was aflame with love for music; his master was liberal, and thus began the most notable musical career of Italy.

Verdi learned all that was to be learned in Busseto, then married his master's daughter, and went away to the big city, as we have seen. The next few years were bitter black, but Verdi came through them changed, but still with the fire of genius burning in him.

It has been said that "development is the badge of a musician's trade; that to stand still is to recede." Verdi from the first, moves steadily forward; and sweeps higher and higher with every effort. "Ernani" gave him place and reputation throughout Italy; "Rigoletto," "La Traviata," and "I Trovatore" give him fame to this date; "Aida," "Otello," and "Falstaff" establish him among the masters of music forever.

Verdi is an Italian and has all the faults and the virtues of his people. He is impetuous, bombastic, intensely eager. There is fire in him and in his work. When he came into manhood his part of Italy was under the yoke of Austria. The country was a seething caldron of hate against the Austrians, crusted over only by the semblance of submission. Verdi's music expressed this intense emotion and he was hailed as the spokesman of liberty.

Once success flooded his way, the tide never ebbed. His fame spread the world 'round; at last the call came from far-off Egypt. He was commissioned to write for the Khedive himself. "Aida" was the result. It is the most beautiful and perfect of all operas. It was written by Verdi in his old age, and is loved by the whole world.

Verdi lived to a long, ripe age. Wealth was his and landed estates and friends. The world tried hard to heap upon him in old age what it had denied him in youth.

To the last he worked, and "Falstaff," written in his eighty-second year, has the fresh touch of a man still in his power, and a breadth and beauty that comes only with the experience of years. He was carried away at the flood-tide of his success.

ARTHUR E. MCKIM.

Hymns We Love

"There's an old, old path, where the sun shines through Life's dark storm clouds, from its home of blue.

In this old, old path, made strangely sweet,
By the touch divine, of His blessed feet."

During a Sunday school convention at Independence, I started to a certain session, feeling so weary that my going was rather from a sense of duty than otherwise. As I neared the church these words of the singers within greeted me—

"In this old, old path, are my friends most dear,
And I walk with them, with the angels near."

The weariness was forgotten, in its place came the spirit of comradeship. I was ready to enter cheerfully into the services of the hour.

I associate with the song another incident. In the land of dreams I was traveling along the side of a broad, smooth highway, hard as flint and stretching far away in the distance. Something whizzed past me with such terrific speed that I only realized it was a person and a vehicle of some kind. Farther on up the broad road a sudden crash brought instant death to the rider. Sickened by the sight I turned my eyes from the road, and saw near by such a contrasting scene: a quiet peaceful hill or mountain side with cool inviting shade, and a scarcely worn path on the grassy slope leading higher and higher. In my joy I exclaimed aloud, "It is the old, old path!" How close together the two ways lie! "In the world, yet not of it."

I am pleased to give the story of this hymn direct from its author, our gifted sister Vida E. Smith. In answer to request she writes:

"I am afraid if I tell you the truth about our little song you will censure me some, for it was a lovely summer day—late summer. I was then superintendent of the primary department in Sunday school and was always weary when I took my place in the congregation. I got into a habit of letting the preacher preach to the other people while I meditated, unless he "tickled my ears," with something I liked or did not like.

"On this day the text was a favorite, you know about seeking the old path, etc., but the theology of the speaker did not fit my mood—too heavy for weary me, maybe. My mind went its own way. My spirit was athirst and it was led beside still waters and finally dipped over the hills of thought and followed the old path.

"On the margin of my primary quarterly I scribbled the words as now sung. I do not think there is a change; they were simple and short. I walked part way home by the side of one of my very dearest friends, Sister Alice E. Cobb, and I read the scribbled lines to her. She was captivated by the spirit of them and urged me with deep feeling to let Audie hear them, as I passed Audentia's home and intended stopping for a few moments. I did as I promised my sweet monitor and leaving the words or copy hurried home. Seating myself at the instrument, I struck a few chords and the melody seemed to flow with the words. While softly running it over, the telephone rang. It was Audentia. 'I have the melody,' she said. It was the same strain that had flowed to the touch of my blundering fingers and the one we sing to-day!

"My experience in that day's wandering was one of several in which my soul has touched spiritual heights while sitting in the meeting place of Saints, but it was unique in the flashlight the Master gave me for the joy of others. At other times the joy has all been my own, and this time I did not dream it should meet with such a wonderfully kind and loving welcome. To me it is a testimony that the spirit that led me that day, led Audentia, and now abides with the simple little song sung in many places." V. V. SHORT.

A Chord Struck in Saint Louis

Judging from the harmony, it must have been a chord. According to either up-to-date or down-to-date ideas, two words now are of very great importance. The one, preparedness, the other organization. Of course we have been having and still have preparedness, for, with the associate national director, Brother E. C. Bell, as our chorister, and his efficient organist, Sister K. K. Walrond, and F. Burgess, how could it be otherwise?

Recently we did the other thing—we organized. Sister Maude Parrish was chosen president, Sister B. Loevy, vice president, Brother Arthur Geeson, secretary and treasurer, and Brother Herman Gillespie, librarian. Each one of our officers are enthusiastic choir workers so we are looking forward with expectation. We are sure they will be able to help the chorister in many ways and the chorister thinks so, too. The office of second vice president was created which the chorister is to hold automatically, thus making him an executive officer. Then we have two committees. Our membership committee consisting of Brother R. A. Lloyd, Mr. Harry Crocker, Brother J. Stanley Parrish and Sister Anna de Jong Smith, have decided to employ all known powers of attraction besides the charm of music, and hope for good results.

Our social committee composed of Mr. B. Loevy, Brother Arthur Geeson, and Sister Adele Peters have already proven that they are sterling by having ready a delightful watermelon treat on one of our hot practice nights. I mean the temperature, to be sure. As there usually is a reason for things I decided they used watermelon as an object lesson—If you would progress in choir work have your choir books like the watermelon, red (read) inside. We chose a correspondent, for we felt an occasional word to the staff might serve to bring us into closer touch with our many brothers and sisters engaged in this wonderful work. In our meeting many words of praise were uttered in behalf of the wonderful articles and ideas published in the columns of the staff and our hope is that we may be able to profit thereby and also be able to assist.

We have just returned from a splendid reunion and we believe it did our choir good and our choir did it good.

On two occasions the choir saved the day, or rather the night. While we were not on a "rock-bound coast," yet amid the storm we sang—not "as the waves dashed high" but as the "rain splashed nigh" for it poured through our tent, but the choir sang on and our organist and chorister stood fast even though drenched.

Changing from the ridiculous to the sublime one of our members said that as the elements broke in all their fury she was permitted to hear a band playing most wonderfully three different selections. She was made to know the beauty of tone came when the storm was worst. We wondered if in the great and wonderful plan of God that even the elements would combine and with the percussion and wind powers make a harmonious glorification to our Father who is in heaven.

ANNA DE JONG SMITH.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 2903 Sullivan Avenue.

News from Our Orchestras

In spite of the intense heat, which would ordinarily depress the most ardent enthusiasm, the orchestral spirit of the church is growing in a way to encourage us. From over the church come inquiries and evidences of interest which give assurance of future realization.

The Holden orchestra is progressing and the new organization of their stake and its consequent inspiring character is making them feel that great things are theirs if they but strive for them.

Saint Joseph brings us, perhaps, the best news of the month. Through the courtesy of Brother John L. Bear we are supplied with a clipping from the Saint Joseph Gazette containing a large halftone cut of the orchestra at the Second Saint Joseph Branch. This cut, together with the Gazette's write-up of the orchestra and the program of its services at the Sunday school and Religio conventions, furnished a most gratifying account of Saint Joseph's prowess that gladdened the writer's heart. The other two Saint Joseph branches are also effectively interested, and we are apprised that under the initiative of Brother Tilden, of the First Branch, a movement is well under way to organize the material of the three branches into an orchestral association, whose object will be cooperation in all things orchestral. We doff our millinery to the Saint Joseph's spirit.

The national (or general church) orchestra at Independence has given some good service in the "twilight services" held on the church lawn on the past Sunday evenings, as also has the regular orchestra of Mount Zion Sunday school.

We are hearing most excellent reports of the work of the orchestra at Knobnoster, Missouri, and by appointment expect to pay them a personal visit on August 1.

Indicative of the most encouraging growth of the orchestral spirit throughout the church, we are hearing reports and receiving correspondence from Fanning, Kansas, Los Angeles, California, Scranton, Pennsylvania, Omaha, Nebraska, Hiteman, Iowa and Creston, Iowa. Others will be heard from in due time, also; for the orchestral spirit is contagious.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 1514 West Short Street.

Woman's Auxiliary

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

"Feed My Lambs"

In Proverbs we find the plea: "Feed me with food convenient for me," and how many, many times, has that cry come into mind, as we contemplated the effort of small children to be interested in the words of a minister, who from the pulpit, was ministering to other wants than theirs. Our hearts have often been stirred with the pity and the injustice of the whole matter, when, in the humility and patient obedience of childhood, such wee ones sat throughout the incomprehensible service—more or less quietly. We have wondered that provision other than Sunday school opportunities were not made for these; also that parents were ever urged to see to it that their children attended the preaching services. We are glad, indeed, to learn that in Independence, the president of the branch is making a special effort in this direction, and arrangements are being carried out, providing the children with the short, bright sermons, adapted in logic and language, to the development of their minds. They are indeed being fed "food convenient," and we feel to cry "Godspeed" to such an effort, and hope to see the example followed in every branch of the church where it is at all possible.

The following splendid paper on this subject, written by Sister Smith of Saint Louis, was read by Sister Weidmann, before a meeting of the general auxiliary convention last April. It shows a mind alert to the needs, and to the possibilities that lie along this direction, and we have scant need to bespeak for it a careful reading, its attractiveness and timeliness making such championship almost superfluous.

Sermons for Children

It is my pleasure to write on a subject which shall sooner or later demand great attention. For this declaration I shall offer a reason.

If you recall your history of the world, you will note that the seventeenth century was one of "divine right of kings," in the eighteenth man gained power and the state existed for him rather than man for the state; in the nineteenth century woman moved forward, but the twentieth, you will all agree, holds forth "The divine right of the child." Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are his, and because of this, had I rhetoric sufficiently strong, I could really set forth his needs for a true religious life at this time.

The children are the future congregations, and on the church of to-day depends the size of her congregations of tomorrow, so methinks it behooves the church to be alert to the fact and care for her children.

Here do I plead for sermons for children. Here we may introduce a perfectly healthy normal child and note his points of contact. You will all agree that interest and love, combined with his spirit of play are most powerful.

How has the church been utilizing these natural powers? True education must adapt itself to the nature of the learner. How is it being done? I am safe in saying that the modern churches generally have failed to bestir themselves to retain the child's loving interest in church matters. They have expected that the youth would learn through some blind system of absorption, and that through the plan of enforced attendance, the habit of churchgoing and worship would be established.

Perhaps some may be thinking that the Sunday school covers this phase of the child's demands. The Sunday school is a wonderful supplement to the church, but cannot take the place of the church in either the adult's or child's life.

Where do the children go from Sunday school if left to their own desire? Not to church I am sure, except in few instances. In one congregation of which I have heard there were one thousand five hundred people and only six of these were children. I do not feel that the children are to blame, for their planes of thought and experience cause them to require an entirely different atmosphere from that of the adult.

Children always have and always will rebel against attendance at an unintelligible service. Ask ten perfectly truthful children whether they would rather go to church or to the circus. You know which would receive the majority of votes. Now there must be a reason and also a remedy for this situation. Shall we demand that our pastors so simplify their work that it comes to the child's level and degree of interest? Absolutely no!

Highest ministerial efforts should not be presented to immature minds. Imagine the tragedy of being denied the richness of a Rushton, F. M. Smith, or a Bishop Evans sermon because the children were not able to comprehend it. Should we force the children to try to comprehend these powerful themes there would be great danger. I have known where forcing a child too early to read literature above his plane has killed the taste for it when he arrived at the age to come into the love of it, and so I believe enforcement would work here.

When I was very small I attended for a short time the Sunday school of a large and popular church. It was not a Latter Day Saint church, for in our churches there is usually afforded an amount of latitude for childish restlessness which often resolves itself into disorder. No, it was a church where one could always hear the veritable "dropping of a pin," but of course the children always went home after Sunday school to be cared for by the maids.

Once every year, however, some of the "grown-ups" would decorate the church and the children would go to church for it was Children's Day.

Imagine the generosity—once in fifty-two Sundays! If the preacher made his theology sufficiently simple, the children would enjoy it and would gladly go again, but a whole year must elapse, for the remaining Sundays were for the adults, and they had every right to their services. Of course a few did get to go on some following Sunday and may I refer to some of the results.

Here we see one mother who utterly ignores the restlessness of her child and in her oblivion enjoys the service, while the child annoys many around who wished to listen. Another mother takes pencil, paper, playthings, etc., and catches a word here and there as she amuses her child. Another takes various food supplies such as cakes, candy, bananas, etc., and then there is the one who has threatened or bribed her child beforehand. Each of these cases has come under our immediate observation but of all we judge the last to be the worst—for exacting an attention which is really inattention, through fear the lowest of motives, is but laying a foundation for the mind wandering during sermon time instead of building powers of concentration. We might as well force the teething child to feed on roast beef as to expect the immature brain to relish concentrated spiritual food.

Remember, do not feel that weak thoughts are what he needs. It is just as wrong to give weak thoughts as to shut him in an unventilated room. What he does need is that we take him where we find him and start with some interest, some activity, some manifestation of his very own—in short make things for him concrete and have fifty-two Children's Days in each year.

Remember, more may be gained from a half hour of joyous reverence than from several hours of joyless restraint. Draw the children there through interest and love. Make them realize all effort is being spent on them and that they are the prime factor of this great concern. Make sure the services are short and enjoyable and they cannot help but interest the children.

Knowing the child's religion is concrete and militant, let him have tangible things to do. For example one of our elders wished to preach to the children on baptism. He did not give a long dry talk and various quotations but he had a bowlful of water, some earth, and a doll; he sprinkled the doll with earth and then asked if the doll had been buried. Of course they said no, and he then let them bury it in the earth and afterward carried on the work with the water, sprinkling and immersing, and incidentally explaining the teaching from the Bible.

I am sure every child knew the proper method of baptism and went forth as little missionaries to tell other children. Objects are ever a help in teaching the young. Suppose he were to tell of Abraham or Noah.

He could have a sand table and fashion a desert, set up tents and palm trees, have an ark and animals, make a relief map of travels or even have maps of Palestine, or any connected country, to be cut from prints or hectographs after his talk.

Songs should be frequently sung and a junior choir could be found very helpful in being to the children's congregation what the senior choir is to the adult service.

Should the sermon be conversational have a couple of children reproduce it, allowing them to stand where the preacher stood, and I would even favor a form of impromptu dramatization such as could be consistently done.

Encourage free discussion after the short sermon. Any work that would give action in this connection would be found profitable as children should not be kept at the quiet, inactive work of listening too long for fear of destroying their power of concentration, of which we have spoken.

We feel that such services for the children each Sunday of the year would, through gaining their love and interest, form the church habit, and that the transition should be as gradual as it is from grade to grade in the day school, and this passing from the loved church of childhood to the loved church of mature years should take place almost unconsciously.

Just a moment for statistics. It is shown that in New York 25 schools averaging over 500 scholars a Sunday only bring in an average of 10 children a year as members of the church. Enforced attendance profits but little as one may be gained where ten go outside.

So in our conclusion we would plead again for sermons for children,—a children's service each and every Sunday, and thereby will the young be gathered into an army for the church and truly will we suffer the little ones to come unto Him.

ANNA DE JONG SMITH.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Step by Step

Such a tiny, tiny thing!
Her little hands to mother's cling
As she stands swaying on her feet,
And on her lips the fleet,
Half-frightened smiles come and go
As, hearing one who loves her so
Call "Baby! Come to Father, dear,
Just one step, sweetheart; do not fear!"

And mother smiles upon the one
Whose trembling fingers clasp her own!
"Yes, darling, go!" she smiling said,
Knowing full well the baby's dread
Of that one step! But mother-heart
Must teach the babe to do its part;
Must help the shrinking feet to make
That first brave effort, and to take
That faltering step, e'en though its fears
Bring to the baby eyes, the tears.

The mother-heart must bear the pain
For what she knows is baby's gain.
So helps her on, with smiling eyes,
Till baby tries—and wins the prize!
With gurgling laugh, and cooing glee,
She stands at last, at father's knee!
Thus, step by step, the wee feet slow
Now back and forth soon learn to go;
And mother learns, through smiling tears,
The message of the coming years,
As step by step, and day by day,
She guides the baby on her way.

No mother-heart is there but would Protect her darling if she could
From snare and pitfall, by the way,
Which lead the little feet astray;
Her mother-heart would bear the pain
Which must be for her daughter's gain;
The hands which cling close to her own
Must loosened be—for stand alone
Her girlie must, and learn to bear
Those things which mother can but share
In tender confidence and love;
'Tis only He, who dwells above,
Can lift the burden from her now,
Or kiss the pain lines from her brow.

The mother's prayers still strew the way
Lest tender feet should go astray;
And oft there comes the loving call
"Be careful, darling, lest you fall!"
Thus step by step, our loved ones go;

Oh, little feet! We love you so!
 The Father waits, with outstretched hands,
 His gentle, loving voice commands:
 "Onward and upward! Daughter, come!
 This is the path to God and home!"

ERMINA PERKINS KEARNEY.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

Present Conditions

The Saints and friends of the home have again come to our rescue and placed us in a better position financially than we were—though not yet clear from debt and anxious solicitude. Members of the board represented the home and its needs at the reunion held at Lamoni, Stewartsville and Council Bluffs, and Brother E. E. Long presented our case at Boone, and our pleas were not unheeded.

We noticed with regret that receipts by mail began to fall off as soon as it was announced that a small legacy had been left to the home, friends no doubt supposing that this would supply our needs. This should not be, for we have not yet received this bequest, and when we do we should not be compelled to use it for current expense and thus exhaust it, leaving us right where we were before it was received, but it should be preserved and placed on interest so that it will continue to bring revenue and then when enough shall be left to the home it will be independent—sustaining itself. This is our ambition, and we hope to see the home permanently endowed. Let us support the home and make all necessary improvements and enlargements without spending this special fund.

Best Friend

I was struck with the force of this little poem to-night. There is in it food for many a sermon. My experience is not large but I feel confident that if more men and women made friends with their children, there would be less sorrow and mistake. Of the many men of your acquaintance to-day, how many are on intimate, loving, understanding terms with their sons, or mothers with their daughters, but this latter, I think is less rare.

One of the foremost minds in the church has a staccatoed axiom, that he uses frequently with a wonderful effect that sounds something like this: "My boy and I are chums! Of course we are! Why shouldn't we be?"

This poem is called "The best friend" and begins:

"You boast of knowing a statesman well,
 A clergyman and a Wall Street power.
 You rode one time with the head of state
 In a railway train for an hour.
 You know a man who was Peary's friend,
 And one who a badge of honor won.
 But what of these if you've missed the best,
 If you've failed in knowing your little son?"

Of course we are all proud of any mark of distinction shown us by distinguished and honorable men high in church or state, but can anything be more delightful and above all things desirable and joy promoting than to also be the distinguished and honored friend of our own child? Intimate friends, the kind that does not hesitate to do his own natural way and be his inmost and very secret self when with us, giving to us confidence and trust and receiving from us our confidential heart talks. With my experience I know that a child loves to be talked with or prayed with but never talked at or prayed at. The distinction became clear to me many years ago.

Sitting alone this evening, there is in my heart this thought. We cannot give too freely of our love to the children. If they live, it is a bulwark of defense to them in the days of their trial. If they go across the tide while we go on with the tide, they come often to our memory in the old sweet love glow that keeps them forever companions for the weary heart. We cannot love too much. Sometimes the heart sickens and we seem to have failed, we are outside the heart circle that we are eager to enter, but it is ours only to do our best and be the best friend in spite of seeming indifference. Who has said, "Who loves much suffers much," has not missed the truth, but who would miss the loving.

Let's love them and make friends of them.

"You've friends, you say, you are proud to claim,
 A doctor, lawyer, a merchant, boss;
 And shall I bow as you speak their name?
 Why, sir, to lose them were little loss.
 But this you'll find when the years are past
 And you count at the last each crowning joy,
 You have missed the best if you miss to-day
 The making friends with your little boy."

V. E. S.

Letter Department

Ancient Ruins in New Mexico

This is the Fourth of July and everybody having a picnic. I thought I would spend the day by myself, visiting the ancient ruins that have been discovered in New Mexico, right close to the Colorado State line. This is not far from the Cliff Dwellers' ruins.

Those ruins are located about twelve miles from Farmington, on the LaPlata River. It is a beautiful valley. The ruins are located on the top of a plateau which is about two hundred feet above the river. On top it is very flat; you can see a long way in every direction. Right on top of the ridge is where the first ruins here were discovered. It might have been selected because of the splendid view it affords of the approach of any possible enemies.

The first ruin is a pit house, which is simply an excavation in the earth with the walls built with rock and boulders, with mortar mixed with some kind of cement. It is round, but perfect mason work. It is ninety feet on top around the stone wall, which was plastered. No entrance is to be found. They must have gotten in through the top.

There are six shelves or seats built of rock and mortar, right close to the wall. In one corner is a place built in, evidently for a person to stand in while speaking to the people. In the bottom of the house is a hole where they had fires. One can see the charcoal yet. There is a tunnel in one corner of the kiva about large enough for a man to crawl through. It seems to lead to the foothills. This kiva has several small apertures in the wall which are neatly arranged with mason work, with an opening of something like six inches square. It widens out into a cavity that might contain several gallons. The people who built this house must have lived long ago, for about eighteen inches of dirt or sand had accumulated on top of the old dwelling place.

inches of dirt or sand had accumulated on top of the old dwelling place.

There are four kivas of similar size houses which have been built on top of this pit house, or on the edge of the wall.

Perhaps a few centuries elapsed and another people came on to this same spot intent on building, not knowing the old pit house was there. Here they erected a stone building, approximately fifty feet by eighty-four feet. It was about eighty-four feet east and west, and fifty feet north and south. The walls of this building are about ten feet high. There is a very marked difference in the pottery of these two different peoples.

These ancient ruins are all underground. I only saw one small piece of cedar used in all these ruins, and that is at the mouth of the tunnel which is at the bottom of the pit house.

The Government is expending a great deal of money in trying to find these ancient ruins. It has many men employed on these hills, uncovering the earth to find them. About twenty miles east of here, close to the Colorado line, are other ruins, but they are different altogether. There are about forty rooms in them, and they were built on top of the ground, several stories high, while these are all underground, of curious workmanship.

It seems to me that we as a church ought to have some one to assist in exploring and to explain to the tourists who visit these ruins, who it was that inhabited this country in the ages past.

It would pay any of our people who can afford it, who may be troubled with lung trouble or not very well, to spend a few months exploring this country, camping out on these hills, drinking this pure mountain water, and breathing this pure air. It would do them good. But they want to be sure to keep out of hotels.

I expect to visit other ancient ruins on this trip.

PETER ADAMSON, SR.

TULSA, OKLAHOMA, R. F. D. 2, Box 62A.

A Testimony

[The following is a translation from the Sandhedens Bannet by Brother A. Jensen who requests its publication.—EDITORS.]

When I think about my brothers and sisters in Scandinavia I feel desirous of talking with them, but this can be done only by writing to the paper.

All things about us are subjected to changes, but God remains the same; and the gospel of Christ being of God and like God, it also remains unchangeable. God's purpose in restoring the gospel was that faith might increase in the earth. The Lord is coming, not to destroy that which is good, but to save it. (Doctrine and Covenants 1.)

I have been a member of the church for thirty-nine years and during that time had many experiences. Life has been intermixed with joy and sorrow, but with Paul I can say, "All things serveth for good to them that love the Lord." I came to this country for the sake of the gospel, and the Lord has blessed us both temporally and spiritually far beyond our expectation. Perhaps a few of my experiences might interest the readers of the paper.

Nine years ago my son next to the youngest had an attack of rheumatism in one of his hips. He was then eleven years old. When the pains became real severe he suffered so that it was a pity to listen to him. Massage was the only thing that could give him any relief. He was sick for two years, and during that time we hardly rested a night, nor turned out the light. I was prompted not to send for the doctors, but called for the elders from time to time to administer to him. I saw my boy in a vision going about unhindered and without difficulty. This caused me to believe that the Lord would heal him, but because no change came for a long time my faith was severely tried.

One evening during a prayer meeting the Lord spoke to me by his Spirit, calling me by name. He said: "I the Lord, will heal your son." This was literally fulfilled. After two years my son was able to walk with a crutch, but to all appearance he was pitifully deformed. But he got stronger from day to day, gradually assuming his natural shape and finally threw away the crutches. He continued to improve until he walked about as I had seen him in the vision. For many years he has been able to do his work on the farm as well as his brethren. He is a living witness for God and his faithfulness before both the church and the world.

Seven years ago I became seriously ill and was given up to die by all who saw me. I felt death was near. The moment my thoughts were turned from the Lord death seemed to be present. For several days and nights my thoughts were continually upon the Lord, and by reason of losing so much sleep I became so weak it seemed impossible for me to endure longer. After repeated administrations by the elders the Lord revealed himself to me in a vision and spoke these words: "Nothing separates you from me." These words filled my soul with a joy I cannot describe. I wondered greatly at what I had seen and heard, and felt very unworthy of the words spoken to me.

The next day at noon I was alone in my room, and the Lord again revealed himself to me. As on the day before, he stood by my bed and said: "Why did you wonder at the words I spoke to you: 'Nothing separates you from me?' You have done something for my servant Peter Anderson" (Apostle Peter Anderson). When the Lord had spoken these words, I saw Brother Anderson standing by his right side. Brother Anderson was then in Denmark on a mission. What I had done for my brother seemed very little, but the Lord had noticed it.

I remained weak, but I had seen the Lord, and death no longer frightened me. The elders administered to me several times afterwards, but no perceptible change took place.

Last of all I saw Bishop Kelley in a vision by night. I knew him at once when he passed through my door. This person was surrounded with a glory that made the room as light as midday. He had a bottle in his right hand, came over to my bed, poured some oil upon my head, laid his hands upon me and said: "I pronounce upon you health and strength." From that moment I began to improve, and a few days later I was able to do my work. When I told Brother Kelley my experience, tears came into his eyes and he said: "Give God the glory."

This is God's work. May we all strive to be faithful to the end, is my prayer.

Kewanee Reunion

For the benefit of those not able to attend the Kewanee District reunion held at this place, we wish to give a brief report.

Everything seemed to be in our favor. In the first place, we were quite fortunate in securing a delightful and convenient location at a very reasonable cost. The reunion is greatly indebted to the Matherville Saints for their willing service in clearing off the grounds, putting up tents, lighting the park and doing numerous other things which would have amounted to a considerable sum had we hired this work done. This, not to speak of the clearing away of things afterward. Good square meals were served on the grounds by the Ladies' Aid Society.

Just previous to our convening, the weather had been extremely warm, but it turned cool the first evening of the meeting and continued quite pleasant throughout.

Elder Peak acted as president of the reunion, assisted by Brethren J. W. Bean and George Sackfield.

While there were not many camping, yet those who were there were faithful in attendance and felt amply repaid for the sacrifices they had to make to come. There was a large attendance from the various branches, this being a convenient place for those who were unable to camp to come in during the day and leave after the evening meetings. We were very kindly treated by the Matherville people; many of the nonmembers who attended seemed favorably impressed and contributed quite liberally towards defraying of expenses, which we are pleased to report, were all met, and a balance left in the treasury.

The preaching was of high order, the brethren being blessed with the Spirit in the presentation of the word. One feature of the sermons which was particularly pleasing, was the kind respect shown to other denominations.

The music, under the direction of our district chorister, Brother J. G. Cole, was pronounced a success, but was only a beginning of what we can do if we continue to develop this talent.

Considerable interest was taken in the auxiliary meetings and we feel that some good was accomplished.

On Friday evening a program was rendered to an unusually large and attentive crowd. A goodly number of young people participated in the reunion and a general feeling of good will prevailed. Arrangements were made for social activities which were in no wise intended to interfere with the meetings.

On Wednesday afternoon some of the brethren who are miners, conducted a party of Saints through the coal mines. This was both interesting and instructive.

In the business meeting on Saturday it was decided we hold a reunion next year. Brethren Will Wakeland, Millersburg, J. W. Bean, of Joy, and J. G. Cole, of Peoria, were added to the committee.

Praying that our second reunion may be even more successful than our first,
Yours in bonds,

LORA DICKEY, Secretary,
MIRA CADY, Assistant.

MATHERVILLE, ILLINOIS, September 4, 1916.

Stewartsville Reunion

The reunion held in the beautiful grove of B. J. Dice of Stewartsville, opening August 18 and closing the 28th, will be chronicled as one of the best ever held there. From the opening prayer to the closing exercises the Spirit of the Lord was present.

The preaching in the main was with power, having upon several occasions a prophetic ring to it which was full of instruction and admonition, signally for a higher spiritual altitude, and a more devoted life.

The prophecies given outlined future conditions as very perilous and trying, for the unfaithful especially, with promises of great blessings from our heavenly Father to the children of God if true to their covenant.

The young men were urged to live a more devoted life of sacrifice, not only of temporal possessions but of their lives with their gifts and endowments. The young maidens were encouraged to put on the beautiful garments of virtue, humility, modesty, and free themselves from the fashions and follies of the world; and all the Saints urged to contribute all that is possible for the work of God in this his hastening time, for the gates of opportunity for the spread of the gospel to the nations spoiled by war would be thrown open, and the army of workers in the great harvest field must be great, and strong with the power of God to accomplish the work designed. Our indulgent Father is good; let us all respond to his call.

R. B.

DUNEDIN, NEW ZEALAND, August 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: We appreciate the HERALD and find we would not get along without it, as it keeps us in touch with the church. We feel our isolation here in New Zealand, but trust that Brother Savage when he comes, will labor in the south island, and so keep the work along here. If, as we hear, he labors among the Moaris, it will not help us in Dunedin, as most of the Moaris are in north island—but the missionary will know best.

With best wishes,

Yours in gospel bonds,

ALFRED LEBHERZ.

TAINUI, Ferguson Street.

SIoux CITY, IOWA, August 19, 1916.

Editors Herald: Some time ago I noticed through the HERALD that your assistant, Brother J. F. Garver, would have to leave that position he had occupied so long and faithfully. Now I see an editorial in the HERALD for August 16, 1916, entitled, "What Beholdest Thou?" and signed E. D. Moore. If Brother Moore is the new assistant and this editorial is a sample of his work, I look forward (with all due love and respect to the editor) and see "this" publication "do" the work that it is intended by the church to do. If the said brother is not the assistant editor there is no offense meant, and if we could have many more such ones the people would be enlightened. And if our people would fill the HERALD with edifying sermons in place of some personal hardship or self sacrifice, how much greater effect our work would have in the big world.

What do I see in the editorial? A good outline for eleven sermons. Would it be a fair question if I asked you the same question? What do you see? God has given us the food and now we want him to feed it to us.

I don't understand them! How can you expect to if you never read or study them. The food is there, feed yourself, and see how fat (spiritually) you will grow. Do you ever think? How much? What do you think about? Do we sustain our officers and other church workers whom we say we love? How? Too much lip service! That means "hot air." Neither the church nor its officers can live on that kind of food. Let us eat the food God has given us and we will then be in a condition and a position to sustain all we have as a church.

You can't tell the world what kind of food we have if you have never tasted it yourself. Study and understand what you have and then you can edify others. Will you assist?

CHARLES J. SMITH.

SKIATOOK, OKLAHOMA, August 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: I feel lonesome on this Sabbath morning and it is raining and I cannot go to Sunday school and prayer meeting. I do enjoy prayer meeting so much. I always love to meet with the dear Saints and to hear the testimonies and prayers. We always have such spiritual prayer meetings, and all is peace and love, and I feel to thank the Lord, for there is no malice as far as I know in our little branch. But where they are few in number the Lord will surely be in our midst to own and bless.

Now dear Saints, my daily prayer is for the Saints and for the upbuilding of Zion.

As ever,

Your sister in the one faith,

DELLAH WATSON.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

At the Sunday school on September 3 there were present eight hundred and ninety-five. The closing prayer was by the Pastor, W. W. Smith, who, while urging the children to attend the meeting in the lower room, announced the program of music, storytelling, and sermon by Brother R. B. Trowbridge.

At the early prayer service the prayers and testimonies of the children were humble and impressive, and with the help and inspiration of the young men and women they are bringing glory and honor to the work.

The discourse of the morning was by Brother W. W. Smith. He felt very keenly the needs of this people, and at the starting out of his ministry, the people's condition and their comfort and necessities have rested heavily on his heart. The attitude of the church depends upon our efforts, and, possibly, upon those of our children. His text was: "The glory of God is intelligence." The sum total of intelligence is that which makes a man a man, and the glory of God is our aim: its degrees are feeling, knowing and willing. In the afternoon the sacrament was administered by President Frederick M. Smith, assisted by Brethren Bond, Garrett, and W. D. Bullard. Among those bearing testimonies were Brethren May and Fairclough.

Brother May with emotion told of the great disaster in London, pleading for the prayers of the Saints. Brother Bond, who a few days ago had seen the pathetic spectacle of veterans with their grizzled faces wearily "marching as to war," was enthused with the Spirit, and his mind now rested upon the words which had long years ago been uttered by the choice Seer, and which had radiated forth the light and truth of the gospel that peace and good will might be brought to earth again.

As to news items, Labor Day has passed into history with all its glamor and vain pleasure seeking. Some of the Saints are taking great delight in improving the appearance of the city and so helping to build up Zion. Our brother, Doctor Luff, is doing his noble part, Doctor and Sister McNichols have developed into wise home builders, and Sister S. A. Dake, who with her own hands has bought and beautified a big ranch in Nebraska, now comes home and plants firmly her stakes, adding to her faithful service in the church her humble efforts towards making a home in Zion.

Thus may we all labor and patiently wait.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Lamoni, Iowa

The branch at Lamoni and the stake of which it is a center are in the midst of a distinctly forward movement that is very gratifying to chronicle. And the indications are that this movement is established on that sure foundation of consecrated and devoted service that will carry it through victorious to the end.

In common with the many other church communities, we held a reunion at this place, closing August 27, which was not only largely attended by the Saints of this and surrounding branches, but with an abiding, enlightening portion of that Spirit that brings intelligence and spiritual strength. We have had many excellent reunions, but we have heard of no one who remembers one that equalled this one.

From those meetings went out a small army of Saints who had resolutely resolved that whatever duty fell to them in the building up of the kingdom of God and its righteousness on earth it would be done gladly and joyfully, for had not God promised to be with every one of us if we would only move forward?

The Sunday evening meetings at the church are advertised as special "gospel services," the subjects and speakers selected to present them, being especially for those who are not members of the church and those in the church who like doctrinal sermons. The attendance and interest at the first meeting, last Sunday evening, were gratifying. The choir is making special efforts to make the meetings attractive from a musical standpoint.

At the recent branch business meeting Paul N. Craig and E. J. Giles, of the new stake presidency, were made the associates of J. F. Garver in the presidency of the Lamoni Branch. Elder Craig has charge of the vocal music department at the college and has moved here to take up that work. All his spare time will be devoted to the duties devolving upon him as counselor to the president of the stake. Elder Giles has moved his family here from Hiteman and has been busy with meetings in the stake tent in out lying branches. He will continue to devote all his time to his work in the stake and branch presidency.

At the August sacrament meeting Elders E. J. Giles, F. M. McDowell and R. V. Hopkins were ordained high priests. At our recent branch business meeting the recommendation of the branch presidency were concurred in for the ordination of A. Otis White, son of Elder D. C. White, as deacon, and Frank Almond as priest.

Many from here plan to attend the debate to be held at Andover, Missouri, about seven miles south, beginning the 11th, Elder L. G. Holloway affirms our church propositions and Elder William Ellmore, of Covington, Indiana, affirms those of the nonprogressive faction of the Christian Church. The meetings will be held in the big reunion tent.

Students are arriving from all directions for enrollment at Graceland College on the 8th. F. M. McDowell, one of the faculty, is quite ill at his father's home in Plano, Illinois, and latest reports are that typhoid fever is threatened. Elder McDowell had been attending several reunions in the interests of the college work.

A number of interesting features are developing locally, but we may tell of them later.

DELBERT.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL OKLAHOMA.—August 26, at Reeding. District president, Joseph Arber, chosen to preside, assisted by E. D. Bailey. Reports: Skiatook, Holdenville, Terlton, Piedmont, Rockcreek. Collection taken for the sarcophagus of Joseph Smith, ten dollars. Recommendations for ordination of Daniel Sorden and William Dolan to the office of elder adopted and referred to the district president and missionary in charge. Adjourned to meet at call of district president and missionary in charge. Prayer meetings were spiritual and uplifting. Good crowds, excellent spirit. Joseph Arber, president; Alice McGeorge, secretary.

UTAH.—At Glenwood Park, Ogden, August 12 and 13, J. W. Rushton and district presidency presiding. Bishop's agent, C. A. Smurthwaite, reported: Receipts, $557.06; expenditures, $531.96. Ministerial reports from B. L. McKim and A. V. Closson. Adjourned to meet at call of minister in charge and district presidency. Reunion at same place August 14 to 20 was a success. Brother Rushton was obliged to leave on the 17th to attend the California reunion. His sermons each evening were a source of inspiration and pleasure. A permanent reunion was organized. The sudden death of Hyrum Smith on the 17th caused a feeling of sadness during the remaining days. Pearl Wardle, secretary, Sandy, Utah.

Conference Notices

Toronto, at Arthur, Ontario, September 30 and October 1, 1916. Branch clerks requested to send credentials not later than September 26 to Mrs. Floralice Miller, Arthur, Ontario, in care of William Goulding. Please note the above address. S. G. St. John, president; Floralice Miller, secretary.

Pittsburgh, convention and conference at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, September 30, 31, and October 1. Emma Lockard, secretary, 622 Sickles Street, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Western Michigan, at Freesoil, September 23 and 24. All branches please have reports in. Thomas Hartnell, district president.

Convention Notices

Toronto Religio at Arthur, Ontario, September 29, 1916. Send all credentials before September 26 to Mrs. Floralice Miller, Arthur, Ontario, in care of William J. Goulding. Local secretaries please note above address. Ernest Rowett, president; Floralice Miller, secretary.

Two-Day Meetings

Oak Ridge, near Lancaster, Wisconsin, September 16 and 17; Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin, September 23 and 24; East Delavan, near Williams Bay, Wisconsin, September 30 and October 1. B. C. Flint and Lester Wildermuth.

Notice of Transfer

Through an agreement with Gomer T. Griffiths, President F. M. Smith concurring, notice is hereby given that James M. Baker has been transferred from Southern Ohio District to Northeastern Nebraska District. JAMES A. GILLEN.

Married

HAWKINS-HOLMES.—At the Saints' church, corner of Spencer Avenue and Grant Street, Brother Hale F. Hawkins, and Sister Anna Bell Holmes, were united in the holy and sacred bonds of matrimony. Brother Hawkins is an employee of the Home Union Mercantile Company, of San Jose, and Sister Holmes is the daughter of Sister D. J. Holmes, of East San Jose. Elder C. W. Hawkins, pastor of the branch, and father of the groom, performed the ceremony that made them one for life.

Died

HOWERY.—C. D. Howery died at his home in Antler, North Dakota, August 22, 1916, at the age of 85 years, 10 months, 20 days. He was ordained an elder by Zenos H. Gurley, sr. At twenty-one he married Elizabeth Stevens, who survives him in addition to six sons and two daughters: George, of Lamoni, Iowa; B. W., of Westhope, North Dakota; Mrs. J. E. Gorden, Mrs. D. Dumont, A. E., F. T., Z. H., and Samuel of Antler. A man of excellent habits and invariably a good neighbor. Funeral from Presbyterian church; interment in city cemetery.

CORSON.—James D. Corson was born June 1, 1837; died May 10, 1916. Baptized by J. R. Beckley, at Ogden, Michigan, about fourteen years ago and has continued a faithful member since. Funeral at his home in Blissfield, Michigan, G. A. Smith officiating, assisted by Eugene Butts.

ALDRICH.—Beatrice Gross Aldrich, daughter of Mark and Clara Gross, was born December 11, 1898, at Uniopolis, Ohio; baptized by W. P. Buckley; died August 9, 1916. Having been taught the gospel in her childhood, she lived a devoted Christian life. Married Luther Aldrich, February 14, 1916. Funeral services at Lima, Ohio, in charge of G. A. Smith, assisted by Jesse Hardin. Interment in Fairmount Cemetery, near Uniopolis.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; E. D. Moore, Assistant Editor.
Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration. All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice. For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter. Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
Woman's Work in the Church	881
"The Iowa Mormons"	882
Current Events	883
Notes and Comments	884
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
How Do We Interpret? by J. R. Lambert	887
That Theological Chair, by J. W. Peterson	890
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
The Fatherland of the Jews	892
Liquor Vote On Suffrage	893
The Superficial Age	893
THE STAFF
Arthur E. McKim—V. V. Short—Anna de Jong Smith—Arthur H. Mills.	896
WOMAN'S AUXILIARY
Anna de Jong Smith—Ermina Perkins Kearney.	898
THE CHILDREN'S HOME
LETTER DEPARTMENT	898
Peter Adamson, sr.—A. Jensen—Lora Dickey— Alfred Leberz—Charles J. Smith—Dellah Watson.
NEWS FROM BRANCHES	901
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT	901

DEMPSEY.—Celestia M. Dempsey, born May 28, 1885, at Fort Scott, Kansas; died August 25, 1916, Denver, Colorado. Baptized March 4, 1916, by T. B. Nerren. Just before she died she said, "God will take care of me." May all God's children have this assurance, what a source of strength such testimonies are especially when coming from those facing death, and such a comfort to loved ones left behind. She leaves father, mother, sister and two brothers to mourn their loss. Sermon by H. D. Bartlett, assisted by G. Walling.

MCKENZIE.—Archibald McKenzie, born in Picton County, Nova Scotia, in 1833, died at Saint Clair, June 26, 1916. Baptized in 1902 by Elder Skinner, of Saint Clair. He was an invalid from rheumatism, having been confined to his chair since 1911, and suffered from cancer for sixteen months, from which he died. Survived by companion. He was a member of the G. A. R., having served in the Civil War. He died in the hope of a glorious resurrection.

JANEY.—Hazel Janey, aged 18 years, died July 26, 1916. For the last six years she had suffered a great deal. Baptized 2 years ago by A. J. Moore, and had a glorious hope that she would come forth in the resurrection of the just, and I have no doubt as to her crown of life. Funeral conducted by A. J. Moore to a large congregation in the Methodist Church near South Boulder, Montana.

LUKECART.—Mollie Hoffman Lukecart, daughter of Andrew and Mary Hoffman, born February 18, 1865, at Bander, Texas; died August 19, 1916. Married G. W. Lukecart, August 27, 1889, and to them 4 children were born, Roy, Maurice, Maude and Dora, all of whom with their father, survive. She was baptized July 27, 1883, by P. L. Stephenson, at Little Sioux, Iowa. Although isolated from the church most of her life, she was consistent, and faithful in her religion until life's sunset.

SMITH.—Hyrum Smith, born at Council Bluffs, Iowa, June

15, 1852; died August 17, 1916, at Ogden, Utah, while attending the Utah reunion. He had been a sufferer with stomach trouble for several years. Married Lucy A. Griffiths, May 21, 1876, who with 6 children, 20 grandchildren, 3 sisters, 1 brother remain. Although not a member of the church, yet he was one in thought and deed, always making a home for the elders. A loving father and ever-ready friend, esteemed by all who knew him. Sermon by A. V. Closson, at Union Fort Mormon chapel, to a large attendance. Interment in South Cottonwood Cemetery.

FULLERLOVE.—Mrs. Estella Fullerlove, born October 22, 1861; married William Fullerlove in 1879. Baptized by Henry Sparling, in 1899. Died September 4, 1916, following an operation. For years she had been a constant sufferer from what was supposed to be a cancer. She leaves to mourn a mother, husband, 1 daughter, Mrs. Wilda Yarton, 1 grandson, 1 sister, 2 brothers, and many friends. Funeral at New-comer's Hall, sermon by F. C. Warnky, assisted by J. A. Tanner. Interment in Elmwood Cemetery.

"Joe Pine"

Some unlooked for delays in securing materials prevented the completion of the new book, Joe Pine, by Elbert A. Smith, but we certainly expect to mail them out this month.

There has been an unusual interest in the story—as it appeared in Autumn Leaves the past year—and we are confident that this interest will increase as the book is circulated.

There are a few of the autograph edition unsold. Send your order now, $1.35, and get one of these special copies at the regular price.

THE PUBLISHERS.

Baby Pictures

CRADLE ROLL CERTIFICATE

September 1 was the date set for having our new cradle roll certificate ready for mailing.

The committee appointed to pass on the photographs to be used for this certificate has met and report that there has not been a sufficient number of photographs received to date, that will make clear cuts.

Again we urge that you send a photograph of any one or all of your children taken before four years of age. Send their first name (their pet name) as we wish this name to appear beneath their picture. Those who have not done this previously should do so yet.

Wrap your photo as securely as possible and state if you wish it returned.

Don't delay sending right away.

A. CARMICHAEL, Manager.

"The Journal of History"

[From the Missouri Historical Review, July, 1916, we quote the following favorable mention of our Journal of History, which may be of interest as expressive of the views of literary people outside of our own ranks.]

The April, 1916, number of the Journal of History (Vol. 9, No. 2) published at Lamoni, Iowa, by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is devoted entirely to the tragic story of the early Missouri-Mormon history. Manuscripts, newspapers, records, and secondary works are reproduced and much new and important information is set forth. The territory covered includes the following Missouri counties, in all of which the Mormons settled and strug-

FOR SALE

Two acres of fine lying land, all set to young fruit just coming into bearing—new 6 room house, back plastered and finely finished. 2 never failing wells, new hen house 10 x 24. Located on South State St. Bargain for cash. E. F. Hall, Lamoni, Iowa. 31-tf

The Woman's Auxiliary Year Book

FOR 1916-1918

This book contains necessary information for those engaged in the Woman's Auxiliary work of the church. Every sister should get one. Price 20c. 35-tf
Iowa, or Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri. Order from your nearest house to save postage.
Herald Publishing House, Lamoni,

TRUANTS. A one-act Religio comedy by John Preston. Three men (or boys) and 3 women (or girl) characters. Plot concerns a number of Religians who through some excuse or other have stayed home from meeting. The way it works out is amusing. Adapted to any audience or occasion. 34 pages, attractive cover25c

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist

in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

Wanted

SAINTS' HERALD for January and March, 1863. Anyone having above numbers and care to dispose of them correspond with 35-3t

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

gled: Jackson, Daviess, Caldwell, Ray, and Carroll. Their most bitter experiences were in the first three. The expulsion of these people from Jackson, their forced emigration from the north Missouri River counties, and the conflicts in other places, all culminating in the tragedy at Far West, are vividly described in this publication, principally by means of inserted reprints and extracts from other publications. Some current popular ideas that have persisted in obtaining credence are contradicted. The so-called "Adam's Grave" in Daviess County is thus commented: "Above the house on the crown of the hill, still plainly visible is the old 'Nephite Altar' known in the neighborhood as 'Adam's Grave.' The superstitious still tell of lights seen there on Friday nights, and that Adam comes out on these occasions. Where these traditions originated we do not know for there is no record of the Latter Day Saints claiming, in that early day, that Adam was buried there." (P. 139.)

The articles are interestingly written and are well illustrated. The publication is readable throughout and will prove of service to the future historian who attempts to compile a history of these people during their early settlements in the State.

Typewriter Service in Rural Communities

The typewriter is coming into more extended use in rural communities because of the assistance it renders to all classes of people. Here are a few examples of the possibilities of service:

The Farmer: Think of the possibilities of selling produce by the means of typewritten letters sent out to customers? Typewritten letters give the sender a business standing with the people who receive them and also enable the keeping of carbon copies of the correspondence, which many times does away with misunderstandings and lawsuits.

The General Store Merchant: More prompt and courteous treatment is likely to be accorded his orders and correspondence with the City jobber and manufacturer if his letters are typewritten.

In The Home: The boy or girl who is intending to follow a business career can secure no better start than a knowledge of typewriter operating. Children who learn to use the typewriter learn spelling at the same time. The housewife finds it a great convenience in writing recipes and for general correspondence.

The Minister: No Clergyman should be without a typewriter. It is of great assistance in preparing sermons and writing the many letters that a pastor has to write.

Mail us the
Coupon to-day

L. C. SMITH & BROS. TYPEWRITER CO.
903 W. LOCUST ST., DES MOINES, IOWA

Please send me information as checked below:

- Send me free catalog.
 How can I get a Factory Rebuilt L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter?
 What about trading in my old machine?

Name _____

Street or P. O. _____

State _____

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, SEPTEMBER 20, 1916

NUMBER 38

Editorial

UNDER THE JUNIPER TREE

It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life.—1 Kings 19: 4.

Following a most spectacular manifestation of God's power through him, we have here one of the strange characters of Bible history yielding to the natural impulses that come to all of us and asking God to take his life. Evidently he desired to shake off the mortal coil and enter into that rest that he had reason to believe awaited him.

Pursued by the frenzied emissaries of a wicked queen who sought his life, out in a dreary wilderness waste, without food and alone; seemingly deserted by his own friends and countrymen, why should he continue to live?

Evidently he had reached a crisis in his life and the strings of the human instrument that should have been in harmony and in tune with God were all unstrung. He was not actuated at this time by the beauties of nature beckoning him on and on into realms of beauty and bliss. Authorities tell us that the juniper tree is merely a bush, sometimes attaining a height of twelve feet, but with no main trunk—only possessing wand-like, slender branches and having a value in stopping sand as it blows across the desert.

So the scenery out there a day's journey into the wilderness whither his enemies had driven him was not of the ecstatically beautiful. Plainly it was a case of pure dejection. We can but weep for Elijah as we think of him there in his desolation. But there is some more to the story:

As he lay and slept under a juniper tree, behold, then an angel touched him, and said unto him, Arise and eat. And he looked, and, behold, there was a cake baken on the coals, and a cruse of water at his head: and he did eat and drink, and laid him down again. And the angel of the Lord came again the second time, and touched him, and said, Arise and eat; because the journey is too great for thee. And he arose, and did eat and drink, and went in the strength of that meat forty days and forty nights unto Horeb the mount of God.—1 Kings 19: 5-8.

Thus we have a brief but remarkable story. The following verses tell us that he was discouraged because he thought he and he alone of all Israel was left who had not forsaken the covenant and gone after strange gods. He was jealous for the Lord God. In his despair his vision was so blurred that he had not perceived that there were seven thousand in Israel who had not bowed the knee to Baal, the god of the heathen.

What was the prescription of the Great Physician for the wounded and distressed soul? First, there was a satisfying of the most imminent need: food—the ministering to the temporal man. Then that which would heal his distressed mental and spiritual condition: Work—activity—physical exertion as well as mental. From the southern end of the Sinaitic peninsula to which he was directed to travel, he must return to the northern limits of the land and there anoint certain men as kings. Not only did God assure him that there were others who were faithful, but he was teaching this prophet that which we most of us have learned by experience as well as precept, that in active service to our fellow men do we find the sufficient balm for wounded souls.

ARE THERE ANY MODERN JUNIPER TREES?

This brief article might well end here but we want to appeal to any discouraged Elijahs attained or in the making, who, prostrate under modern juniper trees, may be desiring to leave us here without them to fight the battles before us.

They are all too common, even to-day, and while some of the similarities of the simile may only be imaginative, there are so many realities to the situation that we are impelled to call attention to them.

SEEKING RELIEF FROM BAAL

None of us are exempt from the condition. Letters come to this office and are printed in these columns which portray the discouraging features of isolation. The thought is sometimes expressed and often implied that from among the many rushing madly after the pleasures and follies of the world some are honest in heart and would heed a real call to righteousness. Others write from the branches and they see discouraging conditions there: so little done and so much done that should be avoided. They ask for temporary leadership. Then there are the hundreds that are not heard from, who obey the gospel's call, are baptized, left to themselves without a shepherd and drift back into the world, hardly realizing that they might have developed into strong men and women in the sight of God. The cry is: Send us men—men of God to remedy these conditions.

Then from other sources the indications come. Not long since we heard from the lips of one in charge of an important part of the general work of the church that the burden of the responsibility was so great as he sought to fill the constant demands for ministerial labor here and there, with the all too few men to respond, that the enormity of the problem prayed upon him and he had come to spend many a sleepless night thinking and planning, trying to keep pace somewhat with the legitimate demands of the work. It was such a discouraging realization that the great fields were all white for the harvest yet a dearth of willing hands to enter in and gather the waiting grain that he felt a great personal responsibility and insignificance in coping with the problem.

In this manner he expressed the human side of many a burden-weary soul who has had an insight into the living possibilities to be attained and the relatively little progress we have really made.

ARE THE SEVEN THOUSAND AMONG US?

May we say to the isolated Saint in yonder distant hamlet, or to the man of God in charge of an important mission, "Be ye cheered and comforted; there are yet seven thousand among us who have not gone after the gods of the world, but who are now coming to your aid"?

Would to God we might herald the news to-day! How gladly would we publish the glad tidings to those afar off as well as those at home. Yet with the seven thousand or any other number, must be that moral, financial, and spiritual support in the consecration of the lives of those who remain. The nations at war to-day point with pride to the willing sacrifices made by the ones who may not go to the battle front but who as valiantly serve in their way.

The need for consecrated, intelligent, Spirit-impelled workers is too great to seek to express—but surely we all realize that. We will all give vociferous assent that whether it be some distant outpost or the most contiguous territory to those residing in the center places there is more and more demand for the labor of all who will serve.

USING ALL WE HAVE

But are we using all we have? Are there any disheartened fugitives from themselves under our own juniper trees who prevent the full use of all our forces? Do any of us freely give in certain favorite lines and obstinately refuse in others as important but less congenial? Do we realize that our perversity is liable to affect not only our effectiveness but that of many others?

There comes to mind with much force the case of one who was so spiritually eloquent that he could command the attention of his audiences, whether of friend or foe. Truly he was a polished shaft in the hands of God, yet the time came when disaffection arose and the conduct of certain others drove him to a juniper tree in the wilderness of skepticism and when the angel came to offer him food that he might return, he listened not. To-day his most excellent talents are lost to the world and himself, and who knows how many hundreds or thousands have through his failure been left to grope in darkness?

ON TO HOREB—BACK TO DAMASCUS

The wrong is not so much in being moved by the conditions around us, but in not asserting the strength of our virile manhood and womanhood, and with God's aid rising above them. With our strength, supplemented by that which God will give us, we may journey safely to our Mount Horeb to commune with God and back to our Damascus and our duties, undaunted.

Seemingly the stronger our tendencies and the greater our qualifications the more serious is likely to be the crisis that despondency may bring to our lives. The greater the heights we attain the farther we must fall if we allow our feet to slip on the rocks of doubt and despair.

Elijah's great crisis came to him after he had been instrumental in one of the most dramatic scenes of Bible history. God had sent fire down from heaven to devour not only the sacrifice offered, but the very water in the trenches round about it.

SPIRITUAL SUICIDE

In our own lives it seems to matter not that the most convincing demonstrations of God's power have been given us—when the deadening influence of melancholia comes over us we often fail to perceive or comprehend the most apparent truths that God has revealed to us. It is a sad condition indeed. The influence of despondency may not prostrate us under our juniper tree and we may not call on our God to take our lives, but when we become obsessed with the idea that we only are left and all others are going wrong, we are in reality taking our own lives. Spiritually, we are in a suicidal condition. Yet just such thoughts do come to otherwise normal human beings. In many of its aspects, we have seen actual demonstrations of the experience of the lonely prophet of God in the desert of Judah in the lives of those about us—possibly in our own. They give us sympathy for them and him.

"LOST—ONE SPUR"

In a western newspaper we recently ran across a commonplace want ad which began like this: "Lost—One Spur," and closed with "Leave at this office and receive reward."

Possibly that is the spur we needed to urge us past the dangerous shadows of our personal juniper tree. We surmise that when located, this lost spur may prove to be an instrument of physical torture, but that will not affect its value to us. We are aware that physical exertion that may almost reach the proportions of torture oftentimes relieves our mental troubles. It was only after Elijah had traveled far and much that God relieved his mental suspense—he was ready for it then.

Maybe we could use Elijah's prescription. By rolling up our real or metaphorical sleeves and wading into the job, we may clear out the juniper trees on our own premises and then help get rid of some that hide our neighbors' abilities. But it's better to develop a little experience at home that others may have confidence in us.

OUR WORK MUST BE FINISHED

Dear readers, there is altogether too much before us to waste our time and energy and efficiency in an indulgence in mental depression. Truly, there may be naturally discouraging conditions that must have our attention, but we need all our normal faculties and more, too, to deal with them, so let's keep free from dejection. Whether these "spells" come only occasionally or are chronic, the harm is relatively the same. Those who labor faithfully will meet unpleasant conditions—but those who do not will also. May the same God who gave the prophet of old to understand that his work was not yet done, touch the hearts of those who are here and there prone to give up to discouragement and vital despair. May the work which needs their whole-hearted support receive it from a willing heart.

Our juniper tree may be only a little shrub. We may quit the Religio because we don't like the president. We may absent ourselves from prayer meeting because we don't like the trend of the meetings. Possibly we learn to dislike the preaching services because the preacher seems uninteresting. We may withhold a tithe because we are not sure it's to be spent right. It may be some other folly. Take another look for the lost spur. Try to realize the magnitude of the work before all of us and forget such petty things by rising above and leaving them. There is no time for magnifying personal or general disaffections. "Quit yourselves like men."

One of Solomon's sayings appeals to us, and in conclusion we quote it: "If thou faint in the day of thy adversity, thy strength is small."

E. D. MOORE.

MAGAZINE NUMBER

Our next issue will be a special magazine number, devoted to the work in Australia. The regular departments will be dispensed with and the entire number will be given over to profusely illustrated articles which in various ways portray the situation and spirit thereof existing in our far-away mission across the sea.

If you have friends here or in that land who do not receive the HERALD you might be doing them a special favor by ordering a copy or copies sent directly to them. Send the office ten cents for each copy and they will be mailed direct.

CURRENT EVENTS

SUFFRAGE AND PROHIBITION WIN.—Election returns from the Canadian province of British Columbia indicate that both these issues have prevailed there.

HEAVY FROSTS.—Crop damage running into the millions as a result of recent heavy and early frosts in the West and Middle West is reported. Snow has fallen in a number of places.

VILLA ATTACKS CHIHUAHUA.—It is officially announced that Pancho Villa's followers to the number of a thousand attacked the city of Chihuahua, Mexico, on the night of the 15th, and were repulsed with a loss of six hundred killed and wounded. A large number of the men captured were immediately tried by court martial and put to death.

ARCTIC EXPLORERS RETURN.—The exploring party headed by Vilhjalmur Stefansson, which left for the Far North in June, 1913, has returned with seven of the party. Fourteen members of the expedition perished in the North. A number of interesting discoveries are reported, including great quantities of copper and new species of mammals and flowers.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The drive of the Bulgar-Germanic forces into the province of Dobrudja in Rumania has not only restored the territory lost by Bulgaria in the Balkan War, but has practically destroyed the Rumanian-Russian armies who were thus seeking to check the advance toward Bucharest. Enormous losses in the defenders' ranks are reported and confirmed. Many soldiers are being withdrawn from the Transylvanian region to strengthen the defense of Rumania's capital. While the Rumanians in Austria have made some advance, the Germans have sent in a large number of men to aid the Austrians, resulting in a check to the onward rush. The Russians in the Carpathians have taken a number of fortified heights, but this strengthening of the defense seems to have prevented an invasion of the Hungarian plains. The violent offensive of the Russians in Galicia has resulted in some gains and the taking of a large number of prisoners. Another unconfirmed report asserts that Halicz, the key to Lemberg, has fallen into Russian hands. The drive of the Franco-British allies in the Somme region has been continued with unusual success and at least three important villages taken and held. These places are in a position to seriously menace Combles, Peronne, and Bapaume. One of the most talked-of features of the war has been the introduction of a new type of armored car on caterpillar wheels which carries revolving turrets from which the most disastrous fire is poured forth. The British have used this monstrous invention with the most terrifying results, as it literally walks over trenches, craters, and even small trees, while its six-inch armor protects it from anything but a shell from a big gun. The end of the line that runs to the North Sea has been repeatedly shelled by British ships, but seemingly with little effect. The Italians have been successful in their attacks on the Austrians in the Trentino and Gorizian fronts, making some slight gains. In Mesopotamia the Turkish forces seem to have been victorious in encounters with the Russians. On the Macedonian front the British-French-Serbian forces have driven the Bulgarians back at a number of points, inflicting severe losses. German aeroplanes have sunk a Russian destroyer off Riga; three British ships, and two French sloops have been sunk by submarines, while raids and encounters in the air are a constant feature of the war news. A new Greek cabinet has been formed, which is supposed to be favorable to the entente allies.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

COLLEGE DAY.—A number of years ago the church in General Conference assembled set apart the first Sunday in October of each year as College Day. This date falls on October 1 this year and should be recognized by every member as an opportunity to render special aid to one of our valued church institutions. Turn to the communication from Bishop McGuire in the Miscellaneous Department and carefully read his appeal.

REFORMS HAVE BEGUN.—The General Federation of Women's Clubs held recently in New York adopted resolutions recommending the standardization of street dresses. Writers in discussing this action predicted opposition by manufacturers and merchants, stating that they were profiting on the folly of woman. One of the grandest movements of modern times in the interest of modesty and chastity was a small number of women who organized a kind of "make over" club for the making over of old garments rather than buying new ones, not following the style so much but rather the trend of good sense and economy. It is unfortunate that this movement is isolated and not popular.—The Light.

ONLY HIRED

(Reprinted from Hesperis by request.)

There is some one gone from the household band,
An absence we scarcely can name;
We miss the strength of a helping hand
Never prized, till the sad loss came.
We never knew that her lips were so red,
That her cheeks were so pure and white;
The clustering curls of her shapely head
Were so wondrously soft and bright.
We miss her sadly, since she is gone,
Though little she dreamed it could be;
For her last words were, as she died, at dawn,
"There is no one to mourn for me."

It was only the orphan earning her bread
In the house of the stranger for hire;
So we thought not the swift feet would ever lag,
Or the stout, humble heart ever tire.
Now, no money could buy the sweet, glad smile,
Or waken the clear laugh again;
Or the song whose music could ever beguile
The presence of sorrow and pain.

So we gathered around her low bed with surprise,
We did not believe she would die;
We read not the strange light that shone in her eyes,
Nor the sense of her double reply.
We spoke of the task she yet would do,
When health would return in a while;
She looked through the pane at the heaven's blue—
Her answer, a strange, sad smile.

We read in her book, where she used to write,
How she starved for affectionate love;
How she hoped the angels that walk in white,
More friendly and loving would prove.
She has gone to try them, and well we know
They will welcome her one of their own;
Her fountain of sorrow has ceased to flow,
While the fountain of joy has begun.

We wish we had spoken a friendly word,
And given a friendly hand
While she pined with us, like a mateless bird
In a strange, unfriendly land.
We pause for something we may not say,
And think for some kind act to do—
'Tis vain, she is silent, and calm as the day
When clouds are asleep in the blue.
We cannot recall her; in quiet she lies;
Her hands grasp the lilies at last;
While realms far beyond us dawn on her eyes—
Her toiling and waiting are past.

—David H. Smith, in Hesperis.

Original Articles

AN EPISTLE

(By Gomer T. Griffiths, president of the Twelve Apostles. Addressed to the ministry and members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in all the world.)

The undersigned has felt impressed for some time to address the following words of advice by way of suggestion to the entire membership of the church and more particularly to the ministry. Vividly indeed has been impressed the thought, or feeling, that every member of the Church of Christ should occupy that position designated by our Lord, as lights upon the hills which can be seen afar off. And also there has come strongly the impression that the hastening time is upon us. By virtue of many years of experience which have been spent by the writer in observations among many branches and districts in nearly all the missions of the church throughout the earth, the fact has been made plain that many of us, members and officers are indulging in habits and observing customs which should be observed no longer among us, for they are detrimental to the welfare and progress of the Lord's work. In this communication, attention is called to several of these unseemly practices.

ADMINISTERING TO THE SICK

Is it wise for the officers who are called upon to anoint with oil to prolong this ceremony by indulging in prayers which consume from ten to fifteen minutes of time, seeing that immediately is to follow a prayer by the brother who confirms the anointing? Remember that during all this time the hands of the elders are resting, as a rule, heavily on the head of the suffering one. How unpleasant it must be to the sick person to have to endure this unnecessary burden. Hands should rest lightly upon the head of the one being administered to. The commandment is that we should anoint the sick in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is evident that the Lord does not require a lengthy prayer from the one who anoints. And the prayer which is offered by the elder who confirms should be brief, unless he is otherwise led by the Holy Ghost. It is to be deeply regretted that some of our elders continue to disregard the following plain counsel which the Lord gave in the year 1901:

Prophesying over them that are sick in administering to them has been a fruitful source of trouble among my people. They must observe that this they are not required to do except there be a direct manifestation of the Spirit which may direct it. Pray over the sick, anoint them with oil, as commanded in the law, and leave them in my hands, that the Spirit may deal with them according to my wisdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 15.

Neither is it necessary to continually remind the Lord, in our prayers, of his promises and power and ability to do, for the reason he is aware of all his promises and able to verify them for our good when we are willing to comply with the conditions which he has made. It would be well, in this connection especially to keep in mind the words of the Prophet Samuel: "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."—1 Samuel 15: 22.

FURTHER ADVICE ON PRAYER

Quite a number of our brethren indulge in praying too long. This mistake is especially noticeable at the opening of preaching services. And this is made much worse by getting behind the pulpit, or turning the face away from the people and praying in a voice so low that few if any are able to hear a word that is uttered. This makes it impossible for the congregation to unite their thoughts and hearts with the one who prays, and at the conclusion they are not able to say amen to the sentiments expressed, for they know not what has been said. Long prayers and prayers that cannot be heard do not lend dignity to the service which is thus publicly dedicated to the Lord.

Again, is it not proper that all should stand when the opening prayer is being offered at a preaching service? Many have contended that it is highly improper for prayers to be offered while the one who prays is standing, even thinking that such prayers are not efficacious. But it is evident that such persons have overlooked the fact that in nearly every instance where prayer is offered in the church, it is offered by one who is standing. For examples: When pronouncing the benediction, administering to the sick, consecrating oil, blessing children, confirming members, ordaining the ministry, and in performing the baptismal and marriage ceremonies. The only exception is in the commandment to kneel when offering the sacramental prayer. And the fact that we are thus commanded to kneel would indicate that kneeling is the exception and not the rule. If it is uniformity we want, in the attitude of prayer, we do not obtain it by kneeling at preaching services, for the reason all present do not kneel at such times; however, when the attitude of standing is observed, there is uniformity, for all are standing at the time of prayer which follows the opening hymn. The minister should request (if necessary) all to bow their heads and join in the spirit of the prayer. Standing conserves uniformity, kneeling hinders it, under the present circumstances. It is not uncommon for the floor to be in such a condition that people do not feel like placing their clothing in contact with it. And often the seats are so near together that it is impossible for all to kneel at the same time. Surely, if God is pleased with the closing prayer, which is offered while all are standing, he will also accept the opening prayer offered under similar condition.

DEPORTMENT IN THE HOUSE OF GOD

At this juncture it is well to call attention to an undignified and unbecoming practice indulged in by many of the Saints—a practice that militates against our influence as a people;—it is the lack of reverence we exhibit in our houses of worship, thus creating confusion and disorder which often make it necessary for the one in charge to call the members to order before the service can be opened. The Lord's people are supposed to be in order wherever they are, and specially in the Lord's house, which is supposed to be always a house of order. Doubtless this carelessness on the part of the Saints arises over the fact that they are so glad to see one another that they forget where they are and exhibit familiarity not encouraged by members of other churches and when witnessed by them lessens their interest in us and the message we bear to the world. The writer is confident that a careful and consistent deporting of ourselves would invite the Spirit of God and not cause unjust (yet deserved) criticism from outsiders because of this woeful lack of reverence of the house of God.

Another common mistake, and one that should be corrected, is the manner many of our people have of taking the back seats when attending services. This leaves a large number of empty seats and a long distance between them and the speaker, thus making it difficult for both speaker and hearer to get into close attention and resulting in unnecessary loss of interest. And perhaps a greater disadvantage which results from this manner of seating is the fact that outsiders are often forced to come way up to the front if they want a seat. Some are not willing to do this, owing often to natural embarrassment, and they stay away. Let the Saints fill in the front seats and so conserve the interest of the singing, speaking, and the general good of the entire service.

It is a sad fact that Saints are often disrespectful to the requests of the ushers who may urge them to take certain seats, or to refrain from habits that annoy others. Members are sometimes offended when asked to refrain from rattling the pages of books, whispering, etc. These deacons or ushers have been selected by the voice of the branch to look out for its best interests. Why, then, should they not be respected when they are simply discharging the duty imposed upon them? In other places due respect must be given to those in charge or the offending party is removed from the building.

PUNCTUALITY

A thing sadly lacking among many of our people, is punctuality in attending church services. It has been observed that in some branches many of our Saints are never on time, never present to join in the opening hymn or hear the opening prayer; and often the officers do not begin on time. From five to ten, and even fifteen minutes go by the time appointed for opening service. The members do not honor the time they have set apart in which to begin the public worship of God. If it is true (as some believe) that angels are present to record our doings, how disappointed they must be to have to wait a quarter of an hour for the children of God to assemble to enter into their public worship of God. Such carelessness and willful neglect should not be had among us. The ministry should begin on time and close on time. And it would be very proper and profitable for the members to gather five minutes early and silently pray and meditate, that preparation may be made to enter immediately into the spirit of the opening service. Let us be punctual in serving the Lord as well as in all other duties.

PULPIT ETIQUETTE

The conduct of our ministry should not be offensive in the pulpit, or elsewhere. How shocking it must be to a refined nature to see a preacher stop in the midst of a sermon and spit on the floor or with unnecessary noise use his handkerchief. It is ill mannered to tilt the chair back or lean heavily on the pulpit, as if too tired to stand up. It is ill mannered and decidedly detrimental to the interests of our work to indulge in such habits as distract the mind of the audience and call from them unfavorable comments.

Another mistake and one that should be emphasized is the habit into which some of our elders have drifted (or from which they have not departed) of ridiculing the faith of any who does not agree with them. Sarcasm is indulged in, and only ill feeling follows its use. We must be above such things, brethren. We must do as we would be done by. The thing that converts men and brings them to Christ, is his gospel. We are to win souls to Christ, not drive them from him. And in our intercourse with our neighbors and among the Saints, we should be careful to be orderly.

Table manners should not be neglected by us. It is fully as easy to use the fork as the knife, when custom demands it, and far more appropriate. Our ministry should not neglect to observe simple civilities and common politeness, which enlarge influence and please our careful friends and bring no reflection upon the cause of Christ.

Be above reproach. We should not wait for the next generation to learn and profit by the plain and important instruction given by the Lord, in Doctrine and Covenants 119:2, 3:

There is a great work to be done by mine elders, and that they may be fitted to do this work and the accomplishment thereof be not prevented, it is enjoined upon them that they shall not only be kind of heart and of a lowly spirit, that their wisdom may be the wisdom of the Lord and their strength the strength of the Spirit, but they shall lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and shall study to approve their ministrations to the people by candor of speech and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls unto Christ. The elders and men of the church should be of cheerful heart and countenance among themselves and in their intercourse with their neighbors and men of the world, yet they must be without blame in word and deed. It is therefore not seemly that they indulge in loud and boisterous speech, or in the relating of coarse and vulgar stories, or those in which the names of their God and their Redeemer are blasphemed. Men of God, who bear the vessels of the Lord, be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing; let your garments be of a sober character and free from excess of ornamentation. Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.

CONCERNING THE SACRAMENT

The action taken by the late General Conference, favoring the individual cups in the communion service, is a move in the right direction and should govern in all branches of the church. All officers who administer the sacrament should observe a uniformity of procedure in all the branches. The emblems should be uncovered when blessed.

In case there are assistants called upon to pass the bread and wine, the presiding officer should stand when passing the emblems to the priest or priests who are to distribute the same among the Saints; and should also stand when receiving the returned vessels.

The officers who distribute the emblems should do so as uniformly as possible, one waiting for the other if necessary, and both returning together to the table, quietly and in step.

It is urged that the Saints observe great care in coming to the Lord's table, not only being clean in heart but also clean in clothing and body. The floor should be free from dirt, the air pure, the hands and nails of the members clean. Most of our churches have places provided where the elders may cleanse their hands before administering the sacred emblems.

OBLATIONS

The Lord has said to us that we should go to the house of prayer and offer up our sacraments upon his holy day and upon this day offer our oblations, or bring our gift to the altar, as a part of the great sacramental service. Giving, then, is as much a part of the service as receiving. And Paul has instructed that we should impart as the Lord has prospered us. Saints should attend to this part of the service and impart freely of their substance.

A word relative to the manner of collecting this offering may be timely. It should be taken up at the first of the service, not waiting till the last when perhaps some have been obliged to leave. The deacons, or ushers, may follow after the priests. The offerings should be brought to the table.

DEACONS

It is well to place in the charge of the deacons the preparing of the emblems and the caring for the sacramental set, linen and so forth. At all services of the membership held in the church, the deacons should have charge of the seating, ventilation, taking of collections, and the like, and if there are more than one deacon the work should be divided and each given certain tasks to perform. System avoids confusion. There should be perfect cooperation between the deacons and the membership. Order should be carefully maintained in the house of God.

PRIESTS AND TEACHERS

Priests and teachers should always be in a position to keep a careful watch over the membership of the church. They should observe who comes to church and who stays away. A good shepherd is not happy while one sheep is away from the fold. Any officer who is not prompt in looking after the work that has been intrusted to him by the Lord is a slothful servant and will not be counted worthy to stand. The statements made in Doctrine and Covenants 17:10, 11 are so plain that no one need refuse to work because he does not understand his duty.

The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties: and he may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons; and he is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present. . . . The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest.

When visiting, it is a good plan, as a rule, for the teacher to take with him either a teacher or a deacon. Official work of this character should be attested by witnesses.

SISTERS' WORK

Many branches have a problem that might be solved by a spiritual-minded sister. Some sister has married outside of the church, and her husband is not willing to have the officers visit her. Should she be neglected by the church? No. Let some good, spiritual sister, or sisters, visit her and encourage her. If convenient prayer should be offered and such things said that will help this tender branch to be revived and bear fruit. Such visiting should be done under the direction or knowledge of the president of the branch. And it might be said here: The president of the branch is president of the branch; not of a few members in it, but of all the members in it, including the various officers of the branch. Every department of the branch work is directly or indirectly under his supervision.

IN CONCLUSION

God has placed in our possession a perfect system. It behooves us to use this system. The great work will go on as fast as the Lord's children are willing to work with him; but we must not forget that if we persistently refuse to discharge the obligations resting upon us, the Master will take from us our share of the rewards and give his work to those who will bring forth the fruit thereof.

The time is soon coming when officers who refuse to honor their calling (and it is a great honor to be called to work with the Lord) will not be counted worthy to stand, and they will be relieved to make way for workers who will obey their Lord and reap the reward of the faithful. Brethren, let us go to with a will. The day is far spent. God has called us with a holy calling. We must be above mean acts, impuning of motives, free from the influence of the green-eyed monster, Jealousy.

May the God of peace sanctify us wholly and bless us in our labors of love for him.

Being interested in other people's duty is not our chief responsibility. Many of us make it a chief responsibility, and therefore many of us fail to be as useful to others as we might be. Doctor H. E. Fosdick, speaking at Northfield of Jesus' words to Peter on the shore of Galilee, after the resurrection, cautioned his hearers against this typical weakness. Jesus was telling Peter what his work was to be. And Peter asks, "What shall this man do?" Jesus says, "Peter"; Peter says, "John." Christ seeks to show us his will for our work; and we are so busily engaged in seeing that others do their work properly that we turn away from our Lord's loving counsel and requests. Ten persons will be inspired to greater faithfulness simply by seeing our own faithfulness to our Master in our own daily lives, where one will be helped by our talking to him about his duty.—Sunday School Times.

Of General Interest

"THE HOUSE WITHIN"

President Wilson yesterday accepted the Lincoln birthplace for the National Government. Henceforth the Nation has a new shrine and one which will be more and more hallowed by the passing years. It was not owing to any initiative in the National Government that this place, so suited for a national shrine, was acquired and dedicated to such uses. The public owes a debt of gratitude to the private citizens whose activity resulted in rescuing the log cabin in which Lincoln was born from destruction and in making it and the old Lincoln farm a national possession.

President Wilson's speech was exactly what might have been expected. He once more demonstrated in how great a measure the golden gift of speech is his. There are passages in his address which are worth reading and rereading if only for the diction. But there is another reason. Standing near the humble cabin in which Lincoln was born, now housed in a magnificent memorial structure, the President found in it another proof of the universal energy, richness, stimulation and force of democracy. That was his central theme—democracy, freedom, opportunity, vindicated by this supreme example of their mysterious efficacy.

The address appears in another column. But the picture he draws of Lincoln is so fine, so suggestive, so all-inclusive in its chiseled brevity that it deserves the emphasis of a special frame. One who reads it again sees "those perplexed and patient eyes" of which the repentant English poet so finely wrote; sees the face that has impressed the memory and imagination of men as no other face has probably done;

Whatever the vigor and vitality of the stock from which he sprang, its mere vigor and soundness do not explain where this man got his great heart that seemed to comprehend all mankind in its catholic and benignant sympathy; the mind that sat enthroned behind those brooding, melancholy eyes, whose vision swept many a horizon which those about him dreamed not of—that mind that comprehended what it had never seen, and understood the language of affairs with the ready ease of one to the manner born—or that nature which seemed in its varied richness to be the familiar of men of every way of life. . . .

(And yet) that brooding spirit had no real familiars. I get the impression that it never spoke out in complete self-revelation and that it could not reveal itself to anyone. It was a very lonely spirit that looked out from underneath those shaggy brows and comprehended men without fully communing with them, as if, in spite of all its genial efforts at comradeship, it dwelt apart, saw its visions of duty where no man looked on.

Another thought is suggested by the inclusion of this humble cabin in the costlier structure—the thought of the fundamental things that must always exist at the center of a democracy that is to endure. No matter how imposing the exterior envelope of life and of society, unless there is a little "house within" dedicated to the great simplicities of life and thought and feeling, it all becomes a snare and a delusion. We may become as great and as rich as we please, but we must never, save at our deadly peril, forget the essence of our democratic Government. The Lincoln homestead will help to keep us from doing so.—Chicago Herald, September 5, 1916.

* * * * *

SMALL COLLEGES BECOME JUNIORS

LAMONI, IOWA, September 10.—Special: The question of how the small college shall exist Graceland College of Lamoni has undertaken to answer in being the first in Iowa to adopt the junior college plan. By arrangement with the University of Iowa it will offer hereafter only the first two years of the standard college course. This work will receive full credit at the university and permit students to enter there with junior standing.

The most considerable advantage of the junior college plan to the small institution is that it permits concentration of funds on the least expensive half of the college course. The first two years work can be maintained at less than half the cost of four years. If only the first two years are given, therefore, the instruction can be made better than twice as good as it is when the funds are spread out to cover four years.

As students of the small colleges come usually from the immediate locality, the junior college plan permits them to get the first two years of their college work at home without sacrificing advantages a larger institution might offer. That assures for the student the beneficial influences of the home during the most impressionable of his college years and a considerable saving in expenses.

President George N. Briggs of Graceland left a very fine position with the Federal bureau of education in order to undertake the development here of a better kind of small college education in Iowa. During the many years in the Government service in the Philippines and in America he had studied educational problems and had seen the merits of the junior college plan. He hopes now to make the course at Graceland so good that it will not only afford the instruction of the first two years in liberal arts but will also permit specialization to meet the requirements for entrance into professional schools.

Most western universities are now requiring two years of collegiate preparation before beginning the courses in law, medicine, or dentistry. President Briggs would have his graduates equipped to take up their professional studies at once if they wish to.

Junior colleges are not new in education. Many cities have established them as extensions of the high school. Joliet, Illinois, has a notable institution of the sort. Grand Rapids, Michigan, has two, and there are many in California cities. A considerable number of private institutions of the class in which Graceland College stands have also adopted the plan.—The Des Moines Register.

* * * * *

RUSSIAN FREEDOM FOR JEWS

LONDON, September 2.—Paul Misukoff's announcement from Petrograd that a bill giving the Jews equal rights will be introduced in the Duma in November confirms the reports which have been current in Jewish circles here for some time past. By a departmental order the residence of Jews outside the pale is already permitted, and recently there was a discussion of the Jewish question by a cabinet council at imperial headquarters at which it was understood that the project of the introduction of a bill in the Duma legalizing the departmental order was favorably considered. A circular issued by Count Ignatieff, the Russian minister of education, abolishing the system of ballot for Jews desiring to enter the Russian secondary schools was regarded as an excellent omen for the further enfranchisement of the Jews.

SEES BRIGHT PROSPECT

Alexis Aladin, one of the best known members of the Duma, who is now in London, said to-day not only was the present report true, but that he considered it quite likely the bill would be passed.

"It is," said he, "a step of immense importance and one that must arrest the attention of the whole world. I am unable to reveal all I know, but am able to say I am confident the bill will be introduced in the Duma and passed. Two very important members of the Russian Government, Vice President Propopoff of the Duma and M. Gourko, recently visited London. Intimate talks I had showed me that both these men look with favor on speedy legislation giving the Jews equal advantages with all Russians.

"Their attitude is extremely significant of the change that has been taking place in the inner council of Russian affairs since the beginning of the war. Here we have Propopoff, a nobleman and capitalist, swinging around to the idea that the time has arrived to put the Jew on an equal footing with his fellow men in Russia. As vice president of the Duma he is a man of influence, in fact one of the most promising statesmen Russia ever produced.

NEW ERA AT HAND

"In speaking with friends here he said that to-day one did not talk of the 'necessity' of giving the Jew equal rights, but of the 'desirability.' In other words, he maintained that the day had come when Russia was beginning to recognize the importance of the Jew as a vital part of her national life. The reason, he argued, was that the Jew had shown himself of real value to Russia in her commercial life and was a factor to be reckoned with in the future if Russia was to use the best that was in her.

"With him stands Gourko, a forceful leader in the council of the empire and an assistant minister. These leaders are not afraid to compromise their future political success by putting the Jewish question on the basis of a complete settlement of equality of rights. That, to my mind, is sure indication of the trend of the Jewish problem in Russia.

"It is only natural for the constitutional democratic party to take the initiative in this move, as it has always been sympathetic to the Jews. It is not the bill being put in the Duma so much that marks an important step, but that it has the backing of strong leaders in the upper and lower houses. It may take several months, perhaps years, or even more, to pass the bill, but I firmly believe it will come.

CHANCE FOR AMERICANS

"Sympathizers with the Jews in America can do powerful work in aiding the move if they will send representatives to Russia. What is needed is to mold the sentiment among the Jews and among the leaders of the Russian Government that whatever bitterness may exist because of Russia's former injustices to Jews be forgotten in the great issue at stake.

"The Jews must be careful not to rake up old points of dissension, but must sink everything else in the one opportunity to gain complete independence as citizens of the Russian Empire. If a delegation of leading American Jews can find time to go to Russia to lend their influence it will help enormously. It is to the manifest interest of the American Jews to bestir themselves quickly in this move."—Des Moines Register, September 3, 1916.

A slope in the valley of the Ollantaytambo, Peru, with an angle of about forty-five degrees, or steeper than the roofs of most houses, is covered with transverse ridges, showing that the entire surface was cultivated in former times. Parts of the same slope are still cultivated.—National Geographic Magazine, May, 1916.

Woman's Auxiliary

OFFICERS

President, Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, 630 South Chrysler Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Vice President, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, 1515 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri. Secretary, Mrs. W. W. Smith, corner Walnut Street and River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri. Treasurer, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri. Historian, Mrs. B. C. Smith, 214 South Street, Independence, Missouri.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPARTMENTS

Educational, Helen Silsbee Smith, 2315 Harney Street, Omaha, Nebraska. Home, Mrs. George N. Briggs, Lamon, Iowa. Child Welfare, Mrs. Walter Sandy, 3431 East Sixtieth Street, Kansas City, Missouri. Relief and Service, Mrs. Edith Cochran, 1107 Powell Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri. Young Woman's, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

"Master, What Good Thing Shall I Do?"

We are glad this week to give our readers two excellent papers upon that most practical and important arm of our work, the relief and service department. Sister Cochran, the writer of one, has the oversight of the "sewing and aid" department under the old constitution, so she "knows whereof she speaks," on matters of this kind. Her devotion to the work breathes through every line of this message to you, alive as it is with the animation and enthusiasm of the writer who evidently, is one who "stands not upon the order of her going, but goes at once." Her clear, ringing call to the sisters of the church to busy themselves in the avenues of relief and service to those in need, should stimulate every local to renewed efforts; and if, in the past it should be that any have slackened their activities in this direction, may not Sister Cochran's earnest plea result in more consecrated and better organized service hereafter?

The paper over the name of our worthy auxiliary president, was written for use in the various reunions as many who may have been present at some of these may recognize. It is thought best, however, that these helps should not be confined to the reunions, and we hereby earnestly request and urge anyone who may have written or read a paper at any of our reunions or other meetings this year, of a nature to be of benefit to our readers at large, to send it to us, that its light may be more widely spread, and our work assisted by so much.

Those desiring information regarding the relief and service work, further than that which is contained in the Year Book, or in these messages from the superintendent of the department, or the president of our organization, may write to either of the sisters mentioned. Sister Cochran's address is 1107 Powell Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri; Sister Frederick M. Smith may be reached at 630 South Chrysler, Independence, Missouri.

Relief and Service—Significant Words!

I wonder if we fully sense their importance—those words! I wonder if we see on every side the urgent opportunities for service! Do we hear, with acute sensibilities, the oft-silent cry for succor? In this teeming world of hurry and worry, waste and want, sin and sorrow, are we occupying our space among those who serve, or are we standing idly by, finding fault with those by whom we are jostled hither and thither as they press steadily onward, pushing a work that will bring them recognition and reward here, and a crown of glory in the eternal kingdom?

Women of the "sewing and aid" department, let us awake to our opportunities! Heretofore, we have confined ourselves to the necessary things that were right at hand; but now, as the relief and service department, let us, not ceasing those activities, enlarge upon the scope of our work, seeking with humble hearts to understand its possibilities, and then strive to live up to them! Divine guidance will be ours if, with the sanction and approval of those whose right it is to counsel and direct in all the departments of this heaven-instituted organization of the church, we humbly try to do all we can.

Let us try to remember that relief does not mean merely temporary betterment of intolerable conditions but a steady campaign towards the permanent benefit of those needing that relief. Service does not mean just to pray every day, attend church regularly, and then stand afar off with a "holier than thou" expression from all the contaminating things of life. True, we are counseled to "keep ourselves unspotted from the world," but Jesus the divine, the compassionate one, said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me." Dear sisters, "It is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die." The mere act of breathing is not living. To live in the true sense of the word is to fill our days with good deeds, our hearts with love and good will toward all mankind, and our minds with the thought that this is a beautiful world and that we are trying to help create all the glad loveliness possible in our part of it. Then when we close our eyes upon its loved scenes it will be to open them upon fairer realms of enlarged opportunities, where we shall have unbounded joy.

I wish to urge upon the members of the relief and service department a careful study of the new Year Book. In this way only, can you catch the full significance of its value. A casual glancing over it will not give you a true idea of the magnitude of the work the Woman's Auxiliary is destined to do, if its members will only envision the splendid opportunities for service to God, to the church, and to our fellowmen, which are opening all around us. We especially call your attention to pages 22, 23, and 40, as applying expressly to the relief and service department. Also read pages 64 to 68, inclusive—the constitution of local organizations. However, do not neglect to read thoroughly the whole book, lest you might labor under a misapprehension regarding some important matter.

In the past this department, under the name of "sewing and aid" has done splendid work. Many local branches of the church have blessed the good sisters for their great help in time of need. Many sick and discouraged ones have felt the ministering hands, and have been cheered by the comforting voices, many destitute ones have been supplied when in distress, and countless are the good deeds that have been performed by the devoted members of this department. Theirs has been a self-sacrificing labor; they have toiled patiently and untiringly—often through great difficulties and discouragements, and now—now we are urging them to continue in the same good work!

Our department is an important one. Let us try to realize this, and strive to discharge faithfully the responsibility that rests upon us. Our work for the present will lie to a great extent along former lines of helpfulness, always doing our part in harmony with those who by right are in authority, consulting with them upon any important work before undertaking it. Let us abide strictly by the rules of our organization and try to inform ourselves fully as to our duties and privileges, as officers and members of local societies.

Do not forget the importance of observing the rules relating to reporting of our accomplishments, thus making it possible for a yearly report to represent quite accurately what the women of the church are doing. Finally, let us determine to fill this year so full of earnest endeavor, that we will surprise even ourselves at the magnitude of the progress made, and the good accomplished, when the time shall come for the annual accounting, next April!

I will be glad to hear from the various societies in this department, at any time, and shall stand ready to render any assistance possible.

EDITH M. COCHRAN,

Superintendent Relief and Service Department.

Our Relief and Service Department

Those who have had general oversight of the auxiliary work (and we can speak particularly for the executive officers who are serving this year) have an earnest desire to see all the sisters of the church who are engaged in relief and service work of any kind, become affiliated with the Woman's Auxiliary. In some few instances there has been raised a sort of barrier between the aid societies of the locals and the other departments, particularly the educational or study classes. This is a mistake and such a condition should never exist. It is merely the result of misunderstanding and frequently caused by a narrow viewpoint. We feel assured, however, that the feeling of prejudice, as it has been called, is fast disappearing and that our sisters are learning to cooperate as auxiliary members, which means that they are learning to appreciate the work of each other.

Not all are gifted alike nor are the tastes and inclinations of people the same, and while we would not presume that the sisters in a branch are doing the work most pleasing to them in every instance, but rather that which is most essential and which wisdom directs; still at times the personnel of the various departments may differ and for good reasons. We therefore want our sisters who have and do compose the sewing and aid department, whether they belong to other departments or not, to know that all of those who work with their hands are welcome members of the auxiliary and that their work is appreciated.

The writer of this paper at one time sat, almost daily, by a very pleasant and interesting young woman, as a classmate in a State university. After a several months' acquaintance the young woman said rather hesitatingly, "I do not know that you will care for me any more when I tell you that I am doing housework for my living this winter." What a narrow and unwarranted attitude to assume! My answer was a look of surprise and the words, "Why should I look down upon you for working? I have worked all my life and expect to work all the rest of it. It is true I have not done housework in the home of a stranger but until I was married I worked in my mother's home and since that time have worked in my husband's home."

In the Year Book of the auxiliary, which we hope to have read by every relief and service worker, there are some suggestions for practical work. It is not possible for a committee, who has for its mission a general oversight, to act as a survey committee for each local or community, hence we merely suggest and must depend upon the sisters in the various locals to adapt or modify or even substitute other work entirely for our suggestions.

Among the suggested sewing circles there may be much practical work accomplished. The dressmaking classes and especially those which give the training in making over garments, may be needed. These might be the means of decreasing the list of those who are known to the church as "the worthy poor"; or, since we all know what the proverbial "ounce of prevention" will do, we might anticipate that such training may prevent members from ever becoming listed with the poor who need the church help financially.

A sister should be selected who is particularly competent in this line of work and if these practical features are prosecuted wisely, no one can measure the results for good. Many of our neatest children, those who come from good homes, are clothed with made-over garments. It is highly commendable to save and to teach others to economize.

Only yesterday I was made happy to learn that a little suggestion which I had made long ago to a sister had been passed on. It was that two good but old stocking tops could easily be converted into a pair of tights or underclothes for a small child which would even take the place, perhaps, of black sateen bloomers worn by some little girls. The sister told me that her granddaughter was now wearing them and that when a poor widow with three children had recently called upon her, she had showed the garment, and gave her a number of pairs of stockings; and that the poor woman accepted the small gift, and especially the suggestion, with real gratitude.

Our church people are not, many of them, people of wealth, and economy must play an important part in our lives. The "lifts" which we can give to each other, when done in the spirit of love and kindness are not to be despised. The good accomplished cannot be estimated.

The millinery classes which are also suggested may serve a twofold purpose, that of teaching economy and of cultivating good taste. Girls and women may be taught how, with an expenditure of comparatively little time and expense, they may trim or even entirely make their own hats. A woman's hat, like her gown, should be becoming and appropriate. Classes formed for instruction in making these necessary articles should introduce the artistic training also, nor should the emphasis upon modest dressing be neglected.

The existence of one of our finest circle of Oriole girls probably is due to the fact that the superintendent of our young woman's department makes her own hats. This sister was permitted to speak at a branch where some of the Saints were just a little averse to adopting innovations such as the Oriole movement, but when our superintendent, who dresses in a very neat and attractive manner, stated in her discussion that she always made her own hats and that Oriole girls were taught these practical features, the attention of the rather conservative members was attracted at once. The sympathies of even the branch president were enlisted so that in a very short time a splendid circle was formed under the direction of a most enthusiastic leader. All this because of a pretty hat—so our superintendent tells us.

There is really no end to the work that may be undertaken by the relief and service department. The more you do the more you will want to do and you will scarcely be able to find committees enough or teachers enough to carry on your good work.

Suppose you would find an especial need for sanitation and hygiene to be promoted among your members (and it is now understood that none of us can know too much about these matters), but suppose also there should be an especial need. You should assist in the necessary cleaning up, giving what we might term "first-aid," but do not stop there. Help the people to help themselves. Get in touch with your home economics superintendent, either local or general, or both, ask her advice as to how to work and tell her of the subjects you wish to teach. She will advise and help you (we have consecrated women for all this work), then help individually or form classes where practical. The modern method is to work hard at prevention of all ills, physical and moral, as well as to care for and cure those in distress.

All your work is commendable but frequently to enlist in the long and arduous duties of prevention is even more commendable than to assist in the immediate duty of relief. The sisters engaged in the relief and service work are in a position many times to know those among the mothers who are in need of books or teaching in child training or child welfare work in general. If you are alert and thoughtful, opportunities will open on every side. Thus you are able to see how the relief and service work is related to the educational and all other departments, and we ask that you try to cooperate in the future with the others as you have never done in the past. You can readily recognize that when our sisters fully appreciate the wonderful opportunities for service in both the practical and educational departments, the standard of the homes of our church will be raised as never before.

We trust that the women will not only read the Year Book of the auxiliary, but will consult the list of suggested books and pamphlets and secure a few, either by purchasing or from libraries. Those enlisted under social workers' problems would be very interesting and helpful to the relief and service workers. There are other books listed which you would enjoy and appreciate in your home and church work.

We are wanting and needing efficient leaders for auxiliary work, and we are also hopeful that, as members, our women will have a desire to become more efficient participants in their home and church and community life at large.

In connection with these few suggestions we wish to express our appreciation of the earnest labors of our relief and service workers. If this paper should prove to be a stimulator, and our members of this department strengthened and encouraged even to a small degree by the effort, I shall be gratified.

MRS. FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Laying Aside the Weights

Dear Sister: Here is another experience from real life. A brother and sister had paid all their tithing; consequently they came under the law requiring consecration and surplus. The husband died, and the church continued to give the widow the same that she had before that event. At the end of the year, there was, of course, no surplus to tithe, so the widow felt content, thinking, as the years passed, that nothing more was required of her.

After a while, when she in her prayers frequently referred to keeping the law of God, there came faint misgiving in regard to her attitude towards the temporal law. She could hardly define it at first, and she thought, "What is wrong? Is not our tithing all paid? and there is no surplus!" But the still, small voice, or impression, continued to trouble her quiet prayers, and she felt strongly that something was wrong. She decided to look into the matter carefully, and ascertain, if possible, the cause of her troubled conscience. She was anxious to deal honestly with herself and her God; and so he helped her to see where she was not keeping the law that she was under. She was impressed with the fact that she had no need to wait until the end of the year to see if there was surplus; she received her remittance monthly, and she concluded that if there was anything remaining in her purse that was not due another, when the present month's allowance was received, that much was surplus, and as such, she owed a tenth of it to the Lord.

When this was made plain to her, she religiously observed to follow the prompting, and if the amount were only ten cents, it went each month to the bishop's agent. Whether this was really required of her or not, the voice ceased to trouble her after she solved the matter in this way, and she feels blessed and happy in so doing, and she firmly believes that the Lord will indeed give "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little" in the way of instruction and guidance if we truly wish him to do so.

These are only a few examples in the line of putting aside weights. They may not be the same weights which burden another; each one knows his own; but the Lord will help us, and work with all who will heed his voice, and are at heart willing to work with him, to make the needful sacrifices for personal purification and uplifting. If we pray for an awakened conscience, we will soon find ourselves in the midst of a spiritual housecleaning! To turn a deaf ear to those helpful voices will never result in "coming up higher." The time has come to act, and not think, only. We are so prone to think how beautiful the higher life will be, and forget to live for it. We read of the good works, or the inspired testimonies, and say, "Surely the church is coming up higher," and then we deliberately lag behind individually, clinging blindly to some weight that prevents our rising to the spiritual heights intended for our occupancy. Let us shake off the sloth that clouds both mind and body, and arise in the beauty of righteousness, to reflect the divine that is in each of us, giving the Spirit the desired opportunity to work through us for our redemption!

EMMA B. BURTON.

(We thank Sister Burton for these helpful little articles. While they are not offered as a law unto others, neither indeed can they be since each soul must work out its individual problems, yet the spirit with which the sister referred to met and solved her difficulties, should be a stimulation to every one of us. The true humility, the earnest whole-hearted desire to fulfill all the law, should be an example to all which we would do well to follow. The weights the flesh binds upon us are many and heavy, and they must be removed before our spirits can soar to the higher planes. —A. A.)

Letter Department

Debate at Jordan

This is not the Jordan of which HERALD readers have read in the Bible and elsewhere, and in which Jesus and many others were baptized by John the Baptist about nineteen centuries ago. Nestled away among the rocky hills of Hickory County, in the highly furrowed state of Missouri (Clinton District) and continuous to Mill Creek, lies the Jordan of which we write. Two stores (small ones), with a post office in one of them, a blacksmith shop, a mill now inoperative, one or two dwelling houses, and a church under the control of "the Church of God in Christ Jesus," is about what the town or village consists of.

The Reverend John L. Winningham, a representative of the said "Church of God in Christ Jesus," felt called upon some months back to "expose Mormonism." We are informed that he made the claim that Joseph Smith had eight wives; also referred to the Mountain Meadow Massacre, drawing an ugly picture of the same, and told his people that was the kind of people they had been opening their doors to, and permitting them to preach in their church.

This was too much for the Welsh blood of Brother D. D. Williams. Instantly he was in a fighting mood, or rather in a mood to defend against the attacks of the Reverend Winningham, and demanded that he prove his charges in a polemic encounter, when the Saints could have a representative to defend their position. To this Mr. Winningham agreed after some delay, trying and vexatious to Brother Williams, on account of some, including the preacher, poking fun at him, telling him his preachers would not back him up, or stand by him. In June the matter was turned over to me, and arrangements were completed to meet on August 21, 1916. My proposition was the usual church proposition, and his amounted to the same thing; he would not debate it in the usual form, but framed it thus:

"The Holy Scriptures teach that the church which met at Jerusalem on the first Pentecost after the resurrection from the dead, has continued on earth throughout all ages; and that the church of God in Christ Jesus represented by J. L. Winningham in this debate is the same in doctrine and faith."

I think it never entered Mr. Winningham's mind that there was a possibility that he might be defeated. Others of his faith and also of other churches were as confident as could be that my opponent was destined to wear the victor's crown. Predictions to that effect were plentiful and seemingly there was no uneasiness that said predictions might fail.

On Wednesday or Thursday one of his leading members said, in the presence of a number of the brethren: "Our man is not doing anything; I could beat him myself."

Indeed I think I may safely say that such a complete transformation of public opinion has seldom been made in a public discussion. The "Church of God," as represented by Mr. Winningham, believes that man is wholly mortal; that he is utterly unconscious between death and the resurrection; that all who have died, good, bad, or indifferent, are all alike in the grave, and in no sense has punishment or reward been meted out to anyone as yet.

Here is a statement of the case by L. S. Bronson, in a little tract entitled, "Where are the dead?" page 5:

"Where are the dead? Now the answer: They are all, good and bad, in one place and in one common condition, — in the grave."

Reverend Winningham tried to avoid discussing this part of the doctrine of his church, and when I showed that up to the present Cain had not received any more punishment than his brother Abel whom he killed, and that he had not and would not receive any more punishment than a sinner whose sin had been of far less magnitude, seeing both were to be resurrected, and burned up immediately; and both become unconscious alike, so his theory was out of harmony with the oft-repeated Bible statement that everyone will receive "according to what he hath done, whether good or bad," (2 Corinthians 5:10) he was "As a sheep before her shearer is dumb, so he opened not his mouth." He could not, at least, answer. In his last speech he used only two thirds of his time.

The debate was well attended, people coming several miles, some of them, to attend. The order was excellent. I think it was the best I ever saw in an outdoor meeting of this kind. The people around Jordan are surely deserving of much credit for the orderly and respectful attention which they gave to the speakers. They do not have to take a back seat for anybody, so far as good behavior goes.

Brother C. L. Snow acted as moderator for me, and Elder G. H. Shepherd of Hancock, Missouri, a member of the Church of Christ (non-progressive Campbellite) acted in the same relation for my opponent. Mr. William Gundwall of the Baptist Church was selected for chairman.

We debaters were so good, however, that the moderators did not have a thing to do except to open the meetings and keep time. Not a point of order was raised on either side.

I do not pretend to give anything like a full report of the discussion; it is neither practical nor necessary. Suffice to say that while Brother Williams was laughed at considerably when he failed to get a man here the first of April, when Mr.

Winningham set the time for the debate, those who laughed then do not laugh now—at least not loud enough to be heard—and I am sure Brother Williams has learned the truth of the old adage, "They laugh best who laugh last."

During the week following the debate I preached at Oak Grove school, a few miles west, and on Sunday baptized two, a man and his wife. Others seemed to be convinced but were not quite ready to yield. Think they will come in soon.

We all certainly feel thankful for the good that has come our way, and we are hoping for still more good to follow.

T. C. KELLEY.

JORDAN, MISSOURI, September 5, 1916.

Kirtland Reunion

Having had the opportunity of attending the Kirtland reunion, and it being what might be called my first real trip to that historic spot, I thought a few gleanings from the reunion might be of interest. It opened on August 10, with Brethren Griffiths, Becker, and Bishop in charge.

At the opening of the reunion it looked as though there were not going to be a very large gathering, but as the days went by the Saints began to gather in from all parts and it was not long before we were at a loss to know what to do with some who came without necessary bedding for camp life. That is one thing Saints should think of in planning a trip to reunion. Provide bedding, as that is one of the hard things for the committee to do.

A goodly number of the ministry were present, all adding their mite to make the gathering a success. One of the pleasing features was the attendance of the young people, and interest taken by them in the meetings. True, there were some things that caused those in charge some worry. It is not all pleasure presiding over a gathering of that kind.

The weather was ideal in the main. Some fine entertainments were had on the lawn in the rear of the Temple. We must not fail to mention the one on the last Saturday evening at the close of the preaching service. All were invited to meet in large tent at rear of Temple and those who attended were permitted to listen to some of the talent that the church can produce. We ought to be proud of our young people, for I think we have the cleanest lot of young people that can be found anywhere, and they should be encouraged.

The meetings were of a high order, much of the Spirit of the Master being felt. The Lord spoke to his people and much of an encouraging nature was said. Among other things we were told that the time was not far distant when the Master would again grace the Temple with his presence and power. The Saints were admonished to live closer to the Lord, as great calamities were yet to come on the earth. The sermons preached were instructive and helpful, some of which ought to have stirred every listener to a more consecrated life. The institute work was voted a success, some talks by Sister Skeene and others were of a high order and I think every Sunday school and Religio worker ought to see a little clearer the magnitude of the work intrusted to them. We were sorry that Brother Curry who was to have charge of the institute work was not able to be present, so the responsibility was delegated to another. The attendance was good—an average of seventy-seven each day.

Many were the expressions of gratitude heard, as testimonies were borne for the privilege of seeing and meeting in the house of the Lord, built as it was by divine direction.

As we sat there our thoughts went back over the pages of history, and we thought of the sacrifices of those who toiled to bring about the accomplishment of that which the Lord had commanded them to do. No thought of self was there.

Men and women gave up the necessities of life, that the house of the Lord might be completed. Many were the tears that were mixed with the mortar as they plead with God to protect that building from the enemy. Sisters forewent the pleasures, yes, the necessity, of a new dress or bonnet that the money might be used for that work that was theirs to do.

Our thoughts were drawn to the present and we asked ourselves the question, Is the spirit of sacrifice in the church to-day? How many are there who would forego the new suit or hat that the money might be used to complete the work given to us to do now? I thought of the future and wondered how many would stand the test of sacrifice when the temple at Independence would have to be built.

I thought of the money spent on pleasure alone by the Saints and wondered, if we were to forego pleasure for one year and give that money to the bishop to help in the carrying on of the work, and paying off the church debt, how long would it take to lift the debt? Gather my Saints together they who have covenanted with me by sacrifice is as true to-day as at any time.

We thought of the care of the Lord for his house, and could not help but feel the sacredness of the spot; of how the Master advised that we should not even talk in a loud tone of voice. We wondered if we held the places we dedicated to the Master in high enough regard. It seems to me we should hold more sacred the church building and let nothing in but that which tends to uplift. Do we hold as sacred as we ought the place of worship? or are we drifting too much after those things of a lighter character? But I have drifted from the main thought.

The reunion at Kirtland was a good one and I think all were benefited by being in attendance; I cannot say as to it being better than previous years, this being my first year at Kirtland.

Many were the expressions of pleasure evidenced as Brother McGuire came on the scene the last day of the reunion. The talk delivered by him in the afternoon of that last Sunday did much to inspire confidence in the new bishop. It was indeed a heart to heart talk, and all felt that truly God still had his work in hand.

May God help us to live and so order our life, that we may have the privilege of meeting in that great reunion of a thousand years. The missionary force remained a day or two longer to take down and store the tents and equipment to await the reunion of 1917.

We left Kirtland with advice and permission of minister in charge coming to Buffalo where we had the kind offer of Brother Doctor Weegar, who was baptized during the reunion, to give us a little care and help us to regain health which has not been up to par this year. We have been a little discouraged this year because we were not as fit for work as in other years. We are hopeful however that we will soon be able to return to our field and commence operations.

WILLIAM ANDERSON.

In these hastening times, every member of the church should have access to the church papers—they are a necessity. When anyone is intrusted with the responsibility of the work, whether a district officer or president of the church, he occasionally needs to publish an important announcement. How gratifying it would be to know it would be read by every member. Think of the loss to those who are never reached by the messages of various kinds sent out to the church. If you have a friend who is in this class, why not present this argument to him?

Alabama Reunion

Once more "I take my pen in hand and seat myself" to chronicle the passing of another reunion at Pleasant Hill, near McKenzie, Alabama. I was associated in the reunion presidency with Brethren Edward Rannie and J. R. Harper. Our associations were pleasant and agreeable. In Brother Rannie I found a congenial companion, a man wide awake in the interests of the church in every department. The Saints in the South will profit by his ministry if they heed his practical instructions. The pulpit was occupied by Edward Rannie, A. G. Miller, and the writer, of the missionary force; Brother T. J. Booker of Bay Minette occupying once.

Sister Bertha Harper ably cared for the Woman's Auxiliary work, while the writer had the oversight of the Sunday school and Religio features. There seemed to be greater interest in these meetings than heretofore. Believing that "it's better to put ten men to work than to do the work of ten men," our effort was to get others to occupy. Among those of the local force who assisted were H. H. Wiggins, W. H. Drake, D. E. Sellers and Sister Vida Harper. We noted development upon the part of the participants and have promises and hopes of better things next year.

One feature of the reunion was "Educational Day." On this day we had with us Mr. James L. Sibley, of Montgomery, Alabama, rural school agent, who spoke at eleven a. m. in the interests of education. At 2.30 p. m. Brother Rannie spoke on "The church and education," presenting historically our principles and efforts along educational lines. Mr. Sibley again spoke in the interest of the young, and at night we enjoyed a very interesting and instructive stereopticon lecture by Mr. Sibley, showing pictures taken in the Philippines where he was employed for three years as teacher and where he became acquainted with Professor George N. Briggs, now of Graceland. Mr. Sibley is a practical educator, a man of experience and ability, broad-minded and liberal. His lectures were well received by both Saints and outsiders. He bought a Book of Mormon, commended our principles and practice, and departed with a favorable impression of the Saints.

We also enjoyed the work of Miss Luther, principal of the high school at Castleberry, Alabama, who spoke on woman's work, also to the young people. We should always welcome such men and women into our midst, and thus, as was suggested during reunion, "go in and out and find pasture."

The reunion did not come and go with a "flourish of trumpets," but was practical and instructive, our motto, "Service." On the walls were such mottoes as, "The elect are those who will; the nonelect are those who won't"; "Doing is the test of knowing; execution is the test of skill"; "The elevator to success is not running—take the stairs," etc. All seemed to enjoy the services. Some had unbounded confidence in the preacher and slept quietly during his effort, perhaps arousing once or twice with an expression which seemed to say, "Is that man preaching yet, or again?"

An amusing and instructive service was the parliamentary drill, and a pleasant diversion from the many services was the playing of games on the lawn by both old and young.

Reunion committee for next year is Sister Bertha Harper, Brethren E. C. Shelley and W. H. Drake. These have gone to work with a will and already have some practical plans for making the reunion next year the "best yet." We urge cooperation upon the part of the Saints throughout the mission. We have not long to prepare. Remember that when you read these words nearly two of the twelve months will have passed. There is a wonderful opportunity to make these reunions better and bigger each year. To this end let us work and pray.

A. E. WARR.

Northern California Reunion

The Northern California reunion held at Irvington, August 17 to 27, with the district conference and the convention of the various auxiliaries, together with the entertainment was all that was expected and hoped for, socially, financially, intellectually, and spiritually.

If those attending have not returned with a new impulse and inspiration to get in and do something both individually and fraternally, it is because their souls were not in touch with the prevailing sentiment and spirit that pervaded the very atmosphere.

Progress was certainly the slogan of the reunion. Among the visions that are rising in the horizon of the near future is a correct record in the various branches. To this end there was elected a district recorder, also a higher type of church etiquette, and a greater degree of respect and reverence for things pertaining to the worship of God and the building up of the heavenly kingdom.

Also a home for the care of the poor and infirm of the church situated on the Pacific slope. The Saints will probably hear more about that at the next General Conference.

I was just about to mention some names who were responsible for the success of the reunion, but where would I stop among the traveling and local ministry, Sunday school, Religio, Woman's Auxiliary and musical workers, saying nothing about the reunion committee, food department, kindergarten, etc? However, at the risk of being considered partial, we will say that our strenuous, live-wire minister in charge, J. W. Rushton, was there with his unsurpassed dynamic potentiality, his glorious visions of the vitalizing forces of applied divinity and his splendid energizing, uplifting, optimistic personality, all of which, like a derby hat, to be lasting and genuine, must be felt. One thing especially emphasized by him was the instruction to Saints not to invite upon their own initiative any preaching by the ministry in the branches. But should preaching be desirable and the branch president has not the matter already under advisement, they may consult with him, and he with his associate officers, and if deemed advisable, he may arrange for the missionary through the district president and minister in charge, if he is on the grounds. Thus placing and resting the responsibility and the conducting of such matters where it was and is designed by the great Head of the church.

Among the several questions to be confronted and adjusted by this district are two which are occupying the minds of the Saints and are entering into the legislation of the body, quite important and far-reaching, viz: Shall we occupy the afternoons in convention work, or shall that time be devoted to rest, recreation and social diversion? and shall the reunion be permanently established at Irvington? I presume these questions will be carefully and unselfishly considered and adjusted soon.

A number, six or seven, perhaps more, were baptized during the reunion, and marked progress is being made by the young officials of the church.

The last night of the reunion we had a splendid reminder of eastern climatic conditions by the rumbling of the rich diapason basso of the heavens, accompanied with a beautiful display of elementary pyrotechnic and a refreshing shower. Quite enjoyable to an Easterner, but considered by native sons worse than an earthquake. The papers reported the death of three young rabbits by fright—native sons.

The 1917 reunion will convene at Irvington as per delegate vote. May the good Spirit again prevail.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

WOODWARD, OKLAHOMA, August 23, 1916.

Editors Herald: On Sunday the 13th inst., I baptized three good persons at Olton, Texas, and the same day blessed five children. Since that time I have been busy every day, trying to do good and bless humanity in general. Yesterday I again troubled the water when I baptized two more persons, who I think will be a fine asset to our work here.

The young lady I baptized yesterday assisted me through my meeting here in June and again in July by playing the organ with untiring zeal, and in that direction she will be of material assistance to our work in this part of the country.

I have been winning my way into the lives of the people where I have been, and gradually teaching them the message of life. I have great confidence in the ultimate triumph of truth, and hope to be ever found doing my best for the moral, spiritual and social uplift of mankind.

Optimistically yours,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

WILBER, NEBRASKA, August 24, 1916.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I contributed anything to your columns. I have been a reader of the HERALD over forty-five years and must say that I don't know how I could get along without it. It is always laden with good news from far and near. It has been a great source of strength to me all along through these years. I have always enjoyed reading all the church papers and how a Latter Day Saint can get along without them I don't know.

As the years pass along, the way grows brighter and clearer, and I am glad that the day is near at hand when the Lord Jesus will descend with a shout, taking vengeance on those that will not obey his gospel law. May we as Saints who bear the name of Saint so live that we will not bring reproach on the work intrusted to our care and let our light so shine that it may be an example to others.

I am sorry to say that I find in my travels a number of people who are trying to lay hold of the church with one hand and the world with the other, which is hard indeed to do. May the Lord endow such with more wisdom before it is too late. I often think of the parable of the five wise and five foolish virgins. According to this there will be half of those that call themselves Saints that will not be ready when the Bridegroom comes; in other words, will not have the Spirit of God. It is written that he that hath not the Spirit of God is not accepted of him. How very necessary it is then that we keep and enjoy the Spirit of God as much and as often as possible so that we may not become castaways and lose sight of the great reward at the end of the race.

As I am afflicted with inflammatory rheumatism, I will ask the Saints in general as you read this to lift a silent prayer to God in my behalf that I may be enabled to move out to do that which is required of me without suffering bodily pain, if it is God's will, and that I may pay more tithing into the storehouse of God. May we all pay more tithing that the cause of God may move forward.

Your brother,
W. C. Hidy.

Possibly a few of our new members have never read a copy of Autumn Leaves, published for the youth of the church. If there are such, they should send for a sample copy, or better still, remit a dollar and get the rest of the year free—fifteen big, illustrated numbers for a dollar. Send your order to this office.

WEST PULLMAN, CHICAGO, August 28, 1916.

Editors Herald: This is my first letter to you though I have been in the work over ten years. I thank my heavenly Father for the spirit that led me into this glorious work. His loving watchcare has been constantly around me and mine, and he has given us that blessed assurance he is ever willing to bless and strengthen those who are striving to live lives that bespeak the power and divinity of this pure gospel of the Son of God.

We feel at times as though the cross is too hard to bear, and almost sink beneath the weight of the burden. But then is the test before us, to prove our integrity and faith of what our heavenly Father has done for us. Our minds wander back to years ago when we first embraced this work through the great sacrifice and noble work of Elder George Baty and his wife, now of Brooklyn, when they were in England, and how we would love to meet with such a noble band of Saints.

I am pleased to find so many noble Saints in Chicago, too, who are truly worthy of the name they bear, but oh, how hard it is for them to present this grand work to the people in this great city when there are others who are casting a reproach upon the same by the lives they lead.

I am enclosing a dollar for the Autumn Leaves for one year's subscription, as I fully recognize its intrinsic value and noble purpose for the benefit of our young ones in the church.

Thanking you for the letter received from you, I remain,
Your brother,
CHARLES E. CATTON.

12038 Normal Avenue.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, 69th Company, C. A. C.,
September 3, 1916.

Editors Herald: I must write to let you know my whereabouts and that I am thankful that you once more suggested I have the HERALD in my possession. There has been some good reading in it, for which I am very thankful. When I look about me and see how others are striving to do good and pass the word on, I am made to see how much I lack in being what I ought to be.

When I read the editorial, "A war cry for our troops on the border," I was able to sense to a great extent the fullness of its importance, even though I have not indulged in all of the dangers. I know what they are, and that they are.

We who are learning the real value of silver and gold and how it should be used, would not know what to make out of it all should we see the way money is thrown away by the men who claim to be soldiers. Men hover over tables which are out in the dark. These tables are lighted up by candles. This is one of the ways in which the men in the army endeavor to pass their spare time away.

The HERALD is like a visiting elder. It comes once a week and livens up our dying spirits.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints and readers that I may grow in faith each day and become strong in the work that is pleasing to God. It is very pleasing to see new members embracing the truth, and may they continue is my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,
CHARLES L. GORE.

CARNEY, ALABAMA, August 28, 1916.

Editors Herald: I read the HERALD and Ensign every week. I don't see how we could live without them, for they are a great comfort to us. I read letters from the Saints in far States, and enjoy them very much.

There are ten in our family, and all belong to the church except five of the small children. I do not regret the day that I was baptized. I am fourteen years old.

I am going to try to live more faithful than I have in the past and want the Saints to pray for me that I may hold out faithful to the end.

Your sister,
RUBY GERTRUDE SCOGIN.

BIG RAPIDS, MICHIGAN, September 4, 1916.

Editors Herald: Thinking a message from an isolated Saint might interest other isolated Saints, I take this opportunity to deliver it. I have been here a little more than a month. I came here from Bay City where I held the office of teacher in the Valley Branch. There is no branch here, and I have been unable to locate any Saints. Feeling a desire to go to some kind of preaching service and prayer service, I attended the Baptist church. The first service was a prayer service, in which I bore my testimony after the manner of a Latter Day Saint. This created a sensation, not that I said anything incautiously, but the ring of certainty which characterizes the testimony of all Latter Day Saints was such a departure from the time-worn rut that it could but attract attention.

After that service I was asked to take charge of the young people's Bible class, which thing I did, seeing an opportunity for teaching the gospel opening up before me. One Thursday night I was asked to take charge of the prayer service. I did. After service at eight p. m., I answered questions till eleven p. m. Some read more Bible now than ever they did. My Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants are loaned out and others waiting for them. I pray that the good work may go on and that some seed may fall into good ground.

On Wednesday evening I go away into the woods, when the weather is favorable, and have my own Latter Day Saint prayer service. The Lord is pleased with this, and the Holy Spirit has been there to bless me. Pray for me that my faith fail not. My prayers are for the people of God, whether they have been gathered out of Babylon or not, and for the cause we all love so well.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
FRANK P. SWEETMAN.

RANGE, ALABAMA, September 5, 1916.

Editors Herald: The reunion at McKenzie, Alabama, was in my opinion, the best ever held there. Five were baptized. By invitation of Brother S. M. Long, of Range, Alabama, I came to this place with the gospel tent, for the purpose of holding a series of meetings. I began on the evening of the 21st, with an attendance of fourteen. Brother A. E. Warr joined me later, and spent a week. We camped at the tent, and preached twice a day, afternoon and evening. The second night we had out a hundred and ten, and the interest continued to get better. People came with their "horned autos," mules, horses, and buggies, some walking and carrying their children. Some came six and eight miles. It was more like a reunion than anything else. We spent fourteen days there, with a total attendance for twenty-five sessions of one thousand, four hundred and seventy. Eleven were baptized and fourteen children were blessed, and many friends were made to the cause. The last night a heavy rain fell, but we had fifty out.

It takes finances to run meetings like this, and Brother S. M. Long and family, with other Saints and friends, saw that we were supplied. Two missionaries who have been bankrupted for some time were again enabled to breathe more freely. Sister Long and daughter Alice, saw that we lacked nothing to eat, nor for bedding. Every day they sent us a big box of nice food, including plenty of sweet milk.

The Saints around Lonnie, Alabama, surely did all they could to make this meeting a success. All were cheerful and with smiles to meet and welcome the strangers. The whole expense was not over twenty dollars, and all were made happy.

If in every new place where we have Saints they would do this, go out with heart, soul and purse, we as the missionaries, could do better, but being without the last-named, we go with our hands tied, and can do but little.

Brother Long stopped his mill every day at three o'clock to let his men attend. Brother Warr and I being limited in time, spent but fourteen days here. I will set the tent up at Fosbee, Alabama, the 11th of this month.

There never was a time when this field was so white for harvest as now. We can't reach nearly all the calls that are made. I now have eleven calls in new places to come and preach, that are going to be impossible to reach this year.

Mobocracy and prejudice have not ceased. I have received two threatening letters, but this is the Lord's work and it must go to the ends of the earth.

Ever praying for the onward march of Zion,
A. G. MILLER.

Home address, De Funiak Springs, Florida, Box 402.

DOUGLAS, ARIZONA, September 8, 1916.

Editors Herald: Your readers may be interested in some items from our locality. Our branch is located about twelve miles from Douglas.

I may as well begin with some of my own experiences, which run back a number of years. When about ten years of age I happened to hear a series of sermons in Bandera County, Texas, by Elder John Curry, of this church. But after his meetings closed he went away, and for thirty-one years I heard no more of the Latter Day Saints. In the meantime I was of the opinion that every man should worship God in some manner, so I united successively with two different popular churches of the world, only to find upon close investigation that there was much lacking in their creeds. The more I investigated, the more dissatisfied I became, until I finally became disgusted and arrived at the conclusion that the church of Christ was not on earth at all. I would not allow myself to think of religion and became almost an atheist.

One evening, about two years ago, Sister W. H. Mannerling, then unknown to me, stepped into the yard and invited me to attend an open-air meeting. On inquiry she gave the name of her church, and I immediately associated her with the Utah Mormons, but she showed wherein they differed, and we attended the meeting. I recalled that this was the same organization to which Elder Curry had belonged, and whose sermons I had heard so long ago.

Leaving shortly afterward, I missed a number of meetings, but after I had returned they were continued by Brother S. D. Condit. One excellent sermon which made a deep impression on us was spoiled by an allusion to the fact that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. The meetings continued in one place and another, sometimes in a tent and sometimes at private dwellings, until finally I suggested they might use our home, so long as they would not insist on my joining them. Evidently their conduct was satisfactory, as you will see by the developments.

Finally the Saints here, without a dollar to begin with, took up the matter of building a church. I, being a sort of jack carpenter, told them if they would arrange for the rest of it, I would give one hundred dollars in work on the building—just to get rid of them. They took me at my word, and in a short time informed me I might order the material and we would begin. With the little help we could gather together, we soon had a church building twenty-four by thirty-two feet.

My wife and I were the first to be baptized, and the statement that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God no longer annoys me—I say it myself. I have been ordained to the priesthood and have made a number of attempts at preaching, and find the greatest peace and satisfaction of my life in trying to tell the people of the kindness and mercy of God.

We have about twelve members in the country, and about twenty in Douglas. We have some excellent church workers. We are all poor but not afraid to work. With our little building in nice shape, worth something over a thousand dollars, well-seated and lighted, built by the sacrifice of this small band of people, we are certainly well pleased. You will perhaps hear more from us later.

Yours in the gospel,
NATHAN V. BRALEY.

STOCKPORT, ENGLAND, August 12, 1916.

Editors Herald: As a young member of the church in the British Isles Mission, I write to say how we all enjoyed the mission conference held on August 5, 6 and 7.

We had a most enjoyable time and I feel sure that at the close, every Saint went away considerably strengthened in the faith.

Apostle U. W. Greene as president of the mission, was much appreciated and will, I am sure, during his sojourn here, be a source of much spiritual help to all the Saints in these islands.

He will have good assistance in the field here, and although the sustained missionaries are few, the quality is good. We ought to have more missionaries in this field. There is plenty of scope in this thickly-populated country, but there is a lack of good, honest, energetic workers.

The membership of the Stockport Branch, where I attend, is not very large. This branch was worked up by Brother G. Baty, of Brooklyn, and he worked very hard against the prejudice which people showed against the work. Our branch president now is Brother William Worth, who is also an enthusiastic and energetic worker, and who spares no pains to forward the important work in this locality. Of course we are few, but we have faith and believe that in the very near future there will be many honest in heart who will embrace the true church.

I am glad to say that one of the leading papers of the city of Manchester, the Manchester Guardian, printed a very favorable and well-balanced report of the proceedings at the conference on the 5th. The editor of this widely read journal was pleased to accept a copy of the Book of Mormon, some little time ago, and which now has its place on the bookshelf in his office.

I should love to see our numbers increase in this land and I am doing my utmost to further the wonderful work. A lot of our young brethren are either serving at the front, or are in training in this country, consequently the ministry has become depleted. I am serving in the army but am at present at home, having been invalided from Egypt some months ago, so that I am enabled to work for the Master in my spare moments. I wonder when this awful bloodshed is going to cease. It is heartrending to see the large number of blue-clad soldiers hobbling about the streets on crutches and sticks, the result of the awful carnage.

I hope and trust that I may be spared, also the other brethren who are serving king and country, so that when hostilities are ceased we may all be released to serve our heavenly king to our life's end.

That we may be kept faithful so that we can keep the banner flying high, is my prayer.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
HEAVILEY, 15 Winifred Road. F. LEWIS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 31, 1916.

Editors Herald: When a president of the United States is inaugurated the various newspapers and journals throughout the Union through their editors keep the people well informed as to his policies in Government affairs. This certainly is right, especially in these times of exigency both at home and abroad. This being right and proper in the body politic, it also must be right in the church for its members through the publications of the church to have a definite and positive knowledge as to the policy and method of procedure of our newly elected president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, namely, Frederick M. Smith.

Those here in Zion know of his work as successor of his father, and grandfather before him, but for the benefit of those abroad, permit me to say that our new president is following grandly in the footprints of his noble progenitors. I do not say this by way of flattery but because it is the truth. He is a man beloved both within and without the church.

One thing he is doing which some may call new, and yet it is not. He is making an heroic effort to get the Saints in Zion to divide up in classes and study all good books. For this he certainly is to be commended. Our knowledge needs to be increased, and our perceptive faculties quickened. This makes one think of the Saints of early days, hiring a Hebrew teacher and starting a school in Kirtland, Ohio. Surely in these times of tumult and commotion at home and abroad when there are such urging demands both moral, mental and spiritual made on the Saints, we of all people must be the best qualified for the work intrusted to us. If we who first entered this work were base and ignorant, shall our children and grandchildren remain the same? No. Verily, no. We must do all that we do better than any other people on earth, whether it be to preach a sermon, manufacture a pin, or build a locomotive. We are to be the head and not the tail. We are to lead, not to follow, hence we must, to be in harmony with the truth, "Seek knowledge by study and also by faith." Not by study alone, if you please, but by study and also by faith. Shall we do it? I say yea, we are willing to follow Brother Frederick M. Smith, our newly elected president, even as he shall follow Christ.

CHARLES J. SPURLOCK.

HOPEWELL, VIRGINIA, September 10, 1916.

Editors Herald: I had several communications from those in the church. I said in a former letter to inclose stamp for reply, yet not one stamp came, although I answered all. It is quite a task for me to write. I am in my sixtieth year, and have a nine-year-old girl to raise. I have not over one thousand dollars to go on, and not that much in money. I do not mind paying for rent of a building to preach in if there is some one to preach, but if the preacher delays too long this chance may not be open at a later date. I expect to go next week to Niagara Falls for a week or ten days, and if they come while I am away I cannot attend to them.

In gospel bonds,
WILLIAM C. CUMMINGS.

DOW CITY, IOWA, September, 11 1916.

Editors Herald: About July 3, I accidentally scratched the middle finger of my right hand on the point of a lath nail which had been driven through a nail keg, but the scratch was so small, being not to exceed a half inch in length and scarcely skin deep, that I thought it of little consequence and did not take time to go across the street to put anything on it to kill the poison, which I might easily have done. This slight neglect upon my part resulted in the loss of my finger and a severe illness which brought me almost to the point of death, and caused a heavy expense and the loss of two or three months time. The old saying, "A stitch in time saves nine," was more than true in this case.

Our home doctor was away and his substitute was a mere boy and only a student, so it seemed that about the only thing I could do was to go to the hospital and be treated for blood poison, for by this time my finger was dead down to the second joint and my hand red and swollen. I was treated at the Lord Lester Hospital, Omaha, Nebraska.

While there I took a slight cold, which settled on my lungs and my heart gave signs of weakness, and at times both breast and lungs hurt me very much. A carbuncle developed on my right hip, a large boil on my left and another between the two; altogether, the nurse said I had at least fifty boils, and my suffering was, I think, the worst I ever experienced. At times it was not difficult to close my eyes and see the casket and grave waiting for their trust. But to one who feels he has done the best he could to follow Christ, who has, to the best of his ability, discharged his duty as a minister of the church for forty-nine years, and has been faithful to the trust imposed and true to wife and children, and all others, even death and what must follow that event has no terror. The Father doeth all things well, and the disciple can trust the Master and rest safely in the arms of Jesus.

However, life is sweet and there is still a longing for home and dear ones. The eyes open and there comes a gentle whisper of the "still small voice" which says, "The Father doeth all things well, and the Saints far and near are praying for thee and other afflicted ones, and their prayers will surely prevail." The following stanza presses itself upon the mind:

"Mid scenes of confusion and creature complaints,
How sweet to my soul is communion with saints;
To find at the banquet of mercy there's room,
And feel, in the presence of Jesus, at home."

The elders were near, and, when requested so to do, came and administered to the sick one, hope revived, and the Spirit seemed to whisper, "All is well," notwithstanding the deep impression had while standing by the stove just before leaving home, that the sickness to follow would be nigh unto death even if I were permitted to recover at all.

Relatives, Saints and friends called and brought flowers and fruit or sent tokens of love and best wishes, and assured the sick that he was remembered by the Saints as they came before the Lord in prayer. Who could neglect to call on the sick?

I left the hospital September 2. I have gained rapidly since coming home, and was able to attend morning services at the church yesterday. My hand is still quite painful and requires the closest attention and dressing every day, which is done by the home physician, though I trust it will soon be well.

All who have assisted, helped and comforted have the heartfelt thanks of the writer and his family, and the Lord has not only our thanks but the praise and adoration of our minds and hearts for his goodness, love, mercy, and healing power.

Kindly and hopefully yours,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

News from Missions

Northeastern Nebraska District

I presume it will be a little surprise to some to hear from me in this field, as I was appointed to the Southern Ohio District, but here I am, and that not by my asking, or refusing to go to Ohio. It was a question for some time if I could possibly arrange to go, but I finally did so.

I am now nearer home, and my health is not as good as in former years. We had intended to move to Omaha, on account of having an equity in a home here. We could not afford to leave all we had so far, so we concluded to come and wife would stay and try to save it.

I appreciate that all has been done in kindness, and hope that nothing but good will come from the effort, to all interested.

I would not have written the above only that there has so far been no official statement published of my transfer. [It is in this issue.—EDITORS.] I have tried to patiently wait, and I think long enough, as many of our friends do not know what has become of us. We do not want them to think we have dropped out of sight.

I think it would be an injustice to the Des Moines Saints to refrain from speaking of our work there during the past three years. We have never enjoyed three years labor more, and never did we leave a field with as sad a feeling. We see improvements being made, the old church building was sold, another bought that was much better and larger, in a better location, several hundred dollars worth of improvements were done, it costing about fifteen hundred dollars more than than we got for the old one. The Sunday school increased more than one half, attendance at the church services increased accordingly, and many there almost dead, were spiritually awakened. The church was dedicated in about eighteen months, free of debt, having raised over five hundred dollars by open donations at one meeting in about thirty minutes.

Can you blame wife and I for enjoying our labor? We mutually enjoyed it because we labored mutually.

We felt sad to leave them because of the many kind acts, and the way the work was cooperated in by all, of course there were some opposition. We could not expect it otherwise. If there had been none we could have thought perhaps we were all doing wrong, for as Uncle John McIntosh used to say when he went out on a mission, "If I make no one mad and baptize none, I might as well go home."

There was a farewell party given us at the church in Des Moines where about one hundred and fifty were present, and a goodly purse made up. Then another by the dear young people at our home, just the eve before we left, in which there were fifty or more present, they making up another liberal donation. Some did not attend either of the parties because they felt too sad to say good-by. Can you blame us for feeling sad to leave them? May God's blessings attend them in their labors of love.

As to this field, so far as recent labor is concerned I cannot say much, on account of it being so late before I was settled where I was to labor. Then my health made it necessary for me to be at home for the past two weeks. I have only done about four weeks of labor this year so far, but it was indeed a pleasant time for me. First I had a fine brother to labor with, in the person of W. E. Shakespeare. I was in new environments, or among new people to me, and the work was like a vacation to me.

But with all of this I suppose I overreached my powers. I have not been able to walk much for the past eighteen months. Because of this and by the kindness of one of my dear brothers in Des Moines, over one year ago I was enabled to get an auto, which has done me valuable service in my church work, but when I started to take it into the Indian reservation to labor among the Lamanites, I was compelled to leave it for repairs, and it is there yet.

So I was left to walk, which I tried not to do much. The change of water, bed and weather sent me home for repairs. It looks now as though both the auto and I will be ready about the same time to try it again, but I hope it will stick closer to me next time.

I was with Brother Shakespeare for three weeks in tent meetings among the Indians and whites of the Omaha reservation. The meetings had been on three weeks before I went. There was six weeks of meetings without a break, and the interest and attendance was as good at the close as at any time, and it was good all the time.

There were sixteen baptized. I think all were Indians but four, Brethren Shakespeare and Case doing the baptizing.

I had plenty of time to study the people and the situation while I was there. We have a great mission among or with this people, but my short experience has taught me that the preaching of the gospel, and baptizing them is a very small part of our mission with them. We must teach them the practical side of life as revealed in the gospel, some of which is that the idler shall not wear the garments nor eat the bread of the laborer, and that both sexes must do their respective part of the work necessary to be done, and not so much interest taken in our food.

We have in the vicinity of Macy, where the tent was located, about fifty Lamanites already in the church, and no one to lead them. What is to be done? They may need preaching, but so much more they need a man that will actually demonstrate the practical side of the gospel among them. Where is the man that is ready for that position?

Perhaps those on whom the responsibility of organizing and setting in order all these things will know just where the right man will be found. I sincerely hope so.

The Presbyterians have been and are the leading church on this reservation. For fifty years they have been predominant. The Red Men that belong to that church have not left off one of their old customs or habits, that I was able to see or hear of. We cannot afford to waste time this way.

I hope it will be understood that what I have said here about this people only refers to this one tribe, as I personally know nothing about others.

Hoping to be able to be in the field in a short time, I remain, as ever, working and praying for God's work and people.

J. M. BAKER.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, 2914 North 25th Street, September 4, 1916.

The younger children should be provided with Zion's Hope, put out by this office. If they do not receive copies at the Sunday school, why not send thirty cents for the next fifty-two issues? The cultivation of good taste for literature should begin very early—the Hope will greatly aid.

West Virginia

The district conference held near Harrisville on September 2 and 3 was quite well attended and the usual business was transacted. Those who attended received much benefit and were thus better prepared to continue to do good work in the various duties in their homes and in the services in the branches. We believe this writing will encourage those who did not attend and it will help them to make a greater effort to meet with the Saints next conference. It would be well to have some two-day meetings in this district and encourage the Saints to meet together oftener. October 1 will be an opportunity to meet with Harmony Branch near Harrisville, when the church is to be dedicated. Arrangements are being made for Apostle R. C. Russell to be there, if possible; other elders and Saints have already said they would be there, and a good spiritual feast is anticipated.

There is much work to do in the district and the three missionaries have been busy. Brother J. M. Nunley has held meetings at Harrisville, Goose Creek, Gay and Elizabeth. Brother Thomas Newton has labored in the central and northeastern part of the mission, while the writer labored in the southwestern part until July 11 when he met Brother Nunley, and the two labored together until at present.

Three have been baptized in this mission since the elders entered the field. We notice that some good is being done and that our efforts are worth while. We are encouraged to press onward and upward.

We desire the Saints to write to us at our mission address, 404 Stealey Avenue, Clarksburg, West Virginia, and let us know about opportunities for preaching. At present, Brother Newton is preparing to hold meetings near Benson, Brother Nunley at Greenwood and the writer at McFarland.

We also want to remind the Saints that Brother Frank L. Shinn, 404 Stealey Avenue, Clarksburg, West Virginia, is bishop's agent and will receipt for tithing sent him. We notice that some have done well in paying tithing but some have not, and we desire to encourage them to do something along this line while it is called to-day and you can help the work in this way. At best we can do but little, and therefore we ought not to neglect that little.

May the Lord help us all to render diligent service to him in every way we can that he may prosper us in the work from which we obtain our needs and are enabled to help build up the kingdom of God.

FRED MOSER, JR.

HARRISVILLE, WEST VIRGINIA, September 9, 1916.

News from Branches

Burlington, Iowa

We were glad to have Brother L. G. Holloway with us for our August sacrament service and as the speaker in the evening. His sermon was strong and forceful, on "The fruits of doing."

The ladies' aids had a booth this year at the Tri-State Fair, the latter part of August, and they report approximately one hundred dollars cleared,—and some interesting discussions with passers-by, in which Brother Williams found himself involved. The aids are also planning for another bazaar in November, which, if as successful as last year's, will add materially to the building fund.

The last sacrament service, September 3, was one to be long remembered. The gift of prophecy was manifested, giving promise for the future, conditioned upon continued unity and faithfulness.

Baptism was administered Wednesday evening, September

6, Sister Elizabeth Stumpf casting her lot with us. We are hoping that more such welcome additions may come in the near future.

We must not fail to mention the vote taken the last week in July, resulting in the change of our midweek prayer service to Wednesday evening. The chief argument was that this seems the prevailing custom through the church, and some of our people passing through had been disappointed in missing an opportunity to meet with us. We trust the change will be noted, and any of our people coming through Burlington will find the church at Twelfth and Locust Streets for the prayer service Wednesday evening, or Religio Friday evening; regular services Sunday are Sunday school at 9.30 and morning and evening preaching service.

CORRESPONDENT.

Lamoni, Iowa

Perhaps the most spectacular news from Lamoni this week is about the Holloway-Campbell debate at Andover. The big reunion tent stands on the lot next to the meetinghouse of the Andover Branch and is filled with from six to seven hundred every evening, while the afternoon meetings are well attended.

The interest is intense, the large audience sitting most attentively through each session of four half-hour speeches. The tactics of Evangelist Campbell, who represents the nonprogressive wing of the Christian Church, are entirely honorable. So far he has avoided the methods so often employed by our religious opponents in which the blasphemous sayings of our enemies are brought to bear upon our work. While it is too early to sum up results, we may feel assured that our people have lost no confidence in the defensibility of the gospel.

The usual meetings are being held here, and in them is manifested the spirit of consecrated service. The prayer meetings are well attended and intellectual in their tendencies. As one of our friends, not of our church, expressed it recently: "When I look into the faces of an audience of these Saints I can see the very glory of the Spirit of God shining in their faces." May that glory have its perfect work in our lives and continue to glow.

The local appointments may be of interest to many, for we realize that Lamoni is quite cosmopolitan and hundreds of communities are represented here. Those communities may be interested in what the people they have sent here are doing. While the local preaching is only one of many features participated in and no more important than any other work in its place, it is more easily announced than visiting the homes of the Saints, for instance, so we explain our apparent inconsistency in disseminating the news.

At the Lamoni church Heman C. Smith occupied in the morning and Elbert A. Smith in the evening. The latter was one of a connected series on gospel subjects, especially adapted to those who desire to know more about our doctrine. The attendance was good. J. W. Wight at the Saints' Home and E. D. Moore at Liberty Home. L. B. Moore at Bloomington; E. J. Giles at Shady Grove Schoolhouse; R. J. Lambert at Pleasanton; John Jenkins and E. J. Giles at Lone Rock, morning and evening; G. R. Wells and James Johnson at Evergreen, where ten were baptized, including three adults who have been convinced under the work done at that place. At New Buda a basket picnic was held, if a Sunday gathering may be called a picnic, and the preaching morning, afternoon and evening was done by J. F. Garver, L. G. Holloway and S. K. Sorenson. Eli Hayer has begun a series of meetings at Allendale to continue for some time.

F. M. McDowell, who was reported as sick in Plano last week, is improving nicely now and likely will be here soon to take up his work at the college.

The funeral of Elder F. M. McDonald was held from the church Sunday afternoon, President Elbert A. Smith delivering the discourse.

DELBERT.

Independence Stake

On September 9 the stake conference convened. The meeting was made a mass convention with delegates from Walnut Park, Enoch Hill and First and Second Independence Branches. The stake recorder's report showed the enrollment of stake as 3,563, and of Independence Branch, 2,952.

The adjourned meeting to 7.30 p. m. finished the business of the conference, and ended with a good spirit prevailing. On Sunday, September 10, there was a fairly good attendance of children and young people and the announcements given included the reception to be given by the branch of Brother W. W. Smith and wife and sons, also one to be given by the Oriole girls. The morning service was by Bishop E. L. Kelley.

There was an unusually interesting program in church service throughout the day, there being 13 baptisms, one blessing and six ordinations, which rendered it an occasion long to be remembered.

The lawn meetings are closed, the weather turning cool, and there is prevailing a sense of brisk activity everywhere, not only among the Saints, but in the community around us. Very ardent speakers from the South, religious and political, have been the city's guests; and while we may be glad because of the progressive spirit we see in the various forward movements of the business and social world, we cannot, as Saints, but feel thankful for the impetus given by some of the brethren, in the industrial growth of our city, and, through them, the good service rendered to those who are now leaders in this work. The spirit of the gospel that gives freedom and encouragement in the realm of right ever urges onward; and the blessed service for God that seems glorious because of its directing and comforting power, is ever uppermost in our hearts.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Miscellaneous Department

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of the Seattle and British Columbia District; Greeting: I am writing this primarily to inform you of my change of address, and do sincerely hope it will be read by every reader of the HERALD within the above territory.

Owing to my family returning to the East I was obliged to break up my home in Seattle, and Brother Peter Anderson, missionary in charge, advised that I make Everett, Washington, my objective point, and having confidence in the counsel of such men, we are now residing in Everett.

Let me urge you to recall your vow made at the waters of baptism that you observe to keep the commandments of God. One of them is tithes and offerings. I am sure that the gospel has appealed to you as something that is tangible and reasonable. You that have a comprehension of what it is, know that it is a means to an end, and that end is eternal life, or eternal death. It is a matter of either exoneration or condemnation. Which shall it be to you?

"Go ye into all the world, teaching, repent ye, for the kingdom is at hand." "Go without purse or scrip." Dear Saints, this sounds like a command—and it is. Who shall obey this command? Those to whom it is given, but you say, "Lord, my family needs my attention." "He that cannot leave home and lands for my sake is not worthy of me," "You that labor in the affairs of men of business, and you that are of the ministry, labor together for the good of all."

Brethren and sisters, here is where we can labor together. You who are free to participate in the commercial life, shall pay your tithes and offerings, that the storehouse of the Lord may be filled, that the families of these men whom God has called from the ranks of the toiler, and to whom he has said, "Go into the world, the harvest field of souls, and gather them into the ark of safety" (the church) may be provided for. You who can return to your homes after the day of toil or business is finished, meet with your loved ones, helping to bear the trials of that wife and mother, giving a word of counsel to that impulsive boy or girl, look at the wife of your brother who sits at the bedside of one tossing in the throes of sickness, alone, with grief that should be shared with one who naturally is stronger to bear it. Listen to the mother plead for the boy or girl to remain at home, but the stronger mind of the home is not there to counsel, neither the stronger hand to restrain. Where is he? "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

Dear Saints, let me appeal to you for your support in this crucial work. Send in your tithes and offerings, that the Lord's storehouse may be filled, that embarrassment of "your credit is exhausted," may not be hurled at the missionary's wife, that the boy of sixteen may not be compelled to leave his school to become the breadwinner, thus robbing him of his equal chance in the world, making of him a martyr unnecessarily. Let us be true to God, to our brethren, and to ourselves.

Your brother in Christ,

WILLIAM JOHNSON.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON, Box 448.

College Day Collection

Doubtless your branch president has called your attention to College Day, Sunday, October 1. This date has been set by action of General Conference and every member of your branch should be given an opportunity to assist Graceland by their freewill offering.

Graceland has already done a splendid work, having sent out an army of young men and women well equipped for the activities of life. Graceland is now better prepared than ever to accomplish good in educating the young and ambitious of the church, as well as others, preparing them for broader and greater fields of usefulness, thus increasing by many times their chances in life.

Graceland is now an accredited junior college and her students will receive credit in the various State universities where they may desire to enter.

I often think of a comparison used by Honorable William Jennings Bryan in a lecture on "Education," in which a man with an education is compared to a man chopping wood with a sharp ax; and a man without an education, to a man chopping wood with a dull ax. The man with a dull ax might work ever so hard but never would be able to keep up or compete with the man with a sharp ax. I think it a very good and true comparison. Many have realized it in their own experiences.

Let us encourage our young to get an education.

Let us encourage them to go to Graceland.

Let us boost Graceland by rendering financial assistance, without which she must fail, for there are few if any self-sustaining colleges in this country.

Let us make an extra effort this "College Day" to do something.

I sincerely hope we shall receive a prompt, generous and hearty response from every branch.

Fraternally,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Conference Notices

Eastern Iowa, at Fulton, 10 a. m. Branches report to Mrs. Cora B. Hart, secretary, 1416 Harrison Street, Davenport, by the 10th. Ministry report promptly to president, William Sparling, 1225 Nicholas Avenue, Davenport. Trains met to noon on 13th at Maquoketa. Those coming otherwise please notify John Heide at Fulton. William Sparling, president, Mrs. Cora Hart, Secretary.

Gallands Grove, at Deloit, Iowa, October 14 and 15. Reports should be sent. Wave Cross, secretary, Dow City, Iowa.

Florida, with Alafra Branch, Dixonville, Alabama, 8 miles south of Brewton, Alabama, October 7, 10 a. m. After conference reunion will organize on same day. E. N. McCall, secretary, Brewton, Alabama, R. F. D. 5.

Nodaway, October 14, 2 p. m. at Pleasant Hope Church, seven miles west of Maitland, Missouri. Let all reports be in hands of secretary one week before conference. William Lewis will be present. W. B. Torrance, secretary, Bolckow, Missouri.

Kansas City Stake, November 11, 2 p. m., at Central Church, corner Ninth and Lydia Streets. Meetings continue over Sunday. Branches should hold business meetings early in October to select delegates, etc. Send delegate lists and credentials to the stake secretary to reach him not later than November 1. Branches need not send in branch statistical reports to this conference but hold them until the February conference. All members holding the priesthood in quorums report to their quorums and the quorum make an itemized report to the conference. All not in quorums send individual report to the stake secretary. Let all who can do so attend, for there is business of importance to transact. J. A. Tanner, president.

New York, with the Niagara Falls Branch, corner Willow Avenue and Seventeenth Street, October 7 and 8. First session 2 p. m., October 7. A. E. Stone, president; Anna Brothers, secretary, 36 Tremont Avenue, Buffalo, New York.

Fremont, with Bartlett Branch, Bartlett, Iowa, October 7, 1916, 11 a. m. The auxiliary conventions will be just previous as usual. New church at Bartlett will be dedicated October 8, 10.30 a. m. This will be the first district conference held at Bartlett, and it is hoped there will be a large representation. T. A. Hougas, president.

Convention Notices

Eastern Iowa Sunday school, with Fulton Branch, October 13. All reports should be in by October 10. Anna Lowe, secretary, Baldwin, Iowa.

Quorum Notices

Kirtland quorum of priests at Akron, Ohio, September 23 and 24 in the Latter Day Saint church. Saturday meeting 7.30 p. m., Sunday 7 a. m. and 2.30 p. m. Bishop Mc-

COOPERATION

To the Saints Everywhere

We want your cooperation. Every book you purchase, every paper or magazine you subscribe for gives some one a profit.

Why not buy or subscribe through your own Publishing Houses and give them the profit?

Our "Book Service Department" was started to serve you. No matter what book you want order through us.

We also have a "Subscription Department" handling all papers and magazines. Just tell us what you want and we will give you prices. Order through

Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa
or
Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Mo.

Guire suggests that we study the Womans' Auxiliary Year Book and the books suggested therein as a help in our "visiting." Get from Herald Office, 20 cents each. Meet with us if at all possible. C. B. Keck, assistant secretary, 1907 East Sixty-sixth Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

Two-Day Meetings

Northwestern Ohio District, October 21 and 22. Take Lake Shore Railway, and Wheeling and Lake Erie steam roads to Oak Harbor; or the Northwestern Ohio electric. Notify Louis Finken, R. F. D. 1, Oak Harbor, Ohio, so conveyance may be had to place of meeting. We expect you all, and extend welcome to those outside district. Jesse M. Harden, president; William G. Kimball, secretary.

Notice of Transfer

This is to notify the Saints of Eastern Michigan that by the consent of the First Presidency and the ministers in charge of the fields affected, Elder S. W. L. Scott has been transferred from Omaha, Nebraska, to the Eastern Michigan District to labor in missionary work for the remainder of the conference year.

J. F. CURTIS, Minister in Charge.

Addresses

A. B. Phillips, 31 Darmouth Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts. All mission reports and correspondence should be addressed as above.

Corrections

In the letter from Sister Emma L. Anderson, in HERALD of August 23, a number of unfortunate errors occurred. Page 818, lower part of second column, reference is made to Book of Mormon 18:42; it should read Alma 19:42-44, Authorized Edition. Near bottom of same column: "It is not a state of rest," should read "Is it not a state of rest." Near top of first column, on page 819: "It is possible there is not one honorable person," etc., should read "Is it," etc. The next sentence: "I should have to think," etc., should have read "I should hate to think there had not been an honorable person," etc. In last line of same paragraph the word until is left out following the word glory.

In the HERALD for September 13, 1916, in the article entitled "How do we interpret?" page 889, column 2, paragraph 2, line 1, omit the second definite article the before the word verse. On the same page, paragraph 7, line 2, read come instead of came. On page 890, in the quotation from Revelation 19:7, 8, insert the words, "that she should be arrayed," between the words granted and in, near the end of the quotation.

A Statement

Mr. John A. Lawson of Burnside, Illinois, entered the Sanitarium July 30, 1916. The examination revealed the presence of incurable brain tumor. The tumor was located in that part of the brain that controls speech, and for that reason the patient could not say words he wanted to say. He gradually became worse, and died September 12, 1916.

G. LEONARD HARRINGTON,
Physician in Charge.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 14, 1916.

Information Wanted

The Philadelphia Branch wishes to locate Alex. T. Mayeau. He is supposed to have gone to Montreal, Canada. Address J. August Koehler, 112 West Ontario Street, Philadelphia.

Died

FOREST.—Samuel Tyler Forest passed peacefully away at his home in Seattle, Washington, August 29, 1916, aged 80 years, 10 months, 12 days, leaving wife and 3 sons. He was a faithful Saint, passing to the reward of such. Funeral

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor. Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us. This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filing of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice. For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter. Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
Under the Juniper Tree	905
Magazine Number	907
Current Events	907
Notes and Comments	908
Only Hired	908
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
An Epistle, by Gomer T. Griffiths	909
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
"The House Within"	912
Small Colleges Become Juniors	913
Russian Freedom for Jews	913
WOMAN'S AUXILIARY
Edith M. Cochran—Mrs. Frederick M. Smith—Emma B. Burton.	914
LETTER DEPARTMENT
T. C. Kelley—William Anderson—A. E. Warr—J. E. Vanderwood—W. C. Hidy—Charles E. Catton—Charles L. Gore—Ruby Gertrude Seogin—Frank P. Sweetman—A. G. Miller—Nathan V. Braley—F. Lewis—Charles J. Spurlock—William C. Cummings—Charles E. Butterworth.	917
NEWS FROM MISSIONS
J. M. Baker—Fred Moser, jr.	923
NEWS FROM BRANCHES
Abbie A. Horton.	924
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT
	925

largely attended. F. W. Holman offered the prayer. Sermon by J. M. Terry, from John 14:1-3.

DONALDSON.—Napoleon B. Donaldson, born in Fremont County, Iowa, March 6, 1865; died September 3, 1916, near Riverton, Iowa. Baptized August 27, 1884, by Henry Kemp. Funeral by W. E. Haden, assisted by N. L. Mortimore.

MCDONALD.—Francis Marion McDonald, born May 17, 1859, at Mount Pleasant, Iowa; died at Lamoni, Iowa, September 9, 1916, after a long illness. Baptized June 12, 1892, by William Waterman, at New London, Iowa. Ordained to elder, June 3, 1900, at Burlington, Iowa, by G. H. Hilliard, J. R. Evans, and J. R. Lambert. Married Lovina Willey, November 8, 1882. To them were born 5 children, Ella A., who died in infancy; Forrest C., of Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. Emma Henderson, of El Paso, Texas; Mrs. Nellie Mae Kavanagh, of Keokuk, Iowa, and Frank, of Lamoni. Funeral in Brick Church, sermon by Elbert A. Smith, assisted by R. M. Elvin. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

WEDGE.—Ellen E. Rayner-Munsell-Wedge, born August 2, 1851, Piqua, Ohio; died July 30, 1916 at Omaha, Nebraska. Was preceded by her first 2 children in early childhood, and by her husband, Mall Munsell, in August 1907. Short funeral service in Omaha, Nebraska, in charge of James A. Gillen. Following the rites of the church the Eastern Star rendered their beautiful service. There are left to mourn, husband, Mr. S. Wedge; 4 brothers, Harris, David, John and James Rayner; 1 son, J. Guy Munsell; 2 daughters, Mrs. A. F. La France, and Mrs. Hale W. Smith; also 3 whom she raised from infancy. Interment at Plymouth, Missouri.

A Distinctive Reason

What is the chief reason for the superiority of Royal Baking Powder?

There are several good reasons, but there is one which distinguishes Royal from other baking powders.

This reason, which every woman should know, is that Royal Baking Powder is made from cream of tartar, which comes from grapes. This means a healthful fruit origin. It means natural food as distinguished from mineral substitutes used in other baking powders.

There is no alum nor phosphate in Royal Baking Powder

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO
New York

FOR SALE

Two acres of fine lying land, all set to young fruit just coming into bearing—new 6 room house, back plastered and finely finished. 2 never failing wells, new hen house 10 x 24. Located on South State St. Bargain for cash. E. F. Hall, Lamoni, Iowa. 31-tf

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist

in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

IN THE SHELTER OF THE LITTLE BROWN COTTAGE. The popular serial that ran in Stepping Stones during 1915, by the editor, Estella Wight. The leading character is not a Latter Day Saint at first, but eventually becomes so, and in the process a strong gospel story is told. Several characters in the book are shown laboring toward the truth, making this a fine, readable missionary medium. Cloth, 373 pages$1.25

BOOK OF MORMON TALKS. H. O. Smith, "Orion," understands the minds of boys and girls. In this interesting book he has told the whole Book of Mormon story, briefly and simply, around the family circle; making the father of two inquisitive, thoughtful boys and girls the chief conversationalist. There is a delightful simplicity about these talks, and a homeliness that will perpetuate their popularity among Latter Day Saints. No. 365, cloth60c

BEATRICE WITHERSPOON. An autobiography of a prominent church worker. By Mrs. Emma Burton, including much of the life experiences of her husband, Elder Joseph Burton. Sea stories, pioneer experiences, conversion in spite of deep-set convictions—numerous features that go to make an interesting, active, useful life. No. 360, cloth$1.30

THE INDIAN MAIDEN. (Object lessons on Temperance.) By Frances. Unique as a story and as a temperance propaganda. Indian life, the old story, and the evils of civilization, furnish the author with material of which she takes full advantage. Quaintly appealing; anti-barbaric and anti-alcoholic. No. 363, cloth60c

THE GOSPEL STORY AND FOOTSTEPS OF JESUS. By Frances. Charming child stories, of the birth-offering series. Adapted to the baby mind. Tales of truth that will register and remain. No. 366, cloth60c

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

The Saints' Herald

SYDNEY HEADS: SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA

AUSTRALIAN NUMBER

September 27, 1916

Volume 63, Number 39

R S SALYARDS SEC
LAWSON IOWA

Australia

BY E. F. ROBERTSON

There's a land far away 'neath the Southern Cross,
Where the sun shines warm all the year;
Where the winter comes not with snow and with frost,
Depriving the world of its cheer;

Where sweet-scented flowers are ever in bloom,
And fruit always ripe on the tree;
Where waters gleam bright in the light of the moon,
And the breeze blows soft from the sea.

My thoughts oft return to those high, rugged hills,
And forests so stately and tall
Where the welkin with music the lyre bird fills,
Or at nighttime, the curlews call.

Then I dream of the skies that were azure blue,
The sunsets of purple and gold,
As I viewed them with friends that were tried and true
In the beautiful days of old.

And I long for a moonlight ride on the lake,
Or a moonlight walk on the shore,
With those I first loved for the gospel's sake—
Then loved for their own sakes more.

But now I am here in a land far away
From the bright Australian shore,
Where blustering winds of the north round me play
And the snow drifts high round my door.

So I sit here and think of days that are gone
And of friends of the dear, dead past;
And I pray that we all may meet round the throne
In the kingdom of God, at last.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, SEPTEMBER 27, 1916

NUMBER 39

HISTORICAL DEPARTMENT

AN INTRODUCTION

With this issue the HERALD Editors present an Australian Number devoted almost exclusively to the mission in Australia. In the preparation of this number we have been assisted in a very able and generous manner by Brother Walter J. Haworth, editor of the Gospel Standard. He has collected much of the matter herewith presented and many of the illustrations used. Others also have assisted us directly in answer to our invitation.

The number may not be all that we might wish, yet we are sure that it will contain much that will interest the general reader and the Australian Saints in particular.

Such special numbers may be made the means of bringing the Saints in various missions into closer touch with each other. There is a traditional good feeling between Australians and the people of America. This of course is intensified between the Australian Saints and the Saints in America by the gospel tie that binds their hearts in one.

The HERALD Editors take pleasure at this time in extending their greeting and their very best wishes to the Saints in Australia. May God prosper the work in that land. May the blessings of peace soon return to the people of that country. And upon the return of peace, may there open an era of gospel preaching during which our laborers in that part of the vineyard may be able to bring many souls to the knowledge of the truth.

We also extend at this time our best wishes to the spiritual heads over that mission, Elders C. A. Butterworth and Paul M. Hanson, and to all the force of workers both local and general under their presidency. May grace and truth attend them, and power and success accompany their work.

ELBERT A. SMITH,
EDWARD D. MOORE,
Editors.

To improve, one must change. And to change one must have his prejudices alarmed.—Selected.

THE AUSTRALIAN MISSION

BY W. J. HAWORTH

The Australian Mission is situated, geographically, farther from the church headquarters than any other mission thus far undertaken. It is distant, approximately, ten thousand miles, and includes the whole commonwealth of Australia and the Dominion of New Zealand. A vast area truly; something larger than the whole of the United States.

There are, however, less than six millions of peo-

ELDER W. J. HAWORTH.
Editor of the "Gospel Standard."

ple in the commonwealth of Australia and New Zealand combined. In Australia mission work is confined; by the conditions under which we labor, to the European or white population, which greatly exceeds in number the aboriginal or black element.

No work has been attempted among the latter for the reason that our missionary force is far too small to meet the demands made upon it for preaching to the whites.

Our branches and openings for preaching have, so far, been upon the seacoast. No work has been attempted in the interior, except in Queensland, where we have two new inland branches. Scarcity of missionary labor is the reason assigned by those who have been in charge of the work. Our field of

W. Savage to New Zealand at the last General Conference.

Our mission is, territorially, part of the great British Empire. The "ways" of our people are somewhat different from those of the people of America. They are also as dissimilar to the "ways" of the English. Though an integral portion of the British Empire, we have our own distinctive nationality, recognized by Britain. We have a free constitution, patterned somewhat after that of the United States. We have a king, [King George V] it is true, but he does not intrude himself. We are as free as any people on God's earth. Our own free parliaments make the laws of the country, which, by the way, are, in some respects, a great advance on the legislation of other countries. Our relations with England have been, happily, more satisfactory, than those of the United States were when that country was a British colony. In the past sixty years we have not had a single grievance against the mother country. We have been given the territory, and, with it, the rights of self-government. We can raise as high a customs barrier against the mother country as we please. We could separate if we wished to, but we feel infinitely better off as we are than if we undertook national existence without the protection of the Union Jack of old England.

While we share the protection of that flag, we feel bound, also, to share in the maintenance of the principles of freedom and honorable dealing for which it stands. Consequently, on the very day the present disastrous war was declared, our nation cabled an offer of thousands of troops to the imperial authorities. It was accepted, and so, Australian troops are to-day fighting for England and her allies. Our operations has been limited by the number of men at the disposal of the ministers in charge.

A GROUP OF AUSTRALIAN SAINTS AT BULAHDELAH.

After over thirty years of labor we have about thirteen hundred members in Australia. There are twenty-four branches, four organized districts, three Sunday school associations, and two Religio associations. We own quite a number of church buildings and only a few of the branches meet in other than our own buildings.

In New Zealand, the missionary effort has been very limited. Elders Paul M. Hanson and D. E. Tucker were appointed there in 1902 and labored for some time under very adverse circumstances. They baptized a few, but because of the adverse conditions prevailing, abandoned the mission in 1904. Since then a few of our Australian Saints have migrated there and through a junction of some of these with those brought in by Elders Hanson and Tucker, the work began to exhibit signs of life some six years ago in the city of Dunedin, in the south island. Accordingly, the writer visited and labored with the Saints there for five months on his way to and from America in 1911. He organized the Dunedin Branch on February 24 of that year.

Since then the local brethren have been doing the best they could to keep the flag flying; and have faithfully preached on the streets and done what they could to further the interests of the work. Their hopes were raised by the appointment of Elder H.

Photo by W. J. Haworth.

APOSTLE GRIFFITHS BAPTIZING IN THE AUSTRALIAN "BUSH" OR FOREST.

warships are patrolling the Pacific and have done good work in protecting our trade.

It may be asked, "What are the prospects for the development of local talent and the putting of local men into the general ministry?" We think the prospects are excellent. The proportion of local men in and we could not nearly cover it if we put every Saint in Australia on the missionary list. Hence, there is a necessity for men—it does not much matter what their nationality is. Young men are preferable. It does the mission good to have an up-to-date, progressive American missionary or two here.

LOGGING IN AUSTRALIA.

Showing Evangelist and Sister F. G. Pitt on the forward end of the log.

the field at present, is fifteen to one, and we expect shortly to increase the number of Australian missionaries. Most of the recent local additions to our force have been young, single men. These are somewhat inexperienced, but will all grow. We have several married men, of wider experience, whom we hope to see appointed in the near future. Finances are our greatest hindrance to the putting of such men in the field. Still we have considerable faith in the Saints whose duty it is to furnish the wherewithal, and abounding faith in the great Author of this work, whom we feel will not suffer our efforts to meet with disaster, provided we exercise the necessary wisdom and diligence.

It would be a good thing for this mission if the minister in charge and those whom he is likely to use as assistant ministers in charge were accorded the privilege of attending General Confer-

PUPILS OF BRISBANE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

They are drilling for an action song. Note the Australian flag.

"Do we need American missionaries?" We do not think any Australian Saint would answer that question in the negative. While we wish to develop all the local men we can enlist for such service, it must be remembered that this is a very large field, ence now and again, and if need be, of spending a year or so in America, to add to their experience of things in general. If those sent were alert men, the gain to the mission would be immense. The writer has had the privilege of attending a General Conference and believes that the mission has benefited in different ways through that experience. The gain, however, would have been far greater, had he been able to have extended his visit so as to have gained some actual experience of missionary work and general conditions prevailing in America.

Australia is a splendid field for our message. It is a young country, and fresh districts are constantly being opened to settlement. Would that we had sufficient missionaries to follow up the opening of these new districts. In the main, the people among whom we labor are fairly well educated and up to the average standard of intelligence. No finer system of primary education is to be found in any part of the world.

As pointed out, however, in another article, the majority of the young people "leave school" at fourteen years of age. But their progress up to this time must not be judged by American standards. Here the children attend school over ten months of the year. The average American takes his primary education later in life, if he is in a rural district. But it is primary education just the same and from what the writer has gleaned, at first hand, the bright Australian boy or girl who gets his education before he is fourteen years of age, is, at least, not behind those who go to school, in America, for primary education, when they are young men and women.

Secondary and higher education is not, however, taken advantage of to the extent that it might be. The percentage of those who pass from the primary to the secondary schools is not high, but when the vast difference between the populations of the two countries is taken into account, the percentage of people who do not advance above the elementary stage in America is as great as in Australia. The age at which they receive the elementary knowledge is a mere detail.

Freedom of speech is respected here. The streets may be used to advantage and the brethren everywhere are doing something along these lines. It is a good means of advertising our work. Invitation cards are sometimes used at such meetings, calling attention to our church services in the various localities. Schoolhouses, however, are hard to obtain. In some states it is impossible to get the use of them. In others, after the use has been obtained it is hard to continue long. The other churches have been known to give up the privilege of using a school themselves in order to keep us out.

Back in 1886, Elder Burton, one of the pioneer missionaries, wrote the HERALD: "Grand land this for fifty or more elders; it would then be to the Reorganization what England was to the former church." That is doubly true now. May God give us the laborers. We can find work for all. We feel that progress will be more rapid in the future than it has been in the past. The mission work is on a better basis than ever before. We have more missionaries than we ever had at one time before. Most of them are lacking in experience it is true, but time will see a great change in this respect. The local men are also better organized and are working with a will everywhere. They will be encouraged to keep it up. May God give strength, courage, and above all, wisdom, to those already here and to those who may be sent to us, as well as to those who may be raised up here, that many may be brought to a knowledge of the truth, and a strong, self-supporting mission be built up in the lands 'neath the Southern Cross.

* * * * *

OUR MISSIONARIES; PAST AND PRESENT

BY W. J. HAWORTH

The pioneer missionaries to Australia were Elders C. W. Wandell and Glauod Rodger. The former had been previously sent on a mission to this land from Nauvoo shortly after the death of Joseph Smith. Having prosecuted that mission, he returned to America, but on arrival in Utah he found the evidence of apostasy among the people led astray by Brigham Young, and disgusted, dropped out of active service. In 1873, he united with the Reorganization and was sent as a missionary to this country the same year. After a stay in Tahiti, he and Elder Rodger arrived in Sydney in January, 1874. His work here was, however, cut short, for he was taken by the hand of death, March 14, 1874, but not before he had seen some of his former acquaintances unite with the true church, and the Sydney Branch organized. His name is an honored one among the Australian Saints and some years ago the Daughters of Zion of the Balmain Branch marked his last resting place with a suitable tablet and grave curb.

JOSEPH AND EMMA BURTON.

They entered the Australian field in 1884, arriving December 20.

THREE AMERICAN MISSIONARIES TO AUSTRALIA.

Left to right: John Kaler, C. A. Butterworth, and Gomer R. Wells.

Elder Rodger was now left to prosecute a most difficult mission alone. But the Lord was with him and he was able to begin on the Hunter, Myall and Manning Rivers in New South Wales, and on Western Port Bay in Victoria, foundations for good work which later laborers have been able to do. Under his ministry branches were organized and named as follows: Hunter River District Branch, Tea Gardens Branch, Bungwahl Branch and Bungay Branch. Not one of these branches exists today, but members of them are in different other branches.

In 1885, the first named became the Wallsend Branch. Later on the removal of members of the other branches resulted in the organization of the Tuncurry, Nambucca and Laurieton Branches, which are still existent and mostly vigorous. Elder Rodger returned to America after five and one half years of foreign service for the Master. He suffered much persecution in some districts, but he bore it all with the meekness of the Master whom he so faithfully served. Of debates he had a few, and some newspaper controversies. These helped to remove prejudice and made it a little easier for those who followed. He baptized but few, but these few were of the right sort, and they and their children and grandchildren have since been pillars in the church—the Davis's, Lewis's and Gregorys in the Newcastle Districts, the Wrights at and near Tuncurry, the Rodgers at Laurieton, the McLaughlins from the Manning to the Richmond, and the Ballards and McKays from the Nambucca right up to Queensland, and in Victoria the McIntoshes, Edens and Stewarts.

The General Conference of 1879 appointed Elder J. W. Gillen to this mission. On arrival here he found his hands were full looking after the ground already broken and striving to stem the fast ebbing tide of decadence. The Sydney Branch became disorganized. The field was so large and the membership so scattered that he felt it was too much for one man. His constant appeals for a helper to be sent from America did not meet with success. Still he was able to do some extension work before he left. He baptized a number at Nambucca and APOSTLE GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

He went to Australia as minister in charge in 1913.

organized the Nambucca Branch, some of the charter members being former members of the defunct Bungay Branch. At Wallsend he baptized Brother and Sister E. J. Haworth, parents of the mission, to a marked degree, by the operations of the Holy Spirit, and the Saints throughout the mission rejoiced with them in many of those fine spiritual manifestations which are so characteristic of the latter-day work.

Elder T. W. Smith, who was in charge of the Australian and Tahitian Mission at this time, but who had spent all his time hitherto, in the islands, arrived in Sydney, November 29, 1887. It was fortunate that he did come at this juncture, for Elder Burton's voice was now much affected by excessive outdoor preaching. The coming of the new missionary and his wife put new life into the Saints. His preaching was inspiring and highly instructive. Sister Smith was an intensely spiritual woman and was the Lord's instrument in imparting many rich blessings to the Saints of the various centers.

Elder Smith organized the Victoria District of three branches, December 31, 1887. This was a step forward inasmuch as it meant the organization of the district forces and the systematizing of the work. Elder Burton was ordained a seventy at this conference.

The second, but larger district, was organized at North Forster on June 30, 1888. This was named the EVANGELIST J. W. WIGHT.

He twice visited the Australian field, during his second mission being in charge conjointly with C. A. Butterworth.

writer, and at Hastings Elder E. Jones, father of Elder J. H. N. Jones. He also baptized some at Queesferry and organized the Queensferry Branch. He returned home in June, 1882.

After his departure the mission was left to its own resources until the end of 1884. During this period Elder E. J. Haworth raised a sufficient amount of money among the different branches to have another elder sent out. Elder J. F. Burton, with his wife and daughter Addie, arrived in Sydney December 20, 1884. From this period church work in Australia began to look up as never before. It has not had a dull or retrograde period since, and we believe it to be one of the most promising fields ever opened by the church. Brother Burton and his wife, who was as good as another missionary, labored in Australia for the next three and a half years. During that time they did some excellent work, making many new openings and organizing branches at Hamilton, North Forster (now Tun-curry), Hastings and Leopold. Elder Burton baptized a large number of people, and, with the assistance of Sister Burton, materially strengthened the work at all points. They were assisted in their mis-

PATRIARCH ALEXANDER H. SMITH.

Who visited Australia in 1901.

Forster District and comprised the whole of the branches within the state of New South Wales. Later on the name was changed to the New South Wales District. More recently, on January 1 and 2, 1915, the state was divided into two and the Northern and Southern Districts of New South Wales, respectively, organized by Elders W. J. Haworth and C. Edward Miller by the direction of Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths. This was necessitated by the growth of the district, which has more than doubled the number of branches in the meantime.

ELDER JAMES W. DAVIS.
Missionary to Australia 1910-12.

At the 1888 conference referred to above, two new missionaries, in the persons of Elders J. W. Wight and C. A. Butterworth, made their first acquaintance with the Australian Saints. Elder Burton and family departed for America the following month, accompanied by Brother Sidney Wright, who, after spending some time as a missionary in America, returned to his homeland in the early nineties (accompanied by his wife, a daughter of the late Patriarch A. H. Smith).

Apostle T. W. Smith and wife returned to the islands, February, 1889, leaving Elder J. W. Wight in charge of this portion of the mission. During this year this was made a separate mission with the last named in charge. In February, 1889, Elder Wight was married to Sister Lizzie Stewart, of Queensferry, Victoria, and some little time after, Elder Butterworth was united in marriage with Sister Sarah Craig of Moolap, Victoria. The former lady accompanied her husband to America in 1894, but Sister Butterworth is still with us, although her husband has been to America twice since their marriage, and is there at the present time.

Elder J. W. Wight returned to Australia in September, 1902, and remained till November, 1903. With the exception of that short period, when Elders Butterworth and Wight were in joint charge, Elder Butterworth was in charge of the mission from 1894 to 1913. Both of these brethren have done much for the mission and their services have met with appreciation from the Saints generally. At the present time Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths is in charge, as intimated elsewhere.

During 1894, Elders Kaler and Wells arrived in the mission, the former bringing his wife with him, the latter following the examples set by Elders Wight and Butterworth, and finding his wife here. These both proved themselves efficient workers, and largely through their efforts the work was placed on a firm footing in Sydney. Elder Wight, about the time of their arrival, resuscitated branch organization in that city, the branch this time being called after Balmain, the suburb where the work was established. The Lord blessed the branch with many additions under the ministry of the newly arrived men and in December, 1896, the Saints erected a church building of their own, having previously met in private houses and hired halls.

We must not forget to mention that previous to this, different local brethren had been appointed to labor as General Conference appointees, but unfortunately up to this time none had been able to remain permanently in the field—Elders C. Avery, C. A. Loving, G. T. Ballard, S. G. Wright, D. McIntosh and H. Broadway each did good field service while they occupied, but one by one they dropped out. The next local addition to the General Conference appointees was the writer, who was appointed in January, 1899, and took the field the following May. So far he has been able to remain in the field and expects to continue indefinitely. Elder Wells returned to America, early in 1900, but came back to Australia in November, 1901.

Patriarch A. H. Smith, accompanied by his secretary, Leon A. Gould, was the next American elder to visit this land. He made the acquaintance of the New South Wales Saints at the conference in December, 1901, arriving while the main social service was in progress. His introduction to the assembly took place when he was requested by Elder Wells, who was in charge of the service, to come forward and ordain the writer to the office of seventy. He was received with joy by the assembled Saints who listened with interest to his statement of why he had come to the mission. At this conference Elder George Lewis was ordained a high priest and bishop. Elders G. R. Wells and J. D. Imrie were ordained his counselors. The present counselors are Elders G. W. Stewart and John Jones. Patriarch Smith was able to do a splendid work throughout the mission, and the Saints recall many pleasant memories of his visit among them.

Elder J. D. Imrie was the next General Conference appointee recruited from our local workers. He was a bright, intelligent officer, but was not permitted to labor with us long. He died in 1903—a little over one year after going into the field. Patriarch Smith, accompanied by Brother Gould and Brother and Sister Kaler and family, left for America in May, 1902.

In September, 1902, Elder J. W. Wight again landed in this mission, bringing Elder A. C. Barmore to Australia with him, and leaving Elders P. M. Hanson and D. E. Tucker to open up the work in New Zealand. Elder Wight returned about the end of 1903 and Elders Hanson and Tucker a year or so later; Elder Barmore in 1912, taking with him a wife, for he had followed the example of previous elders and married an Australian (White) girl.

At the conference at which brethren were appointed to this mission, a revelation was received in which Elder C. A. Butterworth, our esteemed missionary in charge, was to be an apostle. Accordingly, a cablegram was sent to President A. H. Smith, authorizing him to ordain Brother Butterworth, which was attended to in April, 1902.

While Elder Wight was here two new local men were put into the field—Elder J. H. N. Jones, who is still a faithful worker, and Elder William Mackie, who dropped out of the service and was expelled from the church in 1908. The former did a splendid work in South Australia, where the Adelaide Branch was raised up, largely by his efforts. He is at present in Western Australia, engaged in frontier work. The latter also did a good work, notably in and around Melbourne, Victoria.

About this time, Elder John Jones, though not a General Conference appointee, began to do a good work, visiting the different branches and some points where preaching could be done in New South Wales. He continued this work, laboring in a self-sustaining way for several years. He is at present laboring under General Conference appointment, on a self-sustaining basis and is the president of the Northern

New South Wales District. Elder Wells and family returned to America in June, 1910.

Our next additions from America were Elders J. W. Davis and E. F. Robertson, who arrived here in August, 1910. Both performed labor in New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, and Western Australia. They returned to America at the end of 1912.

Patriarch and Sister Pitt were the next American missionaries to visit us, arriving the latter part of 1911. They visited all the chief centers and every branch then organized, where they were well received and did a work much appreciated. They returned to America in 1913, visiting New Zealand, Tahiti and adjacent islands en route.

EVANGELIST F. G. PITT.

Visited Australia 1911-12.

At the next conference (1912) two new missionaries were appointed from our local ranks—Elder W. H. Gammidge, who has been doing good work, and Elder A. J. Corbett who did not go out, owing to the missionary in charge deeming it more expedient to place Bishop Lewis on the list of missionary workers. He has been, however, doing a good work as president of the Balmain Branch.

Apostle Griffiths and Elder C. Edward Miller came to us in November, 1913. Both were soon at work and the Lord worked with them. At the beginning of 1913 Apostle Butterworth went to America, so Apostle Griffiths was left in charge of the mission. He did a splendid work, visiting the most important parts of the mission and generally systematizing the work of the local ministry and putting both branch and district work on a more satisfactory basis. He organized no less than six new branches and a new district while among us. We keenly regretted his enforced departure from our midst, but now we can see that the Lord was indeed in his going, for there were important things pending in America shortly after his arrival there, and his place as president of the Quorum of Twelve was there.

EVANGELIST JOHN JONES.

The first native-born evangelical minister. Ordained December 26, 1915, by Apostle C. A. Butterworth and Bishop Lewis.

Through the efforts of Apostle Griffiths, largely, we have the following missionaries in the field at present, all recruited from the ranks of the local workers: Elders A. V. Robinson, William Patterson, William Burrows, Hermann Peisker, George T. Rawson, George Eden, and Priests J. M. Argent, C. G. Argent, H. I. Velt, Cyrus Loving, James Jones. All are faithfully laboring and much good work is being accomplished as a result of the increase in the forces at our disposal. We now have sixteen men in the field, but this number is by no means adequate to the territory for which we are responsible. More laborers are needed and we have faith that they will be forthcoming. We have a splendid army of young men upon which we can draw as the way opens up, and we can see the way clearer for an advance movement in this mission than ever before. May God bless our field workers—past, present and future.

POSTSCRIPT

The foregoing was forwarded for publication prior to the General Conference of 1915. Since then, some changes have taken place in our missionary force.

At the conference named Apostles Paul M. Hanson and C. A. Butterworth were appointed in joint charge of this mission. The latter returned here, June 1, 1915, and the former arrived, accompanied by Mrs. Hanson, about the middle of the following August. They are doing a good work and the mission is prospering under their care. They have the respect and support of the officers and members of the church throughout the mission and the cause is prospering under their direction. This is as it should be, for the Lord has promised the direction of his Spirit to those in charge of the various departments of church work, if the Saints accord to them the respect due, and heed the advice and counsel tendered. Under such conditions we can expect the Lord to prosper the labors of his people in this or any other land.

During 1915, Elders Rawson and Robinson found it necessary, for private reasons, to retire from the missionary force, but each of them labors in a local capacity as opportunity affords. Elder C. Edward Miller returned to America in January, 1916, after two and a half years of very effective work among us. He made many friends during his sojourn here and brought quite a number into the church. May God prosper his labors elsewhere as he blessed them in this land. Would that we had an army of such devoted workers as the brother whom we affectionately call "C. Ed."

Early in 1916, Brother C. G. Argent and C. Loving retired from the field, but they are still laboring in a local capacity and thus bringing honor to the cause. Elder E. H. Davis, who had long served the Master as a local officer in Western Australia, was appointed at the last conference and is now laboring in Adelaide, South Australia. The Saints of New Zealand are also looking forward to the arrival of Elder H. W. Savage, recently appointed to that part of the mission. Brother A. L. Loving is another appointee who has been doing a good work for about a year.

Our missionary force now consists of Apostles Hanson and Butterworth, Seventies W. J. Haworth, H. W. Savage and J. H. N. Jones (the latter is, however, designated for ordination as a high priest); Bishop G. Lewis; Patriarch John Jones; Elders H. Peisker, William Burrows, H. I. Velt, W. Patterson, E. H. Davies, W. H. Gammidge and Priests W.

Vaughan, J. Argent, and A. L. Loving. May God give to this scanty force the spiritual assistance and guidance necessary for the carrying on of the promulgation of the gospel and the building up of the kingdom of God in this land.

* * * * *

REMINISCENCES

BY C. A. BUTTERWORTH

It is now nearly twenty-eight years since I landed on the Australian shores with a commission from the General Conference to do missionary work in this southern island continent. I was a stranger in a strange land, with neither friends nor relatives, so far as I knew.

This "marvelous work" or "angel's message" that all true Saints love so much to talk about and make known to their neighbors, was little known in those days, and only a few had accepted and were rejoicing in the "earnest of their inheritance."

These few, though scattered far and wide, soon became my true friends and took a deep interest in my welfare and mission work. Years came and passed rapidly away as we struggled on together with a steady and permanent growth, against all opposition and misrepresentation, which has always been waged against the servants of God and "the true light which enlightens every man that cometh into the world," and with the help that was sent us from time to time, the "camp fire" has been kept burning and the light growing brighter and brighter, until now we are blessed with apostles, high priests, seventies and other missionaries, besides the general branch officers and numerous branches to push the work into new fields now opening before us, where the sheep who have not yet heard the voice of the good Shepherd are only waiting the invitation to come into the fold. In my early experience in the mission some of the old-time Saints took as much interest in my welfare as if I were their own son, and their counsel and kindly advice has been a lasting benefit and comfort to me.

All my labors from year to year among the Saints have been of a friendly and congenial nature, and free from personal difficulties, for which I have been thankful, and I have always tried to set an example in harmony with the profession of our faith, that the cause we love might not be retarded or suffer by reason of any of my personal weaknesses.

I am persuaded that the Lord's regard for the Saints of this land is as deep, and his love as abounding as it is for any people on earth. They have a solemn reverence for the divine and sacred, are quick to learn, kindly disposed, zealous, liberal with their means, and anxious to learn all they can about the restoration of this great latter-day work, which is to solve all vexatious problems that are now confronting the world and usher in the reign of brotherly love and peace that shall know no bounds.

The mission has been favored with assistance from America, to our profit, and with much appreciation, especially the work of Evangelist Alexander H. Smith and F. G. Pitt, which in many ways caused new hopes and aspirations to spring up in the hearts of the people by reason of the promises held out to those who would order their lives in harmony with the law of God. Their blessings are looked upon as a special favor from the Lord, in pointing out their course in life and warning the Saints of the many pitfalls and snares laid by the Adversary of souls to entrap and beguile them.

APOSTLE C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

Minister in Charge of Australia, conjointly with Apostle Paul M. Hanson.

We have been favored with a bishop specially chosen by the Lord, and who is ably assisted in his calling by a well-organized body of agents and collectors, and the amount of cash in the treasury at the opening of each year after supplying the families of the laborers, including the poor and the needy, is evidence that the right man is in the right place.

I have made two trips to America on church business, and greatly enjoyed my association with those of my own quorum, and was pleased to make this discovery that we are all still human, with much room for advancement, before we reach the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

From my own observation and experience among the Saints, the average church member in Australia will equal any that I have ever been privileged to meet, and I think that is the testimony of other missionaries who have visited this land. I have worked much with my own hands in years gone by, in constructing church buildings, and in various other ways to assist my brethren in the warfare of life, besides doing my ordinary ministerial work, so far as my health would permit, and in turn the brethren have assisted me as much as they were able. Thus we have labored and prayed together, bore and shared in each other's joys and sorrows, for the accomplishment of this great work intrusted to our care, until there has sprung up a bond of love and true affection that seems to be unbreakable.

My many years in presidency over this mission, principally alone, have caused me to trust more in God than man, for direction, but I find association with others relieves the strain and very much lightens the burdens. Elder P. M. Hanson, my present associate, I consider is one of Zion's noblest sons, whose soul is entirely absorbed with Zion's welfare, and one who will mete out justice with a liberal hand to all who have dealings with him.

My labors have been much blessed and burdens lightened by reason of a good, self-sacrificing companion, who has ever been ready and willing to keep me in my calling and at the post of duty, even when duty seemed to demand my presence at home. Our family has increased to five boys and one girl, and the boys are becoming useful in Sunday school and Religio work and one is beginning to bear the good news to others.

Though war and distress is perplexing the nations, and perilous times are among the people, the Lord has promised us protection from all harm and danger, and a safe inheritance in Zion if we are faithful to our trust, and tread the path of duty.

To this end we must labor, watch and pray, if we would come out victorious and be gathered with the redeemed.

* * * * *

The climate of Australia is subject to extreme of drought or flood, mostly drought in the interior. This is caused mostly by the absence of high mountains. The highest peak is Mount Kosciusko, in New South Wales, 7,336 feet.—G. R. Wells.

GLAUD RODGER AND C. W. WANDELL

BY GOMER R. WELLS

(A biographical sketch read before the Balmain Branch on the anniversary of the landing of Rodger and Wandell in Australia.)

Anniversaries are no uncommon occurrences in the affairs of men of God. It is a suitable way of commemorating any worthy or notable event. This custom is common among all nations, as is seen in national days, notable events in the history of the nations, or the birth of eminent men.

Nearly every individual thinks especially of his natal day as each year brings it about, and friends join in wishing many happy returns. And what child of God does not think with pleasure on the day of his "second birth," and with joy "remember the dawn of that day when led by the Spirit the truth to obey." Should we not all join in the remembrance of the day when that fullness of gospel truth arrived whereby our obedience was made possible.

Jehovah recognized the value of anniversaries when he instituted the Passover and Sabbath—both commemorating the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage; also the Lord's supper which commemorates the deliverance of the whole world from the bondage of sin, on condition of obedience.

Our church celebrates one great event by holding its annual conference on the 6th of April—the day the church was organized with six members, in 1830.

Similarly do we meet to-night to celebrate the arrival of the fullness of the restored gospel in the hands of properly accredited ambassadors, Charles Wesley Wandell and Glaud Rodger, on the 22d of January, 1874.

As the history of the gospel is always connected with those who declare it, it may be interesting to advert to a short sketch of the lives of the elders above referred to.

Of the two, we have far more of Elder Rodger's history than of Elder Wandell's, the history of the latter not yet having been published, while the former's has, and may be found in Autumn Leaves, volumes 2 and 3. [A brief biographical sketch of the life of C. W. Wandell may be found in Journal of History for January, 1915.—EDITORS.]

Elder Glaud Rodger was born in Scotland in 1820, where he also heard the gospel in 1842 and was baptized in his twenty-second year. Soon afterward he was called to the office of deacon, and later to a priest, both of which offices he magnified in the branch of his native town until he was called and ordained an elder. In 1844 he decided to give his life to the traveling ministry. He then labored in Scotland and England for eight years.

From lack of time we are compelled to pass by a recital of the many divine evidences seen in his work here (as well as in America and Australia).

We may remark that his labors were fruitful and blessed of God exactly as were those of New Testament times.

He was married in his thirty-first year. In 1851 he and his wife emigrated to America with many others and went straight to Utah, where he thought he would find the church he loved. Alas, like many thousands of others, he found that under the ambi-

(ten years later), when the elders of the Reorganized Church brought to his door the glad news that the true church was still in existence. He felt the same excellent spirit as of yore, and gladly took his place again in the true fold.

About this time Elder Charles W. Wandell, representing the church in Utah, returned from a mission to Australia. Upon his arrival in Utah he, too, recognized a change; for be it stated to the credit of this man he knew nothing of the corruptions introduced by Brigham Young, and was innocent of the same on account of being appointed before they were introduced and before he had visited Utah. On this account he denied the rumors that first came while he was here in Sydney.

After he learned the truth he left that church and settled in California. He then became careless and indifferent, nearly regarding religion as a failure.

Up to this time he was unknown to the Reorganization; but not unknown to God, as we shall see. A wonderful transaction is said to have taken place at a General Conference of that church in Illinois, three thousand miles from his home.

Turn to Doctrine and Covenants 117: 8, and there you will read a revelation calling certain men to the office of seventy, and among them Charles W. Wandell. At this time all these were known to the church except Charles W. Wandell. The records were searched but his name could not be found. Here they had the extraordinary case of a man being called to the ministry who was not even a member of the church. But it is not unprecedented, as can be shown from the Bible. Cyrus of Persia was actually named before he was born—for a certain work for which God used him, and he never embraced the true covenant.

Though astonished, the conference could not reject the call, and decided to wait and let time work it out. This was in March, 1873.

A few months afterward Charles W. Wandell came in actual contact with the Reorganization in California, accepted it, and united with it. He was then ordained at the following conference, as directed in the revelation. He was appointed to open the Australasian Mission, and Elder Rodger (also a seventy) was associated with him. The latter in vision months before had seen himself thus appointed and even the ship in which he sailed.

On the 6th of November, 1873, these two pioneers bade home and native land good-by and sailed for Sydney. God did not intend them to have a direct passage. The ship sprang a leak in mid-ocean.

CHARLES WESLEY WANDELL.

Pioneer Missionary to Australia. Landed January 22, 1874.

tious leadership of Brigham Young they were fast departing from the path of safety and introducing false doctrines that he could not accept.

Little did he think that it was not the accepted body and that the Latter Day Saints who remained East were even at that time (1852) reorganizing in Wisconsin and that he would meet the elders of that church.

After suffering disappointment and sorrow and poverty there because of priestcraft, he and his family escaped and settled in California in 1854 where he remained, engaged in private pursuits, until 1864

While others were alarmed, Elder Rodger was calm; for in the vision he had seen himself land in Sydney.

The captain examined his charts and found that they were one thousand miles from Tahiti; to which place they turned for repairs. In a night vision Elder Rodger was shown that they had a work in Tahiti, and was shown the place and people.

We may here explain that many years before missionaries had been sent to Tahiti by the first church and many branches raised up which they had to leave on account of the hostile French-Catholic governor of the islands.

The ship put into Papeete, Tahiti, in safety, and spent some time in repairs, during which the two Australian missionaries got acquainted with the native Saints; preached, baptized, set in order, and ascertained the needs of the mission, reporting it to headquarters—the result being that the mission was reopened and continues prosperous to this day.

They then left Tahiti and after a successful voyage landed in Sydney at nine o'clock in the morning, January 22, 1874, on the very wharf seen by Elder Rodger in vision months previous. Among the first people they met were Brother and Sister Ellis. Sister Ellis had seen them in vision and needed no introduction. Both accepted the message soon after, as did Brother and Sister Darke and Sister Brown, all of whom are now with memory freighted with experience and appreciation drawn from twenty long years.

Elder Wandell was permitted to labor but a little over a year, when he passed away, leaving his co-worker, Rodger, to fight the battle alone.

One of Elder Wandell's last requests was that an anniversary be observed.

He died in Saint Vincent's Hospital, Sydney, and was laid to rest by loving hands in the "Old Balmain" cemetery.

Elder Rodger prosecuted a useful mission of over four years and then returned to America, where he afterward died while away from home on a mission in the State of Nevada.

His work here was the foundation of our work in the colonies.

I have been over nearly all the territory from the Manning Road (north) to Melbourne (in Victoria), and find that he is still esteemed even by outsiders, and the Saints hold his name almost in reverence. His voice is stilled, as is Elder Wandell's, and their bodies sleep 'neath the cold clods and whispering leaves of the graveyard, but they still live in the memory of earth's children, while their spirits rest in the paradise of God to await the resurrection morn.

SOME DIARY NOTES

EXTRACTS FROM THE CLOSING PAGES OF THE DIARY OF
C. W. WANDELL, MISSIONARY TO AUSTRALIA

Thursday, January 14, 1875. Returned to Sydney.

Sunday, January 17, preached at the hall upon the subject of eternal judgment. Had great freedom, but was so weak as to be hardly able to stand up before the congregation. I believe it is thought by the Saints that another winter in Sydney may prove fatal to me.

Sunday, January 24, spent a very wretched week. Coughing very much and feeling quite prostrated. On Friday called at the French consulate; could get no information of a vessel going to Tahiti. On Saturday called on Brother Aspinall who put a plaster on my chest. On Sunday held meeting as usual in the afternoon. The weather was so stormy that we had no evening meeting. I have now been in Sydney one year. The Lord has greatly blessed and preserved, though he has afflicted me.

Wednesday, February 3. Had a very bad week. On Sunday I preached two important discourses, but was very tired at the conclusion, and came home in a bus.

Sunday, February 7. Rained in the afternoon. Went to church in the evening and preached in great distress. It is evident that I am getting worse.

Monday, February 8. Mail arrived; letters from Joseph and my family. At just four o'clock this morning I awoke and found myself apparently suffocating. I sprang out of bed and went to the open window and gasped there for about two or three minutes for breath. The sensation was dreadful and entirely new to me. I have heard of asthmatics passing through that experience, but have not considered that I was asthmatic. I did not dare to go to bed again that night. I told the brethren that something had to be done in my case, and that I was determined to go to Saint Vincent's Hospital, where I could be skillfully treated and be properly taken care of.

February 14. I entered the hospital. Doctor Laurie pronounced my disease the heart disease. The swelling of my limbs caused by heart disease has developed a dangerous sore in my left leg. The point is to keep this sore from mortifying and killing me at once.

Know all men that I want all my home books and other church books to be the property of the Australian Mission of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; I want my clothes, all of them, to be given to the elder whom the church may send out to take my place. The trunk goes with the clothes. I here (March 2) feel it my duty to state that I believe young Joseph Smith to be the true leader and president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as against the claims of Brigham Young to that office; and to be the legal prophet, seer, and revelator thereof. He must increase and Brigham shall decrease.

After my decease, I wish the church to assemble in a conference capacity, take action with reference to me that may be just and proper. I feel more than ever convinced that a splendid work will yet be done here. Also, I here record my unlimited faith in the atonement of Jesus Christ as the world's Savior. It is in view of the completeness of that atonement that I am enabled to think so calmly about it. God and Christ are true and so is a universal Providence.

After the conference meeting spoken of shall have been held I want this diary to be carefully and properly prepared for the post office, and sent direct to Plano to Brother Joseph, to be preserved in the archives of the church.

To any of my personal friends in America who would ask after certain inner emotions, etc., I will say that all is calm and serene. The eternal future is bright, and one night last week the angels sang a beautiful song. The Adversary has not showed himself in any distinctive form, and I am truly and greatly blessed. CHARLES WESLEY WANDELL.

* * * * *

GENERAL INFORMATION

DISTRICTS IN AUSTRALIA

Northern New South Wales District, John Jones, president.

Southern New South Wales, George Stewart, president.

Victoria District, C. Edward Miller, president.

Southern Queensland District, Hermann Peisker, president.

BRANCHES IN AUSTRALIA

New South Wales

Bulahdelah Branch, Elder W. Maybury, president.

Leichhardt Branch, Elder G. W. Stewart, president.

Wallsend Branch, Elder E. J. Haworth, president.

Hamilton Branch, Elder N. Williams, president.

Teralba Branch, Elder G. Lewis, president.

West Wallsend, Colin McIntyre, president.

Anna Bay Branch, Elder A. V. Robinson, president.

Bulahdelah Branch, Elder W. Maybury, president.

Tuncurry Branch, Elder E. Wright, president.

John's River Branch, Elder C. H. Ivers, president.

Laurieton Branch, Elder G. H. Parker, president.

Nambucca Branch, Elder Amos Ballard, president.

Southern Queensland District

South Brisbane Branch, Elder E. Nixon, president.

Inverlaw Branch, Elder C. A. Loving, president.

Wondai Branch, Elder William Ballard, president.

Victoria District

Richmond Branch, Elder C. Edward Miller, president.

Geelong Branch, Clarence Butterworth, president.

Hastings Branch, Elder M. F. W. Kippe, president.

Glen Forbes Branch, Elder G. A. Eden, president.

Phillip Island Branch, Elder J. Grayden, president.

South Australia

Adelaide Branch, Elder W. H. Gammidge, president.

Parkside Mission, Elder W. Dyke in charge.

Western Australia

Perth Branch, Elder Robinson, president.

New Zealand

Dunedin Branch, Elder R. W. Hall, president.

(Names of presidents are given as at the time of preparing this table. Some changes may have occurred since that date.)

FIRST QUORUM OF ELDERS—AUSTRALASIAN MISSION

This quorum was organized January 1, 1916, at Leichhardt, New South Wales, by Apostle P. M. Hanson. Elder Nathaniel Williams was chosen to be president and ordained January 2, 1916, by Apostles Butterworth and Hanson. Elder Hermann Peisker, selected as first counselor, was ordained at the same time by Elders W. J. Haworth and J. H. N. Jones. Elder E. H. Davies was selected as second counselor, but has not yet been ordained. William H. Broadway was elected secretary.

FIRST QUORUM OF PRIESTS—AUSTRALASIAN MISSION

This quorum was organized by Apostle Hanson January 1, 1916, at Leichhardt, New South Wales. Walter J. Swain was selected as president and ordained by Apostles Hanson and Butterworth, January 2, 1916. Brethren Clarence Manning and Frederick Spencer were chosen as counselors and ordained at the same time, the officers officiating being Bishop Lewis and Elder G. W. Stewart. Brother Thomas Elliott was elected secretary.

* * * * *

The birds of New South Wales are generally shy. We have been entertained from the roadside many times by the superb imitations of the greatest of mocking birds, the lyre bird, but never succeeded in getting close enough to satisfy sight. We were struck with the beauty of the bell bird's note which is very much like the sound of a small silver bell. They were heard in the trees at the same place in the road for years, but we never got a good look at one. Parrots are not so shy around the squatter's first corn patch, until the clearing gets larger and the shotgun is heard often.—G. R. Wells.

A GLIMPSE OF AUSTRALIA

BY PAUL M. HANSON

It may not be known to all of the readers of the HERALD that the Australasian Mission is the largest in extent of territory of any in the church. It includes New Zealand, which is about eight hundred miles long and two hundred miles wide, and Australia, a vast continent about the size of the United States.

The membership of the church is found chiefly in Australia; but we have a few members scattered

APOSTLE PAUL M. HANSON.

Minister in charge of Australia conjointly with Apostle C. A. Butterworth.

through New Zealand, and a branch exists at Dunedin. Excepting Tasmania, where no missionary labor has yet been attempted, our work has gained a footing in all of the states of Australia and we have branches in nearly all of the leading cities.

This land is very accessible from America; two lines of mail steamers having every convenience for the traveler run from San Francisco regularly, and one line from Vancouver. About three weeks are consumed in making the journey.

Australians are largely of English descent, and of course speak the English language. They are a whole-hearted, cheery, hospitable people. Their love for flowers is ever in evidence in the flower beds in the front of the homes and in the backyards—scarcely ever does one sit down to a meal without seeing flowers on the table.

The climate of the country is much like that of southern California—consists chiefly of two seasons, summer and winter. The coldest weather comes in June, July, and August. The winters are not marked by very cold weather, yet one even from the States feels the wintry weather which is damp and penetrating. Throughout a great part of the year there is one long spell of sunshine. Many who live in Australia have never seen snow.

Australia appears to the visitor as a sort of topsyturvy country. The seasons are the reverse of those in the northern hemisphere; the animal, vegetable, and bird life are different; and from the blue vault of heaven the Southern Cross shines resplendently over all the fair land. The animals, including the kangaroo, wallaroo, wallaby, padymelon, native bear, flying foxes, etc., are different from anything before seen. Birds of beautiful plumage fill the bush with their cries, parrots are heard chattering in the trees, cockatoos may be seen flying overhead, and the lyre bird mimics every sound in the bush. Most of the trees are evergreen, many of which shed their bark.

Photo by Alfred Miles, Brisbane.

AN AUSTRALIAN SUNSET.

Along by the sea, in the mountains, and in the bush are many regions of beauty. The country is noted for its ferns. Often one finds oneself in the midst of ferns in size from those that carpet the ground at one's feet up to the great tree ferns which open out like huge umbrellas. And inspiring are the views of the great wooded districts, in which are to be found extremely tall and stately trees.

It is marvelous that in a country like this the entire population of which is only a little more than five million, cities should be found like Sydney and Melbourne, each having a population of more than employed in a propaganda that has led to a truer understanding of our church and its ideals. I am impressed that the work undertaken by the church in this mission will grow to encouraging proportions according to the support it receives from all who have named the name of Christ; and judging by the past the work will in the future be well sustained. In the midst of the world's trouble, turmoil, and darkness, the gospel of Christ in its fullness is to be authoritatively preached by the servants of Christ. The latter-day glory is to stand as a beacon light to the world, and the righteous are to be gathered out from all nations, looking forward to the coming of Christ when he shall come in glory as King of kings and Lord of lords, to reign in the midst of his people. Before the coming of the Lord the way will have been prepared before him by his church.

The mission of the church being to all nations, the glory of the church will reach foreign fields. Australia was one of the foreign fields entered by the church. For many years the church has sent missionaries to this far-off land. To Australia in the past the servants of the church have gone and gladly spent the best years of their life. They are all held by the church in loving and precious memory, and the works performed by them are responsible to a large degree for the conditions that now presage for this mission a bright future.

Branches of the church have been organized in New Zealand, and, excepting Tasmania, in all of the states of the commonwealth of Australia. New churches are springing up. Congregations are growing numerically. And under the inspired labors of the general and local ministry the light and power and meaning of the glorious gospel of Christ is being made known to many on this vast continent.

Many in the church, of all ages, feel there is no talent too good for the service of the church; auxiliary societies are developing, providing a channel for the expression of many God-given gifts in the church; industrious hands, filled with the reward of labor, are not forgetful of the church's requirements; the world movements are observed, the signs of the times are studied, and a profound interest is taken in the redemption of Zion—Australia looms up as one of the best foreign missions of the church.

* * * * *

Be not ashamed of your craft.—Proverb.

AN AUSTRALIAN HOMESTEAD IN THE "BUSH."

This was once the home of Brother Charles Loving, Argents Hill, New South Wales, a typical Australian homestead in "the bush." This home was carved from the wilderness and built of native lumber.

six hundred thousand. These cities like great cities elsewhere in the world, possess all the advantages of modern life.

Occasionally one sees some of the black-skinned aborigines, but they are in no sense equal to the the Maoris, the aborigines of New Zealand who are equal to the whites when given an equal chance.

Legislation has been brought in this land to about the highest point of human wisdom. Yet there is something seriously lacking. There is here as elsewhere in the world a general discontent that is quite noticeable. Class strife is not absent. Strikes have been frequent even in the state-controlled industries. A materialistic ideal is leading many to the pursuit of money and pleasure.

But the prospects for the expansion of the church work are encouraging. Since the introduction of our work in this land the time has been well em-

SOWING THE SEED FROM A WAGON

BY C. EDWARD MILLER

Several months after I had been in the Australian mission, I was asked a number of times in different localities, if I was going to take the old, old path, from branch to branch, as had been done for many years. In talking over the matter with some of the conference appointees, I learned that it was a difficult matter to get places to preach in, and going to a "Saintless" town there was the expense of board, etc. For these reasons there has not been very much real out-in-new-fields missionary work done over there for years. One of the old elders said he very much feared the church there had entirely lost the missionary spirit.

After canvassing the situation with one of the missionaries, who was as anxious as I was to see some genuine pioneer work done, we concluded to try to reach the small towns by living in a tent, and doing our own cooking. We had all arrangements made, selecting a small town to try the experiment on, when word came to me from the minister in charge to go to Melbourne, so our plans did not materialize. The brother referred to thought a wagon would be more practicable to live in than a tent, and it could easily be hauled from one town to another; but I thought this would be rather expensive, and the initial expense would be heavy, for an experiment.

After arriving in Melbourne, the way was opened to try the wagon plan, and two of the brethren started the work, a short account of which was published in the HERALD.

I had been unable to do any wagon work, as I had branch and district duties, and as a high priest this was my calling, but I think I had some of the spirit of a seventy, and determined to put in a month or so on the wagon before I left the mission, as I wished to see for myself what could be done with that method.

On February 15, last year, Elder W. H. Gammidge and myself left Glen Forbes, Brother George Eden having furnished both the horse and wagon. We arrived at Brother Emmerson's at six p. m., and stayed over Sunday, administering the sacrament to the little band gathered there.

We left on Monday at ten a. m., our objective being a little town called Lang Lang. On the way we stopped at Brother Flemming's home. He is one of the old-timers, having been well acquainted with T. W. Smith.

We reached the outskirts of Lang Lang at six, and camped there for the night. In the morning our horse got homesick and I had to do some energetic sprinting to head her off. Even a horse loves its home.

We drove around the town, making necessary purchases, and engaged a hall for sixty cents a night, for three nights.

ELDER C. EDWARD MILLER.

Brother Miller seemed to captivate the hearts of the Australians. This but confirms the judgment of the American Saints.

The Australian grass seems to possess wonderful nourishing qualities. We had oats with us but our horse didn't care for them, preferring the fresh grass. We secured pasture for seventy-five cents a week. We now found a fine place to camp. We used considerable ingenuity to make ourselves comfortable in camp. Our basin was our friend in need, serving both as a bath tub and to mix dough in! We had considerable rain up to this time, so we spent the day in printing notices and writing them off on our typewriter. We also sent the "Open letter to the clergy" to the three ministers of the town and vicinity, we also accompanied the "Open letter" with courteous personal letters, explaining who we were.

At night we went to the hall and waited for our audience, our patience was rewarded by having an audience of one woman! The next evening it rained very hard, and no audience, and the week we were there it rained every day but one. But we managed to distribute literature to every one of the forty-eight houses in the place.

IN CAMP.

*Elders C. Ed. Miller and George Robinson with the gospel wagon.
(In Australia every wagon has two g's.)*

Notwithstanding we had mailed the "Open letter," which makes the distinction between us and Utah so clear that a child could understand our position, yet two of the ministers went from house to house warning the people that we were Utah Mormons and practiced polygamy! We got busy and again canvassed the town, asking the people if it was a Christian thing to do, when two entire strangers come to the place, to have professed Christian ministers slander them and tell falsehoods about them. I don't think it did those two men very much good in misrepresenting us. We got one business man of the town interested. We went to the printing shop and interviewed the editor of the township paper, telling him what the ministers were doing and asked him if he would give us a little notice. I showed him a copy of a letter I had written to the registrar general of the State of Victoria, asking him if it was true that no licenses had ever been issued to the elders of the Utah church, to perform the marriage ceremony. I showed the editor the answer, which was to the effect that up to that time no licenses had ever been granted to any elders of the Utah church to perform marriages. I then showed him my license, issued by the registrar general, proving conclusively that I was not a Utah elder. I then presented other documents, but he didn't seem inclined to do anything for us, as of course he naturally would want to pander to the ministers and their devotees, so I was very much astonished to see in the next issue of the paper, a clean-cut distinction made between the two churches.

We could not do any street preaching even if it had not rained, as the streets were dark and deserted at night.

One evening we saw an ox team coming along. They are called "bullocks" over there. The driver had been imbibing somewhat. He stopped in front of our wagon and drawled out, "Are you on the wallaby?" A wallaby is a kangaroo, and they are supposed to be on the move continually, so it was an apt expression.

Possibly this article can stand a little embellishment of matter not immediately connected with the subject. A kangaroo was chased by some dogs one day along a sandy patch in a field. There was a high hedge fence dividing the field. The kangaroo mounted over the hedge and they measured his jump, and from where he started to jump to his landing place, was thirty-two feet! When the white men first strung telegraph lines through the country, the black natives thought they were putting up fences to keep the kangaroos out. The native makes a little handful of fire and squats right over it, when the white man came, he built a large fire. The native said: "White man big fool, he build fire so big can't get to it!"

Right back of our camp was the thick "bush," as the woods are called. One day I found an ant hill. The natives used these hills for a bake oven in the following manner. Some of these hills are five feet high. A hole was dug in the side, a fire built in it, and when the clay was good and hot, the embers were raked out and a hot oven was ready to bake anything put in it.

There are interesting things in the air as well as on the land in that far-away island continent, which is almost as large as the United States.

One evening we saw eight great black swans flying half a mile over us. Another evening, just at dusk, saw hundreds of flying foxes, strung out a great distance in the sky. It was a peculiar sky line, and was really uncanny. They looked like gigantic bats. They are very destructive to fruit.

Concluding we had done all we could in Lang Lang, we started for Koo-we Rup, eight miles away. It rained fiercely while we were on the road. We arrived at our destination at two-fifteen, so had the afternoon to prepare our camp. We pulled up along the public road, as we couldn't find any better place to camp. We were somewhat protected from the wind by a high hedge fence. The town had only about twenty-five houses in it. We tracted all of these. A Plymouth Brethren preacher came up to our wagon, and we got into an argument, of course. After being pressed pretty hard, he admitted that if Jesus Christ taught contrary to the way he thought,

Photo by C. Ed. Miller
AN AUSTRALIAN BEAR.

Evidently the original Teddy Bear. Brother Miller says it is claimed that if you lift this bear up by the tail his eyes drop out—the Australian bear has no tail, so the statement cannot be verified.

he would not accept his teachings! He reminded me of the Irishman who watched a brakeman running on the top of some box cars, toward the engine, while the train was going at a good clip. Pointing to the running brakeman, Pat said to his companion: "Mike, look how that man can run, he is gaining on the engine."

We stayed at this place for a day and a half, then pulled out for Cranburne, a good-sized town seventeen miles away. We left tracts at every farmhouse along the road. Sometimes we would have to go some distance through lanes and over fields to reach the house. We demonstrated our bravery by facing about every breed of dog known. We passed through the little fishing village of Torradin, and then through Clyde, distributing tracts at both places.

Now we were on the finest road I have ever seen.

It was lined on both sides with wattle trees and bushes. The wattle is the national flower of Australia. It is a bright yellow. There are many varieties. The scent is delicious. Just imagine what a gorgeous sight greeted our eyes, as we traveled along this yellow-lined highway!

We met the "twelve apostles," but there were only four of the quorum present, the others evidently were on missions. They were birds, which generally travel twelve to the flock, hence the name.

We arrived at our destination at five-thirty, but it was dark before we found a suitable place to locate, which was a reserve a little distance from the town. Supper tasted about as good as open-air appetites could make it.

We had for a neighbor, an old fellow camping in a tent. He said he was hunting work digging potatoes and hoeing onions. You see many tramps along the roads, all carrying tents. But they are not called tramps over there, but "sundowners." As the distance from town to town is so great at times, these wanderers carry tents and lie down in comfort at any place they feel like camping.

The next morning we started out tracting, and covered the whole town, and then it started to rain good and hard. We also mailed the "Open letter" to the ministers of the place. We thought of doing some street preaching, but the weather did not permit us to do so.

It was now time for the return trip. We again distributed tracts by the way. As a general thing the people received us kindly. But at one house, near our camp in Lang Lang, a lady of uncertain age partially opened the door, I asked her if I could leave a tract. Her face was very expressive and it seemed to transform itself into a letter "S" then it seemed to change to an "O" then it looked like a "U" and finally I thought it had the form of an "R." I had purchased a pint of nice thick cream, and it was at our camp not very far away. I became concerned, but when we got there it was still sweet!

We eventually returned to Brother Eden's home at Glen Forbes. The plan we had in mind was to travel from town to town, and visit each place three or four times and see if we could create an interest in our work, but if unsuccessful, we would try another route, giving each town a trial, hunting for human souls, but my time was too limited to completely carry out our plans, but expect others will do so.

We possibly saw the most disagreeable part of the wagon work, as it rained nearly every day we were out; but I thoroughly enjoyed the outdoor life, but above all, I felt as if I was busy about my Master's business. I wish I could put a year in at that kind of gospel labor. There was no tangible result of our effort that we could see, but we sowed the seed, and that was all we could do, and what we went out to do.

I don't see how there can be a better or cheaper way of getting to the people than this gospel wagon idea. It cost two dollars and fifty cents a week for the two of us for food, and we lived well. It cost about a dollar a week to keep the horse.

We often thought of that indefatigable pioneer, Elder Glaud Rodger, trudging over the hills and valleys, carrying a suit case, hunting for souls to save, and possibly many times wondering where he was going to sleep. We compared our condition with his and were thankful that we were more or less independent, as we always had a home at least to go to. Special tracts should be gotten out for the wagon. Ones we used were not adapted to the work at all.

I hope the wagon work will be given a good long trial in Australia, and that young men will be filled with the old-time missionary spirit, and try to reach the people in new fields. I fail to see how we can warn the world by simply "holding what we have" and not trying to push out the way the Lord says we should.

* * * * *

MY IMPRESSIONS OF AUSTRALIA

BY ELDER E. F. ROBERTSON

The long journey of nearly four weeks on the Pacific was almost ended, and the passengers on board the good ship Aarangi were in a state of suppressed excitement as we arose from the early dinner and hurriedly went on deck to get the first view of the world-famed Sydney Harbor, which appeared before us in all the beauty of an almost perfect day. The sky being cloudless and azure blue, and the noonday sun shining down upon an expanse of water, which, but for the gentle undulations always present on the ocean's surface, was like a sea of glass.

Straight before us, some miles in the distance, the headlands loom up like mighty walls of rock rising abruptly from the water's edge, surmounted with fortifications, and on the south stands a lighthouse, containing a light so powerful, I am told, that on a clear night its rays can be discerned from seventy miles at sea.

Behind the headlands could be seen many green, tree-covered hills which extend down into the harbor, forming numerous coves and bays, capes and promontories—rare beauty spots indeed, while away in the distance the tile-roofed houses of the city completed a picture defying description. We soon pass the heads, and the engines are slowed down to half time, and we glide smoothly along past numerous ships, at anchor, or lashed to the various wharves, small sailing craft, or ferry boats, being idly tossed on the languid billows, or hurrying to and fro, past a number of green little islands. A little launch hurries out to meet us, and the health officer comes on board, and makes a rapid survey of us, as we are lined up for inspection. We are attached to a little tugboat and very slowly drawn up to our landing place at Circular Quay, where hundreds of people are assembled to meet relatives and friends, or in the hope of being employed by the passengers in various ways. Handkerchiefs are waving and here and there sharp cries of delight as various passengers recognize their friends on shore.

ELDER E. F. ROBERTSON.

Missionary to Australia, 1910-12.

We, too, are anxiously scanning the upturned faces for one that looks like a Latter Day Saint, but can see none, and are beginning to feel a bit discouraged when my attention is called to three men at the farther end of the wharf, and I said, "There they stand," pointing them out to Brother Davis. "Yes," he said, "I can tell a Latter Day Saint anywhere." So we leaped up on the rail and shouted out to them that we were the men they were looking for, and sure enough, they proved to be Bishop George Lewis and Brethren A. J. Corbett and John Heinrich,

Later we were joined on the wharf by Elders John Jones and W. J. Haworth. After our baggage had been inspected by the revenue officers, we were conducted to the home of Elder Haworth, which was then in the same building as the Standard Printing Office, he being editor of the Gospel Standard, where we met a few more of the Saints and were made welcome in our foreign mission.

In the evening, about seventy or eighty of the Saints from Balmain and Leichhardt, with a few representatives from the New Castle branches assembled at Brother Haworth's, where the bounties

ELDERS E. F. ROBERTSON AND W. J. HAWORTH.

In camp during an Australian missionary tour with horse and cart.

of the earth were served in abundance. Songs, music, and recitations rendered, and addresses of welcome accorded us, to which we replied, feelingly, if not fittingly, for when we thought of the great expanse of water, and of mountains and prairies intervening between us and the place of our birth, of our parents, kindred, and friends, and of the years that must come and go, ere we would again behold a familiar face, or hear the music of a familiar voice, our hearts were too full to admit of much speech making.

However, we felt that we had landed among a kind-hearted and generous people, who were willing to give us their confidence, love, and support without reserve, and we were determined to at least try to merit such good graces and do our best to advance the work of the Lord in their land.

As may be supposed, we found some conditions very different here than in America, and found it necessary in some cases to accommodate our methods of work to these conditions, while some of the methods in use here we thought not so conducive to advancement as they should be, and have tried to make a few corrections. We find our Australian brethren eager to advance the work.

We find the same obstacles in the way of missionary work here as elsewhere. In the cities there is every kind of amusement to attract the attention and occupy the mind, so that few people are willing to listen to the gospel.

As the weather is warm and pleasant the year round, all kinds of outdoor sports and games are very popular. Then there is a law closing all stores, shops, factories, and nearly all public works at one o'clock on Saturdays, giving the working people the opportunity of attending horse races, prize fights, and games and contests of all sorts, one result of which is to encourage betting, and create a spirit of recklessness.

Sunday is scarcely distinguishable from other days on the playground and pleasure resorts. But this is not a special characteristic of Australia, for there is a very strong tendency in the same direction in America and other countries.

Did I say that all stores were closed on Saturday afternoon? No. There is one store that is open all day long, and far into the night, the liquor store. Strong drink is the curse of Australia. Every village abounds with public bars, and they are to be found even along country roads, tempting the miner, the mechanic, and common laborer to drop in and leave the "three-penny bits" and sixpences, so hardly earned, and so badly needed for the home, where wife and children are perhaps in rags, or if not, some good-natured merchant is supplying them, with small hope of ever being repaid. One of our brethren in business was completely ruined in this way.

I am happy to say, however, that we have very little trouble with drinkers in the church, most of the Saints being avowed enemies to the traffic and doing all they can by vote and influence (the ladies vote here) to stamp it out.

Although this country is so much younger and smaller than our own (smaller in point of population, in territory Australia is nearly as large as the United States,) and so far removed from the great centers of civilization, she has legislation along some lines that we could imitate with profit.

For instance, the old age and invalid pension. Every male citizen of sixty-five, or female of sixty, or any invalid, not otherwise provided for, receives a pension not exceeding ten shillings per week. An old person must have been a resident of the colonies for twenty years and possess a good character, and not own property exceeding three hundred and ten pounds (about $1,500) in value.

All children, who have not natural protectors, are provided for by the state, many of them being placed in private families, who receive a certain amount per week, and I think not exceeding five shillings, for their support. The result of this law is that there are no homeless street arabs in the large cities of Australia.

Where parents are actually unable to provide for their own children, they are assisted in the same way. Thus a widow is enabled to raise her own children, instead of placing them in a public home or giving them away as many have to do in our country.

Railways, tram lines, telegraphs, telephones, etc., are owned by the Government, and so the revenues that build great fortunes for men like James J. Hill and J. Pierpont Morgan in America, go into the public treasury and help to supply the old age, invalid, and orphan pension, and benefit the community in general.

There is a commission appointed by the Government, called a wages board, to settle disputes between employers and employees, and affix a minimum wage for all kinds of work. It is hoped thereby to prevent the strike, which hitherto has been a serious menace to commerce and a bar to progress.

The common schools will, I think, compare favorably with our own, and the law compels parents and guardians to keep children under fourteen years of age in school. Few go, however, after that age, and I think the consequent average grade of education is sure to be low, as my experience is that the average child will learn more rapidly after that age, than before.

I have traveled to some extent in three of the five states, and enjoyed the diversity of scenery displayed. Lofty hills, towering mountains, tall forests, beautiful rivers, (though not numerous) and lakes, fertile valleys, broad plains, prosperous towns and cities, the bluest of blue skies, and the most gorgeous of bright flowers, conspicuous among which is the wattle and waratah.

Have also become acquainted with most of the Saints in this land, and find them to be uniformly kind, generous and hospitable. They love the work of God, and are ever ready, with a hearty zest, to join in any enterprise undertaken in its interest.

I have been associated with several of the Australian brethren in mission work, and find them agreeable yokefellows.

My first colaborer, or traveling companion, was Brother Victor Seaberg, a young man without experience in gospel work, but with a big, honest heart, a sunny face, and happy optimistic disposition, who made as many friends as he did acquaintances, and the three months spent with him will, I trust, never be forgotten by either of us. I was sorry indeed, when he decided to quit the field, and return to his anvil, but circumstances at the time seemed to justify it. And the Lord has blessed him, business has prospered, and I hope ere long he will be able to enter the mission with a free hand, and confidently expect to hear of his doing good work for the Master in this and other lands.

Next I spent a few weeks in company with Brother W. J. Haworth, an account of which he gave so entertainingly in the Autumn Leaves. But if, as he declared, I failed to come up smiling on a particular occasion, he made up for it, for his smile was a permanent fixture. It never came off, excepting, possibly, on one trivial occasion, scarcely worth mentioning, when he went to sleep beside the road in the long grass, and was very busily engaged in inhaling deep breaths and exhaling them through the corner of his mouth with a funny purring sound. When I happened to catch him by the leg and start off with him telling him to look out for the snake, the wild look he cast about to the right hand and to the left, could hardly be called a smile. But the smile drifted back a moment later as he remarked, "Blow you. I was asleep."

Like all our earthly experiences, pleasant or otherwise, my association with Brother Haworth came to an end, and in his stead I was joined by our pleasant-faced and congenial Bishop George Lewis, with whom it has been my pleasure to labor more extensively than with the others.

I found Bishop Lewis a brother indeed, wise in counsel, and helpful in every emergency. He is always ready to give the helping hand to friend or stranger, and while he is the most tender-hearted and sympathetic of men, he is also one of the happiest men I ever knew.

While with him we tried our theological steel with Christadelphians at Weston, and with Seventh-day Adventists at Hickey's Creek. In both instances he rendered valuable assistance, and in both instances we did good for the work.

Still I love this sunny southern land with its kind-hearted, generous Saints, who by their thoughtfulness and hospitality have done so much to make my sojourn among them so full of pleasant memories, and I shall often think of them in their far-away home 'neath the Southern Cross.

* * * * *

All General Conference appointees who have labored in Australia agree that it is the most important mission the church has outside of the United States and Canada.

OUR PUBLISHING INTERESTS

BY W. J. HAWORTH

Our publishing interests in Australia are on a fairly sound footing, considering that no capital was ever expended directly by the church in the purchase of plant, stock or machinery. These have been purchased from the profits of doing all classes of jobbing work. Under the circumstances, progress has asset to the mission, binding together the scattered branches and districts and supplying at regular intervals the common news of the mission. The American papers would be inadequate for they are three months from Australia from the news point of view. From the Australian point of view the Standard is our newspaper—the American papers contain what is, as far as news from this mission is concerned, historical matter. It is therefore imperative that we continue the Standard.

Another great drawback to our publishing interests was the fact that we had to pay a very heavy rent each week. For several years we have had a fund destined to overcome this difficulty by the erection of a mission headquarters and printing office of our own. We are now in possession of such a building. It was not, however, free from debt on its completion. We had not sufficient funds for that, but the Saints are doing well towards furnishing us with money, considering the hard times. We look forward with confidence to the future, believing that with a building of our own, many of our trials will be over.

Now there is a way in which American Saints may help us. We are not intending to ask for donations, but desire to call attention to the fact that a book, entitled The Fall of Babylon, on sale at the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, was published in aid of this fund. The sale has been been somewhat slow, but it has been sure, nevertheless.

ORIGINAL OFFICE OF THE "GOSPEL STANDARD."

We began to publish the Gospel Standard in 1902, but at that time we paid outside printers for its production. At first we had something over two hundred and fifty American subscribers, but these gradually fell off and it became impossible to continue the paper if it had to be produced by other than our own labor. Consequently in 1904, Elder W. J. Haworth, with the consent of the Board of Publication, learned the printing process, and a small supply of type was purchased. Later on a small press was acquired and on this the Standard was printed for several years. Outside work was taken in, and little by little the plant was added to, until at the present time we are equipped to do almost any class of printing.

The great drawback has been, however, that there have not been enough subscribers to the Standard to make it self-supporting. Some of the profits of the business have gone, each year in its publication. It would not pay to discontinue the paper, for it is a valuable slow, possibly because the author is practically unknown to the majority of the American Saints, but the gospel story in the book is just the same as if he were known to all. The price is one dollar and twenty-five cents and readers will, if they purchase a copy, not only obtain good value for their money, but will put the money into the fund for the erection of the proposed mission headquarters. I believe "Do it now!" is a favorite motto with Americans.

NEW OFFICE OF THE "GOSPEL STANDARD."

I think I sent a photograph of the old rented premises. We have erected our new wooden office on land adjoining the Balmain church. The church is seen to the right of the picture. A notice board bearing the name of the church, etc., extends across the sidewalk between the two buildings. At the time the picture was taken this was carrying a large calico sign bearing the motto: "For the sake of your own boys vote six o'clock." This refers to the great and successful campaign for the closing of all liquor bars in the state at six p. m. A referendum on the subject was recently taken throughout the state and resulted in a majority of one hundred and twenty thousands for the closing hour to be six p. m. The Saints worked hard for the carrying of this measure.

Our present office building is commodious enough for our requirements. It contains a room for sale of books and general office work, a large printing room, half devoted to the composing department and the other carrying the machinery. The door on the right of the picture leads into the church office, set apart for the use of the ministers in charge and other church officers. The editorial room is directly behind this office.

* * * * *

TRACT DISTRIBUTION AND VISITATION IN AUSTRALIA

BY ELDER A. C. BARMORE

This subject has been assigned to me, and for that reason and a realization of duty, I attempt to write on it. Experience truly teaches, and those who have had it should impart to others what it has taught them. Having had experience on this subject, I now, so far as practicable, pass it on.

To begin with, such work of this kind as I have done requires first of all, perseverance. Without this quality little or nothing can be done. And while this may be especially true of the circumstances under which I have done my work, yet I am sure it applies universally. "He that can have patience can have what he will." The people of Australia are often bigoted, but not more so than those of the United States and Canada, and besides when I say "perseverance" I mean "continuity" in an eminent degree. I have used the distribution of tracts and dodgers as a means of getting acquainted with the people. To do this it is necessary to knock at the door, and where practicable, secure a brief interview.

It is better to say something about the subject of the tract in a few well-chosen words than to deliver

ELDER A. C. BARMORE.

Missionary to Australia 1902-12.

it without comment. If the tract is not the subject of conversation, some other feature of our message should be. The subject, however, need not be distinctly doctrinal. It is enough for it to be some phase of gospel truth. Something very ordinary, believed by nearly everyone, may be the means of removing prejudice. If the conversation becomes special, and evidently mutual, it will almost invariably be on a subject of the person's own selection. It is practically useless for the missionary to lecture a person on a topic of his own choosing.

If he is invited in, no matter what the subject of conversation may be, he should read a chapter and offer prayer before taking his departure. If the interview is more or less secular, he may not feel disposed to do so, but his failure will, nevertheless, be taken as a lack of interest in his business. If the conversation be religious this "lack" will not be noticed so much, but otherwise it will be very apparent. His failure to read and pray will, in Australia, always make a bad impression. The people do not always expect a long conversation, and still less a lecture on religion, but they do expect devotional exercises. The invitation to come in will apparently be hospitable, that is, "Will you have a cup of tea?"

will be its basis. It is best to comply, though what one eats and drinks depends upon his constitution.

A cup of hot water and a cracker, called a biscuit here or more than one if desired, would be better in many cases than heavier refreshment. If any should object to eating between meals I need only remind him that these invitations do not come often enough to be a menace to health. When I have been out for the whole of a hot day they have been very acceptable and have not done me any injury.

In all personal work the nature and use of argument necessarily come in for consideration. My conclusion is that discussion or debate, while it may sometimes do good and yield immediate returns, yet in the long run, if pursued as a usual method, it antagonizes the people and renders them unapproachable. This is especially true when the discussion is held in their own houses. It is a well-known fact that those who like argument will keep their temper better in debate than those who do not. A minority, a very small one, too, are fond of debate. This minority is divided into two classes: One is curious, speculative, and generally insincere. This class will debate for its own sake. The other class is undoubtedly sincere but satisfied with its own creed, whatever it is, and is laboring to promulgate and defend it. Both are seeking victory rather than truth.

Most Australians dislike religious debates and are annoyed by them. They look upon controversy as an effort to compel them to give up their own belief and accept some other. For that reason it requires great tact to get along with them. No matter what doctrine they hold it must be respected and handled as gently as possible. Any effort to show up an absurd theory or practice by ridicule is always warmly resented. They are very sensitive on this point and while they object to such treatment they do not as a rule retaliate in kind, but they close the debate forever. This may seem harsh on their part, but it is justifiable from a democratic viewpoint. If we desire respect for our opinions we must be tolerant of those of others. On the other hand they are always courteous when their courtesy is returned.

On the whole, they are more approachable through social and spiritual means than by anything of a doctrinal or polemic character. For this reason it is necessary to take the time and care to get acquainted with them before one can teach them. When such an introduction has been secured it should be followed up by Bible readings, visits or anything that will bring them closer to the church socially, doctrinally, or spiritually.

When acquaintance has been formed every effort should be made to maintain it. In this way true friendship is proven and a sincere interest in the person's spiritual welfare demonstrated. This must in time, have the desired effect, and it takes "time" to convert people to such a work as ours. This is the secret of success in dealing with one's schoolmates or shopmates. Personal acquaintance is the keynote. If our missionaries worked along this line more the success of the church would be greater. As a rule, our ministers are like those of other churches: Too prone to look upon themselves as professional men, having a business objective, than as men talking to men.

Akin to the foregoing is the attitude we should maintain toward other churches and societies. Personally, I have always labored to placate instead of arouse opposition. My motto is: "Never wake up the sleeping dog." We have enough enemies without making any more. While it is true that we will always be opposed and persecuted, more or less, yet some of the opposition we encounter is due to the methods we pursue. Other churches are not more willing to fight us than we are to fight them. If Ishmael's hand is "against every man" he must expect the compliment (?) will be returned. If a more moderate course were universally pursued, we would, in the finality, obtain recognition and representation where at present we seek it in vain.

The subject of literature here presents itself. I have used books, tracts, and papers. All have done some good. More good could have been done had the supply been larger; it has been very limited. Another thought: Our literature is, to some extent, ineffective because it needs revising. It should first of all, be graded, and tracts numbered in such a way as to present the gospel along the line of logical sequence. This would be a guide to inexperienced Saints as well as a convenience to the missionaries. Now our literature is printed and published without reference to what precedes or follows. The result is subjects are ill timed, and the general arrangement is haphazard. A stranger could not definitely tell what the church believes by reading its current literature. [Since this was written the "Angel message" series of tracts has been published.] Above all, "Joseph Smith," "Mormon" or "Book of Mormon" should not be referred to unless our position regarding them is clearly stated in the same connection.

The church has not yet arisen to the importance of literature as a factor in mission work. Gospel work can be carried on by business methods better than by those commonly employed. Public lectures are practically useless in business. Printed matter is much better. Preaching as the sole method in church work would not have been so generally in use had the church been as progressive as the world. Conservatism has stamped preaching as the only "proper thing." Commerce on the other hand, has resorted to printing and some houses depend on it entirely, but the best method in business extension, is personal solicitation. Hence the great army of "agents," "travelers," "drummers," canvassing from house to house and from man to man. These do the bulk of the world's progressive business. As time goes on, preaching, especially in a small way, will fail. We are living in the day of trusts, unions, etc., hence everything must be on a large scale or it will not be patronized. The labor done will be performed by such efforts as the Chapman-Alexander revivals, or Bishop Evans's on the one hand and by personal work on the other. Ordinary preaching will have its place in fixed congregations, but the preacher who goes out without coworkers, music, etc., will come to grief.

The workers who labor on a large scale, such as those referred to, will be few and must, in their line, be extraordinary men. They may be compared to wholesale men in business. The latter deal in many articles, but make but little on each one. The retail dealer, on the other hand sells fewer articles but his profit is larger per item. The revivalist deals with men in the bulk and makes but little out of each case; the personal worker deals with them singly and accomplishes more per man. The United States of America is the only country where, in general, traveling preachers have been a success. In other countries working privately and remaining some time in one place has proven the better way. This is indicated in the revelation commanding the church to provide the foreign missionaries with tracts.

It may be humiliating for men who have been used to preaching frequently to fair audiences to descend to this method, but they must come to it. When the work of spreading abroad the gospel begins in earnest and "the elders of the first quorums are sent out of the land of America" those most capable of doing this kind of work will take first place.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

THE CAMPBELL-HOLLOWAY DEBATE AT ANDOVER

Andover is a little town about seven miles from Lamoni. Its proximity to the headquarters of the church lends some general interest to the debate recently held at that place between Elder Leonard G. Holloway of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and Evangelist William J. Campbell of the "Churches of Christ," known sometimes as the "nonprogressive" wing of the "Christian" Church. This name we understand they do not accept and it is referred to here only as a means of identification.

The debate began September 11 and closed September 19, with two sessions daily, excepting the first two days. The big stake tent accommodated the audiences. The Saints were the majority of those in attendance, hundreds from Lamoni being in attendance, especially on Sunday.

The following propositions were discussed:

1. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints with which I am associated is in harmony with the Bible in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice.
2. The Churches of Christ with which I am associated are in harmony with the Bible in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice.
3. The Book of Mormon is of divine origin and worthy the respect and belief of all Christian people.
4. The Bible is the final and complete revelation of God's will to man.

It is understood of course that Elder Holloway affirmed the first and third of these propositions and Mr. Campbell the second and fourth.

Reverend Ernest F. Partridge, until recently pastor of the Methodist church in Lamoni, acted as chairman. In that capacity he presided with great credit to himself, maintaining a just and impartial attitude, and by his wise and witty sermonets at the close of each session adding much to the interest of the affair. He was an adept at pouring the oil of good humor on the troubled waters.

Probably any opinion expressed by us as to the outcome of the debate would be considered partial and to an extent colored by prejudice, though we tried to see both sides of the question fairly. But one who has conversed with many in the neighborhood who are nonmembers reports that he has not yet met one who feels that Mr. Campbell maintained his position, but all are agreed in giving the victor's laurels to Elder Holloway.

We are not, however, disposed to belittle or demean Mr. Campbell. It is never wise to underestimate an opponent. He proved to be an antagonist worthy of consideration. In marked contrast to the brag and bluster of some of his associates who have met our men, his deportment was always quiet and unassuming. Nor did he resort to their low and malicious tactics in dragging in vile stories concocted by our enemies. In that regard he is probably one of the cleanest and most gentlemanly men that we have met. A few more such exhibits from the "Churches of Christ" might cause us to modify somewhat our opinion of their representative men.

His stronghold, aside from his ability to gracefully and quickly evacuate a position when it became untenable, was his knowledge of the Bible, in which he is exceptionally well versed—meaning thereby that he has an excellent knowledge of the text of the Bible from beginning to end, and not that he is sound in his understanding, application, and interpretation of the text.

The debate closed with very good feeling existing, excepting among a few, and with an exchange of courtesies between the disputants, each saying that if he had said anything out of the way in the heat of discussion he was ready to apologize. It seemed that this was to be one clean and decent debate. But it will be remembered that of old when the sons of God met together Satan came also.

That reference may have no application, but it is a fact that at this juncture an oldtime antagonist of the faith, J. D. McClure, of the "Christian or Disciple Church," appeared on the scene, interrupting the closing exercises with a challenge to debate the following propositions:

1. The revelations that Joseph Smith gave to the world are true, and Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God. Latter Day Saints will affirm.
2. All that Joseph Smith gave to the world purporting to be revelations from God, were entirely of human origin, and frauds, and Joseph Smith was an impostor. Christians will affirm.

He accompanied the challenge with a threat that if it was not taken up he would proceed at once to deliver a series of lectures in exposure of "Mormonism." He soon found himself in collision with our militant John F. Garver, from which he emerged with his "Christian" mask badly shattered.

The unfairness of such one-sided propositions was fully exposed. Yet this is a favorite trick of certain opponents of the work, particularly among some members of the "Christian" church, so called. They ask us to expose our position to public attack but refuse to defend their own church under similar propositions which would give both sides an equal show.

There is a sense of fairness even among worldly people that certainly would brand such a course as cowardly. Every courageous man who enters a conflict expects to take blows as well as to give them.

Yet many of our so-called "Christian" antagonists of the past have not measured up even to the worldly idea of fair play. Some have never met us in debate in a single instance on equal terms, but have made it their policy to flaunt one-sided propositions in our face, holding the threat of public lectures over us in case we refuse to accept their terms—a sort of spiritual blackmail.

In his debates with our people Clark Braden generally insisted on having a decided and unfair advantage. When he met Elder E. L. Kelley in Lamoni, for instance, Braden did not really affirm a single proposition. The propositions were the same as those presented by Mr. McClure, and though craftily arranged to make it appear that Braden was in the affirmative on the second proposition, when analyzed it is soon apparent that we were still in the affirmative, Braden affirming no position of his own, and not involving his own faith or church in any way. In their debate at Kirtland Brother Kelley was required to defend two propositions, while Braden defended but one.

Because we may have given an unfair advantage to our opponents in days past it does not follow that we should continue to do so. We should insist upon equal propositions. Are these men afraid to defend the church that sends them out and pays their salary? Is our position so difficult to meet that a handicap must be put upon us at the very start?

McClure was challenged by Elder Holloway to come to the stand and sign up equal propositions, but declined to do so, and announced that his lectures would begin the following night.

Mr. Campbell arose to explain that McClure had not come there on his invitation and did not represent him. The fact was developed, however, that the lectures were to be given in Elder Campbell's tent, which looked bad to the public. The debate had been cut short two days at his request, and that he should then turn his tent and those two days over to McClure to use in a one-sided discussion of the question, and such a discussion as might be expected, required much public explanation. And it is to be regretted that he should have become a party, even indirectly, to such an anticlimax. However, we are disposed to accept his explanations in good faith.

The lectures continued three nights, the stock in trade consisting of a rehash of matter used by Braden and fully answered many years ago. But to many in the audience it was new matter, requiring rebuttal. At the close of his lectures handbills containing the following propositions were distributed:

CONCERNING THE M'CLURE CHALLENGE

J. D. McClure has challenged us to debate on propositions that are obviously one-sided and unfair.

He desires us to defend our position publicly and expose it to his attack, but refuses to set up his own church at the same time and expose it to attack.

Every man who stands for a square deal can readily see that such a course is unfair and beneath the dignity of one who professes to be governed by the Golden Rule.

We do not fear a fair discussion wherein men are willing to receive as well as to give blows.

Our Challenge

We therefore challenge Mr. J. D. McClure to meet a representative man of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in public debate at Andover, Missouri, on any one of the three following sets of propositions:

Set One

"1. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the Bible in origin, organization, and doctrine.

"2. The Christian or Disciple Church is in harmony with the Bible in origin, organization, and doctrine.

"3. The Book of Mormon is of divine origin and worthy the respect and belief of all Christian people.

"4. The Bible is the final and complete revelation of God's will to man."

Mr. McClure has alleged publicly in Andover that representatives of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints dare not bring out the facts with reference to the coming forth of that church, and that under this set of propositions he, Mr. McClure, would be restrained, under the rules of controversy proposed, from doing so. This contention cannot be maintained: it has been the custom in discussions in the past for these facts to be developed by both affirmative and negative speakers, a matter well known to Mr. McClure.

To assure all concerned that we do not hesitate to affirm that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and to defend the revelations set forth through him, we stand ready to enter upon a discussion of the following:

Set Two

"1. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the Bible in origin, organization, and doctrine.

"2. The Christian or Disciple Church is in harmony with the Bible in origin, organization, and doctrine.

"3. Joseph Smith was a prophet of God.

"4. The Bible is the final and complete revelation of God's will to man."

And finally, to leave Mr. McClure with absolutely no ground to stand upon in declining to meet the issue he has raised, we submit, and will debate the following:

Set Three

"1. Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and the Book of Mormon is of divine origin.

"2. The Current Reformation, inaugurated by Thomas and Alexander Campbell, is in harmony with the Bible in its origin, progress, and final results."

Either set of these propositions is fair and involves both churches. Is Mr. McClure afraid to defend the church that sends him out and pays his salary? If not, let him pick-up this challenge.

J. F. GARVER.

LAMONI, IOWA, September 21, 1916.

Mr. McClure's efforts proved to be such a grotesque and laughable failure that his old-time preceptor, Clark Braden, might well have turned over in his grave at this burlesque of his "war to the knife and the knife to the hilt."

Elder E. E. Long was announced to reply Sunday afternoon and evening. But Mr. McClure gave it out that he had previous engagements that could not possibly be cancelled, so that he could not be present. A wise and timely arrangement on his part. While Elder Campbell, for the benefit of his flock, announced a meeting for Sunday evening, also "previously arranged." It looked like a "safety first" aggregation.

At this writing Elder Long's reply is still future and will be reported at a later date.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Notices

Lamoni Stake, at Lamoni, Iowa, October 14th; prayer meeting at 9 a. m., business at 10 a. m. Business of importance will be transacted at this session, so all branches should be well represented. Branch reports for six months ending June 30 should be sent to the undersigned. C. I. Carpenter, secretary, Lamoni, Iowa.

Des Moines, at Runnels, Iowa, October 7, 8, 1916. Send reports to me by October 1. Bessy Laughlin, secretary, Rhodes, Iowa.

Southern Indiana, at Louisville, Kentucky, Highland Park Church, October 21 and 22. Have branch and priesthood reports in secretary's hands by October 7. Pearl F. Newton, secretary, 1506 West Twenty-first Street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

London, Ontario, Canada, in Stratford City, Ontario, October 14 and 15. The Statford Saints' church will be used. Business session 10 a. m., 14th. Good representation from all branches, and a good report from all the local priesthood, desired. Let everybody come and bring the good Spirit. P. H. Philippin, secretary, 92 Chesley Avenue, London, Ontario, Canada.

Clinton, at Mapleton, Kansas, October 7 and 8. Hope to see a good delegation from the district present. Send all credentials, reports and written communications to secretary not later than October 4. W. S. Macrae, president, Knobnoster, Missouri. Zora Lowe, secretary, Eldorado Springs, Missouri.

Eastern Michigan, at Sandusky, October 21 and 22. Meals 25 cents. Beds free. J. F. Curtis will be with us. William M. Grice, William Davis, presidency.

Northern Michigan, at Boyne City, November 4, 5. Change made to have J. F. Curtis with us. Meals as usual at ten cents a meal. Secretaries please obtain report blanks from Herald office and every branch report. C. N. Burch, secretary.

Minnesota, at Clitherall, October 22, 23. Lester Whiting, secretary.

All those attending Southern Missouri conference which meets with Beaver Branch, October 7, 8, will be cared for by the Saints of that branch, in spite of reports that there would be no accommodations. Trains met Friday morning only, at Cedar Gap, unless arrangements are made otherwise. We are advised that F. M. Sheehy will be present. Benjamin Pearson, Tigris, Missouri.

Little Sioux, at Woodbine, October 7, 8. We hope to have full report from all local workers and branch officers in time for conference. Send same to Amos Berve, care of W. R. Adams, Logan, Iowa. We hope for good attendance, and especially urge the priesthood to be present. Amos Berve, president.

Convention Notices

Northern Michigan Sunday School and Religio, at Boyne City, November 3. Religio forenoon, Sunday school afternoon, entertainment in the evening. A. E. Starks, C. N. Burch, presidency.

Eastern Maine Sunday school, at Jonesport, October 14, 15. Election of officers. J. F. Sheehy, superintendent.

Western New York Sunday school, at Niagara Falls, New York, Seventeenth Street and Willow Avenue, October 7, at 1 p. m. George Landes, president, Mary F. Dixon, secretary.

Nauvoo Sunday School, at Rock Creek, Illinois, October 13, 10 a. m. Mrs. J. H. Laubscher, secretary, 1319½ North Eighth Street, Burlington, Iowa.

Eastern Iowa Religio, at Fulton, Iowa, October 13. Prayer meeting at 9 a. m., followed by business meeting. Clarence Heide, secretary, Fulton, Iowa, R. F. D. 1.

London Religio, at Stratford, Ontario, October 6, 10 a. m. Secretaries please forward reports and credentials not later than September 30, to George Tomlinson, secretary, Saint Marys, Ontario.

New York and Philadelphia Sunday school and Religio at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, September 30 and October 1. John Jenkins, secretary.

Clinton Sunday school, at Mapleton, Kansas, October 6, 10 a. m. Hope to see a large attendance. Send all communications to me not later than October 4. Zora Lowe, secretary, Eldorado Springs, Missouri.

Clinton Religio, October 6, afternoon, at Mapleton, Kansas. Wish to see a good delegation present. Send all reports to Adrian Lowe, secretary, Eldorado Springs, Missouri, R. 1.
 New York Religio, at Niagara Falls, New York, October 7, 10.30 a. m. Church at Seventeenth Street and Willow Avenue. Agnes B. Batchelor, 703 Northumberland Avenue, Buffalo, New York.

Reunion Notices

The practical time and also to secure presence of J. A. Gillen is October 13 to 22. Particulars were given in HERALD of July 26 and Ensign of July 20. All coming should camp if they choose, or board at prevailing prices, about as at their home towns. Spearfish Saints, few in number, have built the church unaided and should be relieved rather than burdened. Reunions have been remarkably good this year; let us have one more such. Scattered Saints all about Spearfish in Nebraska, Wyoming, and Montana should attend. White-wood station of Northwestern Railroad, hack fare to Spearfish, $1.25. Burlington runs into Spearfish with lay-over at Deadwood overnight or hack fair of $1.50 to avoid lay-over. Write G. W. Newton or R. Etzenhouser, Spearfish, South Dakota. Call at G. W. Newton's real estate office.

Two-Day Meetings

Marlette, Michigan, September 30 and October 1. Meals served in church basement, 20 cents each. There will be a church opening at Ubly, October 7 and 8. Meals free. Come one; come all.

Notice of Release

To whom It may Concern: Elder C. N. Headding reports that he is unable to take up his duties in the Northern California District owing to business matters and is therefore honorably released from the appointment.

JOHN W. RUSHTON, Minister in Charge.
 FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

Addresses

Change of address of A. B. Phillips, as noted last week, has been canceled.

Interesting Feature

In the October number of Autumn Leaves a sequel to The Little Brown Cottage, the story that was talked of all over the church, will begin.

Those who became so interested in the life story of Janey and Robert and the rest, will be especially pleased to learn that Sister Estella Wight has written this most interesting sequel which continues their experiences. The title is, "A vineyard story."

FOR SALE

Two acres of fine lying land, all set to young fruit just coming into bearing—new 6 room house, back plastered and finely finished. 2 never failing wells, new hen house 10 x 24. Located on South State St. Bargain for cash. E. F. Hall, Lamoni, Iowa. 31-tf

THE TWO-STORY BOOK. Two stories leading the reader to Latter Day Saintism, by Elbert A. Smith and Mary Leland Carter. There is sufficient action in these gospel tales to interest the reader from a human standpoint, and it is only a step from the humanity of the book to the divinity of it. No. 372, cloth55c

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist

in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

THE GOSPEL STORY AND FOOTSTEPS OF JESUS. By Frances. Charming child stories, of the birth-offering series. Adapted to the baby mind. Tales of truth that will register and remain. No. 366, cloth60c

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor. Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us. This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department. Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter. Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

INSIDE COVER:

"Australia" (poem), by E. F. Robertson.

HISTORICAL DEPARTMENT:

Note of Introduction, by E. A. Smith and E. D. Moore	931
Australian Mission, by W. J. Haworth	931
Our Missionaries,—Past and Present, by W. J. Haworth	934
Reminiscences, by C. A. Butterworth	940
Glaud Rodger and C. W. Wandell, by G. R. Wells	941
Some Diary Notes, from Diary of C. W. Wandell	943
General Information	944

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

A Glimpse of Australia, by Paul M. Hanson	945
Sowing the Seed from a Wagon, by C. Edward Miller	947
My Impressions of Australia, by E. F. Robertson	950
Our Publishing Interests, by W. J. Haworth	953
Tract Distribution, by A. C. Barmore	954

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT:

The Campbell-Holloway Debate at Andover	956
---	-----

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

	958
--	-----

This is only one of the many good things Autumn Leaves offers, but it alone is worth the price of the magazine.

Then another big inducement is offered. Send a dollar now and you will get the next three numbers free. Just think—fifteen big numbers at only six and two-thirds cents a copy!

IN THE SHELTER OF THE LITTLE BROWN COTTAGE. The popular serial that ran in Stepping Stones during 1915, by the editor, Estella Wight. The leading character is not a Latter Day Saint at first, but eventually becomes so, and in the process a strong gospel story is told. Several characters in the book are shown laboring toward the truth, making this a fine, readable missionary medium. Cloth, 373 pages$1.25

TRUANTS. A one-act Religio comedy by John Preston. Three men (or boys) and 3 women (or girl) characters. Plot concerns a number of Religians who through some excuse or other have stayed home from meeting. The way it works out is amusing. Adapted to any audience or occasion. 34 pages, attractive cover, No. 38225c

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure
Made from Cream of Tartar
NO ALUM—NO PHOSPHATE

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

A NEW BOOK---"JOE PINE"

By Elbert A. Smith

Now Ready

Illustrated by Paul N. Craig

A gripping story of the prairies of the Middle West.

Molly Brady dedicates her young son, Joseph Prian, to God, to carry on the work in the church his father was doing when death interrupted.

A neighbor girl, in her babyish inability to pronounce the names, renamed him "Joe Pine," by which name he is known throughout the story.

His experiences, woven in with those of the other characters of the story, cannot fail to impress the reader with the wonderful scope of this latter-day work.

Distinctly a church story, yet not "theological" nor dry. Possesses a humor that is inimitable and by which many a valuable lesson is impressed. It has sentiment of the most ennobling kind, making altogether a most satisfactory story.

Nicely printed in large type; decorated cloth covers, well illustrated. A book to read and reread and loan to your investigating friends. You will find it all we claim for it.

Price $1.25, Postpaid

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE, LAMONI, IOWA

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, OCTOBER 4, 1916

NUMBER 40

Editorial

THE J. D. McCLURE LECTURES

Last week we chronicled the close of the Holloway-Campbell debate at Andover, Missouri, seven miles from Lamoni.

It will be remembered that at the closing session of this debate J. D. McClure, of Albany, Missouri, appeared on the scene and announced that he would begin the next evening to deliver a series of three lectures against "Mormonism."

This McClure, as some of our readers will recall, used to act as moderator for Clark Braden in his debates with our people, and between debates did such work against us as his hand found to do. The difference between the two was that Braden would debate on occasion, if the propositions gave him enough advantage to suit his purposes, while McClure's policy was to lecture and run, as in this instance.

The advent of Mr. McClure on the scene was generally taken as a confession by the Church of Christ people that their man William J. Campbell had failed to make good in the debate. The inference was that they were not satisfied.

To clarify the situation we may explain that Evangelist Campbell represents the "Church of Christ," so called; while McClure represents the "Christian Church," again, so called. These are factions of the church organized by Thomas and Alexander Campbell, as most of our readers know. Both factions claim to have been born at Pentecost, but the old family Bible has no record of their birth. It is generally believed that they are mistaken about their age.

Evangelist Campbell's people would be referred to by Mr. McClure's people as "nonprogressives"; while McClure's people would be referred to by Elder Campbell's people as "digressives," and so far as we know both may be right in their choice of names.

The chief difference between the two is that Elder Campbell's people do not believe in the use of the organ in church service and also denounce the Sunday school, mission societies, Bible schools, etc., as creatures of sin. Over these differences they manage to keep up a very bitter war of words. (By the way, we overlooked one other difference hinted at by Mr. McClure in his lectures. He intimated that Elder Campbell's people rejected the name of "Campbellite," and asked Mr. Campbell if he was "ashamed of his own daddy." Had his lectures lasted four nights instead of three the two factions might have been quarreling among themselves.)

Their bond of sympathy is their enmity against Latter Day Saint doctrine. On that one point they can unite amicably and join forces at any time, though the love of God and the desire to save souls have never been powerful enough to bring about such a union of purpose among them.

Elder Campbell announced at the close of his debate that he had not invited Mr. McClure to come and deliver the lectures, in an obvious effort to retrieve their fallen fortunes. But it was noticeable that he turned his tent over to Mr. McClure to use during the lectures. Moreover he attended each lecture, but failed to materialize when it came time for Elder Long to reply, and announced a meeting of his people Sunday night at the hour announced for Elder Long's lecture.

As we have previously stated, Mr. McClure's lectures were a rehash of Braden. Many palpably false and absurd statements were made. A fair sample was his story to the effect that Joseph Smith brought so many women to his fine new house in Nauvoo that his wife Emma left him, and in order to get her to return he was obliged to get a revelation pacifying her. Mr. McClure cited the audience to section twenty-four of the Doctrine and Covenants as that revelation. In it, as will be remembered, Emma Smith is referred to as the "elect lady."

Mr. McClure might well have claimed for this story the merit of originality. However as Elder Long pointed out, it has one fatal defect. The revelation in question bears the date of July, 1830, while Nauvoo was not founded until some nine years later. As a matter of fact it is on record that Joseph Smith moved into the only house that he ever built and occupied in Nauvoo, on the 31st day of August, 1843, or thirteen years after this revelation was given. His residence in Nauvoo up to that date had been in a little log house formerly used as an Indian trading post.

That men find it convenient to fabricate such stories as they go along is an indication that they have no argument of any merit to urge against our work. Why men tell such stories and resort to such methods when in the end exposure is certain, we cannot comprehend, excepting on the hypothesis that their malice has defeated their judgment.

Mr. McClure made it his main effort to ridicule the church books. He angled all the time for a laugh. In the end he made such a spectacle of himself that he got more laughter than he wanted. His performance became a sort of comedy or vaudeville stunt, and his own people were heartily sick of it. At last it dawned even upon him that the people were not laughing with him but at him.

Having finished his lectures Friday evening, he refused Elder Garver's urgent invitation to stay and see the matter out. He retreated to a previously selected position somewhere in Missouri. His example was followed by Mr. Campbell.

Elder Long opened with his reply Sunday afternoon in the big tent, which will seat about seven hundred people. It was well filled at the first meeting. In the evening the Lamoni church orchestra gave a splendid thirty-minute concert, beginning at seven o'clock, as a prelude to the lecture.

But long before that hour the big tent was crowded to its capacity and many were standing on the outside or occupying seats in automobiles. Our hearing was all that could have been desired. The unscrupulous attack made upon us had turned to our advantage, as any thinking man might have anticipated that it would.

Elder Long spoke with considerable liberty, in a clean, concise, and convincing manner refuting the attacks made, and also advancing considerable affirmative argument, which of course was all clear gain for our cause. He announced that preaching services would continue during the week in our little church in Andover. Altogether, the Saints at Lamoni feel that they have been considerably benefited as well as interested by that which has transpired.

E. A. S.

THE PERSONAL ELEMENT

Perhaps most, if not all the wonderful achievements in leadership are the result of the vivid personality back of them.

We can hardly conceive of Moses leading the children of Israel as he did without an intimate knowledge of the people and their condition.

Knowing the great system that Christ established, that transforms everything it touches into creations of beauty and usefulness, we must recognize his wonderful personality in it. When we read the effective parables he used to impress his teaching, we know he must have had personal knowledge of the lives of the people. He used such illustrations as appealed specially to the class he was seeking to teach.

As it was with the Master, so has it been with other great leaders. We cannot disassociate Abraham Lincoln from his early years of hardship and life among the common people he loved. Because he knew the great heart of humanity, he was able to interpret its throbbings and thus serve not only his community but the Nation and the world so effectively that his name is written ineffacably among the greatest.

Great leaders, from Enoch till now, have been men who had an intimate understanding of the lives of their fellow men. They have received the utmost respect and admiration because, knowing how, they served to the utmost. They have led because they called in a voice their followers recognized; they reached forth a beckoning hand that was marked with the toil of life. They have known the possibilities and limitations of man because they have lived the life that brought the knowledge.

When we consider the methods of the most efficient leaders we know, from local to general, we discover that their power lies in the fact that they have in one way or another acquired that keen perception of the ways of men that enables them to touch the human emotions and stir them to action.

There are many, especially among the young, who recognize the call to duty but feel utterly incapable. Possibly they have tried and seemed to fail. Measuring their own efforts by those of others, they feel absolutely insignificant.

We should consider well the rugged road these successful men have trod. Up through the school of life they have come, learning humanity's peculiarities by intimate association. Because they have felt the sorrows and experienced the joys of men, they can reach and move them. Having sat at the feet of the great Master of life who has said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these the least of my children, ye have done it unto me," they have attained unto a great portion of his Spirit to guide their efforts.

Let those who become discouraged because of seeming inability, welcome the irksome duties that come to their doors, seeking entrance. They should be counted as privileged visitors rather than burdensome callers.

Sometimes those who would preach convincing sermons, teeming with life and force, have never experienced in reality those illuminating moments that come to those who visit the homes of Saints and others. Nothing is more productive of good than official visits by the priesthood. It not only encourages and strengthens the Saints, but gives the visitor the insight into the lives of the people of God and their ideals and struggles that enables him to preach or teach with wonderful effectiveness. Tact, judgment and adaptability are requisites, but one should also have sufficient sympathy, love and wisdom to enable him to meet every situation.

The qualities we most admire in our favorite speakers or workers may become ours by acquiring the personal element that enables us to clearly perceive the needs and desires of our associates. We may get it in one way or another, but we should get it. It may be in our home, with a Sunday school or Religio class, as an officer or teacher, or as a member of the priesthood, but no matter where we work, we must remember that the great personal element which gives our words life and our actions a living and abiding quality, comes to those who recognize its value and seek to obtain it. E. D. MOORE.

CURRENT EVENTS

SHORTAGE OF COAL.—Those who claim to be in touch with the situation insist that there is danger of a coal famine on account of car shortage. Prices are making a general advance.

EPIDEMIC OF BANK FAILURES.—Six private banks have collapsed in one large city recently. A condition of panic has caused runs on some of the weaker ones and a consequent closing of the doors.

GREAT FLOODS IN CHINA.—Nearly a million people have been made homeless in China by one of the most disastrous floods on record. About seven thousand square miles are said to have been inundated.

CONVICTED FOR BOMB THROWING.—Some time ago the news was chronicled of an explosion during a preparedness parade in San Francisco. Several arrests followed. One Warren K. Billings was recently tried for the killing of one of the ten victims and found guilty by a jury, which recommended life imprisonment.

END OF CHILD PLAGUE.—New York health officials have officially announced the epidemic of infantile paralysis to be at an end in that city. On the opening of the schools, no children will be allowed to attend who come from an infected house. The disease exists to a considerable extent in various States, but is not epidemic.

HALT IN MEXICAN AGREEMENT.—The Villista attack on Chihuahua, though conflicting reports are given concerning it, seems to have had an effect on the conference between United States and Mexican commissioners. It has at least demonstrated that there is yet a border situation that demands some at-ention. Since all decisions of the Mexican commissioners must be acceded by Carranza, the progress is necessarily slow. The Mexicans have demanded that American troops under General Pershing be withdrawn, with the threat of action if this is denied.

EUROPEAN WAR.—At no place in the various theaters of the European conflict are decisive victories being attained. While serious conflicts are reported from every quarter, nothing so far has developed which is conceded by both sides to have been decisive. In the western front the French and British have made considerable advance, taking several strongly fortified villages, including the town of Combles, making their advance upon Bapaume and Peronne much more imminent. The Germans have maintained fierce counterattacks, and losses have been heavy on both sides in this region. Upon the Russian front they have lost heavily in their attacks upon Halicz, the key to Lemberg, and for a week or so operations have been confined to more or less local attacks. At this writing a gigantic offensive is in progress toward Lemberg, with no definite results yet reported. Turkish troops are reported at Riga, the first time soldiers of this nationality have been known to be engaged so far north. In the Carpathians there have been terrific struggles between Russians and Austrians, but no definite advance has been reported. The Rumanians have been driven back by the Austrians on their left wing with considerable loss and possibly to their own territory. The conflict between the Russo-Rumanian forces, opposed to the Bulgar-German armies in Dobrudja, on a forty-three mile front, continued from the 15th to the 20th, resulting in the repulse of the Teutonic forces. The latter have by aeroplane and Zeppelin, bombarded Bucharest, and have inflicted considerable damage. On the Macedonian front the allies have made progress at different points. Greece has entered the war on the side of the entente allies, having previously demanded the return by Germany of the forty thousand soldiers taken without resistance at Kavala. Fierce fighting has been in progress near Gorizia in the Italian advance toward Trieste. An Austrian naval aeroplane has sunk a French submarine, said to be the first time such an occurrence has taken place. They rescued the entire crew of twenty-seven. A German submarine is reported as having sunk a heavily loaded hostile transport off the coast of Greece. Important air raids and conflicts on all fronts and in various places are reported. Zeppelin raids over the eastern part of England and to London seem to occur with considerable regularity about Sunday night of each week. Considerable undersea activity has been reported, and a large number of vessels sunk by German submarines.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

BEQUEST TO SANITARIUM.—A clause in the will of the late Brother John Stevenson, of Rock Creek Township, Illinois, not far from Nauvoo, gives one thousand dollars to the Independence Sanitarium.

NOT ENOUGH TO LIVE ON.—Before a recent hearing of an Aurora, Illinois, board of arbitration, a certain employee testified that with an income of $1,400 a year—$116 a month—he could not meet living expenses. We know of several willing to try it.

WOMEN TO DECIDE CONSCRIPTION.—In Australia a referendum bill has been passed by the House of Representatives which will allow women voters to vote for or against conscription. This is perhaps the first time in history that such an opportunity has been given to women.

WHY NOT FURTHER?—At the ninety-third annual conference, held at Springfield, Illinois, the Methodist Episcopal Church passed resolutions giving preference in assignment of ministers to those who do not use tobacco. Why not take the next step and refuse appointment to those who use the weed?

BRANCH ORGANIZED AT SAN DIEGO.—Under date of September 25, Elder R. T. Cooper writes from San Diego, California. He states that at that time he was enjoying a good time in San Diego in connection with Brethren J. W. Rushton, F. G. Pitt, and G. E. Harrington, who were there on church work. The San Diego Branch was to be organized that afternoon.

PECULIAR SITUATION.—In the big metropolitan dailies the advertisements of the liquor interests may be seen, seeking to establish the idea that prohibition does not prohibit. It is stated that more liquor is sold in prohibition territory than in any other. Yet these same interests exert every possible influence to prevent the enactment of prohibitory statutes. It is surely a peculiar attitude.

HIGH PRICES PREVAIL.—The newspapers report item after item that is affected by the rising epidemic, until hardly anything remains unaffected. It is asserted that eggs, for instance, are almost likely to reach a dollar a dozen in the great Eastern cities. Whether luxuries or the most staple necessities, about everything has gone up and no one knows where the end will be.

IMPORTANT SERIES.—Among the interesting articles we expect to print in the near future, we call special attention to an important series by Elder J. F. Mintun on "Faith and origin of churches." These articles are brief and to the point, a chapter to a sect and should be valuable to all who are studiously inclined. There are copious authoritative quotations, which have been carefully verified.

UTAH ELDERS CHALLENGED.—As reported in a letter in this issue, Elder F. M. Slover has been making some inroads into the ranks of the Utah church in South Carolina. We are later in receipt of a handbill which challenges representatives of these people to affirm the following:

1st. Brigham Young and his successors in the presidency of the Utah Mormon Church were lawfully appointed and ordained presidents of the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in harmony with the law of God.

While he is willing to affirm:

2d. Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph Smith the Prophet, was lawfully appointed and ordained president of the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in harmony with the law of God.

Rules to govern the debate are given and it is proposed to make it eight sessions of two hours each, to be held at Greenville, South Carolina.

KIRTLAND ARTS AND CRAFTS CLUB.—The Saints in and about Kirtland, with the help of those resident in Cleveland, have organized what is known as The Arts and Crafts Club. At their recent reunion they had an exhibit of handwork done by the sisters, such as lacework, quilts, dresses, etc. Brother Earnest Webbe reports very encouragingly as to their success. The exhibit was advertised and wealthy residents of the surrounding country were invited to attend. As a result one sister who in the beginning believed that she could never learn to make lace, sold three yards of the product of her own hands for twenty-five dollars. The sales of one morning amounted to ninety dollars. Dresses sold as high as twenty-five dollars each, and an embroidered quilt brought fifty-five dollars. Without doubt these people in time will be able to work up a very wide reputation for their handwork, and may be able to bring in considerable revenue for the assistance of the church work in that way.

Recently the Congress of Peru, in a convention assembling at Lima, enacted a law amending the constitution, giving the people of the land the privilege of worshipping in any church they may choose. Although the President refused to sign the bill, it became a law by his failure to veto it. As now amended, that part of the constitution relating to the Roman Catholic Church reads: "The nation professes the Roman Catholic apostolic religion and protects it," whereas the original clause read, "The nation confesses the Roman Catholic apostolic religion, and the state protects it, and does not permit the exercise of any other." For the past ten years other religious bodies have not been molested in Peru. Surely the way is opening for the unadulterated Word of God to be given to the people of South America.—Exchange.

Original Articles

"COME UP HIGHER."--PART I

BY C. A. BUTTERWORTH

What a wonderful field of thought and investigation one enters into when he stops to contemplate for a few minutes the meaning of the above words. You may arise at the dawn of day with the greatest aspirations and holy thoughts, with hearts and hands ready for every emergency in contributing to the necessities of the downtrodden and oppressed, but when the shades of night draw round and the day's busy work is done, there still hangs like a beacon light before our vision those heaven-born words, "Come up higher."

OUR IDEAL

Our ideal is to live where God and Christ dwell, and feast throughout countless ages upon the joys which, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard."

It is evident that we are still on the shores of time, tossed by the heaving billows and tried by the adverse winds and storms that so often sweep across our pathway in life, and reveal the human that still needs the beating of the hammers and an increase of the fiery trials to purge out the remaining dross and prepare us for a brighter day. The perfection that God designs to accomplish in us is a condition yet to be wrought out, and every means necessary to reach that goal is within our province if we would only avail ourselves of the opportunity and labor together with Christ for the accomplishment of it.

"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect" is an accomplishment that lies far in the dim, distant future, but we are going on to perfection and ought to be nearer than when we began. For, as we "meditate upon the law of the Lord night and day," and eat and drink of that spiritual rock, the inner man becomes stronger by reason of partaking of the bread of life, while the carnal man, who is being brought into subjection, grows weaker and weaker until every trace of the human is swallowed up in the divine, and the collective body may be delivered up to the Father without spot or blemish.

"To err is human," and the human is still with us, for at best we only "see through a glass darkly," thus making our vision very imperfect and faulty, which requires us to "confess our faults one to another," and only knowing, and prophesying in part, we can never reach the goal until "that which is perfect is come" and the partial light is swallowed up in the fullness, and we are permitted to enter in and labor under perfect conditions.

Surely under such favorable conditions, with apostles, priests and kings, and with the Adversary of souls bound in the bottomless pit, and a thousand years before us, we should reach the "measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" without fail.

COVENANT WITH ENOCH

Many, many years ago when the rainbow was set in the sky, God said that when he looked upon it he would remember the covenant he had made with Enoch that, when men should keep all my commandments, Zion should come again on the earth, the city of Enoch which I have caught up unto myself. And this is mine everlasting covenant, that when thy posterity shall embrace the truth, and look upward, then shall Zion look downward, and all the heavens shall shake with gladness, and the earth shall tremble with joy; and the general assembly of the church of the first born shall come down out of heaven, and possess the earth, and shall have place until the end come.—Genesis 9: 21-23. Inspired Translation.

This man Enoch was a specially chosen vessel of the Lord, because of his wonderful faith and integrity in God. He had been taught in all the ways of the Lord by Jared his father, and was ordained to the holy priesthood when he was but a young man of twenty-five years of age. This took him out into the great battle of life, against "spiritual wickedness in high places," for the world had grown very wicked in those days because of the secret combinations men had entered into to plunder and murder and get gain, "And it came to pass, that Enoch went forth in the land, among the people, standing upon the hills, and high places, and cried with a loud voice, testifying against their works." "And all men were offended because of him," but great fear came upon all of them, so that they dare not touch him, "for he walked with God." For three hundred and sixty-five years Enoch walked with God, which means that he walked in harmony with the divine attributes of light, truth and love, and by reason of this he was permitted to look into the future and behold all the doings of mankind, even unto the end of the world.

CITY OF ZION

In his day he built a city called Zion, a city of holiness, and this vast community of saints lived together as one common family, and carried out a perfect system of equality, and manifested such love toward one another, that God translated them and crowned them with glory at his own right hand. Through Zion, the pure in heart, the world was enlightened in those dark and cloudy days, as David said, "out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." But now Zion, the New Jerusalem, is peacefully reposing in that heavenly country, at the right hand of God, until "the Lord my God shall come, and all the Saints with thee."

Zion has been steadily going Godward, and growing numerically through the passing ages, for "Enoch beheld angels descending out of heaven, bearing testimony of the Father and Son; and the Holy Spirit fell on many, and they were caught up by the powers of heaven into Zion," that is, they were translated that they should not see death, the same as Elijah, the Nephites and others. At the world's great tragedy, when the Son of God suffered the pains of the cruel cross for us, and triumphed over death, hell and the grave, "behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent; and the graves were opened; and the bodies of the saints which slept, arose, who were many, and came out of their graves. And after his resurrection, went into the holy city and appeared to many."

The borders of Zion above are now enlarged, and Enoch's holy band is joined by all those who died in faith, from the days of Adam down to Christ, for while they constantly sought for that "city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God" and spent their days as strangers and pilgrims on the earth, they were not successful in finding it, "For here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come." However, "these all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. "But now they desire a better country, that is to say an heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God: for he hath prepared for them a city." At the resurrection of Christ they all enter the city as seen in later revelation.

And it came to pass, that Enoch cried unto the Lord, saying, When the Son of Man cometh in the flesh, shall the earth rest? I pray thee show me these things. And the Lord said unto Enoch, Look; and he looked and beheld the Son of Man lifted up on the cross, after the manner of men. And he heard a loud voice; and the heavens were veiled; and all the creations of God mourned; and the earth groaned; and the rocks were rent; and the Saints arose and were crowned at the right hand of the Son of Man, with crowns of glory.—Genesis 7: 61-63. Inspired Translation.

This vast heavenly throng, as innumerable as the sands on the seashore, is known to us as the kingdom of God, in its triumphant state, for which we have prayed so long to come, that the will of the Lord might be done on earth as it is now being done in heaven.

Well could Enoch prophesy of the wonderful event, "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints." And the Apostle Paul could pay reverence in these glowing terms: "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." Christ is the head and father of this large family, and the bride, the Lamb's wife, is the mother, and by them we receive our second birth, "ye must be born again," not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

JERUSALEM FROM ABOVE

Paul reasons like this: "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." And John the Revelator continues thus:

And there came one unto me of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and he showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God.

This holy city that is coming down out of heaven from God is presided over by our Lord, to whom all power has been given, both in heaven and in earth, and is called "the church of the first born," and composed of all translated and resurrected beings of all past ages, who will meet the church militant, or Zion that is to be built up on earth by the gathering of the Saints in latter days, and together spend a thousand years in the presence of the Lamb while the earth rests.

And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

Then shall the kingdom of heaven, or church on earth, be like unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. The bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut.

And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. . . . I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end.—Revelation 21: 3-6.

It will here be discovered that "God himself" spoken of in the above is none other than Christ, as one in the Godhead, bearing the title given by his Father, "And his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.

INDWELLING OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

John says, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God and the Word was God." And while the Inspired Translation says the "gospel was the word," both agree that the "same word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory of the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." Paul speaks thus, "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." And in writing to the Hebrew Saints about the Son being so highly exalted above the angels, and being the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person, he says, "But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of thy kingdom."

The sorrow, pain and grief borne by our Savior for all mankind, may be avoided, the joys of eternity shared, and our burdens made light, if we would only repent, but if not, our sufferings will be sore—

how sore you know not! how exquisite you know not! yea, how hard to bear you know not! For, behold, I, God, have suffered these things for all, that they might not suffer, if they would repent, they must suffer even as I; which suffering caused myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit, and would that I might not drink the bitter cup, and shrink; nevertheless, glory be to the Father, and I partook and finished my preparations unto the children of men.—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 2.

"I, God, the greatest of all" has no reference to his Father, of whom Christ says, "my Father is greater than I," but merely to his brethren who are called upon to repent or suffer, "for the head of every man is Christ," and he is the only begotten of the Father, therefore he is the greatest of all among those who are subject to suffering.

ZION AMONG MEN NOW

The "tabernacle of God" is Zion, and it is now seen to be among men. And Enoch continued his supplication, saying:

I ask thee if thou wilt not come again on the earth? And the Lord said unto Enoch, As I live, even so will I come in the last days, in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfill the oath which I made unto you concerning the children of Noah. And the day shall come that the earth shall rest. But before that day shall the heavens be darkened, and a veil of darkness shall cover the earth; and the heavens shall shake, and also the earth. And great tribulation shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven, and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of my Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men. And righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth, unto the place which I shall prepare; an holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion; a New Jerusalem. And the Lord said unto Enoch, Then shalt thou and all thy city meet them there; and we will receive them into our bosom; and they shall see us, and we will fall upon their necks, and they shall fall upon our necks, and we will kiss each other; and there shall be my abode, and it shall be Zion, which shall come forth out of all the creations which I have made; and for the space of a thousand years, shall the earth rest. And it came to pass, that Enoch saw the day of the coming of the Son of Man, in the last days, to dwell on the earth, in righteousness, for the space of a thousand years.—Genesis 7: 66-74, Inspired Translation.

A HAPPY REUNION

This long looked-for happy reunion of saints below and saints above will cause every heart to swell with emotion and ecstatic joy, as they raise their voices together, and sing this new song:

The Lord hath brought again Zion:
The Lord hath redeemed his people, Israel,

And Satan is bound, and time is no longer:
The Lord hath gathered all things in one:
The Lord hath brought down Zion from above:
The Lord hath brought up Zion from beneath;
The earth hath travailed and brought forth her strength;
And the truth is established in her bowels;
And the heavens have smiled upon her.—Doctrine and Covenants 88: 17.

The elders were called upon to listen together, while the Lord in simplicity explained this wonderful event:

And even so I have sent mine everlasting covenant into the world, to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people and for the Gentiles to seek to it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way before me. Wherefore come ye unto it; and with him that cometh I will reason as with men in days of old, and I will show unto you my strong reasoning; wherefore hearken ye together, and let me show it unto you, even my wisdom, the wisdom of him whom ye say is the God of Enoch and his brethren, who were separated from the earth, and were received unto myself; a city reserved until a day of righteousness shall come: a day which was sought for by all holy men, and they found it not, because of wickedness and abominations, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth, but obtained a promise that they should find it, and see it in their flesh.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 2.

That our hearts might not be troubled or overanxious, these comforting words were left us: "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."

As "without holiness no man shall see the Lord," and only the meek can inherit the earth, there must needs be a cessation of all worldly strife and a general cleaning up of conditions such as most people have scarcely dreamed of. And this must take place before that day of righteousness shall come so that the will of the Lord may be done on earth as it is now being done in heaven.

(To be concluded.)

PREACHERS AND PREACHING

There are good preachers and bad preachers, and—preachers. But none are so good but that they may be better—may learn to do their work better, and none are so bad but that there may be hope that they may be sent to the penitentiary—or some other place of penitence.

If all the preachers who are in need of repentance as a fundamental work of personal saving grace, should apply for that celestial commodity upon the same day, heaven would probably have to draw upon its reserves to supply the demand.

But so long as the people's desire is to "heap to themselves teachers having itching ears, to turn the people's ears away from the truth and to turn them unto fables," there will be no need of an extra force of clerks in heaven to record rush order applications for reservations in glory.

This is not to insinuate that there will be no preachers present "when the roll is called up yonder," but merely to affirm by way of encouragement to the public that they will not be nearly so numerous as at the average hallelujah revival. Some preaching goes to extremes in whirling, dusty action, like a Kansas dry-weather dust whirl—big, blustery and trashy at the top, but little and spindling at the bottom, and with all its bluster unable to move anything solid, but jerking trash and scrap paper in every direction.

Another species of performance called preaching the gospel, gives so much more attention to method than matter, that the whole thing is like a dried reed shaken in the wind so far as their action being any indication of spiritual life is concerned; and when the frills are all taken off, what remains of such sermons is about seventeen times more insignificant than magnified nothing.

Others make the mistake of giving so much attention to the solidity of the subject matter, and so little to form, or delivery that the sermon is served hash fashion, or in chunks that would be indigestible for even a steam rock crusher.

Then there are sermons that are l-o-n-g and sermons that are short—and sermons. Once upon a time the person whose hand is hanging on to this pen in a kind of a restraining way while this essay is being written, had the misfortune to be unsuccessful in restraining his tongue from spinning out a very long sermon. In fact he has been guilty of boring his hearers in such a manner a number of times, but in this incident in particular.

It was at a summer reunion. Before going into the stand the fledgling preacher was worried for fear he would be unable to find enough to say to fill, in a respectable manner, the period of time which a sermon is supposed to occupy.

Before he was through, the people were no doubt worried for fear he would never finish. Elder Herman C. Smith was present, and after the amateur preacher of the hour—or perhaps more properly speaking of the two hours, had made numerous oratorical ascensions and glides, and was about to launch out upon a new phase of the rather lengthy "prophecy of Zenos," (see Book of Mormon, page 177, Authorized Edition) he happened to think that perhaps he should ask some one what o'clock it was. So, turning to Elder Smith with some such a flourish of suspended oratory as a Demosthenes might have employed, the speaker inquired: "But how is the time passing, Brother Smith?"

Brother Smith very deliberately looked at his watch, replaced it in his pocket, glanced leisurely at the poised and waiting orator and said: "Oh, a-b-o-u-t as usual."

The lightning struck. Demosthenes came out of his flights, down to common earth again, and the service was closed in time to keep patience from breaking, which no doubt was at that time badly bent.

There is many a good sermon spoiled by not cutting it half in two and keeping the one half for seed—others should be kept in cold storage if not delivered immediately.

A sermon, on ordinary occasions, may be reasonably lengthy, or even very long, without insult or injury to the cause, to the people, or even to the preacher, so long as he continues to say things, but when a man talks without saying anything it is time, in some countries, to go to sleep, and in others to resort to other methods.

Then there is the kind of preaching which says enough, such as it is; and is very good, what there is of it. That kind, avoids vital issues, and would make very nice, soft decorations for a real sturdy gospel sermon, but is too frail and impotent to speak the soul of truth itself.

MAMMON

The great "mammon of unrighteousness" and "root of all evil" extends its influence to the pulpit also, as well as to other dangerous places, so that there is an astonishing amount of the preaching of nonsense for cents; and a great adaptability is developed in keeping far away from all common sense, that stands where cents do not grow rapidly into big dollars.

The sermon which winces and side-steps for fear of not being wholly indorsed by the fellow with the fat pocketbook can never be expressive of the true gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

SCRIPTURAL TEXT

"For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."—1 Corinthians 1: 21.

The context to this remarkable scripture reads as follows: "Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolishness the wisdom of this world?"

Where are the wise referred to here? Many of them are in the modern pulpit. What are they doing? Changing the foolishness of preaching to the preaching of foolishness. Where is the scribe? Right at hand, sir, and ever ready to perform his duties as of old, and also now to write large books of foolishness.

Where is the disputer of this world? Oh, he's here, too, and ready to carry on his dispute. He will dispute every gospel doctrine, and prove his case as thoroughly as vain philosophy may prove anything. According to his preaching, all religious feeling and sentiment grows out of an hallucination of the mind, and all revelation from God is merely a psychological phenomenon.

But even scientists do not agree upon many fundamentals, and so we are thrown to our beginnings for the wisdom of God manifest in preaching, but which is able to save them that believe.

There is a vast difference between "the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe," and the preaching of foolishness to entertain them that disbelieve.

JAMES E. YATES.

* * * * *

SOME REASONS FOR A DECLINE IN RELIGIOUS INTEREST

Mr. Thomas Dixon, jr., gives us a few interesting notes accompanied by some very startling figures concerning the years he spent as a minister in New York City. Speaking of the decrease in organic Christianity, he says:

In 1840 New York had a church to every 1,800 inhabitants, while in 1908 there was not a church to 4,000 inhabitants, counting all mission halls and soup kitchens as churches; yet he asks, Is Christianity on the decline? And answers it in the negative. Christianity, he says, is on the increase.

The nominal increase of membership of the Baptist Church was for a quarter of a century less than one fourth the birth rate of their own membership.

I have had to admire the fervent ardor with which the Baptists gather converts from among the Negroes, Chinese, Japanese and other unpopular peoples, yet in twenty-five years they not only have gained nothing from the outside but "have lost," says Dixon, "two thirds of the children born in their own homes. The Methodists who practice infant baptism have also gained nothing from the outside and have lost one half the children born within the church, while the Presbyterians have held only two thirds of their own without gaining anything from the world."

A great change had taken place during the twenty-five years in the method of keeping the church rolls. Then enrollment meant an accurate summary of active or at least live members. Now many of the churches retain the names of the dead on the plea that their establishment extends over this world and the next.

One of these churches on burning, showed a membership of over four thousand, yet the insurance company could find less than two hundred members.

In 1896 the Baptists in Manhattan reported sixty-four churches. In 1907 they claimed only forty-eight. Half of them were hopes unfulfilled and many were mere soup kitchens supported by a few rich men.

The Methodists in 1896 reported seventy-three and claimed only fifty-nine in 1907, while the Presbyterians reported seventy-one in 1896 and claimed fifty-seven in 1907.

In New York one district of 16,000 inhabitants has a saloon to every one hundred and eleven, and a church to 8,196. In the section between Twenty-fourth and Fifty-ninth Streets west of Ninth Avenue, there was but one church to 15,000, while the district between Fortieth and Sixty-fourth Streets west of Tenth Avenue contained 46,563 people and had but one church.

Dear Saints, what a harvest is there!

I am taking only a few of Mr. Dixon's many figures because I know that figures bore and I don't want to discourage you until I come to the reason why.

But first just one word concerning Catholicism, which makes relatively as sad a showing. It is estimated that during the last eighty-six years we have received into the United States at least fifteen million Roman Catholics, yet with the most prolific birth rate of any of our classes of people, Rome can show only about ten million nominal adherents.

Counting the children born of Catholic parents, Rome has lost about eight millions of her own people in the last eighty-six years.

An estimate of the sources of immigration shows that fifty per cent of it is Roman Catholic. This should have given the Catholic Church an aggregate of 976,000. It was actually only 380,000, showing a loss to them in New York City alone of 592,000.

What are some of the causes of the decay of churchianity in New York?

Mr. Dixon who seems to think he understands the situation, tries to answer the question fairly and squarely. He says, "The ministry is largely composed of men shackled by traditions. They are enfeebled by the exhaustion of a life spent in sputtering over trifles and their consciousness of defeat robs them of the power of achievement."

This last seems a little twisted. Had not they lost this power before defeat came followed by the consciousness of it? Mr. Dixon's ministry in New York, we are told, was marked by the same earnest intensity and eloquence that characterize him as a novelist and playwright, so we think he did his best.

"Defeat," he says, "is for him who acknowledges it." Yet how many we have known who went into business and knew in a short time that they were playing a losing game, but stood with it until they had nothing left to start them up again. Persistently refusing to acknowledge defeat, yet it came and demanded recognition and so it will ever be with the minister who tries to reach the masses from the pulpit of an exclusive church.

Here Mr. Dixon hits it fairly and squarely. "A prophetic and authoritative minister has ceased to exist in New York. The preachers are compelled to say what their church members wish to hear. The moment they interpret freedom of speech to mean anything else they lose their jobs." Well, that was foretold. "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine," etc.

This foretells the modern chronic church worshiper, or should I say worshiper of church, who has studied the Scriptures and decided just what she does and does not wish to hear. They have been coddled so long and so carefully that they imagine they are pets of the Almighty and need only to demand the food that suits them best.

What they really need is work to do. If their minister was constantly bringing in converts from the masses they would find healthful exercise and contentment in teaching and strengthening them.

But the minister has lost his way. The Lord directed him to go into the world and call sinners to repentance, but the world is too rough for the polished minister. It does not suit his refined tastes, and of the sinner he is actually afraid. He gladly welcomes the retreat his church offers and the sinner is just as much afraid of him. He will not enter the church. He would be the only one of his kind there and the minister would single him out and make an example of him.

And there you are. The minister is shut in with his diminishing flock, a caricature of the Christ who would leave ninety and nine in the fold while there was one wanderer to be sought on the hills.

Does not the minister care that there are ninety and nine on the hills to every one that he coddles in the fold? Christ cared only for the sinner and his salvation. "How can they hear without a preacher?" How changed the cry from the modern pulpit, "How can we preach without a hearer?"

The masses are chilled by the solemn formality of the modern church service and the building is to them a mausoleum of dry bones, yet I have found through long years of temperance and purity work among them that a vast majority of them revere the name of Christ, and while listening to an address, crowds of workingmen will often greet this name with deafening cheers, and often I am sorry to say, they will greet the name of church with hisses..

The costly grandeur of the church does not appeal to them. They are accustomed to magnificence in the saloon, and in the gorgeous settings of the stage, still,

"Christianity in America is rapidly increasing, and while churchianity has been slowly dying our cities have been steadily growing better and in every way cleaner."

The disreputable variety shows that twenty-five years ago were conducted under a theater license have all disappeared and the theater to-day is on a cleaner, safer and higher moral plane.

The atmosphere of all other amusements to-day is saner and more wholesome and the numbers attending them many times greater. The social evil does not flaunt its scarlet signs so glaringly and its painted women do not now hang out of windows or stand on street corners plying their trade so openly, and King Alcohol has lost half his territory and almost half his subjects in the territory remaining to him.

Politics were corrupt beyond belief. Now officials for the most part are men of honor and integrity, while the ban is placed on graft and immorality. Parks and playgrounds have grown and greatly multiplied with the decrease of child labor, and while the churches have been moving out into the sparsely settled districts away from the millions who need them, a vast Christianity has been slowly growing down among the masses where the heart of humanity beats.

"Every knee shall bow. Every tongue confess the Christ." "I will draw all men after me," says the Master, and he is able to make good. You see he is doing it, if not with the preacher's help, he will do it in spite of him.

The heads of theological schools complain that the young men who are entering the ministry to-day are inferior in brain and character to those who are entering the business world.

Well, no wonder. Fancy a youth full of fire and holy zeal, strong, courageous and lion-hearted. He feels he is a winner. He enters the ministry to seek that which was lost—to call sinners to repentance. He is going to follow his Master, but he soon finds that he is not the one with authority; he is owned by his church who considers him overzealous, but decides he will do very well when more subdued, so he is given a pulpit where he may preach to a few middle-aged Christians who were called to repentance years before he was born.

Now wouldn't that take the ginger out of a fellow and would you expect his younger brother to follow him into the ministry?

That is just the trouble with our theological speakers. They are so very subdued that they avoid and keep at a distance from those they pretend to be seeking. Surely the brightest spirits will turn from such a calling.

The masses of America are now ready for their teacher, but they want him to meet them in the open as Christ came with his Sermon on the Mount.

No man when he hath lighted a candle putteth it in a secret place, neither under a bushel.

MARY BEEBE HAWLEY.

Woman's Auxiliary

Our Oriole Girls

Sister Gardner the most energetic superintendent of our young woman's department, sends in a collection of items in regard to that phase of our work, which is most interesting and important. Her announcements concerning materials for the Oriole girls, which she has been waiting so eagerly to make, justify an early publication, and we trust the readers of the column will give these matters as wide publicity as possible. The new book of instruction and suggestion for the various circles should be in the hands of every Oriole girl at the earliest possible moment as in it will be found much new material of great value to all. Please do not make the mistake of sending your orders to the editor of this column; this has been done in a few cases in regard to the Year Book for the auxiliary organization, and the editor regrets the disappointment and the delay such mistakes have caused some of our good sisters. Send the orders for the Year Book direct to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni Iowa, and the orders for all Oriole supplies, including the new Oriole Book, to the superintendent of that department, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

We present this week, a most enjoyable little article from the pen of sister Della Braidwood, until lately Sister Gardner's assistant in superintending the young woman's department. Sister Braidwood was one who contributed very largely to the preliminary work of getting this Oriole movement organized among our young women, and is heartily in accord with all efforts made for the betterment of our girls, and for the increase of spirituality and grace among them. One of the lines of activity pursued by the Oriole girls is that called "Praise," and the girls win points of merit in that group by such things as attending prayer services or preaching services, or other church duties a certain number of times per month, or by loving work among the sick, or needy, or by analyzing their church doctrines, and giving reasons why they are Latter Day Saints, etc. As may be seen, these things will stimulate any young Saint to increased appreciation of her church, and an increased interest and activity in the work pertaining thereto. This is but one of the six departments which receive attention in this all-around plan to encourage our girls in useful effort, and this article of Sister Braidwood's is the first of a series touching upon each in turn, which we hope to publish from time to time. Thus the aims and plans of the Oriole movement may be more thoroughly understood among our membership.

A new feature announced by Sister Gardner in this issue deserves special emphasis. It is the plan by which isolated girls may become members of the Oriole organization, and this will be hailed with delight by scores of girls who have hitherto been compelled to stand outside these organized pleasure fields of effort and accomplishment. Under this new plan such girls may be working to earn their points, may acquire, may perform, and fit themselves for worthy membership, and when they may be privileged to attend General Conference, or the reunions near them, or district conferences, they may feel themselves in the midst of the Oriole activities there, and be made happy accordingly. These isolated girls are to be called "Forest Orioles"—a very pretty and appropriate name for the feature contemplated.

Our readers will feel a glow of warm delight surge over their hearts as they peruse the joyous little poem we are privileged to pass on to you this week. It was written by Sister Alice E. Cobb, always a passionate lover of girls, and herself the mother of five. The occasion was that of the organization of the Oriole girls of the Lamoni Stake, at its recent reunion. Do you not catch the fine spirit of praise, and service, and love, breathing through its lines? What, oh what, may not be before us as a church, when every member of it shall become imbued with a similar spirit of loving unity of thought and purpose, coupled with consecrated and enthusiastic joy of service? Let the Oriole spirit of loyalty and worthiness run like new wine through the veins of every one of God's Saints, that their light may indeed shine out, a beacon to all the people!

Praise

Summer vacations are not so far in the past as to be forgotten and I remember with distinct pleasure my effort to make a field and forest point in the study of birds.

I was on a large farm in northern Iowa where the farmers have all planted windbreaks and in the four rows of big trees, two on each side of the house where I visited, there were wild canaries, woodpeckers, yellow hammers, sparrows, robins, wrens, meadow larks, and an owl.

In watching them day by day I was struck with the force of our department called Praise as a characteristic of bird life.

One morning when I was fortunate enough to awaken early (and, by the way, one is likely not to oversleep where there are dozens of screeching woodpeckers within a few feet of the bedroom windows!) I was permitted to see some tiny bird high up in the tiptop of a tree, singing its heart out to a big dazzling sun just appearing on the scene, and I almost expected to see its little throat burst with the enthusiasm of its praise.

Praise for what?

Light, air, beauty, and glorious new day begun! And these things are all mine, too—yours and mine—every day of our lives, never withheld, never grudgingly given, by the Father of birds and men!

One evening, just before sundown, after days of hot dry weather, great ominous clouds appeared in the south and in a moment or two the sunlight seemed an ugly yellow, the trees were bending and twisting. Lightning shot all directions at once, and I noticed the anxious flitting here and there of the birds. They were excited and gave nervous little calls to one another.

After the drenching rain, the men, who had been obliged to quit the fields, went silently out to see to the stock. Not one word of gratitude for the much needed rain—but the birds!! As the sun gave a last parting shot our way, those little feathered creatures came from every direction and such a chorus of singing and joyous hallelujahs you never heard.

Thanks for the coolness after the heat.

Thanks for a cloud to dim the glare of the sun.

Thanks for rain after drought.

Thanks for protection through storm.

They seemed to remember it all; and the blessings had, every one, been ours, too, but being the only one on that farm who believes in a God of blessings, I imagine I was the only one who gave a thought to thankful praise!

And as I learned my lesson from the birds there in the north, our Praise department loomed larger and finer before me.

There are so many ways in which we can return our thanks, not alone in songs and prayers of thanksgiving, but Christ has said in speaking of being fed when hungry and so forth—"Inasmuch as ye do it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye do it unto me."

Let us remember to return to him our spoken gratitude for all the daily blessings, big and little, which we are so likely to overlook, and let us not forget to share with all our neighbors, friends, and even our enemies, the benefits we receive.

When trying to discover what we possess that can be shared we will be astonished at how little is given us which cannot be handed on to the others near by.

So, praise, when we consider it as helpful service, is surely not the least of the departments of Oriole work.

DELLA BRAIDWOOD.

The Mission of the Oriole

Here we come, "birds of one feather,"

True to the adage of old;

Merrily flocking together

Dressed in the black and the gold.

Choosing a bird as our sample—

A gold-crested one, with black wings—

We follow out his example;

This is the way that he sings:

(Whistle.)

Some call him "Robin the Golden,"

Giving the Oriole call,

Tribe birds to whom he is holden,

Count him no poacher at all!

Seeking a tree 'mong the tallest,

Perched on its uppermost twig,

He, among songsters the smallest,

Sings a tune fit for a jig:

(Whistle.)

There he sits, swaying and blinking,

While men are passing along,

Twittering, whistling, and thinking

"They need my merriest song!"

Outbursts of joy most befitting

Thrills, not of grief but of bliss,

Flutelike, his throat keeps emitting

Exquisite bird tones like this:

(Whistle.)

Seeing the orchard and garden,

Ruined and robbed by his foe,

Down to the aid of the warden

Swiftly the songster will go;

Being to service devoted,

He flies from tropics to poles;

Because he is cheery and noted,

Our circles are called "Orioles."

(Whistle.)

True to the name we have taken

And to the cause we've espoused,

We will stand firm and unshaken,

Till joy the whole world is around;

Mounting by culture and labor,

To the tiptop notch of the tree,

True to each friend and each neighbor,

"Service" our motto shall be!

(Whistle.)

Donning our badge, black and yellow,

Symbol of love in our souls,

Striking their notes sweet and mellow,

We mimic the bright orioles!

Lo, when appeals are unheeded,

And sorrow's banner unfurls,

Then, should our service be needed,

Just call on the Oriole girls!

(Whistle.)

LAMONI, IOWA.

ALICE E. COBB.

The Oriole Work is Desirable for Every Girl Because

1. It will round out the spiritual side of a girl's character.
2. It will increase a girl's understanding of church work and her devotion to it.
3. It will develop sincere, home-loving hearts.
4. It will inspire love of the outdoors, and reverence for the things of nature.
5. It will assist her in finding her place in the world and strengthen her efficiency.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER.

Forest Orioles

This is the name we have chosen for our isolated girls who may wish to become Orioles. We have had many requests for arrangements to be made so that the girls who live away from branches and where there are not enough of our girls to form a circle may become members. We have been very glad to do so, and the new book will contain instructions for them as well as for the circles. We urge every girl whether she lives in the country or in the city to send for one of the books and see what there is in it for her. The Forest Orioles will become a department of the Oriole work and all who wish to enroll may do so by corresponding with the general superintendent of the Forest Orioles, Miss Irena Stratton, 81 South Nineteenth Street, Kansas City, Kansas.

The Oriole Girls' Supplies and Equipment

Oriole Book, 20 cents. This book contains the full instructions for organizing and developing the Oriole work. The second edition is now ready, having been revised, enlarged and illustrated as the needs of the work demanded. It contains the Oriole song as sung by the Oriole girls at the last General Conference. To do the best work every Oriole girl should have a book.

Khaki Cloth, 25 cents. The material for the uniforms is of brown khaki, 29 inches wide, which is the recognized cloth for outing costumes, and has been accepted as having the best wearing qualities. Care and thought have been given to the selection of the grade of material which should be used and recognized as the material for the Oriole uniform. The girl with limited means as well as the girl more favorably placed, has been considered, and the material adopted is thought to be the most economical, lasting and practical. Samples will be sent to the girls living in cities so that if desired the material may be purchased in their home city.

Embroidery Thread, per skein, 3 cents. This thread is orange and black, to be used for embroidering the symbol on the uniform.

Beads, 1 cent each. In six colors, each indicating a particular group of points in the Oriole work. Leather thongs are sent to string the beads on, as ordered, free of charge.

Stationery, per box, 30 cents. An attractive box of stationery containing twenty-four sheets and envelopes of fine, linen finish paper. The Oriole symbol in black and orange is printed in the upper left-hand corner. Any girl will like it. Makes a nice gift from one Oriole girl to another.

Oriole Pin, each 40 cents. Sterling silver back, with safety clasp. Face of pin is enameled with the Oriole symbol in black and orange. Small, neat and attractive.

All supplies are sent postage prepaid. Money must accompany order. Send all orders to Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

But the preacher has to walk,
'Cause he can't afford a car.

We must keep up with the times
If we get desired results;
As it is the preacher ofttimes
Is rewarded with insults.
People pass him by, and scorn him,
And his reputation mar;
But the case would be quite different
If he had a gospel car.

If we ever reach the people
We must meet them on their plane.
If we don't, and plod on blindly,
All our efforts will be vain.
And we'll hear the lamentation
As we stand before the bar:
"Our reward would have been greater
Had we bought that gospel car."

Now you stay-at-homes, please listen,
You who've made a lucky "hit,"
Think of those who sit in darkness;
Open up your heart a bit.
Send a check up to the bishop,
Deck your crown with one more star.
Tell the bishop that your check is
For a missionary car.

Then the army of the Lord will
On to victory quickly go
As they gather in the grain from Seed the gospel car will sow.
See the fields of ripening grain,
Spreading o'er the hills afar.
What a harvest we might gather—
If we only had a car!

E. E. LONG.

Hymns and Poems

If We Only Had a Car

If we only had an auto
For our missionary work,
We'd go on our way rejoicing,
Never taking time to shirk.
We would preach the grand old message
To the people near and far,
And distribute books and papers—
If we only had a car.

Now we think it hardly fair to Send the missionary out
With no way to reach the people—
Yes, a car would help, no doubt.
Send the money to the bishop.
Then the gates will stand ajar,
And we'll hear the ransomed singing:
"Bless the missionary car."

People nowadays are "foolish,"
Prone to seek their selfish ease,
And will spend for worldly pleasure
Gold enough to bridge the seas.
Merchants, farmers, and mechanics
Ride in comfort without mar;

Signs of Autumn

The shortening of days,
The fleeing of birds,
The well-grown lambs,
The heavy-clad herds;
The fading of flowers,
The denuding of trees,
The noncooing of doves,
The hush of the bees.

The fall of the apples,
The mellowing seen,
The bronze of the oak leaf,
The green intervene;
The goldenrod faded,
The clovers decay,
The grasses they wither,
The work of a day.

The plants that are dying
The seed they relay,
The work of a summer,
The hundredfold pay,
The rest for winter,
The grave—they are pent,

The tokens of autumn,
The life they relent.

The squirrel's preparing,
The mouse with his chest,
The nuts they gathered,
The reward of their quest;
The fishes retiring,
The deep waters to find;
The instincts of each,
The work after its kind.

EVAN B. MORGAN.

Letter Department

After Sixty-Nine Years of Service

While reading your vivid description of the late Lamoni reunion, and the expressed experience of the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as given by himself in that great congregation, reminded me of my own experience which I feel impressed to give to the HERALD readers, if I can write it sufficiently clear to make its publication worth while.

About seventy-two or seventy-three years ago, inspired by curiosity, I walked into a public hall in the town of Walsall, England, where Latter Day Saints were worshipping. It was a communion service, and after they had commemorated the great sacrifice made by the Christ for the world, the meeting resolved into a prayer and testimony service.

To my surprise, I heard a number of humble, intelligent and earnest prayers. And after a few prayers had been offered, all in the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, some arose to their feet, singly and in perfect order and gave expression to their feelings of gratitude to God for his boundless love in opening their eyes so that they could see the light that he had sent into the world, viz, the restored gospel! That which Jesus preached with all its principles, ordinances, promises and gifts. This was new to me, though a member of the Baptist Church, and a constant Bible reader! But the veil of false tradition, which Satan had drawn over the eyes of the world, had been drawn over mine,—hence, the idea of the restored gospel was new to me, but the plain and simple manner in which the testimonies were borne, more than half convinced me of their truth! Then, my familiarity with the letter of the Scriptures compelled me to believe that their claim was scriptural!

But in addition to testimonies borne in the English language several seemed impelled by a power greater than their own, to speak in languages that I could not understand. The tongues were spoken in so meek and peaceful a manner that my heart was filled with a holy fire, such as I had never realized before. That sacred fire has never been entirely quenched to this day; may God grant that it never may be.

I had heard many prayers, in other churches, for a pentecostal shower, but I had never seen one before. But in that audience I was compelled to say in the depths of my soul, "If there ever was a pentecostal shower, it is here to-day." I felt its holy fire thrilling my soul and helping me to behold the glory of the latter day.

Others gave the interpretations of the tongues in the same meek and quiet spirit, for there was no confusion there, no facial distortion! But the glad look in every face, and eye sparkling with tears of joy showed that every heart was touched with the flame of divine love.

Yet, two years rolled away before I was prepared to bow in obedience to the divine will. Still God in his mercy bore with me and finally led me in the straight and narrow way that leads to a life eternal, for which, to-day, I praise his holy name.

Please permit me to add, that for sixty-nine years, I have taken up the gladsome theme of the restored gospel and proclaimed it to the world, and have been honored of God to be one of his humble messengers and an instrument in his hands of leading many to see the light, and believe the promises made therein; and in hundreds of instances I have witnessed the blessed effects of the baptism of the Holy Ghost as manifested in the gifts of the gospel as promised by Jesus (Mark 16) and by Paul in Corinthians 12: 13, 14 and Ephesians 4.

I thank God these blessed evidences are still given as proof that "God is no respecter of persons," that he is God and changeth not.

Rejoicing with you in the blessedness of the restored gospel of Christ, I remain very respectfully,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

CHARLES DERRY.

WOODBINE, IOWA, September 9, 1916.

Words of Cheer

[A brother writes us a letter which he says is not for publication; however we make bold to publish it, but withhold his name, out of respect for his desire to avoid publicity.—EDITORS.]

Editors Herald: Inclosed find one dollar and fifty cents for one year's subscription from a new member who heard me preach the gospel and obeyed the first principles. I believe you will be with him, that you will strengthen him and comfort him when I will not be with him. I believe you are one of the best methods in the church to-day of feeding and keeping the Saints awake. I pray that the day is not far distant when you will be a welcome messenger in every home where a child of God sojourns, and that you will continue to have the inspiration of the Holy Spirit with you in the future as in the present.

I enjoy Brother Elbert Smith's pieces. They always make me long to be better. I would not be without you in my home if you cost me ten dollars per year.

Wishing you every success,

Some Frontier Experiences

About five years ago I wrote you from the first house this side of the North Pole, where I found one family of Saints and where I baptized four others. From time to time others have followed up the work and baptized a number. Others have come in from Ontario and from the States so that now we have about twenty-five members all in one neighborhood. As soon as proper material for officers can be designated, no doubt a branch will be organized on the very edge of civilization.

Last month a reunion was held at that place (near Shellbrook) and was well attended, more especially by those not of our faith. Many of these are interested and became more so during the reunion and the meetings that followed. Rain interfered considerably with the meetings, for several much interested were expecting to be baptized. There are many swamps in that country, and as yet the roads are little improved so that several who wished to attend were hindered. Considering the weather and the primitive means of travel on this northern edge of civilization the meetings were quite successful. Of the missionary force, Brother T. J. Jordan, Brother Birch Whiting and myself attended. Brother Whiting has a cousin, Brother Frank Whiting who lives here. They had not met in a number of years. Listening to the "call of the wild," this mighty hunter enjoys this country of wild game and adventure, and there are many others just like him.

This is a wonderfully productive country when the timber is cleared away, and where wild animals are plentiful. One hears tales related of early New York, Ohio and Kentucky all told over again but with a modern date and has but to step outdoors to realize it himself. The only difference is that the Indians are peaceable and friendly. Partridges, deer, elk, moose, bears, wild cats, lynx and wolves, together with the largest poplar and straightest trees that ever grew, intermingled with pine, spruce and tamarack, make up this north country. One feels like two hundred years ago has come again and with the gospel of two thousand years ago restored. Why should not these Saints be happy? Modern schools and modern civilization added, and all the latest improvements in tools and machinery, together with improved grains and garden products, all serve to make up the "Last Great West." No wonder the Middle West loses so many that go to Canada.

Before, when we visited the place it was during the hunting season when snow was deep and cold intense, but this time when flowers bloom everywhere and berries are plentiful. What a difference in appearance! Berries are the common weeds of the country. Strawberries first, most and best of all. Thousands of acres in the trackless North are a perfect mat of strawberry vines. One man showed me his horse hoofs that were red with strawberry stains. Next there is the red raspberry, and blue berries, cranberries, saskatoon berries, buffalo berries, and blackberries, besides the black currants and choke cherries in abundance. Wherever the pines and poplars will let the sunshine in, there springs up a veritable berry patch, with flowers intermingled to break the monotony.

The ground freezes very deep and insects that winter in the ground are unknown. In many places the frost is not out of the ground more than a month or two, more especially in the heavily wooded swamps where moss is thick. Most delicious cold water may be had all summer long.

The timber is fast being used for lumber and shipped away. The poplar is the finest paper wood in the world and it is expected when the war is over that a mighty industry will spring up in the North which will clear the land to make paper for the world.

At Big River, ninety miles northwest, where I visited and did a little preaching three years ago is located the largest sawmill on the American Continent. But the mills are pushing farther north, and they have a thousand miles yet to go before they reach the timber limit, back where reindeer and caribou roam in thousands (one man told me he had seen three thousand reindeer in one herd) that have never heard the crack of a rifle and never have seen a human being. But these animals are safe for many years as one cannot take teams in during the cold of winter without stables for the night, and the mosquitoes and swamp prevent doing so in summer. Only as the mill hands cut the timber can wagons and sleighs penetrate those forests at all.

But farming is at its limit about where the pineries begin on account of summer frosts. Last week many anxious farmers scarcely slept for fear the cold nights would bring frost. Several nights the thermometer was down to thirty-two and -three above zero. But the nights passed without any damage. Warm weather has come again and the grain has begun to ripen. Both here and farther south the prospects for a second bumper crop is assured. The grain, though late in the spring, has matured wonderfully fast on account of the long, hot days, mingled with an occasional drenching rain. Just about as needed. With wheat again averaging forty bushel per acre and the price a third better than last year, times should be good in the Northwest but for the terrible blight of war.

At the close of the reunion I began a series of meetings at Canwood, ten miles farther into the woods, where I held one of the most interesting meetings I have conducted for many a year.

Securing the use of the schoolhouse we announced meetings for a week. On Sunday evening we attended the Baptist meeting, met and asked the minister to announce our meetings. But he did not feel charitable enough to do so, nor would he give us permission to do so ourselves. We told him that he did not own the schoolhouse and that when his meetings were through we would take the liberty to make the announcement. He said, "I will make the announcement, but in a way that probably will not suit you." I said, "Say what you please, only I want the privilege to reply." "Not if I can help it," was his reply.

I said, "You cannot help it, for if I cannot reply in the schoolhouse I will somewhere else, you may be sure of that."

A number had heard our conversation and our meetings were getting quite an advertisement already. I soon learned that he was not much respected in the community. It was time for meeting, but he put on his hat and went in the direction of one of the directors and we went to find the others. We failed to find our men, as they lived in the country. We were directed to a Mr. J. A. Riddle, skeptic, postmaster and merchant. He informed us that he was not one of the board. We told him our object and he became interested at once and said: "I will announce your meetings myself and I would like to see anyone stop me."

We returned to the schoolhouse and met the preacher and one of the school board and urged our right to announce our meetings after the other meeting was over, but to no avail. The director informing me that he would close the schoolhouse if I went to "cutting up." I told him that I had no idea of "cutting up," and only asked what any minister could expect of another, and besides that he could not close me out of the schoolhouse without closing out the Baptists and all the others. And he had promised me the schoolhouse for a series of meetings and he could not well go back on his word and remain a Christian. However, we informed him we would not insist on the announcement, as it was already getting quite an advertisement and would probably have a better one before the evening was over. Mr. Riddle was as good as his word and began to announce my meetings in the school yard as soon as the other was out and told them why. An altercation occurred between him and the trustee, but to no avail, and only served to spread the announcement further, and at the same time to show up the uncharitableness of the Baptist preacher.

Our first meeting was a surprise even to Mr. Riddle. The schoolhouse was crowded to its limit, even the preacher himself and the most of his congregation being present. I had called on him at his request and laid our claims before him and found him to be rather a fair man after all and loaned him some tracts and at his request later, the Book of Mormon. He partly apologized for not announcing my meetings, for a number of his members had reprovved him, and Mr.

Riddle had told him that he had made a regular fool of himself, as the course he had taken only made the matter more public. I often called on him and talked over the sermons of the previous evenings, most of which he had heard. He was a brother Dane, born the same place my father was, and possibly a distant relative.

Mr. Riddle and wife and a few others took it upon themselves to attend every night, so that in case I was misrepresented after I had gone, they could set matters right. Mr. Riddle never missed a word and I am glad to say his skepticism is a thing of the past, mostly because of the Book of Mormon. The last night of nearly a two weeks' series I had chalked the walk, announcing, "Christ visited America." The house was "full inside and out." After mentioning the tradition of many Indian tribes and reading of the wonderful civilization on the Americas before its rediscovery by Columbus, I introduced the Book of Mormon and read of Christ's visit and what he said all agreeing with the Bible and fulfilling the promise of the Savior with respect to his other sheep. But I did not mention the name of the book till the very last and after suggesting various names for it. I enjoyed more liberty than ever before on the subject, the Spirit so forceful that it did not leave me till noon the next day. Everyone seemed interested and many faces aglow with the testimony of the Spirit. I announced the price of the book and our desire that all should read it for themselves and learn the origin of the American Indians and the dealings of God with the other half of the world. Mr. Riddle was the first to order both for himself and for others. A number of others have also ordered.

My train was to leave at nine next morning, a lumber train, sometimes on time and sometimes not—sometimes on the track and sometimes not. It reminded me of Conductor Finnegan's report to Train Master Flannigan: "Report again. Off again. On again. Gone again. Finnegan to Flannigan."

While at breakfast at the hotel Mr. Riddle came in, still aglow with the interest of the previous evening. He wanted me to get that book up as soon as I could. I told him that the Baptist minister had one and he might borrow it. But he said: "He needs it as badly as anyone, and it will do him a lot of good if he will read it." Mr. Riddle informed me that nearly everyone present the night before was interested to a wonderful degree. But as nearly the whole town was going away that day to the fair in Prince Albert and be gone for several days, we thought it best to close for a short time. Brother Whiting was with me the last night and will return there shortly and follow up the work. Mr. Riddle has a large hall and offers it free to any of our ministry at any time. He said he had been in darkness all his life with regard to half the world and again and again thanked me for the light he had received. I told him the truth was of God and he would hold him responsible for what he had heard. He said he had taken it upon himself to collect a little help to pay my expenses and presented me with a paper containing the names and a purse of twelve dollars and a half which he had collected before breakfast. I don't know what he could have done before dinner. Going up town to order the forwarding of my mail I met several others who also handed me small amounts and a wish that I come again. Also on the train some did likewise.

One Thursday night when the schoolhouse at Canwood was occupied by the Baptists, I was driven out ten miles farther north by a young Brother Filby to the most northern schoolhouse but one in Saskatchewan, where I preached to a small but interested crowd, some of whom came into Canwood to see me a few days after. Brother Jordan had preached one or two sermons there last winter. On our way out we saw a moose at full speed. I think I had never seen anything go so fast. I am confident that the fastest train did not equal it. One day at Canwood I took a walk on the railroad track and about a mile from town I saw a black bear standing up, which at first I took to be a man until he took to the woods. Walking a little farther around a bend I saw, as I thought, a bear climbing a telephone pole, but discovered later it was a real man this time. What a fatal mistake might have been made had I possessed a gun!

Arriving at Prince Albert we could do nothing there on account of the fair but held some cottage meetings on Sunday, and came south on Monday, passing through three districts of hailswept crops from one to eight miles wide. Only a small percentage for such a large country, but worse this year than last. Many of the hail companies are hard hit this year. Two of our best branches suffered almost complete loss. Shall judgments "commence at the house of the Lord"?

At the Prince Albert fair we were surprised to see the finest and best cattle, sheep and poultry we ever beheld at any fair, and I have attended a few. Vegetables, especially potatoes, turnips, carrots and cabbage were certainly equal to anything I have ever seen. I will not relate the size of some of the cabbage, but will simply say they were wonderful. On the race track Saturday I saw Dean Swift make the fastest time of any trotter in Canada—2.11¼.

A year or so ago I saw advertised in the HERALD, and I think a comment by the editor, a tale of the north entitled The Flower of the North, which if anyone wants to purchase will give him a good idea of the chivalry of our northern people. The plot is laid in Prince Albert, a respectable city on the north edge of the world and the wholesale center for all the lumbering regions of the still farther north. I do not know the author, nor do I care. I pay little attention to authors. Name and authority cannot give weight to truth and goodness, nor diminish aught from it. If conference visitors and church workers in general could get that idea, more questions could be settled by the rule of right rather than authority. I was glad to see that idea present in our last General Conference. It is growing.

Since the war the north seems to be opening for gospel work as never before. I hesitate to leave the pleasant prospects.

Happy and busy,

J. W. PETERSON.

Northern Wisconsin Reunion

The attendance was not as large as in past years, yet the interest was strictly up to date. The preaching was of the order which helps men to be better and inspires Saints to greater diligence. The speakers were B. S. Lambkin, J. W. McKnight, Philip Davenport, jr., L. Houghton, S. E. Livingston, A. L. Whiteaker, and Lyman W. Fike. The local priesthood which could be mentioned were assistants in many ways, and many faithful hands and willing hearts contributed to and for the comforts of the Saints. Nineteen were baptized.

The dining hall was carried on in a successful manner. There was twenty-eight dollars profit, yet the meals and the price was of such a size and quality that none could reasonably complain.

There were many spiritual prayer meetings. There was a separation of the young and old. The meetings of the young men and ladies were inspiring. One beautiful day we were all early at the docks on the lake and in launches about thirty young men and ladies glided across the lake at the sound of the gasoline engines. At a suitable place beneath the large Norway pines there we united in a prayer-meeting which will be remembered many days. The next day all of us went to the home of a sick sister and brother—Whiteaker was the name. Sister Whiteaker had been suffering for some time, but the prayers of the young Saints revived her, and did them good also.

There was a street campaign carried on also each evening at seven o'clock. Elder Fike was the one having this in charge, being assisted largely by the Saints, young and old, with their voices. The interest was real good. It was new work to most, but after the first impression wore off there was a desire to stand on the corner and sing the songs of Jesus.

The financial conditions of the district are good; a nice surplus was reported on hand by the bishop's agent. When the Saints learn their duty there will be enough and to spare.

Ever praying for a great advancement.

L. W. FIKE.

CHETEK, WISCONSIN, September 18, 1916.

Extract from Letter to F. M. Smith

I have made quite an inroad upon the Brighamites in South Carolina where our elders have never labored before and it has caused the leading men among the Brighamites in this field to become alarmed over the matter. The president of their mission is reported to have said that we got the best local men they had in the South. They have several branches in this State but our work has been a deathblow to them from which they can never recover. Three of their men who were local elders have come into our church and I have good reasons to believe that all are very good men. Others are interested in our work and will be with us no doubt. I have been very cautious about baptizing, because our work is new.

We must keep missionaries in this State all the time from now on. It will not do for me to leave here now, for the Utah elders are busy telling falsehoods as usual. No one can know how cunning and deceptive they are unless they have them to meet where they have a branch. I will have to go to Tampa, Florida, and other places during this year. A good, wise man should be here to continue the work when I leave for other parts.

Your brother,

SENECA, SOUTH CAROLINA.

F. M. SLOVER.

[For the benefit of those who have not previously read the offer of Brother Cox, we will say that he has very kindly made a number of beautiful and serviceable pointers of scraps of leather for the elders and others of the church who use charts and pointers in their church work. He charges nothing for his work. We are sure those who have received the pointers have appreciated them.—EDITORS.]

DALBY SPRINGS, TEXAS, September 16, 1916.

Editors Herald: Will you please say through the HERALD to the elders who want pointers, that I have filled all the calls for them and have scraps of leather enough, I think, to make twelve or fifteen more, and expect to make them soon. If there are others that want them let me know and I will try to fill their order as soon as I can. I have made forty-two in all and have not heard from all yet. If there are any that have failed to get them, please let me know as I don't want any of them lost. In the true faith,

R. F. D. 1.

J. N. Cox.

CRESCENT, OKLAHOMA, September 6, 1916.

Editors Herald: When one is deprived of the association of brothers and sisters in the church, is when one enjoys and appreciates the dear old HERALD most. Why, I read of the advertisements and find some of them quite entertaining.

When I read of the preparation being made for the reunion at Lamoni, I had a great desire to be there. It seemed impossible to go, and when I found that Central Oklahoma met in reunion and on the same dates as Lamoni, I at once began to plan to attend here. I want my old friends and the other Saints to know what a grand time we had.

Some one remarked that "Reeding is such a small town." True it is a small town, but large enough to hold some great big, kind-hearted Saints, who did much for the comfort and convenience of the campers.

Oh the joy of once more meeting and shaking hands with those of our own faith! A few I had known in years gone by, but most all were strangers, not for long, however.

It was such a treat to meet with the Saints and sing the songs of Zion, and we certainly made the woods ring.

Each evening the cars began coming early and kept coming until the space around the natural bower was filled.

The Woman's Auxiliary held an interesting meeting. A district organization was partially effected, with Sister McGeorge, of Terlton, president, and Sister Keiffer, of Oklahoma City, secretary and treasurer.

Brother Keiffer, of Oklahoma City, is superintendent of the district Sunday school association, and is a "live wire." We are looking forward to more and better work being done because of a more complete organization.

Brother Daniel Sorden, of Kingfisher, was there to represent Graceland. He is an ardent supporter and defender of our church college, and boosts with the right spirit.

The preaching was good during the whole reunion, Brethren Arber, Smith, Robinson, Malony, Fitzwater, and others carrying this work. The prayer meetings were a strength to all. The gift of prophecy was manifested at several meetings.

I must not forget the one social event. We were glad to have Sister Joseph Arber with us and glad, too, that their wedding anniversary should occur at this time. The first time in twelve years they had been together on this day. Briefly, we gave them a royal serenade.

The dining tent was well patronized. Just take notice that tea, coffee and meat were conspicuously absent from the table, excepting for two chicken dinners. No sickness in camp.

Though the parting time came all too soon, we took comfort in the thought that probably another year will bring another reunion of Central Oklahoma, and we hope to meet all who attend this year, and many more.

This letter is getting long and the "half isn't told" yet.

Your sister in Christ,

LETHA M. TILTON.

PARIS, TENNESSEE, September 6, 1916.

Editors Herald: Have just closed a two-weeks' effort here in Paris, with fine interest. The Methodist Episcopal minister here made a strong effort to keep the people from coming to the tent, but was not very successful as we had a full tent almost every night. And what do you think? This same preacher before our meetings came to a close, left his wife and children in the parsonage just three doors from our tent, and ran away with another man's wife. So there is great consternation now among his flock. Some have told me they are dissatisfied with their baptism. They have decided there are others who need watching.

We are to have a baptismal service this afternoon. We look for a large ingathering here ere long.

J. R. McLain.

GLASGOW, MONTANA, September 9, 1916.

Editors Herald: I am taking this way of asking the elders and Saints who may be located at or who may be passing through Anacortes, Washington, to call on Roy P. Davis and family—Seventeenth and N. They have gone there recently and need the encouragement and prayers of the Saints.

* They have not been in the church very long and have lacked the association of the Saints and have had much sickness in their family.

Yours for the gosepl,

L. B. DAVIS.

DAVILLA, TEXAS, September 11, 1916.

Dear Saints: I am writing to thank those who responded with tracts, HERALDS and Ensigns so kindly, and to say I have plenty, for the present at least. Also received tracts, etc., from Kentucky, against the church; one written by Grant.

I desire an interest in the prayers of all for I have much to meet and temptations to overcome.

Your sister,

MIRTIE JONES BROWN.

NAPA, CALIFORNIA, September 12, 1916.

Editors Herald: As I am renewing my subscription to the HERALD, I desire also to renew my testimony to the goodness and mercy of God, and to the truth of his promises and his power to fulfill all of them. My faith in God and in his son, Jesus Christ, and in the restored gospel is firm; even firmer than ever. I say that after twenty-five years membership in his church, and after experiencing many trials during that time. I am as confident that the Saints can have the promises of the gospel fulfilled to them as I am that the said promises were made. But only on condition of first doing their part; that is, it is necessary to fulfill all the requirements of the gospel before we should even expect to have its promises fulfilled to us. This ought to be clearly understood among the Saints.

Would any one of us enter into a covenant, or contract, with another, or others, and expect to receive the benefits promised us in such covenant or contract unless we honestly fulfilled our part of the same? Certainly not.

I rejoice in the evidences of activity among the Saints on every hand, as reflected through the columns of our greatly prized HERALD.

In gospel bonds, yours,

L. M. PRUDEN.

NEBRASKA CITY, NEBRASKA, September 12, 1916.

Editors Herald: As the spiritual letters and articles contained in the HERALD are a comfort and strength to me, I have thought perhaps there may be some Saints who would like to hear from this part of the Lord's vineyard.

Our little branch seems to be getting along nicely, also our Sunday school and Religio. Brother H. A. Higgins presides over our branch, Brother Walter Scott, Sunday school superintendent, Brother Zura Gouldsmith, president of the Religio society. We also have a sisters' society which is a great help in the financial support of the branch. Most of the members seem to be interested in the work of the Master, and I think we all feel that we are living in perilous times and that the hastening time is here. We cannot be too zealous in keeping the laws of God and serving him to the best of our ability.

Since the first of last April, eleven new converts have been added to our number, all are regular attendants at all of the services.

On the twenty-seventh of August we had with us Brother J. A. Dowker and family of Lincoln, Nebraska, Sister Rannie of Independence, Missouri, and Brother and Sister Myer of Oklahoma, all of which we were glad to meet. Brother Dowker occupied the pulpit at the morning service, and his discourse was greatly appreciated by those present.

Sister Eva McNamara, one of our bright young sisters, left a few days ago for Lamoni, Iowa, having been elected a member of the faculty of Graceland College. We shall miss Sister Eva, but wish her the best of success in her new field of work.

Our district conference convenes next Friday, the 15th, at Lincoln, Nebraska. We hope to attend, but whether we are permitted to do so or not, our prayer is for a peaceful and profitable session.

Truly God is in this latter-day work, and we have been a recipient of his blessed, peaceful, loving spirit too often to ever be deceived. We were made to rejoice when reading the account in the HERALD, of the Lamoni Stake reunion, and we thought, "oh! how we would love to have been present at that feast." Another article in HERALD of August 16 we wish to mention, the title of which was "Education and inspiration, are they different?" This article gave us strength and new thought, and I felt much benefited from reading it. The church publications are a source of great comfort to me, and I cannot understand how any Latter Day Saint can be content without them, they surely do not realize what spiritual uplift they are missing.

MRS. M. DUNLAVY.

News from Missions

Northeastern Missouri

But little is seen in your pages from the northeastern Missouri District, yet there are a few things that might profitably be said relating to the conditions of the work there, and the work that has been done.

I began meetings at Higbee on July 6, preaching at the church and on the street, continuing till the 26th of the month, during which time I had the respectful attention of those who attended, but there was small attendance till the last week of my stay, when there was a greater interest. Organized a local Religio during the time. About two weeks of the time I was there I passed through a siege of sickness, but always felt well in preaching except one night when my strength failed. At this place I found as kind-hearted people as I ever met. They are hospitable and liberal, but there was a dearth of unity and spirituality. When I left there was a much improved condition.

From there I went to Santa Fe, where resides one lone sister, Sister William Brown, who had secured the use of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, building. During the time I was here I was unwell, but gradually recovered, preaching each night except the night I arrived. The janitor of the church cared for the building, gratuitously, and said that he was glad to thus help, and had appreciative audiences, though some were not so large. On the account of a revival service to begin I had to close, which I would not have done at that time under other conditions. Left with a standing invitation to come again. Sister Brown's husband did all that he could to make my stay pleasant. From Sante Fe I went to the home of Brother John Fassnacht, near Frankford. Here had been much of prejudice in previous years, but I sensed none of it during my stay, but had good audiences, and met with the kindest treatment on the part of the local Christian minister, Elder Doty, that I ever met with in any place save a very few in all my ministry. With his consent and expressed desire, I occupied at the Christian Church the forenoon of Sunday, and assisted him at all his services, by his request. There had been a revival service announced for the following week so that I only continued over a week, and two nights of that time the heavy rain prevented meetings; then on Monday evening before I could get out of the neighborhood the flood came that washed out the railroad tracks and bridges right and left, and made it impossible to go very far by wagon road. I remained over till Thursday when fortunately I found a way out, and arrived at Moberly that night. Here I found nine members of the church, but there seemed to be no opening for services, so I made some pastoral visits and journeyed on to Bevier where I occupied on Sunday, and went to the Menefee Branch where Brethren Chase and Ely were holding a tent meeting, and where a few of the Saints had camped that they might attend. Here I preached twice, and assisted at two other services, when large audiences of attentive listeners were present. I was with the tent at Macon a few nights and here four nights, and from what I could observe the brethren with the tent have done a good work. This seems about the only effective work that can be done during the summer time in that district.

While I never met with kinder treatment on the part of the Saints when in their homes and associated with them, yet I found a discouraged condition, or an indifference as to missionary work that is surprising and saddening. I believe that with consistent labor for a time, and social and business conditions improving there will be more of zeal manifest in the missionary work. God has a people there who are worthy of being sought out.

I expect to return to the mission in a few days, and have an invitation to come to Ashland, some distance from Columbia. Here lives Father Ezra Tremain, who desires that his neighbors should be further warned.

Have been very busy since returning home, and feel that some good has been done. Will be occupied till I return to the mission. At Bevier I am informed that they are preparing for a missionary effort later on.

I hear many of the brethren who have in former years labored in that mission spoken of very highly. I enjoy following such men in their work, where there is a demand for missionary efforts. This mission demands younger men, to pioneer the work, but with the prayers of the Saints and the help of God we will do what we can.

In the conflict,

J. F. MINTUN.

DES MOINES, IOWA, September 22, 1916.

News from Branches

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

The time for working out our plans of winter activities is at hand and many of our young people, in particular, are giving several spare hours to the study of various subjects that will go to make them defenders as well as boosters of this great latter-day work.

We must remember that to accomplish the things of life that are really worth while requires considerable effort, hence if we would experience the pleasure there is in being able to perform, or even appreciate big things, we must needs be trained accordingly.

Environment and heredity are to be considered by those who would develop intellectually and physically. Weismann pointed out that the two main factors of all evolution are: The nature of the organism, and the nature of the conditions. Of course we cannot choose our parents, but by controlling our environment we can, to a large extent, modify or intensify our hereditary influences. Christ died that the old body or the body of sin might be destroyed so that evil would have no dominion over us.

It then lies to us to press forward to competency in the service of our Master, to remain humble and prayerful and to have an eye single to his glory so that he can help us to frustrate inward evil with purer influences acting from without.

Many new enthusiasts and good support are some of the products of the incessant efforts expended by the officers and members of the Religio. The various departments of the branch are hard at work and the officers are stretching every point to make their respective functions appeal to all.

A. J. DICKSON.

Independence Stake

While the people are being stirred to the usual high degree in political affairs, the great Prohibition movement seems to be at the front, sending out its leaders to the churches to champion its work.

Many of the Saints were interested in the big presidential campaign of two weeks ago, here, and last Sunday morning, September 17, quite a large audience attended the service and listened to an interesting address by Reverend E. F. Jones, a representative of the Anti-Saloon League. He gave some very important statistics, and solicited funds by pledge cards, for the carrying on of the work.

Mr. Jones was the leading unit in conducting, not long ago, the campaign that put the liquor traffic out of Independence. He reported very favorably the present outlook for Nation-wide prohibition and dwelt considerably on the fact that the people are, through education and experience, getting the work into their own hands and finally the brewers and distillers will be put out of their job.

Sunday afternoon the Saints attended the prayer meeting in goodly numbers. Several of the younger element attended the monthly meeting at the Girls' Home.

Sister T. J. Sheldon's encouraging talk, also Sister Tessie Smith's, were commented on very favorably. Brother H. O. Smith had been announced for the evening session at the church, and on the following evening a large crowd gathered in the hall, at the reception of our beloved pastor and family. It was a joyous occasion, and they are meeting with good success in winning the confidence and esteem of the Saints, both old and young.

New classes in culture are being formed; the young men

Help thou thy brother's boat across, and lo, thine own hast reached the shore.—Persian Proverb.

are entering into research work; the young women are brightening up in history and kindergarten and industrial art, and the work generally is on the advance.

The study of the last quarter's Quarterlies has been a factor in the educational spirit now abroad because of the research studies contained therein, which have helped to infuse an interest in the history of God's people on both continents. The home and normal departments of the stake are truly a blessing to the classes which patronize and support them.

Sister McNichols' class, consisting of sixty young ladies, who met September 21 to study their Bible normal work, reflected much credit by their promptness and interest shown in map work. Also Mrs. W. W. Smith's gathering of over one hundred sisters, an hour later in the church hall, told of the interest that has been wrought in the art of storytelling among the Sunday school workers and mothers of little children.

In attendance, at least, these and the Book of Mormon home classes are equalled by the classes formed by President Frederick M., Brother Walter Smith and Doctor Harrington, which also have met for study of psychology, economics and sociology.

Our leaders, unlike the rabbis who forbade the study of Greek wisdom, are teaching the Saints out of all good books, and progress so far seems to be apparent.

On last Sunday morning Brother W. W. Smith discoursed on the subject of music, giving out much excellent information in regard to the origin of many familiar hymns, touching lightly on the effects sacred music should have on the congregation by way of overcoming the habit of inattention, whispering, etc. during the hour set apart for praise and worship.

As has been remarked, the Saints here are being stirred to duty on every hand.

Rally day is approaching, a collection in the interest of Graceland will be taken up, and on next Sunday the ordinance of the Lord's supper will take place at eleven a. m. instead of at the afternoon hour as usual.

Glad tidings have reached us of the return home of many of the boys who have been to the border.

We have been made to rejoice by hearing of the official visiting being done here from house to house, and also the success of the work in the other branches of the stake.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.—At Irvington, August 25, 26. J. W. Rushton, C. W. Hawkins and C. A. Parkin chosen to preside; J. A. Lawn, secretary, M. A. McConley, assistant. Bishop C. A. Parkin's report from January 1 to June 30, 1916: Receipts, $3,255.65; paid out $2,329.30. District treasurer's report, receipts $123.23; paid out $45.10. Branch reports: Oakland 314, San Francisco 235, Sacramento 231, San Jose 202, Tulare 166, Santa Rosa 135, Chico 125, Stockton 90, Fresno 62, Ukiah 44, Ceres 31, Irvington 30. A resolution adopted asking General Conference to consider the establishment of a "Saints' Home" for the aged and infirm on the Pacific Slope, and asking the Southern California District to cooperate with us in this petition. Ruth L. Griswold elected district church recorder. Irvington chosen as place for holding next reunion. A committee consisting of C. A. Parkin, C. W. Hawkins and John A. Lawn was appointed to investigate a proposition to purchase additional land adjoining reunion grounds, committee to report to our next conference. San Jose chosen as place for next conference, date left with district president. The following were named as reunion committee for the ensuing year: C. W. Hawkins, J. H. Driver, Chester Young, A. C. Hawley and H. J. Davison. At the Sunday afternoon service the following were ordained: C. W. Hawkins to the office of high priest, John A. Lawn president Pacific Coast quorum of elders, H. D. Simpson first counselor to same, Edward Ingham second counselor. John A. Lawn, district secretary.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Logan, July 6, 1916, Assistant President Warren McElwain, in charge. Branches reporting, Fargo 95, Milroy 30, Dunn Center 16, Dunseith 95, Minot 77, Lansford 56. Bishop's agent reported to July 1, 1916, receipts, $3,060.67, expenses, $2,454.50. Audited and found correct. Officers elected: Warren McElwain, president; with power to choose assistants, J. W. Darling, secretary; John A. Stowell, treasurer; Bertha Graham, member of library board. Adjourned to meet at Fargo, December 30 and 31, 1916. J. W. Darling, secretary, Thorne, North Dakota.

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Centralia, Washington, August 5, 1916, district officers presiding. All five branches reported a membership of 591, a grand total of 644 with enrollment of three disorganized branches added, a net gain of 12. Bishop's agent reported for six months, Balance at beginning, $452.27, at end, $95.98, resulting from a receipt of tithes and offerings, $540.96 and expenditure of $879.25. District treasurer reported, beginning with a balance of $18.25 and closing with $30.75, resulting from the branch quarterly collections for district expenses. F. W. Holman elected member of board of auditors for three-year term. Seattle designated as the place for holding the winter conference in February, at the call of the presidency. Reunion was continued until the 13th, with prayer and testimony meetings, round table and preaching services each day, from which much valuable information and instruction was received. Admonition through the voice of the Spirit, was several times received, together with the calling of George R. Brundage to the Aaronic priesthood. Seven were baptized and confirmed. Reunion treasurer reports receipts of $68.40 and a balance of $22.86. Reunion for 1917 will be held at Bellingham, Washington, in August, John Hartnell, G. R. Brundage, J. M. Terry, R. D. Davis and Oliver Shippy being elected the new committee. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 4233 Bagley Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

NORTHEASTERN NEBRASKA.—Decatur, Nebraska, September 9 and 10. Carl T. Self, president, assisted by J. A. Gilen, presided. Missionaries present: Elders Baker, Case and Shakespeare. Reports showed gain in membership and new branch organized at South Omaha. The local priesthood of Omaha filled in turn the pulpit at Blair every Sunday. Final report of N. S. Lytle, bishop's agent, read and approved, as was the report of the newly appointed bishop's agent, James Huff, of Omaha. Reunion report given by Brother Self. Encouraging individual reports were given by each of the missionaries. Bern Case ordained an elder. Next conference at Omaha, at call of district president. Carl T. Self, president, 405 Bee Building, Omaha, Nebraska, Odessa Carter Jensen, secretary, Blair, Nebraska.

HOLDEN STAKE.—At Holden, Missouri, September 16 and 17, 1916. Short prayer service Saturday morning. Business at 10.30, called to order by President D. J. Krahl. Stake President, D. J. Krahl made president of conference and associated with him, Frederick M. Smith and missionary in charge, F. M. Sheehy; Mrs. A. M. Fender, secretary, I. M. Ross, assistant. There are six branches in the stake. Report for the stake shows a net gain of 23 and membership of 1,217. Action regarding the purchase of the tent belonging to the former Independence Stake was referred to the stake bishopric and presidency. The following brethren were ordained to offices named: Frederick A. McWethy, counselor to the stake president; J. W. A. Bailey and Isaac M. Ross, counselors to the stake bishop; J. E. Bozarth and C. V. Hopkins, elders; R. T. Howard, deacon. A resolution to hold a reunion in the Holden Stake in 1917 prevailed unanimously. D. J. Krahl, C. J. Hunt, F. A. McWethy, W. S. Macrae and J. W. A. Bailey were elected as reunion committee with power to choose place, set time, etc., for the reunion. The following resolution was passed by unanimous vote: that all recommendations for ordination in the Holden Stake be presented to the stake high council for approval. The naming of the time and place for the next conference referred to the stake presidency. The following were ordained high priests and stake high counselors: Frederick A. Cool, John E. Johnson, B. P. Thompson, William Hartnell, Charles F. Searcliff, Charles Gaither, Edward E. Fender, R. E. Burgess, Emery Thompson. The following were ordained in harmony with action of the conference: W. R. Odell, president first quorum of elders in the Holden Stake; Henry B. Thompson and J. W. A. Bailey, counselors; John A. Miller, president first quorum of priests in Holden Stake. Program by the Woman's Auxiliary was a pleasing and interesting feature. Mrs. A. M. Fender, secretary.

Convention Minutes

IDAHO.—Religio, at Hagerman, August 25, 1916, in charge of J. T. Davis. Election of officers: William Glauner, president; Fred Brose, vice president; Charlotte Condit, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. R. E. Stone, home department superintendent; Mr. Green, member library board. Adjourned to meet at call of president. Charlotte Condit, secretary.

IDAHO.—Sunday school, at Hagerman, August 25, 1916. Sister T. J. Jackson relieved from superintendency on account of ill health. R. E. Stone elected. Lottie Condit, assistant superintendent; Jennie M. Condit, secretary-treasurer; Sister Gill, member library board; Nellie Nitcher, home department superintendent. Election of officers changed from winter to summer session. Adjourned to meet subject to call of president. Jennie M. Condit, secretary.

First Presidency

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT CHURCH SECRETARY

The First Presidency, believing that the time has come when the developments of the church require the appointment of an assistant secretary to the church, have appointed Richard Salyards, jr., to this office, subject to the ratification of the next General Conference. The brother has indicated his willingness to assume the duties of this office at once, and he will enter into the work under the direction of the secretary of the church.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 28, 1916.

Conference Notices

Kewanee, at Kewanee, Illinois, October 21 and 22. Send reports to district secretary. Those attending notify James Norris at 1001 Grace Avenue, Kewanee, Illinois. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, 115 Clarke Avenue, Peoria, Illinois.

Western Maine, with Mountainville Branch, November 4 and 5. Business meeting 2 p. m. Elders and priests are expected to report all labors to G. H. Knowlton at least one week before conference. George H. Knowlton, president.

Convention Notices

Gallands Grove, Sunday school and Religio, at Deloit, Iowa, October 13, 10 a. m. and 2.30 p. m. Sessions in charge of an auxiliary field worker. A good attendance is hoped for. Floy Holcomb, secretary.

Central Michigan Sunday school, at Whittemore, afternoon of October 27. All schools should be represented. Elsie Janson, secretary.

Florida Sunday school institute, at Dixonville, Alabama, October 6. Interesting program will be had. Bessie Clark, superintendent.

Reunion Notices

Spearfish reunion date changed from October 13 to 22, to October 20 to 29. All must notify to be arranged for as to their boarding place. R. Etzenhouser.

Important Notice

QUARTERLY SUBSCRIPTIONS RAISED

On account of increased cost of print paper, prices of Sunday school Quarterlies for January-March, 1917, will be as under:

Senior grade, 8 cents a quarter; 25 cents a year.

Intermediate, 5 cents a quarter; 15 cents a year.

Junior, 5 cents a quarter; 15 cents a year.

Primary, 5 cents a quarter; 15 cents a year.

Beginner, 6 cents a quarter; 20 cents a year.

Payable in advance, by order of General Convention.

There is no certainty these prices will apply to later quarters of 1917. Schools would act wisely to subscribe by the year. It would pay to borrow, to do so. No risk, if a proper system of class collections is in operation. If heretofore you have ordered only by the quarter, it will cost you no more to buy now at the yearly rate.

G. R. WELLS, Superintendent.

LAMONI, IOWA, September 29, 1916.

Name of Author Wanted

Some time ago some one sent in an article entitled: "Comparison of characteristics of the Lamanites and Indians," but no name accompanied it. Will the writer of this please send us his name?—HERALD EDITORS.

Correction

In the next to the last line on page 934 of the HERALD for September 27 the date of the death of Charles W. Wandell is given as March 14, 1874, but it should read 1875.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Anna Chipps, of Rock Forge, West Virginia, desires the prayers of the Saints. She is afflicted with cancer. The doctors have given her no hope, but she has received some relief as a result of administration.

F. M. Stowell, of Mount Vernon, Ohio, requests the prayers of the Saints, that in their isolation God may bless and help them in the rearing of their children.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Eleanor Millard, of Joyfield Michigan, who has suffered from paralysis for several years. She desires that she may again receive strength of body and mind, and be relieved from pain if it be the Lord's will.

Died

PARKER.—Andrew J. Parker, born March 1, 1831, in Erie County, Ohio; died September 2, 1916, at Williamston, Michigan. Baptized more than ten years ago by William Aylor, in Oklahoma. The deceased was the last of a family of seven children to pass away. He was a pioneer of the county in which he lived at the time of his death, having gone there when he was twenty-one years of age. He leaves a wife and three children. He was a true Christian man. Sermon by J. D. Stead.

SCHeyTT.—Henry Scheytt died near Bozeman, Montana, August 10, 1916. He leaves a wife and 2 daughters to mourn their loss. Baptized by Brother Hills after learning the glorious gospel. Funeral in charge of Brother Brower at the Saints' church, Bozeman, A. J. Moore preaching the sermon to a large congregation.

MORTIMER.—Paul Mortimer, son of Clarence and Grace Heide was born August 8, 1915; died August 13, 1916, at Fulton, Iowa. Pneumonia and complications were responsible. Blessed October 10, 1915. Left sorrowing parents alone, two other children having passed away in their infancy. Funeral services conducted by C. G. Dykes.

BARSBY.—Charles E. Barsby was born at Rockford, Illinois, May 30, 1877; died at Dunlap, Iowa, September 4, 1916. On June, 9, 1914, married Kezia Shaw; at Council Bluffs, Iowa. To this union was born 1 child, Albert, who died April 27, 1916. Besides his widow he leaves his mother and 4 sisters. Funeral services in the Methodist Episcopal church, sermon by D. R. Chambers, at Dunlap.

HOWERY.—Mrs. Elizabeth Howery, wife of Charles D. Howery, died at Antler, South Dakota, September 1, 1916, about 2 weeks after the death of her husband. She was born in England, May 6, 1833. Married in 1852, to which union were born 10 children, 6 sons and 2 daughters surviving, with a large number of grandchildren and great grandchildren. A good Christian woman, with all the lovable disposition of a fond mother. Funeral from the Presbyterian church in Antler. Interment in city cemetery.

BENNETT.—Sister Rosella Ellison Bennett, born near Woodbine, Iowa, October 24, 1860; married Irvin Cooper in 1880. Three children were born to them. Walter, the eldest, died in infancy; Floyd and Hattie were with her until the end came. Mr. Cooper died August 10, 1904. Baptized September 26, 1896, by D. A. Hutchings. September 4, 1910, married Frank Bennett of Woodbine, Iowa. Although her suffering was of long duration and very severe she bore it patiently. Was beloved by all who knew her. Funeral from her late home in Woodbine. Sermon by Fred A. Fry, burial in Woodbine cemetery.

CROUCHMAN.—Levi Clifford Crouchman, son of Brother and Sister John Crouchman, Windsor, Ontario, passed away August 7, 1916, with diphtheria. Born February 13, 1897, at Ralieg, Kent County, Ontario. Memorial services August 20 by Elder Leslie of Windsor.

PRENTICE.—William Joseph Prentice, born at Ballymacbernan County, Down, Ireland, united with the Utah church in Ireland and on September 17, 1913 at Detroit, Michigan, was baptized by Fred Simpkins into the Reorganization. Married Miss Sarah Ellen Lamlin, to which union were born 1 son, Robert, and 1 daughter, four months old. Death from accidental drowning. Funeral services from the house. Fred Simpkins in charge. Sermon by Leslie Brown.

WELLS.—Lavera Myrl Wells, daughter of Mr. and Sister Noah Wells of Cawood, Missouri. Born September 17, 1914; died September 8, 1916. A beautiful little flower, the third child of her parents. Two sisters and many other relatives remain. Funeral from home by W. B. Torrance. Burial in Yates cemetery, five miles east of Cawood.

VAN MEER.—Leslie E., born at Harper Springs, Michigan, September 27, 1872. Married Minnie E. Case, October 17, 1906. Baptized by Elder Johnson in Seattle, Washington, October, 1910. Died at Denver, Colorado, September 3, 1916. Leaves wife, daughter, father, 1 sister and 2 brothers. Service at Saints' church in Denver. Sermon by Ammon White, assisted by Elders Walling and Williams. Interment in Fairmount Cemetery, Denver.

STRICKLAND.—Helen Davis, child of Cecil C. and Helen M. Strickland, died September 23, 1916, at the age of 2 years. 5 months, 17 days. She was a sunbeam in the home. Funeral from the home in Seattle, Washington, sermon by J. M. Terry, using for his text "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

HANTS.—Barbara M. Hants, wife of W. H. Hants, was born in Schuyler County, Missouri, November 25, 1863; died September 17, 1916. Married July 8, 1896. She was baptized at Joplin, Missouri, by F. L. English, September 5, 1915. Funeral from Joplin church, sermon by Lee Quick, assisted by Brother Lancaster. She was loved by all who knew her.

PENDER.—Alida L. Pender, wife of Mr. W. C. Pender, and mother of W. S. Pender, was born in Ohio, March 7, 1843; died September 20, 1916. When a child she moved to Iowa with her parents. Married W. C. Pender, March 21, 1861. They moved to Kansas, where she lived until her death. Sister Pender loved this latter-day work. She was the mother of 12 children, 7 having preceded her. The 5 remaining are, O. E., of Meodosha, Kansas, James, of Hallowell, Kansas, Mary Bergman, of Cherokee, Kansas, Meta Johnson, of Scammon, Kansas, and Mrs. Mable Rannels, of Calmans, Kansas. Sermon by Lee Quick, before a large congregation of friends.

LAWSON.—John A. Lawson, born March 20, 1874, at Galland, Iowa; died at Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri, September 12, 1916, having suffered for some time prior to his death with what proved to be an incurable brain tumor. He is survived by wife, 6 children, a stepson, father and mother, 4 brothers, 5 sisters. Brother Lawson was an earnest and zealous worker in the church, holding the office of priest. Body taken to his home in Burnside, Illinois, funeral was at Rock Creek Church, September 15, in charge of George P. Lambert, sermon by William T. Lambert.

WILLETTS.—At the home of his daughter and son-in-law, Brother and Sister Samuel Shakespeare, near Pleasanton, Iowa, September 23, 1916, Edward Willetts, aged 85 years, 6 months, 25 days. His wife died in 1914. Nine sons and daughters are living, also over 100 grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Brother Willetts loved truth and justice. He was baptized in 1897 by H. A. Stebbins, and the funeral sermon was preached by him at Lamoni, assisted by M. M. Turpen. Burial in Rose Hill Cemetery.

FISHER.—William Everitt Fisher, son of Jacob H. and Stella Fisher, born January 14, 1915; died September 21, 1916. Funeral at Saints' church, Skiatook, Oklahoma, sermon by W. P. Robinson, Brother Stevens in charge, assisted by Brother Haskins.

BROCKWAY.—Frank Brockway, born in Kirtland Township, Ohio, February 7, 1862; died at Kirtland, Ohio, September 14, 1916. He was baptized March 11, 1894, by John H. Lake. Married Martha Biggs, December 31, 1896. Leaves wife, adopted daughter, 2 stepchildren, 3 sisters and 2 brothers. Interment in Kirtland cemetery. Sermon by Elder L. W. Powell.

WILSON.—Phyllis E. Wilson, daughter of Wellington and Matilda Wilson, born near Treherne, Manitoba, April 13, 1907; died September 23, 1916. While playing with a little cousin on September 9, a fire was lighted. Her clothing became ignited and she sustained burns, dying from the effects of them September 23. Funeral from the home in charge of E. F. Robertson.

DODSON.—Henry Clay Dodson, son of James M. and Gertrude Dodson, born November 23, 1894, at Cambridge, Nebraska; died August 22, 1916, at the Post Hospital, Scofield Barracks, Honolulu, of pneumonia. Baptized September 30, 1906, at Farnam, Nebraska, by G. W. Johnson. Leaves father, mother, 4 sisters. Member of Troop B, 4th Cavalry, United States Army. Funeral at Second Independence Branch, sermon by George Jenkins. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

KEITH.—David Keith, born in Lincoln, England, March 2, 1838; died at his home in Detroit, Minnesota, September 13, 1916. Brother Keith came with his parents to Canada and later moved to Farmington, Maine, where on January 30, 1862, he married Drusilla Dow. To them were born 6 children, 5 of whom, together with the widow, 23 grandchildren, and 2 great-grandchildren, survive him. He served his country one year with the 28th Maine Volunteers, Company B. In 1878 he came to Minnesota, and in 1893 was baptized. Funeral by P. W. Martin, assisted by the Methodist pastor and choir. At the cemetery the local camp of the G. A. R. and S. of V. took charge.

KEMP.—Marie Gaylord Kemp, born in Clinton, Wayne County, Pennsylvania, August 11, 1835; died August 28, 1916, at Clarinda, Iowa. Baptized June 27, 1878, by James Caffall. Funeral at residence of L. E. Gaylord, Moline, Illinois, who is her only brother. Sermon by C. E. Willey, assisted by Alfred Needham. Interment in River View Cemetery, Moline.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor. Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us. This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

The J. D. McClure Lectures	- - - - -	961
The Personal Element	- - - - -	962
Notes and Comments	- - - - -	963
Current Events	- - - - -	964

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

"Come Up Higher."—Part 1, by C. A. Butterworth	- - - - -	965
Preachers and Preaching, by James E. Yates	- - - - -	968
Some Reasons for a Decline in Religious Interest, by Mary Beebe Hawley	- - - - -	969
WOMAN'S AUXILIARY	- - - - -	971
Della Braidwood—Alice E. Cobb—Mrs. J. A. Gardner.	- - - - -	973
HYMNS AND POEMS	- - - - -	973
E. E. Long—Evan B. Morgan.	- - - - -	974
LETTER DEPARTMENT	- - - - -	974
Charles Derry—J. W. Peterson—L. W. Fike—F. M. Slover—J. N. Cox—Letha M. Tilton—J. R. McLain—L. B. Davis—Mirtie Jones Brown—L. M. Pruden—Mrs. M. Dunlavy.	- - - - -	978
NEWS FROM MISSIONS	- - - - -	978
J. F. Mintun.	- - - - -	979
NEWS FROM BRANCHES	- - - - -	979
A. J. Dickson—Abbie A. Horton.	- - - - -	980
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT	- - - - -	980

In "No Man's Land"

Once we knew it as "No Man's Land," but now we call it "The Garden of Sleep." Winter gave it the first name and summer the latter, and each in its season was true and appropriate.

A novice in war, I saw it first on a winter's day; one of those dread November afternoons that seem now almost like a bad dream, a gray lowering sky, a damp penetrating cold, a never ending, bone-wetting drizzle, and everywhere mud, mud, mud.

Mud! Even the very word looks ugly in print, and, oh God, how we hated the very sound of it! Was there, we wondered, anything left in the world but mud? Was the world being overwhelmed by an onflowing tide of mud? Had we ever known an existence free from it?

Mad questions perhaps, but there were times when men of strong brains asked themselves such things in all seriousness. We lived like rats in mud, and rats alone lived with us. All other decent animals would have scorned an existence under such conditions, and it was left for the highest and the lowest of the animal race to dwell together.—Cartoons Magazine.

Typewriter Service in Rural Communities

The typewriter is coming into more extended use in rural communities because of the assistance it renders to all classes of people. Here are a few examples of the possibilities of service:

The Farmer: Think of the possibilities of selling produce by the means of typewritten letters sent out to customers? Typewritten letters give the sender a business standing with the people who receive them and also enable the keeping of carbon copies of the correspondence, which many times does away with misunderstandings and lawsuits.

The General Store Merchant: More prompt and courteous treatment is likely to be accorded his orders and correspondence with the City jobber and manufacturer if his letters are typewritten.

In The Home: The boy or girl who is intending to follow a business career can secure no better start than a knowledge of typewriter operating. Children who learn to use the typewriter learn spelling at the same time. The housewife finds it a great convenience in writing recipes and for general correspondence.

The Minister: No Clergyman should be without a typewriter. It is of great assistance in preparing sermons and writing the many letters that a pastor has to write.

Mail us the Coupon to-day

L. C. SMITH & BROS. TYPEWRITER CO.
 903 W. Locust St., DES MOINES, IOWA

Please send me information as checked below:

Send me free catalog.
 How can I get a Factory Rebuilt L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter?
 What about trading in my old machine?

Name _____
 Street or P. O. _____
 State _____

There is a Real Difference

Cream of tartar, derived from grapes, is used in Royal Baking Powder because it is the best and most healthful ingredient known for the purpose.

Phosphate and alum, which are derived from mineral sources, are used in some baking powders, instead of cream of tartar, because they are cheaper.

If you have been induced to use baking powders made from alum or phosphate, use Royal Baking Powder instead. You will be pleased with the results and the difference in the quality of the food.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO.
New York

Girl Wanted

We would like to get in touch with a good Latter Day Saint girl who needs a home and would do the housework in a family of three for reasonable wages. If interested, write Mrs. C. I. Carpenter, Lamoni, Iowa.

IN THE SHELTER OF THE LITTLE BROWN COTTAGE. The popular serial that ran in Stepping Stones during 1915, by the editor, Estella Wight. The leading character is not a Latter Day Saint at first, but eventually becomes so, and in the process a strong gospel story is told. Several characters in the book are shown laboring toward the truth, making this a fine, readable missionary medium. Cloth, 373 pages$1.25

TRUANTS. A one-act Religio comedy by John Preston. Three men (or boys) and 3 women (or girl) characters. Plot concerns a number of Religians who through some excuse or other have stayed home from meeting. The way it works out is amusing. Adapted to any audience or occasion. 34 pages, attractive cover, No. 38225c

THE GOSPEL STORY AND FOOTSTEPS OF JESUS. By Frances. Charming child stories, of the birth-offering series. Adapted to the baby mind. Tales of truth that will register and remain. No. 366, cloth60c

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist

in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

FOR SALE

Two acres of fine lying land, all set to young fruit just coming into bearing—new 6 room house, back plastered and finely finished. 2 never failing wells, new hen house 10 x 24. Located on South State St. Bargain for cash. E. F. Hall, Lamoni, Iowa. 31-tf

THE TWO-STORY BOOK. Two stories leading the reader to Latter Day Saintism, by Elbert A. Smith and Mary Leiland Carter. There is sufficient action in these gospel tales to interest the reader from a human standpoint, and it is only a step from the humanity of the book to the divinity of it. No. 372, cloth55c

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, OCTOBER 11, 1916

NUMBER 41

Editorial

SEEK TO END POLYGAMY

At its recent annual session the National Reform Association is reported as having advocated and discussed the following in an effort to end polygamy and other evils in Utah:

A constitutional amendment to forbid polygamy and polygamous living.

Proceeding by the Department of Justice to force an accounting of the property which was restored to the Mormon kingdom in trust.

Proceeding to dissolve the Mormon kingdom property trusteeship as a combination in restraint of trade.

An order by the postoffice department withholding the privileges of the mail from the Mormon kingdom and its responsible officers so long as they teach the crime of polygamy.

Refusal by each house of Congress to seat any man who pays political allegiance to the Mormon kingdom or is elected by its power.

Years ago the Reorganized Church went on record somewhat similarly and stands to-day in the same attitude. In 1870 the General Conference of this church adopted a lengthy memorial to Congress, from which we briefly quote, as the entire document is quite extensive:

We, your memorialists, would therefore submit for the consideration of Congress in its action on the Utah question, and its legislation on the question of the right of Congress to interfere with polygamy as being a part of the faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints:

1st. That the law of the church found in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Covenants, books accepted by the polygamists themselves, expressly forbids to one man more than one living wife.

2d. That the law obtained in those books is the constitution of the church; that no law can obtain in the church in contravention thereof, and that therefore the pretended revelation on polygamy is illegal and of no force.—General Conference Resolutions, No. 107.

In 1902 and 1903 this was readopted and confirmed. In addition to these legislative enactments, this church has through its press and its valiant missionary arm proclaimed to the world that polygamy and its kindred evils were and are an abomination in the sight of God and all good men.

We wish we might devote more of our energy to a constructive presentation of our church tenets, which we assert are absolutely above reproach and entirely in accord with the Bible and all good moral precepts. Yet, since we are often compelled to clear ourselves of the opprobrium cast upon by our enemies, we are glad to welcome any movement which will help to effect an eradication of the evils we have so long recognized and so persistently assailed.

E. D. MOORE.

FAMINE AS WELL AS WAR

Jesus Christ said that as one of the signs of his coming there should be "wars and rumors of wars."

And he added: "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in diverse places."

Famine is a natural associate of war. The words of the Master are having a most spectacular fulfillment. So overwhelming is the fulfillment that the minds of men seem to be stupefied so that they do not grasp the full significance of the situation.

That famine as well as war is abroad in the earth is shown by the following extract from the Outlook of October 4:

ARMENIA

The most recent development in the Armenian situation consists in the publication in this country of documents written by German agents of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief Work. German missionaries have long been operating in and about Aleppo, in Asia Minor. They and the German Ambassador at Constantinople sympathize with the American endeavor to save the remnant of the Armenian race, forced by Germany's ally, Turkey, to flee from the Armenian territory northwest of Aleppo. The American board's statement is as follows:

Workers of the American board in Constantinople speak in the highest terms of the aid they are receiving from German missionaries in central and eastern Turkey in giving out food and clothing to the wretched people in that section. The American consul at Damascus estimates that five hundred thousand people have been pushed into the vilayets of Aleppo and Damascus. The majority are women and children. They are slowly dying of starvation. The consul appealed to the treasurer of the board, Mr. W. W. Peet, in Constantinople, asking if a central relief depot could be established near Damascus. Mr. Peet writes his home office in Boston: "Our cooperation with the German missionaries for work in Aleppo has proved so helpful and satisfactory that I am desirous of making a like arrangement for Damascus in answer to this call. I therefore applied to the German embassy to ask their assistance in securing workers for a Damascus depot. I have not yet had a reply to my application, but the embassy has telegraphed their consul and missionaries in that locality, asking that they assist us in this work."

Here are some details of the German reports:

"In every tent there are sick and dying. Anyone who cannot manage to get a piece of bread by begging eats grass raw and without salt. Many hundreds of the sick are without any tent and covering, in the open, under a glowing sun. I saw desperate ones throw themselves in grave trenches and beg gravediggers to bury them.

"At another place there is no grass; the locusts have consumed everything. The people were gathering locusts and eating them raw. Others were looking for roots of grasses. They catch stray dogs and like savages pounce upon dead animals, whose flesh they eat eagerly without cooking."

DON'T KILL THE PREACHER

The following from the Apostolic Review is certainly worthy of our consideration:

Sisters, this is a hard time of the year for preachers. Many places they go the stoves are not put up till you are frozen into it. But remember that most of your time is spent in the kitchen close to the fire, and your husband (if he is a farmer) may be knocking around outdoors.

If you are taking care of a preacher, don't freeze him! Remember that where he is reading or studying, in another room, he has not the warmth of the sun nor the kitchen stove, nor has he a work which will stimulate his blood.

Many preachers suffer in the fall because the heating stoves are not put up soon enough. Often the preachers have to sit around with their overcoats on! Last fall my husband caught the worst cold he has had for years because of neglect in putting up a stove where he was staying. Also, remember that a bed which has not been slept in for weeks accumulates dampness. Before you put anyone in it, bring the bedclothes to the fire.

The preachers are not looking for luxuries, but their surroundings should be made agreeable to their health. Leave off the pastries of the table for them, prepare for them simple food, and give them a sanitary place in which to stay.

We haven't any more self-sacrificing preachers than we need, and let us take care of the health of those we have.—
A Preacher's Wife.

"CALIFORNIA DRY"

The quotation below is from the San Bernardino News for October 6, presenting our well-known Brother Rushton in a familiar role. The prohibition issue in California is stronger this year than ever, as they vote on prohibition in November in self-defense. If the State goes dry the entire Pacific coast from Mexico to the North Pole will be dry, according to the Associated Press Bureau. The lieutenant governor of that State says that since all the Pacific coast except California became dry, that State has become a cesspool of all the gamblers, crooks, bar flies and dissolute women from the several States that went dry, and California is going dry to get rid of the undesirables. Several other States, including Iowa, are in the throes of a fierce fight on this issue.

ADDRESS UPON DRY STATE BY NOTED ORATOR

JOHN W. RUSHTON TALKS AT MEETING IN CHURCH UPON ISSUES FACING VOTERS

Attacking a cartoon that appeared in a Los Angeles paper, portraying a laborer with a bandage across his eyes, labeled "ignorance" and shown in the act of chopping down grapevines with dollar signs attached as fruit, John W. Rushton last night spoke for over an hour to an audience that completely filled the Presbyterian church, on the subject "California Dry."

Rushton, who comes from Leeds, England, and who has participated in dry fights in this country, is one of the greatest orators in the church of the Latter Day Saints.

Rushton said that he did not base his statements on public opinion or public belief, but on figures officially compiled by Great Britain and America. He said it was the laboring class that was poorest paid and which paid the most for the liquor industry. He said Government statistics proved it.

Misleading cartoons and newspaper articles, said the speaker, cause ignorance to be spread. He scathingly denounced the cartoon recently appearing in a Los Angeles paper.

Roscoe A. Goodcell presided at the meeting. Mayor George H. Wixom introduced Rushton. Rev. W. J. Lee led in prayer.

The pupils of the high school heard Rushton in a talk in the high school at noon to-day. He has spoken in the high school before and the pupils are always pleased to hear him again.

CURRENT EVENTS

NEW JAPANESE PRIME MINISTER.—Count Okuma, known as the "Gladstone of Japan," has resigned and is succeeded by Marshal Terauchi, former minister of war. This is taken to mean a firmer hand in Japan's foreign policy, especially as it relates to China.

POLISH PEOPLE TO SOUTH AMERICA.—Russia is reported as negotiating for the colonization of a million Poles in various republics of Latin America. It is understood that the Russian Government is willing to provide passage and purchase live stock and farm tools.

NEW GERMAN WAR LOAN.—The fifth German war loan is meeting with liberal response by people in all walks of life, indicating no serious lack of funds for financing military operations. According to unofficial tabulation, the total raised on this loan is about $2,397,500,000.

EIGHT-HOUR COMMISSION.—President Wilson has appointed a commission of three to appraise the results of the new Adamson eight-hour law as it is found in operation. The ones named are: Major General George W. Goethals, George Rublee, and Edgar E. Clark.

RECORD PRICE FOR FLOUR.—Standard brands of wheat flour recently sold at the central markets for $9.30 a barrel, the highest price in more than forty years. Domestic shortage and crop damage in Argentina from drought are held to be responsible. Wheat has passed $1.60 a bushel at the Chicago market.

TROOPS RETURN.—As new regiments reach the Mexican border, those already there are being returned to their homes and released from duty, taking up former occupations. Several regiments have recently returned, and we are informed that one of them is the Missouri regiment that includes the Independence men.

CHINESE LOAN.—An American loan of $60,000,000 to China has been arranged. A Saint Paul company has contracted to construct 1,500 miles of railroad through a part of China largely controlled by French and British influence. The route will be through the richest section of China and the loan secured by the road itself.

BIG WAGE INCREASE.—During the week the great packing house concerns of the country have voluntarily granted increased wages to more than 60,000 men, which will mean more than $4,000,000 annually. The Wholesale Clothiers Association has granted a reduction of working time, with extra pay for overtime. This will mean an increase of $1,000,000.

PROTEST HIGH TAXES.—A committee, representing a total wealth of $250,000,000 invested in Mexican mining interests, recently met with the joint commission on Mexican affairs at their new meeting place, Atlantic City, New Jersey. They claim that taxes at present in that much-disturbed country are "grossly excessive and confiscatory." The commissioners have been in session for five weeks and will likely continue another month.

SUB WARFARE AT OUR DOORS.—Six steamers, four of them British, two neutral, some of them carrying American passengers, have been sunk by submarine attack on the Atlantic Coast. It is supposed that this was done by the U-53, a German submersible which entered the harbor at Newport, Rhode Island, on the 7th. This boat brought mail for the German embassy at Washington and departed without taking supplies. It is thought that all were rescued from the sinking ships, though reports are meager at this writing. The Frederick VIII is due in these waters from Copenhagen, and is supposed to carry Brother Peter Muceus and family from Norway.

EUROPEAN WAR.—In the east the conflict has resolved itself largely into strategical moves of various kinds, concerning which authentic news is very scarce. It seems to have developed that the Ru-manians recovered their forces somewhat and made another advance in the Transylvania region, only to be repulsed by the Teutonic forces in Austria. The Teutons under von Mackensen in Dobrudja, have been repulsed, after making a series of successful advances toward the capital of Rumania. The Rumanians, reinforced by Russians, have successfully withstood and driven back to some extent the center of these forces. It is reported that Rumanian troops have crossed the Danube into Bulgaria to the west of this section, but as to their activity thereafter little is reported. On the Macedonian front the allies have made a number of important advances, taking several villages and otherwise strengthening the line. The Serbians have regained eighty-nine square miles of their own country from the German-Bulgar forces now controlling that territory. The Austro-Italian conflict continues as usual, with minor successes and losses on both sides. On the western front the week has been marked by bad weather, with some advances and strengthening of positions by the allies. The French and British are both within easy distance of their objectives, but their advance is continually met by heavy counterattacks from the Germans. The Russian advance upon Lemberg has been somewhat successful in certain places, though checked and repulsed in others. During the week this portion of the war theater has been the scene of very severe fighting. Meager reports come from Persia and the Caucasus front, most of them indicating slight gains for the Russians. Neutral as well as other sea craft are almost daily being sunk by German submarines. Since August, nine million dollars worth of shipping has been lost by Norway.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

LITTLE RED SCHOOLHOUSE INDICTED.—Doctor W. F. King, of the Indiana State board of health recently addressed the Mississippi Valley conference on tuberculosis. He asserted that the average "little red schoolhouse" is a hotbed of tuberculosis infection. Ventilation is difficult in such places, but it should be given serious attention.

THE WORK IN CLEVELAND.—Under date of October 3, Brother E. A. Webbe writes from Cleveland, stating: "I am glad to report our branch has been picking up. A very encouraging attendance and spirit of service is manifested. Pray that it may be such throughout the church." He also states that in attendance at the Kirtland Temple on a recent Sunday, he noticed that it required the services of three of the brethren acting as guides to the groups of visitors going through the Temple, and that this duty was being performed efficiently and with good results.

BREAD OR LIQUOR?—A temperance society of fifty thousand members has submitted a protest to Chancellor von Bethmann Hollweg, of Germany, complaining that the beer users are getting the grain, while those who abstain go hungry. The contention, based on high medical authority, is that enough grain is converted into beer each day to feed ten million people. Since it takes more grain to make a quart of beer than a loaf of bread, they want the drinker charged with that amount on his bread card. Those who do not drink would thus receive larger bread rations.

KANSAS CITY SCHOOL OF SOCIAL SERVICE.—We are in receipt of an eight-page pamphlet announcing the opening of the Kansas City School of Social Service for the fourth year. The pamphlet includes a list of officers, the executive committee, names of the members of the advisory council, program for 1915-16, the course of study, and considerable general information. We are particularly interested in noting that the name of Frederick M. Smith appears as president and member of the executive committee. He also is announced as a member of the advisory committee, and is lecturer on general psychology, his lectures being given Saturdays at 7.30 p. m.

ENGLISH POOR RESORT TO CLOGS.—A press dispatch from London chronicles the fact that many of the poor in London have resorted to the wearing of wooden clogs. This is something that they have absolutely refused to do in the past, feeling it a mark of degradation. This is probably but one of the many evidences that the hardships of war will eventually strike the poor first and hardest. If the nations of the earth squander their money in engines and munitions of destruction they cannot remain in condition to purchase the necessities and the luxuries that make for the comfort of life. And while the rich may have some of their indulgences curtailed, it is the poor who really will suffer, not only in a physical sense, but also in their self-respect and standard of living.

THE WISHES OF THE READERS.—Another of the leading newspapers of the land, the Washington Star, issued from the National Capital, now prints daily on a front page, this announcement:

In deference to the wishes of many of its readers, the Star will not print advertisements of intoxicating beverages hereafter.

We are confident the "many" readers are willing to assume the responsibility. How pleasant it would be if many more publications would take a similar stand, and then bar the pernicious tobacco advertisements flaunted in our faces. Then there is another phase to the situation. An editorial from the Mount Ayr Record-News, of recent date, closes thus:

With the average county seat papers the exclusion of rum and vice ads is so common as to be but little regarded. We have the feeling also that the big city papers, having made "big money" from sinful ads, ought to repent and restore fourfold before allowed full membership privileges.

CONCERNING R. B. NEAL.—The Apostolic Review has opened its pages to a series of articles by R. B. Neal, entitled "The Mormon-Christian War." The Review editors call especial attention to these articles. Mention is made in the articles of the SAINTS' HERALD, evidently with intent to draw forth a reply in detail.

Nothing is presented that cannot be answered, yet if Neal thinks to draw us into one of his windy wars of words through the Apostolic Review he is mistaken. For the consideration of the Apostolic Review we will give one good reason for taking that position.

In reply to an article selected and republished in the HERALD during 1908, R. B. Neal caused the following notice to be published in the Christian Standard, under date of October 10, 1908:

Gentlemen editors of the Liahona and the SAINTS' HERALD, and all other papers that have published the article, "A pious forgery," I, acting under legal advice, give due notice that if you do not withdraw the charge of forgery you made against me, voluntarily, in your papers, I'll force you to try to prove the charge in the courts of your State. Fair warning.

We have patiently waited eight years and have never heard from Neal about this matter through our State courts or in any other way.

In that way we got R. B. Neal's number. We learned his size. We obtained the measure of his veracity. We discovered the valuation he sets on his own word publicly given.

Men respect a man who makes great threats and then makes them good—or tries to do so. But they have no time or regard to waste on a man who bawls out a wonderful threat in the most public place to which he can by toleration gain admittance and then quits without an effort to make good.

It takes only one exposed bluff to discredit a bluffer.

Having abandoned the field of argumentation eight years ago and resorted to threats and intimidation, and time having shown that he absolutely lacks the courage even to try to make good his threats, Neal cannot now gracefully return to the field of argumentation and expect the HERALD to notice him at any length.

For that reason we have not given him more than passing and casual notice, which is more than he is worth, and that in all probability is all that we shall ever give him.

We suggest to the Apostolic Review and the "Churches of Christ," that they secure some other man to plead their cause, for by setting this man up as a champion they are all in danger of being judged by his standards.

Original Articles

"COME UP HIGHER."---PART 2

BY C. A. BUTTERWORTH

COMING OF THE END

The Lord has ascended to the right hand of his Father, and is glorified or endowed with the intelligence he had before the world was, and is making all preparations by consultation with his Father, who is the "head of Christ" and whose "kingdom ruleth over all" for the cleansing of the earth, and his glorious appearing, which is unknown, either to men, angels or the Son, "but my Father only."

"The harvest is the end of the world, or the destruction of the wicked," which certainly will be a most trying time with the nations that forget God, for with the ravages of war, pestilence, and the various forms of contagious disease, they will be made to feel the chastening hand of an offended God. "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be"; they were eating, drinking, marrying, and "the imaginations of their minds and hearts was only evil continually," until the flood came and took them all away, "so shall it be at the coming of the Son of Man."

Paul writes to the saints thus:

And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.—2 Thessalonians 1: 7-10.

Malachi gives a warning voice:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.—Malachi 3: 1-3.

DESTRUCTION OF THE WICKED

The day is coming when every man's works shall be tried "so as by fire," and those who use any other material in their building than gold, silver or precious stones, or the principles of the doctrine of Christ, must suffer loss.

For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.—Acts 3: 22, 23.

Moroni said to Joseph Smith that prophet was Christ, but the day had not yet arrived for the destruction, but was near at hand.

For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the Son of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall.—Malachi 4: 1, 2.

There will be quite an alteration in the affairs on earth when the Son of righteousness arises and the government is placed upon his shoulders, "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." (Isaiah 65: 17.)

Peter said there would be scoffers in the last days, walking after their lusts, and denying the Lord Jesus, and saying, where is the promise of his coming, and he says they were willingly ignorant of what had occurred in the times of Noah, that the world that then was, being overflowed with water perished; but the heavens, and the earth which are now, are kept in store by the same word, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. But concerning the coming of the Lord, beloved, I would not have you ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. . . . But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall shake, and the earth also shall tremble, and the mountains shall melt, and pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall be filled with fervent heat; the earth also shall be filled and the corruptible works which are therein shall be burned up. If then all these things shall be destroyed, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conduct and godliness, looking unto, and preparing for the day of the coming of the Lord wherein the corruptible things of the heavens being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the mountains shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless, if we shall endure, we shall be kept according to his promise. And we look for new heavens, and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.—2 Peter 3: 6-13, I. T.

Luke gives us a clear solution to this great problem, as follows,

I tell you in that night there shall be two in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. And they answered and said unto him, Where, Lord, shall they be taken? And he said unto them, Wheresoever the body is gathered; or, in other words, whithersoever the saints are gathered, thither will the eagles be gathered together; or, thither will the remainder be gathered together. This he spake, signifying the gathering of his saints; and of angels descending and gathering the remainder unto them: the one from the bed, the other from the grinding, and the other from the field, whithersoever he listeth. For verily there shall be new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. And there shall be no unclean thing; for the earth becoming old; even as a garment, having waxed in corruption, wherefore it vanisheth away, and the footstool remaineth sanctified, cleansed from all sin.—Luke 17: 34-40, I. T.

The "remainder" here spoken of are a few worthy brethren and sisters, who have become unequally yoked with unbelievers, and cannot be gathered with the body, for the unbelieving will not go, and the believing cannot leave their companions; and perhaps a few missionaries, who are still looking for the absent lambs before the night of burning; for the "world shall be burned with fire." (Matthew 13: 44, I. T.)

"NOW IS CALLED TO-DAY"

Behold, now it is called to-day, (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming); for after to-day cometh the burning: this is speaking after the manner of the Lord; for verily I say, To-morrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up, for I am the Lord of Hosts; and I will not spare any that remaineth in Babylon.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

"To-day" ends our sojourn under present environments of seeing, knowing and prophesying in part, at the coming of Christ, and "to-morrow" that which is perfect will come in the personage of the "Son of righteousness" when the great millennial reign will be ushered in, and "Ye shall go forth and grow up as the calves of the stall."

Therefore I must gather together my people according to the parable of the wheat and the tares, that the wheat may be secured in the garner to possess eternal life, and be crowned with Celestial glory when I shall come in the kingdom of my Father, to reward every man according as his works shall be; while the tares shall be bound in bundles, and their bands made strong, that they may be burned with unquenchable fire.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 9.

"THEN SHALL THE END COME"

When "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, then shall the end come," and after your testimony, cometh the wrath and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunderings, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds. And all things shall be in commotion; and surely men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people; and angels shall fly through the midst of heaven, crying with a loud voice, sounding the trump of God, saying, Prepare ye, prepare ye, O inhabitants of the earth, for the judgment of our God is come; behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. And immediately there shall appear a great sign in heaven, and all people shall see it together. And another angel shall sound his trump, saying, That great church, the mother of abominations, that made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, that persecuteth the saints of God, that shed their blood; she who sitteth upon many waters, and upon the islands of the sea; behold, she is the tares of the earth, she is bound in bundles, her bands are made strong, no man can loose them; therefore, she is ready to be burned. And he shall sound his trump both long and loud, and all nations shall hear it.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25, 26.

Verily I say unto you, that ye are chosen out of the world to declare my gospel with the sound of rejoicing, as with the voice of a trump; lift up your hearts and be glad, for I am in your midst, and am your advocate with the Father; and it is his good will to give you the kingdom; and as it is written; Whatsoever ye shall ask in faith, being united in prayer according to my command, ye shall receive; and ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect, for mine elect hear my voice and harden not their hearts; wherefore the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered into unto one place, upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts, and be prepared in all things, against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked; for the hour is nigh, and the day soon at hand, when the earth is ripe, and all the proud, and they that do wickedly, shall be as stubble, and I will burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that wickedness shall not be upon the earth; for the hour is nigh, and that which was spoken by mine apostles must be fulfilled; for as they spoke, so shall it come to pass; for I will reveal myself from heaven with power and great glory, with all the hosts thereof, and dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years, and the wicked shall not stand.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 2.

Melchisedec was a righteous man of most wonderful endowments and qualifications, and as a priest of the most high God, called from among men, he wrought righteousness and accomplished much in the extension of God's kingdom,

And men having this faith, coming up unto this order of God, were translated and taken up into heaven. And now, Melchisedec was a priest of this order; therefore he obtained peace in Salem, and was called the Prince of peace. And his people wrought righteousness, and obtained heaven, and sought for the city of Enoch which God had before taken, separating it from the earth, having reserved it unto the latter days, or the end of the world.—Genesis 14: 32-34, I. T.

The end of the world is the destruction of the wicked, and not the end of the earth. Enoch's city, the New Jerusalem, is coming to this earth at the opening of the millennial reign and not at the close, as all the holy saints are to reign with Christ on earth a thousand years and there is no one in heaven to come down at the close, but the move will be upward, that all may dwell with God.

"ALL THINGS NEW"

The end of the age having arrived, the corruptible things of the heavens and the earth are consumed and pass away, then "He that sat upon the throne said, Behold I make all things new." Like a man who has been baptized into Christ, "old things have passed away; behold all things have become new," the same man of course, but now a new creature.

The Bridegroom with the bride, the lamb's wife, and all their obedient children known as "all the family in heaven and earth," now meet to enjoy together that glorious rest and reign of peace, when all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest. "Zion shall to the new earth come, home of the saints, beautiful home," and the spirits of just men made perfect through Jesus the mediator of the new covenant shall leave their home in paradise and re-enter their bodies," for the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." "And blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." "And they sang a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation: and hast made us unto our God kings and priests and we shall reign on the earth."

This is the final stage of our earthly training before "the end of the earth" and all that have ever lived are now either on the earth or in the prison house preparing for the great day of judgment when "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess to the glory of God the Father." The glory that we enter and the crown that we shall wear, will then be determined by the God of all the earth in harmony with the things that are written in the books "according to our works."

There is a celestial glory, which is represented by the sun, where the seat of the heavenly government is located and where God resides upon his throne for ever and ever, and all things bow in humble reverence and give him praise. This abode is to be shared by "the church of the firstborn" when Christ delivers up the kingdom to God, the Father, after subduing all things under his feet, for he must reign until the last enemy is destroyed which is death.

THE "LITTLE SEASON"

During the "little season" Satan is to be loosed out of his prison where he has been bound for a thousand years, and enter upon a vigorous campaign among the nations, who were not bad enough to be cut off at the coming of the Lord, nor good enough to be changed in the twinkling of an eye and enter with him to the marriage supper, and he pushes this effort right up to the borders of Zion, where the New Jerusalem has been located during the reign of Christ and compasses the camp of the saints and the beloved city, with all the liars, sorcerers, whoremongers and idolaters that he can muster outside of the city, and the final end comes by his destruction with devouring fire.

And again, verily, verily, I say unto you, that when the thousand years are ended, and men again begin to deny their God, then will I spare the earth but for a little season; and the end shall come, and the heaven and the earth shall be consumed, and pass away, and there shall be a new heaven and a new earth, for all old things shall pass away, and all things shall become new, even the heaven and the earth, and all the fullness thereof. But, behold, verily I say unto you, Before the earth shall pass away, Michael, mine archangel, shall sound his trump, and then shall all the dead awake, for their graves shall be opened, and they shall come forth; yea, even all; and the righteous shall be gathered on my right hand unto eternal life; and the wicked on my left hand will I be ashamed to own before the Father; wherefore I will say unto them, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 6, 7.

THE GLORIES

This second cleansing of the earth by fire after Satan's unholy work during the little season, and the coming forth of the rest of the dead and the final judgment of the last great day, will determine where we are to spend our eternity. "There is a glory of the moon and a glory of the stars," with heaven of heavens, and "many mansions" to be occupied by those who only have lived in life for these conditions; but the earth, which the Saints shall possess both in time and eternity shall abide the celestial law, and be crowned with celestial glory and return to the hands of its Creator with all those who have been quickened by the same glory. And while we have been singing:

Lead kindly light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead thou me on.
The night is dark, and I am far from home,
Lead thou me on.

and,

My God, my Father while I stray,
Far from my home on life's dull way, we can now sing with anthems of praise,

Home again, home again, from a foreign shore
The days of my earthly pilgrimage are o'er.

We have worked out our salvation with fear and trembling, and reached the home of our creation.

"For in heaven created I all the children of men."
"Glory to God in the highest," the ideal of our aspiration, "come up higher" is reached at last.

The Lord said unto Moses, when he inquired about the many worlds and their destiny:

"Only on account of this earth, and the inhabitants thereof, give I unto you; for, behold there are many worlds which have passed away by the words of my power. And there are many also which now stand, and innumerable are they unto man, but all things are numbered unto me; for they are mine, and I know them. . . . And the Lord God spake unto Moses, saying: The heavens they are many, and they cannot be numbered unto man, but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine, and as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words. Behold, this is my work to glory, to the immortality and eternal life of man."—Doctrine and Covenants 29: 7-9.

This sphere and kingdom, having accomplished the purpose of God, passes away and is delivered up to God, its final destiny, and another takes its place while the wonderful works of the Almighty move steadily onward.

(Concluded.)

* * * * *

RECORDS OF THE DISTRICT PRESIDENT

The greatest thing a human soul ever does in this world is to see something, and tell what it was in a plain way.—John Ruskin.

Indefinite, incoherent are the words which best describe the writer's feelings when he was elected district president.

For an explanation of the gifts and callings, duties and general outline of the character of the man, see all under "High priest" in concordance of Doctrine and Covenants; also Church History, vol. 3, pp. 561-564. Mention may also be made of circular letters which come from the Presidency, as well as keeping an eye on Unity.

Whatever information had been gathered by predecessors, has been carried away, either in their memory or else in their private notebooks. The idea of compiling and preserving information, etc., comes under the head of "How." It may be well to discuss a little of the "What" first.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF THE SITUATION

The problem is this: The administrative rights of the district president. We cannot approximate the solution without inquiry into the relationship of this office to other powers, etc. Judging from the past the two closest and most influential things are the local work, as represented in branches and auxiliaries, and the leading missionary quorum, with its delegated authority, as represented in assistant ministers in charge and missionaries. It is very interesting to be situated between two powers whose operations are differentiated. The district president who is absolutely molded by these two powers is of limited value to the church.

THE MOST POTENT FACTOR

The most potent factor in placing district work upon a working basis is the direct line of communication that was established by Frederick M. Smith. Physiologically, there are no two heads to one body; logically, there can be no deduction from two contrary propositions; psychologically, independence of mind is absolutely impossible when impressed and actuated by two differentiated philosophies. Therefore the necessity of a direct line of appeal and instruction from the head of the church. As a head of a department, Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14 gives the district president certain inviolable spiritual rights.

THE "HOW"

We restrict this part of the discussion to preserving items of value. We may as well tell it in story form. A loose-leaf binder and report blanks, also some good plain paper was purchased from Herald Publishing House. On the first page is written "Journal of information for district presidency." Next page has name and address of general church officers and auxiliary officers. Next, the name and address of local elders. Next a register which indicates the frequency of elders' reports. Then comes a list of the branches containing information called for in report to presidency. And so on "ad infinitum." This is followed with all of the communications received from the Presidency. Then comes the reports received from branch presidents and local elders. And last of all a supply of blank reports. We feel assured that our successor will not be able to say in describing his feelings, indefinite, incoherent, for this journal is the property of the district. They paid for it. The discussion of this "How" may be extended, until we see a vision of an adequately equipped office. "Initiate as well as imitate."

JAMES E. BISHOP.

QUIET STARS

They make no fuss about it—the stars set like lamps in the skies—but they shine on steadily, quietly. We always know where to find them, and what to count on. They are illustrations of the quiet lives, set out here and there along the dark sea of life's voyage; making no noise or ado, asking no puff or recognition, they work on day by day, year in and year out, with a beautiful self-abnegation and thoughtful devotion to the world's leavening. Into the quiet heavens where they dwell run the weary and heavy laden for soothing and healing. Every neighborhood has them, and in its barren wastes whose white faces and sweet fragrance make the world bright and beautiful. It is good for us to have been so much and so constantly with the Master as to have come to his place of gentle ministry and self-giving service, where the unheralded bit of service for the troubled and needy is sweeter to us than any applause or fame the world can give to its heroes.—Anon.

Of General Interest

EGYPTIAN CULTURE IN EARLY AMERICA

That the pre-Columbian civilization of the Americas came from Egypt, whence it set out about 900 B. C. in a great "cultural migration" that left its influences also in India, China, and Polynesia, is the contention of G. Elliott Smith, who sets forth his views in a communication to Science (New York, August 11). Forty or fifty years ago, the theory of a prehistoric spread of customs and beliefs from the Old World to the New was quite common among ethnologists. Lately, however, this has been succeeded by doubt, and by an idea that similar needs and circumstances in different regions may well lead isolated groups of men to work out systems of civilization of the same type. Mr. Smith thinks, however, that the similarities are so great and involve so many complicated elements that the chances are infinite against their occurrence independently. He writes:

Courtesy Science, New York.

MR. G. ELLIOT SMITH'S THEORY OF EGYPTIAN CULTURAL INFLUENCE.

Note the practical agreement of this map with the other one appearing with this article.

The proof of the reality of this great migration of culture is provided not merely by the identical geographical distribution of a very extensive series of curiously distinctive, and often utterly bizarre, customs and beliefs, the precise dates and circumstances of the origin of which are known in their parent countries, but by the fact that these strange ingredients are compounded in a definite and highly complex manner to form an artificial cultural structure, which no theory of independent evolution can possibly explain, because chance played so large a part in building it up in its original home.

For instance, it is quite conceivable (though I believe utterly opposed to the evidence at our disposal) that different people might, independently the one of the other, have invented the practices of mummification, building megalithic monuments, circumcision, tattooing, and terraced irrigation; evolved the stories of the petrification of human beings, the strange adventures of the dead in the underworld, and the divine origin of kings; and adopted sun worship.

But why should the people of America and Egypt who built megalithic monuments build them in accordance with very definite plans compounded of Egyptian, Babylonian, Indian, and East Asiatic models? And why should the same people who did so also have their wives' chins tattooed, their sons circumcised, their dead mummified? Or why should it be the same people who worship the sun and adopted the curiously artificial winged-sun-and-serpent symbolism, who practiced terraced irrigation in precisely the same way, who made idols and held similar beliefs regarding them, who had identical stories of the wanderings of the dead in the underworld?

If any theory of evolution of customs and beliefs is adequate to explain the independent origin of each item in the extensive repertoire, either of the new empire Egyptian or the pre-Columbian American civilization (which I deny), it is utterly inconceivable that the fortuitous combination of hundreds of utterly incongruous and fantastic elements could possibly have happened twice. It is idle to deny the completeness of the demonstration which the existence of such a civilization in America supplies of the fact that it was derived from the late new empire Egyptian civilization, modified by Ethiopian, Mediterranean, West Asiatic, Indian, Indonesian, East Asiatic, and Polynesian influence. . . .

All that I claim, then, is that the influence of Egypt was handed on from place to place; that the links which all ethnologists recognize as genuine bonds of union can with equal certainty be joined up into a cultural chain uniting Egypt to America.

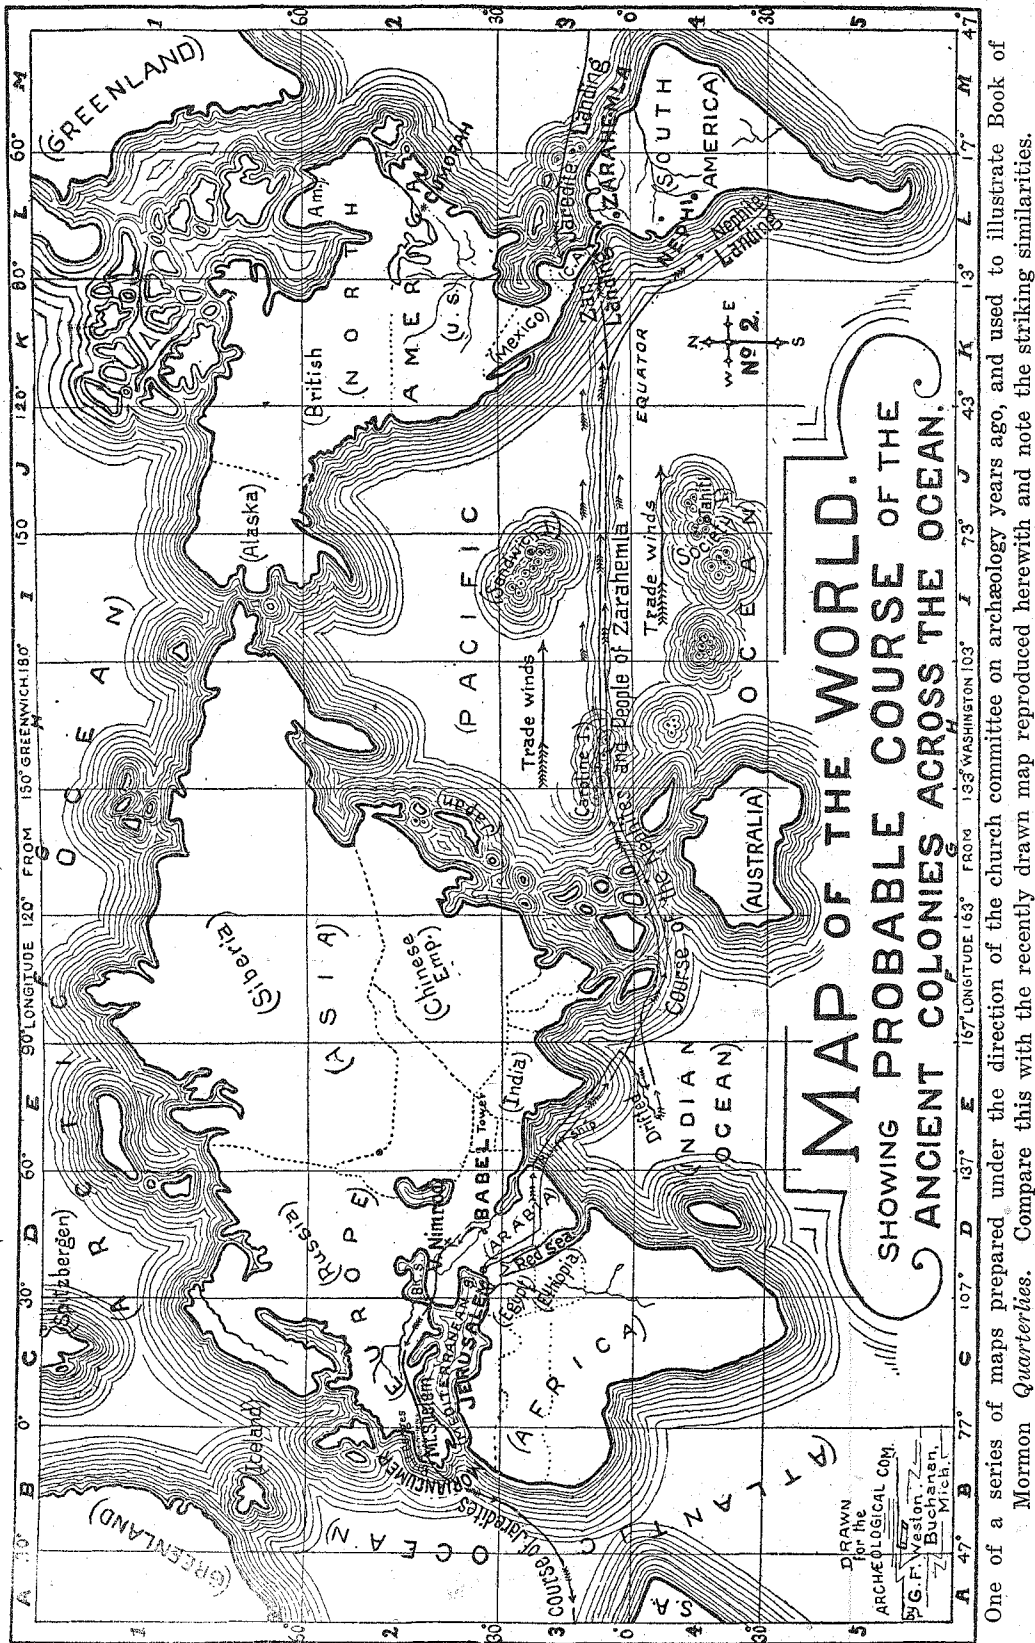

In almost every one of the focal points along this great migration route the folklore of to-day has preserved legends of the culture heroes who introduced some one or other of the elements of this peculiarly distinctive civilization. . . .

At every spot where they touched and tarried, whether on the coasts of Asia, the islands of the Pacific, or on the continent of America, the new culture took root and flourished in its own distinctive manner, as it was subjected to the influence of the aborigines or to that of later comers of other ideas and traditions; and each place became a fresh focus from which the new knowledge continued to radiate for long ages after the primary inoculation.

The first great cultural wave (or the series of waves of which it was composed) continued to flow for several centuries. It must have begun some time after 900 B. C., because the initial equipment of the great wanderers included practices which were not invented in Egypt until that time. The last of the series of ripples in the great wave set out from India just after the practice of cremation made its appearance there, for at the end of the series the custom of incinerating the dead made its appearance in Indonesia, Polynesia, Mexico, and elsewhere.

—The Literary Digest, for September 9, 1916.

One of a series of maps prepared under the direction of the church committee on archeology years ago, and used to illustrate Book of Mormon Quartermies. Compare this with the recently drawn map reproduced herewith and note the striking similarities.

COMMENTS ON THE ABOVE BY ONE OF OUR BOOK OF MORMON SPECIALISTS

To persons conversant with the belief of the Latter Day Saints relative to the origin of the prehistoric Americans, the foregoing article of Mr. Smith needs little if any comment; in fact we would say at once that his reasoning is sound and his conclusions are remarkably correct. It will be noted that he does not claim that the people migrated directly from Egypt, but that their "civilization," their "culture," unquestionably could be traced to that country for its origin. In the Book of Mormon we find Nephi writing in about 590 B. C. as follows:

I make a record in the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews and the language of the Egyptians. —1 Nephi 1: 1.

Again in 400 A. D., Moroni writes:

And now behold, we have written this record according to our knowledge in the characters, which are called among us the reformed Egyptian, being handed down and altered by us, according to our manner of speech.—Mormon 4: 98.

No argument is needed to prove that Israel retained the impress of their long sojourn in Egypt, and the foregoing statements from the Book of Mormon simply remind us that this impress was carried to the land of America by this party of Jews under Lehi in 600 B. C. who became the ancestors of our American Red Men.

As to the matter of the date of this migration,

Mr. Smith has come remarkably near the date set by the Book of Mormon which places the date at 600 B. C. when he says, "It must have begun some time after 900 B. C."

Mr. Smith places the beginning of this "culture" in America correctly at the place where the Nephites built their first city, the city of Nephi, or as more modernly known, Cuzco. Being ignorant of their history prior to this point he is excusable for placing their landing at this place instead of three hundred miles farther south as we have located it.

Since the migration traveled eastward, and the various islands of the Pacific lying more or less directly in their probable pathway, Mr. Smith very naturally concludes that the inhabitants of these islands were inoculated with this Egyptian impress as the migration proceeded step by step on its way to the Americas, whereas, the Book of Mormon gives us to understand that the journey of the Nephites under Lehi and his son Nephi was a continuous one, no landing being made from the time they embarked and sailed from the shores of eastern Arabia until they reached the "promised land," the southwest coast of South America.

The Book of Mormon, however, tells us (Alma 30: 6-11) that about 54 B. C., or nearly two thousand years ago, at least one shipload of emigrants sailed from the Land Bountiful, the Isthmus of Panama, bound for the Land Northward, Mexico, but who were nevermore heard from, leaving to the writers of their history the supposition that they were drowned. We think it not unlikely, however, that this load of emigrants, and possibly others who may have met with a similar fate were driven by storm or otherwise to the islands of the Pacific, of which the Hawaiian group lay within reasonable reach of the coast for which these people were bound, carrying with them this Egyptian impress or "culture," thus explaining its presence in the various groups of islands as stated by Mr. Smith, and yet in no wise invalidating the historical claims of the Book of Mormon.

Though not particularly necessary to prove the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, yet we are gratified to note that the results of modern research and scientific investigation do not fail to corroborate that which was revealed to the world by the spirit of inspiration in 1828-30.

C. I. CARPENTER.

The Staff

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

The Uplift in Music

We feel that few things would be so inspirational and encouraging now, at the beginning of the winter's musical activity, as these "live-wire" reports received from different places. In the reports of many of the fall reunions we read of the success which has in almost every instance attended the efforts of the singers of the church. Our people have long had recognition among others as being leaders in this line of soul expression. Is it because we have had the previous assurance of the Father in these latter times, that music is one of his trusted handmaidens, through whose power and influence he wills to sway the hearts of men, and turn their thoughts and their desires to him? Is it because we have "tried it out," and have realized so strangely the ecstasy of soul uplift which attends this branch of divine worship? Is it because we are learning, perhaps far in advance of the people of the world, that service, offered in the spirit of love and humility, brings with it a compensating joy beside which many other avenues seem dark and cheerless? We think so; and because of this conviction we feel that our "sweet singers of Israel" should be the happiest, most joyful, most delightful people on earth, trying in their lives to express the nearness to the Savior which they feel in the exercise of their beloved art.

Through the thoughtfulness of Brother Rushton, who recently met Professor Fairweather, in California, we are privileged to offer our readers a splendid article from a competent authority, who has found in vocal music an avenue for the expression of all that is most worthy in life. Professor Fairweather is a man past seventy years of age, but the possessor of a voice which still rings, joyously full and rich, true to his high ideals of the spirituality of music.

What a Loved Hymn Means to Me

"The spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue ethereal sky,
And spangled heavens, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim."

—Joseph Addison.

It was of this hymn that Thackeray said: "It seems to me that those verses shine like the stars. They shine out of a great, deep calm. When he turns to heaven, a Sabbath comes over that man's mind; and his face lights up from it with a glory of thanks and prayer. His sense of religion stirs through his whole being."

Well may the words be found in hymn books, for even without notes they contain perfect music within themselves. I wish everyone would repeat them over silently a few times and note the effect produced upon the mind.

Often, as I go about my work, these words chase themselves through my mind, never tiring, never wearying, but bringing always a feeling of joy and exaltation. Sometimes intermingling and chiming in and out among them, I can hear those other equally melodious words from which the lines were written and which we hear sung as an anthem. "The heavens declare the glory of the Lord and the firmament showeth his handiwork." When at last my mind has become rested, permeated, and satisfied with this medley, invariably it drops back to rest tranquilly in the thought that, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever."

Measured by this rule, what a rare and everlasting heritage has been left us in the words and melodies of the hymns we love. I can cheerfully add my testimony to that of V. V. Short in HERALD of September 13, as to the power of the song, "The old, old path." It was in a little conference gathering that I first heard it, and it seemed to me that never before had I fully realized what it meant to love my Savior. "Made strangely sweet, by the touch divine, of his blessed feet." One cannot help thinking that the author's attitude toward her Master must be much the same as that of the one whom the Bible describes as "The disciple whom Jesus loved." I am sure there are many who thank God for that little "flashlight of joy" that has induced and encouraged others to try to walk more constantly in "the old, old path."

VALE, SOUTH DAKOTA.

GERTRUDE WALKER.

Musical News from Various Points

Philadelphia.—We remember writing a short year ago a brief outline of our winter's work that we had planned. It seems good to realize that no plans were miscarried, and that the season continued in one constant round of service, until the excessive heat made it impracticable to carry on extensive work. Six performances of the "Messiah" was quite an unusual record, but the wonderful rendition of "The Holy City" with but two weeks for preparation was something that will be reviewed in the annals of our choir history with a considerable degree of joy and pride.

The social features of the year, the choir parties and jaunts to New York, Elk Mills, and Elkton, the banquets and tennis in the summer time have kept us from many of the attractions that the world has to offer. Then, too, the consecration of the crowd, its loyalty and devotion and constancy have appealed to many of those who have been associated with us in our steady grind, and many have joined the church and are now numbered among our most active workers, thus fulfilling a great many of the things that were expected of the choir movement work.

We are pleased to report additional progress as we take up the fall work. Many have been added to our numbers, and through advertising in the daily papers we hope to increase materially the membership within the next few weeks. We have one of the largest church choirs in Philadelphia—and a steadily increasing repertoire.

On last Saturday night a great crowd was on hand to commence the first rehearsal on Mendelssohn's oratorio "The Elijah," every member being present with the exception of a few who were detained by reason of sickness. This is the most difficult task that we have ever attempted, and if it is done as successfully as "The Messiah" we will indeed have cause to rejoice.

A splendid opportunity has been provided to meet a long-felt need, and members of the chorus having a desire for personal advancement are taking advantage of personal instruction with R. Ernst Hartmann, a distinguished conductor and teacher pianist. The newly organized orchestral department of the general choir movement has aroused interest and on last Friday evening a unit of the national organization was organized here. We hope to have a full complement of instruments through personal effort and advertising. Mr. Hartmann will conduct the orchestral forces, and it is hoped that the choir will be accompanied by this body of musicians and be a regular feature of the Sunday activities of the Philadelphia musical fraternity. We are looking towards the establishing of our own conservatory of music as soon as the interest demands it. Judging from our interest at present the day does not seem too far distant. Concerts, lectures, recitals, oratorio and orchestral performances will be a regular feature of our work from now on, and we hope to have time for an occasional social gathering where we can relax and discover the other side of us.

I am indeed grateful for the opportunity of working with such a noble band of God's children, and I am hoping that our work will continue to be successful, and that, too, that we will always be deserving of the nickname that has been accorded us—"That happy bunch."

Brooklyn.—While not so large in numbers Brooklyn responds nobly to the call of district work. I am again privileged to conduct weekly rehearsals of this loyal band. We have been cheered to note the return of some who have not been in the ranks for a year—and we are hoping, too, that a little advertising plan that we have in mind will reach some who are anxious to take up serious study of the oratorio. As in former years, this choir will work along the same lines as the Philadelphia choir and will join forces in some notable performances. Many of the choir have responded to the call of Pastor Ward L. Christy, formerly of Saint Louis, and have served faithfully at many of the street meetings that have been held in the park with splendid results all summer. In fact it has been encouraging to note that the church has been filled many times to capacity on Sunday nights. The same educational features that are being inaugurated in Philadelphia this year will characterize the work in Brooklyn. Cornelius Estill, the organist and pianist and coach will continue his class, and serve us as an accompanist at the evening rehearsals of "The Elijah." Many members of this faithful little choir will uncomplainingly respond to the urgent call of Brother Christy, who is opening up a mission in New York City. Blessings will surely follow the persistency of their efforts, and I am glad, too, for the opportunity of that Tuesday night pilgrimage to Brooklyn, for our associations have meant much to me. Keep up the good work, Brooklyn!

Scranton.—A few weeks ago we received an inspiring letter from Brother Lewis of Scranton that leads us to believe that there will be no lack of interest in the general choir movement work this coming year. Sister J. R. Lentell is acting in the capacity of chorister, and we expect to see and hear results. No branch in the district affords a greater wealth of material and it is hoped that we may have the pleasure of their associations with us in district work this year.

Elk Mills.—This is the place where we have had so many of our wonderful experiences, and where a splendid result could be obtained with the cooperation we have reason to expect. Brother Tom Carr has the gift of enthusiasm, and we are looking to him to accomplish something worth while. Most of the boys came up recently for a week-end in Philadelphia and while in the home of Betsy Ross they had the distinction of being the first sight-seeing crowd to render a song in this historical place. Methinks I can still hear them sing, "Maryland, My Maryland." We hope in a later issue to send in the manuscript that has long since been written of the district choir's visit to Elk Mills last May. Thus, as briefly as I can, you have the history of our district work, and the possibilities are looming up brighter as the days roll on.

ALBERT N. HOXIE.

Chatham.—Chatham District reunion convened at Erie Beach from August 4 to 14 and was a grand success musically and otherwise.

This year the stringed, reed and brass instruments were introduced for the first time, demonstrating the beautiful help of this branch of the work to all lovers of music. We hope the Saints of the Chatham District will get busy and push this instrument help so we can have a brass band for the next reunion.

We are profoundly indebted to all who cheerfully helped with their musical talents. Good solos were rendered, in fact all the musical numbers were inspiring and uplifting.

We also appreciated the help of those from across the border and say "ever welcome to our reunion."

Your brother,

J. H. TYRRELL,

Chatham District Chorister.

First Independence, Missouri.—Shortly after the reorganizing of the stake, the choir enjoyed very enthusiastic and inspiring talks from Brother Walter G. Smith, and from our new choir president, Brother Joseph G. Smith. We all felt renewed interest, and attendance since has increased steadily. Several new members have been added. Brother Walter and wife have shown a very kindly interest, attending the meetings of the choir on Thursday evenings. One evening, after practice, the choir accepted their kind invitation to go to their home, and there a most pleasant hour and half were spent, singing and enjoying ourselves as our choir usually does on such occasions. Light refreshments were served, and everyone felt encouraged and reanimated for future efforts.

Our outdoor Sunday evening services have been a great success throughout the warm weather. Not only was the choir attendance fine, but the numbers of those who came to hear increased week after week. One feature of that work which needs much credit, was that of our new band. Feeling the need of some support of this kind, our leader, with the help of Brother Turner, organized a band, composed largely of people who are studying their instruments under competent teachers. Many were interested from the first, and others are qualifying to join later. On the whole it is resolving itself into something permanent and will doubtless prove to be of great assistance, both in outdoor and indoor services. Altogether, our choir feels strengthened and encouraged; we have broken all previous records of attendance for July and August, and are looking forward to a fall and winter of real hard work, joining in the impetus which our entire branch has received of late.

VERNA BRACKENBURY, Reporter.

Woman's Auxiliary

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

Our Field Work

Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, as field worker for the auxiliaries of the church has done some very effective work for our woman's organization at several reunions this fall. As vice president of our general society, she is intensely interested in awakening the women of the church, with whom opportunity has allowed her to come in contact, to the importance of arousing themselves to the vital nature of the problems and privileges before us. She is an ardent advocate of the necessity for studying and informing ourselves upon the various subjects which have peculiar meanings for us as Latter Day Saints who are indeed called to be (and are nominally attempting to be) coworkers with God in establishing Zion, out of which his beauty may shine! Have we not some distance to go, dear sisters, before we are efficient in that part of this great work which is, and shall be, intrusted to us? Do we not yearn to become "workmen who need not be ashamed," when offering to God the result of our efforts?

There is a peculiar responsibility upon the mothers of our church. It is given to them, to mold the minds and train the hearts of the men and women who will carry on the work of the church in the days ahead. Can we, then, feel that little is required of us? Will we go uncondemned if we sense no greater responsibility than that which rests lightly upon our neighbor of the world? She may think lightly, live lightly, and discharge her duties to her family and State lightly, and still be living up to the best her mind has received. Can this be said of us? Having received the greater light, and, through baptism, having agreed and undertaken to live according to that light, is not a greater service required of us—one more worthy, more lasting, more eternal in both its character and its duration? And will not our condemnation be the greater if we, through idleness, through perverted tastes or inclinations, or through stubbornness in refusing to recognize and accept this responsibility, fail to live up to its requirements, and fail to take advantage of the privileges it offers for personal development?

This latter factor is not the least the equation offers, for the leaders of our church, however consecrated and efficient they may be, can never bring the church up to a higher standard than its membership is willing to reach. Elevating the spiritual standard of the units is the only way in which the standard of the church as a whole can be raised, and cannot we, as women, carrying on the work peculiarly our own, all unite in an effort to see to it, that "as for me, and my house, we will serve God"?

Just think, for a moment. What would be attained, what moral planes of purity, zeal, consecration and service would be reached if it could so be, that every family in the church should be of that mind, and work to that end unfalteringly, and with devoted energies, attempting to "press forward to the high mark"! As women, is this out of our reach? Do we not more earnestly desire this result than any other in the world? For "what is a man profited if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" We believe the mass of our women see the importance of individual effort, and of effort all together, for in both there lie the elements which spell success.

Thus it is that Sister Etzenhouser, in putting the work of the auxiliary before the women of the various districts, as far as it has been possible to get them together, is quite successful in arousing a deep-seated desire for improvement, and has left a train of enthusiasm in her wake which will bear good fruit later on. Other capable field workers, too, have kindled their fires at this wonderful lamp, and, through the inspiration and suggestion found in the Year Book, are stimulating and encouraging the sisters in many places, to take upon themselves more active and earnest work in the kingdom. May God bless all such efforts, and reward liberally in harvest which will appeal to all of us, and be acceptable to him.

Auxiliary Echoes

Detroit.—The sisters of the second Detroit branch send us a mention of an ice cream social which resulted in over thirteen dollars being added to the fund for purchasing a church. The program given in connection with the refreshments was not the least enjoyable part of the affair, and doubtless resulted, as such things rightly used cannot fail to do, in bringing the participants and the hearers in closer unity and purpose.

Independence.—We learn that Sister Walter Smith is to have charge of a kindergarten in Independence, and also conduct a class of grown-ups who are studying story-telling. We rejoice in both these items; the sister mentioned is well qualified for such work, and cannot fail to be a great stimulation and help to those seeking to understand better the wise guidance of the child mind.

President Frederick M. Smith's class in sociology is to take on the form of week-night lectures, we understand. "The greatest study of mankind is man," and in this fascinating branch of research we find as subject matter a maximum of social problems which concern us very nearly. President Smith has the faculty, so invaluable in an instructor, of helping his hearers to apply the truths discovered to daily and individual experiences, which augments very materially the value of such a study as sociology to Latter Day Saints. When we are able to understand the general trend and development of men in their relations to each other, and when we learn to solve the vexing problems of the hour with the Christ principle dominant in the process, we have arrived very near to the goal of the Christian's ambition—very near to the attainment of the "perfect man in Christ Jesus."

Council Bluffs.—At the reunion of districts which combined forces at Council Bluffs recently, the Zenith circle of Oriole girls of that place had a large tent which became the scene of many interesting meetings. It was a sort of general rallying spot for girls, women, and children. It was here the little tots had their Sunday school lessons, marching thence in single file back to the big tent, some with tiny birthday cakes upon which stood bravely the witnessing candles; it was here the young women met each morning for institute work—lectures on cooking, morals, manners, dress, and many other helpful subjects; it was here many received their patriarchal blessings, under the hands of Brother F. A. Smith, or Brother J. W. Wight; it was here the sick and suffering were administered to, receiving such blessing as was for their good; and it was here that anyone in need instinctively went, whether that need were a cot to rest upon, a mirror before which to adjust stray locks, a needle and thread to avert disaster to dress, a quiet in which to lull a child to sleep, or a pan of water by means of which to remove traces of the day's stress and stain. Thank you most heartily dear Zenith sisters, your mark is surely set high in the heavens, and we trust your zeal will equal your aspirations, and that you need never stop short of your ideals!

Saint Louis.—(Extracts from a letter telling about the Saint Louis reunion.) Sister Etzenhouser's talks were splendid; even her testimonies in our prayer services have great weight. She gave us talks on "Winding your own engine," "Social purity" (illustrating with corn), "The Religio," "The Sunday school" and "The man in the making" using a chart which carried the boy through the various stages of "Blow"-age, "Grow"-age, Gang-period, etc. She is certainly a good and efficient worker, as she is a fine "mixer" and very magnetic.

Lamoni.—The press chairman from Lamoni local sends us the following glowing account of the work done at the late reunion at that place. Does not the mere reading of the joyous experiences of those meetings fill our hearts with resolutions to live more worthily, that pentecostal showers shall not be so rare among us? The report follows:

A happy time is coming when we shall have a united sisterhood in the Lamoni Stake, working together that we may advance in all that is helpful and uplifting. Of this there have been encouraging signs in the weeks just passed and especially during the stake reunion which closed on yesterday, August 27.

During the week preceding the reunion the Patronesses of Graceland College adopted the constitution of the Woman's Auxiliary and so were ready to cooperate with other members in the forward movement during the reunion.

For all the auxiliary has had several departments of work represented in Lamoni for a long time, we have never had a combined local organization. Now, the opportune time for launching a stake organization seemed to have been reached, but first we must have our local organized. Accordingly, a meeting of Lamoni women was called at fifteen minutes past four on the first Sunday of the reunion, the purpose of the meeting having been announced previously.

An address by President Elbert A. Smith on woman's work in the church had been given in the morning, occupying the senior lesson period of the Sunday school hour. In this address the high calling of the womanhood of the church and the advantages of organization were very clearly set forth, and with aspirations stirred toward the giving of more efficient service the sisters of the center place of the stake were anxious to complete their organization.

Mrs. Lydia A. Wight was chosen president of the local and Mrs. Bess Blair vice president. Mrs. Lulu Blair was elected secretary and Mrs. Annie Midgorden, treasurer. Mrs. George N. Briggs presided.

During the reunion week the sisters of the Bloomington Branch organized a local, and on the second Sunday a stake organization was effected. The officers elected were Mrs. Susie Hayer, president, Mrs. Agnes Outhouse, vice president; Mrs. Ida Monroe, secretary, and Mrs. Emma Steckel, treasurer.

Throughout the reunion a spirit of close cooperation was manifest in all the work. A program committee composed of one member from each of the three auxiliaries, the Sunday school, the Religio and the woman's organization had provided programs for four afternoon sessions, as allotted by the general committee, and it was designed that the matter presented on each of these days should represent all three societies. By courtesy, however, the second Saturday was made largely a Woman's Auxiliary day.

On that occasion Mrs. Helen Silsbee Smith, of Omaha, gave a sketch with blackboard outline, of the work of the educational department, of which she is superintendent. Mrs. Flora Scott, president of the Graceland Patroness Society read a paper written by our general president, Mrs. F. M. Smith in behalf of the relief and service department. Mrs. Callie B. Stebbins presented the work of the child welfare department and quoted from a paper written by the superintendent of that department, Mrs. Lula M. Sandy, of Kansas City, in which she advises combining with the practical work outlined for that department the study of the book, Child Study and Child Training, by William Byron Forebush. This is one of the books listed in the Year Book by the educational department for the use of preparational classes in mothers' and teachers' problems. In illustration of a part of the work suggested, Sister Stebbins told a story, "The great, big, beautiful wheel," by Annie Locke MacKinnon.

A delightful feature of this service was the singing of the Oriole song by a group of Oriole girls accompanied at the piano by Miss Madeline Higgins of Kansas City, the author of the beautiful words and music. The "whistling girls" of the circle gave the charming bird call in its place. Aren't we glad we have outgrown the old prediction?

On the following afternoon, after the organization of the stake auxiliary, Mrs. Lulu Blair read a paper dealing with the Oriole movement, of which she is the local superintendent. Also an address upon the work of the home department was given by Mrs. George N. Briggs, who is the general superintendent of that department.

Mrs. Lydia A. Wight was in charge of this meeting as also of the woman's portion of the service on the day preceding.

In planning for the comfort of those attending the reunion it was recognized as being very desirable that a place for chance visitors should be provided and so it came about that in the brown and white encampment two abiding places bore the red-lettered badge of "guest tent." The expense was borne by the Sunday school and Religio stake associations and the furnishings were provided by the Woman's Auxiliary. Another tent bore the inscription "A rest tent. A place where tired mothers with their children—and others—may rest." Here playthings were accessible for the little children and Oriole girls helped to care for them. In fact they made it unnecessary for the mothers to stay with their children. Not only here did the Orioles give willing teamwork, but by twos they scattered over the camp and took charge of the little ones wherever they found opportunity, thus leaving the mothers free to enjoy the services in the big tent.

Older children were happily cared for with interesting addresses and occupations, stories and travelogues in forenoon and afternoon sessions at the children's tent. Between times, swings, trolleys and games contributed greatly to their enjoyment and to the beauty of the scene, already beautiful in colors of the living green of grass and trees, and soft blue sky with fleecy clouds. Peace and happiness seemed written over all.

Truly a blissful condition, where the children are contented amid wholesome surroundings and the older people mingle with them or are free to go aside for the worship of God or to engage in social converse upon his work.

The best reunion we have ever had is ended—all too soon, it seemed; so next year we are to have two weeks, commencing on Friday and lasting over three Sundays.

PRESS CHAIRMAN OF THE LAMONI LOCAL.

Life and Voice Culture

The law of life and the law of vibration are recognized as synonymous in expression with mind stuff or thought as its cause and builder; to illustrate—a cathedral is desired. Desire is the first thought energy toward building; an architect, whose business it is to think ideal structures, is employed; he demonstrates his ideas in form of plans drawn out, naming the materials to be used, etc. The workmen think these thoughts after the architect, and the edifice is erected; back of the whole is thought-energy—thought the cause, the builder—the cathedral is simply the effect.

Now let us apply this to the building of our minds and bodies, the temples of the living God—our faculties will be our workmen, they must distinctly understand the materials to be used in this temple. Of course, ordinary foods will play a conspicuous part, but for the purposes of this article, these foods will not be brought into question. "Man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the Mouth of God." Word is expressed thought, and all ideals are the expression of the highest thought, i. e., the Word of God.

The beautiful ideals of singing should be the expressions of the workmen who think the thoughts of the almighty Architect after him, and appropriate the same to the building up of character and body. This all-potent mental food is too often wasted; we try to live by the "bread alone," only allowing the ideal to be a temporary enjoyment for the senses, instead of a life builder.

As musicians we are dealers, purveyors, if you will, of life. There never need be, there never should be, a short-lived musician. We are dealing in the very mind-stuff that builds noble characters and beautiful bodies; why is it that musicians are not all so built? Because we have not followed implicitly the perfect plans of the almighty Architect; we have thought disease when our plans have called for wholeness; we have thought weakness when the plans called for strength; the plans called for beauty, but the revelations of our looking-glasses do not satisfy our artistic longings and we often try to hide under artificiality, and our happiness is not complete. Let us make it so by using our vocal organs for the triple purpose of building the voice, our character and our bodies.

In the first rudiments of the art, it will be well for us to appreciate the value of deep breathing of pure air as a means of thoroughly purifying our blood, and, if we are wise, we shall direct our thoughts to its being the breath of life with all that term implies; for the practice of deep breathing is more than a physiological, it is a psychological function. In this breathing we are appropriating more than air, something finer, more life-giving and vital than oxygen; by it our minds become clearer and our bodies strengthened and refined. For want of a better, the hypothetical term "ether" has been used, but let us call it by its proper name, a term implying "above the physical," spirit, for this spirit substance, this breath of life is more vitalizing than any known physical element—try it. First of all, breathe slowly, and simply think words, and when you have gotten familiar with these symbols, these words, think of the mental concept these words stand for. Now expire slowly and with the following inspiration of fresh air, let the word life and its import fill your body, sending its vibrations down to your very feet, hold it a moment or two and feel it vibrating all through your being and vitalizing and vivifying you throughout. Again—after taking a deep breath, sing to the notes "do, sol"—going downward—the word night, think of the blessing of nighttime; the repose of the conscious realm of mind, the involution of forces for the coming day's evolution; let these thoughts reverberate through your whole being until every part is thrilling with the word and its corresponding blessings. Then take the word day and let your voice resound with the joy of thankfulness for the blessed day that the night has prepared you to enjoy—the life throbs through one's being; when both mind and body are engaged in intense thanksgiving cannot be described—no physical stagnation can withstand the mighty flow of life.

When you get to song you will have to consider the mental concept of it as a whole, not what it is about—the song might describe the sighing of the wind among the trees—but these words would be used only to convey an idea; that idea is the goal of your thoughts, your mental concept, interpretation.

Summed up, what can be realized by our beloved art? Voice culture, the building of a perfect character, the attainment of longevity and bliss. Is it worth while? Is it?

H. F. FAIRWEATHER.

It is the close observation of little things which is the secret of success in business, in art, in science, and in every pursuit in life. Human knowledge is but an accumulation of small facts, made by successive generations of men—the little bits of knowledge and experience carefully treasured up and growing at length into a mighty pyramid.—S. Smiles.

Letter Department

The Curbstone Preacher

The readers will remember an article in a late HERALD entitled, "A call for curbstone preachers." In it mention is made of the "soap-box orators" which one may hear in New York City, as they harangue to eager listeners on such topics as socialism, single tax and woman suffrage. Evangelical efforts are said to be in the minority and the assaults of the atheist win the multitudes despite the defenses of the Salvation Army.

But there is one evangelical effort in New York which is not in vain; it is that of one of the most zealous missionaries in the church. Brother Ward L. Christy does not use a soap-box for his pedestal but something just as ordinary, a large tin can about three feet high which stands at the side of the street. Such cans are supposed to contain the waste which collects on the streets, but fortunately one is generally empty when he gets ready to use it. Several of the brethren have been supplying their automobiles for the occasion. Our "curbstone preacher" could make a more dignified appearance if he would only stay in the car, but when he works up a crowd he becomes anxious to get nearer the people; dignity is a minor item, and the tin can is turned upside down in the very midst of the crowd. Standing on the bottom of it he imparts the teachings of the sacred book with such power and volume that he can be heard a long distance on all sides.

Three times a week this earnest worker holds forth at his open forum, which with all his pastoral duties keep him busy day and night. When he preaches on the street corner the people sit outside of their business places and can hear him very easily. A crowd also stands close by. At the park the people sit in the benches or gather around the speaker. At times some of the local men very ably assist him. Each "wins the respect and attention of the passers-by because they instinctively realize that he has no ulterior motive for the advocacy of his message," as is stated in the article mentioned.

A band of church members valiantly supports these efforts by singing our beautiful hymns which one of the young brothers accompanies with his violin. They not only afford the music but some are kept busy during the entire meeting handing out Stepping Stones and Hopes to the children who gather around from their play on the streets and in the park. These children's papers have come in from all over the church in response to the "Call for literature" which Brother Christy put in the Stepping Stones, HERALD and Ensign. Between two and three thousand have already been given out to the children who receive them with joyful hearts. Other workers go to the people at the close of the services to offer them tracts to read, to take their name and address in case they wish them.

Just a few through ignorance and prejudice scorn the cause, but the most of the listeners praise the noble work. One woman said, "How I admire his sincerity! I do not believe in hiding our light under a bushel—which so many people do." On the other hand two very inferior-looking women, when asked if they wished to read some of the tracts, very reproachfully replied, "No, you street rabble, trash!" Our hearts go out in pity to such. Silently we pray, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." Our Savior was scorned, too, but he always gave his best, no matter whether his hearers were friendly or hostile. He wept over Jerusalem. And it is this same Christ Spirit which impels our curbstone messenger who does not disdain the roadside as his pulpit where he is successfully planting the good seed of the gospel of the brotherhood of man as well as of the fatherhood of God.

This faithful missionary keeps in touch with all those who are reading the Angel Message tracts, the Future Destiny of Man, the Plea for the Golden Rule, etc., by visiting them or sending others to visit and invite them to the church services. He also writes personal notes telling them what his Sunday evening subject will be and solicits their attendance. On the church he puts up very attractive posters to invite people's interest and attention.

The questions arise: "Does all this hard work pay? Do the people come out?" They most certainly do. The pews have been filled. When the members have all returned from their summer vacations he expects the church to be crowded. Speaking of pews brings to mind an interesting testimony given at one of our prayer meetings by a man who has been attending services since he heard the message on the street. He spoke of a young man who was poorly clad, and who went to one of the rich, popular churches. He wandered toward the front without the usher seeing him and entered a private pew. Soon a wealthy aristocrat was ushered up with his family. Upon noticing the stranger in the pew he told him he was in the wrong place. The stranger arose and stood aside until the occupants were seated, then he remarked, "And this is a Christian's pew!" Our visitor said that rebuke would remain with that rich man if he were to live a thousand years. Then he praised our church; a church where the rich and poor are equally welcome, where tender sympathy is extended to all.

This was the testimony of a very poor, humble man, but the same sentiment has been expressed by a man of wealth, position, and learning, a civil engineer from Copenhagen, who became interested in our work at one of the first street meetings. He frequently attends services and praises the kindly spirit which reaches out to all. His popular church is too cold for his Teutonic blood; he says his minister is paid four thousand dollars a year and cannot preach a sermon. He laments the fact that no one ever gets acquainted at his church. It is only a mechanical, "How do you do?" and a formal handshake. He remarked, "Just think what you people could do for humanity with that four thousand dollars!" This man says he would change his place of worship if it were not for his family who could not resign their social position in the world.

These are just a few types of the many which could be mentioned whose world-weary souls have been fed and their spirits refreshed by the words which have come from the deep and sympathetic heart of the curbstone minister, inspired by the example of the great Master, our Savior. Surely the Lord is blessing him and many will rejoice in the success of his efforts. If hundreds of such men would only "minister to the hungry sheep of the curbstone that look up and are not fed with aught save that which serves to increase their sense of detachment and isolation, their feeling of discontent and prejudice!"

MABLE KNIPSCHILD.

(In attendance at Columbia University, New York City.)

A Letter from "The Hub"

[The following extracts are from a personal letter written to the senior editor. At the top of the page in Brother Burgess's familiar handwriting appears a note that may read, "Not for publication." But again it may be, "Meant for publication." Brother Burgess's correspondents will understand. Not being sure in the matter, we have decided to play safe in either event and publish half of the letter, as follows.—EDITORS.]

I have long thought of writing you, but we are kept rather fully occupied, as the work is new. I think and hope I am learning a lot in a practical way; with plenty of bumps, in a way.

Do you know you are a dangerous character? Now one can write to Frederick M. and feel reasonably certain, as to the letter being immediately filed away and perhaps forgotten. But with you, there is always the threat of the HERALD and publication back of you.

You might not like too many sad things, which you could not print. It might sound like complaint. There are many things—even the truth, that it would never do to print. And there may even be some truth it were better that you did not know—perhaps.

Coming east we stopped six hours in Chicago and ten in Buffalo because it would save us five dollars, or ten dollars on the trip, and would get us to Onset just about as soon; otherwise we should have to stay all night in Boston at a hotel. It had been raining at Onset, but did not after our arrival, except one small shower. We soon made ourselves shipshape, however, and ready for anything, as near as might be. There were seventy-five tents, eight cottages, and about four hundred and forty in attendance (some stayed in town at Onset and rented cottages), so it was not as large as Lamoni. But the spiritual interest was excellent.

There was scarcely a prayer meeting, if one, in which the gifts of the Spirit were not made manifest in prophecy, tongues and interpretation, and the peaceful joy of the Spirit. There was a truly remarkable outpouring. The great theme appeared to be preparation for greater service and for the coming day, now at the very doors. There were a number of baptisms, but the meetings were especially a reunion of the Saints.

Elder Phillips deserves high commendation; with one exception: he did not preach once during the ten days and a half that we were there. But he so arranged that everybody else had something to do. He did not even preside or take charge of any, except the business and priesthood meetings. In fact, I have never seen government so little apparent and yet so sure. We had priesthood meeting every evening at six p. m. and we believe it was found profitable by all who attended.

The attendance at all services was excellent and attention good. I think it was the most orderly reunion I have ever attended. M. C. [Fisher] looked after his end—finance—in his quiet way, and with no apparent steam. He does love the outdoors, like a boy, and loves as well as any other boy to go around barefooted and bareheaded and work the sand through his toes, as an everyday affair. Then if he can eat green cucumbers and green apples, he is happy. His simplicity, his integrity and desire to do good must impress anyone who observes him.

I could write a small volume, but will not. You have the institute program. The prayer meetings would take longer to set forth, but they were much above the ordinary. The preaching also was of a very high order. Elder E. J. Ebeling, John Sheehy, Ward L. Christy, A. D. Angus, E. B. Hull, Ralph W. Farrell, and George F. Robley doing the heavy work, but their efforts were not heavy, nor were they light either, they were inspirational and stirring. Several times we heard the remark that the time had passed so quickly they could hardly realize that the time was up, let alone that the speaker had exceeded the ordinary allowance. Some of the efforts were taken up and criticized in the priesthood meetings for the benefit of the younger members of the priesthood. Notably Elder Ebeling called into question our efforts to pound the desk. This is a new thing for us to pound the desk, but we found that we had to watch ourselves to keep from laying down the law with too much force. But all was taken in good part and much good resulted.

Here we are trying to learn the streets and divisions of Greater Boston. We have Boston, East Boston, South Boston, Somerville (including Winter Hill and the pieces of Somerville) Medford, Cambridge Lynn, East Lynn, Saugus, Winchester, Wakefield, Revere, Chelsea, Everett and so forth. The rub is that many of them have streets of the same name. Many straight streets change their name, but when they turn the name sticks; also the number gives no idea of location. Every street is started with "1" and each house numbered in order to 100, then 101; so 101 may be almost any distance from 1; again every time they change the name they start back at 1. Only a few notorious streets are allowed to keep their name for any great distance, and usually every street that crosses these changes its name.

However, we had some experience with this last year, and became acquainted with the main streets of Boston itself and those around the church in Somerville.

We were very glad to note your editorial on the Lamoni reunion. Also I enjoyed very much your editorial last week, on the war posters.

Now as you are busy and I ought to be ashamed of myself with the work piled up here, we shall close with our heartiest good wishes to you.

Very sincerely yours,

S. A. BURGESS.

WINTER HILL, MASSACHUSETTS, 154 Central Street.

Extracts from Letters

"I live in an isolated place, the nearest branch being Oakdale, about sixteen miles from here, so I do not have many church privileges. I read of the blessings of others who are located in branches and wish I had their privileges, yet on a recent visit I saw a number of things which almost made me thankful that I am isolated. At one place I noticed how very hard it was for the various members to attend church. Excuses of all kinds were offered; some were too tired; others were going visiting, and another family had company. At another place I found the Religio on Friday night attended by a very few, while there were hundreds who evidently could have been there. I enjoyed my visit at the Stewartsville reunion very much. God poured out his blessings upon his Saints. I hope to be of some use to God's work and help spread his gospel, that the wickedness in the world may some day cease."—Charles Holmes, Breckenridge, Missouri.

LEEDS, ENGLAND, September 5, 1916.

Editors Herald: As most of the Saints of the Manchester District will be glad to know how I am going on in the mission field, I take the liberty to write these few lines to the HERALD.

I started out on my missionary career, in company with Apostle U. W. Greene, billeting at the home of Elder Thomas Taylor, where we spent a very enjoyable time together. Brother Taylor has quite a fund of good Irish jokes, and the relating of these, as we sat around the table after our day's labors, was a feature that gave us great joy.

We held meetings in the Leeds Branch chapel on Sunday, August 13, and the four week nights following, there being a very good interest. Two young sisters gave their names in for baptism, and I am confident that the efforts of our Brother Greene was productive of good in that branch. As I look at the records of this branch, my heart is sore at the thought of so many of those who have their names enrolled as members and yet have lost all interest in the work of the Lord. I am doing all I can to get in touch with these Saints, in order to show them the danger of turning their backs upon the church that God has established in these the last days, nevermore to be thrown down.

August 19, the day upon which our Brother Greene had to leave us, very quickly came round, and at the appointed time we were taken to the Midland Station by our Brother Taylor in the governess car. As I stood on the platform waiting for the train to steam out, I could not help but feel a little despondent at the thought of our parting. Our stay together had been so pleasant, that I just felt as if I were parting with a lifelong friend, whereas we had only been acquainted just a few short weeks. Truly this latter-day work is a marvelous work and a wonder.

On this same day my wife had been invited to stay for a while with me at Leeds, and accordingly we went to meet her at the Central Station. She stayed with us along with our daughter Florrie, just a week, when she had to leave, owing to our daughter having to continue her education. When left to myself, I felt very gloomy indeed. So gloomy that I almost wished that I had not entered the field at all. I began to wonder whether I was a coward or not, but I remembered that Brother Greene had told me that he had been in the field about thirty-four years and had never been able to get rid of the homesickness in all that time: then I read the letter of Brother Arber in the HERALD, and noticed that he was in the same boat, so the old saying proved true in my case, viz, "Trouble never seems so hard to bear when we have some one to share it with us."

On August 24 I baptized the two young ladies who had asked for the same during Brother Greene's stay, in a font that the Leeds corporation had built purposely for baptisms. The Sunday following I, along with Elder Harper, confirmed them. In the afternoon according to prior arrangement I went to the mission at Bradford, Yorkshire. There are only about nine Saints at this mission, but they have the Spirit of the Master with them, and it did me good to be with them. My efforts there were much appreciated, and several friends came in with us to hear the gospel taught by this "Latter Day Saint elder." I took advantage of this opportunity to lay our case before them, in such a way that it caused them to ask questions, and that is just what a Latter Day Saint likes. Some were so interested that they came again, and expressed the desire to hear more. I pray God to give me strength to continue, that finally I may convince some of these souls of the truth of our message.

Whilst staying at Bradford the Saints were most kind to me, and did all they could to make me feel at home. That they succeeded is the greatest compliment that I can pay to them.

On August 28, I visited Manningham Park, being piloted by our Sisters Wormald and Schofield, and I very much enjoyed the portion of the park that I visited, also the Cartwright Hall which has been turned into a museum. This to me was full of interest, and I could very well have spent a full afternoon in each of the rooms.

Whilst at Bradford I was billeted at the home of our Brother and Sister Richardson (late of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania). My first meeting with our brother was at the conference when our Brother Greene first came to England on his way to Palestine. Brother Richardson and wife had come over to their home in England on the same boat, and he made himself known to me in this wise: "I am Brother Richardson of Philadelphia, who are you?" This so amused me, being as I was so used to the English custom of introductions, that I never forgot him, and when I was sent to Bradford on my first visit last December, the first Brother that I recognized was our Brother Richardson.

On September 2, my host and hostess took me to a place called Bailsdon Moor, a beautiful place just outside Bradford. As I walked along, I noticed what seemed to me to be some kind of a road for vehicles, leading right up to the top of the hill. On inquiring I was told that it was the old Roman road built so many years ago, by these conquerors of the early Britons. Ascending the hill by this road, my thoughts were busy conjuring up ideas of the days when the chariots raced back and forth along this very road. The stones had deep indentations, made by the passage of so much traffic, modern, perhaps, as well as ancient. From the top of the hill we had a splendid view of the surrounding country, and the sight was one of beauty. I have visited the beauty spots of Wales, and also the Isle of Man, but neither of these places has ever given me a better view than the one I witnessed from the top of this Yorkshire Moor. Descending the other side of the hill we came to the glen known as Shipley Glen, and a wonderful view met our gaze. Rocks were thrown about in this natural beauty spot in great profusion, just as though some great giant had been at play. We climbed over the rocks and we were brought to the bottom of the hill, right into the heart of the glen itself. We passed along through exquisite scenery, reminding us that we were indeed indebted to our Father in heaven for his goodness to us. We took the car to the city again, where I left our brother and sister and made my way to Leeds.

Should anyone require a good pilot when he comes to Yorkshire, I recommend him to Brother Richardson. He is really fine, for he just takes you in hand and explains everything to you as you pass by. This gives an added interest to your ramble, and makes your visit a pleasant one.

The work that lies before me in Leeds is one that will need all my energy to cope with, but I rely on the strength of the Lord to help carry it on to success. I pray that God will bless his work in the British Isles, and that the time will soon come that we shall be able to work under brighter conditions than we are doing at present. We sometimes get discouraged with lack of results, but we must press on, and we are assured of victory in the end.

May we all be faithful to our covenant is the prayer of Your brother in gospel bonds, ABEL HALL.

News from Missions

Eastern Colorado

It has been quite awhile since I contributed a few lines to our much appreciated church organ. My silence is not due to any disinclination upon my part, nor because I lack interest in the HERALD; but rather because I feel that there are such able contributors among the brethren who can write so much more interestingly than I, and thus claim space in your columns the more consistently.

But of late so many things have appeared in the HERALD that are of deep interest to all Latter Day Saints; matters that either properly represent or misrepresent the conditions in the church at present, I have been prompted to cast in my little mite.

In the HERALD for August 9 appeared a letter written to Brother F. M. Smith, and the letter contains a dream, or vision, as had by this certain brother, which, to the mind of the brother, set forth the true condition of the church at this time.

Now I do not want to appear to be sitting in judgment upon the spiritual presentations of others, but since my attention has so many times been called to said letter, and my views asked for in relation to the depicted condition of the church as set forth therein, I herewith submit an answer or two as I mean it.

In the first place I cannot accept the idea that the beams (representing the Presidency) have so soon become out of place, when so recently the Lord, through the former revelator to the church, placed these men there by revelation, since which time the church in General Conference assembled ratified such appointment.

The Bishopric of the church became rather disorganized by reason of the resignation of Bishop Kelley, and the Lord directs our present prophet to select Benjamin McGuire to fill this important office.

Brother McGuire comes before the conference and tells them of the clear-cut spiritual manifestations that he has had, as well as his wife, to the effect that he was called to the office of bishop. The church accepts the revelation, and the general body ratifies the appointment. Thus far the great beams are in place.

And as is the invariable custom, before conference closes the Presidency was sustained, and especially President F. M. Smith, as the prophet, seer and revelator to the church, unanimously.

Certainly we cannot accept the idea that this representative body of Saints were misled relative to the spiritual standing of the Presidency.

What is the corrective measure to be applied provided the church falls into disorder? Hear what the Lord says, Doctrine and Covenants 122:10: "Should the church fall into disorder, or any portion of it, it is the duty of the general quorums of the church, or any one of them to take measures to correct such disorder; through the advice and direction of the Presidency, the Twelve, the Seventy, or a council of high priests, in case of emergency; and in case the Presidency is in transgression, the Bishop and his council of high priests, as provided in the law; and the Presidency and high council if the Bishop, or his counselors, if high priests, are in transgression."

Now is it possible that so soon after the sitting of the General Conference, where such corrective measures can and may be applied, the Lord sees a wonderful emergency and gets in such a hurry about matters as to altogether ignore his law previously given, and says to a member, "You tell the head what to do"?

Saints, these criticisms may appear a little unkind, but as I see matters, we should be very careful how we place judgment upon the condition of the church, when such claimed spiritual manifestations come through other channels than that organized of God.

And since the publication of the matter referred to above, it is plainly seen that with some of the Saints it has created a feeling of distrust and suspicion, and they say, "Well, it's too bad the church has gotten into such condition."

The tendency, of course, of such feeling with the Saints will be to lessen their efforts to sustain the church in a financial way, as well as spiritual.

But my own personal experience this year has permitted me to witness some of the greatest demonstrations of the power of God I have ever seen manifest in the church, in the preaching of the word, and the healing of the sick and the casting out of devils.

One evening while I was making the opening prayer in opening a service for preaching for an old-time elder, a holy angel came into our midst and laid his hand upon my right arm, giving me such inspiration as made it indeed joyous to be there. And while the dear old brother was preaching, the same hand was laid upon his right arm, and, truly such inspiration I have seldom witnessed. The audience sat spellbound as they listened to the word.

The conference of the Eastern Colorado District held at Wiley, Colorado, September 1 to 3, was pronounced by all as one of the most spiritual and best attended conferences held in this field for years.

The Wray Branch alone was represented there by six auto loads of Saints who had to travel a distance of one hundred and sixty-five miles, besides the numbers that came in from other places: from Denver, Colorado Springs, La Junta, Falcon, Bristol, and Trinidad, and also Limon. The Saints felt well repaid for their effort and we hope to see as good a turnout at Denver the last week of February, 1917.

At present I am doing labor north of Burlington, Colorado. There is some interest here and some who appear to be much interested in the work, and who will in time, no doubt, obey. Unholy practice upon the part of some who belong to the church here are making it rather trying for the few faithful ones. We are hopeful, however, by making the proper application of the law of Christ to correct these disorders.

Ever hopeful and praying for the welfare of Zion,
Your brother,

J. R. SUTTON.

Northeastern Illinois

As the year moves on we certainly have much to be thankful for, and especially when we consider the conditions that are ripening all about us and take into account the fact that our country is still at peace, while so many nations are suffering such awful carnage of war.

The reunion that took place at Plano, August 18 to 27 was a success in every way. The year was a little backward and some of the farmers were hindered, yet there was a very good attendance, especially the latter part. That helped out financially, so that after paying for a second-hand cook tent, 20 by 40, we came out over fifty dollars ahead. The meals were furnished at fifteen cents by tickets, and transient at twenty cents. The cook tent cost fifty dollars and a bargain at that. We are ready for a good season in 1917 which will start a week later than this year.

We hope that every member will begin now to plan on attending the next reunion, and thus keeping their minds on the church gathering, avoid many worldly amusements that do not enrich the soul, but which take the nickels and dimes that make the dollars.

There were many who were well pleased with the new up-town site and the same site is procured for next year, gratis. The writer as district president is now started on a mission of holding a series of six to eight days of meetings in each branch and has started in at the Deselm Branch, near Manteno.

My years of experience have taught me that six to eight days of meetings are much more effective and profitable than the two-day meetings and avoid so rapid moving from place to place on the part of the district officer. And while assisting the local officers and the Saints, it makes more of a missionary effort for the outsiders that may attend, than just a two-day effort can do.

There is one thing that has been deeply impressed on the writer's mind of late; that this is going to be one of the hardest winters financially that the country at large and the church has seen for years. And as a church we ought to see to it that only the real necessary things are purchased and indulged in on our part. As one of the missionary families we find that the allowance as now furnished is not sufficient to do even this. We are not able to live on the allowance, with the advance in prices of most every necessity, and sacrificing many things at that, that others have and think necessary to their daily existence. Yet on the other hand I find many of our people who are living just as carefully as they can and some of the poor who are in just as close circumstances as the missionary families, as a rule, are.

What I long to see is to have a nearer equality reached by the church throughout, so that all have the necessary things (and no more) of life.

In Doctrine and Covenants 70:3, we read: "Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things; he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestation of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."

Now we need "the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit" and to become "equal" in our temporal things is the only way to that end. Spiritual manifestations we certainly need, and shall need so long as church shall have its work to do. And while we shall ever need education as furnished by the world all around us, yet to the mind of the writer what we are needing most at this time is spirituality. This we can have; yes, even "the wayfaring men, though they are accounted fools, shall not err therein." (I. T.) All need spirituality first and then all the education they can obtain.

To the branch presidents and secretaries, let me say, we hope that you are making a good, honest effort to locate every member of your branch, and see where the scattered members are living and in all cases where they are living near another branch, more convenient for them to attend, and especially if permanently located, get them to ask for their letters of removal to such branch. In so doing should you find any living in this district, remote from any of the branches, please send me their names and addresses and we will try, together with the other missionaries, to visit such scattered members as we may have opportunity to do. Those who are located in other districts will be sought out and their addresses put into the hands of the officers of those districts. Now, should any officer of any other district, seeing this notice know of any of his members living in the Northeastern Illinois District, please send their addresses to me, or anyone else seeing this notice, and knowing of scattered members in this district, we would thank you for their address. We hope that all Saints living in this district will remember that Robert Burwell of Dalton, Illinois, is the bishop's agent of this district and will be pleased to receipt for any tithes or offerings that you may have. My home address is, Evansville, Wisconsin, 315 First Street.

Your servant and brother,

J. O. DUTTON.

MANTENO, ILLINOIS, October 1, 1916.

News from Branches

Lamoni, Iowa

As evidence of the responsiveness of the Saints here we mention a recent incident. The president of the branch sent out a call to the local priests to meet him at a certain time. He sent out twenty-eight requests; twenty-six were in attendance, one excused himself because of absence from town, leaving only one unaccounted for.

While we would not say that in every case results like this might be chronicled, we believe that where definitely prepared plans are laid, most excellent good follows.

Sunday was observed with the church as "College Day." The morning sermon by President Elbert A. Smith was an appeal for a proper comprehension of the three great forces for good which the church had always stood for: the pulpit, the press, and the school. In his characteristic manner, he pointed out the necessity for supporting all, both morally and financially. The choir was augmented by the College Glee Club. The collection was $390 in cash and pledges.

The evening sermon was by J. W. Wight, being one of the series of gospel sermons continuing each Sunday evening.

The Religio continues to meet at six-thirty Sunday evenings, and the attendance and interest is comparatively good. Various classes are being asked to give the program, and some very good ones have been had.

The church orchestra will play during the fifteen minutes prior to the Sunday school hour—nine-thirty. Their work in the Sunday school is a most popular feature.

The choir recently elected Paul N. Craig as chorister, following the withdrawal of Harold C. Burgess, who has served long and faithfully. He has served the musical interests of the work in a very creditable and appreciated manner. Brother Burgess will continue to actively serve with the choir and in other church work.

The presiding deacon of the branch, Brother W. J. Mather, who has efficiently and faithfully served the local church, has made some business changes recently in connection with his dental practice that he expects to move from our midst. At the recent business meeting he presented his resignation, and in his place Charles E. Blair was elected to fill out the unexpired term. A number of improvements are being made on the local church building, amounting to about fifteen hundred dollars, which work naturally comes under the supervision of the presiding deacon. Among these improvements are furnace repairs, new papering, new doors, and ample new sanitary toilet accommodations.

At the recent priesthood meeting, recommendations of the branch presidency, and some others associated with them as a committee, were adopted. These indorse the work of the Womans' Auxiliary and accept the invitation of that organization in which the men of the community are requested to join with them in the evening classes each Tuesday evening at the high school building. On alternate evenings there will be classes in psychology and English under the auspices of the extension department of Graceland College, with F. M. McDowell and Olive Thomas as teachers.

For the priesthood there will be a course in Book of Mormon study, based on the Book of Mormon Normal Book as a text, with collateral reading. This will be under the charge of J. A. Gunsolley and such committees as may develop in the work. These meetings will be held on the first and third Mondays of each month at the church. Other men not of the priesthood may, upon invitation of members who are, attend these meetings.

On the second and fourth Monday evenings of each month there will be classes in public speaking with Sister Eva McNamara, teacher of oratory at Graceland College, as instructor. About half of the time at these meetings will be devoted to lessons in lettering with brush and pen for show card and other church advertising work. As development is made, the various phases of advertising will be taken up. This will be in charge of E. D. Moore and Paul N. Craig.

The appointments for Sunday preaching were: A. J. Yarrington, our presiding teacher, in a maiden effort at the Saints' Home; Earl F. Hall at Liberty Home; R. V. Hopkins at Shady Grove; James Scofield at New Buda; F. A. Smith, at Oland; R. J. Lambert at Evergreen; Elmer E. Long at Andover.

DELBERT.

On account of the necessary changes in price on books and tracts, you should secure the latest price list before ordering books and other requisites of this office. Ask for one to-day.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Brother Koehler preached Sunday morning, September 24, on the priesthood of the Church of Jesus Christ, using for his text Hebrews 5, exemplifying it very beautifully and comprehensively with the officials of our Government. The following are some of the ideas expressed.

We must have officers fulfilling the functions of the Government in accordance with what it undertakes to do. This entire body of men is the priesthood or ministry of the nation. They are put there by the voice of the people with the right to exercise authoritatively all the duties attached to their respective offices.

The priesthood of the church of Christ is a body of men, chosen by the Lord, who together administer the affairs of the church. This body, working coordinately or as a unit, obliterates endless confusion which would incidentally be the outcome of individual bodies working out of harmony with each other.

No matter how qualified a person may seem naturally, this does not give him official rights. An ex-president may be better qualified to perform the duties of chief executive than is President Wilson, but this will not give him the authority to do so.

The priesthood, or officials of a nation, are elected by the voice of the people. If the people do not speak, we do not have government "by the people."

The priesthood of the church of Christ is elected by God. If God does not speak we do not have his government in the church.

I want to call your attention to how it (the priesthood) receives its authority and to the character of the still, small voice—interpreter as a call from God. In Exodus we have an example of how God called an executive—Moses. As necessary as was it for Moses to be called in this manner two thousand years ago, so necessary is it that men be called in a like manner to-day. God is immutable.

Men study in preparation for the ministry largely as a result of seeing the deplorable condition of the world, the need of ministers or with the thought of being able to do considerable good to mankind. Here the question of authority enters. In 2 Chronicles and in Acts 19 its importance is manifested.

Paul says in Romans 10, referring to the uncalled, "For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God."

It is only under a condition of humility and obedience that the Lord makes manifest his will.

Our priesthood does not boast of having authority. It only wants to assure you that God speaks to-day in the same way as he did of old.

Philadelphia did not get disheartened over the impediment (paralysis). Expect wonderful progress now that we have been disencumbered.

AL J. DICKSON.

Miscellaneous Department

The Bishopric

Owing to the great press of official business demanding the entire time and attention of the Presiding Bishopric, we shall be obliged to request that no personal calls nor telephone calls be made except between the hours of 3 and 4 p. m., except in very urgent cases.

Persons wishing to see us would find it to their advantage to arrange for interviews by telephone before calling.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE,

JAMES F. KEIR,

Presiding Bishopric.

Conference Notices

Minnesota meets October 21 and 22 instead of October 22 and 23, as advertised. Lester Whiting.

Western Montana, at Deer Lodge, November 4, at 10 a. m. All officers and branches requested to have their reports in early. William J. Murray, secretary.

Spring River, at Purcell, Missouri, November 4 and 5. Mollie Davis, secretary, 115 West Jefferson Avenue, Pittsburg, Kansas.

Central Michigan, at Whittemore, October 28 and 29. J. F. Curtis is expected to be in attendance. George W. Burt, president.

Eastern Montana, at Andes, Montana, November 11 and 12. Mark C. Hutchinson, secretary; W. R. Hillman, president.

Kentucky and Tennessee at Oakland Branch, near Farmington, Kentucky, October 28. Send all communications and reports to president or secretary, by October 20. All coming by rail notify John Adair, Murray, Kentucky. All come and help transact necessary business. J. R. McClain, president; C. A. Nolan, secretary.

Kansas City Stake, at Central Church, Ninth Street and Lydia Avenue, November 11 and 12, convening at 2.30 p. m. the 11th. Reports from auxiliaries, ministry quorums, and delegate report from branches are to be in the hands of secretary not later than November 1. Do not send statistical reports. W. S. Brown, secretary, 1447 South Thirty-fifth Street, Kansas City, Kansas.

Convention Notices

Western Montana Sunday school, at Deer Lodge, November 3. Prayer meeting at 10.30 a. m. Business session and round table in afternoon. Program in evening. Mrs. G. W. Thorburn, superintendent; William J. Murray, secretary.

Southern Indiana Religio and Sunday school at Louisville, October 19. Goldie V. Brook, Jessie B. Mast, secretaries.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana Sunday school, at Saints' chapel, Coldwater, Michigan, October 20, at 10.30 a. m. R. G. McElhenie, secretary; Starr Corless, superintendent.

Eastern Montana Sunday school at Andes, Montana, November 10. Mrs. Mark C. Hutchinson, secretary.

Eastern Montana Religio at Andes, Montana, on the afternoon of November 10, previous to district conference. Mark C. Hutchinson, president; B. D. Stratton, secretary.

Reunion Notices

A brief explanation will be helpful to Saints in these parts scattered as they are, about the reunion situation at North Platte and Spearfish. Some weeks since Brother Gillen wrote me to connect up with J. W. Smith, which I did, and who suggested I set the Spearfish date in harmony with Brother Gillen's dates. His first open date being October 22, the Spearfish date is October 20 to 29. Brother Smith said theirs would be later if held. We will welcome any Saints finding it convenient to go to Spearfish. Full items appeared in Ensign of July 20, and HERALD of July 26. In both papers in first week of October there is supposed to be another. All going should write in advance. The trip over the Burlington is as fine in scenery as anything I have seen. Like the Rockies, only on a smaller scale. I may be addressed as below. See notice and comply. R. Etzenhouser, Spearfish, South Dakota.

Quorum Notices

Northern Michigan Quorum of Elders meets with the Northern District conference at Boyne City, November 4 and 5. Allen Schreur, secretary.

Two-Day Meetings

Gaylord, Michigan, October 21 and 22. Arrangements are being made for good speakers, and we expect an enjoyable time. Arthur E. Starks, president.

Addresses

A. B. Phillips, 70 Albion Street, Somerville, Massachusetts.

An Appeal to Our Missionaries

With the advent of the fall season it is brought to our mind that the summer with its reunions and special conventions accompanied by special field workers in the auxiliaries has passed and gone, and we trust that a great many of our districts have been greatly benefited by the work done by the special workers through the summer time and that they will have new life and ability for the fall and winter work. The benefits of these special workers should be manifold in the way of instruction as to proper ways and methods of pushing the work into new fields and maintaining it in the old places, inspiration to do better work and more of it through seeing the opportunities which lie before the society as well as in receiving real assistance in disposing of specific cases of difficulty which may have been hindering the local or district work.

There are, however, many of the districts who have not had the benefits of these special field workers from one cause or another and they are therefore somewhat at a disadvantage with those who have benefited by these opportunities and in thinking how these districts could be helped and placed upon a more equal footing with the other more fortunate ones the thought has occurred to me that this can be very well accomplished with the aid of our missionaries. In most cases the districts which have not had the special work are really the ones which are most in need of encouragement and instruction and as we have missionaries in practically all, if not all, of our Religio districts it seems they should be in position to render this aid very handily.

There is just this thought also in this connection; we like to look upon the Religio and Sunday school, etc., as auxiliary parts of the church whose aim should be always to promote, first of all, the general interests of the church of which they are a part and I am heartily in favor of this view of the matter and wish, at all times, to work so in harmony with the general church officers that our efforts may be in unison toward the great end the church has in view and for which it was established.

Now, if we, as a society are expected to and do work for the ultimate benefit of the church should not we be in position to ask for the help and support of those whom the church sends out to represent and further her interests? We do not want to be understood as intimating that we would ask of the missionaries anything which would interfere with their duty to the church first of all, for that is not in harmony with our thought, but in your work in the various districts you have a splendid opportunity to further the interests of the Sunday school and Religio work, and I know that many of the missionaries do this, but I would like to suggest that each one post himself more thoroughly on Religio matters, becoming familiar with the constitution and rules of the society and with the Religio Quarterlies so that as you go about you can be real field workers who will be in the district all of the time and who can counsel wisely with the local and district officers, advising them as to the best course to pursue and of ways that may suggest themselves to you for improvement.

When you see an opportunity for a new local, see that it is reported promptly to the district Religio president and in conjunction with him see if it cannot be organized and started off in such a live condition and with such a thorough understanding of the work that it will make a real asset to the Religio society and the church as well. We have seen a number of instances where societies were organized and not properly instructed and then left to battle with the odds—which usually results in failure or only partial success.

It is a fact that in some districts it seems very hard to find district officers who are qualified for the work and who understand it thoroughly themselves, and this is certainly a place where the missionary who wishes to help the Religio along can do some effective work. I do not mean by taking a district office, for I would advise against that except as a last resource, feeling that it will be much better for the Religio as well as for the church to train and educate the local workers to take care of the local work than to load it onto the missionaries, who, if they are looking after the interests of the church in a missionary way—and we feel that this is the aim of all of you—do not have the time to look after the details of a district officer's work in the Religio. This is not our idea, but if you will acquaint yourselves with the Religio constitution and the rules and aims of the society so that you can counsel with the district officers and advise them wisely as to how they should proceed and report to the proper general officer of the society any who may need special instruction and help that you may not have time to give or whom you feel the general officers should keep in special touch with, that service on your part will be felt for good to a wonderful extent in the Religio society in a short time in getting our district officers better qualified and more alive to their duties and opportunities.

We are in remembrance of that citation about the end which comes to the blind when they are led by the blind, and so feel that we ought to have live, intelligent leaders in our district societies, and would earnestly solicit your aid in educating them, or in helping the general Religio officers to do so. We have come to the conclusion that the best candidates for office in our society, either local, district or general are the ones who are competent, willing and have the time; but if one of these qualifications is missing we feel that it had better be the first, as, if the officer is willing and has the time, we should be able to educate him and make a good worker of him, but if he has the first qualification but lacks either the willingness to work or the time to do it, the work is bound to suffer. Will you help us in carrying out this idea, not only by advice at elections where you may be present, but in assisting us to educate those who may not be fully competent?

There is another matter which I would like to present to you and secure your help in, and that is to make the Religio more of a missionary asset. I have always felt that there are many people whom we could bring in touch with our work through their special talents which could be well utilized in the literary part of the Religio meetings. For instance, perhaps Mr. A. sings well, or plays some instrument, or is competent to talk on some topic of local interest to the community, but we have never been able to get him to attend our church meetings. Why not invite him to the Religio to display his talents and by judicious commendation of the effort and renewal of the invitation we can bring him in closer touch so that he will eventually learn that the church is not all that some say it is and we will be able to get him to come out to church services when we are holding special efforts or to the regular services. I believe there are many whom we could reach in a social way in this manner who would become somewhat acquainted with the books and teachings of the church through the lesson study and would thus have their prejudice removed sufficiently to permit them to listen to your efforts and receive benefit from them. Will you not help us try this out by encouraging the practice in the locals and recommending it in the district meetings?

I am sure that all missionaries understand that the Religio is willing to supply them free of charge with the Quarterlies and Constitutions, and in fact any other leaflet of instruction which the society issues, but if there are any who do not understand this we will be glad to arrange to supply them upon application to the president. We want your help and are willing to supply you with all the material we can to make your efforts easy and successful and we want to also be of assistance to you in your chief work and will always be very glad to hear from you as to any condition which may come to your attention which could be improved, with your recommendation as to how it may be remedied. If there is any feature of the work you do not thoroughly understand we shall be glad to assist you in any way we can or to refer you to ones who can.

May we not solicit your cooperation in making the Religio of more service to the church and to its members, particularly the young for whom it was chiefly designed, by making each local and each district more active—not by loading yourselves down with offices, but by helping us train good local officers so that whether you may be present or absent the work may go on successfully.

Sincerely,

G. S. TROWBRIDGE,

President Zion's Religio-Literary Society.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, 5032A Devonshire Avenue.

Information Wanted

The following names are listed on the records of the Condon, Oregon, Branch, yet their whereabouts are unknown to the officials thereof. Anyone knowing the whereabouts or the information that would lead to their location is requested to correspond with the clerk of said branch, whose name is appended herewith.

Paul H., Elvin A. and Floyd E. Penrod; Ulysses G. and Mary Walls; Minerva E. Carsner; Louisa E., Rose O., Tilda M. Fields; James A. Olney; Lonzo, Catherine, Leonard and Mabel McWillis; Charley White. MRS. B. C. LEGHORN.

Religio Home Department

William F. Sage, of 600 Lyncaste Street, Detroit, Michigan, has been appointed Assistant General Home Department Superintendent of the Religio Society, to take effect at once. Brother Sage has been asked to devote the most of his time to the work of the "Extension Circle," a correspondence system designed to get in touch with the isolated Saints. We heartily invite the cooperation of all interested. The time of the year is at hand when much good can be done for the isolated Saints. District home department superintendents are urged to begin now to increase their district enrollment by cooperating actively with all local officers, and to begin now to prepare to get their final reports in on time.

PLANO, ILLINOIS, Box 218.

FRANK F. WIPPER.

Woman's Auxiliary

Woman's Auxiliary of Eastern Michigan will hold a session at the convention held at Sandusky, Michigan, October 21. Will the secretaries of the locals oblige me by sending report as soon as possible, so I can get my report ready for the convention? Nettie M. Gault, secretary, 1505 West Fort Street, Detroit, Michigan.

Requests for Prayers

Brother R. Newby requests that the Saints fast and pray on the first Sunday of November for Sisters Powell, Mary Tomlinson, and Eva Brett, of Spokane, Washington, who have all been suffering for several years.

Sister Edna J. Cochran requests prayers for Sister Dora McMillian of Vancleave, Mississippi. She has had fever sixty days and is very sick indeed.

Died

BEEBE.—Angeline C. Runyan was born at Trumble, Ashtabula County, Ohio, June 8, 1841; daughter of Nicholas and Emily Runyan. She was married June 26, 1859, to Calvin A. Beebe. The same year she was baptized by E. C. Briggs. A few years after their marriage they moved to Council Bluffs where they afterwards made their home. Her husband died in 1903, since when some of the children have lived with her. She died September 18, 1916, at her home after a brief illness, though she had been in poor health for some years. She was the mother of eight children and of the immediate family there survive her: Walter W. Beebe, of Omaha, Mrs. F. W. Houghton, Mrs. F. M. Sheehy, and Mrs. F. Hoagland. Funeral at the home, September 20, at 10:30 a. m., J. A. Gillen in charge, sermon by Frederick M. Smith. Interment in Fairview Cemetery, Council Bluffs. Prayer at the grave by Frederick M. Smith. Sister Beebe was a consistent, constant and faithful member of the Council Bluffs Branch, and she will be greatly missed by them. Her pure, gentle, highly spiritual life was a preachment of virtue and a sustaining testimony of the Christian attributes. The vacancy left in the family and circle of friends by her demise will be keenly felt.

Book Reviews

HELL, OR THE PURPOSE AND DURATION OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.—By Elder Egerton K. Evans. Evans Printing Company, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Price 25 cents. Second and revised edition. A condensed exposition of this much-discussed subject. Announced as a result of years of careful thought by the writer who for years had entertained the orthodox ideas of this condition or place of punishment.

THE HOW-BOOK.—The new booklet issued by the church general Library Commission for library boards, by E. H. Fisher and Harold Gunsolley, "Issued by order of the Commission for instruction of library boards, librarians, and all engaged or interested in library work." A very necessary booklet for those working along those lines and others who should be. Distributed by this office or E. H. Fisher, 343 Medford Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts. Price, forty cents a dozen.

October "Everybody's Magazine"

Everybody's has features in each number that are highly worth while. The October number is an excellent one, with timely articles and clean fiction, with other special features and departments. The first of a series of separate stories by Booth Tarkington about Lucius Brutus Allen is a real gem. Illustrations and decorations are profuse. The subscription price is $1.50 a year, which may be sent to this office.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; Edward D. Moore, Assistant Editor. Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
Seek to End Polygamy	985
Famine as well as War	985
Don't Kill the Preacher	986
"California Dry"	986
Current Events	986
Notes and Comments	987
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
"Come Up Higher"—Part 2, by C. A. Butterworth	989
Records of the District President, by James E. Bishop	992
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
Egyptian Culture in Early America	993
THE STAFF
Gertrude Walker—Albert N. Hoxie—J. H. Tyrrell—Verna Brackenbury.	995
WOMAN'S AUXILIARY
H. F. Fairweather.	997
LETTER DEPARTMENT
Mable Knipschild—S. A. Burgess—Abel Hall.	999
NEWS FROM MISSIONS
J. R. Sutton—J. O. Dutton.	1002
NEWS FROM BRANCHES
Al J. Dickson.	1004
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT
	1005

The October "American Boy"

The greatest football coaches of American colleges and universities each contribute on winning gridiron play with diagrams and full explanations in American Boy for October. Percy Haughton, Gilmour Dobie and Glen Warner tell the high school football player how to succeed. The article is interesting, not only to players themselves, but to every football fan. James Willard Schultz, who has spent the greatest part of his life as a member of the Blackfeet Indian tribe, has another serial of true life history of a real Indian boy. It is called "The sacred buffalo hunt," and is a thrilling tale of adventure, giving a true and accurate picture of life on the plains before the white man's invasion of the West.

Clarence Budington Kelland's Halloween story is filled with laughs. Gardner Hunting is represented by another "Peter repeater" story. C. H. Claudy contributes a thrilling railroad story. There is also a football story by William Heyliger, a tale of the West by William MacLeod Raine and a story of the Southern cypress swamps by Archibald Rutledge.

"Indian games and how to play them," by El Comancho, will give the boys a new store of exciting games that will lend quickness and strength. "Excursions in experimental electricity," by Terrell Croft, is an accurate and scientific explanation of the elementary principles of electricity told in an interesting and entertaining style. "How you can make money this winter" is a series of letters telling how American Boys made money last winter, and will offer many suggestions to the ambitious boy. The usual departments give the boy something to do every spare minute of his time. Take a copy home to the boy. Price ten cents, $1.00 a year until November 10; after that $1.50 a year.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure

No Alum—No Phosphate

The Woman's Auxiliary Year Book

FOR 1916-1918

This book contains necessary information for those engaged in the Woman's Auxiliary work of the church. Every sister should get one. Price 20c. 35-tf Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, or Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Order from your nearest house to save postage.

TRUANTS. A one-act Religio comedy by John Preston. Three men (or boys) and 3 women (or girl) characters. Plot concerns a number of Religians who through some excuse or other have stayed home from meeting. The way it works out is amusing. Adapted to any audience or occasion. 34 pages, attractive cover, No. 38225c

OUR MISSIONARIES IN BIBLE LANDS. A compilation of interesting views of historic places in Palestine and Egypt, with descriptions, from photographs taken by Elder and Mrs. F. G. Pitt, instructive and interesting. No. E361, handsome heavy paper covers50c No. E362, cloth boards75c

Tonsils and Adenoids completely removed.

Dr. Joseph Mather, Specialist

in diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat.

Elders and family on ministerial allowance, work done free of charge.

Cataracts removed.

Work done in Independence Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri.

FOR SALE

Two acres of fine lying land, all set to young fruit just coming into bearing—new 6 room house, back plastered and finely finished. 2 never failing wells, new hen house 10 x 24. Located on South State St. Bargain for cash. E. F. Hall, Lamoni, Iowa. 31-tf

THE TWO-STORY BOOK. Two stories leading the reader to Latter Day Saintism, by Elbert A. Smith and Mary Leland Carter. There is sufficient action in these gospel tales to interest the reader from a human standpoint, and it is only a step from the humanity of the book to the divinity of it. No. 372, cloth55c

IN THE SHELTER OF THE LITTLE BROWN COTTAGE. The popular serial that ran in Stepping Stones during 1915, by the editor, Estella Wight. The leading character is not a Latter Day Saint at first, but eventually becomes so, and in the process a strong gospel story is told. Several characters in the book are shown laboring toward the truth, making this a fine, readable missionary medium. Cloth, 373 pages$1.25

THE PLEASURES OF THE WORLD. A three-act drama by John Preston, showing the effect of unwise discipline in a home. There are 12 characters, 6 male and 6 female. The play takes 2 hours to enact. A strong vein of comedy runs through the piece. Everywhere this play has been produced it has proved a success. Easy to present on any platform, as there is only one simple stage setting. Interesting as reading matter. 68 pages, paper binding, No. 38125c

BOOK OF MORMON TALKS. H. O. Smith, "Orion," understands the minds of boys and girls. In this interesting book he has told the whole Book of Mormon story, briefly and simply, around the family circle; making the father of two inquisitive, thoughtful boys and girls the chief conversationalist. There is a delightful simplicity about these talks, and a homeliness that will perpetuate their popularity among Latter Day Saints. No. 365, cloth60c

On One Burlington Ticket

You can see the most of the best of the National Park wonders in America and take a 4-in-1 vacation.

You can visit Yellowstone, via the new Cody Road—through the heart of the "Buffalo Bill" country—the only auto route into the Park; Glacier Park—there is nothing else in the world like it; Rocky Mountain-Estes Park, a mountain playground for little folks and big—and Colorado.

I wish you would drop in the next time you are passing by and let me tell you more about this wonderful trip. I am here to serve you. Let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

SEND FOR NEW PRICE LIST OF BOOKS AND SUPPLIES

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 63

LAMONI, IOWA, OCTOBER 18, 1916

NUMBER 42

Editorial

WEDDED TERMS--TRUTH AND FREEDOM

(College Day address, by Elbert A. Smith, Sunday morning, October 1, 1916, at Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Winsome L. Smith.)

The term freedom is very broad, and I believe that when Jesus said, Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free, he meant that in every sense, without any reservation, with all that it contemplates in its fivefold dominion, freedom at every point is dependent upon knowledge of the truth.

Jesus said: "ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

In this statement the Master predicates freedom on knowledge of the truth. He makes freedom one of the blessings or conditions that follow a knowledge of the truth. It is of course, only one of the blessings that follow a knowledge of the truth.

The old statement, "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise," is a fool's proverb. There can be no permanent happiness without the knowledge of the truth. And I think that Jesus certainly laid down a very profound principle when he said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

FREEDOM FIVEFOLD

One of the prominent educators of the day, I think it is Professor Ross, says that freedom is fivefold in its nature: Physical, political, religious, intellectual, and economic.

Physical freedom is that which we struggle for first of all. Men do not want to be bound in body; they resent chains or bands of any kind on their persons. They do not want to be confined in dungeons, or in cells. For that reason one of the most used modes of punishment is to confine individuals, to take away their physical freedom.

And next perhaps, we begin to struggle for political freedom. Man's struggle for political freedom is as old as history, older probably than profane history. There has always been some Patrick Henry to cry out, "Give me liberty or give me death," and to add, "If that be treason, make the most of it."

But associated with that struggle for political freedom there has been the struggle for religious freedom, and side by side with the names of the patriots of all nations, Garibaldi, Lafayette, Washington, Kosciuszko, and all others, are placed the names of those who have struggled for religious freedom, and certainly they are no less illustrious: Luther, Wesley, Huss, Melancthon, Joseph Smith, and all those who lived and died in the interests of that which they believed to be religious freedom—the privilege that the Pilgrim Fathers prized so highly, to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences.

Associated with this there has been the struggle for intellectual freedom, in which scientists and philosophers and educators of every type have given their lives. Of course all of this is associated with the struggle for political, religious and intellectual freedom, for really there is only one freedom, and it includes all of these.

And last of all comes the struggle for economic freedom, that you and I are witnessing to-day, and to which we are parties; the struggle to do away with poverty, penury, inequality, injustice, excessive toil, and the bondage that men come under in their effort to obtain a livelihood.

THE BROAD DOMAIN OF FREEDOM

So we discover then that the term freedom is very broad in its comprehension, much more so than we at first might think. And I believe that Jesus meant that, in every sense, without any reservation, freedom, with all that it contemplated in this fivefold dominion, at every point is dependent upon knowledge of the truth.

Take as an illustration a child that has been in chains all its life until it reaches twenty-one years of age, one we will say that has been physically bound down. Then suddenly strike those chains from off its limbs. We might do that but we would not set the child free. It would still be bound down to the chair where it had been confined during all those years, and until it learned for itself the principles of locomotion, muscular contraction, and balance, all those things that are involved in walking it would not be free, but would have to learn the truth about certain physical matters for itself.

We might carry that illustration through all these domains of human freedom.

FROM REPRESSION TO ANARCHY

During the Reign of Terror in France, the masses rose up against the aristocrats and sought to free themselves from political domination and religious oppression. But they were not free, because they did not have the truth. They went at once to the other extreme, and in place of political repression they had anarchy; and in the place of that which might be considered religious oppression they went into atheism, and their last estate was worse than their first, until finally they obtained enough knowledge of the truth to come out of that condition.

So we might discover that in every field of activity men must know the truth before they can be free.

A DEFINITION OF TRUTH

The truth itself is also very broad in its comprehension, as a term. Pilate put to Christ the question, "What is truth?" Pilate had the learning of Rome and Greece to help him answer, but he came to Jesus to get the answer, and he came to the right place.

"What is truth?" We have a definition of truth. There are many of them, but this one definition appears in a passage I will read from the Doctrine and Covenants: "Truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come."

I think that is very comprehensive, and very true. When we have a knowledge of any particular subject as it is to-day, and as it has been in the past, and can add an intelligent forecast of the future, we have the truth pertaining to that particular subject. The future, of course is a subject that is known to God only; we can understand it only as we form a correct estimate of what is likely to occur from our knowledge of things as they are and as they have been, and as the spirit of truth may reveal to humanity things that are to come.

By the aid of these two methods, we may get a very great knowledge of things as they are to be, and so arrive at least at relative truth, though we may not come into the possession of absolute truth until we see as we are seen, and know as we are known, and no longer look through a glass darkly.

Truth is at the base of our freedom, and everything else that is good and perfect in this life and the life to come. "The glory of God is intelligence; or in other words, light and truth." But we might ask ourselves the question, "How are we to come into possession of truth?" Well, we are reminded first of all that Jesus Christ, in John 16: 13, said, "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come."

"You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." But "when the spirit of truth is come, he shall guide you into all truth."

FOLLOW THE GUIDE

Some may take that to mean that we are to sit down and the spirit of truth will bring all truth to our knowledge, but I call your attention to the fact that Jesus said that the Spirit was to be a guide into all truth. If you start out and try to follow a guide in a dangerous and rough and unknown country, it will require a great deal of exertion on your part. The guide will do his part; but you have to do your part. And so when we strike out into an exploration of truth it requires the most strenuous effort on the part of humanity to follow and to accompany the divine guide that God sends, that Jesus has termed the spirit of truth. And, as we are told in the Doctrine and Covenants, we are to seek learning by study as well as by faith.

First of all, then, we find that the greatest assistance that we are to receive in this struggle after truth, is the help of the Holy Spirit. Any system of education that ignores that divine guidance is destined to fail to ever arrive at a complete knowledge of the truth. That is the reason that so many in the world to-day, as Paul says, are ever learning, but never coming to a knowledge of the truth.

PULPIT, PRESS, SCHOOL

But aside from this there are three great leading institutions that assist individuals to come to the truth: The pulpit, the press, and the school. I believe the history of the church shows that we have not ignored any one of these three, but almost from our beginning as a church, have sought to utilize the forces that are potent and potential in all three of these institutions.

First of all the pulpit: It goes without saying that we have utilized the pulpit. Beginning with the 11th day of April, 1830, when Oliver Cowdery delivered the first public sermon ever preached by one of our men, until this day, we have declared the truth from the pulpit as we have had opportunity.

We have not ignored the press. As early as 1832 we established The Evening and the Morning Star in Independence. That publishing house was destroyed by the mob. Later we established the Messenger and Advocate, in Kirtland, and still later the Times and Seasons in Nauvoo, the Millennial Star in England, and in 1860 we started the SAINTS'

HERALD, and since then a great many other publications. We have utilized the press.

Other pulpits cannot deliver the message that we have to deliver. Other presses cannot deliver the message that we have to deliver. Of course, we read other publications, other religious papers, but they do not answer our needs, we must have our own.

And we have also availed ourselves of the school as an educator. As early as 1830 we began to establish schools in Kirtland, and the elders received a course of lectures, and formed themselves into a school.

In the history of Caldwell County, Missouri, published by the Saint Louis Historical Society, the statement is made that the first buildings that the "Mormons" erected in Missouri were schoolhouses, and that there were many school-teachers among them.

When we moved to Nauvoo, and the charter of Nauvoo, a very liberal document, was drafted, one of the provisions of the charter, as granted by the State Legislature, was that there should be a university established in Nauvoo; and there was some work done along that line, though of course it was never completed because the city did not endure long enough to carry out the plans.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

And finally in the Reorganized Church, we have Graceland College, established here in Lamoni, to carry out our ideals. We avail ourselves of other schools, it is true, but we believe that in this institution, and the influences surrounding it, our young people may be brought in touch with our ideals as they cannot be in any other school.

A year or so ago I delivered the College Day address in Omaha. I told the people there that we have several institutions in Lamoni that can be seen for a considerable distance. I see them a long way as I come to Lamoni on the train, and they are typical institutions. Graceland College on the hill, stands for education. The old Brick Church here stands for religion. And the Herald Office stands for the power of the press. And to throw in good measure, I told them that the water tower stood for temperance. And so a little later when one of the teachers in the Sunday school asked the class of little ones what temperance was, one of them answered, "Temperance is a water tower. I know, because Brother Smith said so."

Temperance is more than a water tank, that is simply a symbol, otherwise we have a great many temperance towns that in fact are far from temperate.

BE NOT "QUITTERS"

And so the college is a symbol. But unless we sustain it financially, so that its doors may be opened, and so that it may continue to do its work, it will not long be a symbol of education; but it will stand for a failure on the part of this people to accomplish a certain thing that it started out to accomplish. If there is one thing that I like to do, it is that when I start to do a thing I like to stick to it until it is done. I despise to undertake a thing and then quit it before it is finished; and as a people I think that having undertaken this work we should stay with it with all our force, and not come under the opprobrium that attaches to "the quitter," one who begins a thing and then has not the force and courage to carry it out.

AN APPEAL TO LAMONI SAINTS

We have Graceland College. We have argued in the past that it is not a local institution. It is general in the sense that its benefits may be enjoyed by anyone anywhere in the country who is willing to avail himself of its benefits. Of course, it is local in the sense that it must be located somewhere, and it is located here at Lamoni; and it follows as a natural consequence that Lamoni will be in position to receive many benefits from it.

And so in asking for your help for Graceland College to-day, when the collection is taken up, I am going to appeal to you on several grounds, and I will take the very lowest ground first of all, and work up.

You remember that when those professors were here from the University of Missouri, and were entertained in the coliseum by the commercial club, one of them said that Graceland College is more valuable to Lamoni than any factory that we could possibly induce to locate here, taking it just from a financial and a commercial standpoint. The advertisement that it gives us, the influence that it brings, the number of students who come here and spend their money, and the faculty, all combined, in his mind made it a more valuable institution than any factory that we could induce to locate here.

Now you know if there were some prospect of a factory being located in Lamoni, the business men would be very earnest in offering inducements to that institution. They would give it financial assistance and inducements of various kinds. We do not have to induce the college to come here, we have it already, and all that remains for us to do is to support it liberally, as we have done in the past, realizing that it is a valuable investment for the community from a financial and a commercial standpoint.

I think that is the lowest and most mercenary ground upon which we could appeal to you in regard to Graceland College, though that is not mercenary when we do it in the proper sense, that we avail ourselves of every instrument that will help us to build up a strong and well-to-do community here, with the idea that we may accomplish good for the whole church with the influence that we obtain.

Then there comes the selfish reason to a certain extent, that of the interest we have in our children. Graceland College offers us right here at our doors an opportunity for our children to stay at home, under home influences, and obtain the first two years of college education. Graceland College now is a junior college, the only one in Iowa, a pioneer along that line. Some one commented on the fact that we have a very large percentage of last year's graduating high school class in Graceland College this year.

What a fine thing for Lamoni that we can graduate our children from our high school and send them a few blocks to the college for their first two years of college work, and they can stay right at home, have the economy that can thus be obtained, and the influences of the home around them while they obtain the first two years of their college education.

Last of all we appeal to you from the high standard. Lamoni, as we have pointed out before, is a city set on a hill, in a religious and educational sense, a central gathering point, and Graceland College is one of the instruments that helps us to shed our light abroad in all lands: one of the instruments, or teachers of truth. It will enable boys and girls from all parts of the world to grow up, having obtained a knowledge of the truth, both along intellectual and religious lines, something that could not be offered in other quarters perhaps.

A LETTER FROM PRESIDENT BRIGGS

As to the present status of the college and its prosperity in certain lines at least, I will read a letter written to me by Brother Briggs, president of the college, dated September 26, of the present year, in answer to an inquiry that I presented to him.

PRESIDENT E. A. SMITH,
Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother Elbert: In compliance with your request I am giving you the following figures relative to the attendance at Graceland College at the present time as compared with October 1 of last year:

This is the first time in the history of the institution when the college department itself is the largest one. As you know, we have four departments: College, Academy, Commercial and Studio. Heretofore the college department has usually ranked third, but at the present time, the first in the history of the institution, it ranks first.

The following figures will be of interest:

Nonresident college students have increased this year over last year 155 per cent. Resident college students have increased this year over last year 31 per cent, while all college students have increased 77 per cent over last year. There is an increase of 23 per cent over last year in all of the departments. We feel very much encouraged and believe that you will be interested in these figures.

G. N. BRIGGS.

You will notice according to this letter that the college has four departments; the studio, which of course is the department of music; the commercial department, which teaches shorthand and typewriting, bookkeeping, etc; the academy, which is preparatory, something along the line of the high school, preparing students for higher education; and last of all the college, which gives the first two years proper of college education.

You will notice that for the first time in the history of the college, the college department leads in point of attendance. When you analyze that, it is very encouraging, and you will notice that the percentage of attendance in all the departments and in the college as a whole, among both resident and non-resident students, is higher than it was last year.

We will not have any trouble to get the students. We will not have any trouble to get consecrated men and women for the faculty. Our only trouble will be to get the finances with which to conduct the college and loosen its hands so that it can do its work.

I will leave this matter with you, and trust that when the appeal comes for help you will respond generously and freely to support this college; one of the three instruments that we use in spreading the truth abroad, under the direction and divine assistance of the Holy Spirit, which is to guide us into all truth.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

WHY NOT A PENSION?—The Illinois Retail Dealers' Association recently decided to ask the legislature to pay saloon keepers for the loss of business occasioned by closing during an election. Why not ask for pension for those who are put out of business by such elections?

SUCCESSFUL CONFERENCE.—On the 14th and 15th the Lamoni Stake conference was held at Lamoni. This was perhaps the most remarkable conference ever held in the stake. The very windows of heaven seemed to open and pour out spiritual blessings at the prayer meetings, while the business sessions were peaceful and satisfactory. The sessions were marked by a high degree of intellectuality. Perhaps our local correspondent will give us details next week.

SAFELY ARRIVED.—Brother Peter Muceus and wife with their five boys, arrived in Lamoni on the 13th, after about fifteen years' residence in Scandinavia where Brother Muceus had been under missionary appointment. The boys do not understand English except the oldest one, who has had some training in English in the schools. The family hope to locate in Lamoni. They did not hear of the submarine disturbances off the Atlantic Coast until after their arrival in New York on the Frederick VIII.

Original Articles

PREDESTINATION--FOREORDINATION

And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified. What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?—Romans 8: 28-31.

According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will.—Ephesians 1: 4, 5.

Superficial judgment, based upon tradition or gross perversion of this and other scriptures, by theologians of the Calvinist and other old school interpreters, should not be permitted to engender doubts as to the soundness of Paul's statements of God's plan of dealing with the human family.

A careful and just analysis will, in the writer's opinion, reveal no inconsistency with other scriptures that tell us that God is "no respecter of persons," or that he can be justly accused of favoritism; but that Paul's statements are the result of an inspiration that can be relied upon as being true to the order of God in human affairs.

In Ephesians 1: 4, 5, we are confronted with the statement concerning the doctrine of preexistence; a doctrine as yet under discussion in the church, but which in the mind of the writer, is capable of being sustained as being both a reasonable as well as a scriptural assumption.

To make proper use of the whole text of Paul's statement upon this subject is to form a concrete whole of sufficient credibility for rational minds who have entered into covenant relation with Almighty God, through a restoration in our day, of this "covenant," which has been pronounced "everlasting" in its nature.

"If any man" having the opportunity to know what the design and will of God is, elects to "do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." Knowledge acquired by practical and personal experiences is the challenge to a skepticism that is born of and nourished by the partial or superficial view which inexperience or lack of acquaintance always fosters and encourages; and my own life experiences, I conclude, must be the foundation upon which I base my religious faith or beliefs.

The "righteousness" or rightness of God's methods is revealed in the ultimate results that follow the acts that a genuine faith must produce, or as it is written, "from faith to faith."

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth" etc. "If any man will do . . . he shall know." "This is life eternal, to know" that God is dealing with us in a direct manner and according to previous contract.

The beginning of this revelation of the "righteousness," or, rightness of God's methods, made its first reasonable appeal to me, as I now remember, when, in the reading and study of the claims of the Book of Mormon I found that according to the statement of Alma, as recorded in the sixteenth chapter of his book a "desire to believe" was acceptable to God, and, finding myself through past experiences in possession of a "desire to believe," for as yet I was not ready to assume the role of a "believer," but nevertheless I was encouraged to foster this "desire" by prayer and serious reflection, and gradually there stole in upon my soul's consciousness the permanency of a "belief" whose foundations were laid in God, and this belief being encouraged and fostered by serious attempt to purge my life from things worldly or unprofitable gradually assumed the proportions and stability of a genuine "faith," or "assurance" that Alma's beautiful "experiment" was a success and confirmed by the evidences which the changed life was producing, not to speak at length of a peace which words would fail to describe.

But to return to Paul's statement: Whom he did predestinate, he also called. I have before, or at other times stated that the "call" of the preachers and "exhorters" of the day, at "revivals" in church, at camp meetings or elsewhere had failed to impress me or furnish me with reasonable conviction as to their association with an authorized message from the Almighty, of the existence of such a being as they represented him to be; and who was not only responsible for my existence, but my intellectual as well as my bodily needs, and which they, nor their creeds were able to supply, and fostering in the mind of the writer a suspicion or doubt, not only as to the correctness of their theology, but also, as to the moral as well as the intellectual effect upon their conscience and their life in many regards, and of separating me from association with some men of good intention whose imperfect religious training and education had led them to assume a defense of a God, and a creed, or misrepresentation of him, a defense for the most part not of reason, justice, mercy or love, but by the authority and dictum of the outcome of centuries of religious and bloody quarrels, and by and through which nothing could be settled by a universal or common consent, but by the contention only of a more or less restricted community under whose environment, teaching and preponderating religious influence or atmosphere I was born and reared, and not until I was brought in contact with the angel's message did I begin to realize and sense in a practical way what "faith in God" really meant, or that I was acquiring something really stable in regard to religious affairs.

And so on, "faith to faith" was I being led and made stronger and stronger all the while; faith, as a means of learning or of acquiring wisdom about God, a gift only acquired and retained by service, prayer and a constant watching and study of "the word" which still contained many unsolved problems, yet still was proving to be a divine alembic or crucible in the dissolution of doubt, and that having espoused a faith that permitted the Almighty to explain himself in a personal and direct manner to me in the order assigned by Paul, viz, "from faith to faith"—faith to-day, knowledge to-morrow—the test of faith succeeding upon another day and again followed by explanation and a new knowledge and immense satisfaction; and so on from day to day I was becoming assured that it was God, and no man that had "called" me unto an acquaintance with him, or his ways, or method of "salvation," or to know what the term salvation really meant.

We are told that man was in the beginning with God, an intellectual, and logically responsible agency to act for itself, as all intelligence also (Doctrine and Covenants 90:5). An unintelligent existence is nonexistence, so far as man is concerned, or not worth while, as I would put it. But that he may have been, before his advent upon this stage of existence, subjected to intelligent experiences with the privilege of choice in matters relating to his interests seems to follow in logical order, and not unreasonable to the writer. This is not urged as doctrine or an authoritative explanation of the canon, but I am trying only to defend Paul and the Bible through my own experience.

"Whom he did predestinate he also called," that is, God knew something about the chances that might attach to man's future history and that it was to be a part of his plan in regard to the completed product through assimilation of power which an intelligent experience with a body in earth life and a correspondence through experience with its vicissitudes alone might furnish.

It becomes then, a vital and important truth to me, that I have been called according to his purpose, and not the plan, or plans of men; and why not add, according to a foreknowledge upon his part?

"For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate, to be conformed to the image of his Son." This could only be accomplished through acquaintance, association with, or a knowledge of, through the means thus furnished and employed; thus commanding the title of brethren, or, the "first born among many brethren."

If predestination and calling, effectual calling, as the creed has it, is to be maintained, it must be followed by a practical application of the doctrine of justification, for, "whom he called, he also justified," therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord, Jesus Christ, and the method or plan by which only true and lasting faith is acquired. (Romans 5:1.)

Faith is the gift of God. Religious beliefs upon which men often depend for salvation cannot be and are not supported by arguments or methods that are "justified" by those that employ them.

"Truth cleaveth unto truth, light unto light, intelligence unto intelligence": therefore the doctrine of "justification by faith" which is "the gift of God"; as against human opinions when accompanied by works of obedience to his counsel becomes "a very wholesome doctrine and full of comfort," in a world distracted by religious quarrels and difference of opinion.

Because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth.—2 Thessalonians 2:13.

And such were some of you; but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God.—1 Corinthians 6:11.

Celestial glory, the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, cannot be attained by a large admixture of human creeds and opinions that give weight and preponderance to error in sufficient proportions that may lead to a denial of the doctrines of Christ, and thus render "void the law" only through which a knowledge of what "salvation" really is, to be had.

It would be a stupendous conceit, and an untruth if we, as Latter Day Saints, were to assume that our better insight into the ways of God were the result of our superior inherited or acquired intellectual endowment, accretion of human wisdom or learning. There is something vital and fundamental back of all that which the world, and perhaps we, do not as fully understand sometimes as well as might be good for us to understand. "My sheep hear my voice," and "whether by my voice or the voice of my servants, it is the same." (Doctrine and Covenants 1:3, 8.) And doctrinally we have nothing to fear, or that we should be ashamed of in the assumption of our "calling" as actual ministers for Jesus Christ, and the truth that will make the people free from the confusion and danger of disaster to the religious hopes of the world we are now living in.

The truth that makes us free indeed is the gift of God; its agency for conveyance is the Holy Ghost, the very essence and spirit of truth, God's gift to the true discipleship only.

The gospel only is the power of God unto salvation; and it is very clear that a fractional part of the race inhabiting our globe ever have had or ever will have an opportunity to hear it in this life.

We should also note here that the work of elimination does not stop with the call, but as it is written, both in ancient and modern times, many are called, but few are chosen. The chosen are only those who prove themselves worthy and faithful and the elimination of the fatalism of the decree of Calvin and other well-meaning misrepresentatives of Jesus Christ.

To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness; that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.—Romans 3: 26.

I never felt, as a young man, under any condemnation for the rejection of an association of Jesus Christ with popular beliefs and articles of faith which must be subscribed to before salvation could be secured.

To disentangle and separate Jesus Christ and the word which we had been taught to believe from the widely divergent views as to a dependable rule of belief or action, that exist in the world to-day, our vision must be cleared. A defense of Jesus Christ as being the only Savior, and fully accredited messenger of God to the race, the work of elimination of the old leaven, of tradition, superstition, and beliefs that are not grounded in an appeal to our reason and the cultivation of a more intimate association with the power of the Holy Ghost will have to go on until the chosen messengers of God are able to present a solidarity of explanation that shall absolutely complete our justification for being a believer in Jesus.

I am then unwilling to believe that God did not understand his business when he permitted such conditions to exist as made it possible, first, that only those who heard the gospel could obey it, or be saved by its provisions, either here or hereafter; and it would also savor of assumption to be found charging God, as we said at first, with favoritism or partiality in denying the heathen the call to gospel salvation in this present world or state of affairs, and it is only when we consider our brief sojourn here as a very small section of life, only a part of the great program, that we get a proper poise and vision of God's plan of possibilities.

The promise of salvation that Peter had to offer on Pentecost was conditioned upon previous arrangement, as we view matters.

We are not going to say that any, or all, for that matter, that confronted Peter were incapable of "repentance," or of being baptized, but it remains a fact that they and a majority of the religious communities rejected not only Peter's, but John's baptism as well, and I am going to leave the subject with the statement that Peter aligns himself with Paul, and myself, when he said, "For the promise (of the Holy Ghost, the messenger of truth) is to you and to your children,"—all of you? No! but "to them that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." The promise and the call becoming thus intimately associated, and an even number suggests also another or an odd number.

"He that hath ears to hear." It actually seems to the writer that many are born without the right kind of an equipment in the matter of ears for adjustment to gospel requirement; but yet we must continue to sow the seed of the word of the kingdom of God—though much of it be wasted and lost, according to the parable of Jesus so far as present fruitage is concerned; but as a "witness" to the nations that all the promises of God are yea and amen in Christ Jesus, in the provisions made in our day for the fulfilling of the promise and prediction that this gospel of the kingdom should be as preached and for the purpose particularly designated, as well as for a final cross examination in a future day of judgment, in which the word and the deed are to be joined as important witnesses.

If then an effectual, practical calling will alone furnish results that can in reason and scripture be defended, universal experience has shown that it is not what the world might call an intellectual or even, as it might appear, an already attained moral equipment that answers the call of the Almighty to a full gospel service.

"Not many wise men, nor noble, hath God called," is Paul's affirmation.

"Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath God not chosen the poor of this world, but rich in faith" (evidence) or assurance, not fear, or traditional beliefs that defy both scripture and reason. This is the statement of the Apostle James also, and we can but be impressed with the harmony of the statements of these great men with the results of our observations and experiences.

To use a personal illustration, my own fleshly relatives, many of them my equals or superiors in intellectual endowment or conformity to the rule of a morally upright life, yet upon them the avalanche of either scriptural or reasonable argument of the superlative and supernatural claims of the practical gospel program of life, seems, or is treated as an idle or superstitious tale, or with a disposition to shun a complete and fair analysis that marks the universal course of rejection of the message of Almighty God to the soul of man, and the power to see its beauty seems somehow to be withheld, and so, to quote again:

"For whom he did foreknow," that is, God knew more about us a long time ago than we or our friends are now conscious of; "for whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate," "Prearrange," "to be conformed" to the rule of a greater measure of life accomplishment, and at this particular period in our existence than that which he had foreplanned for others. No favoritism, no respecter of persons in the plans of the Almighty, but "he that feareth God and worketh righteousness according to environment and opportunity; we must believe in justice, that such are accepted with him and owned and blessed of him under the rule of service assigned and performed. The dangers that attach to the failure in attaining the glory which is of the superlative type unto which we may be called, and the disaster that follows the fall from these heights, as is shown by present-day history, the extra service that seems to be imposed; separation from the convenient and easy life of the average religious performer, a life of self-denial concerning the things that we would naturally want to do, to be ostracized, to be willing if called upon to make for ourselves "no reputation," and submit to ignorance and misrepresentation of the purest and best motives that we are capable of being susceptible to; to persecution perhaps through persistence in following the real and not the emasculated Christ of the creed.

To this service are we, as Saints of the latter days called, now! A later call may, and doubtless will, furnish opportunity to test others, but our challenge to step out of the throng and the masses who crowd the broad way, is now!

M. H. BOND.

* * * * *

ZION IN AFRICA

Many attempts have been made to locate Zion, the city of Enoch. Beyond a doubt it was situated in the first land of promise, where dwelt Adam and all the people of God.

And Enos, [grandson of Adam and son of Seth] and the residue of the people of God, came out of the land which was called Shulon, (doubtless where Eden was located) and dwelt in a land of promise, which he called after his own son, whom he had called Cainan.—Genesis 6: 15, I. T.

According to this text all the people of God emigrated into a promised land, which owing to the primitive means of travel, was not far from the original Eden. Adam was about three hundred and twenty-five years old at the time of this emigration.

This promised Cainan was the native land of Enoch.

And he said unto them, I came out from the land of Cainan, the land of my fathers, a land of righteousness unto this day.—Genesis 6: 43, I. T.

This was about three hundred years later, and when Adam was about six hundred and twenty-five years old. At that time Enoch was on a missionary journey by the east coast and south of Cainan.

And it came to pass as I journeyed from the land of Cainan by the sea east, I beheld a vision.—Genesis 6: 44, I. T.

Afterward he beheld another vision and looked northward to see his native Cainan.

And again the Lord said unto me, Look, and I looked toward the north and I beheld the people of Cainan, which dwelt in tents.—Genesis 7: 6, I. T.

While on this missionary journey, Enoch exercised such faith that

The earth trembled, and the mountains fled, even according to his command. And the rivers of water were turned out of their course, and the roar of the lions was heard out of the wilderness. . . . There also came up a land out of the depths of the sea; and so great was the fear of the enemies of the people of God, that they fled and stood afar off, and went upon the land which came up out of the depths of the sea.—Genesis 7: 15-18, I. T.

There are a number of points of location that we desire to emphasize.

1. "Dwelling in tents" indicates a warm country.
2. "Lions" indicate a tropical country.
3. "The sea east" where people dwelt in tents and where lions roam about, could not have been the Atlantic coast of North America and scarcely the coast of China east of Asia.

4. "The land out of the depths of the sea," could scarcely be Japan, for that country is too cold. There is no east coast of Europe and the country is too cold for lions. There is no land off the east coast of South America and lions are not native to that country. But, the island of Madagascar off the east coast of Africa could well be that land. No other warm east coast meets the requirement, and no other eastward island answers the description.

Returning northward and eastward where Enoch had come from, it should not be a difficult matter to locate the land of Cainan. But we have a fuller description yet and one that agrees with the foregoing. This time it is not a historical account, but the word of the Lord.

And the people of Cainan shall divide themselves in the land, and the land shall be barren and unfruitful, and none other people shall dwell there, but the people of Cainan; for behold, the Lord shall curse the land with much heat, and the barrenness thereof shall go forth forever.—Genesis 7: 9, I. T.

This description is complete. The Desert of Sahara in Africa is the hot and barren country—the only hot country not now inhabited lying northwest of Madagascar.

There the city of Zion was built by Enoch after his return from the missionary journey to the east coast. There lived his son Methuselah and his grandson Lamech, father of Noah.

Not far away was Eden, doubtless in Central Africa, where the rivers flow in four directions, the Nile being one of them, some others perhaps being turned out of their course.

In Cainan lived Adam, Seth, Enos, Cainan, Mahalaleel and Jared, father of Enoch.

When Adam was six hundred and eighty-seven years old Enoch founded the city of Zion. That was the year Methuselah, his son, was born. Each of these men helped to perfect Zion. Doubtless to Adam and Seth belonged the honor of establishing righteousness in Zion, as well as to Enoch.

The city existed three hundred and sixty-five years on earth. (Genesis 7:76.) At the time of its departure Enoch was four hundred and thirty years old (Genesis 7:78). Adam had been dead one hundred and twenty-two years, having lived in Zion two hundred and forty-three years. Noah was not born until four years after Zion was taken. Methuselah and Lamech were not taken up with Zion, neither were Seth, Enos, Cainan, Mahalaleel, or Jared. All of these outlived Zion. Why any but Methuselah were not taken is not recorded. (Genesis 7:9, I. T.)

Evidently Enoch was the bishop of the church. The building of a city pertains to the financial rather than the spiritual arm of the church. The modern Order of Enoch recognized the bishop as its head. Paul's description of the powers of a bishop to "convince gainsayers" certainly was complete in Enoch.

Enoch was also a seer (Genesis 6:40), which also indicates the work of a bishop. Ammon informed King Limhi, when speaking of the Urim and Thummim, called by them interpreters, that "whoso is commanded to look in them the same is called a seer." Enoch must therefore have possessed a similar instrument, something to make him a seer.

Aaron was the bishop of the church—the head of the Aaronic priesthood. To him pertained the right of the Urim and Thummim, although Moses at that time was president of the high priesthood. That right fell to Eleazar, his son, and successor, rather than to Joshua the successor, in part, to Moses. As late as Samuel and David the ephod with the Urim and Thummim attached, was in possession of the high priesthood rather than the prophet. In the Aaronic line inherited the right to the Urim and Thummim.

In the Book of Mormon times those who held the Urim and Thummim did not hold the higher priesthood.

Joseph Smith was not yet ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood while in possession of the Urim and Thummim.

The counselor of Jared rather than Jared himself possessed it. Of course the president of the higher priesthood has the ordained right to act in all the offices of the church and the authority to use the Urim and Thummim. He, too, is a seer and in him centers all authority in the church, but the primary right of the Urim and Thummim inheres in the lesser priesthood.

When Enoch founded Zion, Adam was then the president of the priesthood of the Son of God and lineal priesthood being then as now, the order in the church, was doubtless succeeded by Seth, who outlived Enoch.

But as bishop he had a right to the Urim and Thummim and to found, in harmony with Adam and Seth, the city of Zion.

This may suggest some further light on the work of the bishop and show some further use of the Urim and Thummim.

I am confident therefore that Eden was in Africa, and not far away, the promised land of Cainan with Zion as the center stake. Also that the ark was built by Noah in that country but floated, during the flood, to Asia and landed on Ararat.

Perhaps also the pyramids were built by these people before the flood. Indeed a very clear tradition among the sons of Israel—the Arabians—is, that the great pyramid was the tomb of Seth. There may be more weight to that than to some supposed recent discoveries. The third dynasty in which they were builded was doubtless from Adam rather than from the founding of Egypt. Harmsworth's History of the World, article "Egypt" says: "The pyramids were built during the third dynasty and certainly three thousand and possibly near five thousand years before Christ."

The above history in eight volumes was edited and written by fifteen of the leading scientists of the present day, and so far as science goes carries more weight than the carelessly written histories of Egypt and Babylon.

J. W. PETERSON.

Of General Interest

CHURCH PAPER ETHICS

Some one interested in advertising ethics has recently completed a survey of the religious publications of the South, and has ascertained that out of 108 periodicals, only thirteen have made any effort to exclude fake advertisements from their columns, while the rest are full of cancer cures, tuberculosis cures, baby killing soothing sirups and habit forming preparations, including medicines founded on goose grease and other well-known lubricants of the human system.

If there is any place where advertising ethics should be observed, it is in the publications dedicated to the scourger of those who contaminated the temple.

Christianity and Lydia Pinkham in parallel columns present a curious spectacle.

Why, it may be asked, should fake advertising be a speciality of southern religious publications rather than of northern, when the South is generally considered to be more universally religious than the North and to take religion more seriously?

The answer has to do in part with the sectional position of the South, which is behind in nearly every phase of moral consciousness, and tolerates fake advertisements just as it forms the last refuge of child labor.

But every newspaper will recognize that the strength of will required to cleanse the advertising columns is dependent upon a sound financial condition. Some newspapers take advertisements of a shady character because they want to make all the money they can, in any way they can. But in general, newspapers are cleaned up as rapidly as their financial condition will permit, once the fundamental idea of cleanliness has been accepted.

The South is still shaky on fundamentals, and its religious publications feel the pinch of poverty. If the church would support them more adequately, or if the church would work for a consolidation which would establish the surviving periodicals on a sound basis, the work of reclaiming the advertising columns from opium compounds and cancer cures would be wondrously simplified.—Des Moines Register, September 25, 1916.

* * * * *

CREATING THE APPETITE

An officer of the Ohio State Liquor League is accredited with the following, taken from one of his recent speeches on prosperity to the liquor brotherhood:

It will appear from these facts, gentlemen, that the success of our business is dependent largely upon the creation of an appetite for drink. Men who drink liquor, like others, will die, and if there is no new appetite created our counters will be empty as will be our money drawers. Our children will go hungry, or we must change our business to something more remunerative.

The open field for the creation of this appetite is among the boys. After men are grown and their habits are formed they rarely change in this regard. It will be needful, therefore, that missionary work be done among the boys, and I make the suggestion, that nickels expended in treats to the boys now will return in dollars to your tills after the appetites have been formed. Above all things, create appetites.

—The New Republic.

Half-hearted trust in God, which is sincere as far as it goes, but does not go quite so far as to cut free from the world and give up all thought of keeping open lines of retreat, is not the sort that gives settled joy and peace, but rather draws . . . into turmoil and unrest.—L. W. Bacon.

It is all right to be a man of one idea if the idea is big enough.—Selected.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

Encouragement

In our late visit to several of the reunions we received much to encourage us in our efforts to sustain the Children's Home. Money and pledges were handed us in a way that convinces us that this work has many, and true friends who will not see it fail. At a late meeting of the trustees a resolution was adopted providing that what we have received from the estate of Sister Sage of Saint Joseph, Missouri, shall be used as an endowment fund, and the remainder after our debts were canceled is placed where it will bring us something. So when we receive enough as legacies or endowments the home will be independent. We hope therefore that friends of the home who expect to leave means to a good cause will remember the Children's Home in their wills, or what will be still better endow the home now, and see the good work moving on through their liberality while they live.

Just at the close of the reunion at Logan a good brother proposed a plan which if supported will relieve the stringency and place us where we will not need to be constantly calling for help. Upon learning that the current expense of sustaining the home was approximately two hundred dollars a month he said; "I will be one of one hundred persons to guarantee twenty-five dollars a year each. Another brother hearing the remark volunteered to be the second one. We present this so that if any others wish to join in this commendable plan they may send us their names, and when the one hundred names are in our hands we will notify each one, and we will move out upon smooth waters with success assured.

Our Heroes

(The sentiment of the following poem we wish to heartily commend to our boys at the home and to all other boys who will have the privilege of reading it.)

Here's a hand to the boy who has courage
To do what he knows to be right;
When he falls in the way of temptation
He has a hard battle to fight.

Who strives against self, and his comrades
Will find a most powerful foe;
All honor to him if he conquers,
A cheer for the boy who says "No"!

There's many a battle fought daily
The world knows nothing about;
There's many a brave little soldier
Whose strength puts a legion to rout.

And he who fights sin single handed
Is more of a hero, I say,
Than he who leads soldiers to battle
And conquers by arms in the fray.

Be steadfast, my boy, when you're tempted,
And do what you know to be right!
Stand firm by the colors of manhood,
And you will o'ercome in the fight.

"The right," be your battle cry ever
In waging the warfare of life;
And God, who knows who are the heroes
Will give you the strength for the strife.

—Phoebe Cary.

Woman's Auxiliary

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

Let Us Look to Our Foundations!

"And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not shall be likened to a foolish man who built his house upon the sand."

What is meant by the "house" we are building? Plainly, it means the structure of our characters, as framed by our daily thought and action. Every house, to be strong and durable, must be built upon a strong and durable foundation, and the materials used in the building, throughout, must be those of a strong and durable nature. This much no one would care to deny. Let us proceed then, to analyze the nature of the materials which many of us are using, in our character building.

"Other foundation no man can lay, than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." In other words, no other foundation can be used (which will prove stable and firm and serviceable) except that set forth in the example and Spirit of our Christ. Should not our first effort, and constant effort, then, be to study the Christ, and, endeavor to understand the nature of the example we are to follow—the "material" we are to use in our building? Do we find him indulging in petty grievances against his fellow men, such as is made manifest in the "grudge" Sister Burgess refers to in her thoughtful little article found elsewhere in our columns? Behold him when reviled and accused, "opening not his mouth"! See his patient forbearing and forgiving attitude when insulted and abused! Did he argue, as did the sister in Sister Burgess' incident, that no one could blame him for resentment when treated as he was? No, on the contrary, his love for everyone about him, friend or foe, was of such a pure and far-seeing quality, that it reached out past the deed, past the thought, to the doer, the thinker, and he loved and pitied what he beheld there! "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do!" Buffetings, spite, hate, he construed always as evidences of a vast spiritual need in the soul of the one who indulged in them, and his loving impulse immediately yearned to minister to that need—sought to render service that would uplift, and help the mistaken one to gain the mastery over self—to supplant the evil thought with good, and to replace the low ideal with one which was more worthy a child of God. Shall we not follow in his steps? What good thing is accomplished by resentment and holding thoughts of retaliation? None at all, but, on the contrary, such material is pitifully frail to use either for foundation or structural material in our house building! Abraham Lincoln said, "No man resolved to make the most of himself can spare the time for personal contention. Still less can he afford to take all the consequences, including the vitiating of his temper, and the loss of self-control!" Think this over, and see if any of us can feel that we can afford to let any personal or cherished grudge towards anyone, in the church or out, destroy the peace of our own spirits, or interrupt our communion with the Father of us all. Truly such a foundation for our lives would be but shifting sand; at the first breath of adversity, a structure so weakened, so poorly built, would crumble, having no deep foundation in Christ ideals. Can we afford this risk? And yet, as a people, do we still find among us these petty feuds, these offenses, and strained relations, and embittered feelings? If we do, are we guilty of naming the Christ as our pattern, and then deliberately turning our backs upon his counsels and teachings? Is this a "coming out of the world"? Are we different, after all?

Let Us Be "Different"

Coming out of the church, the nonmember remarked, "That sounds good, but there's nothing in it!"

The sermon had been soul stirring, and beautifully delivered,—on the text, "A new commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another."

"What do you mean?" I asked, in astonishment.

"Nobody believes that, nowadays; no set of religionists live that gospel," he replied.

I was about to deny the charge, and argue the case with him, but just then Sister May stopped to shake hands with me, and I eagerly asked her, "Why were you not out to our Mite Society party the other evening at Sister Grant's?"

I noted her seeming embarrassment, and a sister, near by, suggested, "Maybe we forgot to invite her."

"Why, she is a member of the society, and should have been notified," I apologized, but, immediately sensing a "coolness" in the atmosphere, I hastily changed the subject, not very adroitly, I fear, to that of the splendid sermon we had just heard, and the remark made by our visitor. I could see that this did not help matters, and on the walk to the car, some one said to me:

"You made a bad break asking Sister May about the party; don't you know that she and Sister Grant do not speak to each other? that they have been at outs a long time?"

"But both are members of the church—have belonged for years—how can that be?" I exclaimed.

"Oh, I know that, but you know the way Sister May was treated; you cannot blame people for feeling that way when treated so rudely as she was!"

"Yes," I replied, "It was a fine sermon, but it doesn't work, and our visitor's criticism was a just one. If we love only those who are kind and considerate of us what reward have we? Do not even the publicans the same?"

Going home, I kept thinking of this incident, and others of a similar nature which crowded into my memory, and I mentally questioned, "Are we indeed thinking and acting and living like the publicans? If so, is not that why there are so many empty seats in our church?"

"It's no use; people do not want religion, and you cannot make them take it! We can get the church filled for an entertainment or a social but never for preaching services," a brother said, discouraged after preaching to about thirty people in a room seating about three hundred. (There happened to be a rumor there at the time, that even the preacher had not wholly forgiven an offending friend!)

Considering all this, how are those of a worldly mind to know that our religion has made us any better than those who go to the ball games on Sunday, or on the boat excursions?

We have had a church in our city for fifty years, and the membership to-day is but about three times what it was when first organized! The children and grandchildren of those early members are not with us to-day; we have not converted as many as we have failed to keep to the faith of their fathers! Why is this? Perhaps the secret lies here; that there is too little difference between us and the world, when it comes to our daily living, and our individual examples! We profess to believe the gospel but do we live it? Do we live up to its requirements or its opportunities?

I wish the sisters would take these questions under advisement: "Are we different?" "Do we love them that hate us, and do good to them that despitefully use us?" "If we do not these things, are we following the example and the teachings of Christ?" "And if we do not so follow him, are we really Christians?"

Are you staying away from meetings because you are tired, or indifferent? "Do not even the publicans the same?" Do you find it easier to dress the children and take them to the park than to church? "Do not even the publicans the same?" Is it much easier for you to pay one dollar, or more, for the roast beef for the Sunday dinner than to give the same amount to "branch expenses," and do with a simpler meal?

If we are guilty of these things, are we better than or different from the world? Sisters, do you not realize that if we could only "be different,"—in our homes, our dress, in our relations with our own and with the world, avoiding the follies and extravagances we see all about us, and being consecrated, living the whole of the law as we preach it from our pulpits—others, then "seeing our good works," would be led to "glorify our Father in heaven"?

In our auxiliary all women have voice and vote; then let us begin at once, with new vigor, this campaign of living our religion, of helping to establish the world-wide peace, and bringing in the millennial reign—beginning right at home, with ourselves, our thoughts, and our examples.

Be "different!"

MRS. S. R. BURGESS.

Preparing the School Lunch

(The following article from Sister Sandy, superintendent of our child welfare department, is the second in her series concerning the child interests in the home. It is worthy a most careful reading.)

The very best school lunch for the child, is the one that is eaten in the home with the mother. It may not be an elaborate one, and it may not be served on a beautiful table, but if you can have your child come in at noon, join you in a simple meal, while you listen to his story of the morning's work, you will be serving the very best school lunch that your child can have. Often it is as necessary to feed the mind as it is the body of your boy or girl, for the little disturbances of school life must be met before proper digestion can take place and often no one but mother can smooth out the wrinkles.

But if you live a long way from the school, or must be away occasionally at the noon hour, it is well to have in mind the physical necessities of your child and plan a good wholesome lunch to take with him. The large demand of the brain on the body at the student period of life makes it imperative that the body be supplied generously with those elements needed to meet this demand.

Throughout the whole school period the body and its organs are developing, and the food must be abundant and of a nutritious character to meet the large demand upon the functions of absorption and assimilation. Not only has new tissue to be formed, but a great amount of energy has to be expended in muscular activity and heat.

Some animal food is needed to meet the demand for new tissue foundation while hydrocarbonaceous foods must be drawn upon to supply heat. A goodly supply of foods containing the salts of lime are also a necessity for bone and tooth formation. A generous supply of fruits and vegetables furnishes the system with many things both mineral and organic which are needed in development of all organs. Pure sweets are allowable and are needed by children even more than by adults.

Dainty sandwiches (wrapped in oil paper) may be made to form the bulk of the lunch. There are lettuce, nuts, ham, eggs, olives, cheese, sardines, tuna fish, and meat loaf to draw from in making these sandwiches. Fruit such as bananas, oranges, apples, figs and dates are to be had in the cooler months, and jellies that have been made in the fruit season. Baked beans, apple sauce, custards, fit nicely in a small glass, with a tight lid, in the corner of the basket, and homemade cake or cookies add the necessary sweets.

A paper napkin should always be added after the lunch is prepared, that the child's clothes may be saved and his hands kept free from dirt.

It is pitiful sometimes to see what some school children bring to school for a lunch.

One day my small boy carried a lunch and at noon he failed to get the lunch I had packed but got instead one brought him from another home. He found to his surprise a piece of hard bread, cold pancakes left from the morning meal and a part of an apple.

As mothers, let us be alert to the needs of our children, physical as well as mental and spiritual.

LULA M. SANDY.

Cut the Grocer's Bill

If you have been industrious this summer season, you enjoyed tomatoes right out of your own garden. Did you can the extras and save on the coming winter's expenses? Some people insist that there is no economy in canning but you count the cost very carefully and usually you will find a difference in favor of the home product.

A friend of mine has planned another way to save. She planted fruit trees and some small fruit in her back yard and finds, that so far, some of them have yielded enough to fill several cans for each winter.

This thrifty, little woman also keeps six hens in a tiny coop and pen at the rear of the lot and tells me that the "biddies" nearly always supply her table with plenty of fresh eggs in return for the scraps from her table and a few pennies worth of grain each week—less than the cost of the eggs would be.

BERTHA L. MADER.

MANHATTAN, KANSAS, 1509 Poyntz.

Letter Department

An Effective Advertising Method

In response to the inquiry I will say that the formula for my "Hektograph filler" is as follows:

Transparent glue, (gelatin) 2 ounces.

Glycerin, 4 ounces.

Water, 6 ounces.

Put glue in cold water and set it in a double boiler. When glue has fully dissolved add the glycerin. Pour this in your container (a shallow cake tin the right size will answer as well as anything if it is level on bottom), and leave until filler has set by cooling.

When using this duplicator it will work best if it is warm enough so it will not feel cold to the hand—lukewarm.

Before using, cover the surface with tepid water and let stand from five to ten minutes; pour off and after wiping it with a clean sponge or soft rag, blot up the surplus water with a newspaper. Now apply your "copy," made with pen or typewriter with hektograph ink, carbon, or, ribbon, be sure that this copy is pressed down evenly so that the contact is perfect; let it remain on the gelatin from three to five minutes, then take hold of one corner and remove from the surface and you will have a negative that should give you from fifty to seventy-five legible copies.

To obtain these copies press your blank paper into contact with the negative then at once remove as you did the first sheet and repeat the performance as many times as you wish copies.

OUR METHOD OF USING THIS ADVERTISER

One method we have used is to get out a personal letter containing the church announcements, with the subjects to be discussed for the following week, place and time of service, and send to each member of the branch, also to a list of those who are or may be interested—this list usually being largely drawn from the names given us by attending members as those they wish to invite in this manner, they furnishing the postage. If the matter is not too bulky we use a card instead of letter.

When we get out a certain number (twenty I believe is the minimum), and mail at one time and place, we are allowed to do so at a cent per unsealed letter.

Another method we have used is to get these letters out and send them out by special messengers (Boy Scout style), one to each house in town.

This summer we have placed our announcement of gospel tent meetings on the margin or back of, Latter Day Saints, Who Are They? or What Did Jesus Preach? and put one in each home in the city or locality where we have the "canvas church."

This may not be an "up-to-date" method of advertising, but it serves to advertise us just the same, and brings results.

Trusting that this may be plain enough so "he who runs may read" and understand, I am Sincerely,

A. M. CHASE.

KIRKSVILLE, MISSOURI, 705 West Pierce Street, September 26, 1916.

SPokane, WASHINGTON, September 13, 1916.

Dear Herald: Having a few spare moments, I thought I would use them in writing a few lines to the HERALD or as I sometimes call it, the portable preacher. I meet with those on my travels who have been brought into the fold of the Master by its teachings, and I often think if the Saints would only try to give more of their old papers to the neighbors, they would have many souls to their credit on the Lamb's book of life.

When we see Satan getting in his work as he is in these days, we, as the chosen people of God, ought to put forth every effort to overbalance his efforts.

I happened down on the streets of Spokane a short time ago and there I came across three ministers on the street preaching; one of these was a lady—no, I will not call her a lady, for she was certainly a disgrace to the female sex, and if anyone had told me that the authorities of Spokane would allow any such language used on the streets, I could not have believed it—and then to make it still worse she claimed to be a representative of Christ. I could not help thinking of the statement of the Apostle Paul as recorded in Timothy 3: 6, but she was able to hold the largest crowd and received the largest collection. I think I would be safe in saying she got eight or ten dollars. I believe if Christ delays his coming another twenty years that this fair Nation of ours will be as bad as any heathen nation on the earth—yet some say it is getting better.

A little farther on was another representative of the Pentecostal Assembly of God; he was against all creeds but his, and said that any minister that would not defend his creed before the public was one of the false prophets spoken of in Matthew 7. When he got through I asked him if he would defend his creed or the doctrine he had been preaching. He said he would, so I told him I would be there the next night with propositions for him to sign for a public debate. He said he would be there, so I called the attention of the crowd to what he said. I was led to tell them that I would guarantee that he would not come, so I went the next night and sure enough he didn't arrive. There was a large crowd present and they said it was plain to be seen who the false prophet was.

This is certainly a grand field in which to labor for the Master. I have met with as fine Saints as could be found in a year's travel. While I was holding forth in Laclede, Idaho, some of the Saints saw that the clothes I had been wearing for nearly two years were looking quite shabby, so some of them and some of the Fordham Branch got together and bought me a suit. We read in Doctrine and Covenants 83: 16: "By this you may know my disciples." They have complied with all that is contained in this verse, so they surely must be disciples of the Master. It is the best suit I ever owned. I certainly appreciate their kindness. May God bless them abundantly. Praying for the advancement of the great cause we have enlisted in, I remain, as ever your brother and laborer for the Master,

R. NEWBY.

231 South Smith Street.

LOS INDIOS, ISLE OF PINES, WEST INDES,

September 15, 1916.

Editors Herald: As we read the many letters in the HERALD from brothers and sisters in such various parts of the world, many in like circumstances to ourselves, it inspires us to think that a few lines from a brother or sister even in the Isle of Pines might find room in your columns.

So far as we know we are the only representatives of the church on this island, and at times we feel the lack of brothers and sisters very much. The HERALD with its many inspiring letters and sermons is a very welcome friend and helper each week, and we cannot think that those who have every church privilege can appreciate its company as we have learned to since coming here last May. If anyone knows of a brother or sister on the Isle of Pines, we would be glad to get a letter from them or from any of the Saints who are interested in us or the island.

We have a very industrious and honorable class of people here, and we do sincerely hope that some time we may have the privilege of hearing the true gospel effectively preached to them. There may be some read this who will say, "Well, where is the Isle of Pines?" So let us say, it is a little island just south of Cuba, with a moderate climate and lovely sea breezes all the year around. It has many little flowing streams, a few mountains, and is timbered with pine and many different kinds of palm, also vines and flowers of every description. Its industries are mostly fruit and vegetable growing.

I could write columns of literature on its beauties, and novelties, but I do not believe in being lengthy along those lines. When I want to read something of the world I pick up something in which I expect to find worldly things, but if my soul is hungry for spiritual food, as every earnest brother and sister are, and as I often find myself, I look for the HERALD, and let us bear in mind when writing letters, that many like ourselves are away from any branch of the church, and perhaps away from Christian influence except for the church books and papers.

Therefore let us endeavor to be a blessing and uplift to all we may reach through the SAINTS' HERALD.

I would like to ask the prayers of any interested in us, and of all the Saints, that we may be kept faithful, and that the day is not far off when the church will be able to send some missionary to us. We will gladly do all that we can to support and help them.

Our prayers are for the advancement of the gospel.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

JOHN A. FISHER.

SOUTH MAITLAND, NOVA SCOTIA,

September, 17, 1916.

Editors Herald: Just a line to let your readers know that I am still alive and still in the faith. Wife and I are now in Nova Scotia, trying to do something for the cause of the Master; and, although my work has not been as productive of good as I could wish, I feel that some good has been done by our coming here. It is impossible for me to tell just how much good has been done, but am sure that a number of people understand our faith better than they did, and I feel quite positive that some of them have a better opinion of it, than they had before we came. We are sorry we cannot stay longer, for this field has been much neglected in the past, and some of the Saints feel it, too; but, notwithstanding that, they have been quite faithful in paying in their tithes and offerings to help spread the truth in other places.

Through the influence of my wife's relatives, I have been permitted to preach in some new places: places where neither myself nor any other elder would have been able to secure a hearing, perhaps, under other conditions. Wife's relatives are Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Baptists, but all have been as nice to me as though I had been one of their own ministers. A number of them have opened their own houses for the preaching of the word, others have secured public places for me to preach, and all, so far as I know, have shown a willingness to hear, and that, too, without any prejudice. They are a good, liberal-minded people, and seem willing to accept truth wherever found, regardless of its popularity or unpopularity. I hope the time may soon come when they shall be permitted to hear the gospel fully explained, for I believe there are some among them who would obey it.

We came here in a bad time for gospel work; have been here all through hay, wheat, and oat harvest, and the people have been very, very busy, taking care of their crops. I have been able to do but little preaching, except on Sundays, and even then other denominations had their regular appointments, so I had to wedge in between other services in order to preach at all. But I feel glad we came, and glad that we have had as good opportunities for preaching the word as we have, for I feel that gospel seed has been sown that will, some day, bear fruit, if it can only be cultivated properly. But it will require wisdom, humility, and a goodly degree of the Holy Spirit for the man who comes here to open up the work.

There are those in this country who, I believe, will accept the gospel message, if they can be convinced that we have the whole truth; but you can never convince them by throwing clubs at them, and it would be a waste of time to try it.

On our way to Nova Scotia we stopped off at Jonesport and Kennebec, in Maine; assisted at the opening of their new church at Jonesport, and attended the District Sunday school convention at Kennebec. Had a pleasant visit with the Saints at both places, and preached for them a few times. Met Brethren Ebeling and "Johnnie" Sheehy, and found them both alive in the work. They are both "live wires." John is young, both in years and in the ministry; but he is making good in the work, and if he continues faithful and studious will be a power for good.

From here we go to Pictou County, and then to Williamsdale and River Philip, in Cumberland County; we then hope to start for Kennebec, Maine, reaching there for the third Sunday in October.

With confidence in the final triumph of the work, I am as ever,

Yours in gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

SIoux FALLS, SOUTH DAKOTA, September 17, 1916.

Editors Herald: I thought it might be of interest to give a brief account of the work of Brethren Levi Gamet and C. W. Prettyman. They came to this city August 14 and preached a few evenings at the home of Brother Abby Hetricks. Then Brother Gamet wrote to Huron for the tent and began tent meetings Sunday night, August 20, and continued until September 10, three weeks. We had a small attendance; only two nights the tent was reasonably full. There was an average attendance, probably, of twenty-five persons. We had some splendid sermons.

The probable cause of prejudice is the fact that within the last two years there has been three public lectures here on Mormonism. Frank Cannon, ex-senator, as well as non-Mormon also non-Saint, has been here twice; once lectured at Chautauqua and once in the auditorium. Also when the Methodist Episcopalists dedicated their east side chapel they engaged Bishop Oleff of the Methodist Episcopal Church, from Denver, Colorado, to come and give his sensational lecture, Mormonism versus Americanism. So that together with it being one of the most up-to-date business places in the world in every way, with its twenty-one or upward thousand, thirty saloons and all those things that follow such institutions, and also it being the first time a public effort has been made here, it is as good as could be expected. They have promised to return this winter and continue their efforts. We got a nice review of their sermons with announcements in the Argus Leader nearly every day, and in one issue we got their pictures. We made an effort to get the auditorium for one Sunday afternoon. The writer, Brethren Gamet and Prettyman visited the mayor to see what arrangements could be made. But he refused, saying that he spoke for twenty-five thousand persons, and he considered that the majority did not care to countenance anything that had a color of Mormonism, notwithstanding the fact we in our turn went to some length giving the difference and history of the work together with our position. He said he could not now give his consent. The Argus Leader gave an account of the interview, with some reflections, but when we offered an explanation and tried to get it in the next issue they did not decline but simply left it out.

There were six persons baptized in all. There are, at present, about twenty-one or twenty-two known Saints in this place. We hope for more, and if the Lord will that we have a branch, we will be very glad. We pray for "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," and that the Saints may pray for the few who are here in a city of many temptations.

Your brother in the gospel,

C. F. PRATT.

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK, September 18, 1916.

Editors Herald: It affords us such pleasure to read the news from other places that we believe it might be of interest to some to hear again from the Falls Branch. The Saints here are enjoying a good share of prosperity as regards spiritual conditions, and are endeavoring to hold aloft the gospel banner. Many are bringing their friends to the services with them and are also in other ways trying to spread the angel message.

We have tried advertising, in the past, on quite an extensive scale, but find the individual and collective efforts bring the greater results, both in members and in spirituality. It is a pleasure to see the array of young men and women we have stand and bear record to the divinity of the great latter-day work, and thus helping those who are older, to keep things moving here.

We have baptized five since last writing, making a total of thirteen in the last two or three months. This is encouraging but not as from the fact that a general peace and harmonious shoulder-to-the-wheel effort is being made, and, if continued in this branch, is going to be felt in this community. It gives us pleasure to find members of other churches sending for our sisters and members to pray for them, and a local medical doctor we happened to hear of is telling his patients those Latter Day Saints are a fine bunch of people to get among.

We had Bishop McGuire and family with us overnight and had him preach last Saturday evening. He can expect a crowded house if he comes this way again. Our worthy district president, A. E. Stone, has been confined to his home sick, for some time, but we hope to see him around for our district conference, October 7 and 8, here at this branch. The work moves.

Yours in bonds,

1553 Willow Avenue.

WILLIAM J. LANDES.

MANITOWANING, ONTARIO, September 20, 1916.

Editors Herald: As it is some little time since I penned a few lines to your pages I will again take the liberty to do so.

The appointing powers have seen fit to appoint me to the Manitoulin Island and the North Shore for another year. I hope to prove equal to the work allotted.

After arranging home affairs, my first call was at Windsor, Ontario. I had the pleasure of attending their Children's Day exercises. I preached for them twice and attended a baptism of five of the scholars; the baptisms took place in the font at the Detroit church and were performed by the branch president, Elder J. Leslie Brown; the confirmation took place at the evening service. The Windsor Saints are to be congratulated for the efforts they are putting forth; the writer will always have a warm spot in his recollections of Saints there.

While in Detroit I had the pleasure of spending an evening with Brother John R. Grice and family; he seems to be the right man for the place and will accomplish good wherever he may labor, but of course with a true companion like his, how could he be otherwise?

From there I went to Saint Clair, Michigan, and visited with my sister, Sister Harry Lively, and from there I attended the conference at Port Huron, which I enjoyed with one exception, and that was when Brother Curtis announced me as the speaker for Saturday evening. It seemed worse from the fact that I had never occupied at a conference or reunion. But, as I heard Brother Weaver make excuses and they didn't go, so I thought the best thing I could do was to save all my stock, as I would need it before I finished. So I borrowed some books and tried to make use of the short time at my disposal. My father, Samuel Brown, assisted me, and the Lord stood by me. I trust that others were benefited, for I was. To God be the praise. I took passage on the steamer Harmonie from Sarnia for the Soo; had a delightful trip.

I labored in both the Soos until Brother Charles Birch arrived; after assisting him to get established, I moved on to a place called Spanish Station. There I found the Saints trying to live their religion and apparently bearing fruit, as several have been added to the fold. Brother Ernest Aelick is their preacher and is surely developing along gospel lines.

From there I moved to the Manitoulin to arrange for our Island two-day meeting. While on my way over on the mail boat, I made arrangements with the manager for reduced fares, saving one dollar and a half on a regular three-sixty-five return fare. We indeed are very thankful to Mr. Sims for his kindness.

Our two-day meeting is now a matter of history, and if a crowd is any criterion to judge by, it was a grand success. The Saints turned out well, and all seemed to enjoy the association of the Saints. Almost every locality where there are Saints was represented; those traveling the farthest were from the Soo. Brother R. C. Russel was the only outside preacher present, and he left a good impression with outsiders as well as the Saints. We were disappointed that Brother Curtis could not be with us, but hope he may later on.

After the two-day meeting Brother Mack Brown, the local priest here, left for the Soo, and I learn that he has decided to locate there, and Sister Brown will follow very shortly. The Saints here were loathe to part with them as they were both earnest workers, but by moving, their field of labor will not be limited, as the Saints are in need of help. For some time they, at the Soo, have only had a deacon and teacher, namely: Brother Albert Tomlinson and Brother Thomas Campbell. Now they will have a priest. So I trust they may meet with success in their labor for the cause.

While in the Soo the writer was most hospitably cared for at the home of Sister Mills. Her husband isn't a member but is favorable. She has been very sick, but I am pleased to learn the Lord has heard the petitions of her brothers and sisters in her behalf. The Saints at the Soos, and in fact every place that I have labored, have been all that could be wished for.

Before and since the two-day meeting I have tried to do the best I could at Manitou Landing, Sandfield, the place of our two-day meeting, and The Slash. In going to Sandfield we cross Lake Manitou; it is said to be the largest on a fresh water island in the world. It is about eighteen miles long and nine wide in the widest place. Brother Chester Smith kindly placed his launch at my disposal.

I expect to leave on the 21st for home, and will take in the Chatham District conference at Bothwell. It will be the first time for a long while that I have had the privilege of attending my home conference. I expect to be home for a few weeks to assist in arranging home affairs, then return to my mission for the winter.

I remain in gospel bonds,

ROBERT T. BROWN.

CLYDE, COLORADO, September 22, 1916.

Editors Herald: It has been quite a while since I wrote my testimony, and I thought in my weak way I would try to write. As I always like to read the testimonies of the dear Saints, I thought there might be some that would like to hear how I am getting along physically.

I am glad I can say I am getting better. I do not suffer so badly as I did, but I am still in a critical condition. I cannot walk a step, cannot get up out of my bed without help. I have been afflicted for over five years. Sometimes I am a little better, sometimes worse. I believe I now will keep getting better until I am able to walk, for I am so much better than I have been. I have given myself to the Lord and pray for his will to be done, for he knows best, and I believe he does what is best for his children. I feel that I am one of his children.

I love this church, and I have the witness to know it is the only true one. Jesus said he would send the Holy Spirit to bring all things to our remembrance, whatsoever we had heard. I know he gives me an understanding of his word; he also says, "My sheep hear my voice, and a stranger they will not follow." How quickly a Latter Day Saint can tell the uncertain sound of the gospel.

I love the gospel, and oh how I wish I were able to attend the good meetings. My heart aches to go to the house of the Lord. Jesus says, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." Dear Saints, pray for me that if it is God's will I might be healed. If not, his will be done.

This is the lonely time of my life. The 19th of December I had to give up my companion, the dearest and best friend I had on earth. I have children to love and comfort me, but I miss my husband. I know he is better off with the Lord. He told me he did not want to leave me, saying if we could only go together how much better it would be for us both.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. H. A. HUFF.

WABASH, ONTARIO, September 25, 1916.

Editors Herald: As I have not seen any letters from the Chatham District for some time, I will try and write a few lines to your columns.

The Chatham district conference has just closed. It was held at Bothwell, the twenty-third and twenty-fourth of this month. Everyone seemed to have a good time.

I have become interested in this great work, and love to tell the story. The Lord surely has not forgotten his children here; he spoke in prophecy to his people in Bothwell on the seventh day of this month. I believe that if it ever was necessary for us to live our religion it is now.

This district seems to be more fruitful than ever before, and some of the prophecies that were given to the Wabash Branch some time ago are now beginning to be fulfilled. The Lord has told us that there were a number of the young men here that would go out into the world and represent the gospel.

Our missionaries here are Brethren R. D. Weaver and J. H. Yager. The former is now preaching on street corners at Thamesville. The latter is about to start a series of meetings at Linsay. They have both done well.

I love to read the HERALD, and the letters, for they bring the Spirit of the Lord to me. I am young, and ask all the Saints to pray for me, and the work here, that in the end we may all be able to wear a robe of righteousness and a crown of the overcomer.

Your brother,
JOHN A. TAYLOR.

THUNDER HAWK, SOUTH DAKOTA,
September 25, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have appreciated the weekly visits of the HERALD and Ensign these many years, but never prized them more highly than in the past five months, as my husband and I have been spending a few months visiting children and grandchildren in a new homestead country where the gospel has not yet been preached. My prayer is that God will speedily prepare the way that his work may be opened up here. I believe there are those seeking to learn the truths taught in the Scriptures, as I have been attending their union Sunday school while here, and we who see the greater light feel more anxious for those who know not the gospel in its fulness.

I have been trying to let my light shine, and trust I may have a good influence, and leave some impressions that will be worthy of reflections and deep study upon the word of God. When I read the HERALD and Ensign, often I feel the Spirit of God, and I am very thankful that I am named as a child of God, and that your interests are my interests. I find many precious thoughts worthy of our attention that should be put into active service in the Woman's Auxiliary Department. When at home, in our local auxiliary work in the past we have been able to accomplish some good.

My prayer is for the welfare of the church in all of its departments.

ELLEN HARR.

WOODBINE, IOWA, September 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: On Sunday night, September 24, the Logan reunion was brought to a close. It was indeed a spiritual feast from beginning to end, but abler pens than mine will no doubt describe it. But I want to say that the inspiration of the Almighty was present in all the meetings. Much valuable instruction both by men and women was given, for we were blessed with both, in their different departments. Our business meeting on Saturday the 23d, was perfectly harmonious on every matter brought before it. All for which we thank our heavenly Father.

Yours respectfully,
CHARLES DERRY.

MAPLETON, KANSAS, September 28, 1916.

Editors Herald: It may not make enough difference to bother about a correction, but in the little write-up of the debate at Jordan, Missouri, published in your issue of September 20, I am made to say that Missouri is a highly "favored" State, when the intention was to say said State is a highly "favored" one.

Neither did I mean to say that the little town of Jordan is "continuous" to Mill Creek, but contiguous, or adjacent thereto.

But the worst mistake of all is making my opponent, Mr. Winningham, responsible for the delay in holding the debate, which is done, largely at least, by erroneous punctuation at the bottom of the first column, page 917. A period should have been placed after the sentence, "To this Mr. Winningham agreed." He was not responsible for the delay, as this improper punctuation makes it appear. I do not wish to misrepresent him in any way.

The name of the chairman of the debate is William Sundwall, not "Gundwall," erroneously given.

Since writing my letter regarding the discussion, I continued to labor in the regions round about till September 21, preaching thirty-two sermons, and baptizing eight persons, all heads of families save one.

May the Lord bless his people everywhere.

In gospel bonds,
T. C. KELLEY.

LAIRD, COLORADO, September 30, 1916.

Editors Herald: It has been several months since I have addressed your readers. Since June 1 we have been endeavoring to present the angel's message, the restored gospel, laboring mainly to the north and south of Wray. I have occupied in six different schoolhouses, also in the chapel at Wray. Altogether since the first of June over forty have been led by the writer into the waters of baptism, mostly adults.

We have found more opportunities for presenting the gospel than we have been able to fill. I have been laboring alone this year, save the help received from the local officers in various places where such help could be obtained. Besides preaching over one hundred sermons since June 1, we have done considerable fireside work. In some places where we have held forth several families who had been regular attendants during the first week or so quit coming to the meetings, and upon being asked by some nonmembers as to why they did not continue to attend the meetings replied, "Oh, if we had gone much longer they'd have us under the water, too." In some localities a great deal of prejudice has been manifest. Some who are found praising the dead saints of former days, speak evil of Latter Day Saints who are found contending earnestly for the very same faith. Prejudice which cannot see what is plain shuts out truth and light and will eventually lead people to ruinous error.

We are pleased to state, however, that many who at first were prejudiced against the work, upon giving it due consideration are now uniting their testimony with the Saints that they know this work is true. Prejudice that is purely the outgrowth of ignorance sometimes melts away with but few sermons. It has been truly said that, "Ignorance gives a sort of eternity to prejudice, and perpetuity to error." "Prejudice that squints when it looks, perverts when it hears, and lies when it speaks," is not easily overcome by argument not being founded in reason.

We have been made to rejoice in that those who have been given ear and reasoned, although prejudiced at first, have been brought to the unity of the gospel, being baptized by the one spirit into the one body, while on the other hand we have met some who have undoubtedly sung until their throats are sore the well-known song, "It's the old-time religion, and it's good enough for me. It was good enough for Paul and Silas and it's good enough for me." Yet when we present the old-time religion of former days as proclaimed by Paul and which was good enough for him and Silas, we hear them say, "Away with such teachings, that's Latter Day Saint doctrine." How inconsistent! By a parity of reasoning, if such it can be called, it might as well be said, "Away with it! That is former day doctrine."

We are pleased to say that we have found friends wherever we have gone, and have been treated courteously, and both Saints and nonmembers have assisted us financially.

Having been separated from loved ones for several months, I will soon return home for a season. Day after to-morrow I leave Wray for Yuma from which place I will go north about fourteen miles where I have been preaching the past two weeks and where seven adults have already been baptized. The object of my return there is to baptize two more adults and to administer the sacrament in the evening. We now have five families of Saints in this new opening.

On my return home I expect to make a few "hello-good-by" visits at Denver, Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Rocky Ford, La Junta, and Wiley. I may hold a week's series of meetings at the latter place, arriving home about the middle of October.

Your brother in Christ,

J. CHARLES MAY.

DARBY, MONTANA, October 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: For some time my wife and I have thought of writing to let you know how much we appreciate the HERALD and its writers. I cannot remember just when we did begin to take it, but it has followed us like a blessing, which it surely has been all these years. This morning I read a letter in its columns from a brother in Michigan who says that he is isolated. Speaking of isolation. Hark! Two years ago last April I came here on our homestead, twenty-two miles from the nearest town or railroad. There are no Saints in that town. The nearest are at Hamilton, forty miles from here. Brother L. G. Holloway and wife will remember the road. Since I came here I have heard one sermon, by Brother George Thorburn, that was at Hamilton. We are so far off from the main trail that the elders never find us, but our Father in heaven knows where we are, and the HERALD comes every week.

When questions arise that are hard for us to answer, some one, and Brother E. A. Smith has generally been that some one, has written something in the HERALD that has helped us out, and we feel like praising God for the light and hope of the glorious gospel, and we earnestly desire that the time will soon come when we can associate with God's people. There doesn't seem to be any near us who feel the need of the gospel, and we hardly ever meet one who cares to talk about religion. We are trying to keep the faith, but sometimes we feel pretty small.

This may let some of our friends know where we are. We are poor in finances, but our desires and hopes are for God's church and kingdom.

Yours in the one faith,

N. C. WHITNEY.

RAVENWOOD, MISSOURI, October 2, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have not seen a letter from the Nodaway District for some time, but we are still on the onward and upward move. Brother William Lewis is in our district now, he just closed a week's meeting at our branch (Sweet Home). We all wished he could have stayed with us longer. He gave us much food for thought.

I am young in this work, and also young in years. I was baptized three years ago this fall. I want to do all that I can for the advancement of this great latter-day work; which is all the world to me. There is nothing in this world that would satisfy our longing souls like the gospel of Jesus Christ. The pleasures of this world have no attraction for me. I would rather go to church and prayer meeting than anywhere else, although I don't have the privilege of attending either one so very often. But then I think we can spend a very profitable time at home studying our church books and Quarterlies, both of the Sunday school and Religio. They are both fine, well worth anybody's time to study them.

Let all of the isolated Saints, who don't have the privilege of attending Sunday school or Religio, join the home department with us in both studies, it will not only help us individually, but it will also help the whole body for each member to be active. Isolated members have not the worst life to live, for it is when we are alone that we get the best communion from above. We can find plenty of work to do for the Master wherever we are. Let us strive to live a life worthy of imitation. So isolated Saints, remember you are of us, and should help in every way you can.

I was elected Sunday school home department superintendent of the Nodaway District, so if there are any of you that don't take the Sunday school work, please write to me, as I am anxious to get you enlisted in this work. If you wish to take up the Religio work, write Roscoe Ross, Mound City, Missouri.

My mother and I had the privilege of attending the Stewartville reunion, and we certainly did enjoy it. It was a time never to be forgotten by me at least. As an account of it has already been given in the HERALD I will refrain from further comment.

Dear Saints, I ask an interest in your prayers, that I may hold out faithful to the end.

Ever praying for the advancement of the gospel of Christ,
MISS F. FAY GATES.

DEER ISLE, MAINE, October 2, 1916.

Editors Herald: Some time has elapsed since I have written for your valuable and instructive paper. Not that I have lost interest or grown cold in the work of the Master, but owing to the cares of life and more or less neglect on my part.

I am still striving, with the dear Father's assistance, to press upward and onward, and hope to so live daily as to be faithful to the end, that I may have a part in the promised reward.

The work here is still alive and in some ways progressive. Two or three have been added by baptism to our branch and we are hopeful of more in the near future. Our branch president, Brother Moody Eaton, is still holding the fort here and doing what he can for the work, and occasionally our district president, Brother George H. Knowlton, makes a visit, greatly encouraging and strengthening us all by his preaching and advice, of which we never tire.

I realize, as never before perhaps, the great necessity of living a good, consistent, saintly life, realizing that the end of all things is fast nearing an end, when we shall be punished or rewarded according to our individual deeds or work. I want to live a life as becomes a true Saint, and desire your prayers to that end.

Your brother in the conflict,
WALLACE A. SMALL.

TUNNEL HILL, ILLINOIS, October 4, 1916.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have written anything to the church papers, and I suppose many of my friends are wondering what has become of me and what I may be doing. Hence I am glad to write that I am enjoying better health and more free from pain than I have been for several years, and am busily engaged in active missionary work in this Southeastern Illinois District, and surprised myself in sending in my last quarter's report to find that I had preached fifty-eight times and performed other active labors connected with this.

I attended the reunion held in this district at Deer Creek Church, near Cisne, Illinois, in August, which was a real pleasure to me. I attended a reunion at this same place four years ago, just before I went to Independence and the Sanitarium for treatment, and as I had labored in the district six or seven years prior to that time, to say it was pleasant to meet and greet old tried and true Saints and friends is putting it mildly.

The reunion was a success in many ways. The prayer meetings and preaching were characterized with a large degree of the Spirit of the Lord, hence making them in the main of a very educational and highly entertaining character. Brethren Henson, Davis, and Walters presided and Elijah Presnel acted as secretary. F. L. Sawley was musical director and conducted the auxiliary work.

After the reunion I went to Bungay, Illinois, where I held an open-air meeting and had large, appreciative crowds to preach to. From there I came to Tunnel Hill, a noted Latter Day Saint landmark where William, E. L. and T. C. Kelley were born, also I. M. Smith and others of note in the latter-day work. Brother William Kelley, a retired school-teacher, having taught twenty-seven years, is president of this branch. Elders P. G. McMahan and Wilber Sutton, each having taught school in these parts over twenty years and now teaching, are splendidly qualified men in the work here. This branch owns two church buildings, and in the vicinity of the branch are carrying on three Sunday schools and one Religio. I have had and am having large congregations here and excellent interest is surely manifest. Two have been baptized, and others are near the kingdom. I am greatly rejoicing in the good work, and more than thankful that I can again be busily engaged as a missionary in the work I so dearly love.

I find much to do here, being interested as I am in each department of auxiliary or church work. I greatly enjoy instructing and helping the young people in music, both instrumental and vocal. I can and do play the organ or piano, act as chorister or in any way along musical lines, and I am sure giving God the praise that I can help and encourage the auxiliary work and am thankful to be as far as I am, an all-around man wherever it is necessary.

I find and see much to do in all of this work in this district, hence I am kept very busy and happy in my work, and especially after being inactive for so long, because of bodily affliction. In a word, I have tasted so much of bitter pain and suffering that I now enjoy the sweet privilege of being of service to others, and enjoying the Spirit in my efforts, telling the gospel story and knowing that the people are made to appreciate my labor of love for them.

In gospel bonds,
F. L. SAWLEY.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, October 5, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have just finished reading the Magazine Number of the HERALD for September 27, and wish to congratulate the Editors on its production, as I believe it will give the average Saint in America a better understanding of the work in that far-away mission, and of the conditions under which our missionaries in Australia labor.

However, I noted one mistake in the article entitled "Our missionaries, past and present." It is stated that J. W. Davis and E. F. Robertson arrived there in August, 1910, and left at the end of 1912, which would mean that we were in that country but a little more than two years. As a matter of fact, I was absent from home on that mission just sixty days less than four years. As I left July 1, 1909, and arrived again May 1, 1913.

The statement is wrong by just one year, as our steamer reached port in Sydney, August 10, 1909, if my memory of the event is to be relied upon. We sailed from Fremantle, January 4, 1913, making the return journey via the Holy Land and Europe, hence were more than three months on the way.

Fraternally yours,
464 Stiles Street. E. F. ROBERTSON.

IRA, IOWA, October 6, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have not been able to read the SAINTS' HERALD for many a long weary year, all because I have allowed sin to cause me to say and do things that I ought not. Therefore, turning away from God and loved ones, I became a prodigal son, rambling aimlessly about with only one object in view, I wanted to see America first.

Oh, what poor consolation! Saints, my heart hungers for something better, I solicit your prayers that I may do better, for to do so means a happier man. I cannot enjoy life as God wishes me to. It is my desire to be able to live in harmony with the laws of God.

ROBERT S. ENGLEMAN.

Extracts from Letters

"We are busy repairing our church, preparing for dedication—new lights, new floor, seats or opera chairs, paper on the wall, and, we trust, new spiritual life."—J. M. Terry, Seattle, Washington.

News from Missions

Northwestern Ohio

Many times I have thought of writing a short letter to the HERALD in behalf of our new district. It is wonderful the progress that has been made in this part of the vineyard. A little over four years ago there was not a branch in what is now the above district. We now have seven branches. Some of these have done very nicely, others not so well. The branches that have done the most have real, live officers working in harmony with one another, seeking and heeding the counsel of those "whom God hath sent."

Uniopolis, Oak Harbor, Toledo, have good church buildings. Toledo's church is not finished, but is nearing completion, and will bring much joy to the Saints, as they had previously worshiped in unpleasant places. Oak Harbor has a very cozy place of worship. A two-day meeting will be held there October 21 and 22. Come and bring the good Spirit with you, that all may enjoy the service. A program will be arranged. Brother G. T. Griffiths, missionary in charge, will be with us if nothing prevents. The missionaries are expected and desired.

Some of the branches have been weakened by the Saints moving away, which may be all right, but does not seem so. Many places need and desire the work of the servants of the Master; such as Pulaski, Bryan, Antwerp, Saint Marys, Osgood, Lima, Lafayette, Kalida, Mermill and many other places.

Two of our missionaries are young in years, yet able in the work, and have a bright future before them, and the Saints should lend every effort possible to help them on to victory and at no time weaken their argument in any way, even if it does not reach the ideal they have in mind. The Lord has spoken against such and has counseled to cease permitting the spirit of recrimination and accusation to find place in their discourse either public or private. (Doctrine and Covenants 130:8.)

The Japanese philosopher, Yoritomo Tashi, has said, "The strong man ought not to be too talkative, or too taciturn; too apathetic, or too turbulent; too obsequious, or too irascible." This is good advice. What the Lord wants is big men and women, not large in stature, but in heart; the inner man. He wants us to study "all good books," to "be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven and in earth and under the earth; things which have been, things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms that we may be prepared in all things."

The cheap fiction that some read cannot "prepare us in all things." The "best books" are the ones, said the Master. Alcott has said, "Good books, like good friends, are few and chosen; the more select the more enjoyable." John Ruskin's view of books is worthy of our attention: "No book is worth anything which is not worth much, nor is it serviceable until it has been read, and reread, and loved and loved again; and that you can refer to the passage you want in it as a soldier can seize the weapons he needs in an armory, or a housewife bring the piece she needs from her store."

We who have been warned are to warn our neighbors. How can we unless we study to show ourselves approved? We are in school—"This world is a schoolroom, this life is an education." We were told at our conference that this district would grow and develop beyond our expectations, if we did our duty.

A tent is needed to help get the gospel before the people. Some money was subscribed at the spring conference to obtain seats with. Brother Everett Ulrich is our bishop's agent. His address is 1424 Detroit Avenue, Toledo, Ohio. Brother William Anderson has been hindered from doing as much as he wanted to on account of poor health. Some opposition to the work in some parts has been the means of spreading the gospel, especially in Toledo. A reverend gentleman by the name of Smith, of the Methodist "brand" and editor of the Ironville Star, said many unkind things about us in his paper. Some of his members saw the light and accepted of it. He referred to them as hogs, in his paper; to the "sow returning to her wallow." I told him they were a dirty set if a "hog" couldn't stay in their "lot."

We rented a hall close to his church and invited him to come and occupy half time or longer if he wanted it. Still the good work rolls on, and may we all defend the cause by our every-day work.

