SHALL WE GO FORWARD?

Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before.

I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.—Philippians 3: 13, 14.

Sunday evening, December 26, President Frederick M. Smith preached in the Brick Church in Lamoni. The sermon was a memorable one in some respects, and no doubt the echoes of it will travel far. It may not be too much to hope that they will wake up distant slumberers.

As was consistent with the Christmas season, he dwelt upon the divine mission of Christ, his character, and leading incidents in his life. He brought before the people in a very striking manner the question of their faith in that Jesus who was conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, crucified on Calvary's cross, raised from the dead, and lifted up on high in glory to draw all men unto him.

At the conclusion of the sermon the speaker called attention to the fact that it is now the time when annual inventories are taken, and admonished the people to take a spiritual inventory and find out where they stood. He put to them the same choice that Joshua of old forced upon the attention of all when he said, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve."

The sermon was not reported, so we are not able to reproduce the exact wording of the message. We do not commit President Smith to the wording of even that small portion which we essay to reproduce from memory. But in substance, in closing, he said:

Suppose when you go home to-night you make a definite choice. Place upon one end of your table the Bible. Then place upon that the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants. Then go through the house and gather together the various other evidences that you are serving God and seeking to walk in the way of life, and put them with these books.

Then suppose you place on the other end of the table your deck of cards, if perchance you have such a thing in your house. Place on top of that its little twin brother, "Some-r-set." Place with them your theater ticket, and possibly the gasoline that you may be disposed to burn up needlessly, joy-riding, at times when you might better be engaged in some form of self-culture or service. Then go through the house and gather up every other evidence that you are running after the pleasures of the world and place such on that end of the table.

Then draw a line between the two, and decide which you will retain. Make your choice. For as sure as you live you cannot keep both. You cannot serve two masters.

He went on to admonish the people to make the choice made of old, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

It is impossible to reproduce in print the spirit and power of a spiritual sermon. But those who were present felt deeply that such a message foreshadowed a forward movement, if the people who need it most will but respond. It presaged a revival of spiritual power and interest.

We cannot do better than to pass the message on. It is a time for taking stock of ourselves. It is useless to point to this one or that one and say, "He has done wrong. He has failed, in a degree, at least, to make the upbuilding of the kingdom first in his life." Let each take the lesson to himself as he may need it.

Let us ask the question that the disciples of old asked with one accord, "Lord, is it I?"

Without doubt certain forms of recreation are legitimate. They build up body and mind. But they are never an end in themselves. There is always a danger that men will drift across the line and become lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

If any have crossed that line, or even draw dangerously near to it, now is the time to rectify the mistake, make a definite choice, and abide by it. We cannot have two dominant motives. Our dominant motive so long as we remain professed followers of Christ can legitimately and consistently be but the one motive, to seek first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness.

From everywhere come reports of spiritual blessings and awakening. The times seem ripe for a forward movement to higher ground. Shall we go forward? Shall we heed the admonition of the watchman set upon the tower? Shall we give to the world a better interpretation of the Christ life and ideals?

We may be assured that such a forward movement will bring a struggle. It may mean a dividing asunder of friend from friend. A separation to an extent. It may bring misunderstanding and suspicion. To remain dormant may offer the only promise of ease and peace. But that, when analyzed, conveys instead a threat of the more speedy disaster.

We have been assured for ourselves that he who heeds the promptings of the Spirit and moves forward will receive light in addition to the light that he now has. Knowledge shall be added to his knowledge, joy to his joy. But that man who resists the appeal made to his heart will drift farther and farther away into darkness. He shall inherit many stripes, and if he repent not, in time he shall be broken and cast aside.

We cherish the hope that a brighter day is dawning. We trust that the Saints everywhere will respond, and that the year opening before us may see a steady and solid advancement and growth in spirituality, in morality, in soberness, intelligence, light, and truth.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE LORD OF MISRULE

Alfred Noyes has chosen this peculiar title for his new book of poems.¹ It was suggested to him by a passage from the works of an old Puritan writer: "On May days the wild heads of the parish would choose a Lord of Misrule, whom they would follow even into the church, though the minister were at prayer or preaching, dancing and swinging their May boughs." The initial poem is devoted to that theme.

In this volume of verse there are poems of more than usual force and charm; such for instance as "Forward," beginning:

A thousand creeds and battle cries,
A thousand warring social schemes,
A thousand new moralities,
And twenty thousand dreams!

Each on his own anarchic way,
From the old order breaking free,—
The ruined world desires, you say,
License, once more, not liberty.

The most beautiful perhaps is the poem called "Crimson sails." It is intended to suggest the value of ideals, the power of dreams, the illuminating intensity of a consecrated purpose as compared with selfish, material self-seeking.

When Solomon sailed from Ophir,
With oliphants and gold,
The kings went up, the kings went down,
Trying to match King Solomon's crown,
But Solomon sacked the sunset,
Wherever his black ships rolled
He rolled it up like a crimson cloth,
And crammed it into his hold.

Chorus:
Solomon sacked the sunset!
Solomon sacked the sunset!
He rolled it up like a crimson cloth,
And crammed it into his hold.

His masts were Lebanon cedars,
His sheets were singing blue,
But that was never the reason why
He stuffed his hold with the sunset sky!
The kings could cut their cedars,
And sail from Ophir, too;
But Solomon packed his heart with dreams
And all the dreams were true.

Chorus:
The kings could cut their cedars,
Cut their Lebanon cedars;
But Solomon packed his heart with dreams,
And all the dreams were true.

When Solomon sailed from Ophir,
He sailed not as a king.
The kings—they weltered to and fro,
Tossed wherever the winds could blow;
But Solomon's tawny seamen
Could lift their heads and sing,
Till all their crowded clouds of sail
Grew sweeter than the Spring.

Chorus:
Their singing sheets grew sweeter,
Their crowded clouds grew sweeter,
For Solomon's tawny seamen, sirs,
Could lift their heads and sing.

When Solomon sailed from Ophir,
With crimson sails so tall,
The kings went up, the kings went down,
Trying to match King Solomon's crown;
But Solomon brought the sunset
To hang on his Temple wall;
He rolled it up like a crimson cloth,
So his was better than all.

Chorus:
Solomon gat the sunset,
Solomon gat the sunset;
He carried it like a crimson cloth
To hang on his Temple wall.

This pretty bird, oh, how she flies and sings,
But could she do so if she had no wings?
Her wings bespeak my faith, her songs my peace;
When I believe and sing, my doubtings cease.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

WHITLOCK RETURNS.—Brand Whitlock, American ambassador to Belgium, and who some weeks ago came home in poor health, left New York, December 28, returning to his post.

RAILROAD GUILTY.—The Federal Court of Appeals at Philadelphia, has sustained the district court in the conviction of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey for granting rebates to the Lehi Coal and Navigation Company. The fine of two hundred thousand dollars was also sustained.

LAMAR PASSES.—Associate Justice Joseph Rucker Lamar of the United States Supreme Court died at his home, Washington, District of Columbia, the 2d, after an illness of several months. Justice Lamar was fifty-five years old, and had served on the supreme bench five years.

PEACE PARTY.—The Ford peace party has visited Stockholm, Sweden, and gone on to Copenhagen, Denmark. Mr. Ford has returned to America. He is reported as having said in New York the 2d, that the main purpose of the peace plan is to crystalize, if possible, the various ideas and hopes for peace which prevail throughout the world.

WOULD INCITE STRIKES.—Congressman Frank Buchanan, of Illinois, former Congressman H. R. Fowler, of the same State, F. S. Monnett, former attorney general of Ohio, and five others have been indicted by the Federal Grand Jury at New York, charged with conspiracy to incite strikes in American munitions plants, in the interests of Germany and her allies.

NEW PROHIBITION TERRITORY.—The following States became prohibition territory, January 1: Iowa, Arkansas, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, South Carolina. Virginia has voted in favor of prohibition, and laws will be passed by the present favorable legislature to become operative November 1, next. With the eighteen States already under prohibition, this will place twenty-six States in the dry column.

WAR TRADE.—American trade has been greatly stimulated by the European war. The total excess of exports over imports during the war amounts to more than $2,000,000,000. The following figures are given covering exports during the first fifteen months of the war: Breadstuffs $675,370,101; meat and dairy products $293,826,358; firearms, cartridges, powder and other explosives $121,742,937; copper $121,133,436; horses and mules $121,127,601; automobiles and automobile parts $107,966,570.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Villa, without promise of amnesty, is still in hiding in unknown quarters, presumably in western Chihuahua. The railroad between Mexico City and Chihuahua City is operating a regular train service. Typhus conditions in Mexico City are said not to be so serious as reported. Physicians and assistants have been appointed to visit the stricken districts and take charge of all cases. General Huerta, former provisional president of Mexico, is said to be in a serious condition at El Paso, Texas, following an operation.

OSBORNE INDICTED.—Thomas Mott Osborne, warden of Sing Sing Prison, has been indicted by a New York grand jury, charged with irregularities in prison management, perjury, and immorality. There has been a strong fight in New York against the honor system inaugurated at Sing Sing under Mr. Osborne, and many believe the charges against him to be trumped up by the opposition to the system. A former grand jury indorsed the warden's actions and methods, and urged that he should be supported by "all well-meaning citizens."

UNITED STATES AND AUSTRIA.—Austria has yielded in the Ancona case. In a note made public the 1st, the Austrian Government "substantially" concurred in the principle insisted upon by the United States—that private ships not fleeing or offering resistance, as the Austrian note expresses it, "may not be destroyed without the persons aboard being brought into safety." The note further recites that the submarine commander sinking the Ancona "was punished in accordance with the existing rules for exceeding his instructions." Trouble with the cables has held back a part of the note, said to include further facts said to have come recently in possession of the Austrian Government, and assurances that Austria will pay indemnity for American lives lost. American Consul Bristow, stationed at Port Said, reports that the Japanese liner Yasaka Maru was sunk without warning. No lives were lost. The sinking of the British steamer Persia, presumably by an Austrian submarine, with heavy loss of life, possibly including Robert H. McNelly, American consul at Aden, Arabia, and other Americans, may develop further complications between Austria and America. Particulars are not yet known, though it is reported that the Persia was torpedoed without warning, and sunk in five minutes.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The entente fortifications at Saloniki are said to be completed so that, supported by the allied fleet, the place has been made a formidable base for further activities in the Balkans. Reinforcements continue to reach there. The British have transferred troops from Saloniki to Orfano, sixty miles east. The French have landed forces on the Greek island, Calteloruso, off the coast of Asia Minor, not far from the important seaport Adalia. The movement of German and Austrian troops from the Macedonian frontier indicates threatening Russian advances already reported in Bessarabia, to the north of Rumania. The possible entrance of Rumania in the war on the side of Russia and her allies is also suggested by this transfer. The Germans seem slow to attack the allied position at Saloniki, though indications suggested that they might have done so had other conditions been favorable. The Russians report success in Persia. A new cabinet favorable to the entente allies has been appointed in that country. Military preparations for the protection of the Suez Canal are being made by Great Britain in Egypt. Heavy cannonading is reported on the western front. The French announce gains in Alsace. The last few days have seen an unusual activity in submarine warfare. Six British, two French, one Belgian, one Norwegian, and one Dutch vessel have been sunk by submarines and mines. Many lives have been lost—eighty on the French liner Crotat, sunk in the Mediterranean, December 24, and possibly three hundred on the British liner Persia, reported January 1, as sunk in the same waters, both presumably by Austrian submarines. A French submarine has been sunk in the Adriatic by Austrian vessels. The British armored vessel Natal is from London reported sunk on December 30, in the harbor by internal explosion attributed to foul play. About three hundred men perished.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

AN OFFICIAL DEPOSITORY.—The Library of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has been designated as an official depository for the publications of The State Historical Society of Iowa. Accordingly, this library will receive all of the publications of the society as issued. As an official depository, the Library of the Reorganized Church will acquire a large collection of books and pamphlets on the history of Iowa for permanent preservation. The State Historical Society of Iowa, which is one of the oldest of our State institutions, was organized in 1857 and is located at Iowa City. It is now perhaps the leading State Society for historical research and publication in the United States.

BETTER MORALS IN ZION.—It is greatly to our credit that the observer can truthfully report that the manifestation of ruffianism here on the public streets has substantially disappeared. The crowd whose presence deterred women from traveling on the public square is no longer in evidence. The men who carried pistols and occasionally flourished them are gone. Not for many years has a homicide on the streets been reported to the discredit of our good name. Something is due to the law preventing the carrying of concealed weapons, but more to the condemnation of public opinion visited upon men who arm themselves for what they call self-protection. The lesson is one of general import. The capstone was put on when retail liquor establishments were removed. Whisky was the moving cause for the outrageous prevalence of abominable crimes in Kansas City, illustrated by the trial just ended and the trials pending in Kansas City. Such is the local inventory, and it is no great stretch to say that narcotics and intoxicating liquors spread their hateful influence over nations and turn peace movements into armies.—The Independence (Missouri) Examiner, October 11, 1915.

Beyond the Gray

The firelight flickers and the icy rain
Beats dismally against my window-pane;
Out in the garden, 'neath a robe of gray,
The flowers lie dreaming of another May.

And so, dear heart, although the wind blows cold,
And tall trees shiver as the day grows old,
So I sit dreaming; and afar I see,
Beyond the gray, another spring and thee.

The Voice

Over the woodland's western walls
In the dawn there's a voice that calls,—

Calls some sweet inscrutable thing,
And sets my feet to wandering!

Why I fare I do not know,
Nor by what devious paths I go,

But I must up and out and away,
Vagrant, vagabond, estray,

Thrall to the voice that calls and calls
Over the woodland's western walls!

Time is but as sand in the glass
Where I loiter and where I pass;

Time is but as the thistle-drift,
Tossed on the winds that sing and shift.

More to me is the wayside flower
Than all of grandeur and all of power.

Haply I have been summoned to see Where life's dearest treasures be!

Haply I must learn again,
Through stress and sacrifice and pain,

To know that the things of largest worth
Lie close to the throbbing heart of earth!

REFLECTIONS--NUMBER 5

BY W. E. PEAK

ORDER OF ENOCH

The Lord revealed a plan to Enoch "for the benefit of the poor." This plan gave general satisfaction and enabled all the faithful to have the comforts as well as the necessities of life. This same plan was made known to the church in Jerusalem and they tried to live according to it, but only succeeded for a short while. (Acts 2: 44-46; 14: 34-37; 5: 1-11.)

This plan is the best system for man when he is prepared to live according to it. But till we are, it would be just as useless for us to attempt it as it would be for a child to run a railroad locomotive, or to have given the hard-hearted heathenishly inclined Israelites the fullness of the gospel, when they needed the "law of carnal commandments."

The Lord in this dispensation has given us the outline of this plan, and we understand that some day we will live according to it. The plan is not fully revealed nor clearly understood, but its leading features are plainly presented.

As a church we usually refer to this or these organizations as the Order of Enoch, although they are not so named in the revelation. It is referred to as "The order given of the Lord to Enoch, for the purpose of establishing the poor" (Doctrine and Covenants 77), and the "Revelation . . . showing the order given to Enoch and the church, in his day" (Doctrine and Covenants 81). In the late revelation they are spoken of as "these organizations contemplated in the law," and they are to be brought into existence by the "bishop and his counselors, together with the other bishops of the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 3).

These organizations are to be effected in the "places for settlement in the regions round about," where the Saints are "desirous and willing to form parts in colonization under terms of association in different localities." There will be farmers organized into one of these "organizations," and the bishop will provide "for other organizations or associations than those simply pastoral or agricultural" (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1).

These organizations "in the regions round about," will not be "in near proximity to each other," but will be scattered around all through the country included under this term: "It is well to understand that the term regions round about must mean more than a small area of country round about the central spot" (Independence, Missouri), (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 5). This brings to us the indorsement of Joseph's explanation of the "regions round about," when he said they reached to the farthest point, from where we could go to Independence, Missouri, in twenty-four hours' time, by the swiftest mode of travel. That means a distance of eleven or twelve hundred miles. These "regions round about" include a large territory, and the command of the Lord is, "Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me" (Doctrine and Covenants 117: 11).

In these regions round about the Lord will bring these organizations "contemplated in the law" into existence for the financial benefit of his people. The gospel provides for the temporal success of the Saints as well as for their spiritual success. But it is a mistake to imagine that neither can be obtained outside of the "central spot," for the revelations teach differently, and as those who live in Independence can testify from experience.

These organizations contemplated in the law are calculated to bring about gospel equality. Not the equality some men imagine. There is a difference between having that which is equal and that which is identical. The wise farmer treats his stock equally, but not identically. If he should roll out a fine bale of hay and say to his cow and his pig, "Come and have a good dinner," his treatment would be identical, but not equal. The cow would fatten on the hay, but the poor pig would soon starve to death. So identical treatment is not what is needed, but equal treatment. That means to give the cow what her nature and condition demands, and the pig what his nature and condition demands. While their feed would not be identical, either in kind or quantity, each should have what is needed. Then the farmer would be treating them equally.

So it is in the church, and will be in these organizations contemplated in the law. One may be prepared to own and successfully operate a million-dollar manufacturing establishment, while another could only run a peanut stand, or drive a team for wages, owned by another. They should both have what they need; and this is the equality that is contemplated in the gospel.

It is absolute folly to imagine that the time will ever come when all the property owned by the members of the church will be dumped into one pile and then distributed in equal proportions, or that there will ever be a common treasury from which each can draw as he sees fit. Business must be run on business principles, and always will be. If you want an inheritance, earn one. If you wait to get something for nothing you will have to wait till you become a pauper, and then more than likely the church will have developed that degree of business justice that it will turn you over to the county instead of taking money that was paid into the church treasury for other purposes, and giving it to you.

The Lord says he has so arranged things in this world that man "might have in abundance, but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin" (Doctrine and Covenants 49:3).

The world lieth in sin because many do not possess anything, and this class is growing larger all the time, while the few are increasing their wealth more and more each year. We all know that this is not proper; that this condition causes much trouble, and the indications are that this trouble will grow worse and worse till it becomes serious.

Let us examine the cause. Suppose two young men start in life under the same conditions. Both are carpenters or tailors. One is very industrious, studious, and saving. He is always at his post of duty, when he can possibly be there. He studies his work and masters his trade. He becomes an expert workman and learns by prayerful study the demands of the community, and learns how to obtain employment. He pays his tithing and helps his branch defray its local expenses. He is saving. He studies and learns how to make a dollar go as far as possible, and deposits as much in the bank as he can. He dresses, eats, and curbs his luxuries according to his income. The result is, he prospers. He soon has a little home, and by the time he reaches old age he has helped the church all his life and laid up enough to have plenty to support him in comfort. Do such men cause the "world to lie in sin"? Oh, no. Or suppose he had by careful study learned how to contract and he could give employment to dozens of men, and by prudent investments becomes wealthy. Is that a sin? No.

The other young man is at work if the weather and all other conditions are favorable. But in reality he is looking more for excuses to lay off than to work. He depends as much on his wife to make the living as on himself. He does not study his work, and as a result he never becomes more than "a jack at the trade," and is only wanted when no one else can be had. When he gets a few dollars ahead he spends them like a millionaire. He never has a bank account, nor any tithing to pay, nor any money for the local expenses of his branch. But he can tell you all about the redemption of Zion, and just how the business of the church should be run. The industrious, frugal brethren who are succeeding in business and are carrying the burden of the church by paying their tithing and free-will offerings, are all out of order. Why? Because they do not give him a home and a big salary for little work. When he is old and his wife unable to help make the living he becomes a pauper. He looks to the church for support. Is he entitled to it?

The industrious, saving Saints have built the church and defrayed its expenses for him to worship in and have supported the elders to preach to him ever since he was a child, and now they are asked to feed and clothe him in his old days.

The Lord said, "For he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborers" (Doctrine and Covenants 42:12).

This part of the gospel will be observed in the church as strictly as any other part some day. The command to be frugal (saving) (Doctrine and Covenants 119:9) is just as binding as any other, and as "the idler shall not have place in the church, except he repents and mends his ways" (Doctrine and Covenants 75:5). And when one asks for financial help from the church, or for care in church institutions his request should not be granted unless he is worthy. If he has been an idler and disregarded the command to be frugal, he is not worthy. And it is wrong to take the money given to the church for other purposes by the industrious, frugal Saints, to support him.

If he cannot obtain support from his children or his friends, he should go to the county for support. Even then his support will come from the industrious, frugal citizens, but this is the way the Lord prepared for his support when he organized our government. He is not to get it from the church, for the idler "shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of laborers."

This class is large in number; they do not possess what they might have obtained, and as a result "the world lieth in sin." We should move wisely, and clear the church of the idler and spendthrift as the Lord directs.

Millions of laborers in the United States are poor and without possessions to-day as a result of idleness and extravagance. I know but few men who have been industrious, frugal, and studious, who have not homes. Of course there are exceptions, but this is the rule.

The millions of dollars that are spent every year by the laboring men of the United States for tobacco, whisky, and luxuries, would build thousands of homes. If they would do as the Lord demands they would soon have homes and bank accounts, so there would not be the chance for the few to become so rich. While the laboring man scatters his money around by high rents and extravagant living, the business few continue to scrape it up by the millions. This is one reason why the world lieth in sin.

When the organizations contemplated by the law are brought into existence, it will not be for the purpose of giving each one something for nothing, but for the purpose of teaching each one to earn a living so he will be able to support himself and lay up a little for an emergency. Each one should be taught a trade, profession, or business, so he may become a useful member in society. Idlers and spendthrifts have no place in the church.

Those who have the gifts that qualify them for "the affairs of the men of business" will be recognized and placed in the lead in each organization, and will be looked to for financial advice, just as the competent elder is looked to in his line of work. God will direct and instruct the faithful Saints through him when they come to him in times of financial trouble. This should be done now, as we have quite competent business men in nearly every branch.

But the trouble is, those who need advice, as a rule, never think they need it, or if they do, they counsel with some one who does not know any more about business than they do. By wise industry and frugal living the Saints in any branch can become prosperous. Each should try to so arrange that he could help the other, not by giving gifts, as you would to a pauper, but by giving or obtaining opportunities for him. When the opportunity is obtained, then succeed according to the opportunity.

Every Saint should feel proud of the privilege he has of doing something for the church, either financially or in the ministry. Then when he sees or reads of the cause prospering, he can say with joy, I have helped a little myself. And every Saint who helps pay for a church that is built in his branch will love that building and enjoy going there to attend the meetings, and to associate with the Saints. If you help pay the branch expenses you will have more interest in the success of the church and become a better member.

The church is not a business institution. We do not mean by this that the church could not run any business under the direction of the Presiding Bishop. It has done so, and the time may come when we will be in a condition to do more; but the difficulties that lie in the way should be understood and carefully provided for.

Business competition is so great that no manufacturing institution can succeed unless it is run on the same business principles as its competitors.

To illustrate: Suppose the church has a mill worth twenty-five thousand dollars. It is owned by the church, and the main object is to give steady employment to the Saints living in Zion, Independence, Missouri. Say thirty-five men are employed. These brethren have gathered, not by the direction of "the presidency and the bishop" (Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2) as the law provides, so they could work in the mill. If this had been the case they would have had all things prepared before them (Doctrine and Covenants 108: 4), and they would have been "accounted as wise stewards," (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 5).

They have not followed the instructions of the Lord, and cannot "be accounted as wise stewards," and when one acts unwisely he is very fortunate if he escapes the evil consequences. But they are here in Zion and they have families depending on them for support. The men know but little or nothing about milling but they need work and are employed at full pay. It would be a sin to ask them to work for less, but they do not produce in quantity nor quality what is required in other mills.

The year passes, and the auditing committee comes, "the eyes and ears of the church." They find that the business is not prospering. In fact, the institution is losing money. They are filled with fear for the church, and so report. The good bishop tries to explain that he is running a charity affair and is giving these poor Saints an opportunity to make a living, and that it is cheaper to thus keep them than to give them money out of the treasury. But his policy of mixing charity and business is rejected by the church.

Then what? The good bishop wakes up to the fact that the church wants the business and the charity run separately. So he calls in his foreman and asks him if he can make the mill pay ten per cent profit. He is answered, "Yes, if you give me complete control." That is satisfactory, and he is informed that he can have three months to get the business on a paying basis, or he will be discharged. The foreman puts out the sign, "Competent men wanted at the mill." The next day a large, strong, uncouth, burly negro applies for a position. The foreman says, "Can you do the work that is required?" "Yes, sah, I'se work'd in de mill fur ten yars." "All right, if you can do the work you have a steady job. If not you go. Report for work at seven o'clock to-morrow morning."

Poor Brother A has a large family depending on his days' work for their support, but he knows very little about milling, is not very strong, and is naturally slow. He is informed that his discharge takes effect at 6 p. m. to-day, and the negro takes his place. This policy is carried out and in a short time nine out of ten of the Saints who were working there are thus displaced, and those who are left are rushed to the extent of their strength.

The year passes. The auditing committee comes again. A neat profit has been made, but our "eyes and ears" hear and see. The poor Saints who needed work so much were supplanted by strangers. The discharged Saints were very dissatisfied with the church, and their reasons for being dissatisfied had been hurled to their friends all over the country.

What would be the result? Is it unreasonable to believe that the bishop would be accused of destroying the faith of the Saints for the sake of making a few paltry dollars?

The only way the church can do business successfully in Zion is to have a plant that is equal in production to similar plants in the community. Then the "presidency and the bishop of the church" must select competent and worthy men to work in it, as the following directs:

And then shall ye begin to be gathered with your families, every man according to his family, according to his circumstances, and as is appointed to him by the presidency and the bishop of the church, according to the laws and commandments, which ye have received, and which ye shall hereafter receive.—Doctrine and Covenants 48:2.

The foundation for a business must first be laid and then competent and worthy men selected to build on this foundation; and these are to be selected by the presidency and the bishop. When a man is thus selected to go to Zion he is to go with his family. He has a job, and thus "all things are prepared before him."

God always presents the fact that the family is the basis of society, and his instructions are to keep the family together. In carrying on his work he tells us to so arrange that the home can be kept intact as much as possible. The elevation of society or the church begins in the home. There are no exceptions made for the ministry, either. The same law that makes it necessary for those who gather to Zion to take their families, makes it necessary for the missionary to take his family to his mission also. A mistaken policy does not become correct by age, although some of us may reverence it for its gray hairs and hoary appearance.

Those who have gathered to Zion without being "appointed," or having "all things prepared before them," have made a mistake, nor can the bishop or any other man, keep them from suffering for this mistake.

The design of the Lord is for men individually or collectively as a company to own and manage the business affairs in Zion and every place else, instead of the church. The church will have all it can attend to when it cares for the ministry, building churches, parsonages, and caring for the worthy poor. This is clearly presented in Doctrine and Covenants 101; when the church was directed to put the various business institutions in the hands of individuals. Even the printing press was to go to F. G. Williams and Oliver Cowdery. These properties did not belong to the church, nor was the church to have any control over them; they belonged to a company formed "under terms of association" (Doctrine and Covenants 128:1) according to the law of the land, like the Jackson County Bank or the Crick Foundry in Independence, Missouri.

Men were to do their own business, and their property was to go to their heirs, as any other deeded property would; but they were supposed to conduct their business according to gospel principles, just as you and I are required to do to-day, and always will be.

Those Saints who are anxious to live in the "Order of Enoch," as it is called, can have one organized now as well as they ever can, for the bishop has been authorized to so organize "those desirous and willing to form parts in colonization, under terms of association in different localities" (Doctrine and Covenants 128:1). This means your locality, and you can become a member of one of these companies to-day, on the same terms that you can forty years from now. The same terms or laws exist now that will be observed in the future. "The willing and the obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days" (Doctrine and Covenants 64:7).

APPEAL TO PURITY

That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us.—Hebrews 6:18.

God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?—Numbers 23:19.

So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.—Isaiah 55:11.

With the foregoing scripture we will take a view of the dealings of God with the human family. First I will call your attention to the first scripture used, wherein it is said that it is impossible for God to lie. When God placed Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, he placed before them good and evil, and said unto them that in the day they ate of the fruit of the tree of knowledge they would surely die.

Yet they did eat of the forbidden fruit. The question now arises, Did they die in that day? We all agree that Adam and Eve died a spiritual death, as they were banished from the presence of God because they had acted against God's holy will, and had broken the divine law that had been given to them; and so they lost. And in order to gain back that which they had lost they were compelled to go through a different process,—that of obedience to the same divine law.

We come to another man whose name was Noah. He acted in accord with God's will and kept the divine law, and others that were saved with him from the flood and gained a blessing by it. Afterwards he set a bad example, and a great part of the human family has been following it ever since.

Next we note the children of Israel, who after God had led them out of Egypt and through the Red Sea and in many ways showed unto them the great love he had for them,—when they came to the borders of the promised land they were not permitted to enter in, because they did not act according to God's will, and did not keep the divine law that he had designed. Therefore, we should not harden our hearts as in the day of provocation, for as is said in Hebrews 3: 10-12:

I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do always err in their heart; and they have not known my ways. So I swear in my wrath, They shall not enter into my rest. Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.

Let us take heed that when we get to the border we may not fail to enter in because we fail to do God's will, and keep the divine law.

We find by the record given in his word that in all ages of the world whenever God had a work on earth he had a people to perform his commands, and he made known to them his will through revelation, visions, dreams, and administering of angels, and they were blessed or condemned according to their works after they had received the divine law. If they kept the commands and put their lives in accordance with the will of God, they were blessed; but if they did not put away from them things that displeased him, they suffered loss. And so it will be with us.

We, as Latter Day Saints and people of God, know that he has in our time restored the everlasting gospel, and has again spoken by revelation and administering of angels, and by visions, to his servants, for the direction of his people that they might know his will and keep the divine law. He has spoken through his servants and reveal unto us things that are good for us, and things that are not. If we can get these little "nots" out of the way the other will be easier. Let us bear in mind that it is impossible for God to lie (Hebrews 6: 18); that he is not a man, that he should lie (Numbers 23: 19); and that his words will not return unto him void (Isaiah 55: 11.)

In Doctrine and Covenants 42, God says:

Thou shalt not commit adultery, and he that committeth adultery and repenteth not shall be cast out. . . . Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm. . . . If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments.

And again in Doctrine and Covenants 21, also 38 and 39, the Lord tells us to beware of pride; it is pride that keeps us from being humble.

Again we find in Doctrine and Covenants 10: And now verily, verily I say unto thee, put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good, yea to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my Spirit.

Also in section 18: And thou shalt do it with all humility, trusting in me.

Section 67: Inasmuch as you strip yourselves from jealousies and fears and humble yourselves before me, for ye are not sufficiently humble.

Then, dear Saints, let us shun that hurtful pride and be humble before God, that we may keep ourselves unspotted from the world.

There are other things that will keep us from enjoying the fullest glory that God has promised to the faithful, among which are tobacco and strong drink. We find in Doctrine and Covenants 86 that the Lord spoke through his prophet to us and revealed his will and made promise that if we would be governed by it we would be blessed, and if we did not do his will, we would not be entitled to the blessings set forth in this section. He said:

I have warned you, and forewarned you, by giving unto you this Word of Wisdom by revelation, that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold, it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father, only in assembling yourselves together, to offer up your sacraments before him. And, behold, this should be wine; yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make.

And again, "Strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies."

Do any take a little drink and say, "Oh, a little drink will not hurt anyone"? I have heard this expression made, but if men do not take but one drop, it is against God's will, and if they do not repent it will keep you from enjoying the fullest glory.

And again, "Tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill."

Do we want to enjoy the greatest glory that God has prepared for the faithful and true? If so we will have to cleanse ourselves from this abominable weed and filthiness of the flesh and keep God's law, for he has made it very plain that it is not his will for us to use tobacco. Except we cleanse ourselves from the filthiness of the flesh we will be left out. And to the brethren that hold the priesthood the Lord has said, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord" (Isaiah 52: 11).

Dear Saints, let us keep ourselves clean from such things, and keep our lamps trimmed and burning, for the time is short till the Saints will have to gather to Zion under the protecting hand of God. Behold the Lord requireth the humble heart and a willing mind. The willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days, and the rebellions shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away and shall not inherit the land (Doctrine and Covenants 64).

Again in Doctrine and Covenants 85 we find that the filthy will remain filthy still. Brother, do you go to a filthy fountain to get clean water? Then can you expect any clean thing to come out of a filthy heart and mouth? Be not like an old brother who called tobacco a side issue. Let it be considered a direct issue, for it is directly against the divine law of God to use it, and will keep us from receiving the blessings of God as much so as anything else that is against our Lord's will. G. W. BANKESTER.

THY KINGDOM COME

After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.—Matthew 6: 9, 10.

After this manner did Christ teach his people to pray; and few, very few, who offer this prayer fully understand the importance, nor do they comprehend what it really means. There are many who pray, "Thy kingdom come," who, if they knew the kingdom of heaven was at hand would die of fright. These do not know, neither do they mean what they are praying for.

A WORK OF PREPARATION

We are admonished repeatedly to prepare ourselves for that great and terrible day when the Son of Man shall come in his glory to reign on the earth. And in that day shall the wheat be sifted from the tares, and his will will then be done in earth as in heaven.

But how are we to prepare ourselves? By just repenting of our sins and being baptized? No, indeed! There are many other things for us to do. We each have a duty toward our fellow men, but there is a greater duty resting upon each and every one of us toward our heavenly Father, to whom we pray, "Thy kingdom come."

God's Spirit will not dwell in unholy temples, neither will it always strive with man; therefore we must be clean; clean both in person and in thought, that we may have his Spirit with us at all times. Then when we have put ourselves in condition to receive his Spirit, is his will being done on earth as in heaven.

AN IMPORTANT DUTY

One of the most important things in our line of duty is tithing. This is not a man-made law, but it is one of God's laws enjoined upon the Saints in the last days, and not only in the last days, but a law given for all time, both in the Old and New Testament scriptures.

Every Christian has a duty to perform, and that duty is to help bring the kingdom and have God's will done upon the earth.

Jesus said: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind" (Matthew 22: 37). Now if we pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done," and do not the things he requires of us, we deceive ourselves and do not the truth."

Jesus also said: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations" (Matthew 24: 14). Now in order that this gospel may be preached in all the world, we must send our missionaries into all the world, and they must have food and raiment, and their families must be provided for, and this takes money. The church must be supplied with the means to meet these demands.

The good Book fixes a standard of giving, it is so plain any child cannot fail to understand it. But we hear the objector say that one tenth is optional with the giver. The wish is father to the thought, however. The requirement is as plain as any other statement in the Bible. The trouble with some is, they pick out what suits them and leave the rest.

If the church is to be maintained and the gospel preached in all the world, and God's will is to be done in earth as in heaven, then each one must put his shoulder to the wheel and share his part of the expense, and the only way to do this is to pay tithing as the Lord has required.

Christians are dead who love their money and their lands and style better than they do their Bible or religion. The day is coming when their money will be nothing but dust, and in that day they will realize they have not been generous with the giver of every good and perfect gift.

There is no debt we owe that is more valid than that of tithing. People sometimes borrow money to buy automobiles and build fine houses; but if one would suggest that they borrow money to pay tithes they would say very quickly that tithing would have to wait a more convenient time.

If a person has religion in his heart he will have it in his pocketbook, too; if there is no religion in his pocketbook you may know there is none in his heart, no matter how often he prays, "Our Father which art in heaven."

If there be any virtue in the gospel of Christ, let us think on these things. Let us remember we are living in the latter days, when Jesus said signs should follow them that believe; and one of the best signs of the believer is paying his tithing; in so doing he proves by his works that he means what he says when he prays, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done."

OLD-TIME RELIGION

A religion which is destitute of love is dead.

A religion which possesses the kind of love and zeal which is without knowledge is fanatical.

A religion which embraces knowledge without love is an iceberg.

But the religion which, having faith, exercises love, obtains knowledge, and is the power of God unto salvation.

Faith, love, knowledge, wisdom, power and glory,—these are all of one kindred, and make up the sum of true holiness.

It was a holy inspiration which moved the author of the Colossian letter to write these words:

For I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you, . . . and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh; that their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgement of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ; in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

Hearts knit together in love and understanding, eligible to obtain the riches of full assurance! This is the gospel which comes as of old, "not . . . in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

Lifeless, loveless religions, destitute of faith and knowledge, may perpetuate their forms of godliness in the world and deny "the power thereof," but the riches of full assurance are to be obtained from the great treasure house of God and Christ "in whom are had all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge"; and the key which unlocks that treasure house to any man is: Love toward God and man, and the begetting of knowledge through obedience to the everlasting gospel.

And the "old-time religion" is good enough for all.

SEA-CURE FOR THEOLOGIANs

The Lutherans, who are a much-divided body doctrinally, are also much animated by a desire for unity. Hitherto they have failed to reach any basis of agreement. One of their number, evidently a humorist, Reverend J. C. Kunzmann, of Philadelphia, suggests that the Lutheran Church send all its warring divines and disagreeing theologians far out to sea on a ship with a roving commission to stay out of port until the elements in the minds of the contending factions are completely reconciled. This proposal, thinks the Macon Daily Telegraph, would have distinct possibilities if only "the passengers did not scuttle the ship during the heat of controversy, which would have to precede final agreement." The plight of the Lutherans is not unique, however, as the Macon writer shows by a glance at religious differences in other folds:

There is nothing men are so bitterly at variance over at heart as the little differences in theology. The smaller the real differences the more iron-bound their convictions, the more aggressive their evangelical propaganda.

Whether the whale really swallowed Jonah or not has been the issue upon which many a lifelong enmity and family feud have been founded along the stern and rock-bound coast of Puritan (so-called) New England in days gone by, while the theory as to the damnation of unborn babes, predestination, and foreordination, we believe the official names are, have riven Scotland, even in recent times, to its very core in community after community. Mohammed put thousands to death by the sword, not because they didn't recognize the supremacy of Allah, who is God, but because they refused to relinquish a doubt as to Mohammed's warrant to speak for him. Thousands died cheerfully and stubbornly because of what in the practical aspect might be classified as a minor detail.

The Baptist brother says the Christian, to be a Baptist, must be immersed, and the Methodist as stoutly maintains that the sprinkling of water carries out the symbol equally as well. Both denominations have a good deal in common, but who is so rash as to say that they could ever get together as one denomination with that barrier in the way?

The High Church of England and the Catholic Church of Rome have almost everything in common except that the sovereignty of the Holy Father at the Vatican is in no way recognized by the former, while the Greek Church has so many similar beliefs and faiths to the Roman Catholic that to the less than expertly and professionally informed mind the only difference seems to be that one is presided over by a pope and the other by a metropolitan. And so it goes—they all differ on something.

Secure in our beliefs, we have more churches than schools in many sections, with infinitely more money spent on the individual buildings, because our own special brand of church must keep up with the procession.

The Lutherans want to get together and unite all their churches, which is a fine thing, for the Lutherans are pious, generally deeply religious people, and for them to be united as one great body would undoubtedly help the general condition of American Christianity—but they are so split up over little details, little clinging lichens of belief and dogma, that the suggestion is seriously made that the leaders be all sent to sea and made to stay there until they agree.

Not so bad an idea after all. Personal contact does many things formal eloquence cannot even attempt—and to those who believe in the power of prayer the opportunity for joint supplication would be so constantly available that the fullest harmonizing effect of praying in concert would be reached on every occasion. Pretty good idea—recommended to a good many other denominations separated from each other by merely hair-line boundaries. This is an age of concentration. —The Literary Digest, October 2, 1915.

RAILWAY PROSPERITY

An extremely healthy state of railway finance is revealed in a statistical review of the past ten years, just issued by the bureau of railway economics.

The railways are not especially interested in painting rosy pictures of their own condition, so this statistical review, issued by a bureau maintained by the railways themselves, may be taken as a very fair and conservative portrayal of the true situation.

To start at the wrong end, dividends have increased from an average of 3.50 per cent in 1904 to 5.20 per cent in 1914, and the percentage of railway stock on which dividends is paid has also made a material advance.

Railroad mileage has gone up only 16 per cent, but the total amount of capital stock and bonds has increased 53 per cent. So it is apparent that in ten years there has been an enormous increase in the margin between operating revenues and operating expenses. The railroads have not only stood the burden of a $5,000,000,000 increase in funded debt, and a $2,300,000,000 increase in capital stock, with little track increase outside of yardage and sidings, but they have had a growing surplus to put into dividends.

There are in the United States 247,397 miles of railway lines, with a capital stock of $8,680,000,000, and a bonded indebtedness of $11,566,000,000, making a total liability of $20,247,000,000, compared with $13,213,000,000 in 1904. The railway mileage in 1904 was 212,243.

Operating expenses per mile of line have increased $2,636, but operating revenues have grown $3,081 per mile, so the railroads, despite their higher expenses, make more per mile than they did in 1904.

The net operating revenue of the roads—that is, the surplus left after the payment of all operating expenses—has grown from $2,998 per mile in 1904 to $3,443 in 1914. This showing is made despite the fact that 1914 was a very poor railroad year. The surplus in 1913 was $3,930 per year, a gain of nearly 30 per cent over 1904.

This net operating revenue goes to pay interest on bonds, taxes and dividends. It was sufficient to meet all fixed charges and to increase the total of railway dividends from $221,000,000 in 1904 to $451,000,000 in 1914, a gain of just 104 per cent.

The enormous development of the railroad industry during ten years may be briefly summarized through a resume of traffic:

Total tractive power of locomotives has increased 83 per cent.

Total freight car capacity increased 80 per cent.

Tons of freight carried one mile developed from 174,000,000,000 in 1904 to 288,000,000,000 in 1914, a gain of 65 per cent.

Passenger traffic increased 60 per cent.

Passengers per train increased 22 per cent.

Freight revenue increased 53 per cent.

Passenger revenue increased 57 per cent.

Operating expenses increased 63 per cent.

Despite the greater percentage of increase in expenses, the actual surplus of revenues over operating expenses has grown from $636,000,000 in 1904 to $846,000,000 in 1914.

The railways are to be congratulated on this evidence of prosperity. They are making far more money than they were before the 2 cent fare laws went into effect, and before the interstate commerce commission commenced to regulate freight rates. . . .

BOY SCOUT CONTROVERSY

Much of the wind has been recently taken out of Ernest Thompson Seton's sails, as to his widely published resignation as chief scout of the Boy Scouts of America. His announced reasons for the step were that woodcraft had become of secondary instead of primary importance in the scout work, being superseded by military training, etc. Some little sensation was caused by his statements and his action, and the whole Boy Scout movement has become in consequence the object of considerable comment.

It now appears, however, that Mr. Thompson Seton did not resign at all, but was dropped from his position. Indeed, his term of office expired nearly a year ago, and he was not reappointed. There was therefore nothing for him to resign—and his statement was to this extent misleading. Further interest in his late performance is found in the reasons for his being dropped. The principal of these was that he was not a United States citizen, refused to become one, and went so far as to resent the incorporation of a chapter on patriotism in the scout handbook. His term expired last February, and the national council at its annual meeting did not elect him because of the belief that in a movement for making men as citizens of America there should be no doubt as to the citizenship and patriotism of the leaders in the movement. In fairness to him, however, the office was left vacant until he could be afforded a reasonable opportunity to declare his intentions of becoming a citizen of the United States. This he refused to do.

In common justice to the Boy Scout movement, which has been made to suffer somewhat by the false light in which he has placed it, a full understanding of all the circumstances should be had. The foregoing is the official explanation and is vouched for by the national council.—Deseret Evening News, December 14, 1915.

What We Owe, and Why We Owe It

[The following is a copy of a circular letter issued by the bishop of the Gallands Grove District.—EDITORS.]

Dear Saints: What we owe, and why we owe it, is or should be a very important theme for every Latter Day Saint to think upon. Do some of us think according to habit? If we do, then try to train the mind to positive thinking along lines of helping the Master's work, for he "requireth the heart, and a willing mind." The signs of the times ought to stir us, as professed children of the light, to greater activity along the growing and important lines of helping the church financially, though it must be done by sacrifice. The Bible says, "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be an abomination."

The Saints ought not to entertain the thought that they cannot afford to pay tithes and offerings, but they cannot afford not to pay, for it's the things you leave undone which give you the painful heartache at the setting of the sun. And of all the sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these, it might have been.

To-day the church needs the overflowing service of "all for each and each for all," in order to more fully demonstrate this gospel of helpfulness, being "doers of the word, and not hearers only." Being cleverly expressed commercially, "One worker is worth a hundred shirkers on the market."

Are you in earnest? Seize the minute; what you can do, or think you can, begin it." For, "As mildew denudes shrubs of leaves and flowers, so covetousness smothers and clouds the souls of men." Saint Paul counseled the church to "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove yourselves."

The past year has truly been an eventful one for the church as well as for the world, and in one month more 1915 will pass into history. Are we ready to meet the record we have made?

In concluding this letter, permit us to say, Do not withhold your gifts, although they may be small.

With confidence in the final triumph of the work, we are,
Yours for service,

CHARLES J. HUNT.

Stead-Fagan Debate

For some time, one Bishop Fagan has been after our people in Lansing to meet him in public discussion. He is trying to start a church of his own (homemade), and it is called "The Church of Jesus Christ of Holiness Workers." He expects to have twelve bishops or apostles in his church, and he has informed us that apostles and bishops are all the same, anyway.

Brother Stead wrote the church propositions which are usually affirmed and denied alternately; he also wrote some rules governing, and Fagan signed the whole document without a word. Beginning Monday, November 15, Brother Stead affirmed for six evenings, then Mr. Fagan took the lead for six evenings.

The church builder was quite jubilant for several sessions, no doubt firmly believing that he would convert our membership, church building and all. Brother O. J. Hawn appeared on the scene the latter part of the first week, and recognized the pious face of the bishop. And behold it was soon noised around that Fagan had been baptized some thirteen years ago by Brother Hawn.

One evening at the close of the session Brother Hawn informed Fagan, or rather reminded him that he was the fellow who once baptized him into the Latter Day Saint Church. The right reverend bishop soon discovered that his hopes and expectations had been blasted. His position was too silly and self-contradictory to take up valuable space to relate. Brother Stead spoke a mighty truth one evening when he told the audience that he did not think the bishop yelled an opponent to meet him as he defeated his own cause. He was about the easiest fellow jugged ever. J. D. said he was the weakest he had ever met.

And right here let me speak my opinion, and I think J. D. as well as the Lansing Saints who heard the debate will fall in line. I think it is high time we as a people begin to ignore some of these men who are seeking notoriety. I do not believe God wants us to meet every Tom, Dick and Harry that challenges us.

J. D. told Fagan and his half dozen followers that they were drunken but not with wine, and behold they thoroughly demonstrated it a few times during the debate; and when Brother Stead was making his closing speech and gently speaking words over the remains of the great bishop, a yelling demonstration from Fagan and two of his followers for a time disturbed until we had to call for men to quiet the drunken rage. The whole bunch then left the church crying: "The snakes and false prophets are stirred up! Saints, let us get out from among the snakes." So they departed and Brother Stead finished his speech.

Our opponent had but little to say about Joseph Smith, but made several direct attacks on the Lansing Saints and Brother Stead. He cried out several times that Stead misrepresented and lied, and that his heart was as black as hell. J. D. so nicely expressed surprise at a holy, sanctified person treating an opponent in such a way that it cut like a two edged sword. I moderated for Brother Stead, with the exception of one night, when I was sick. Then Brother George A. Smith took my place.

Well, the debate is over and the wonderful church of which "I, Bishop Fagan, am a member" still struggles on in a drunken stupor, without its twelve bishops.

I am remaining in Lansing one week longer, complying with a request to deliver a few lectures. The Lansing Branch is fortunate to have a nice lot of young folks who, while bubbling over with jollity, are devoted and active in the Master's cause.

As ever,

O. R. MILLER.

LANSING, MICHIGAN, December 1, 1915.

SOMERVILLE, MASSACHUSETTS, November 17, 1915.

Editors Herald: The writer must beg somebody's pardon for forgetting what was said concerning how the press committee should write up the Massachusetts Sunday school and Religio joint convention, so must proceed according to natural inefficiency.

It was a beautiful day in Boston, the hub of the Massachusetts universe. A fine delegation of New England Saints were present, and everybody knows what that means. The convention was a success, at least that was the general impression and expression. Romping, roaring, howling, ideal, supertranscending success? Oh, no. Lots of room at the top for improvement. Nevertheless, the convention was good.

One especially good feature was recognizing the defects of our past year's work, and the determination to seek to improve in the future. Papers are being gradually eliminated from our convention. It is urged that writers of papers fail to make a snappy, alive, inspirational and vigorous, consequently instead of being awakeners they take more of the nature of lullabies, or sleeping powders. Still, we had some very good things on paper at this convention. A "whole lot" of good things were said about a larger vision, preparation, fire, steam, system, equipment, etc., which certainly cannot be all lost or forgotten.

Eating in the lower auditorium seems to promote sociability, and meets with general favor. This is not a new custom, however, with us.

Our own district workers will pardon the failure to make special mention because of their number. We have no one or two who are the all in all of auxiliary work among us. We had quite a large number in official capacity and on the program who did excellently, but who dare say that we could not have had just as good and successful a convention composed entirely of those who were not upon the program? and this not reflecting on the noble band who are just now carrying the burden. All cannot be at the top at the same time, yet all can contribute in one way or another to make a success of such gatherings, and seemingly did in this case.

We take pleasure, however, in noting the presence of visitors who figured acceptably among us, namely, our minister in charge, Elder G. T. Griffiths, and Elder S. A. Burgess and estimable wife, all so widely known for willingness and proficiency in any good church work that comment is not necessary. Their work was very much enjoyed.

CAMERON, MISSOURI, December 18, 1915.

Editors Herald: Since my last communication of September, I have been busy laboring in a number of branches. Was at Scranton, Pennsylvania, from September 18 to October 6. The work in Scranton is progressing; Brother and Sister T. U. Thomas have rendered valuable service. I was much pleased with the advancement and with the interest taken in the open-air service, held Saturday nights.

The young and progressive band is a drawing card; they meet at their neat and well-located church building, and before going to the service, which is held at 8 p. m. prayer is offered, and then they march up the principal street of West Scranton, South Main Avenue, playing some of the more lively music found in the Hymnal and Praises. After reaching the ground, which is about eight blocks from the church, they continue playing two or three pieces; then Brother Thomas, in a very earnest and intelligent manner, with the gospel story, interests the crowd, which numbers, on pleasant evenings, from two to five hundred. After the close of the sermon, the band marches back to the starting point, playing with much earnestness, which is characteristic of the spirit of the meetings; after reaching the church, they are dismissed by prayer.

I was certainly much pleased with the order and spirit that was manifested by the band, entering upon their work in the spirit of prayer and dismissed in the same. The members of the band are nearly all young; at least half are from twelve to twenty years of age. There are thirty-four enrolled in the band. All are not Latter Day Saints, but the large majority belong to the church, and the band is known as the "Scranton L. D. S. Band."

The band is fortunate in having William John Lewis as their competent leader, and Brother Wagner (Earl V.) as a faithful assistant; also W. Davis, Albert Lewis, John Jones, David James and others.

One very pleasant experience was had by the Scranton Band, in a union Sunday school parade. An effort was made by a few narrow, selfish persons to keep the Latter Day Saints out. As all the Sunday schools of the city had been invited, our brethren were determined not to be kept out, though they were the last school in the parade, but not the least. There were several bands in the line of march, so the L. D. S. School, with their faithful band, got in line, dressed in their clean, white uniforms, having many young lads in their number. They were the center of attraction. As they were passing the place where the largest crowd was, both sides of the street being blocked, the band played "Onward Christian Soldiers" as they never had played it before, and the testimony of all that heard the music is, that it was surely more than human. In conversation with some of the members of the band they said that they never played with such freedom. The music rendered captivated the large throng along the street, and many were the compliments paid to the band. Long may they live, and unity prevail! This band has also played for other churches at their socials, also for Grand Army picnics.

Also there is a good choir, or a good lot of singers in Scranton, and they are fortunate in having Brother T. U. Thomas as their chorister.

Our next call was at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, where one of the state normal schools is located. We found a faithful little band there. Brother and Sister George Morris have rendered valuable assistance to the branch. Brother Morris is well versed in music and is a competent leader. For a number of years he was chorister in Scranton. He could be of much benefit if located in a district that needs a good musical director. He has labored as a missionary the last two years, where his time was devoted principally to preaching. The appointing powers would make no mistake if Brother Morris were given a mission where he could not only preach but give a helping hand to the musical arm. Sister Morris is blessed with a volume of sweet voice. They are a good "team," and would be of much value to Brother Hoxie's musical army.

We spent one week at DuBois, Pennsylvania. There are about twenty-five members there, the fruits of the labor of Brethren Burdick and James Bishop. In the near future, the DuBois Saints hope to be organized into a branch. We enjoyed our labor while with them, and were reminded of the fact that if more time were spent by the missionary force, there would be large numbers gathered into the fold.

The branch at Wellsburg, West Virginia, that we visited later, is principally the fruits of the labor of Brother Burdick. May the day soon dawn when a greater effort will be put forth to go into new fields, as commanded in the revelations.

We visited Steubenville, Ohio, the home of our Brother and Sister Rees Jenkins, who are on a mission to Jerusalem. While in Steubenville, we heard that they were about to return to their home. They have been gone eight years next May; part of the time they labored in Wales. We wish them a safe journey home. Steubenville is also the home of our young missionary, James E. Bishop—and his faithful wife. Brother William Richards is president.

We held nine meetings at Wheeling, West Virginia. The attendance was not what it ought to have been, still the interest was good, and liberty was enjoyed in all the services.

My daughter, Ruth, accompanied me to all of the above branches, and was kept busy doing stenographic work; she left for home November 13. I afterwards visited the Hamburg Branch, in Pennsylvania; it is ten miles from Sharon. This is in the country, and a good farming country, with the best of markets. I was surprised to learn that good farms could be bought for seventy-five dollars per acre. Brother

M. H. Headly is president of the branch. Hamburg is the home of our missionary, Brother Burdick. The Saints there are held in high esteem, and are a credit to the church. The weather was unfavorable to hold meetings, wet and cold; still the faithful ones were on hand. I held six meetings; one night was too stormy for any. This was the only time in the seven months that appointments were not filled. Sister Burdick faced the storm and walked about half a mile, but she was the only one that ventured out. We spent the evening at the home of Brother and Sister Headly, talking along gospel lines.

Arrangements were made to labor in Cleveland, Ohio. We began meetings Sunday, November 21, and closed Sunday afternoon, the 28th; the 23d was my sixty-eighth birthday. I mentioned it at the breakfast table, at the home of Brother and Sister Eben Miller. After services that same evening, about thirty-six of the Saints were invited to come and wish the writer many pleasant returns of the day. The time was spent in singing and talking along interesting lines. Brother Miller, in behalf of those present, in a very impressive speech, welcomed the writer to their branch and city, wishing him many happy returns of the day, and presented a purse that had, on very short notice, been taken up. Bess and Pearl Miller are responsible for this pleasant surprise.

I shall ever remember this pleasant event and my visit to the branch at Cleveland. I hope that good was done there. There is valuable material in that branch, and with a united effort much good will be done.

I am grateful to the Saints in my field for their kindness in various ways. At all of the branches I was made welcome, and I can say, with the poet, "Blest be the tie that binds."

To the Saints at Conneautville, I wish to say that I was unable to call on your branch and bring the stenographer, as she had to return home. If I shall be returned to that field, shall call.

By consent of the missionaries in charge, Brethren G. T. Griffiths and F. M. Sheehy, President F. M. Smith approving of the same, I shall labor the balance of the conference year in Mission Number 2, F. M. Sheehy being in charge of that mission. Branches needing my service kindly let me hear from you.

Wishing all the compliments of the season, I remain,

In gospel bonds,
WILLIAM LEWIS.

News from Missions

Nevada

It may be that some of your readers would like to hear from "The Sagebrush Parson." I am still on the firing line, though my guns sometimes sound rather weak, and the surrounding mountains throw back the echo as the only seeming result of the shot. Am glad to see from time to time that others are busy spreading the gospel message, and wish that I, also, could be busy. But much of my time seems to be spent in "watchful waiting."

After praying over the matter one night, I saw myself standing beside a small stream feeding the fish arbor vitae (tree of life) leaves. They greedily sucked them in against the current. So I have thought maybe my mission might be to feed the fish, and that they were accepting the food even against the current of popular opinion.

As my old motorcycle was worn out, I gave my check for a new one. Earned the money at odd times, otherwise wasted, by painting, paper hanging, electric wiring, carpentering, fixing autos, tuning pianos, teaching music, and plumbing. Quite a variety, but "variety" is said to be "the very spice of life"; it gives life a flavor.

I have three pupils now that pay me one dollar each per lesson, and I hope to have enough to take me home in the spring. Teaching also enables me to get into homes and talk with people about the gospel, as also piano tuning does. Have very little opportunity for preaching, and my work is mostly tracting and personal work. The sentiment of the people here seems to have been well expressed by an old German I approached and asked if he would like to hear of our church. He said, "No, ve are Luterans, and ve don'd vant any more church."

Well, being satisfied that "the times of the Gentiles" are nearly full, and that such condition will be brought about by a growing indifference, I can look for or expect nothing else till the Master comes, and I trust I may be found among those who are "watchfully waiting."

Have had the pleasure of leading nine through "the water into the kingdom" since the first of March, six of whom were heads of families, and I trust more will yet "go, and do likewise."

Ever praying and laboring that the cause of truth be ever onward, I remain,

Yours in service,

S. M. REISTE.

GENOA, NEVADA, December 10, 1915.

London, Ontario, District

We spent about two and one half months last winter and spring with the Kimball Branch in the Chatham District, and while there enjoyed some of the greatest blessings of our experience. An earnest band of Saints, under the leadership of Elder Isaac Andrew, did all in their power to make the meetings a success, and although the ministers of Babylon did all in their power against us, we were permitted to lead thirteen precious souls through the waters of regeneration.

My wife was with me during these meetings (in fact she travels with me most of the time), and she was a great help to us in many ways. Her musical ability goes a long way towards making a series of meetings a success.

While here in Kimball she and I were spoken to through prophecy and tongue, several times, and our method of traveling together was commended by the Lord. In the last gift, through Elder G. C. Tomlinson, we were told to go to the General Conference, as the Lord had special blessings for us there. The Kimball Saints raised money enough to send us both, pay our fare both ways and our board while there. It was the writer's first visit to a General Conference, and our eyes and ears were wide open to catch all that was going on. We wish to say that we returned home stronger in the faith of the restored gospel than ever before. While there we were ordained a seventy, and placed in the First Quorum.

Just here I wish to say a word in favor of the thoughts expressed by Brother W. E. Peak in his "Reflections," regarding sending missionaries to fields for a term of years, and sending their families with them. We, too, believe it a serious mistake to send a man away from his family for several months at a time. I also agree with Brother Peak that it is a serious mistake to keep changing a missionary from one field to another.

I have made four new openings since I came to this district, but have not baptized one as a result. Some of the Saints are in the background, and the outsiders seemingly care nothing for the gospel. They will only come once or twice a week to meetings, so it is almost impossible to preach every night.

Just now I am holding a series of meetings near Courtland, and have a few interested. A few days ago I called on the Methodist minister here, Mr. A. Trueblood, and had a long visit with him. He is about thirty years of age, and is the fairest minded man I ever saw in the ministry of the other churches. He asked for a brief statement of our faith, which was quickly given. He wanted to know the difference between us and the Utah people, and stated that he was ready to tell all who asked him that we were in no way connected with the followers of Brigham Young. We had a nice long visit, and when I left he asked me to call again, which I propose to do at an early date. I referred him to the statements of John Wesley and the songs of Charles Wesley regarding the "latter-day glory," and told him we were representing the work they believed would be established after their time. May God lead him into the fold, is my prayer.

Together with other trials, this summer my wife was taken down with diphtheria, and for several days she suffered terribly. We put our trust in the Lord, and in his time he heard us and she was healed without a doctor seeing her, or without medicine. To God be the praise and glory.

Our headquarters are at Corinth, Ontario, where we have made our home with Brother A. W. Borbridge and wife. They are very kind to us, and we deeply appreciate the same.

I would say to the London District Saints who desire us to visit them, please drop us a card, Box 65, Corinth, Ontario, and we will gladly come and do our best for you.

With best wishes to all, we remain,

In the faith,

R. D. WEAVER.

COURTLAND, ONTARIO, December 13, 1915.

Lamoni Stake

On October 9 and 10 I attended the district conference of the Des Moines District, and again met with those with whom I had labored in days ago, enjoying communion with them in their business and worship. I noted some improvement, but there was noticeable the absence of many that had been in attendance at previous conferences.

Began preaching services at the Graceland Branch the 28th, where I continued till November 7, when I baptized four. There was enjoyed a much better feeling here than I have ever enjoyed in all my labor there, and the Saints seemed to be more devoted to the worship of God, and more willing to sacrifice in the interests of each other.

Spent three days at Lucas, where Brother C. Scott was holding a series of services, and where I enjoyed assisting him. Here I baptized a daughter of Brother Charles L. Woods.

On the 11th Brother Scott and I went to Hiteman to be in attendance at the conference of the stake. Here was enjoyed a very peaceful and spiritual time. The work of the stake was given new impetus in some ways. Brother J. A. Gillen was present part of the time. His presence was much appreciated.

On the 16th I went to Sister Reese's, being met at Afton Junction by her hospitable husband and her brother, George. On the following evening I began preaching to a small audience at Talmage. Here I continued till the 28th. I closed on the afternoon of that date. The United Brethren minister preached that night, and in the attitude of one beating the air he tried to oppose some of the truths that I had presented while there. He beat the air most of the time. Much prejudice caused by ignorance was observable. I left a few much interested, and a strong request that I return in the near future. One thing that the minister and a few others took objection to was that I took up no collection for myself. I did not need to, as my needs were supplied. Mr. Reese made me welcome at his home, and others offered me the privilege of their homes when I return.

On the 30th I came to Creston, where I occupied four nights in the courthouse. Here I had a very interested audience. I found here the same opportunity offered before of presenting to the public a brief of each sermon in each of the dailies. On Monday, December 6, I baptized three, two of whom are from a family none of the progenitors of whom are in the church. They had been investigating for about two years, and finally concluded, after a great struggle, to obey, believing there was no other way to do the will of the Christ.

The mother, Sister Stella Franklin, had been a member and a worker in one of the popular churches, but she said that there was an aching void that she had not been able, with all her active service rendered, to satisfy. This she longed for, and said that in accepting the gospel she had received complete satisfaction. And when her husband inquired if she was now better satisfied, she said that she was and that if he would investigate, he, too, would have the same satisfactory experience. He is now investigating.

While here Mrs. Emma F. Baird, who had given her name for baptism, the mother of Sister Bessie Hall, was taken very sick, and although all was done that could be, the power of death came upon her, but it left such an impression on all who viewed her departure that they were comforted in her decease. I was called to bring my youngest daughter home from the northwest part of the State, where she had been teaching, and had taken sick. I left Creston on the afternoon of the 7th, and brought her home on the 9th, and was called to Creston the same afternoon of my arrival to preach the funeral sermon of Mrs. Baird, which I did on the 10th to a house full of sympathizing relatives and friends, who were much affected by the instruction.

An appointment had been made for me in the Christian church at Kent, where live Brother and Sister James Bowman, but on account of being called to bring my daughter home I had to cancel it for the present. It is thought advisable to go there later, as the people are just now all engaged in Christmas preparations.

I returned home to care for home affairs and the sick, and find plenty to do. Much sickness exists. Found the sick of my home better, and they are still improving, for which I am very grateful.

I have been much blessed in all my ministrations during the time covered by this letter. The Saints seem to be cheered, and more willing to make sacrifices in the interests of the work of God. I hope to be privileged to occupy after the holidays in the stake work, and wherever I may be called to labor.

The work of God seems dearer to me than ever. I can clearly see that the sifting time is upon us, and all that can be shaken will be shaken. Even the ordinances of cities are compelling the cessation of things of a worldly nature, that some members of the church are participating in. Some are becoming very anxious about the young of the church, when it is not so much the young that are clamoring for such worldliness as it is some of the older ones who are losing spirituality. The world is appealing to some of the older Saints as though we ought to adopt it in the church for the encouragement of the young and to keep them in the church, when it is the very thing that the world is bringing into existence to occupy their time as in the days of Noah, so that they will act as though they thought the Lord delayeth his coming, and they would have plenty of time for the world and the church.

We do not take people into the church till they have repent; but according to the policy of some, there is little need of repentance. Just continue as the world does, and still be at the services, or some of them, and pay freewill offerings and tithing, and you are all right. This is deceptive and will shake many out of the church when the time of gathering fully comes, I fear. God give to his people the joy and peace that is found in the kingdom of God, and both old and young will hate the things they once loved and love the things they once hated.

With a brightening hope in the final triumph of the kingdom of God and the redemption of Zion, I am,

J. F. MINTUN.

DES MOINES, IOWA, December 17, 1915.

Northern California

Leaving Santa Rosa, September 6, I returned to San Francisco, where I was joined by my companion, and on the 9th we started for Chico, which was to be my headquarters for the conference year. We stopped over several days at Stockton, en route, injecting a little bit of enthusiasm into the work there.

On our arrival at Chico, the Saints were very kind to us, and by giving us loans of furniture, dishes, etc., soon enabled us to set up housekeeping in a neat little three-room cottage, which is to be our home until next conference. There was a "Saints shower," too, about this time, which put the finishing touches on our needs.

Elder Cady had preceded me to Chico, and as soon as domestic affairs would permit, Brother Cady and I began the active mission work at Oroville, the county seat of Butte County. There were no Saints there, but plenty of the stuff they are made of. Deacon Frost of the Baptist Church gave us the use of his front bedroom while we were looking over the field, but as no suitable place for preaching was available, we brought the district tent over from Chico. We brought the living tent also, and friends in Oroville furnished us with camp outfit, bed, dishes, etc., so we were able to set up "bachelors' hall." The kindness of the neighbors in sending in eatables helped much to strengthen our bill of fare.

We opened our services October 12 with forty in attendance, and continued until November 9 with average attendance of thirty-two. As it was too cold for further tent services, Mr. T. P. Edwards, a Baptist friend, kindly opened his house for services, where we continued with good interest until November 21.

Brother Rushton was in Chico about this time, and held a five days' series of meetings, accompanied by Brother C. W. Hawkins, district president. They paid us a visit, and Brother J. W. preached for us in the tent on October 21, leaving a very favorable impression.

November 14, we held a baptismal service on the banks of the beautiful Feather River. Three autoloading of Saints came over from Chico and assisted in singing number 397 (Saints' Hymnal), while four were baptized. The same day we organized a Sunday school with about thirty charter members.

During our stay we sold two Books of Mormon and three Bibles, and took four new subscriptions for Zion's Ensign.

November 22, Brother Cady left for San Jose to spend Thanksgiving at home, after which he would go to the San Joaquin Valley.

Thanksgiving Day I met with the Saints at Chico, and had the pleasure of eating Thanksgiving dinner with my wife, for the first time in four years (chicken, etc., which some of the Saints had brought us). I hope all the missionaries fared as well.

December 1, I left Chico, visiting Saints at Marysville and Roseville, en route. I am stopping with Brother I. D. Webster, (a Michigander, formerly of South Boardman). He has secured the schoolhouse for a week's services.

From what I have observed, Brother Albert Carmichael's recent visit to California accomplished much good. Everywhere the field seems white to harvest, but the laborers are almost lacking. We need men,—true, loyal, business men, farmers, mechanics, etc., and about twenty times as many missionaries. May they be forthcoming, is my prayer.

On account of cold weather, the trip to Modoc County has been abandoned until spring.

Hoping the spirit of good cheer may be with all the Saints during the Christmastide,

In gospel bonds,

M. A. McCONLEY.

CHICO, CALIFORNIA, 1001 Main Street.

Saskatchewan

Since leaving my home and family at Independence, Missouri, on May 3, I have traveled in all about three thousand miles, and to date have preached sixty-eight times, baptized six, administered to twenty-six sick, attended in all one hundred and forty-eight meetings, including one district conference. I have visited Viceroy, Weyburn, Tyvan, Odessa, Saskatoon, Imperial, Bladsworth, Senlac, Shellbrook, and Prince Albert, preaching in thirteen different places tributary to these points. When I take into consideration the distance traveled and the time spent, I feel that I have accomplished very little in the spread of the gospel.

I can say that I have met with very little if any opposition. The greatest drawback I find to the spread of the work is lack of interest in the gospel, and indifference on the part of the people. Those in the cities are too much taken up with pleasure and business affairs to listen to the gospel, and in the rural districts the people are exceptionally busy in the spring and fall months, and in the winter they do not like to get out into the cold.

On the whole, I consider this a hard mission in which to accomplish good. However, when we consider the size of the district and the few missionaries we have, I believe considerable good is being accomplished.

I wish to say that wherever I have gone I have been well used, both by the Saints and those outside the church. My needs have been amply provided for. I find many good, earnest-hearted, energetic Saints throughout the district, and find here as elsewhere some who are careless and indifferent, and dead to the work.

I see in these conditions the fulfillment of the words of the Master when he said that there would be five foolish virgins and five wise at the day of his coming. Many are looking Zionward, with the hope of being gathered there, while others are indifferent and seem to have no thought of Zion or the gathering of the Saints.

I also find differences among the Saints which cause strife and contention, things which ought not to exist among those who are supposed to be the pure in heart. I find some who are not living their religion, and whose lives bring reproach upon the cause of Christ. These things have a tendency to discourage the missionary and hinder in his work. However, we expect to have such conditions to contend with.

I am thankful for the many blessings and experiences which I am permitted to pass through in connection with this work.

As the time draws near for me to depart from the field my longing for home and loved ones becomes stronger, but

I strive to overcome that homesick, lonesome feeling and look beyond to the happy Christmas time, when, the Lord being willing, I shall be at home after nearly eight months' absence. Then I am reminded of the words of the poet,

"This world that we're livin' in
Is mighty hard to beat;
You get a thorn with every rose,
But ain't the roses sweet?"

I then think of this life as a whole; the many hardships, troubles, heartaches, sorrows, which are the thorns, and then the roses that grow among the thorns along the roadway; then look beyond to the time when there will be no parting, no more thorns, but will all be roses.

The thought here presents itself, Are we laboring for the thorns or the roses? My attention is drawn to the beautiful lesson on service, found in the senior Religio Quarterly for this quarter. From beginning to end the lesson is full of splendid thoughts, good advice and instruction. Every Saint will do well to study this lesson and try and apply the teachings to their lives.

One thought especially comes to my mind, Talk not so much of doing, but do. Thoughts brought out under different headings in the lesson are: Anxiously engage in the good cause; what is service?; when should we serve?; how serve?; and the worker's decalogue near the end of the lesson, and finally the closing words of "labor together with God."

How many of us are so anxiously engaged serving ourselves that we forget the service we owe to God and to our fellow men? If we occupy in a half-hearted, lukewarm service, will it win for us a crown of roses or a crown of thorns? Or will the service of our faithful brothers and sisters be accepted in lieu of our neglect and lack of service, and we receive a crown?

I go from here to Tuvan to-morrow, to hold a series of meetings. Expect to start for home December 22.

Ever praying for the success of the gospel, I am,

Your colaborer,

E. R. DAVIS.

Kentucky and Tennessee

As the year 1915 with its varied experiences draws to a close, we recount its blessings. After three short crops, almost failures, we have been favored with abundant harvests once more, so we are encouraged. The events of the times are stirring the minds of the people as never before, with the result that many are inquiring for the truth.

The Lord's work is on the upward move in many respects. Notwithstanding many Saints have moved to regions round about, our numbers are augmented with additional baptisms. Our missionary force this year is small considering the demands of the work. We have only three active men. We have five branches, with a membership scattered over several counties with a new branch recently organized. So with the openings previously made, we have not been able to answer all the calls for preaching, yet some new openings have been made.

After our reunion in July, which was a success and has been reported, I was engaged with the tent until the latter part of October. Brother C. A. Nolan was associated with me in tent work, and Brother J. M. Nunley a part of the time. We made five points with the tent, three of them new openings.

In some respects this was the most successful campaign we have held in this district. Many friends were made to the cause. Altogether more than forty baptisms are reported thus far. Our old tent has given out, so an effort was made to get a new one. Seventy-five dollars have been subscribed to this fund. We hope to get a large tent in time for an early start next season.

After closing the tent work, I held meetings at Joppa, Illinois, where there is a noble band of Saints, all of whom except one, I had baptized. They have no one to preach for them, and as they live just across the river from our district, they expect me to come over occasionally and occupy. They have a nice Sunday school, and are trying to let their light shine.

I was called from here to Sharion, Tennessee, to do some baptizing. I held a few meetings with good interest, and left Brother Nolan to continue, while I went to High Hill and filled a previous appointment.

Our district conference was held at Bethel, October 30. Here we have the largest church building in the district. It was taxed to the limit to accommodate the crowds. Brother R. C. Russell was expected to be at this conference, but was engaged in the East and could not attend. Brother Nolan and I continued the effort there for a week.

From there we went to High Hill Branch, held forth over two Sundays, and baptized one. I then went to my home and made preparations for winter, after which we started on a tour through Carroll and Henry counties, to answer calls that had been waiting for months. In order that we might answer more calls, we separated at Galeson, Brother Nolan going to Orr Springs, while I went on to Henry Station and Swindle Schoolhouse, where I was greeted with a large audience. I held forth here and also at Carnes Schoolhouse, and Moppheens. From here I went to Paris and held two meetings at the home of W. T. McClain, then to Marys Hill, eight miles east of Paris.

While there, Brother S. L. Booth and I went to Haglars Ridge, six miles farther east, near Springville, in a Seventh-day Adventist neighborhood, and secured a vacant store building and announced meetings to begin the next evening. The weather was fine and we had a full house after the second night. We arranged a query box and soon had plenty of questions. However, as soon as we made a distinction between the law of Moses and the gospel law, the ire of our friends was aroused, and they began to remonstrate. Excitement ran high.

We announced that the next night we would answer all the questions, and also show why Christians keep Sunday as the Sabbath. The next night the house would not hold all the people. We were blessed with excellent liberty in showing that the law of Moses, including the decalogue, was given at Sinai (Deuteronomy 5:23), because of transgression (Galatians 3:19), and that the Sabbath was unknown to the world for twenty-five hundred years (Nehemiah 9:13, 14). We presented the matter of the Sunday Sabbath from a scriptural and historical standpoint.

We continued for a week occupying some nights over two hours, and after the sermons answered questions for another hour. The question of eating meat, and especially pork, and also the question of strong drink and tobacco was brought up one night, after I had talked for one hour and a quarter. I left it to a vote, after telling them it would take an hour longer to answer these points, and all hands went up. The people said they were not tired and wanted to hear if they should eat sausage for breakfast. An Adventist brother answered, "No."

I proceeded by showing that from Adam to the flood herbs were meat for man and beast (Genesis 1:29; 3:18); that after the flood (Genesis 9:2) flesh was to be meat for men, the blood excepted. I showed further that certain meats, including pork, were to be "unclean unto you," the children of Israel (Leviticus 11:5). This was binding under the law to the Jews only, the same being done away in Christ (Colossians 2:14). I also quoted 1 Corinthians 8:8, and other scripture.

Adventists urge Isaiah 66:17, which only refers to the condition of the new Jerusalem, when the enmity between man and beast cease (Isaiah 11:7). I quoted Doctrine and Covenants 86, showing the will of God concerning meat, tobacco and strong drink. Few more questions were presented.

This is a fine opening and we have many invitations to return. This will be a good place for a tent meeting. We are planning to start the campaign here next spring. We were royally entertained at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Lippard, who are Methodists, but who seem well pleased with our position.

I returned to Marys Hill and organized a branch with twenty-six charter members, with Elder W. L. McClain, president; W. C. Cobb, priest; Sister Luna McFall, clerk.

Weather at this time is stormy. I am domiciled at the home of Brother W. L. McClain, in Paris, Tennessee.

I must not forget to mention the good work being done by two of our local brethren, W. L. McClain and S. E. Dickson, who are employed in the L. and M. shops at Paris, and who have occupied almost every Saturday and Sunday with meetings. Brother Will has an auto and has filled regular appointments at Oakland Branch, thirty miles from Paris, also at Buchanan Branch. Brother Ed traveled in his buggy, as well as making several trips by railroad, filling appointments at a distance. As a result of these efforts, some fifteen or twenty have been baptized. These brethren are to be commended for their zeal and good works.

To the Saints of Kentucky and Tennessee District, I have to say that the time will soon be here for closing the agent's books for 1915. Has your name been recorded among the faithful helpers? If not, do not delay, but send what you can, be it much or little. Do not let the year pass in which the Lord has done so much for us, without helping some in the cause we love so well. May God bless all his faithful children.

With kindest regards, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

J. R. McCLAIN.

Oklahoma

Coming south from Lamoni, the writer visited one day at Independence, this being the first time in twenty-one years the writer has left his mission for a month's rest out of the mission. It was a real treat; and I see the need of our men visiting Lamoni and Independence. We need to come in closer touch with the leading workers at headquarters. I found, however, while at Lamoni, there was plenty of work to do.

I stopped at Yates Center, Kansas, by special invitation, to visit the Van Valkenburg family, eight of whom the writer baptized in Oklahoma. This visit, however, was to marry Sister Ida Van Valkenburg to Mr. Fred Marlow, of Reeding, Oklahoma.

Our next stop was in Oklahoma, where we preached twice at Collinsville and blessed three children. At Tulsa we met the noble band of Saints with the W. P. Robinson family as our city missionaries. From Tulsa we went to Sperry, where we ate a very sumptuous Thanksgiving dinner at the home of Brother and Sister Earl D. Bailey. These many points where a few Saints are located must be visited. The sheep must be fed. If we had a few more live local men like Brother Lemuel Dyke it would relieve the missionaries of a great burden, as the calls are many—but where are the laborers?

Two weeks of hard work in Oklahoma City completed our first church in that great new city of seventy-five thousand. We now have a neat little church at Seventy and Lottie, where our little band of workers can meet. Brethren R. M. Maloney and Ed Dillon, being elders, will look after our interests there. The writer and Brother Dillon with hammer and saw assisted the carpenters, and we built free from debt. We have a good band of workers there, especially the Ladies' Aid.

Our Indian holiday meetings are now on; the camp is growing larger every day. This is our best chance to preach to them. The Christmas tree will be one interesting feature on Christmas Day. Some names are now in hand for baptism.

The writer is preaching now every night eight miles southeast of Kingfisher, to a full house of interested listeners.

Your coworker,

HUBERT CASE.

Northwestern Ohio

I want to thank the Saints for their interest in me during my recent illness. Have just about recovered from an attack of typhoid fever, which has hindered me in my missionary work for six weeks, and, it seems, will hold me for at least four weeks longer. It has been only through the prayers of the Saints and administration that I have recovered.

Reports from the two-day meeting held at the Oak Harbor Branch in November are very good. It was a success in every way and the spirit of unity prevailed. Soon the harvest will be reaped there that has taken years of sowing. Here is a little band of Saints that a few years ago were denied the use of the United Brethren church to hold a funeral service. They started to build a church, and to-day it stands at "Seven Oaks" as a monument of their work.

Toledo has made the best advancement of any branch in the last year. There has been a gain of twenty-eight by letter and baptism. Of this number fourteen were granted letters to the Sylvania Branch, which was organized in September, one lost by death, leaving a net gain of thirteen. The Saints here are scattered over the city, which affords a splendid opportunity for cottage meetings. The writer with the aid of the local officers expects to start meetings in the homes of the Saints wishing to warn their neighbors. There is a full corps of working officers here, with three elders, three priests, one teacher, and three deacons, also some young men heeding the admonition of Paul to "study to show thyself approved," and who will be available workmen when the Lord calls.

Reports from the new branches, Lima and Sylvania, show progress. Elder J. G. Halb has been holding meetings in both places with satisfactory results. One has been baptized and several more are interested, but are holding back for some cause. These branches are not fully organized yet. Both are presided over by priests. We are looking forward to complete organization of both in the near future. Unipolis and Bryan are going along in the same old-fashioned way.

The prospects for the coming year are bright. The Macedonian call is being heard all over the district.

Trusting the cooperation of the Saints for our future work, and ever praying for the success of the cause, I am,

Your brother in the conflict,

MATTHEW W. LISTON.

News from Branches

Toronto, Ontario

Bishop R. C. Evans has commenced his twelfth season of theater services. Shortly after closing last spring the Princess was burned, and has not been rebuilt. This made it necessary to secure another house. He succeeded in getting Toronto's "best," the Royal Alexandria. This is a very fine house, located a little farther west on King Street than was the Princess.

He opened Sunday, November 28, and notwithstanding very strong counter attractions, was greeted with a full house. Patriotic concerts are held in nearly all city playhouses on Sunday evening, also many moving-picture shows are putting on concerts. As our city is full of military enthusiasm, these concerts have a great hold on the public; and it is a high tribute to the bishop that he can fill one of our big theaters in his twelfth season, when war is uppermost in all minds.

The old Jerusalem gospel still has a drawing power. His language may not be the gilded college style, but when under the inspiration of the Spirit he is so forceful and penetrating that a wayfaring man, though a fool, can understand.

The services are well advertised, as in the past, with a new feature added. Some of our members have "movie" shows, and others have influence with other houses, and the result is that in a number of shows the bishop's picture is thrown on the canvas twice daily, announcing his lectures. This brings it before thousands daily in a way which is sure to strike, as everything thrown on the screen is read.

Everybody is busy in church work here. A thorough canvass of the city is being made with literature, and the people engage in conversation if possible. This work is under the direction of a committee of three, while another committee looks after the financial end. When a call for workers was made, seventy-five young people responded, and they were sent out, two by two, to all parts of the city, loaded with literature and full of the desire to talk gospel everywhere. This work will continue throughout the winter.

Our Religio, Sunday school, ladies' auxiliary, and dramatic club are all busy in their different spheres, and doing good work.

When Bishop Evans first talked theater work here, his dream was a branch of one thousand members. We have now passed that mark and are still going. We expect a big season, and everybody is working and praying for it.

Your brother,

A. F. McLEAN.

48 Fern Avenue, December 18, 1915.

Spokane, Washington

About the only thing we see in the HERALD regarding Spokane is an admonition to the Saints from the bishop's agent and a conference notice now and then. Considering the size of the branch here, this should not be, so I thought I would start the ball rolling.

It has been my experience that when a Saint moves from one branch to another he is always interested in news from the particular branch or branches of which he has been a member. Also, those who have been left behind are interested, and methinks the missionaries who have labored in the different places from time to time are still interested. This is as it should be, for we are, or should be, one large family; and who amongst us, especially at this time of the year, is not overjoyed at receiving a letter from mother, father, sister or brother, in the church or out?

Do I hear some one disagreeing with me as to our being one large family? True, I have heard such a remark as this: "If we are ever to live together, some of us will have to clean up a little." But, on the other hand, I have often heard the word mother or the word father used, when the one using it has thought that the term sister or brother did not express to the utmost their feelings.

I like this, and well do I remember a certain mother who about nine years ago was an instrument in God's hands in bringing me to a knowledge of the gospel (simply by going to her house in search of room and board). Is it any wonder that I should look upon her even now as mother? I know that if she sees my name appended to this she will still think of me as her son.

Yes, we are "one large family." Saints, let us have more of this feeling, one toward another. When we have, our influence for good will be greater, consequently the work will go forward with greater strides. Our actions cannot be hid. Are we not to be as a light set upon a hill? The world is bound to take notice.

We have just closed a successful conference. All have been blessed and edified. Two were called to offices in the priesthood. Most of the Saints of the district are now looking forward to a reunion that has been provided for next June and July, while Spokane Saints in particular have a series of meetings to look forward to in January as well, the preacher being our able young missionary, J. A. Bronson. We pray that many may be gathered in.

If Jimmy Bannister should see this letter, I wish he would take notice of my address. It is North 218 Lee Street. I wrote him a letter some time ago at Niagara, and the postal authorities, not being able to find him there, seemed to think that he had probably gone to the Fair: they searched for him in San Francisco, but were unsuccessful.

In gospel bonds,

FRED BROWNING.

Independence, Missouri

The closing weeks of the year 1915 have been of unusual import to the Saints here. The elders and officers in charge of the work, with others, have evidently put forth their best efforts toward an effectual feeding of the flock, composed of young and old, over which they have been made overseers, among whom we mention Frederick M. Smith and G. E. Harrington.

Efficient workers among the sisters have also been raised up, whose mental activities have been aroused in behalf of all. And besides the strong, older, never-failing members of the auxiliaries, who quilt, make comforters, mend and make over garments for the needy, and as they toil, speak encouraging and comforting words while providing the plain simple things of life, we have also in our midst sprightly young women who, by their love for literature, art and music, are helping to develop the Saints, and are leading them onward, especially in the service of song in the house of the Lord.

We desire to name here the seldom-heard-of leaders in the sewing department, Sisters H. O. Smith and W. Pooler, and our self-sacrificing Mutual Helpers, Sisters Closson and Keown. Then there are the unobtrusive teachers of the study clubs, and last, though not least, Sister Flo McNichols of the National Young Chorus, and others as faithful in the Master's service. There are also efficient young men at work.

Yesterday after three sessions of spiritual work at the morning prayer meeting, Sunday school, and church service, the Saints spent a profitable afternoon listening to the testimonies of fifteen of our resident missionaries, who had been sharing with their families the blessings and comforts of the Christmas holidays. These testimonies of work done were inspiring and greatly appreciated. This meeting was indeed a gladsome ending of the scenes lately presented through the auspices of the Sunday school, for besides enjoying the pleasures and instructive services of Rally Day and Pioneer Day, the Saints had been given one of the best entertainments of the season, in the beautiful Christmas pageant exhibited on Friday and Saturday nights, the 24th and 25th.

The outlook for the future, so far as opportunities for the uplift and development of the Saints is concerned, is indeed bright and auspicious. The faithful laborers of the ministry at home are without stint of enduring sacrifice, and are planning to make more effective among us their work of spiritual advancement. And when our brethren from abroad come to us to the central place, they bring such a message of peace and good will that notwithstanding the clouds of sickness and the departure of our loved ones at times, the Saints are made to lift up their heads and rejoice in this glorious work.

We have men's meetings, women's meetings, children's meetings, and to the profitable and uplifting sermons preached by the power of the Holy Spirit are added lectures, scientific and educational; so at this the opening of the new year the Saints may well be thankful for blessings bestowed.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Book Reviews

THE RESEARCH MAGNIFICENT.—The Macmillan Company, New York City, $1.50. H. G. Wells, the British sociologist-novelist, is the author of this book. His central character is a most original figure. Benham realizes at the beginning of his gentlemanly career that one so favorably situated ought to go out after the greatest thing in life. This he conceives to involve the acquisition of mental and moral qualities that will lift him above the crude, retrogressive ideals of the majority of his fellow beings. In other words, he will be a spiritual "aristocrat." Mr. Wells surprises us with the term, and works against our American prejudices for a while; but eventually we understand—and feel disqualified to ever think of a true aristocrat again as merely a leisurely and chivalrous, higher-class and privileged individual. We must think of him now as a hard-headed intellectual, full of pride and almost abnormal ambition—yet not what is commonly comprehended under the title of egotist. This Benham, indeed, is impossible of description or classification. One can only sense him. Certainly by most people he would be counted a failure: among other things, he wrecks his home through his persistence with the idea of aristocracy (of life, not of society); his passion for individual kingship—kingship apart from crowns and things sensual. But was Benham's life really a failure? The reader hesitates a very long time before attempting to decide. Unless, of course, the reader has a closed mind. Benham believes mankind is horribly handicapped by fear, indulgence, and one or two other supreme "limitations"; and he most certainly proves it. But what he does not prove (and he feels this toward the last) is that the sort of life he has lived himself—aloof from his fellow creatures—is worth while for its own sake. He separates the idea of happiness, of tolerable happiness even, from that of rightness; makes the truly progressive individual a martyr, as matters stand, in the world. He does so intentionally, of course. How far is he wrong? Wells has accomplished a work worth while in creating Benham and sending him out upon his human search. Yes, in spite of our own theories, we feel sure he has. We have met another—shadowy, but tangible and intensely interesting—intellectual to bear us company on our own excursions into the unknown. And we welcome him, sincerely, in spite of his inhuman tendencies.

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN.—John Walker Powell. Macmillan Company, New York City. $1. The war in Europe is causing great searching of hearts by thoughtful people the world over, and many have been led to inquire of their own souls, and also of their associates, as to whether or not Christianity has proven a failure. During the awful conflict in progress, Browning's lines of poetry come to mind, "Whose sad face on the cross sees only this, After the passing of a thousand years." President Eliot, of Harvard University, is said to have declared that Christian ethics are a failure. A writer in the Century discusses the "collapse of the church." The man on the street is asking, "Is the Christian ideal indeed practicable?" This writer concludes that Christianity is not a failure, but the interpretation of Christianity received at the hands of the church is indeed a failure. On page 169 of his work he says: "A brilliant professor in a leading University in reply to a questionnaire regarding the attitude of university men to the church, replied, 'A lover of religion will avoid all the churches, liberal and orthodox, as a lover of wine would avoid empty bottles.' Perhaps this particular professor was more interested in making an epigram than in stating the exact truth, but there can be no doubt that many essentially religious men both among the educated and the working classes are estranged from the church."

LES MISERABLES.—Macmillan Company, New York City. 25 cents. A volume from the Macmillan Pocket American and English Classics. Bound in cloth. Convenient size for travelers or students who wish to carry it with them for study. It contains an introduction to Victor Hugo, also notes explaining French terms and pronunciation.

ACRES OF DIAMONDS.—Russell H. Conwell, Harper and Brothers, New York City. $1. The work also contains an interesting biography of Mr. Conwell. The body of the book consists of Conwell's famous lecture, "Acres of Diamonds," Mr. Conwell has delivered this lecture in many places. In fact, it is said that he has delivered the lecture more than five thousand times. Besides his work as President of Temple University, of Philadelphia, he has traveled almost continuously in the lecture field for 50 years. A notable and interesting feature of his work is that the proceeds of the lecture are used to send poor young men through college. Following each lecture he counts out the expenses of his trip, writes a check for the balance of the receipts, and forwards it to some young man whose name appears on his waiting list, these names having been sent in with recommendations from various colleges and other institutions of learning. In that way it is said that he has made it possible for 1,674 young men to make their way through college. His lecture is in itself interesting and inspiring, and is based on the old story of Ali Hafed, a Persian, who was prosperous and contented until he heard a wonderful story about diamonds. He then sold his farm and traveled far and near hunting diamonds until he had squandered all his money and finally ended his life a suicide. Some years later the man who purchased his farm discovered that it contained wonderful diamond mines, in fact the Golconda diamond mines from which the crown jewels of the world were taken, were discovered on that farm. The incident is said to be historically true. From this starting point Mr. Conwell proceeds to argue that we need not rush abroad to a distance to find out diamonds, but will find them at home under our feet; opportunities are at hand if we will but develop them.

January "American Boy"

A new type of the woolly, wild-west Indian story appears in the January American Boy in "Apauk, Caller of Buffalo." More thrilling than fiction, the life story of the greatest of the Blackfeet medicine men, not only possesses an enthralling interest but gives the reader an authoritative historical picture of the life of the American Indian on the great western plains before invasion of the white man.  —Lord Byron.

James Willard Schultz, is an adopted member of the Black-foot tribe and has lived the life of an Indian for forty years. "The whiner," by Clarence B. Kelland, is a New Year's story of a lumber camp with a point to it. Doctor Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, sends a message to American boys on what science offers the young man. "Yim," by Lee Smits, is a likable tale of a pet bear whose faithfulness to his master amounted at times to a nuisance. "Laddie breaks honor" is a story of a boy worth while, who used a prohibited skate sail to save life. Other interesting stories are, "A feller t' depend on," by George M. Johnson; "A profitable investment," by James William Jackson, "Juana of the Hills," by Vera Connolly, and the serials, "The fighter," by Gardner Hunting, and "Indian lodge post," by Dillon Wallace. A. Neely Hall, who is conducting the For the Boys to Make department, explains with full diagrams how to make toys that really go. Other articles which will afford helpful hints to the practical boy are, "Dogs in disease," by J. Fielding Cottrill; "Breeding prize birds," by M. E. Jennings; "Tanning skins," by C. D. Gilbert, and "A small electric plant for the country home," by Don Cameron Shafer. The photographic, stamp, novel inventions, puzzle and humor departments satisfy a variety of youthful interests and keep the boy busy. Take a copy home to the boy. $1.00 a year. WHAT CHRIST GAVE FOR US

And What We May Do for Him

(Synopsis of a sermon preached by Elder John F. Garver, at Lamoni, Iowa, December 26, 1915).

They shall call his name Emmanuel.—The angel to Joseph. Christ . . . gave himself for us.—Paul.

The spirit of the Christmastide naturally engages our attention at this time, and our minds revert to him whose natal day we at this season celebrate. It is well in meditating on the life of Christ that we remember him not only as Bethlehem's babe, but also that we remember the mission on which he was sent into the world, and the spirit in which he sought to perform that sacred work. It is with this the spirit manifested by Christ, and the willingness with which he gave himself to the work of his mission, that we are especially concerned at this time.

The apostle reminds us that Christ gave himself for us; and indeed Christ gave all he had. Entering unreservedly upon the work of the redemption of mankind, he gave himself wholly that we might live.

This giving of his all was perhaps the most potent factor in the life of the Savior. Reserving nothing, literally pouring out for us all that he possessed, all that he was, he at once evidenced his own conviction with reference to his work, gave to men a suggestion of his own estimate of the great importance of that work, at the same time vitalizing the invitation to follow after him.

GOD WITH US

Now in this giving of himself for us, the angel would have us remember that Christ came to the world in the stead of God. In fact, the angel said that his name should be called Emmanuel, or, being interpreted, God with us. So in the life and work and mission of Christ we have an interpretation of the plan of God, and of the way in which he has ordained that man shall labor and perform his work under that plan; and thus is afforded us a divine demonstration of the way of righteousness, and a divine example after which we may seek to follow in that way.

In fine, God so loved the world that he was willing to give his son, who might thus demonstrate his way; and Christ so loved the world that he was willing to come and interpret God to us.

WHAT CHRIST GAVE

We note briefly the manner in which Christ gave himself over wholly and without reservation to his mission and work.

He sought not after the material things of this world, but, in exemplification of his own teaching, he sought ever to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness. His energy was given over so fully to this end that he was required to say, I have no place to lay my head.

We do not understand that Christ would deny men and women things material. Indeed, these are intended for the people of God. The Lord has said, The earth is mine, and the fullness thereof. God's people may in righteousness take to themselves of these things. Material things are to be acquired, however, not as the end of life, but as a means to an end. They are to serve as a medium of exchange for the things that we need, and are to serve the church as a means for the preaching of the gospel and the fulfillment of the mission of the Saints.

In giving himself fully to his work, engaging earnestly therein, Christ left for other men the accumulation of things material, the plan of God providing that those blessed in this line of work should contribute to the support of those whose labor called them to other activities, and to the support of other lines necessary to the upbuilding of the kingdom. Christ then gave the material things he might have taken to himself, that his work might be a full and complete success.

He gave a thing more to be prized than money, or bonds, or lands. He gave the favor of man.

It was John the forerunner who said that the ax was laid to the root of the tree. Christ took up the ax and smote sin in every form,—sin, the taproot of all disorder. In doing so he rebuked worldliness and condemned evil in whatever garb, drawing upon himself the disfavor and abuse of men. Continuing under this disfavor, and yet laying persistently and effectually the ax to the root of the tree, he aroused the indignation of men strong and influential. These men, smarting under the rebuke which they had received, and to retain their own places and institutions, sought the overthrow of Christ through his crucifixion.

Now a man may be willing to give the honor of other men that his work may be a success, but men are not so many who are willing to give their friends, if need be, that their work may be accomplished. This test Christ passed under, and without shrinking.

There came a time when certain of the disciples, because the teaching of Christ was thought to be hard, turned back and followed him no more. When he asked three of his special friends to watch with him in the garden, they failed him, and were content to sleep. His friends all seemed to desert him for a time, and even the one whom he had chosen to feed the sheep and the lambs denied him. Unmoved by this trial and test, Christ went to the cross without a murmur, where there was left to him the supreme test, in this connection, when to all appearances the Father withdrew for a season and left him to bear the burden alone. And he who, as he said upon one occasion, might have called legions of angels to his assistance, was even in this time of agony left without one to succor and to comfort.

He had given all he had, material things, the favor and honor of men, friends that were nearest and dearest to him, and yet there was denied him even at this crucial time the companionship of his heavenly Father. Little wonder there was wrung from his drawn lips the agonizing cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me!" Yet holding himself to his purpose, he raised his voice in mighty faith, and, even though the Father had withdrawn himself, breathed the prayer of trust and confidence, "Into thy hands I commend my spirit."

So the life and personal ministry of Christ among men was finished. Indeed in that work he gave himself for us.

OUR GREAT HIGH PRIEST

Contemplating a life of such sacrificing service, well might the apostle say, "Such an high priest became us," or, in other words, such an one is worthy to have become our great high priest, our leader, and our king. The Apostle Paul invites us to meditate further upon the life and work and sacrifice of this our priest, when he says, "Consider the apostle and high priest of our profession."

Truly this man Jesus, the son of God, who held himself constant to his great profession and mission; who gave himself fully that we might live; who triumphed over all things,—truly this one is worthy, and it is fitting that such an one should have been chosen as the priest and leader of our cause.

OUR PROFESSION

If we shall draw from these meditations the lesson of the hour, it will be needful that we remember not only that Christ is our great high priest, but that he is the priest of our profession. The same apostle admonishes us earnestly to "hold fast our profession." A work and profession which has been considered so important that one should be sent from the courts of glory to be known as Emmanuel, and to give himself as Christ has done for us,—truly may we be admonished that even if it shall require the giving over of all things else, we should without wavering hold fast to this profession.

Now, what is our profession? It was so necessary that we should be left without question with reference to this our calling, that the Savior in his last words to his apostles just prior to his ascension said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." This is our profession. This is the profession of the church and people of God, even the preaching of the gospel.

To this work "all are called according to the gifts of God unto them." We are not to preach the gospel only by sending men into foreign fields. If we shall preach the gospel effectually, it will be when we send men into foreign fields to proselyte, and when we make for these proselytes places of gathering against the day when it shall be necessary for them to flee to Zion,—the gathering places to include all provisions necessary for the temporal necessities of the Saints and the work, and to exclude all worldly influences and enticements which might tend to lead away from the work and mission of the people of God.

This work of preaching the gospel, of bringing to the light and building up in the light men persuaded to believe the truth, was considered so necessary by Christ that it became the burden of his consideration and prayer. As recorded in John 17, he presented to God the church, including followers in this dispensation, and until the end of time—including you and including me—asking that they might through the keeping of the word be restrained from all evil, and become one in purpose, and in effort, and in love, to the end that the world might be persuaded to believe on him who was sent and on his testimony.

This, then, is our profession: To so occupy under God that the world shall have an exemplification of the efficacy of the gospel to redeem and to save; to so occupy that we shall finally become as a city set upon a hill, the light of which cannot be hid.

WHAT HAVE WE GIVEN?

We make bold to ask at this time, What have we given to Christ, who has given so much for us? Are we to be satisfied to give to him the tenth of our possessions and the tenth of our increase? We understand that this day, to the coming of the Son of Man, is a day of sacrifice. Is it a sacrifice for men out of their abundance to give one tenth? This tenth in any event belongs to God. If we are to sacrifice, we are to give beyond that which already belongs to him, even of that which we might otherwise appropriate to other purposes.

Shall we be content with having bestowed upon our friends at this season gifts beyond or within our means, while we give nothing to Christ?

This is the season of giving, and we may give to our friends and kinsmen. But unless we have caught the inspiration of the life of Christ, and out of the full consecration of all of our talents, have given to the extent of our ability to him, not only in money and in kind, but in service and in love, we have not caught the significance of the great gift of Christ to us. Let each ask himself, What have I that I may give to him? or, to better express it, what have I that I should withhold from him?

We are to give to Christ that through this means we may under God open up a way for other men to be brought to him through the light of divine truth. If in this giving wholly of ourselves in service to him we must sacrifice or deny ourselves material things, we are to be content without these things; if we lose the favor of some men, we are to press bravely forward without this favor; and if in our determination to prove true to the trust imposed it becomes necessary for us to part with friends who are inclined to press their feet in other directions, we are to move on, leaving these friends for the friendship of God.

LET US BE FAITHFUL

The language of the apostle reminding us that Christ gave himself for us is expressed in connection with the hope of the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Seeing that it is Christ who triumphed over all, and to whose coming we look forward; seeing that it is such an one who has become our great high priest; seeing that our profession calls us to labor together with him under the great Father of all, surely there is no question with reference to the final triumph of our mission. There may be those among us who will fail, but the great purpose and work of God among men cannot fail.

It is our privilege and our calling to have part in the preparation necessary to the second coming of Christ. In his life and in the spirit thereof, we are enabled to understand the spirit in which we are to perform this our work.

May God help us and bless us to the end that each one of us may be found worthy in that we have unreservedly given to Christ the full measure of our devotion and our faithful service.

CURRENT EVENTS SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

INVESTIGATING GASOLINE.—The increasing price of gasoline has been called to the attention of Congress in resolutions demanding investigation. It is intimated that the Federal Trade Commission may inquire into the matter.

A MINIMUM WAGE.—A minimum weekly wage of eight dollars and fifty cents for experienced women and girls employed in retail stores is provided by a Massachusetts law that went into effect January 1.

DIRECTORS ACQUITTED.—Six of the eleven former directors of the New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad, charged with criminal violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, were on the 9th found not guilty, the jury disagreeing on the five others.

SERIOUS EPIDEMIC.—Influenza, or la grippe, has during the past few days spread over the country in what is described as the most serious epidemic of this malady ever known to the country, taking a heavy toll in lives, and causing considerable economic loss by incapacitating workers in all walks of life.

FORD PEACE PARTY.—The Ford peace party has been reported in readiness to proceed from Copenhagen to The Hague via rail. The journey across German territory was to be made in sealed cars, no one to be allowed to alight, to carry papers, cameras, post cards, opera glasses, etc. In passing important points, including the Kiel Canal, window shades were to be drawn. It is announced that the party will be in session at The Hague for only a short time.

LABOR RIOT.—In a labor riot in connection with the strike at Youngstown, Ohio, the 7th, nineteen persons were shot, four probably fatally. In the battle between rioters and private police of the plant, report says, both sides used pistols, the police starting the shooting after the hurling of rocks by the mob. Eight business buildings and two buildings of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Works were burned by rioters. State troops were ordered to the scene of disorder.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Germany has recognized the Carranza Government. The general trend throughout the country seems to be toward a readjustment under the new government. Not too much reliability can be placed, however, in reports regarding internal affairs. Villa troops not incorporated in the Carranza army are returning to their homes, and fighting grows less frequent and deadly. No definite information with reference to Villa has been given out since last report.

PEACE COMMISSIONERS.—The international commission provided for under what is known as the Bryan Peace Treaty with Great Britain has been announced. Judge George Gray, of Delaware, will be the national member for the United States, and Ambassador De Gama, of Brazil, the nonnational member. Viscount Brice will be the national member for Great Britain, Max Koreski, of the imperial council of Russia, the nonnational member. Fridjof Nansen, former premier of Norway, will be umpire. For a similar commission with Italy, George L. Mackintosh, of Indiana, has been selected as American national member, the Chilean ambassador, Eduardo Suarez Mujua nonnational member.

BRITAIN FOR COMPULSION.—Announcement was made in the British Parliament on the 4th, that of 5,011,441 men available for military service in England, Scotland, and Wales, only 2,829,263 had offered their services under Lord Derby's voluntary enlistment scheme. The same day the resignation of Sir John Simon from the cabinet was announced, as a result of a clash over the compulsion bill. On the 6th, by a vote of 403 to 105, the conscription or compulsion bill to become operative throughout the British Isles, except in Ireland, passed its first reading in the Commons. Unwilling to abide by resolutions adopted by an organized labor congress in session in London, recommending that the labor party in Parliament oppose the conscription bill in all its stages, the three labor leaders of the cabinet resigned. Conscription would insure Great Britain an army maintained at 4,000,000. Enlistment under the Derby plan has been reopened and will continue indefinitely, to allow men who have not done so to enlist before the conscription act goes into effect.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Desperate fighting on the western front, especially in the Vosges, has brought no change. Comparative quiet reigns in the eastern front in the Riga section, on the north of the Russian line. On the south their offense against the Austrians has carried the Russians to Czernowitz, capital of Bukowina, where they have taken important fortifications, if not the capital itself. Activities in Galicia and on the Bessarabian front have for several days been confined to artillery fire. The Russian army is said to be well equipped and of excellent morale. An Austrian attack on Scutari is reported checked by Montenegrin and Serbian forces. The Teutonic allies still threaten to attack the entente entrenchments at Salonjki, but no forward movement has yet been reported. A Serbian army is reforming in Montenegro, said to number near 100,000. The Montenegrins have held against the Austrians, the latter being reported now on the defensive. Continued Russian success in Persia has checked, temporarily at least, Germanic influences in that country. Reinforcements are on the way to join the British at Kut el Amara, Persia, where they have for some time withstood a Persian army. The remaining positions held by the allies on the Gallipoli Peninsula have been abandoned, with the wounding of only one man. Thus closes a costly attempt to take Constantinople via the Dardanelles and the peninsula. The suggestion by the allies that China be brought into the war is unfavorably received in Japan. The British seamers Geelong, Saint Oswald, and Glengyle, have been torpedoed in the Mediterranean, the latter with loss of life. The British battleship King Edward VII has been sunk by a mine. The loss of lives on board the Persia is announced as three hundred thirty-six.

GERMAN CONCESSIONS.—In a formal note to the United States made public the 7th, the German Government offers to pay indemnity in the Lusitania case, with the reservation that said concession is made without admission of wrongdoing. The German note also gives assurances that, in harmony with orders issued at the beginning of the campaign in the Mediterranean, when German vessels were instructed to observe the principles of international law, German submarines in the Mediterranean will sink enemy noncombatant vessels only after passengers and crew have been accorded safety, unless said vessels resist or attempt to escape; the situation in the Mediterranean being essentially different, it is stated, from that in the war zone about the British Isles, which was established as a measure of reprisal against Great Britain. The note further recites that cases of destruction of enemy vessels in the Mediterranean will be submitted to prize courts, and that if American interests are concerned, results of proceedings will be laid before the Washington authorities; that this action will be taken in the case of the Persia if it should develop that that steamer was destroyed by German submarines; and that if orders of the German Government are disobeyed, commanders will be punished, and indemnity paid the United States for American lives lost. These assurances with reference to Mediterranean naval warfare are given by Germany on her own initiative.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

FRY TO ENGLAND.—Elder Charles Fry, editor of Zion's Ensign, has been called to England by the serious illness of his aged mother, whom he has not seen for many years. Concerning his voyage to his native country the Ensign for January 6 says:

By letter from Brother Fry, the first part written at a hotel in New York, at which time his passport had not come, he said he wired to Washington for it. Later it came after the vessel, the New York, on which he was to sail, had been loosened from its moorings and was pushing out of the harbor. However, he got on a tug and overtook the vessel, as was stated by a later note written on board, which he sent back by the tug. At this writing he is probably in midocean, as he left New York on Friday, December 31. We hope he will have a safe journey, as he sailed on a neutral vessel, and seemed to have no fears of submarine attack.

ISAIAH TWENTY-NINE---NUMBER 1

BY E. E. LONG

Opponents of the latter-day work have invented all sorts of interpretations for Isaiah 29 in their frantic efforts to defeat the Book of Mormon. They realize that if the Saints' interpretation of this chapter is allowed to stand their position is impregnable. This "main forte," as it has been called by some of our critics, is not only strong of itself, but it is admirably supported by numerous other works, all conveniently connected with the interior stronghold by intersecting trenches. Our Commander in Chief, by a wonderful foresight, has so arranged the lines of defense that, no matter from what angle an attack is made, the enemy becomes enmeshed in a cleverly arranged system of barbed wire entanglements, and the drive ends in confusion and disorder.

And it is not infrequently that prisoners are taken by the King's patrol guards who, once inside the lines are so amazed at the beauty and symmetry of the fortifications that they become willing subjects, and enlist in the army of the Lord. Such was the experience of the writer.

The latest effusion to come to our notice is from one Edson Smith of Coeur d' Alene, Idaho, whose line of attack, briefly stated, is as follows: Jerusalem was the "Ariel" spoken of (which we will not dispute) which was "conquered and brought down to the very lowest depths of humiliation before Jesus was born into the world, and the vision of the prophets and seers had become a sealed book to them so far as their understanding went." The "sealed book" was the "Book of the Prophets," which the wise and learned doctors of the law could not understand. Jesus was the "unlearned" man who did understand and read the prophets at the age of twelve, confounding the doctors by his explanation of the prophecies therein. The Book of Mormon could not be the sealed book, because it claims that Christ appeared to the people on this continent. Whereas, "the Bible only makes provision for his first coming at his birth, and his second coming at the end of the world."

Without taking time to make a direct reply to the foregoing allegations, I will proceed to examine the whole chapter in detail, in connection with other prophecies and historical events, and allow the reader to form his own conclusion. The reader is requested to read the whole chapter at this juncture.

ARIEL, OR JERUSALEM

Woe to Ariel, to Ariel, the city where David dwelt! add ye year to year; let them kill sacrifices. Yet I will distress Ariel, and there shall be heaviness and sorrow: and it shall be unto me as Ariel. And I will camp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount, and I will raise forts against thee. And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust. Moreover the multitude of thy strangers shall be like small dust, and the multitude of the terrible ones shall be as chaff that passeth away: yea, it shall be at an instant suddenly. Thou shalt be visited of the Lord of hosts with thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire.—Verses 1-6.

Ariel, said to mean "The Lion of God," in all probability, has reference to Jerusalem. It was there where David dwelt, and it was there where they killed sacrifices. Jerusalem was distressed with heaviness and sorrow when Nebuchadnezzar raised forts against her, "before Christ was born into the world," and again when the Romans came against her, A. D. 70. It was during the latter siege that she suffered the greatest distress and sorrow. But in both of those terrible sieges she was "brought down."

TO SPEAK OUT OF THE GROUND

How did or could she ever "speak out of the ground," with a "familiar spirit," and her speech "whisper out of the dust"? We would not expect the stone and mortar ruins to speak out of the ground. An inscription might be found on a pillar or buried slab, but that would be the "speech" or record of some one or more of the inhabitants. With this idea in mind, we leave the material elements of the city and consider the occupants.

If a record written and preserved by some of the inhabitants should be found buried in the ruins, it would fulfill the conditions of the prophecy as found in verse four. If some of the inhabitants escaped the siege and preserved a record for generations to come, would it not also fulfill the prophecy? It would make no difference whether that record was found in the ruins, or in a distant land, so long as it was a record of a remnant of that people.

No such record has ever been found in the ruins of Jerusalem to date. When the city was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar the inhabitants were carried to Babylon, where they remained seventy years. No Israelite record has ever been found in the ruins of Babylon, or any other place where the Israelites have sojourned on the Eastern Continent, that could be said to fulfill the conditions of the prophecy. Turning to Psalm 85: 8-13, we find a similar prophecy as follows:

I will hear what God the Lord will speak: for he will speak peace unto his people, and to his Saints: but let them not turn again to folly. Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land. Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase. Righteousness shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps.

This prophecy has reference to a restoration some-time. It will be at a time when "truth shall spring out of the earth," and when the land shall yield "increase." Jesus informs us in John 17: 17 that God's word is "truth." If a remnant of the Israelite family should escape the siege of Jerusalem and journey to some distant land, carrying with them a portion of God's word to which might be added more truth by revelation, which in time might be buried in the ground and found later, would it not fulfill the conditions of the prophecy? If such a record should come forth, and when compared with the recognized word of God it should be found in complete harmony therewith, would it not have a "familiar spirit"? That such a remnant would escape and make its way to some distant land is plainly foretold by the prophets. And that such a thing did occur is affirmed by the Book of Mormon.

THE WANDERING SHEEP

And the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall again take root downward, and bear fruit upward: for out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and they that escape out of Mount Zion: the zeal of the Lord of hosts shall do this.—Isaiah 37: 31, 32.

Here it is stated that a "remnant" of the "house of Judah" would escape out of "Mount Zion," out of Jerusalem. Please note the fact that it does not say that this remnant was of the tribe of Judah, but of the "house of Judah." The "house of Judah" embraced a part of the tribes of Ephraim, Manasseh, and Benjamin. (1 Chronicles 9: 3.) The same prophet sees the remnant as they journey after making their escape.

For the fields of Heshbon languish, and the vine of Sibmah: the lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof, they are come even unto Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness: her branches are stretched out, they are gone over the sea.—Isaiah 16: 8. (See also Jeremiah 48: 32.)

The "lords of the heathen" were Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, and Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. The principal plants were "broken down" when the ten tribes were carried away, 721 B. C., and when Nebuchadnezzar carried Judah to Babylon, 588 B. C. The escape of this remnant was due to divine favor, being warned by the prophets to "flee afar off" (Jeremiah 49: 30, 31). "Afar off" and "over the sea" both indicate some distant land to which they were directed to go.

This place afar off over the sea is described by Isaiah as a "land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia," where the Lord in time would "lift up an ensign," and "blow a trumpet"

(Isaiah 18: 1-3). From that place the Lord said his dispersed suppliants "shall bring mine offerings" (Zephaniah 3: 10). With the complete overthrow of the house of Israel a universal scattering took place, as foretold by the prophets.

My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did search or seek after them.—Ezekiel 34: 6.

Through all the mountains, upon every high hill, and upon all the face of the earth, would include America, would it not? When Jesus was sent to the "lost sheep of the house of Israel," he said:

Other sheep I have which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.—John 10: 16.

Those "other sheep" were some portion of the scattered flock, unknown to the "fold" at Jerusalem. They were not the Gentiles, as some suppose, because the Gentiles were never called sheep only as they were made sheep by the law of adoption. It was some portion of the scattered flock which had been led away, afar off, and "over the sea."

About 606 B. C. Nebuchadnezzar made Judah tributary to Babylon, allowing Zedekiah to occupy the throne at Jerusalem. Soon afterwards Zedekiah entered a league with Pharaoh of Egypt in the hope of throwing off the Babylonian yoke. His treachery displeased the Lord, who was using Nebuchadnezzar to chastise Judah for his apostasy, and Ezekiel, the prophet, put forth a riddle (Ezekiel 17: 2-10) portraying the punishment about to be sent on the "rebellious" house (verses 12-21) ending the chapter with the following remarkable prophecy:

Thus saith the Lord God; I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon a high mountain and eminent: in the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it: and it shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar: and under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell.—Ezekiel 17: 22-24.

The first great eagle was the king of Babylon. The second eagle was Pharaoh of Egypt. The cedar was the house of Judah, and the highest branch was the royal family. Now notice that the Lord says he will take of the "highest branch of the high cedar" and crop off from the top of his young twigs a "tender one," and will plant it upon a high mountain and eminent, where it will bring forth boughs and bear fruit and be a "goodly cedar."

Can there be any connection between this "young twig" and the "branches" Isaiah and Jeremiah said were "gone over the sea"? This "tender one" was to be planted in the mountain of the height of Israel. Jerusalem and environs was frequently called the "holy mountain," but this reference to the "mountain of the height of Israel" could not apply to Jerusalem, for the reason that the twig that was to be "cropped" was growing at Jerusalem, and was to be transplanted "afar off." If we can locate the "mountain of the height of Israel," it will be an easy matter to learn the whereabouts of the branches that were to go over the sea. Somewhere beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, in a land shadowing with wings, "the daughter of my dispersed shall bring mine offering." Is it stretching the imagination too much to assume that this "daughter" is the branch or branches that be planted afar off and become a goodly cedar? We think these declarations all refer to the same thing.

JOSEPH'S HERITAGE

It will be necessary at this juncture to go farther back into the history of the "house of Israel" and notice another and older prophecy that was to have its culmination in the "last days" (Genesis 49:1). Calling his twelve sons together, Jacob gave them his parting blessing (Genesis 49:1-27). Passing down the line we note the following declaration with reference to Joseph: "Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall" (verse 22). Could these branches that were to "run over the wall" have any connection with the branches Isaiah and Jeremiah said were "gone over the sea"? Verse 26 of this blessing says:

The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessing of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills: they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separated from his brethren.

The "blessing" which Jacob's progenitors, Abraham and Isaac, conferred upon him was the land of Canaan, or Palestine. Jacob's blessing upon Joseph and his "crown" was "above," or greater, unto the "utmost bound of the everlasting hills." Afar off. A landed estate somewhere. Moses, referring to this tribal blessing, has this to say:

And of Joseph he said, blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and fullness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush: let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. His glory is like the firstlings of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousand of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh.—Deuteronomy 33:13-17.

Here it is positively declared that Joseph is to get a land somewhere that will abound in all the good things of earth and heaven. Keeping in mind the fact that Joseph's land was to be above or greater than that given to Abraham and Isaac, let us follow the Israelites from the wilderness into the land of promise, and note the division of the land among the tribes.

The tribe of Levi, being set apart for the priesthood, received no "inheritance." Because of transgression, Reuben, Jacob's firstborn son, lost the family birthright, which was given to the sons of Joseph, (1 Chronicles 5:1) Ephraim and Manasseh, each of whom, becoming the head of a tribe, received an inheritance with the others. But did that double portion for the posterity of Joseph fulfill the prophetic blessing? We think not. Though a little larger in area, Joseph's inheritance in the land of promise was not above that allotted to the other tribes. Abraham and Isaac received the entire land of Canaan as their inheritance. Joseph's land was to be "above" all that, greater in every way, whereas Ephraim and Manasseh only received a tribal portion in common with the others. We must look elsewhere for Joseph's land.

JOSEPH'S LAND

Again we turn our attention to the prophecies of Isaiah and inquire further concerning the "land shadowing with wings," which is said to be "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia." Taking our position at Jerusalem, from where the word of the Lord went forth, we turn our faces toward Ethiopia. Looking across and beyond that country we see a mighty ocean, and beyond this expanse of water we see a land, a mighty continent, than which there is none greater known to man. It is America. And it is, indeed, "afar off," and "over the sea." Almost severed in the middle as it is, the two grand divisions resemble the outstretched wings of some gigantic bird.

What a remarkable coincidence! But that is not all. Here on this continent are the numerous remains of a lost people that have baffled the skill of scientific research from the beginning of their discovery. North, east, south, and west, the evidences of their greatness abound. Who were they? Whence did they come? and whither have they gone? Many theories have been advanced by the army of "explorers" who have sought some clew to their identity, but to date those silent monuments of a vanished race refuse to divulge their mysterious secret. Professor J. D. Baldwin says of them:

Remains of ancient civilizations, differing to some extent in degree and character, are found in three great sections of the American continent: the west side of South America, between Chile and the first or second degree of north latitude; Central America and Mexico; and the valleys of the Mississippi and the Ohio. These regions have all been explored to some extent—not completely, but sufficiently to show the significance and importance of their archaeological remains, most of which were already mysterious antiquities when the continent was discovered by Columbus.—Ancient American, p. 14.

This ancient people, whose remains indicate unity and civilization, must have been organized as a nation, with a central administration which all recognized. They must have had a national name, but nobody can tell certainly what it was.—Ibid., p. 57.

To find the chief seats and most abundant remains of the most remarkable civilization of this old American race, we must go still farther south into Central America and some of the more southern states of Mexico. Here ruins of many ancient cities have been discovered, cities which must have been deserted and left to decay in ages previous to the beginning of the Aztec supremacy. Most of these ruins were found buried in dense forests, where, at the time of the Spanish conquest, they had been long hidden from observation.—Ibid., p. 93.

The chief peculiarity of these ruins, that which especially invites attention, is the evidence they furnish that their builders had remarkable skill in architecture and architectural ornamentation. All who have visited them bear witness that the workmanship was of a high order. The rooms and corridors in these edifices were finely and often elaborately finished, plaster, stucco, and sculpture being used.—Ibid., p. 99.

These antiquities show that this section [Yucatan—E. E. L.] of the continent was anciently occupied by a people admirably skilled in the arts of masonry, building, and architectural decoration. Some of their works cannot be excelled by the best of our constructors and decorators. They were highly skilled, also, in the appliances of civilized life, and they had the art of writing, a fact placed beyond dispute by their many inscriptions.—Ibid., p. 101.

But the most wonderful traces of a great past are found in Mexico, Central America, and Peru. Here are found ruins of great cities, pyramids, and temples. . . . In Central America are ruins which appear to have a much greater antiquity than those of Mexico. Among the most noted are those of Palenque and Copan. Most of those ruins are found buried in dense forests, and were unknown to both native and Spanish invaders until about 1750.—Marvelous Story of Man, pp. 92, 93.

If from the depths of some of those ruins a record should be found, giving a history of the people who flourished here in the past, and that record would show that one or more of those "branches" of Israel's family tree that was to be planted "afar off" and become a "goodly cedar," came here by command of God, and originated the civilization now lost, would it not meet the requirements of the prophecy, "truth shall spring out of the earth"? If by the design of God their record were buried in the ground as a means of safety, to come forth at some future time for a wise purpose in God, would it not fulfill the prophecy? Would not those people "whisper out of the dust"? Being a record of a part of the house of Israel, would they not through their record breathe a "familiar spirit"?

LIBRARY WORK

(Prepared and read by Ray Carmichael before the Southern California Sunday school convention, August 27, 1915.)

Library work is taking its place as one of the necessities of every community. Some of our great philanthropists have recognized the value of libraries and are establishing centers that everyone can draw from. While spending a day in a library in one of our southern California towns, I was attracted by the number of children present. The children have a room where storybooks, picture books, games, historical pictures and other educational and entertaining means are at hand. During the afternoon some woman of literary talent or teacher comes at an appointed hour and tells stories. It makes one dream of the possibilities of the millennium to see these eager child faces turned toward their teacher. These institutions are to be commended in every respect. The one lamentable thing is that they do not reach every one of us.

One's attitude toward books will change as a result of constant association. My idea of a book, that is its value, has been completely changed. To me a book has a personality the same as an individual. It is not a dead mass of paper and printers' ink bound between two gilt covers.

As a rule a book represents the best thoughts, ideas, and ideals of the author. They give you the key to his personality. Therefore you are face to face with the man,—he is giving you his point of view of the idea in mind, in the best form he can. You read it and weigh it as you would in conversation. You may not believe his line of argument or philosophy, but you follow his ideas and in the end have a more definite position of your own even though the original one be changed.

This new individual you have met is giving to humanity something that he considers is a step higher than that which has already been expressed. If you can consistently make it a part of your philosophy of life you have gained by his acquaintance.

The value of a book in my library is not represented by its cost price. Unscrupulous publishing companies secure a copyright of a high-sounding name and put it on a high-grade paper and between beautiful morocco covers. These books are sold to the average person who believes that no worthless material will be put up in that form. And too, they make a beautiful and intellectual appearance in the home. These books represent a negative or a zero personality dressed in the latest and best clothes. Who cares to have such among his friends?

Then it is not the cost price that we measure books by, but the truths of life that we have learned and made part of our lives, and the profitable hours spent in their companionship. We may look with pride on our books (not the superficial pride) and say, "I know every one of the truths that you have held. You have them no more. I hold them now. You gave them to me. Life is broader and grander. I can see farther and deeper."

Thus when you lay a book down you can say, I now see life from another person's standpoint. I have added a positive character to my acquaintance. Of course when we sit philosophizing on the value of a book, after its completion, we may come to the conclusion that it has not been worth while, that the individual met has not proved a desired friend.

Just at this point comes the question that thousands of earnest people are asking, "What shall I read? I am hungry for good reading: what can you recommend?" These questions are as hard to answer as picking out friends for other people. You have to give some definite idea of what you want. Have you a hobby that you want to specialize on? Are you interested in some one thing? Do you want to read for entertainment or amusement? Reading without an aim in view is time lost.

Librarians fully realize this and have lists of books on file that can be recommended. Responsible magazine publishing houses will give you the latest books on any subject desired.

Remember that a book has an individuality; that its cost price does not represent its value; and that organization in reading means efficiency. As a religious people we stand for the highest in everything. Personally, we cannot meet all of the great minds in the world, so we are commanded "to read all good books."

THE SPIRIT'S VOICE

There are, it may be, so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification.—1 Corinthians 14: 10.

Every kind of voice signifies something; but the voice of the Lord is of more important signification than all others.

All men recognize the voices of kindred and friends, the voices of animals and birds, and can readily distinguish between the many voices of the various beasts and fowls; but who knoweth the voice of the Lord?

"For God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not." (Job 33: 14.)

The voice which reaches the mind by means of the auditory nerve, being the common instrument of thought conveyance,—men seem to forget that this kind of voice is among the most crude as a means of conveying thought. Other voices than this proclaim, and other tongues than flesh utter speech.

The heavens declare the glory of God; the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard.—Psalm 19: 1-3.

But there is a language which voices yet a deeper speech than all these. It is the language spoken direct to the soul by the voice of the Spirit.

But oh, how many ears are dull to this the most thorough and penetrating of all speech! And how many souls are too carnally heavy to arise from slumber and respond to the voice of the Spirit!

God speaketh, yet man heareth not, because in the tumult of exterior worldly voices, he is too deeply submerged. "Wisdom uttereth her voice in the streets," but few hear other than the sounds of traffic there.

She crieth in the chief place of concourse, in the openings of the gates: in the city she uttereth her words, saying, How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity? and the scorers delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge? Turn you at my reproof: behold, I will pour out my Spirit unto you, I will make known my words unto you. Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded; but ye have set at naught my counsel, and would none of my reproof: I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you. Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me; for that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord: they would none of my counsel; they despised all of my reproof. Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices. For the turning away of the simple shall slay them, and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them. But whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil.—Proverbs 1: 21-33.

The Lord said certain things upon an occasion, and as he passed by:

A great strong wind which rent the mountains, and break in pieces the rocks before the Lord; but the Lord was not in the wind: and after the wind, an earthquake; but the Lord was not in the earthquake: and after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire: and after the fire a still small voice.—1 Kings 19: 11, 12.

It was by the still small voice that the Lord made known his mind and gave forth his counsel.

In every important act of our lives, the question should be given place for due consideration: what sayeth the still small voice?

Things inanimate are said to give voice to certain thoughts or ideas to us, but they do so by reason of the fact that their very existence furnishes us a comparison with facts, which, operating upon reason, give voice to truth in language, silent, but unmistakable. But when a living intelligence speaks to intelligence, it must be by a different voice than mere calculation or deduction.

Therefore, when God, as the first living intelligence, communicates through delegated messengers of the Holy Spirit, as the second living intelligence, to individual man, as the third living intelligence, then it is that, "he, the spirit of truth" maketh known the things of the Father, "leadeth into all truth," and "showeth things to come." Or then it is that the Holy Spirit of the Lord is operative in the process of leading into all truth.

"Everyone that is of the truth heareth my voice," the Christ declared; and yet comparatively few were permitted to hear the voice to which his lips gave expression, while the Master was among men. But all who will come may come, and hear the "still small voice" speaking just as clearly and no less lovingly, "Hear ye him."

"To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your heart" (Psalm 95: 7).

It is edifying to read of him, and refreshing to hear the ministry speak of him, but the purpose of the gospel is to prepare those who obey it, to hear his voice.

Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.—Revelation 3: 20.

Sorrow to everyone who will not heed that knock! Woe to everyone who hears his voice and will not open the door! Sore disappointment to all who carelessly open the doors of their hearts to some deceiver from among the many strange voices in this world!

Blessed communion, glory and honor, immortality and eternal life to everyone who heareth the Master's voice, and openeth unto him! J. E. YATES.

THE DUTY OF PARENTS

The words of God which he spoke unto Moses were: "For this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man." (Inspired Translation.)

The Lord's harvest is the souls of men. We read:

And if it so be that you should labor all your days, in crying repentance unto this people, and bring save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father.—Doctrine and Covenants 16: 3.

And he said unto them, the harvest is great, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest.—Luke 10: 2.

If we desire to be colaborers with God we should help bring in the harvest. It is a blessing for parents to have children. It affords them an opportunity to be colaborers with God in bringing souls unto him. If the Lord is pleased with the man that has labored all his life and can bring one soul unto him, how much will it please the Lord when parents bring up their children to be saved in his kingdom, and how great will be their joy with them in the kingdom of God.

The time parents have the greatest influence over their children is when they are young. I heard one of our elders say once, that when he was six years old his mother took sick. His mother had taught him to pray. He and his little brother concluded to pray for their mother. They asked the Lord to spare her, for they could not get along without her. The Lord heard their prayers. When children at that age are instructed in the way of the Lord they can exercise greater faith than we can imagine.

"Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." (Proverbs 22: 6.) This is in harmony with instruction the Lord has given in these the latter days. Read Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

These instructions should be borne in mind and put into practice, especially by Latter Day Saint parents. The seed of life should be sown in the young minds early in the morning. Also parents should do their duty in such a way that their teachings might be made effectual by their example. If parents do not heed the admonition of the Lord, and keep his commandments, they may see their children become careless and indifferent in the work of the Lord. And who will be held responsible?

The Lord rebuked some of the early elders for neglecting their duties toward their families, and told them to set in order their own house or they would be removed out of their place. What he says to one he says to all. Read Doctrine and Covenants 90: 7-9.

Do we sense the meaning of these words when we sing,

Put on the gospel armor
And watching unto prayer,
Where duty calls or danger
Be never wanting there.

There are duties resting upon parents toward their children of no little importance. If not performed, danger lies at the door. The world is so full of sin that if children are not warned and prepared they will not be able to withstand the many temptations.

Jesus said:

If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.—John 15: 10, 11.

Brother Joseph said once:

Responsibility with its duties has its inspiration, necessarily so. Our work is a divine one—we require and are promised help. The exercise of faith in God will bring this to us. The constantly cultivated desire to do well our work will bring the approval of God upon us.

God shows us our duty, but does not do it for us. Neither foot, head, nor any part can say, I have no need of thee. All have duty to perform. God does not expect the ministry to do all the sacrificing, any more than he designs for them all the rewards. God's ways are equal. God rewards men according to their works. His mercies will endure when skies and stars grow dim; but it will never rob justice. We expect a great reward, but we must not forget that there is a great work for us to do. If the homes of the Saints are conducted according to the will of God, the young Saints will be interested in the work of the Lord. How are we getting along?

Parents should cultivate contentment and a happy disposition. When they are dissatisfied and gloomy it puts a shadow over the homes, with a bad effect. If there is musical talent in the home, especially singing, that home is made glad many times by the use of it. Some homes are deprived of this, but they will not be held responsible for not doing what they can't do. But all will be held responsible for the way they live.

There has been much said about education. I heard a story once about a girl going to school nearly all her life, and when she got married she didn't know how to cook potatoes. Book learning is good, and so is housekeeping; and as with the girls, so with the boys. We need wisdom in all our undertakings. It is written, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." (James 1: 5.)

Of General Interest

THE JEW IN WAR

[Than the Jews there is perhaps no people suffering more from the present great war. While we may not agree with the conclusions of some writers we are interested in the movements of this people and in the various discussions ensuing therefrom. The following article appearing in The Literary Digest for December 4, 1915, under the title, "The 'Third Exile' of the Jews," presents the Jew in places of trust and power in marked contrast to his place among the nations a century ago, yet presents him in continued distress and suffering, a stranger and a wanderer, without home and without shelter. Surely God, who has so marvelously preserved this people through so many centuries, and who has promised that they or a remnant shall finally return to Palestine, their former country, will in his own due time move in their behalf to this end.—EDITORS.]

On August 4, 1914, the Orthodox Jews were fasting and setting on the bare floors of their synagogues, reciting the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and commemorating the 9th of Ab, the anniversary of the destruction of the temple. The day also marked the anniversary of the time when the people were led into captivity, first by Nebuchadnezzar, the Babylonian, and next by Titus, the Roman. On this day the great war was declared by the nations of Europe, and thereby was ushered in what the Reverend S. B. Rohold, pastor of the Christian Synagogue of Toronto, calls the "Third Exile." It has already brought "greater sorrows and sufferings to a larger number of the 'wandering feet and weary breasts.'"

The Jewries of the world, he declares in The Missionary Review (December), are "convulsed with trials and sufferings, such as even they cannot parallel in their long annals." . . . Here is pictured the present plight of the race:

The world struggle is searching the very vitals of the race, stirring its energies, revolutionizing its life, and transforming its outlook. Five hundred and fifty thousand gallant Hebrew soldiers are at war, Jew engaged in mortal combat with Jew. Four millions of them, men, women, and children, of all ages—strong, weak, healthy, and sick—have been driven into full flight, haunted by the thundering cannons, along the wasted roads, marshy fields, bogs, and wild forests; disorganized, terrorized, abandoning land, stock, treasures, and all the attachments of home, in order to save their bare lives. Hunger and starvation meet them everywhere, and as they pass through the "valley of shadows" new horrors overtake them every hour. The very life is lost in the attempt to save it. No "promised land" in sight. "All hope abandoned there!" Our hearts break as we gaze at this horrible, grim, and continuously moving panorama of Israel's bitter and tragic flight.

The Jew, he declares, is paying a very high price to the best traditions of the race. He is "strenuously leading in all the episodes of the war: in its politics, in its economy, in its finances, in its organizations, in its supplies, in its armies, and in its horrors." He estimates that 46 per cent of the world's population, or 760,000,000, are affected by the war. "The total number of Jews in the world is not over 14,500,000, of whom some 10,000,000, or 68 per cent, are affected by this war." We read:

There are now twelve nations fighting, with armies totaling at least 20,000,000, or 2.6 per cent of the population of the nations engaged. The Jews engaged in the war comprise the biggest army they have ever put forth. A conservative estimate, given in The Jewish Chronicle, puts the number at over 550,000, or 5.5 per cent of all the Jews in the world—double the proportion of Gentiles engaged. And when we look into the machinery of this war and the role the Jew is playing, and the results of that great machinery, we wonder that the nations of the earth should be trusting to such leadership.

The Jewish population of the British Isles is about 245,000, and over 16,000 are in the ranks.

Hundreds have secured medals, and three have secured the most coveted order, the Victoria Cross. Five Hebrews are holding positions in the British cabinet; one, Lord Reading, has become lord chief justice; five are in the House of Lords, six are privy councilors, sixteen are baronets, fourteen are knights, and eighteen are members of Parliament. . . .

The total Jewish population of France is a little over 100,000. Before the war, in the regular army there were 8 Hebrew generals, 14 colonels, 21 lieutenants, 68 majors, and 107 captains; but now over 10,000 Jews are in the ranks, and are doing gallant work on land, sea, and in the air.

General Heymans is in charge of one army corps. Five Jews are holding important positions in the cabinet. The Rothschilds, feeling that their country has been outraged, have returned to the Austrian emperor the title of nobility which his ancestor, a century ago, had bestowed upon them.

Belgium shelters 15,000 Jews. The first man taken as a hostage when the Germans entered Antwerp was a Rothschild. In Italy, where the Jews were not emancipated until 1870,

The total Jewish population is 45,000, and they have provided Italy lately with a prime minister, Signor Luigi Luzzatti (1910), who previously served as minister of finance on six occasions. Sixteen members of Parliament and fourteen Senators are Jews. . . .

The most conspicuous man in Italy at present is M. Salvatore Barzilai, whom King Victor Emmanuel appointed as a cabinet minister. General Otholenghi, late minister of war, and newly made senator, another Jew, is the idol of the army.

Germany has not yet fully removed disabilities from her 615,000 Jews, but the war has caused the suppression of some leading anti-Semitic papers, and some of the war leaders have professed a change of heart in favor of the Jews on account of their loyalty:

German Jews have contributed their full share toward that remarkable display of efficiency, both military and economic, which has astounded the world. In every branch of the social and political life the Jew has left his mark. Karl Marx laid down the scientific foundations of socialism, and Ferdinand Lassalle founded the German social-democratic party, and its leaders, up to the present head, Hugo Hasse, were all Jews. The head of the revisionist party is Edward Bernstein, who, on account of his antiwar views, is an exile in Switzerland. What an irony that the only man who dared to defy the Kaiser in the Reichstag, and vote openly against the German war loan, and was not beheaded, was Herr Liebknecht, a Jew!

One secret of the efficiency of the German armies lies in their wonderful organization of transportation. . . . To a Jew—Herr Albert Ballin—the Kaiser has entrusted the general management of all the German railways, and he is personally in charge of the transportation of all the German troops. This Jew who is not wanted is most desirable now. Iron crosses have been lavished galore on the German-Jewish soldiers.

Austria has drawn 180,000 into the war from her Jewish population of 1,313,687, and the race has furnished one field marshal, 6 generals, 17 colonels, 15 lieutenant colonels, 48 majors, and 211 other officers.

Russia, with a Jewish population of 6,060,000, employed 350,000 Jewish soldiers and found them valorous and worthy in large numbers of the highest order for bravery. But the Russo-Polish Jewish tragedy is beyond calculation for details of frightfulness and shocking suffering. The writer quotes from The Jewish Chronicle:

Facts that have been detailed to the present writer by friends in whose impartiality and veracity he could have nothing but perfect confidence are backed up and confirmed to a large extent by an official document, an order of the day, issued by the Russian Generalissimo. This order seems to have been promulgated in March last. It decreed nothing less than the expulsion of all Jews from military zones in Galicia, Bukovina, and Poland. The excuse for this terrible determination was an easy one to find ready at hand. It was the alleged disloyalty of the Jewish population. That allegation, needless to say, could have been based at most upon the treason of a few individuals. But the Russian Government, bettering Burke, indicted a whole nation. The decree, too, was directed, not at any locality nor at any general section of the population. It was a decree against Jews as Jews.

And now we have the result. Some two hundred thousand Jews who have been living in the confines of Kovno, Courland, and Suwalki were exiled by the Russian authorities, so that, in the technical language employed, those districts might be "evacuated of Jews." Our unfortunate brethren upon whom this decree fell were compelled to obey it at a short notice, varying from eight hours to thirty at the most. In that time two hundred thousand people had to leave their homes, their possessions, their all, and face—they knew not what! What followed requires the pen of Dante adequately to narrate. Not one Jewish soul of all this vast population was allowed to remain, so that towns which had contained a large proportion of Jewish inhabitants were deserted. . . .

The actual woes, sorrows, and agonizing tragedy of the martyrdom of the Great Jewery will never be fully told; nor are we able to comprehend the magnitude of its frightfulness and its horrors. The Honorable Louis de Brandeis, chairman of the United States Government Business Committee at Washington, tells us that no fewer than five hundred thousand Jews have lost their lives since the war started, either on the battlefield or by the invading armies.

With Mr. Herman Landau, chairman of the Central Committee, we feel that: "A cry of frenzied despair comes from those countries. The vast cyclone of destruction, the most formidable that the world has ever seen, has passed over the Jewish pale of settlement. Since the time of the Tartar invasion there has never been a country in Europe so utterly devastated. In many districts not a single congregation was spared; synagogues were burned, hospitals and homes for aged and orphans have been destroyed and deserted. A population full of energy, of resources, and of intellectual abilities is at once thrown into wretched poverty, the brunt of the terrors falling upon hundreds of thousands of refugees."

Though forty flourishing colonies have sprung up in the deserts of Palestine and Galilee, and, by report, are already encouragingly prosperous, the Jew now sees his national hope for the country of his fathers vanish into thin air. This is convincingly explained by the writer, who says:

The catastrophe that befell the Jewish hope in Palestine is very hard to realize. It is a very conservative estimate that during the past century not less than £100,000,000 have been spent by the different Jewish philanthropists, such as Baron Edmund de Rothschild and other Jewish colonization and Zionistic societies.

Practically every Jew in the world has a little box in his house with "Great Alms for Palestine" written upon it, and it is looked upon as a meritorious act to put money in that box, which goes toward the keeping up of the Jewery in Palestine; and the Jewish papers throughout the world were all in praise of the wonderful awakening, and visions and dreams filled the minds of the Jews throughout the world. And what do we find now? Four thousand years ago the Jewish people had fled from the bondage of Egypt and found a haven of rest in Palestine, and now, after four thousand years, 15,000 Jewish refugees have fled from Palestine to find shelter in Egypt.

Three notorious Turkish tyrants, Azymi Bey, Djemal Pasha, and Hardegg Pasha, occupying positions in different parts of Palestine and Syria, have not left an opportunity of showing their ill-will toward the Jew, and especially giving themselves to devastate and erase practically out of existence all Jewish colonies; and to be a Zionist is now considered as a political crime.

The shattered hope of the Jewish people in Palestine is, perhaps, one of the severest blows dealt to the wandering feet and weary breast.

HONOR BUILDING--AND BUILDINGS

The foundations of the new penitentiary at Joliet will be dug by honor men. The buildings will be erected, stone upon stone and brick upon brick, by honor men. In a thorough sense the penitentiary will be erected upon honor. This is the announced decision of the penitentiary board.

It is reassuring at this moment when the escape of several prisoners has created natural doubts concerning the efficacy of the system. Honor men are obviously not all honorable. No group of men in a penitentiary, or out of it, exists without some weak or perfidious member. Schools, colleges, business, police organizations, armies, navies, churches, every human organization contains men who will succumb upon occasion to temptation. That much is to be anticipated.

Armies are not condemned wholesale on account of the occasional traitor. Nor is the police force. Convicts should be treated with similar sympathy and understanding. The honor system will erect the new penitentiary, which, according to the old plans, was to be without walls except to one small section. The loyal men who do this work should not be the object of unwarranted attacks because of a few disloyal ones.

The guards and officials at the penitentiary who do not believe in the men and who have no patience with honor as a principle of reform handicap the work. Governor Dunne is committed to the modern plan. He should see to it that his subordinates, in fact as well as by words, are loyal. The new penitentiary may then indeed be an honor institution. —Chicago Herald, August 28, 1915.

DEATHS FROM ALCOHOL

A defender of the liquor traffic, who shows the depth of his intellect by attacking congressmen as insincere for voting against booze while one third of their salaries comes from internal revenue taxes, seeks to limit the death-producing capabilities of alcohol to the statistical list of victims of chronic or acute alcoholism. He thus finds that alcohol killed only 3,183 in that part of the United States which collected mortuary statistics in 1912, out of a total of 616,000 deaths.

To this 3,183 should be added the thousands of deaths indirectly caused by alcohol, which superinduces pneumonia, tuberculosis, kidney diseases, paralysis, industrial accidents and automobile collisions. If the number of years taken off the life of the average heavy drinker could be added together, the total would be stupendous. The abstainer from alcohol has the best chance of recovering from sickness, and the best chance to avoid it. It would probably be no exaggeration to say that 30,000 people die in the United States every year from the direct or indirect effects of alcoholic indulgence.

This does not include the babies who die of hunger and neglect, while their fathers hand the weekly pay check across a saloon counter. If the babies were included, the list of booze victims would be infinitely higher.—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

Christmas Remembrance

During Christmastide our Children's Home has not been forgotten or neglected, and the board and managers feel very grateful. It might have been expected that when the Saints and friends had their own little ones to cheer and provide for that they would in a measure forget those in the home, but such does not seem to have been the case. The treats and means to provide Christmas cheer have been very satisfactory and gratifying, many kind hearts have been impressed with the beautiful sentiment expressed in the following verses from the Baltimore Sun:

A LITTLE CHILD OF LOVE

In this season of sweet songs let no single little tot
In the rush and in the throng of the season be forgot, Let no little stocking hang
By the chimney empty quite,
When the sweet gleam brings the morning
Kissing Christmas into light.

Not one weensy little fellow nor one little boy or girl
Dream in vain of sled or engine or of dolly with a curl,
Let no sorrowing, wan face weep
By an empty plate that day
When the sweet world wakes from sleep
To the song, of Christmas play.

Be no little child neglected in the hurry and the chase,
Let no shadow hide the sunshine of a little childhood face,
Let no lone forgotten lamb
In a giftless world be found

On that morn that wakes with rapture
Of the hosts of heavenly sound.

Let no empty stocking hang by a chimney bleak and bare,
That a little child may find Santa Claus has not been there,

Let no bubble of delight
Break in sorrow on some lip,
Thinking Santa had forgotten
Little children on this trip.

Let no bloomy dream be lost in the gray, sad tear that morn,
When some other little child marches down with drum and horn,

In this season of sweet song,
Let no single little tot
In the hurry of the throng
By old Santa be forgot.

A LITTLE CHILD OF LOVE

The following beautiful poem selected by a member of the Children's Home board is presented with the hope that it may contribute towards awakening in the heart of those fortunate enough to have little ones in their homes, a deeper appreciation of the God-given blessing thus bestowed, and inspire the heart not yet touched with the pure sunshine of child love, with its thrilling delights; and thus a substantial contribution be made to the sum total of human and earthly happiness. So may the seed be sown that will produce a bountiful harvest, and the pebble be dropped in the water that will cause the waves to circle round and round until they lash the shores of eternal bliss.

When there's a little child to love, the world's a sweeter place,
With more of resurrection in the wild old daily race;
So many things to think about you never knew before,
And one more life to love, my dear—thank God for one life more!

When there's a little life to love the weary way turns sweet,
With blossoms where we used to find rough rocks beneath our feet;
A little child to love and rear and pity and behold—
Thank God for one more life, my dear, with all its dreams of gold!

When there's a little child to love, the skies turn sweet again,
And in the sunlight of the days we soon forget the rain;
A little life that leans on us and longs to fill its part—
Thank God for one more child to love while love still rules the heart!

When there's a little child to love, the little cares seem less,
The echo of a childhood laugh has such a way to bless;
More human beauty fills the earth and softer grows the strife—
Thank God for one more life to love, for one more little life!

What if the way may seem so long, with stormy skies above,
The sunshine rifts the darkest gloom with one more child to love;
With one more lullaby to sing and one more life to cheer—
Thank God a little child looks up to comfort us, my dear!

When there's a little child to love the hatreds we have felt
Before the sunshine of her face like mists of morning melt;
The day sings sweetly at its toil, and, oh, that romp at night—
Thank God for one more life to love, for one more child of light!

When there's a little child to love the winter turns to spring,
And everywhere the laughing heart of life begins to sing;
The added burdens do not count when in love's tender fold
There is another little life to treasure and to hold!

Watchman, What of the Night?

The ponderous volume of the Old Year lies closed, ready to repose in the archives of Time. Its black-bordered pages bear record as a witness against the most eventful and gravest epoch that ever darkened the world's history of Christian civilization.

Death and the war-god have grimly stalked the earth, leaving hillocks of human clay, gaunt devastation, colossal ruin, and wounded, sorrowing hearts without number in its cruel wake.

Our attention is now caught and held by the New Year,—the "Book of Days." As we gaze upon its uncut pages, with anxious minds and quickly throbbing hearts, we question: What will the mystically sealed chapters of the future reveal to us—individually, as a church, a nation, an international family?

Diplomats, doctors of political science, and specialized economists are groping in the twilight zone endeavoring to figure. What will it have to offer from out of the slaughter, the hatreds of the war and the classes, the chaotic conditions of misery? What new aspects for the onward march of the human race and the cultivation anew of those human sympathies, which, in the end, we are told will weld the whole world into one harmonious family?

This, of course, is the desire that presses close to the heart of the race, the substance of which has been ruthlessly swept backward by the obdurate hand of war. Even the faintest promise of universal restoration will make the pulse of the battle-scarred world beat with a joyous rhythm.

To-day in the world's great arena, twelve powerful armies are engaged in deadly occupation; like unleashed bloodhounds they tear at each other's vitals—brotherhood, Christianity, civilization ignored, trampled upon, forgotten!

Will the forces for peace which have been set in operation, triumph over the brute strength of the war fiend, or will that gigantic vehicle of death and destruction sweep on, carried by its own momentum, until absolute desolation reigns?

The very nature of the conditions which exist over the entire globe, loudly proclaims that the end is rapidly drawing near.

Are we ready to meet the crisis in advent of such a contingency? Are we employing the precious time allotted to us in making careful preparations to be fortified with spiritual equipment? Let us, God's chosen people, who have been privileged to become enlightened and acquainted with the secret disposition of God's mind and will regarding latter-day events, be active in erecting an indestructible spiritual structure within, which will stand impregnable and endure through the advances and desperate rush attacks of the enemy.

ROSA BEARSE ROBBINS.

What Is Our Influence?

How is our influence? is the question we ought to ask ourselves. There is no person living, great or small, but what has more or less influence upon those with whom they meet and associate. The greater our sources or responsibility the greater our influence, and our influence depends on what we are. A bitter fountain cannot send forth sweet water, neither can a mean soul send forth good influence.

So let us search out our hearts and see what they are made of. We may try to hide our evil desires, but we cannot; they will crop out and have a bearing on others. No two persons can be associated any length of time without being influenced to a certain extent by each other. We are making impressions or tracks every day. Are they for good, or are they for evil?

I often think we should have a housecleaning to see if some habit has not formed that will send out an influence that would not be for good. A careful housekeeper cleans house at least twice a year. She gives the house a general cleaning. Of course she dusts and sweeps every day, but she gives it a general overhauling at times. And so should we, and eliminate that which would have a tendency to make a bad impression; especially we of the household of faith.

So let us watch, work, and pray, that we may always send forth an influence for good. Then we will be a strength to others, others will rely upon us, and we will be able to assist God in the great work of eliminating evil from the world and establishing Zion. For God has said we cannot assist in this great work except we are humble, faithful, and full of love and charity.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,
One of the faith,
MRS. E. G. MAXWELL.

Editors Herald: The semiannual conference of Spokane District has just closed, leaving the Saints rejoicing because of the blessing we have received from our heavenly Father. Greater harmony and peace was never experienced here before. There was perfect unity in all things.

After the business of the district Sunday school association there was a program arranged by the Sunday school, Religio, and numbers from the several parts of the district. This program was a grand success, being educational for all. The Spirit seemed to rest upon the whole house, unity prevailing throughout every session. At the close of our convention we organized a district Religio. For Religio workers and all who are deprived of a local, there is the work of the home department. Get in correspondence with our superintendent, Bert E. Hart, 237 South Fiske Street, Spokane, Washington. Here stand the two great arms of the church ready for action. Our slogan is, A bigger and better district.

The conference convened Saturday at 10 a. m., with Brother F. D. Omans, district president, in charge. Reports showed a gain by baptism of over sixty, with a good prospect among the Indians. Preachers are in demand throughout the district and our work grows each year.

The district tent committee was continued. It was decided to hold a reunion in or near Valley, Idaho. There is a big tent to be bought, so all who feel able to help with any amount may do so. The names of those contributing will be read under the big tent at our next conference in July, with the amounts stated. Will your name be written there?

It should be. Send contributions to W. W. Wood, 127 South Regal Street, Spokane, Washington.

Everything looks bright in the district. The Father was pleased to send a message to our conference sacrament meeting which made us all rejoice, calling to the ministry two men of Valley, Idaho, where we expect to have a branch soon.

There has been much sickness among our members, but we are very grateful that all have been spared to us thus far. We hope our heavenly Father will hear our prayers and raise our loved ones from the bed of affliction, that we may all rejoice together as one big family.

W. W. WOOD.

Editors Herald: I write regarding my mother, Mrs. Jennie Hodges, for whom I requested prayers a few months ago. I wish to bear testimony of the truth and goodness of God and his blessed work, and of the miraculous help mother received after suffering so terribly with heart trouble and asthma. All our efforts failed to help her. I am sure that prayer and a merciful God saved her. We feel to praise his holy name for his merciful kindness.

Hoping that the grace of God will abide with us, that we may ever be faithful, I am,

Your sister,
MRS. LORENA HAMMON.

LUCASVILLE, OHIO, November 29, 1915.

Editors Herald: I was born near Jacksontown, Jackson County, Ohio. When fourteen years old with my parents I moved to Scioto County, near Lucasville, where I have since resided. I was brought up by respectable parents, being one of ten children, eight of whom grew to manhood and womanhood; two died in infancy.

Being the oldest girl, I had the care of the younger children. Neighbors often called on mother in sickness, which left the care of the house to me. I was always glad to see mother when she returned, and never told her she had stayed too long and that I had too much to do. She was kind and always taught me to do right, emphasizing the worth of character.

I have since learned that character is better than money or education. If we can have only one of these, let us take character. Let us keep our characters clean, so that when the Savior comes he will accept us.

The children of our family are all married except myself, I being left with my parents in their last days. My mother passed away twelve years ago, father three years later, our home being broken up and my enjoyment gone.

I was baptized six years ago the fourteenth of last February, by Elder E. E. Long, confirmed by Elders Long and G. T. Griffiths. Since then I have received many spiritual blessings, though I have had some dark seasons. I am fifty-three years old and have been living alone for nineteen months. Am two miles from the church. I often stop with some of the Saints.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all that I may be found faithful in well doing.

Your sister in Christ,
MARTHA J. STRICKLAND.

ALVA, OKLAHOMA, November 22, 1915.

Editors Herald: Yesterday I closed a two weeks' meeting at Gamet, about fifteen miles northwest of Alva. I was there over three Sundays, and am glad to be able to say that the interest manifested is encouraging.

When I went to that place one year ago I could scarcely get a hearing, so strong was the prejudice toward us. I continued there for a couple of weeks and overcame in part the feeling of prejudice that ruled the lives of many. And, Brother Editors, I didn't overcome it by the use of harsh criticisms and denunciations of the people, but by manifesting the Spirit of the lowly Jesus I won my way into the lives of those people. On arriving there this time I was greeted by a well-filled house, and the attendance and interest remained excellent throughout. The universal appeal as we left was, "Come again, Brother Vanderwood."

The writer discovered a long while since that whenever we employ any means other than the spirit of love, kindness, meekness, and gentleness in dealing with the people we at once write failure in our efforts. If we arouse the spirit of fight on the part of the people we are surely not affecting them for good. But if through the Spirit of the divine Master we draw them to us, we may be assured that we can then in the course of time lead them to Christ.

We have the best thing in the world; is it not therefore worth while that we become efficient in our work so as to be able to make the proper approach unto those whom we would attempt to teach? I find that people are glad to hear the message of life when we are able to present it to them in the spirit of love and good will. Hopefully,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 1302 West Lexington Street.

TRENTON, MISSOURI, November 30, 1915.

Editors Herald: We are holding our meetings in a little hall and we have the use of it only for our Sunday worship and Wednesday evening prayer service. The people here are presenting the question to us, "Why don't you people build a church to worship in?" It is thought that if we did build our membership would increase faster.

Our Religio has started a Christmas fund, and we are all going to hand in an offering December 26, and tell how we made it.

I love the latter-day work. Without it I would be most miserable.

Trenton is a town of eight thousand inhabitants. Churches of most all denominations are here. I have lived here eighteen years. Was here six years before I felt the responsibility of sending for an elder to come and preach the gospel. Elder Ammon White was the one who started the work here. Since that time there have been about thirty-five baptisms, and others are near and almost ready. I am interested in the work for Christ and the redemption of God's people.

MCBAINE, MISSOURI, November 30, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am a lone Saint at this place. I feel most lost at times, except for reading the HERALD and Ensign and meeting a few true Saints sometimes. I do not see how Saints can get along without the church papers. Among the Saints I wish to mention Judge Lofty, of Moberly, Missouri. His talk and fatherly advice have been a great help and strength to me. I have been weak and have not lived as I should at times. I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may overcome my weakness, and that I may be an instrument in God's hands in showing others the true gospel.

I work in a store and meet a great many people, and have an opportunity to talk the gospel to them. I remember talking to a minister of Columbia, about Christ organizing his church. He denied that Christ had done so. When I quoted, "On this rock I will build my church," he said, "I haven't the time to interpret that." This man was a Baptist.

I find many people here who know nothing about the Latter Day Saints. They think we are Mormons. When I explain the difference between the Utah people and us they seem surprised. Some say "I never knew that before." I think we should always be ready to speak of the hope we have in Christ.

I live nine miles from Columbia, Missouri, on the Missouri Kansas and Texas Railroad. I would like to correspond with a physician about locating here. If any of the elders are passing through McBaine I shall be pleased to have them stop and see me. I am poor in this world's goods, but will do the best I can for one. If any of the Saints could spare a few copies of Autumn Leaves I would hand them out to people. By so doing we might accomplish good.

Wishing success to all the Saints, and victory to Christ's church, I remain,

Your brother,

C. E. TREMAIN.

Extracts from Letters

W. M. Young and wife of 317 South Seventh Street, Bismarck, North Dakota, write as follows: "Please publish our address in the sacred columns of the HERALD, that elders passing through may call. Should there be any Saints living in the city, will they please call? We pray that all may come up higher."

Sister Lydia M. Weegar, Buffalo, New York, writes: "On December 2, the Ladies' Aid gave a supper and Christmas sale at the home of Sister Koehler, and another the following week in a store building in the business part of town. Results were beyond our expectations. We hope to turn over a substantial amount to the building fund the first of the year, besides remembering the Children's Home, and doing good otherwise. We have a small membership, but in one way or another all have lent a helping hand toward the success of the work. We hope for increased zeal and effort the coming year."

Elder A. H. Daly writes from Steelville, Missouri, December 14: "I am opening up a new field here. My wife and I are the only Saints at this place, but we expect to do a good work. There have been two schoolhouses open to us, and I have been asked to hold a series of meetings any time I could get ready. I want to persuade Brother W. A. Smith to come here the first of the year."

No backward glance shall hinder or appall me;
A new life is begun;
And better hopes and better motives call me
Than those the past has won.

News from Missions

Southeastern Mission

I have found plenty to do in this country. The Utah people have canvassed the country with their doctrines, and the worst thing I have to meet is that the people consider us the same as the Utah elders. Nearly every place I go I have to show the difference between the two churches. I have made many new openings in this country, but have baptized only a few.

I have about eighteen taking the Ensign. If we had a few more Brother E. Staffords to furnish the price of the paper we would soon acquaint many people with our doctrine. The thing for us to do is to distribute more literature. One or two have told me that the Ensign was the best thing they ever found in the line of literature. Brother Roth's sermons are fine. We have six more names to send for the Ensign, the parties, having promised to read it.

I organized a Sunday school here the 4th of this month with twenty-six enrolled. Brother John Richards is superintendent, and Sister A. G. Miller secretary. Several others have promised to join us. The work is in very good shape here in De Funiak Springs. I will now move on elsewhere.

If we were more free with our literature and more earnest, we would gain more friends and converts than we are now doing. I find more new openings than I can fill, and plenty of calls for literature. I am expecting the Alabama District tent in a few days, and will use it this winter. We need more young men who will sacrifice to labor for the Lord.

I spent a few weeks at Cottondale, Alford, and near Aycok, Florida, where we have many warm friends who treated us with courtesy and hospitality. I could not find a place to hold the attendance, as I was shut out of the church buildings and schoolhouses, so we went from house to house and preached. During this time my eyes became afflicted so that I had to go home, the same afflicting me for nine weeks. They are now about well, and I expect to be out again in a few days.

We were unfortunate this year in that we only secured four missionaries for this large field, but the Lord knows best. We have had success so far. There have been a good many baptized, and we have reached many who never had an opportunity to hear the gospel before. We have reason to rejoice. The work is moving in this field, slowly but surely. I hope to see the time come when we will all be more liberal with our tithing and will have more missionaries sent out, and their families better cared for.

It does my soul good to think of the coming of our dear Redeemer, when the Devil cannot deceive longer and lead astray the sons and daughters of men—when there will be no more pain, or sorrow, or tears.

I moved my family here in June. There were only three members of the church here then, but we have about twelve now besides my family. The Saints and friends of this city and the community round about have been good to my family. We did not have to buy any fruit or vegetables. One good Baptist sister gave us twelve quarts of peaches, and a man gave me a bushel of plums and a bushel of pears. Several gave us potatoes and syrup. God has truly blessed us this year with his Spirit, as well as temporally and physically. He has a people in this country, and we are doing all we can to seek them out from among the world.

The people of the South are oppressed financially from the results of the war. It is truly the time Paul referred to in 2 Timothy 3, and to which James referred in James 5. Seeing that these things are coming to pass, let us live up to our ideals and rejoice, for we know that our Redeemer draweth nigh.

In the conflict for the onward march of the redemption of Zion,

A. G. MILLER.

DE FUNIAK SPRINGS, FLORIDA.

Western Nebraska and Black Hills

When finances is involved people expect some kind of a report. On leaving this field at the close of last year's work, meeting with Brother Prettyman, I consulted with him as to probable use of tent used in the Nebraska portion. He assured me it would be needed there. If it had not been, the cost of shipping back and forth would soon amount to the price of a tent.

I determined, therefore, to secure one for the Black Hills territory. This has been accomplished at a cost of one hundred thirty-two dollars and forty-nine cents. The equipment is a 28 by 28 square tent, seven-foot wall, with twenty-foot center pole. Top 12-ounce double-filled army duck, sides 8-ounce, double filled. Living tent of same material 10 by 12. (The poles were secured in the woods, stakes also.) There are twenty-four collapsible or folding slat seats, attractive, comfortable, and durable, six feet long. This is far the best outfit I have seen operated by us.

Bought in August, and the season having been disastrously wet, it was bought fifty dollars under price by various firms in June, of the South Omaha Tent and Awning Company, Omaha Nebraska. (Try them if buying.)

The Spearfish Saints put up fifty dollars, and on the day promised. At the time of purchase it fell to me to furnish most of the rest. This has been reduced, till if twenty dollars subscribed yet due shall come in, there will be something over for needed articles of equipment. Long delayed subscriptions are quite uncertain. The tent was pitched in Spearfish, August 23, and operated till November 1.

The latter weeks a stove was used successfully, but extreme care had to be taken, and then three spark holes appeared. The attendance was not large at any time, and varied much. Saturday and Monday evenings we held no services. The Spearfish Saints had maintained their Sunday school, which was transferred to the tent. They had also maintained their prayer service till the tent season. Excellent song service was rendered.

Most of the time excellent loyalty was shown in attendance, justifiable hindrance sometimes preventing, but not always. Saints can feel it as well as see it, when attendance is light,—as also can preacher and visitor. The novelty of "ladies in charge of tent afternoons" was tried, to extend sociability and secure its advantages (as also to relieve the preacher). This lapsed, owing to limited results. During its continuance it was sweet relief to the preacher, who had had previous tent experience that reduced largely its novelty.

The preacher was well maintained. Three were added by baptism, Brother F. M. Newton and Sister Mildred Plumb on the first Sunday, and on the last Sunday Sister Florence Fasbender, in attendance at high school. She had been taunted for attendance by schoolmates, but with true courage, born of conviction of the truth, fearlessly did her duty. Her parents did not object, though distant, and only knowing of the faith through her report. Quite a few were interested, and may come later. This was the pleasantest season of tent experience I ever had. On November 1 the tent was stored.

On November 2 Brother Donald Plumb and wife, Sisters

Newton and Mabbott, took their first missionary trip, delivering the preacher at Elder A. L. Gurwell's, some thirty miles distant, where Brother Gurwell had worked for five years, and is raising his family commendably, not forgetting the family altar, as many do. His two younger sons were baptized, completing the family. Some are interested there.

Brother Gurwell conveyed me twenty-eight miles to the home of Brother Erwin Dicky, who had journeyed thirty-five miles and put in two nights at tent. Brother Dicky had been a teacher in the Sunday school and had made friends. A good hearing was offered. Some interested. Ground broken in these two places offers good room for the tent next season.

The Spearfish Saints are building a church, nearing the roofing stage, but meager details have reached me. They may believe in keeping secrets, and no doubt will report when ready.

In bonds,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

VALE, SOUTH DAKOTA, December 20, 1915.

Central Illinois

With the aid of the Saints, Brother R. L. Fulk and the writer have been enabled to effect a new opening at Virginia, and also at Browning. During these tent meetings we laid the foundation for future work. Elder Roy Burton, of Snicarte Branch, has followed up our effort at Virginia and has baptized five excellent people. We hope soon to see them organized into a Sunday school.

While we were at Browning with the tent, members of the so-called Church of Christ challenged us for discussion. Brother E. E. Long was sent to attend to their case. The debate was set for December 7. Four propositions were debated. The two churches, Book of Mormon, and the Bible—the complete and final revelation of God to man.

Elder W. G. Roberts was the man selected by the Campbellites to defend their claims. Just prior to commencing the debate we had a circular printed signed by two of the Campbellites and ourselves, advertising a clean debate.

Roberts killed himself the first night by his ungentlemanly methods. Brother Long, by his gentlemanly demeanor, and clear-cut Bible arguments, won the respect of the people. Roberts on the fourth proposition instead of debating the Bible proposition, which he had signed and which we had in our possession, wrote out another proposition and forged Brother Long's name to it. He added the three words, "essential to salvation." This was done of course merely for a catch, so that he could make it appear that Brother Long was denying the authenticity of the Scriptures. Brother Long denied the proposition which Roberts signed in our presence, without these three added words. Roberts left Browning, Illinois, disgraced. One good citizen of Browning was heard to say: "Elder Long can leave with his head up, but Roberts cannot."

Brother Long made a good defense. Many friends were made for the cause. Quite a number were anxious to have Brother Long preach after the debate. The theater building was secured, and the next day, being Sunday, Brother Long occupied both in the afternoon and at night before large audiences. At the close of the night service one of the leading citizens came up with tears rolling down his cheeks and asking for baptism. And I am satisfied there are more yet to follow.

Thus closed an interesting debate. I acted as moderator for Elder Long, and Mr. Rhoady acted for Mr. Roberts. Debates sometimes are necessary, as in this case, and in many new fields. And I think Roberts should be met as long as his church indorses him.

We are encouraged over the present prospects of developing the work in new places. However, as Christmastide draws near we are thinking to-day of the familiar scenes experienced by those who are privileged to mingle with loved ones around the family hearthstone.

Still in the conflict,

A. M. BAKER.

BEARDSTOWN, ILLINOIS, 1105 South Monroe Street, Mission address.

Sweden

Perchance a few words from this part of the world would be interesting to those that have the work at heart in this mission.

I am the only missionary laboring in this country, since our brethren, Okerlind and Hansen, left for their homes in the United States. It is rather a large territory for one man yet I am willing to do what I can that the cause of Christ shall be made known among my fellow men.

A little while ago I was up to our capital city to look after the interest of the work at that place. I found the few Saints living there, the fruit of Brother Okerlind's labor, manifesting quite an interest in the work. It was their desire that I should come. I held as many meetings as it was consistent for me to do, and besides I visited some who had become friendly to the cause, to whom I had the privilege of explaining the gospel further. I sincerely hope that these will in time accept the gospel of Jesus Christ. For different reasons I could not stay very long at this time. On my way home I visited a family of Saints who now live in Norrkoping, but who lived in Helsingborg before, where I baptized them some three years ago. I was welcomed to their home, where I preached three times and partook of the Lord's supper with them. It is truly a pleasure to meet true Saints who have learned to love this blessed gospel of Jesus Christ, which has been confirmed to us through revelation in these last days.

Because of labor done at other places the last two years, not much gospel work has been done at this place where I live. Getting back from Stockholm, I concluded to try to hold some meetings here, and am glad to say our effort turned out well. Quite a few have attended, and have manifested considerable interest, and I hope that I shall be able to do some good yet at this place, and also at other places I may be able to visit.

While at Stockholm I visited a man who had organized a church of his own some two years ago. I visited him because some of our people had been out to hear him and thought he was a nice man, and told me among other things he believed in the gospel powers, such as prophecy, healing, speaking in tongues, etc. This man was turned out of the Baptist Church because he dared to believe a little more gospel truth than the Baptist believed in, and now he has taken upon himself to build a new church.

In my conversation with him I asked him if he believed in the Bible way of organizing a church, namely, with apostles, prophets, teachers, elders, etc., to which he replied that he did not believe in more than twelve apostles, because the new Jerusalem had only twelve gates, with one of the apostles' names on each gate, and for that reason there could not be any more apostles. I called his attention to the fact that the New Testament recorded twenty apostles, but only twelve at a time. He made no answer to that, but I had found out that this church builder did not believe all the truth; and should not wonder if he would excommunicate one of his elders should he dare to contend that the church ought to have twelve apostles,—as he himself was excommunicated from the Baptist Church. I believe he would.

I told the gentleman that eighty-five years ago Joseph Smith announced to the world that he believed in the gospel powers, and that the signs should follow those that believe the true gospel of Jesus Christ; and furthermore, that he organized under God's direction, a church with all the officers, apostles, with the rest, and that since that time the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ has been preached and many have accepted it, and are rejoicing therein. I also told him about the "sealed book" that came forth, and then left him, because he said he was a busy man.

The prospect for gospel work is better than at any time before, although the great war is raging not so very far from here. We are made to feel the effect of it because of close times, as nearly all life's necessities are fifty per cent and more higher than they were before the war broke out. As a consequence many people are suffering, and it seems the end is not yet.

Before I close I wish to acknowledge receipt of six dollars from a Sister Larson, Logan, Utah. I am glad that some of our Scandinavian Saints are beginning to see what an amount of good a few dollars will do. At the rate of sixty-eight cents per meeting I could preach eight gospel sermons with those six dollars, and plant much gospel seed in human hearts. We cannot all preach, but we can all do a little to help the work along. I believe the work would be more onward if a little means were put in our hands to pay for halls to preach in. As it now is, a good deal of the time has to be spent in going from house to house, giving out tracts and talking to people, and this is surely slow work. Yet I am willing to continue that way and do the best I can, God being my helper.

With best wishes to all workers for Zion's cause, I remain,
Your brother in gospel bonds,

C. A. SWENSON.

News from Branches

Perry, Iowa

Since our last communication, we have had the pleasure of a visit from Elder J. S. Roth. On account of the approaching Christmas festivities, it was thought unwise to arrange for a series of meetings at this visit. On Sunday, December 19, Brother Roth occupied both morning and evening. In the evening quite a number of interested outsiders as well as some who have been very much opposed to us, listened to his sermon on the judgment, which was quite a revelation to those who had never heard our message. On account of his age, wide experience and thorough study of the gospel, Brother Roth's visits are always looked forward to by the Perry Saints.

As we reviewed our last year's work at the annual business meeting, it was a matter of congratulation that much has been accomplished toward placing our branch on a higher plane. We have entertained the district conference, dedicated our little church, and recently made a number of improvements. Those of our membership residing here are active workers, and our financial matters are in good shape. Our numbers are increasing, and, with a number of honest investigators, we feel that we have truly been blessed, and hope for a pleasant and profitable New Year for ourselves as well as those likewise engaged.

The cantata "Santa Claus' Dream" was rendered by the Sunday school on Christmas evening. A well-filled house enjoyed the same. Many who had never visited our church were present and expressed their surprise and pleasure at the ability of our little band of children. Those who have assisted in the development of the children along the lines of appearing before an audience feel a justifiable pride and satisfaction in giving these young people the opportunity to acquire an ease and grace in public that will be a great help to them in whatever place they may occupy in the church in future years of activity.

The happiness of the children was subdued by a feeling of sadness because of the absence of one of their number, whose spirit returned to the bosom of the Master only the day before, Little Margaret, the nine-year-old daughter of Brother and Sister Johnson, having passed away after a few days' illness with scarlet fever. While the membership felt the deepest sympathy for the family and every heart went out to them in their grief, friends could offer but little assistance to comfort them, and could only commend them to the loving care of an all-wise and tender Father.

Detroit, Michigan

All who pass here and visit us will say that Detroit, as regards the Saints and church work, is still alive to the motto of making conditions so that it is truly a place "where life is worth living."

With a membership which is nearing the five hundred mark, things of course ought to be alive. However, like most places, we have a few who are leaners instead of workers. But by the sacrificing efforts of various members of the priesthood and others, the sweet truths of the gospel are being carried to the honest-hearted souls among us, who are accepting it and yielding obedience to the command to seek the watery grave and there find the peace and solace so long sought.

We have now three Religio locals, two Sunday schools and a mission church, besides the central church here; so the work is indeed on the upward trend.

We share with others in rejoicing when we read the item concerning Lamoni having a Christmas Offering of over $500. Detroiters are making good progress in this matter; in our main school the membership is about one hundred and eighty, and nearly all are giving regularly two cents a Sunday towards this fund. We have now for the 1915 offering about $150, which is, we think, a good showing compared to the seven dollars from here three or four years back. System and thoroughness bring results. This is an example of the effect of a penny a week from each.

A suggestion to Saints or friends who come to Detroit, or for that matter any other city: We often run across those who have been several months in town, who say the reason they have not come to service was because they did not know the location of the church. Some we have located by reason of friends sending us their name and address. If you have a brother, sister or friend in Detroit who does not attend the meetings, write us and we will try and have some one call on them. There is no need for anyone to remain a week in a town without locating the church. First, try the city directory, under list of churches. Second, try the city guide book, if they have one. Third, look in the newspapers on Saturdays under church advertisements or church notes; we always have a standing ad in the papers, with place and time of service.

Before you start for town, a letter to the pastor would doubtless bring you a lot of information, and you would have another friend to whom you could go for advice, etc. I have often thought local church officers were not availing themselves of all they could in the line of duties performed, when members left their midst to go to larger towns, and they didn't take the trouble to see that they knew where the church was. Only a moment's time to write a few lines on a card and send it to the pastor of the church in that town, with the transient's name and address, would put them in touch with the Saint. Thus we would really be practicing the theory that we all love each other as ourselves.

A Saint coming to a strange city, especially a young Saint, would find much pleasure in getting in touch with the church at once. He will have the companionship of a crowd of others, and thus not be a stranger. They might aid him also regarding a position and abiding place, and a lot of things, little in themselves, but which count for much.

With the hope that each Saint will find more avenues for service, and will do his part in this new year of 1916 as never before, I am,

WILLIAM F. SAGE.

Los Angeles, California

On December 8, the Los Angeles Branch held its annual business meeting, presided over by our missionary in charge, Brother Rushton. The meeting proved to be a long one, although only the usual volume of business was transacted.

The following presiding officers were chosen to occupy for the coming year: President, V. M. Goodrich; priest, Peter Kauffman; teacher, Brother Spencer; deacon, Nels Paulson; secretary, Ray Knowlton; librarian and correspondent, Sister E. Switzer. Provision was made for the ordination of Brother W. Burton to the office of deacon. The graces of good will and brotherly kindness were instilled into the minds of the assembly before the meeting was opened, by a short but pointed address by Brother J. W. Rushton.

One of the best items of interest to give the Saints is the apparent full return to health and activity of our esteemed pastor, Brother Goodrich, who has been greatly handicapped for many months by very poor health. On December 26, he addressed the Los Angeles Saints both morning and evening, showing that he is well on the road to efficient service once more.

The Long Beach Mission is growing steadily under the care of Elder R. T. Cooper, who has moved to the beach in order to more fully devote himself to his work there. May the Lord bless his efforts.

Our Christmas entertainment was in charge of the Sunday school, and was well rendered, and appreciated by a very large audience.

The prayers of the Saints are asked for the sick in our branch. We pray that all our sick ones may be healed soon.

Much good is being accomplished in this district, we believe, by our missionary in charge, Brother J. W. Rushton. His conciliatory policies and his emphatic enunciation of the gospel principles are meeting with the hearty approval of the Saints.

The good literature committee is working on a publicity campaign for the year 1916. You will hear more of this later.

That the coming year may bring greater results than ever before, both in acquiring new members and in uniting the Saints in a stronger cooperative body as a whole, is our sincere prayer.

ELLA M. SWITZER.

Burlington, Iowa

The ladies' aids of Burlington united in a bazaar on November 18, 19, and 20, which proved a success in more ways than one. Financially, it resulted in about $135 clear, after expenses and tithing were paid; and we feel that the results of "missionary work" done cannot well be measured. Tracts went out with each purchase, and a number of interesting experiences were related by those who met and talked with the visitors and purchasers. Brother Williams was on hand much of the time to lend able assistance in this part of the work. And the prayers that were offered for the success of the effort and spreading of our message, were united and earnest.

Brother Frederick A. Smith held a series of meetings here, beginning November 28, and continuing until December 10. His sermons afforded a veritable feast of good things, and the interest held well throughout—part of the time the house was filled to its capacity. We have reason to believe that opposition and prejudice which had existed in some cases was broken down, and much was done, both in strengthening the branch, and carrying the word to others.

Brother Smith's daughter, Sister Freda, accompanied him to assist with his patriarchal work. On Saturday evening, December 4, the Plus Ultra Religio class met at the home of Brother Williams, for a social evening with her.

Brother L. G. Holloway stopped over in Burlington from Friday, the 10th, to Sunday, speaking for us Sunday evening,—a clear, logical sermon on the "Evidences of Christianity." It was the sort that "tastes like more."

Brother C. E. Willey and wife of Lamoni were here during a part of the series of meetings, Brother Willey assisting at one service.

The Christmas program rendered by the Sunday school Sunday evening, December 26, was exceptionally good. It has been feared that with the amount of sickness prevalent some would be unable to take their parts, but all were there, and there was not a slip to mar the evening. Much of the program was taken from the leaflet put out by the Herald Publishing House, and one of the most attractive features of the program was the star drill.

We missed the presence of Brother and Sister Williams and daughter for the Christmas season, but recognized the claim on them of former home ties and relatives at Hite-man, Iowa. We hope to have them with us again for the first Sunday of the New Year.

December 30, 1915.

Bothwell, Ontario

As it is a long time since I have seen anything in your columns from this district I think it is time some one was waking up to the situation. I am more interested in Zone Branch, of which I am a member. We are trying to do our part as a little band of Saints, and I believe that our branch is in as good a condition as it has been for some years.

We have been meeting in an upstairs hall for the last six or seven years in Bothwell, under very unfavorable circumstances. Last fall we were asked to build a church building here in town. The original church building and home of our branch was at Zone Center, about three and one half miles from town. It was built about twelve years ago, in the time of Brother A. Leverton and of the late Brother John Taylor.

At the time the church there was built there was a fair-sized membership living near there, but many of the families have moved away and seems to be little use for it now. In compliance with instructions, we have moved forward and purchased a beautiful site, the best we think in the town. We expect to get started toward building in the early spring, and expect to put up a red pressed brick building. Conference is billed for Bothwell next fall, and some of us are hoping to have the church ready to open at that time.

So far as we can discern things are moving along quietly in the district. Our reunion this year was counted the best yet, and we hope they may continue. We had the president of the mission, Brother Curtis, and also Brother R. C. Russell with us, as well as several others of the missionary force, all of which went to make the reunion a success.

As the months and years go by, the church and its associations become dearer to us, and we feel like striving on that we may accomplish the work the Master requires of us. Ever praying for the onward march of the gospel, I remain,

Your brother and coworker,

JOHN C. DENT.

One brother and one sister in England survive. Baptized September 29, 1870, at Kewanee, Illinois, by Thomas Weeks, confirmed by John Chisnell. Ordained elder April 15, 1877, at Streator, by John S. Kier. Deceased was a loving husband and father, faithful to the church till the last. Sermon by Luther Simpson, assisted by Elder Izatt. Interment at Oak Hill Cemetery, Taylorville, January 1, 1916.

RIMMER.—Jesse Edwin, son of Jesse and Rachel Rimmer, born September 27, 1915, near Atlantic, Iowa; passed beyond, October 11, 1915. Services at Gallands Grove, by D. R. Chambers.

The January "Review"

George Harvey contributes to the January North American Review the first of a series of editorial articles embodying the result of his observations during his recent European trip. Colonel Harvey's impressions are presented in the current number of the Review in the form of a series of sharply etched pen-pictures, remarkable for their vividness, their dramatic intensity, and their depth of feeling and conviction. No more striking and illuminating portrayal of present conditions in England has appeared since the war began. What is a merchant marine? It is, says Lincoln Colcord, in an admirable article, far more than a fleet of ships—"it is quite as much the men who own them; above all, it is the concrete expression of an extensive maritime impulse and activity in the nation at large." These things, says Mr. Colcord, are to seek in this country. He considers the question whether, indeed, the creation of a merchant marine is possible for America. An even more disconcerting article than Mr. Colcord's is another one of the series of notable papers on naval problems that Rear-Admiral Fiske has been contributing to recent numbers of the Review. In this, in the course of a discussion of "Naval principles," he raises the disturbing question whether it is not already "too late" for us to take effective naval action against the danger which, he believes, the future holds for us. What is the truth, the veritable "inside story," about that famous and much misunderstood affair, the Chicago and Alton transaction, and the part played in it by the late E. H. Harriman? George Kennan reveals some surprising facts about the case. In a discussion of the duties and obligations of the United States in the matter of the Colombian Treaty, a writer of importance and unquestioned authority, but cloaking his identity under the pseudonym of "Latin-American," presents some views which will not be pleasant reading for honorable Americans; nor will the Reverend Percy Stickney Grant's article on "The open forum movement" please Americans of conventionally orthodox views regarding the attitude of the church toward modern problems of sociology and economics. In "Suffrage and prohibition," L. Ames Brown asks whether an extension of the franchise among women helps the "wets" or the "drys." "Saul of Tarsus" is the title of a brilliant piece of analytical criticism directed against the Apostle Paul, and raising the query: Was Paul a Christian? Two purely literary features of value are a charming essay by Florence L. Ravenel on "Great women's daughters," and a poem of singular dramatic power and pathos, shot through with spiritual beauty, by Hermann Hagedorn—"The fugitive." Lawrence Gilman contributes his customary illuminating reviews of plays, music, and "The book of the month"; and that always enlivening department, Letters to the Editor, contains, as always, much interesting reading matter.

Behind War's Screen in Holy Land

Armenia, the martyr nation, is riveting the horror-stricken attention of the Christian world, and throwing into the limelight the dark deeds of the present possessors of the Holy Land. Doctor William T. Ellis, the eminent journalist and traveler, knows the past and present situation of the Armenians and their murderers as few Americans do. He will write for The Sunday School Times a series of six articles, which will answer these absorbingly interesting questions about the Holy Land, and will include also; "The Story of Armenian Christians from the beginning." "What the other eastern churches are, and were." "Some religious aspects of the most interesting city in the world—Constantinople." "America in the land of the Bible, and what she has done for Armenians." All the latest news-facts of importance from the massacre fields. In planning this series it has been the desire of Doctor Ellis and the editor of The Sunday School Times to put before American Christians the facts that should be known in connection with the unparalleled situation in the land where Turkey holds sway. A free specimen copy of the Times containing one of these soul-stirring and informing articles will be sent to any interested person on receipt of a post card request mentioning this paper, and addressed to The Sunday School Times Company, 1031 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Book Reviews

GLEIG'S WONDERFUL BOOK CONCERNING THE MOST WONDERFUL BOOK IN THE WORLD.—Reverend George Robert Gleig, M. A., Introduction by Sylvanus Stall, D. D., 740 pp., $1.80 net. Vir Publishing Company, Philadelphia. The editor of this book, Doctor Stall, who was ever a staunch defender of the inspiration and authenticity of the Bible, in his message in the Introduction, in view of his recent death, seems to speak as a voice from the grave when he says: "Forty-five years ago, while a sophomore at college, as one of a committee I was engaged in re-cataloguing a large library connected with the literary society of which I was a member. While thus engaged I came upon two small volumes in which Gleig's History of the Bible was originally issued in 1831. Mousing, as I did, into most of the books, these two volumes held my attention. I took them to my room and studied them carefully. Then, as to-day, current literature and the college class-room teemed with the fleeting fancies and mistaken guesses of men whose principal claim for consideration consisted in their attacks upon the foundation of religious conviction and Christian faith. For all this I found in the volume now in hand an adequate antidote. I had previously passed through a severe trial of my faith in the divinity of Jesus Christ, but since the days when I found and read Mr. Gleig's book, Satan has never again been able to shake my faith in the Bible as the inspired Word of God, or the divinity of Jesus Christ, or his atoning work as the Savior of the lost sinner. Indeed these two little volumes moulded and fashioned my religious life and character perhaps more than any other books which I have ever read, and they have never lost their place or influence in my life." In this book, Reverend Gleig follows the Bible narrative, dealing with the principal events and incidents from Genesis to Revelation. The author has a charm of style and diction which distinguishes him as among the best of writers. Reverend Gleig was of that class who believe the Bible is either all true or not true at all. This book will therefore be denounced by a class of so-called "scientists" as unscientific and out-of-date, because scriptural, and by a certain class of ecclesiastics who substitute their own conjectures concerning scriptural teachings for plain, manifest teachings of the Scriptures themselves. But, it will be hailed and welcomed by a much larger class who are tired of the "theories," "conjectures," and "guesses," which are so often called scientific, but which are soon found to be unscientific and false, and consequently pass on only to give place to more theories, conjectures and guesses. The author saw clearly that to substitute human conjectures in place of Bible declarations is only to multiply difficulties a thousand-fold.

HUMAN IMMORTALITY AND PREEXISTENCE.—J. Ellis McTaggart. Longmans, Green and Company, New York City. 90 cents. Mr. McTaggart has his Litt. D. from Cambridge, and his LL. D. from Saint Andrews, and is Fellow and Lecturer of Trinity College in Cambridge, and Fellow of the British Academy. A book of 119 pages, devoted to the study of the possibility of human immortality and the allied question of preexistence.

A WHOLESOME STORY

Presents the Gospel
Plan in the Living of it :: ::

$1 Postpaid

In response to many requests from subscribers to the Stepping Stones, we are pleased to announce the publication of this popular serial in book form. There are 320 pages, in large type on good paper, cloth binding. Cover and inside illustrations. Price one dollar.

Those who have read any of the chapters will already know of its merit and want the book. Those who have not may be assured that it has much of special interest as a story that contains true-to-life experiences.

Sister Estella Wight, the author, has woven commonplace events, such as all of us know, into a pleasing story fabric which brings out many of our church doctrines in a convincing light.

The story was finished in the Christmas number of the Stepping Stones. The book is a very nice product of the printer's art. Order now.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE, Lamoni, Iowa

THE WHITE SLAVES OF LONDON.—W. N. Willis. Richard C. Badger, Boston. $1. Dedicated to the Lord Bishop of London, contains a letter of introduction from the Lord Bishop, also incorporates an appeal to the British Nation from the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Bishop of Birmingham, and Mrs. Bramwell Booth. A study of the social evil in the great city of London.

THE STORY OF OUR BIBLE, HOW IT GREW AND WHAT IT IS.—Harold B. Hunting. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York

City. Back of the Bible is a fascinating story—a story of the men and women who wrote it. A story of the life of the people as it is written book by book. The account of the New Testament is given first and not in its chronological order, the author evidently feeling that interest of the reader may thus be more easily aroused at the start. The book contains some interesting illustrations of ancient writings, sticks, scrolls, etc. A beautifully printed and bound volume that should be interesting and profitable to Bible students.

Nobody but Latter Day Saints will know this book IS Latter Day Saint. Yet the public will wonder whence comes the spirit of it.

Not a book for lazy readers or nonthinkers.

Vital characters (many known to you), a strong plot, and a love story and life-story that will grip you.

Young men and young women, especially, should get this book—and hand it out to their friends.

You will be proud of it as a literary production. Your most critical friends outside the church will read it in spite of themselves.

THE PARABLE OF THE PRODIGAL SON

(Sermon preached by Elbert A. Smith, September 5, 1915, at the Lamoni Stake Reunion, Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Winsome Smith. Scripture Reading, Parable of the Prodigal Son, Luke 15: 11-32.)

The parable that I have read to you this afternoon is commonly called the parable of the prodigal son. It is sometimes referred to as the parable of the son that was lost. It occurs as the third in a series of parables that are called the lost and found parables: the first of these being the story of the sheep that was lost; the second, the piece of money that was lost; and the third, that of the prodigal son who was lost.

Jesus had a custom of putting his truths into story form. They were short stories. He evidently endeavored to make them so striking that they would never be forgotten, and he succeeded. So long as humanity endures, the parables of Jesus will be classic.

He endeavored to make them simple, so that even a little child could understand them. Now perhaps I had better change that a little.

I was requested to address the young people at the Saint Louis reunion recently, and in the beginning of my address I said, "This is to be an address to the young people, but I will try to make it so plain and simple that even the older people can understand it."

They thought I was joking, but I was more than half in earnest. Sometimes we get so old and so positive and so wise that we cannot perceive a new truth. Philip Cook, our Indian brother, said, "Old horses have stiff necks." He was talking to the joint council of the Presidency and Twelve. We were trying to convert him from some Indian customs, while he was trying to convert us to those same customs; and when he failed, he said: "Well, old horses have stiff necks."

I am reminded that Joseph Smith at the age of fifteen found his way through a theological muddle that the older heads could not solve. It was so very simple it required a childlike faith, that was all; so he said, "I will go to God and ask him," and that was all there was to it. That was too simple for the older heads. They said, "Why do that when we have all these libraries and all these hired preachers?"

At the age of twelve years Jesus confounded the lawyers. He said, "I must be about my Father's business." They were about their own business. And thus we find that, as Jesus said, we must become as little children. So Jesus himself addressed his message in plain and simple language, that even the older people can understand if they will.

Probably this parable is among the most remarkable of the parables that Jesus taught. I have an estimate of it in the writings of Farrar:

Never certainly in human language was so much—such a world of love and wisdom and tenderness—compressed into such few immortal words. Every line, every touch of the picture is full of beautiful, eternal significance. The poor boy's presumptuous claim for all that life could give him—the leaving of the old home—the journey to a far country—the brief spasm of "enjoyment" there—the mighty famine in the land—the premature exhaustion of all that could make life noble and endurable—the abysmal degradation and unutterable misery that followed—the coming to himself, and recollection of all that he had left behind—the return in heart-broken penitence and deep humility—passion and tenderness over this poor returning prodigal—the ringing joy of the whole household over him who had been loved and lost, and had now come home—the unjust jealousy and mean complaint of the elder brother—and then that close of the parable in a strain of music—"Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine. It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad; for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; was lost, and is found"—all this indeed is a divine epitome of the wandering of man and the love of God, such as no literature has ever equaled, such as no ear of man has ever heard elsewhere. Put in the one scale all that Confucius, or Sakya, Mouni, or Zoroaster, or Socrates, ever wrote or said—and they wrote and said many beautiful and holy words—and put in the other the Parable of the Prodigal Son alone, with all that this single parable connotes and means, and can any candid spirit doubt which scale would outweigh the other in eternal preciousness—in divine adaptation to the wants of man?—The Life of Christ, p. 339.

AN AGE-OLD TYPE

Three kinds of characters appear in this parable. Naturally the one that attracts our attention first is that of the prodigal son, and in presenting him Jesus presented a type that is almost as old as humanity. I presume that every little village in Judea had its typical prodigal son. Possibly every family had at least one member who had some of the characteristics of the prodigal.

It is said that every flock has one black sheep, and we might add that every sheep is a potential black sheep. You or I, if we are honest, must admit that we have in us some of the tendencies that would make us prodigal and would lead us to depths of degradation if we would only give them free rein. And by the same token, every sheep is a potential white sheep. There need not by force of necessity be any black sheep in any flock. It is a matter of human agency in the long run.

THE LURE OF THE "FAR COUNTRY"

Now we notice first of all that this prodigal fell a victim to the lure of the "far country." He had no more than secured his inheritance until he packed up and went away to this distant land. It is the glamor and the romance and the adventure of sin that leads many young people into transgression, and not any inherent desire to do that which is wrong. Sin covers itself with tinsel, and so appeals to the young in the form of romance and adventure. Many a young man goes out into a strange city, out into the night in search of some strange woman, or after masculine companions in saloons or gambling joints, when it is the spirit of romance and adventure that appeals to him. Many older men go the same road. The evil consequences and repulsive features are kept under cover. They are not discovered until later. But it is this romantic appeal of the strange far country that entices.

Now what is this far country? It is not always a long way off in point of physical distance. It may be just down town. It may be just around the corner. But it is a long way off in point of moral difference between our station in the church and kingdom of God, and the place to which we are enticed by the powers of evil. It may be close at hand geographically, but a long way off morally.

THE CONSEQUENCES

Do not think that you must go to a distant country to be a prodigal. You can do that in Lamoni very easily if you permit yourself to be led astray by the false pretenses of the Evil One. But what are the results? It is the result and not the promise that concerns us. It is the ultimate consequence. There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the ends thereof are death.

The consequences as revealed in this case were, first of all, waste. The prodigal squandered his inheritance. It doesn't matter whether our inheritance is of money, or time, or strength, or whatever it is, if it is squandered in the service of evil.

The next result was that he fell into want and suffered. That was inevitable. We read that this individual came down so low that he was anxious to eat even the husks that were fed to the hogs. I believe the commentators say that these were pods taken from the carob tree, a tree that bore a certain kind of bean. Not the corn husks as we might picture them. Even then they were pretty poor food for a rich man's son who had been used to luxury.

I call your attention to the natural results of his course as revealed in the fact that his food was husks and his companions were hogs. That is the inevitable result of leading the life of a prodigal; it always has been so and always will be so. And the suffering is not always confined to the individual who is guilty. It does not always terminate when he ceases to sow his wild oats. This is illustrated in a little poem from the pen of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, entitled "The price that he paid":

I said I would have my fling,
And do what a young man may:
And I didn't believe a thing
That the parsons have to say.
I didn't believe in a God
That gives us blood like fire,
Then flings us into hell because
We answer the call of desire.

And I said: "Religion is rot,
And the laws of the world are nil;
For the bad man is he who is caught
And cannot foot his bill.
And there is no place called hell;
And heaven is only a truth,
When a man has his way with a maid,
In the fresh keen hour of youth.

"And money can buy us grace,
If it rings on the plate of the church:
And money can neatly erase
Each sign of a sinful smirch."
For I saw men everywhere,
Hotfooting the road of vice;
And women and preachers smiled on them
So long as they paid the price.

So I had my joy of life:
I went the pace of the town;
And then I took me a wife,
And started to settle down.
I had gold enough and to spare
For all the simple joys
That belong with a house and a home
And a brood of girls and boys.

I married a girl with health
And virtue and spotless fame.
I gave in exchange my wealth
And a proud old family name.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

HUERTA PASSES.—General Victoriano Huerta, one time provisional president of Mexico, died at El Paso, Texas, the 13th, failing to recuperate after an operation performed a few days before.

DEFENDING PENNILESS.—The following cities of the United States maintain public defenders in the police courts to safeguard the rights of penniless prisoners: Los Angeles, Omaha, Pittsburgh, Houston, Texas; Temple, Texas; Evansville, Indiana; Portland, Oregon.

REBELLION IN CHINA.—Rebellion against the new Chinese monarchy is reported in the province of Yunan, where many thousand men are said to have joined the rebel movement. Disturbances are reported from other points, the rebel forces being successful in Sze Chuen.

CONCERNING "PERSIA."—It is announced that the Austrian Government has notified the United States that after a full investigation, it is unable to determine how the Persia was sunk. Secretary Lansing has been asked by Austrian representatives what information the United States Government has concerning the Persia.

PROHIBITION FOR CALIFORNIA.—The required number of signatures to initiative petitions for a vote on State-wide prohibition in California has been obtained. Two propositions will be submitted; one for partial prohibition, to take effect in 1918; another for total prohibition, to take effect in 1920, both to be voted on in November.

FORD PEACE EXPEDITION.—The Ford peace expedition has concluded its sessions at The Hague. The Ford party was joined by representatives from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Holland. Part of the Ford members sailed for America on the 12th, the remainder on the 15th. The members of the permanent peace board appointed remained at The Hague.

PROGRESSIVES AT CHICAGO.—The Progressive Party will meet in national convention concurrently with the Republican convention at Chicago, June 7, as decided by the national committee in session in Chicago the 11th. This arrangement and the declaration of the Progressive executive committee evidences a willingness on the part of the Progressives to unite with the Republicans on a candidate for president.

SUBMARINE ACCIDENT.—Three civilian workers and one enlisted electrician were killed and ten other men seriously injured by an explosion on the United States submarine E-2, while the craft was undergoing repairs at the New York navy yards the 15th. This is the second fatal accident in the history of the submarine in connection with the United States Navy, the first occurring when, with all on board, the submarine F-4 sank in Honolulu harbor last March.

WIRELESS EFFICIENCY.—On the 10th, wireless communication occurred across the North American continent between the battleships Wyoming in Atlantic waters, and the San Diego in Pacific waters, such a feat having not before been accomplished. Unusual static conditions and improved apparatus are said to account for this new record of efficiency.

CONTINUES OSBORNE POLICY.—Doctor George W. Krichwen, who has relieved Thomas Mott Osborne as warden of Sing Sing Prison, since charges were brought against the latter, has announced his intention to continue the reform policy of his predecessor. Following complaint by Doctor Krichwen concerning interference with his work on the part of John B. Riley, State Superintendent of New York Prisons, the resignation of Mr. Riley has been requested by Governor Whitman.

AID FOR JEWS.—In response to a Senate resolution, President Wilson on the 12th issued a proclamation designating January 27 as a day for Americans to contribute for the relief of suffering Jews in Europe. The resolution recites that there are nine million Jews in the warring countries, the great majority of whom are destitute of food, shelter, and clothing, millions of them being driven from their homes. Contributions should be addressed to the American Red Cross, Washington, District of Columbia.

CURE-ALLS CONDEMNED.—On the 10th, the United States Supreme Court found constitutional the Sherley amendment to the Pure Food and Drug Act, passed in 1912, to regulate statements as to the curative effects of medicines in interstate commerce. The decision was in the case of a Chicago drug concern which shipped medicine to Omaha, described in an accompanying circular as a compound which had been known to cure tuberculosis. In handing down the decision, Justice Hughes found "no grounds for saying that Congress may not condemn interstate transportation of swindling preparations, accompanied by false and fraudulent statements, as well as lottery tickets," thus putting venders of swindling cure-alls on a par with the notorious gambling concerns of past decades.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Eighteen Americans returning from the United States to a mining camp in Chihuahua on the 11th, were by supposed Villa bandits taken from the train about fifty miles west of Chihuahua City, and shot. These men were traveling under promised military protection of the Carranza Government. The train, carrying supplies and money, was looted. The United States Government in a note to Carranza, urgently requests the apprehension and punishment of "the perpetrators of the dastardly crime," and the "immediate dispatch of forces to the various mining camps in the State of Chihuahua." Generals Rodriguez and Almeida, Villa followers, are said to have been captured and shot near the scene of the outrage. Urged to do so by the United States Government, mine operators are arranging the removal of their employees from that part of Chihuahua and Durango threatened by Villa supporters. Villa is in western Chihuahua with something under two thousand troops at his command, defying the authority of Carranza, and prepared for guerilla warfare. The surrender to Carranza representatives of three thousand Mayo Indian and Villa troops near Esperanza, Sonora, is announced. Typhus fever is reported at Juarez.

EUROPEAN WAR.—A calm on the eastern front has been followed by desperate fighting between Russians and Austrians in Galicia and Bukowina, casualties on both sides being unusually heavy. Czernowitz, capital of Bukowina, is still in the possession of the Austrians. The Austrians claim to be standing their ground elsewhere. The Austrians have been successful over the Montenegrins. Considerable Montenegrin territory has been taken, and further strongholds are threatened. The Austrians claim the capture of Cetinje, the Montenegrin capital. Heavy fighting in the Champagne region and the Vosges Mountains on the western front has resulted in local German successes, there being no material change in the lines. Bulgarian forces are reported to have advanced in Albania to within about thirty miles of Durazzo, at which point Italian forces are supposed to be located. British troops in Mesopotamia are reported successful over the Turks. Two Italian steamers have been sunk by mines in the Adriatic, and an Austrian scout cruiser by a French submarine in the same waters. Italy is floating her third war loan, $200,000,000, which is said to have been covered by local subscriptions. Austria is reported suffering from a shortage of coal. A concession by the British Government to prevent employers from using conscription as a weapon to rid themselves of undesirable employees, forcing them into the army was followed by the withdrawal of the resignation of the three labor leaders of the cabinet. The second reading of the conscription bill was agreed to in the Commons without division. Rumors persist indicating that the Kaiser of Germany is suffering from some affection of the throat. Reports range from announcements of slight indisposition, to some serious malady. It was stated some months ago that the Kaiser was suffering from throat trouble.

Great is he who enjoys his earthenware as if it were plate, and his plate as if it were earthenware.—Seneca.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

LIQUOR AND COMPENSATION.—If the people engaged in the liquor business ask for compensation for any pecuniary loss brought to them by prohibition, a very complete answer can be made to them. Do they give back to the wife the value of the husband drink has taken from her? Do they give back to the children the father whom drink has brutalized? Do they give back to the mother the son whom drink has ruined? Do they recompense society for the moral disease which they spread? Do they give back to government the purity for which they have substituted rottenness and corruption? . . . Why should the liquor interests, that make no effort to compensate, ask compensation? They live by sufferance, they must take their chances. They can not complain of the wrath their business arouses.—W. J. Bryan.

INFLUENTIAL INDIANS.—While the radical characteristics of the Indian make for his prominence in sports, it is in the field of erudition that his mark has been a shining one. A senator from Kansas, Charles W. Curtis, is part Indian, and Senator Owen of Oklahoma boasts of the Indian blood in his veins. There is Doctor Charles A. Eastman the noted Sioux writer, who married soon after his graduation from college, Imogene Gurney, also an author; Representative Charles D. Carter of Oklahoma is a Chickasaw; Arthur C. Parker, the State archæologist of New York, is a Seneca; Doctor Carlos Montezuma of Chicago, a splendid physician, is an Apache; Marie L. B. Baldwin, an able lawyer is a Chippewa, and there are scores of others in professional and business life who are full-blooded Indians.—Philadelphia Press.

CHRISTMAS WITHOUT BOOZE.—This is the first Christmas in Independence since the saloons closed January 1. In many homes in this city to-day there is bread instead of booze. In many homes to-day for the first time is a happy Christmas, with toys in the little stockings and father at home and sober. The merchants sold many hundreds of dollars worth of Christmas cheer this week to people who never had money to buy last Christmas. The tag day committee divided the city into wards and went where was needed food or clothing and in wards where heretofore they had distributed $150 needed less than $50. The committee has money left for the coming weeks of winter, when some may be needed. The merchants had the best business of many years. The streets are crowded with sober, happy people, and a woman can walk any sidewalk in town without danger of being pushed off the sidewalk by a drunken man. The booze which reaches Independence this Christmas season will come in small lots and from other places.—The Independence (Missouri) Examiner, December 24, 1915.

And I gave her the love of a heart
Grown sated and sick of sin!
My deal with the Devil was all cleaned up,
And the last bill handed in.

She was going to bring me a child,
And when in labor she cried,
With love and fear I was wild—
But now I wish she had died.
For the son she bore me was blind
And crippled and weak and sore!
It was so she settled my score.

When the prodigal son ceases to sow his wild oats he may think that the deal is all over with and done, but the harvest is yet to be reckoned with, and sometimes it is the innocent who suffer as well as the guilty. It is not so because God is unjust; it is because our lives are so intertwined that in the very nature of events we cannot ruin ourselves without ruining others, and the nearer we come to them the worse effect our sins have upon them.

HE CAME TO HIMSELF

I notice in the story of this prodigal son that there came a period when it is said that he came to himself, and he said, "I will return to my father's house." It seemed that prior to that he had not been altogether sane; and I doubt if any man is who pursues a similar course. But this individual came to himself and did not like the consequences of his sin. I think that is the case with most men. They do not like the painful consequences, they want to escape them; but this in itself is not enough. This individual went a little further, and entertained a real detestation for the things that he had been doing. He began to abhor his past life. He was like the individual who said, "The things that I once loved I now hate. The things I once hated I now love." When we see a case like that we see one of the greatest manifestations of the power of God, in transforming an individual.

THE GREATEST MIRACLE

I was at a reunion not long ago and they were regretting that they had not received the gifts and powers of the gospel in their meetings; that is, they had not received the gift of tongues or the gift of prophecy. I called their attention to the fact that perhaps they had overlooked one of the greatest manifestations of the power of God.

We had with us a brother who joined the church about two years ago. All his life long he had been what he would call a "hard nut." He had been cast out as a little boy into the world. He had become familiar with all kinds of evil. He had grown up to be a railroad man and had traveled to and fro. He became a hard drinker, and one peculiar feature of the case was that he and his wife were good boon companions, and wherever he went she went. When he went to a saloon she went with him, and they bought their drinks and drank at the bar; and they took their whisky home and drank it at home. Both of them were converted at the same time, about two years ago, and they are now the main pillars of the church in their locality. There has been a complete change, and this man said, "The things that I once loved I now hate."

I thought that was one of the greatest evidences of the power of God, one of the greatest miracles that Jesus ever performed. It was a great miracle when he healed the blind, cast out the devils and raised the dead, but it was a greater miracle when he transformed human lives, as he did in the case of Peter, and Mary Magdalene; and so there in that reunion we had a demonstration of this same power of the gospel in this age. Jesus said it would do that, and when I see it doing so I have a right to say that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ. I do not need to say that I believe it. I know it; that is, to that extent I know it. I have seen it demonstrated.

And so in the case of this prodigal son, there began to be a demonstration. He began to come to himself and put away all that was evil and give place to all that was good.

YOUR CHILDREN MUST BE BORN AGAIN

I heard some people not long ago discussing their children. Some of them said, "Well, I have always taken my children to church. I have made them go to every meeting, but now they have grown up and they never want to go, and I cannot make them go." Let me tell you, you cannot make your children love this gospel. You cannot make anybody love God. You can aid them by bringing them to church at least a reasonable number of times. I would not make them go to every meeting. But, you may do all that you can with your son and he will not love this cause, he will not love God until he is born again. God's Spirit is like the wind that bloweth where it listeth; when it touches the heart of your boy, as it did your heart, why then he will like to go to church.

And so there came a time in the life of this prodigal son,—I do not know how many times his father had reached out for him, but his father could not save him; he had to think and feel for himself, and fall in love with the perfect law of liberty before he would ever walk in that way. It will be the same way with your children and with mine.

MAKING A NEW START

This prodigal son did not get his inheritance back again, simply because he returned to his father's house. That is what this brother, of whom I have been telling you, declared: "Why," he said, "there are all those wasted years I can never get back again." But the prodigal son, and this individual also, was willing to make a new start and make the best of the future. There was no use mourning any longer about the past, he had repented of it and put it away, and though he might suffer loss from it, all he could do was to go ahead like the Apostle Paul, who said, "Forgetting past things, I press forward." The main point right here is that the prodigal son was willing to make a new start; make the best of what remained of his life.

I believe the last time I preached to you I quoted this saying, "If you want to go anywhere you must start from where you are." You will pardon me for repeating it. When a man preaches as often to one audience as I have done here, he is apt to get on the old trail once in a while. If you want to go anywhere you have to start from where you are. You might think, I would like to start from somewhere else, where I would be more favorably situated, and it would look a little better for me to start; but if you are to get there you must start from where you are.

The prodigal son started from the pigsty where he was feeding the hogs, and went right straight home to his father,—and he did not temporize on the way, either.

REFORMATION BY DEGREES IS PAINFUL

At one of our reunions I went out for a little stroll in a quiet place, and, lo, I ran into a good brother who was very busy smoking a cigarette. He was as surprised as I was, and did not have time to bury it or hide it, and so he apologized. Why did he apologize to me? If he felt perfectly at ease smoking a cigarette in the presence of God, why should he apologize to me? I did not intend to sit in judgment on him; but he said, "This is about the only bad habit I still have. I have quit drinking and I am gradually quitting smoking. I used to smoke all the time nearly, but now I only smoke about three or four times a day, and I am gradually quitting."

I believed him; he was a pretty good brother. I think he was telling the truth. But I said to him, "Are you not like the Dutchman I heard about once?"

"Why," he asked, "how is that?"

"Well, the Dutchman cut his dog's tail off an inch at a time so that it would not hurt so much as to have it taken off all at once."

I like the plan of the prodigal son best. He quit all at once; had it over with, put it away and went right straight home to his father, and did not have any fooling along the way. I believe that is the best plan.

THE ELDER BROTHER

Possibly we have said enough about the prodigal son. The preachers generally dwell on him. I heard a story of a man in one of our penitentiaries. There was a penitentiary and a theological seminary in the same town. Possibly some of the inmates of the one ought to have been in the other, and vice versa. Those preachers used to take turns in going down to the penitentiary to preach to the prisoners. And they used this parable so often that the prisoners finally got into the habit of saying, when they saw a preacher approaching, "Here comes another prodigal son." Perhaps it would have done them good to have heard a little about the prodigal son's brother, and a little more about the love of his father.

The second character that attracts our attention in this parable is the older brother. We observe that he was a very good man. In many respects he was a man that you could depend on, as a rule. He had stayed right at home and worked hard all those years with his father. He had never disobeyed any commandment. He was worthy to be considered an heir. So far as he was concerned, the father said, "All that I have is thine."

But this brother had one serious fault. He lacked charity, and in the opinion of the Apostle Paul, until he obtained charity all these other merits were to a certain extent rendered null and void. He became as a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. He was angry when his brother came back repentant, and the father made a feast for him. He lacked sympathy. He lacked understanding.

Of course we do not know how often his patience may have been tried. It may have been that this prodigal son had made several attempts at repenting before this. We do not know, but the Master said, just prior to this, that we must forgive seventy times seven. Instead of receiving his brother back again with rejoicing and with a willingness to believe that he had truly repented, he was angry, he was selfish, and he said, "Why, you never did this much for me." You will notice he was a little bit pharisaical. While we are talking about the prodigal son who is away out yonder in a far country, while we are exposing his faults, we should be careful that we are not a little pharisaical ourselves, like this older brother who stayed at home and behaved himself, and yet who lacked the great virtue of charity.

Sometimes we hear a good brother say, "Well now, they got a good raking this morning," referring to a sermon that had been preached. Be a little careful, brother. Possibly they deserved that raking,—but are you not enjoying it a little too much? When you go out to shoot sinners be careful that you old blunderbuss doesn't miss the sinner entirely and kick you into the middle of next week.

The great thing that the elder brother needed was to acquire charity, and I have an idea that the returning of the prodigal son was a great benefit to both of them. I like to imagine the prodigal son going on, after that, in the path of righteousness, and the elder brother acquiring that sympathy that he had not previously had.

REJOICING IN HEAVEN

It is stated here in the language of the Master that there is more rejoicing in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons who need no repentance.

The father said to this elder brother in substance: You are always with me. All that I have is thine. But this, thy brother, was lost and is found; he was dead and is alive. I have had joy with you all these years. My joy has been constant. It has been diffused over all these years; but now I gather up in one great climax of joy everything that I have been robbed of all these years in your brother who has disappointed me so often.

When we see some one that has always been going wrong, and who repents and does right, how joyful we feel. For the time being we forget the pillars in the church, who have never gone wrong, and on whom we depend. But let me tell you, after that time of rejoicing is over, and we want something done, we often turn back to those good old pillars, who have been proven dependable.

I imagine this is the way the angels in heaven feel. It is about the only way I can understand that statement, unless it shall be in the light of the comment made by one individual who says that this text really means, "There is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine self-righteous men who think they have no need of repentance." That may be the meaning of it. I will leave it for you to consider. Certainly the Master had just been talking to men of this type; they are not really righteous men, but self-righteous men who think they have no need of repentance. And certainly there is more joy in heaven over one repentant sinner than over ninety and nine of the other class.

THE FATHER

The next character attracting our attention is that of the father. I presume this father had suffered a great deal because of the conduct of his erring son. Certainly in that far country the family name had been dragged clear down into the gutter. The name of the family was ruined in that country; and

I imagine even at home the neighbors were talking about this disgraceful boy.

You know, there are some people who seem to rejoice when the son of a good man goes wrong. I cannot understand it, but that is a fact. The only way I can account for it is that they feel that their partner, the Devil, has again been vindicated, for certainly they must be in partnership with him. I try to raise my son to be a good son, but I may fail. If I fail and you feel any degree of rejoicing in my failure, you are not my friend. At such a time you should weep with me and uphold me in your prayers.

This father had suffered a great deal, but he was willing to forgive, he was anxious to forgive. I noticed yesterday morning in the prayer meeting that Brother John Smith said we were farther from God than he was from us. I do not suppose such could be literally true. I cannot be any farther from Brother Smith than he is from me, in point of inches or miles. The distance must be equal. But you get the idea.

God is nearer a common meeting point than we. That point is where we have full repentance and he can give full forgiveness. And so we read of this father, that he saw his son a long way off, ran to meet him, and fell on his neck and rejoiced.

GOD WILLING TO FORGIVE

We recognize at once, of course, that this father is the type of God, and if that means anything it means that God has never in all the history of the world cast the human family off. He has never stepped to one side and said that he would not forgive. His position has always been one of love. He has always been ready to meet humanity. It was not the work of Christ to reconcile him to man, but to reconcile man to God. And the moment Christ induces us to come to the common meeting point, when we are full of repentance and willing to do the will of God, God comes to that point and gives us full forgiveness.

This is what we get out of the parable, so far as the attitude of the father is concerned in this case. On the part of the prodigal son there is a complete forsaking of sin; and so far as he could do so he was willing to make restitution. He came to the father and said: I have sinned against thee; I do not ask to be received back as a son; I am willing to be a servant. And the Father received him as a son, not as a servant only.

TEACHING POINTS

I think I do not need to dwell longer on this parable. You will notice that the main teaching points are: The consequences of sin; the necessity of repentance; the need of brotherly charity; and finally the fatherhood of God.

It was the work of Christ to teach the parenthood of God, "Our Father which art in heaven,"—the fatherhood of God, and the brotherhood of man.

We see God in this father. We see humanity in this prodigal son and his elder brother. Possibly we see ourselves in one or the other, or in both of them. These are the main points that Jesus wanted to bring home to the hearts of the people when he presented the parable to them. Are you in any degree like this prodigal? If so, God is willing and anxious to receive you home again.

Our brother this morning quoted that wonderful passage to the effect that neither life, nor death, nor powers, nor principalities, shall separate us from the love of God. He might have stated there is only one thing in all the world that can separate us from the love of God,—that is our own will, ourselves. It was the will of this prodigal son which separated him from his father, and when that will was converted he went straight home. There is no power on earth, in heaven or in hell that can separate you from God and his love except your own individual volition; and if you are willing to return to God to-day and go up and receive baptism when it is administered this afternoon, God is willing to receive you just as he did the prodigal son.

If you are in any degree like this elder brother who had not yet learned charity and sympathy, then you should take home the lesson that we see brought to him on that occasion: You are with me all the time. All that I have is thine. But these who were lost are now found. We should welcome them and receive them with love and not with coldness.

Finally, we should admire the great loving character of God. Neither the prodigal son nor his brother were altogether admirable, but there is no fault at all in the father; and so Jesus said at one time in his life, "Why call ye me good? There is none good save God."

BY E. E. LONG

WITHOUT A COMPETITOR

The Apostle Paul says that God "made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they might seek the Lord, . . . and find him" (Acts 17: 26, 27).

If God made all nations he made the people who occupied this continent in the past; and if he determined that they might feel after him and find him, is it not natural to conclude that if they found him they would have a record of some kind? If God had anything to do with the origin and development of those mysterious people, their record, if ever found, will have a familiar spirit; for God, we are told, is unchangeable and no respecter of persons (Malachi 3: 6; Acts 10: 34). So far as the prophecies examined thus far are concerned, the Book of Mormon bids first and has no competitor. It is the sealed book referred to by the prophet, and this fact will become more apparent as we proceed.

ARIEL'S SORROW

And the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, even all that fight against her and her munition, and that distress her, shall be as a dream of a night vision. It shall be even as when a hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and, behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and, behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be that fight against Mount Zion.—Isaiah 29: 7, 8.

Ariel, as we have seen, has reference to the inhabitants and not to the material elements of the city. The heaviness and sorrow visited upon her was not limited to the vicinity of Jerusalem. Ariel is represented wherever her scattered children are found. This is implied by the fact that a "multitude of nations" would fight against her, and distress her. Who are the multitude of nations, and how long would Ariel's distress continue? Let us see.

Turning to Leviticus 26, we have one of the most remarkable and far-reaching prophecies concerning the "House of Israel" in the Bible. In verses one to thirteen the Lord sets forth wonderful blessings to be enjoyed by the people, if they are faithful. But in verses fourteen to thirty-nine he portrays in unmistakable terms the "heaviness and sorrow" to befall them if they were disobedient. Five times the Lord repeats the warning that he would punish them "seven times" for their sin. The punishment to be meted out would extend to heathen countries where they would be scattered. But in verses forty to forty-five returning favor is promised, when their punishment shall have been sufficient.

The multitude of nations, then, that would "distress Ariel" would embrace all nations that would hold Israel in captivity, from the time of their captivity to their restoration.

Despite the severity of the threatened punishment, Israel soon forgot and went a "whoring," playing the "harlot" upon every high hill (Jeremiah 3: 10). Their punishment began when Shalmaneser carried the ten tribes away, and continues to a certain extent to this time. Judah, however, remained unmo- lested for one hundred and twenty years, until Nebuchadnezzar made them tributary to Babylon about 606 B. C. A few years later Zedekiah rebelled, with the result that Judah was crushed and carried to Babylon. This period, from the captivity of the ten tribes, 721-722 B. C., to the destruction of Jerusalem, 588 B. C., embraces the complete overthrow of the whole house of Israel. A "time" is three hundred and sixty years. Seven times three hundred and sixty are two thousand, five hundred and twenty years, during which time Israel would suffer "heaviness and sorrow." No prophecy ever had a more literal and awful fulfillment.

If we begin to count from the captivity of the ten tribes, 721-722 B. C., it reaches to 1798 A. D., when it may be said that the "terrible one," the pope, was brought to naught when he was taken prisoner, placed in exile, and his power broken. From that time forth the portion of scattered Israel which sojourned under the pope's domain began to enjoy the rights of civilized men, the nations one after another granting more or less liberty to their Jewish subjects.

If we count from the subjection of Jerusalem, 606 B. C., it brings us to A. D. 1914. During this latter year the Czar of Russia, the last one of the great rulers to fall in line by showing favor to Israel, made some wonderful promises to his Jewish subjects if they would be loyal to the Russian arms. And before the Germans set a foot on Russian soil the Kaiser promised freedom for Poland.

SETTING UP THE ENSIGN

When we take the central point of the period of 721 to 588 B. C., which would be 655, 654 B. C., and measure the distance in prophetic years of 360 days, it ends A. D. 1830, the year the Book of Mormon was published to the world. Is this another coincidence? Not only was the Book of Mormon, which contains a message direct to scattered Israel, published 1830, but the gospel in all its original splendor was proclaimed, the church organized after the apostolic pattern, whereby the "ensign" was officially "set up" as portrayed in the following soul-cheering prophecy:

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.—Isaiah 11: 11, 12.

The time of this proclamation when the Lord would set his hand the "second time" to recover his people is definitely set forth in Isaiah 18: 5 as "afore the harvest." Jesus tells us that "the harvest is the end of the world" (Matthew 13: 39). This "ensign" was to be set up in the land shadowing with wings "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia," because it was from there the Lord said his "dispersed" would bring an offering (Zephaniah 3: 10).

The great truths contained in the Book of Mormon did "spring out of the ground," and "whisper out of the dust." It came at a time, too, when the nations that were distressing Ariel were and are in the condition described as dreamy. The nations that have been and are distressing Ariel are nearly all "Christian" nations, so called. They rely on their conflicting creeds to furnish them a safe passage to heaven, and in their various forms of worship they imagine they are having a "feast." But they will wake up to the fact one day that their "hope" has been a delusive nightmare (Matthew 6: 21-23; Luke 13: 24).

Stay yourselves, and wonder; cry ye out, and cry: they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink. For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered.—Isaiah 29: 9, 10.

Here they are described as being in a drunken, staggering, sleepy condition, without prophets or seers. This so fittingly applies to the modern Christian nations that comment is hardly necessary. If there is a lingering doubt in the mind of the reader, the following, written nearly eight hundred years later, should dispel it:

This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away.—2 Timothy 3: 1-5.

Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.—2 Timothy 4: 2-4.

No wonder the prophet should exclaim, "Stay [hold] yourselves." A terrible "consumption" has been "determined" when "the wicked shall slay the wicked" because they would distress Ariel, the "Lion of God," "fight against mount Zion," and "mock" at the "strange work" which God would perform (Isaiah 28: 21, 22). These nations, while professing to be "Christian," are in a state of apostasy, having broken the "everlasting covenant" (Isaiah 24: 1-5).

LIGHT ON MODERN CONDITIONS

Since the Book of Mormon is on trial, it is only fair that it should be heard in its own behalf. If allowed to speak it may shed some light on modern conditions and furnish a reason why its testimony is rejected, and "mocked":

But behold, in the last days, or in the days of the Gentiles; yea, behold all the nations of the Gentiles, and also the Jews, both those who shall come upon this land, and those who shall be upon other lands; yea, even upon all the lands of the earth; behold, they shall be drunken with iniquity, and all manner of abominations; and when that day shall come, they shall be visited of the Lord of hosts, with thunder and with earthquake, and with a great noise, and with storm and with tempest, and with the flame of devouring fire; . . . For behold, ye have closed your eyes, and ye have rejected the prophets, and your rulers, and the seers hath he covered because of your iniquity.—2 Nephi 11: 116-124.

And the blood of that great and abominable church [Babylon and her daughters, Revelation 17], which is the whore of all the earth, shall turn upon their own heads; for they shall war among themselves, and the sword of their own hands shall fall upon their own heads, and they shall be drunken with their own blood. And every nation which shall war against thee, O house of Israel, shall be turned one against another, and they shall fall into the pit which they digged to ensnare the people of the Lord. And all that fight against Zion, shall be destroyed. And that great whore (the church of Rome, who hath perverted the right ways of the Lord; yea, that great and abominable church, shall tumble to the dust, and great shall be the fall of it.—1 Nephi 7: 26-31.

Compare the foregoing indictments against modern Christianity with the word of the Lord against ancient Israel, and note the "familiar spirit" attending. But the Book of Mormon is not alone in its testimony concerning the Gentiles. Listen!

O Lord, my strength, and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit.—Jeremiah 16: 19.

Since the beginning of the war preachers and editors, supported by an army of popular writers, have declared that Christianity is a failure. In a sermon, June 13, 1915, Reverend J. Edward Kirby, pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church, of Des Moines, Iowa, said: "This war marks the complete and absolute failure of an ecclesiastical Christianity." Reverend W. A. Briggs, of Perry, Iowa, said: "It is the absence of the spirit of Christ which has brought on this contention and strife. True, the Christian religion was the prevailing religion in these nations. But that was greatly weakened by formalism." Commenting on such expressions as the foregoing, the editor of the Gospel Trumpet says:

The present deplorable suicidal war that is raging in Europe is shaking the faith of some Christians whose faith stood more in men than in God. As these men see so-called Christian nations tearing one another to pieces, they ask, How can this be Christianity? One minister is reported as having said, "I can never preach again." Another churchman concluded that since it is Christians who are waging this war, and Christian churches that are backing it, he would drop the name Christian. . . . The trouble with these men is they have never had a real true conception of Christ and his salvation. The Christianity that they were acquainted with did not and does not stand the test. It was a popular Christianity, which gloried in the goodness and achievements of men, a Christianity that boasted of social service and moral uplift, that whitewashed humanity with a thin covering of civilization and called it Christianity.—Gospel Trumpet, November 5, 1914.

Doctor William Wright Stoddard of Rochester, New York, undertook to bring about a reformation among his people by preaching against worldliness in the churches, but he was promptly expelled from his pulpit. The Gospel Trumpet publishes the following as a "quotation from the pastor's own statement concerning the matter":

While the action of the Rochester Presbytery in ordering dissolution of my pastoral relations with Memorial Presbyterian Church in one way may seem a very strange interference to some, yet it ought not to occasion very great surprise. It is becoming increasingly difficult to preach the gospel in the churches to-day, and to conduct a ministry along purely Bible lines. The Bible makes plain the opposition one may expect, and also instructs us that this opposition will increase as time goes on. It is an exceedingly serious question which confronts the ministry to-day—as to whether those who are set as watchmen for God in the midst of his people shall have boldness to warn the people of sin and its results and to lead them into the glorious privileges and experiences of the life of Jesus Christ, or, for expediency's sake, that there be no ruffle in the life of the church be compelled to tone down the message, tell the people everything is all right, or nearly so, and what is not is steadily and surely dropping out or evolving into the right; yes, for the present and for the future, cry peace, peace, when there is no peace. If such a state is to continue, then it begins to look as if the professing church, which in many instances is no more than a club, with its dancing halls, smoking rooms, and pool tables, and many other worldly attractions, instead of the only attracting power given the church in the Bible, the Holy Spirit, were doomed, and the safety of God's people in many places may soon lie in separation from, instead of union with, the church.—Gospel Trumpet, November 5, 1914.

Worldliness and irreligion have entered the popular churches to such an extent that the editor of the Christian News for November 11, 1914, was led to write: "The churches have become honeycombed with theater-going, card-playing, and tango-dancing members. Formality, dry-rot, and tommy-rot have taken the place of spirituality, pure living, and gospel preaching." Surely, the Gentiles are beginning to say, "Our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit."

The Book of Mormon inveighed against those very things, in more definite terms than the Bible does, leaving the doctors of divinity no opportunity to blind the people with a multitude of conflicting interpretations, so they reject it in toto as a "pretentious fraud." The Protestant churches have imbibed so freely of those worldly allurements which they inherited from the "Mother Church" that, like her, they, too, have become "drunken with iniquity."

These modern Christian nations are the ones referred to as "drunken, but not with wine; staggering, but not with strong drink." It was to these nations that Ariel was to speak out of the ground and "whisper out of the dust."

THE SEALED BOOK

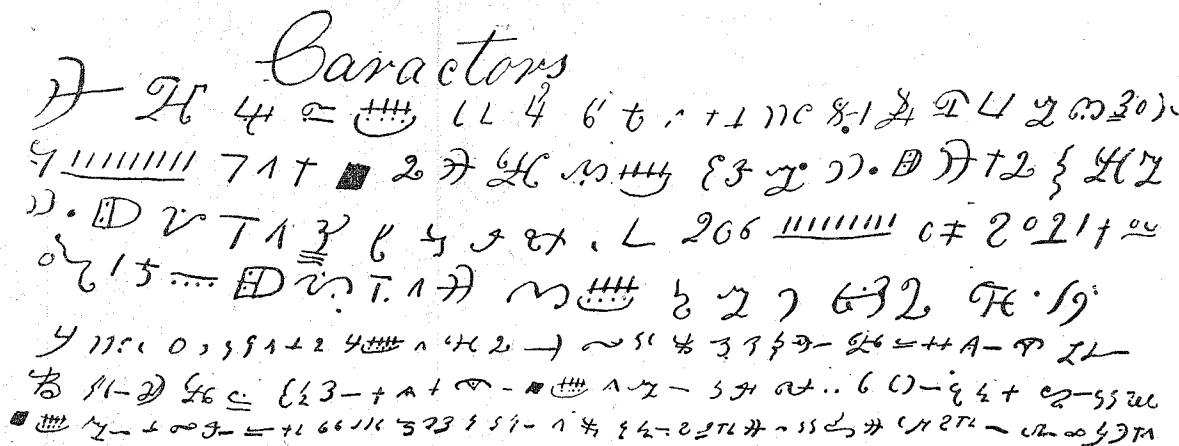

The Book of Mormon is the only message of modern times that can consistently lay claim to meeting the conditions of the prophecy. It is the "sealed book" referred to in the following:

And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed: And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned. —Isaiah 29: 11, 12.

Can this sealed book have any relation to the subject matter of verse four? As shown under verses one to four, the fact that Ariel, at some time would "speak out of the ground," and "whisper out of the dust," implies the discovery of a lost record. And that it would have a "familiar spirit" evidences the further fact that it would be a record other than the Bible, but bearing a message in harmony with the Bible. The "voice" of any portion of Ariel would be familiar to other portions of Ariel, no matter how September 22, 1827. Mr. Smith copied some of the characters on a piece of paper, the original of which is still in existence, and in the month of February, 1828, sent them to Professor Anthon of New York City. We will let Martin Harris relate what occurred when he presented the characters to the learned professor.

I went to the city of New York and presented the characters which had been translated, with the translation thereof, to Professor Anthon, a gentleman celebrated for his literary attainments. Professor Anthon stated that the translation was correct, more so than any he had before seen translated from the Egyptian. I then showed him those which were not yet translated, and he said they were Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyriac, and Arabic, and he said that they were the true characters. He gave me a certificate certifying to the people of Palmyra that they were true characters, and that the translation of such of them as had been translated was also correct. I took the certificate and put it into my pocket, and was just leaving the house, when Mr. Anthon called me back, and asked me how the young man found out that there were gold plates in the place where he found them. I answered that an angel from God had revealed it unto him.

long they might be separated. When brought together they would be "well acquainted," familiar to each other. While the "vision of all" the nations who would be in a drunken, staggering condition, with respect to the word of God already in their possession, would be on a par with the learned and unlearned men who could not read the sealed book, because they would be blind to the truth by reason of their drunken state.

If the coming forth of the Book of Mormon corresponds with the specifications of the prophecy it must be the book referred to.

LEARNED COULD NOT READ

The gold plates on which the Book of Mormon was written were delivered to Joseph Smith by an angel

He then said to me, "Let me see that certificate." I accordingly took it out of my pocket and gave it to him, when he took it and tore it to pieces, saying that there was no such thing now as ministering of angels, and that if I would bring the plates to him, he would translate them. I informed him that part of the plates were sealed, and that I was forbidden to bring them. He replied, "I cannot read a sealed book." I left him and went to Doctor Mitchil, who sanctioned what Professor Anthon had said respecting both the characters and the translation.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 19.

The prophecy says that the "words" of the book would be delivered to a "learned" man, who, when requested to read it, would say, "I cannot for it is sealed." The "words" of the book were delivered to Professor Anthon, a learned man, who said, "I cannot read a sealed book."

JOSEPH HAD THE BOOK

The "book" was to be delivered to an "unlearned" man. Joseph Smith was unlearned, as all his enemies delight to tell us. That he did have the book is supported by testimony other than his own, which has never been impeached.

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people unto whom this work shall come, that we, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites, their brethren, and also of the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken; and we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety, that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shown unto us by the power of God, and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates, and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bear record that these things are true; and it is marvelous in our eyes, nevertheless, the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God, we bear testimony of these things. And we know that if we are faithful in Christ, we shall rid our garments of the blood of all men, and be found spotless before the judgment seat of Christ, and shall dwell with him eternally in the heavens. And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen.

And also the testimony of eight witnesses.

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that Joseph Smith, jr., the translator of this work, has shown unto us the plates of which hath been spoken, which have the appearance of gold; and as many of the leaves as the said Smith has translated, we did handle with our hands: and we also saw the engravings thereon, all of which has the appearance of ancient work, and of curious workmanship. And this we bear record with words of soberness, that the said Smith has shown unto us, for we have seen and hefted, and know of a surety, that the said Smith has got the plates of which we have spoken. And we give our names unto the world, to witness unto the world that which we have seen; and we lie not, God bearing witness of it.

VISIT TO ANTHON ADMITTED

The fact that Martin Harris visited Professor Anthon, and submitted the "words" of the book to him, was admitted on at least two occasions afterward, once in a letter to E. D. Howe, of Painsville, Ohio, and once in a letter to an Episcopal minister, of New Rochelle, New York, in 1841. Though admitting the fact that he was visited by Mr. Harris, the professor tried to discredit the genuineness of the characters, calling them a "hoax." Describing the paper, he says:

This paper, in question, was in fact a singular scroll. It consisted of all kinds of crooked characters, disposed in columns, and had evidently been prepared by some person who had before him at the time a book containing various alphabets, Greek and Hebrew letters, crosses, and flourishes; Roman letters inverted or placed sideways, were arranged and placed in perpendicular columns; and the whole ended in a rude delineation of a circle, divided into various compartments, decked with various strange marks, and evidently copied after the Mexican calendar, given by Humboldt, but copied in such a way as not to betray the source from whence it was derived.—Church History, volume 1, pp. 21, 22.

We are interested in the events that occurred, not in Professor Anthon's opinion of the characters. With reference to the form and arrangement of the characters, his memory was defective, or he willingly misrepresented the facts, as the accompanying illustration of the characters show.

Of General Interest

TURNING TO RELIGION

The religious world has stood aghast at the European war. Men who have not believed in religion have stated everywhere and at all times that religion had failed; that so-called Christians were fighting each other; that even the pope could do no good. These things have been said, but the man who has visited the war zone has realized that men and women have been turning to the consolations of prayer as they have never done before.

There was a noted unbeliever in France—M. Lavedan—a brilliant journalist. The war has not made his unbelief stronger, but has converted him to a belief in God and a hereafter.

The United Presbyterian publishes from an authentic source the following statement from M. Lavedan: "I once laughed at faith and thought myself wise. But as I saw France bleeding and weeping, my laughter could not give me joy. I stood by the way and saw the soldiers as they went light-heartedly to face death. I asked, What is it that makes you so? I counted the sacrifices of our people and saw how they accepted them with praying hearts. . . . Who can hope, when everything is failing, save he who has faith in God? Oh!—I dare not name him (Jesus Christ). He was so good, and I . . .

"What would become of France, if her children did not believe, or her women did not pray? A vast people of the dead cover the field! How hard it is to be an atheist upon this national burying ground! I can't do it, I can't be one! I have deceived myself, and you who have read my books and sung my songs. I was mad. It has all been an awful dream! O France, France! Return to your faith and to your best days. To depart from God is to be lost.

"I know not whether I shall be alive to-morrow, but I must tell my friends Lavedan does not dare to die an atheist. It is not hell that makes me afraid, but this one thought grips me: God lives, and thou art so far from him! O! my soul, rejoice that thou art permitted to see the hour in which, kneeling, thou hast learnt to say, I believe, I believe in God, I believe."

The wives and mothers at home in all parts of stricken Europe believe more earnestly than ever that there is a God. They are on their knees several hours every day. They are on their knees in the churches and in the fields. The fact is that Europe had been growing cold toward religion. Some of the strong countries thought they could get along without God entirely, and this war has convinced them of their powerlessness.—Des Moines (Iowa) Capital, December 16, 1915.

The New Year

Another new year, a year of opportunity, with the word spelled in larger letters than ever before in the history of the world! What will it witness? Among the scenes of strife in foreign lands, will the dove of peace alight? Will the spirit of unrest which permeates the whole world vanish before the wonderful spirit of the Christ-child who came to show that the one eternal principle is love—love for fellow men, and love for God and his truth? Let us hope so; and let us resolve to do all in our power to hasten that much-to-be-desired end.

As Saints there is more responsibility upon us than many of us seem to realize. Too many of us seem to drift along with the world, and try to imitate it in every way which seems to promise pleasure or profit. But are we justified in such a course? What did God mean by saying he would have a pure, a peculiar people? He does not indulge in meaningless words, and thus he means that we must "Come out of her, my people!"

Let us give him a chance; let us help him show what he can do, when he has willing and obedient instruments through which to demonstrate his power. And when the close of this wonderful new year shall have come, we shall rejoice in the retrospect, and feel that we have been assistants in the great work of redemption, and have succeeded, in large measure, in working out a portion of our own salvation.

Personality in Music

A question that will obtrude itself upon our minds sometimes as we listen to the efforts of church choirs here and there, is: If humility, spirituality, self-effacement and consecration were considered as important in singers as in preachers, how much more effective in inducing reverential thought and mellowing the heart for the reception of the speaker's message might not the singing be?

"Just an ideal borrowed from the clouds," some one may say; "music is harmony of sound, and when you have ability that can produce harmony that is all there is to it, and the quality of the music differs only as the talent of the performers."

Apply the same reasoning to the man who stands behind the sacred desk, and argue that it is what he says, only, that influences his congregation—is that true? Is the question a material one, involving no more than an appeal to the mental or physical senses? For if we deny possibilities of personality, we can claim no more.

Years ago, when we knew less than the little we know now of the subtle psychic forces, we were appointed to read a paper before one of our general gatherings. We enjoyed ourself greatly in the writing, and felt quite satisfied and happy when we had finished. Some time later we read the paper to our mother, and we remember now our disappointment. The paper seemed flat, so different from when we were working upon it. We could not keep the tears back. We thought we could not read it. We were in despair. What was to be done?

Our mother wisely suggested that perhaps an influence had accompanied the writing of the paper that was not with us when we read it, and advised that we pray to have that influence again when we should have to give the paper before the convention. Efforts to improve the paper seemed in vain. We had simply done the best we could in the first writing, and we humbly implored the Lord to supplement us in the reading. When the time came our wish and our prayer were answered. We enjoyed ourself as we had in the first instance, and we had the additional pleasure of hearing expressions from others testifying to the hoped for effect.

A small thing may give us a far-reaching insight; and that lesson, first impressed then, and reaffirmed at different times since, has made us realize that we cannot afford to depend upon any degree of human attainment. Learning, logic, brilliance, may charm the mind, but are impotent to stir men's hearts and inspire their souls with the God-ward impulses that it is the design of all church singing and preaching to do.

In one of our districts years ago there was a brother who was a remarkable choir leader. The secret of his power was perhaps best expressed in a favorite quotation of his, "Sing with the Spirit and with the understanding." We have heard him say that many times. It was perhaps his guiding motif.

The townspeople used to flock to our little chapel to hear the singing under the direction of this man, and some declared that the singing was different from that heard in the other churches. The brother sang, himself, and was able to take any part, though he did not have an especially good voice. But he infused his choir with the spirit he had.

We have known an elder to come into the pulpit of that church feeling unable to fill his appointment. Then, as he watched the brother and listened to the song responses that he drew from the choir and the congregation, he would forget himself, lean forward, and by his heightening color we could tell that he was being inwardly warmed and stirred. When the time came for him to open his Bible he stepped briskly up to the stand. He had been put in spirit for the effort he had to make, and we used to hear sermons that matched the singing, and made us leave the church proud and happy to be a Saint in latter days.

That the power of this choir leader lay not in his natural ability was evidenced some years later when we met him again. He was not the same man. He was not the same leader. That influence that stirred you and thrilled you was gone. He was "tame" and ordinary. No one realized the change in him more than he did himself. He told us that he had become cool and indifferent in the gospel work, and the old-time spirit had left him. LOUISE PALFREY SHELDON.

Franz Liszt was more than a great musician; he was a great man. He would have been a great man had he never written a note or struck a chord, for his friends were legion, and he was an inspiration and a help to all who knew him. The words, "artistic temperament" fade away before his personality, and jealousy and hate have no place in his biography.

Born of an Hungarian father, an Austrian mother; educated wherever circumstances led him, in France, England, Germany, Italy,—he developed a personality as rich and deep in character, as it was broad in experience, and in the seventy-five years that he lived, stamped his genius indelibly on the history and course of nineteenth century music. He began as a performer, and his skill at the piano first won him notice, but he was born to greater things. He was born to create,—to give form to his own ideals and to inspire others to the same purpose.

Liszt, above all the masters of his generation, was a tone poet. His personality was the soul of vigor and intensity and his genius was the bodying forth of his own inward impressions. Music was a language in which he spoke to all who could hear and understand.

As a consequence, he was continually striving after new forms, and creating out of his own art, where he did not find expression ready to hand. Naturally his first compositions were for the piano. He knew that instrument as few others did, and he loved to work, extending its possibilities. The creations that came from his brain defied all but his hands, and for years his pieces for piano did not come into popularity because of their difficult technic. He was a prodigious worker, and the very number of his published compositions,—fully thirteen hundred,—attest his prolific genius. As he grew more mature and as his nature deepened, the piano could not give full expression to his thoughts and he turned his attention to the orchestra and voice. It was then that he began to write his Symphonic Poems, the worth of which has made his name immortal.

But Liszt the composer, great as he was, is less interesting than Liszt the man. Born in an age of great musicians, his personality dominated them all. He traveled in every country of Europe, and wherever he went musicians flocked to him. He was a kindly critic, and his words of appreciation bridged many an aspiring artist over the crisis of a hard beginning. Liszt, when but a little boy, had been received by Beethoven with kind regard and encouragement, and throughout his life he repaid the debt with interest. Brahms, ungrateful as he proved, got his first word of commendation from Liszt. Grieg, when a struggling young man, got a letter all unsolicited from the great Hungarian master. You can imagine his feelings when he read it, and can know what it meant in his development. Liszt writes: "I am very glad to tell you what pleasure it has given me to read your sonata (Op. 8.) It bears testimony to a talent of vigorous, reflective, and inventive composition of excellent quality, which has only to follow its natural bent in order to rise to a high rank. I am pleased to think that in your own country you are meeting with the success that you deserve; this will not be wanting elsewhere either; and if you can come to Germany this winter, I cordially invite you to spend a while at Weimar in order that we may thoroughly get to know each other." It was the beginning of Grieg's recognition in the world, and Liszt had his undying gratitude. Writing of it he says: "At times when disappointment and bitterness are in store for me, I shall recall his words, and the remembrance of them will have a wonderful power to uphold me in days of adversity."

Grieg did make a visit to Weimar and was carried away with enthusiasm. "I did not know what to admire in him most," he writes, "the composer or the pianist, for he played superbly. No, he does not really play, one forgets he is a musician,—he becomes a prophet proclaiming the last judgment, till all the spirits of the universe vibrate under his fingers. He enters into the most secret recesses of the mind, and stirs one's inmost soul with demonic power."

Nothing was too hard to undertake for his friends, and his own plans could always be deferred for theirs. Some of his best years were spent educating the people to an appreciation of Beethoven and Schubert. He gave concerts, wrote essays, and lectured, all to popularize the works of men whom he knew to be great, but beyond the public taste. His devotion to Wagner amounted to a passion. Wagner had married the daughter of Liszt, and the attachment of the two men was very close. Those were the days when Wagner was hated throughout Germany, and to sponsor him was to court the disfavor of those in authority. Yet Liszt saw the genius of the man and loved him so well that at one time he told him "the object of my whole life is to be worthy of your friendship." Wagner in return says that "this friendship was the weightiest and most important event in my life."

Though born a Hungarian, Liszt lived most of his life in Germany. After years of concert touring all over Europe, he settled down at Weimar, and with the brilliant Countess Carolyne de Sayn-Wittgenstein,—who gave him her love though she could not wed him,—he composed his best works. Weimar became a mecca for musicians, and literati, and Liszt gave freely to them all.

He was a deep reader and all of his songs and symphonies were based on poetry worthy of his efforts. His great symphonies, "Faust" and "Dante" indicate their source, and his "Symphonic Poem," his greatest work, was inspired by a poem which he heard Victor Hugo, himself, read.

In his Hungarian Rhapsodies, so widely known and popular, he shows his birth unmistakably, and the wild, dramatic, enchanting music is as a breath from the plains of Hungary.

Liszt late in life became deeply religious, and went so far in his devotion to the church as to take orders. He was known as Abbe Liszt, and contributed greatly to the sacred music of his time. His ideal was high, and to him, "the church composer is as a preacher and a priest, and where the Word is no longer sufficient to express the sentiment, music transfigured it, and lifts it aloft."

"No artist probably ever possessed so comprehensive an intelligence, or was so susceptible to the influence of the other arts. His emotional character, sincerity of feeling, ideality of thought, are vividly reflected in his works; while if the cry of human anguish can at times be heard in his music, if he proves himself emphatically the interpreter of the sorrow-stricken, the consoler of those who weep, he can also be light-hearted and gay, his strains can make the blood course through the veins, can conjure up mirth and gayety, and can dispel the clouds of melancholy as if by magic." A. E. MCKIM.

Stray Notes

Independence produced her regular thanksgiving concert, with the usual success, both financially and artistically. Choruses from Wagner, Verdi, Shubert, and other leading composers, were interspersed with solos, well chosen and pleasingly rendered. The choir was assisted by a group of beautiful piano numbers given by Sister Marie Riggs of Kansas City, in which Sister Riggs captivated her audience, this being the first time she had played for the Independence Saints since her study abroad.

One Sunday early in November all the churches in Kansas City gave musical programs consisting of numbers by American composers, according to a lively report which reached us. Our own Central Branch Choir was not behind the procession, and gave a fine program, with patriotism for its theme, as expressed in the realm of music. The Religion session previous was also devoted to music, and we are in receipt of a splendid paper which was read at the session, which we expect to give to our readers at some later date.

Our energetic assistant chorister, Brother E. C. Bell, of Saint Louis, "is right on the job," and is darting here and there among the church choirs, getting things well under way for the musical triumphs of next General Conference. He is making periodical visits to Independence and other large choirs of the church, and work is progressing most satisfactorily upon the oratorio choruses. Lest any forget, we will publish once again, the numbers which have been chosen from the "Messiah" for rendition at that time. They are as follows:

No.	Title	Page
4.	And the glory of the Lord.....	10
9.	O Thou that tellest good tidings	32
12.	For unto us a Child is born	46
17.	Glory to God	60
22.	Behold the Lamb of God	79
24.	Surely he hath borne our grief.....	87
26.	All we like sheep	95
33.	Lift up your heads	116
44.	Hallelujah	158
53.	Worthy is the Lamb	195

Brother Hoxie urges the purchase of uniform editions, that there shall be less trouble, about the paging, in understanding direction. He has made arrangements with his publishers, by which copies will be mailed postpaid for forty-five cents for single copies. Twelve or more will be forty cents each, transportation charges additional. To get this rate orders should be accompanied by money, and sent directly to Theodore Presser Company, Music Publishers, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 1712 Chestnut Street, and mention made of "The General Choir Movement Bulletin, number 1." I love thy church, O God;
 Her walls before thee stand,
 Dear as the apple of thine eye,
 And graven on thy hand.

Home and Child Welfare Department

FEBRUARY READING.—PREPARATION FOR ADOLESCENCE

"Don't spend time telling us what to do with little children. It is an easy matter to get along with them. Tell us what to do with the unruly big children who spoil the peace of the home and bid fair to go to destruction."

So wrote a father some years ago to the Home and Child Welfare reading committee.

Some of the ablest advisers in the land in regard to methods of dealing with children and young people are now offering suggestions as to how to meet the problems presented by wayward adolescents. American Motherhood is now publishing a series of articles on the subject by Professor William A. McKeever of the University of Kansas. We recommend that these articles be studied in connection with our present course of readings. The series began in September, 1914. In the Home and School department of The Mother's Magazine, conducted by Professor M. V. O'Shea of the University of Wisconsin a share of attention is given to matters relating to this trying period.

But these and other eminent writers, while they offer wise solutions for difficult problems and give hope to parents inclined to despair, still point backward to early opportunities which, had they been well employed, might have been the "ounce of prevention, worth a pound of cure."

In "Parents and their problems," writing of "Parents and their sons," Professor O'Shea tells of a boy who in his teens is disrespectful and disobedient to his parents, unkind to his sister, disinclined to study or to take life seriously, and who, by his attitude keeps the family in an unhappy state a good part of the time. The parents have established for themselves habits of application and faithfulness and have devoted their lives to serious interests. They feel that they have endeavored by precept and example to develop these qualities in their son. Inquiry concerning the early life of the boy showed he had been to a considerable extent under the care of nurses who had no knowledge of child nature and who felt no sense of responsibility for his future. The competency of a nurse "had been based largely upon her tact in avoiding conflicts with the boy, which simply meant that she had always to give in to him and serve him in his bullying. . . ."

"Here is seen one source of the present difficulty with the boy. He started out in life as a bully; and by the time his parents really began to take him in hand and to regard his actions as serious enough to claim their attention, he had practically got his attitude in respect to obedience, earnestness and the like. Most children acquire their general attitudes toward the people and institutions and customs about them by the time they are ten or twelve. Of course, these attitudes can be changed sometimes, but it requires constant conflict for a long period to break up original tendencies and establish new and different ones. But not one parent in ten, even if he takes control of his child before he is ten will go to work vigorously to uproot vicious habits and establish more useful ones. In the case of this boy, his meanness is due in considerable part to the constant nagging he has had from his parents the past few years; this has served to stir him up but not actually to change his habits; he has held to the course in which he got well started during his childhood.

GOVERNMENT BY HABIT

"The first habits which parents are to form in the training of their children are their own. If we wish to avoid, in later years, the necessity for resorting to government by spasm, and to establish instead, government by habit, we do not have to begin by experimenting on a helpless child. We can begin fortunately by experimenting on ourselves. . . . We all know how hard it is to break up a bad habit: fortunately it is just as difficult to break up a good one."—Ernest Hamlin Abbott.

In the work on adolescence entitled Youth, Doctor G. Stanley Hall shows the effect upon the child of early parental influence which by steadfast guidance and strengthening of the will produces within the child habits of thought and of action which will prove a stay in all coming life. The following quotation includes also an extract from Doctor Hall's views on the value of authority:

"The will, purpose, and even mood of small children when alone, are fickle, fluctuating, contradictory. Our very presence imposes one general law on them, viz, that of keeping our good will and avoiding our displeasure. As the plant grows towards the light so they unfold in the direction of our wishes, felt as by divination. They respect all you smile at, even buffonery; look up in their play to call your notice, to study the lines of your sympathy, as if their chief vocation was to learn your desires. . . . If we are careful to be wisely and without excess happy and affectionate when they are good, and saddened and slightly cooled in manifestations of love if they do wrong, the power of association in the normal child will early choose right as surely as pleasure increases vitality. If our love is deep, obedience is an instinct if not a religion. The child learns that while it cannot excite our fear, resentment or admiration, etc., it can act on our love, and this should be the first sense of its own efficiency. Thus, too, it learns that the way of passion and impulse is not the only rule of life and that something is gained by resisting them. It imitates our acts long before it can understand our words. . . . Its instinct for obedience becomes almost a passion. As the vine must twine or grovel, so the child . . . imitates bad patterns and examples in the absence of worthy ones. He obeys as with a deep sense of being our chattel, and, at bottom, admires those who coerce him, if the means be wisely chosen. The authority must of course, be in ascendancy over heart and mind. The more absolute such authority the more the will is saved from caprice and feels the power of steadiness. Such authority excites the unique, unfathomable sense of reverence, which measures the capacity for will-culture and is the strongest and soundest of all moral motives. . . . Happy the child who is bound by the mysterious and constraining sympathy of dependence, by which, if unblighted by cynicism, a worthy mentor directs and lifts the will. This unconscious reflection of our character and wishes is the diviner side of childhood, by which it is quick and responsive to everything in its moral environment. . . . His acts will not have been choices, but a mass of psychic causes far greater than consciousness can estimate have laid a basis of character, than which heredity alone is deeper, before the child knows he has a will. . . .

"A young child can know no general commands. . . . All is here and now, and patient reiteration, till habit is formed, and no havoc making rules which it cannot understand or remember, is our cue. Obedience can, however, be instinct even here, . . . and there is no more fear of weakening the will by it than in the case of soldiers. As the child grows older, however, and as the acts commanded are repugnant, or unusual, there should be increasing care, lest authority be compromised or sympathy ruptured. . . . We should, of course, watch for favorable moods, assume no unwonted or preternatural dignity or owl air of wisdom, and command in a low voice which does not too rudely break in upon the child's train of impressions. The acts we command or forbid should be very few at first but inexorable. We should be careful not to forbid where we cannot follow an untrusty child, or what we cannot prevent. Our own will should be a rock and not a wave. Our requirements should be uniform, with no whim, mood, or periodicity of any sort about them. If we alternate from caresses to severity, are fickle and capricious instead of commanding by a fixed and settled plan, if we only now and then take the child in hand, so he does not know precisely what to expect, we really require the child to change its nature with every change in us. . . . Such a changeful authority not only unsettles but breaks up character anew when it is just at the beginning of the formative period. Neglect is better than this. . . .

"The young are apt to be most sincere at an age when they are also most mistaken, but if sincerity be kept at its deepest and best, error will be least harmful and easiest overcome. If authority supplement rather than supersede good motives, the child will so love authority as to overcome your reluctance to apply it directly, and as a final result will choose the state and act you have pre-formed in its slowly widening margin of freedom, and will be all the less liable to undue subservience . . . later, as obedience gives place to normal manly independence.

"In these and many other ways everything in conduct should be mechanized as early and completely as possible. . . . If good acts are a diet and not a medicine, are repeated over and over again, as every new beat of the loom pounds in one new thread, and a sense of justice and right is wrought into the very nerve cells and fibers; if this ground texture of the soul, . . . this sphere of thoughts we oftenest think and acts we oftenest do, is early, rightly wrought, not only does it become a web of destiny for us, so all-determining is it, but we have something perdurable to fall back on if moral shock or crisis or change or calamity shall have rudely broken up the whole structure of later associations. . . .

"It is only so far as this primitive will is wrong by nature or training, that drastic reconstructions of any sort are needed. . . . The will especially is a trust we are to administer for the child, not as he may now wish, but as he will wish when more mature. We must now compel what he will later wish to compel himself to do. To find his habits already formed to the same law that his mature will and the world later enjoin, cements the strongest of all bonds between mentor and child."

From W. H. Spence we quote, "The center for attack in the training of children is the will. All that happens in the home and all that is done for him must yield him a dividend of will power. Discipline, guidance, influence, must play upon the will or the child's life problem becomes an unsolved enigma."

"NURTURING THE INNER LIFE"

Under this heading Mrs. Elizabeth Harrison is quoted in Parents and Their Problems as follows:

"I have seen a nursery maid force a six months' baby into his baby carriage and tuck the carriage blanket so closely around him that his legs and arms could not assist in expressing the awakened wrath and indignation within him, until his face grew purple and his eyes had an expression of murder in them. I moved to one side so as to see the face of the nurse. It was angry and flushed also.

"Again I have seen the same preparation for the home going made so lovingly and gently, with bright, cheery words which the baby could not understand, but the tones of which awakened the corresponding mood within him, until he crowed with delight as the blanket was tucked around him.

"In each case the child was unconsciously absorbing the mood of the older person, and this absorbing of mental conditions comes before the actual imitating of physical activities. It thus indicates the importance of having the right person to take care of early infancy. . . . She must have a true mother heart if the inner life of feelings, instinct, impulses and emotions are to be guarded and developed as well as the body. They are dim and helpless, but they are there, and many a child has been made willful and selfish by the mistreatment of them. In early infancy the tone of a voice may jar or sooth this tender inner self fully as much as rough or gentle handling can arouse physical pain or pleasure.

"As the child grows older this instinctive absorbing of the moods of people around him soon develops into the imitating of their gestures and tones. This in turn very soon passes into the effort to imitate the activities of those around. . . . Their young minds are more responsive than the most sensitive photographic films. Yet each impression made is awakening and feeding some instinct, or impulse, or desire, which is helping to make or mar the serene inner life which ought to be the heritage of every child.

"I do not mean by this that every word and deed should be guarded when in the presence of a child, but I want to emphasize the importance of keeping children in surroundings that are wholesome, and with people who are sympathetic without being weak or sentimental. In other words, the child absorbs the spiritual atmosphere of the home and is fully as much affected by it as his body is affected by the fresh air of his physical environment. He absorbs the one as surely as he breathes in the other. . . . In the light of this psychological insight, what shall I say about homes in which the child is permitted to hear the jars and jangles that sometimes come between parents, or between mistress and servant?

"Blows upon the child's tender flesh are less marring. In time bruised flesh will heal. But who shall say when will be wiped out the effects of evil emotions such as suspicion, jealousy, rage, when once aroused? They not only poison the blood, but they poison the impulses which should reach out from the inmost depths of a child's being toward fellowship with and love of all mankind."

FOR ADDITIONAL STUDY

Talks to Teachers on Psychology by William James is recommended as containing valuable information on habits; also the two chapters on "Habit formation" and "Habit breaking" in the book entitled Habit Formation by Stuart H. Rowe. Additional light on the cultivation of the will may be found in any good textbook on psychology. The subject, "Preparation for adolescence," will be continued in our next reading.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are requested for a sister at Allendale, Missouri. This sister is eighty-five years old, and it seems that she has only a short time to remain upon the earth. She desires to be released. Sister Hunt of this place, desires prayers also. She will be eighty-five years old in March. These aged sisters should be remembered.

Prayers are desired for a brother who is sorely afflicted, that he may recover and see wherein he is wrong, and yet live the life of a Saint. The daughter of this man asks for strength that she may bear up under trial, and for her brothers, that they may accept the gospel.

Letter Department

SOUTH BRISBANE, AUSTRALIA, November 25, 1915.

Editors Herald: I recently had the pleasure of meeting the servant of the Lord, Apostle Paul M. Hanson, and had a most enjoyable time. Surely we can say, as one of old, The Lord has been mindful of us.

We have a knowledge that God hears our prayers, for he answers to our asking. We should be a happy and thankful people for all our knowledge of the Lord's ways. Truly the Lord is righteous and his path is straight. The fruit of the Holy Spirit is the best food for us to feed on. If we will continue to take to ourselves the same we will grow to perfection, then will we be like our Master.

My prayer for all is that the Lord will bless them. I pray for the leading quorums of the church, for all the priesthood, and the people.

Yours in the gospel,

R. C. SCHULZE.

BOISE, IDAHO, December 1, 1915.

Editors Herald: I take a great deal of interest in reading the HERALD, and especially the articles and letters from different members, brothers and sisters in different parts of the world. I am interested in the progress of God's kingdom. My love goes out to those who are striving to do the will of our Lord and Savior. The time will soon come when we must answer for the life we now lead and the example we set before others.

I have read with much interest the different and varied opinions expressed in the HERALD and Ensign with reference to the Word of Wisdom, as well as by different members from time to time in conversation and otherwise.

It seems to me the Word of Wisdom as we find it in the Doctrine and Covenants as given by the Lord, is plain and easy to understand. The Lord did not give it to be interpreted according as our appetites might suggest, but for our benefit. If we care to have God's advice, we must first exercise faith in him, and learn that he labors for our great good because he loves us. Why not trust him then, all the way, for our temporal as well as our spiritual salvation?

The Word of Wisdom was not given by way of commandment or constraint, but by revelation, setting forth the order and will of God unto our temporal salvation of Saints in the last days; given for a principle with promise, etc., if we do his will.

One controversy is over the fruit question. Should we can fruit? Verse two gives us to understand that all wholesome herbs God has ordained for the use of man, every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof. Let us consider what is meant by season thereof. Is fruit in season the year around, if preserved by confinement in cans or otherwise? If so, when does the season thereof come in? Saints as well as worldly people know how to preserve fruits.

Now in the first place God does not tell us that we should or should not can fruit, so I do not think it matters to the Lord whether fruit is put into cans, jars, or any other utensils, so long as we use it, or in other words, eat it in season thereof; and I believe fruit to be in season just as long as it will keep with care in its natural state.

For example, potatoes have to be kept in cellars and kept out of the sun, cold, etc. They are in season yet not canned, because they are in their natural state. In this same way other vegetables are kept; but strawberries, cherries and other berries—the season thereof is short. For that reason the Lord has ordained the different fruits and berries all in their season, each in its turn and time, when needed and required by the system—heavy fruits in winter, and lighter fruits in summer.

I do not think it is necessary for people in colder climates to store up fruits and berries in a preserved or confined state for winter use. God knows our needs and wants and will provide us with every needful thing if we trust him for all, and seek to do his will with a heart sincere.

The Lord said that flesh of beasts and fowls had been ordained for the use of men with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they should be used sparingly, and it is displeasing if they are used only in time of winter or cold or famine.

Is this meant just for some of us because we may think that our systems require meat, because we are not all constituted alike? God does not say some may eat meat and some may not. He says it is pleasing to him if we do as he says, and which thing is intended for the weak and the weakest of all Saints.

Dear Saints, let us be one in theory, principle, and in doctrine. Let us unite in serving the Lord. In so doing we will bring to ourselves the greatest amount of good.

Your brother in Christ,

Route 2, Box 15.

News from Missions

At the Exposition

We wish to relate some of the closing scenes at the exposition, and the interest shown by many who stopped at our exhibit. We had not anticipated the great throngs of people who came the last two weeks of the fair, but rather had been told that possibly few would visit the grounds towards the close. As a consequence our literature became scarce, which fact we greatly regretted, but we made the most of our opportunity in explaining the gospel, and giving the tracts to those who seemed most eager to learn of the work.

The weather was ideal during almost the entire time we spent in San Francisco, for we had but few rainy days, and even then the people seemed to attend just the same; and at such times we were more busy than ever in talking the gospel, for it was more pleasant for the majority to be inside than out, and thus we had splendid opportunities for work.

Many who had formerly visited with us and become interested, came often towards the close for any new literature we might have, and seemed most anxious to hear and learn all they could in the few remaining days.

One lady who had talked with us several times, and had admitted it seemed the right way, called one afternoon, and while we were occupied with others made herself useful by explaining the gospel to others who came along, and whom we had not had a chance to reach, and she seemed very enthusiastic. Another lady, a member of the Mormon Church, came several times, and we had nice talks together. As I explained the many ways in which they had departed from the truth, she admitted it was only too true. She became very much interested. I read many writings from their own books to her.

She said when bidding us good-by that she would like to tell us of a great trial she was passing through. She informed us that a relative was in the hospital, having undergone an operation, and was recovering nicely, when a couple of the Mormon elders called and informed the patient that her husband was living with another wife, and immediately she lost her mind, and is now insane. We told her this alone should prove to her how some have departed from the truth in the latter days, and have given heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. She said we would hear from her later.

Several infidels called at different times. One was rather a learned Hebrew. While I conversed with him, many stopped to listen. Not being able to satisfy him as to many points, and Elder Pitt being otherwise engaged, I was wishing that Brother Rushton were present (knowing he was at the exposition that day), when to my pleasure he came. Listening long enough to hear the gentleman make some erroneous statements, he spoke and said, I beg your pardon, sir, but you did not quote that correctly, and he showed the gentleman wherein he was wrong. The number listening to the conversation was about twenty-five. Many asked me who the new arrival was, and said he is the best they ever heard. I replied, He is one of our apostles, for we do not only believe in dead ones, but that we should have living ones to-day also.

The gentleman in question, after the conversation of half an hour or more, acknowledged his mistaken ideas, shook hands very warmly with Brother Rushton, and said he was indeed pleased to have met him. Many of the callers remained longer, hoping to hear further from Brother Rushton. We greatly regret that conditions were such that he could not have occupied in one of the theaters at the exposition, where he could have presented the gospel to thousands, as speakers from some other denominations were able to do.

A lady called one afternoon. As she finished reading some of the display cards I spoke and said, This is the Reorganized Church, etc., and explained all to her as best I could in a short time, thinking she might be in a hurry. After I finished and asked her if she would take some literature she said, I want to tell you that I came to the exposition to-day simply to call at this exhibit and have your work explained to me. I had never heard of any Latter Day Saints except those known as Mormons. Yesterday I passed through here and saw the picture of Joseph Smith, and as I went into the Theosophy Booth over there, I remarked how surprised I was that the Mormons were allowed to exhibit here, and the lady in charge of the Theosophy said, Those people over there are not the Mormons, they have a beautiful gospel, and the Joseph Smith who was their president is not the polygamist, Joseph F. Smith of Utah. She said, You go over there and they will tell you all about it. Our new friend said, That is the reason I am here now, for I felt I must come and hear what you believe and teach.

After this information I went into details as best I could. I read to her the court decisions, and from the Book of Mormon where it says no man should have more than one wife, and that any other teaching is an abomination in God's sight, and many other statements proving to her there are really two different churches of Latter Day Saints. She seemed very happy and said it sounded the best to her of anything she had heard. She was glad indeed she came to investigate. She has the church address in many cities, and we hope to hear of her later.

Almost without an exception, when people have heard the gospel in its purity they remarked, Well, why in the world do you not change your name; it will never do any good, and many such remarks.

There are so many really wonderful experiences one could relate, but I do not wish my letter to be too long, so will only state that while we were busy all the time and tried to do faithfully our part, yet we regret we could not have accomplished more. Time alone will tell what good may result from the efforts made.

The exposition was grand! Will not attempt to describe it. Will leave that for others more gifted than I. Suffice it to say that the grounds were beautiful; the buildings very artistic; the exhibits nicely arranged; the music rendered by the several bands inspiring; the weather ideal; the people good natured as a whole; the several nights' illumination and fireworks wonderful; the aeroplane flights by Niles, and Art Smith very exciting, especially when the latter would make dips or complete somersaults, descending in spiral and give fireworks display at a great height.

The day before the close of the exposition was one of the rainy days mentioned, and all were feeling blue, for so many wonderful things were in store for the closing day, if it were a pleasant one. Much to the surprise of almost all, the closing day dawned beautiful, warm and bright. As the sun shone in all its glory, the grounds everywhere seemed to take on a new beauty. The bands were playing in almost all the courts, and all seemed to be happy, yet there was a tinge of sadness manifested, for this was the closing day of the great exposition, and the farewells would soon be said to those who had endeared themselves to others.

Our little exhibit even seemed to appeal to us in a new way, for no longer would we have the privilege of standing there and explaining the gospel to many people. We felt very sad as the closing time came, and the books were put away for the last time, and the last good-by was said to the friends, and to our little exhibit. As we left the building we could only feel to ask the Lord to bless the humble efforts made in behalf of his cause.

The crowd continued to gather during the day, and as evening approached there were more than four hundred and sixteen thousand present for the closing scene. There were all sorts of attractions, some of which attracted the majority to the Marina, where the fireworks and special attractions were to be held. Unfortunately we were in the midst of the crowd before we realized it, and as we became separated and were jostled and pushed back and forth, I there and then resolved never again to get into a crowd. While we escaped injury, many had limbs broken, and others fainted.

At 11.30 the aeroplane flight, illuminated, took place, and at midnight the lights faded away. The majestic and beautiful Tower of Jewels which had sparkled and shone like diamonds during the daytime, became more beautiful as played upon by the many searchlights. As all eyes were turned upon it for the last farewell, the lights gradually diminished and darkness came, and then we realized the exposition was a thing of the past, but would not be forgotten.

After spending a few days at the summer home of Doctor and Sister Bush, among the pretty hills a short distance from Berkeley, and also several days at the pleasant home of Brother and Sister George Taylor of the same city, we bade the Saints of Oakland farewell for a short time and came to Sacramento, where we are very comfortably located at the home of Brother and Sister Ball. We are enjoying the stay here. Meetings are now in progress, and we are hoping for success in our work. Brother Brooner who is in charge here had arranged a very nice program for Christmas. The children all did well, and at the close of that part of it Elder Pitt gave the Jerusalem views. All seemed well pleased with the evening's entertainment.

We like this city very much, and can say it is one of the cleanest we have ever been in. The streets are wide and clean, and the houses are very pleasing in their architecture. The Saints have a nice church in a nice location, and we hope with their united efforts that good may be accomplished. We are both well, and after our pleasant rest of a few days we are prepared for work again.

We had a very pleasant and happy Christmas, having a fine turkey dinner—cranberry sauce, pumpkin pie, and all the other good things, with Brother and Sister Ball. And with good news and presents from loved ones, we spent a Christmas that shall long be remembered.

New Year's Day had a wonderful surprise for the people of Sacramento, as well as for those of others cities of California; for when we awoke and looked out behold, to my delight at least, we saw the beautiful snow. The ground was white, and I was soon out in it; for while some may prefer the roses in bloom in the yard at Christmas time, I confess my preference for the snowstorm. We snowballed and had a merry time the short time it remained with us.

Wishing all the Herald readers a happy New Year, in which Elder Pitt joins, I am,

Yours in the gospel,

ROSA PARKS PITT.

Eastern Iowa

This has been a fairly successful year for the Eastern Iowa District, not only in the number who have been added to the church by baptism, but also in the spiritual growth of the membership. The General Conference gave the district three missionaries, Brethren E. Rannie, E. B. Morgan, and the writer constituting that force. It was thought best by the missionary in charge, Elder J. A. Gillen, to have Brother Rannie look after the branches, so he recommended that he be placed in the office of district president, which was done. Brother Morgan has also labored among the Saints. It is to be hoped the labors of these brethren have resulted and will result in good throughout the district.

The writer has tried to occupy in new openings so far as possible, and has succeeded in getting the gospel before many who never had heard it before. We had the privilege to be associated with Brother E. E. Long in a series of meetings in the Union church east of Olwein. I found him a most excellent colaborer, and only wished I might continue my labors with him. Conditions became such, however, that it was necessary for us to separate and labor in different fields.

At the above place four were baptized and others have manifested a desire to unite with the church in the near future. It was through the kindness of Brother Fred S. Clark that we were enabled to hold these meetings. He gave us the use of his auto, which made it possible for us to drive to our appointment. The Olwein Branch also assisted materially in helping us financially. If all our people would put their cars to as good use as did Brother Clark, the gospel would soon be carried to many people who now have not the opportunity of hearing it.

At this place there was considerable opposition manifested. The Christian people had several members in the locality and theirs was the only church holding regular services. A deacon and his wife became interested, and finally the wife came into the church, also another of their members. This aroused their antagonism, so they decided to expose Mormonism. One of their preachers by the name of Chambers, opened up a tirade of opposition, and continued his effort each evening for nearly two weeks. At the conclusion of his effort, I announced a reply. Each family in the neighborhood was notified by mail of the event, so a large crowd was present to hear our defense.

During the eleven years which I have spent in the mission field I do not think I ever witnessed as great a display of ignorance and hatred towards the truth as I did on the part of the members of the Christian Church on this occasion. One of their elders conducted himself in such an ungentlemanly way that even a brother-in-law, not a member of any church, rebuked him for his unchristianlike conduct. One woman who had been very active in telling all manner of falsehoods against us, made a very ugly remark, indicating her hatred, not only for the truth, but against those who would dare expose the trickery of the opposed side. However, many friends were made to our cause, and the Campbellites were sadder but wiser as a result of their experience.

We held a series of meetings in the Esgate Schoolhouse near Fulton. The Saints of that branch gave excellent support, and some of the people seem to be interested.

Through the kindness of Brother William Stoll, who extended an invitation to the missionary to accompany him to Lamoni, I was permitted to visit home, Brother Stoll paying all the expenses. On our return we stopped in the old historic city of Nauvoo and enjoyed the sights for a few hours.

It always seems like a funeral to the writer when in that place, viewing as a traveler does, the ruins of a once populous city. Many of the houses still stand, but the history of some of the former occupants of them only serve to bring shame and disgrace on the name of the church.

Recently I held a series of meetings in that district, which will result in good. These meetings were held near Salem, in a community where the gospel had never before been preached. Through the kindness of a Mr. E. W. Elliott, who was willing to lend assistance in providing for the preacher, I was enabled to preach in the schoolhouse. The Quakers or Friends offered some opposition, but so far they have not succeeded in materially affecting our work. One was baptized, the wife of Mr. Elliott.

I also visited Burlington, and found a real live band of workers there. Brother D. J. Williams has proven his worth to these Saints as their pastor. His wife is also a good helper, indeed.

It is impossible to mention all the good loyal workers we have in the Eastern Iowa District, but suffice it to say, many are making sacrifice to help their fellow men. If all the Saints would stand shoulder to shoulder in this great work, soon Zion would be redeemed and the pure in heart gathered out.

The year just past has been one of interest to me. We can see a great need of men who are willing to sacrifice their lives in the desire to further the interests of the work. We hope the time will soon come when young men will qualify themselves so that they may become useful to the church.

With best wishes, I am,

In gospel bonds,

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

News from Branches

Central Chicago

On January 5 at the semiannual business meeting with a good attendance present, Brother H. P. Keir spoke of the past six months' work. He had felt blessed and encouraged, and was more than ever desirous of pressing steadily onward toward the goal. He had been aided valiantly by the other officers, as well as members of the branch. He felt that the work was in a splendid condition spiritually, and in a good condition financially. The debt is gradually being wiped out. Brother Keir spoke encouragingly of the band known as The Gleaners, who have zealously stood by the work and aided in the money matters.

Brother H. P. W. Keir was elected president of the branch. The business meeting was a good one; the spirit of kindness was present.

On January 9 the Saints were greatly edified and encouraged to press onward by a good sermon by Brother J. D. Stead, of Lamoni, Iowa, from Deuteronomy 18. He spoke at length of the prophet that Moses said should be raised up to lead the people, and showed plainly that that prophet was Christ the Savior of the world. Come again, Brother Stead.

Plans are arranged for our district conference to convene January 21 to 23 at the West Side Church, on Gladys Avenue, near Forty-fourth Street. We are all looking forward to a feast of fat things. We hope to see a good crowd.

May God bless those who attend the work everywhere.

Your sister in the faith,

L. M. HORTON.

Independence, Missouri

The first snow of winter fell on December 24, and on the following morning there was a scurrying on the streets, of young people with baskets laden with good things coming as a Christmas treat, for somebody, from the Mount Zion Sunday School.

It was a beautiful day, clear and frosty. The big entertainment at the Stone Church with its wise men and the shepherds with their crooks attracted crowds from every direction, and the Saints became too weary to turn out the next morning for early prayer meeting, at which there appeared on time only twenty souls.

Elder J. R. Lambert preached to edification, and the Saints listened at the afternoon service to the elders who had come home to spend the holidays,—Brother H. O. Smith for the first time in nine years, and Brother T. C. Kelley, the second time in eighteen years. Long journeys and few physical comforts had been the lot of Brother Okerlind, who four years ago was at home on Christmas. Brother Rannie's life out in the wide world had been unique, for he couldn't report favorably at every turn of the road, but he said, with a glint of sunshine in his face, "I got into office."

Frequently the mind reverts to the isolated ones who have but a faint idea of the strenuous work going on in the larger branches, and of the army that is being rallied for the Master's service. At this place the election of officers is well under way. The worthy pioneers are vacating their places, and all have filled a venerated niche in our memories. A few Sundays ago the children called to remembrance the kindly ministry among them of their prophet, as well as ours, not long since passed away, and as a loving tribute in the school hour, sang some of his loved hymns,—"Tenderly, tenderly," "Father, when in love to thee," and others. The grown-ups also call to mind, at this season of the year, some of the mothers in Israel, who, but a short time ago, graced their peaceful homes in Zion with their gentle presence, and have now gone to rest.

We remember Sister Amanda Butler, whose son-in-law and daughter, Mrs. T. J. Smith, cared for her in her later years, and who gave not long since through the columns of the Herald, an interesting account of her hardships and sacrifices for the work's sake.

Another pioneer, Sister Susan Strickland, kindly watched over by her companion and daughter, Mrs. B. Shirk, a church worker at Enoch Hill, has recently died. She was one of the few who was favored to be present at the Amboy Conference, when Brother Joseph took his seat at the head of the Reorganization.

Blessed is their memory, and that of all the noble defenders of the faith, now peacefully gone before.

Our visitors lately have been Elders Christy, Grant, Elvin, Cochran, and J. C. Crabb, who preached a grand sermon Sunday morning, January 9, meeting in charge of President F. M. Smith.

MRS. ABBIE HORTON.

WINTERS.—Mads L. Winters, born in Dungsted, Denmark, October 6, 1823; died January 8, 1916. Married Anna Madison, Sister of Brother Olla Madison, now deceased. Came to America in 1860, and settled in Utah. Removed to Atchison County, Missouri, in the fall of 1866, later to Nodaway County, Missouri, where he resided until death. His wife preceded him nearly 8 years. Eight children were born to them, 3 having preceded him. Baptized January 24, 1866, by C. Christensen, later ordained an elder. Brother Winters's physical condition was such that he could not get out much for several years, but he found comfort in the standard books and the SAINTS' HERALD. Services at the home of his son, John; W. B. Torrance in charge, sermon by Arch E. McCord.

DILLIVAN.—Walter Dillivan, born in Trumbull County, Ohio, March 10, 1829; died at Deloit, Iowa, November 12, 1915. Married Martha Kelley in 1854. To them were born 5 children, Elizabeth J. Nowles, Aaron M., and Sarah Myers, living; Margaret Cole, deceased one year ago, Samuel, 25 years ago. His wife died November 27, 1862. Married Sarah Ford, March, 1864. To them were born 5 children, Harriet, wife of W. W. Myers, of Lamoni, Iowa; Minnie Richmond, Lucy Case, and Clark, who, with his companion, remain at home; Wallis, deceased at 18 months. Brother Dillivan was an elder and firm in the faith; an earnest worker for his Master and the church. Services in Deloit, in charge of C. J. Hunt, sermon by D. R. Chambers.

DAWSON.—Irwin Quincy Dawson, born May 18, 1872, Columbus Junction, Iowa; died January 5, 1916, Independence, Iowa. Married Minnie Beasley, March 10, 1896. To them were born 2 daughters, Reva and Opal, who, with the mother, survive. Deceased leaves also mother, 2 brothers. Baptized by Elder Turner in 1903. Lived near Viola, Iowa, about 33 years. Services at the home by John Heide. Interment in Perkins Cemetery.

STOREY.—Lynn M., second son of Elder O. H. and Jennie Storey, born in Fremont Township, Indiana, March 26, 1886, where he spent his entire life; died after several weeks' illness, at Fremont Hospital, December 8, 1915. Married Louisa B. Hunter at her home in Leoni, Michigan, October 5, 1914, after which he settled on his little farm near his parents. Lynn was a most dutiful boy, always looking to the best interests of others, and especially a great friend and companion of his mother. He also proved a kind and loving husband. Leaves wife, father, mother, brother, sister, other relatives, and a host of friends. An honorable, noble boy has gone. Services at the Saints' chapel, Clearlake; sermon by G. A. Smith, assisted by William Shaub. Interment in Teeters Cemetery.

Book Reviews

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.—E. Lawrence Dudley. Macmillan Company, New York City. 50 cents. This book is one of the series of "True Stories of Great Americans," published by the Macmillan Company. This series aims to get away from the dry text of biography. It is an attempt to describe as interestingly, forcibly, and vividly as the subject matter deserves, the eventful lives of the great men who helped to shape American history. The volumes have been written in each case with a child's point of view in mind, and those facts have been emphasized which are calculated to appeal to the young readers and assist them in the formation of characters. This particular volume, devoted to the life of the many-sided, world-famed American, Benjamin Franklin, should receive a wide reading among children.

A HISTORY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE SINCE 1870.—Fred Lewis Pattee, Prof. of English Language and Literature in Pennsylvania State College. Century Company. $2. An interesting study of that eventful period in American literature following the Civil War, covering the growth of our literature during the past forty years, during which time such national figures were developed as Mark Twain, Bret Harte, Walt Whitman, William Dean Howells, John Muir, Burroughs, James, Mary E. Wilkins, Eugene Fields, and many others. The period covered in this volume has been designated by one writer as the greatest in our literary history.

MARVELS OF OUR BODILY DWELLING.—Mrs. Mary Wood-Allen, M. D., with Introduction by Sylvanus Stall, D. D. Cloth. Illustrated cover. 328 pages. $1.20, net. Vir Publishing Company, Fifteenth and Race Streets, Philadelphia. This is a wonder-tale about this marvelous body of ours. It is a beautiful building, more exquisitely appointed than any structure of man's creation. Not only a dwelling, but a wonderful workshop wherein are done wonderful things—a laboratory where many marvelous processes are carried on; a manufactory where worn-out materials are destroyed and new substances created; a structure embodying wonders of mechanism and skill of engineering. There are rooms in this wonder-house of ours where work is carried on which even our great physiologists have not yet come to understand. There are some few rooms which are as mysterious as those to which Bluebeard gave Fatima the key. The brain cells are electric batteries, and the nerves are the telegraph wires. One of the special watchmen is the pink sentinel—the tongue, standing at the entrance of the reception room. And the force-pipe, the heart that keeps on throbbing away, doesn't seem to ever rest. But yes, it rests between beats; it makes a stroke and then rests. Science has made such accurate calculation that we now know that the heart rests five eighths of the time, which makes about fifteen hours in every twenty-four. All these wonders are told in a charming way by a very gifted authority, who knew that study and obedience of the laws of physiology will insure that sound body which is the beautiful dwelling place of a sound mind. This book will make an ideal gift for the young of both sexes, and even those of adult age will appreciate the marvelous information which it contains.

Something New For Latter Day Saints

A professional writer, and member of our church, whose pen-name is "John Preston," has written a play, called—

"The Pleasures of the World"

This is something new in the way of church literature, and will give many a branch the vehicle for legitimately entertaining its young and also raising funds for special purposes, that it desires.

No Religious People will appreciate this play as will our people. It is a frank discussion of

from all sides; and not a "sermon." It is because we believe in the originality and thought-progressiveness of Latter Day Saints that we are offering it for sale and presentation.

This Comedy-Drama

does not pretend to solve the "pleasure question": it merely presents the various phases of it—frankly—illuminatingly—humorously. The idea was taken from a sermon.

Several Large Branches have already made arrangements to produce this play and are very enthusiastic over it.

The Holiday Season is a good time to produce it. And it is because there is only one "setting," which any stage or platform will accommodate. The scene is the interior of an ordinary living room. There are six men and six women characters. It takes 2 hours to present the 3 acts.

Between 60 and 75 pages

Per copy, 25c, postpaid

Nobody but Latter Day Saints will know this book IS Latter Day Saint. Yet the public will wonder whence comes the spirit of it.

Not a book for lazy readers or nonthinkers.

Vital characters (many known to you), a strong plot, and a love story and life-story that will grip you.

Young men and young women, especially, should get this book—and hand it out to their friends.

You will be proud of it as a literary production. Your most critical friends outside the church will read it in spite of themselves.

Every important branch of industry of to-day has its trade journal. The progressive business man must keep pace with the progress in his line.

Every Latter Day Saint should have access to the official publication of the church. The times demand that every member of the church be informed of the various movements of the church.

The building of the kingdom of God is the all-important task of the church to-day. We shall only be wise builders as we know the needs of the body.

The SAINTS' HERALD goes to the people laden with the best that can be secured by the writers of the church. There is doctrine and news and information. Various special departments cater to special needs, such as the musical, Sunday school, Woman's Auxiliary.

Occasionally we issue special magazine numbers, with a number of good illustrations and articles on special subjects, but every week there is something for the thoughtful reader.

It will be a real loss if you do not have the SAINTS' HERALD the coming year. Subscribe now.

PRESIDENT SMITH'S LIFE PLEA

He being dead yet speaketh.—Hebrews 11: 4.

[HERALD readers are fortunate in receiving the following synopsis of a sermon by President Joseph Smith, of beloved memory. The sermon was preached at Park's Mill, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, October 6, 1866. Elder Charles Derry, one of the congregation in attendance, estimated at three thousand, was strongly impressed with the effort, and prepared this synopsis at the time. He finds it at this late date among other papers, and sends it to us for publication. This address is of value in that it sets forth that even at this early date President Smith evidenced the deep conviction and the firm hold on the conditions of the times and the church which made his administration a power in leading men to Christ and the law, and in instilling within the hearts of his fellows a great desire for the worthiness and virtue which will finally achieve for the people of God all that has been promised for this dispensation. President Smith calls attention to Christ as our unerring leader; to the necessity of faith with works, exercised and performed in righteous living; to the necessity of fidelity in even the smaller things of life, the whole to be tempered with wisdom. He presents a strong plea for education in the true sense, that the ministry and the church might move into that degree of preparation that will make possible the Zion of God. And finally, as was characteristic of the man, he applies to himself the same rules he urges for others. Our appreciation of this effort of President Smith and of his life and ministry can be no better expressed than in the words of Brother Derry: "I was deeply impressed that it was delivered under the inspiration of God. I felt its power and truth, then, and when I found it among my papers I felt its truths were as practical to-day as they were when uttered. These words show that the spirit which actuated President Smith at that early day was with him in all his long and useful life."—EDITORS.]

Elder Smith addressed the assembly from the 67th verse of the 6th chapter of the Gospel of John, "Will ye also go away?" He said:

I do not know that I shall be able to present this matter as I see it, but if I have your prayers I may be enabled to present it so that you can arrive at a proper understanding of it.

Many people who had heard the testimony of John had become followers of Jesus, and had been witnesses of the miracles that he did. They had eaten of the loaves and fishes; and it was this latter privilege that had led many to continue to follow. But when he told them that he was the bread of life sent down from heaven, they said, "This is a hard saying, who can hear it?" When he gave them to understand that the Son of Man should ascend up to heaven where he was before, then many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him.

Then he turned to the chosen Twelve and addressed them in the language of our text, "Will ye also go away?" The multitude began to marvel at his sayings, and to ask, "Are all these things to come to naught? and not be fulfilled? Are all our glorious expectations to be cut off?" Who are they, and where are those thousands of followers? They have gone back disappointed, as many do now. Only a devoted few remained, and well might he ask them, "Will ye also go away?"

He does not ask this question in pomposity, or in power, but in meekness and humility; with no desire to exercise any power of his own, but to carry out the purpose of his Father and his God. He asks the question as you or I ought to ask one of our brethren when we see him turning from the pure gospel of the kingdom. He asks us the same question, "Will ye also go away?" And we should be prepared to answer it in the language of the apostles, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

They answered as they were led by the power of the Holy Ghost, that had given them power to know he was the Son of God and had the words of eternal life. Hence they might well ask, "To whom shall we go?"

Some say, "It matters not about following Christ now. We can run faster than others, and we can soon overtake the rest of the Saints. We will wait and take our time and come in at the eleventh hour."

This appears to be the case with many in the church now. It is evident there is not that faith in the church that there ought to be. And why is it? It is because we are not diligent in our duties, and are putting our trust in some other man instead of living the religion of Jesus Christ for ourselves. We think that some to whom we are looking as guides do not come up to our standard, and then we are ready to turn away from the truth.

Again, others are waiting for Christ to come down and endow them with mighty power and blessings, forgetting that the Lord has called upon us to "Come up higher"; "Follow me." The remedy for this want of faith is in ourselves.

The church is compared to the body of a man. Suppose the head should seek to carry out certain purposes and the body would not make a single effort in that direction, would it be done? No! The body must carry out the plans of the head, or the work can never be accomplished. In order that the whole body may be full of light, every member must be diligent in the duties assigned him. It is in vain to blame the head. This is the only means by which we can remain in the true vine. Is not Christ asking us, "Will ye also go away?" He asks us to come unto him.

I am more and more convinced that I am right in persisting in doing my duty every day of my life, and it is the only means by which I can keep life in myself. I am engaged as a soldier of the cross and I must be diligent, and I want every member of the church to be equally diligent. When they stand before him to receive a reward for the deeds done in the body, there are none but what would be ashamed to tell the great Judge that they have done nothing in the work assigned them. You will be sorry that you have waited for the tide of salvation to flow over you and waft you into celestial glory. You must remember that straws float with the tide, but we must fight our way up the stream against wind and tide, if we are to inherit eternal life. You will fight three-score years and ten to keep this mortal body together; but you will scarcely spend a day to provide for that eternal life beyond the narrow bounds of time.

Many are desirous of knowing the great mysteries of God; and in searching for the same they neglect the everyday duties. When you think of the great blessings to be obtained, don't let them dazzle your eyes so that you cannot see the little duties that ever present themselves to us. It is by the discharge of these apparently small things that we accomplish the great task of life, and work out for ourselves a never-ending state of glory and blessedness.

We must remove every evil from us, and remember not to throw them behind us in our path, for by so doing we curse those who have to follow us. Let us remove them out of the way, bury them from light, and thus help our fellow travelers.

We have often prayed for the redemption of Zion, and we talk of being clothed in white linen; but we must remember that Zion shall be redeemed by judgment, and her converts by righteousness. What is this fine linen? It is the righteousness of the Saints, and you can only be clothed with that as you live in accordance with the law of Christ, and avoid all evil, even the appearance of evil.

When a man entices you from the true path he will turn around and laugh you to scorn, and thus persecution is brought upon the church through the transgression of its members.

Who was it that persecuted the ancient saints? They were men who made great pretensions of religion—the proud Pharisee—the pious hypocrite,—and these are the kind of men who to-day persecute the Saints of the Most High,—who headed the mobs and drove the Saints from their peaceful homes, under the plea that the Saints were a wicked people. There were no doubt hypocrites among us, and perhaps there are to-day; for the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net cast into the sea, which brings forth of every kind.

Suppose I should be tempted to commit an act of treason against the law of God, so as to be unworthy of your confidence and esteem. Do you think I could preach so eloquently as to hide the crime? No, I could not. It would be your duty to bring me to the law of God. You would cast me away as unworthy of your fellowship and my punishment would be just. If the principle holds good in my case, it would be equally so in yours. You would have no right to claim greater clemency than you would allow me. I am only a man, called to perform a certain duty, and to work out my salvation. God has called you to perform a duty and work out your salvation; and you will be held accountable for your calling as much as I shall be accountable for mine; hence the necessity of us attending to the little duties of the day, for if we do not, how shall we be permitted to enjoy the greater blessings?

Do you suppose we shall go to Zion when we owe the world one half that we possess? Remember, there is no law to be given commanding us to take the riches of the Egyptians when we go. We are commanded to give to every man his due; and if we are not prepared to give due allegiance to those to whom it is due, we never can be accepted of God.

Suppose I should give utterance to the statement that the promises of God were to be received upon the principle of faith alone. What would be your duty in this matter? It would be your duty to say, "Sir, I have not so learned the gospel of Christ. I understand there are other duties and obligations which must be performed before we can be put in possession of the promised blessings."

Every man may be said to have a glass through which he looks, and by which he judges of right and wrong; but I fear that some have the glass so adjusted that they cannot see the truth as it is. These look upon some man as a model of perfection, and when this man goes wrong, the observer cannot adjust the glass so as to see his own duties. He either follows his model, or throws away the truth altogether. If we do this, we shall not be able to see Christ when he comes to reign with his Saints.

Let every man learn his duties and perform them independently of any other man; then his steps will always be properly adjusted, and he will never be led astray. Every man must remember that he has to live the gospel of Christ for himself. Brother John Landers says that God is tired of waiting to bless his people. He is waiting for us to prepare ourselves for his blessings, and if we do not have them it is not the fault of others, it is our own fault. Those who are ready God will help. Some say they are ready; but I fear not, for I can point out some who are not living up to their privileges. We must do the little before we can do the greater.

We go out into the world to preach the gospel, telling the people that God in his mercy has given a law by which they shall work; but do we practice what we preach? If not, our preaching is in vain.

You and I perhaps have different views of the gospel, and so long as we trust to individual wisdom we shall not be likely to come to a proper understanding of the matter; but if we take the law of God and the Holy Spirit for our guide, we shall not be deceived. Hence Peter says, "Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue."

"Well," some one says, "I thought that faith was all that was needed; but now I find there is something else to attend to." This is one of the virtues in which we must educate ourselves.

I have been taken to task for advocating the principle of education; and asked why I did not trust to the Spirit to bring all things to remembrance. The Spirit cannot bring that to our remembrance which we never knew. The Lord tells us we must "seek out of the best books words of wisdom." "Seek learning by study and also by faith," and again, "Study and learn and become acquainted with all good books and with languages, tongues, and people." "Obtain a knowledge of history, countries and kingdoms, and of the laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion." Many in their search for knowledge overlook the first principle upon which all true knowledge is founded, and aspire after something beyond their reach. This is a false step, and will retard the progress of all who take it.

Paul was caught up to the third heaven and saw and heard things that were unlawful for him to utter. What benefit would it be to you if I were so caught up? Would you be instructed by what I had seen if I were not permitted to reveal it? If I teach you things pertaining to present duties you can be benefited by them. This is the faith which the Latter Day Saints must contend for, and there is no better way than to quietly live the religion of Christ, and we shall have that faith which will be like an anchor to the soul.

I once supposed that when a man was in possession of knowledge he had all he wanted; but I find now there is such a thing as possessing knowledge without wisdom. We have seen such men and have seen them sink below the horizon, and the knowledge they had became a curse to them.

We have sung of the guide sent down from heaven. Who is the guide? It is not you, nor is it I, but it is Christ—the way of truth and of life.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

CANAL TO OPEN.—It is reported that the Panama Canal will probably be opened to traffic by February 15.

RETRYING DIRECTORS.—Attorney General Gregory has ordered the retrial of the five New Haven directors in whose cases the former jury disagreed.

HEARST BARS LIQUOR.—The Hearst papers have announced that they will no longer carry liquor advertisements. This decision follows that of other dailies in the country.

STRIKE SETTLED.—The strike at East Youngstown, Ohio, mills, which led to riot and shooting on the 8th, has been settled by a compromise in which the workers are to receive an increase in pay.

"MENACE" ACQUITTED.—Publishers of the Menace, an Anti-Catholic paper, charged with sending improper matter through the mails, have been acquitted by a jury in the federal court at Joplin, Missouri.

EASTMAN SEPARATION.—Counsel in the Eastman Kodak Company case have been notified that Judge John R. Hazel, of the federal district court, approves the separation of the business of the company asked for by the Government. Compliance with this order must ensue within thirty days.

SWEDISH NEUTRALITY.—At the opening of the Swedish Parliament on the 17th, King Gustave said that in order for Sweden "to maintain the neutrality which it decided to observe from the beginning of the war, . . . and the sovereignty of Sweden, increased forces on land and sea must be in readiness."

PRESIDENT TO SPEAK.—It is announced that President Wilson will deliver a series of addresses in different cities of the Middle West in the interests of a stronger army and navy. It is expected that he will leave Washington for the first trip the 28th, and stop at Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Chicago, Milwaukee, Des Moines, Topeka, Kansas City, and other points.

NO SALOONS, NO DEBT.—On January 1 the State of Kansas paid off its last cent of bonded indebtedness, becoming one of six States of the Union free from debt. Celebrating the event, Governor Capper said:

The brewery interests proclaim to the world that Kansas is on the right road to financial ruin, but at the same time they invest their surplus in Kansas municipal bonds. They buy them because they know sober Kansas pays its debts, and its bonds are worth more than one hundred cents on the dollar.

OSBORNE CASE.—Following the announcement by Superintendent of Prisons, Riley, that Thomas Mott Osborne had been permanently removed from the wardenship of Sing Sing Prison, Mr. Osborne was allowed a leave of absence, pending investigation of conduct and conditions complained of. Superintendent Riley refuses to hand his resignation to Governor Whitman, as requested. Mr. Osborne became warden of Sing Sing in December, 1914. His reforms, highly spoken of by criminologists and other reform workers, seem to have run counter to the practices of certain New York politicians. His removal is said to be sought in the interests of these practices.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Carranza authorities in Chihuahua declare that all Villa bandits will be vigorously hunted down. Holding them responsible for the massacre of the eighteen Americans at Santa Ysabel, Carranza has formally proclaimed as outlaws Villa, Lopez, and Castro, and authorized their execution on sight without formality. A Villa major has appeared at El Paso, Texas, and announced that Villa sent him to say he was not responsible for the outrage at Santa Ysabel. Typhus fever is reported to be on the wane in Mexico City. Official report recites nine hundred and sixty-two cases for the first week in January, which is fifty per cent less than for the week previous.

EUROPEAN WAR.—After the lull reported last week, the Russians have begun again their strong offense in Bukowina and Galicia. The Russians have made advances in the Caucasus, where they seem to be preparing for an extended campaign against the Turks. No change is reported in the west. Heavy fighting is reported on the Austro-Italian front. Further British success over the Turks in Mesopotamia is reported. It seems that the original British expeditionary force has been surrounded at Kut El Amara, and that a relief army in attempting to rescue them has driven the Turks to within a few miles of this point. Reports concerning recent Montenegrin activities are conflicting. Hostilities in this territory seem for a time to have ceased. It is announced from some quarters that the little country has agreed to a truce; from others that King Nicholas in surrendering the capital, began peace negotiations to prevent the complete ruin of his country; and again it is said that Montenegro has broken off negotiations for peace, and that fighting between Austrians and Montenegrins has been resumed. Reports of the landing of additional entente allied troops at Saloniki, landings at Corinth and other points in Greece, the occupancy of the Island of Corfu, and the blowing up of a bridge at Demir Hissar, together with the restricting of Grecian commerce, suggest possible drastic measures looking to the use of all Greece as a base of operations and the bringing of Greece to allied terms. It is generally understood that the Grecian King is favorable to the central allies, while the people for the more part are inclined to the entente. The entente allies have maintained a close censorship with relation to their recent Balkan movements, reports mentioned coming largely from other sources. King Constantine, in a statement for the press of the United States, defines these allied activities as "unheard of highhandedness," "encroachments on the sovereignty of Greece." Announcements purporting to come from the Paris war office justify the occupancy of Corfu, because Turkey refused to recognize Greek possession thereof, and since Greece protested only in form; the occupancy of Saloniki for the succor of Serbia, and at the requests of the Greek Government which refused to mobilize otherwise. The French allege that the bridge was destroyed as a military necessity, and will be replaced. It is announced that through train service between Berlin and Constantinople was achieved for the first time, on the arrival at Constantinople the 17th of a train bearing government officials, business and newspaper men.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

MEETING OF HIGH COUNCIL.—The High Council convened in Independence, January 4, and continued in session until the 19th. This is the longest sitting of the council since its organization,—so far as the Reorganized Church is concerned, at least. Five cases were considered. After the adjournment of the council, the two members of the Presidency met for several days with four members of the Twelve at that time in Independence for a consideration of matters arising in various respective fields.

WHO KILLED THEM?—Under the heading "Prohibition caused death," it was on January 9 announced that seven deaths had occurred in Washington since January 1, when the prohibition law went into effect in that State. Four men, it is said, died from drinking wood alcohol, two men and a woman from over-indulgence after enforced abstinence. Now it was the saloon that contributed to the death of these unfortunate people, through the creating of appetite and the undermining of will power. It was an honest little fellow who, in answer to the question, "Who killed Cock Robin?" replied:

I, said the Sparrow,
With my bow and arrow,
I killed Cock Robin.

But the saloon is not an honest little fellow, hence is not willing to acknowledge its own deadly work.

ISAIAH TWENTY-NINE---NUMBER 3

BY E. E. LONG

POINTS OF IDENTITY

Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their hearts far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precepts of men: therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.—Isaiah 29: 13, 14.

In these two verses we have another point of identity by which we may determine the time of the appearance of the "sealed book." Two severe indictments are laid against "this people," whoever they are, that will help us to identify them. Their worship is merely a form, a mouth and lip service, while their affections are somewhere else. Fear toward God, instead of being engendered by love, is inspired by the "precepts of men." Who are they?

Take up the creed of any one of the "established" churches and note the numerous written prayers and ceremonies. It will readily be seen that the confession of some of the modern ministers are timely when they attribute the "failure" of modern Christianity to "formalism," and "absence of the Spirit of Christ." The dogma of a never-ending hell, of literal fire and brimstone,

Where they suffer burning torture,
Down in Satan's hot domain,
Where escape is ever hopeless
From their never-ending pain.
But forever, and forever,
They must burn, and bake, and fry,
With the awful pain increasing
As the years go dragging by, puts the brand, "this people," on modern Christianity. There is no escape. It was among "this people" that the Lord said he would proceed to do a "marvelous work and a wonder." He would cause the wisdom of their wise men to perish, and the understanding of their prudent men to be hid. That marvelous work was accomplished when God gave Joseph Smith, the unlearned man, the gift to translate the sealed book.

By a great mass of contradictory testimony, the enemies of the Book of Mormon have sought to show that it originated in some other way than the supernatural manner claimed for it. They have declared it carried its own refutation because it claimed to have been written on metallic plates. They have confidently asserted that the ancient Americans never wrote on metallic plates,—but that bit of wisdom has "come to naught," as hundreds of copper plates have been taken from the mounds in various places, besides axes, spears, and ornaments of various kinds. They once boldly affirmed that it was a fraud because it claimed that the elephant and horse were common to America in past ages. That argument has "perished," because remains of both the horse and elephant have been found in such profusion that it is a manifestation of unwarranted ignorance to deny it.

In Orton Hall at the State University, Columbus, Ohio; stands the skeleton of a gigantic elephant, or mastodon, which was found on the farm of N. S. Conway, two miles north of Catawba, Clark County, Ohio, in 1895: Length, nineteen feet, six inches; height, nine feet, eight inches; length of tusks on curve, nine feet, eight inches; across from tip to tip, ten feet, seven inches. Others have been found in different sections of the country.

From the standpoint of scientific research, and the fulfillment of its own prophetic declarations, the Book of Mormon stands vindicated to-day as never before. The evidences of its divinity accumulate, while the stock arguments of those who "mock," perish, one after another.

TURNING THINGS UPSIDE DOWN

Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and knoweth us? Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay: for shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not? or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding?—Isaiah 29: 15, 16.

The frantic efforts of those who oppose the Book of Mormon are strikingly portrayed in these two verses. In their endeavors to defeat the work of God, they take the ridiculous position that there is to be no more revelation from God: that the canon of scripture is full, consequently the Book of Mormon is an imposture. To sustain their contention they delve into the sacred Scriptures from Genesis to Revelation, "seek deep," in the vain hope of "hiding" their counsel.

The Lord says in doing so they are turning things upside down, and asks the pertinent question: "Shall the thing framed [man] say of him [God] that framed it, he had no understanding?" That is precisely the situation men place themselves in when they assume that God had finished his revelation to man. Instead of the Bible being the complete word of God, it contains an abundance of testimony to the contrary, as will be shown under verses twenty-two and twenty-three.

Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear: but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear. For your hands are defiled with blood, and your fingers with iniquity; your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath muttered perverseness. None calleth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth: they trust in vanity, and speak lies; they conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity. They hatch cockatrice's eggs, and weave the spider's web; he that eateth of their eggs dieth, and that which is crushed breaketh out into a viper. Their webs shall not become garments, neither shall they cover themselves with their works: their works are works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands. Their feet run to evil, and they make haste to shed innocent blood: their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and destruction are in their paths. The way of peace they know not; and there is no judgment in their goings: they have made them crooked paths; whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace.—Isaiah 59: 1-8.

An editor of a popular magazine says, "The world is misled by demagogues and false teachers." These false teachers have lulled the people to sleep until they have wandered away, and when there is "no answer from God," they think it is because revelation is no longer necessary.

The wicked, God said, would do wickedly still (Daniel 12: 10);

They never repented, said John (Revelation 9: 21),
But blasphemed Jehovah because of the plagues,

And went their wild ways, on and on;
Because they had called their conventions of peace,
Expecting that war and its carnage would cease.
Yet they avail nothing, nor come into mind,
When nations are angry, and blood-mad, and blind (Revelation 11: 18).

A FRUITFUL FIELD AGAIN

Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest? And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness. The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. For the terrible one is brought to naught, and the scorner is consumed, and all that watch for iniquity are cut off: that make a man an offender for a word, and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, and turn aside the just for a thing of naught.—Isaiah 29: 17-21.

For centuries Lebanon has been trodden down of the Gentiles, her cities laid waste, and her farms a desolation. In addition to the destruction wrought by man, the Lord threatened to send a "great army" upon the land, which would devour as a flame of fire. That "army" is described in the first and second chapters of Joel. But it is gratifying to note that after a time the Lord would turn it away and restore the years that this army had eaten (Joel 2: 25, 26). In this connection he said he would restore the former and latter rain "moderately."

This restoration is the same thing referred to in Isaiah 29: 17, where it is declared that Lebanon would be turned into a fruitful field, a very "little while" after the marvelous work and a wonder would be accomplished. The marvelous work was accomplished in 1829 and 1830. At that time the promised fruitfulness of the land had not been realized, but it began to be fulfilled a "very little while" afterward. Heavy dews began to fall about 1840, and later, 1853, the former and latter rains were restored.

BROUGHT TO NAUGHT

"And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book," and the "eyes of the blind" see out of "darkness." By reason of the additional light brought to the world by the message contained in the "book," those who were blinded and deafened by sectarian error and priestcraft would hear the great truths of heaven and see the gospel and the love of God in a new light. Their "joy in the Lord" would be increased because of the "familiar" tone of the message revealed, when the "sealed book" would be found to make plain the truths of the Bible which had before been wrapped in darkness and mystery because of the many conflicting interpretations placed on it by self-appointed teachers. For the "terrible one" is brought to naught. The appellation terrible one, evidently applies to the papacy. This power is referred to by Daniel as follows:

And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end.—Daniel 7: 25, 26.

And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.—Revelation 13: 5-7.

He was to continue "forty and two months," one thousand, two hundred and sixty years. The pope began the exercise of his terrible power 538 A. D., and for one thousand, two hundred and sixty years ruled with an iron hand. But it is stated that "they shall take away his dominion." Adding one thousand, two hundred and sixty to five hundred and thirty-eight, it reaches to 1798 A. D.

In the latter year, Berthier, at the head of a French army, marched into Rome and took the pope a prisoner and placed him in exile, where he died. Two years later another pope was elected, but his "power" was diminished. The "consumption" had begun, and continued to waste the vitality of the victim until 1870, when the last vestige of temporal "power" was taken from him, and he shut himself up in the Vatican, a prisoner. In this connection, the following prediction is significant: "He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity" (Revelation 13: 10).

The temporal power of the pope had to be broken, "brought to naught," before the Lord could begin the performance of his "marvelous work." With the decline of the pope's temporal power the spirit of toleration was born, and the way paved for the introduction of the angel's message foretold by John (Revelation 14: 6, 7).

"The scorner is consumed." The plain inference is that there would be those who would reject the "book" with scorn, and "mock" at it. That this is the case needs no corroboration.

"That watch for iniquity." Of all the vast multitude who have opposed the Book of Mormon, so far as my observation goes, I have never known one who did not "watch for iniquity." Instead of meeting the issue on its merits, they attack the character of those who, under God, were instrumental in accomplishing the marvelous work.

"That make a man an offender for a word." It has been the universal experience of the ministry of this church to preach the message to an audience with increasing interest, and have men and women tell them it was the "best thing we have ever heard," "the first time I ever heard the truth," and many similar expressions of appreciation; when, behold, some preacher who scents danger to his craft makes a house to house canvass to warn the people against the "Mormons"! Many honest people have been turned away from further investigation by the unscrupulous tactics of lying preachers who "turn aside the just for a thing of naught." But, like the "terrible one," they are going to meet their doom; for it is written: "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up" (Matthew 15: 13).

Your creeds and your dogmas can never avail;
They're not of God's choosing, dear friend.
But, creatures of men, they will perish at last,
And you will lose out in the end.

FAVORING ISRAEL

Therefore thus saith the Lord, who redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale. But when he seeth his children, the work of mine hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel.—Isaiah 29: 22, 23.

When God would remember his covenant, and set his hand to recover his dispersed people, public sentiment would undergo a change, and the poor, down-trodden Jew would begin to find favor in the eyes of his fellows; for—"I will get them praise and fame in every land where they have been put to shame" (Zephaniah 3: 19); because:

Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders. And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers: they shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord: for they shall not be ashamed that wait for me.—Isaiah 49: 22, 23.

Let the Book of Mormon set the time for the beginning of this great preparation.

And it came to pass that I beheld that the wrath of God was poured out upon the great and abominable church, insomuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth, and as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations, the angel spake unto me, saying, Behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots; and behold, thou seest all these things; and when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose foundation is the Devil, then at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants which he hath made to his people, who are of the house of Israel.—1 Nephi 3: 232-237.

Surely, the wrath of God is upon the "great and abominable church" now. From the time when the French subdued the pope, 1798, until now, war among the so-called Christian nations has increased in magnitude and intensity, culminating in a cataclysm of blood without a parallel in history, and the end is not in sight. In that day God says Israel would find favor among the nations, and he would no longer hide his face for shame.

The restoration of the Holy Land was a signal for Israel to lift up his head. It was a part of the "strange work" the Lord said he would do in behalf of his people. For his unbelief and disobedience, Israel was driven from his possessions and became an outcast, without a country and without a home. With the advent of the Book of Mormon the message was proclaimed that the set time to favor Israel was at hand, and that the Gentile times were nearly ended.

At that time, 1830, there was one nation in the world where the Jew was a free man. That nation was America. Those who went forth to proclaim the "good news" fortified themselves behind the prophetic word that Israel would be favored, but that the Gentiles would be embroiled in wars and bloodshed more and more as the end approached. It needs no argument now to prove that they were correct. Their position has been fully vindicated.

But Isaiah is not alone among the Bible prophets in proclaiming deliverance for Jacob. The prophets have all had something to say concerning the matter. It has been the burden of their cry for ages. Though scattered and peeled, Israel has never lost hope, for it is written: "Can a woman forget her sucking child? . . . yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee." (Isaiah 49: 15.)

For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim; afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days.—Hosea 3: 4, 5.

For thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out. As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day. And I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, and feed them upon the mountains of Israel by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places of the country. . . . And they shall no more be a prey to the heathen, neither shall the beast of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid.—Ezekiel 34: 11-28.

The Apostle Paul puts the time of this restoration beyond his day. In fact, Israel was not scattered world-wide until after the year 70 A. D. So this great gathering from the countries, from among the heathen, must be after that time.

For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins.—Romans 11: 25-27.

From the very inception of the "latter-day work," as we term it, the Saints have taught that Israel would soon be reinstated, and become a nation in its own land. Prospects for a speedy fulfillment of the glorious promise was never brighter than now. The Book of Mormon abounds with similar prophecies, and it will not be long until the "scorner will be consumed," and the servants of God who have proclaimed the truth against blind opposition will be vindicated by the culmination of events now in the making that will put their critics to silence forever.

Throughout all their long dispersion and ignominy, the Jews have steadfastly refused to accept Jesus as the Messiah. The Book of Mormon comes to us with the avowed purpose of convincing them that Jesus is the Christ. That is the one great burden of its message. It represents a portion of lost Israel, and coming, as it does, from a source absolutely independent of sectarian influence, it cannot but have a salutary effect on the mind of the Jewish people, when God shall direct that it is time to take it to them. Sectarians of every shade of character have made strenuous efforts to convert the Jew, but in vain. It will take a "thus saith the Lord," in the old-fashioned way, to touch the heart of Jacob.

ISRAEL'S RECORDS AND RESTORATION

Under Isaiah 29: 1-6, it was shown that a "remnant" of the tribe of Joseph escaped the siege of Jerusalem, and by command of God came to America, where, in process of time, they became a mighty people, as evidenced by their numerous remains. Their record being in danger of destruction at the hands of a wicked and lawless element, was buried in the ground for preservation until the "times of restitution."

One of the most definite and complete prophecies concerning the restoration of Israel is found in Ezekiel, and as a prelude to that prophecy the following "word of the Lord" is recorded:

Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions; then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions: and join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand. And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not show us what thou meanest by these? Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand. And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes.—Ezekiel 37: 16-20.

Here two records are clearly implied. A "stick" was a piece of wood, properly formed, around which the strip of parchment was wound on which the scriptures was written, the whole being referred to elsewhere as a "roll," "roll of a book," etc., (Ezekiel 2: 9; Jeremiah 36: 2; Isaiah 8: 1). In this instance one writing was for Judah, and the children of Israel, his companions. Then there was "another" one for Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and the children of Israel, his companions. The "stick," or record of Judah embraced the history of Israel, and the "stick," or record, of Joseph also embraced the history of Israel. Two separate records, one in the hand of Judah, and one in the hand of Ephraim, which in time were to come together and become "one." Now let us note what was to follow the coming together of these two records.

And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land. And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all. . . . Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore.

My tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people.—Ezekiel 37: 21-28.

Israel and Judah are to become one nation and one king will rule over them. But first there is to be a "covenant of peace" made, a "new covenant" (Jeremiah 31: 31). Now listen:

At the same time, saith the Lord, I will be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people. . . . Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return thither. They shall come with weeping and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn.—Jeremiah 31: 1-9.

In this gathering and restoration, Israel is to "walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way," and "not stumble." This straight way is the gospel way as represented by primitive Christianity: "This gospel of the kingdom" (Matthew 24: 14), in all its original power and splendor. Something altogether different from the modern product, with its multitude of conflicting creeds and "ways." It would be a difficult matter to find a "straight way" among the meandering bypaths of modern Churchianity, where a man could walk without stumbling. The Lord says they are "crooked paths" (Isaiah 59: 8).

THE CHRISTIAN SOLDIER

(Address given by Elder J. H. N. Jones, at Adelaide, South Australia, November 10, 1915.)

The text I intend to use as a basis for my subject you will find in the second epistle to Timothy, chapter 2, paragraph 4, "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life." My specific reason for so doing is that I intend to talk to you about soldiers.

Paul, I believe, is the only one who gives a description of the temporal and spiritual soldier, or uses the temporal as spiritual. History states that Paul was chained to a soldier while being a prisoner, thus by his captivity understood the barracks. While under soldiers' guard and having daily intercourse with them, Paul became acquainted with all ceremonies, commands, technicalities, and actions of the soldier temporal, or soldiers of the king, earthly, being also acquainted with the soldiers spiritual. Therefore he became an authority on the subject.

No doubt the actions of the temporal soldiers were so impressed upon his mind that it caused him to use the above text, and place the emphasis upon soldiering. Personally I do not believe that God intends officers of this church to leave their divine call as soldiers for him who hath called them that they may please him, and exchange their services by enlisting on the side of the empire.

I have noted more of our people here in khaki than elsewhere in Australia, and when we see men from our own midst enlisting and becoming soldiers we realize the position, as did Paul.

In order to become a soldier, something has to be done. Obedience: The first law is to swear allegiance to the king to obey orders given, or in other words, the law written. Our country volunteers. Some countries or kingdoms have conscription. During this great crisis, unparalleled in history, Australia has sent out recruiting officers, offering all the inducements possible, imploring men to go to the front.

I will give you some of the details in enlisting. You go to the recruiting office and give name and address. The next performance is a medical examination. To pass this test you must be perfectly sound,—teeth, limbs, hearing, and sight. If successful, you then go into camp, and there you are classed, thence into a company or regiment, number and colors. Then an elementary process begins. The officers discipline you and build you into a soldier. A soldier does not like (dungaree) dress—he much prefers his old pledged khaki. Then to the front, possibly to give your life for your country.

I, myself, have entered into a compact to do the same. My life is already forfeited to God, as a spiritual soldier for Christ.

Conditions alter with the elders of Israel, as recruiting officers. They are out specifically to ask you to enlist in the army of Christ, not to slay and kill, but to save and preserve, to be in the world but not of the world. There are many of the world who do not recognize Christ as their king, but serve the Devil, and are not alive to Christ, or the gospel light. The man who conquers self is a much greater man than the man who takes a city. Alexander the Great was a great warrior, mundane, but could not conquer himself spiritually.

The battle field, what it is:

1. Principle: Those who want to serve Christ,—faith elementary; the fight of faith, the robe of righteousness. Mark the difference of an army of soldiers for Christ and a soldier for the field, earthly. It requires more stamina, morality, unity, brotherhood, justice, and faith to serve Christ than is necessary to serve king and country in war. Probably some of you may doubt this statement. Repudiation or not, I fear not as to the accuracy thereof.

2. Distinction: (Classification.) Recruits for the army of the Lord. There is no edict issued from the King of kings for a medical examination,—teeth, hearing, height, or measurement. All are permitted to enter the kingdom of Christ.

3. Restriction of officers: They must be called by divine proclamation. Men and women, you are all required in this unique and unparalleled kingdom. The only essential quality necessary to gain admittance is cementation spiritually, not physically. Remember, the mind is the measure of man. God takes men and women in the church or kingdom to make them perfect in their sphere. There is no one so perfect that he can say he can do without the gospel.

4. Military duties of a soldier: The first duty is obedience. Imagine a general in the British army issuing a command, strategic. After so doing a private approaches the general and informs him that no such command is necessary, and that the position necessary to conquer, can be taken without command or strategy. What do you suppose the general would think of the private that spoke thus? I am afraid that his giant intellect would almost impose contempt for the seminonentity of the private.

Yet, theologically, we find in the universe millions of people being taught that it is not essential to salvation to obey the gospel commands. By whom were such teachers sent? Can you for one moment think they were sent by God to preach this? I say no. They were chosen by man, and are teaching the commands of men. Obedience is better than sacrifice. Obedience is the first duty of a soldier in the field. Precisely so in the army of Christ.

Conversing with a certain salvationist, I asked him the reason he did not baptize. In reply he said, "No need of so doing." Fancy such disregard of the laws of his King and General, Christ. He does not intend to allow men, and I might say we dare not allow them, to enter the kingdom only through or by the divine plan laid down by the king, Christ.

Now begin your training, those of you who are not in, and get grafted onto the tame olive tree. God wants to tame us now, for there are many vicissitudes to go through, and much to be purged out of the old man. Paul speaks of fighting the fight of faith. He fought against principalities, not against flesh, but against powers in high places.

People outside this church watch us, and sometimes see us fail, then they say, "If I had begun as he I would not have failed. I would have lived it out to the letter." The man outside never was in the fight, and therefore he is incompetent to judge. I say that no man away from God or outside the faith can judge or have any conception of the multitude of forces Satanic that the man in Christ has to face.

Satan controls the man who is away from God; but the soldier in Christ has to storm the heights. The higher up he gets the greater the responsibility and the more he is watched, and if he falls, great is his fall. We are climbing a hill, not a hill like Mount Lofty. (We use the temporal to express the spiritual.) If you are not in the church do not criticize, but get in the ranks and try to climb up with us. The greatest and best men are those who look on with a kind eye, and who endeavor to mete out justice, equity, and love at all times. You are wanted in the church. The Lord requires you, and waits to accept you as a volunteer.

A soldier temporal, when passed and put into the ranks, gets his shoulders squared up, and is disciplined; so if we desire to win spiritually, we must necessarily stand and pull together, and be in line.

As regards meeting hours allotted for assembling, I believe that we should be on time to the minute. If not, the army becomes negligent and undisciplined. Some say, "It looks as though it will rain to-day, I think I will stay at home." When you do that you lose. I wonder how many there are who, if three pounds was due in wages at the end of the week, would stop at home because it looked like rain? I venture to say not many. One does not escape by being dilatory. There is nothing worse—when out of step it throws the whole line into confusion.

If you are doing anything you ought not to do, your thoughts may be that it is all right because your brothers do not know, nor the world, but remember, God knows. If such be the case, you are injuring yourself and staying the progress of the church.

Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, in his power to stand against the wiles of the Devil. So long as we abide in him we shall conquer. Therefore, take unto you the whole armor of God, having your loins girded with faith; having on the breastplate of righteousness; the shield of faith, which is able to quench the fiery darts of the wicked. If you live right your faith will grow, or vice versa.

Put on the helmet of salvation, then you may enter the great army of Christ. To him that overcometh a crown of life is given.

In conclusion, brethren, I urge you to love God, to love one another, to be just and equitable, that you may speed God's work. If we do not do this, it will be to our eternal loss.

May God be with you.

THE MASTER'S CALL

Can'st thou not hear me calling thee my child,
Can'st thou not hear me calling thee, out from the wild
Where thou hast wandered
Far from me and the light of home.
Into the darkness, alone?

Did'st thou not hear me calling thee?
When out the door thou wentest
And passed on into tracts unknown,
Leaving behind thee the warmth, security, of home?

What did'st thou find my child to keep thee?
Was it the flowers that by the wayside grew
That drew thee on to gather of their fragrance?
And hid the snare that others laid for you?

Come, come, my child, from out the pathway thorny,
 Turn back, and live for me, and I will give Thee peace, and joy, and mercy for thy past sorrow,
 That through thee some poor erring soul may live.

The above words are written for a purpose, namely, to reach a heart in the wilderness. How many Saints, when reading the story of the ninety and nine sheep whom the Savior left in the fold safe, while he went to find the one who had strayed, think of the greatness of his love. Just think of him saying to the ninety-nine, "You are safe here, but one of your number has strayed away, and I am going to search for it."

Up into the dangerous mountain passes went the Savior, into deep valleys, along roads rough, thorny, and dangerous, searching, ever searching for his lost one. Hear his loving voice calling, "Come back, my child, from out the pathway thorny." Who can hear and yet resist a loving Shepherd's pleading to the weary soul?

The author of these verses, and writer of these humble lines, was a wanderer, and has experienced all the bitterness of darkness of soul; has been through the mountain passes and into dark valleys; but, out from the darkness came a voice, "Come unto me, I need thee," it said, "that through thy suffering another soul may live."

Think of it: out of the darkness and ashes rises a soul beautiful and purified, won by mercy and a Savior's love. It brings to my mind the Master's words, "Go into the highways and byways and search for them and bring them in."

Saints, give your whole life for the service of the Master. Lift up the fallen, comfort the sorrowing, strengthen the erring ones with words of mercy and tenderness. Live for Christ. Let him be your all, for in him is our life. God gave his Son, his all, the best he had. Jesus gave his all, his life, the best he had. We must give our all, the best we have, our life, our strength, our whole heart and soul to his service, that through us some poor erring soul may live.

I send this contribution with a prayer in my heart that it will be a blessing in the Master's hands to some one. I am your sister in the gospel of Jesus.

FLORENCE WRIGHT.

The awakening of the spirit in man to its rights and opportunities with God must come through the preaching of the gospel by those whom God has sent (Romans 10: 15-17). "There is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding" (Job 32: 8). That is a truism, a principle, which in its very nature is fundamental in making man acquainted with God.

"No man can come to me except the father which hath sent me draw him." These are the words of Jesus, who knew the law governing every step of man's progress and advancement toward his Creator.

Paul says:

How shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent? . . . So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.—Romans 10.

Where Jesus preached, faith seemed to spring up as by magic; he inspired faith in the people, and many miracles were done. We hear him commending them for their faith in such words as the following: "According to your faith be it unto you." "Thy faith hath saved thee, go in peace." "I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel." "And perceiving that they had faith, said unto them," etc.

Jesus demonstrated the possibilities of this wonderful principle in nearly every move he made during his ministerial career. We see the winds and the waves obey him; demons and all kinds of disease are subject to him as he moves, inspired by such living faith, doing always those things which pleased his Father in heaven. Being in close touch with God, enlightened by him, he fearlessly worked, nothing doubting, being successful in all his undertakings.

Before he left the earth he sounded a word of warning to those who would live in the latter days, as follows: "Nevertheless, when the son of man shall come, shall he find faith on the earth?"

Now what does this mean? It looks to the writer as though Christ foresaw the time when men would trust in human wisdom more than in God. We need right now to be careful, as a people. I believe we need to rely more upon God, and less on the arm of flesh which must fail us.

The practical example of the Christ and his disciples in dealing with humanity ought to forever remind us that without him we can do nothing.

Hebrews 11 contains a summary of a rich harvest of faith covering a period of many years' history, touching the lives of good men and women who walked in the light, moved by faith, and who were able to do great deeds, and bless their fellow men.

We have need to examine ourselves and see whether we be in the faith, as Paul admonished.

Too frequently now we see Saints call for the doctor instead of the elders, as the Lord has advised we should do. We might cite examples of faith coming under our observation in the recent past, such as the healing of an Indian woman, Sister Orrin Turtle, who was operated on about January 1, 1915. Discovering she had a cancer, her doctor sewed up the wound, and through administration we feel she was healed, as I saw her yesterday on the street in Kingfisher. Many others could be cited. But there seems to be a growing tendency to depend on human skill rather than upon the Lord.

If we look closely we find that the awakening of honest people to the possibilities of the gospel has borne fruit in latter days, just like it did in former times in many instances. There seems to be some danger of our lamps going out after we arise and trim them. This I believe is the reason the warning was given. I believe many have faith who have never yet been tested. There will come a testing of every man's faith, and in the language of one in olden times, we need to say, "Lord increase our faith."

HUBERT CASE.

Of General Interest

WILL THE WAR END IN THE HOLY LAND?

If we study the present trend of events we will see that the happenings of the past few months are swinging the pivot of influence and importance away from the capitals of Europe back to the cradle of the race, back to the Caucasus, to the valley of the Mesopotamia, to Constantinople, and last, but not least, back to Palestine, the crux of the whole situation. . . .

There is abundant evidence that would lead us to the conclusion that this great world war, that was started over European issues and in Europe, is not going to be decided in Europe, not in the fall of any of the great capitals of Europe, not even in Constantinople's fall, important as that would be, but in the Holy Land in Palestine. This, inexplicable and bewildering as it may appear, is nevertheless apparent, for the near future, judged by the events of the past few months, will no doubt find the attention of the whole civilized world focused on that country.

"Palestine geographically is the gateway between the East and the West, or rather the barbarian which commands the two avenues of the Euphrates and Red Sea lines of communications." To England, with Egypt an integral part of the British Empire, Palestine is of supremest importance. To Russia, once Constantinople is in her grasp, Palestine and her future becomes a matter of greatest moment, for Palestine in the hands of a first-class power would be able to dominate the highway to the East and to control the Mediterranean Sea.

To Germany, with her colonies gone and her hopes of territorial expansion confined solely to Asiatic Turkey, Palestine is of overwhelming importance. No political acumen is necessary to see how Palestine in hostile hands would seriously impair the usefulness of the Bagdad Railroad, and how large a place Palestine must have in Germany's hopes and fears.

The Jewish question, then, is of paramount importance, for a dissociation of Palestine from the Jew is unthinkable, for that strange people are inseparably bound up in its future; therefore we find this evidenced in a striking manner by the prominence given to it by most, if not all, of the present belligerents.

For instance, an army order issued by the Grand Duke Nicholai just a little while ago, that attracted little attention at the time, is notwithstanding fraught with tremendous import. In it he called attention to the fact that Russia's aims and purposes in this war were far-reaching and that they embraced the deliverance of Palestine from under the heel of the infidel Turk and the resettlement of the nation in their ancestral land. He therefore urged all Jews to bend every energy and enable Russia to accomplish this task, and granted permission to Jews fight in Galicia or Poland to transfer themselves to the Caucasus so as to have a part in the bringing of that about. In view of this the transfer of the grand duke to the Caucasus may prove to be not the political shelving of Russia's military genius, as many suppose, but rather a remarkable, astute move on the part of the Russian military authorities. Anticipating the slacking up of the German offensive in Poland, and the necessity of the Germans digging themselves in in Poland for the winter, which will no doubt release Russian troops for service elsewhere, and seeing that the campaign in Armenia and the Caucasus may soon overshadow in importance the movements in Galicia and Poland, they have sent the grand duke to the Caucasus to prepare for this new phase of the war.

Further, there have been frequent references to this subject by prominent British statesmen, references to the hopes entertained by them that the outcome of the war may enable them to solve the age-long Jewish problem.

More dramatic, however, than all these are the statements attributed to the Kaiser. He, not to be outdone and shrewd enough to see the value of Jewish support, has gone even further and has been reported as offering himself as their Messiah. It is stated that, going into one of their synagogues in Lodz, after the occupation of that city by his troops, he lifted up one of the scrolls of the law and said: "Jews, you are awaiting the Messiah. I am the Messiah and I was sent of God to save you." German agents in Holland and elsewhere have notified Jewish refugees that if they will espouse the German cause he will restore the kingdom of Israel in Palestine. His spectacular visit of some years ago to Jerusalem, melodramatic and bombastic as it appeared at the time, was simply an incident in a scheme of world wide magnitude which a bewildered world is just now beginning to get glimmering of.—Richard Hill, in Travel Magazine, November, 1915.

MAINTAINING THE AGED

The Protestant churches of America, endeavoring to raise a preachers' retirement fund of $50,000,000, move the country one notch nearer to the universal old age pension.

It is asked frequently, and with reason, why there should be retirement funds for preachers, professors, common school-teachers, policemen, firemen, civil service employees and army and navy officers, while there are none for storekeepers, laborers, editors, lawyers, farmers, etc. The claim is made, truthfully, that favored classes are thus created in the community.

But the remedy is in extension of the favors, not in their withdrawal. Those who now have retirement funds either actually or in prospect are not more entitled to them than others, but they are the first provided for because they serve the community directly. It is a little harder to see that others serve the community to an equal extent, and bear the same relation to society, as those who are on the public payroll or are maintained by groups of people.

Society now assumes the duty of keeping all indigent people from starvation. It makes provision for those incapacitated by age from earning their own living, but does so in a manner that stamps them with unmerited disgrace. The step from maintenance of the aged in a state of pauperdom to maintenance in comfort is much slighter than the original step of first acknowledgment of a social duty toward the indigent, infirm and aged.

The Protestant churches of America hope to provide for their ministers through the public spirit of the church membership, which is asked to give of its accumulated savings. When the old age pension is taken up by the government, it may be handled without taking one cent from the wealth any living man has earned. Surplus wealth left behind by men favored of fortune or their own talents can be put to no more beneficent use than to care for others who are nearing the grave, but who have not been able to accumulate a surplus for their declining years. Their wealth in any case must go to people who did not earn it, unless the old Indian custom is adopted, and it is buried with them. The only choice is whether all of this surplus wealth shall go to young men, amply able to earn their own living or whether a part shall go to old men, who no longer are able to work and whose dependence intensifies the struggle of their children to escape a like fate for their own last decade.—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register, October 6, 1915.

Sunday School Department

EDITED BY GOMER R. WELLS, LAMONI, IOWA

General Convention

Last year the Sunday school had a Sunday in their convention time. The day was filled with a joint program with Religio workers, and the Religio people kindly granted us some of their time for business. This year they are in a similar position, and we shall have the opportunity to reciprocate. There will no doubt be a joint program on the Sunday that belongs to the Religio society.

There may be suggestions lying around here and there almost forgotten. You have attended former conventions and gone home feeling that certain things could be improved for the good of the whole. If you will revive those reflections and send them in, we will try to benefit thereby in planning the program for the coming meetings. Write soon, for the time is now.

We have a splendid children's chorus in training, and promised for the convention, also other juvenile features that you will want to hear, such as the ten-year-old soloist, the juvenile quartet, all under ten, and a child reader. The music is under the direction of the church chorister, Brother Hoxie, who has his lieutenants at work preparing something fine, among which is the entrancing strains of a Sunday school orchestra, making the delegates forget the fire of debate, the tedium of business, and lighting the fires of fellowship and good cheer. "Music hath charms," you know.

Birth and Birthday Offerings

Birth Offering.—An offering made once for all, after baby has been blessed. Sent originally to Sister M. Walker and held by her as a general "Birth Offering Fund" to help publish books for our children called the "Birth Offering Series," sold now by Herald Publishing House. When forty, fifty or a hundred dollars can be turned over in one sum to the Herald Publishing House manager it helps get out the edition and it can be sold cheaper right away. Herald Publishing House now receives the money, but the fund is languishing.

Birthday Offering.—An offering made by anyone on the Sunday nearest his birthday, consisting of a cent for each year of this age, and taken charge of by the local Sunday school treasurer. A local fund only. Some schools call it a "Relief Fund," and one school we know has a standing committee to help needy scholars get shoes and clothes to come to Sunday school. The majority of schools have no settled plan to dispose of this money. Of one large school this year we learn that even the birth offerings went into the Christmas Offering Fund. Some vote part of the birthday offerings to the district work, sometimes to library work. Feeling that the old-time birth offering had been neglected, some have voted a neat sum to the birth offering fund.

There is still quite a confusion of ideas all over the church about the above-mentioned funds. There are now about ten books of the "Birth Offering Series" on sale, mostly for children who can read. There is still a demand for books for the little "Hopes" who cannot read, perhaps something along kindergarten or nursery lines, and yet leading the mind to think of the Father and Savior of all. But the fund has gone down considerably—we are sure because of the confusion of ideas and the want of some one to boost it. It is a worthy fund and should not be allowed to fail.

With Cradle Roll Work

The collecting of the birth offering is as important as its advertisement. There is no more logical way of collecting this offering than through the cradle roll department. Every local cradle roll superintendent could receipt for it when enrolling the baby, and send it in to a general cradle roll superintendent—if we had one. Such a general officer is the logical one to take charge of this birth offering work and fund, advise and assist in the arranging for a book, and turn the money over to the Board of Publication whenever it has been decided to publish.

The association has made cradle roll work a requirement in the standard for districts—half of the schools must have cradle rolls in operation to be a first grade district. It is put on a par with normal and home class work, each of which have officers to direct the work. But cradle roll work remains unprovided for in the same sense. The general superintendent is now taking care of cradle roll work and directing district officers and local superintendents where they have no district officers. It is growing, but would grow faster if it had some one to specially care for it.

Two years ago cradle roll amendments to the constitution were proposed, but in the closing moments of the convention of 1914, with little or no consideration, they were laid on the table. We expect at the coming convention at Independence, these will be taken from the table and considered, at which time the above-mentioned birth offering work could be included by further amendment. If it should be thought unnecessary to make this officer a member of the Sunday school executive council in general, district or local capacity, that can be stricken out of the proposition.

Proposed Amendments

Two districts, Toronto and Northeastern Illinois, have asked that notice of amendments be published providing that the basis of representation of schools in district conventions be one delegate for every ten members of the school or fraction thereof over one half. It is claimed that the present representation has no basis at all, and that a ye and nay vote could not be taken. Also that the present representation amounts to practically the same as holding a mass convention.

We have been surprised to find that a large number of our Sunday school workers are under the impression that the basis is one for every ten, for so it was years ago. That was changed—when, we have not been able to find out, nor why. The constitution does not read that way now. This is the rule as it stands now in article VII, section 6, page 17: "Choosing Delegates.—Previous to each convention the school shall choose one or more delegates to represent it, and if necessary shall instruct him or them how to vote." There is no limit to the number—the whole school and then some might be chosen.

It is now proposed to amend article VII, section 6, page 17 as follows: Strike out the words "one or more" and add to the section the words, "The basis of representation shall be one delegate for every ten members or a fraction of more than five."

In district rules, article VII, section 2, it is specified that "All duly elected delegates shall be considered members of the district convention." The above-mentioned amendment if adopted would show clearly on what basis delegates are elected.

Mass Convention.—Amend article X, page 12, by inserting after the word change the words, that convention, making it read: "Any district association convention, where the membership of the district is under 1,000, may upon a two thirds vote of the delegates present, change that convention from delegate to mass convention."

Some few districts have thought a convention had the authority to change the rule or practice of the district for all time to come and have decided to ever afterward hold mass convention. The superintendent has been asked to rule on this, and we would like the section to be amended so as to relieve us of any such necessity hereafter.

Member of Library Board.—Make all references to member of library board conform to the terms used by the Latter Day Saint Library Commission. That body chooses a librarian, and in district and local organization the board chooses a librarian, who may or may not be a member of the board. It is therefore improper to call our representative on the commission or board the "Librarian."

Amend article V, section 6, page 5, by striking out "Librarian.—The Librarian" and inserting instead thereof, "Member of Library Commission.—This officer." Making it read, "This officer shall be a member," etc.

Amend article III, section 1, page 9, pertaining to districts by striking out "librarian," and inserting instead thereof, "member of library board."

Amend article IV, section 6, page 11, by striking out "District Librarian.—The librarian," and inserting instead thereof, "Member of Library Board.—This officer," making it read, "This officer shall be a member," etc.

Amend article I, page 13, officers of schools, by striking out "librarian" and inserting instead thereof, "member of library board."

Amend article II, section 6, page 14, by striking out "Librarian.—The librarian," and inserting instead thereof, "Member of Library Board.—This officer," making it to read, "This officer shall be a member," etc.

The above are so apparent, it ought to take less time to pass them than is required to write them. Then all references to the subject in our leaflets of instruction and blanks could be altered to read correctly.

"MAKE A BUSINESS OF IT."

That's the attitude which Bishop Carmichael thinks all auxiliary workers should assume towards Sunday school and Religio efforts. It is natural for a bishop to look at it thus, and he is right. Too many have been actuated by a sort of subconscious notion that we should not exert ourselves much on the Sabbath because, you know, and we have always been taught, it is a day of rest.

Do we sometimes encourage our children in the thought that they need not regard Sunday school lessons seriously—that is, to be really studied and mastered the same as everyday lessons? If there should be an attempt to make the Sunday school a real school, then this subconscious thought takes charge and rebels against any hard work on the Sabbath. And there is no thought of compelling in such case, as it is a principle of our spiritual work that the Lord requires a willing mind; he loves voluntary service.

When asked what they should do that they might "work the works of God," Jesus answered, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." "The Sabbath was made for man," he said. When we turn to the original commandments to learn the purpose and benefit man is to derive from Sabbath observance, we see that physical and muscular labor is comprehended—nothing said of the mental and spiritual labors. It is a work to believe in God and Christ's program. That is our Sunday work. Let us, like the Master, make a business of it—"wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" This was his idea when but a lad of twelve.

A SUNDAY JOB

There are two ways in which we as officers and teachers can make this work a Sunday job. One is expressed in a letter we read recently from a newly elected local superintendent, in which he deplored the low condition of the school. Said he, "I cannot help the neglect of the past. I shall try to do the superintendent's work in a manner that it should be done. I took the work because of the inability of others to consent to do it. I am weighed down with other church work so that it is really a sacrifice to be superintendent. Nevertheless, I am tired of this half-hearted service, and I want our school to be able to say they have at least one live one. I shall do as Bishop Carmichael says, Make a business of it." The first thing he set about doing was to get rid of the "slackers," as he calls them, the people who regarded it as a day-of-rest-take-it-easy job—a Sunday job. This superintendent looks upon a Sunday job in a different light. We want more of his kind, and we have them, as witness the following.

HOW THEY WOKE UP

A certain district had once attained the distinction of being first grade according to the standard. They fell back because the schools settled down into that smug self-gratulation which says, We've won our laurels. We have the kind of Sunday school machinery that will run itself. We have a library board, home class department, normal and cradle roll superintendents. What more can be expected of us? Why, we've qualified. But the superintendent did not look at it that way. Brother officers said he expected too much.

About that time a new set of report blanks for local superintendents to report to district head were put in his hands. These began to bring in some facts that confirmed the superintendent in his fears. He tabulated some and took them to convention. This is the way he reported, purposely leaving it till the last, just before the election of officers.

We have met this afternoon for a purpose: To lubricate the machinery of the district; to approve or disapprove of what has been done; formulate new plans of action; to get a new vision of our work; that with the enthusiasm and zeal engendered here we may go home with a more definite idea toward accomplishing our ideal; and if so be that we have no ideal, to realize one while here. Let us keep in mind this purpose and work toward that while here. The reports—are they the kind we want or ought to have? If not, give us your help in making those who report realize just what we want. Take notes and make a clear report to your school.

You are to elect officers this afternoon. Have you given it any thought before coming here? Have you looked over the field to decide whether there is another who could fill the office, whatever it may be, now occupied by one who may be doing good work but who ought to be released? Are you going to vote for a friend or a worker? Let us take the Lord into our confidence, and this convention will then do that which will be a help to us now and benefit in time to come.

It would be pleasant to tell you of the fine record we have made the past year, and to tickle your ears with smooth sayings; but unfortunately that cannot be done. We have been lulled to sleep by a false feeling of security, and I feel that I realize the meaning of the ten virgins as I view the schools, only it is difficult to select the five which are awake.

We have rested too long on the reputation which others built up for us, and we have not kept pace with the needs of our schools. Anything that has life needs to be sustained to keep it alive. We have not been sustaining the Sunday school with sufficient nourishment, and to-day it is in a weakened condition because of our neglect. I might ask you what you have contributed to the support of your school, but I have your answers on these reports which I hold in my hand. (Explanation of new reports followed.)

Listen! Out of ten schools, only one holds a teachers' meeting weekly; one has weekly meeting of primary teachers only; two hold them once in three months, in one the superintendent visits teachers and talks over plans, while four hold no such meetings. All except one school have no teacher-training going on. In all except one the library is inactive with no results, and in that one only some. Only four expressed a desire to have help from the district officers.

I see many of you look startled. When you were visited, you put the best forward, made the officer welcome, being too polite to tell him you did not need him, but you wrote it to me in black and white in these reports. Now if you have no confidence in the district officers, that is easily remedied by electing a new set. If it is not that, we must examine our work and determine where we have failed. Personally, I do not believe we are self-satisfied, nor that we have lost confidence in the district officers; but that we are not fully awake to the importance of our work. Aren't you looking upon it as an easy Sunday job, rather than a real job in which you have got to make good?

It's easy to refer to the Sunday school in respectful and somewhat sentimental terms, such as, the nursery of the church. But we must remember that the job of being nursemaid therein is no sinecure. It takes a man or a woman for the work of caring for the young of the church, and incidentally for those not so young. If you think of the Sunday school as an organization which meets once a week for the purpose of studying a lesson half an hour, singing a few songs, taking up a collection and then having a social chat, your work will be on that basis, and the school will not grow, because it will have nothing to feed upon. That has been our stumblingblock—we have lacked vision and the work has been amateurish. Let us consider

A FEW REMEDIES

Keep standard of excellence before you all the time. Work for one point and then another until all have been met. You have done it; it can be done again. We are not discouraged because we have failed. Why, its worth failing to see the determination written on these faces—now you are awake. The imperative need of the district has long been that we wake up and act in the living present, "heart within and God o'erhead."

Superintendents, ask yourself these questions, and don't let up until you can answer them satisfactorily: What does my job mean to me? What one qualification have I for holding that job? Find one thing you can do in that office and build up from that. How can I improve myself? What shall I study? Consult with your librarian and insist that there shall be in your library some books which you and every teacher ought to read. Go into the book stores as opportunities present and look over books on Sunday school lines. Ask at your town library for books on religious pedagogy (don't shy at that word; it means telling how to teach intelligently) and keep asking for them. By and by they will get them.

Read such books as, How to Conduct a Sunday School, by Marion Lawrence; Modern Sunday school in Principle and Practice, by Cope; any good book on adolescence, of which there are many. Secretaries should read, The Village and Country Sunday School, by Fox. Study the Teen Age books in teachers' meetings. Join parents' and teachers' associations. Go out and learn what the world is doing along educational lines and make use of whatever is adaptable to your school.

GETTING SOMEWHERE

Let the teachers' meeting be a live thing and you will not want to miss it. It's because you get nowhere that no one wants a ride. To-day we do not want to travel in an old merry-go-round, where we get on and off when we wish, always going round and round in a circle. This is the day of the twentieth century limited, which starts from a definite place at a definite time and gets to a definite place on time. Plan your program of exercises a month at a time and avoid repeating. Let the various classes or departments feel they are helping in this. In my own school I visited the junior class. Lesson was on the apostasy. I questioned them about it and asked them to tell the school next Sunday what they had learned. One little girl drew on the board the diagram taken from the Quarterly. A boy told how we received the manuscript, by a roll he had prepared; and two others told of the martyrs. It took about ten minutes, but it meant much to the children, and I ventured to say they will remember that lesson for years to come.

AIM AT SOMETHING

Two lads live near me. Last spring each was given a bow and arrow. One began at once to erect a target and aim at it; the other aimlessly shot his arrows. This fall the first boy told me he could hit the center of the target three out of five times. The other boy is still shooting arrows. To me that tells so much; and I have to ask myself the question, What am I aiming at? Here is something we must aim at as a Sunday school association.

1. Conversion of pupils. They must be rooted and grounded in faith by precept and example from officers and teachers. The Sunday school is a branch of missionary work. We are seeing that now.

2. Education is the Sunday school's province.

3. Perpetuation. The Sunday school must keep its members and train them in lines of useful activity. This means normal classes, for how can you train except you have been taught? There needs to be training classes for our coming officers and teachers.

HOW CAN IT BE DONE?

Cooperation, all pulling together, is going to bring us up to first grade again, and it is going to be first grade in truth. We are not going to merely cover the law by saying we have a library board, but a working force—Librarians who are making good; superintendents who know why they are superintendents; those who are aiming at something, not merely shooting arrows.

In a few weeks the superintendents will be called together and we shall meet as do the church quorums of the district, to study our problems. Meanwhile, get to work as soon as you leave this building. Talk with your pastor; your associate workers. Begin that reconstruction.

Pastors with a Sunday school vision; superintendents with a Sunday school purpose; officers with a Sunday school plan; teachers with Sunday school power, will give us pupils with

Sunday school interest, praise, and spirituality; which means that the Sunday school is going to fulfill its mission by training children to be Latter Day Saints. And that is our reason for existing.

One thing that made this superintendent so bold was because he was sure of his ground, and the detailed reports that had been sent in for six months were the basis of his certainty. This is better than guessing or talking at random about conditions.

Easter Lesson for Juniors

By an oversight the Easter lesson in the Junior Quarterly this year has been placed on same date as it was in 1913. It is printed the last lesson in this quarter. Teachers who want the Easter lesson to fall on its proper date can begin the first April lesson on March 26, in place of the one printed, and assign the Easter lesson for April 23. Collect your Quarterlies and give them out again for the Easter lesson the week before. In this way the theme for April will be kept in order. If ordered in proper time, April lessons will be in hand by March 26.

Burnt His Typewriter

Elder A. E. Warr, missionary in the southeastern mission, had the misfortune of losing his faithful little Corona typewriter when the Saints' church was burnt down at Bluff Creek, during a conference last fall. The brother has the work of district president, district superintendent of Sunday schools, normal superintendent for the State, as well as missionary correspondence to attend to. The necessity of keeping carbon copies of much of his writing and reports makes the work very laborious by hand and takes time from other work that could be saved using the typewriter. A new machine would cost fifty dollars, but a second-hand one might be gotten for about thirty-five dollars. It would be a kind boost to the work and to the brother if this loss could be replaced.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

Children's Home Doings

We are very glad to inform the friends of the home that another good brother met the proposition of the brother we mentioned some time ago who offered to duplicate any amount that any person would give towards the debt up to five hundred dollars. This pays another thousand dollars and has reduced our obligations to a comparatively low figure. The treasurer will be ready to give exact figures by the time we appear in this column again. Let the good work go on however and let us wipe out the whole debt by the time we report. Let us commence the next conference year clear of debt so we will have no interest to raise. Then if we keep up our efforts there will be no trouble in meeting current expenses, and maybe make the much needed improvements.

Our family is increasing, four having arrived to make their homes with us since our last issue.

Never before has there been so much interest taken by the children in the work of the home. Some of the older girls are taking interest and pleasure in the work. The matron informs us that the girls are learning to cook, sew, and do fancy work, and are getting very proficient. Two of the older girls arose, one morning at least, without being called and prepared breakfast for the whole family, one of them making biscuit which the matron pronounced first class, and Mother Briggs is a competent judge, as she is one of the best of cooks. The boys, too, are doing well, but have not the opportunity that the girls have to show their usefulness, as it is not the best season for outdoor work, but with coming of spring we expect to see the old home place take on a neat and tidy appearance, and see a garden growing which will be admired by the whole community.

The trustees feel greatly encouraged and expect to see this noble band of boys and girls under the leadership of Father and Mother Briggs make the home self-supporting so far as fruit and vegetables are concerned.

With the blessing and favor of the Lord the Children's Home will yet rank as one of the flourishing institutions of the church. The time of three of the trustees will expire at the next conference, viz: Bishop Roberts, his counselor, Oscar Anderson, and Sister Minnie B. Nicholson. Without presuming to dictate who should be chosen to succeed them, we hope we will be excused for saying that they have each done well, and nothing would please the holdovers more than to have them continue with us.

PLEASANTON, IOWA, December 7, 1915.

Editors Herald: A desire comes to me to tell of God's goodness. Prior to my sickness in February of this year, I told my husband that if I ever became ill I desired to heed the admonition of James, where he said, If there be any sick, let them send for the elders, etc. I had congestion of the right lung in February, and was raised by God's power alone. Although I was near death's door, I never thought of dying. I have received many blessings indeed through prayer and administration.

The Spirit of God has borne witness to me many times that this is his work. That the Adversary is at work, sometimes right in the church to destroy all good, has also been manifested. It behooves us therefore, as Saints, to "always have his Spirit," that we might be able to know right from wrong, yea, able to know what to do under all circumstances.

A series of meetings have lately been held here. J. A. Gillen preached the first night. The Spirit was with him in power. Meetings were discontinued, but many inside as well as outside of the fold are inquiring if we are not going to have more services.

I believe we should all be as anxiously engaged in spiritual things as we are in temporal things. We often let a little opposition keep us from performing things pertaining to the spiritual; but let opposition come pertaining to temporal matters and we will wade through anything to do what we think we ought to do. Saints, this should not be.

I feel to commend Brother Farrell for the work he has done editing the Religio Quarterly. In the lesson regarding fruit in season, the definition is that a season is a period of time, not very long. I believe as my husband said, that the Lord meant what he said. The same is true with reference to the statement, Strong drink is not for the belly, but for the washing of the body. Some say the Lord meant alcohol was not to be used as a beverage. He says, Be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be effectual by your example. If we begin drinking the accursed stuff for medicine, we may want a little when we do not need medicine; and one drink often calls for another. I am teaching my pupils not to use alcoholics as medicine, and believe I am on the safe side.

Please remember me and my husband, also those here who are outside the fold. I believe in time many will be brought to the glorious gospel.

Editors Herald: I wish my many friends to know of my whereabouts, and that I am still in the land of the living. I am located near Vale, a small inland town in Butte County, South Dakota.

Brother Rudolph Etzenhouser has just closed a three weeks' meeting in our schoolhouse. He had a splendid hearing and made many friends to the cause. Some were deeply interested in the angel's message. Brother Etzenhouser is a power, and on the Book of Mormon theme I have never heard him equaled by anyone. The people were spellbound as they listened to the story of the marvelous work and a wonder. Some murmured, others learned doctrine, while the meek increased their joy in the Lord. We are hopeful that some will soon come into the kingdom.

My heart yearns for the companionship of Saints, and I often think of and pray for my dear associates at Santa Ana, California. May God bless these with all others of like precious faith.

Ever praying for the onward march of truth, I am, as ever,

Editors Herald: I was confirmed in the Lutheran Church when I was a boy. I many times asked God to help and direct me. A friend loaned me a Book of Mormon, and this and the letters in the HERALD and Ensign convinced me that this work was of God.

I was baptized by Charles Fry, December 23, 1909. I do not regret the step taken. I think it is the best thing I ever did in my life. I once saw Brother Berve in a dream or vision. I afterwards saw him at a reunion at Moline. My trials, disappointments, and burdens seem very heavy at times. I ask your prayers that I may receive God's blessings, and always be found faithful.

DES MOINES, IOWA, December 7, 1915.

Editors Herald: I rejoice in the latter-day work every day of my life. I am thankful that God was merciful to me and led me to a knowledge of the truth. I long to lead some one else to the truth. There are souls dying all around us who know nothing about God or his glorious gospel. Why cannot every one of us wake up, put on the whole armor of the Lord, and strive to lead each his neighbor to see the truth?

Some Saints seem to think the missionaries can do it all. If we would take our HERALDS and visit our neighbors and converse on the subject of religion, we have no idea what good we would do. A family recently moved into our neighborhood. I went to visit them and took some Sunday school papers to the children and a HERALD to the lady. She seemed pleased with the good things in the HERALD, and glad to get it. She told me she had almost quit going to her church, for every time she went she became more and more disgusted.

Now, each family of Saints might find some soul hungering for the truth, if they would only put forth the effort. There are many families of the Saints who do not take the church papers. I think these are making a great mistake. I know families can become more spiritual and interested in the gospel by securing the church literature. It would seem that all would wake up and take notice of the awful things coming in the earth. May God bless his work.

MARY SMITH.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, December 12, 1915.

Editors Herald: In your last issue I read an editorial on spiritualism, the title of which was, "Is there anything in Spiritualism?" I do not want to comment on the editorial by any means,—I only want to give my views on the subject from a Bible standpoint.

In the first place, there are two great powers in existence, and have been since the rebellion in paradise; since that time it has been the object of the lesser to overthrow the greater, and it has been the weakness of man to give way to the deceptive spirit, or the influence of Satan. As God inspires and uses man to carry on his work on the earth, Satan does likewise. This is patent to every Bible student.

Paul tells us that Satan has power to transform himself into an angel of light. By this we see he has wonderful power. There is beyond a possibility of a doubt, something in spiritualism. If it were not so, I could not with a positive knowledge believe the gospel. This may sound strange to those who have not made this a study.

Look at the case of the witch of Endor and Saul, king of the Jews. Now it is folly to think that Samuel the prophet appeared to Saul and the witch, when God had refused to answer Saul's inquiries as to the result of the next day's battle. Can a Bible reader believe that one of God's honored prophets would come out of paradise and tell Saul the result? We don't give Satan credit for what he knows. He is somewhat of a prophet himself.

Now when Saul went to inquire of the medium of Endor, who was one of Satan's inspired agents, Satan appeared to the woman in the person of Samuel, and told her what Saul wanted to know, and he also talked with Saul. Satan is branded as a liar. The Lord said he was the father of lies, and we believe, yes, we know, that he could be the father of lies and still tell the truth when it suits him to do so. I believe he tells as much truth as some men I know. Be this as it may, Satan told Saul the result of the next day's battle, at least.

The Bible says that Isaiah, one of the major prophets, had to contend with spiritualism in his day. God's people, the Jews, many of them had run off after wizards. In the eighth chapter of Isaiah, Inspired Version, he says "Bind up the testimony, seal up the law among my disciples. . . . And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter; should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to hear from the dead?"

This shows that even God's people, the Jews, resorted to the mediums for information when they wanted to find out about their dead friends. Satan knew what they wanted to know, and he told them through his inspired agents. The dead cannot come back, the righteous would not deceive, and the wicked dead are bound in the prison house and could not come back to talk with the living if they wanted to.

There are many fake mediums performing wonderful things under the guise of spiritualism, just as there are false teachers claiming to represent the Lord, and one is about as deceptive as the other. Satan, while in possession of a man's body, spoke to Jesus, and said, "Why are you come to torment us before our time?" He knew who Jesus was, and what his mission work was. He was also able to enter paradise, and falsely accuse the brethren. But since the Lord had trodden the wine press alone, and overcome, and had risen triumphant over death, hell and the grave, Satan cannot go back there. Now he must do all his work among men on earth.

On one occasion a maid who had a spirit of divination followed Paul and Silas several days and cried out saying, "These men are the servants of the most high God, which proclaim unto you the way of life and salvation." Now this maid was one of Satan's inspired agents, and she was telling the people the truth, but it was detrimental to the work of God's servants, and Paul rebuked the evil spirit and he had to go, because Paul represented the greater power.

Now when Satan wants to deceive he always comes to us with a lie in the mouth of his agents. Many wise people say that there is nothing in spiritualism but sleight of hand tricks done by man's wisdom. This is as far from the truth as Satan was when he lied to Mother Eve in the Garden of Eden.

Uriah Smith, a noted Seventh-day Adventist author, in one of his works, says that the damnable doctrine of a conscious existence after death is responsible for the works of spiritualism. He is another wise man deceived by Satan. Some fifteen years ago a confirmed spiritualist came to me and said he could show that there was little difference in what he believed and what I was teaching. When I inquired why he believed spiritualism, he said, because he could learn of the condition of the dead. I told him the Bible would tell him that. He said he did not believe the Bible. I told him that Paul said because they had no love for truth, God would send them strong delusions that they might believe a lie, and be damned. He has never mentioned spiritualism to me since.

Now in conclusion let me say, if all mankind would believe God's word, spiritualism would be a thing of the past. Satan knew that they would not believe it, so he inspires his agents to give them what they will believe. Satan can work miracles, and does do it, and men are being deceived by them, because they won't believe God's word. Let all remember Moses and Aaron before Pharaoh.

Paul said that the Spirit says expressly that in the latter times some shall fall away from the truth, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, through the hypocrisy of men that speak lies. (Abbott's revision of the New Testament.)

Let us all take God at his word and we will not be deceived by spiritualism.

Yours for all truth,

1447 Lyon Street.

BOISE, IDAHO, December 15, 1915.

Editors Herald: We are often told that we must try and do something to help the work of the Lord along. Perhaps others are doing what I know nothing about. Some might be doing little things which would appear small or simple to me, yet which would perhaps in the sight of God be greater and purer than all I might do in the service of the Lord.

In Colossians 3: 15, Inspired Translation, we read that the peace of God should rule in our hearts, to the which we also are called in one body. Second Peter 1: 16 says, We have not followed cunningly devised fables in making known unto you the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty.

We might here raise the question, What is expected of me, and what can I do to make myself useful to the church? In this connection I suggest that we seek the Lord in earnest prayer, asking him to lead, guide and direct us; that we have faith and be patient; scatter a few words of kindness every day; encourage the discouraged and help place the glad message of the Lord before the world, either by tracts, books or word of mouth; lend a helping hand to the needy; be slow to rebuke, quick to strengthen; remember our obligations to the Lord; let the little seed we sow each day, though it be small in amount, be pure, trusting in the Lord who will bless all.

Your brother in Christ,

F. W. BROSE.

ERHARD, MINNESOTA, December 15, 1915.

Editors Herald: In renewing for the HERALD I wish to say that we enjoy the letters in the HERALD very much. I have been a member of the church for fifteen years. The Lord has truly blessed me and comforted me many times, and kept my feet from many pitfalls.

My parents differed in their views of religion, one being an Adventist, the other a Roman Catholic. In their declining years both were brought to a knowledge of the gospel of Christ. They have now gone to their reward.

How true are the prophecies referring to the perilous times of the last days. It behooves us to be on guard lest we be overcome by the pleasures of this world and the wiles of the Evil One. Ever praying for the uplift of humanity, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

WILLIAM N. CORLESS.

PORTSMOUTH, IOWA, December 28, 1915.

Editors Herald: I look forward to the weekly visits of the HERALD and enjoy the good letters and sermons very much. I am interested in the spiritual and financial welfare of the Saints. I have just returned from a visit to Hamilton, Missouri, and the Oakdale Branch, four miles south of Hamilton. I was pleased to find a good lively band of Saints here, both old and young, interested in the church and Sunday school. While there I purchased a farm for a home. Brother Coleman Snider is president of the branch, and is ably assisted by Brother J. T. Ford.

Wishing success to all the Saints, I am,

Your brother in bonds,

J. H. BULLARD.

News from Missions

Idaho

We came to Idaho for the first time two years ago. It was a pleasant time we had with the Saints and friends in this fine State. Not being permitted to come back last year, we lost some fine opportunities for doing good. However, when we came back this year we found many glad to see us, and not only that, but ready to do anything they could to help the work along. The report from Idaho this year is, progress. The work is moving, not only from a spiritual standpoint alone, but from a financial standpoint as well.

We are glad to report such favorable conditions in this district, and believe that the effort that is being put forth by some of our live wires is in the right direction. I like to see the young of the church taking hold of the work.

Of course while we have so many things to say in favor of the work here, we can also see where many mistakes have been made. We hope to be able to report a better reunion next year than the one past. According to Webster, it was a success. The people were there all right, the largest attendance we have ever had. But from the definition put upon the word reunion by Latter Day Saints, I am afraid it was not a success. I am sure we will profit by the mistakes that we made this year, and come with the determination to make it a grand success next year.

We should be the happiest people on earth. Knowing that we have the sanction of our heavenly Father, and that we are representing principles that can be defended, who should be more glad than we to tell others of this gospel of peace? I can say, as I hear one of our defenders say one time, that one hour under the sweet influence of the Holy Spirit, is worth more than a lifetime of worldly pleasures.

We have held what we would call several very successful meetings this year. In several places where we preached two years ago, we find the people more anxious to hear the gospel.

Getting the people to come and hear has been one of our worst drawbacks in this field. When the missionary can get Saints to cooperate with him, it gives him encouragement to go ahead. Anyone passing through this part will receive a welcome if he will stop off and hunt our people up at Pocatello, or at Blackfoot.

I think mistakes have been made by too many of our people moving to Independence, to Zion, as soon as they became members of the church, leaving a good place where they were making a good living and means to prepare the way for them to go to Zion when the time came for them to go, and going to a place and expecting to go to work where there are five men for every job. I believe education along this line will do more for our people than along some other lines. The Doctrine and Covenants tells us to have all things prepared beforehand. There is, I believe an awakening among the Saints along this line.

I have enjoyed my work among the people here this year. Several have been baptized in this district; many are deeply interested in the work. We have a series of meetings near Rigby, Idaho. The house was full for two whole weeks, and the spirit of liberty was there to help us in presenting the word. When we left it was with many invitations to, "Come back again," which we hope to do as soon as we possibly can. We only have one family living there belonging to the church, Brother Jasper Jennings's family. We wish to commend him for the good, exemplary life he and his family have lived. It is a pleasure to go to a place and hear the people of the community say that, That man (speaking of one of our members), is one of the best citizens of our neighborhood.

Even though we are engaged in our work away out here in the West, to the extent that we cannot write to all of our friends in Ohio, and West Virginia, and other places where we have labored, we haven't forgotten them and their kindness to us. We take this means of letting all know that the gospel is still dear to us, and that we still have a desire to do what we can to tell others of it.

Trusting that we may all do our part to bring about better conditions, I am Still fighting,

H. E. WINEGAR.

News from Branches

Wichita, Kansas

Wichita and surrounding territory has had a prosperous year. Brother W. F. Burns and family of Waterloo, Iowa, have moved to Wichita, and will take an active part in the work of the branch and auxiliaries. We are glad to have them with us.

Brother and Sister C. E. Truman received a hearty vote of thanks at the Sunday school business meeting for a new organ and book case, both being greatly needed. Brother E. L. Barraclough is president of the branch for the ensuing year.

Our sacrament meeting was one of comfort and hope to the Saints. The branch is in good spiritual condition, love and harmony being generally in evidence. The Religio home class is proving a blessing to all. Every Saint a home student is our aim. Three classes in as many different parts of the city are applying themselves diligently to the lessons of the quarter. Some nonmembers are attending.

Just now we are wishing very much that some real Latter Day Saint, who is also a 'cellist, would move to Wichita and help in the organization of an orchestra. Why not visit Wichita during the third annual convention of Kansas live stock men, February 8 to 10, and stay over the following Sunday and worship with the Saints here? We meet at 116 North Elizabeth, and will give you a welcome.

Brother J. Arthur Davis has been with us during the week and will, if the weather moderates, remain another week to conduct meetings. He was accompanied by Brother N. E. Young, of Pittsburg, Kansas, who went at once to Wilmore, Kansas, to open a two weeks' meeting.

Last Sunday Brother J. E. Vanderwood preached an excellent sermon, giving instruction to the Saints. Monday night was occupied by Brother A. C. Martin, of Independence, with his usual fervor. Brethren Vanderwood and Martin were en route for their mission fields. Next week we expect Brother T. C. Kelley, after which he will preach at other points.

It is a little early for such a reminder, but perhaps if you knew it in time you could arrange to drive through and camp at the Southern Kansas reunion to be held at Wichita next August. Further information upon request, and perhaps without request, if you watch the HERALD and Ensign carefully. We had a good reunion last year, and are working and hoping for and expecting a better one next year.

IDA H. STEWART.

1554 South Emporia.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

We are a branch of one hundred and fifty recorded members, a number not living here.

By last year's report we lost three members by death. Two of these were dear old sisters, who united with the church when this branch was in its infancy.

Though but a child then, and in no way connected with the church, I well remember that little band of Saints, and how devoted they were to each other, and to their church. I oftentimes wondered why it was that they were so devoted to that little white church on the bank of the canal. Since that time many changes have taken place; most of that little band have gone to their reward, and I have been made to understand why they were so interested in their church. I, too, love to go to that little chapel and meet with God's people.

During the past year we were visited by Brethren William Lewis, G. T. Griffiths, U. W. Greene, James McConaughy, John Carlisle, and our district president, Brother A. E. Manchester, receiving much spiritual food through them.

Our district conference will convene at this place February 12 and 13, to which we are all looking forward for a good spiritual time.

We hold Sunday school at 9 a. m., prayer and testimony meeting at 10.15, young people's prayer meeting at 6 p. m., and preaching services at 7 p. m., prayer meeting on Wednesday evening, Religio on Friday evening. We also have a ladies' aid society, the members of which are always willing to help the branch along in every way they can.

We have a nice lot of young people in our branch, some who are quite active in the work. The Lord has been with them in their prayer meetings, and they have been greatly blessed. Judging from the number of little buds in our primary and junior classes, in a few more years we will have a still larger number of young people. May the Lord help us to tenderly guide their footsteps, that we may be able to keep them all in the fold as they grow to more mature years.

My only son is in the United States Navy, and is at present at Colombo, Ceylon. From there he goes to Hong Kong, China. Many times the question comes to me, Oh, where is my wandering boy to-night? No one but a mother can realize what this means to me. But I have placed him in God's care, trusting that if it is his will, he will bring him safe home again. If the Brooklyn should come into a port where any of our foreign missionaries are located, will they please go on board and inquire for Russell Darst. He would be glad to see any of our people.

May we all work together for the one great cause, is my prayer.

Your sister in the gospel,

ETTA J. DARST.

Flint, Michigan

We are still in the conflict for truth, and are happy to say that we are still enjoying the blessings of God.

The work in this place is "Onward and upward." There seems to be a great awakening in the people of the world, as well as the people of God, striving to become followers of the meek and lowly Christ in very deed.

We were pleased to have our young Brother Grice of the Chatham, Ontario, District with us during the holidays. Brother Grice is highly esteemed by the Saints of Flint, and we surely enjoyed the talks, sermons, and his pleasing manner of telling the gospel story. His time for departure to his field of labor came all too soon, and with reluctance we bade him good-by, with the prayer on our lips that the good shepherd would continue to bless his labors of love and sacrifice.

We must not forget to mention that we were also pleased to have the association of our young Brother Yeager, who also is working for the Master, in company with Brother Grice. He was called upon to assist in the Wednesday evening prayer service, and the instruction that he gave the Saints will not soon be forgotten.

Elder George W. Burt, president of the Central Michigan District, also paid us a visit the latter part of November. We were pleased to see his smiling face again. His chief object was the ordination of Brother Ernest Orton to the office of elder. Brother Orton is still with us, and is proving that he is one of those that the Lord has chosen.

Our Sunday school is doing nicely at present, and we are holding sessions in the south part of the city as well as in the church. Brother Orms is superintendent, and we believe he is the proper man for the office, having had experience in different schools before becoming acquainted with the "Angel's message."

The Religio is also advancing, there being three sessions held each week. We know this to be a grand work.

Indeed we must be doers of the word as well as hearers. Wishing success to all who are striving to serve the Master, I am,

In bonds,

CORRESPONDENT.

DELEGATE CREDENTIALS TO GENERAL CONFERENCE

Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, have been sent to secretaries of districts, stakes, and branches not in districts. Such officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their organizations at the General Conference of 1916 to the Church Secretary, as soon as practicable, that the report of the committee on credentials may be made up and printed before the opening of the conference, as required by conference action. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conference should be forwarded without delay, and of those yet to be appointed immediately after appointment. All credentials should be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the secretary of the body appointing, with name of such organization, place and date of conference or business meeting, is sufficient; separate, individual credentials to delegates are not necessary. Please insert "total membership" in all cases; also report if delegates are authorized to cast majority and minority vote in case of division and the full delegation not present.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the undersigned.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting" will be found in chapter 17 of the Rules of Order, with the exception that such rules have been amended to provide that the basis of representation shall be one delegate for every one hundred members.

Districts should take notice that fractional numbers—less than one hundred—do not entitle them to another delegate.

Branches having a membership of less than one hundred, when not included in districts, are entitled to one delegate.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

Quorum Notices

To Whom It May Concern: After consultation with the President of the church, I deem it important that the Quorum of Twelve convene at Independence, Missouri, on Wednesday, March 15, 1916, at 10 a. m. The place where the sessions will be held will be announced later. All matters requiring the attention of the traveling council should be addressed to John W. Rushton, 1522 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri, not later than March 10. Those who desire a mission appointment are requested to apply through the presidents of the respective missions. Please write to the ministers in general charge for blank applications. We feel that there is a great and grave responsibility resting upon the members of said council. Therefore, we solicit an interest in the prayers of all the Saints, that the Lord of the great harvest will abundantly bless by his Holy Spirit not only the Quorum of Twelve, but all the other councils that shall convene at Independence, Missouri, during the coming General Conference. We are looking forward to a grand conference.

Your brother and fellow servant in Christ,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS,

President of Quorum of Twelve.

Notice of Release

This is to give notice that Walter W. Chrestensen who was appointed to the Arkansas and Louisiana field has by his request been released from the missionary field for the balance of the conference year.

Requests for Prayers

Brother Quincy Anderson, Ozark, Missouri, who is sorely afflicted with hernia, requests prayers that he may recover without an operation.

Died

BONNOT.—Emaline Bonnot, born March 15, 1860; died at Kansas City, Missouri, January 8, 1916, of rheumatism and cancer of the stomach. Her sufferings was long and severe. Her loving husband and 3 sons, Thomas R., Arthur R., and Julius O., were with her nearly constantly, and did what they could. Her faith in God and the church was great. Death came to her a blessing and relief. Married J. A. Bonnot, Chester, Illinois, February 12, 1885. To them were born 7 children, 4 preceding her. Baptized February 8, 1890, by C. Saintclair. As per her request, services were conducted by F. C. Warnky, at the residence, 4806 East Sixth Street, assisted by D. F. Winn. Interment at Mount Washington Cemetery.

KEMP.—Frances Mary Goodsell, born May 17, 1841, Hastings, Sussex, England; died after a long and severe illness, November 18, 1915, Denver, Colorado. Married James Kemp, at the place of her birth, September 15, 1858. Came to America with her husband in 1862, being among the Saints who crossed the plains by ox team to Utah, under the impression that she was going to Zion. Joined the Reorganized Church in 1864, remaining faithful till the last. Through all of her suffering, she never wearied in her testimony for the gospel, and her pleadings with her children in her last days were to remain true to the faith. Settled at Conifer, Colorado, with her husband, July 4, 1879, with other pioneers, where she spent 35 years of her life. She sacrificed much for the spread of the gospel. Was the mother of 14 children, 10 of whom are living. Was ever a loving and dutiful mother, and a mother to those who were not her own, ready to answer every call. Lived a noble and pure life. Her sufferings were long, not realizing a peaceful moment during the year prior to her death, except for a few moments before she passed away, when she expressed that she was better, and asked her children and aged husband to be thankful when she had passed on. Deceased received many blessings and messages of the Spirit, and the promise of a crown of glory in the celestial kingdom. Services by Elder Nerrin, of Denver, by request of Sister Kemp. Miss Baird, of Golden, rendered beautifully "Face to face," "One sweetly solemn thought," and "God be with you." Interment in Conifer Cemetery, by the side of her youngest son, Roy, who preceded her 10 years. The funeral was largely attended, and the floral offerings were beautiful.

ROBERTSON.—James Earl Robertson, born at Pleasanton,

Iowa, July 17, 1885; died at Independence, Missouri, where he was taken for treatment after a nervous breakdown, December 17, 1915. Deceased lived an exemplary life. Was ordained an elder a few years ago, and did valiant service for the church. Was greatly loved. With his parents removed to Franklin, Nebraska, in 1902, where he has since resided. Since 1910 Earl spent much time at Yuma, Colorado, where he had a homestead. Leaves parents, Brother and Sister P. R. Robertson 2 brothers, Elder Edward F., and Harry, of Franklin; 3 sisters, Mrs. Maud Burgan, Hebron, Nebraska, Mrs. Nellie Brumbaugh, Franklin, Grace, at home. Services in Congregational church, Franklin, by J. R. Sutton, before a large congregation of sympathizing friends. Interment in Franklin Cemetery.

PREMOE.—Vernie J. C., infant son of William Earl and Maude Marie Premoe, born April 20, 1915; died January 16, 1916. Just before morning's gray dawn had been kissed away by the rising sun, this blossom from heaven's garden folded its tender petals and reposed in the arms of sweet sleep, while the spirit, the real child, returned to the Father of us all. Father, mother, brothers, William Theodore, Edward Joseph, and Ernie R. C., twin of the departed, grandparents, and many other relatives and friends are left to mourn, but not without hope. Services by O. R. Miller.

The times demand that you keep informed of each development in the history of the church. For the coming year you will need

The Saints' Herald

Every important branch of industry of to-day has its trade journal. The progressive business man must keep pace with the progress in his line.

Every Latter Day Saint should have access to the official publication of the church. The times demand that every member of the church be informed of the various movements of the church.

The building of the kingdom of God is the all-important task of the church to-day. We shall only be wise builders as we know the needs of the body.

The SAINTS' HERALD goes to the people laden with the best that can be secured by the writers of the church. There is doctrine and news and information. Various special departments cater to special needs, such as the musical, Sunday school, Woman's Auxiliary.

Occasionally we issue special magazine numbers, with a number of good illustrations and articles on special subjects, but every week there is something for the thoughtful reader.

It will be a real loss if you do not have the SAINTS' HERALD the coming year. Subscribe now.

In response to many requests from subscribers to the Stepping Stones, we are pleased to announce the publication of this popular serial in book form. There are 320 pages, in large type on good paper, cloth binding. Cover and inside illustrations. Price one dollar.

Those who have read any of the chapters will already know of its merit and want the book. Those who have not may be assured that it has much of special interest as a story that contains true-to-life experiences.

Sister Estella Wight, the author, has woven commonplace events, such as all of us know, into a pleasing story fabric which brings out many of our church doctrines in a convincing light.

The story was finished in the Christmas number of the Stepping Stones. The book is a very nice product of the printer's art. Order now.

NOT BY BREAD ALONE

(Synopsis of an address delivered at Graceland College by Elbert A. Smith.)

Man has this in common with the animals, that his comfort, even his existence, rests to a certain extent upon a material basis.

It may not be a very edifying spectacle to watch a vulture tearing at a carcass. Yet what essential difference is there between that and you and me picking at the corpse of a turkey or chicken?

The differences are mainly in detail. We wear clothing instead of feathers. We use knives and forks, plates and napkins, and some of us may even use finger bowls. Yet in essence the process is much the same. Eating is an animal function. We must eat to live.

We do not escape this unpleasant conclusion by cutting down our menu or restricting the number of our meals. In fact by so doing it may be made more obvious to us.

Your speaker tried the no-breakfast plan for a time. I soon discovered that I was becoming a pessimist; especially between the hours of nine a. m. and noon. One forenoon I seized my hat and went down town to a lunch counter. When I went to town the sky was overcast, and everyone scowled at me. When I returned the sun was shining, the birds were singing, and everyone had a smile on his face. I had become an optimist. I was in the mood to write an editorial on "Natural laws in the spiritual realm."

We do not escape the comparison that I have made by eliminating flesh foods from our diet. Still we dine with the animals. We eat wheat with the birds, oats with the horse, corn with the hogs.

We may mix this food in its most ethereal form, —and eat "angels' food"—the principle remains unchanged. (In passing I may remark that I fear many people eat angel's food in this life who will not get much of it in the next world.)

Man cannot live on moonshine and high ideals. The old recipe of faith and apple dumplings is a better mixture. We must dine every day with all animal creation,—with tigers, birds of prey, horses, sheep, swine.

Yet this thought need not be repulsive. Every natural function is wholesome and respectable, in its time and place.

Jesus Christ sanctified the social board when he ate honeycomb and broiled fish with his disciples after his resurrection.

He taught us to pray, "Our Father which art in heaven. Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread."

He prayed for the kingdom of heaven, a great spiritual concept, yet, in the next breath, said, "Give us this day our daily bread," give us this day, right now, the humble loaf of material bread on which life depends,—the loaf made from the same grain that the beasts and birds eat.

He also said that man should not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of our heavenly Father.

He recognized the true nature of man. For man stands with his feet in the mire and his head in the clouds.

Held to earth by his physical nature, he is wedded to heaven by his spiritual being.

Created just a little lower than the angels on the one hand, on the other he is just a little higher than the animals, and performs with them all the animal functions.

Feeding with the animals daily on material food; he also partakes of spiritual food with God and the angels on high.

This is the lesson that Jesus wished to present to us. We are dependent upon bread for life. We should receive our portion with thanksgiving and eat it with dignity, though by doing so we acknowledge the claims of physical nature.

But there is something higher than this. We may rise above the animals if we will. We are not forever chained to their humble board. Too many men never aspire to anything better. They are of the earth, earthy. They are satisfied with animal gratification, and do not in reality rise above the animals.

Jesus wants us to partake of spiritual things: intelligence, truth, light, liberty, religious freedom, moral freedom, intellectual freedom, economic freedom.

We must live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God. Every good and perfect gift cometh down from him, who is the Father of light.

WHO SLIPPED THE CABLE?

OUR COMPLIMENTS TO MR. SHOOK

We have just learned of the dire calamity which has overtaken the church in the publication of Mr. Shook's books in criticism of our faith. In a private letter to one of our brethren remotely located, Reverend Shook writes:

My advice to you is to read my books just as soon as you can. . . . Let your people get busy. They have a job on their hands. Already a number of their elders have slipped the cable through reading them, and some others are trembling in the balance.

This sudden and rude awakening to the menace of Shookism recalls the lines of the HERALD Editor, written some months ago in the seclusion of his sanctum, far away from the noise and heat of battle. Poor Editor, little did he know of the coming storm to break in its fury on our secluded outposts, else he would never have rid himself of the lines:

A fellow named Shook, much mistaken,
Shook the church like a rat,
(Neal puts it like that).
But none stopped to look
At this little man Shook—
And the church never knew Shook had shaken.

It is kind of this gentleman to inform our people in obscure places of the distress in which the eldership of the church has been thrown by his mighty attack. He is a little careful, however, in the matter of details—as to who and how many have slipped, or are trembling; and for the very good reason that being without an array of such elders he is without details.

This little departure from ordinary ministerial veracity prepares our friend for a graver offense. Hear him:

With this I will close, assuring you and all Latter Day Saints of my personal friendship. They are a good people but deceived by their leaders.

Mr. Shook would persuade the Saints that while they are a wholesome people, they are deceived by an unscrupulous leadership—present as well as former—a compliment to the cunning and intelligence of the leadership, but not flattering to the people thus deluded.

This—the slandering of men living and dead—is a method so often resorted to and so often answered that it need not be further considered here other than to say it evidences a lack of better fighting material.

This instance, with others, reminds one of the old judge who on advising his young friend just beginning the practice of law, said: If you have the law on your side, plead the law. If you have the facts but not the law, plead the facts. If you have neither law nor facts, go after the other fellow.

In this case, as in others, Mr. Shook no doubt thinks he has the advantage of attending to the other fellow in his absence.

It probably flatters the Reverend's vanity to indulge in such peeka-boo tactics. He certainly cannot expect to go far with a propaganda of bald and unsupported assertion and accusation.

If Mr. Shook had brought forth anything new and original in his works there might be something for him to boast of. How he can groom himself in self-satisfaction, having only reiterated matter as old as the fight on the cause, and so stale as to be without flavor; and having maliciously maligned the leaders of the faith he attacks, is a matter that can perhaps be best accounted for in the light of his desire for notoriety and reward.

If it were not for his exaggerated egotism, Mr. Shook, after exposure of the meanness of his line of attack, would no doubt, if it were possible, "slip the cable." He cannot, however, loose his hold on a thing on which he has never held a death grip. Hence when he lets go his fight on our faith, as our brother has so neatly expressed, we will be none the wiser, not really having known of the attack.

If one feels that this little tale should not have so sad an ending, let it be remembered that Mr. Shook's books will lengthen the long list of works against the faith of latter days. Being rather attractively bound, they will appear well on the shelves. And last, and perhaps least, bearing the name Shook, they may suggest that the "tower of 'Mormonism'" is tottering.

AN EDUCATION FOR EVERYONE

[The Graceland College authorities make the following announcement with reference to a new department just established and in which many HERALD readers will be interested.—EDITORS.]

In this age of the world when "efficiency" is the watchword, the individual himself is responsible in nearly every case for the position which he occupies. He may have for his vocation just that standard of work for which he has developed a working capacity. No longer is the man considered a valuable asset to a community if he merely has the time and inclination to get his bread and butter without contributing something to society. This something must be intelligent service of some kind, physical, mental, moral, or spiritual. He who gives the most lives the most!

How shall we become efficient workers in the multiple avenues of service that are open to the twentieth century man and woman? That is our question! By consistent study to gain knowledge, and by the application of the knowledge thus gained in our daily lives.

The old argument that "experience is the best teacher" may be overdone. The jealous tenacity with which too many of our American farmers have held to the old adage has caused years of waste of time, money, energy, and natural resources. These men are realizing that the study of the scientific principles of farming is a short cut to success. This is true in every phase of work, in fact in every phase of life. We are "heirs of all the ages," and we have a right to gain by study, by "short-circuiting," if you please, that knowledge which our ancestors have spent years in formulating for us.

We are glad to see that the desire for study is growing among our people, and that this desire has called into existence three classes of students: those who are able to leave other work and complete a college course; those who want to complete a course but are not able to spend sufficient time and money to do it all within the walls of a college; and those who, like our missionaries, wish to get what they can without having to leave their regular work at all.

Graceland College has provided for classes one and three, the last class having been given opportunity for study for the last two years through the Extension Institute.

Now Graceland is glad to present to the second class, her Correspondence Department, organized this year, distinct from the Extension Institute. This new department offers detailed and intensive work in commercial and academic courses for the benefit of those who wish to secure credit toward graduation.

The subjects offered in the courses named have been selected with careful consideration, only those being offered which adapt themselves easily to correspondence methods. Subjects enough, however, are given in the four-year academic or high school course, so that one or two years of residence work should be sufficient to complete elective or science credits.

This plan has many advantages, in that it serves the various needs of so many individuals.

If you expect to enter college and lack some high school credits required for entrance, why not clean them up through the Correspondence Department?

If you wish now to study just certain subjects, why not take them through the Correspondence Department so you may have credit in case you desire to finish the course at a later time? Nothing is more trying than to decide to finish some education course and then discover that at one time you studied something which could apply on that course if you could only show credit for it in some institution.

If you have decided to attend the academy or commercial school but are waiting to earn money for expenses, why not finish some subjects by correspondence while you are working, and thus shorten the time for the completion of the course?

Or, if you want to complete either course at Graceland or elsewhere and cannot afford money or time away from other work for the entire course, why not do what you can by mail and then do only the residence work necessary to complete the course?

This department offers these courses at a minimum cost, making it possible for the individual to get the most out of his money. Instructors are selected with care, and are ready to give each student personal attention.

For further information write for a bulletin, addressing all preliminary correspondence to Charles B. Woodstock, Registrar, Graceland Extension Institute, Lamoni, Iowa.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

CALIFORNIA STORMS.—Cloud-bursts and floods in southern California have resulted in the loss of one hundred lives, estimated, and in great loss to property.

MANITOBA WOMEN VOTE.—The Manitoba Legislature has passed a bill extending to women the privilege of voting for members of the provincial legislature, and of membership in that body.

PROHIBITION FOR PHILIPPINES.—The Senate has passed a prohibition amendment to the pending Philippine independence bill. This amendment would prohibit in the islands the sale or offering for sale of all intoxicants except the native drinks used by natives only.

BRANDEIS FOR SUPREME COURT.—President Wilson has nominated Louis D. Brandeis, of Boston, for associate justice of the Supreme Court, to succeed Justice Lamar, deceased. Mr. Brandeis is a Jew, and this is the first time for a Jew to be nominated for the supreme bench.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Villa is said to be in western Chihuahua, making preparations for an extensive campaign. According to last report he commanded about one thousand men. The Carranza government has thus far failed to restore order in this territory. They seem to be maintaining the new government elsewhere with fair success.

WILSON AND PREPAREDNESS.—President Wilson at this writing is in the midst of his campaign in the central western States for preparedness. The President says: Preparedness should have nothing to do with politics. The Nation's honor is dearer than its peace and comfort. In the midst of impending danger, the country should prepare not for aggressive, but for defensive warfare.

INCOME TAX LAWFUL.—The United States Supreme Court on January 24 by an unanimous decision declared the income tax law constitutional. In this decision the Supreme Court gives a broad construction of the 16th amendment under which the tax was levied, holding that "the whole purpose of the amendment was to relieve all income taxes from the consideration of the source whence the income was derived."

PROTEST MAIL SEIZURE.—The United States Government has made public a note of protest to Great Britain against interference with neutral mail, in which it is urged that detention of diplomatic and consular mail is an aggravating circumstance in a practice which is generally regarded in this country as "vexatiously inquisitory." The British Government announces that Great Britain will consult her allies before replying. Great Britain has censored neutral mail carried by vessels touching at her ports.

WILSON FOR TARIFF BOARD.—In letters to the chairman of the house Ways and Means Committee, made public January 26, President Wilson recommends the election of a nonpartisan tariff commission. While the President has "no thought whatever of a change in attitude toward the so-called protection question," he has changed his mind in the matter of the tariff commission because "all the circumstances of the world have changed." It is the opinion of President Wilson that it is "absolutely necessary to have a competent instrument of inquiry," to "deal only with facts of industry and economic exchange," without regard to "theories of policy."

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Austrians have taken Scutari, in northern Albania, the Montenegrins retiring without resistance farther south into Albania. The status of affairs between Austria and Montenegro is not officially made public. It seems, however, that some kind of a truce or surrender has occurred, and that the Austrians control practically the entire country. King Nicholas and staff of Montenegro, are in France. Members of the Serbian Government are at the island of Corfu. The entente blockade, limiting Greek imports to immediate needs, and to prevent supplies from reaching the Teutonic allies, continues. Heavy fighting in Galicia has continued, and the Russian aggression has extended to practically the entire southern Russian and Galician lines. The Germans have been in the aggressive in the west, and have made slight gains in France. The British garrison at Kut El Amara report sufficient supplies on hand, and no recent engagements with the enemy. The British rescuing party has been stalled in their effort to relieve the garrison, after having pushed their way to within a few miles of Kut El Amara. Their losses have been heavy. The Russians are making headway in their campaign against the Turks in the Caucasus. French warships are to assist British vessels in blockade duties in the English Channel and North Sea. The compulsion bill passed the third reading in the British House of Commons January 24 by a vote of three hundred and eighty-three to thirty-six, and was sent immediately to the Lords. The British trade union conference on January 26, by an overwhelming vote, reversed its recent attitude toward military service, this time approving the cooperation of the labor members of Parliament in the recruiting campaign, and pledging the Government the full support of organized labor in the conduct of the war.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

INTEREST AT DENVER.—Elder Ammon White in writing to Elder F. A. Smith, speaks encouragingly of the work at Denver. He says in part:

We are in the midst of a revival here, and though the cold has been intense at times, we have had a fair hearing. Six have given their names for baptism, five from the world and one boy of a church family. I feel the work has taken on a spiritual growth here. The attendance has been better than ever experienced regularly on Sundays.

MAYOR OTT CONVERTED.—Christian Ott, the mayor of the city of Independence, is converted, and it took only a year under his own administration to effect his conversion. In a meeting at the city hall Monday forenoon of the Jackson County Law Enforcement League for the annual election of officers, the mayor was present and bore his testimony. Those on the liquor side and many who were not in favor of liquor, feared for the city of Independence when the twelve-thousand-dollar saloon license would be cut off. Hear what the mayor said about it at this meeting. Mr. Ott said:

The morals of the city of Independence began to improve 365 days ago, and still continue to improve. The city to-day is better off morally and financially than it was a year ago when the saloons were banished from the city. I never voted a prohibition ticket in my life, but now I see my mistake. I never will vote for something for which I cannot argue, and there is no argument in favor of whisky. I hope to see the time come when whisky will be voted out of the State of Missouri. I welcome you to the city hall for this meeting, and I tell you now that the city administration is with you and will back your efforts for the enforcement of the laws.

Is not this splendid testimony! It is our candid opinion that saloons will never be tolerated in Independence again. They are now banished from all Jackson County outside of Kansas City, and we begin to have hopes for that big city west of us.—W. H. Deam, in Zion's Ensign, for January 6.

A NEW YEAR'S REVERIE--PART 1

J. W. RUSHTON

The solemn silence of the midnight hour is broken by the sweet chimes of the city clock checking off the four quarters of the final hour of the dying year; and as the mellifluous vibrations lose themselves in oft-repeated echoes, like some mysterious sistra from a dead and forgotten past, the shattering boom of the heavy bell with its thunderous note arouses the soul, which, upon the wings of imagination and memory, turns to the haunts of the past, and, then with expectant eagerness moves into the future.

While the detonations are roaring from the abysmal throat, tolling the knell of the year now dead, we emerge from the chrysalis of the immediacy of time and sense and establish intimacy with history and prophecy. How strangely in the "Hall of Dreams," past, present and future, seem to blend! The hard lines of history's actualities in the soft light of imagination seem to be but the portals leading to the threading vistas whose countless lines dimly limned stream away into the elusive distances.

We see faces, forms, and events, mingling with easy grace in comradeship with those which shall be; weaving and interweaving, meeting and dissolving, evolving and devolving in the bewildering filminess of kaleidoscopic prognostication. And from out of the dreamy depths we can discern the delicate tracery of the new humanity, the new life and the new world. In such a moment we feel a new interest in the past, and a growing appreciation of the significance of the present, awaking to a realization that both are the parents of the future that is to be.

A WITCHING HOUR OF REVERIE

In this witching hour of subconscious meditation when, "whether in the body or out of the body," we cannot tell, it seems as though old and familiar things are clothed in new meanings; and we find them to be incarnations of living realities of whose presence we had not thought.

The ghosts, and fairies, and hobgoblins of our childhood days seem to be the progenitors of a multitude of experiences familiar to us as remorse, hope, desire, idealism, disappointment and despair; and either willingly or unwillingly we are led through dark and forgotten places; we see reenacted deeds and events, some pleasing, some displeasing; and we meander through the fair and smiling fields of opportunity when life was young, the atmosphere filled with noble impulses, generous thoughts and the happy anticipation of heroic labors.

We reconstruct the gladsome world of romance in which we lived in the care-free days of youth, and with the sunshine of hope weave visions of great and useful service rendered with knightly chivalry for the redemption of our race. Then there steals upon us the presence of the clouds, and we feel the blast of cruel disappointment which withers our hopes and with bitter mockery these impish memories fill our ears with jeering laughter and we are plunged into forebodings of unutterable regret. Then comes to us the "Queen of fairies"—Hope; who with light and courage leads us along the upward path into the land of "new endeavor" and with a loving smile gives us the "key of patience," insuring our happiness if we will but be faithful and true.

There are many things in this condition of reverie we see which cannot be imprisoned in our inadequate vocabulary, and we can find no equivalents of value in all the resources of expression. But there are some things we see of which we can speak and which can be transmuted from the abstract of ideality into the concrete of reality.

One thing which impresses us is the significance of Time, whose passing epochs like the rolling billows of eternity's sea surge over the consciousness in the ceaseless attacks upon the shores of the future. We feel that every moment is filled with eternity, and every act is the germ of destiny; that all the imposing array of "to-morrows" are the result of the receding cohorts of "yesterdays." Above and through all we have as the residuum of experience this truth: "That the ways of God to man are right."

THE BEST OF THE AGES

Time is remorselessly destroying everything but the truth; and nothing can survive the baptism of time except that which is worthy of eternal vindication. And as the majestic pageant of history moves with impressive mien we grasp the assurance: All that is, is because it is more worthy than that which has been and is not: and all that which has been and is not, is not, because it was not worthy. Hence truth and immortality are indissolubly connected, while error can never be associated with immortality.

The soul that is now, is because it represents the best which the ages have in agonizing and ceaseless labor produced. All the forces, passions, glories and triumphs of the centuries have been made incarnate in the soul of the present. In all the turmoil and attritions of Nature she has labored to produce that which is the best. Time has been the great test of her work, and the irrevocable law is, "Only the best can survive."

It is not only the law of nature and the experience of history, but it is the law of God in the spiritual realm: That which is not full of truth and love is not good, and in the nature of things is doomed to elimination.

For he [Christ—the humanized and externalized God] must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet.—Paul.

For this cause was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil.—John.

He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, [the dissolution of all combinations, no matter how strong, impressive or beautiful, in death]; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. [Uninterrupted correspondence with the eternal realities.]—Paul.

The essential elements of divinity are truth and love. All which is not true and lovable inevitably is moving to extinction. Time, nature and God are working together to this end. This deduction is supported by three witnesses from modern philosophy, whose words are worthy of patient study.

Firstly, John Ruskin: "Wheresoever the search after truth begins, there life begins; wheresoever that search ceases, there life ceases." (The Two Paths.)

Secondly, Professor Bosanquet: "Love is impulse towards unity, the mainspring of logic." (Individuality and Value.)

Thirdly, Doctor G. Stanley Hall: "There can be no moral progress unless we have faith that the eternal powers are on the side of right." (Educational Problems.)

LOVE THE DYNAMIC

Love is admittedly the dynamic of the soul, and wherever this dynamic force is at work it must work as all forces work, to unify all things with itself, and conversely must destroy all things antagonistic to itself. Love works to unify all things lovable into oneness; and this is the motif of all reason of which logic is the science.

Wordsworth puts the matter very effectively, saying, "We live by admiration, hope and love."

And truth always must be the object of our admiration, our hope and our love. Admiration presupposes the existence of that which is admirable; and hope is the visualization of our inward faith, and there can be no faith without the necessary basis of truth, from which faith generates her "reasonable inferences." In these high and holy ends love finds her justification. The union of the past, present and future logically is the result of our unswerving confidence in the truth that all moral progress is attained in the conviction that the power of the Eternal is always on the side of right.

Consequently to be allied with that which is not right, to believe in that which is not truth is to invite sure and certain disaster.

A SOLEMN WARNING

This solemn warning is clear: To be in ourselves the living expression of all which is the best as a result of divine and natural power in the realm of time; and to live in such a way as to destroy that sublimated effort, by unworthy deeds or purposes, or to sully or mar such heritage and leave it in a moribund state for the coming generation, is the "unforgivable sin."

Quoting Bosanquet once again:

The evil-self is the adversary of unification of experience, and the vehicle of contradiction in the very heart of self.

It is indisputable that God, nature and time are working together towards "unity and harmony." If these forces be against us as they are if the self is evil in motive, intention or purpose, then, in the name of all reason, how can we hope to succeed working against them? It is not necessary to attempt a description of the curse which follows a life of divided interests. Our Lord has said in terms of unforgettable emphasis, "What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and shall lose his soul?"—Jesus.

The soul that cannot love the lovable, admire the admirable and hope with unquenchable faith in the ultimate vindication of the right, even in face of impending catastrophe, has been sentenced to death at the bar of divine justice, and even though a world of possessions is in the treasuries of such a soul, the possessions are but a monument—sacred to the memory of the greatest of all tragedies—a dead soul.

Religion, experience and education have this end in common; to unfold, to discover and define truth and love, and bring the soul into intimate correspondence with them, as the immortal elements in all soul-values.

That soul which can be contented in association with that environment not friendly to the truth and love is destroying not only its intrinsic value but its sense of value. When this sense of real value is destroyed then redemption is impossible, for it may stand in the presence of the "Altogether Lovely" and see nothing but "Beelzebub the prince of devils." And while all the earth is aflame with divine glory and the voice of God like the sound of many waters fills the air with music, such an one will be contentedly plucking blackberries, as Mrs. Browning so beautifully reminds us, and playing on a jew's-harp.

But to realize this immortal worth in ourselves is not the end, but merely the beginning of a life of real value. For the soul merely possessing his heritage of truth and love does so potentially and is but static. To be made into values these possessions must become dynamic and kinetic in service for others. Only in service can truth become righteousness; and love become sympathy. Religion or education which enjoys the vision of God and clothes itself in impeccable goodness, or exhausts itself in acquiring an academic knowledge and a uniform of diplomas no more constitute values than do the mountains of specie piled up in the vaults of our national treasury.

THE ENTIRE EQUATION OF VALUE

Our reverie carries us beyond the mere consideration of the individual soul upon whom all the preceding ages have lavished their succeeding strata of glory; for not only is it true that "it is more blessed to give than to receive," but it is also true that value cannot be actualized, defined and computed only as the individual reacts upon society for good. Whatever a man possesses, whether talent, or genius, or money, or property, themselves these are not values, but mere factors, which, plus use, plus purpose, constitute the entire equation of value.

This word has been rejuvenated, if not resuscitated, by John Ruskin, so far as relates to its original content and meaning. That meaning revived by Ruskin has been made once again fundamental and vital in our modern sciences of values. He reminds us that the word comes from the Latin valere, which is also the root of the word valient, reminiscent of the olden days of chivalry and knight-errantry. The word valere when interpreted value means strictly, "That which avails for life." The word valiant meaning, "that which avails in life."

Ruskin has been severely criticized for leaving the realm of art and engaging in discussing political economy; his views on the latter subject regarded as a deplorable intrusion, and to be condemned because of their idealism. However, quite recently other writers whose training and place in life makes them immune to criticism such as directed against Ruskin, have adopted these selfsame definitions as the basis of their conclusions. I refer to Professor Hobson of Oxford, Prince Eugene Troubetzsky of Moscow, Doctor Bosanquet and Professor Jevon of England.

Professor Dresser has built up a very elaborate system of spiritual philosophy upon this foundation; while Adolph Harnack of Germany has included it in the three cardinal principles of Christianity as taught by our Lord himself.

The following quotations are from an article by Prince Troubetzsky in Hibbert's Journal of July, 1915.

What gives a nation its essential characteristics is not its possessions of riches, but the way it values and employs them.

The more we are conscious of the incomparable value of the element of individuality, unique in man and every nation, the deeper becomes the grasp of the link which connects all individuality with a higher and universal principle from which it derives its meaning and its value.

When once the life of the spirit has begun to stir, wealth returns to its secondary role as an instrument destined to serve as the high and holy end of our existence.

The things possessed as used by the possessor, and, in connection with the higher and universal principle, directed in holy service, is the end of our existence, and the very basis of their meaning and values.

We now put this message from Russia in alignment with one from Germany's master theologian, Harnack.

Speaking of the three outstanding features of Christ's message which he defines as being:

Firstly, The kingdom of God and its coming.

Secondly, God, the Father; and the infinite value of the human soul.

Thirdly, the higher righteousness and the commandment of love.

In these it is very clear that to realize the kingdom of God the second and third principles must of necessity be possessed individually and applied to life inwardly and outwardly. To accept the second will, in the nature of things, automatically introduce the third. Accepting God as the universal Father brings to light the latent value of the human soul; and, if we postulate that value for ourselves then, we must extend the same evaluation to all other souls, and love and righteousness become the terms upon which our socialized relationships are established. In the realization of these premises the kingdom is here. For the kingdom of God is the acceptance of the will of God as the rule of action in social life, and the only power which can apply that will is love.

Then Harnack says, "The value of a truly great man, as I saw it put lately, consists in his increasing the value of all mankind."

This is the transvaluation of all values upon which God bases his estimate of a man's worth.

In other words, it is not so much a question, ultimately, of what a man is and does himself, but what he has caused others to be and to do.

ISAIAH TWENTY-NINE---NUMBER 4

BY E. E. LONG

EPHRAIM AMONG THE NATIONS

But where is Ephraim? In the great work of restoration he is to be the "firstborn," the one to receive the message first. There are some pointed references to Ephraim in the prophecy of Hosea which have led many people, applying the term Ephraim to the whole house of Israel, to conclude that the lost tribes are mixed up in the Anglo-Saxon race.

I have before me a book, Lost Israel Found, in which the author states that "The term Ephraim is synonymous with Israel, and embodies the ten tribes as a consolidated people." Proceeding on that hypothesis, he attempts to prove that the ten tribes are identified with the British nation. The present war has entirely upset his pet theories, however, and he is found among the multitude of "blind guides" of the latter days. The trouble with such theorists comes by reason of the fact that they confound the prophecies directly concerning Ephraim with the whole house of Israel. The prophet declares:

Ephraim, he hath mixed himself among the people.—Hosea 7: 8.

My God will cast them away, because they did not hearken unto him: and they shall be wanderers among the nation.—Hosea 9: 17.

These prophetic declarations do not apply to the whole house of Israel, nor to the ten tribes, but to Ephraim, whose "glory shall fly away like a bird."

Ephraim, not Israel, was to "become a multitude of nations" (Genesis 48: 19). Israel is in the "north country" (Jeremiah 23: 7, 8), while Ephraim is "among the people," his racial identity being lost to the world. It was to Ephraim the Lord said, "I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing" (Hosea 8: 12). Scattered among the nations, his racial identity obliterated by intermarriage, Ephraim would be the first one to recognize the voice of the "Good Shepherd," when he would begin the search for his lost sheep in the latter days.

Remember that the "stick," record, of Joseph, was to be "in the hand of Ephraim" (Ezekiel 37: 19); and Ephraim was to be an important factor in conjunction with Manasseh to "push the people together to the ends of the earth" (Deuteronomy 33: 17). The Book of Mormon is the "stick" of Joseph, in the hands of Ephraim, and it is "counted as a strange thing." Since its appearance in 1830 the "reproach" has largely been removed from Israel, till to-day, among the leading civilized nations of the world, he occupies first place in financial affairs, and is rapidly becoming an important factor in politics. "When he seeth his children, the work of mine hands, in the midst of him." The Book of Mormon informs us that the American Indians are a remnant of the house of Israel, the remnant escaped from Jerusalem 600 B. C. going "afar off," over the sea. When recognized Israel learns this great truth, which he will do through the instrumentality of the Book of Mormon, he will "sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel."

BECOMING A DELIGHTSOME PEOPLE

When, in 1830, the Book of Mormon was published, setting forth the fact of the Indian's identity with lost Israel, it was confidently asserted that the only good Indian was a dead one, and that he was doomed to annihilation, because he could never be civilized. Again the "wisdom of the wise" has "perished." Simultaneously with the return of favor to scattered Israel, the United States and Canadian governments began to take steps to protect the Indian and give to him the rights of free citizenship. The following remarkable prophecies concerning the Indian are found in the Book of Mormon:

The Gentiles who have gone forth out of captivity, . . . will not utterly destroy the mixture of thy seed, which are among thy brethren; neither will he suffer that the Gentiles shall destroy the seed of thy brethren.—1 Nephi 3: 176-178.

And because of his greatness, and his grace and mercy, he has promised unto us that our seed shall not utterly be destroyed, according to the flesh, but that he would preserve them; and in future generations, they shall become a righteous branch unto the house of Israel.—2 Nephi 6: 105.

For this people shall be scattered, and shall become a dark, a filthy, and a loathsome people, beyond the description of that which ever hath been amongst us; yea, even that which hath been among the Lamanites; and this because of their unbelief and idolatry. . . . But behold, it shall come to pass that they shall be driven and scattered by the Gentiles; and after they have been driven and scattered by the Gentiles, behold, then will the Lord remember the covenant which he made unto Abraham, and unto all the house of Israel.—Mormon 2: 44-49.

The proper treatment of the original occupants of this land—the Indians—is one deserving of careful study. I will favor any course toward them which tends to their civilization and ultimate citizenship.—From the inaugural address of President U. S. Grant, March 4, 1869; Messages and Papers of the Presidents, vol. 7, p. 8.

To assist the President in carrying out his peace policy with the Indians, the following law was passed April 10, 1869.

Section 4. And be it further enacted, That there be appropriated the further sum of two millions of dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the President to maintain the peace among and with the various tribes, bands, and parties of Indians, and to promote civilization among said Indians, bring them, where practicable, upon reservations, relieve their necessities, and encourage their effort at self-support, a report of all expenditures under this appropriation to be made in detail to Congress in December next; and for the purpose of enabling the President to execute the powers conferred by this act he is hereby authorized, at his discretion, to organize a board of commissioners, to consist of not more than ten persons, to be selected by him from men eminent for their intelligence and philanthropy, to serve without pecuniary compensation, who may, under his direction, exercise joint control with the secretary of the interior over the disbursement of the appropriation made by this act or any part thereof that the President may designate and to pay the necessary expense of transportation, subsistence, and clerk hire of said commission while actually engaged in said service, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary.—Appendix to the Congressional Globe, April 10, 1869, p. 48.

From President Grant's first annual message I make the following excerpt:

I have attempted a new policy toward these wards of the nation (they cannot be regarded in any other light than as wards), with fair results so far as tried, and which I hope will be attended ultimately with great success.

With the inauguration of this "new policy" the Lamanites began to "blossom as the rose." President Grant's "hope" is being abundantly realized.

From the assistant deputy and secretary of the department of Indian affairs at Ottawa, Canada, under date of September 6, 1911, I received a letter from which the following is quoted:

As soon as the Northwest Territories were transferred to Canada by the British Government in 1870, the Dominion Government began to take steps to educate and civilize the Indians of the country. Treaties were made with them to surrender their Indian title to the land, large reserves were given to them to be exclusively used by themselves, annuities were agreed to be paid them, seed, agricultural implements and stock were given them, Indian agents were appointed over them, and, in farming districts, farm instructors were employed to show them how to cultivate the land. The Government of Canada is doing a great deal for the education of its Indian wards: in the Western Provinces and Territories and in British Columbia it aids 119 day schools, 50 boarding schools and 15 industrial schools at a cost of $326,916.

He further states:

Those who become enfranchised,—that is those who can show good behavior and progress in some industry and have received a patent of a portion of the reserve to which they belong,—can have their names placed on the voter's list if the laws of the province permit it.

The simultaneous action of the Dominion and United States governments looking to the education and civilization of the Indian may be another of those strange coincidents in connection with the latter-day work, but we prefer to believe that it is only another manifestation of the hand of God in behalf of his oppressed people. Mr. Forbes Lindsay, writing in the World To-Day, says:

Undoubtedly he is destined to make his mark on the community that shall furnish the field for his future activity; for the Indian is a man of strong fiber, and of exceptional individuality, with inherent qualities of a very high order. . . .

Our past treatment of the Indians seems to have been based upon the idea that they were neither amenable to civilization nor assimilable by the population of the country. We herded them from reservations that were secluded from the outer world, cut off their accustomed industries and activities, closed every field of endeavor, and in fact suppressed even the fundamental instinct of self-preservation. The old reservation policy afforded the Indian no opportunity for usefulness. He was restricted to eating his rations and loafing. His only relief from a monotonous and enervating life was found in degrading dances and ceremonies. It happened in cases that the Government was forced to find some occupation for a band that betrayed symptoms of unrest, but the object was merely to keep them out of mischief, and no thought of training them to labor and to a civilized method of living was ever entertained. But with sufficient food, and forced abstinence from liquor, and hygienic surroundings, the Indian ceased to diminish, and to-day we have two hundred and eighty thousand of them upon our hands, and they display a tendency to increase in numbers.

Since Mr. Lindsay wrote, the Indians have made rapid advancement, and contrary to the popular notion at the time the Book of Mormon was published, they are increasing in numbers. Mr. T. R. Porter of Omaha Nebraska, writing in the New York Press says:

The Western Indians are turning the tables on the white man, and the race which has for half a century pushed the red men back from the great plains and forced them on to reservations is now having its own field invaded by these same red men, and Indian lawyers, doctors, teachers, preachers, judges, and stenographers are becoming common in the trans-Missouri country.

One of the foremost lawyers of eastern Nebraska is Tom Sloan, an Omaha Indian. Sloan has been United States Commissioner, and has held offices of trust. His clients are not all Indians, by any means, as he has a large practice among the whites in the towns near the reservation. Sloan has been admitted to practice before the United States Supreme Court, and is often before that tribunal in Washington. He is a college graduate and is a sharp, shrewd lawyer. He is well read and is a cultured and polished man, but prefers to spend his time with his own people rather than to reside in a city among white men.

Every Indian reservation in the Northwest now boasts of several Indian doctors. Not the old-time "medicine man," with his charms and his magic, but the modern, educated, intelligent physician who uses the white man's methods.

With his education and enlightenment the Indian has learned the value of organization as an important factor of development. At Columbus, Ohio, October 11-16, 1911, many of the leading Indians of the country met in convention and formed a temporary organization for the promotion of the welfare of their race. From the Columbus Citizen for October 16, 1911, the following excerpt is made:

At the final session of the American Indian congress here Monday, T. L. Sloan, an Omaha Indian of Pender, Nebraska, was elected president, and Charles E. Dagenett, a Peoria Indian, of Denver, Colorado, was elected secretary of the temporary organization, to serve until a permanent national organization is formed. This will not be done until a later convention. A convention is to be called to build a constitution, and then the permanent national association of American Indians will be formed. The executive committee elected to serve with the president and secretary is composed of Reverend Sherman Coolidge, Arapahoe, of Oklahoma; Hiram Chase, Omaha, of Pender, Nebraska; Miss Laura Cornelius, Oneida, of Seymour, Wisconsin; and A. C. Parker, Iroquois, of Albany, New York.

Commissioner of Indian Affairs, R. G. Valentine, addressed the convention, and, among other things, said:

I have felt it is a distinct loss to my administration, that many persons who write on Indian subjects, have never been in the office for Indian affairs, and know nothing personally of the race nor its requirements. When I heard of this conference, I knew that a new day had dawned for the Indians.—Columbus, (Ohio), Dispatch, October 13, 1911.

A "new day" has, indeed, dawned for the Indians, as foretold by the Book of Mormon long ago. The permanent organization was perfected at Washington, District of Columbia, in December following the conference at Columbus, and has since met annually. Among the many prominent Indians interested in the movement are: Doctor Charles Eastman, a full-blood Ogalla Sioux, a graduate of Dartmouth College, and for many years employed by the United States Government as physician to the Indians; Doctor Carlos Montezuma, a full-blood Apache, who studied medicine and graduated in Chicago. John M. Oskinson, a Cherokee, is associate editor of Collier's Weekly. Miss Laura M. Cornelius, an Oneida, is a graduate of Columbia University, and has traveled extensively in Europe and America. Referring to these and others, the Columbus Dispatch says:

Then there is Mrs. Charles Dagenett, a full-blood Miami, who is the right hand of her husband in all his plans; Mrs. Rose LaFlesche, of the Chippewa tribe, who has been "the man behind the guns" in developing this conference; Mrs. Marie L. Baldwin, a Chippewa, who is holding an important position in the Government office of Indian affairs at Washington; Emma D. Johnson, a Pottawattomie, of Oklahoma, whom the Government employs as a kindergarten teacher in the Indian schools. These are examples of splendid womanhood of whom any race might be proud.

In this connection, the following prophecy from the Book of Mormon is of interest:

For after the book of which I have spoken shall come forth, and be written unto the Gentiles, and sealed up again unto the Lord, there shall be many which shall believe the words which are written; and they shall carry them forth unto the remnant of our seed. And then shall the remnant of our seed know concerning us, how that we came out from Jerusalem, and that they are descendants of the Jews. And the gospel of Jesus Christ shall be declared among them; wherefore, they shall be restored unto the knowledge of their fathers, and also to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, which was had among their fathers. And then shall they rejoice; for they shall know that it is a blessing unto them from the hand of God; and their scales of darkness shall begin to fall from their eyes: and many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a white and a delightsome people.—2 Nephi 12: 80-84.

JEW'S AWAKENING

While the "scales of darkness" are beginning to fall from the eyes of the poor Indian, the Jewish mind everywhere is being awakened, and their cherished hope of a restoration to their own land has crystalized into an organization. The following is from the Chicago Herald, August 23, 1915:

Representatives of ten thousand Jewish workmen enrolled in seventy Jewish organizations met in the West Side Auditorium yesterday and launched Chicago's part of a country-wide agitation which has for its ultimate aim the colonization of Palestine and freedom of the Jews from civil, political and national yokes under which the race has labored for two thousand years. . . . The meeting was held primarily to agitate freedom for European Jews. A member of the committee said, however, the meeting would become known as Chicago's first step in an American movement to place all Jews on an equal footing with the citizens of every country.

It will be noticed that the object of this meeting and organization was the same as the gathering of the Red Men at Columbus, Ohio; to place all Jews on an equal footing with other people. Surely, Jacob need not now be ashamed, nor his face wax pale, for God has set his hand to recover his people, and the voice which whispered from the dust in 1830 is beginning to be heard.

Hark! ye mortals, hark! be still,
Voices from Cumorah's hill,
Break the silence of the tomb,
Penetrate the dreadful gloom,— Gently whisper "all is well,
Now is the day of Israel."

COMING TO UNDERSTANDING

They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine.—Isaiah 29: 24.

As a result of the additional light that would be shed abroad in the world in connection with the reading of the "sealed book," and the assurance of God's unchangeable character, God's people, scattered among the sectarian churches, blinded by priestcraft and erring in spirit, would come to understanding by hearing the truth in its former plainness.

One excuse for the great opposition the Saints have had to meet is that if left alone they would draw away the best people in the churches. This is true. The best people in the churches are God's people, and he long ago issued an invitation to them to come out of Babylon (Revelation 18). Jesus said his sheep would hear his voice, and, almost without exception, where his servants have had an opportunity to reach the people with the angel's message they find at least a few who are anxious to receive the truth. These humble souls who love the truth rather than some creed have "increased" their joy in the Lord, because of his manifest goodness in the latter days.

Ofttimes those who are united to some one of the popular churches, for the want of something better, murmur against the creed—some being expelled for their boldness. Once they come in contact with the gospel in its original plainness, they learn the true doctrine of Christ and exchange their small "treasure" for the "pearl of great price."

Many a fond mother has murmured at the creed doctrine of a never-ending hell of literal fire, where her darling babe that died in infancy must burn in company with adult criminals throughout the countless ages of eternity. But once they read the Book of Mormon, this infamous doctrine of the Dark Ages is discredited, and the creed is immediately at a discount.

THE SEALED BOOK TRUE

The Book of Mormon is the "sealed book" of Isaiah 29. It came forth at the right time, in the right way, and in the right place. It speaks from the ground, whispers from the dust, with a "familiar" spirit, harmonious with Bible truths. It supports the Bible in its testimony as to the unchangeability of God and his purposes concerning the house of Israel, and the redemption of mankind. It occupies a conspicuous place in the field of prophecy, and is being wonderfully vindicated by the development of present events. It exalts the Christ, extols the love of God, and magnifies the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. It closes its testimony with the following assurance of its truthfulness that may be tested by all men:

And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost, and by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things.

CHURCH DEPARTMENT

Do we as a people hold the church or meeting place as sacred as we should?

The above question is one that has often troubled the mind of the writer. I am inclined to think that the place of worship should be revered as a place where we go to meet God and Christ through the Spirit. Thus the house of prayer should be entered thoughtfully, meditatively. We should go quietly to our seats and sit in silent meditation, not in visiting. A kindly greeting is good, but the church is not the place to visit.

The object in going to the house of prayer should be to get our spirits refreshed, thus gaining strength for the struggle. Can we expect to get that when we enter into light and foolish talk and jesting? Or even in more serious conversation? Should we not arrange to have matters talked over outside of the meeting place?

I have gone into some of the so-called popular churches and have been struck with the solemnity that prevails. True, there is more sociability among the Saints, and they are not so formal; but do we not carry it too far, and lose sight of the sacredness of the place?

Should the presiding officer have to call the Saints to order when it is time to open meeting? All should be in their places ready to enter into the service when the time for opening arrives. Coming in late is in bad taste and should be discouraged. Be prompt, is a good motto to adopt. Then we should respect the rights of others, not being forgetful of the laws of courtesy when in church. The reading of newspapers and such in church is very bad manners. Is the mind in a condition to enter into true worship after reading the exciting events of the day while in the place of worship? Would it not be better to leave such things for some other time?

One of the most disturbing features in a church service is that of whispering and laughing. It not only annoys the speaker but those who sit near such persons.

The Lord in speaking to the church in 1832 (Doctrine and Covenants 85:36) says, "Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith." (Also see Doctrine and Covenants 94:4.)

I remember an incident when I was a young lad: Brother Lake was holding meetings in my home town. A lady came into the meeting and bowed her head in silent prayer. A titter went around the room. In a prayer meeting subsequent to that, Brother Lake took us to task, and pointed out the fact that the lady had set us an example that would be well to follow.

I have before me a clipping taken from a leaflet picked up in a church. I insert it here:

WELCOME

Whosoever thou art that enterest this church; Remember it is the house of God. Be reverent, be silent, be thoughtful, and leave it not without a prayer to God, for thyself, and for him who ministers, and for those who worship here.

Shall we let the world lead us in reverence for the house of God?

I would like to see all respect the place of meeting as sacred, a place where we seek to worship in spirit and in truth.

I have seen choirs after they have finished the singing leave the building before the sermon. I have wondered how the speaker felt. I know I felt for him. I think it is not good manners, to say the least. I hope I may never have the experience of seeing the choir leave like that, if I am to be the speaker.

Another feature of annoyance is children running around, attracting the attention of all. I think that as Saints we ought to be reverent in the place of worship, just as much as if we saw Christ in person in our midst.

I have heard outsiders comment on the irreverence shown the place of meeting by the Saints.

Saints, let us not be behind in the matter of reverence in the house of God, but be silent, thoughtful, and prayerful in demeanor while there. "My house is a house of order," is as much a truth to-day as it ever was.

May we aim to please God in all things, and reverence to his house is one of these things.

WILLIAM ANDERSON.

Of General Interest

WHAT ABOUT DESPOTISM?

The saloon newspapers complain right lustily about the despotism of the Czar of Russia in imposing prohibition of vodka selling among the people of that country.

One C. A. Windle, an alcoholic Hessian, uses up many heated epithets in denouncing the Russian Government for interfering with the liquor sellers.

It is true that the liquor sellers were interfering with the success of Russian armies, defeating their country's arms; but that does not affect Windle at all. The safety of no nation or no government, or anything else, should be allowed for a moment to interfere with the profits of liquor dealers.

There is another side to this story:

Up to the middle of November, sixty-seven Russian town and county councils had officially petitioned for the continuation of prohibition until the close of the war.

Ten capital cities of Russia, twenty-one provincial towns, twenty-one county councils, had officially petitioned the Government to continue the prohibition of vodka selling forever.

Even the fair committee of Nishni Novgorod, the greatest fair city in the world, officially petitioned for perpetual prohibition of vodka.

After the first order of prohibition during mobilization was issued, Michael Dimetrovich Tschelishev went to Finance Minister Peter L. Bark to present arguments for continuing the policy indefinitely, or at least until the close of the war.

Instead of arbitrary action, Bark said: "The population must declare, by means of village decrees, that it does not desire alcoholic drinks. Give me these decrees that I may make my stand on them."

The people were quick to act upon this suggestion and the "village decrees" came thick and fast. The people demanded prohibition of the thing that made them so much trouble.

Peasant and working organizations, by the thousands, petitioned for prohibition. Organizations of cooks, waiters, leather workers, clerks, metal workers everywhere, petitioned for continued prohibition.

Out of the thousands and thousands of petitions sent to Petrograd on the subject, not a single one asked for the continuation of liquor selling.

Seventeen bishops of the Orthodox Church petitioned the holy synod to use its influence to protect the people by permanent prohibition.

Juries and commercial bodies over the nation made petitions against vodka selling.

When the people were given liberty of action, they acted quickly. Within twenty days the capital of the empire, Petrograd, a city of one million, seven hundred thousand people, enacted prohibition.

Moscow followed within a week, and then followed all the principal cities of the empire—Nishni Novgorod, Samara, Tambov, Viatka, Ekeerinincslav, Ufa, Minsk, Astrakhan, Ekaterineburg and scores of others.

Not one city or town council petitioned to retain the drink.

It was an uprising of the people against the alcoholic oppressor.

In the past the Government had forced vodka selling upon the people against their wishes.

Now, when given liberty, the people turned upon their drink oppressor and drove him out.

Windle's scalding tears about the Russian oppression of prohibition are all out of place.

Prohibition is the liberation of the Russian people, so far as alcohol is concerned.—The New Republic, August 6, 1915.

TRANSMITTED DEGENERACY

AN IMMORAL FAMILY

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11.—Fifty-eight blood relatives confined in penitentiaries, jails, infirmaries, institutions for feeble minded or industrial schools, is the record of an extensive family of degenerates traced out during the past year by the Ohio juvenile research bureau. In announcing the results to-day, Doctor Thomas H. Haines, director of the bureau, declared the family history already discovered was the basis for a record comparable to that of the notorious Jukes family which has been familiar to sociologists for the last forty years.

The Mengold family—this is the fictitious name which has been chosen for the newly traced clan of degenerate men, women and children—lives mainly in southeastern Ohio and lower Ohio river counties of West Virginia.

HIGH PER CENT OF DEGENERACY

Five generations of the family have been charted, including 474 individuals. Definite data which has been secured on 261 of these shows the following condition of degeneracy:

Sixty members of the family have court records; 15 have been in jail; 14 in the penitentiary; 9 in the infirmary; 9 in children's homes; 6 in the workhouse; 2 in the girls' industrial home; 2 in the institution for feeble minded, and 1 in the boys' industrial home.

Seventy-seven are immoral; 74 criminal in varying degrees; 55 feeble minded; 23 alcoholic; 12 public women; 7 tubercular; 6 children adopted into other homes; 4 subject to epileptic fits; 3 insane and 3 tramps.

Crimes of which they have been convicted include burglary, larceny, forgery, destruction of property, bootlegging, operating or being inmates of immoral houses, intoxication, riot, perjury, various degenerate forms of assault, homicide, shooting to kill and attempting to poison husband.

The mentality of most degenerate members of the family as determined by the Binet test is that of children between 8 and 11 years.

PRODUCING LARGE FAMILIES

Most members are living at large, marrying and producing large families. One man, whom the juvenile research investigators call Jasper, is in the Ohio penitentiary for a crime against his daughters, one of whom is in the girls' industrial school at Delaware.

It was an accidental noting of the fact that several persons bearing the same name and later found to be relatives were charges of the State that led to the investigation which started less than a year ago. Starr Cadwallader, recently resigned as a member of the board of administration which has charge of all State penal and corrective institutions, made the discovery and urged the family survey.

GUILTY OF BESTIAL CRIMES

Mrs. Mary Storer Kostir of Columbus, a young psychological investigator, was assigned to the task and she has spent most of her time for the past year on it. Her individual record of each member of the so-called Mengold family recounts bestial crimes, and vices undreamed of by most normal citizens. The survey will be continued until traits of additional Mengolds are accurately recorded, and an estimate can be made of the cost to the States of maintaining such an abnormal family.

John and Polly Mengold, progenitors of one of the worst lines of the family, came originally from western Pennsylvania. The others were ignorant mountaineers.

The notorious Jukes family, to which Doctor Haines compares his newly-mapped family, contains a total of 1,200 members, of whom 540 are related by blood. Since 1874, when its tracing was started, record has been made of 280 paupers, 140 criminals, with nearly all of both classes feeble minded or insane. The cost of prosecuting or caring for them is declared to amount to many millions of dollars, mainly chargeable to New York State, where the family originated.—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register, October 12, 1915.

PALESTINE THE WORLD'S MEETING PLACE

All expert students of the world war appear to be a unit in declaring that the titanic conflict will be settled within the Turkish Empire. That is another way of saying that the supreme military struggle of the centuries will fight its decisive battles within Bible lands. . . .

God has suddenly reversed the apparent verdict of centuries concerning the promised land. For nearly a thousand years Palestine has been passed by in the march of events. Interest in it has been merely sentimental. It has been the objective of pilgrims and travelers. It has been no active factor in world politics since the Crusades. For, lo, these many centuries Palestine has been in the backwater of the current of the times. . . .

It was not so in former days. Every student of the Bible is aware that Canaan in its time was the center of the then known world. Archaeologist and historian have united to demonstrate this profoundly significant truth. The chosen people were placed at the crossroads of the earth. All empires converged in that little strip of land, about the size of the State of New Jersey. There the various civilizations of antiquity impinged. To every reverent student of history it was a clear providence which caused the full revelation by Jehovah to be made on this particular spot. Everybody understands that the one place of all places for God to appear in the person of a Christ, comprehensible to East and West, was at this meeting of the ways, whence his story could easily be borne everywhere.

In a thousand books and in ten thousand sermons it has been pointed out why, in the high strategy of heaven, Canaan should be selected as the promised land for the chosen people: because central to Egypt, to Greece, to Rome, to Persia, and to Babylon. The major caravan routes and the military highways crossed one another there. All that peculiar historical preparation was made on this one small strip of land for the crowning event of time: the appearance of Christ. The truth that history and geography are but the handmaidens of God has no better vindication than the unique position of Palestine in the ancient world.

Now, even while we rub our eyes and look in wonder, the major currents of life have swept back again, after these many centuries, to the little land we call "Holy." Once more Bible lands are the center of the world stage. The war is to be settled, not in Flanders nor in France, not on the western nor on the Russian front, nor in the Caucasus; but in the region every foot of which is within the scope of the Bible story. Here we have a condition worthy of most careful study by every reverent observer of the times, and every diligent student of the Book which still is more important than the daily newspaper. . . .

In a large sense we are witnessing a tremendous vindication of the strategy of divine Providence. A new light streams upon the Book as we see the pivotal place which the land once more occupies. It used to be the fashion of corner-store wise men to sneer at the Jews and their promised land as not worthy of attention, and as not at all commensurate with the empires of antiquity. Answer has been made to that old criticism by the events of the present world war, which finds its central theater where God first set the stage three thousand years ago.—William T. Ellis, LL. D., in The Sunday School Times, January 16, 1916.

Nuts for Adventists

[The following questions raised by our friend, Frederick W. Loch, not a member of the church, we are inclined to think will disturb our Adventist friends some before they are answered. In fact, it will be noted that one of them has already sidetracked the questions propounded, and that others have made concessions that do not help their cause in any way. We give place to these letters, thinking that the suggestions may be helpful to those of our people who may be annoyed by the urgings of Adventists.—EDITORS.]

THE SAINTS' HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

Gentlemen: Friends of mine have just handed me a copy of your paper, THE SAINTS' HERALD, dated November 11, 1914, number 45, and my attention was particularly called to an article appearing on page 1069, entitled, "Original Articles, Are We Transgressors?" I am sorry the title does not indicate the real subject under discussion, but it refers to the Sabbath question.

I have had this same subject up with a prominent Seventh-day Adventist connected with their Washington, District of Columbia, printing plant, and I have also discussed it with one of the editors of the Signs of the Times, published in Mountain View, California.

I was willing for the sake of the argument, to admit that they were correct in all their assertions except that I wanted proof that Saturday was the seventh day of the week of creation in North and South America. I was told to keep the day (Saturday) when it came to me.

I wrote back that I wanted proof that the day that came to me that was called Saturday was indeed the seventh day of the week of creation in North and South America; that I wanted them to trace the day and tell me where it started. If it started at the "date line" partly on the one hundred eightieth meridian, I wanted proof that God started the days near the one hundred eightieth meridian. I was willing to admit, for the sake of the argument, that it is impossible for the whole world to begin keeping the Sabbath day, or any other day, at the same instant of time, but that each place on this earth should begin keeping the day when the day comes to the place, just as persons at any particular place on the earth would have to await the arrival of a train going around the world in twenty-four hours, before they could celebrate the arrival of the train at their particular place. But I wanted the Seventh-day Adventists to prove to me that when the train (of days) arrived in Oakland, for example, that it was indeed the seventh time in Oakland, and not the sixth time, or the first time, or any multiple of these times. In order to prove this, I wanted them to prove to me where the train (of days) started. On which half of the earth did the sun first shine? Where did the first second of day one of this world's history begin? I wanted proof that God actually started the days at the "international date line."

In reply I was told: "I have heard a good many arguments of different kinds against Sabbath observance, but I have never supposed that the question of day line, or as to just exactly the particular spot in the earth where the first day started, was ever considered a serious objection to the observance of the Sabbath. If the question of your observing the day depends upon that, I fear I shall not be able to help you."

As he was not able to help me, I took the matter up with astronomers in the United States. (I inclose herewith a copy of one of my letters to astronomers, dated October 27, 1915). None of them could give me positive answers to questions, 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6. In reply to question 5 I was told that the "international date line" was man-made, and made only for convenience' sake in navigating. None of the astronomers criticized paragraphs marked "A" and "B."

In the November issue of Father J. S. Jerome's magazine called Sunspot, he devoted pages 29, 30, and 31, to answering some questions. He could not prove that Sunday is the first the first day of the week of creation in North and South America.

I hope some parts of my letter may be of value to you. You are at liberty to use it as well as the copy of letters to some astronomers. In case you do use any part of my correspondence, please call my attention to the publication so that I can obtain a copy.

Yours respectfully,

FREDERICK W. LOCH.

LETTERS TO ASTRONOMERS

Gentlemen: Millions of people believed the world was flat and punished those who claimed that the world was round, and who demanded proof that the world was flat.

Many of us now believe certain things to be true just because others have told us they were proven facts. Most persons believe that we know positively that Sunday is the first day of the week of creation in North and South America; Monday the second, etc.

QUESTIONS

1. Do we know positively which is the first day of the week in North and South America?

2. Can it be proved that Saturday is the seventh day of the week of creation in North and South America? If it can, please give some proof. I am willing to admit that we know, through the Jews, which is the seventh day of the week in Palestine and all other places having approximately the same longitude, but should the day come to us from Palestine, or go from us to Palestine?

3. On what part of this earth did the first second of day one of this world's history begin?

4. On which half of the earth did the sun first shine?

5. By establishing the "date line" at the 180th meridian we are indirectly told that God, or nature, started the days at the 180th meridian, but is there any astronomical proof for that?

6. As the sun, according to the Bible, was not created until the fourth day (Genesis 1: 14-19), what caused "the evening and the morning" of the first day (Genesis 1: 5), of the second day (Genesis 1: 8), and of the third day (Genesis 1: 13)?

A. If the seventh day of the week (Saturday) began in North and South America, then we in North and South America should have the seventh day before people in Africa, Europe, and Asia; but if the seventh day began in Africa, Europe or Asia, then we should have the day after the people in Africa, Europe, or Asia.

B. Again, if the seventh day (Saturday) began on the Atlantic coast of America, then the people on the Atlantic Coast of America should have the day about three hours before the people on the Pacific Coast of America; but if the day (Saturday) began on the Pacific coast of America, then the people on the Atlantic coast of America should receive the day about twenty-one hours after we had the day (Saturday) because the sun appears to travel westward, away from the Pacific coast, and the day after leaving us on the Pacific coast would appear to cross the Pacific Ocean into Africa, Europe and Asia, and then across the Atlantic Ocean and finally reach the Atlantic coast of America about twenty-one hours after it had left the Pacific coast. In about three more hours the day (Saturday) would again be near the Pacific coast and we would soon begin a new day, while the Atlantic coast of America would only have had about three hours of a day before our new day. If we were having Saturday they would be having about three hours of Friday.

Thanking you for any information you may give me I remain,

Yours respectfully,

FREDERICK W. LOCH.

CONCESSIONS THAT DO NOT HELP

Editors SAINTS' HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sirs: Yesterday afternoon I received your kind letter dated January 6, 1916, in reply to my letter dated December 17, 1915, in regard to the Sabbath question. Since writing to you I have discussed the "date line," now established near the 180th meridian, with other Seventh-day Adventists, and one of them stated that the date line should be established near the site of the Garden of Eden. The claim was made that God made everything first in the Garden of Eden, and that he, therefore, undoubtedly started the days there.

I replied that there was no Biblical proof for that assertion. But even if it were admitted that God created in Eden, the first whale, the first polar bear, and all the other animals that exist in the Frigid, the Temperate and the Torrid zones of this earth, then again some of the Seventh-day Adventists would be observing the wrong day. For if the date line should run through Eden, then when Saturday starts at the date line in Eden, persons east of the line would be observing Friday, even if they were only the fractional part of an inch east of the line. There would take place on the site of Eden, and at all other places having the same longitude as Eden, exactly the same thing that now takes place on and near the 180th meridian, viz, the gaining and losing of a day, depending on whether one is traveling eastward or westward.

Another Seventh-day Adventist made the point that the Jews in North and South America observe Saturday as the seventh day of the week of creation, and that as the Jews are God's chosen people, God inspired them to keep the correct day.

I told him that to me it seemed strange that God should inspire the Jews to keep the correct day as Sabbath, but that he could not, or at least did not, inspire them to accept Jesus Christ as the Messiah. I added that, so far as I knew, the question as to where God's date line should be had never been called to the attention of learned Jews; and that even after the matter had been called to their attention, and they had decided that Saturday is or is not the seventh day of the week of creation in North and South America, that decision, by itself, would not be proof that it was a correct decision. Learned Jews once decided that Jesus was not the son of God, and after the passing of nineteen hundred years the majority of the Jews sustain that decision and refuse to accept Christ as the promised Messiah. Was their decision correct? Catholics and Protestants, including the Seventh-day Adventists, refuse to accept the Jews' decision on this matter.

Yours respectfully,
FREDERICK W. LOCH.

The Rich Man and Lazarus

There was a certain man who would not pay his tithing, except by intermittent spasms. A beggar lay at his gate full of sores.

And it came to pass that the beggar did not die, and was not carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom, but continued his missionary labors, and to beg the bishop for his family allowance and for a fifteen-dollar suit of "hand-me-down" clothes.

And it came to pass that the rich man also did not die (or had not at last report), and in hell he did not lift up his eyes, not yet being in torment, but remained to send Lazarus a Christmas greeting on a postal card.

Several letters were also received in the same mail. The first is from the financial agent of the church, and reads about as follows: "Inclosed find ——. Sorry we cannot send the back allowance for the last two months, and that this amount, small as it is, is so long overdue; but tithing comes in slowly, and we have to divide it around the best we can. Yours truly," etc.

The full allowance when all sent, is frequently about sixty per cent of what the family needs, figuring meals at six cents each, and allowing for supplies of other people's cast-off clothing. Lazarus must depend upon the ravens for the remainder, and in some climates ravens are scarce. So that now, by receiving only a part of the sixty per cent, it makes the burden that much heavier on the poor, innocent ravens.

The next letter is opened and says: "Please remit." The next one says it with more business severity, and indicates by its tone that somebody is a culprit. The next letter appeals to the public-spirited generosity of Mr. Lazarus in soliciting aid for the poor through some public charity movement, and graciously sends thanks in advance for the favor.

The stipend had to be divided among creditors whose names Mr. and Mrs. Lazarus had listed before them, and like the old story goes, they said: "Which shall it be? which shall it be? I looked at John and John looked at me."

MORAL

If you haven't paid your tithing, or have done like Ananias, have "kept back part of the price,"—halt! For humanity's sake as well as for Lazarus', send a check to the bishop.

Of course, if you find this matter to be too annoying, you may omit, instead of remit; but it would be advisable in that case to invest in a modest supply of asbestos garments, and to study up a bit on the etiquette of the region where the worm turns yet dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

For indeed those with tithe money unpaid are now comforted, while ministerial Lazarus is laid at the gate full of sores, and is tormented; but unless they repent it shall yet be said: He is comforted and thou art tormented, and beside this there is a great gulf fixed, etc., and one is appointed to refuse to dip his finger in water to cool the tongues of those tormented in this flame.

APPENDIX

And behold it came to pass that when Lazarus had read all those duns, and had stretched the amount in hand to make it cover about thirty-five per cent of bills due, and had sent merely a pleasant word to some creditors, he picked up the remaining piece of the morning mail—a postal card—and read: "Wishing you a merry, merry Christmas, and a happy New Year."

With the proverbial exactness with which a woman can say things fitting to the occasion, Mrs. Lazarus was prompt to advise him to curse God and die.

But with admirable fortitude, the dear man, who seemed to be even meeker than Moses, slowly lifted his haunted eyes to the height of Camel-back mountain in the distance, and said: "Surely, O Lord, thy judgments are altogether just, and their torments who withhold tithes now a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not."

And in double soliloquy they both sat in the gloaming and whispered: "A merry, merry Christmas and a happy New Year."

Written by one Lazarus, who also hath more than five brethren who are full of sores in this place, before the gate of privation and inequality. But for all this, some who live without worry as to their next day's victuals will not believe.

But if they will not believe this, neither will they believe though one arose from the dead.

Yours very respectfully,

R. H. D. LAZARUS.

NEBO, ILLINOIS, December 26, 1915.

Editors Herald: Sometime ago we were favored with nearly four weeks' preaching services by Brother W. A. Smith, who came in a somewhat unfavorable time, as everybody was busy finishing wheat sowing, apple picking, and other fall work. But each service was peculiar in itself for interest and spirituality, especially on the part of the speaker. Brother Smith demonstrated very plainly the fact that we can preach our gospel in plain and positive terms without nagging other people and their religion. No one was baptized, but the services certainly did good.

On the 13th inst., in company with my father-in-law, Brother T. P. Johnson, I started for Browning, Illinois, to hear the last half of the debate between Brother E. E. Long and W. G. Roberts, "Campbellite." I have had some experience both in hearing and as a participant in debates. Have experienced the sting of—well, anyhow, disappointment—as well as the joy of victory. But I can unhesitatingly say as this another conflict with enmity to truth and with a willing emissary of this foreign power ends, that a very satisfactory victory was won. It could be easily seen that others comprehended the force of the defense of our cause.

One young man told Brother Long and me that he could go over the town and take the names, and he would assure us that nine out of every ten would say Elder Long had won the victory. One of their own ministers told me he was disappointed, as he expected to learn something, but didn't consider he had. Well, he got the best the man they call their best and who verily thinks he is the best, could tell them about the awful, awful "Mormons." Yes, everything from the "hole on the pole," to the John C. Calhoun letter.

Of course this minister didn't particularly criticize his own man more than ours, but was disappointed, when the facts are, Roberts did all he could do, and all any of them could or can do to down what they call Mormonism, and he, this brother of Roberts, must go away from attending a twenty-two session effort of a man that claims he has held one hundred and twenty-nine discussions, and twenty-nine efforts of these have been on the same grounds fought over in the discussion,—I say, he, Elder Roberts's ministerial brother, must go away disappointed. It was enough for me to know that one of Elder Roberts's admirers and ardent supporters wasn't so very well satisfied with that wonderful (?) effort of that wonderful (?) anti-Mormon polemic.

We do not have any Saints at present living at Browning, but some of the leading people of the town are our friends and are investigating as a result of the efforts put forth by Brethren A. M. Baker, our well-known, able, sound, safe, and reliable, once boy preacher, and R. S. Fulk, of Beardstown of but few years in the church and mission field, but active, humble, progressive, and safe.

The climax of their, the Browning people's, opportunity to hear the truth was certainly reached in the masterly defense put forth by Elder E. E. Long, and preparation was made for two Sunday services for Elder Long to preach the Sunday following the debate. Have not heard about the results.

I wonder why all our elders are not better prepared than I fear some are, to defend the great truth. True, we should not go around with a chip on our shoulder, challenging everyone, but the stock of preparedness could be utilized in everyday gospel work.

Why should anything short of at least a belief in our competency, based on well-grounded facts of merited ability to meet whatever and whoever might perchance attempt to hedge up the way, satisfy us, and fill the ideal of a soldier of the cross?

Yours as a lover of our cause,

W. A. GUTHRIE.

MARSHALL, ARKANSAS.

Editors Herald: We came to this part of God's vineyard we believe by divine direction, as it was the least of our thoughts to come when we left Tennessee. We landed here in this fertile valley where the soil cannot be surpassed for the raising of all kinds of grains and grasses. For fruit it has no equal. Fine springs of pure water gush out of the rocks.

When we came from Clinton Mountain, and dropped down into this deep valley, I told my wife our prayers were answered, feeling as I did that this was the place God wanted us to stop. The grandeur of this valley; the air perfumed with grapes and wild flowers made us think we were in a flower garden. The people here though, with all the beauty of God's handiwork, lacked a shepherd, even the glad tidings which should go to all people. So after we became located, in our weak way we organized a Sunday school in a near-by schoolhouse and advocated the angel's message and distributed tracts, papers, etc., until quite an interest was manifested.

The work was new to the people here. They wanted what they called a "big meeting," so we told them we would get an elder if possible. I wrote to Brother E. A. Erwin and he set a time when he could come. The people helped, and we had a very fine meeting arranged when he arrived, with a congregation ready to listen. The crowds increased each night, some coming as far as ten miles over the mountains. Brother J. T. Riley finally came to help in the meeting.

The people were surprised at the order, as they all gave good attention. It was said on the streets of Marshall that the order and preaching in so large an audience was surprising. The like had never been known in this country. Six were baptized and many left near the kingdom.

Shortly after the meeting there was quite an effort made to tear down what had been done, but it had been built on a solid foundation, so that with all the wiles of doctrine our persecutors could not work much on the people. One so-called preacher said he would prove that the people could be saved without being baptized. He has never taken the stand, however, to prove the assertion.

Hoping the time is near at hand when the angel message will be of great joy to all people, and that they will know the truth as it is and was in the days of old with the gifts and blessings as promised by our Savior, and praying that the Lord may open up the way that a greater work may be done in this part, I remain ever ready to do all that is possible for the upbuilding of our Master's cause.

In gospel bonds,
W. S. SHUPE.

OLATHE, COLORADO, December 28, 1915.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure that we take this manner of informing those who might be concerned, that the California Mesa is still on the map.

As Saints of the Most High, in this part as well as elsewhere, we have had the privilege of enjoying the peaceful influences of the Holy Spirit many times. While many disappointments have been ours to endure and many trials have come upon us, we can lift up our heads and rejoice that we have been able to keep the banner of King Emmanuel aloft, and can praise him for all the kindness of the past.

The past month has been a very busy time for the Saints in this part. Elder Amos Higdon has just closed a series of meetings, and a twelve-night discussion with Mr. E. C. Fuqua of the Church of Christ. The discussion was held at Olathe, and the Saints had to drive about seven miles to attend. On account of the distance and much sickness, the discussion was not very well attended by the Saints, but the house was filled most every night.

In spite of the fact that we were going against a very prejudiced class of people, we were able, by the aid of God's Spirit working through the able defender of the cause, Brother Higdon, to gain the confidence of many people and make friends for the cause. While we have not yet been able to determine the exact result of the efforts and the seed sown, we have had the consolation of knowing that we did not lose any friends by the discussion. We trust that some of the seed has fallen upon good ground and will bring forth fruits in due time.

We hope that the good work will continue in this part, and that the Evil One will be overcome to that extent that the scales may fall from the eyes of those who are yet persecuting the people and work of the God of heaven.

The sixteen-year-old son of Brother and Sister Liman Hubbard met a sad accident on Sunday, December 19, being thrown from his horse, which resulted in instant death. We trust that our prayers in behalf of the bereaved family may prove an aid and a comfort to them in this dark hour.

We ask the Saints everywhere to remember us in their prayers.

Yours in faith and unity,
B. H. BUNTEN.

ROSCOE, NEBRASKA, January 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: A few weeks ago I received a letter from Sister Minnie Bell Wismer, of Windsor, Ontario, whom I baptized at Walkerville, Ontario, about fourteen years ago, asking for a duplicate certificate of her baptism. Unfortunately she simply gave Windsor, Ontario, as her address, without any box or street. I addressed her accordingly, but the letter has been returned. Will the sister please give me her definite address, that my correspondence may reach her? Let Saints who are in touch with her call her attention to this notice. Address me at Independence, Missouri.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

ROSEBURG, OREGON, January 2, 1916.

Editors Herald: In renewing our subscription, I want to say that we could not get along without the weekly visits of the HERALD. It is the only preacher we have. We have not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon for over a year. There are always good things in the HERALD to help the Saints. It should be in every Latter Day Saint home.

We wish the HERALD great success during the coming year.

Your brother and sister,
MR. AND MRS. A. A. CURRIE.

BOZEMAN, MONTANA, January 5, 1916.

Editors Herald: We are stored away in the valley of the mountains at an altitude of four thousand, seven hundred and seventy-three feet above the sea. Our winter is reaching its extremity in cold and snow. The ground is now covered with a white blanket about a foot thick. We have enjoyed a "white Christmas," and sleighbells have been ringing for about three weeks.

Though our regular attendance in the Bozeman Branch is small, we feel that the faithful ones are growing in grace and in interest in the work. The Saints seem to be arousing to some extent at least, from that lethargical sleep and spiritual apathy that has been, and is prevailing over the Saints and the world. Our sacramental services are usually well attended, and a good spirit manifested.

The Saints have shown their love by many acts of temporal kindness, and their faith by their cooperation in the advancement of the work. However, there are many things left undone. In all branches we find Saints who rarely attend services. How can Saints fail to attend when the church is so greatly in need of their help? May God's Holy Spirit guide the careless ones back to the path of duty and a love for the spreading of truth. Oh, if the Saints in branches could have that love, that hungering, and thirsting, for light and truth that is manifested by some of the isolated ones!

I have just returned from the north part of the State. I found the Saints there eager to hear the word, but the world is oh, so indifferent! though on last Sunday we had eight adults (nonmembers) present, twenty-one persons in all, who listened attentively to our talk on the reality of God, and the necessity of worshiping him in spirit and in truth.

We enjoyed a splendid visit with the Saints of Lothair, and while there officiated in a marriage ceremony. I am glad to see the young marry in the church. I believe there is too much marrying out of the church. It is easier to raise children and feed them on spiritual food when father and mother are both agreed in spiritual matters, as well as in temporal things. Divisions in the homes of Saints occasioned by marriage are causing many hearts to grow cold and to be overcome by the world. And many of the lights that are yet burning will be extinguished ere the cry, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."

We wish to thank the good Saints of Bozeman for their liberal kindness in seeing that the preacher looks well in the pulpit and that Santa Claus comes to his family and gladdens their hearts with a truly Merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

With true love for the restored gospel, I am,
Yours,
W. J. BREWER.

DENISON, IOWA, January 4, 1916.

Editors Herald: We, the Saints of Denison, Iowa, have started to build a church. The citizens of the town have donated about six hundred dollars. We need about five hundred dollars more to complete the building, which will leave eight hundred dollars debt on the lot. Denison is a town of about four thousand. The work has not yet been opened up much here. There has been preaching around in the homes of the Saints at different times for some few years, and there has been Sunday school in our home for a year. We thought it necessary to build a place of worship, that all might have a chance to come and hear the gospel.

Being laborers together with God, I believe we should do all in our power to advance the work. We are only a few in number, about thirty-eight in all. This includes children from eight to fifteen years of age. Yet we are trying to hold up the ensign as though we were many.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA.

Editors Herald: I feel like responding to the Magazine HERALD, December 15. I enjoyed it very much, and read it through at a single sitting, all but the sermon. I had commenced that the day previous. I have not yet lost my interest in the island mission, neither that of Australia. I am always glad to hear from them, and wish Brother Hanson had written more of his visit to the islands. Perhaps we shall hear more later.

Vairea looks much thinner than when we last saw him, and of course, older. Tuterehia—"Ta," as I used to call him for short,—has the white crest on his heretofore black, glossy locks. That makes him look like an old man. "Tane," our boy, as we termed him, looks about the same, only a little more fully developed. He was a great help to us in learning the language, in that when we miscalled, or mispronounced a word in his presence, he never failed to quickly give the correct word, and was the only one in the islands who did thus correct.

It was Vairea and his wife who vacated their tidy looking concrete house for the accommodation and comfort of Brother Alexander Smith and Brother Gould while they were in Kaukura. The house was low and square, newly plastered and whitewashed inside and out, and the roof built out far enough to shade the porches on all four sides of the house, making it additionally cool.

It had been arranged by the natives that all the white missionaries should eat together in Vairea's house; the cooking was done mostly by the natives in a shed a rod or two from the house. So we women folks set the table, washed the dishes, made their beds and swept. Lillie Peterson was generally interpreter for the natives, who were continually bringing their little gifts in the way of shells, and now and then a pearl to the "apostols." Nights we went to our respective lodging places.

Brother Gould's typewriter was something brand new to the natives of the Taumotus, and they fairly thronged around him in their interest to see the way he made it talk.

A Taumotus conference house was being built hard by, and the master builder, Toane Tamati, began to fear it would not get finished in time for use if the brethren so forsook their work. One day the house was about full, all trying to get as near Brother Gould as they could. Our men folks were outside somewhere. Toana beckoned me to one side, and wanted me to send all the brethren out of the house, and tell them that they must keep at their work, to get the building finished for conference.

I said, "No, that is not my work. You must send them out yourself."

"I have," said he, "and they come right in again. But if you would send them out to their work they would stay."

I shook my head, laughingly, saying, "Aita, aita, tau ohipa." Meaning, "No that is not my work."

It is pleasant to have those incidents in missionary life recalled, and to live them all over again. And I am glad to see even a picture of the long-anticipated stone wall in Tarona Papeete, also a new church, and the old Buran tree at the end of the missionary house.

I was not acquainted with either the people or the places that Brother Haworth wrote of, but I was with the writer, and it was Australia, so I enjoyed it.

Brother Trembath's sermon, replete with good points, drew my thoughts from Queensland to Geelong, where I was more acquainted, and therefore felt more at home. It was Elder Burton's privilege to be the first to preach the gospel in Geelong, and build up a little branch there, including the splendid Craig family: splendid because the family was large and all obedient, and industrious; and because of their generous hospitality. All partook of the Spirit of the gospel. Not one opposed the work.

Perhaps those of the then small but live branch of Geelong will remember the last time we, Joseph, Addie, and I, met with them, just prior to our leaving for America. After the preaching by Joseph a collection was taken up to help the missionaries on their way home. Their collection box was an ebony tray of Chinese design. The president of the branch, Brother Trembath, passed the collection, tray and all, to Joseph, and insisted that he should keep the tray. He smilingly put the money in his pocket, and passed the tray to me, saying, I might have that for my part. Well, it lasted longer than the money did. I have taken good care of it all these years (thirty-six), until something over a year ago I presented it to the branch here in Santa Ana, our son Frank being president, and gave them its history, so far as I have here given it, thinking that I could not dispose of it in a better way.

News from Missions

Spring River

I last wrote from Webb City, Missouri, where we held forth for three weeks, baptizing fourteen, all adults except three. The Webb City Saints believe in doing things. They have a neat little church which is a credit to our cause. Our people here are held in high esteem and are well respected. The last Sunday I was there I had an attack of la grippe. I thought I could ward it off, so went to Joplin, where I stopped for one night with Brother George Pearson and his good family.

Next day I went to Helper, Kansas, expecting to begin a meeting. Conditions here were not altogether favorable, so many people being ill with la grippe. This malady got a good hold on me so I went home December 11. I then received a message to come to Webb City to preach the funeral of Brother Martin. I stopped over at Pittsburg with dear old Brother and Sister Richards. Brother Martin was a noble man, and died firm in the faith.

After the services we hurried to the train and were soon on our way to Fort Scott, Kansas, where we were announced to preach that night. The Fort Scott Branch is not in Spring River District, but I had been requested to spend a week with this the branch we joined when we came into the church, then the Lebanon Branch, in the year 1894. We enjoyed our stay with these people, and were blessed in preaching.

On the 20th we were called to Carthage, Missouri, to preach the funeral sermon of a lady not a member of the church. She believed the gospel but had not been baptized. From here we went home for Christmas.

I preached a week at Mapleton, then Brother J. W. Wight, of Lamoni, came and preached the next week. To say he preached some grand sermons is putting it very mildly. Those who were able to hear him were much pleased. A good many could not get out on account of colds, la grippe and bad weather. We hope Brother Wight can come again when conditions are better.

We came to Purcell, Missouri, January 15, and commenced a meeting next day. The weather has been cold, but the crowds have been increasing every night. We are hopeful.

Brethren Silvers and Budd are in Oklahoma. I hear good reports from there. They are good, safe men.

The branches in this territory are in good condition, so far as I know. We are expecting a good conference at Scammon, Kansas, the first Sunday in March. I am sure the Scammon Saints will do their part.

This conference year will soon be closed. What will the record be? May the dear Lord pass by our mistakes, is my prayer.
LEE QUICK.

Southern Ohio

We are trying to keep busy, but the weather conditions in southern Ohio are sorely against us. Rain, mud, high water, alternating with cold weather and extremely rough roads, make it hard to get about, and hinder the people from coming to meetings. Again, many of our people have been out of employment for so long that they are handicapped so far as making an effort to extend the work is concerned.

In three branches all meetings had been abandoned. One, however, has taken up meetings again, and a Sunday school has been organized; the other two are still delinquent.

The Saints of the Southern Ohio District who have mourned because of the giving up of their district reunions some years ago, to form a joint reunion with other districts, should remember that the last district conference has appointed a committee to provide for a reunion in the district during 1916. Let every Saint begin now to make preparations for the reunion, which no doubt will be held some time in August. Electric Park, near Wellston, where several successful reunions have been held, is available, if this should meet with the approval of all the committee. As one of the committee, we would be glad to hear from any of the Saints who have suggestions to make.

We will have to begin anew. When the reunion merged with the other districts, we had an equipment of family tents and cots for rent, as well as a large district tent. Now we have nothing but the small district missionary tent. Those who can provide themselves with tents should do so. We will likely have to rent some tents. Due notice will be given later, but let every one begin now to lay his plans for the reunion of the Southern Ohio District in 1916, to make it a success and a great spiritual feast for the Saints.

Members of the committee are G. T. Griffiths, 185 West Eleventh Avenue, Columbus, Ohio; James Moler, Creola, Ohio; A. W. Kriebel, Wellston, Ohio, Route 1; H. P. Kelley, 320 East Twelfth Street, Wellston, Ohio; and H. E. Moler, Creola, Ohio, or Holden, Missouri.

Brother Bozarth has gone to Limerick to hold some meetings, while Brother Harnish, supposedly, is at Ironton. The writer since the holidays has been engaged at Vale's Mills, Davisville and Wellston and vicinity.

Word from Brother William Anderson informs us that he will join our forces soon to labor till General Conference. Those knowing of opportunities for preaching please notify the undersigned at Creola, Ohio. A postal card will suffice. In gospel work, H. E. MOLER.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

On January 9 the attendance at Sunday school was eight hundred and seventy-three, the beginners numbering fifty-four. The senior orchestra being somewhat affected by the severe weather, numbered only fifteen, but there were twenty-five instrumentalists of the juniors, and on that bitterly cold day among the beginners, twelve tots of the cradle roll, with beaming faces, sat in their accustomed places at their study table.

On the sixteenth there were only seven hundred and nine present. Elder Samuel Twombly was the morning speaker, and President Elbert A. Smith occupied in the evening.

The hour for opening the proposed afternoon monthly meetings having arrived, the brethren assembled in the lower room, with President Frederick M. Smith in charge, and others to speak. The sisters met in the upper room, and the Sunshine Band, numbering seventy-five children, gathered in the hall under the kindly and efficient leadership of Sister Fern De Tray.

The Woman's Auxiliary, with its eight departments, began its devotional exercises with singing "God is marshaling his army," and prayer by Sister T. J. Sheldon. Then followed a few introductory remarks by Sister D. J. Krahl, and Brother Frederick entered at once upon the all important work of the occasion. A great work was to be begun, a work which our brother seemed to have qualified himself to present for the first time to his people for their great good.

The speaker had at a mass meeting on the 14th, projected a scheme for the work of bringing about a higher spiritual and mental condition of the Saints, and the erection of a commodious building as a culture hall, where might be presented the highest ideals of a liberal education and higher religious culture. To use his own words, he had "been looking forward to such an extent that the church might be a social center for mental and spiritual culture." Here, too, our young people might seek activities not responsive to influences of the world, but those which would be pleasing to God; and among the means to be employed in order to get results were prayerfulness and consecration. Also there must be solidarity of purpose, intelligence, unity, and individual efficiency. There must be a conceding of leadership, the ordaining of certain individuals for certain purposes, and the maintaining of the rights of the community as well as of the individual. As to groups or classes, Brother Frederick M. suggested as studies, sociology, child psychology, home culture, food, finance in the home, hygiene and sanitation. His efforts appeared to all to presage success.

The sisters proceeded to organize. After an hour's work the teachers dismissed the classes and all present prepared to separate for their homes, feeling that they had spent the time profitably, that the work was of infinite worth, and that it would ultimately lead up to higher conditions, even to what is greatly desired by the Saints, Zion conditions among the Lord's people.

May he bring success to every righteous undertaking, is our prayer.

In gospel bonds,
ABBIE A. HORTON.

Old Aunt Mary's

Wasn't it pleasant, O brother mine,
In those old days of the lost sunshine
Of youth—when the Saturday's chores were through
And the "Sunday's wood" in the kitchen, too,
And we went visiting, "me and you,"
Out to Old Aunt Mary's?

It all comes back so clear to-day!
Though I am as bald as you are gray—
Out by the barn lot, and down the lane,
We patter along in the dust again,
As light as the tips of the drops of the rain,
Out to Old Aunt Mary's.

We cross the pasture, and through the wood
Where the old gray snag of the poplar stood,
Where the hammering "red-heads" hopped awry,
And the buzzard "raised" in the "clearing" sky,
And lolled and circled, as we went by
Out to Old Aunt Mary's.

And then in the dust of the road again;
And the teams we met, and the countrymen;
And the long highway, with sunshine spread
As thick as butter on country bread,
Our cares behind, and our hearts ahead
Out to Old Aunt Mary's.

Why, I see her now in the open door,
Where the little gourds grew up the sides, and o'er
The clapboard roof!—And her face—ah, me!
Wasn't it good for a boy to see—
And wasn't it good for a boy to be
Out to Old Aunt Mary's?

And O my brother, so far away,
This is to tell you she waits to-day
To welcome us—Aunt Mary fell Asleep this morning, whispering, "Tell
The boys to come." And all is well
Out to Old Aunt Mary's.
—James Whitcomb Riley.

What Is Life?

Tell me not in idle murmur
Life is but an empty dream,
That the things most true and certain
Are not wholly what they seem.
Life means more than mere existence,
More than fancy, more than dreams—
It is greater far, and deeper
Than the earth's most mighty streams.

One has asked me to define life,
This I'm somewhat loath to do;
For, if I should undertake it
I would try define it true.
God is life, my weary brother,
And besides him all is death;
It is God who giveth wisdom,
It is God that giveth breath.

Words are weak and they will fail me,
Flesh is weak and must decay;
All that lacks the truth my brother
Soon must die and pass away.
Life is love and life is virtue,
Life is wisdom truth and light
Life is of the day my brother,
Death is of the darkest night.

Life is not an empty theory;
In the abstract it is not,
Life is real and we must live it—
Life is perfecting of thought.
Life is correspondence, brother,
Correspondence with the truth;
Dwelling in the highest virtue,
Deepening the love of youth.
All the virtues of Jehovah
Are the attributes of life;
And he who is their fond possessor
Is forever freed from strife.
Life in fact is an experience—
I must grow it day by day;
Life is goodness formed within me,
It is found no other way.

Life is gained by correspondence,
Not by caprice, not by art.
Life is found when God's admitted
To the fountain of the heart.
I can have no life without him,
For apart from him is strife;
But when he abides within me
All is comfort, all is life,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Brotherhood

For years we had stood together
And toiled at the self-same task,
With a hand that was worn to leather,
And the face of an age-old mask.
Where the narrow walls confined us
We had dreamed, as a bondsman can,
Of a world made free for brothers—
And a kingdom of every man.
We had dreamed of a space unbounded
Where the eye sees far and clear,
With never a thought for nations—
Ours was a world frontier.

And to-day it was that I found him
When we stormed on the other trench,
With a hell-fire hot all round us,
And a deadlier poisoned stench.
There he lay, like a wild beast slaughtered,
And a stain on his mouth like wine,
And eyes that stared, unseeing,
To the heaven that's his and mine.
Perhaps, at to-morrow's dawning,
I too shall be lying there,
In the only peace and freedom
That he and I can share.

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

At the beginning of another year we desire to make appeal to the members of the church in Arizona. In our annual report to the bishop for the year just closed, we had on our list of tithes, offerings and consecrations, the names of only ten sending in contributions, ranging from fifty cents to six hundred and ten dollars. To meet the monthly demands made upon us for the year, it was necessary for the bishop to come to our aid with about seven hundred dollars.

What kind of a record will that be for us to face in the day when we come to our rewards, recognizing the wondrous liberty of the kingdom extended to us in which we covenanted to be workers with the Master to establish the cause in all the world? Let us see to it that a better record appears in the bishop's report for 1916.

Allow me to suggest this plan: As we have to meet an obligation of over one hundred dollars each month to supply the families of the missionaries in this field, each member—children and adults—send in a monthly contribution of at least ten cents as tithing, offering, or consecration. That you think would be a small amount, but it would be $1.20 from the least helper at the end of the year.

Individuals who receive from one hundred to several hundred dollars a month would find it as easy to pay ten or more dollars per month. If each will come forward with their mites monthly, I feel sure we will not need to appeal to the bishop this year. Let the children feel the responsibility of assisting in this great work, and they will find a way to help, even though it be in denying themselves some luxury that would reach to the minimum amount.

Will you join in this effort to meet the demands made upon us this year? and let the report of 1916 show Arizona receipts of fifteen hundred dollars or more. We can do this if the Lord helps us, and he says, "Prove me now herewith," etc. Local helpers in each branch will assist in these gatherings, or you may send direct to the undersigned.

Trusting to receive a hearty response, and that we may not need to call or write to the bishop, I am,

Your coworker,

DOUGLAS, ARIZONA.

S. D. CONDIT, Agent.

Quorum Notices

PACIFIC COAST ELDERS

Meet during conference, February 18 and 19. Rule 7 of by-laws will be acted upon. Send reports up to and including January 31, to secretary, H. A. Hintz, Chico, California, 1001 Main Street.

FIRST SEVENTY

About the first of the year I mailed report blanks to the brethren of the quorum who are now on foreign missions, and to-day I have mailed blanks to the rest of the members, except to Elder H. Arthur Koehler, whose address I do not have. His address I request at his first mailing opportunity. Should any of the rest of the brethren not receive a blank by February 15, please write and give me your present address, and your home address, so I can have both for my use.

Notice of special time and place of meeting will be announced through the church papers later. Since I am to present only a summarized report to the quorum, it will be necessary to receive individual reports, at as early date after March 1 as possible. Those who do not expect to attend the sessions please send dues at the time of sending report. There are no funds on hand.

Your brother,

J. F. MINTUN, Secretary.

According to a letter received from the nurse in charge, he would be laid away December 17, 1915, in a plot of ground reserved for the Canadian troops.

Conference Daily

A daily Ensign will again be issued during the General Conventions and General Conference in April. The compliments on the make-up of the Daily Ensign published in April, 1914, encourages another venture this year. As our force is small it will help very materially if subscriptions are sent early. If our friends will begin now to send subscriptions it will be appreciated, but if all wait till the last moment more or less confusion may ensue and mistakes be more apt to happen. Help the office force by sending soon. Price 25 cents for the time of conventions and conference.

February "Cartoons Magazine"

Seldom have the cartoonists had such an opportunity as was afforded them by the junket of the Ford peace party. Cartoons Magazine for February presents a resume of their efforts. Thus, the New York Herald cartoonist rechristens the Oscar II "The Flivver" (cranks at either end) and shows this strange craft full of dummies, one tire punctured, and with Mr. Ford at the wheel, speeding past a very much battered figure of the Emperor of Austria. Other cartoonists, it will be noted, make it appear that the squirrels have been deprived of their winter's food supply, or that nut-crackers and squirrel cages were awaiting the tourists on their arrival in Norway. How the English view the approaching conscription crisis is shown by a number of cartoons from British newspapers. The Persia tragedy and the Ancona correspondence furnish material for other strong cartoons. Shadows of the coming presidential election resolve themselves into a series of rather amusing, but significant cartoons, which tell the story in a word or two. Most of the foreign cartoons, especially those from Germany, Austria, and Italy, deal with the Balkan situation in a more authoritative way than the American artist seems to have achieved. King Ferdinand's nose, it will be remarked, is the most pronounced feature of these brilliant caricatures. Cartoons from Japan show the far-eastern view of the new Chinese monarchy. The American cartoonists devote themselves principally to the foreign-inspired plots to injure the ammunition traffic, and to the brightening business prospects brought about as a result of the war boom. James Melvin Lee, of New York University, contributes an article entitled "Lincoln as Vanity Fair saw him" that will interest every student of Abraham Lincoln and his times. Among other contributors are "Zim," and Helena Smith-Dayton, who introduces in clay models some new small-town characters that everyone will recognize.

SUNSHINE PARTIES

are every day affairs in the South in the Winter time ---for when blizzards, slush and snow are quite the fashion in the north, balmy, breezes, sunny skies, moonlit bays and tropical flowers are the fashion in the South. And those who pack their grips and go South at this time, reap rich rewards in health dividends and delightful recreation and return, realizing more than ever before, the real value of a winter vacation in that romantic, historic and beautiful land South of the Mason and Dixon Line.

The cost is low---perhaps not as much as you thought it would be. Come in and let's talk it over.

A Distinctive Reason

What is the chief reason for the superiority of Royal Baking Powder?

There are several good reasons, but there is one which distinguishes Royal from other baking powders.

This reason, which every woman should know, is that Royal Baking Powder is made from cream of tartar, which comes from grapes. This means a healthful fruit origin. It means natural food as distinguished from mineral substitutes used in other baking powders.

There is no alum nor phosphate in Royal Baking Powder

THE CASE AGAINST UTAH

Ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel.—Matthew 23: 23, 24.

JOSEPH F. ON TOBACCO

In the Improvement Era for February, Joseph F. Smith, president of the Utah church, is quoted as having said in answer to inquiry:

Young men or middle-aged men who have had experience in the church should not be ordained to the priesthood nor recommended to the privileges of the house of the Lord, unless they will abstain from the use of tobacco and intoxicating drinks. This is the rule of the church, and should be observed by all its members. I would not, without positive objection, suffer any person to smoke tobacco in my homes. I have always made it a practice not to recognize or bow respectfully to cigars or stinking pipes in the mouths of men, when I meet them on the street or elsewhere; it is sufficiently humiliating to me to see men, supposed to be intelligent beings, addicted to the filthy habit of smoking cigars, cigarettes or pipes with tobacco in them.

It is to be presumed that President Smith takes as his counsel in the matter of tobacco using the word of God as expressed in Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1: "Tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man."

A GROSSER CRIME

Mr. Smith and the Utah church are to be commended for the stand taken against the use of tobacco in every form, and for his able defense of the word of God in this connection. But what shall be said of those who contend for so rigid an application in a lesser matter, and who themselves violate "the weightier matters of the law"?

The same God who said "tobacco . . . is not good for man" said concerning "grosser crimes":

There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts. Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments, saith the Lord of hosts, or cursed be the land for their sakes.—Jacob 2: 36-38.

We are aware that just here the Utah propagandists will say, "But you did not read it all. Why not quote the next verse?" Very well, here it is:

For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people: otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things.—Jacob 2: 39.

And so it is urged that if God wills he will command otherwise, and then shall men be justified in taking to themselves wives as many as they will.

SAME WORDS TO ALL

But hold! Our friends have not read it all. Anticipating just this wresting of the scriptures, God said again:

Know ye not that the testimony of two nations is a witness unto you that I am God, that I remember one nation like unto another? Wherefore, I speak the same words unto one nation like unto another. And when the two nations shall run together, the testimony of the two nations shall run together also. And I do this that I may prove unto many, that I am the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, and that I speak forth my words according to mine own pleasure.—2 Nephi 12: 59-62.

We have it established then that God is not to authorize polygamy; that whenever he speaks it will be like as he has spoken formerly, or as he spoke to the Nephites; and indeed, he cannot do otherwise, for he is "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever," always speaking "the same words unto one nation like unto another," all of which he does, proving that he is the same.

A THING ABOMINABLE

There is no mistaking the fact that God condemned in the strongest terms polygamy among the Nephites. In the same connection and in the same terms he condemned this practice on the part of David and Solomon and others in their day and nation. Hear him:

David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old.—Jacob 2: 33-35.

For they shall not commit whoredoms, like unto them of old, saith the Lord of hosts. And now behold, my brethren, ye know that these commandments were given to our father Lehi; wherefore, ye have known them before; and ye have come unto great condemnation: for ye have done these things, which ye ought not to have done.—Jacob 2: 43, 44.

Nor should we expect to find the Lord doing anything else than condemning these things on the part of David and Solomon. It was the stick of Judah, the Bible, containing a record of "the children of Israel his companions," and the stick of Joseph, the Book of Mormon, containing a record of "the house of Israel his companions," that were to become one in the hands of the church of latter days—it was this running together of these two nations whose testimony "shall run together also," or be one in agreement, that was to evidence to Jew and Gentile that Jesus was the Christ of God—the Father of all, in whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning, and from whom emanates the same unchangeable law in all ages. We should not expect then, nor do we find him approving of the conduct of Judah and disapproving of that of Joseph in the same thing.

Now the Israelites had become so abandoned in having hurled themselves into the abyss of polygamy and kindred evils, that God had led out a people under Lehi, that in the land of promise there might be raised "from the fruit of the loins of Joseph," in monogamy, for it could not be done under the blighting influence of polygamy, "a righteous branch," in the chastity of which people, and in their consequent purity, God might have delight. And inasmuch as these had forgotten the commandments given to them through their father Lehi, God called upon them to repent of their sins, to follow no more after the ways of "them of old," to live no more after the manner of David and Solomon, in polygamy and under the curse of its resultant evils.

A RIDICULOUS POSITION

In the light of these facts the position of the Utah church is not only made to appear simple but ridiculous. God by the gift of interpretation through the Urim and Thummim said through Joseph Smith: "David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord"; and they have Joseph afterwards inquiring of the same Lord how he justified David and Solomon "as touching the principle and doctrine of their having many wives and concubines," and receiving in answer the following:

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, my servant Joseph, that inasmuch as you have inquired of my hand, to know and understand wherein I, the Lord, justified my servants Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; as also Moses, David and Solomon, my servants, as touching the principle and doctrine of their having many wives and concubines: Behold! and lo, I am the Lord thy God, and will answer thee as touching this matter.—Utah Doctrine and Covenants 132: 1, 2.

God commanded Abraham, and Sarah gave Hagar to Abraham to wife. And why did she do it? Because this was the law, and from Hagar sprang many people. This, therefore, was fulfilling, among other things, the promises. Was Abraham, therefore, under condemnation? Verily, I say unto you, Nay; for I, the Lord, commanded it. . . . Abraham received concubines, and they bear him children, and it was accounted unto him for righteousness, because they were given unto him, and he abode in my law, as Isaac also, and Jacob did none other things than that which they were commanded. . . . David also received many wives and concubines, as also Solomon and Moses my servants; as also many others of my servants, from the beginning of creation until this time; and in nothing did they sin, save in those things which they received not of me.—Utah Doctrine and Covenants 132: 34-38.

In this language God is represented as having commanded men of old time to take to themselves not only many wives, but concubines as well, the doing of which was accounted unto them for righteousness; and most glaring thing of all, David and Solomon are named among those who in this intercourse, it is represented, did no sin, for God gave to all these their wives and concubines—and only a few years before he had said through the Urim and Thummim that this thing was abominable in his sight!

THE LAW OF MONOGAMY

That God never indicated this so-called polygamous revelation is clear from these facts: He condemned polygamy among the Nephites, and declared it through Jacob to have been an abomination among the Israelites. Being God, he could not lie, hence could not have condemned this thing through Jacob and condoned it through Joseph Smith. Speaking unto one nation like unto another, neither could he have authorized in David's day what he rebuked in Jacob's. Governed by the same rule, he could not authorize in this dispensation what he condemned and prohibited in former dispensations; and especially after giving to this dispensation the following,—for if it be true that he speaks to one nation like unto another, surely he will not contradict himself in speaking to the same nation. Hear him on this question as his law was set forth in March, 1831:

Marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation, and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

This last quotation clinches the entire argument, for it is here said by the Lord that through lawful marriage—monogamous marriage—was the earth to answer the ends of its creation, being filled with the measure of man, even according as God had created, or ordained, before the world was made.

True to this principle, God has never deviated therefrom. In carrying out his righteous purpose to people the earth, "that it might be filled with the measure of man," Adam was created, and his wife.

When the world of mankind, because of sin, had been destroyed by the flood, and the commandment came again to multiply and replenish the earth—for this his righteous purpose God preserved only Noah and his sons, and for each of them one wife. When Israel had plunged herself into polygamy and other evils, and God had determined to allow the overthrow of Jerusalem, he led out a righteous man and his sons, and for each one wife. And at no time did he give to any of these concubines. Hence in the beginning God gave to each man only one wife; and at the times of scourging and purging just mentioned, he called out men of one wife only, and from these sought to raise up a people in righteousness, who would not walk in the ways of "them of old," polygamy and other evils being left with the wreckage of the world and the iniquitous nations thereof.

That the instruction in Doctrine and Covenants 49:3 was clearly understood by the church to provide for monogamy only is evidenced by Doctrine and Covenants 111:4, the same being an article read before and adopted unanimously by the general assembly of the church at Kirtland, Ohio, in 1835, immediately following the action accepting as the word of God the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and ordered published in and appearing in the 1835 edition of said book as section 101. This article recites:

We believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again.

HOW DO WE STAND?

So indeed is the unchangeability of God and the immutability of his law established beyond the peradventure of a doubt. For not only in the testimony of two nations, but in the testimony of three, is it shown that God's order is for man to lay his lines in monogamous marriage, the only marriage God ever authorized or promised to bless.

Yet our Utah friends would persuade us that this is the God who gave the law appearing in their Doctrine and Covenants 132, seeking to authorize polygamy and to justify men of old time in both polygamy and concubinage, the very acts herein justified having before been condemned by him as an abomination.

In the light of these facts, how, think you, stand those before God who are so rigid in the lesser things, but who have not only neglected but done violence to the weightier things of the law? How shall these appear who have excluded from their "homes" the lesser things of the law, and taken to their "homes"—for such could not be taken to the home,—a thing which God did not authorize, and which he has condemned in the strongest terms as a grosser crime? How shall they make answer who "strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel"?

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

CHINESE REBELLION.—The press announces that twenty-five thousand Mongolians have organized and begun a march southward toward Peking. The government reports victory over the rebels in the south.

REPRESENTATIVES HOME.—Henry Morgenthau, United States ambassador to Turkey, is on his way home via the Balkans and Berlin. Henry Van Dyke, United States minister to Holland, is at home for a short rest.

FORD PEACE EXPEDITION.—The Ford peace tribunal has established headquarters at the Grand Hotel, Stockholm. Sixty-seven members of the expedition landed at New York December 29. Mr. Ford expresses himself as satisfied with the results of the expedition.

DISASTROUS FLOODS.—Floods have occurred in territory east of the Mississippi, as a consequence of which the water has raised in the Mississippi, resulting in property damage amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars and the loss of eleven lives in Arkansas. Sixteen have also been drowned by flood waters of the Arkansas River.

CANADIAN BUILDING BURNS.—The Canadian parliament building at Ottawa was threatened with destruction by fire on the 3d. Several persons were overcome by smoke, and some were severely burned. All escaped, however. The Montreal fire brigade was called out to assist in subduing the flames. Rumor and one arrest suggest the suspicion of incendiarism.

WILSON AND PREPAREDNESS.—President Wilson was received enthusiastically throughout his central western preparedness trip, and was listened to attentively by large audiences. Closing his campaign at Saint Louis the 3d, the President is reported as having said:

There is no other navy in the world that has to cover so great an area, an area of defense, as the American navy, and it ought, in my judgment, to be incomparably the greatest navy in the world.

HATTERS REIMBURSED.—Contributions by members of the American Federation of Labor to reimburse Danbury hatters who have lost their homes under a judgment awarded D. E. Loewe & Company, and secured under the Sherman antitrust law, are announced as reaching $350,000 to $400,000. The judgment awarded Loewe & Company under the plea of boycotting was $252,000.

LANE ON GASOLINE.—Secretary Lane reported to the Senate on the 3d that the increase in price of gasoline is due in part to greatly increased consumption, and to increased exportation. The demand for gasoline in 1915 was, he said, twenty-five per cent higher than in 1914, and he predicted that it would be twenty-five per cent higher in 1916 than in 1915. Exports for 1914 had exceeded those of 1913 by 500,000 barrels, and exports for 1915 those of 1914 by 1,500,000 barrels.

DENY EXCLUSION.—The United Mine Workers of America in convention at Indianapolis, Indiana, December 31, defeated a resolution to amend their constitution so as to exclude national guardsmen and state constabulary from membership in that body. While the organization objects to the use of the militia in breaking strikes, it was thought that exclusion would be in violation of law and contrary to public policy. This convention strongly indorsed the fight against national preparedness.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE.—On the 2d, Vice President Marshall casting the deciding vote, the Philippine independence bill was amended in the Senate by providing absolute independence for the islands in from two to four years, unless the President be in doubt as to "the stability or efficiency of the proposed government," in which instance he might prolong the period until Congress could "further consider the situation." On the 4th the amended bill passed the Senate by a vote of fifty-two to twenty-four.

"LUSITANIA" CASE.—Negotiations for final settlement in the Lusitania case are understood as having adjusted matters except on the point of disavowal. The United States Government is reported as having contended that Germany should declare the act illegal. A tentative German note is being considered by the Washington authorities, declaring the sinking of the liner an act of reprisal, and the killing of Americans unintentional, because reprisals should not be applied to neutrals. This note also expresses regret, assumes liability, and offers indemnity.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—The capture of Agumendo, most prominent revolutionist since the collapse of the Villa cause, has been announced by the Carranza embassy at Washington. Bandits have overcome a Carranza garrison about one hundred miles south of El Paso, Texas, cut the railroad and torn down the telephone lines, severing communications with El Paso. Rebels have also defeated Carranza forces in the oil regions west of Tampico. Villa is reported first at one place and then at another. Latest announcement is that he was surrounded by Carranza forces while heading for the international border, but had thus far eluded them.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.—The Federal Council of Churches announced figures on January 30 giving church membership in the United States for 1915 as follows: Baptists, North, 1,252,633; Baptists, South, 2,705,121; Catholics, Eastern Orthodox, 467,500; Catholics, Roman, 14,049,068; Congregationalists, 771,362; Disciples of Christ, 1,363,100; Evangelicals, 205,255; Friends (Quakers), 120,712;

Lutherans, 2,434,186; Methodists, North, 3,657,594; Methodists, Protestants, 210,110; Methodists, South, 2,072,035; Presbyterians, North, 1,434,400; Presbyterians, United, 153,651; Presbyterians, South, 332,339; Protestant Episcopal, 1,040,896; Reformed in America, 126,847; Reformed in United States, 320,459; Unitarians, 70,542; United Brethren, 360,387; Universalists, 55,000.

EUROPEAN WAR.—In the west, north of Arras, the Germans have made the largest gains realized for some time. Heavy losses are said to have attended this movement, which has covered several days. The Austrians have met with success over the Italians west of Goritz. Serbian and Montenegrin troops are concentrating at Avlona, Albania, to join the Italian contingent there, which it is said has been enlarged by the addition of 20,000 more Italian troops. The Russians continue to press their advantage in the Caucasus and in Persia, where they still report gains. A Russian army is said to be approaching the headwaters of the Tigris, threatening Bagdad from the north, and looking to the relief of the British at Kut El Amara. The British and French report gains in Kamerun, the German West African colony. The most sensational event in the warfare on the sea for some time is the capture by a German raider of some kind, off the Canary Islands, January 15, of the British south African liner, Appam, which was brought into Hampton Roads on the morning of the 1st, by a German prize crew from the raider. The German raider had sunk seven allied vessels. Under orders of the United States Government, on the 3d, the crew of the Appam of 115, the 114 Appam passengers, and 136 British seamen, survivors of vessels sunk, were removed from the Appam, leaving on board the German prize crew of 21, and 20 German civilians, including 3 women, being transported on the Appam from South Africa to detention camps in England. The United States Government is under the necessity of determining what disposition should be made of the Appam, under the contending claims of Germany and Great Britain. Airships have been unusually active of late in various parts. In a German air raid on Paris, December 29, 24 were killed and 27 injured. In British rural districts on the night of January 1, 54 were killed and 26 injured by a German Zeppelin raid. A British coasting collier has been sunk at sea with 13 of her crew of 16 by a German Zeppelin. The allies seem to be gaining favor with the Rumanians. The larger portion of the Rumanian army is concentrated along the Bulgarian and Hungarian frontiers.

Let us have faith that right makes might; and in that faith let us dare to do our duty as we understand it.—Abraham Lincoln.

BY W. E. PEAK

THE TWO PRESIDENTS

There are, in the church, two priesthoods; namely: the Melchisedec, and the Aaronic, including the Levitical priesthood.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 1.

There is a president for each priesthood.

PRESIDENT MELCHISEDEC PRIESTHOOD

Wherefore it must needs be that one be appointed, of the high priesthood, to preside over the priesthood; and he shall be called president of the high priesthood of the church, or, in other words, the presiding high priest over the high priesthood of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 31.

And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church.—Ibid., 104: 42.

It is the duty of the president of the church "to set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom" (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5).

The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 2.

The burden that the Presidency is to carry includes all that pertains to the work of the missionary and local departments. They are "to set in order" all that pertains to the church.

There are also two "traveling presiding councils," or quorums, (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 4), and each one is "equal in authority and power to the three presidents" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11) that form the Presidency of the church.

These two quorums are the Twelve and Seventy (Doctrine and Covenants 123: 13). Both of them are "traveling presiding councils." Not "presiding councils" over local organizations, but of the whole church.

They are to assist the Presidency when needed and can act for them when appointed.

Either quorum can preside over the whole church when conditions require.

Should the "First Presidency" of the church (which indicates that there is more than one presidency) be removed, the second "presiding council" (the Twelve) would become the Presidency of the church. And should the Twelve be removed the third "presiding council" (the Seventy) would become the "Presidency of the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 10).

The work of these three quorums is quite similar. The First Presidency is "to set in order all the affairs of this church" (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5). The Quorum of Twelve is "to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12). The Quorum of Seventy is to work "in building up the church, and regulating all the affairs of the same, in all nations" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 13).

The same work is required of each quorum, although it is described by different words.

There is system in the arrangement. The Twelve are to labor under the direction of the First Presidency, and the Seventy under the direction of the Twelve. This places the Seventy primarily under the First Presidency through the Twelve.

The First Presidency are to send the Twelve "to unlock the door of the kingdom in all places where" the First Presidency "cannot come" (Doctrine and Covenants 105: 7). This shows that they are to represent the Presidency, when authorized to do so; and they are only to do this in the absence of the Presidency, where they cannot come.

"Wherefore, whithersoever they (the First Presidency) shall send you (the Twelve) go ye, and I will be with you." The Twelve are not only to be sent to their particular fields of labor by the Presidency, but they are "to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same," "under the direction of the Presidency" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12).

The Twelve are to send the Seventy to do the same work under their direction (Doctrine and Covenants 105: 8; 104: 13).

When these two quorums are doing the work of their calling, they will be in charge of the missions in which they are laboring. But neither of these three presiding quorums which constitute the complete presidency of the church, can do the work of their calling without being authorized by the church (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 5; 104: 11). Even the First Presidency cannot so much as preside over a conference only "by the voice of it" (Doctrine and Covenants 27: 4).

This illustrates the democracy of the church and shows us the rights of the members. The Lord calls men to these offices and the church sets them apart for this work by ordination, and they are permitted or authorized to proceed, according to their ordination, by the vote of the church. When the majority of the members say "Stop," they stop, and when a majority say "Proceed," they can go on.

The law forever prevents priestcraft or official tyranny. The people are supreme. The ensign of the church stands for liberty. Long may she wave majestically, and woe be to the man who tries to trail her in the dust.

The Presidency, authorized by the church to proceed according to their calling, appoint each one of the Twelve in charge of that particular portion of the church that wisdom directs. This apostle thus appointed, represents the Presidency and can proceed "to build up the church, and regulate all the affairs of the same" in his mission, as the Presidency would do if present, if this appointment is sanctioned by the vote of the church, as the following shows:

He that heareth him that is sent heareth the Lord who sent him, if he be called of God and be sent by the voice of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 5.

If the Presidency see fit to take personal charge of any portion of the church without having one of the Twelve or Seventy in charge, they can do so, as the following indicates:

Therefore, see to it that ye [the Twelve] trouble not yourselves concerning the affairs of my church in this place [Kirtland Stake], saith the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 105: 11.

When for sufficient reasons it is not wise to appoint one of the Twelve in charge of a mission, the Presidency has the right to leave him to labor without the responsibility of being in charge.

The twelve, when authorized to proceed by the church according to his calling, appoints the seventy under him in charge of the particular portion of his field that wisdom directs. Whether this should be done by the one in charge of that field, or by the Twelve as a quorum is a question. The Presidency as a quorum appoints the Twelve to their several missions, and there are many reasons for believing that the Twelve as a quorum should appoint the seventies in charge of the several fields, instead of leaving it for each one to do separately. Yet all this should be under the general supervision of the First Presidency.

There may be reasons why a certain seventy should not be appointed in charge at times, and it may be wise for a portion of the twelve's mission to be left under his personal charge or direction, but when a competent seventy can be had, he should be in charge under the twelve.

When the stakes are included in the missions of the twelve, a competent seventy should by all means be in charge. The seventy could devote his whole time to the stake, while the twelve can give but little attention to it.

All wisdom is not found in any one quorum. Each man is entitled to the direction of the Spirit, so he will know what the Lord requires of him (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 4). If one of the three presiding, regulating quorums should make a mistake, the church or member is protected by right of appeal to the "general assembly of the several quorums which constitute the spiritual authorities of the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11). These quorums are the Presidency, Twelve and Seventy" (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10).

Therefore it is proper and absolutely necessary for the appointing powers to consult those who are to be appointed before the appointments are made.

These appointments should be permanent, and no change should be made unless absolutely necessary, and this by the consent of the Seventy or with the concurrence of the First Presidency. Many mistakes have been made by not doing this, which has resulted in injury to the men appointed to unsuitable fields, and in loss to the church.

THE SECOND PRESIDENT

The second priesthood is called the priesthood of Aaron. . . . The bishopric is the presidency of this priesthood and holds the keys or authority of the same.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 8.

But a literal descendant of Aaron has a legal right to the presidency of this priesthood, to the keys of this ministry, to act in the office of bishop independently, without counselors, except in a case where a president of the high priesthood after the order of Melchisedec is tried.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 34.

As the president of the Melchisedec priesthood has "the burden of the care of the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 2), great responsibility is placed on him, and it becomes necessary for the church to give him much authority "in administering spiritual things" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 5). So it is with the president of the Aaronic priesthood. It is necessary for the church to give the Bishop much authority "in administering all temporal things," to "do the business of the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 32).

The president of the church is "to set in order all the affairs of the church," which places the watch-care of the temporal things under his jurisdiction; yet the Bishop is not to labor under his direction as the Quorum of Twelve does.

The First Presidency works with the Bishop (Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2) and are "the proper counselors," to him "in spiritual and temporal things" (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 9); yet they cannot dictate to him, or control his policies. He is not under the control or jurisdiction of any officer or quorum (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6). He is only amenable to the "joint council" (the general assembly, Doctrine and Covenants 126: 6) of the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. When this council speaks the Bishop must obey.

The Quorum of Twelve and all other quorums should watch the procedure of the Bishop and "should it become apparent to the quorum that there was abuse in the administration of the temporal affairs of the church, they shall at once make such inquiry and examination through the proper officers of the church as will correct the evil and save the church from injury" (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 5).

The Twelve have not the authority to "correct the evil," they find in the Bishop's policies or work. Neither can they even make an examination. All they can do is to proceed to have this examination made through the proper officers.

The Presidency, whose duty is to set in order all the affairs of the church, should be informed that something is out of order in the Bishop's office; and the Presidency should call the joint council of the Presidency, Twelve and Seventy, and make the necessary examination, and their action and determination should govern.

The control that the Bishop has of the finances of the church gives him great power, it is true; but the church is sufficiently safeguarded by these three quorums, the special interest of which makes it absolutely necessary for the finances to be properly and wisely administered.

So we can truly say, "The law of the Lord is perfect."

A NEW YEAR'S REVERIE--PART 2

J. W. RUSHTON

A CHANGE OF OUTLOOK

Not only has this truth been used in science and philosophy, but it has had very important place in the most impressive fiction and drama of our day; and we cannot but feel that we are upon the eve of a great change in our outlook upon life when we see this light dawning upon the universal consciousness of the race.

We mention but briefly, Dickens's A Tale of Two Cities; Victor Hugo's Les Miserables; and all of W. J. Locke's works which we have been privileged to read, and take an extract from The Beloved Vagabond to show what we mean. On page 220 of this book, Paragot, a Bohemian artist living in London, who had picked up a London waif and in his careless way had provided for him and taught him his knowledge of art, speaks one day to Articot as follows:

I am proud of you because I made you; you are proof that I haven't spent all my life in absorbing absinthe, and omitting to decorate Europe with palaces. Instead of bricks and mortar I have worked in soul-stuff and my masterpiece is an artist,—and a great artist by the Lord God, if you will keep the "great and sorrowful gift" pure and undefiled as a good woman does her chastity.

You must help me in my work my son. Let me be able to point to you as the one man in the world who does not prostitute his art for money or reputation, who sees God beneath a leper's skin and proclaims him bravely, who reveals the magical beauty of humanity and compels the fool, and the knave, and the man with a muckrake and the harlot to see it; and send them away with hope in their hearts, and faith in the destiny of the race and charity to one another,—let me see this my son, and by heaven! I shall have done more with my life than to build a temple made with hands—and I shall have justified my existence.

In The Passing of the Third Floor Back, Jerome K.

Jerome shows us the miracle worked by a big, generous soul in reaction upon a group of miserable, petty and mean London boarders. No one can watch the portrayal of this splendid character by Sir Johnstone Forbes Robertson without sensing the divine power which is the soul's ultimate value demonstrated in the regeneration of these men and women—a literal transvaluation of values.

AS STATED OF OLD

The same truth is expressed in Paul's saying to the Thessalonians: "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy."

Again, by Daniel, "They that turn many to righteousness, [shall shine] as the stars of the firmament."

And in the two instances where Jesus discussed the ethic of divine judgment he declines to recognize those whose claim is but a personal acknowledgment of himself and the performance of Christian exploits which had no other commendation than individualistic benefits, either directly or ulteriorly.

But our acceptance by God is shown to depend upon our Christian enthusiasm being directed in helpful sympathy to the alleviation of another's sorrows and the supplying of another's needs. In other words, the sum total of the individual life upon others will prove our worthiness to consort with God in eternity. In this we see "that Jesus Christ turned virtue from passive abstinence, from wrong to active beneficence."

Or as James shows it in his epistolary letter, religion is inward purity, self-control and sympathy.

THE SUM TOTAL OF RESULTS

The question of supreme concern as we stand with our backs to the years which have gone, and look into the future so pregnant with destiny is this: What is the effect produced in the experience of others, because of our personal attitude, service or program?

If our life as a person, or minister, or as a church, is lived upon individualistic lines, it is doomed to condemnation, whether that life is good or bad in the accepted sense of these terms. For ultimately goodness and badness as terms of soul value must be applied to the sum total of results made concrete in the lives of others. After all, this is the way we are measuring things and persons commercially and professionally: A good lawyer is one who secures justice to his client; a good doctor is one who can restore his patient to health; a good minister is one who can bring the soul of his parishioner into contact with God and arouse his congregation to the actualization of the kingdom of God.

GLORIFICATION

This is also the meaning of our Lord's evaluation of himself according to John's account: "The hour is come, that the Son of Man should be glorified."

Observe the process of glorification:

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.—Jesus.

If we may take liberties with the text, let us paraphrase a little: If a grain of wheat, no matter how good and pure in quality it may be, is alone, it has not died. There being no death of the self-interest of the individual life, there is no vitalizing glory of its resurrected multiplicity.

Dick Heldar, the artist in Kipling's The Light That Failed, who went blind under such tragic circumstances, said to the heartless Maisie upon whom he poured out the wealth of his soul's passion: "If we make light of our work by using it for our own ends, our work will make light of us, and we are the weaker, we shall suffer."

Will it be too startling to say now: "No one is worthy of heaven who is not willing to spend himself to the pouring out of blood,—and, if need be, go to hell for another's sake"?

NEGLECTING THE MORAL ASPECT

To speak of developing Christian grace and virtue on a purely mechanistic basis, or by slavish adherence to a textual or ritualistic program, as though divine character was a similar process to producing a chemical combination, or a biscuit, or a new recipe for making a cup of coffee; that by punctiliously observing ecclesiastical rites and General Conference resolutions of a positive and negative character, such a stilted and automatic jerking along the highway of holiness will pass for the living presence of "Christ in you the hope of glory," is too cheap.

Paul labored and prayed for the Galatian saints to the end "that Christ may be formed in you."

Equally suggestive of disappointment is the disposition which is almost an obsession with some people: to advertise that the second advent is going to take place something like the next item on the program in a show; that God's great and epochal evolutions are working like running trains, according to a schedule or table.

We do not deny the interest there is in a chronological analysis of divine eschatology, but to cultivate a taste for this thing to the neglect of the moral aspect of this question is a grave danger.

THE GARDEN OF THE PRESENT

A casual glance at our accepted scriptures will show how woefully disappointed the generations have been in the past who based their calculations of God's movements upon chronology alone; and we may affirm in the light of these experiences that a church which has its eyes glued upon such a program is in danger of developing an abnormal appetite for novelties and for changes which inevitably lead to incompetency in appreciating the splendid provinces of present opportunity from out of which all the future must grow.

If we do not sense eternity in the "to-day," "to-morrow" can never reveal it; for to-day is the concentrated essence of all the "yesterdays"; and is the germ of the to-morrows—to-day is eternity.

A person looking for heaven among the astral constellations and galaxies, and who cannot see God in the earth, will be looking into the future for those dramatic events which are largely imaginative, to presage the establishment of Zion and the coming glory. And while contrasting events with schedules in pathetic eagerness, the garden of the present is overrun with noxious weeds, the walls are dilapidated, and we shall likely be awakened to find ourselves classified by the wise man who said, "A fool's eyes are in the ends of the earth."

NECESSITY OF A PROGRAM

As a church we have categorically announced that "Faith is the moving principle of all action." This is good; but what does it mean?

"Faith is the reasonable inference from accepted truth"; and implies the necessity of a program of life.

The gospel has been given in order that man might be acquainted with God—his thoughts, ways and purposes. Further, that man might cultivate in himself the same thoughts, ways and purposes, so that he will thereby become like God, this being preparatory for his eternal companionship with the divine in his home to which he has invited man. We believe that such consummation will be on the earth; others believe that it will be in heaven. The geographical point is immaterial.

As known truths we can allege that God's character is described to the best of our capacity to understand in the two words truth and love. Further, that God cannot be at home with us, nor we at home with him, unless he either becomes like us or we become like him. The first is impossible, the second is the hope of the gospel.

What is a reasonable inference from these accepted truths?

Either that God cannot come to earth until we are so like him that we want him more than we want anything or anyone else; and in the language of Saint Augustine, "we are restless until we rest in him"; or that if he should come, we would have to leave, for it is sheer stupidity to say we are like him.

Herein lies our program: First, to cultivate God's thoughts, emulate his methods, and consecrate ourselves to his purposes.

Second, when this preparation has been completed we should inoculate society to the utmost capacity of our influence with the qualities of the same character by not doing anything which we know is out of harmony with God, nor tolerating the doing by others of that thing.

THE TABERNACLE OF GOD

We reiterate what has been written before, "God waits for us and not we for him."

It is suggestive of deep heart-searching that those who speak so much concerning the second coming of Christ and its imminence specialize upon "the signs of wickedness among the nations," and not upon the increasing holiness of the Saints.

If the schedule is only sustained on the negative side and not its positive, surely there is something to the credit of the wicked nations, viz, punctuality. But what of ourselves?

The Bible speaks of the prelude to the second advent in terms of blood, fire and vapor of smoke; but that is not all: there must be the development of a people of whom it is said, "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men." Surely we cannot overlook the fact that besides the baptism of the fires of death and destruction, there must also be the baptism of divine glory.

Not a few have been worrying over the Temple Lot and the erection of an imposing edifice upon which the glory of God shall rest by night and day. It may be heretical, but we will take the risk of saying that this is not primarily a matter of much importance.

If the glory of God shall rest upon any work of man it is an unmistakable evidence that he approves that work, with all that such work symbolizes, i. e., motives, desires, methods, means, and hands.

Unless the temper and spirit of the people engaging in such work for presentation to the Almighty as well as the methods and means employed, and altogether the effect harmonizes with the highest and holiest ideals of God, his glory could not rest upon it. Again we feel convinced that the "hurry up or we shall be too late" disposition which is influencing some is not of the most useful and moral quality we could have. Chronology, theology and materials have a place no doubt, but the value of the work will consist in the moral and spiritual worth which goes with it, as well as the ends to which it shall be devoted.

LOOKING INTO THE FUTURE

Looking into the new year and examining our hearts in the light of these reveries, can we say of our work and its results with Paul, "Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed"?

Individually that salvation consists of the development of consonance between our personality, including the affective, cognitive and conative functions (feelings, reason and will power), with the love, reason and will of God; then the diffusion of the quality of consonance which is held possessively and inwardly, until it reaches the utmost circumference of our personal influence.

The decrease of social dissonance with God and the corresponding increase of socialized consonance with him will be the measure of our value as individuals and as a church.

Instead of looking for Christ to impose himself upon the world from without in order that Zion may be realized, Christ must be first in the hearts of men, and his externalization in the communal life of the people will be the natural transmutation of the abstract vision of all peoples and times into the concrete fact of social experience. To give the matter a clothing in the language of physics; Zion is the actual fact of Christosphericity which will depend upon the reality of the Christocentricity of the individual.

O may I join the choir invisible
Of those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence:
In pulses stirred to generosity, live
In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn
For miserable aims that end in self,
In thoughts sublime that pierce the night like stars
And with their mild persistence urge man's search
To vaster issues.
This is life to come,
Which martyred men have made more glorious
For us who strive to follow. May I reach
That perfect heaven, be to other souls
The cup of strength in some great agony,
Enkindle generous ardor, feed pure love,
Beget the smiles that have no cruelty—
Be the sweet presence of a good diffused
And in diffusion ever more intense.
So shall I join the choir invisible
Whose music is the gladness of the world.

—George Eliot.

BANCROFT REVIEWED

THE BOOK OF MORMON SUSTAINED

An article in a recent issue of the HERALD, by Brother Prettyman, contained a quotation from Bancroft's Native Races of Pacific States (1882 edition, as given in Parsons' Text Book), which again calls attention to the value of a set of books that we are fortunate enough to number among our private collection. It is the first (1874-76) edition of The Native Races of Pacific States, by Hubert Howe Bancroft, in five large, sheepskin volumes, containing in all over four thousand pages. This edition is said to be a very rare print, and was held at a fancy price.

Believing that a more intimate acquaintance with a work that is quoted so often by the ministry, and which is the most complete and authentic ever written on the subject, will prove interesting and instructive to the readers of the HERALD, I offer the following review of the author's preface to the 1874 edition of The Native Races of Pacific States, also the quotation referred to above.

Describing the vast territory covered by his work, Mr. Bancroft says:

To the immense territory bordering on the western ocean from Alaska to Darien, and including the whole of Mexico and Central America, I give arbitrarily, for want of a better, the name Pacific States. Stretching almost from pole to equator, and embracing within its limits nearly one tenth of the earth's surface, the last western land offers to lovers of knowledge a new and enticing field.

This not only reveals the scope of his work, but the fact that at that late date, 1874, forty-four years after the publication of the Book of Mormon, American antiquities offered a "new and enticing field."

The author says:

To some it may be interesting to know the nature and extent of my resources for writing so important a series of works. The books and manuscripts necessary for the task existed in no library in the world; hence, in 1859 I commenced collecting material relative to the Pacific States.

And as further proof that a knowledge of the ancient inhabitants of America was altogether beyond the physical reach of either an unlearned youth, or a broken down, illiterate clergyman, the historian continues:

After securing everything within my reach in America, I twice visited Europe, spending about two years in thorough research in England and the chief cities of the Continent. Having exhausted every available resource, I was obliged to content myself with lying in wait for opportunities. Not long afterwards, and at a time when the prospect of materially adding to my collection seemed anything but hopeful, the Biblioteca Imperial de Mejico, of the unfortunate Maximilian, collected during a period of forty years by Don Jose Andrade, literature and publisher of the city of Mexico, was thrown upon the European markets and furnished me about three thousand volumes.

In 1869, having accumulated some sixteen thousand books, manuscripts, and pamphlets, besides maps and cumbersome files of Pacific coast journals, I determined to go to work.

We are told that before the completion of the work the collection increased to sixty thousand volumes. Here was assembled all the "wisdom of the wise." "But," said Mr. Bancroft, "I soon found that, like Tantalus, while up to my neck in water, I was dying of thirst."

How wonderful the inspiration of Isaiah! "It shall even be . . . as when a thirsty man dreameth, and, behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and, behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite" (Isaiah 29: 8).

"The facts which I required," complained Bancroft, "were so copiously diluted with trash, that to follow different subjects through this trackless sea of erudition, in the exhaustive manner I had proposed, with but one lifetime to devote to the work, was simply impracticable."

In accounting for the Book of Mormon in any other way than that of inspiration, we are forced to believe a greater miracle—that a mere youth, in the back woods of New York, away back in 1827, knew more about the ancient people of America than the great American historian with sixty thousand volumes and many able assistants could possibly learn in a natural lifetime!

The author proceeds to relate the manner of his escape from the "water" before choking to death or dying of old age:

After many consultations and not a few partial failures, a system of indexing the subject matter of the whole library was devised, sufficiently general to be practicable, and sufficiently particular to direct me immediately to all my authorities on any given point. The system, on trial, stands the test, and the index, when complete as it already is for the twelve hundred authors quoted in this work, will more than double the practical value of the library.

Again:

The labor involved in the preparation of these volumes will be appreciated by few. That expended on the first volume alone, with all material before me, is more than equivalent to the well-directed effort of one person for ten years. In the work of selecting, sifting, and arranging my subject matter I have called in a large corps of assistants. . . .

Thus we see how difficult the task, even at that late date. To assemble and select the material necessary for anything like an intelligent and authentic work on American archaeology required the resources and wisdom of one with no less ability, resolution, and courage, than Hubert Howe Bancroft. And to show that the task was almost impossible of accomplishment in the short time allotted to man on the earth, he said:

Mine is the labor of the artisan rather than that of the artist, a forging of weapons for abler hands to wield, a producing of raw materials for skilled mechanics to weave and color at will; yet, in the undertaking to bring to light from sources innumerable essential facts, which, from the very shortness of life if from no other cause, must otherwise be left out in the physical and social generalizations which occupy the ablest minds, I feel that I engage in no idle pastime.

With reference to population and civilization, the historian says:

Aboriginally, for a savage wilderness, there was here a dense population; particularly south of the thirtieth parallel, and along the border of the ocean north of that line. Before the advent of Europeans, this domain counted its aborigines by millions; ranked among its people every phase of primitive humanity, from the reptile eating cave-dwellers of the Great Basin, to the Aztec and Maya-Quiche civilization of the southern table-lands,—a civilization, if we may credit Doctor Draper, "that might have instructed Europe," a culture wantonly crushed by Spain, who therein "destroyed races more civilized than herself." Not all savages, yet all of a common stock "differing among themselves in minor particulars only, and bearing a general resemblance to the nations of eastern and southern America; differing again, the whole, in character and cast of features from every other people of the world, we have here presented hundreds of nations and tongues, with thousands of beliefs and customs, wonderfully dissimilar for so segregated a humanity, yet wonderfully alike for the inhabitants of a land that comprises within its limits every phase of climate on the globe.

To us this is a wonderful testimony in favor of the divinity of the Book of Mormon. And to show that by divine inspiration men sometimes take short cuts to truths, which may, in time, be laboriously worked out by others, the Book of Mormon contained all of these facts over forty years before Bancroft discovered them.

In Isaiah 29:5 we read:

Moreover the multitude of thy strangers shall be like small dust, and the multitudes of the terrible ones shall be as chaff that passeth away: yea, it shall be at an instant suddenly.

The following account of the sudden disappearance of the American aborigines is but an involuntary comment on the exact fulfillment of this scripture.

At the touch of European civilization, whether Latin or Teutonic, these nations vanished; and their unwritten [?] history, reaching back for thousands of ages, ended. All this time they had been coming and going, nations swallowing up nations, annihilating and being annihilated, amidst human convulsions and struggling civilizations. Their strange destiny fulfilled, in an instant they disappear; and all we have of them, besides their material relics, is the glance caught in their hasty flight, which gives us a few customs and traditions and a little mythological history.

Is there a Book of Mormon student in the world who could, with but a single stroke, paint a more vivid picture of the terrible political upheavals and consequent destruction of the Jaredite nations, or the bitter contests of the Nephites and Lamanites, which ended only with the complete annihilation of the former?

For all of Mr. Bancroft's accumulation of knowledge, for all of his expenditure of time and means; for all of his painstaking research, he was rewarded with but a "glance caught in their hasty flight"! Just a few "material relics," just a few "customs and traditions," just a little "mythological history,"—just a little! Yet enough to fulfill the Scriptures in this particular and add another witness to the divine authenticity of the latter-day message.

The following quotation, I believe, will serve Brother Prettyman's purpose more fully than the one from the 1882 edition:

"The following are names of rancherios of tame Indians or Neophytes in the Sacramento Valley." The author then gives a half dozen unpronounceable names, and continues: "Rancherios of wild Indians or Gentiles are": More names are followed by his authority for the statement which he gives as "Indian Tribes of the Sacramento Valley, M. S."

Again: "Tame Indians or Neophytes: . . . Wild Indians or Gentiles: . . . Sutters Estimate of Indian Population, 1847, M. S." (The Native Races of Pacific States, vol. 1, p. 450, 1874 edition.)

While the spelling differs in the above quotations, yet the name is evidently the same, and in each case signifies "tame Indians."

We not only have here the same name that is given in the Book of Mormon, but two names, each having its peculiarly identical significance.

SUCCESSION OF THE APOSTLES

The original twelve were: Simon Peter, Andrew his brother, James the son of Zebedee, John his brother, Philip and Bartholomew, Thomas, Matthew the publican, James the son of Alphaeus, Libbanus whose surname was Thaddeus, Simon the Canaanite and Judas Iscariot (see Matthew 10).

As a church we claim that the apostolic office was perpetual, so long as the church existed,—that the means for its perpetuation was provided is evident from Acts 1:23. Matthias was chosen to succeed Judas, the choice being made after fasting and prayer and vote of the apostles. In Acts 13:1-3 Barnabas and Saul were appointed by the voice of the Holy Ghost; Galatians 1:18, 19, James the Lord's brother; 1 Thessalonians 1:1, Paul and Silvanus and Timotheus. There are also other references which indicate successors; but a few positive instances are better than a larger array, with some uncertainties.

We are not alone in the claims for literal succession, and also that the number of communicants is immaterial.

The Episcopal Church, in Church Identified, by W. D. Wilson, and furnished me by the Right Reverend Joseph H. Johnson, Bishop of the Diocese of Los Angeles and Santa Barbara, says:

But the relative numbers is not very important. It is always held that the identity of a society depends upon its officers and recognized authorities. This point was clearly established in the famous case of the Presbyterian Church of York, Pennsylvania. The court in that case held the Old School to be the Presbyterian Church, on the ground that "a popular body is known only by its government or its head," and awarded to them the name, the funds, and the property, not because the New School were taught to be anything but Presbyterians, but because the recognized head and government of the church remained with the Old School, or rather the Old School remained with the recognized government, and the New School were declared seceders and their church a new one.—Pages 8, 9.

The Catholic Church also claims succession from the apostles and of their liturgy as well:

But of all the proofs in favor of the apostolic origin of the mass, the most striking is found in the liturgies of the church. The liturgy is the established ritual of the church. It is the collection of the authorized prayers of divine worship. These prayers are fixed and immovable. Among others we have the Liturgy of Jerusalem, ascribed to the Apostle James; the Liturgy of Alexandria attributed to Saint Mark the Evangelist; and the Liturgy of Rome, referred to Saint Peter.—Faith of our Fathers,

"We define," says the Council of Florence 1439, "that the Roman Pontiff is the successor of the blessed Peter, Prince of the Apostles and the true vicar of Christ."—Ibid., p. 125.

The true church must always teach the identical doctrines once delivered by the apostles, and that her ministers must derive their powers from the apostles by an uninterrupted succession, so consequently no church can claim to be the one whose doctrines differ from those of the apostles, or whose ministers are unable to trace their authority to an apostolic source.—Ibid., p. 38.

There is no just ground for denying to the apostolic teachers of the nineteenth century in which we live a prerogative clearly possessed by those of the first, especially as the divine word nowhere intimates that this unerring guidance was to die with the apostles.—Ibid., p. 63.

These premises would seem to be well laid and apparently worthy of the indorsement of any church, including our own. As a matter of fact we as a church could not consistently claim any less; the only difference being in the method by which the authority is traced to the apostolic source.

Accordingly we claim our position to be in harmony with the scripture (Revelation 12: 1-14): The beautiful woman robed with white, with the power and light of the sun, with the moon under her feet, and a crown of twelve stars on her head, bringing forth the priesthood and authority in the form of a man child, then flying into the wilderness of disorganization, becoming displaced by the woman of scarlet, the man child caught up unto God and to his throne; and at the end of the appointed time the woman or church coming forth out of the wilderness, as shown in Doctrine and Covenants 1, when men were "authorized" and "empowered" to "lay the foundations of this church and to bring it forth out of obscurity," the same being accomplished under the authority of the direct personal ministry of the authorities claimed by our contemporaries, Peter, James and John, who brought back the man child, priesthood, through which process the officers have been reestablished, deriving their powers from the apostles, teaching the identical doctrines once delivered by the apostles, together with the power of succession, so that this unerring guidance will not perish with the men first ordained to this power (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 30).

So we again have a full complement of officers, and claim the old original head and government, by which a society is known, including apostles.

I wish to credit to Brother R. S. Salyards of Lamoni, Iowa, the suggestion of using the claims of the denominations named in connection with the question of succession.

Of General Interest

TRAVELING RELIGIOUS EXHIBITS

Religious exhibits at the Panama-Pacific Exposition were such a success that their field of usefulness is to be extended by a wide itinerary. The Christian World recites rewards meted out to them, and plans for their extension, as follows:

The collective exhibits were awarded the Grand Prize. Besides this, there were awarded to the various church boards and religious organizations four gold medals, five silver medals, twenty-two bronze medals, and four honorable mentions. The collective exhibits are said to be the finest ever gathered together and exhibited in the history of the church.

So great has been the interest in these exhibits that a plan has been perfected whereby the entire exhibit displayed at the exposition, together with additional religious exhibits, may be shown in the larger cities throughout the country. It is the aim of the exhibit management to include in this great plan not only exhibits from every one of the thirty denominations constituting the Federal Council of the Church of Christ in America, but from great interdenominational religious and social-service agencies throughout the country.

While the cities in which the campaigns are to be held are not definitely contracted with, the following is a list of cities where exhibits are to be held: Seattle, Los Angeles, Des Moines, Dallas, Buffalo, Youngstown, Chautauqua, Birmingham, Indianapolis, Washington, Tacoma, Denver, Minneapolis, Houston, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Bay View, Detroit, Richmond, Spokane, Omaha, Saint Paul, Atlanta, Toledo, Rochester, Newark, Grand Rapids, Providence, Portland, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Louisville, Columbus, Harrisburg, Albany, Hartford, Saint Louis. The exhibits campaign is to start in Seattle, Washington, January, 1916.

THE RABBIS' ANSWER TO HAECKEL

Admitting that Professor Ernst Haeckel may be a great biologist, Dr. Samuel Schulman, of the Temple Beth-El, finds him but "a poor philosopher" in his latest conclusions induced by the spectacle of the war. The great German monist avers that the present war has ended the "illusions" of the existence of a providential God of predestination, and of the immortality of the soul. Doctor Schulman replies rather tartly that the dean of the German scientific world "is a type of scientist that becomes a dogmatist on matters on which he can speak with no more authority than anyone else." He gave his views to a representative of the New York Times in these words:

God still lives, though men refuse to obey his law. There is no more difference about God and immortality in seeing a man die in battle than there is in seeing him snatched away by a microbe or carried away by an earthquake. The manner of a man's death has nothing to do with the divine plan for his destiny. It is very interesting to observe that an English statesman, Balfour, in his latest book, Theism and Humanism, comes to altogether different results. The fact is, were it not for the reality of God, the assumptions with which the scientists operate, uniformity of nature, etc., would have no basis. God and right and love and the value of the spirit are realities despite this war.

I will tell you what illusion this war has swept away—the flattering unction to our soul which a materialistic science has dinned into our ears for the last fifty years, namely, that men become better and more civilized because of the mastery over nature which enables them to increase their material comforts. This war proves that the civilization of the head is but the smallest part of human culture, but that if brutal wars are ever to end, humanity's heart must be educated. Men must take seriously and everybody in their lives the faith in a God that wants them to love one another. It is Haeckel's gods that have been swept away by this war, and not the God of Judaism and Christianity.

Doctor Silverman, of the Temple Emanu-El, is more inclined to agree with Haeckel, after important reservations, than his confrere in faith. He declares that "so-called Christian ethics has gone bankrupt," adding:

Every war is of high relation to all true ethics. War and the doctrine of "Love thy neighbor as thyself" are inconsistent with each other. It is quite true that people who love their neighbors cannot make war upon one another, and certainly cannot carry on an inhumane war.

Professor Haeckel is quite right when he believes or intimates that those who are conducting this present war, or any war, are not really Christians, believers in God, or the doctrine of "Love one another." Anyone who believes in the highest doctrine of religion can never conduct offensive warfare.

When it comes, however, to the question of the denial of Providence and predestination or the existence of the Deity, or of immortality, then the question hinges on the definition of these terms. If by Providence Professor Haeckel means that God is forever interfering with human will, whether it be directed to good or evil ends; that predestination means that every human act, whim, or folly, cruelty, or torture has been ordained since the beginning of creation; that God is a great being who can control every minute act of individuals or nations; that immortality is a meeting again of human souls after death and the continuance of life after death similar to life we have here, then I agree with Professor Haeckel that war with all its inhumanity has shaken if not entirely destroyed, such a belief. But his definitions of God, Providence, predestination, and immortality are false. He sets up straw men in order to overthrow them. Like most other atheists, he creates a god whom he can destroy.

God is a force that has created, governs, and preserves the universe, and Providence under that conception of the Deity is merely the working out of the laws of nature to their natural end.

Providence, in other words, means the logical and consistent process of the elements and forces of the universe.

Predestination means a constitution, physical, mental, and moral, with which every being is equipped and the circumstances both physical and spiritual under which it is born.

Predestination is the track upon which the engine must run. If it runs off the track it destroys itself. But in the track it has freedom of motion. In other words, predestination is subject to improvement by the human will, while the very human will itself is conditioned by the limitation of its physical, spiritual, mental, and moral equipment, its inheritance and environment. We are governed by our predestination and by our free will. There is constantly in our life this interplay of fate and volition. Immortality means the perfect existence of the human soul, but does not undertake to declare under what conditions and under what processes the soul exists in another life.

From the standpoint of these definitions of God, Providence, predestination, and immortality, the war does not present such an intellectual difficulty as makes it impossible to accept the premises. Granting these premises, the war is a result of the hypocrisy of men who profess to believe in God, who profess to obey his law, and whose whole life belies their professions. Not religion is destroyed by the war, but our belief in certain men whose acts have proved their insincerity.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, of the Free Synagogue, sees Professor Haeckel's declaration as "the problem of multitudes of souls racked by the spiritual stress of the war," and he warns both church and churchmen against "sneering away the words of Haeckel, which embody the doubts and agonies of multitudes of hitherto believing souls."

One non-Jewish clergyman, Doctor W. T. Manning, of Trinity Church, New York, enters the field opened by Haeckel to speculate on the situation after the war:

It seems clear that the world will be a new place, and that the church will have the greatest opportunity she has ever yet known. It seems certain that out of this war will come a mighty impulse toward democracy. With all its horrors the struggle is making toward world-brotherhood.

A DRY CHRISTMAS

Here is a bid for sympathy that might find response in the hearts of the people if it did not bring to mind, this Christmas time, thousands of empty stockings of little kiddies whose daddies drink.

It is supposed to be a Christmas and New Year's greeting and it appears in Our Side, the Minneapolis liquor journal. We give excerpts from it:

Friends and readers, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. . . . The last two years have been very bad and bitter ones. Nearly 100,000 retailers have been put out of business and some of them have had to ride the bumpers to get where they could get work. . . . Yet notwithstanding that, Our Side says to all, Merry Christmas. Let all entertain hopes for better times and a Happy New Year. . . .

In this supposed-to-be-joyous season let us resolve to do right—obey the laws—help the poor as much as we can, contribute to church and charity according to our means—remembering always that there are others worse off than we are, and that we are not altogether hoggish and parsimonious. Let the brewers be kind and considerate of the poor saloonists. Let the saloonists on the other hand work hard in hand with the brewers and wholesalers. As they say in the secret societies, "Let peace and harmony prevail."

It is indeed a gloomy situation in which the "poor saloonist" finds himself at the present time, but we ask Our Side to remember that the closing of those thousands of saloons which resulted in driving the hundred thousand saloonists to honest toil has been the means of bringing a Merry Christmas into more than one hundred thousand homes, where last year's Christmas was blighted with want and poverty because of alcohol. . . .—The American Issue, December, 1915.

MARCH READING.—PREPARATION FOR ADOLESCENCE

PARENTHOOD A PROFESSION

"Parenthood is a profession, perhaps the noblest profession. It is a life calling. It is a fine art; and it is based upon a genuine science. There is, therefore, a psychology of fatherhood and the rudiments of it every boy's father should know. We are coming to recognize that there is a psychology underlying every profession. . . . I believe psychology has a large contribution to make also to the profession of fatherhood."—George Walter Fiske.

"Underlying all this complex work of child-rearing lies a well-developed science, psychology, which ought to be required in an elementary form in all secondary school courses. Later, every prospective parent should be required to take a thorough course of training in the psychology of child development. Such training will, in my opinion, do more to save the boys and girls and the whole country, than any other discipline that can be offered. If the various women's clubs would devote one half the time they give to Shakespeare and Browning to the pursuit of a well-planned course in child psychology, the result in behalf of the growing generation would be well-nigh sensational."—W. A. McKeever, in A Better Crop of Boys and Girls.

In Parents and Their Problems, under the heading, "The usefulness of ideals," Mrs. Mary Harmon Weeks writes of the advantages of setting clearly before us the things we need to know and ought to recognize as aids in the training of children. We quote: "If such definite study of methods of child training were a prerequisite of child having, if such forming of clear and well-defined ideals as to results to be accomplished did nothing more than to establish the fact that most disobedience, untruthfulness, dishonesty and lack of self-control are due to the physical condition—food, health, sleeping rooms, personal relations in the home—which we provide for our children, to the examples we set for them, the temptations which we create for them, the opportunities for deceit and wrongdoing which we offer them, and to our usual failure to understand child nature, its means and methods, we shall have gone a long way on the road to better things."

RECOGNIZING THE VALUE OF SELF-CONTROL

Mrs. Weeks says further: "Almost every other good habit traces itself back to self-control, making its acquirement one of the essentials of success in the formation of others. Would not a study of the psychological processes involved in self-control, the physical and mental conditions that strengthen or modify the power of self-control, a clear recognition of one's own limitations in this direction, and persistent efforts to overcome them, be a strong parental equipment for dealing with this difficult problem which confronts every father and mother at the birth of each child? And would not the mere recognition of self-control as a definite problem in child training, save us many a humiliating experience in which our own lack of self-control has rendered nugatory, strenuous but misguided efforts to make precept work without example. . . .

"Self-control stands in such close connection with obedience, each almost presupposing the other, that they can scarcely be separated in a statement as to their value. But it is safe to say that no parent can discharge his full duty to his children, who has not a clearly defined notion of the meaning, scope and value of self-control as a determining factor in a successful life, and some understanding of the slow, steady, persistent efforts necessary to establish it."

Of this important principle Miss Emma Virginia Fish says: "As I study the children and young people around me, I am becoming convinced that the underlying weakness in their training, especially of the boys, is lack of self-control. Self-control in eating, in playing, in exhibitions of temper is rarely taught to the little children. Consequently, when the overwhelming impulses of adolescence arrive, the will lets go and the youths fall an easy prey to temptations. Why are not the boys taught that self-control in all things lies at the foundation of character? If they were early taught to hold their wrong impulses in check, to exercise their wills in overcoming faults, they would not so quickly fall at the first onslaught of the temptations peculiar to puberty. Especially is this true of sexual abuse. A boy armed with self-control and a true, pure knowledge of himself combined with high moral principle will very seldom be led into wrong practices. And this control over his instincts will follow him through life and form the basis of a happy marriage. 'Self-control in ALL things' might well be placed before the eyes of our boys, for only by the exercise of the divinely given will power will they gain true, pure manhood."

FAULTS AND THEIR ANALYSIS

Little children are early taught self-control in exhibitions of temper, the above quotation tells us. There are ways of helping a child to curb his uprising temper. There are also ways of utilizing the forces back of it so as to leave the temper unruffled and by continued repetition of such a course to form habits of cheerful activity, thus causing the child to escape the destructive effects of anger. An article headed "When faults are virtues," by Miriam Finn Scott in Good Housekeeping magazine, throws a great amount of light upon this subject. Concerning the faults of our children this writer says, by analyzing them, "We shall probably discern that, in the majority of cases, the faults are only an unpleasant and deplorable expression of forces that, in themselves, were originally admirable. They may spring from splendid energy that has not been permitted a proper activity, from fine emotions that are undisciplined and have not been given a happy outlet, from faculties that have not been given or allowed a wholesome occupation. . . ."

QUALITIES BEHIND TEMPER

The most common and distressing fault among children, and the one that as a rule is least understood, is undoubtedly an uncontrolled temper. Parents have been driven to despair by that fault in their children; and the children themselves have inflicted immeasurable misery on others by it, have had their own usefulness or happiness crippled or curtailed, have perhaps even had their lives ruined by their inability to govern it.

"We must realize that, detestable as temper ordinarily is, the qualities which are behind it are, in themselves, qualities to be admired and treasured, as they are forces capable of incalculable good. Temper may have its origin in, or be a perverted expression of, any of the following desirable qualities: self-dependence, will power, high spirits, a desire for mental or physical activity, curiosity, initiative, concentration and persistency, imagination, personality, emotional strength. The trouble is that either these splendid forces, these virtues, have somehow been distorted, or that we parents in our well-meaning ignorance of the truth have pursued exactly the wrong course to encourage their proper growth."

PREVENT WASTE OF FORCES

"We must get the fact into our heads, and get it there to stay, that the child who can cry hard and long for the fulfillment of a desire, keeping all the time to the point of his desire, the child who can go through a violent fit of temper without bodily injury to himself, has physical energy, emotional strength, will power, and the power of concentration. That same child can use his emotional strength just as well for expressing happiness as he can for expressing anger or disappointment; furthermore that child can use his physical strength, and will, and persistence, in doing useful, constructive, helpful, positive things instead of using such magnificent forces in purely negative, unhappy or destructive ways. We must realize that it is the duty and opportunity of mothers, fathers, teachers and all adults who are responsible for the first years of children's development to get hold of this precious raw material and make the greatest possible use of it. Our great problem is to so handle the child as to prevent useful forces from going to waste in temper.

"To have physical health in the home, the home should be clean and free of germs. As regards temper, the same is true; the home should be morally aseptic and antiseptic, free of the germs which beget the disease of temper. In trying to prevent the development of temper, and to save the waste that goes with it, there are two chief working principles we should lay down for ourselves at the start. First, we must, from the child's earliest days, remove all possible causes of unnecessary irritation—and there are many in the average household. We must remember that temper, like practically every habit, good or bad, may take its start from an apparently insignificant event or practice, and that it becomes established through repetition. Second, we must see to it that, from the beginning of the child's life, those energies, which, when misunderstood, or suppressed, or mishandled, result in temper, must have materials and opportunities for free, normal, happy and constructive development. . . ."

CONSTRUCTIVE DEVELOPMENT

"Our greatest interest in this problem of temper obviously should be how to handle the child so as to avoid the mal-growth of qualities, full of potential good, into destructive forces. The first step in this endeavor should be to make a study of the child's characteristics. I know a little boy of five and a half who, without the guidance and thoughtful training he is having would most likely develop into an erratic, excitable, self-willed man, who, unless everything went his way, would have, and would give, no peace. But his mother early realized that her child was possessed of powerful emotions and physical strength; and, from his infancy, she surrounded him with opportunities through which these powers could find expression. She was most careful and regular about his physical habits, his meals, his rest period, his sleep period; she made a point of seeing that before bedtime he was never excited or overstimulated, or led into doing something which would necessarily delay the period of going to bed or make going to bed less pleasant than what he had just been doing. Thus, the child acquired the habit of doing the right thing at the right time, and was happy in so doing; and thus endless painful scenes were avoided, endless conflicts of will, which would have been certain germinators of temper.

"She tried, to the best of her ability, to give the child's emotional power a happy and developing activity. She gave him the opportunity for unselfish, joyous play. She gave him full chances to become acquainted with color and form, as he came in contact with them in his daily life; and so he loved flowers and birds and the beautiful things of nature. She saw that he was supplied with colored crayons, colored papers, scissors, and that he acquired the use of them. . . . In the regular, routine manner of going out for a walk, this mother would take the little boy to various places of interest, to the museum, the aquarium, or just merely to some new park. Thus the child had pleasant occupation for his vitality. His instinct for physical activity, his emotions, his imagination, were so satisfied, and constructively satisfied that there was no cause, and no time, for temper to be fostered in him. In consequence this little boy now goes for weeks without having a tantrum, though he possesses in a marked degree the qualities out of which wild temper is developed. Those qualities are being utilized as qualities, not as the begetters of vices, and are assets in the development of his character."

The article from which the foregoing extract is taken was reprinted in American Motherhood, December, 1915, and the whole of it is well worth reading. It contains a number of illustrations from life, showing, on the one hand, how parents are often responsible for the bad tempers of their children and, on the other, how wise treatment may direct the energies, which otherwise would have been displayed in temper, so as to bring them under self-control. Suggestions are also given in regard to dealing with children in whom the habit of giving away to anger is already established.

REDIRECT THE CHILD: NOT STOP HIM POINT BLANK

Upon this point of directing the forces of the child life, Professor Irving King is quoted in Parents and Their Problems as follows: "The parent who tries to suppress an impulse of any sort in his child may succeed in thrusting it out of the child's conscious life, but he does not really kill it. More than likely it is still working away in the recesses of his mind, producing distorted and unhappy consequences in his conduct. Many things that the child may want to do are neither suitable nor right, but the energy of the impulse, in most cases, can be used in some desirable form of activity. What is needed most of all in the home life is abundant opportunity [with wisdom] to redirect the child rather than to stop him point blank, when his curiosity and eagerness to do show undesirable tendencies."

In the next statement from this article there is pointed out the advantage of redirecting the thought of the child in quest of knowledge of sex, so as to send it on in a natural channel instead of trying to suppress it, thus damming it up, as it were, to work unexpected injury. One of the most effective ways offered by scientific psychology for disposing of early impulses and curiosity of a sexual nature is through frank, sympathetic conversation between parent and child. The air of mystery, the sense that these things must not be mentioned, and worse still the false information so often given, produce deep-seated and lasting harm to almost every phase of the child's inner life."

INTELLIGENT SYMPATHY

"After all, the greatest thing needed by the father and mother is intelligent sympathy with their children. Their other mistakes will be, in part, offset if they can really enter into the lives of their boys and girls and learn to appreciate their point of view in all they are striving to do. The father, as well as the mother, must be the comrade of the children. Openness and frankness must characterize their intercourse. They must be absolutely truthful in all their association together. They must cultivate the art of loving and confidential talks with their boys and girls. . . .

"After we have done the very best we know how to do, we shall often feel that we have fallen far short in our efforts with this or that child. And yet the fault will usually be found to lie . . . in our own lack of insight into the needs of the troublesome youngster and to our lack of deftness in applying right principles. . . . However, to strive to accomplish something along right lines is better than to make no effort at all." CALLIE B. STEBBINS.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

Remarkable Confirmation

It will be remembered that a short time ago Father and Mother Briggs came to the Children's Home and were installed as superintendent and matron.

At the time, though the board of trustees felt justified in securing their service, not one of them knew of the existence of the document from which we copy here. There came into our hands just a few moments before this writing, the record of a patriarchal blessing bestowed upon Mother Briggs, September 1, 1905, through Patriarch Joseph R. Lambert.

We quote from this document for a threefold purpose: first, as confirmatory of the divinity of the Spirit that prompted the utterance of the blessing; second, as evidence of the wisdom and light that led to the installing of these parties in their important position; and third, to impress upon the minds of the Saints and friends the conviction that in sustaining these parties they are sustaining them in a God-appointed work:

"I lay my hands upon thee in the name of Jesus Christ, thy Lord and Redeemer, and present thee to God, that thou mayest receive from him, through this divine ordinance, according to thy needs, and according to his wisdom and love. Thou hast wisely and properly decided to seek for additional strength, light and help from thy Father above, through this ordinance. And I say to thee, Thou shalt be blessed; thou shalt receive the uplifting influences of the divine Spirit, helping thee to keep the commandments of the Lord Jesus, and to accomplish the important work given thee to do, that it may be done faithfully and well."

In this paragraph some special work is referred to, but not specially defined. Some other things are then spoken of in a general way, and then the special work referred to above is specifically set forth as follows:

"Now, I bless thee, dear sister, that thou mayest yet be the means of accomplishing good for the little ones; that the way may be opened for thee to teach and instruct, and cast thy influence in favor of the good work sought to be done for their timely welfare, and their eternal salvation. May the love of God abide in thy heart and qualify thee for this work. May his wisdom indicate to thee that which is most needful to be done; and whatever may be the demands of this life, or the character of those things by which thou art surrounded, I bless thee that thou mayest be able to keep thy mind and heart fixed on God and the accomplishment of thy work. Thou shalt have wisdom and knowledge, and faith and love to qualify thee to lead along the lambs of the fold, and help them to come to God, according to the gospel of Jesus Christ. Be faithful and true to thy covenant. Banish all fear from thy mind, for however much others may fail, the Lord God will do his work, and hasten it in its time. Be faithful, and the peace of God shall be thine, in this world, and eternal life, even celestial glory, in the presence of thy Father and Redeemer, in the world which is to come. I seal it upon thee in the name of Jesus, the Lord. Amen."

Brother and Sister Briggs have no children of their own, though they have reared one, and so this blessing must have had reference to those without their immediate household.

It is comforting to those upon whom the responsibility of the home rests, and no doubt will be to others, to be assured that the Lord ten years ago, and more, was preparing parties to occupy in this work.

When the writer first talked to Brother and Sister Briggs about this work, Sister Briggs remarked to her husband, "Perhaps this is the work I am to do with the children"; but said no more, and we knew nothing of the document here presented until now.

It will be remembered that at the time this blessing was given the Children's Home was not opened, and hence the words "Cast thy influence in favor of the good work sought to be done for their timely welfare, and their eternal salvation" referred to the movement by the sisters and others looking to the establishment of the home, and the prediction that Sister Briggs was called to that work was prophetic both as to her work and the consummation of the project then under consideration. The opening of the home being on August 15, 1911, it was nearly six years after the date of the blessing.

Financial

The statement in our last issue that the treasurer would publish a statement at this time, showing the true condition, we will not be able to fulfill. The treasurer informs us that he has not been able to get his reports in sufficiently to balance his books. This statement will be forthcoming in due time. We are still needing your help, however.

To Change Conference Date

Would it be well to change the date of General Conference?

With a desire that the greatest good for the greatest number of people may obtain, I present the following, so that before the convening of General Conference the various district conferences may discuss the matter herein, and if so desired instruct their delegates relative to how to vote when the fixing of the date of the next ensuing General Conference is presented to the delegates.

Some may be of the opinion that the date, April 6, has been fixed by the Lord as the rightful date for the convening of the conference, but so far as history records, I have not been able to so learn.

If we are to follow precedent, then it should be June 6, for according to my understanding of volume 1, Church History, the first conference convened June 6. We find that the Lord made provision for quarterly conferences, and were we to follow accordingly, from April 6, the second quarter would be September 6. Since we have seen well to have but annual conferences, it will therefore be optional with us what date we shall fix. And if we follow in line with the organization and the first convening of conference, September 6 will be perfectly in harmony with all these. And if by comparison with the date at present fixed, April 6, we should find that September 6 is the preferable time, would it not be wisdom on our part to so order the next convening conference?

1. April is a time when there is greater danger in traveling than any other time of the year, owing to the unsettled condition of the railroad beds from the winter frosts and the spring freshets.

2. Very few of those who work in offices, shops or on the farm, can possibly get their vacation in April, owing to it being such a busy season of the year, more so than most any other. From north to south of this country we find the farmers busily engaged in some kind of planting, which, if they neglect, cannot be done at any other season, and thus they would lose their source of maintenance.

3. The weather is so uncertain that we have experienced the pleasure of seeing cherries almost half grown before the closing sessions of conference, and to our sorrow we have seen them frozen to the center; while upon another occasion we had the displeasure of wading through twenty-four inches of snow that fell in twenty-four hours' time. Those coming from the South do not wear sufficient clothing in their own State, where it is seldom at freezing point, to keep them comfortable during these rushes of winter; while those from the North are unprepared in their northern garments to endure the outbursts of heat, and thus both parties have to purchase heavier or lighter garments, according to the weather, probably to their financial embarrassment. To be in keeping with the season it is often necessary for our sisters to purchase their spring hats while at conference.

4. The many changes in the weather hinder the more delicate from being in attendance, and often those much stronger are overcome with the sudden changes in temperature, so that they have not the courage to repeat their visit another April.

5. It is often very trying on those who lodge the visitors to provide adequate comforters for the sleeping of their visitors, owing to the severity of the weather.

6. There is no other season of the year when foodstuffs are so scarce and consequently high-priced, and those who furnish the meals are compelled to charge high prices or provide scanty fare, the latter of which they would not do.

7. The country looks its worst; and none would ever think of attempting a long distance ride in an auto, owing to the extremely muddy condition of the roads.

SEPTEMBER 6

There are so many points of advantage for September that it seems to me almost needless to present an array of facts. But as one of our venerable brethren once said when making his speech at General Conference, "Just to make it unanimous," I will present a few of the many.

1. The railroad bed and bridges are the solidest of any time in the year, and thus there is little fear of accident in travel.

2. The office and shop workers as well as professionals can more conveniently take vacations then, while the farmer has his grain harvested and only the loose ends of the summer work are to be taken care of, and he can more easily be spared than in planting time.

3. From north to south it is conceded that September is the ideal month of the year for travel, by train or auto, and those who have been broken in health by the severity of the past winter and excessive heat of the summer may now feel perfectly at ease in starting a long or short tour across the country by auto, for the roads are at their best, the open air is neither too hot nor too cold, the country looks its best; and there is every inducement to incline people to make the journey either by railroad or auto. Money is more plentiful among all classes, and thus they are more free to attend the conference. Zion and her stake look their best, and are more enticing for the settlement of the Saints than during the bleak month of April in which either snow or mud has the future home of the Saint locked fast in its unkindly embrace. Millinery is in season during the entire month; and none would be at the expense of purchasing changes of raiment owing to changes in temperature.

4. There is such a fascination and health-building recreation in auto riding that many would save some of their shorter summer pleasure trips, that they might take the whole family for this one grand cross-country ride, that would build up the health and spirits of all; and thus they would come to Zion or her stake in good health and spirits, and under the most favorable conditions view their future homes with pleasure.

5. There is no other season of the year in which foodstuffs are so delicious and plentiful and therefore so healthful and easily obtained, and those who provide the meals for visitors could do so with a much greater variety and at a greatly reduced price; and thus many, who, to-day, are through lack of finances, deprived of the privilege of attending the General Conference, where they would get their spiritual life replenished, could be in constant attendance, much to the general benefit of themselves and their brethren and sisters.

I do not think that it is necessary for me to present any argument concerning the many benefits derived from attendance at General Conference. I think that such is conceded by all. Then will it not be well to have this matter brought up at your district conferences, and there fully discussed, so that legislation may be had at our next convening that will so set the date that the church at large may receive the greatest possible uplift?

Respectfully submitted,

R. C. RUSSELL.

GRACE, MISSISSIPPI, January 25, 1916.

A Few Words Aside

If you knew of a missionary spending his very best effort and energy, and devoting all of his time to his calling; and if you were also made aware that by the strictest economy, under the high cost of living, his family allowance could not quite be stretched to cover the actual need from month to month; and if in addition to this you should learn that said missionary had been appointed to labor in a frontier field which was not supporting its appointees; and if you should be informed that under such circumstances it is sometimes so difficult for the bishop to supply the frontier points from the general fund that the missionary's family only receives a part of the allowance from time to time, which, if paid up in full, is scarcely adequate; and then if the fact should be impressed upon your mind that such public servants of the church lay awake nights thinking,—thinking how bills are to be met, "dreaming dreams no mortal ever dared to dream," unless tied in the same stall,—wondering whether the Lord would justify a missionary under such circumstances in laying aside the work he is commissioned to herald, in stifling the proclamation thereof, and in picking up the instruments of labor by which the men of the world gain a competence; if you, dear reader, could come to see and know of all these points concerning the welfare of some of your own representatives in the gospel field, what would you do about it?

Would you pray the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the vineyard? If so, will you kindly repair to an appropriate place and begin that prayer at once; for truly and soberly, this portrays the unpleasant dilemma of your humble servant.

Hoping to meet you all where coal bills shall be no more, or somewhere, and where a suit of clothes will last forty years, I am,

Yours truly,

JAMES E. YATES.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

The very cold weather continues, but instead of snow we have sleet, making the sidewalks very slippery. There has been much sickness here of late. La grippe in certain cases has ended in attacks of pneumonia, which have been fatal.

Our superintendent, D. J. Krahl, was hindered by illness last Sunday from being present at Sunday school, Brother C. F. Davis acting in his place. The secretary, Brother G. W. Eastwood, announced the attendance as eight hundred and eighty, and the Christmas Offering for the year as six hundred seven dollars and thirty-four cents. Though the weather was cold and sleety, the attendance at all meetings was fairly good.

The booster club, composed of young men whose object it is to further the interest of the culture hall movement, met on Sunday afternoon, as did also a young people's prayer meeting, which was called to be held in the east gallery in charge of Bishop Keir.

On Friday, the 28th, there will be special musical features, consisting of a young folks' quartet, hailing from Atchison. There will also be a chorus of one hundred and twenty-five voices to entertain the Religians.

The Saints are happy in the possession of a bulletin board and a wireless tower. The former is a masterpiece of art, the fine printing being the work of Brother Mills.

Visitors are still coming hitherward, and we have with the rest Brethren Vanderwood, Hills, and Peak, also Brother R. Archibald, who was here on Sunday, January 30. Elder R. M. Elvin preached last Sunday evening with the same earnestness as of yore.

The leadership of the choir work in the morning was in the hands of our active Brother E. C. Bell, of Saint Louis, who marched the singers through "Onward Christian soldiers" in good time. The rehearsal in the afternoon of the "Messiah" was also finely directed by him.

The quotations of the morning's sermon and text, "I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder," in the light of the present new movements lately conducted here, are interesting to read and consider. These were read from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants by Elder G. E. Harrington, as he discoursed Sunday morning on the establishing of Zion, the conditions in Zion, a place of thanksgiving and instruction, requiring the application of principles set forth by the bishopric, as well as consecration of head, heart and hand. After speaking concerning these things, and also of judgment, intelligence, discernment, and enjoyment, the preacher referred to the man called of God to bring about the realization of Zion. His counsel to the Saints was to follow the leader, otherwise we are hindered in the onward movement of Zion.

The afternoon prayer and testimony meeting was an interesting one because of the many testimonies borne, and of the presence of President Frederick M. Smith, who, treating on many interesting subjects, bore a humble testimony of the divine direction and guidance of the Spirit, and of his high appreciation of this marvelous work.

May we as Saints pursue our way onward with patience, faith, hope, and charity, as the revelation and the Holy Ghost direct.

Your sister in bonds,

Olive, Maine

Since last report much work has been accomplished by the Olive Branch. Our annual business meeting was held on the evening of January 3. Reports were very gratifying. All were made to realize that much had been accomplished toward placing the branch on a higher plane. Among other business, it was voted to borrow the necessary money to complete the upper auditorium of the church, and the building committee was authorized to attend to the matter at once.

The Willing Workers, a noble band of hustling sisters, recently held a supper in the church vestry. Good success was realized as usual.

Brother Ebeling is still holding meetings in the vestry of the Union church in West Jonesport, Thursday evenings, with good success. An increase of members would not surprise us. Our brother is surely putting forth his utmost efforts for the advancement of the work. He is held in high esteem, not only by the members, but by all with whom he comes in contact. He was not long ago chosen vice president of the local branch of the National Parent-Teacher's Organization. Through this channel we can rest assured this organization will be presented with many truths pertaining to old Jerusalem gospel.

Our Religio is on the gain. Last evening there were one hundred and seventy-eight present, new members being added to the list. An effort is being put forth to entertain and draw all classes into the gospel path.

A branch orchestra is about to be organized under the leadership of Brother Hubert Rogers. Our Sunday school, under the leadership of Brother W. C. Smith and associates, is steadily gaining in numbers. The school is blessed with fine teachers, some of whom are normal graduates. It is hoped a normal class will be organized in the near future. This would be of benefit to the younger teachers.

This world is but a fleeting moment in comparison with eternal life. It behooves us as Saints to be up and doing while the day lasts, that we may not be counted as slothful servants, but rather be fit subjects to dwell with God and his dear Son, Jesus Christ, through the countless ages of eternity.

CHARLES F. CUMMINGS.

Central Chicago

Our district conference has come and gone, leaving sweet memories in its wake. The business sessions were characterized by a kindly Christian spirit. Friday afternoon and evening were given to the Religio and Sunday school conventions. The evening entertainment was indeed an enjoyable one, in which our young men and maidens gave of their time and talents to the service of God.

Two splendid prayer services, together with a sacrament meeting, were enjoyed by a goodly crowd. God in his abundant mercy spoke to his children through Brother W. A. McDowell. The Saints were admonished to preserve their family altars and to teach their children to pray, that they might be pure in mind and body so that his Spirit might dwell in them. All were encouraged and strengthened to press steadily onward in the warfare. We need the whole armor of God to compete with the wiles of the adversary of our souls.

The sermons by Brethren F. F. Wipper, J. O. Dutton, J. F. Curtis, and W. A. McDowell were truly manna from on high. We were caused to realize that man should not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

The material man was also generously provided for by the west side Saints, for which and for their genuine hospitality the visiting Saints extended to them a vote of thanks.

Since the conference we of the south side of our big city have been treated to a series of sermons by Brother J. F. Curtis with a short prayer service each evening before preaching, which have been felt for good. We have all been made to rejoice in the feast of fat things. Our young people have been enthusiastic, and aided by their presence and talents of music and of song. We are pleased to hear that Brother Curtis will remain until Thursday, speaking each evening.

Sunday afternoon at four o'clock, a Mr. W. H. Pyne, of Beloit, Wisconsin, was inducted into the kingdom by Brother Lester Wildermuth. This brother has been very ill. God spared his life, and he was added to the household of faith. His wife has been a faithful Saint for several years.

The evening service was in the nature of a temperance meeting. The Good Templars met with us. Several speakers, besides solos rendered by two young ladies, were much enjoyed, making the day a very busy one. May we always be found busy on the side of right.

Brother Curtis spoke this evening at the Oaklawn Mission. Our young people's prayer service was well attended and there were numbers of good, live testimonies and some good prayers. Success to the young.

"God is marshaling his army for the rescue of his truth,
He is calling now to battle, both the aged and the youth."

Valiant soldiers, is the prayer of your sister,

News from Missions

Homeward Bound

Am writing this on the steamer Sierra, on my way home from Australia. I left Independence August 15, 1913; expect to get back February 19. The greater part of my time has been spent in the state of Victoria, where I was privileged to make many good and true friends in the gospel.

In the farewell given me by the Melbourne Branch, December 3, I was made to feel my labors there were very acceptable to the people of God; and the kind words uttered by the various speakers gave me abundant assurance that the sacrifices made by those at home and myself were not in vain.

The priesthood of the branch gave me a beautiful illuminated address, signed by all of the brethren. It is a token which I shall ever prize very highly. The sisters of the Sunshine League remembered I had a wife and daughter across the great deep, and I am carrying some rays of sunshine over with me for them.

On December 4, many of the Saints and friends assembled at the wharf to bid me Godspeed, on my way to Sydney, which is about six hundred miles from Melbourne, by water.

A little while before the boat leaves the pier, men go around selling rolls of various colored paper, which is about three fourths of an inch wide and various lengths. The roll is thrown on the boat, the friend on the pier holding one end, and as the steamer moves out the paper is unwound. It is a beautiful idea, this "last touch," and being in communication with a friend so long as possible. And it is a most picturesque sight, all these streamers of various hues, reaching from the ship to the piers, and then hundreds of people waving handkerchiefs, hats and hands in motion, the shedding of tears, parting good-bys, cheers and tears mingling, all make a sight never to be forgotten.

As I looked down upon the Saints and friends on the wharf, the majority of them having done me many personal favors, and as I realized this parting was possibly forever, so far as this life was concerned, my feelings can only be imagined. These Saints there will ever have my love and prayers. With his right hand God has planted one of his branches in Melbourne.

I was privileged to visit a few of the New South Wales branches before leaving Sydney. At New Castle, while walking toward our good Bishop Lewis's home, I was overtaken by Brother and Sister Hopkins's daughter Vera, and the inner man was provided for at their home. I spent the night with Brother Lewis, then the next day by motor and train reached Bullahdelah, where there is a fine little branch, with as kind-hearted Saints as you can find anywhere.

Here is located the only alum mountain in the whole world. I believe there is a hill of alum in Italy somewhere. The alum rock here is about ninety per cent pure in places. It looks something like Italian marble. The sisters had a beautiful watch charm made for me from the rock. From Bullahdelah a crowd went by sulkies to Brother and Sister McGinnes's hospitable home at Kilingolook, where we took Brother Anderson's speedy yacht and one of the prettiest river rides I ever had was the trip to Tuncurry, where is located the old pioneer church of Australia, now in ruins and replaced by a nice little structure. The district conference convened the next day after our arrival, and it was a fine spiritual, intellectual, and musical success. This is only a small branch, but there is considerable talent in it. After the conference an automobile ride of twenty-five miles landed us at Taree, where we took the train for Sydney. I had a fine time getting ready for my trip home. I had good times as I was packing up, thinking about meeting my loved ones.

The conference of the other district was held in Sydney on January 1, a very large gathering being present. The conference was presided over by the two ministers in charge and the presidency of the district, with dignity and skill. In a large priesthood meeting presided over by Apostle Paul Hanson, I saw evidence the Lord was going to bless Brother Hanson in his work. The spirit of his office rested on him in that meeting, and his counsel was seasoned with the Spirit, and his prestige was increased among the priesthood. Brethren Butterworth and Hanson are men who will build up the kingdom of God, because of their integrity, supplemented by inherent talents, which the Lord can use to his honor and glory.

On Monday evening, January 3, a farewell was tendered me by the Saints, an appropriate program being prepared. Here again I was made to feel my mission to Australia was a success. The Sunshine League of Sydney remembered it costs a lot of money to travel, as did a number of the brethren also, and the bishop's liberal help was supplemented by these faithful Saints, so my needs were adequately met in every way.

Now came the great day for me, Wednesday, January 5, when the Sierra was to leave Sydney for San Francisco, via Samoa and Honolulu. About fifty of the Saints gathered at the wharf. The boat was to leave at 4, but the passengers were supposed to be on board at 2, on account of military requirements. Each passenger's luggage was scrutinized, passports had to be inspected, etc. It is very difficult for an Australian to leave the country under present conditions, so the passengers were largely American, with several German-Americans, etc.

Now it is time to get on deck, so the good-bys have to be said, a last clasp of friendly hands, and the gangplank is the barrier between the ship and the wharf, as no visitors are permitted on board. The streamers are now binding the friends on the wharf with the passengers on the boat, and now the ship is slowly moving away out into the Sydney harbor; the streamers are breaking, and so the last ties are being severed.

Some scenes can never be adequately portrayed, some heart throbs cannot be explained.

Again I look at my brethren and sisters in the gospel, and how I loved those Australian Saints! I now began to realize I had become rich in friends; they were mine, now I was to lose their association, "good-by" meant "farewell." Wherever I had labored, every branch I had visited, I found the same warm-hearted people of God, and now I had bidden them farewell, and would see their earthly faces perhaps nevermore. Under such circumstances farewell is not easy or pleasant to say. As the ship sailed away, I kept the Saints in view as long as physically possible. The last handshake had been given, the last streamer had snapped, and now my vision could distinguish the people of God no longer, so I had a nice little cry all to myself.

Swiftly the boat made for the "heads," which is an opening of a mile and a half across, being the entrance from the sea into the harbor. As we steamed out into the mighty Pacific, I felt the door of Australia would always be open to me—that magnificent front door of a mile and a half wide, swung open by nature to welcome the people of the earth to that sunny land. The various passengers arranged themselves about the boat, seeking places of comfort. I could not so lightly throw off the feelings which possessed me, so stood at the stern and watched the rugged cliffs of Australia become fainter and fainter. And I whispered time after time, Farewell, Australia; farewell!

The gospel meets all of our highest human demands, and there is a demand for Zion, where the people of God can be assembled as one magnificent family—the chosen family of God. With all our inconsistencies, our human failings, yet we have been chosen out of the world as God's people in these latter days. May he speedily gather his people to their Zion home, under more favorable environments his name may be more fully glorified.

After I could distinguish land no longer, I began to realize I was at last on my way home, so as I paced the decks, I kept repeating to myself, "I am going home, I am going home." What a feeling of exultation and exaltation possessed me! The right kind of a home is the sweetest place on earth; it is the divine loadstone which attracts by an irresistible power. Let us make our homes the divine sanctuary, and then we need have no fear of competition from any source.

Thursday was a beautiful day on the sea, Friday a little rough. A number became sick, then Thursday night it grew quite rough, and Friday very rough. Saturday it was blowing a gale, and Sunday about every passenger on the boat was sick. A typhoon was raging and we were in part of it. To avoid getting the full benefit of it, the captain went out of his course, making us twelve hours behind the schedule.

I always wanted to see a storm at sea, never considered I got my money's worth before; but I got it this time all right, thank you. We could not go on deck for two days, as the wind was in an awful hurry all the time, and in every place on the boat, and the decks were washed with the water the boat was shipping. But I enjoyed watching the storm. The evidence of power I saw around me in those towering waves was awe-inspiring. When the propellers "raced," which they did when the ship would pitch and lift them free of the water, and when they would strike the water again, the jar would shake the ship from bow to stern. The engines had to be slowed down to lessen the racing of the propellers. Since Monday we have had better weather. I am feeling fine and hungry all the time!

On the 11th we were watching for Samoa, which is a United States naval station. We expected to reach the island at 7 but it was so dark the captain was afraid to risk entering the harbor, as the pass is very difficult to make at night, so we cruised around all night and entered early next morning. I was pleased we did not leave at night, as I wished to get a view of the place. It is a beautiful little village and harbor, tucked back between the hills which tower around it. There is the usual tropical vegetation, trees, etc. I shall not go into a detailed description of the place. We stayed there for about four hours, while the boat was loading copra. The natives seem to be somewhat lighter than the Tahitians. Many of them were gathered at the wharf, with all kinds of souvenirs to sell. The majority had slept on the wharf all night, as the ship was expected to enter the harbor, and they had prepared quite an elaborate program for our entertainment, in the form of amusements of various kinds, native dances, music by the native military band, etc., which was to be held in a building used for such purposes. Before the steamer left a lot of the natives came on board, to which I will refer later.

After we were permitted to land, I walked down toward a public building, and there was the band, composed of natives, who were policemen appointed by the Government; at a signal from the steamer, the Stars and Stripes were swung to the breeze from a high flagstaff, and the band played the national air. It sounded good, and it felt good to hear that band playing that air. I realized I was on Uncle Sam's domain; that I was no longer on foreign soil, but in my own land. May that flag continue to wave over a land at peace with the world. And may our country be patient and long-suffering with the nations engaged in a deadly struggle. If in an effort to gain some advantage, the giants in their deadly combat ignore our just claims or injure us grievously, we can afford to be patient.

At noon the whistle warned the stragglers it was time to get on board. Many natives of both sexes were on the steamer, and four dusky belles, in their native costume, entertained the passengers with dancing and singing. After the native songs, the girls sang "Tiperary," to the delight of the passengers. Some of the girls had been to the Panama Exposition in the Samoan village, so they were stage seasoned. I learned one of the girls who was there died from pneumonia, as the climate was too severe for her. She was a young mother, and her baby has also died since, so the husband is a despondent fellow, with his troubles to bear.

It will take us six days to reach Honolulu. I expect to remain there for three weeks, when the next boat, the Ventura, will arrive from Sydney. We have quite a live branch at Honolulu, I understand, presided over by Brother Waller, who is known to the HERALD readers.

The sea is very agreeable, the air warm, with a delightful breeze blowing. Sail on, good ship, and take me homeward!

C. EDWARD MILLER.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Central Texas: This is a day of sacrifice and a day of the tithing of God's people, a day of freewill offerings. So let each one of us see to it that we discharge our duty along this line, as well as others. I have traveled nearly all over the district, and find a great many of the Saints in poor circumstances; some on account of sickness, some for one thing, and some for another.

Now, dear Saints, let us stop and think a moment. The Lord wants us to build up his kingdom, and then all other things needed will be given us, that we may glorify him. Now if you have no tithing, it may be you have a small amount that you could give as a freewill offering. We have a membership of about four hundred in our district, and do not contribute enough to supply one missionary's family. We do not wish to be numbered with those who are to be condemned, and if we are to inherit celestial glory we will need to keep the law that shall entitle us to that glory. The law of tithing is a part.

Let all who can send in any amount as tithing or offering do so. I cannot see all in person. Let those who see this notice please speak to the Saints about them that do not take the HERALD. Send all money to the following address.

Notice of Transfer

By arrangement with the missionaries in charge involved, Brother Charles E. Crumley has been transferred from Salt Lake City, Utah, to Stockton, Northern California District.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, February 2, 1916.

Married

HUTCHINSON-WINEY.—Mr. Thomas Clarence Hutchinson, son of Mr. George Hutchinson, of Deloit, and Sister Patience Abbie, daughter of Elder Carl and Flora Winey, of Deloit, Iowa, were united in marriage, at the home of Charles E. Butterworth, Dow City, Iowa, February 3, 1916, at 2.45 p. m., Charles E. Butterworth officiating. The young people are well and favorably known in Deloit and vicinity, and they have the love and confidence and best wishes of all who know them.

Died

GOWELL.—Emma Gowell, born Searsport, Maine, November 6, 1834; died Independence, Missouri, January 28, 1916. At the age of sixteen deceased joined the Congregationalist Church. On her birthday in 1862, married Doctor Samuel R. Gowell. To them were born 6 children, 4 having preceded her. United with the Reorganized Church in June, 1907, baptized by her son, M. F. Gowell. She was a loving mother, a devoted wife, of a kind and forgiving disposition. Leaves husband, 2 children, M. F. and Carrie B. White, number of grandchildren, host of friends. Services at South Side Brick Church, Independence, by F. C. Warnky. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

SPITLER.—Mary Mildred Spitler, born in Iowa, March 24, 1846; died at San Luis Obispo, California, January 22, 1916. Baptized at Santa Maria, California, April 19, 1896, by B. W. Pack. Services by C. W. Hawkins.

WATSON.—John H. Watson, husband of Dellah May Watson, born Jasper, Tennessee, May 7, 1877; died December 24, 1915. Baptized by John Harp, August 25, 1905, near Sperry, Oklahoma. Leaves wife, mother, 4 brothers, 1 sister. Interment in Skiatook Cemetery, Skiatook, Oklahoma. Sermon by W. P. Robinson in Methodist church.

JURDON.—Melissa Jurdon, born May 2, 1838, Cayuga County, Ohio; died January 7, 1916. With her parents came to Iowa in 1846. Married William G. Myers in 1855. To them were born 5 sons, A. G., W. W., M. E., J. G., C. T. Her husband died in 1864. Married Joseph Jurdon, June 17, 1865. To them were born 8 children, Olive, James, J. A., B. A., John, Clara, Clarence, and Mrs. A. M. Justice, 4 having preceded her. Besides her children deceased leaves 31 grandchildren, 18 great-grandchildren. Baptized in 1862, she was faithful until death. Services at Deloit, Iowa, sermon by R. D. Chambers, assisted by C. E. Butterworth.

JONES.—At Lone Rock, Harrison County, Missouri, January 22, 1916, Margaret M. Jones, aged 78 years, 10 months, 26 days. Her husband, Charles H. Jones, died in 1913. They were married near Madison, Wisconsin, in 1857. Baptized at Marengo, Illinois, in 1861, by Samuel Powers. Both continued faithful until death. Five children were born to them, of whom 2 sons survive, Alma C., Lone Rock, and Frank H., Scammon, Kansas. Services in Saints' chapel, in charge of Price McPeck, sermon by H. A. Stebbins, prayer by A. B. Young, and at the grave by L. G. Holloway.

BOWEN.—At Lone Rock, Harrison County, Missouri, January 24, 1916, Elizabeth Bowen, aged 85 years, 6 months, 2 days. Her mother was a niece of Benjamin Franklin, of Revolutionary fame. Married Uriah Bowen in 1851, in Kentucky. They moved to Harrison County, Missouri, in 1854, obeyed the gospel in 1883, baptized by Moses McHarness. Brother Bowen died in 1893. Thirteen children were born to them, 8 of whom survive, together with 59 grandchildren, 56 great-grandchildren. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by T. J. Bell.

"In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage"

BY ESTELLA WIGHT

No recommendation of this story is needed for those who have followed it, wholly or in part, in Stepping Stones.

To those who have not, we can say that it is an original and natural presentation of the gospel cause. The characters are unusually well drawn and the situations are real—many of them exciting, tense with life and action. The domestic pictures, especially, are pretty and realistic.

Altogether it is a splendid Latter Day Saint work, and deserves the attention of readers. A fine book to lend outsiders.

Illustrated cover, excellent cloth binding, inside illustration; 320 pages. Price, $1, postpaid.

A CITY SET ON AN HILL

Text: "A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid."—Matthew 5: 14.

Some one has said that the pulpit is a coward's castle. I think it possible that the individual who coined that phrase never preached in any pulpit, and I am very positive that he never preached in Lamoni. He probably had the idea that a man could stand up in a pulpit and say what he pleased, and no one would ever get back at him,—I say again that he probably never had preached in Lamoni.

The individual who attempts to address the people from the sacred desk must face two possibilities. There is a chance that he may offend and hurt the people, at least some of them.

It has often occurred from this stand that the preacher has hurt the people. We ought to remember, however, that it is not the intention of the preacher to hurt the people.

When a dentist removes a decayed tooth it is not his object to hurt the patient. His object is to get the tooth out. When a surgeon cuts away a cancer, it is not his idea to mutilate the patient. He wants to get the cancer out. And it is not the object of the preacher to hurt the people, or offend them, but there is that danger of course.

THE GREATER DANGER

But the fear of offending the people sinks into insignificance, it fades away into the background when contrasted with the danger of offending almighty God by not declaring his word in its fullness, or by saying something that ought not to be said.

The Apostle Paul said, "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." Paul, thou art certainly to be congratulated. God give all preachers of this church the same courage of their convictions! And may we have the good judgment to present nothing not in harmony with his counsel.

Jesus said, I do always that which pleases the Father. God, give us like wisdom in our presentation of the word.

To-night I wish to call your attention to two passages of scripture in the lesson that I have read, the first one stating a fact, and the second one stating the conclusion or deduction from that fact,—a statement of duty, if you please.

The first of these is, "A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid."

LAMONI A CITY ON AN HILL

A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid. Of course this has a general spiritual application to all the people of God, but it also has a local and perhaps physical application that I want to make here this evening in the beginning of my discourse.

Many and many a time as I have been leaving Lamoni, going north to Des Moines, or south to Kansas City, I have looked back and noted the fact that I could see Lamoni for a long distance. When coming home from either of these directions, I have watched from the car window to get the first glimpse of Lamoni and her institutions. I am always glad to get back in sight of Lamoni.

I have walked the streets of Chicago, of Los Angeles, of San Francisco, Denver, Saint Louis, and other large cities, and have enjoyed for a time mingling with the crowd and sensing the spirit of the city, but always I am glad to get back to Lamoni. It is not the size of a community that makes it great and desirable. Isaiah tells us that a strong city is one where righteousness has entered in.

OUR TYPICAL INSTITUTIONS

When we go from Lamoni or when we approach Lamoni, we are reminded that it is a city set on a hill and can be seen for a long distance. We can see especially the institutions that characterize the city: Graceland College, the Herald Publishing House, the Saints' Home, the Children's Home, and last but not greatest of all, the old Brick Church on the hill.

I mention these institutions because they are typical of the community. They are the institutions that embody the spirit of this community, and they are the ones that deserve our undivided support, both morally and financially.

It may be a little foreign to the subject, but I am going to talk for a moment or two on these different institutions. Graceland College typifies the ambition of the people of God to be better educated. It is in harmony with the spirit of this people, who during the first year after the church had been organized, if my memory of history is correct, arranged a course of lectures for the eldership in Kirtland, and also formed a class to study the Hebrew language.

The same spirit was with them when they projected the University of Nauvoo; and in Missouri, according to the History of Caldwell County, published in Saint Louis, which says that the first buildings erected by our people in Far West were schoolhouses.

It is right in harmony with the divine injunction that we should seek to obtain a knowledge of all things, in the earth, and under the earth, in the heavens, at home and abroad, of history, of governments, and all those things that God has outlined as subjects for our investigation.

We ought not as a people to let that institution go down. As a community we ought to support it. It can be the means of almost incalculable good to this church, and has already been such a means in the development of our young people who have gone there and received its ministrations.

UTILIZING THE PRESS

The Herald Publishing House typifies our ambition to reach the people with literature, and to enlist in the services of God, if you please, the power of the printing press. The Apostle Paul, great missionary that he was, did not have the advantage of the printing press, but I am sure had the press been in existence then, he would have used it for all that it was worth to carry the message that he said it was his ambition to preach to the world by every means within his power.

Are we supporting that institution as we ought to do? The SAINTS' HERALD ought to go to every family in the church. It ought to be read by every member who is old enough to keep touch with the spiritual life of the church and know what is going on in the work. When the Herald Publishing House was burned we could raise eighteen thousand dollars here in Lamoni to rebuild it. Cannot we spend a dollar and a half a year to help keep it running?

Some people say they cannot afford to take the church paper, but the things that they can afford are astonishing, in view of that plea. I might name some of them, but I will refrain from it. The fact of the matter is we cannot afford not to take the church papers.

Some people say they do not have time to read the church history, for instance. How many novels do you suppose they find time to read during the year? It may be all right to read an occasional good work of fiction, some of them are well worth reading, but we ought first to know something about the history of the church.

I just leave that thought with you, that the institution should receive our loyal and unqualified support financially for the sake of the institution and for the sake of ourselves, and yet I regret to say that in some quarters there seems to be instead of the spirit of support, a feeling of prejudice, and a feeling of jealousy.

My dear brothers, the Herald Publishing House belongs to you as much as to anyone. Is it reasonable to be jealous of the prosperity of your own business concern? Brother Carmichael is the manager, I am the editor, but you are the owner. We may be out of a job next year; but as long as you live you will own the Herald Publishing House. Why not support it and develop it? The HERALD cannot go on successfully without a strong subscription list, and it ought to go into all the world bearing the gospel of the Son of God.

THE OLD BRICK CHURCH

I might mention the Saints' Home, which typifies our desire to care for the aged; the Children's Home, which typifies our determination to care for unfortunate children. I pass them by and mention last of all, this old Brick Church on the hill.

Some people have made fun of it because it is not handsome in architecture, but to me it has a simple dignity. There is no ostentation about it. I assure you that, though the time may have come when we should remodel it, when it is changed we will always look back with reverence and respect to this old church on the hill.

I mention it because this pile of brick and wood and mortar simply is an outward embodiment of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in this place. In a physical way it typifies the spiritual church of Christ; it stands here on the hill and cannot be hidden,—and so with those who meet here from time to time, their lives cannot be hidden, and they must eventually be judged as to the manner in which they have lived in harmony with their profession, and have heeded the message that has gone from this pulpit.

This is the chief institution, the others are subsidiary, they but carry on the church work; but this church building, as an institution, represents the church, the living church, and also the community of Lamoni.

This little town set on a hill is the moral embodiment of the sentiment of the church. Had it not been for that church there would never have been a town here. It was founded for the express purpose of carrying out the high ideals of the people of God who came here in years gone by, headed by our revered and saintly President, Joseph Smith.

Have we in any measure lost sight of the necessity of supporting those ideals? Are we descending to

CURRENT EVENTSSECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

SWISS JOIN FORD.—Swiss delegates have been appointed to the Ford peace expedition.

HEPBURN PASSES.—Colonel William P. Hepburn, for twenty years a congressman from Iowa, and a national Republican leader, died at his home, Clarinda, Iowa, the 7th.

SOCIALIST COLONY.—New York Socialist leaders announce the incorporation at Independence, Missouri, of a Socialist colony, to be established in the Ozark Mountains of Missouri.

LABORATORY BURNS.—Morse Hall, containing valuable chemical laboratories of Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, was destroyed by fire the 13th, causing great inconvenience to the school and students.

WOULD MOVE CAPITAL.—Alleging that the Anti-Saloon League is behind a scheme to make Washington a dry city, W. J. Cary, a Wisconsin representative, has introduced a resolution in the House, proposing that the United States move the capital to Milwaukee, where beer is made and where there is no danger of prohibition legislation.

REPRESENTATIVES INDICTED.—Indictments were voted by a federal grand jury at San Francisco the 8th, involving Franz Bopp, German consul general, E. H. Von Schack, vice consul of Germany, Maurice Hall, Turkish consul general. The German officers are accused of interference with American trade in munitions by hindering munitions factories, the attempted blowing up of Canadian railroad tunnels and merchantships; the Turkish officer of aiding in supplying German warships in south Pacific.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Carranza has decreed Queretaro, one hundred and ten miles north of Mexico City, the provisional capital of the Republic. Mexico City is the capital of the federal district. The Carranza government of the State of Chihuahua has called upon former Villa adherents to surrender to rightful owners booty taken during the Villa regime. Villa with a small band of cavalry has thus far evaded the Carranza forces, appearing at various points from time to time.

TO SINK VESSELS.—Germany and Austria-Hungary have announced to neutral governments that beginning March 1, armed belligerent merchant vessels will be sunk by the Teutonic allies without warning. This announcement follows a memorandum recently sent by the United States authorities to the entente powers, proposing the disarming of neutral merchantmen. The United States Government has heretofore contended that merchantmen could arm for defensive purposes. The further use of submarines in the present war, however, has, in the opinion of the administration, reversed the former status of merchantmen: In the days of belligerent operation against merchantmen by cruisers carrying heavy armament, the merchantmen could only act defensively, and so were properly allowed to arm for this purpose; in the days of the submarine, which is defenseless when exposed, armed merchantmen may act offensively against a submarine. The United States Government in the note of January 18, plead for submarine observation of the rules of stoppage, search, and safety to passengers, merchantmen to reciprocate by disarmament.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Activities in the west have subsided for the greater part to cannonading, with local gains for the Germans. The comparative inactivity on this front is supposed to cover preparations for the spring campaign. In the east a general revival of activity is reported along the entire line. In Bukowina the Russians have forced the Germans at points to their second line of defense, and are said to be nearing the capital, Czernowitz. The Russian opposition seems to be more formidable than heretofore, said to be due to improved equipment, especially in big guns. Austrian troops are reported about to take Durazzo, the northern point of Albania. The Serbians continue to retreat southward to the center of Albania. Bulgarian and Turkish forces are massing on the Rumanian border. German, Bulgarian, and Turkish troops are said to be concentrating to the north of Greece, presumably for an attack on Saloniki, or to resist possible allied attack from this point. The allies have continued to land troops and munitions at Saloniki. The Russians reported further advances in Persia up to the 9th, when from Constantinople it was announced that they had been checked. The British at Kut El Amara still hold out, with the relief army twenty-three miles south on the Tigris, unable to advance on account of high water.

GARRISON RESIGNS.—On the 10th, Secretary of War, Garrison, and his assistant, Henry Breckinridge, resigned from President Wilson's cabinet, Mr. Garrison's resignation taking effect immediately, Mr. Breckinridge's upon the qualification of his successor. In correspondence made public it appears that President Wilson failed to "irrevocably" support the federal continental army scheme developed by Secretary Garrison and his assistant, to provide a standing army under federal control. While President Wilson contends for an increased army for defense, he has declined to insist upon any particular form or policy. It appears also that Mr. Garrison and the President differ in the matter of the President's attitude toward the Clark amendment to the pending Filipino Independence bill, Mr. Garrison considering it "an abandonment of the duty of this Nation and a breach of trust toward the Filipinos"; Mr. Wilson holding that it may be "unwise at this time, but it would clearly be most inadvisable for me to take a position that I must dissent from the action should both House and Congress concur in the bill embodying that amendment." The resignation of Mr. Garrison is thought by party leaders to presage the defeat of the continental army plan and the reorganization and upbuilding of the national guard, or militia, for defensive purposes.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

MILLER VISITS HONOLULU.—We are in receipt of a letter from Brother G. J. Waller, dated Honolulu, February 1, in which he states: "We are enjoying a visit from Brother C. Edward Miller, who arrived here by the steamer Ferra, from Australia, on January 18. He is to leave for San Francisco, February 8." Brother Waller also inclosed a newspaper clipping which indicates that they are making good use of Brother Miller during his stay in Honolulu. He is advertised to deliver three illustrated lectures at the church on the subject "Ancient America."

CONFERENCE "ENSIGN."—As announced elsewhere in the HERALD, the Ensign Publishing House is arranging to publish a daily Ensign during the coming General Conventions and General Conference. This conference is certain to be one of importance, and the interested Saints will be pleased with this opportunity to keep in daily touch with its work and developments. Twenty-five cents sent to the Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, will secure the daily for the entire time of the conventions and conference. Subscribers should send early to avoid delay and inconvenience to the Ensign management.

NO SPIRIT NO UNITY.—The editor of the Apostolic Review, the most influential periodical of the no-organ Christian Church, in the issue of January 25, makes complaint as follows:

I suppose I am assailed by a thousand critics. They go from place to place and talk about "not agreeing with Sommer," and where "Sommer is wrong."

These are the people who have done away with the Spirit because they have the Bible, and who claim to speak where the Bible speaks and to remain silent where the Bible is silent. The Review editor is perhaps the most influential man among them, and yet a thousand other men of sufficient influence to distress him disagree with him. These evidently think that where Sommer speaks the Bible is silent; and if we had their version of the situation, as in the case of the Review editor, we would no doubt find a thousand of their brethren differing from each of them. And so it goes—ad infinitum—no Spirit no unity. The countless disputations into which these men have fallen establishes their testimony that they do not have the Spirit, and the further fact that without the guiding influence of the Spirit of God a people can hardly be brought into all truth.

NEW LAMONI CHURCH.—Our readers will remember the illustration and reference to the proposed new church for Lamoni, appearing in the last magazine number of the HERALD. At the February business meeting of Lamoni Branch the work done thus far by the building committee was approved, and the committee continued under instructions to proceed to build, providing the full amount required for the work as planned, thirty thousand dollars, be subscribed. The arrangement is to remodel the present building by extending it at each end, and by the addition of wings on the north and south. If constructed according to the specifications submitted and accepted, this building will be adequate for present pressing local needs, and for the work of the General Conference, supplying not only a large assembly room, but also committee, class, and lecture rooms, kitchen, dining room, baptismal font, toilets, etc. The Lamoni Saints, with the Independence Saints, have heretofore been loyal to the general church in entertaining the General Conferences, and have in mind the needs of the general church in this connection, as well as local needs, immediate and remote. Such a building would be a monument to their zeal and determination in the cause of righteousness.

SONG

There is ever a song somewhere, my dear,
There is ever a something sings alway;
There's the song of the lark, when the skies are clear,
And the song of the thrush when the skies are gray.
The sunshine showers across the grain,
And the bluebird trills in the orchard tree;
And in and out, when the eaves drip rain,
The swallows are twittering ceaselessly.

There is ever a song somewhere, my dear,
Be the skies above or dark or fair;
There is ever a song that our hearts may hear—
There is ever a song somewhere, my dear—
There is ever a song somewhere!

There is ever a song somewhere, my dear—
In the midnight black, or the midday blue;
The robin pipes when the sun is here,
And the cricket chirrup the whole night through.
The buds may blow and the fruit may grow,
And the autumn leaves drop crisp and sear;
But whether the sun, or the rain, or the snow,
There is ever a song somewhere, my dear.

There is ever a song somewhere, my dear,
Be the skies above or dark or fair;
There is ever a song that our hearts may hear—
There is ever a song somewhere, my dear—
There is ever a song somewhere!

a lower plane? If so, we may rest assured that it will be exposed, because being set on a hill, this town cannot be hidden.

A PINPOINT ON THE MAP

I am aware that Lamoni as a community is a very small affair numerically. The town of Lamoni is hardly a speck on the map of Iowa, can hardly be seen on the map of the United States, and is lost on the map of the world. When we come to boast about the things that other communities boast about, we have nothing that would distinguish us from other villages. Some boast of their chambers of commerce, of their opera houses, their paved streets, their parks, their lighting systems, their factories, etc.

Some of these things we have and some we have not. But we have not any of them in such a degree or in such proportion that they would distinguish us above the thousand thousand other little hamlets the wide-world over,—and yet there is something that distinguishes us.

This little community was represented at the world's exposition in San Francisco. Were other little towns of this size represented there? Thousands of pieces of literature were distributed there, bearing the impress of the printing house of this community, and were carried to various parts of the world. Thousands of people heard an explanation of the aims and ideals of this community.

Thousands of people the wide-world over are looking at this community,—from Australia, from Great Britain, from New Zealand, and from the islands of the sea, and from nearly every State in this Union.

A UNIQUE POSITION

Why is it? What is it that distinguishes this from other small communities? You know without being told that it is because this is the headquarters of the church; because the gospel of Jesus Christ goes out from this community; because we have sent out hundreds of missionaries from this town, from the conferences held here, over all the world, into foreign fields, and into every State; because from this very stand there have been read the revelations from God to the General Conferences, given to the church in these last days when all other churches say that revelation has ceased and that God speaks no longer.

WE SHALL BE JUDGED

For these reasons this community is a city set on an hill, the eyes of the world are fixed on it, and it cannot be hidden.

Do not fool yourselves, we cannot deceive the world, nor can we deceive God. When strangers come here from abroad and visit this community, if they find the spirit of pleasure seeking, of carelessness, of indifference, of ungodliness here, they will recognize it. But if they come here and find a sober, godly, righteous, studious people, they will know that too. We cannot escape observation, neither from man nor from God; God too, will see and know whether we fail or succeed.

And so, my brother and my sister, I present this plea to you. If you have become a part of this community, and voluntarily a part of the church that is represented here, and are not prepared to at least try to live up to the high ideals of this church, for God's sake get out, and go into some city in some low valley.

I will present that in a better way, perhaps. For God's sake, change your ideals and make up your mind that from now on you will not only live here, but in harmony with the high message that has come to this people, those who came here and founded this community, and are yet trying to work out their conception of the life of Jesus Christ. That is a better way to put it. We do not want to drive anybody away. But if we are indifferent to the message that has come to us, we not only endanger ourselves, but we also come nigh to bringing condemnation and rejection to the whole community.

I was born in one city where the church was rejected,—in the old city of Nauvoo, another city that was set on a hill and was a point of focus for the eyes of the world, and to-day that city, so far as the Saints are concerned, is in ruins. Why? In part because the people did not live up to their profession. I wonder if that fate will ever overtake us. Certainly not if we appreciate the Spirit of God that is abiding with us from time to time, and heed the commandments, the warning, the exhortations, and the invitations that come to us from the servants of God.

Of course, as I have said, this statement, "A city set on an hill cannot be hid," has a broader spiritual application than to this little community. It refers to all the people of God everywhere. You, and you, and you, are a city set on an hill that cannot be hidden. That is a statement of fact. Let us next consider that side of the question.

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

AN APPROACH UNTO ZION

The hope of the church for years has been a Zion in which peace and safety could be vouchsafed to its occupants. It is I believe, worthy our attention at present, and I therefore desire to draw out a few thoughts, preliminary or fundamental in their nature, that they may tend to effect the necessary conditions and prerequisites to our approach unto Zion.

Let it first of all be observed that Zion, like a great many other words, is susceptible of more than one meaning. In the first place, Zion is a condition,—the pure in heart. In the second place, it is a place,—the land of Zion, the home of the pure in heart. The great fundamental error that has existed in the past is that men have looked to the place of Zion, and have ignored or entirely lost sight of the condition of Zion.

The law of the universe, which is the law of God, is a law of cause and effect. This law holds good in regard to Zion and her redemption. Zion can only be redeemed by law, and that must be the law of rightness. The Prophet Isaiah in speaking of Zion, exclaims: "Her people also, shall be all righteous!" How fundamental this expression is! Can you think of a Zion without this requirement? Could we rightly speak of any place as Zion unless the condition of righteousness (right-ness) had already become a reality? I trust we are able to see that it is not the place so much as the condition, that should first concern us. It is the condition, the preparing of the thoughts, heart, and life of man that is the paramount issue.

In the early genesis of history we read of man transgressing the laws of right, and we are informed in the sacred volume that "the ground was cursed for his sake." Now in order to have God remove the curse from the earth it will be necessary for man to bring himself into harmony with the law of the universe, the law of love and truth.

So once more we are brought face to face with the immovable fact that the very first step to be taken, the very first stone to be laid in the building of the city of Zion, is the effecting of an inward condition. The regenerating of the life of men must be brought about, and when I use the word regeneration I mean "that change by which the love of God is implanted in the hearts of men."

It is therefore readily discovered that the first approach unto Zion is one that deals with the inner life of men; the preparing of the mind and heart, and the fitting of our earthly tabernacles for the indwelling of the divine Spirit; that by reason of God's Spirit dwelling in us we may become so closely allied to Jesus, the Anointed One, that the heavenly Father will be pleased to remove the curse from that portion of the earth which he has designated as the "land of Zion," the home of the "pure in heart," that we may dwell there in peace and safety.

The place for the gathering of God's chosen people will be provided as soon as the condition obtains within. Selfishness will have to be eliminated; greed for gain must be suppressed; and the spirit of altruism must be enthroned. The spirit of covetousness will forever bar men from the tree of life, and it will also prevent our participating in the redemption of Zion.

We live not for ourselves alone, but for others. It is our imperative duty to see to it that our lives are not in the way of the progress of others; that we do not retard or impede the progress of men. We must become large enough in soul to be able and willing to sacrifice our present pleasures for the future good of our race; to forego temporary comforts for the acquiring of permanent virtues. We should remember always that we can never see a Zion, worlds without end, unless we conform our lives to the law that shall make us pure in heart.

Personal righteousness, (right-ness) then, is the first requirement, the necessary prerequisite. Without it there can be no Zion, and I therefore wish to insist that the surest way for us to hasten the redemption of Zion is to get Zion into our lives. Let us become Zion—"the pure in heart,"—ourselves, and lo! the "Golden Age" will be at hand.

Zion to me no longer means an asylum to which I may flee for personal safety, only to gratify my self-centered spirit. But it does mean to me a place where men shall dwell in peace, who have saved themselves from their own littleness of soul; who have abandoned selfhood, and have taken upon themselves the nature of Christ, which if necessary will enable them to lay down their own lives for others; in order to bring them to an enlargement of their personal lives, that they too may taste of the goodness and love of God.

In the past we have supposed that it was necessary for us to get to a place we called Zion in order to be able to live our religion. This is a fundamental error. The distance between the human and the divine is the same at any point of the compass, and it is quite as possible for us to live in a condition of at-one-ment with God in one place as another, if we can only get the consent of our minds to do so. When those whose hearts are pure have gathered, and the city of Zion has become established, it will be a boon to the world, because others will be able to see the results accruing from personal and collective righteousness.

Now brother, where do you stand? What kind of a vision have you received? The wise man has said: "Where there is no vision the people perish." When I say vision I mean insight. Blind Bartimæus had no physical vision, therefore he was physically blind. He who has no spiritual vision (insight), is spiritually blind. He who has no moral vision or insight is morally blind. What is your case? Examine yourself and find out. If I look for the church to build a Zion into which I may enter to find personal safety for my selfish self, and do not contribute my quota to that end, I am both morally and spiritually blind. I have no moral or spiritual vision, therefore I must perish both morally and spiritually.

If I look for others to contribute to my personal comforts, and make provision for my selfish self without returning the equivalent in service, I have absolutely no conception of the Spirit of Christ. One of the reasons why we do not make greater spiritual growth is because we are too cheap. When I say too cheap I mean that we are not willing to pay the price. We are all the time trying to get something for nothing. The man that does this will be a moral and spiritual pauper all the days of his life.

Large returns require large investments; therefore, if we will achieve nobly we must sacrifice greatly. We can not cling to our selfish, self-centered self, and at the same time be one with God. Avarice, pride of heart, passion, and the like, must be given up if we would attain unto the condition of the pure in heart, without which no man can see God. When our eyes have been opened so we can see, and our intellect has been quickened so we can perceive the truthfulness and force of the Master's message, viz: "It is more blessed to give than to receive," we will be in a fair way to our approach unto Zion.

Let us, then, resolve within our own hearts and minds that we will pay the price and receive the goods; that we will utilize the things we have been intrusted with, mental and physical, as well as material, for the hastening of the redemption of Zion. Like Joshua of old, may we be able to say, "As for me and mine we will serve the Lord."

May God anoint our eyes with eye-salve, that we may be able to have our vision cleared and extended, is the prayer of your humble brother.

My next chapter will be, The purpose of a Zion.

REFLECTIONS---NUMBER 7

BY W. E. PEAK

ZION

The word Zion has been spoken with reverence in all ages. The prophets have delivered their greatest discourses and displayed their greatest oratory on this theme. Poets have exhausted their vocabulary to find words to formulate suitable sentiments expressing their conception of the glory of Zion. The sweet singers of Israel, under the glow of inspiration, have produced the most harmonious music, as they presented the sublimity of Zion in song.

"Zion, Zion, lovely Zion" is defined by inspiration as "the pure in heart." What nobler theme can the human mind dwell upon? Therefore, "let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion, the pure in heart" (Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5).

Surely Zion should rejoice, for the blessings of God will be on them when "all the wicked shall mourn; for vengeance cometh speedily upon the ungodly." And unless we are pure in heart, vengeance will overtake us also.

The work of God among men from the beginning has been to make them pure in heart, so they would be of Zion. Whenever or wherever a man has developed the required degree of righteousness he has become one of Zion, one of "my sheep," one of Israel, a saint, whether he has been a member in the church in its organized form or not (John 10; Doctrine and Covenants 38: 7).

But in the last days there is to be a special city where the pure in heart shall dwell; it shall be called the city of Zion, "the new Jerusalem" (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 12; 27: 3).

David said, "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory" (Psalm 102: 16). So there is no use for us to expect him to appear in his glory, till Zion is built, and stands forth in the beauty of righteousness.

This city will stand in what is known as the "land of promise" (Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1), "the land of Zion" (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 11). There is also to be a special organization, with its headquarters in the city of Zion, to govern the Saints, the pure in heart in the land of Zion, that is called Zion also (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 15).

Just how much territory should be included in this organization when it is first brought into existence, may be a question, for we are told:

Go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, and that her stakes may be strengthened, and that Zion may go forth unto the regions round about.—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 3.

This evidently conveys the idea that the organization known as Zion will "prosper and spread herself" (Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5), and include more territory than at first, as she is enlarged and goes "forth unto the regions round about" (Doctrine and Covenants 108: 3).

It is reasonable to conclude that this organization known as Zion would include all the territory that the officers of that organization could attend to. This may be only as much as is now included in the Independence Stake, or it may include half of the States of Kansas and Missouri.

The organization of Zion will be much the same as the organization of a stake. The main difference is Zion will be presided over by the First Presidency, as the following indicates:

And, behold, verily I say unto you, that ye shall write this commandment, and say unto your brethren in Zion, in love greeting, that I have called you [Joseph Smith] also to preside over Zion in mine own due time.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 8.

Joseph Smith was presiding over the church as its first President at the time this revelation was given, which shows that the Zion here refers to the special organization known by that name, that was to be formed with its headquarters in Independence, Missouri.

The President of the church was called to preside over Zion, but conditions were such that it was unwise to perfect the organization and preside at that time.

Subsequent events demonstrated the wisdom of this statement, as the Saints were driven out of Jackson County that fall. But the fact that it is the law for the president of the church to preside over Zion when organized is clearly presented, for he is "called" to do that work.

The Presidency with twelve high priests will form "the high council in Zion," to do the business that pertains to this council (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 15).

The Presiding Bishop will be "the bishop of Zion." The Zion spoken of here does not mean the pure in heart, in the sense that it includes the whole church, but refers to the organization known as Zion, for in the same verse we find, "for according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion" (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3).

The Presiding Bishop was to locate in Independence, for "this land [the land of Zion] is the land of his residence, and those whom he has appointed for his counselors, and also the land of the residence of him [Sidney Gilbert] whom I have appointed to keep my storehouse (Doctrine and Covenants 57: 4; 58: 6).

The Presiding Bishop will do the work of his office as bishop of the church and the bishop of Zion with his agent, "until the borders of Zion are enlarged, and it becomes necessary to have other bishops, or judges in Zion, or elsewhere" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 33).

With Zion organized, with the First Presidency presiding, assisted by "the high council of Zion," and the Presiding Bishopric assisted by his agent or bishops, presiding over the temporal affairs of Zion, the Saints, who are directed to go there, can receive the care and advice necessary to enable Zion to arise and shine as the people of God.

Each branch will continue its branch organization, and this branch organization will be developed and perfected as it is prepared to advance, till it will have a bishop (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 33; 117: 10), evangelical minister (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 17), and all other officers provided for in the law.

The temple will be built (Doctrine and Covenants 83:1, 2) and in it will be held the meetings of Zion, wherein the Presidency will preside. They will be held as often as the officers may decide, perhaps every Sunday afternoon, or as wisdom directs. They will not interfere with the local affairs of the branches, each branch being under its own local officers, attending to their own meetings and branch affairs.

The temple will be under the control of Zion as an organization, just as the temple at Kirtland was controlled by the stake of Kirtland; and in a general way it may be under the jurisdiction and control of the General Conferences, yet the officers of this organization of Zion will have control.

We expect to see Zion thus organized before the temple is built, and hope to see both accomplished before many years shall roll by.

CITY OF ZION

This city was seen by David and spoken of by him—"to declare the name of the Lord in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem." The Zion referred to cannot mean the people as a church, but a place where the pure in heart will declare the name of the Lord. They will also praise him at the same time in Jerusalem.

All Bible readers for ages have known where Jerusalem is located, but it is necessary for the Lord to reveal to man where Zion should be located, and when men should begin to build it.

David gives us to understand that it will be in the last days, just before the coming of Christ, by saying "when the Lord, shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory" (Psalm 101: 16).

The Lord has spoken and given us the location in the following language:

Wherefore, this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion. . . . Behold, the place which is now called Independence, is the center place and the spot for the temple is lying westward upon a lot which is not far from the courthouse.—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1.

The land of promise, the land of Zion, refers to the same place. This land is located in the United States, but it does not include the whole of America at the time these revelations were given, for we read in verse five, "And let those whom I have spoken be planted in the land of Zion, as speedily as can be, with their families." The men spoken to were then living in Ohio, not in the "land of Zion."

Again, Vienna Jaques was to "go up unto the land of Zion" (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 7).

He that sendeth up treasures unto the land of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13.

In the region round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 9.

The scattered Saints were to be restored to the land of Zion, and none of them were outside the United States. They were to gather from Kirtland unto the land of Zion (Doctrine and Covenants 100: 5). Saints in different parts of the United States would "not go unto Zion" (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 3). They could go from Kirtland "up to the land of Zion" (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 4).

Independence, Missouri, is "the center place" of the land of promise, or the land of Zion. In this center place the city of Zion will be built.

It is called "a holy city," "and it shall be called Zion," "a new Jerusalem" (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12).

This city "shall be built by the gathering of the Saints, beginning at this place, even the place of the temple" (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 2).

The Saints or many of them will be gathered to the land of Zion, before the temple or the city of Zion is begun. The building of this city can only be done by Saints who are worthy. And in order for us to know who are worthy and the ones that the Lord wants to do this work, it is necessary for the Lord to direct.

This he has promised to do in the way here described:

And ye shall begin to be gathered with your families, every man according to his circumstances, and as is appointed to him by the Presidency and the Bishop of the church, according to the laws and commandments, which ye have received and which ye shall hereafter receive.—Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2. (See also 57: 25; 58: 6, 9, 12; 72: 5; 64: 4; 63: 11.)

Men only make a success in life when they do what the Lord requires. We should only gather to the land of Zion when the Lord requires it of us. When we proceed according to the law that God has given to govern in the case, we are not apt to make mistakes. But should we disregard the law, we are running a fearful risk.

He who reigns within himself, and rules passions, desires and fears, is more than a king.—Milton.

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD

Baptism for the dead may be a true doctrine, and may become an ordinance to be complied with by the children of God in due time; but baptism for the dead as taught and practiced by the Mormon Church in Utah is not in accord with the Spirit of Christ, neither in harmony with the three standard books of the church, the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, as we believe the following will prove.

Taking into consideration the great love God has for mankind, a love so great that he gave his Son to die for man, it is hard for me to believe that he would place those who died without the gospel in hell or the prison house. But such would have to be the case if the doctrine as practiced in Utah be correct. Baptism for the dead, or proxy baptism, can only be of worth to those confined to the prison house, for it is from there they are to be released by that ordinance.

ARE THOSE WITHOUT LAW CONFINED?

For where no law is, there is no transgression.—Romans 4: 15.

And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.—John 3: 19.

These passages of scripture throw sufficient light on the matter to give us to understand that those who do not hear the gospel will not be judged by it. Not hearing the gospel, they are not transgressors of the law; and to place them in hell or the prison house would make God a most unjust being. Only those who break the law go to prison. Those who die without the law are Christ's; they were bought with a price. The atonement satisfies the demands of justice, and those who die without law are his the same as little children.

On this point we use the Prophet Mormon as a witness, Moroni 8: 25-28. He says.

For behold that all little children are alive in Christ, and also all they that are without the law. [Our relatives with others who die without hearing the gospel. B. L. M.] For the power of redemption cometh on all they that have no law; wherefore, he that is not condemned, or he that is under no condemnation, cannot repent; and unto such baptism availeth nothing. But it is mockery before God, denying the mercies of Christ, and the power of his Holy Spirit, and putting trust in dead works.

This statement of Mormon is surely a stinging rebuke to all who baptize for those who have died without hearing the law. And the saying that it is mockery before God, and putting trust in dead works, proves conclusively that baptism for the dead as it is being taught did not originate with God. Mormon also places condemnation on all who so teach, when saying that if a person should "be cut off while in the thought, he must go down to hell," "for he hath neither faith, hope, nor charity." (Moroni 8: 15.)

Woe be unto him that shall pervert the ways of the Lord after this manner, [that is, teaching that little children and those who die without hearing the gospel need baptism, the former being taught by some of the popular churches, and the latter by those who are hunting up the genealogy of those who are dead and gone, and are being baptized for them by proxy. B. L. M.] for they shall perish, except they repent. . . . Woe unto such, for they are in danger of death, hell, and an endless torment.—Moroni 8: 17-22.

One of the great purposes God had in view in bringing forth the Book of Mormon was "the confounding of false doctrine," baptism by proxy for those who died without hearing the gospel being a false doctrine. Mormon has written on that subject and condemned such practice in language that cannot be misunderstood by any who will read. In the Doctrine and Covenants we also read: "And then shall the heathen nations be redeemed, and they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection."—Section 45: 54. Thus have we proved:

First, That where there is no law there is no condemnation.

Second, That all they that are without the law are alive in Christ; that unto such, baptism availeth nothing; that to baptize for such is "mockery before God," "putting trust in dead works"; and that all who do such "are in danger of death, hell, and an endless torment."

Third, That when Christ comes they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection, for they are his.

Having proved that baptism by proxy is not for those who die without hearing the gospel, the question arises: What dead are the living to be baptized for? Reason tells us it cannot be but for those who have heard the gospel and refused obedience thereto; for justice would not permit any other class being put in the prison house.

However, we do not have to depend on reason alone to draw this conclusion, for we have scripture to prove it. The Apostle Peter says that it was those who were disobedient during the days of Noah that Christ preached to in the prison house (1 Peter 3: 19, 20). That being the case, then baptism for the dead is only for those who have heard the gospel in this life and refused to obey it. They are the ones to be released from the prison house,—not those who die without the law. Of necessity, then, it will require a revelation for every baptism that is performed for the dead, and we understand it was because of such requirement that the Lord commanded the temple to be builded in Nauvoo. In commanding it he said to the Prophet Joseph:

And verily I say unto you, let this house be built unto my name, that I may reveal mine ordinances therein, unto my people; for I deign to reveal unto my church things which have been kept hid from before the foundation of the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 13.

The Prophet Joseph being killed before the temple was built, we have no record of those ordinances being given. And those who have been baptizing for the dead are running without tidings, not waiting for the Lord to reveal those ordinances, "in Zion and in her stakes, and in Jerusalem" as he said should be done; and because of their doing such, the Prophet Mormon's statement that such practices are "mockery before God," and "putting trust in dead works," seem applicable to them.

As said in the beginning, we repeat: Baptism for the dead may be all right in its time and in its place; but as it is taught and practiced by the dominant church of Utah it can never be right, for by such practice they are denying the power of the atonement of Jesus Christ.

B. L. MCKIM.

SUCCESS

With all thy getting get understanding.—Proverbs 4: 7.

To make a success in life such as will prove a blessing to us both here and hereafter, many things must be taken into consideration. We are not all able to make success at the same trade. We differ in ability and talent.

Brother Joseph once said, The natural is the hope of the spiritual, and our business is to bring ourselves into a condition of entire harmony with God, in word, in work, in everything. None are without talent; some have more, some less, all varied by individuality; and all, we believe, sufficient for present demands when properly cultivated.

There is one thing in which we can all make success. That is character building. Character should always be regarded as capital. Do some good and leave behind some monument that the storms of life cannot destroy. One has said: "Order your thoughts and you will order your life."

In a work called, The Path of Prosperity, we read:

You must daily practice the habit of putting your mind at rest, going into the silence, as it is commonly called. This is a method of replacing a troubled thought with one of peace, a thought of weakness with one of strength. Until you succeed in doing this you cannot hope to direct your mental forces upon the problems and pursuits of life with any appreciable measure of success.

The going on to perfection does not mean immediate possession, but to go on striving to reach it.

A very interesting lesson is found in the Doctrine and Covenants 9: 3-5, about Oliver Cowdery,—why he did not continue the work of translation.

Behold, you have not understood; you have supposed that I would give it unto you, when you took no thought, save it was to ask me; but, behold I say unto you, that you must study it out in your mind; then you must ask me if it be right, and if it is right, I will cause that your bosom shall burn within you; therefore, you shall feel that it is right; but if it be not right, you shall have no such feelings, but you shall have a stupor of thought, that shall cause you to forget the thing which is wrong; therefore, you cannot write that which is sacred, save it be given from me. Now, if you had known this, you could have translated; . . . Do this thing which I have commanded you, and you shall prosper.

A very interesting lesson for Latter Day Saints, especially parents of children. The Lord could easily have given his servant what he asked of him, but he wanted to teach him a lesson. Teach him to do something himself. The only ones the Lord can reach are those who are willing to learn. He told his servant how, and then left it with him. Parents oftentimes make mistakes by helping their children too much, instead of teaching them things they could and should do. They many times go and do it for them. Jesus said to his disciples, "Learn of me."

To be successful in life we must be diligent and industrious in whatsoever occupation we are placed, temporally or spiritually. We should strive to know ourselves. None of us are without talent.

The Lord has said:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

There should be connection and harmony. Take the violin: the four strings are not all the same size, neither do they produce the same sound, but when properly regulated there is harmony. So it is with God in regard to his work. When all work together there is harmony.

Our opportunity is great. We should read and study the church publications and the many good books written by noble men. They are offered to us cheap and are within the reach of all. It is a great joy to me when I see my children coming in from their day's labor to read and study the church literature. One of my boys said, "The more we learn about the gospel the less we think we know." the Lord is great. We can afford to serve him. He is able to fulfill all his promises to us. If we seek him we will find him. We will be able to go on from faith to faith, not doubting. But we must work.

"But the wisdom that is from above is first pure" (James 3: 17). A man might devote all his time and talent to the things of this world, make a success in a given line, and be careless and negligent in regard to his spiritual affairs. In another we find the opposite. This wisdom descendeth not from above; both the temporal and spiritual should be joined together.

Brother Joseph said, It is a mistake to separate the temporal from the eternal, both are one with God and with us. The temporal is part of, is complementary to the spiritual. Between the material and the spiritual there is no real distinction; in other words, both are part of a great whole. Principles of truth do not find their full expression or existence in the abstract, as laws upon spiritual statute books; but in the concrete, in their living manifestations.

The Lord is interested in our temporal affairs in life. We read, "Cry unto him over the crops of your fields, that ye may prosper in them: cry over the flocks of your fields, that they may increase" (Alma 16: 220).

Sometimes we hear an expression by our people like this: This life and the things of the world do not amount to much. No, if we look at it in that way. We brought nothing into this world and can take nothing out of it. It takes but a very small spot of ground to hold the greatest man or woman that ever lived. As the sun rises in the east and sets in the west, so is this life. It is only a moment of time compared with eternity. But when viewed from a gospel standpoint, life appears different. If we expect to be with God in the eternal world where life is bliss and happiness, this life is the school where we must be prepared for that condition. We need experience.

It should be the aim of God's children in their different occupations in life to do their very best, pay their tithing and help with what they can, that the gospel might be spread. Selfishness and extravagance stand condemned in the sight of God. I sometimes think it would be more pleasing to God if some would say "I won't," instead of saying "I can't."

Saints who are living in small branches where they are needed and are doing well financially, should consider well before moving away. Steadiness is a great factor in success, both temporally and spiritually.

In performing the duties of local officers, extra time and study are required. They must inform themselves of the work needed for the household of faith. If these officers perform their duty, success will follow; if not, they will be like the clock when run down—fail to produce the correct time.

Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing.—Matthew 24: 45, 46.

A. JENSEN.

It depends chiefly whether you are working for the world's praise or the world's good, how its commendation or its condemnation is given. But if you will work for the praise of that inner spirit, which, for lack of a better name, we call conscience, no pain shall be felt at what the world does or says. In truth, if you have a high and good purpose and honestly try to attain it, you must apparently fail, in some measure, because all strength is founded on unseen supports, and the highest tower is that whose base extends the farthest underground. But mere failure should be the last thing to daunt you. Remember how the oyster mends its wounded shell—with a pearl!—The Optimist.

CONSERVING THE LAMANITE

[The following from a communication sent out for publication from the office of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, Washington, District of Columbia, under date of January 10, 1916, and signed by Commissioner Cato Sells, gives some idea of the present concern on the part of the United States Government for the American Indian. It is said of the Lamanites that they shall become a delightful people. It would seem that the Government is to do all it can toward the fulfillment of this prophecy.—EDITORS.]

In an address before the Congress of Indian Progress held at San Francisco in August of last year, I said:

It is our chief duty to protect the Indian's health and to save him from premature death. Before we educate him, before we conserve his property, we should save his life. If he is to be perpetuated, we must care for the children. We must stop the tendency of the Indian to diminish in number, and restore a condition that will insure his increase. Every Indian hospital bed not necessarily occupied with those suffering from disease or injury should be available for the mother in childbirth. It is of first importance that we begin by reestablishing the health and constitution of Indian children. Education and protection of property are highly important, but everything is secondary to the basic condition which makes for the perpetuation of the race.

That thought has deepened its hold upon my convictions.

We must guarantee to the Indian the first of inalienable rights—the right to live. No race was ever created for utter extinction. The chief concern of all ethics and all science and all philosophies is life.

The Indian has demonstrated his humanity and his capacity for intellectual and moral progress amid conditions not always propitious, and I am eager to participate with all the favoring forces that contribute to his racial triumph, believing as I do that when he comes to himself as a factor in the modern world his achievements will enrich and brighten the civilization of his native land.

I should like to get the feeling I have upon this question into the conscience and aspirations of every Indian Service employee, until there shall prevail a sort of righteous passion to see that every Indian child has a fair chance to live.

There is something fundamental here:

We cannot solve the Indian problem without Indians. We cannot educate their children unless they are kept alive.

All our Indian schools, reservations, individual allotments and accumulated incomes tend pathetically towards a wasted altruism if maintained and conserved for a withering, decadent people.

If we have an Indian policy worthy of the name, its goal must be an enduring and sturdy race, true to the noblest of its original instincts and virtues and loyally sympathetic with our social and national life; a body of efficient citizens blending their unique poise and powers with the keen and sleepless vigor of the white man.

We must, therefore, renew daily our warfare against the archfoe of efficiency—disease.

We must begin at the right place—not only with the infant at its mother's breast but with the unborn generation.

The new campaign for health in which I would enlist you is first of all to save the babies!

Statistics startle us with the fact that approximately three fifths of the Indian infants die before the age of five years.

Of what use to this mournful mortality are our splendidly equipped schools?

I earnestly call upon every Indian Bureau employee to help reduce this frightful percentage! Superintendents, teachers, physicians, matrons, nurses, everyone can do something by instruction or example: the physician with his science, the nurse with her trained skill, the matron with her motherly solicitude, all of us by personal hygiene, cleanliness and sobriety.

With this idea uppermost, all employees whose duties bring them in touch with Indian families must work in closest harmony for surrounding the expectant Indian mother with favorable health conditions before and after childbirth. The sanitation of the homes of such women should have special attention, and no baby allowed to be born into an environment germinating disease, if prevention is available. . . .

This campaign for better babies, for the rescue of a race, calls for redoubled energy and zeal throughout the service, for it means personal work and tireless patience. It is a well-nigh stupendous task, but will be a glorious one if we can make successful headway. . . .

There is among the Indians a marked and tender affection for their children, but too often the wife, the mother, is regarded and treated as the burden bearer. I wish we might see this habit overcome, for it is distinctly barbaric. I want to see developed and prevalent in every Indian school, from the least to the largest, that modern and truly chivalrous spirit that recognizes and respects the sacredness of womanhood. I should like to have every Indian boy leave school with this lofty and just sentiment fused into his character, as the picture in the porcelain, because of the deep and exquisite power it will have to bless his future home with health and happiness.

While, therefore, this appeal aims primarily at the safety and health of the child and is intended to enforce the thought that the future of the Indian race may depend vitally upon what we shall be able to accomplish for its new generation, it is also a message of reenforcement to every utterance and every effort expressed or put forth within the Indian Service in behalf of the adult against tuberculosis, trachoma and every other disease; against the liquor curse and the use of any kind of enervating drug or dope. I look to the schools chiefly to safeguard the boys and girls enrolled there against these deadly scourges; and there must be no abatement, but rather renewed and continuing energies in this direction.

In closing, I ask every employee to do his or her part in widening our work against disease, until our Indian reservations become the home of healthy, happy, bright-eyed children with a fair start in life, and our schools become impregnable defenses against every enemy to healthy and high-minded boys and girls.

A Period of Preparation

The shortest and stormiest month of the year is again with us! Shut in, as so many are, one may accomplish wonders in the way of study, music, spring sewing, and the like. The weeks slip by, and all too few are left for preparation. We cannot be too diligent and industrious, and the reward is sure; for when the warm days of spring come, one can wander in the out-of-doors with a feeling of freedom well earned, if the winter has been used wisely.

We trust your copy of the "Messiah" is well worn by this time. We heard a young man the other day asking about the price of rebinding. It pleased us, for we realized that he was working with a right good will at his particular portion of the load we will all swing along with, at the conference time. If each singer, each choir, does everything possible now, success is assured for the "all together" finale of the spring!

Faint not before difficulties. Slacken not in the splendid effort towards achievement. Remember, every new obstacle overcome is a step towards perfection. Development lies in the path of difficulties conquered. No one ever achieved anything worth while by following the line of least resistance. It is trial that engenders determination; temptation met and overcome that brings grace and integrity. God wants a tried people—one that has, through hindering influences, steadily pursued an upward course. This is true of all Christian endeavors.

Especially is that reward swift and gratifying which comes through application to the cultivation of music. The joy of doing, the sense of achievement, is never so quickly obtained, as when, after plowing through difficult chorus numbers a few times, the choir member begins to experience a new sense of power and understanding; his face brightens; from his whole countenance gleams a light of comprehension, a quickening spirit of intelligence, as he grasps the meaning and masters the difficulties of the composition, which at first baffled and mystified. This revolution of feeling, this awakening of understanding and sympathy, is the great reward which comes to a conductor of choirs.

And there is a satisfaction attending, which cannot be surpassed,—the feeling that you have been instrumental in opening another's vision to new paths of attainment, that you have aided him in setting his feet firmly in those paths and have helped him to see new beauties and new wisdom in that, to us, most precious commandment, "Cultivate the gift of music and of song."

Announcing Brother Bell

We present this month a most able article on district choir work from the pen of our assistant general chorister, Brother E. C. Bell. Read it carefully; and when, at our spring institute meetings, the scope and opportunities of this phase of the work come up for discussion, be ready to give us the benefit of your observations and experiences in this line of musical activity.

Brother Bell has made a rare success amalgamating the interests of the choirs in the Saint Louis District; and, while this has been accomplished largely through hard work and consecrated application, what he has done can be done by others, provided they are willing to bring to the task the same amount of personal enthusiasm and "stick-to-it-iveness" that he has shown.

God qualifies for duties imposed, if the desire to qualify is in the heart. So see to it that in this forward movement, felt so noticeably all through the church, you are not to be left behind, through lack of willingness to do and willingness and desire to be of service to God's work and people.

Introducing Brother Gresty

We present this month an able article by Brother J. T. Gresty, of Sydney, New South Wales. Brother Gresty is a composer of music, who has won many laurels in his native city, and who, since joining the church, has given up advantageous secular work for the joy of presenting the gospel. He is very interested in our music mission to tell the glad tidings to the world; and, owing to the lines in which his efforts in the past have been made, he is especially interested in the new work of amalgamating the orchestral interests of the church. This article gives a glimpse of his "sound doctrine" concerning the movement.

In order that the readers of the Staff may feel acquainted with Brother Gresty, we publish a sketch of his work as found in the Music and Musicians in Australia column of the Sydney Mail.

Brother Gresty has some charming daughters who are high in musical attainments, having followed in their father's footsteps as composers; and one, at least, having a highly cultivated soprano voice, which voice we hope to hear at no very far distant time, as we understand she plans to tour the United States as concert singer.

Welcome to our columns, Brother Gresty; write often, and give us the benefit of your wide experience in the realm of "music and of song."

A. A.

Gresty as a Composer

Composer, conductor, orchestrator. Mr. Gresty is an enthusiast. A Victorian by birth—he hails from Castlemaine—Sydney has been his home for the past twenty-three years. For twenty years he has been orchestrator to Mr. J. C. Williamson. He is a voluminous writer. Apart from his theatrical work, he is author of a great number of songs, several oratorios, a prize Commonwealth Ode (produced by the Sydney Philharmonic Society in 1902), and one of the most difficult compositions that a musician can aspire to write—a quadruple chromatic fugue in E minor. His chief delight is the composing of fugues. It was the study of Cherubini's celebrated tonal fugue that induced Mr. Gresty to try his powers in the same direction.

How far he succeeded is best told by the composer himself: "Cherubini's fugue is in eight parts and for two choirs, two hundred and forty-two bars in length. My quadruple chromatic fugue is on four subjects, accompanied by two counter subjects, in eight parts also. This is far more difficult than a plain fugue for two choirs, and it contains all the known devices used in developing a fugue, viz, subjects with reversed accents, by inversion, sequential treatment of the parts by augmentation, etc. A separate exposition is given of the second subject—in other words, a fugue within a fugue. The latter part of the fugue is developed with altered rhythms of the various subjects, concluding with strettos on some of the subjects, two strettos maelstrale on the fourth subject and second counter-subject on dominant pedal. The whole of the fugue is two hundred and fifty bars in length—eight bars longer than Cherubini's." M. Wiegand, our one-time city organist, used to say that before playing a fugue of Bach's he took a pinch of snuff to give him courage. The burly Belgian would probably have required an extra pinch or two before tackling Mr. Gresty's masterpiece. At present Mr. Gresty is putting the finishing touches to a two-night oratorio, the subject of which embraces comprehensively all that lies between the Creation and the Last Judgment. There is a great dearth of oratorios now, he laments. That is to say, of oratorios with inspiration in them. What voice is to the singer, or brains to the writer, inspiration is to the composer. Works lacking this grand essential may for a time enjoy a measure of popularity, but oblivion is bound to overwhelm them.

Mr. Gresty will not debase his talents by writing music of the popular order. He has been asked to do so, and has steadily refused. To his old friend, Mr. Benjamin Pentreath, of Bendigo, Mr. Gresty acknowledges his indebtedness "for the first inspiring influence he received in the higher realms of music." He also pays a warm tribute to M. Léon Caron, "the quickest composer and orchestrator he ever knew," and to whose influence he owes much, more especially in orchestration.

While musical taste is distinctly on the up grade in Sydney, it pains Mr. Gresty to think how frequently local talent and genius are allowed to fade and die for want of encouragement. Hitherto the efforts made to establish in Sydney a permanent professional orchestra to perform the works of the great masters have proved futile, and in this respect we lag behind Melbourne. Now that the Symphony Orchestra, composed of many of the city's best professional players, has entered upon a series of concerts, he hopes that the patronage accorded by the public will be of so generous a character as to insure the permanence in our midst of the Symphony Orchestra.—Sydney Mail.

For a Better Service

Having been requested by Sister Audentia Anderson to send along an article to the columns of the Staff, I am offering my first contribution.

I have intended for some time past to write along the lines of the necessity of forming a large and efficient orchestra, uniting with the combined choral forces, capable of performing the works of the best masters.

I was pleased to see that President Frederick M. Smith is doing all he can to encourage this important part in the musical services of the church. I have been deeply interested in the forward movement with the united choirs; and also in the enthusiasm shown by those at the head of the movements. Remember the words of the great composer, Schumann, "Nothing great has ever been accomplished in art or science, without enthusiasm."

Having been in the musical profession for over thirty years, both as orchestral player, and chief orchestrator to the leading firm of Australia, I think the giving of my experience along these lines will be a help to those who are interested in this forward movement.

There are still greater heights that the combined chorus can rise to. Why not perform some such prominent oratorios as the "Messiah," (Handel), "Creation" (Haydn), "Elijah" (Mendelssohn), also "Hymn of praise" (Mendelssohn). In the latter the orchestra plays a very important part alone for a great deal of the first part, the chorus being used later on.

Now, to perform the latter work would require the best players on all instruments. And it is on this very important subject of giving our best that I am writing. We have the best gospel on earth, which we all rejoice in, and in the united praise of God we should give our best efforts of both chorus and orchestra, and also the soloists. Nothing but the best will do.

Take, for example, a few of the choruses of the Messiah; some of them are really difficult, and yet are grandly effective, such as: "And the glory of the Lord," "O Thou that tellest," "All we like sheep," and the "Hallelujah chorus"—that grand monument to Handel's genius. To produce these works effectively it will require the best trained soloists, also chorus; and orchestra, and a test for voices and orchestra is really necessary, to get the best united effect possible.

I would urge both chorus and orchestra to study to be proficient sight readers; although I would not debar really good voices from taking part, of persons who are not good sight readers, provided that amongst the various voices there are sufficient good sight readers to attack well, and inspire confidence in others.

Now to the main purpose of this article,—orchestration. Playing off the scores by both transposing and nontransposing instruments, as is often done in churches, will not do. The music for all the church service will need to be properly orchestrated by those who may possess the proper knowledge, or who have been trained especially along the lines of orchestration. This will mean a great amount of labor. The work should be of the best quality, to produce the best effect and that all the beautiful coloring instruments may be heard to the best advantage, being not overpowered by the louder instruments.

For General Conference purposes with a picked choir of, say, two hundred voices, a good balance would be an orchestra of about sixty-five performers of both sexes, especially in the strong portion; composed as follows; 14 first violins, 12 second violins, 10 violas, 8 cellos, 4 double basses. 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 2 bassoons, 4 French horns, 2 cornets (or trumpets), 3 trombones, tuba, tympani.

With the violins there may not be much difficulty; there probably will be with the violas; but any good violin player can soon master the viola, by learning the clef for that instrument. Good cellos and basses are also important parts of the string family. The difficulty will probably be for the performance of good standard works with the solo instruments of the wood-wind family. The flutes may not cause much trouble. The oboe, clarinets and bassoons probably will.

Who that loves this great latter-day work so well, having a sufficient talent and aptitude, will begin the study of these three important wood-wind instruments with competent masters, and study and practice diligently till they are able to perform their part well? The principal thing with these instruments is tone. These are what is professionally called "The coloring instruments" of the orchestra.

Good execution without proper tone is not sufficient. The oboe is often less studied than the clarinets. The Cor Anglais, or as it is sometimes called, the bass oboe, is an important instrument, with distinctive quality of "tone." The bassoon will need to be studied, as the old masters and also modern orchestrators write much for these useful instruments. The greatest difficulty of all the instruments will probably be the French horns—they are the most difficult to master of all the family of brass (difficult to attack); but with the best instruction from the best masters, it is possible to occasionally get good players. I would make an especial appeal on behalf of the French horns, oboes, and bassoons, as these instruments are seldom studied. Who will begin this study at once, with a full determination to master them?

We can accomplish anything, provided we have the necessary talent and energy to complete the task. There may not be so much difficulty with the cornets and trombones; with the latter instruments tone is one of the necessary qualities. It would be better to have the slide trombones instead of the valve. The tympani only will be required of the drums, and the brass family and tympani will need to be somewhat subdued for church purposes. This orchestra need not necessarily take up a great deal of room. All should be seated as closely as possible around the organ, in front, and all in full view of the conductor, so as not to take up the space for the congregation.

Until the church can produce all the necessary players to undertake their important part for General Conference purposes, it may be necessary to engage professional talent for the more important coloring instruments. This is not insurmountable; where there is a will there is a way. A special fund could be collected for this purpose.

I trust this important advance in the great latter-day work by the addition of a first-class orchestra, will be taken up by all the Saints enthusiastically. Above all, I would say to the various performers, and also soloists, and singers, "Give of your best; nothing but your best to the service of the Lord," and by the help of music bring this great latter-day work before the people.

I would suggest in conclusion, local orchestras for choirs of between twenty-five and thirty, an orchestra of from twelve to fifteen, composed as follows: 3 first violins, 2 second violins, viola, cello, bass, flute, clarinet, horn, 2 cornets, trombone. For these smaller orchestras, there would need to be a special orchestral arrangement, as the large orchestral arrangement would not do.

Let us all unite to give our best, and obey the scriptural injunction, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might." Saints, be practical.

J. T. GRESTY.

One Phase of District Choir Work

"Organized efficiency" has become the keynote of the successful conduct of all our big commercial industries and financial institutions. The same principle has been applied to our professional, social and philanthropic enterprises, and may be, indeed must be, applied to our construction, organization and conduct of the particular work which we have directly under consideration, if we expect to see it complete.

It would appear that in using the term district choir, its construction would be obvious; yet we have been asked, "What constitutes or enters into the organization of a district choir?" We have answered: The district choir is constructed, first, by combining the organized choirs in a given district; and, second, with the addition of such scattered members as may be qualified to join and help in the particular work of the organization.

The work of a district choir may be separated into three divisions:

First, the support of the services, whether district conference, reunions, or other district meetings, as may be deemed advisable.

Second, the incentive to greater understanding or education on the part of those who hear or come in contact with the work, and who may be nonmembers, and a consequent desire to become better acquainted with the general church work, the result of which would be the removal and destruction of prejudice towards the work.

Third, the broadened field for usefulness which opens to those who take up the musical studies and enter this part of the service.

In considering the work of a district choir we must not confine ourselves entirely to the field of music, as the possibilities of the work are too broad to limit them. The musical department affords an excellent opportunity to enlist the service of all of our young people, to bring them together in church work, and prepare them for service in other fields. The choir, like the Sunday school, has not accomplished its real mission until it has made each individual unit a working factor so far as possible in all departments of church work.

After the various branches in a district have developed to an extent the musical talent they possess, it enlarges the scope of the work very materially to bring them all together for an united effort in the field of music which cannot be handled by only a few voices. There is as much difference between a small branch choir and the greater district choir as exists between the small organ and the pipe organ; not merely in volume, but in tone, harmony, and "musical possibilities." The larger sphere is where we should all aspire to be; and out of this combined effort new relations arise which lead us into better and broader conceptions of real gospel service.

Experience has fully demonstrated that a person cannot be interested in any work to any appreciable extent unless he can assist in its accomplishment. The musical feature is only one department, and it is not to be expected that everyone who develops in this work will become a specialist. In fact, I believe we will agree that the masses will continue to appreciate and recognize the choir service as a method of offering unto the Lord united praise; and the harmony taught them in working with others will branch out and make itself felt in all other efforts which they may make.

Our observation and experience has been sufficiently extensive to enable us to know that the district choir movement is a most helpful factor in district church work. Where we have been able to interest all the singers in the district, and have drilled them specially for united musical effort at district conferences, it has given each of them a personal interest in the success of the work that they otherwise would not have. Many of them have been in attendance at the district conference meetings, because they have had a part to perform. This personal interest has been so potent and has so affected them that they have become interested in endeavoring to influence their friends, and they have invited them to attend, and made special efforts to bring them out, until our conference attendance has been greatly increased. And the resultant success of such efforts has caused all, in departing, to feel encouraged and determined to do more whenever and wherever they can.

If we have seventy-five or one hundred voices in our district choir we have just that many units or points of contact through which to influence and enlist the service and attendance of others. And we can readily see the possibilities for broadened and greater work for good, by judicial effort towards influence and encouragement through these very points of contact.

We all know that a person cannot be a good singer without proper cultivation of the voice; but a good singer has one of the essential elements of a good speaker: not merely to be a preacher, but to take his part in prayer and testimony service, in the Religio, and in the Sunday school.

The effect of the district choir work, therefore, cannot be restricted to the musical department alone. When we are able to interest our young people in this service and keep them at work, we are encouraging and cultivating ability which will appear and be evidenced by better service in other departments of the church work. So we must not judge of the value of this work by the music which the choir renders while the church service is in progress. This we are sure is only a small part of the grand total.

Musings

I wish to live so good and pure that I may always have God's approving smiles.

My trials are sometimes hard to bear, but my kind and loving Father would not burden me above that which I am able to bear.

The trying of our faith worketh patience—that the dross might be consumed and the pure gold refined.

Methinks I see our Savior on the Mount of Transfiguration, and also on Calvary's cross.

Methinks I see him weeping over the beloved city; and he wept over the loved one dead.

He forgave the fallen woman. In my mind I see and hear him say, "Go and sin no more."

He condemned the Pharisee, reproved the hypocrite.

I think when I am refined, and the dross is consumed, I may be like him.

Oh, to be more like Jesus and to hear him say, "You too, have been willing to walk in my footsteps."

MARLETTE, MICHIGAN. MRS. E. G. MAXWELL.

TULSA, OKLAHOMA, December 29, 1915.

Editors Herald: A Happy New Year to you. I have been a reader of the HERALD for about thirty-eight years, still it comes every week laden with gospel truths.

I cannot see how we could get along without it, as we have lived away out in western New Mexico for the last eight years and the HERALD was nearly the only preacher we had. So we rejoiced when the HERALD or Ensign came laden with good news from all parts of the world.

We had quite an experience among the Brighamites in that country. About ninety-five per cent of the people were Brighamites. They have departed far from the truth. I have heard them declare from the pulpit that God at one time was a man like we are now, and that we may become equal to him; that Jesus Christ was a polygamist. They are great people to honor Brigham Young. The twenty-fourth of July is Brigham Young day. It came on Saturday this year, and at night they had a dance which lasted until two o'clock Sunday morning.

Thank God the way opened up for us to get away, and now we are located in Tulsa, Oklahoma. This is a nice place. We have about sixty Saints here. Brother Robinson and wife and daughter from Lamoni, Iowa, are here looking after the church work.

I am traveling, selling coal for our coal company, composed of Peter Adamson, jr., Ellis Short and E. D. Bailey. They have quite a business established here. One coal dealer in a certain town said to me, "I see you are getting to be an old man; have you any provision made for old age? Do you belong to the Masons or any secret order of the day?"

I said, "No, I do not belong to any society of any kind on the face of this earth, except the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. There is provision made in the gospel of Jesus Christ for the aged. We have established two or three homes for our aged people, also a children's home, and have our own Sanitarium."

"Well," he said, "if our church had all those provisions made for the homeless, we would not need any secret societies."

Dear Saints, let us rejoice that we have the gospel of Jesus Christ in its fullness, restored unto us by the angel of God in this our day. This is a day of warning, and not a day of many words. Let him who has been warned warn his neighbor; tell them we are living in perilous times, when the judgment of God is on the earth, wars and rumors of wars, famine and pestilence, all things in commotion, and the hearts of men failing them for fear of the things that are coming on the earth.

Let us as a people banish all selfishness and think about helping our aged people, the widow and orphan, the sick and those in distress. Let God's loving Spirit enter our hearts and it will drive out our selfishness. Then we will be as the church was in Enoch's day, of one heart and one mind; and we will be ready when the Master comes to wed his bride.

It is the desire of my heart to be ready when he comes, which coming we believe is near at hand. May God help us to be ready is my prayer.

PETER ADAMSON, SR.

Editors Herald: I have received much benefit from your valuable paper. I appreciate the thoughts set forth in the HERALD articles. They are certainly food for the mind and brains that are not already petrified.

My efforts have been insignificant, but still I believe that I have transplanted some of the solid gospel seeds that will not decay with time, but will bear fruit.

The object of this letter is along the line just mentioned. My brother in the flesh asks me in a letter to solicit the prayers of the Saints in his behalf. This is evidence to me that after years of suffering he now turns to God for help, and now asks the church for prayer. I hope that through the HERALD you will help me reach many prayerful minds. I am a firm believer in concentration of righteous minds.

With best wishes for your paper, and for the truth, I am,

Your humble brother,

FRANK PETERSON.

CALDWELL, TEXAS, January 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: We have been subscribers to the HERALD a long time, until last fall when we failed to renew on account of short funds.

We have had considerable preaching here by Brother John Harp, preaching that was good to listen to. It is remarkable how he held up to do the preaching he did, having chills and fever all the time. We are always glad to see Brother and Sister Harp come to our branch. I will never forget our trip to and from Bryan, where we went to see Brother Spiller.

Brother John keeps up an interest wherever he is. At the close of his meetings here he ordained Brother R. L. Spiller to the office of elder. He left to spend the holidays with Sister Ruth at San Antonio, Texas. We hope he will regain his health and be with us again soon.

Our little Sunday school is still alive, though it has some hard bumps. Brother Aylor passed us by. We would like to have seen him and talked with him, but of course he knows best.

Brother S. R. Hay was in our midst not long ago. He is a very welcome guest. He tells us our duties in plain words. We would do well to heed the advice of the ministers. Let us try to do better and treat our neighbors better this year than we have in the past.

Wishing the HERALD and all its readers a prosperous New Year, I am,
Your brother,
Route 3. C. M. MITCHELL.

Extracts from Letters

Brother J. L. Rust, of Gladstone, Illinois, writes: "Brethren, let us not mistake the coming of the Lord. The apostle tells us we shall see him as he is, not perhaps as we would have him, but as he is. If we are not found naked we will be ready to partake of his divine and glorious estate, and enter into God's rest. There is one who said he could not enter upon the work he was asked to do because he had bought land; another had bought cattle; the third had married a wife and could not leave her. One of the apostles said, 'Lord, we have forsaken all and followed thee.' Who of us are ready to follow Christ and overcome as he overcame? When the earth comes to the measure of its creation, those who are ready to receive him, to them will he appear and say, 'Well done.'"

Brother F. G. Pitt writes from Berkeley, California, December 15: "We enjoyed our work at the Exposition, and have every reason to believe that good was accomplished. We estimate that we talked to at least five thousand people. We made a host of friends and distributed a lot of literature. But we are glad the work there is ended. It proved to be too much for my wife, and she was severely ill at the close. But she has had a little rest the last ten days, and is feeling much better, and I think will soon be herself again. It required a lot of time and patience to get our things removed from the Exposition,—so much red tape. They wanted to get some money out of us for wrecking and packing. It cost some a lot of money. We escaped with a cost of fifty cents to convey our things to the door. Compared to what some had to pay, our entire exhibit cost us very little."

London, England

After reading so many good encouraging letters from the pages of our weekly messenger, I thought a few lines from this side of the water might be of interest to HERALD readers. In this way we can become acquainted with many we have never met. Letters expressive of the deep interest they are taking in gospel work often give strength and inspiration to the far-away missionaries, learning of others who are making valiant efforts to lift the gospel standard before the world in different lands. And often what a hard struggle it is to succeed! Surely the united prayer of faith should ascend to the God of all power for the triumph of truth over error.

When we read of the great task that lies before the servants of God who undertake such a work as that which Brother Philemon Pement has on hand in making such a brave effort in the city of Ottawa, Canada, in the face of such opposition among a people who have been taught to believe that their church has continued down from the apostles' time, and they believe beyond a doubt that they are the true successors to the apostolic church—what a veil of false tradition must be cleared away before the light of truth can shine into their minds. It is surely a great undertaking, and yet with a faith like that of Joshua, Brother Pement can and will succeed. We pray that he may meet with good results, and that the seal of God's favor may rest upon his labors.

What a wave of inspiration one feels on reading such letters, and we say from our hearts, God be with you, Brother Pement, and with many other such men of courage we have in our ranks. We are in sympathy with such, being similarly situated as we are here in the world's metropolis. When trying to present the gospel we hear the cry, "Oh, beware of them: they are the 'Mormons.'" There are many obstructions and many who make falsehood their argument. Yet Brother May keeps hammering away, believing that truth will finally find its way to the front and shine out in all its former beauty.

This war is awakening some of the people to think of the whys and wherefores, and we believe their minds will be more willing to hear the gospel message than before.

When we hear the cry for recruits for the army of king and country, we often wish there was such a response to the call for laborers in the army of the Lord, that there might be a greater harvest of souls gathered into his kingdom. But we must wait the Lord's time; it will surely come, and they who will not hear his voice must feel the chastening rod, while the willing and obedient will gather out of Babylon.

Brother May has decided to go to General Conference the coming spring. He feels that it will do him good. He has been a regular attendant at the conference for many years, and now after being absent for four years in succession he thinks it will be helpful and a benefit to enjoy the privilege of meeting with his collaborators in the gospel work, renewing the associations of the brethren.

As for myself, I feel inclined to remain in England, and will try to hold the fort with the London Saints until he returns. I think the money that would be spent on the trip is needed here for home necessities, and for the help of the London mission work. With these thoughts in mind, I am willing to sacrifice the pleasure of going, much as I would like to see loved ones at home, also old associations, Saints and friends in Zion.

I do not care to return until I see what I seemed to see by the eye of faith when I left my Zion home. It was then my one ambition to see the truths of the gospel that had been crushed to earth arise again, and shine as at first. I hope to see the time when the difference between the Reorganization and the Utah departure will be clearly defined, that the people may know that polygamy and all its attendant evils is not, nor ever has been, a part of the belief of this church, but is as far from it as darkness is from light. Already the mist has begun to clear away, and some are beginning to give the work a more thorough investigation. I feel inspired with the faith that the work will become more firmly established.

Although I have been advised by home folks to return until the war is over, I feel no danger from the visitation of Zeppelins. I am willing to run my chance with the rest of my brothers and sisters in this land, believing that God is just as able to take care of me here as elsewhere if he chooses to do so. He says "prove me and see," and in proving him we prove ourselves. We ask you, dear Saints, to pray for this land and its people, that the gospel may yet be lifted high, and its banner float gloriously over this country, where so many of Ephraim's children dwell.

We are doing the best we can with the limited means in hand, holding meetings in our own home, and open-air meetings in the park. We have now a second Brother May added to our number, a park convert. He is a well-read and intelligent man, and has done some lecturing for other societies. He is not called to the ministry yet, but we are looking forward to seeing him a minister for Christ. There have been several baptisms. One lady united with us yesterday, and I think more will soon follow. We hope the coming summer we may be able to procure a hall for preaching, that we may be able to invite more people to our meetings.

Hoping for greater success in the coming days, and asking the prayers of God's people to that end, I am with you in the faith.

MRS. RODERICK MAY.

South Sea Islands

No doubt readers of the HERALD will be glad to again hear from the work in the islands of the southern seas. It is still on the forward move, and prospects are as good this year for the mission as they have been in preceding years, notwithstanding the war is hindering us to some extent. We are plodding on, however, and doing the best we can for the advancement of our brethren of these isles, for we know that the "Redeemer of Israel" has received them and is doing his part in returning them to the land of their inheritance.

We cannot report many baptisms for the year just passed, but that is not always a conclusive sign of advancement, although a very good sign, at times, of growth. I think I am safe in saying that about fifty or sixty have been baptized throughout the islands during the past year.

There are many, many natives who are with us so far as their faith is concerned, but because of their conditions we cannot baptize them until they straighten out their paths and manifest a true desire to obey by getting married or laying aside some of their coveted habits.

When we look the work squarely in the face in this mission, we have to say that it has gone forward, although the discouragements are almost overwhelming at times. The thought that the Lord has received this people by his own power, made known to us through revelation in this age, is encouragement to us to continue on and do what we can for their aid.

We have some good Saints here who are trying to adapt themselves to the gospel requirements, and who I believe will in the appointed time receive their part with the redeemed. We cannot help but love them, for they are our brothers and sisters in the ties of the gospel. It is because of this love that we are encouraged to continue in doing what we can for their betterment.

As we view it at the present, we are convinced that our brethren of these islands are not needing so much stress laid upon the principles of the gospel as they are teaching along social lines. Oh, the great need of that work among the membership, and just like our brethren of the States, that is the very thing they do not desire. Many of them would much rather discuss some unheard-of question, and in which there is not and cannot be a sensible meaning. Creation is thus the world over. We are laboring hard to instruct them along the needed lines, that they indeed may become a "delightful people."

Oh, how we wish that we had more laborers from the States among this people. So many of the islands cannot be reached by us frequently, and the natives have no other way of getting in touch with us other than through the mission paper and personal letters. If we had two or three more missionaries willing to sacrifice a few things of the world, and bend the knee and extend the helping hand to this people of God, how much happier we would be, and how much more good could be done to these our native brethren, for they are a people who are victims of circumstances and dependents to a great extent upon unclean environments.

This people in years gone by worshiped idols as any other heathen nation, and became accustomed to many customs and habits subject to a tropical climate. When we compare those days of ignorance with their ways at the present we must say that they have advanced. What has brought this advancement other than the gospel that they have obeyed? We are not troubled with weakness of faith among this people, or perhaps I should say lack of stability, for these natives will fight for the restored gospel. What we need is a higher plane of social conditions. Their faith in the "angel message" is unshaken.

The Utah church has a number of missionaries here, but that is not having a bad effect upon our people. Notwithstanding their great number of missionaries, we frequently baptize their members. It apparently makes our membership stronger in the faith. We are meeting the falsehoods of these missionaries in every island we visit. They have circulated a statement among the natives to the effect that Joseph, our late president, prophesied at one time before his death that he would live to see three of their presidents pass to the beyond, and now that he has died, having seen only two pass away in death, the third one still living, he therefore was a false prophet and an impostor. To think that such statements should come from professed enlightened people, and be circulated among a people who are dependent upon the foreigner for the greater part of their enlightenment, is only another evidence of the truth, for once, of Brigham Young's statement. We have answered the statement in our mission paper, and have requested them to produce said prophecy from Brother Joseph's revelations or from the many writings he gave to the church. As yet it remains unanswered.

The above is only a sample of the many things they resort to in endeavoring to prove their abominable doctrines. Polygamy is done away with, according to their statements, at times, but why is it that these natives are frequently found defending that doctrine? They at the present time have about ten missionaries in these islands. In talking to a native missionary of their church to-day, I learn that there are seven on the island of Tahiti at the present. They are, as one expressed to us one day, having a good time. Such we do not doubt.

The past year a number of our leading men have been taken away in death. News reached us last month that the president of the elders' quorum died on a schooner between the islands of Apataki and Ahe, on his way to the latter place. They were near enough to the island to hold his body until they reached shore, where he was buried by the Branch of Manihi. He will be remembered by the past missionaries of these islands. We have many young men coming to the front who through proper training and instruction will be a great help to us in coming years.

Not only have we been visited by death, but the great conflict in Europe is reaching our mission. A few of our young men (half-castes) are being drafted for soldiers, and will be trained here for service, then shipped to the war zone. It is not certain just how many and who at the present time are to be drafted, but a few weeks will tell. Former missionaries will recall the name of one of our bright young men of Tikahau, Matahuira a Lui, a son of Lui, one of the Pupu leaders, who has been drafted. So the enemy of peace is extending his hand of terror, bloodshed and misery to these quiet, outlying islands of the sea, seeking meat, the flesh of humanity, to appease his hunger and greed.

We are intending to have our conference here in Tarona this year, providing the governor will permit. We go before him to-morrow with an interpreter to seek his consent. Conditions are such here now financially that we are fearful of his giving his consent. Also a fever is raging in the island of Rairoa at present. Many have died as a result of it, and many are still sick. In some of the upper islands the native race is thinning out fast through disease and various other causes. The poor creatures are handicapped, as they have no doctor, no one on whom they can rely for help. Notwithstanding these conditions, we trust that we may be permitted to have our conference. If the governor will not consent to this, we will have district conferences throughout the mission, if possible.

Our Christmas passed off as usual in the islands, and only those who have had experience in this mission can understand how that was. Had you been permitted to step in and listen for a short time to the native program, we are sure you would have been amused. When a children's Sunday school class is called upon for a song, it is nothing to hear the whole Sunday school singing with them. Their unlimited desire for song is so great that they must help the children out. It is not an unusual thing to see some old brother go from the front part of the church building to the rear to assist some children's class that he thinks may need help.

We are happy in the conflict, and determined to win the fight by the Master's help. Trusting that the Spirit of divine peace is pervading the "army of the Lord" in the "land of Zion," we remain,

Fighting for truth,

PAPEETE, TAHITI.

CLYDE F. ELLIS.

Central Michigan

One year ago I started a series of meetings at Coleman, with the help of a good faithful band of Saints. We held forth for about five weeks, six being added to the branch. At the close of the services the Saints did not forget that the missionary needs money to travel, and they fitted him out with a new suit of clothes. I felt thankful for their kindness and labor of love.

Next I went to Loomis, Michigan, where our faithful Brother Eddie Welch had been holding forth. Thirty were baptized here, where now a full organized branch exists. And these Saints did not forget that a missionary needs to pay his fare on the train.

Next I went to Midland, where I started the work four years ago, when a few were baptized. In the meantime, Brother De Wolf had moved in and taken up the work, and had prayer meetings and Sunday school started. The result at this time was that nine were added to the faith.

I went to Farwell, where we started a series of meetings and two were added to the branch, and a Religio society was organized. The Saints were strengthened. While here the sad news came of the death of Brother and Sister De Geers' baby, of Midland. Little Ernie had passed over the river to the life free from this vale of tears and pain. They brought the remains to Farewell for burial. We hope that the parents will always retain in mind to keep on preparing to meet the loved ones gone on before, when Jesus returns with them in Christ.

From here I was called home to remain for a short season, when on July 5 a big, bouncing boy was born to us. Wife and I hope some day that he will be a missionary for the church.

After things were made possible for me to leave home, I went to Moores Junction, where our district president, Brother George Burt, had started holding meetings in the tent. He left for other parts of the vineyard needing his assistance, and with the faithful band of Saints with Brother Matthew Umphrey at their head, I assisted in the work. Between forty and fifty were baptized into the fold.

Talk about using a missionary like King Pharaoh used Joseph, who was sold into Egypt! I had chariots and horses at my service, and a fine warm overcoat, and a suit of clothes presented to me. Truly we gained a fine lot of people in the church here, who are now bearing testimony to the truthfulness of the angel's message. These are results which can largely be attributed to the faithful living of Brother John Umphrey and wife, who over twenty years ago obeyed the gospel, and who are still bearing the testimony, I know this gospel is true, and also know that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God. The latch of their door is always on the outside, day and night. They have shared their home with the servants of the Lord, forgetting not that they need help in a financial way to carry them to other parts of the vineyard. May God bless them with rewards when Jesus comes.

From Moores Junction I went to Bently and held a few meetings, where Brother and Sister Beebe who had lately been baptized into the fold live, she having been one of the strong pillars in the Methodist Church, being now a stronger one in the true faith. They are rejoicing in the sweet angel message, with two of their children. Here is another place where the preachers find a home.

The meetings at Bently did not seem to be very successful. I remember one night while delivering the message of love there came a bang against the door, and after examining it on the outside found it plastered with rotten eggs.

Oh, yes, I forgot to mention Brother Maynard, who has been an alien for twenty years, whose door has always been open and has assisted the missionaries in the past. He was cutting corn in a field with another man by the name of Weedahoe, and as they met with each a handful of corn they must have both been thinking of their past sins, so they said, "What do you say that we go and be baptized to-morrow?" So they called the preacher by phone and made arrangements to become citizens by birth. After this Brother Maynard starts in right. He says to his wife, who had been praying for him for twenty years, "Come mother, we must read the Bible and have our prayer, lest we be overcome." We hope he will endure to the end.

From Bently I put up the tent at a place called Adams, where we had great opposition, but Satan did not prevail. There the new Saints rendered valuable assistance, and four more were baptized. I left here and went back to preach a few more sermons to the Saints, when I was called to Midland to administer to Sister Torneetta Bordman, who was stricken with diphtheria. I was shown that it would take all the faith we had that her life might be spared. We feel that God has spared her life for a purpose, and we hope to see her grow to womanhood, always retaining in mind the blessings of God to her.

I preached here in Midland, then went home and started to preach at Coleman. After talking with Brother Russel Yager, he desired me to take up a series of meetings here, so began on the 28th of January, just a year since I held meetings here before. We have three for baptism Sunday. The prospects are good for more. So the good work goes on.

I have had my discouragements, and also my blessings in the past years. The sunshine and the rain bring forth the growing grain. This last year has been one of trial among the Saints, especially among the farmers, as the season has been wet. But we hope and trust that the coming year will be prosperous, and that we as a people may take heed at the signs of Christ's coming so that we may not be among the unwise virgins, but be prepared with our lamps trimmed and burning. If not, we shall suffer loss.

Let us make this a year of sacrifice, and not spend our money in riotous living, for if we do we shall be like the prodigal son, when we come to ourselves we shall find that our food will be husks and our company hogs. Let us not be found saying that Christ delayed his coming, by giving our services of youth to Satan, and our old age to God. Blessed are they that do his commands, for they shall have right to the tree of life, and shall enter in through the gate into the city.

In bonds,

SAMUEL T. PENDLETON.

Denver, Colorado

When we arrived here last September I found the Denverites just returning from their vacations, spent amidst the most beautiful and inspiring mountain scenery; where a week or more breathing the light, pure air and climbing over the rocks and crags, sometimes above the clouds, where one stands in reverential awe, gazing at the wonders for miles around, serves to revive both the spirit and the body of man after the monotony of routine life on farm or in city. I believe it is time and money well spent to thus hike away for a season, and then return with high hopes for the future. I wish all could have the chance so to do.

I have been thinking of the advisability of a summer camp for the Saints and friends, where, amid the scenery, they could have the association of some from all around, and perhaps a service now and then to bring them to the God and creator of all that their eyes behold. Such places were the favorite haunts of such men as Enoch, the brother of Jared, Moses, Nephi, and the Master of men. While resting from the flurry of life, they communed with Nature and her God, and learned the great things of the law.

Denver is beautiful for location, and within a few hours of the great mountains which look down on her with ever watchful eye, like that of the Father from above.

The Saints have a nice church at the junction of Logan Avenue with the beautiful Speer Boulevard which winds along the banks of Turkey Creek, intersecting with the other main thoroughfares of the city. It can be reached from any car line on Broadway, getting off at Speer Boulevard, going east to the church. Regular hours for meetings at all seasons of the year. Visitors will be welcomed.

A mission under the care of Elder Nearrin is located at Third and Detroit, reached by the Fourth Avenue car line. A prosperous Sunday school is also located there.

The Sunday school and Religio at the church are doing good work, and the attendance and interest of the Saints in all other meetings are growing.

The January revival, held by the writer with the aid of the local force, G. F. Walling, pastor; E. W. Fishburn, chorister, and several good workers amongst the members, resulted in the baptism of six, whom we hope will be a help to themselves and the church. The personal work of some of the Saints with their neighbors and friends aided much in bringing them to the church to hear the gospel. This kind of work is too much neglected by our people in the cities. It is especially beneficial at the time of revival meetings.

We found here, as elsewhere, a lack of system in the gathering of local finances, so we suggested a system in harmony with the spirit and letter of the law, which resulted in the adopting of the following by the branch, Sunday school, Religio and Ladies Aid:

"Resolved that the following be adopted by the branch, and that the auxiliaries be requested to adopt and concur.

"First, All moneys raised by the branch or any of the auxiliaries shall be placed in a common fund, the branch deacon being custodian of such fund.

"Second, Each of the auxiliaries and the branch through their executive officers shall prepare and present once every six months to the separate bodies joining in this financial plan, a financial budget of necessary expenses for the ensuing six months, which after approval by their representative bodies shall be approved by a financial board of three members of the church, to be elected by a joint session of the branch and auxiliaries.

"Third, The duties of the financial board shall be:

"(a) To pass upon all budgets, recommending any changes that may be discovered necessary.

"(b) To keep an accurate account of all receipts and expenditures, and suffer at no time any body to draw warrants in excess of its respective approved budgets.

"(c) It shall approve all warrants drawn upon the treasurer by any of the bodies contributing thereto.

"(d) It shall report at least once each six months a full and complete report of all transactions by that body.

"Fourth, The treasurer or deacon shall report to the joint session of branch and auxiliaries at least once every six months, such report to be a record of all transactions and information necessary for the business of the body.

"Fifth, The term of office of the financial board shall be for six months, or until its successors are elected and have qualified."

No matter in what collection you drop your money, it reaches the treasury and is used to meet the needs of the whole. If the amount can be added to by social, entertainment, or collection, can all heartily join, for all partakers of the benefits.

Now you critics, if you do not like this, dig up something better, but do not tear down our house and erect none better. We want the best methods. Let us help each other. We have good general principles by which to work, but what we need is for some one to work out the details of a workable plan. The church needs organizers, who can grasp our needs and practically apply our God-given principles of finances.

We like boosters and like to boost, but too big a boost lands us on the other side of the saddle; so let us boost just right and we will all land together.

We are encouraged and hopeful, though handicapped at times, through lack of wisdom and knowledge.

Hopefully yours,

AMMON WHITE.

News from Branches

La Junta, Colorado

On Sunday, January 30, a branch was organized at La Junta, by A. E. Tabor, J. R. Sutton, and J. C. May. Fifty people were in attendance. We have twenty-seven members at La Junta, with others investigating. A spiritual feast was enjoyed by all at the organization meeting.

Elder W. E. Williams was chosen branch president; Elder Solomon Tripp, assistant and visiting elder; F. P. Mans, teacher. The Spirit having so directed, Brother Mans was ordained a teacher and chosen by the branch. There being no deacon, Brother Tripp was chosen treasurer. Sister Marietta Williams was elected clerk. The preaching on this date was by A. E. Tabor at 11 a. m. and by J. R. Sutton at 7.45 p. m. The branch is to be known at the North La Junta Branch.

We now have a branch of twenty-seven members living in La Junta, others in the country, and smaller towns near by.

Your brother in Christ,

SOLOMON TRIPP.

The Bishopric

To the Saints of Eastern Montana District; Greeting: Did you ever stop to think, as you go about and look over your flocks and fields, and note the increase from year to year, that the Lord has been your partner and coworker, and that without this you would be unable to accomplish anything?

Have you taken an inventory of your holdings to know how much belongs to your partner, whom you must confess holds the power in his hands? In Matthew 7: 21 we read, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of the Father, which is in heaven."

We understand, then, the necessity of complying with the will of the Lord.

Malachi 3: 8 reads thus: "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings." So we may easily understand that in order to "do the will of our Father which is in heaven," we must impart unto his storehouse of our tithes and offerings.

If we do this and comply with all the gospel laws, the Lord gives us the promise in Malachi 3: 11 that the devourer will be rebuked for our sakes.

Again in Proverbs 3: 9, 10, we read, "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with all the first fruits of thy increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty and thy presses shall burst out with new wine."

In Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5, the Lord says, "Behold now it is called day (until the coming of the Son of Man) and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people, for he that is tithed shall not be burned."

Again in section 106: 2, we read that all those who gather to Zion and observe not the law of tithing shall not be found worthy to abide therein.

We find in our short experience as a collector of tithes, that to those who observe the law of tithing it seems to afford pleasure, and I also find that those who pay their tithing in full each year are the ones who most heartily indorse the law.

Let us all remember our duty, for as one brother stated, "The law of tithing can impoverish no one."

On almost every hand we hear the call for more missionaries to help spread the angel's message. But while we are calling for laborers, do we always realize the fact that it requires money to support their families? Are we always ready and willing to help defray the traveling expenses of the missionaries when they come in our midst?

Let us see if Eastern Montana can do her share towards reducing the church debt in 1916.

Hopefully trusting and praying that the blessings of the Lord may rest upon all who are trying to do his will, I am,

Your coworker in the cause of Christ,

B. D. STRATTON, Bishop's Agent.

FAIRVIEW, MONTANA, Route 1, Box 27.

AGENTS' NOTICES

To the Saints of the Youngstown-Sharon District; Greeting: We desire to reach every member living in the newly organized district, so they may know where to send their tithes and offerings. Our district covers the following territory: The counties of Columbiana, Mahoning, Trumbull and Ashtabula in Ohio; Lawrence, Mercer, Crawford, Erie, Warren, Venango and Forest in Pennsylvania. Saints living in that territory kindly remit to the undersigned.

We are confident that the majority of our members desire to keep the laws of the church, knowing as we do that complete salvation can only be had through complete obedience to all the commandments God has given us. Our first object in paying tithing is with a view to fulfilling the law. Secondly, we have our obligations to our neighbor. Our missionaries and their families must be cared for if the gospel is to be carried to others. We received it freely; in the same spirit we desire to see our friends and neighbors receive it.

We cannot feel satisfied until the names of all the members appear on the tithing record. We would ask the Saints to report as often as they can, once every month if possible. Do not wait for a large amount, but let us hear from you regularly. The allowances must be paid every month. Members living in and near the branches, kindly make their remittances to the local branch agents. I should be pleased to hear from the scattered Saints direct.

Your coworker,
SHARON, PENNSYLVANIA, 90 North Oakland Avenue.
MARTIN AHLSTROM, Agent.

Quorum Notices

SECOND SEVENTY

Pursuant to action of quorum last conference, no blanks will be sent for reporting. Instead it is required that the general report blank be used, number 165, on sale at ten cents a dozen at Herald Publishing House, each member furnishing his own. Additional items may be added to this blank. Please be prompt in sending reports on March 1 or as soon as possible thereafter. If you are not coming to next General Conference, inclose 15 cents for annual dues.

H. E. MOLER, Secretary.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, Box 144.

Conference Notices

Independence Stake, Knobnoster, Missouri, March 11 and 12. Branches should be reported and represented. Statistical and ministerial reports and delegate credentials should be in hands of undersigned not later than February 29. General Conference delegates to be selected. James Bunt, secretary, Independence, Missouri.

Alabama, Pleasant Hill Branch, near McKenzie, March 11 and 12. Send branch reports promptly to district secretary. It is expected that Brother Russell will be present. G. W. Miniard, secretary, McKenzie, Alabama.

Convention Notices

Eastern Colorado Religio, Saints' church, Logan and Speer Boulevard, Denver, March 2 and 3. Program Thursday evening, prayer service Friday, 9.30 a. m., business and round table 10. Blanch Sampson, secretary, 571 Emerson, Denver.

Reunion Notices

Joint reunion, Kirtland, Youngstown-Sharon, Western Ohio and Pittsburgh districts, Kirtland, Ohio, August 10 to 20. Details later. Gomer T. Griffiths, J. A. Becker, J. E. Bishop, committee.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are requested for Miss Annie Vinson, Margerum, Alabama. This lady is not a member of the church, but believes the Lord is able to heal her. If it is his will, she desires to recover; if not, that her spirit may soon pass over. She has been a sufferer and an invalid for many years.

Sister G. T. Calvert, who has been a sufferer for many years and is growing worse, requests the prayers of the Saints. She writes that she has endeavored to bear affliction patiently, and now hopes to find relief.

Matron Wanted at the Saints' Liberty Home

The committee of managers in charge of Liberty Home are under the necessity of securing a matron to take general charge of the affairs of the house, and would like to have applications from those who desire such a position, and who have the ability to get along nicely with old people. There are above twenty inmates most of the time, and such help as is needed to do the work is always retained, but there is here an opportunity for one who desires to do a good work for the sake of the old and for the church, and it is doubtful if any possess good qualities which would not be needed and brought into action in this position.

As our present matron is planning to leave at a very early date, it will be necessary to move very promptly. You will therefore send your application, accompanied by such references as you may be able to furnish, to the undersigned.

R. J. LAMBERT, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Conference Daily

A daily Ensign will again be issued during the General Conventions and General Conference in April. The compliments on the make-up of the Daily Ensign published in April, 1914, encourages another venture this year. As our force is small it will help very materially if subscriptions are sent early. If our friends will begin now to send subscriptions it will be appreciated, but if all wait till the last moment more or less confusion may ensue and mistakes be more apt to happen. Help the office force by sending soon. Price 25 cents for the time of conventions and conference.

Playing the Game of Gossip

Give a bad story a "good start," let it run a week, and when it gets around to the starting point its own father won't know it.

That is the game of gossip. In Autumn Leaves for March Evangelist H. O. Smith tells an amusing little anecdote under the title, "Playing the game of gossip."

You will be interested in his story and his deductions. Read it. It is one of a series, "Mission Experiences," now running in Autumn Leaves.

Elders from everywhere meet in Autumn Leaves to swap anecdotes. Invariably they are worth while.

Autumn Leaves is published monthly. Fine illustrations. Many good stories and articles. Only one dollar a year. Send all subscriptions to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

There is a Real Difference

Cream of tartar, derived from grapes, is used in Royal Baking Powder because it is the best and most healthful ingredient known for the purpose.

Phosphate and alum, which are derived from mineral sources, are used in some baking powders, instead of cream of tartar, because they are cheaper.

If you have been induced to use baking powders made from alum or phosphate, use Royal Baking Powder instead. You will be pleased with the results and the difference in the quality of the food.

SUNSHINE PARTIES

are every day affairs in the South in the Winter time ---for when blizzards, slush and snow are quite the fashion in the north, balmy, breezes, sunny skies, moonlit bays and tropical flowers are the fashion in the South. And those who pack their grips and go South at this time, reap rich rewards in health dividends and delightful recreation and return, realizing more than ever before, the real value of a winter vacation in that romantic, historic and beautiful land South of the Mason and Dixon Line.

The cost is low---perhaps not as much as you thought it would be. Come in and let's talk it over.

A CITY SET ON AN HILL.—PART II

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, January 25, 1916, reported by Winsome Smith.)

Text: "A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid."—Matthew 5: 14.

A STATEMENT OF DUTY

Now I pass to the second verse to which I wanted to call your attention, as containing a deduction from fact, a statement of duty, (found in Matthew 5: 16): "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

We find ourselves in this position because of our profession,—a city set on a hill. That is the fact. Finding ourselves in that position, the thing for us to do is to let our light so shine that the children of men may see our good works and glorify God. That is the deduction, the statement of duty.

A PECULIAR PEOPLE

But how shall we let our light shine? By our works. You remember that somewhere the statement is made that God would have a peculiar people. Every freak in the form of religion has hidden under that passage. Shaker bonnets, long robes, bare feet, long hair, all kinds of religious fanaticism have hidden under that expression that God would have a peculiar people; but why not read the entire passage? What is it that chiefly distinguishes them from others? "A peculiar people zealous of good works."

Why, that is just like the Master. The statement is that he went about everywhere doing good. A peculiar people zealous of good works. We must let our light shine then by way of our works, by way of our service, by way of our sacrifice.

SACRIFICE

"What," some one says, "did you say sacrifice? Is not the day of sacrifice all over and done?"

No, we are told in modern revelation, that "this is a day of sacrifice." Then the necessity for sacrifice still exists. I wonder if the spirit of sacrifice still persists.

We see plenty of evidence in some quarters that it does; but in other quarters we see evidences that are a little dubious.

Once in a while we hear a young sister say, "Well, whatever happens, I will never marry a missionary." Once in a while you hear her mother say, "Now whatever you do, don't marry a missionary. See what your father had to go through with."

IRON WEDDING RINGS

Let me tell you what a good old German in the city of Burlington told me last fall. He said, "Brudder Schmidt, I will tell you why the Germans are so successful. It is because of the vimmins's they got back of them." There is something in that. At the beginning of the war thousands of German women brought their marriage rings and threw them at the feet of the Government to be melted up for the gold, and wore away with them iron rings received in exchange.

Do they love the Kaiser more than we love Jesus Christ?

How many young women are willing to forego the diamond-studded ring of the banker or the merchant and put on the iron ring of the missionary's wife? How many?

It is true that if we ever succeed it will be because of the women we have back of us. Whenever you find a good man, from the days of Samuel, whose mother gave him to the temple service, until now, you will find back of that man a good woman,—his mother, or his wife, or his sister, or his sweetheart, who said, "God knows how much I love you, but go, go, and do your duty!"

SAINT FRANCIS

Once in a while we meet with a missionary who says to his son, "Now you had better steer clear of church work; better avoid it, see what it has cost me."

Saint Francis, the founder of the Franciscan Order, felt called to go out and administer to the poor. His father called him before the bishop and was about to draw up papers to disinherit him. Saint Francis drew off every article of clothing and threw it at his father's feet, and standing forth naked, said,

"Now I can say, 'My Father which is in heaven.'" So he borrowed a robe from his bishop and went out into the world, not even owning the clothing he wore, to preach the gospel and minister to the poor. He was a Catholic, and we sometimes have a poor opinion of Catholics; but Jesus says, "Except your righteousness shall exceed," and so on.

I wonder if we have the spirit of sacrifice, or do we have the spirit of complaint? Do we recount the hardships that we have undergone in the service of God? We will do well to review the past.

DID JESUS PROMISE EASE?

Do you remember when Jesus Christ called the disciples around him and said to them: The world has loved me and it will love you. You will have a good time. You will not have any trouble. Everybody will speak well of you, and you will have an easy time and plenty of money. Do you remember the language?

"Oh, no," you say, "Jesus did not say those words, he said in substance, The world has hated me and it will hate you. It will persecute you, and he gave them to understand that they would suffer hardships, and that they would be required to leave lands, houses, fathers, mothers, wives and children." How soon was that fulfilled!

We do not go very far in the Acts of the Apostles before we see Paul and Silas in the jail at Philippi at midnight. I wonder if we would not mourn and complain with our feet in the stocks, in jail, in darkness and at midnight; but these men were singing psalms!

We do not go very far before we see Stephen stoned to death. Did he complain? No. Looking up into the heavens he beheld the glory of God, and Jesus on his right hand.

IN CAVES AND DENS

And so thus we turn to the Hebrew letter, and in the eleventh chapter we read the portion of the saints of God in those days:

And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment: they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; of whom the world was not worthy: they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth.—Verses 36 to 38.

When we see what the saints suffered in those days have we any cause to complain?

Thus tracing the history down to our own dispensation, we see how the mob came upon the Saints in Independence in July of 1833, and said to them, "You must get out of here."

And the Saints said, "Give us time."

They replied, "We will give you time. We will give you fifteen minutes to get out of here"; and they took Bishop Partridge and others and tarred and feathered them.

HAUN'S MILL

Remember the bloody massacre of Haun's Mill: How the mobs had driven the Saints, and at this little place a number of families had assembled and were living in tents and hovels and covered wagons, like those saints of old who had no place to call their home and hid in caves and dens; and then on an October day, out of the woods came a mob and murdered many of the men, hacking the wounded to death with corn knives, then went away and left the women and children and surviving men there at night with their dead and wounded.

Did they go back on the work and exhort their children to give it up, and to be careful? It is not a matter of record that they did; but they went forward with this work as best they could.

THE ELECT LADY

And when that sad procession came back from Carthage and laid at the feet of the widow in Nauvoo the body of her martyred husband and the body of his brother, did she say: "Now I have had enough. I will raise my children up for some other purpose"?

It is not a matter of record that she did. She stayed there and kept her trust, and when her boys reached the years of manhood she gave them to the church, and told them to go and preach the same gospel that their father had died to conserve,—Joseph, Alexander, and David, she sent them all forth, not reserving even one.

Can we do less than that? If I with you have ever been guilty of murmuring, I feel ashamed, in the light of all that the Saints have gone through in the days gone by. We have no cause to complain of that which has been required at our hands.

We may never be required to pass through the same things, but as Emerson says:

Whatever outrages have happened to men may befall a man again; and very easily in a republic, if there appear any signs of a decay of religion. Coarse slander, fire, tar and feathers and the gibbet, the youth may freely bring home to his mind and with what sweetness of temper he can, and inquire how fast he can fix his sense of duty, braving such penalties, whenever it may please the next newspaper and a sufficient number of his neighbors to pronounce his opinions incendiary.

"GOD WITH US"

That time may come to us, as it did in the past,—possibly not,—but at least we can render to God such service and such sacrifice as it is in our power to do under the conditions which surround us, and God can help and aid us.

We have trusted him in the past and we have found that he is all powerful. The heavens are full of blessings prepared to descend upon this people if they are faithful; but if they are not, there are imminent dangers and scourges that may descend upon them.

Brother Smith told us Sunday afternoon that he believed the hand of God had been with us in this Nation-wide scourge of sickness, so that we have not lost a single individual.

I want to bear a little testimony here about a thing that came under my own observation. It was while we were living in San Bernardino, California, that a terrible scourge of infantile paralysis swept through southern California. There were hundreds of cases of it, particularly in Los Angeles, and seventy-five per cent of those cases were fatal. In the majority of instances when the poor little sufferers lived at all they were absolutely helpless, deformed, and often rendered idiotic,—ten thousand times worse than death.

Naturally we were very much concerned. We had two boys. I was not concerned alone for them, but as I walked the streets and saw little children playing, or clinging to their mothers' dresses, and realized that to-morrow perhaps some of them would be stricken by that invisible terror that stalked in the noontime, my heart was made to bleed with anxiety. I received this impression: I told the Saints that I believed if they would meet, after fasting, in a season of special prayer to God, he would not only spare the children of the Saints, but the entire community.

Well, some one said to me, "Is it right when God has sent his judgment on the world to pray him to turn it aside?" I was not sure that this was a judgment from God. It seemed to me that if God wished to punish some one he should start on some of those case-hardened reprobates that I had seen walking the streets unscathed, instead of on innocent children.

Well, anyway, we had that special prayer meeting one Wednesday night, after fasting that day. There had already developed several cases and much alarm. We held that little prayer meeting, and to the best of my knowledge not another case developed in that city of thirty thousand inhabitants. Some may say that was a coincidence. Yes, the blessing coincided with our prayer.

SHALL WE KEEP THE COMMANDMENTS?

I had also this personal experience. Perhaps it may seem insignificant to you, but while I was praying for my own children that they might escape that awful scourge, the thought came to me, "Why pray to God to do a certain thing unless you are willing to keep his commandments?" At the time I was becoming somewhat addicted to taking a cup of coffee at frequent intervals. If I did not intend to observe the Word of Wisdom, had I the courage to ask God to turn the destroyer aside unless I was willing to abide by the conditions contained therein?

I may have done worse things than to drink a cup of coffee. I do not class that with burglary, or drunk-ness, or murder, or anything of that kind, to be sure, but it is typical of larger things. He that is faithful in small things, you remember.

Why ask God for blessings unless we are willing to abide by his commandments? But as sure as the world stands, if we get down in humility and serve God he will send his blessings and preserve us from impending danger, for the Apostle Paul says, "If God be for us who can be against us?"

Now may the Spirit rest with us and help us to remember the exalted position in which our profession has placed us. May we never forget that a city that is set on a hill cannot be hid.

CURRENT EVENTS

DANES JOIN FORD.—Danish delegates have been appointed to the Ford peace conference.

PHILIPPINE OWNERSHIP.—The Philippine Assembly bill authorizing the purchase of the Manila Railroad for four million dollars, has been passed by the Commission.

NICARAGUAN TREATY.—The Senate by a vote of fifty-five to eighteen has ratified the treaty with Nicaragua, under which the United States secures a ninety-nine year option on the Nicaraguan canal route, and a naval base on the Gulf of Fonseca, for three million dollars.

WOULD INVESTIGATE OWNERSHIP.—The Senate on the 15th by a vote of thirty-nine to twenty-two adopted an amendment to a pending bill to provide investigation of traffic conditions throughout the country, and which amendment would order an investigation of the wisdom and feasibility of government ownership and operation of all public utilities engaged in interstate commerce.

LORIMER ON TRIAL.—William Lorimer, former senator from Illinois, is on trial at Chicago under a charge of conspiracy to wreck the La Salle Street Trust and Savings Bank, of which he was president, and subsidiary institutions. The indictments cover false pretenses, receiving deposits when the bank was known to be insolvent, and misrepresentation of assets.

METHODIST MERGER.—Thomas Nicholson of New York, secretary of the board of education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, addressing Methodist ministers at Evanston, Illinois, the 17th, urged the merging of the Methodist Episcopal Church with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Nicholson believes "that a unification of the churches would double the strength, and in no way would it interfere with the work."

PARLIAMENT OPENS.—The British Parliament opened the 15th. Announcements were made at this session that a general conference of the allies was to be held in Paris, to consider political and strategic aspects of the war; that the Government was taking stock of munitions, men, finances, and industrial reserves, with a view to maximum strength; that to prosecute the war is costing England approximately twenty-four million dollars a day.

"LUSITANIA" CASE.—An informal agreement for adjustment of differences in the Lusitania case has been held up, final settlement being contingent upon future Teutonic submarine policy, especially in connection with recent announcement of Germany and Austria that armed merchantmen will be sunk on sight after February 29. In the tentative agreement Germany is said to have yielded to the contention of the United States in the matter of stoppage, search, and safety to passengers. The Washington Government has notified Germany that the new policy to sink defensively armed merchant ships without warning is inconsistent with assurances given in the Lusitania agreement, which case is consequently continued.

PRESIDENTIAL NOMINEES.—Woodrow Wilson formally entered the race to succeed himself as president of the United States, when on the fourteenth he wrote to the Ohio secretary of state: "In order, therefore, to satisfy the technical requirements of the statutes of the State of Ohio, I hereby consent to the use of my name," on the primary ballot. The name of Mr. Wilson was on the 15th entered on the Illinois primary ballot. Among those more prominently mentioned for a fusion candidate to unite the Republican party by bringing back to its ranks the Progressives, are A. B. Cummins, Justice Hughes, and Theodore Roosevelt. Cummins is an open candidate; Hughes declines to consent to the use of his name; Roosevelt is noncommittal, but considered willing to enter the race.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Preparations are said to be under way to meet possible Villa invasion in southern Sonora. Secretary Lansing announces that order along the international border is being restored. In data submitted to the Senate the 17th, it was stated, in a letter from Secretary Lansing, that during the years 1913, 1914, 1915, there were killed in Mexico, 76 American citizens, as against 47 in the three years preceding, and that 26 American civilians and 16 soldiers were killed on American soil in the past three years, as a result of Mexican troubles. Those killed in Mexico in the three years just past from causes attributable to the revolution are 18; disappeared and probably killed from revolutionary causes, 6; by robbers, 10; by Indians for robbery and revenge, 12; miscellaneous and indefinite causes, 30.

ARMED MERCHANTMEN.—The allies have not yet responded to the proposal of the United States to disarm merchantmen. German and Austrian announcement of intention to sink such vessels without warning after the 29th, stands as made. Sweden has notified the United States that it would recognize the act of Germany in declaring armed merchant ships auxiliary cruisers and subject to attack. Representatives abroad have been notified that the position of the United States is that these vessels have the right to carry defensive armament, armed and unarmed vessels being held to be in the same class. At no time has the United States receded from this position. The proposal of the United States to disarm merchantmen was made in the interests of non-combatants, to become operative during this war only on acceptance by the allies, and on condition of Teutonic guarantee of stoppage, search, and safety to passengers.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Germans have made in the Champagne region and in the Vosges the most substantial gains realized for some time. Austria reports slight gains over the Italians. Russian activities in Galicia and elsewhere in the east are reported subsiding. On the north of this line the Germans have failed in efforts to advance. In their campaign in the Caucasus, the Russians have captured Erzerum, chief city of Turkish Armenia, the center of important roads, and of great strategical importance. Russian victory here it is thought will relieve the British at Kut El Amara, Mesopotamia, and below that point on the Tigris. The Bulgarians report that they occupy one third of Albania. Durazzo yet withstands the Austrians. Bulgaria hesitates to attack the allies at Saloniki, partially, it is thought, from fear of the Rumanian army, the mobilization of which is said to be completed. The situation of the British forces in Mesopotamia has improved. Indian troops formerly in service on the Flanders front have joined the British relief army. The French and British forces have completed the conquest of Kamerun, the important German colony in western equatorial Africa. An aggressive campaign is being pushed in German east Africa, the only important German colony not in the hands of the allies. The Arethusa, described as the most popular ship of the British navy, has been seriously damaged by striking a mine in the North Sea. Under the compulsory service provision going into effect the 10th, Great Britain has called to the colors all single men not exempted.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

FRY HOME.—Elder Charles Fry, editor of Zion's Ensign, has returned safely to America. He writes from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, under date of the 16th, as follows:

I am glad to report that I am safely returned to Joseph's land, having reached New York yesterday after a ten days' rough voyage from Liverpool. A few days were spent with Brother Roderick May and family in London on my return, where I found him diligently engaged in building up the work. My visit to my aged mother was opportune, as since leaving her the light of this world has been shut out from her eyes by blindness. It has also been highly profitable.

CONCERNING ZION--PART 2

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

THE PURPOSE OF ZION

It has been decreed by the Lord that, "Zion cannot be built up except by the laws of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself." Here we have a thought worthy our consideration. Notice the expression in paraphrase: Build up by law. What kind of a law? Celestial law, most certainly; the law that is able to transform the life of man into the likeness of God.

It is the purpose of Zion then, to fit men to dwell with God. Zion is a preparatory state, a school, a developer of life, that shall tend to fit men for a dwelling place with God, the highest of all.

It is utterly impossible for a man to jump from sin to purity of heart in a single bound. He cannot reach a kingdom of bliss when he dies if he has been content to live in the lower and baser regions of life all his days on the earth. Zion therefore is a necessity, both as a place and a condition where a knowledge of God and of good can be acquired and worked out for the blessing of our fellow men. Its purpose then, is to make men, not parasites.

By the assistance of Zion, then,—first, by the Spirit of it which makes the heart pure; and, second, by the place where pure laws and noble lives work together, man is brought Godward. I cannot approach unto Zion and yet retain my selfish, carping prejudices and traditions. The very elementary spirit of Zion will cause me to eliminate those things, and grow in the stead thereof the ennobling virtues of life which are revealed in the loving service I am ready and willing to render unto others.

Zion does not consist of selfish gratifications. But it does consist in the possessing of the Spirit of Christ that will enable us to lift others as well as ourselves to a condition that is Godlike in character and service.

Zion means work. Its fundamental purpose is to teach men the law of service to others. Ruskin has said:

If you want knowledge you must toil for it; if food, you must toil for it; and if pleasure, you must toil for it. Toil is the law. Pleasure comes through toil, and not by self-indulgence and indolence. When one gets to love work, his life is a happy one.

So it is also with Zion: if we want Zion we must toil for it; Zion means service rendered, and not a siesta. When we get to really love Zion well enough to work for its upbuilding, we will find that our lives will take on a new joy and satisfaction, such as we have never before realized or known. As expressed by Ralph Waldo Trine:

He who, forgetting self, makes the object of his life service, helpfulness and kindness to others, finds his whole nature growing and expanding, himself becoming large-hearted, magnanimous, kind, sympathetic, joyous and happy; his life becoming rich and beautiful.

So by the inter development will the fruits of righteousness (right-ness) be caused to ripen in our daily lives, and we will be able to feed the perishing multitudes with the bread of life.

Zion, then, has a purpose for its establishment, and that purpose is not for the maintaining of selfish whims and desires, but quite the opposite. Its real purpose is to teach men to become useful in life, that we might make the world a fitter place in which to live.

George Eliot asks: "What do we live for if not to make the world less difficult for each other?" Zion is for this purpose, and it is required of you and me to make it this. God will do his part at all times, but he will never do it all. He wants us to share in the work preparatory to Zion, that we may also share in the glory that shall accrue from a loving service.

"Let us have faith," says Abraham Lincoln, "that right makes might, and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it."

Paul says: "We are laborers together with God." This suggests at least two things, viz: effort and achievement. Man is made for service, and service to others is only the prelude to life. Living means the doing of things. Phillips Brooks has said:

Set yourself earnestly to see what you were made to do, and then set yourself earnestly to do it; and the loftier your purpose is the more sure you will be to make the world richer with every enrichment of yourself.

We as Saints were made, converted, and enlightened to be a glory unto God, and a blessing unto mankind; are we doing it? Are we filling the measure of our creation? If not, why not? We cannot benefit others without at the same time receiving benefit ourselves. We cannot make ourselves better without also contributing to the betterment of the world at large.

It is somewhere written that: "A man is commonly either made or marred for life by the use which he makes of his leisure time." Zion can admit of no idlers, no talebearers, and no self-centered people. If we can once awaken to the fact that the purpose of Zion is to make men energetic, thrifty, industrious, helpful, frugal, and optimistic, we might be able to sense the meaning of the prophet's words that say: The inhabitants of Zion shall labor for Zion, for if they labor for money they will perish.

Brother, sister, what are you making of your leisure time? Are you utilizing it properly, or are you wasting it? It is good for us to have a little leisure time, but we should never have a moment of idle time. During our leisure moments we can methodically plan, contemplate, and arrange our future work. We can review, and reflect upon that which we have acquired in the past, so as to be better able to utilize it in the service we render the church and the world of humanity.

The supreme purpose of Zion is to bring peace to earth, and establish a spirit of good will among men. He who is working to that end is the one who is laboring for Zion, and he will accomplish his purpose, not by condemning others, but by overcoming and subduing himself. He who is schooled in the spirit of loving, self-sacrificing service, is the one who will become the world's greatest benefactor. We learn that we may become the more useful. We live that the world might be enriched by our lives.

Ruskin says:

The entire object of true education is to make people not merely do the right things, but enjoy them—not merely industrious, but to love industry—not merely learned, but to love knowledge—not merely pure, but to love purity—not merely just, but to hunger and thirst after justice.

Let men therefore educate themselves to become useful—not simply because it is a duty, but because they have cultivated a profound love for mankind. Let them love virtue and purity, and the purpose of Zion will be fulfilled in their lives.

The very thought of Zion should stimulate our lives to action. I can conceive of no other way whereby Zion can become a reality unto us, than in and through the law of service. Before we can redeem Zion we must redeem man, i. e., we must regenerate the lives of men. We need men and women with pure hearts, noble lives, high ideals, virtuous thoughts, industrious hands, frugal habits, and determined purposes, before Zion can ever become a reality. I must learn that I have no right to lavish and squander on myself that which is necessary for the comfort or blessing of others.

It is Zion's purpose to prepare a people for the carrying on of business pursuits in keeping with the law of God. That is, the children of Zion must do business as Christ himself would do it if he were here in person. We must do business upon the principles of right-ness, and not for the sake of pecuniary gain. It is required of us to be in the world, but not of the world.

Zion, then, is to be the salt of the earth, and its purpose is to disinfect, preserve, and season the lives of men. Are you ready for that kind of service? If not, pray tell how shall Zion ever be redeemed, and wherein shall its beauty appear?

Let us pray as did the blind beggar: "Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me." And when we receive his recognition, let us, like the beggar further pray, "Lord, that my eyes might be opened."

My next will be, "The foundation of the city of Zion."

REFLECTIONS--NUMBER 8

BY W. E. PEAK

SUPERANNUATION

A few hard killing frosts visited western Pennsylvania this fall, then nature emerged into that mild, pleasant condition known as Indian summer, which permits the leaves and vegetation to gradually ripen and display all the tints that can be produced by a combination of the various colors of the rainbow, clothing these rugged hills and narrow valleys with that wonderful beauty which nothing but nature can produce.

Pittsburgh is on the western slope and among the foothills of the Allegheny Mountains, which stretch themselves across the State, raising their shaggy heads far above the surrounding country.

My first mission was in Pennsylvania in the Wyoming Valley District, on the eastern side of these mountains, along the Lackawana and Susquehanna rivers. That was many years ago. And if in the spring I should be permitted to glide out of the rough and stormy sea of missionary life into the quiet and peaceful harbor of superannuation, it will be a fitting close to my missionary work. To begin work on the eastern side of these mountains and to close it on the western side: So may it be.

Not that I desire or expect to stop preaching. No, I am in the ministry for life; but I would like to step out from under the responsibility of active missionary work and spend the rest of my days at home, preaching according to the demands and opportunities that may be found for one who has spent thirty years in the active ministry.

I believe that under these conditions the request should be granted; and I think I could do more good by laboring in Zion during the next fifteen years, than I have done during that length of time in the past.

It surely would be a pleasant experience to realize for once in my life, that I am permanently settled.

STANDING MINISTERS

In the church we have certain officers designated as standing ministers. These are the high priests, elders, priests, teachers and deacons (Doctrine and Covenants 122:7).

The special duty of these standing ministers, called also "local authorities" (Doctrine and Covenants 120:7), is to preside over districts and branches (Doctrine and Covenants 122:8), "having the watchcare of the membership and nurturing and sustaining them, under the direction and instruction of the Presidency and the Twelve."

The Seventy when traveling by the voice of the church, or sent by the Twelve to minister the word where the Twelve cannot go, are in the power of their ministration apostles. —Doctrine and Covenants 129: 3.

The watchcare of the membership rests on the Twelve and Seventy where there is no branch or district organization. In meetings in unorganized territory the presiding councils or quorums of the church take precedence according to rank, the Presidency, Twelve and Seventy (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3; 122: 9).

When branches and districts are organized they relieve the Twelve and Seventy of the burden of caring for the membership. These local authorities, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, are called and ordained for this special work, and these officers are "to relieve the Twelve and Seventy from the vexation and anxiety of looking after local organizations when effected."

The Twelve and Seventy are "the missionary quorums of the church," and they should leave "the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible" (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7).

This shows that these traveling presiding councils, these regulating advising authorities of the church (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 4), the Twelve and Seventy (Doctrine and Covenants 123: 13), are to place the responsibility on these local authorities, the standing ministers, to care for the branches and districts "so far as possible." But they still retain control—an active oversight.

These regulating advising authorities are not to abandon or leave the organizations. They are to permit and to insist that the standing ministers should attend to the work of caring for the membership, "so far as possible."

When the standing ministers fail to do the work required, the traveling councils, the Twelve and Seventy, are to "regulate them as required by their office and duty; and this that the work and church may not be put to shame and the preaching of the word be hindered" (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 7). The Lord saw that some local officers would try to hinder the preaching of the missionaries, and this was to be regulated by the Twelve and Seventy.

These men must be in charge of these organizations or they could not regulate as required by their office. This verse explains the first verse and enables us to understand it, and also the seventh verse in the next revelation. They all harmonize.

The traveling presiding councils, are not to be cast out of the organizations as unnecessary officers, and prohibited from regulating all the affairs of the church, according to their office and duty, as though they were no longer needed after a branch or district is organized. They should be considered the directing, regulating and advising authorities of the church, representing it abroad. And when they are in these organizations of either district or branch they should be regarded and considered as the leading representative authorities of the church, and be respected as such, and their counsel and advice be sought and respected when given.

They have the right in these branches and districts to make decisions "in cases of conflict or extremity," which they could not do if they were not in charge, but were simply visiting. This right is clearly presented, as the following shows: "Their decision should be listened to and regarded, subject to the appeal and adjudication provided for in the law" (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 4).

When branches and districts have cases of difficulty of long standing, or when the law and usages of the church are involved, the traveling councils are to proceed and "regulate them as required by their office." This revelation takes no branch or district from under the control of the missionary quorums. No provision is made to except a single one. All these organizations are subject to the regulating authority of the Twelve and Seventy.

To do this they must be kept in charge of these organizations and proceed, the Twelve to do their work under the directions of the Presidency, and the Seventy under the direction of the Twelve. These two quorums are very intimately associated and should work together.

When a district is organized, the missionary work should not cease in the territory included in that district. The branches are bases for missionary operation, and if the members are living their religion their influence goes out for good.

The missionaries who have labored to get enough members to form a branch have now a nucleus from which they can extend their work more successfully; and the missionary work should continue in the branch and around about till wisdom directs that they go elsewhere. And this is to be decided by the missionary quorums.

Is there a district or stake in the church that does not need missionary work? If so the Twelve and Seventy are not needed in that district, for missionary purposes. But so long as missionary work is needed it is safer to leave it under the care of "the missionary quorums of the church."

The First Presidency is a missionary quorum in the sense that they "have a right to officiate in all the offices in the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 4; 122: 9). In this way they can officiate in any office that conditions demand, even that of deacon. So it is with the Twelve. And if the Seventy do not release their unqualified members from their quorum, the Twelve should have the right to drop them from the missionary force.

The rights of a missionary in a branch and district should be clearly defined. When a branch is living according to the principles of the gospel, it creates the best opportunity for missionary work of any place in the district.

The church supports the missionary and sends him into a district to labor. Is it wise then, to give the president of a branch, the members of which by their faithfulness have created a fine field for missionary work, authority to say to that missionary, "You cannot labor in this district wherein you can do the most good"?

Is it right for the district president to say to the missionaries supported by the church, "You can do missionary work in sectarian churches, but not in Latter Day Saint churches"?

The missionary should be located in one of the branches and become a member of it. Then he is one of them, and has as much right to his say as any elder in it. It is seldom wise for the missionary to become the branch or district president, unless it is absolutely necessary. Let the local men do this work. It will help them, and relieve the missionary of this burden.

It is an easy matter for the missionary to work with the local officers as a rule, if he is one of them. The missionary can then extend his missionary work as the law requires, till the world is warned.

In the city of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and vicinity, we have over seven hundred thousand people. A missionary located here could labor in the branch as demand requires, and find work to extend his missionary efforts till the gospel is taken from the Gentiles, and the elders shall turn unto the Jews. Even then the missionary will find work here, as there are hundreds of Jews in this city.

The statements requiring the Twelve and Seventy to push the missionary work with greater vigor, and to leave the burden of care in organized districts or conferences to the standing ministry, under the Presidency of the church, do not mean that when one of these officers sees a Latter Day Saint church he should run from it, as a wolf would from a hunter, or that he should be prohibited from entering and preaching in it. They mean that he should make a special effort to convert the people who live in the vicinity of the church first, and then farther away, thus enlarging the circle "until the world is warned," leaving the local work of caring for the members of the branch and district to be done by the local officers "so far as possible."

The Twelve and Seventy, "taking cognizance of those (cases) only in which the law and usages of the church are involved, and the general interest of the church are concerned, and in "cases of difficulty of long standing" (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 7), the local officers have failed to settle. Then these officers are to regulate the branch or district as required by their office and duty. They should only leave their missionary work to regulate local affairs when these officers have gone as far as possible, and yet failed to remove the difficulty. This verse shows that these quorums retain the supervision over the branches and districts.

"In these matters there is no conflict in the law," and personally I have had no difficulty. When I came to Pittsburgh last spring the presidency of the branch was offered to me. I refused the position, as the one who occupied was worthy and well qualified. I have insisted that the local officers attend to all local affairs of the branch. This they have done splendidly. The Lord has blessed them in their work, wisdom has been displayed, and I have never labored among a finer class of Saints.

The secret of success in the church is to let each one do the work the Lord wants him to do. Let each one do his own work unmolested.

Zion will triumph, the pure in heart will rise and shine, their homes will become holy places, in which they stand, and the judgments of God will pass by them, as they did the faithful Israelites who properly sprinkled their doorposts. It was not necessary for them to be out of the country where the judgments were sent, but it was necessary for each one to make his dwelling a holy place, by doing as the Lord required.

That is the only way you and I can "stand in holy places." We must make the place where we stand holy by righteousness or we cannot escape the plagues. "And upon my house (the church) shall it begin, and from my house shall it go forth" (Doctrine and Covenants 105: 10).

The plagues and the protection will reach Independence, Missouri, and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, just the same. Our individual condition will determine our fate, not the location of our homes.

AUTHORITY OF THE PRIESTS

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself.—Luke 10: 27.

And no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love.—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

No power or influence can, or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness, by meekness, and by love unfeigned.—Joseph Smith, in Times and Seasons, vol. 1, pp. 131, 132.

As ambassadors of the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, the priesthood carries the very serious responsibility of being wise servants, yet harmless as doves. Nowhere is the problem more difficult of solution than in our association with each other, and our work among the Saints in branches and districts.

To us comes the problem of acting as ambassadors of a kingdom not founded on force, and one where our activities are to be limited principally by our ability to make our work acceptable to the ones whom we seek to serve.

The question of whose right it is to preside, or what are my rights in the church as a member of the priesthood, is one that has caused some discussion and difference of opinion.

When the Master declared, "Whosoever shall be chief among you, let him be your servant," he indicated the fact that the extent of our greatness or authority in the church must be the measure of our ability to make our services acceptable to the body unto whom we are made a minister.

A servant can never be a dictator; he may do only that which his master desires. If he exceeds this limit of action, he soon becomes unacceptable and hears the dictum, Thou mayest be no longer a steward.

It may be just here that some will say, My stewardship is from God. We answer: True, but, secondarily, your stewardship is from the body of Christ, into whose hands is given the right to approve or disapprove of every man in his ministry.

When the Master declared that "no one can assist in this work except he be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care," and that "faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God" qualifies him for the work, he left no room for jealous self-assertion among his ministers.

Is it possible that one will withdraw from active participation in the work because the Saints choose another to do what his priesthood has placed within the scope of his possible activities? Is my eye single to the glory of God if I do this? Should I not rather study to make my work so effective, either as one of the chief shepherds, or as a humble helper, that the body will desire my ministrations because of the service rendered?

I remember once when a controversy was being had over certain priestly rights or authority, hearing a certain man declare, "I never play second fiddle." I could not help thinking how glad one should be to play second, if only he could do it creditably in this great work; and I wondered if that statement would ever have been made had this man's eye been "single to the glory of God."

If there is a spirit with the priesthood which causes them to strive for place or position, or to sulk if denied a prominent place in the work, there certainly will be a sad lack of spiritual force and power needed to lead men unto salvation.

We should never forget that "a deacon may preside," if chosen by the body; and that if any man preside in any case, it is always by that same choice, and not by any inherent right or authority.

If we cannot make our services of such character and import that they are desired by the body, we can have no authority over them, unless in case of violation of moral law. And if a deacon, teacher, or priest can serve more acceptably than an elder, the elder should be glad to hold up the hands of either, rejoicing that the work is done, even though he may have to "play second fiddle" that it may be well done. This principle carries in all departments of this work.

As a fitting close to this discussion we quote at length from the epistle of Joseph Smith, already referred to in this article.

There are many to be called, but few are chosen; and why are they not chosen? Because their hearts are set upon the things of the world and are aspiring to the honors of men; they do not learn the lesson that the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven; and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled or handled, only upon principles of righteousness; that they may be conferred upon us, it is true, but when we undertake to cover our sins, to gratify our pride, vain ambition, or to exercise dominion or compulsion over the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold the heavens withdraw themselves, the Spirit of the Lord is grieved, then amen to the priesthood, or to the authority of that man; behold ere he is aware, he is left to kick against the pricks; to persecute the Saints, and to fight against God. We have learned by sad experience, that it is the nature and disposition of almost all men, as soon as they get a little authority, as they suppose, to begin to exercise unrighteous dominion, hence many are called but few are chosen. No power or influence can, or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness, by meekness, and by love unfeigned; without hypocrisy, and without guile: reproving with sharpness when moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and afterwards showing forth an increase of love towards him whom thou hast reproved, lest he esteem thee to be his enemy, so that he may know that thy faithfulness is stronger than the cords of death. Let the soul be full of charity towards all men, and virtue guard thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God, and the doctrines of the priesthood shall distill upon thy soul, as the dew from heaven; thy scepter shall be an unchanging scepter of righteousness, the Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, the ends of the earth shall inquire after thy name.

A. M. CHASE.

There are hovels so radiant and redolent with a high and beautiful life that we count them courts of the immortals. There was conventional high life, I presume, in Sodom; but the only variety which the angels recognized was found in Lot's tent, at the gate of the city; and, for the rest, the flames disposed of it. There was a good deal of nominal high life, without doubt, among the antediluvians; but there was only one family that was high enough to keep its head above water.—Plain Talks.

MUSIC AND SONG

"Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," and the pen writeth at times, and it may be this time to the revelation of ignorance on the writer's part.

The music question is one that has its place in his mind and heart, and as music, according to past history and present revelation, is an important part of the service of the Lord, why should it not have room in the hearts and heads of those who are engaged in the work of the Lord, and know that the success of the work is dependent somewhat upon the musical part?

The command, "Let the young men and maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song," is to the end that light and truth may be disseminated by these gifts, and that the Giver of them may be praised in singleness of heart; but God may or may not be in the service of song. If pride and fashion of this world be too much in evidence, the spiritual part which makes this service profitable, as it does the preaching, will be lacking. It will be a dead form, and the time occupied by it will be wasted. The hireling singer cannot impart spirituality any more than the hireling preacher. The devotee of Parisian fashion, loving show and admiration, would drive God out and handicap the preaching, rather than bring God and his Spirit to the people.

There are not only fashions of this world in dress which it is desirable to depart from, rather than conform to, but fashions in music, fashions in eating, drinking, etc. We should set the pace or form the fashion in gospel music as in gospel preaching, so that the service of song shall be distinctly spiritual rather than worldly, or simply churchly. For instance, the anthem: The editor of the Autumn Leaves set this out well in one number, from which we quote:

He hears the sound of many voices in a bewildering medley of utterances. There is an abrupt pause; then a soprano voice runs lightly up the ladder, "I shall not be dismayed." Instantly a heavy male voice runs down cellar and bellows, "I shall not be dismayed." "Then suddenly all break forth, "I shall—I shall not—I shall not be—I shall not be dismayed—dismayed—dismayed—dismayed—I shall not be dismay-ed!"

That is an anthem. And we would add, it is fashion—in music—and it needs to be regenerated.

Pyrotechnics or gymnastics in instrumental performances and in "upper attics" show off the composer and the performer to great advantage and applause. The words of the song need not be understood, the scenic efforts delight and feast the flesh; but is the heart satisfied, is the soul drawn out toward God and his love and truth? In mere entertainment we do not expect this; in true worship we should—and true worship should be the aim of all who worship. "They that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (John 4: 24). The expression of truth is lacking, if unintelligible to the hearer.

In the "upper attic" and acrobatic strains, the enunciation, the distinct wording is sacrificed—the singer cannot do justice to music and words. All so-called "singing evangelists" distinctly enunciate. They know enough to know that they cannot "reach the people" with operatic airs and indistinct wording. The beauty of their singing is largely in its simplicity and comprehensibility. The aim is to reach the heart.

A few years ago we legislated out the Saints' Harmony and Harp, I believe. Doubtless a small book like the Hymnal as first issued was needed, but we have found it too small for all the demands of the church. May we not need yet to go back to the Harmony in a less bulky or somewhat changed form, to get the proper selection of music for all occasions and places? I want to give the Saint's Harp the proper credit for its part in my conversion. When I opened it and saw the different subject headings and all the principles and doctrines in verse, I said, "They have got it all, there is nothing left out." I had not then heard a sermon. Yet we have done away with this full and systematic collection. Is there not in it sufficient for all demands without going far outside of it? Or have we, as Brigham Young said of the books, Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, "outgrown them [it] as a boy outgrows his jacket"?

Recently we listened to a most inspiring solo at the Saints' church in Independence. The selection was, "A calm and gentle quiet reigns to-night," with tune and chorus new to us. The hymn itself is divine; the singing of it was not less so perhaps, because so plain, so unostentatious, so without explosiveness or effort. It was quality rather than quantity, but the volume of tone was sufficient—just right. If the singer was not inspired we know the hymn is, and I was somewhat at least by the singing of it. If the preacher did not reach me with his good sermon, the solo did.

Some may be sorry who read this production on music. The solo which we heard is responsible. We have no fault to find with classical, operatic, or instrumental performance in their place. We like the classical in music,—whether Beethoven, Mozart or Wagner,—but deliver us from the imitations. Some go beyond their depth. Beginner preachers have to be reminded sometimes that "Small boats should keep near the shore."

The gospel and its truths get drowned when in song they are subordinated to display. Let us have simplicity and humility in song service, and let not our gospel hymns be relegated to the rear in solo or chorus work, or distinctness of wording in any hymn be sacrificed to tune effect. The singing of hymns without this plainness of enunciation, or when the "air" swallows up the words, or they get lost in it and do not come back, is as unedifying as the gift of tongues without interpretation. The singing is in fact an unknown tongue to the hearer. What is the sermon, or what is the song, if not understood and inspired? It is much if understood, as the solo we have mentioned proved.

May God bless the singers and musicians of his people, that their gifts may contribute to the salvation of men and to the praise, honor and glory of him who is the source of all good. M. F. GOWELL.

JUDGE NOT UNRIGHTEOUSLY

There are some who think it improper to judge at all, but it is not. True, the King James Translation says in one place that we should not judge, but shortly it says that we shall be judged with the same judgment that we exercise toward others: thus showing that we should be careful in our judgment. The Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures renders it thus: Judge not unrighteously.

To judge righteously is to render a verdict in our own mind according to the evidence presented on the acts of individuals, or on various propositions presented to us, for our consideration. In the home, the husband and wife should conjointly (so far as possible) use their best judgment as to the best method of using economy, the proper way to rear their children, and so on. If improper judgment is rendered, then the whole family suffers.

The trouble in some cases is that the father thinks his judgment alone is sufficient, without consulting the wife; and vice versa. While it is true he should be recognized as head of the house, it is nevertheless true that the counsel of the wife should be sought, as in very many instances it is better than that of the father.

We should not, however, judge the motives of individuals, but should judge their acts and words only. The judgment of some is very weak, we sometimes say. Yes, perhaps they have labored under the conclusion or delusion that they should not judge at all; hence they need our pity.

In church matters for instance, if we were not permitted to judge, then if sprinkling were presented as baptism, we must accept it. If one says we need no church organization, we must accept that statement too, and that without question. When at the branch business meeting or district or General Conference, various propositions are presented for the vote of the assembly. It is eminently proper to judge righteously, that the work suffer not. Of course, in such cases, both sides of the proposition should be discussed before judgment is rendered.

The trouble with some is they have very strong convictions as to how judgment should be rendered at a business meeting, but not enough courage to let their voices be heard on the floor in their vindication. We should have the courage of our convictions, and vote and act accordingly. Discussion is necessary in such cases, and differences of opinion should be presented in a plain but friendly manner, that even the young and the timid in the assembly may render a proper verdict and vote accordingly. Even children should be taught to use their best judgment, and when asked to go to a picture show, or play a game of cards, or other improper games, they should have the courage to say no.

In 1 Corinthians 6:2 Paul upbraids the saints for not being able to judge in small matters, telling them they were to judge the world. It is high time we as Saints use good judgment in church propositions, and stand by the standard books of the church. In doing so the church will prosper and we shall be a happy people, while Zion shall arise and shine in the perfection of her beauty. C. J. SPURLOCK.

WAR'S REFUGEES

[The horrors of war cannot be imagined by those who do not come under its devastating and deadly hand. The following appearing in The Outlook for January 19, and from the pen of Gregory Mason, an eyewitness of the suffering in Poland incident to the retreat of the Russian army from before the formidable attack of the Germans, suggests something of the terrible suffering of many thousands of people of all classes, on other fronts as well as on that of Russia, in the present European conflict. May God hasten the day of universal peace, to be ushered in at the appearing of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.—EDITORS.]

Near Moscow, on a siding of the railway that runs from Moscow to Warsaw through Smolensk, was a string of thirteen freight cars, the short, chunky, Russian kind—barely half as long as the American—looking as flimsy, top-heavy, and unwieldy as houseboats on wheels. No locomotive was tied to the string, and from the windward side, where the cars were whitewashed by the biting blizzard that had already stopped all traffic with its drifted barricades; they had the desolate look of stranded empties. But the leeward door of each car was open a few inches, permitting the egress of odors that told anyone who chanced to pass that the big rolling boxes were loaded with human freight, closely packed and long on the journey.

I pushed the door of one car back and looked in. At first in the semigloom nothing was visible, but gradually, against a crack in the opposite car wall that let through a streak of gray light with a ribbon of snow that rustled as it fell on the straw-covered floor, there grew the dull silhouette of two old women, who sat facing each other in the straw, laboriously pounding corn into flour in a big earthen bowl between them.

The young Pole who was with me climbed into the car and probed its recesses with a spear of light from a pocket flash-lamp. The old women stopped pounding to lift toward us wrinkled faces that expressed fear and hate when the tiny searchlight was turned on their dim, blinking eyes. Another pair of hags in a far corner, propped against a bale of hay and bound together like Siamese twins in a brown horse blanket, moved their eyes feebly, but nothing more. They were paralyzed. A score of children that had been huddled here and there in the straw in twos and threes for warmth's sake, came slowly to life and crowded around us, lifting a ring of wan, emaciated little faces. Three, too feeble to stand, sat up and stared at the strange light. The bodies of four small babies moved not at all—were, in fact, lifeless.

These people were refugees from a rural part of Poland, made homeless by the Russian military decree which ordered the destruction of all buildings and the removal of all civilians from the rearward path of the Muscovite army as it fell back before the battering attacks of the Germans from Warsaw to Dvinsk.

For ten days these four old women and twenty-seven children had been in that car, with no fire, few warm clothes, and only a little dried meat, corn flour, and water to sustain life in them. This the meager fare had failed to do in the case of the four youngest. Since they had been herded into that cold box, like cattle, by soldiers at the station to which they had been driven, or walked from their blazing homes, they had been moved eastward daily in the joggling car, which traveled slowly and by fits and starts, unvisited by anyone, not knowing of their destination, and now too low in mind and body to care.

The two old creatures who were paralyzed when they had been dumped into the car were now apparently dying; several of the children swayed with weakness as they stood, clutching at the biscuits and sweet chocolate which we drew from our pockets. Five of them were grandchildren of one of the paralytics, three designated one of the wrinkled flour-makers by the Polish equivalent of "granny," but none of the others knew where their parents were, and six of them had forgotten their own family names or had never known them.

The other twelve cars were like this one, except that all of them had at least two or three—and usually six or seven—feeble, crackly-voiced old men with their complement of women and children, and one contained three young fellows of twenty who had probably smuggled themselves into the car and who cringed when my Polish interpreter lunged on them with his rapier of light, and retreated into a corner where two cows stood with necks crossed in affection. These youths knew they had no business in that car, for even in the chaos of retreat the word had been passed among the civilian refugees: "Women, children, and old men first in the cars; young men can walk."

But there have not been enough cars even for the weak, the very young, and the very aged, and thousands, perhaps tens of thousands, have found their graves along the slushy, muddy roads they were following toward Petrograd and Moscow from the occupied provinces of Poland and the Baltic. These people in the freight cars at least had had transportation and a crude kind of shelter. But of the two million refugees who are overcrowding Moscow and Petrograd, to the great detriment of the health average of the two Russian capitals, many thousands came there several hundred weary miles on foot. And others, less determined or weaker, are still straggling in or are lingering by the way, some of the latter dying and some finding shelter in small towns between the twin big cities and the front.

Some estimates place the number of Russian refugees at from ten to fifteen million; thirteen million is the estimate of the Tatiana Committee, one of the most influential relief organizations in Russia, named after the second daughter of the Czar, who is its honorary head. By race the refugees are principally Poles, Jews, Letts, and Lithuanians, but they come from all ranks and stations of life, rich and poor alike, now all poor, thrown from their homes with nothing but the clothes on their bodies by the grim chances of war.

In times of peace and prosperity the sudden impoverishment of such a large mass of people would tax the relief and charity of Russia to the limit; but now, when all food prices are from one hundred to three hundred per cent higher than before the war—when even the well-to-do have difficulty to get enough bread, sugar, and coal—it is inevitable that thousands of these homeless ones should starve and freeze to death. Thousands have already suffered this fate, but hundreds of thousands, perhaps a million or more, will die this way before spring, unless relief comes quickly and bountifully from abroad, for Russia cannot cope with the emergency alone. Unless Russia's allies or neutrals begin at once to pour into Russia a stream of food to fill the stomachs of these hungry, homeless ones, this will be the bitterest winter in Russian history, a winter whose horrors will far transcend the terrible winter of 1812, when Napoleon ravished Poland and sacked Moscow.

PRAYER IN BRITISH FAMILIES

The Christian Evangelist sees three new tendencies in the religious life of England and Scotland, attributed to the present war. The Evangelist says:

One is a popular wave of enthusiasm for family prayer. Another is better observance of Sunday as the day of rest. And the third is such measure of cooperation between the Anglican and Free Churches as was not dreamed possible one year ago.

The Evangelist sees also in the revival of family worship a movement of national proportions, which may spread to this country:

A great meeting was recently held in London, attended by Free- and Established-Church men in about equal numbers, and having for chairman a Free-Church layman, and for principal speaker the Archbishop of Canterbury. The subject was family worship, and the Archbishop pointed out that England on her knees at home can accomplish more, perhaps, than England fighting in or out of trenches abroad. It is reported that a national movement has sprung up in the churches of England and Scotland in favor of family prayers in the homes. It is said that Free- and Established-Church people are interested in about equal numbers, and that teachers are setting out to the provinces to talk in its favor.

The truth that through afflictions oftentimes come our greatest blessings is evident in the above paragraph, especially as regards England and Scotland. That this war will have a world-wide effect of purifying and cleansing the religious life of mankind is clearly indicated in this and other like evidences of spiritual revival. Is there not a direct call to America in this to reestablish the family altar in its homes and to bring our people nearer the heart of the Father?

WAR AND RELIGION

Has the war had something of the same effect in encouraging the growth of a religious spirit in the United States which it has unquestionably had in some of the belligerent countries—notably in France, where a marked revival of religious faith is noted by all observers?

The question is pertinent in view of the figures given by the Federal Council of Churches, covering the growth of the various denominations in 1915. These show that the churches, irrespective of denomination, had the greatest growth in their history. Of the 100,000,000 Americans approximately 40,000,000 are listed as church members. When we recall that membership of Protestant churches seldom embraces the younger members of the family unless they have directly affiliated it becomes plain that the proportion of those under religious influence is many millions greater than the federation's total.

It would of course be impracticable to demonstrate just what part, if any, the natural reaction toward spiritual things produced by the spectacle of Europe has played in this apparent quickening of the religious consciousness of the people. However, it is entirely justifiable to draw from the federation's statistics the conclusion that the common assumption that religion is losing its hold on the great mass of the people has been grossly exaggerated.—Chicago Herald.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

Thanking Our Friends

We have good and cheering news for our friends, especially for those who have so nobly and generously responded to our call for means to pay off the debt of the institution. When we made this call we were feeling keenly the necessity of paying out means subscribed by friends, and needed by the children, to keep up interest on outstanding notes. We know that you will rejoice with us to know that there is now means enough in the hands of the Presiding Bishop donated for the home to pay every dollar of our indebtedness, and that we have decided to apply it for that purpose as soon as it comes into the hands of the treasurer of the Board.

This will leave us short on running expenses, or with but a small amount in hand. If now our many friends will come to the rescue and help us to obtain current expenses, it will place us in excellent condition financially, and every cent contributed will be used for the comfort of the children.

We cannot adequately express our pleasure in this desirable and longed-for condition; nor can we express our gratitude to those friends who have made this condition possible. Those who at the same time were contributing to current expenses are entitled to no less credit.

We feel sure that no institution ever established as an auxiliary to church extension ever had more or better friends. We look forward to a bright and prosperous future, when all who in any way shall have contributed to success will enjoy peace and satisfaction as a result of good accomplished.

Our Treasury Department

We have been kept busy the past few months closing up accounts and making out reports of various departments of church work. Among these accounts are those of the Children's Home. Doubtless you would all be interested in a complete report of the finances connected with the home. There is not enough space in this department to publish the long list of names of persons and their donations, along with the items of expenditures; besides, it would be expensive to do so. The report of the Board of Trustees to the next General Conference will include a comprehensive financial report which will be published for the benefit of the membership of the church as well.

We do, however, desire to report to you some of the footings of the accounts, which will furnish something of the material progress the institution has made during the past year. The same wholesome advice applies to the management of the Children's Home as applies to private homes, namely, "Keep within your means." And again, the sentiment has been expressed, "Had better not run at all than run in debt."

The supporters of the Children's Home sense the significance of the foregoing quotations, and no doubt expect the management of the institution to operate in a way to avoid the further accumulation of debt from year to year. We are pleased to report to you the fact that during the past year

THE HOME HAS NOT ACCUMULATED DEBT

The treasurer has received from all sources during the year ending December 31, 1915, the sum of $4,635.58. This amount does not include the offerings sent to the Presiding Bishop's office intended for the home, as that amount has not as yet been turned over to the home. There has been paid out in the interest of the institution for the same year the sum of $3,960.63. The net assets December 31, 1914, were $15,056.42. The net assets December 31, 1915, were $16,889.03. This shows a substantial gain over the previous year of $1,832.61.

Had it not been for the sacrificing and faithful support from the Saints and friends of the home in the matter of receipts, and a degree of economic and efficient management on the part of expenditures, no such gains would have been realized. There has been further development and advancement made in the direction of financial gains since the treasurer's books have closed up the year's work for 1915.

It has been the splendid hope of the board of management that in the near future the announcement could be made that

THE HOME IS FREE FROM DEBT

Less than ten months have passed since the treasurer, through this department, issued a call for contributors to lift the indebtedness of $2,500 against the real estate of the home. The Saints quickly and generously responded, so that up to the present there has been not only enough donated to lift the landed indebtedness, but to meet every other obligation as well. So as soon as the amount in the Presiding Bishop's office is turned over to the home the Children's Home debt stands paid.

We take this opportunity to express our appreciation to all who have contributed of their means, or have in loyal support used their influence for good in the direction of freeing the home of indebtedness, and add here the suggestion that our energies be now applied to meeting the regular

MONTHLY EXPENSE

The home pays its bills at the close of each month. We have a list of those who have offered to furnish regularly each month a contribution to meet the running expenses. The home needs more on this list who are willing to place aside certain amounts each month for this purpose. Send to this office for a supply of contribution cards to be handed to others to secure signatures of those who are willing to contribute regularly throughout the year.

STILL ANOTHER SUGGESTION

Most everyone likes strawberries. Children like strawberries, and should be taught how to raise and care for them, as well as how to do other farm work. The superintendent desires to set out a goodly number of the everbearing strawberries. He wants plants that are true to name, and of approved variety. We thought there might be those who have everbearing plants who would be willing to donate some to the home. If there are any such, please communicate to the undersigned at Lamoni, Iowa, stating particulars. Let us hear from you at once.

Concerning Clark Braden

Numerous times I have been asked, "What has become of Elder Clark Braden?"

The last time I met him in public debate, which was at Thayer, Missouri, he announced publicly that he would never meet the Reorganization in public debate again, upon church propositions. Afterwards, I saw a similar statement in the Helper, over his signature; this promise he kept, absolutely.

The debate at Thayer was my sixth debate with Elder Braden, and his last with the Reorganization. I made answer to one of his lectures at Miami, Kansas, afterwards, but he refused positively to be led into a debate. This constituted the third time I had made answer to his lectures against our people. After this Miami lecture, Elder Braden made his appearance once or twice in the East, attempted to lecture against the church, and was met by a circular letter of mine, inviting him to a public issue of our differences; but he then and there announced, "That is one of I. N. White's tricks"; pulled out for other fields, and from that time I have heard little or nothing of his work as a debater or lecturer.

In March, 1915, I wrote Elder Hill of the Christian Church, at Decatur, Illinois, saying:

"Dear Sir and Brother: Having heard that you know the post office address of Elder Clark Braden, I write you asking if you will be so kind as to send to me the address on the inclosed addressed card? I hold Elder Braden in the highest regards, though we have had to exchange thoughts in a public way a number of times. I have lost his address, and desire to write him on the most friendly terms. Thanking you in advance for the address, I am,

"Yours very truly,
"I. N. WHITE."

Elder Hill wrote me on the 31st, saying:

"Dear Sir and Brother: Your letter asking Brother Braden's address reached me in due time, and I hasten to reply. I think if you will address him at Carbon, California, you will reach him, O. K.

"Yours very truly,
"LEW D. HILL."

On April 23, I wrote as follows:

"Dear Sir: Just recently, I learned through Mr. L. D. Hill, of Decatur, Illinois, that you were still among the living, and that your post office address was Carbon, California. More than one year ago I heard you were dead, and though strange it may appear, I felt sad over the affair, as I held you in high esteem as a debater, much more honorable than many I have met in both your church and others. I am glad to learn you still hold a place as well as myself upon terra firma, and are among the living.

"There have been many important changes in the church I represent, since I met you last. President Joseph Smith died December 10, 1914; his son, Frederick M. Smith, succeeded him in the Presidency. A number of changes have taken place in the Quorum of the Twelve, caused by death and increasing infirmities of age and incapacity, caused by illness of body.

"My own work is mostly local by reason of a nervous breakdown. My wife and I visited California three years ago in order to get away from the care and worry usually found in church work. I would be pleased to have a short letter from you (if you are able to write at length) in regard to your health, and such other information as you desire to convey to me. I am not writing to invite 'controversy,' but from a pure motive of friendship. I trust the day of controversy has passed with us. We may never see alike, but we can go down to our graves friends.

"I close, and will patiently await your reply to my note.

Sincerely yours,

"I. N. WHITE."

To this I got the following reply from Carbon, California:

"Dear Sir: Replying to your letter of April 23, addressed to my father, I will say, first, that I desire to thank you for its kindly, tolerant tone, and, second, am pained to tell you that my father died March 6, 1915, at the age of eighty-four, and lies buried in Burney Cemetery, this State.

"During the six years which father spent in my home, he softened a good deal towards his former antagonists. I think he realized the futility of metaphysical jugglery, and came to believe that Socialism—the collective welfare of the race, material and spiritual—is all that is worth while. He died a Christian Socialist. He left a mass of anti-'Mormon' literature and manuscripts for which I have no earthly use.

"Hoping that your indisposition, of which you speak in your letter, will soon pass away,

"I am yours, etc.,

"LINCOLN BRADEN."

On May 10, I wrote Mr. Lincoln Braden:

"Dear Sir and Friend: Your kind answer to mine of April 23 came to hand the 8th inst. Indeed, I am sorry to hear of your father's death; was too bad that I did not write him a few months sooner, which would have reached him before his death. Your father had an eventful life, and died at a good old age. I trust and hope your great loss may be his peaceful gain.

"You speak of your father leaving a lot of anti-'Mormon' literature and manuscripts, etc., which you have no use for; probably the money value would not be much for either his or mine, since it might be called nothing but 'trash,' so far as a cash value is concerned when letting disinterested persons put a value upon it; but to me it is a relic that should be preserved, and not burned, as often is the case, after the death of the 'old folks.' Will you be so kind as to inform me more fully in regard to what disposition you are willing should be made of your father's literature, etc.? It is with reluctance that I ask you to burden yourself with anything of the kind, but you will pardon me for the deep respect I had for your father, though he was one of my most difficult opponents to meet in debate.

"Yours most truly,

"I. N. WHITE."

I failed to get an answer to this, and on June 21, 1915, I wrote,

"Dear Sir and Friend: On May 10 I addressed a note to you in regard to what disposition you were willing to make of the anti-'Mormon' literature your lamented father left with you; to date I have failed to get any word in regard to it. I may have asked too much of you; if so, I ask pardon. However, through your kindness I would be pleased to learn upon what terms you would part with the literature I refer to in the above note. Referring to yours of April 30, where you say your father died a Christian Socialist, greatly interests me. I would be pleased should you inform me when and under what influences came this change in his religious life. Also, if I am not burdening you too much, would be pleased to know more of your father's death—the disease, and his last testimony, sayings, etc. Thanking you in advance, I am,

"Sincerely and truly yours,

"I. N. WHITE."

To this I have so far failed to get an answer, though I inclosed a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

I have been somewhat lengthy in answering the question, "What has become of Elder Braden?" for two reasons: First, to show how I hold in respect a man who has been my bitterest opponent in debate, though it has been said that we were at swords' points during the time we were before the public. Second, because it has been frequently published and maintained by the Christian Church that Elder Braden has been the most adroit and best posted man that has ever met what they please to call "Mormonism." We want it understood that we have no disposition to burn or "hide away" Elder Braden's fame or literature in order to keep "the dead from speaking." It has been met, and we have prospered as a church at nearly every point where Elder Braden sought to oppose so-called "Mormonism," and defend so-called "Campbellism."

Peace to his ashes. Believing all men will be rewarded according to their works, whether good or evil, we can afford to await the arbitrament of time, without passing sentence on anyone. We had better be on safe grounds—as Hedge's Logic says: "Try to always think probably your opponent is in the right, and you are wrong."

Editors Herald: Will Saints in Minneapolis, Minnesota, kindly call on Mrs. Rutherford, 2706 Polk Street, Northeast, Minneapolis, Minnesota. Her mother is a Saint, and desires her to hear the gospel. Some try to make her believe we are Mormons.

Your sister,

MRS. S. M. BURGETT.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 6, 1916.

Editors Herald: I am thankful for being permitted to live in these last days, as the rapid fulfillment of prophecy indicates the end is nigh. However, it is not entirely without fear and trembling that we step over the threshold of the glad new year. What will the new year mean to us? What will we have accomplished to look back upon? At the end of the year, shall we rejoice over good deeds done? or regret those undone?

We have reason to think that our redemption is nigh at hand. We are told in Matthew 24 that when the things therein stated come to pass, we are to lift up our heads and rejoice, for our salvation draweth nigh.

During the past two years we have been greatly shocked by what has occurred. Two years ago the whole world cried "Peace," and swift destruction came upon them. Those who since 1830 have been watching the signs of the times were in a measure prepared for just what took place, yet even some of the Saints have been shocked by the terrible suddenness of the great world war. There are other events to occur in the near future.

Let us awake and shake off the coals from our garments. Great things may be accomplished by the Saints during the coming year, if only we are willing to consecrate our all, even ourselves to God's service. To do this we must be wise virgins, having oil in our lamps and our lamps trimmed and burning. Saints who are wise will not be found spending their surplus for worldly amusements and self gratification, thus withholding from the work of God its just dues, even the means wherewithal to redeem and upbuild Zion.

Some have said, "Christ will not come until the temple is built." It takes money and willing hearts to build temples. Jesus says the day and hour of his coming no man knoweth, not even the angels in heaven. Only God knows when Christ is to come again. The heavenly Father will not change the time of Christ's coming to suit us. His purpose will be fulfilled. Our Savior will not delay his coming. At the day appointed he will appear, whether we are ready or not; and woe be to those who have been warned and have failed to comply with God's laws.

Will our lamps be trimmed and burning? Will we be on the watchtower, doing the Master's bidding? or will we be asleep on flowery beds of ease, with lamps untrimmed and without oil? God has a work for each of us. Will we do our part, or leave it undone? Can we not be warned concerning coming years by what has occurred during the past two years? If we are the elect, we may feel this great time of trouble will be shortened for our sake.

If we believe these things, let us be up and doing, that our house may not be found in disorder. Let us turn the searchlight of truth in upon our most inward thoughts, and search out by the aid of our Redeemer, our faults and shortcomings. Let us by the aid of this searchlight of truth, search and cleanse ourselves of all impurities, that we may not be found wanting when our Lord and Master comes. He surely will come soon, perhaps sooner than most of us expect. Let us watch and pray, work and fight. The time is short and there is much to be done.

Praying for the redemption of Zion, and watching for our Savior's glorious appearing, I am,

Your sister,
SADIE BURCH.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, January 6, 1916.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the letters from my brothers and sisters in other parts of the world. We get many letters in one when we receive the HERALD. Many times I have been made glad; and many times sad for my brothers and sisters who are sick, and for those in the warring countries. I cry unto the Lord to hasten the day when he shall take up the reins of power and rule the world,—when all shall be peace and quietness and love.

We are trying to live the gospel, at least most of us. There are always some who do not make the proper effort in this direction. We hope the day will come when we will all be serving the Lord, the God of heaven and earth.

We are expecting Brother Ellis here to hold meetings. We ask the Saints to hold us up through their faith and prayers. We believe there is a people here who would serve the Lord. We have had with us Brother J. L. Mortimore and Brother William McIntosh with his wife and children, and Brother Grant Saint John. We were glad to see them all. The Spirit was with Brother McIntosh on the Sunday night when he preached on the life of Christ from the cradle to manhood. We hope this effort will bring fruit for the Master.

My prayer is for the church, that we may all live as God and his Son would have us do, that he may find us ready at his appearing.

Your brother in the gospel,
W. G. ELLIOTT.

SAWYER, IDAHO, January 9, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have just finished reading the HERALD of January 5. The more I read the HERALD the greater desire I have to read letters from different parts. When I read Brother E. R. Davis's letter from Saskatchewan, my heart went out in prayer to God for the isolated Saints in Canada. When I read the letter from Spokane, by Brother Fred Browning, I wondered if he were the railroad switchman whom we met on our return from conference. We were on the Spokane international line.

Our family has been greatly blessed in a knowledge of the gospel since my letters in the HERALD last fall. All are earnestly studying the truth. Our oldest son and myself went to conference. We were made to rejoice in meeting such fine people. All we met had the spirit of humility. I will never forget our first conference.

Our son Charley, near twenty-one years old, was called to the office of priest and was ordained December 26, 1915. He preached his first sermon to-day at Valley, and again this afternoon spoke at Laclede. He feels his unfitness to occupy, following our able missionary, Elder J. A. Bronson, who has been giving Laclede such fine sermons. He has helped Charley in every way he can, by loaning him books to study and instructing him along different lines of work, which is greatly appreciated.

On New Year's Day Brother Bronson led two brave people into the icy waters for baptism. They were from Laclede, making a total of twelve baptized at that place, with more near the kingdom. Brother Bronson has a good work started there. The Walker family I mentioned before have all been baptized except the father and the youngest child, aged seven. Mr. Walker has been favorably impressed with our son Charley, and has said that the first sermon he heard Charley preach, he would go into the water to be baptized. I do not see how people can wait when once they know the truth of the gospel. Brother Bronson often refers to how I could scarcely wait a week for him to go to Palouse and do some baptizing.

While I was anxious to get into the work, God delayed us so that all of our family might indeed see the truth and be baptized. Oh, the wonderful, loving mercy of our heavenly Father in dealing so kindly with his children who are weak! How he builds us up in strength and knowledge, that we may comprehend a portion of his goodness! We thank him that we are among those who have taken the name of Christ in complying with the gospel plan, and are numbered as Saints. It is our earnest prayer that we may live worthy the name. We understand that we are to live as Saints, as well as to be called Saints; that we are to be doers of the word, not hearers only.

To-day is the first Sunday the Saints have held Sunday school here. We had twenty-seven in attendance, and more to come. There is plenty of opposition from the Baptists. Some of our members belonged to the Baptist Church before they were baptized by Brother Bronson.

I would like to write to Alice Zimmerman, who was baptized about a year ago in Spokane. I read her letter in the Ensign, and Sister Bronson and I were going to write to her, but we lost her address. She was going to Saskatchewan to spend the winter with her son.

I would like to meet all the Saints at our reunion. I hope many will come. If it is near Sawyer we will be glad.

I received a nice letter from Elder Benjamin Bean, of Sacramento, and would answer, but received no address.

In gospel bonds,
MRS. JENNIE CRABB.

News from Missions

North Dakota

It quite frequently happens that people in other States, especially in the South, get a misapprehension in regard to our northern State, thinking the climatic conditions are worse than they really are; and on the other hand some people, especially the real estate boosters, go to the other extreme, thinking thereby to increase their profits, but the mission force of this district, in common with their fellow laborers in other fields, with little of this world's goods to lose, are mainly concerned in striving to find out a method of overcoming obstacles of every kind, and is rendering the best service possible to the church, and advance its spiritual interests.

I may briefly say that during my long residence in this territory I believe the last six weeks has been about as trying as I ever saw. However, as it is best to look on the bright side of everything, it gives me pleasure to say that in spite of the severe cold at New Year's, a goodly number of the Saints gathered at Fargo, heartily received and entertained by the resident members, and a peaceful and spiritual time was enjoyed throughout, enhanced by being permitted to meet in a building of our own, a nice, new, comfortable building, estimated to have cost sixteen hundred and ninety-four dollars and eighty-three cents, two hundred and fifty of which was paid in labor, twelve hundred and twenty-nine dollars and eighty-one cents in cash, a little over two hundred dollars being yet required to finish the tower, etc.

Another church building is almost completed at Dunn Center, where I had the pleasure to organize a new branch. This is in a new part of the State, where the people have been living thirty to forty miles from a railroad for years, mostly ranching; now the land is broken up for farming.

I am sorry to say some of the older and more favored parts of the State are not showing the same zeal and energy. I see many families who are lax in various ways, such as in the training of their children, taking church papers, regular attendance at the services, spending means in personal adornment, and in other ways, to the neglect of the tithing fund; and this in face of the fact that our State has been very fortunate in the way of both crops and prices. Some are increasing their holdings, in machinery, stock, and lands, but withholding the Lord's tenth. I feel impressed to utter a word of warning, as the whole country is seemingly entering into one of those periods of wild speculation which in all similar periods of the past has been followed by a corresponding season of depression.

One of the worst features of this western country is that most of the farmers have too much land already, half tilled, and consequently not yielding a fair profit on the investment. I hope to see our people avoid the snares and pitfalls set for the unwary, avoid extremes, cultivate a spirit of contentment, thus securing peace of mind, leaving themselves more time to cultivate the intellectual, moral, and spiritual faculties.

Like the rest of the country, we have had an unusual amount of sickness. I have had to respond to more calls for administrations than usual, but have been cheered in witnessing marks of divine favor. One that I particularly wish to mention however for the good of those who may be similarly situated, was in a case where the local elder was called, and the blessing received. Please do not unnecessarily call the missionary, at a loss of time and expense, when there are others able and willing to respond. Unable by reason of snow blockades to reach the country districts, what little labor I have done during the stormy period has been at Minot and Fargo. Few outsiders being present, my ministrations have been to the Saints, in which I have been favored with the comforting aid of the Spirit.

My physical endurance is somewhat impaired by age and infirmity, and I hope that some of the better qualified and promising young men who have been called will see their way clear to enter more fully into the work. Much more could be done than there is by making openings at or near their homes, and occupying as opportunity may offer. Such efforts persistently followed, and supplemented by wise, pure, and consistent lives, will not altogether be in vain.

In many cases too much reliance is placed upon the occasional visits of the traveling eldership, with a tendency to sit with folded arms during the interim. Brethren of the ministry, awake to the opportunities all around you, and during the coming spring and summer months, stick to it as General Grant did in his military campaign.

My earnest desire and prayer is that as a church we may all realize more fully the sacredness of our calling, and give to God our full possibilities of service. With best wishes to all the Israel of God.

Your fellow laborer,

WILLIAM SPARLING.

Homeward Bound

I left Honolulu last evening on the Ventura. The Saints there know how to make an elder feel at home. While I was only with them for three weeks, yet it seemed as if I had known them for years. I enjoyed every moment of my stay there.

Brother Waller made possible many little trips around the city and up the beautiful valleys, and the big Packard six apparently climbed the hills as eagerly as in going the speed limit (and sometimes over) on the level roadways. Honolulu is simply great from every standpoint. Its cosmopolitan population offers a variety of subjects for character study, which possibly could not be duplicated in any other American city. And the towering, rugged hills for a background, with the great variety of flowers, palms, shrubbery, bungalows and stately homes of the city proper, make a combination which is really remarkable.

Brother Waller is one of the busiest men I have ever met. He has a large capacity for work, but I think under present conditions that capacity is being too severely taxed at times for the good of his health. No doubt the appointing powers at the conference will make provision for the peculiar needs of the mission. It takes an unusual combination of talents in both a missionary and his wife to meet the varied and exacting demands of the work there.

I was very favorably impressed with the character of the Saints. As in all branches, there are those who are vacillating, and possibly this may be the case to a larger extent in a branch such as at Honolulu; but there are many there who are in deep touch with the things that are worth while, and which abide forever. I could readily discern lots of soul in some of our Hawaiian, Chinese and Japanese Saints and friends.

Brother Butterworth advised me, before leaving Australia, to plan to give my Book of Mormon lectures at Honolulu. He said they would be just the thing, which eventually proved the case; I felt God's approval in my last effort. Two men outside of the church made contributions, which, for amount, was very unusual; and they said they proposed to help the work in the future.

On Monday evening sixty-five of the Saints and friends gathered at the pretty eight-room mission house, donated to the church by Brother and Sister Ingham, now of California, and gave me a reception. The cottage was bright with youth, supplemented by the dignity of old age. Under the leadership of Brother Waller's daughter, with others, the gathering was entertained with games of various kinds, in which all entered with spirit. I enjoyed the singing of the Hawaiian songs, one of which was especially beautiful in sentiment, and accurately expressed the Hawaiian nature.

It may sound strange, but when one notices the brown color of these people, and when contrasted with the whites, the latter often have a faded, washed-out appearance. He who judges from the heart, and is no respecter of persons, looks for the white souls, and is not governed in his judgments by the color of the skin.

After the program had been rendered, and the dainty refreshments served, a very neat presentation speech was made by a talented young sister, Dolly Lee, of Chinese-Hawaiian extraction, and a handsome calabash and jewel box, made of the beautiful koa wood, was presented to me. These unique gifts will ever be prized because of the association which they will inevitably bring to my mind. Some of the Saints made an effort to fill the little jewel box with silver coin.

From the time I left Melbourne, to this reception at Honolulu, the Saints have seemed to compete with one another in showing me kindness, and such saintly consideration has made my homeward journey more than delightful. But then the farewells come at last, and they are not so pleasant. The Hawaiian custom is to place leis or wreaths around the neck of the departing friend. The passenger so favored presents quite a picturesque sight.

The band is playing a lively air, "alohas" are said, the steamer moves out into the harbor, the band renders "Auld Lang Syne," and then "Home Sweet Home." I spy Captain Scott and his good wife on the captain's boat, Sister Scott with a pair of glasses leveled my way; the Saints are waving last farewells, they gradually fade from my view, but their kindness is indelibly stamped upon my heart. There never was language invented which could adequately express how one feels in bidding farewell to such a gathering as was there on the pier. Aloha and Aloha, dear Honolulu Saints. May the gospel reunite us when Christ comes to gather his Saints from the ends of the earth. Sincerely,

AT SEA, February 9, 1916.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

Gallands Grove

The quarterly conference of the Gallands Grove District closed at Dow City last evening, after a pleasant and profitable session. Our congenial bishop, C. J. Hunt, and Elder J. L. Butterworth presided over the conference. We noticed among the speakers Elders J. B. Barrett, C. J. Hunt, George Jurgens, James Spence, George Hanson, Lacy Myers, and the writer. The preaching was interesting and instructive, the social services were quite spiritual, and the business was transacted pleasantly. The conference adjourned to meet with the Saints at Denison, Iowa, some time during the month of June, the exact date to be fixed by the presiding officers of the district, and the Saints located at Denison, who hope to have their large, new church finished by that time.

By a unanimous vote the Gallands Grove District decided to unite with the Des Moines District in holding a reunion at Boone, Iowa, some time during the coming summer or fall. A committee composed of the presidents of the district were appointed to have the oversight of the work for the Gallands Grove District, in connection with a similar committee appointed by the Des Moines District. Our association with Des Moines District last year in reunion work at Nevada, Iowa, was very pleasant and satisfactory, and we hope for a like experience this season.

"But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—Jesus.

Should any of the Saints within the Gallands Grove District who read this letter desire any work that may be properly done by a patriarch, the writer is at liberty just now to do such work. He is willing and anxious to discharge his duty, as he understands it, and hopes to be able to do so in the fear of God, and for the good of all who may be concerned.

As a people we have much to encourage and inspire hope for the work in which we are engaged is the work of God; and the power of God unto salvation unto all those who believe and obey.

It is quite true that in a sense we may be unpopular in the estimation of the world, yet the Lord has in a very marvelous way given us favor and grace in the eyes of the people.

"What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? . . . Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? . . . It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? . . . Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Romans 8: 31-39).

It is a good thing for all Saints to enjoy that blessed indwelling assurance ever manifest by our Savior in his life work, when he taught as follows: "The Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him." "I am not alone, because the Father is with me." "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." John has written for the encouragement of the saints: "Beloved, if our hearts condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God. And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight."

To feel that God is ever near, and that he sees and knows our every need, and understands our thoughts and aspirations, and knows our every act and the nature of the work we are doing, is, indeed, a safeguard to the child of God. Such a realization helps the disciple of Christ to put himself upon his very best deportment, and inspires him to walk closely in the footsteps of the blessed Master. Indeed it makes him a new creature, and is evidently what the Apostle Paul had in mind when he penned these words: "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature."

The nearer we live to God, the more of his Spirit we receive, and our way seems clearer, heaven nearer, and eternal life more sure. It is a good thing to be courageous and persevering in the service of God. He who is truly in Christ has no cause to fear, for no power in the universe is able to pluck him out of the Father's hand.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

DOW CITY, IOWA, February 14, 1916.

New York District

The year 1915 has passed into history, with its trials and disappointments, as well as its joys. Changes have been many, some of a pleasant character, others taking more of a solemn aspect. Some of the pleasant things of life lift our souls above the lower conditions of this world, into a state of ecstasy, enabling us to view things from the mount of pleasantness, where we realize that God is still moving along his great work, directing its course and filling the hearts of his Saints with joy, giving to the willing hands endeavoring to build up his work, strength to accomplish the part intrusted to their care. It is indeed a pleasure to see Saints working together for the accomplishment of God's cause.

The four years of experience, association, and labor among the Saints and friends in this field have truly been pleasant. Their cares and sorrows have been shared by ye missionary, their joys have also been enjoyed by him. In their times of prosperity they have remembered him. While names are not mentioned, honor goes to those where honor is due. While all have had times of darkness and adversity, yet all have had times of rejoicing, and the sweet with most has offset the bitter. While a few have been called to mourn, others have not.

On January 19, Sister Alice Terryberry, of Niagara Falls, New York, lost her husband, who died of apoplexy. On February 9 the grim reaper appeared at Buffalo, taking Elder William Brothers. Elder Brothers was one of the faithful ones, always found at his post of duty. He had been a sufferer from heart trouble for some time, but was unwilling to give up his duties in the branch. He had been president for some time, and his fullest desire was to see the work of God go forward, and to perform his full part in its advancement.

In the little town of Sherrill, a place near the once Oneida Community of earlier fame, there resides a little band of Saints who have fought their way through the persecution and opposition hurled against them by their Christian (?) friends of earlier days. Having fought so valiantly for the truth, they have won their way with the gospel to the hearts of some of their true friends. It was decided an opportune time to organize them, so on the 6th instant they were organized into a branch, with twelve members and three officers. They have a bright prospect before them. We pray to God for their success. The organization was concurred in by the missionary in charge, as was also the ordination of Brother W. J. Landes, of Niagara Falls, New York, to the office of elder, he being president of the Niagara Falls Branch, Brother F. C. Mesle being president of the new branch.

Our desires and efforts are for the progress and advancement of the work in this part of God's heritage.

Looking forward to the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

A. E. STONE.

News from Branches

Burlington, Iowa

We take pleasure in reporting another visit to Burlington by Brother L. G. Holloway, Sunday, January 30. He spoke for us both morning and evening, two of his usually good sermons, and was present at the priesthood meeting in the afternoon.

The district conventions and conference met with the Burlington Branch, February 4 to 6, and the sessions were good throughout. Six of the seven branches were represented, and Brother O. Salisbury of Des Moines was a visitor from that district. He was in charge of two prayer services, assisted in presiding at the business sessions, and spoke Saturday and Sunday evening; also presided at the preliminary session, organizing the young people for the purpose of promoting reunion interests. This will doubtless be reported through the Autumn Leaves. The prayer services were exceptionally good, one being held Friday morning at nine, in the interests of auxiliary work, one at nine Saturday morning, a young people's meeting at 8.15 Sunday morning, and prayer and sacrament service Sunday afternoon. At this last meeting, the Spirit was manifested.

We are especially glad to report the baptism of the following on Thursday evening, February 10: Brother August Lee, Brother Glen Rayer and Sister Hulda Stadlander. They have all been associated with us for some time. During the prayer service following the baptism, a prophecy was delivered by Brother Edward Schweers, to Brother Lee, recognizing the step taken, and instructing him to prepare by study for future usefulness.

Auxiliary work is moving nicely, both Sunday school and Religio increasing in enrollment. Brother Williams has charge of the men's class, both in Sunday school and Religio now, and the interest manifested is encouraging.

CORRESPONDENT.

Terlton, Oklahoma

The Saints here are well and rejoicing in the work. There are not many who live near enough to attend services regularly, but all are willing to help in any way they can. There is a feeling of unity that is good to see and feel. The branch officers are striving to do their work well. The prayer meetings are participated in usually by all present, young and old.

The Saints who live in the oil fields about five miles from here, not being able to attend the branch meetings, have their own meetings. They have a fine little Sunday school. This is a splendid way to keep alive and grow in the work. Brother Carter's folks were instrumental in getting the work started in that neighborhood. Several there have been added to the church. The young of that community are being educated along gospel lines.

Brother W. P. Robinson came here from Tulsa a few weeks ago and preached some splendid sermons for us. We hope he can come often. Brother Arber has also been with us. We are always glad to have our missionaries come. Brother Yates is affectionately remembered by many, as are his wife and family. We hope Brother Aylor, who first delivered the gospel message in this place, will visit us whenever he can. Brother and Sister Case were with us at the little reunion held here in the oil field last summer. The meetings though small, were uplifting, and caused us to long for the great gathering where we shall meet again all we have known and loved in this gospel work.

Sincerely desiring the welfare of all the Saints, and the triumph of the work, I am, February 12, 1916.

Your sister,

MRS. ALICE M. McGEORGE.

But all God's angels come to us disguised;
Sorrow and sickness, poverty and death,
One after other lift their frowning masks,
And we behold the seraph's face beneath,
All radiant with the glory and the calm
Of having looked upon the front of God.

—J. R. Lowell.

Hymns and Poems

(SELECTED AND ORIGINAL)

Deliver Thy Saints

O Lord thy children bless
These days of dire distress,
Hear us we pray.
Guide thou our wandering feet
To where thy children meet,
And in communion sweet,
Praise thee alway.

And if perchance they fall
By nation's greedy call
Of war and strife,
Let angels near them stand,
And lead them by the hand
Into that better land
Of their new life:

Where rules no martial law,
Subject to human flaw,
For power and fame:
Where Christ will be their king—
Who wants no warlike thing,
Who'll peace and deliverance bring,
Oh, praise his name.

FLORENCE SMITH LECKNEY.

The First Bluebird

Just rain and snow! and rain again!
And dribble! and blow!
Then snow and thaw! and slush! and then
Some more rain and snow!

This morning I was 'most afeared
To wake up—when, I jing!
I seen the sun shine out and heard
The first bluebird of spring!

Mother she'd raised the winder some;
And in acrost the orchard come,
Soft as an angel's wing,
A breezy, treesy, beesy hum,
Too sweet fer anything!

The winter' shroud was rent apart—
The sun burst forth in glee—
And when that bluebird sung, my heart
Hopped out o' bed with me.

—Riley.

Indirection

Fair are the flowers and the children, but their subtle suggestion is fairer;
Rare is the roseburst of dawn, but the secret that clasps it is rarer;
Sweet the exultance of song, but the strain that proceeds it is sweeter,
And never was poem yet writ, but the meaning outmastered
the meter.

Never a daisy that grows but a mystery guideth the growing;
Never a river that flows but a majesty scepters the flowing;
Never a Shakespeare that soared but a stronger than he did enfold him,

Nor ever a prophet foretells but a mightier seer hath foretold him.

Back of the canvas that throbs the painter is hinted and hidden;
Into a statue that breathes the soul of the sculptor is bidden;
Under the joy that is felt lie the infinite issues of feeling;
Crowning the glory revealed is the glory that crowns the revealing.

Great are the symbols of being, but that which is symbolized is greater;
Vast the create and beheld, but vaster the inward creator;
Back of the sound broods the silence, back of the gift stands the giving;
Back of the hand that receives thrill the sensitive nerves of receiving.

Space is as nothing to spirit, the deed is outdone by the doing;
The heart of the wooer is warm, but warmer the heart of the wooing;
And up from the pits where those shiver, and up from the heights where those shine,
Twin voices and shadows swim starward and the essence of life is divine.—Richard Realf.

Sunset After Rain

The cradle of the valley
Is filled with floating mist,
The summits of the mountains
Are veiled in amethyst.

The trees spread grateful branches
For thirsting slaked, for hunger fed,
All things are praising God.

—Harriet Howe, in The Literary Digest, October 2, 1915.

East and West

Men look to the East for the dawning things, for the light of a rising sun,
But they look to the West, to the crimson West, for the things that are done, are done.
The eastward sun is a new-made hope from the dark of the night distilled;
But the westward sun is a sunset sun, is the sun of a hope fulfilled!

So out of the East they have always come, the cradle that saw the birth
Of all of the heart-warm hopes of man and all of the hopes of earth—
For out of the East arose a Christ and out of the East has gleamed
The dearest dream and the clearest dream that ever a prophet dreamed.

And into the waiting West they go with the dream-child of the East,
And find the hopes that they hoped of old are a hundredfold increased.
For here in the East we dream our dreams of the things
we hope to do,
And here in the West, the crimson West, the dreams of the East come true.

—Douglass Malloch.

Quorum Notices

HIGH PRIESTS

To the High Priests: Me thinks that I hear the footfall as of a mighty gathering host! It is the assembling of the Saints in General Conference, and coincident therewith will be the sessions of our quorum.

Anent there has been prepared quite an interesting program for the meetings of 1916.

Before you shall read this notice, the time will have arrived, and for some past, when your individual annual report might have been in the hand of your secretary. Are you to be a delinquent this year?

Up to this date there have come to hand 37 reports; and it had been hoped that all the reports and papers from far and near should have been on file with your secretary before this time.

To stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance: have you as yet remitted your annual dues? Please do not let this personal responsibility slip your mind. The 1915 Annual was published on our credit, and we await your contribution to liquidate.

Your fellow servant,

ROB'T. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

Died

HARVEY.—Abraham Harvey, beloved husband of Caroline Harvey, born September 4, 1850, Hardinsburg, Indiana; lived in the same township until death, February 10, 1916. Was a faithful member. There survive, wife, 3 children, Nellie Radcliff, Stella Mattax, Norman, 3 brothers, 2 sisters. Services in Baptist church, Hardinsburg, by E. A. Jaegers, priest of Louisville Branch. Many friends gathered to pay him respect.

BROTHERS.—William Brothers, born February 11, 1858; died February 9, 1916, of complications caused by heart trouble of long standing. Married Mary A. Hayes, January 19, 1887. To them was born 1 child, Anna Mae. Baptized June 17, 1892. Ordained teacher October 3, 1907, by U. W. Greene, F. J. Pitt, and F. C. Farnfield; elder, June 6, 1910, by U. W. Greene and H. O. Smith, since when he served as branch president most of the time. He lived a faithful and exemplary life. There survive wife, 1 daughter, 1 brother, 4 sisters. Services from the home, Buffalo, New York, by A. E. Stone, assisted by S. W. Tomlinson and James Pycok. Interment in Forest Lawn Cemetery.

CURTIS.—Emsley Curtis, born May 22, 1847, Crawford County, Illinois; died February 9, 1916. Married Martha Allison, May 16, 1867. Of 9 sons, 3 daughters, there survive, with his companion, 6 sons, 2 daughters, mother, Margaret Westwood, 2 brothers, 4 sisters, 43 grandchildren, 2 great-grandchildren. Baptized December 14, 1872, Dekalb County, Missouri, by A. C. Inman. Ordained elder March 1, 1874. Labored as a seventy several years. Late years he spent in business, but continued preaching as circumstances permitted, making his last effort at Walnut Park, near Independence, January 30, 1916. Of the 6 sons living, 4 are ministers: J. F., of the Twelve; J. D., Second Quorum of Seventy; Joseph and T. W., Aaronic priesthood. Services at Independence, charge of I. N. White, E. L. Kelley, Abner Lloyd.

HUFF.—Henry A. Huff, born October 15, 1850; died December 19, 1915, near Clyde, Colorado. Married Melissa Webb Humphrey, October 14, 1873. Baptized May 17, 1903, by J. D. Porter, and was loyal to the faith until death. Leaves to mourn an invalid wife, 3 sons, 3 daughters; Wilson, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; John, Rome, Indiana; Samuel Clyde, Colorado; Mollie Skliba, Rocky Ford, Colorado; Mattie Williams, San Francisco, California; Ettie Miller, Clyde, Colorado.

SURRIDGE.—Maggie Surridge, born at Mill Creek, Utah, June 16, 1866; died at Bevier, Missouri, January 9, 1916. Deceased lived an exemplary life, faithful in church and auxiliary work. She was loved because of her willingness to labor in the interests of others, from whom she won esteem and respect in her quiet and humble way, floral tributes marking their appreciation of her life and work. The Bevier Branch has lost a faithful laborer. Services at Saints' chapel, Bevier, F. T. Mussell in charge, sermon by W. B. Richards.

WARD.—Naomi D. Ward, daughter of Thomas and Sarah Ferrell, born October 20, 1881, in West Virginia; died March 7, 1915, at Springfield, Missouri. Baptized by Elder Shinn in West Virginia. Lived a consistent and devoted life. Married I. N. Ward, September 8, 1907, at Springfield. Three children and husband mourn the loss of a loving mother and companion. Sermon by J. W. Quinly, assisted by Henry Sparling.

WILLIAMS.—James Boynton Williams, born Colesburg, Iowa, March 12, 1847; died at Neligh, Nebraska, January 24, 1916. Baptized January 23, 1879, by Charles Derry. Ordained elder January 6, 1884, by George Hyde. Sermon by Levi Gamet, assisted by W. M. Self. Interment in Saints' cemetery, Clearwater, Nebraska.

SMITH.—Emma M. Cochran, wife of Elder S. S. Smith, born July 2, 1874, in Iowa; died February 1, 1916, Colorado Springs, Colorado, of pulmonary tuberculosis. Husband and 3 daughters survive, 1 daughter having preceded her. Father, Thompson Cochran, stepmother, 3 sisters, 3 brothers, also mourn her departure. Baptized when 16 years of age by H. A. Stebbins. She was a self-sacrificing, devoted, loving mother and Saint, one who truly loved the gospel. Before death she called her children around her and bade each an affectionate farewell. She expressed strong faith in the future life. Services in charge of G. E. Harrington, Independence, Missouri, sermon by L. E. Hills. Burial at Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence.

GILSPIE.—Louisa V. Gilispie, born Jackson County, Indiana, September 15, 1845; died February 2, 1916, while visiting Sister and Mr. E. Rees, Kansas City, Kansas. In 1871 married Erastus Gilispie. To them were born 9 children, 5 of whom survive: Homer, Edward, Robert, Grover, Mrs. Mary Baker. Deceased also leaves husband, 25 grandchildren, 1 great-grandchild. Was member of Christian Church; a good woman, loved by all who knew her. Husband, children and other relatives thank Sister and Mr. Rees and others for kindly assistance rendered. Sermon by F. C. Warnly in Grand View church. Interment at Maple Hill Cemetery, Argentine, Kansas.

DILLON.—Elizabeth Larbey, born in Delaware County, Ohio, April 15, 1827; died, Evergreen, Iowa, February 1, 1916. Baptized, Far West, Missouri, May, 1835, by Charles Patten. Confirmed by Lyman Wight and Charles Patten. Married in 1842 to Alanson Shumway, by whom she had 4 children. Left a widow in 1847, in 1850 married James P. Dillon. To them were born 6 children. Joined Reorganized Church, April 20, 1863, baptized by Otis Shumway, Jackson County, Iowa, confirmed by Edward Larbey and Otis Shumway. In 1881, with husband and family came to Decatur County, Iowa, where she resided till death. Widowed the second time July 28, 1894, she was thereafter the especial charge of her son, S. F., who was faithful to his trust. Sermon by Heman C. Smith, residence of her daughter, Ella Barrett. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery, Lamoni.

COOK.—Ethel V., daughter of Fielding F. Goben and wife, born Lucas, Iowa, January 17, 1890; died Fort Dodge, Iowa, February 2, 1916. Deceased spent her girlhood days attending school at Lucas, and was known to have had a kind and cheerful disposition. Married James Cook, December 25, 1909. They afterwards moved to Fort Dodge, where they lived until her death. Although not a member of the church, it is thought that Ethel was prepared to enter the other world, having made her peace with God before her departure. She leaves husband, 2 children, Clara, aged 4; Charlie, aged 2; father, mother, 4 brothers, grandparents, other relatives and a host of friends. Services in charge of Thomas Hopkins, Saints' church, Lucas, sermon by John R. Evans. Interment in Fry Hill Cemetery, Lucas.

MARKSHAUSEN.—Sara Markshausen, born August 31, 1894, Coleman, Michigan; died December 15, 1915, at her home, Los Angeles, California. After an illness of 6 weeks she passed peacefully to her rest, leaving husband, infant son of 7 weeks, foster mother, Mrs. E. E. Singer, uncle and aunt, Arthur and Maggie Thompson, and a host of friends. Baptized June 10, 1906, Coleman, Michigan, by T. W. Williams. She was loved by all who knew her.

MURRY.—Thomas L. Murry, born July 15, 1872, Cherokee County, Kansas; died January 31, 1916. Deceased was a member of the Christian Church for 12 years. United with the Latter Day Saint Church 5 years ago, at Purcell, Missouri. Leaves wife, 4 children, aged mother, brother, sister. He was a loving husband and kind father. Services in church, Purcell, by Lee Quick, before a large congregation of friends. Interment in Purcell Cemetery.

GRIFFITHS.—Loucine Evelyn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Griffiths, jr.; died January 31, 1916, aged 1 month, 28 days. Services in charge of Thomas Hopkins, at the home of William Boyd, Lucas, Iowa. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

CHAPMAN.—William Chapman, born August 8, 1844, Jackson County, Ohio; died February 4, 1916, Rich Hill, Missouri. Married Missouri Downen, August 8, 1868. To them were born 7 sons, 2 daughters, 4 sons and 1 daughter preceding him, leaving Sister Chapman, Edward, Charles, John, and Sister Berry Payne to mourn. Services at Saints' church, Rich Hill, by J. W. Wight before a large and sympathetic audience. Deceased had been a member of the church 27 years. Baptized by J. C. Foss. Interment in Rich Hill Cemetery.

HAWLEY.—Lucy M. Connelly, born September 18, 1858, Bell Prairie, Minnesota; died January 24, 1916. Her early life was spent in Wisconsin. She moved later to Becker County, Minnesota. Married Miles L. Hawley, June 1873. There were born to them 2 sons, 2 daughters. The sons, Clarence and Harry, died in 1896, the husband in 1906. The last 5 years of her life were spent in Montana, where her daughters live, and where she died. She held her hope in the gospel to the end. Remains sent to Audubon, Minnesota, for burial, where service was held by J. E. Wildermuth.

BOTKINS.—Ada May Botkins, born Bath, New York, June 12, 1863; died January 8, 1916. At 17 years of age married Will Smith, who died 5 years later. Two boys were born to them, Earnest and Otto, who still live. Married W. J. Botkins, May 31, 1887. To them were born 3 girls, 1 boy. Myrtal preceded her mother; Blanche married Bert Styles and lives at New Rockford, North Dakota; Willie and the younger daughter with their father near Prosper, North Dakota, are left to mourn. Services at the home, singing by Mrs. Ava Wildermuth and Mrs. W. E. Shakespeare. Services in charge of Thomas Leitch, sermon by J. E. Wildermuth. Deceased was an earnest believer in the restoration.

Book Reviews

YOUR BABY.—Doctor E. B. Lowry, author of Herself, The Home Nurse, etc., Forbes and Company, Chicago. $1 net. This is a book which every young mother and prospective mother in the land should read; for it makes motherhood easy and will remove the fears and troubles of many women. Everything which a mother wants to know and must know regarding the care of herself and her baby is clearly told in this helpful book. It shows how to avoid mistakes, what to do and what not to do. Doctor Lowry not only pleads for better babies, but plainly tells how to prepare for them; everything that is essential to the happiness and health of the mother and child is told. Nearly half the book is devoted to the mother's care of herself before the baby comes, and this part alone is invaluable to any expectant mother. This book contains the latest and best approved methods for the care of the baby,—its feeding, clothing, exercise, sleep and training. It is full of common-sense help and facts that many mothers might overlook. Like all Doctor Lowry's books, it is permeated with an earnest spirit of helpfulness and wise, sane direction.

SUNSHINE PARTIES

are every day affairs in the South in the Winter time ---for when blizzards, slush and snow are quite the fashion in the north, balmy, breezes, sunny skies, moonlit bays and tropical flowers are the fashion in the South. And those who pack their grips and go South at this time, reap rich rewards in health dividends and delightful recreation and return, realizing more than ever before, the real value of a winter vacation in that romantic, historic and beautiful land South of the Mason and Dixon Line.

The cost is low---perhaps not as much as you thought it would be. Come in and let's talk it over.

LAMONI, IOWA, MARCH 1, 1916

NUMBER 9

Editorial

AT THE ROOT OF THE MATTER

"Can a rush grow up without mire?"—Job 8: 11.

We are in receipt of a leaflet, copies of which have been widely distributed in a certain district. The opening paragraphs are as follows:

Joseph Smith, like the Pope, Mohomet, and other religious impostors sought:

(1st) WEALTH. Joe Smith started poor, died immensely rich. His widow refused to leave Nauvoo because of the property left her there.

It is not necessary to quote the leaflet further in order to show its character, so far as veracity is concerned.

At the death of Joseph Smith, Joseph W. Coolidge was appointed administrator of the estate. Besides purely personal property allowed the widow, she was granted from the estate an income of one hundred and twenty-four dollars a year. (See Tullidge's Life of Joseph the Prophet, p. 744.) She had herself and five children to support. By the amount of income derived from the estate the reader may judge as to the fabulous wealth in possession of the Prophet at his death; also the wonderful opulence because of which the widow chose to remain in Nauvoo.

Joseph Smith never at any time was immensely rich. Most of his life he was very poor, driven as he was from pillar to post by his enemies,—those having no more regard for truth than has the author of the leaflet in question.

At no time was he in more than moderate circumstances. Probably the sum total of his worldly possessions never at any time amounted to more than two or three thousand dollars.

It is true that as legally appointed trustee-in-trust for the church he may have held considerable property belonging to the church; but none of this was ever diverted to his own estate, nor did it pass to his heirs, excepting perhaps one piece of real estate by purchase after his demise.

His unfortunate widow was left in very straitened circumstances. She remained in Nauvoo because it was her home, and because she refused to follow Brigham Young or sanction his teachings.

She retained the home place, a two-story frame structure used as a hotel; also the "Old Homestead," as it was called, a one-story frame cottage containing probably three rooms, standing on a lot across the street from her home. These properties were not at that time of much value, and have never been valuable. They have hardly been worth their upkeep, so far as monetary value is concerned. In addition there was a small farm of forty or sixty acres east of Nauvoo that passed to her and subsequently to her sons, the eldest purchasing the equity of his brothers; it was not of great value at that time.

It is a matter of common knowledge in Nauvoo that Joseph Smith's widow continued living there in circumstances approaching poverty, with great hardship and toil raising her family, taking in boarders and serving meals to transients to eke out a livelihood.

She lived much like the old man in Arkansas, who did not "make a living," but merely "lived on what he made." But she kept her integrity and self-respect; and in that excelled the individual who thus attacks her memory.

Job says: "Can a rush grow up without a mire?" The presence of the rush is a sure sign of mire underneath. The promulgation of such falsehoods as constantly assail the Saints is evidence of foul conditions underneath, hidden, but very real. The condition of heart from which they spring may be imagined,—God forbid that it should ever be experienced by any one of our readers, unless perchance some one of the before-mentioned ilk chances to read this, in which event the wish is foredoomed to denial.

In line with this was a palpable slander mentioned by Brother Garver in the HERALD for November 3, 1915. This slander, coming from one whose name we refrain from repeating lest we further inflate his already distended egotism, was published in the Apostolic Review. The author recounts the horrible details of the Mountain Meadow Massacre, as John D. Lee purported to set them forth, then turns from Utah, and focusing his gaze of hate upon the Reorganized Church says:

True to-day—the words of the “seers” at Salt Lake City, Utah and Lamoni, Iowa, are to “be received as if from God’s own mouth!” Each says the other is a bogus seer—but the followers of each to-day, if ordered to do a like deed, rape and murder women and children, would form “a prayer circle,” giving each other “the elbow touch,” and arise from their knees and execute the orders of hell!—baptizing them in the name of God, our loving heavenly Father.

That man is well acquainted with our people by reputation and knows many of them personally. He knew that what he was saying is false. From whence sprang such a charge into being?

“Can a rush grow up without mire?” can such malignant accusations spring into being excepting from a heart filled with the bitterest and blackest of unchristian hatred? That man calls himself a Christian minister. Again we repeat: “Can a rush grow up without mire?” The outcropping is evidence enough of the nature of the subsoil. It is distinctly not Christian.

The stories told are evidence enough of the heart condition from which they spring. They certainly grow out of the mire of religious bigotry, deep, black, malignant, putrifying. From such reptilian slime they emerge.

But why should such conditions exist in human hearts? We can scarcely answer. Search for the answer if you will in the unwritten history of satanic strategy and tactics in opposition to truth.

Jesus said, “They have hated me without a cause.” He went on to add that as it had been with the Master so should it be with the servant. Perhaps these men themselves could not give a reason for their hatred, even if they were to honestly try to do so,—though it is beyond conception that they should honestly set forth any statement in the matter. But there is one who knows the influences and motives prompting them, namely: their instigator and chief protagonist, the great “Accuser of the brethren.”

In line with the absurd yet cruel stories before noted is one circulated in the East by a Reverend Anderson, to whom Brother Griffiths has replied. This man set forth the charge that Joseph Smith had murdered thousands of persons.

Through the medium of the press Brother Griffiths very aptly called upon the person making the charge to publish the names of the individuals alleged to have been murdered, with some details of their taking off. There has been no response.

Of course the charge has no ground in fact, but it most certainly draws its sustenance, takes its shape and being from some hidden root, from some source of supply. Again we repeat: “Can a rush grow up without mire?” Trace this charge back to the heart from which it sprang, and you will surely find the mire.

We feel no malice toward these men. Indeed we would gladly pray for their conversion, holding the day of miracles not yet past. But for their condition of heart and methods of attack we have the utmost detestation.

The circulation of such stories as we have recounted but strengthens the Saints in the belief that their work is true. The stories are so palpably false, and are known by the Saints to be false, that they conclude God is not with those who circulate them. It cannot be necessary to fight error with such weapons. As falsehood always arrays itself against truth, finding falsehood thus continuously opposing the Saints at every turn, they are confirmed in the belief that truth is with them.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

MORGENTHAU HOME.—Henry Morgenthau, American ambassador to Turkey, has returned to the United States.

WOULD COLLECT CONTRIBUTION.—A woman is made the defendant in a suit filed in the district court at Des Moines, by a Lakeside Presbyterian Church, of Storm Lake, Iowa, in which the plaintiff endeavors to collect three hundred dollars subscribed by the defendant toward erecting a church building.

EXIT LIQUOR.—The publisher of the New York Tribune writes a prominent temperance worker as follows:

After April 1 next, we shall not carry the advertising of any alcoholic liquor. At present we carry this advertising on a nonsolicited list, entirely barring all statements which present any such beverage as having food or tonic value.

NO VODKA, NO INSANE.—During the Russo-Japanese war, Russian military hospitals for the insane were overrun with cases due to the use of alcoholics. To-day, as a result of prohibition in Russia, says Mr. Ernest Gordon, who recently visited that country, there is only one case of insanity caused by alcohol in the one Russian hospital which cares for the insane from the Russian northern army, larger than all the Russian forces used in the Japanese war.

SUGAR TARIFF.—A Democratic caucus in the House has decided by a vote of eighty-four to twenty to repeal the clause of the Underwood tariff law which would put sugar on the free list May 1. Majority leader Kitchin is reported as saying that to bring about preparedness it will be necessary to keep the duty on sugar and to impose new taxes. If the proposed action with reference to sugar obtains, it will continue a revenue from sugar imports of about $40,000,000 annually.

MEXICAN SCHOOL SYSTEM.—The Carranza government is said to be compelling large landowners throughout Mexico to pay the principal cost of educating the rural population. The landowners provide the schoolhouses and pay the teachers, the Government supplies the books. The American school system is being substituted for the French, and a three-year course in English instead of French as heretofore provided, is required; six months of French being required in preparatory schools.

ARMED MERCHANTMEN.—Germany still holds to her declaration of intention to sink without warning armed merchantmen March 1 and thereafter. Considerable concern has been shown by certain leaders in Congress, who have endeavored to enact legislation withdrawing protection from Americans taking passage on armed merchant ships. President Wilson has continued firm in his opposition to the declared policy of Germany, and congressional leaders have been persuaded to allow the administration to deal with the situation, for the present at least. In a letter to Senator Stone, dated February 24, the President said:

No nation, no group of nations, has the right while war is in progress to alter or disregard the principles which the nations have agreed upon in mitigation of the horrors and sufferings of war.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND RESOURCES.—A bill to put into operation a recommendation of the Department of Labor to provide new opportunities for the unemployed has been introduced in the House. This bill would create "A National Colonization Board," with the Secretary of Labor as chairman, which would be required to select portions of the public domain, or adjoining privately-owned lands suitable for farming, grazing, lumbering, and other industries, for colonization purposes, and would be empowered to withdraw from entry public lands, including timber, coal, water-power sites, and other resources, and reserve them for colonization.

FOR OSBORNE PLAN.—Perhaps the first meeting of the kind ever held was that of ex-convicts under the auspices of the Outside Branch of the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing Prison, which occurred at New York City recently. Men who had spent the greater part of their lives behind the bars mounted the platform with Mr. Fred Dorner, principal keeper of Sing Sing, and their former benefactor and warden, Thomas Mott Osborne, and told how before lodgment in Sing Sing their treatment in prisons had plunged them deeper into crime. All spoke in warmest terms of the Osborne plan, evidencing that under its humane treatment they had been persuaded to cleaner living, and to productive activities.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Following up the attack reported last week, the Germans have continued a most valiant campaign in France, centering at Verdun. Seven miles of trenches have been taken north of Verdun. The Germans claim an outlying fortification, which is not conceded by the French. The French have stood valiantly against the terrific attack, and have kept up a deadly artillery fire, resulting in severe loss to the Germans. This effort now holds the attention of all parties, as Verdun is a formidable stronghold, and is considered the key to an advance on Paris. The French report minor gains in the Champagne regions. The Austrians report the capture of Durazzo, the important northern Albanian port. The Russians have followed up their gains in Armenia, taking additional territory in the vicinity of Erzerum. Conditions in Mesopotamia while not materially changed, are said to be more favorable for the British. The pressure on the British forces in this territory it is thought will be relieved by the Russian success in Armenia. On February 21 the British steamer Westburn put in at Santa Cruz, Canary Islands, and flying the German flag, with a German prize crew of seven men in charge. Besides its own crew, there were on board the Westburn two hundred and six passengers taken from other British vessels. Fearing that the vessel might be returned to the British if interned, on the 24th, after putting ashore the Westburn crew and the passengers, the Germans took the vessel out to sea, scuttled it, and returned in small boats to Santa Cruz, where they probably will be interned. It is thought that the German crew was from the same raider which recently ran the Appam into Hampton Roads. One hundred lives were lost when on February 27 the Maloja, a British liner, was sunk by a mine two miles off Dover, England. The British House of Commons on February 21 passed new votes of war credit amounting to over $2,000,000,000 which it is estimated will carry on the war for Great Britain to June 1, and which, as expressed by Premier Asquith, is an amount "not only beyond precedent, but actually beyond the imagination of any financier of this or any other country." Since the beginning of the war Great Britain has voted war credits to the amount of $10,410,000,000, of which $845,000,000 have been loaned to her allies. Speaking in the Commons, February 23, Premier Asquith said the British Government was determined to continue the war without compromise.

The true test is not in the care with which we get through our day, nor in the amount of accumulations to our credit, nor in the positions we may gain, but in the amount of truth, helpful and cheerful service which individuals can render, making for the collective happiness of the whole and the honor of the nation.—J. W. Rushton.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

BOOK LOST.—The History of the Brethren, by Brumbaugh is missing from the editorial library. We have an urgent call for this book to be used at once in debate. If one of the ministry has it, will he please forward it to the Herald Editors, Lamoni, Iowa, at once.

TRAINING NURSES.—This is to call attention to an advertisement on the last page of this issue of the HERALD, extending the opportunities of the Independence Sanitarium for young women who may wish to become nurses. Excellent work is offered at the Sanitarium along these lines, and under the most favorable circumstances for young women of the church.

NEW ZEALAND NEWS.—Brother J. C. Bradley writes from Dunedin, New Zealand, as follows:

We have just received the illustrated HERALD, with Evangelist E. C. Briggs's picture on the front. We have enjoyed it immensely, in fact, I enjoy reading everything within the covers of the HERALD. We are indeed a blessed people to have such a valuable publication. The work here in Dunedin is moving along slowly, although of late we have been creating a bit of interest. We still look forward to the time when we will have help to encourage us in the work. We ever pray for the advancement of this latter-day work.

POOR GUESSER.—The man who introduced in the House of Representatives a resolution to move the national capital to Milwaukee because the Anti-Saloon League threatens to make Washington dry, may be a good press agent in advertising the products of his home State, but he is a poor guesser. From prohibition Washington it is only a step to a prohibition nation and, Milwaukee or no Milwaukee, the national capital would then be dry, unless it were removed to foreign soil, and by that time there would hardly be any wet territory.

WHEN LIARS MEET.—One of the famous so-much-per anti-"Mormon" agitators has considerable to say in a contemporary religious journal over the appearance in a Utah publication of 1884, of a statement purported to have been made by Joseph Smith in which he is quoted as having said the Utah revelation on polygamy is "an eternal principle," and "we have got to observe it." The gentleman who so kindly calls attention to this matter suggests that the "Josephites" should especially "take notice that the prophet acknowledges what they deny." This man has the happy faculty of appropriating testimony adapted to his cause, and rejecting damaging testimony. Rejecting Utah testimony when it does not serve his advantage, he accepts it when it does, forgetting for the time the statement of Brigham Young, "We have the greatest and smoothest liars in the world."

LAMONI CONFERENCE.—Saints in the outlying districts are interested in developments in the more central places, and will be pleased to learn of the excellent stake conference held at Lamoni, Iowa, February 26 and 27. A spirit of uplift and persuasion to greater effort in the honoring of God's law, and his expressed will in the matter of clean living and devoted service, was enjoyed. President Frederick M. Smith and Bishop E. L. Kelley were in Lamoni at this time, in the interests of various departments of church work, and were in attendance at the conference, each occupying the stand, and extending other valuable help. President Smith addressed a packed house on Sunday evening under a spirit of power and leadership which was good to see and to feel. The faithful among the Saints in this territory realize, as do the Lord's people elsewhere, that there is just before the church a wonderful opportunity, if they take to themselves wisdom, and live for the light needed to hold them from unprofitable activities, and to direct them in consecrated service for God and the church. That the Lord may prosper his work here and everywhere is the desire of all true Saints, and that he will do so when his people prove themselves, is the assurance that each may have in his place and work.

EDITORIAL SELECTION

THE HOMESTEAD

Here we came when love was young,
Now that love is old,
Shall we leave the floor unswept
And the hearth acold?

Here the hill wind in the dusk,
Wandering to and fro,
Moves the moonflowers, like a ghost
Of the long ago.

Here from every doorway looks
A remembered face,
Every sill and panel wears
A familiar grace.

Let the windows smile again
To the morning light,
And the door stand open wide
When the moon is bright.

Let the breeze of twilight blow
Through the silent hall,
And the dreaming rafters hear
How the thrushes call.

Oh, be merciful and fond
To the house that gave
All its best to shelter love,
Built when love was brave!

Here we came when love was young,
Now that love is old,
Never let its day be lone
Nor its heart acold!

REFLECTIONS--NUMBER 9

CONFERENCES AND THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

"The conferences . . . of the church," refer to the General Conferences. The manner of conducting them is clearly understood, but whether we have adopted the best methods of conducting our conferences is a question.

Man is naturally loath to leave old habits, and the majority have left the paths of their forefathers only when forced out of them. Progress has had an eternal fight with conservatism. The cry has been "leave us alone." Those in favored positions have declared with all soberness that they were satisfied.

All progress of the world has met with various form of opposition from sneers to bitter persecution. But of late years, the quiet, calm assurance of the ones in control, that we need no change, has produced satisfaction among the masses, as a rule, to the extent that investigation has been greatly retarded, and at times temporarily stifled.

As much as we honor the church, we are forced to admit that she has not entirely escaped the experiences of other organizations. Even our progressive leaders have only been able to advance the body as it has been prepared to move. Those who have followed the onward movements of the church realize the efforts that were necessary in order to reduce tithing and the support of the ministry to a practical system.

The basis of ministerial equality was not established without an effort, and it took years before the present satisfactory system of reporting was adopted. Graceland College, instrumental music in the church, and other improvements have had similar opposition. Many other problems lie before us yet unsolved; and it is no evidence of apostasy nor of lack of faith for one to attempt their solution.

It is true that many a man has failed in his attempt to blaze a road through an unknown forest; but by the vantage gained by his failure others have succeeded. So it may be with those who try to solve some of the problems that now confront the church.

The questions will all be answered and the proper policies adopted as soon as we, as members, are in a condition for the advanced movement. Light and understanding come to us just as we are prepared to receive.

In 1902 the Lord gave our president a wonderful vision, presenting the condition that he desired should prevail in the church. In this vision the president saw the assembly of the General Conference, with these changes in the quorums and church as desired. And this assembly "did not seem to be so large as at other times I had seen them" (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 9).

It was just as much the will of the Lord for the conference to be composed of a less number of members, so it would not "be so large as at other times," in the past, as it was for these changes to be made in the quorums. The changes should have been made in the quorums and also in the number of members composing the conference, so both the quorums and the conference would agree with the vision seen.

Man must use his best judgment in the absence of revelation from God, but it is always a mistake for us to proceed contrary to the principles revealed in revelation. And should we attempt to reduce the membership of our conference, as the vision indicated that we should do, it would be far better for us to do it according to what has been revealed, before this vision was given.

In 1901, the Lord said:

My servant [Joseph Smith] was directed to present to the church rules of representation, and he so stated to the body at different times that he was so led; but the conferences of my people saw proper to change these articles and rules of representation, and propositions are pending that they be still further changed.—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 7.

The rules that Joseph Smith was directed to present to the church were given by him to the conference in 1881. They were opposed by some, but finally adopted; but changed at the next conference. The president did not present them as a revelation, but was directed by the Spirit to present them. And during the discussion that followed stated to the body that at different times he was so led.

It was a display of inspiration, an expression of the will of God by way of wisdom, instead of command, the same as the word of wisdom.

It is just as much of a mistake for us as a church to disregard the directions of the Spirit in the rules of representation, and govern our conferences contrary to them because they were not given by command, as it is to disregard the Word of Wisdom, for the same reason.

But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

If we governed the conferences by rules of representation that "my servant was directed to present to the church," the assembly would not be so large "as at other times," for there would be no ex officio members, except "the Presidency, the Twelve, the Seventy, the High Council, and the Bishopric" (Church History, vol. 4. p. 352).

"High priests, elders, and priests engage in missionary work under appointment of General Conference, . . . are also entitled to voice and vote." The districts can send not less than one nor more than five delegates.

Much might be written in favor of this system. But it must be apparent to all that it is a display of inspiration, for we can all see the wisdom of having the business of the church done by the best qualified members we have. If only five delegates could be sent from our large districts, the best representatives, as a rule, would be chosen.

Our late president, while on his deathbed, expressed his love and confidence in his brethren, and rejoiced in the fact that during the great number of years he had stood at the head of the church he had been opposed but a very few times; that when he had been led by the Spirit the brethren had filed into line with only a few exceptions; this was one of the very few exceptions. He expressed himself in the following words:

Be steadfast, and if people are heady, if the church is heady, the eldership are heady and take the reins in their hands as they have done a little, especially on the rules and regulations, rules of representation, don't worry, don't worry, let it pass, let the church take the consequences, and they will after a while grow out of it.

His is a glorious record, surely. I am proud of it. It now remains for us who are left, on whom rests the burden of carrying on the work so grandly begun by noble men, to decide whether we will go back to the rules of representation that the Lord directed to be presented to the church; or will we continue to wander in the maze of self-sufficiency, because our forefathers made the mistake?

It is not a question as to how, when or by whom those rules of representation were obtained or formulated. This I do not know. The question is, Did the Lord want them, as formulated, presented to the church? The revelation leaves no doubt on that question: "My servant was directed to present to the church rules of representation, and he so stated to the body at different times."

ELDERSHIP REPRESENTED

The only qualification for delegates chosen by the branches or districts should be membership and good standing, it being given by the Spirit that those other than the eldership should be represented in this way.—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 9.

It is clear from the above how the membership is to be represented in the General Conferences. As "those other than the eldership" are to be represented by these delegates, the question would naturally arise, How is the eldership to be represented?

This question is answered in the rules of representation as presented by Joseph Smith in the following:

That the general officers of the church, known as the Presidency, the Twelve, the High Council, the Seventy, and the Bishopric, (proper), are ex officio members of conference, and entitled to a voice and vote as representatives of the spiritual authorities of the church at large.

It will be noticed in the revelation that the statement for the eldership to represent themselves in the conference is lacking. It becomes very conspicuous by its absence. The thought is thereby forcibly presented that as the membership as a whole, is to be represented by others, or by a certain few thus designated, so is the eldership.

Then the rules of representation tell us in plain terms who are or what quorums and councils are to represent the eldership the spiritual authorities the church (Church History, vol. 4, p. 252). "The word elders used in the law signifies those holding the Melchisedec priesthood only; all classes and orders of this priesthood are characterized by the word elder (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 8).

The elders are those holding the Melchisedec priesthood; and those who hold the Melchisedec priesthood hold "the right of presidency, and have power and authority over all the offices in the church, in all ages of the world, to administer in spiritual things" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 3).

These men who have the right to administer in spiritual things, belong to the eldership. It makes no difference what their office is, they belong to this class. "There is no difference in the priesthood, though there may be and is in the office in which the several orders may occupy and act" (Doctrine and Covenants 129: 7).

The entire group that holds the Melchisedec priesthood belongs to the eldership, and as a whole is represented in the conferences, according to the provisions in the law, by the general officers of the church, who are ex officio officers. These general officers are the Presidency, the Twelve, the High Council, the Seventy, and the Bishopric. They by virtue of their official positions, represent the eldership in the conference, not represented otherwise.

These general officers do not cast the votes of the eldership that they represent in the conference, for these elders have no vote; they represent them in a similar way as the presiding councils may represent the church abroad, when they should be considered as the leading representative authorities of the church, in either district or branch.

They would not have the right to cast the votes of the church, yet they represent the church; they can only cast their own vote. In this sense they can and should represent the high priests and elders not "under missionary appointment."

Many who have studied these rules of representation that were presented by the direction of the Spirit, that the elders rejected when they took the reins in their hands, have concluded that they are just what the church needs, and they expect to see the time come when the present generation will be willing to let the proper ones hold the reins, and adopt that which was given by the direction of the Spirit, so many years ago. Let us now return to the old path, thus marked out by the Lord, and see how pleasant the walking will be.

CONCERNING ZION---PART 3

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

THE FOUNDATION OF THE CITY

He looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.—Hebrews 11:10.

We are now contemplating a beautiful city, to be known as Zion. We are told by the voice of inspiration that this city is to be built by the gathering of the Saints. To me this means ultimately more than simply having a few people assemble upon a certain spot of ground,—people whose lives are not regenerated,—and who have only a vague idea of the Holy City. To me it means first of all, the gathering of our mental, spiritual and material forces together, that we may be able to labor as one, being united in thought, effort and purpose, having a common hope, a common love, a common zeal, and a common goal.

Good old father Abraham looked for a city, and in his vision he saw a city with foundations. How strange, one may say; but did you ever think of a city without proper foundations? His vision led him to contemplate the very ground work of the city. "A city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Notice closely and you will discover that God is both the maker and the builder of that foundation. But we must not lose sight of the fact that men are to have a part in the building of the city. God has always worked through human agencies. Doctor Weymouth in his translation of the New Testament into modern English, renders our text thus: "He continually looked forward to the city which has the foundations, whose architect and builder is God." This makes clear the thought that the plans and specifications of the city are drawn up by God himself.

Now if you were going to build a city, what is the first thing you would think of doing? In order to erect a building the walls of which will stand it is necessary to dig deep until the solid foundation rock is reached. When the bedrock has been reached, good sound material must be worked into the foundation.

We build a city upon the same principles. Zion must be an abiding city, therefore, it must be built upon the eternal rock of truth, the rock of ages, the chief foundation stone, underlying the whole city. That stone is Christ. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Christ is the "bedrock, the everlasting foundation," and if we allow the slippery sands to lie between our building and the solid rock, our building will not stand. It is for this reason no doubt that the apostle gives the warning: "Let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon." Are we as judicious in this matter as we should be, think you?

To build a city requires labor, activity, on our part. We must work if we would accomplish. The first requirement is to pay careful attention to the plans and specifications of the city. The blue print should be studied with the utmost care. Its equal dimensions must be considered; the acquiring and aggregating of the material to be used for the building must be thought of. Before we build upward we must begin to dig downward. We must dig deep until we have located the solid rock of eternal truth. When this is done let us quarry the mine of our own soul until we find there the stones of truth and virtue that can be placed by us upon that solid rock we have located by digging. We may have to hew away many accretions from the stones we have quarried before we can properly place them in the foundation of our city. The chief effort, however, must be in properly laying the foundation upon the great and eternal foundation rock of truth.

Our material also figures largely in the work. If we place therein faulty stones, those without proper solidity, our foundation will give away as we begin to place the weight of the building upon it. If we place therein material that will corrode and decompose, our work will be an absolute failure. We must build with that material that is able to abide. We read: "Truth abideth forever and hath no end." Our city then, must be a city of truth, its foundations must also be truth. These truths cemented together by never-failing love for God and humanity will provide us ample material for our work. When the material has been gathered it requires methodical and persistent labor to properly place it in the sure foundation.

While we are thinking of the material with which to build, it is also well that we think of the qualifications of the builders, for it is written:

No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.

Men must acquire truth, love, virtue, temperance, wisdom, knowledge, willingness, and energy to enable them to labor with God in the building of the city. Before the city can be built the foundation must be properly laid. The foundation of Zion is not stone, brick, mortar, and cement only,—these things may figure in the erecting of the outer or visible city,—but the true city must have as its foundation the law of rightness, unadulterated truth, a profound love for human justice, a willing heart and mind, and a ready hand in the performance of altruistic service. The apostle in summing up the things that abide names them as, "Faith, hope, love," so that these things immovably fixed upon the Christ who is the "ground and pillar of truth," will serve as a suitable foundation for the city of Zion.

Let it be distinctly remembered, however, that the laying of this foundation requires effort, persistence, tact, energy, and endurance. We cannot loiter along with the fond hope that some day the visible city will be built, and we can then enter it bodily and find rest; for this can never be. In this life we get what we work for. We are able to enjoy only that which we have acquired for ourselves, and we enjoy it not alone but by sharing it with others. So it is in laying the foundation of Zion, the specifications furnished us by the great Architect provide that it shall be so laid that there will be ample provision for all. The regulations for the laying of the foundation preclude every chance of selfish, covetous ambitions.

Now brother, sister, friend, I wish to make an appeal to you and ask of you, are you laying this faultless foundation? Have you delved deep in quest of the solid rock? Or is the foundation you are laying built upon the sand? If you have not removed the surface soil that lies between your structure and the solid rock of Christ, you will one day discover to your great chagrin that your labor has been for naught, because the storms of passion and the floods of grief that will beat against your structure will cause it to fall, and great will be its ruin.

If we lay the foundation of truth and love in our lives so that our characters become so closely allied to Christ that we assume his very likeness in our dealing with men and things, then, and only then, can it be said of us that we are laying the foundation of the city of Zion. The foundation then of this city is rightly laid within ourselves, as individuals, and as a church. Individual and collective rightness is the only sure foundation that can be laid,—all other matters will simply be shifting sand. Upon this sure foundation of righteousness the city beautiful, the habitation of the pure in heart, can be built.

Isaiah the prophet says: "Her watchmen shall all see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion"; indicating to the writer beyond any shadow of doubt, that before the Lord can establish for us the heavenly city, we the watchmen for the pure in heart must receive a common vision of the fatherhood of God, and the brotherhood of man. We must unitedly see the need of an altruistic service, and lay the foundation for such in our own lives and characters.

May the God of love and all grace assist us to that end.

My next will be, "The building of the city."

(To be continued.)

REVERSE LEVER OF CRITICISM

The preacher delivers a sermon, and it becomes public property. Therefore the people have a right to criticize. For a moment I shall use the "reverse lever,"—in other words, criticize the critics!

The preacher has no right to aim his gun at the private sin harbored by one of his audience, but if the sin has had a general effect, or is a general sin, he may attack it and be in perfect order. That the speaker has a perfect right to criticize conditions which may affect his audience; and that the auditors have a perfect right to criticize the speaker, no doubt all agree. But some folks surely abuse their rights.

We often boast that Latter Day Saints are such great critics. That is, we wish to pay a compliment to our ability to discern and discriminate. But we should be very careful to discriminate between criticism and faultfinding! Criticism is constructive. Faultfinding is destructive. Criticism misapplied, degrades to faultfinding.

We sometimes utter our thoughts (or lack of thought), and in reply to timely suggestion we boldly declare, "We told the truth, anyway!" Truth is truth, but there is a time, place, and way to tell it. "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."—Proverbs 25: 11.

Some folks seem to be bothered with the "foot and mouth disease,"—that is, every time they open their mouth they get their foot in it!

A gentleman, the husband of a refined and lovely woman, got despondent, and one day while his wife was gone wended his way to the large attic and committed suicide by hanging himself. Days passed. He was laid to rest. The relatives had come and gone.

Mrs. Mary Dooley, a neighbor lady, desired to run over and console the widow. Mr. Dooley kindly said, "Now, Mary, you know you are eternally speaking up at the wrong time, and saying inappropriate things, so you had better stay away." Mary promised that if he would consent to her going that maybe her presence would help, and she would not say a word about the recent, sad affair. So Mary entered the home of the widow, and immediately remarked that the weather was damp and disagreeable. The sorrowing widow replied that it was very, very inclement, and that it was almost impossible to get the washed clothes dry. But Mary said, "It seems that you should not have much trouble in that, as you have such a nice big attic to hang things in!"

And so it is with some people, they shut off the power that runs their thinker (if they are fortunate enough to have one), while they mercilessly "buzz" their talking apparatus. One may spend two weeks trying to construct, and get people to thinking, and in fifteen minutes' time some anarchist can dynamite the whole thing! I say anarchist because there is neither law nor order applied to the wagging of his tongue.

I had just finished a sermon which had been delivered in my own peculiar way (peculiar to some because I got out of the old rut for a minute). Some nonmembers were present. They evidently liked the sermon. I heard one of them remark to an influential member of our church that "the sermon was good," when to my surprise (just slightly surprised), I heard our brother reply, "Yes—pretty good, but too many stories!" In other words, the brother was not pleased with the sermon, or possibly didn't like it because the other fellow did, and he was not content to hide his own misery, but felt, I suppose, that he was building the work by discrediting the apparent good accomplished. This is only one case out of "a thousand and one" that I have experienced since entering the mission field.

Jesus said, "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light" (Luke 16: 8). Yes, when you attend a musicale given by professionals, you have noticed that while one performs, the rest of the company give expressions of enjoyment, although they have heard the same recital until it has grown old to them. They know that appropriate expressions help intensify the attention of those they are trying to entertain.

An evangelist comes to town. Ministers of all Protestant churches assist him. Even though some of them do not approve of all his expressions and methods, they seldom allow a word or even an expression to throw discredit on the efforts.

A minister of this church conducted a series of meetings and drew big crowds. The presiding elder liked all of his sermons but one, and instead of boosting by dwelling on the number of sermons he enjoyed, he spent his time in talking about some unwise statements the minister had made in one sermon.

Now, anyone can readily see that such will not only discredit the one who delivered the sermon, but it will also hinder the work!

Taking charge of a meeting is no child's play. The one in charge will have enough to do if he performs his part well. I have been seated behind the pulpit expecting to deliver a sermon. With joy I listened to the music, which was appropriate. The audience, after listening to a beautiful and inspiring solo or anthem, were in a proper frame of mind for the sermon, and the speaker felt the psychological wave and expected a spicy and brief introduction, when lo, and behold, a string of announcements a yard long were cut loose, and besides a collection was taken. Ere that was finished about all the "preach" that the preacher had felt had left him, and the minds of the congregation were wandering all the way from the collection plates along that string of announcements to the war zone! It took the speaker ten minutes to get the attention of his audience, and the sermon then was not what it should have been, and yet the elder in charge no doubt was about the first to wonder why the sermon was not better.

Sometimes the one in charge introduces a speaker about like a gentleman once introduced a humorist at a Chautauqua. Said he, "We have a humorist with us to-day. We, your committee, did not all agree that it was just right in the sight of God to hire a humorist, and I for one voted against it, but he is here now, and we hope he won't disgrace the Chautauqua by saying too many 'foolish' things." Of course the effort of the humorist was a failure, and no doubt most all blamed him. The introduction (?) had killed the humorous germ in the speaker, and frozen the audience to their seats!

The members of a branch vote to send for a certain missionary, wishing him to deliver a few sermons. The presiding elder is not just in harmony about the matter, for he has heard that this particular minister has a "queer" way of telling things. The missionary arrives. The presiding elder is on hand, ready to give more advice in fifteen minutes than one could possibly use in a year. And so it goes:

There's nothing gives some folks such joy
As in the stands to sit,
And give the players good advice,
And tell them when to hit.
To tip them where to throw the ball,
Just when to steal or slide;
To rail against the umpire's word
And his decisions chide;
But still we wonder if these men
Who try to run the game
Have done enough in their own lines
To win success or fame.

Not many months ago I gave a series of lectures, and by doing some special advertising, we were greeted the first evening with a packed house. Extra seats had to be furnished. For several evenings the choir did well. But the very evening for the special lecture, in the face of a full house, the choir balked! Some one had said something about another's warbling. Others got offended, and there was trouble galore. Actions speak louder than words, and you may be sure the nonmembers "stopped, looked, and listened"! The evening's service was hampered and future efforts hindered. It did not bother the members present—they were used to it!

An old, worn-out declaration is about as follows: The preacher has nothing to do all day, and of course he can be at the church, ready to speak, every evening; therefore he seems to think the members who work all day, should be as active and punctual.

I do not know—we may have, in the ministry, some gentlemen of leisure who have nothing to do and plenty of time to do it. But I know some who spend the most of the day studying, distributing tracts, visiting the sick and the investigators, and yet they always appear on the "revival scene" in time to do their work. Well, if they did not there would surely be some sermonets on the subject of "punctuality" at the next testimony meeting.

The "children of this world" in time of revival meetings are quite loyal, and especially the members of the choir, who pledge to be there every evening if possible, and when they cannot attend they get some one to fill their place. Too many times we have those who go if they feel like it, and the weather is just right. With some, if needed to boost the meetings—hookworms are in evidence! If a social is in evidence—then the hookworms disappear.

After the speaker has been complimented by the august presence of three in the choir, the meeting closes, and he mingles with those present, not looking for a word of encouragement,—no! no! A compliment might give him the bighead. But he is expecting any moment to bump up against some good orthodox (?) member who is prepared to ask why he did not use this passage to prove that point. He expects to be informed as to how he could have bettered his effort by proving the modern railway train, the street car, the automobile, or some other "jitney" vehicle by Nahum's prophecy! And say, brother, why did you not give them something to think about by discussing where Cain got his wife, and who performed the ceremony? And above all things, young man, you should never give a different interpretation to the prophecies than has been given by our "old elders," for in doing so you may weaken the faith of some, and many will brand you a heretic, and declare that you are indiscreet.

Well, have you ever noticed:

When the other fellow airs his views he is an "egotist"; when we air ours we are performing a "public service."

When the other fellow believes thus and so he is an "heretic"; when we do we are "apostolic."

When the other fellow agrees with us he is an "apostle of sanity"; when he does not he's a "fool."

When the other fellow has a scheme it is "visionary"; when we have, it is a "discovery."

When the other fellow criticizes us he is a "fossil"; when we criticize him we are "discriminating."

When the other fellow defers to the powers that be he is "toadying"; when we do we are using "tact."

When the other fellow kicks it is because he is "sore"; when we do it is from a sense of "duty."

When the other fellow speaks out he is "erratic"; when we do, it is because we are "fearless."

When the other fellow is making a reputation it is because he is "sensational"; when we get ours it is because "of hard work."

When the other fellow fails we blame "him"; when we fail we blame the "other fellow"!

It is easy to sympathize with those who are afflicted, or the young preacher who mostly fails in attempting to discourse; but it seems miserably difficult for some folks to "sympathize with joy," or in other words, to rejoice with those who rejoice, because of success.

The following from a modern advertisement seems in order:

We are not trying to outdo the other fellow. If other stores are brighter and better than ours we are glad, but we are simply trying to get ahead of ourselves.

WHICH IS THE GREATER?

Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well-wisher to posterity, pledge his life, his property, and his sacred honor to the support of the Constitution and the laws.—Abraham Lincoln.

Lincoln had reference to our federal Constitution. How many pledges could Christ obtain to his constitution as outlined in the New Testament Scriptures? Answer, five hundred million. But stop. Let us take another count. We do not mean the New Testament taken merely as a moral code and an historical record. We mean the New Testament taken as a constitution, with its officers and their qualifications, powers, and duties prescribed, together with its morals and history. Result: four hundred and ninety-nine million, nine hundred and fifteen thousand of the five hundred million will not pledge themselves to it.

What is the matter? Answer: "Why, those apostles, prophets, sevens, etc., having the qualifications and powers mentioned, meet our objection. We think good moral men having good college titles and a desire to officiate can minister as well as the officers provided in the New Testament."

But would that kind of logic hold good relative to our federal Constitution? Could we say such men could officiate as president, congressmen, or judges of the supreme court without the steps stated in the Constitution?

OUR FEDERAL CONSTITUTION

This is the supreme law of the land. Any office created contrary to its provisions is unconstitutional. Any law passed contrary to its limitations is void. It is not a cob house to be torn down and rebuilt according to the notions of would-be builders. Its officers are named, the qualifications of incumbents stated, and their duties defined. In case of death, resignation, or removal from office, vacancies are filled and the governmental machinery works as perfectly as ever.

CHRIST'S CONSTITUTION

The above statements apply equally to Christ's constitution, but more binding if possible.

THE TWO

Imagine a federal constitution providing for the qualification, powers, and duties of president, congressmen, and judges of the supreme court, and its supporters failing to place the incumbents in office. Yet that is the way in which the scriptural constitution is supported by many, many people. The qualifications, powers, and duties of apostles, prophets, sevens, etc., are provided therein, while in modern Christendom certain other officers officiate, whose duties are undefined, nor is the office named.

Think of an assessor or a judge with these qualifications,—a college title and a desire for the work,—chosen to act in a federal office. Insane! Unsafe! Unsound! the millions cry out.

Think of an individual whose qualifications and office are unknown in scripture parlance—merely claiming a college title and a desire for the work—being chosen to act in a leading office of the scriptural constitution. Sane! Safe! Sound! the same millions declare.

A fraternal organization draws up its constitution. It would not attempt to carry on its work with the presidency vacant.

God and Christ drew up their constitution. Rest assured they will never attempt to carry on their work without it. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."—Amos 3:7. So the prophet presides over the church here. From the beginning, in every dispensation the true church has been presided over by a prophet—and it is so now.

The Pharisees, Sadducees, Essenes, and other religious institutions of Christ's time carried on their church work without the scriptural presiding authority. Did it make any difference then what church a person belonged to? Christ's church had the unalterable constitution. Were people saved who drew up other constitutions for creeds? Paul held office and citizenship under a creed constitution, and later under the scriptural constitution: His epistles answer the question.

Here are the qualifications for one of the federal offices:

No person shall be a representative who shall not have attained the age of twenty-five years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Here is the scriptural qualification for an office under Christ's constitution: "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." Aaron was called by revelation through the Prophet Moses. Two things essential—revelation and a prophet. With you, fellow churchman, how much preference is given to the former? With us, both are at par.

Here are the qualifications, in substance, for naturalization under the federal Constitution: Except a man maintain five years' residence, having taken out in the meantime, a legal paper declaring his intention to become a citizen and another completing his citizenship, he cannot become a citizen of the United States.

And these for naturalization under the scriptural constitution: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." These are the two steps necessary after having complied with the principles of repentance and faith, as Paul declares in Hebrews 6: 1, 2. If the latter clause had one inch of space in the federal Constitution for churchmen to observe, there would be but one church, as there is but one federal Union.

POSITIONS EXCHANGED

Without advocating the union of church and state, let us ask, What would be the change in affairs were the two above scriptural clauses placed in the federal Constitution, and the two federal clauses placed in the Scriptures? The church would be officered and aliens become naturalized in one straight, narrow, rigid way because of the coercive power supporting the federal. The scriptural constitution lacks this coercive power, and it might be amusing to note the different ways in which our Government would be officered and aliens become naturalized. Perhaps some would say these clauses only applied when the Union was just getting started; and it is likely there would be five hundred different ways of getting officers and citizens for the Union, as there are five hundred different ways of getting officers and citizens in the Christendom of our country.

TIME AND MONEY

The funded war debt of the countries of Europe now amounts to something like $30,000,000,000, while the total cost of the war direct and indirect, is hardly less than three times that amount.

But what does $30,000,000,000 mean to us? If this war debt were to be paid at the rate of $1 per minute, without interest, the payment would extend over a period 57,059 years.

We are totally incapable of grasping the significance of figures which are set down in the form of a dollar sign and ten numerals. . . .

Had a sinking fund been started in the year 500 B. C., and $1 a minute paid into it from that time to this, the total would be less than will be spent by the present Congress if the preparedness measures go through.

Mr. Rockefeller's fortune represents an accumulation of $1 a minute since the birth of Christ.

The amount which J. P. Morgan is commonly reputed to be making off the war would be expressed by a salary of more than $1,000 a day from the time of Shakespeare.

This shows something of the vast stretches of time which would be necessary to accumulate some of the fortunes of to-day were they not recruited by means of commissions, interest and reinvestments.

The startling results obtained from modern financial methods may be illustrated by an exaggeration of the workings of interest. . . . You would do better to trust to interest at the rate of 100 per cent a minute, for just one hour's time, than to try simple accumulation from the days of the cavemen.

Specifically, if you had $1 at 8 o'clock this morning, and made 100 per cent a minute on it for one hour, your fortune would amount at five minute intervals to the following sums:

At 8.05 o'clock, $32.

At 8.10 o'clock, $1,024.

At 8.15 o'clock, $32,768.

At 8.20 o'clock, $1,048,576.

At 8.25 o'clock, $33,554,432.

At 8.30 o'clock, $10,737,741,832.

That is far enough to carry it in detail, but at 8.34 o'clock you would own the entire United States, at 8.36 o'clock every dollar's worth of personal and real estate on earth would belong to you, and from that time on you would begin to take mortgages on the solar system and outlying sections of the universe.

It is only because we cannot get through our heads the significance of rapid accumulation, and because dollars in billions are merely rows of numerals, that we look calmly upon the war debts of Europe, . . . and the vast fortunes which a few men have piled up as a threat against the safety of the Nation.

Great fortunes have been acquired through a sort of compromise between straight accumulation and the 100 per cent interest method outlined above. Doesn't it make you wonder what will happen in another hundred years if we don't levy a good stiff inheritance tax?—Des Moines (Iowa) Register, January 18, 1916.

JUDICIAL ABSURDITIES

In the trial at Clayton, Missouri, of one Beverly C. Stevens, charged with obtaining money under false pretenses, a certain section of the indictment read thus:

"That B. C. Stevens, jr., on or about the 22d day of July, 1914, feloniously, designedly, knowingly and fraudulently" procured money from one George H. Reichard by means of a spurious deed of trust.

Just as the case was going to the jury Judge McElhinney, before whom it was being tried, instructed the jurors to bring in a verdict of acquittal, which they did.

The ground for this instruction was that the word "did" was omitted in the indictment between "1914" and the word "feloniously."

Everybody in the courtroom apparently understood the charge. The defendant certainly was under no misapprehension concerning what he had to answer. The jury knew what was what. Even the learned judge probably knew. Yet the absence of that did served to set free one who might have been absolutely guilty and a menace to his community.

The judge cited "authority" of his State supreme court for his act, and there are many such "authorities."

It is such "authorities" and judicial acts which bring the courts into popular contempt and prevent their commanding the respect necessary to insure for them their proper usefulness.—Chicago Herald, April 25, 1915.

"ALCOHOL AND MY FUTURE"

EDITORS.]

Suppose a man to-day would invent a drink that would make the people sick, the husband cruel, people insane, and mothers indifferent about their children.

The world would be shocked and the drink would not exist perhaps a day. Alcohol, to-day, is doing the very same thing and that's why we are writing about "Alcohol and my future."

I have never heard of anybody bootlegging flour or any other food yet. Why do they bootleg whisky and beer, because they are not a food?

It is well to call a drunk man a runaway body, because he has no control of himself.

When a man buys a drink of whisky he doesn't pay for it only in money, but he pays part with his character, body, and at last his soul.

How alcohol eliminates earning capacity:

Almost every boy in Haskell has seen advertisements of help wanted and boozers need not apply. What does this mean? It means that an abstainer gets the job.

I believe alcohol has already presented enough scenes of its ravages to the Nation, so it ought to be put out now.

We might do well to picture alcohol as an octopus in the middle of a nation, just reaching out and taking it, individual by individual.

If the faucet is not turned off, that will surely happen to poor Uncle Sam.

One more thing, I must here make a solemn resolution not to have anything to do with alcoholic drinks, but to hit it hard, and try and turn the faucet off, when my turn to vote comes.

"Push Me"

We have a good-natured Bear, who is superintendent of the Far West District who wrote "Push me—I like it." He intimated the result would be that the local superintendents would also get pushed. If to this he adds the right kind of gospel ginger, something will move in his district along right lines.

Our pushing out of the new report blanks for local and district superintendents has brought varied results all along the line. Some express appreciation, and say they now understand conditions as never before, and are determined to work for higher grade. Others merely sit up and stare silently at our impudence in asking for more of their time—we are left to imagine this for we get no reports. We wish the conventions of those districts would do a little pushing; but how are we to let them know without offending the superintendent?

Still others who are already busy and who would like to see results for their work, feel discouraged. They have been met with indifference and procrastination, mixed in some cases with ignorance, and they feel like quitting. As one has said, "Merely attending three or four conventions a year and presiding over routine business is not filling the office. That is only holding it; and I am not satisfied with that." They have pushed to the limit. They feel they can go no further.

With these we stop our pushing for the moment and take their arm for a little stroll to observe. We ask them to consider how patient God is; how long-suffering with human imperfections; how he has to wait for results; how long it has taken to bring the human race up to the present state of civilization. And see what this civilization is doing to-day in Europe! Yet God is not discouraged. He would not be God if he even had an impulse to quit. He sent his Son into the flesh, who knows what it means to feel discouraged, and yet he proved what perseverance and patience and faith is worth.

In every department of church work discouragement is in evidence. Getting reports is a problem in every movement among men which thrives by voluntary service, and in a world where the bread-and-butter question grimly claims first attention. And yet, there are bright spots in every department. We have many things to encourage us. That which should nerve us is the invincible, inflexible, determination of God and Christ to carry out an all-wise, well-thought-out program. In the very nature of it, error cannot win out. The right is sure to win, though its progress may seem slow to human minds.

We fear that some of our best superintendents have been tempted to decline to serve longer at the conventions recently held, mainly because they have a larger view, a keener appreciation of what is required to build up the Sunday school work. This, coupled with conscientious, loving regard for the Master's work, causes them to feel that some one else ought to take up the work. Where we had an opportunity to learn of such, we have urged them not to decline unless they felt sure another as well qualified and with more time to give to it had been nominated.

We have reason to believe better days are ahead. We, ourselves, have not been able to see very much for our efforts at times. We no sooner train superintendents so they can cooperate with us than another new hand has been elected in his place. And that work must be done over again. We have not been able to see much progress along these lines. The field is large and we cannot reach all of it as we would like. But we believe that plans are being considered which if thought practicable will be presented to the next conventions of Religio and Sunday School and also the General Conference, and which will bring relief along these lines. Watch for them in General Conference news.

We too have been pushed—by circumstances over which we had no control. Reports from over threescore districts have come in every quarter, revealing lack of understanding and asking for explanation. Added to this were personal problems—(we, too, have our troubles).

The cradle roll work is advancing rapidly. District after district has appointed superintendents for this work. Every one of them has asked for guidance and instruction on reporting. We have had to devise report forms covering all the points of activity for this department. Busy district superintendents have passed problems and queries in different departments of their work on to us. Thus our correspondence piled up. We sought in vain for stenographic help, until lately, and now the convention arrangements are pressing upon us. But we hope to meet the body with a clear eye, with a vision of future possibilities, and a program for better attainments.

Helps

It is when we are pushed to the limit that we begin to contrive and plan; which develops our mental machinery. It is not a bad thing to be pushed—sometimes. At the coming convention we intend to demonstrate the uses of a simple, inexpensive duplicator, which will be welcomed by Sunday school and Religio district officers as a time-saver and a help in reaching their people. Some of the uses of this duplicator, such as getting out form letters, duty-rousing memos and a follow-up series, will be presented in the superintendent's conference.

Those who can not attend the convention may learn about this duplicator by writing us direct. We will furnish information and samples of work. One of our best superintendents has decided to quit because he hadn't the time to do the writing which the work called for. This duplicator would help him so much that we believe he might decide to stay on the job.

Can You Talk to Children?

How many of our ministers know how? Never before in our connection with this work have we been so impressed with the need of our parents, teachers and ministers studying and cultivating the ancient art of story-telling. We have been made to feel very anxious when reading inquiries from primary teachers in which it was very evident they were seeking to depend too much upon artificial aids in their teaching, and all because they do not understand the value and power of a well-told lesson story.

One superintendent had nearly decided to discard our own Beginner lessons in favor of a picture method (with slight explanations) from another publishing house, apparently ignoring pictures recommended by Beginner editor, one cent each. He said, "You are aware that little folks grasp more readily what they see than what they hear." This impression is quite common.

We do not wish to minimize the value of object teaching and of pictures in lesson work. But it must be evident that a picture can not teach itself. It requires some explanation. Object lessons are not complete without the teacher element. The inexperienced teacher, failing to see results (such as interest) from their stories naturally feel that it is not what the child hears but what it sees, that creates interest. They fail to discern that the cause is in their own inability to tell the lesson story properly. Did anyone ever see children listless and inattentive while listening to a well-told story? If to that we add a judicious use of objects and pictures, we have an ideal combination. Of the two, the story is the indispensable foundation of all teaching of little ones in home and school.

What is it that makes a well-told story? We plan to give the story-teller's art some prominence at the coming convention. Actual demonstrations by experienced teachers will be given. Principles underlying the art will be explained; the best books on the subject recommended, also magazines devoted to the art.

WHO WILL RESPOND?

Latter Day Saints have in the history of the coming forth of the great restoration, ideal material for story-telling—true stories, based on fact, in fulfillment of Bible prophecy. If possible, we would like to arrange for a daily story-tellers' circle during the conference, at which the stories concerning the latter-day work would be told and studied.

With a view to making this feature of the convention a success, we ask teachers and parents and writers all over the church to write short stories for children in the primary age taken from the history of the church and the Book of Mormon, such as, The first vision, The finding of the plates, The bringing forth of the book, Persecutions and the protections accompanying the same.

The stories should not be over two thousand words. They should be mailed to the general superintendent at Lamoni, Iowa, not later than March 25. The collection will be examined by experts and the best ones read at convention, or published later.

We are not going to offer a prize, but every one will be acknowledged later on through this column, and the ones coming nearest to the standard and usable in class work will be so mentioned. If possible we would have a criticism on every one by competent judges and returned to the writer for his or her benefit; also suggestions as to what book or books they ought to secure to further improve in the art.

We recognize through experience in past conventions and conferences how much there is to do and how little time in which to do it. For this reason we may have to modify our tentative plans very much. The man without a vision can never accomplish anything. He may not realize all that he sees and feels is desirable. But he stands a chance of seeing something materialize.

Seed, Cultivation, and Soil

(Synopsis of an address before convention of Nauvoo District, February, 1916, by Miss Ethel A. Lacey, the district superintendent.)

What would we think, I wonder, if a gardener gathered up a handful of seeds, here from a barrel, there from a box, and again from a bag, with utter disregard of kind or habits; and then with equal disregard as to fitness of season, scattered them broadcast in his garden, here a clay bank, there a gravel bed, again a rich patch of loam but hidden in heavy shade, and still again, a bramble patch that has used up the richness and fertility of the soil? How much more, then, should we use care in the sowing of the gospel seed in the hearts and minds of our boys and girls,—the soil which is given us if we will, to enrich, cultivate, and make fertile and productive of fruit even unto eternal life.

Leaving our simile a moment, let me ask, What is teaching? Would we have our boys go from us with their minds full of the stories of valor, of honor, and courage, and integrity of Bible characters, to indulge in games and pastimes that are questionable, tainting their honor and cleanness, rough, and inconsiderate of their mates? And would we have our girls go from us able to repeat their lesson verbatim, to indulge in that which is unkind or unjust, in little deceptive tricks, or anything that would taint their maidenliness? Then, to cause to know is not enough. We should cause to do as well,—actions, the fruit of the seed sown.

Now, back to our gardener, and I want to borrow and adapt an illustration used by another. As our expert gardener (the intensive farmer we would call him to-day) gathers up his seed, he would do so taking into consideration its habits, the plant it would produce, and the food properties necessary to its growth. First then, his study is his seed. Then he must know how best to cultivate it; what of transplanting or trimming the plant may need. Of equal importance with either of these is a knowledge of the soil, what qualities it has that will serve as food to the seedling, and what may be supplied by careful tending and fertilizing.

The comparison is plain: The seed is our lesson subject-matter, that part of the gospel story which we seek to implant in the hearts of our boys and girls, to bear fruits unto eternal life. The method is the way in which we may present our lesson material the most surely to bear the desired fruit. The pupil is the soil: his needs, his disposition, what we may supply to make the soil of his heart and mind the more fertile. The study of method and the "soil" are so closely connected that we can well afford a brief comment on the former.

QUESTIONING

We find in the younger classes more need of the lecture or story method, where the teacher by a talk, or the telling of the lesson story, seeks to impress the lessons of the day, supplemented by pictures, objects and handwork, and following it with questions to fix the teaching points. So even there the question method plays an important part, and should be used the more as the classes advance.

Has it occurred to you, I wonder, that the very way in which we ask our questions has much to do with our success? Where is the attention of the class when the teacher begins with the first printed question, finger on place lest he miss a single word, and reads mechanically through? I have watched such classes: one looking out of the window; another watching the class next to them; the girls comparing rings; and the boys comparing pocket knives, etc. Let us, then, make our questions:

1. Original; even though they be practically the substance of the quarterly question, still, ask them of the class and not of the quarterly.

2. Suppose I have a class of five—either boys or girls, for they're alike in some things if they aren't in all. Three of them are bright, eager, assertive, and ready to show their knowledge of the lesson and interest in it. Two are shy and quiet, and perhaps not so quick, who always choose the corner seat and have little to say. Who gains the most benefit from a question? Of course, it's the one who answers it. Then would not the fairer way, and the surest for the development of all, be to make our questions personally direct? Such a question cultivates deference to one another and inspires interest and enthusiasm equally, and need not lose us time if, not obtaining a ready response, we refer the question quickly and pleasantly to the class as a whole, or even to another member.

3. The question should be clear. By way of contrast, I ask, "Who was David?" There are several answers which might be given, and it would not be clear to the mind of the pupil which answer is desired. On the other hand, if I ask, "Who was the second king of Israel?" the question would bring a definite answer.

4. Suggestive. The question should be suggestive, not of the answer, but of the thought. One which calls for simply yes or no leaves no impression on the mind, while a sentence answer, or even a word leaves its mark.

5. Lastly, our questions should be spiritual. Not every question, we know, can point a moral, but it should lead to one,—to the life lesson around which the story centers.

QUESTIONS TO AVOID

In sharp contrast are four groups of questions we should avoid:

1. Frivolous, or unimportant questions. With just one half hour, we cannot well afford to use our precious time with, "What do you suppose he looked like?" or by asking round the class if each one has studied, when a few quick questions on the lesson itself would give us that information.

2. Questions that are entangling, confusing, and based on speculation, do not build for good, and use the time we need.

3. Leading. For example, "Wasn't David king of Israel?" suggests the answer without thought on the part of the pupil.

4. Personal. I have heard teachers say, "Now, Johnnie, you're not going to be naughty and stubborn like Mary, are you? Just see,—she won't do a thing I ask her to. You're not going to do that way, are you?"

And then wonder why the stubbornness seemed only the worse!

I recall in my own experience, a time when I was the size of some of our little folks here. I had committed some childish misdemeanor during the week for which mother had chided me, and I was feeling quite contrite when Sunday morning came. It just happened that the teacher that morning enlarged and dilated on that particular offense. How naughty it was for boys and girls to do such things! Did we suppose God would love boys and girls who did such things? And then, "Has anybody in the class ever done that? If you have, raise your hands!" I doubt if that teacher would have the same influence with me as before to this day.

THE DIVINE SOIL

So much for the method. We hasten now to a consideration of some qualities of the soil itself. There are several qualities which we find in all our soil, to a greater or lesser degree, which we must use and bend our efforts to develop!

1. Attention. In the early months of the child's life, the attention is largely involuntary; but as his control asserts itself he gives his attention where lies the chief interest. It devolves upon us as teachers to hold it; to so concentrate our own that it will draw the child's as a magnet; and to present our material in such a way that, of his own volition his attention is ours. As our Intermediate editor has put it, we have the "whole boy" at Sunday school.

2. Sensation, the impression produced upon the mind through any one of the senses. It is a recognized fact that we remember a greater proportion of what comes to us through the sight and through the other senses. Hence the importance of object-lessons and handwork in the younger classes, and of the home-work throughout. One of our senior teachers told us at teachers' meeting that he asked his class to write the answers to the quarterly questions while studying, and that those who did so invariably showed a better knowledge of the lesson.

3. Perception, the impression retained of sensations. The importance of this faculty is, we think, considered sufficiently for our present purpose, by considering number two.

4. Memory, the power of recalling, of calling back at will, the impressions, is one of the most important faculties in our development, both spiritual and mental. It is recognized that we memorize more readily in our younger years, and retain the longest that which we learn in youth, which fact should the more strongly impress us with the importance of our work. The important thing here is not to burden the memory with unimportant details and data, but to confine memorizing to texts and facts of importance which could and would affect a life, and establish a principle of truth and its harmony with all truth. Reviewing by ingenious methods is helpful in all grades, especially in the primary.

5. Imagination, the power of imaging, or constructing mind pictures, not only of that which we have experienced, is an important faculty, helpful to the teacher if used carefully; but beware of using it unless the teacher can see the picture herself. Three quick lines for a boat, and a wavy line for the water, will place before the child, not those three lines, but a boat riding in the waves of Galilee, if accompanied by a word picture from the teacher.

6. Judgment. The reasoning faculty begins almost with the "Why?" age; and of all our powers it needs the most careful training. Students of mind growth agree most gratefully with the word of the Lord, that the age of accountability begins approximately at eight. What^{is} accounting but reasoning, or giving a reason for?

As the physical develops, the judgment grows proportionately, and as the new physical powers assert themselves, we reach the period which one writer has termed the "upheaval of youth." This is the most trying time for both teacher and pupil, but it has been demonstrated that the questioning attitude, the seeming uncertainty which has every appearance of doubt, is not in fact unbelief, but rather a desire to prove for oneself. If met with reasoning, a reasonable explanation, the trying time may be tided over and the questioner established in the truth. Far be it from us to meet such questioning with contempt or rebuke, or even with lightness, and thus quell the growing power of our boys and girls; or, what is even worse, send them elsewhere for their answers, to receive worldly explanations that will harbor skepticism and genuine unbelief. Will, the god-given right of agency, cannot be formed or forced, but only trained by careful guidance of the judgment.

7. Emotions. Last of the qualities of our soil but far from least in importance, are the emotions. We may pride ourselves overmuch, I fear, in that "ours is a reasoning faith." So it is, and for that we are thankful; but the Master has said, "Where your heart is, there will your treasure be also." Are we inspiring the love and confidence of our classes by our own lives, by our love for and confidence in them?

THE PRODUCTIVE GARDEN

We must hasten now to a brief consideration of some of the influences affecting the fertility and productiveness of the soil. We have:

1. The home.
2. Companions.
3. Recreation.
4. Reading.
5. The school.
6. The street.

Do you ask, How can a Sunday school teacher be concerned with such matters in the individual lives of his pupils? Surely, it is a sacred duty that we should know at least something, in general, of these influences.

The home influence, it is to be hoped, is good among our own people. But we may have boys and girls from elsewhere, and in either case, the teacher may make this more or less a helping factor by an occasional call in the home, consultation with the parent as to the needs of the boy or girl. We cannot, of course, know all the acquaintances and mates of those in our class, but if we know what sort of companions they seek we can offer timely suggestions as to the qualities and character desirable in the friends we choose.

If we know the sort of games and recreation sought, we can judge better as to what is needed of gentleness, courtesy, fairness, square dealing, etc.

We cannot know every book read, but we can know whether the writers chosen are good, and those whose plots and characters are pure and high, and free from the oversensational and overemotional that are just as surely stimulants and intoxicants to the mind and the body through the mind as any we could take into the mouth. We may know whether the atmosphere of the school is tainted with the skepticism which is gaining such an appalling growth, and seek to meet it.

We may caution against the signs, the language, the glare, the lure, and the call of the street and its amusements,—“the chaff and chips of life,” as I heard our Religio president put it, to his class. He told of a young man who was living in and for the pleasures of the world. His mother asked him to bring her a basket of chips. When he brought it heaping full she said, “Now, put an apple on it.” The apple of course would not stay. From this she drew the moral: He was filling his mind and time with pleasures that were chips, and leaving no room for the more wholesome pleasures, and for the “fruits of the Spirit.”

KEEP ON SHELLING P'S

We may sum up our success by relating an incident told by Marion Lawrence. He told us of a pastor in the East who had a Bible class of forty or fifty, and more were brought into the church through this class than any other known. When asked as to his method he said, “I just keep on shelling my pod of P's.” Here they are:

1. Preparation. We need not say to our consecrated teacher that this means more than a hasty glance at the lesson just before class time. Marion Lawrence again has said, “The most pitiable sight is a teacher teaching all he knows.”

2. Perseverance. When I speak of this, I think of the parable of the ninety and nine. How long did the Shepherd seek for the lamb that was lost? Not until he concluded it was mischievous and frolicsome, and was playing with him, but until he found it. Can we, dare we, sing, “Make us thy true under-shepherds; give us the love that is deep,” and leave the mischievous boy in the corner to his own devices, while we devote our attention to the ninety and nine who are safe, and demure, and well-behaved?

3. Prayer. Why is this not put first? It's in the center, where it belongs, and permeates both ways,—first, last and all the time.

4. Pour out: Our hearts, our lives so full of the message we are bringing, that it literally pours out, from us to the class.

5. Pull in: Drawing in by the magnetism of love into the safety, the security and the peace of the fold.

Blest feast of love divine!

'Tis grace that makes us free
To feed upon this bread and wine,
In memory, Lord, of thee.

—Edward Denny.

Pictures for Beginners

On account of copyright and other obstacles, our publishing house has experienced difficulty in procuring supplies for teaching material, especially pictures for the lessons. We expect this will be overcome in time. It will be impossible to provide all necessary teachers' helps, blackboard outlines, and other material until we get our lessons written far enough in advance to enable artists, writers on helps, etc., to get the work done. As soon as our lessons develop to a point approximating permanency, we can begin to provide all the helps so much needed by our workers.

The Herald Publishing House could supply the pictures selected by the editors, but the extra handling would increase the price and there would be delays in filling orders. To avoid this, we think it best for the present for teachers and superintendents of beginner departments to send direct to the editor, Mrs. Eunice Winn Smith, who will be glad to procure pictures and fill all orders promptly, as she is within phone call of the publishing house. There is surely no school so poor but it can pay one half to one cent for pictures.

In order that teachers and superintendents of departments may have ample time to order these pictures, we give below the list for the next quarter, April-June, the pictures mentioned by number in connection with the subject of each lesson.

Lesson 1. “The awakening of a tree.” Perry picture number 616; K. B. L. P., second year, number 26.

Lesson 2. “The awakening of the seeds.” Perry, number 510; “The sower.” (Same for handwork.)

Lesson 3. “The awakening of the little girl.” Picture of Jesus, number 3270, Perry. “Raising of the daughter of Jairus,” Perry, numbers 790 and 7970; Wilde, 81 and 548; K. B. L. P., second year number 21. This subject may be had in handwork size.

Lesson 4. “The awakening of Jesus.” Union, 161; Perry, 3356, 3258. The latter may be had in handwork size.

Lesson 5. “Jesus and the heavenly home.” “The ascension,” by Biermann, Union, 177. For handwork, Perry, 4004. K. B. L. P., second year number 27.

Lesson 6. “The awakening of all.” Perry, 797s. “Jesus in the home of Mary and Martha,” or number 280, “The last supper.”

Lesson 7. “The garden of Eden.” “The Angelus,” Perry, 509. Also to be had in handwork size. K. B. L. P., first year, number 28; second year, number 32.

Lesson 8. “Helping to care for the birds.” Perry, number 9086, “House-wren,” “Bluebird,” 9021; “Robin,” 9016. K. B. L. P., first year, number 29.

Lesson 9. “Helping to care for others.” Union, 183; Wilde, 603 and 604; Perry, 521, for handwork.

Lesson 10. “Praying for health.” Wilde, number 500, “Hezekiah destroying the idols;” number 1032, “Isaiah.” This may be had in handwork size.

Lesson 11. “Praying for help on a journey.” Union, number 57, “The return to Jerusalem.” K. B. L. P., first year, number 34; second year, number 39. Perry, 4123, “Artaxerxes granting liberty to the Jews.” Same for handwork.

Lesson 12. “Praying for deliverance.” A picture of Paul preaching may be used. Number 4177 is good in handwork size.

Lesson 13. “David praising God.” B, number 3194, like picture in the Quarterly, may also be had in the half-cent size for handwork, or Union, number 71.

Pictures in handwork size cost one half cent each; all the others mentioned are one cent each. Teachers and beginner superintendents may now order in plenty of time and have pictures on hand for the first lesson of next quarter.

Order from Mrs. Eunice Winn Smith, 112 West Ontario Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Secretaries of Districts

If you haven't already sent in your report for the year, and credential blank for delegates, please attend to the matter as soon as possible.

It is necessary to have these reports in hand early enough for printing.

Fuqua-Higdon Debate

We write with reference to the debate between E. C. Fuqua of the nonprogressive wing of the Church of Christ, and myself. No doubt Mr. Fuqua or one of his brethren has written to their papers and told of what a wonderful victory they gained, and that "Mormonism" is dead in Olathe, Colorado. We have but one member in that town. There has been no place for us to preach in the city.

The debate began December 10 and closed the 19th. I affirmed for five nights that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and the Book of Mormon of divine authenticity. Mr. Fuqua affirmed the last five nights that the Church of Christ, of which he is a member, is the church of Christ in fact, doctrine, and organization.

I brought out the doctrine which Joseph Smith gave to the world, including the fact that God is a personage and had been seen and conversed with by men. Mr. Fuqua said Christ said no man had seen God at any time; yet he acknowledged that God had walked and talked with Adam in Eden, since which time he had not been seen.

I contended that the words attributed to Christ were really the words of John, and that the qualifying clause, as my opponent had agreed, when according to his interpretation he said no man had seen God at any time except Adam, showed that the statement, No man had seen God at any time except he hath borne record of the Son, made the passages harmonize with other scripture cited.

Mr. Fuqua's first statement in regard to the Book of Mormon was that it was the production of Oliver Cowdery; his second that it was conceived in the fertile brain of Joseph Smith; his third that it was the Spalding manuscript.

He ridiculed the idea of believing in healing, tongues, prophecy, etc., saying they were done away. The young man I had chosen for my moderator, Brother Albert Rose, was taken sick with stomach trouble the day before the debate began. Mr. Fuqua said, Higdon knows there is no such thing as healing in the church to-day. The young man he has chosen for his moderator has been taken down with stomach trouble. Why doesn't he heal him? I replied that Paul had to leave a young man with stomach trouble too (1 Timothy 5: 23), and that he advised him to take care of himself. I showed that the Lord gives the different gifts severally as he will (1 Corinthians 12: 11).

Mr. Fuqua made light of the Inspired Version, and of course I produced the Living Oracles. He threatened to sue me for slander, but when I brought forth the history verifying the statement I had made, he did not say anything more about that. While I was trying to persuade him to record his name, saying that the history was not true, he arose to a point of order. The chairman asked him if he denied the statement in the history. He said, "No, but it needs to be read in connection with the fly-leaf of Living Oracles."

He dwelt at some length upon his scholarship, and of course my ignorance. But with all his scholarship and ignorant as I was made out to be, there were many friends made to the cause. The mayor of the town complimented me upon being clean in the debate, and said there was no need for my opponent using the language he did. I hardly felt able to meet so distinguished an opponent, and told Brother Peter Anderson so. His advice was for me to keep humble and stick to the subject. It affords much strength to a young man to know the man he is laboring under has confidence in him.

My earnest prayer to God is that we may all live so we will be able to meet all opponents to this latter-day work. I do not mean by this that I wish to be in debate continually. So far as that is concerned, I would like to keep out of discussions altogether, as my disposition is such that it is trying to have the religion of others shown to be not in harmony with the scripture. I like to preach an affirmative gospel.

Ever praying and working for the advancement of the cause we love, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

AMOS T. HIGDON.

DELTA, COLORADO, 326 Main Street, Mission Address.

MARION, MICHIGAN, January 30, 1916.

Editors Herald: It will be seven years in May since we moved to Marion. Brother S. D. Cudney and wife, Charlie Cudney and wife, were the only Saints living in Marion. Brother Charlie Cudney moved to Lamoni, leaving Brother S. D. Cudney and wife and myself the only ones belonging to the church here. Soon after we got settled we sent for Brother W. D. Ellis to come and preach for us. He baptized Brother N. Dingman, and interested some at Cadillac. Brother Dingman was the first one baptized in Marion. Soon after Brother A. E. Burr baptized some; other elders have baptized several.

A branch was finally organized by the missionary in charge, with A. M. Boomer, president, N. Dingman, priest, S. D. Cudney, deacon. A good work has been done here by the ministry. Our record gives a membership of seventy-six at present. A goodly number of these have been baptized by the branch officers, since the organization of the branch. The officers called and ordained are, Elder W. G. Hubbard, teacher, James Storey, deacon, Harvey Walters. All have done a good work.

Brother Thomas Johnson, assistant branch priest, has been preaching in Mount Pleasant. Brother W. G. Hubbard made an opening in a near-by place this summer. Those who have been baptized from there are, two in Cadillac, one in Marion. The record for the past year gives the addition of seventeen, eleven baptisms and six by letter. The secretary informs us that these are the first letters in our branch. We have now two elders, two priests, one teacher, two deacons. Our former priest, Brother Dingman, moved to Traverse City. Those added by letter include my mother, Brother Robert Morrison and family. Brother Morrison is a priest, very humble, and a live wire. He is now with Brother Campbell preaching at Leota. When at home he is busy in his office as branch priest. We find as a rule the branch officers willing to help the work along.

The writer looks back to the time when only one held the priesthood; at times the burden seemed very heavy; it now brings joy to have good humble men to help carry on the work.

The writer was called to Sherman City. Sister Norman of that place was very sick. Not being able to make connections with the P. M. line, we had to drive nineteen miles. Reaching there about 4.30 p. m., we found the sister very low. We administered at once. She was instantly relieved, but only for a time. We continued to do all we could for her. No permanent relief was given. We laid the case earnestly before God, pleading that if he willed he would raise her up, if not that she be allowed to pass away in peace. Our hands had scarcely been raised from her head when she peacefully passed away, a smile upon her countenance. The sister leaves to mourn a companion, five children. Services were held in the Disciple church, sermon by the writer. The influence of the sister was deeply felt by those around her. For miles the neighbors came to her funeral. The services were well conducted. Respect was shown the bereaved ones.

We were offered a place to preach in if we could stay. Some said they were well satisfied with what they had heard, though it was new to them. We could not remain longer, as conditions called us home, but not to make money, instead of answering to this call. The greatest joy of my life would be to stay with the mourners, and feed the hungry the bread of life, but my family must be fed and clothed, by my daily earnings. Nevertheless, this does not lessen the need of service. With bleeding heart I must turn away an opportunity to bring some one into the gospel. We do the best we can, praying that the way may be opened some day that we may be able to do more good in this work.

A. M. BOOMER.

WORCESTER, MASSACHUSETTS, January 10, 1916.

Editors Herald: We have been greatly blessed in our study and work in Clark University. From the first we have found our path smoothed by the record Brother Frederick M. Smith made while here. Constantly, on every side, we were met with, "You are friends of Mr. Smith, are you not?" or, "Do you know Mrs. Smith, who was here last year?" When we proudly acquiesce, we find ourselves deluged with inquiries and exceedingly sincere expressions of esteem for Mr. and Mrs. Smith. It is good to have such a sponsor, and the opportunities in the university have proved equally good.

We have lectures from splendid, broad-minded men, authorities in their subjects, who seem greatly interested in the welfare of their students, and since the number of students is small, we receive their personal attention. Also we spend many golden hours in the magnificent library, where we have table and alcove to ourselves—the one, by the way, which Brother Fred occupied last year. But if our year's work here should mean nothing else but contact with the wonderful, stimulating mind and kindly heart of our president, Doctor G. Stanley Hall, we would feel that our year had been by no means spent in vain.

Our experience also among the Saints of the district has been remarkably fine. We have had the good fortune to meet and to know many of our church people in various parts of this land of ours, but never have we found a district so full of "live wires." We meet here a score or more of well-trained, enthusiastic, consecrated workers—leaders and organizers. And seldom have we encountered such whole-hearted, splendid hospitality. It has been a rare privilege to meet with the district in conference and convention. We have received a wealth of inspiration from these spiritual feasts which we have drawn upon for many following weeks; for here in Worcester we have sadly missed the meetings of the Saints.

Our Christmas week was spent in an unusually pleasant and profitable manner. We had been invited to Doctor Sinclair's, in Boston, for Christmas Day, and as "long as you care to stay," and we arrived just in time for the turkey. We found a small dinner party already assembled, and, as the afternoon passed, more dropped in, till by evening the parlors were full. It was indeed a very merry Christmas, with the magnificent electrically lighted tree and the pleasant chat and laughter of the many guests.

We were very pleased to meet Brother and Sister U. W. Greene and daughter at the doctor's, and the next morning at church we listened to a very fine sermon from Brother Greene. When we entered the chapel we felt the spirit of Christmas peace and love. The room was hung with large, fluffy green stars, from which dangled masses of twinkling silver stars. On the wall in front was a beautiful, large painting of the "Shepherds abiding in their fields." Brother Greene took us back to the Holy Land—pictured to us vividly the journey of Mary and Joseph to Bethlehem, and the customs of the people there which made it possible that the Savior of the world should be born in a humble stable. He ended by proclaiming again the angel message delivered to the shepherds so long ago. He admonished us not to feel discouraged, that the peace of God was in human hearts and could never be taken away; that the peace and good will promised on the fields of Bethlehem would be passed from soul to soul until finally it echoed in the heart of every son and daughter of Adam.

At night the shepherd picture had been replaced by an even more beautiful painting of the Wise Men gazing upon the star as it rested far away over the little town of Bethlehem. Brother Burgess talked to us of that story, emphasizing the divinity of Jesus as the universal Savior, looked for and prayed for by all races of mankind in all ages; he showed us that even Confucius and Mohammed had pointed to him. We found upon inquiry that the pastor, Brother H. J. Davison, was responsible for the beautiful decorations and the paintings. It must be splendid to have such an artistic pastor.

Now we are home again, working away upon a few of the great number of things that must be accomplished before our school year closes. We both feel that this is our last year of preparation, and we are praying that we may have strength to make the preparation thorough and adequate for whatever service the Master may desire at our hands. And we ask earnestly for the prayers of the Saints, that we may be given wisdom and understanding to glean all the truth, leaving all the error as we study, and to choose the best to add to our little store of knowledge.

Yours in gospel bonds,

6 Lucian Street.

THE PLAINS, OHIO, February 11, 1916.

Editors Herald: The many friends of James Moler in Ohio, West Virginia, and Missouri, where he has performed ministerial services for the church for over thirty-four years, will regret to hear that he has suffered a partial stroke of paralysis, which occurred on Sunday the 6th, affecting the left arm and left side of the face, and a portion of the right side of the face. He is able to move around, and retains his mental faculties well, considering his condition. There is hope of recovery, or of a partial recovery at least. While fully aware of his condition and of possible results, he seems cheerful and patient, and takes great comfort in the association of relatives and friends who minister to him or call upon him in sympathy.

News from Missions

Southeastern Mission

As I look back over the field of action and make a close survey of the situation, I rejoice by reason of the lessons which I have learned in the great school of experience. Truly the gospel work is a work of education all along the way.

From December 13 to January 7, I labored at Jamison, Alabama, where the Brighamites have a nice church building in the country and a branch of about sixty members. They have a local elder in charge of the branch and three priests. In addition to these I came in contact with thirteen of their missionaries, which made seventeen of their ministry in all.

I was told by these people that their church building was open and free for all denominations to occupy, provided no collections were taken up. With this understanding, I preached in it eight times with excellent liberty to good-sized audiences most of the time. Favorable comments were heard in regard to the preaching, from those in authority, until by an urgent request from the elder in charge, sanctioned by the president of their conference, I preached on some of the differences between the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the Brighamite Church, which was brought into existence by Brigham Young and others after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Most of these differences were brought out after public attacks were made by President Stapely and another elder.

After making a defense of our position, to which President Stapely made a reply, and after I had announced that I would make another effort, I was given to understand by President Stapely and others that the church was closed against me under the plea that I had abused their people in that vicinity.

After their missionaries did what they could to keep me from getting the facts I had in hand before their members and others, they all left that vicinity for the purpose no doubt of keeping the facts from coming to light through controversy that was liable to arise between us in the presence of the people. The closing of the church against one Josephite, while seventeen of their ministers were there, was an evidence to others that there was something somewhere that they did not want the people to hear, or that they (the elders) had no confidence in their ability to defend the false doctrines taught by Brigham Young and others.

They have lately baptized one of our members (a sister) there. In order that the readers of the HERALD may know just what these people are doing, I quote from a written statement which the sister spoken of above signed in my presence, as follows:

"JAMISON, ALABAMA, January 7, 1916.

"This is to certify that I, ———, have lately been taught the principle of polygamy at this place by the elders of the Utah Mormon Church as stated in Utah Doctrine and Covenants, section 132, and believing the principles as stated therein are the laws of God which he has given for the exaltation of mankind, and having lately united with the Brighamite Church, I therefore request that my name be erased from the church record of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

"Signed by ———"

"In the presence of F. M. Slover."

I was told by an old man (one of their members) who seems to be very sincere and honest, that the leading elders had been telling him for the last eighteen years that they neither taught polygamy, believed in it, nor practiced it. The facts are they have been practicing it in Utah right along, also teaching it in some instances and denying it in others.

I was told by one of their missionaries that an angel appeared to Joseph Smith with a drawn sword and told him if he did not practice polygamy he would kill him. But the angel message to Joseph Smith in the Book of Mormon which contains the fullness of the everlasting gospel (Doctrine and Covenants 26:2), says in the Book of Jacob 2:36, "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none." The angel which this Brighamite elder speaks of, if such a thing ever occurred, contradicted the word of the Lord as taught in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church in the lifetime of Joseph Smith, and so does section 132 in their Doctrine and Covenants contradict the word of God as taught in all three of these records. We say with Paul, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed" (Galatians 1:8).

The folly of the Brighamite elders is being manifested wherever the work is correctly represented as taught by Joseph the Seer. Their Doctrine and Covenants, section 132:26, reads as follows: "Verily, verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife according to my word, and they are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, according to mine appointment, and he or she shall commit any sin or transgression of the new and everlasting covenant whatever, and all manner of blasphemies, and if they commit no murder, wherein they shed innocent blood—yet they shall come forth in the first resurrection."

Section 63:17, 18, Utah Doctrine and Covenants, shows that the fearful and the unbelieving and all liars and the whoremonger shall not have part in the first resurrection. Section 132 Utah Doctrine and Covenants, teaches that the Lord justifies one man in having many wives and concubines, and it also teaches that a man will be damned if he doesn't have them, while other parts of their Doctrine and Covenants teach that they will be damned if they do have them. Thus, as the saying goes, according to their book they will be damned if they do, and they will be damned if they don't. They are not the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints which was organized in 1830, and it is no surprise to those who know their history and doctrines, which have been taught and practiced by Brigham Young and others, that instructions have been given by the presidency of the dominant church in Utah to not discuss with the Josephites, but to let them alone.

Many of those whom they have gathered into their church do not know the facts in regard to the work as taught by Joseph Smith, and their elders are determined to keep these facts from coming to light, hence their reason for trying to prevent public controversy. No true Latter Day Saint is afraid to defend the truth.

Much more could be written that would be very interesting concerning my experience with that people, but space admonishes me that I must refrain. Will say, however, that the true church of Latter Day Saints does not close the doors of its church buildings for fear proof will be presented showing it is wrong in faith, organization, or practice. We say with Paul, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

I lately baptized nine at Range, Alabama, and three here. As I take a retrospect of the efforts that have been made, and the experiences I have passed through in my field during the conference year, which is rapidly drawing to a close, I can gladly testify that God has been with me by his power and love. The brethren who have continued with me in the field during the year have done well. The work of the Presiding Patriarch, while his stay was short, has been an uplift to the work. His kind words of encouragement will never be forgotten. We hope he can return often, to keep in close touch with the interest in this field.

May peace and love abide with all the faithful workers of the church everywhere.

F. M. SLOVER.

News from Branches

Woodbine, Iowa

I suppose it is generally known that Woodbine is in the Little Sioux District, but we seldom see anything in the church papers either from this town or the district. I have been impressed several times to write of conditions, but fearing that I could not write intelligently, because of failing sight and memory, and my hand not being as responsive to my mind as formerly, I have not yielded to my desire.

I am glad to say that we are not all dead, nor can I boast that we are as much alive as we ought to be. Yet I believe that many are desirous of honoring God and his cause, and are working to that end.

We are lacking ministerial timber for one thing, i. e., in this branch, and often have to borrow from other branches. The old preacher, who has been largely depended upon, is not always able to respond to the call of duty, and in fact has been unable most of the winter and is not able to do justice to the work now.

We have been favored for nearly a week with the labors of Elder Amos Berve of Sioux City, who did excellent work in instructing both Saint and sinner. Elder Berve is an able, earnest, devoted man, having a good knowledge of the work, plain and easy to be understood by the masses as well as the classes. I would to God we had thousands like him in the active ministry. I never met him before, though he has been in the district some time, mostly at Sioux City, but owing to weakness incident to old age, I have not been able to attend conferences in the district when he was there. I have been glad to form his acquaintance here, during his preaching.

I have heard that at the last district conference there was talk of requesting his return here, which I would be glad if it pleased the Lord so to direct. Not that the district officers are not good and worthy men, for I believe they have proved themselves good and useful men and workers in the cause; but we need some one that can devote his whole time to the district; and I believe they would continue to lend a helping hand to whomsoever the Lord directs to come here.

Our branch president is a good all-around man, honored by the whole community and loved by the Saints. He thinks he is no preacher, yet he gives good instruction to the Saints, and loves the cause. The other branch officers are good men, but cannot be persuaded to preach, lacking confidence in themselves, but not in the work. More than half of the names on the branch record are absent, their whereabouts unknown, hence we have not the numerical strength that we appear to have. The Sabbath school and Religio are medium, could be better, or a good deal worse. If all living here would do their duty we would have greater blessings than we now enjoy.

Wichita, Kansas

The snow and ice have disappeared. Mud and sunshine suggest approaching spring. Attendance at Sunday school and branch services continues good. Brother Young of Pittsburg, Kansas, instructed the Saints morning and evening last Sunday.

Brother E. C. Nelson has had the privilege of hearing Brother J. Arthur Davis preach at Bucklin, Pratt, and Dodge City, where services were held at the courthouses. Some interest is shown. Brother Davis is expected at Wichita next week, where he will hold a weeks' meeting.

A sister here will long remember the February sacrament meeting. The sister seriously burned her hand with concentrated lye about thirteen years ago. The hand never healed, though receiving the best medical care. The brother who administered anointed the hand and proceeded in the usual manner. Immediately following the administration a severe pain began in the shoulder, proceeded down the arm to the hand, and then passed off from the finger tips. The next morning the hand was well, and on Tuesday the sister was able to do her washing without harm to the hand that had been healed. Truly God is good to Israel.

IDA H. STEWART.

Independence, Missouri

We are glad to hear of the home-coming of some of the brethren who have been abroad for a time. We regret to have to record the late passing away of several of our loved ones from our midst.

The robins have not begun their spring songs yet, but it begins to look favorable for a cessation of piercing winds and wintry blizzards.

We are happy to note the efforts being put forth by a few of our young people to increase interest in the early prayer meetings every Sunday morning. There is considerable enthusiasm manifested among both old and young in the class work going on in the new culture movement. Very encouraging word comes from the classes of brethren who are studying civil government. There are large groups of sisters delving into the intricacies of sociology, child-psychology, etc., as taught by Miss Glines, a school-teacher, and Doctor Green and others.

Through the courtesy of Doctor Paquin, health commissioner of Kansas City, an interesting lecture was heard by over a hundred sisters on Sunday the 20th. The brethren too, accompanied by President F. M. Smith and Doctor G. L. Harrington, joined the audience in showing appreciation of the speaker's effort. His topics were the treatment of children in cases of epidemics, neglect of laws of health, scarlet fever, diphtheria, measles and all disease usually incident to childhood.

The health inspectors of our sister city are surely carrying on a lively crusade against "germs," and an effort of that kind is contemplated by our doctors here.

Among the elders lately occupying the pulpit are Brethren Charles Fry, M. H. Bond, Peter Anderson, Bishop Keir, and Israel A. Smith, who on the 6th discussed the subject of ancient documents, and especially the four evangels. In the short time allotted he critically scanned the writings of Greenleaf and Stowe, going as far back as Eusebius, to prove the authenticity of the New Testament Scriptures, giving the large audience present the benefit of his research. He called to mind the valuable Greek texts, the voluminous manuscripts, the precious copies stowed away in the Vatican, their safety, the amazing length of time of their repository and preservation, and the witnesses furnished,—all this supportive of an implicit faith, attest the divine authenticity of these to the Saints, invaluable sacred writings.

The musical people continue wide awake, with their vigorous leaders A. H. Mills, Sister Cordie Hulmes, and Charles Eaton, who lately presented to the Sunday school some fine selections, two of which are his own creation, named "The Nauvoo Overture," and "Mount Zion Sunday School March." Superintendent Krahl did the graceful presentation.

The Sunday school and Religio news items are growing in interest. One of our school pupils has just arrived home from a four years' trip on the briny ocean. Our expert gunner, Julian Warnock, a stalwart, lately of the United States navy, started home-bound on his twenty-first birthday, having sailed over many strange waters, and visited Japan and the Philippines, Mexico, Panama Canal, Santiago, and the Exposition, and is honorably discharged.

May life's voyage for all the Saints be safe and successful, and at last their spirits be filled with love and confidence.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

salaries. Let us remember all this and do as we would be done by.

We are satisfied that God loves a cheerful giver; let us reduce the embarrassment and mental strain on these men by liberal giving.

I am bishop's agent for this State and will promptly receipt for all moneys sent to the church. Please send me your tithings, consecrations, and offerings, and I will send same to the Bishop. Give the elder money intended for his personal needs.

May God bless all. Let us hope and pray that souls be added to the church in large numbers this year. I am,

Yours in the hope of the gospel,
E. E. WILLARD.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Northwestern Kansas: I desire to call your attention to your duty along the financial line. The Lord has promised to abundantly bless those who measure up to gospel requirements, and truly the finances are one thing requiring attention. There are those who never have paid tithes, some have never given free-will offerings to any great extent. If we think we have, let us cast up the sum total of our giving and then ask ourselves, How much good would this do me, if some one were to give it to me in the same space of time I took to give it to the Lord?

It will likely appear to some much as the piece of pie did to the little boy when he saw it, and thinking it was for sister, said, "Oh, mamma, is that all for sister?"

"No, dear," replied mamma, "that is for you."

He dejectedly replied, "What a little piece!"

Let us reconstruct our observation position.

You will notice an appeal in the HERALD of February 9, from one of our foremost missionaries that is heart-touching in its portrayal of conditions. The man is a loyal laborer for God, and are the Saints excusable if they force him out of his God-appointed work by refusing to pay to God what they owe him, and which he must have with which to maintain his cause? This is not an isolated case. If you say, How will it help him for us of this district to pay? I answer, Whatever is left over after the expenses of our district are met will be sent to the Presiding Bishop, and at once would be used in such cases of necessity as I have mentioned.

Let us not force God to sue us. For just as sure as God lives, if we don't pay what he deemed his due when he ranged the plans of earth, we will not get the benefit. We will be poorer in this world's goods, and poorer spiritually.

My observation is that the young man who starts his maturity by being honest with God has been blessed both temporally and spiritually. I would not think of holding out the idea that we should pay tithes simply that we may prosper financially, and I do not remember that I ever paid a cent of tithes that I did not ask God to give me the blessing. That became my due for the sacrifice in an increase of the Spirit's presence.

Let us pay what we owe. Let us be honest with God. Let us start this year right. This district has not been self-sustaining in the past. Let us rally to the work. There are Saints in the district who are loyal to this principle, and there are others, some more able, whose names do not appear on our books.

Dear brothers and sisters, get your names on our books. And to you whose names appear in the past, but not now, know ye not that the race is not to the swift, or the victory to the strong? but to the quiet, earnest, faithful performer of every known duty? We need your help. We are not asking charity. It is what you owe we want. Your appointed missionary is not asking charity; he could make much more money in business. It is what we guaranteed to give him when we sent him out that he wants. It is not pleasant for him to have to dun us for it. He is making a greater sacrifice when he gives his all than we are when we pay one tenth of our all.

May God help us to see our duty. Let us have a generous response to this appeal.

With interest for God's work,

JOHN A. TEETERS, Agent.

AGENTS' NOTICES

To the Saints of South Dakota; Greeting: We are about to start another conference year: elders and seventies will soon be appointed to their various fields to devote their time and energy to the preaching of the gospel. Many of these men will leave wife and children and the pure love they give him, comforts of home, all to do the bidding of him who said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." They do not do this through compulsion or fear, nor through desire or expectation of bread without work, but through pure love of fellow men and desire to advance the cause of Him who sends them.

The work of a missionary is not altogether to preach to those who have not heard the restored gospel, but to "feed my sheep," those of the faith. Dear Saints, have you not felt the divine Spirit come over you as you sat around the hearthstone and listened to the experiences of the elder? as you heard him explain and make clear to you those questions that have been in your mind for weeks, perplexing questions that would not dawn? Have you not felt the Spirit that caused tears to come to your eyes as you listened on your knees around the family altar to the man of God as he poured out his soul in prayer in your behalf? These things are sacred, and food for the hungry soul. Life would indeed be dreary, hardly livable to us Saints if we were not to hear the cheering words of one of our missionaries once in a while.

Now it is a fact that man cannot live by bread alone, nor by faith at all. He must be fed and clothed, and as we cannot keep him at our homes all the time, he must have a way provided to get to the next place so others may hear the glad tidings.

His family is at home, his children must be educated, coal must be bought. Take the provider away and some means must be supplied to do this. We are a practical people, and it ought not to require much mental work to figure out that if we want the father to come and preach to us, comfort our sick, baptize our children, that we must provide some way to care for the mother at home.

This way has all been figured out by Him who requires the father to devote all his time in the service of Christ, in the way of tithing, offering, etc. We give a tenth of our increase to God. He allows us to use the other nine tenths, he uses the one tenth in caring for the family while the father is preaching. Is that not generous?

He allows us 90 cents out of every dollar for our needs and to advance our business, and uses the 10 cents to buy bread for the family left at home. Dear Saints, consider this seriously. We love the gospel better than life. We would give up all for it, so we claim. Does that all include the pocketbook?

We will soon have the names of two elders who are to visit us this year. This State is a big one, and the richest per capita in the Union. We have only one branch in the State, and that is so close to the edge that it is counted in Nebraska. There are not many Saints in the State, yet more than a few years ago, we are glad to see. Let us remember the needs of the elders as they come to us this year, remember that car fare takes money, and that the elders are but human and do not like to ask for money; would you? They wear out clothes like other men, let us keep them in a condition that we will not be ashamed to have them come to our homes, especially when we have friends there who are not in the church.

These men sent out are intelligent gentlemen, sensitive, oftentimes highly educated, men capable of earning good ter H. N. Hill, Sister Mark Smith; Sister Lorena Leeka, alternate. Bishop's agent's report received, audited and found correct. Carl T. Self ordained elder. Died

DAHLEM.—Olive May Dahlem, born March 26, 1875, Streeter, Illinois; died Madison, Wisconsin, February 11, 1915. Married Adam W. Dahlem, October 7, 1894. Baptized December 12, 1894, by I. M. Smith, Buchanan, Michigan. Confirmed by I. M. Smith, H. Richardson, E. J. Goodenough. Leaves husband, 5 children, mother, other relatives, many friends. Deceased lived a good pure life, and died strong in the faith. Always bore testimony of the hope she had in Christ. Sermon by W. A. McDowell.

CHURCH.—Edward C. Church, brother of Charles F. Church and Mabel E. Cochren, born May 9, 1857, Covington, Indiana; died January 8, 1916, Lamoni, Iowa. Baptized September 22, 1867, Hopkins, Michigan, by his father, Horace Church. Services in Saints' church, Lamoni, in charge of J. F. Garver, sermon by John Smith.

FRY.—Henry L., son of Brother and Sister Henry Fry, born near Missouri Valley, Iowa, March 16, 1860, where he made his home with the exception of about eight months when he resided in Missouri Valley; died December 24, 1915, after an illness of two months. Married Inez Copeland, March 14, 1895. To them were born 11 children, 1 having died in infancy, leaving 5 sons, 5 daughters, companion, mother, 4 brothers, many relatives and friends. Services in Christian church, December 26, a large audience being present, showing the high esteem in which the deceased was held. "Refuge" was beautifully rendered by members of the Christian Church choir, after which the pastor, Reverend Dow Crewdson read the 14th Psalm and offered prayer. "The Lord knoweth why" was sung, and after a few remarks by the pastor Elder Alma Booker discoursed from Job 14: 4. The closing song was "The sun is shining somewhere." A number of relatives and friends followed the remains to the last resting place, Calhoun Cemetery. The family has lost a loving husband, father, son and brother; the church an earnest worker; and the community a loyal citizen.

Worth Careful Thought

Do you read the label to know whether your baking powder is made from cream of tartar or, on the other hand, from alum or phosphate?

Royal Baking Powder is made from cream of tartar, derived from grapes, and adds to the food only wholesome qualities.

Other baking powders contain alum or phosphate, both of mineral origin, and used as substitutes for cream of tartar because of their cheapness.

Never sacrifice quality and healthfulness for low price.

SUNSHINE PARTIES

are every day affairs in the South in the Winter time-- for when blizzards, slush and snow are quite the fashion in the North, balmy breezes, sunny skies, moonlit bays and tropical flowers are the fashion in the South. And those who pack their grips and go South at this time, reap rich rewards in health dividends and delightful recreation and return, realizing more than ever before, the real value of a winter vacation in that romantic, historic and beautiful land south of the Mason and Dixon Line.

The cost is low---perhaps not as much as you thought it would be. Come in and let's talk it over.

WANTED: BIG MEN AND BIG WOMEN

(Sermon preached by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, January 27, 1916.)

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.—Ephesians 4: 13.

But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ.—Ephesians 4: 15.

But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and forever. Amen.—2 Peter 3: 18.

You will notice that in the texts I have selected, the subject of growth is mentioned, and the idea is held forth that we are to grow until we become like Christ; that we are to be measured by him.

Some months ago I heard Brother Gillen while preaching in Council Bluffs, say, "We want big men and big women."

You will agree with that idea, I believe. Of course he meant to convey the thought that we want men and women who are big spiritually, not necessarily big physically. Not every big person is big in spirit. Sometimes some very large people are very small in spirit.

We want men and women who are big spiritually. We want men and women who are too big to quarrel. Whenever you discover an individual of a quarrelsome disposition, who is not making any endeavor to curb that disposition, you will find an individual who is very small in spirit. A big man is never quarrelsome.

FEEDING A GRUDGE HEART TISSUE

We want men and women who are too big to hold a grudge against one another. A big spirit never holds a grudge, and the spirit that holds a grudge can never become large. It takes too much spiritual sustenance to keep a grudge alive—the man is starved to death.

It costs more to keep a grudge than it does to keep a horse or an automobile. A horse eats hay, and an automobile burns up gasoline; but a grudge eats the heart of the man himself, and he will burn in hell eventually if he does not cast it out, because Jesus said definitely, "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

You perhaps have seen men who have nursed a grudge for long, long years. It has made them suffer, and it has made others suffer. They are never satisfied until they "get even" with some one; and after they have gotten even they feel meaner than they did before. A grudge makes you feel bad all the time until you gratify it, and then you feel worse than you did before.

ASSETS AND LIABILITIES

We want men and women who are so big that they will not do a mean or contemptible trick. We want men and women who are so big that they will not betray a friend. It is a mark of nobility and greatness of character to be true to a friend, true to the cause, true to the church, true to our convictions, no matter under what conditions we may find ourselves. If we have that kind of men and women in the church they are the most valuable asset we have.

The bishop may make his report annually to the conference. He may have a list of figures headed assets of the church, showing money in hand, and notes, church buildings, etc; but I want to tell you that the greatest asset that this church has consists of the men and women who are big in character, the living assets of the church. But when we have men and women who are small, they are liabilities.

FOURTEEN MEN FOURTEEN DAYS

The High Council has just recently finished sitting in Independence. We were held there for fourteen days, possibly a little longer. Fourteen men on the supreme court of the church, sitting for at least fourteen days, to hear various cases of difficulty that had come up on appeal. Some of these cases, if not all of them (certainly the majority of them) grew out of trivial matters. They grew out of the little things that could have been avoided had the participants, one or both of them, been big enough to avoid the follies and offenses that brought them finally into that court. Of course by the time the cases reached us they had grown to great proportions.

Fourteen men for fourteen days,—that means the time of one man for six months and a half to hear those cases of difficulty that had come up to the High Council in one season. This was an extraordinary session, I know, the longest session we have had in the history of the church, but just think of it! The idea of taking out of the field a man, a high priest, efficient enough to sit on the High Council, able to preside over a large pastorate like Kansas City or Des Moines, taking such a man as that out of his field at church expense for six and one half months to listen to cases of difficulty that ought never to have come up at all!

No case ever ought to reach the church courts. Always there is one side or the other, and frequently both sides, more or less are at fault.

It would be interesting to ascertain the time taken up by elders' courts all over the country; by ministers in charge called out of their fields to settle cases of difficulty in different branches; and the time taken up by teachers in settling difficulties, and by pastors; and find out just how much time it takes year by year to adjust and adjudicate these difficulties that ought not to come up at all. And when you have finally done that and have some idea of the loss that occurs to the church, not only in point of time, but also in efficiency, you will agree that we want big men and big women.

The loss is not altogether of time. There is a loss of prestige. Whenever these difficulties occur, the church suffers in prestige, and the world has cause to complain against it, and finds a basis for its accusations against the Saints. So there is loss all along the line.

Yes, we want big men and we want big women, who will not involve themselves and the church in these difficulties, but who will be a constant source of strength and power to the church wherever they shall be found.

HOW SHALL WE GROW?

But how shall we grow? How shall we become big? I have noted down one or two ways in which we may become great, and one of these perhaps may at first glance seem a little surprising.

We may become great by being humble. Whenever you find an individual who is trying to exalt himself, and thinking all the time how big he is, you will find an individual who is not growing. It is said that a watched kettle never boils; and the individual who watches his soul and congratulates himself that he is getting a little bigger than somebody else is not growing at all.

GODLIKE CHARITY

We can become great by cultivating charity. It is Godlike to be charitable. We are told that charity is the pure love of God. Charity is not the giving out of a nickel, or taking some one to a lunch counter, or giving him an old overcoat that is cast off, or even in giving a splendid gift. That may be an evidence of charity, it may be one of the manifestations of charity; but charity itself is kin to that love that filled the heart of God, so that he could overlook your shortcomings and mine, and forgive your sins and my sins, your follies and my follies, and send his immaculate Son here on earth to lead us up out of the mire, and bring us to salvation.

We may become great by acquiring a knowledge of Christ. As one of our texts says, we are to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. When we know him and understand him, we will then become like him.

We are told in the first chapter of the second epistle of Peter:

And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful.—Verses 5-8.

You will notice that the apostle tells us that we are to give all diligence. We cannot cultivate greatness by being dilatory. We are to be diligent and faithful, and to stand, not exalted one day and cast down the next, but persistent in our service to God, in our church attendance, in our studies; and thus day by day, and year by year, we shall become more and more like Christ.

What is it to become great? Probably everybody has a desire to be great. Most of us start out in life with very high ambitions. We think that we want to do something extraordinary. We want to achieve some high position. We feel that we can make a success in some field. Every healthy boy and girl has that ambition.

WHAT HAPPENS TO MOST OF US?

Well now, what happens to most of us? A certain number of men start out. When one of these men is forty years old, perhaps, he finds himself on a farm. He started out with those high ambitions, but he finds himself at forty years of age on the farm, plowing the same old fields that he has plowed every year in the spring, reaping the same fields in the fall, milking the same old cows at night, doing day by day and year by year the same old round of drudgery.

The second man finds himself in a store behind the counter at forty years of age. He goes down to the store every morning, sells buttons, tape, shoes, etc., and goes home at night. The next morning he gets up and repeats the process.

The third man finds himself in a factory at forty years of age. He leaves home in the morning before his children are up. He sits or stands at a machine all day long, and goes home after dark after his children are asleep,—perhaps doesn't see them awake for months at a time.

Now this is the common lot of the majority of people, and fairly portrays it. But in the course of time, having failed to achieve what they considered true greatness, these men (and the same is typical of women also), begin to transfer their ambitions to their children, if they have children, and think what wonderful things they will accomplish. They take great delight and pleasure in seeing their children develop.

OUR CHILDREN, TOO

Time goes on as we watch the children grow, and if we live long enough, when they are forty years of age, we see the one boy on the farm, plowing the same old field in the spring, reaping the same old field in the fall, milking the same old cows at night.

In the second case we see the boy, now a man, forty years old, behind the counter, selling buttons, tape, shoes, etc.; and in the third case the boy goes to the factory in the morning, stands or sits at the machine all day, coming home after night. The same thing that has happened to us, has happened to them, and this is the common experience of man.

It is only an exceptional individual who climbs up to some position that we commonly credit with being great. It is true that once in a while one breaks into the Senate or the House of Representatives, but he is possibly shuffled out at the next election; doesn't stay there very long.

It is true that we say in this country that every boy may become president of the United States, but we know he cannot. We know that out of fifty million boys at least forty-nine million, nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand cannot possibly ever become president of the United States; and if one should happen to become president that is no indication that he would be a great president.

How many presidents can you remember whose names you can even recall? We start out with George Washington, the father of our country, and then we make a big leap to Abraham Lincoln, a man so great that we do not care to name any others.

It is a fact that the great majority of humanity finds itself condemned to walk in the common walks of life; and defeated in their ambition to be great, as they esteem greatness, weary of endless drudgery, hundreds become discouraged and commit suicide.

A TRUE CONCEPTION OF GREATNESS

This is a wrong idea of greatness. We do not have to climb up into some high position to be great. We do not have to accumulate a lot of money to be great men and women. Greatness doesn't consist in

CURRENT EVENTS

HAITIAN TREATY.—The Senate has unanimously ratified the treaty with Haiti, under which the United States assumes the protectorate over that republic, taking charge of its finances and guaranteeing its territorial integrity.

FORD PEACE COMMISSION.—The first official session of the permanent Ford peace commission convened at Stockholm, Sweden, February 28, with representatives from the United States, Switzerland, and all the Scandinavian countries.

CHINESE REBELLION.—The rebellion in southern and western China against the government of the new emperor, and contending for the reestablishment of the republic, with forces estimated at forty thousand, has thus far withstood the government troops.

DENYING SUFFRAGE.—After passing the Maryland senate a bill for a woman's suffrage amendment in that State was defeated in the house by a vote of sixty-four to thirty-six. A bill for woman's suffrage in Oklahoma recently passed the house and was indefinitely postponed by the senate committee.

NICHOLAS VISITS DUMA.—For the first time Emperor Nicholas of Russia has visited the Duma in an official way that recognizes the legislative as an integral part of the Government. This visit at the recent opening of the Duma, is thought by liberals to promise a new policy on the part of the crown, looking to the growth of representative government in Russia.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES.—Senator Robert M. LaFollette announced himself a candidate for the Republican Progressive nomination at a recent meeting of Progressive Republicans, at Madison, Wisconsin. He is opposed to the preparedness program; favors use of the standing army for social service in times of peace; advocates a peace conference of neutral nations; national munitions factories; and an embargo on the exportation of arms. Senator Theodore Burton, of Ohio, and Senator A. B. Cummins, of Iowa, have also announced their candidacies.

WILSON AND CONGRESS.—In a letter to Congressman Pou, acting chairman of the rules committee, President Wilson on February 29 urged an early vote in Congress on a pending resolution to prohibit travel by United States citizens on belligerent merchantmen, looking to what would amount to a vote of confidence for the President, in connection with his foreign policy with reference to armed merchantmen. The administration forces in the Senate on March 3, by a vote of sixty-eight to fourteen tabled the Gore resolution to warn Americans off armed merchantmen, thus sustaining President Wilson in his foreign policy.

PREPAREDNESS.—A preparedness bill was introduced in the Senate on the 4th which would authorize a federal volunteer force in times of peace; enlisted reserves in peace times; federalization of the national guard under a pay system, under supervision of the War Department; an officers' reserve, and a reserve officers' training corps. The House committee has a bill ready to report not differing vitally from that of the Senate. These bills would provide, approximately, a peace strength of 700,000, comprising a regular army of 175,000, a national guard of 425,000, federal volunteers through summer training camps of 100,000, estimated; they would also provide for organization of industrial and technical reserves, and munitions factories' preference to Government orders in time of war, or danger of war.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Felix Diaz, a nephew of the former President of Mexico, and for some months a fugitive from that country, has left the United States, presumably to launch in Mexico a new revolution against the Carranza Government. It is said that there is an understanding between Diaz, Villa, and Zapata. Villa is reported fleeing north from Casas Grandes, Chihuahua. Carranza has announced that paper money issues of the Constitutionals will not be repudiated. A new issue not to exceed five hundred million dollars, based on a gold reserve, and to replace the present issue, easily counterfeited, will be authorized. The Senate has confirmed the appointment of W. P. Fletcher, former ambassador to Chile, as ambassador to Mexico. Joseph S. Shea, of Indiana, has been nominated by President Wilson to succeed Mr. Fletcher as ambassador to Chile.

ARMED MERCHANTMEN.—On February 28 a German note was presented to the state department at Washington, concurred in by the Austro-Hungarian Government, announcing that their submarines would sink on sight armed merchantmen after midnight of the 29th, and which policy went into effect March 1. The position of President Wilson is that, in keeping with long-established international law, merchant ships, armed or unarmed, should not be sunk without warning, unless resisting or attempting to escape. The President stands on his recent contention:

No nation, no group of nations, has the right while war is in progress to alter or disregard the principles which all nations have agreed upon in mitigation of the horrors and sufferings of war, and if the clear rights of American citizens should ever unhappily be abridged or denied by any such action, we should, it seems to me, have in honor no choice as to what our own course should be.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The fighting in the vicinity of Verdun, unprecedented in violence and in men killed, has continued. The Germans have taken six square miles of French territory and have carried their line at one point to within five miles of Verdun. The German advance has been checked and the French forces are defending their positions, to all appearances, as valiantly and effectually as at any time heretofore. Profiting by the example of Leige, Belgium, the solid fortifications of which crumbled under the force of high-power shells, the French announce that some months ago they stripped the Verdun forts and placed their defense on a trench and burrow basis. Fort Douaumont, five miles north of Verdun, is in the hands of the Germans and in ruins. The British report gains along the Ypres. Activity on the eastern front is confined largely to artillery fire. The Russians continue their success in Persia and Armenia, capturing towns and passes, and driving the Turks before them. The capture of Kermanshah, Persia, near the western border, brings the Russians within one hundred and fifty miles of Kut El Amara, where the British have been besieged by the Turks. Reinforcements going up the Tigris are said to have joined the second British expedition, which is now advancing to the relief of Kut El Amara. Nine allied vessels were from February 26 to 29 sunk by Teutonic mines and submarines. These losses include the French auxiliary cruiser La Provence, en route to Saloniki, with four thousand French soldiers on board, three thousand of whom are reported lost. Since March 1, seven allied vessels have been sunk. Teutonic vessels seem to have been active in sowing mines along the east coast of England and in the Mediterranean. Reports concerning the sinking of vessels, however, are indefinite, it not being announced whether the same has been by submarines or mines. The German Moewe has returned to port at Wilhelmshafen, on the North Sea, after a spectacular career of several months as a raider, carrying one hundred and ninety-nine prisoners, and one million marks in gold. The commander reports the sinking of twelve British, one French, one Belgian steamer, one British sailing vessel. The Moewe is the vessel from which the German crew boarded the Appam and took it to port in Hampton Roads. The Moewe also claims to have sown mines extensively, one of which sunk the British battleship King Edward VII. Portugal, nominally one of the allies, not formerly at war with the Teutonic powers, though aiding the British in stripping Germany of her African colonies, has requisitioned German ships interned in her ports, of which there are said to be thirty-six in Portugal, and as many more in her colonies. Against this act Germany has entered an emphatic protest.

Loitering slow, the future creepeth; arrow swift, the present sweepeth; and motionless forever stands the past.—Schiller.

what we have, nor in where we are, or in what we have done. It consists in what we are.

Socrates was a great man. He was born of common parentage. He never accumulated much money or land. He was poor all his life. He went around barefooted, wearing an old robe. He never accepted an office politically, excepting one almost forgotten term in the senate. He said that his warning voice that spoke to his inner consciousness told him not to accept office. (I suppose some people wish that Teddy had a warning voice to speak to him.) He was not even great in appearance. He had a coarse, broad face, a big upturned nose, and protruding eyes, a large ungainly body, with short legs, so that one contemporary writer said that as he walked down the street hunting some one of whom to ask questions, he looked like a pelican waddling along the streets of Athens.

THE LIE TO AN OLD THEORY

He was great in spirit. By his unflinching integrity, by his absolute fearlessness of everything on earth excepting to do wrong, by his virtue, and his honesty, he was so great that his name became proverbial. It seems as though nature designed him in order to give the lie to the pagan world theory that greatness consists in money, or appearance, or position. Socrates had none of these, neither money, position, nor dignified appearance.

Jesus Christ himself, the greatest spirit that ever walked in human flesh, was the son of a common carpenter, and is said to have been a carpenter in his younger days. Jesus himself was not great because of what he did. It is true that he suffered martyrdom, but so did others,—so did Socrates. It is true that he performed great miracles, but so did Elijah. It is true that he wrought marvelous works, but he said to his disciples, "The things that I do ye shall do, and greater things than these."

Jesus Christ was great because of what he was,—not because of what he did, but because of what he was. He was the supreme representation of the Godlike spirit. He said, "He that hath seen me hath seen God." He was great all the time, whether in action or in repose. His greatness did not consist of his deeds. A man must always be greater than anything that he does. Greatness consists in what a man is, and so if you or I ever are to become great, it will be because we have become like him, and partaken of his Spirit.

HOPE FOR ALL

Then the great majority of men, finding themselves defeated in their ambition to become great according to the worldly idea, unable to accumulate a great amount of wealth, unable to climb up to the high position they covet, may satisfy themselves with this thought, that greatness is not constituted of these things at all. Greatness is of the Spirit. Greatness is manifested in integrity, honesty, and virtue; and the man who tills his farm, cultivates his field, plowing in the spring, reaping in the fall, milking his cows at night, may be a greater man than the individual who has climbed up to the Senate, or even to some higher place, and has not cultivated honesty, integrity, and virtue.

The man behind the counter, or the man in the factory, the wife at home, all of these may become truly great. They do not need to become discouraged or dissatisfied with the toil of the endless round of life. They may achieve greatness, and their children after them, they may become great in spirit. They may have more than the worldly idea that all there is to life is what we see in this world. They are preparing for the great beyond; and Peter tells us that if we do these things we will enter into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior.

Jesus tells us that he that is faithful in the things that are least, shall be made ruler over things that are great. Thus we prepare ourselves by being faithful in these smaller things, for greater positions of trust, here or hereafter; and finally if God or the people shall call us up to some higher position, ecclesiastical or political, or in the civic affairs of the community, we will be prepared to occupy.

I hope that God's Spirit may be with us to bless and direct us, that we may grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior, becoming in due time big men and big women.

CONCERNING ZION--PART 4

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

THE BUILDING OF THE CITY OF ZION

The God of heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build.—Nehemiah 2: 20.

Too generally we think of the building of Zion as the erecting of a visible city only. It is true that a city of brick and stone is comprehended in the thought of Zion, but that is a very incidental part. The building of the true city is ultimately greater than the mere materialistic side of it. All cities are built of material things, and are designed by great and skilled architects; but Zion is to be built first of all by human characters and human lives. As we have noticed in a previous chapter, God himself is to be the great architect of this city.

It is the building of this moral and spiritual structure that is paramount. The Apostle Paul likens the church unto a building. He also likens it to a human body. It may also be likened to a city. But let us never be so unwise as to suppose it consists in the formal, visible, exterior city alone, because this is not true.

A building may be very beautiful in its outer appearance and yet be desolate—without an inhabitant. A human body may be perfectly organized and symmetrically built, and at the same time it may be a lifeless corpse. A city may be built of excellent material, with age lasting buildings, and yet it may be uninhabited, or occupied by those whose lives are unregenerated. So it will be readily observed that the thing the most attention is generally given to is of the least importance. Micah the prophet has said: He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God. The inner condition of men's lives is of much greater importance than the outward, formal city is.

The city of Zion is to be built primarily with men and women. Did you ever dream of a city without them? It would be utterly impossible to conceive of such a thing. Men and women are the first and the last requirement. A real city then, is composed of real living people. A wicked city is composed of wicked people; a pure city of those whose hearts and lives are pure.

"We his servants will arise and build." Before we can build a pure city we must build a pure life—character. The material city is built upon a foundation securely laid, and erected brick by brick until it reaches its perfection. So likewise the spiritual city, the true city of character, must be erected upon the foundation described in our last chapter and reared a brick at a time, and they must be laid by the plummet of righteousness (right-ness), and the line of judgment.

To build Zion then, means the building of a city of righteousness. Right between man and man, as well as right between man and God must obtain. The Spirit of Christ must actuate the lives of the people, and their right-ness must transcend the bounds of the conventional, formal worship of men. Human justice and divine love must overflow the church and fill the streets of the city. It must find its way into the busy marts of life, in the workshop, the factory, the market, and in fact in all the vocations and business transactions of men.

Malachi asks: "Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?" The answer to this question is that Zion, the pure in heart, will abide that day; the city of pure men and women will stand when he appears. This will be because in the first place Zion is to be an abiding city, because she is to be built upon the everlasting foundation of Jesus Christ our Lord. She is to be a city of truth, built upon the principles of divine truth. Truth is enduring, therefore she must stand. The character that is built of truth will live forever; all who have built a true life and a true character will stand immovable, to welcome the coming of the Prince of Peace. It is therefore not so much a question of our getting into the place we call Zion as it is worthiness to dwell there that should concern us most.

Our text says: "The God of heaven, he will prosper us." We should remember always that this is on the condition that we will let him prosper us. "What he can do for men," says Henry Churchill King, "depends also upon them. God himself cannot force moral choice and spiritual growth and attainment upon men." God is the builder and the maker of Zion, but he cannot force it upon us. He will not do so. But if we will arise in the strength of our manhood and build that spiritual city within our own hearts and lives, he will prosper us, and give us power to achieve every success necessary for the building of the outer city.

At-one-ment with God, then, is the one great essential, the paramount virtue. Zion is to be a metropolis in which love, pure love, is to be the ruling power. It is to be built up in keeping with the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom. Celestial means heavenly, therefore it is to be understood that we are to build Zion upon heavenly principles, in keeping with heavenly laws. Those who build in this manner will not only have an abiding city, but their lives shall affect and influence those who have been opposed to the truth, and by the spirit of meekness and brotherly kindness lead them to better things. This will be building a permanent city, and the Lord our God will prosper us in such an undertaking. Hear what the silver-tongued prophet has to say about it:

The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, The city of the Lord, The Zion of the Holy One of Israel. . . . Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise.—Isaiah 60: 14-18.

Solomon has said: "If a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him." So, also, we reason that if a body of people please the Lord in the life they live and in the character they build, he will cause even their oppressors to come bowing down to them. We can therefore only build the city of Zion by building pure and strong characters, and revealing noble lives in our dealings with men. That city cannot be built nor purchased with money alone. Money is an excellent aid if rightly used; but the fundamental principle underlying the city of Zion is a pure heart, a clean life, and a noble aspiration.

The city of Zion might have been built long ago if the people had only learned the one lesson of love for that which is pure and true. It could be built now if men would eliminate selfishness, envy, and greed, and practice in the stead thereof, altruism, love and liberty of thought, and purity of life.

Zion then, means a life, not an argument; a reality, not a theory; a character, not a profession. Let the church therefore, arise and clothe herself with righteousness; let her put on the divine life; let her build Zion within, and lo, the outer city will become a living reality.

Thus by an unfoldment of character and an enlargement of life will we be able to build a permanent city, and become a blessing unto all with whom we come in contact.

May God assist and sustain us to this end.

My next will be, "The inhabitants of Zion."

REFLECTIONS--NUMBER 10

BY W. E. PEAK

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

There is no article or document written on the above subject that I have ever seen, nor have I ever heard a leading man of the church express his views on the composition of the general assembly. It is quite generally understood that provisions are made in the law for this tribunal, but if it has ever been organized we have no account of it.

It is invested when organized, with authority superior to any quorum in the church, or even the general conference. It is the highest tribunal in the church and its decisions are final.

The first reference we find in the revelations to it reads as follows:

And in case that any decision of these quorums is made in unrighteousness, it may be brought before a general assembly of the several quorums which constitute the spiritual authorities of the church, otherwise there can be no appeal from their decision.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

Either of these three presiding quorums has authority to make decisions that cannot be overruled by any tribunal or council in the church except the one here referred to.

We are not informed in this verse whether all the quorums in the church are to meet to form this assembly or not. We can only decide from inference. The only intimation that there is a limited number of quorums intended is found in the words "of the several quorums that constitute the spiritual authorities of the church."

If there had been no limit to the quorums, and it had been intended to include all, there would have been no singling out of these quorums "which constitute the spiritual authorities of the church." If all quorums in the church were included as "the spiritual authorities," this part of the sentence would be redundant.

Again, in this revelation there are statements that indicate the divisions of labor in the priesthood, as "administering spiritual things," and "outward ordinances," as the following shows,

The Melchisedec priesthood holds the right of presidency, and has power and authority over all the offices in the church, in all ages of the world, to administer in spiritual things.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 3.

This places the responsibility of administering in spiritual things on those who hold the Melchisedec priesthood.

The second priesthood is called the priesthood of Aaron . . . and has the power in administering outward ordinances.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 8.

But the literal descendant of Aaron has a legal right to the presidency of this priesthood, to the keys of this ministry, to act in the office of bishop independently, without counselors.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 34.

The office of a bishop is in administering all temporal things, . . . to do the business of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 32.

These statements "administering spiritual things," "outward ordinances," and "administering temporal things," in a sense divide these quorums.

The next reference to the "general assembly" is in these words:

Inasmuch as there has been much discussion in the past concerning the Sabbath of the Lord, the church is admonished that until further revelation is received, or the quorums of the church are assembled to decide concerning the law in the church articles and covenants, the Saints are to observe the first day of the week, etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 7.

It will be observed that there are certain questions concerning the law that are to be decided by the quorums of the church, instead of the General Conferences. Again the question is left unanswered whether all of the quorums or a few are referred to. The reading of the sentence would indicate that all are included, and if admitted, would force the conclusion that the general assembly is thus composed.

But each revelation must "be understood by the revelation which went before and in accordance with which it was written; and which follows after it in the book" (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 8).

The next and last reference to the subject is:

In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to and their action and determination should govern.

The same thought is again expressed, and in nearly the same words. But the question is not answered as to the number of quorums referred to. The indications are just as in the other revelations, that all the quorums are included.

When this statement was made, it left Joseph in doubt, just as the rest of us were in doubt from similar statements in previous revelations, so he asked, "What quorums of the church were meant?" and the answer came, "The three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy" (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10).

This explains the meaning of the terms, "the quorums of the church," "the quorums of the church in joint council," and "the several quorums which constitute the spiritual authorities of the church."

This joint council, or general assembly, composed of the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy, is the one that is to decide on all important questions, sit in judgment on the policies of the bishop, the decisions of the three presiding quorums, and the acts of the General Conferences.

It is generally understood that these three presiding quorums when in joint council will vote as quorums, and two will overrule the third. Much can be said in favor of this position; but all other councils vote as members, and it may be thus in the general assembly.

It is quite evident that the joint council referred to in the last revelation, refers to the "general assembly of the several quorums which constitute the spiritual authorities of the church," from the words, "I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law."

This refers to section 104: 11, where we find the first statements on the subject of quorums making decisions, and explains which ones are authorized to do so.

RELATION OF THE THREE QUORUMS

Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

This quorum of three presiding high priests is known as the First Presidency of the church. The statement "the First Presidency of my church" (Doctrine and Covenants 115: 1), conveys the idea that there is more than one presidency. Just how many there are is neither stated in plain terms, nor in so many words, but in section 122: 9 we find this statement, "in the second presidency the Twelve."

The Twelve as a quorum, is not a second presidency to or in any local organization, but to the whole church.

We find that this second presidency forms a quorum "equal in authority and power to the three presidents (the First Presidency) previously mentioned," (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11). They "are a traveling, presiding high council," (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12), presiding as the second presidency of the church.

The seventy are also called to preach the gospel . . . and they form a quorum equal in authority to that of the twelve especial witnesses, or apostles, just named.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

They are equal to the Twelve and with the Twelve form one of "the traveling presiding councils of the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 4). They are a traveling, "presiding council" (Doctrine and Covenants 123: 13) as well as the Twelve, and equal to them. The Seventy as a quorum is not a presiding council, over any local organization, but is the third presidency of the whole church, in a similar sense as the Twelve is the second presidency.

These three presiding quorums form the complete presidency of the church, and constitute the "general assembly of the church."

They form the highest tribunal in the church. If one of these quorums forms a decision, it can only be appealed from to the joint council, composed of the three, or the complete presidency of the church. This council will make the final decision.

The work of these three quorums is very closely associated. The First Presidency is to "set in order" all the affairs of this church (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5). The Twelve is "to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same in all nations," under the direction of the Presidency (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12). The Seventy is to work "in building up the church and regulating all the affairs of the same in all nations," "under the directions of the Twelve" (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 13).

These quorums should work together in harmony, each in its respective position. Neither should dictate to the other; the principle of common consent should rule. If one of the seventy should disagree with the twelve in charge, or with the twelve as to his appointment, he should appeal to the First Presidency. Their decision should rule till reversed by the other two quorums, or by a majority vote, if it should be considered of sufficient importance to call the general assembly. However, the decision of the Presidency should rule till reversed by that assembly.

So with any case between the twelve, where the twelve is laboring "under the direction of the Presidency," the Presidency would hold the ruling authority till it was reversed by the general assembly, composed of these three quorums.

I believe the twelve and seventy should be consulted as to their missions before either is appointed. Each quorum is equal, and by thus consulting together a better understanding would be obtained and a more amicable feeling would prevail. Not that the appointing powers would be bound or controlled by the opinion of the one to be appointed, but his reasons for his position should be listened to and considered. If not considered sufficient by the appointing authority to justify them in granting his request or desire, they should proceed and appoint according to their own judgment.

Then if the one appointed is not satisfied, he should have the right of appeal, the seventy to the First Presidency, the twelve to his quorum, and if his quorum decided with him, the First Presidency could either agree, or the twelve could appeal to the general assembly. The seven presidents could represent the seventy when the seventy were not in session, subject to their action.

MISSIONARY WORK

"In the missionary work, first the twelve; second the seventy" (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9). This statement is clear and ranks these two quorums in the missionary department, so we can understand where they occupy.

They are also called the missionary quorums (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7), and "the traveling presiding councils." The fact is also clearly presented that wherever or whenever missionary work is to be done, it is to be performed by and under the jurisdiction of these two quorums. They are called and ordained for this special work, as well as to regulate all the affairs of the church where they labor.

It may be well to emphasize the fact that:

The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 2.

If these who constitute the First Presidency could do all the work that was necessary to be done, both local and missionary, there would be no need of other officers.

Joseph Smith, April 6, 1830, presided over the only organization there was in the church. He was the only presiding officer in the church. There was no need of any other at that time. But as the church increased in membership, the work became too great for him, and other officers were put in their respective places as the work demanded, till we had a complete arrangement for local and missionary forces.

So it is to-day. If the Presidency can attend to the local and missionary departments in any locality or the entire church without assistants, then these men who are ordained for that purpose are not needed. The Twelve and Seventy, these presiding councils, equal to the Presidency, are the ones to assist the Presidency, in building up the church and regulating all its affairs.

Wherever any part of the church needs regulating or missionary work, if the Presidency cannot come (Doctrine and Covenants 105: 7) and attend to it personally, they are to send the Twelve.

And when the Twelve cannot go to do this missionary work or regulating church personally, they are to send the Seventy. And the Seventy when thus sent "are in the powers of their ministration apostles" (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3).

In our stakes there are thousands of people who have never heard the gospel. It is the design of God that in Zion and in her stakes, the honest in heart should be converted as soon as possible. These places should have as many of the inhabitants in the church as can be converted. These stakes call for missionary work and for assistance in the branches with greater force than any other place on earth.

We hope the time will come some day when there will be a few men in the Quorum of Twelve who are just as competent as those in the First Presidency; and we also hope that the time will come when there will be a few men in the (let us take off our shoes, for we are treading on holy ground) Quorum of Seventy, that are just as competent as any in the Twelve or Presidency. Remember, we do not claim that there are such men now, that would be too large a bouquet to handle, but we hope for them. Is this a vain hope?

Then, if such a condition is ever realized, which is possible, and if the Presidency cannot personally attend to all the work, local and missionary, in Zion and her stakes, they could safely trust a part of this work to the Twelve; and as the apostle could not devote his whole time to the stake, as he would have a large field besides to attend to, he should send one of these competent seventy, and have him in charge of the stake, to devote his whole time there.

This arrangement is complete and meets the demands. "The law of the Lord is perfect." The only question is, Can we find a seventy who is equally as competent as the stake president? Let the wise decide.

The missionary work, belongs to those two quorums and they are the proper ones to attend to it, wherever it is to be done, just as "the high priests and elders holding the same priesthood are the standing ministers of the church, having the watchcare of the membership and ministering and sustaining them, under the direction and instruction of the Presidency and the Twelve." (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3.)

When a seventy is living in a branch in a city, holds meetings two blocks from his home, and has twelve nonmembers attending, he is pushing the preaching of the word into the new fields now widening before him (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7) just as much as if he were five hundred miles away, preaching to the same number. Or if he is preaching in the church building in his home branch, and has a dozen nonmembers attending that would not attend if the local men were preaching, he is pushing the preaching into new fields. It is the reaching of nonmembers, that is designed, not simply keeping away from branches and being a long distance from home. And if those who live near the church building can be reached, so much the better, for they can be cared for by the branch officers.

The church buildings are erected for missionary purposes, as well as for caring for the members, and the missionaries have a right to use them for missionary purposes as well as the local officers for their work. These buildings are for the use of both the local and missionary departments.

And should there be a conflict over the building, between these two departments in any branch, then there will be a demand for the regulating officers to do their work.

It is a mistaken policy to keep men hundreds of miles from home preaching in new openings, when their efforts cannot be followed up. It is much like a boy going through a forest hacking on various trees, but not cutting any down, nor accomplishing anything undertaken.

CHANGING SEVENTIES

There are times when it is wise to change a missionary from one mission to another. This is usually recognized by the missionary as soon as by anyone else. Sometimes this is caused by his incompetency or by his unwise acts. If it is incompetency, care should be taken to locate him in a proper or suitable field. If it is the result of unwise acts, it is a question to be decided after careful examination, whether he should be moved or released from the missionary force. The proper officers should examine the case, and if he has made mistakes he should be required to correct these mistakes just the same as a member.

The busybodies among the members should be visited by the proper officers, when they are tattling about the missionary's mistakes or supposed mistakes, just the same as if they were talking about any other member. The furor that is sometimes raised by a few extremists over the mistake of a missionary will die out as a rule in a short time if left alone. Or it can be easily adjusted if handled by the proper officers. This course as a rule, will be far more satisfactory and profitable to the church, than changing the missionary to satisfy the popular clamor, caused frequently by a few storm centers.

If the missionary is unwise and is the cause of trouble and will not learn or reform, he should be released from missionary work. But if the Twelve concludes to remove the seventy for any cause, he should be consulted and have the right of appeal to the presidency if he so desires.

If the seventy is located permanently, as he should be, there will be but few changes to be made each spring, and more care can be taken in making them. There will be no need of a month's work, as there is when every man is changed.

The seventy who is located in a mission is not confined to one locality, and if those who live in a certain locality desire a rest from his presence, there are plenty of other places for him to go, till the desired rest is obtained. If the appointing powers desire to discipline a seventy, a better policy can be found than sending him away from home.

I have never been in a district or stake but what I could find hundreds of places where missionary work could and should be done. And if the missionary were left, with his family, in one district or mission, he could soon find more new openings than he could attend to.

This is the only way to solve the problem of keeping the missionaries from the branches, and have them push the preaching of the word into new fields now, widening before them.

This never can be done when a missionary is only in a field long enough to get slightly acquainted with the demands and opportunities of that field.

I don't like this way of spending half of my time getting acquainted, and then forming ties of friendship to be torn asunder by the appointments of the next conference. I think too much of the noble Saints I labor with.

THE FINISH OF IT

The house that Jack built was never completed. The foundation was made, the walls erected, and the roof spread over it; but the windows were never put in, nor the floors laid, nor the doors hung. It was never finished.

In every work of importance there is a beginning stage, and a finishing. The beginning will witness the gathering of materials and the casting of form, perhaps, but the creation can be of no use, and will be kept hidden away till it is finished.

So, in the beginning the earth was "without form." As a batch of dough the housewife turns and kneads on the board, it had no symmetry. It was "void," hidden in darkness, and covered with water as of a great deep. The Spirit of God moved upon the water, brooding, perhaps kneading (Genesis 1:4, 5, I. T). This was the beginning, the incubative stage of the work.

PROBABILITIES

God does not account to us the length of time that the earth was reserved thus in darkness, as we shall see; and scientists who wish to venture a guess at the length of that time may go their limit without conflicting with the Holy Scriptures. They may place their guess at seven hundred million years, if they wish, and may argue that God put in all this tedious time "storing coal, oil, gas, gold, etc.," for the comfort of man who would dwell here and need these things for perhaps seven thousand years. If that guess should prove to be correct, it would show the labor and gain to be in the proportion of one million to one.

To those who till the soil this proportion will seem extraordinary. For they plant one grain of wheat and reap thirty; one grain of barley and reap sixty; one grain of oats, and reap an hundred; one grain of corn and reap a thousand.

It seems that nature, which yields such returns for man's labor, should respond to God's some better than the figures of science presume. But if scientists persist to argue that it "probably" took so long a time to create the earth, Saints may only reply that it probably didn't. For it has never been revealed how long the earth was reserved in darkness while God's Spirit brooded over the waters covering it.

LET THERE BE LIGHT

Nevertheless, they that are set to be the "light of the world" (if there is a people willing to qualify for that distinction to-day), may say that howsoever long or short the period of brooding and darkness, it ended when God said, "Let there be light," for there was light,—good light. Uncertainty ended the same instant.

Darkness still remained over a portion of the earth's surface, however, but God divided the light from the darkness, and called the light day. The darkness he called night.

"And this I did by the word of my power; and it was done as I spoke" (Genesis 1: 8, I. T). Working faster now.

This light which God separated from the darkness and called day is the first day this earth ever saw. And as though he took some pleasure in bringing the matter to our attention, God, in his word, often refers to himself as "the Lord of Sabbath, which is, by interpretation, the creator of the first day" (Doctrine and Covenants 92: 1; see also Romans 9: 28; James 5: 4).

THE DAYS OF GENESIS

The description of this first day as given in Genesis 1 is so plain and particular that "nothing can be added to it," yet people draw different meanings from it.

The idea has found place with many that this first day was of the million year period sort,

Half dark and half light,
Half black and half white,
Half day and half night!
Spotted!

The source of this idea is found in the fact that, "Scientific men believe it took a long time to build the world. They believe it has passed through millions of years of time. They read indications of this in the rocks." Genesis 1 says the Lord made it in six days.

But Psalm 90: 4 and Doctrine and Covenants 85: 11 tell us that the Lord's days and years are different from ours; the days of creation some say were doubtless long periods of time. We are told to read in 2 Peter 3: 8, what the Bible says about time as God measures it. "A thousand years as one day."

Sure? It really seems so according to the King James Translation, but the Inspired Translation says, not as to the creation of the world: "But concerning the coming of the Lord . . . one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day" (2 Peter 3: 8).

Other scriptures brought forward to support the scientific view have similar qualifying words.

These quotations say, in effect, that the first day spoken of in Genesis 1, does not mean just what it seems to; that scientific men have found fossiliferous remains of the life of those first six days embedded and preserved in the sedimentary sandstones, indicating that it must have meant millions of years instead of ordinary days, as we might have supposed if science had not spoken.

But the Scripture that treats of creation says that these first six days were occupied in creating spirits:

Every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew.—Genesis 2: 4, I. T.

For I the Lord God, created all things of which I have spoken (animals and vegetables), spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth; . . . and I, the Lord God, had created all the children of men, and not yet a man to till the ground, for in heaven created I them, and there was not yet flesh upon the earth, neither in the water, neither in the air.—Genesis 2: 5, 6, I. T.

PHYSICAL FORMATION

After the spiritual creation of the six days and the rest on the seventh, God formed man from the dust of the ground (Genesis 2: 8, I. T). Still later he planted a garden and caused vegetation to grow (Genesis 2: 8-11, I. T). Still later he formed physically, every beast of the field, etc., out of the ground (Genesis 2: 25, I. T).

All this physical formation, as distinguished from the spiritual creation, was after the rest on the seventh day, before which time there was no life at all in the earth, neither animal, nor vegetable; neither spiritual nor physical. There was no physical life anywhere before the seventh day. And if the sedimentary sandstones have any fossil remains of the life of the six "age long" days, they must be the remains of dead (?) spirits.

We had not understood that "scientific men knew much about spirits. Nor had we learned that spirits were of such fierce consistency as to embed their forms and preserve their outlines in rock formation. Believe it never! "For the words of the Lord are pure words,"—plain, and easy to understand.

THE FINISH OF IT

That first day which God created and which always pleased him so much, was not of the spotted, thousand year sort, but of the variety that is light called day, divided from darkness called night, with evening and morning at either end of it.

What could have better delighted the Lord of Sabbath than the creation of just a short, brief day, that begins in the glory and freshness of morning, gleams bright through its course, and ends in the evening's rich, modified splendor! Why should we suppose it took an age for the Almighty to create this first day?

"It was done as I spake" (Genesis 1: 7, 8, I. T.).

Again, God said, "Let there be a firmament," and he made it, dividing the waters beneath from the waters above, and "It was so, even as I spake" (Genesis 1: 9-10, I. T.).

Then between the evening and morning of the third day, God created the vegetable life, fruit trees, grass, herbs, etc., and "it was so, even as I spake" (Genesis 1: 15, I. T.).

Between evening and morning of the fourth day, God created sun, moon and stars. Between evening and morning of the fifth day, fishes and fowls. (Genesis 1: 18-25, I. T.).

Then between the evening and morning of the sixth day, God created the beasts of the earth, the creeping things, and man. "And it was so, even as I spake" (Genesis 1: 33, I. T.).

Thus (in six days, and even as I spake) the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them (Genesis 2: 1, I. T.). They were not begun and finished, essentially, but finished.

The earth which had been "without form and void," was done up in the shape of a ball. The waters, which had slopped and spilled over all the land, were drawn off into one place, and their bounds set, saying, Thus far shalt thou come and no farther. The sky was spread above all as a "molten looking glass," blue tinted, set as with costly stones.

As God looked upon it all, in vision, as yet, behold the earth carpeted with greenness, spangled with flowers; the air, filled with the songs of birds, with variant melodies, and as its mild currents moved among the shrubs and trees they bowed their heads, in mute assent that all was "very good."

Such was the finish of it.

WORDS OF PLAINNESS

The idea that it takes "age-long" periods for God to do anything was never obtained from reading the scriptures. It came into existence by the invention of what are called "scientific men," who have always wished to deny the possibility of a miracle. They wish us to believe that God neither had nor has any other force at his command than the forces with which they are acquainted, or with which they may become acquainted by their searching. But it is written that "man doth not comprehend all things which the Lord can comprehend" (Mosiah 2: 15).

When we think to interpret the plain words of scripture so as to have it conform to "scientific opinion," we should remember that at one time another people, the Jews, "despised the words of plainness . . . and sought for things they could not understand. Wherefore, because of their blindness, which blindness came by looking beyond the mark, they must needs fall."

Again, "Behold, the scriptures are before you; if ye will wrest them it shall be to your own destruction" (Alma 10: 17).

BEYOND SCIENTIFIC LIMITATIONS

Perhaps science is good, so far as it goes—so far as it may go. But there is a well-defined limit beyond which its light can never reach.

Beyond that limit are oceans of truth, we like to believe, a knowledge of which God reserves to himself, and to those to whom he will reveal some of it. Scientists will never be able to discover it, nor to figure it out, for we cannot by "searching," find out God (Job 11: 7; 37: 23).

And no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and they to whom the Son will reveal himself; they shall see the Father also.—Matthew 11: 28, I. T.

Of General Interest

SUN TEMPLE UNEARTHED

The excavation and partial restoration of the "Sun Temple," in Mesa Verde National Park, has been described as the greatest step forward in the history of American archæology. It has been estimated that the structure unearthed at the point of the Mesa, directly opposite what is known as Cliff Palace, across Cliff Canyon, was originally built as far back as 1300 A. D. The exact age and the exact usage to which the building was put must remain forever mysteries.

Doctor J. Walter Fewkes, of the Smithsonian Institution, conducted the excavations in Mesa Verde Park (New Mexico) at the request of the department of the interior. He regards his discoveries as of the most extraordinary interest to archæologists. The Sun Temple he unearthed is an altogether new and mysterious type of ruin, he declares, in a report submitted to the department.

Close inspection of the Cliff Palace convinced Doctor Fewkes that an ancient building was buried near by, for the stones strewn on the surface of the palace showed signs of having been worked artificially. Cedar and pinon trees of great age grew on the mound to which Doctor Fewkes' attention was directed. He determined to excavate.

During the prosecution of the work last summer nothing reached print, although a ruin of large size and unknown character was rapidly emerging, and hundreds of national park tourists visited the spot and listened to Doctor Fewkes' camp-fire talks at night. During the autumn a few hints of the importance of the discovery became public; but the official report, here epitomized, contains the first definite information on the subject.

All his hopes, Doctor Fewkes reports, were realized. "The results of three months' work," he says, "were more striking than had been expected."

There was brought to light a type of ruin hitherto unknown in the park, and, as was well expressed by a visitor, the building excavated shows the best masonry and is the most mysterious ruin yet discovered in a region rich in so many prehistoric remains. Although at first there was some doubt as to the use of this building, it was early recognized that it was not constructed for habitation, and it is now believed that it was intended for the performance of rites and ceremonies; the first of its type devoted to religious purposes yet recognized in the southwest.

The ruin was purposely constructed in a commanding situation in the neighborhood of large inhabited cliff houses. It sits somewhat back from the edge of the canyon, but near enough to present a marked object from all sides, especially the neighboring mesas. It must have presented an imposing appearing rising on top of a point high above inaccessible, perpendicular cliffs. No better place could have been chosen for a religious building in which the inhabitants of many cliff dwellings could gather and together perform their great ceremonial dramas.

The ruin has the form of the letter D. The building is in two sections, the larger of which, taken separately, is also D-shaped. This is considered the original building. The addition enlarging it is regarded as an annex. The south wall, which is straight and includes both the original building and the annex, is 121.7 feet long. The ruin is sixty-four feet wide.

There are about 1,000 feet of walls in the whole building. These walls average four feet in thickness, and are double, inclosing a central core of rubble and adobe. They are uniformly well made.

The rooms in this building vary in form and type, one kind being circular, the other rectangular. The former are identified as kivas, or sacred rooms; the purpose of the latter is unknown. There are two circular rooms or kivas of about equal size in the original building, and a third occupies the center of the annex.

There are twenty-three other rooms, fourteen of which are in the original building, the walls of which are parallel; several curved, others straight. Three of the former had entrances from the roofs, four had lateral doors into the plaza, and the remainder are arranged in two series, the members of which communicate with each other. None of the rooms of the annex have lateral doorways.

Not a single room, either of circular or rectangular form, shows any signs of plastering, but all joints between stones, from the bottom to the top, are carefully pointed with adobe and generally chinked with stones. The impression of human fingers and palms of small hands of the workmen, probably women, still show in the clay mortar.

The principle of the arch was unknown, but the corners were practically perpendicular, implying the use of a plumb bob. The curved walls are among the best in the ruin.

Outside the main building is a circular building with walls four feet thick, which closely resembles the base of a tower. This was probably intended, like the "tower" in Cliff Palace, for ceremonial rites.

One of the most interesting features is the embellishment of the walls by geometrical figures cut in their surfaces—a rare form of decoration. Several stones with incised figures were set in the walls. Generally, the designs are geometric, but there are others, including the figure of a ladder leaning against a wall, turkey tracks, and the conventional sign for flowing water.

The importance of these incised figures on stones set in walls lies in the fact that they seem to indicate an advance in architectural decoration not represented in other prehistoric buildings in the southwest. They may be regarded as first steps in mural sculpture, a form of decoration that reached such an advanced stage in old ruins in Mexico and Central America. Each figure may have had a special meaning or symbolic significance connected with the room in which it occurs, but they seem to me to have been introduced rather for ornament or decorative effect.

Naturally the two first questions asked about this structure concern its age and its uses. Both are mysteries.

It is impossible to tell when Sun Temple was begun or how long it took for its construction or when it was deserted. There are indications that its walls were never completed, and from the amount of fallen stones there can hardly be a doubt that when it was abandoned they had been carried up in some places at least six feet above their present level. The top of the wall had been worn down at any rate six feet in the interval between the time it was abandoned and the date of my excavation of the mound. No one can tell the length of this interval in years.

We have, however, knowledge of the lapse of time because the mound had accumulated enough soil on its surface to support growth of large trees. Near the summit of the highest wall in the annex there grew a juniper or red cedar of great antiquity, alive and vigorous when I began work. This tree undoubtedly sprouted after the desertion of the building and grew after a mound had developed from fallen walls. Its roots penetrated into the adjacent rooms and derived nourishment from the soil filling them.

Necessarily when these roots were cut off, thereby killing the tree, I was obliged to fell it, but the stump remains, cut off about a foot above the ground. A section of this tree at that point was found by Mr. Gordon Parker, supervisor of Montezuma National Forest, to have 360 annual rings; its heart is decayed, but its size suggests other rings, and that a few more years can be added to its age.

It is not improbable that this tree began to grow on the top of the Sun Temple mound shortly after the year 1540, when Coronado first entered New Mexico, but how long an interval elapsed during which the walls fell to form the mound in which it grew and how much earlier the foundations of the ruined walls were laid no one can tell. A conservative guess of 250 years is allowable for the interval between construction and the time the cedar began to sprout, thus carrying the antiquity of Sun Temple back to about 1300, A. D.

APRIL READING.—PREPARATION FOR ADOLESCENCE

A little boy came in from school, and with loving insight discerned his mother's weariness.

"You're tired, aren't you, mamma," he said. "What can I do to help you?"

"Oh, there's nothing you can do," his mother answered.

"Yes, mamma, let me help you. I want to work," the child insisted.

But the mother, still refusing, said, "No, you would hinder more than help. You'd better go on outdoors."

"Then may I go and play with the boys?" he asked, hopefully.

"No, you may stay right in your own yard." Then she added to a neighbor who had just come in, "I don't know what to do with that child. He is always teasing to go somewhere."

"Well, mamma, what can I do?" still plead the boy.

"You can go out there and sit on the nice green grass," his mother said decisively.

"But I want to do something," wailed the child, as he threw himself upon the grass to roll about disconsolately.

How little that mother realized concerning the forces thus going to waste.

In A Study of Child Nature, Mrs. Elizabeth Harrison says: "In every stage of man's development unselfish love plays a part. . . . Yet this instinct does not always serve the purpose for which it has been assuredly given. Loving, warm-hearted little children grow into cold, selfish men and women, and many a parent who has given his all to his children has to exclaim with Lear, 'How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child.'"

"Selfishness is the most universal of all sins and the most hateful. . . . Think if you can of one crime or vice which has not its origin in selfishness. Why is this? To one who has thoughtfully and carefully studied the subject, the cause of the widespread prevalence of selfishness is not hidden. It lies largely in the mother's nonapprehension of the right treatment of her child's earliest manifestations of love. . . .

"There is a physical love which expresses itself in the mere kiss and hug, and word of endearment. This is not the all-purifying, all-glorious love, so elevating to every life; it is but the door, or entrance, to that other higher form of love which manifests itself in service and self-sacrifice. . . . While her child is in the loving mood, let the mother ask of him some little service, very slight at first, but enough to make him put forth an effort to aid her. Thus can she transform the mere selfish love of the child into the beginning of that spiritual love which Christ commended when he said, 'If ye love me, keep my commandments.' . . . Faith must show itself in deeds. . . . A little child can no more be educated to a life of religion and faith without the exercise of personal activity than heroic acts can be accomplished with words only.

"Never should the mother . . . refuse the proffered help of her child. If she is doing something in which, from the nature of it, he cannot share, let her be careful to substitute some other loving service while declining the one proffered, remembering that love, turned away, nourishes selfishness; that proffered help, refused, begets idleness."

DANGER IN IDLENESS

In the Uplift Book of Child Culture, Judge Ben Lindsey writes: "Sometimes I think there is danger of forgetting that idleness is a serious evil. The boy or girl who is never held to a strict accountability for duties is missing one of the most necessary lessons in life and laying up trouble for the future. . . . Even if it is twice as much work to show the boy or girl how to do certain things and oversee them as it would be to do it oneself, the mother who cares for the development of her child's character will find it pays. It is the idle child and the child who thinks of nothing but his own amusement that gets into trouble. Copy book maxims are out of fashion, but the fact remains that Satan still continues to find work for idle hands to do. . . . Children like to help. They like to feel that they are of value and importance, and there is nothing that will do more to make them efficient and conscientious citizens than giving them habits of industry, and the realization that they have their place to fill in their little world, which is a part of the big world of the grown-ups."

WORK A SAFEGUARD

"The power of stated and regular work about home to restrain a child from mischief and wrongdoing is little appreciated in the average city household. To be sure in the homes of the poor, many children are overworked and exhausted by out of school duties, but their condition is scarcely more pitiable than that of the children of more well-to-do families who have no home duties. Mr. William George has found that work and responsibility for some difficult tasks is almost a panacea for the reformation of the wayward children of rich and poor alike. His experience with delinquent children from comfortable homes points conclusively to a fatal defect in the training these homes provide. Such children are often suffering from irresponsibility. They have been used all their lives to having things done for them and consequently they have never acquired the art of relying on themselves in anything but mischief. We may well say that the first step in moral training is learning how to depend on one's self and how to be ready to give kindly help to others when they need it. The various phases of promptness, obedience, mutual helpfulness, truthfulness and self-reliance can be much more vitally impressed through home duties than in any other way. There, if anywhere, the child may learn how necessary these virtues are to the welfare of everybody and how hard it is to be happy without them."—Irving King, Ph. D., in Parents and Their Problems.

CULTIVATE CONFIDENCE

The small tasks of the young children are not only stepping-stones to industrial efficiency and to development in the fundamental virtues, but if performed in loving companionship with the mother or the father, they lead also to mutual sympathy and understanding and aid greatly in establishing the confidence upon which the later safety of the children so largely depends.

"The lack of confidence between parents and children is frequently seen in the attitude of mothers and daughters toward each other. The latter are selfish and demanding, sometimes saucy and headstrong. . . . Again the cure is prevention. The little girls should be expected to help the mothers in the house, to wait on them and to prepare little surprises for their comfort and pleasure. Many girls are selfish because they do not realize how much labor it costs some one else to give them the things they want. If a girl is 'fussy' about her clothes and wants new or freshly laundered ones too frequently, let her make some of them herself and do her own washing and ironing to see how hard mother has to work to satisfy her whims. . . .

"Many long-suffering mothers endure the humiliation of being ordered about by their exacting young daughters . . . and otherwise treated disrespectfully, because these same mothers have overlooked the sauciness or 'answering back' of the little children. The result is loss of respect, and no mother can hold even her daughters without their respect to add weight to her attempts at control and advice. Make friends of these dear girls who at heart are really longing for your companionship but are too shy to let you know it. Add to their respect for you affection, sympathy, and an earnest desire to be their friend and confidante and teach them unselfishness and self-denial from the very beginning. Then, when the testing time of adolescence arrives, you will both be ready for the deeper confidences which should come from one to the other as from woman to woman. . . .

"Sad it is to see in many instances the son estranged from the father because of lack of understanding and of sympathy for the boy's ambitions and abilities, too much severity, or in later years a mere difference of opinion or of temperament.

"To prevent this deplorable coldness, begin to make companions of the little fellows. They just love to have father interested in their games and studies. When they come to you with questions as to how this or that thing works, explain it to them. Take them with you to places of instruction like machine shops, factories, electric plants, and by thus satisfying their craving for knowledge you will bind yourself to their young hearts with unbreakable ties. Then when the restlessness and interrogations of adolescence come, they will the more readily listen to your advice because you have shown them all along that you 'knew things' and could help them out of difficulties. Confidence thus established in small things will bring respect and love and you will be able to talk to them of the great questions of sex hygiene because you have prepared the way by this daily companionship all through their young lives."—Emma Virginia Fish.

ABUSE OF CONFIDENCE

"It is most important that parents should possess the fullest confidence of their children. To do this they must never trifles with truth, never violate a promise, never betray a trust.

"There is nothing so valuable to a father as the absolute confidence of his son. How many fathers who are extremely solicitous for their son's welfare lose their real hold upon them by forfeiting their confidence, by scolding, nagging, whipping, by making promises which they do not keep, giving them things and then taking them away. . . .

"The father who wants to keep the confidence of his boy (and the same is true concerning the mother's ability to retain her daughter's confidence), must regard it as sacred and never make a promise which he does not keep.

"I know a father who is distressed to the point of distraction because his son is becoming dissipated and associates with young people of immoral character. He grieves terribly because he cannot do anything with his boy, has no influence over him; but the fact is that from infancy the father has fed him upon false hopes, has never kept his promises, has scolded and nagged the boy, called him brainless, good for nothing, and was always telling him that he would never amount to anything and ridiculing his dreams of his future. Of course the boy is not going to make a confidant of his father, who, if he had regarded his word as lightly and treated his business associates as unfairly as he has his own boy, would not have the confidence of anybody. As it is, in losing his son's confidence he has lost what he now longs for above everything else in the world—the power to restrain and guide him at this critical time.

"Boys are very sensitive and when they have been snubbed a few times by the father . . . they will seek sympathy, comradeship and advice elsewhere. Tens of thousands of fathers have ruined sons with splendid possibilities by constantly scolding them, condemning them, when the real trouble is that the father did not understand the boy, did not sympathize with him or win his confidence. . . .

"The wise parent gets into the boy's heart, makes a friend of him, tries to help him express himself, and does not try to make him be somebody else. If children were properly trained, the mother would be the daughter's first confidante; the same is true of the son and the father. But the child will never open himself up to the mother, father, sister or brother who has abused his confidence."—Orison Swett Marden, in Child Culture.

MAKE HOME ATTRACTIVE

"I beseech of you, fathers and mothers, if you would keep your boys and girls from the street, if you would prevent their making harmful friendships, if you would have the home a bulwark against temptations, make it so attractive that they will not want to wander away. . . . And with the routine of necessary work, encourage plenty of fun and laughter. Many a boy full of life and mischief is sent out of doors because the father or mother 'cannot stand his noise,' and will not take the pains to enter into his fun for a little while. When mother has a headache or father is overtired, an appeal to the love and sympathy of the youth will often cause him to use self-control and turn his boisterous mood into one of thoughtfulness and care. Or, a pleasant occupation or game suggested instead of a frolic will give opportunity for the play of spirits. A boy, or girl either, allowed freedom for fun at home will not be so eager for the street in search of activity and excitement."—Fish.

"There are few parents who cannot do something to build up and preserve the character forming influences expressed in the phrase 'our home.' . . . More evenings can be spent together in reading and in friendly social intercourse. . . . If the children have had peculiar difficulties to meet and their hearts are sore, they can be encouraged by kindly inquiries and intimate counsel. . . . Better progress in their studies would often result if they knew that father and mother had a more loving concern that they do their best. Nothing alienates a child more quickly from the home than the sense that no one cares very much what he does. On the other hand, if he can be made to feel that every phase of his conduct in school and on the street does make a difference, does reflect upon the cheer of the home circle, he has gained one of the most powerful of incentives for a right life."—King.

DOING THINGS TOGETHER

"The normal home is a character garden—not a girl factory nor a boy foundry, but a garden where character grows. It can grow only in an atmosphere of happy contentment.

"One family, not wealthy either, fitted up a gymnasium in the attic to keep the boys at home—and went without parlor furniture. What eminent good sense! Many wise parents have introduced dark rooms for photography, workrooms for carpentry, bug rooms for natural history, even mushroom farms in the cellar, and so on through the whole fad chapter, and it all worked splendidly. The boy likes his home, stays at home and brings his friends home."

[From such a home has come our young brother who is in charge of the wireless station at Graceland College. In his own home he was given opportunity to make things, to experiment, to follow new lines of interest.]

"Happy the home that can discover the boy's interests and keep him busy and contented at home. Particularly happy the home where the boys can share the home responsibilities and duties. . . . Doing things together in the household, with mutual concessions and burden bearing, is a mighty binder together of hearts. As Professor Starbuck says: 'It is the rule, not only outside the home but within it, that the strongest attachments spring up and happiness abounds when people are losing themselves in a common task. When people have honestly worked together nothing can separate them.' The more strongly this community of interest is felt, in common toil or even hardship and suffering, the stronger the home ties."—Fiske.

CONVERSATION IN THE HOME

"There is no educational opportunity in the home more important than the talk at table. But this educational influence must never wear a pedagogic air and impose a schoolroom order on a life which ought to be free, spontaneous and joyful. . . .

"Children are part of the family and have a right to share in the talk. If they are in the right atmosphere they will not be intrusive or impertinent. . . . Encourage them to talk, and meet them more than half way by the utmost hospitality to the subjects that interest and puzzle them. Give them serious attention; do not ridicule their confusion of statement nor belittle their troubles. . . .

Some people make the mistake of 'talking down' to their children; of turning the conversation at table into a kind of elaborate 'baby talk'; not realizing that they are robbing their children of the delight and education of hearing older people talk about the world in which they live. . . . Do not limit the talk at table to the topics of childhood, but make it intelligible to children; bring into the home the large events and interests of the world; broaden its life by relating it to the life of society; make books and music and art generally contribute to its richness; give the substance of books of travel or of narrative interest. In a word, take your children into the life of your mind as well as of your heart. . . . The confidence of children is the key which unlocks their lives to parents, and companionship furnishes the best atmosphere for confidence."—Outlook Editorial.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

Points of Difference

There are children's homes and children's homes the country over, under the auspices of various organizations, both civic and religious, and even those whose ownership and directorate are private or corporate.

As is the case with the Latter Day Saints in the field of education and the care of the homeless aged, so is it in the care of the homeless child,—we have just begun our work; and the fact that the work is in its infancy does not make it any the easier to prosecute or maintain.

In the work of education, and in the care of the homeless aged, we have departed from the ways and manners of the world to a very large degree, and are blazing new paths which time will prove to be either an honor to our inspiration or a monument to our folly. What about the care of the homeless child? Are we to care for the children in our institution, placed there because of their necessity for protection and a chance to properly develop, in the same manner that the children in other institutions are cared for?

How many have noted the manner in which the institutions of the world are caring for the orphaned and the homeless child? Listen to this from the pen of Jean Webster, she who wrote "Daddy Longlegs," and for all that has her serious side of life.

"The trouble with orphan asylums—at least most asylums—I know several happy exceptions—is that they totally unfit children to live in a normal community. When a child from earliest infancy has done exactly what one hundred other children have done at the ringing of a bell, has never handled any money or taken any responsibility, you can imagine how fitted he is to cope with life when he is turned out to shift for himself at sixteen! . . . My quarrel is with the old-fashioned institutions—and there are many of them to-day—on the congregate system, where the children are fed and housed and educated in the cheapest manner possible. You have only to look at the listless, stupid, anemic crowd of youngsters to realize what kind of citizens they will make. Mr. Thomas Mott Osborne told me, not long ago, that one of his prisoners says that he started on his criminal career at the age of seven months, when he was placed in an orphan asylum."

It is with thankfulness that we note how far the people to whom the church has trusted the destinies of our homeless children have avoided the plans here condemned by the witty and talented authoress. For instance, in the matter of the care and education of the children, we are a long way from the cheap and careless methods to which our attention has been called. Still, because of insufficient funds, we are not so far ahead as we should be. If we desire to care for the children in such a manner as to lessen the outlay of money, and are at the same time able to give them chances to do the very things which will fit them to live in a normal community, we have reached higher ground, and the citizens which develop from our product will justify our methods. Our institution has not forgotten that the development of the child to live a useful life is the end to be accomplished.

Miss Webster goes on to say: "There is a terrible place over in New Jersey, . . . and there is another up in Connecticut that is most dismal. All the children have their heads shaved like criminals, and it is very difficult to tell the difference between the boys and the girls. In fact, as I was going through the hospital, I noticed one forlorn little youngster, with shaved head, sitting up in bed, in a dreadful flannel pajama nightgown affair. I went up and patted him on the shoulder and said, 'Poor little fellow! What is the matter with you?' The little fellow gave me a disgusted look and said, 'I'm not a fellow, I'm a girl.'

Those who have visited our children's home cannot imagine such an occurrence as the above, yet within a day's journey of Lamoni there exists an institution which treats its inmates (not children, by the way), in just such a manner as this.

It has been our fortune to visit at places where children who have been cared for at our home are now occupying in private homes; and at one place the sister stated that the young woman, now past sixteen years of age, did not know how to cook the very simple articles of diet, such as potatoes, apple sauce, bread, etc., when she came there from the home, and for a time we were made to feel at least in this case we had failed to do our duty by the child.

Just a few days since, however, we were at the home calling on a sick girl, and before we left, were asked to try the cooking and baking done by the girls, as taught by Sister Briggs and her assistants. We were pleased to be treated to such good pies and cakes and tarts, and to hear of the good biscuits baked by these same girls; but, if possible, we were more pleased to think that the scene enacted in that home where the good sister asked the question, Why do you not teach the girls to cook and the boys to milk? would not likely occur again, for the boys are being taught to milk, and report has it they are doing good work, and the girls are learning sewing, embroidery, and cooking. The boys are also learning to cut wood, garden, embroider, chore, and be just like other normal boys, generally useful.

It must be admitted that to get this start is not the easy or the cheap way, but in the long run it is certainly the economical method, and time will vindicate those who have undertaken this burden. Let the good work go on, and when you hear some ask the question, Why is it we cannot support the children at a less cost per child than is done at the home in Lamoni? just remember that your money is well spent if the child is developed so that he or she may become a useful rather than a useless member of the community in which abode is finally taken.

Reunions

HOW THEY ORIGINATED: THEIR VALUE AND PURPOSE

The facts in this discussion have been the subject of observation and consideration for years. The immediate cause of now waiting are conditions reflected in Elder H. E. Moler's letter in reference to the lapse of reunion work in southern Ohio, and the attempted revival of same.

The depleted condition of the three branches mentioned might be due to other causes, but the helpfulness of lively reunions could no doubt have tided them over. Southern Ohio merged for years their reunion interest with others for a larger reunion, and failing to attend at the greater distance are now trying to duplicate former work. Similar experiences and results have been had elsewhere. Related to our work, as well as that of others, is the fact of practical working distances beyond which the response of attendance does not come.

Southern Ohio holds the historical distinction of having held the first reunion within the State, at Limerick, in 1895, and an excellent one it was. The writer was one of the main agitators, and while at tent work with Brother H. E. Moler assisted him in making six muslin tents, the material furnished by Brother A. B. Kirkendall at cost, and a machine for the work. These tents the purchasers got at cost of the material, the work being done to start reunions. Renting or buying at a full price, then, was too formidable a venture. Had southern Ohio steadily maintained their reunions, who can measure what the results might have been? Let them do their first works over in faith, regain the lost vantage ground, and press on to ever enlarging success.

Reunions originated in this way: In the General Conference of 1883 at Kirtland, Ohio, the semiannual or fall conferences were discontinued. The main reason and all-sufficient one being that the ministry be called from their work but once a year, instead of twice; and secondly, the fall being altogether the best season for ministerial work, the conference held in the fall was eliminated. They could meet in April and do business though the weather be unfavorable for it, and is yet more unfavorable for field work.

These reasons why the General Conferences should be held in the spring and not in the fall will stand until the seasons change, as self-evident facts in the case.

The fall conferences held in western Iowa where the largest nucleus of membership was had built up largely the Reorganization in large gatherings. Something was due them. Brother Charles Derry moved that some gathering be held in lieu of the fall conferences, and the reunion held at Persia, Iowa, was the result, and first reunion. Then followed that of Garners Grove, in 1884, and that of Gallands Grove, in 1885, etc.

To serve more than one locality different reunions developed. A rivalry sprang up as to which was principal but in due time abated, and the several localities have maintained their work.

The good work spread not only in western Iowa, but from sunny California to Massachusetts, and from Florida to Canada, or reverse if you will. So the substitute for the old-time fall conference is blessing all the land! Isn't that a good substitute?

Placing the General Conference in the fall, should it ever be done, would not only call the ministry from their main work at the best time for it, but would very largely neutralize the reunion work in an extended section.

It will always be the privilege of all who can and care to do so to attend General Conferences, no doubt, but the work devolves upon the alignment made in instructions from the Lord in the plan of representation he gave, the reference made to it in 1901, and section 125:7, 8, rather indicating a diminishing ratio instead of an increasing one. Considering this in connection with settlements to be formed at various points, "More than a small area of country," as set forth in section 128:56, it at once appears the General Conference whenever held, or wherever, could not supply these localities as can the reunions.

General Conferences are largely legislative. The work, confined to certain limits, to many not of the active participants is irksome. The reunion provides opportunity for all, and much more widely diversified and suitable to their needs.

Since the Lord has advised "settlements," in "more than a small area of country," why make the General Conference do duty especially in the advertisement of one locality? The "settlements" should be looked forward to and as nearly supplied in the full sense as the case may admit of. The reunion is perhaps as potent as any one means of service available, and may be common to all "settlements."

The permanent locating of some reunions is in evidence to their value. Onset, Massachusetts, Hermosa Beach, California, Chetek, Wisconsin, etc. It may not be best or necessary for all localities to localize at one point all reunion work. In some parts the shifting process may be altogether best, and is evidently so at least till the best center may be found.

In some localities it has been thought because of different crops, seasons, etc., reunion work is impracticable. Eastern Michigan Saints thought so, and the writer with others had a time in getting them to make the attempt. They began, have continued; and now would be much harder to convince adverse to reunion work. They have held that June only was the time there, but propose to risk a later date for the next.

Conferences are good, so are two-day meetings where held, neither afford sufficient time. People quite generally, once a year, take some time off for vacation, recreation, or what you like. Largely the reunion affords occasion and privilege for these. It means rest from secular application and added opportunity for spiritual attainment, and is altogether desirable as an indulgence. It is a fact, too, where you find reunion work best developed, there is found the development of all lines of our work.

To help and be helped is a good advance thought to reunion activity, and the main equipment. Of property equipment, a tent is a main feature, and not a great expense. One could often be used in home life, and will with care last for years. The Black Hills living tent, bought with the larger tent, cost eleven dollars.

Should I be in this field the coming year, I shall make a strenuous effort for a reunion at Spearfish, for all the surrounding contiguous sections, parts of South Dakota, Nebraska, and Wyoming, a section too far removed from all other reunion work to in any sense interfere with them, or to cooperate with them.

Let all Saints in the above-indicated territory earnestly consider this, and be ready to cooperate. Begin now, as says Brother Moler to southern Ohio. May many other localities catch the echo and fall in line.

Yours for reunions, and every other good work,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

Prehistoric Temple Found

[The following letters will be of interest to HERALD readers. An account of the unearthing of this ruin will be found in the Of General Interest department of this issue.—EDITORS.]

The wonderful news gatherer and publishing agency, The Associated Press, reported the United States Government to have uncovered a prehistoric temple in Mesa Verde National Park, New Mexico, containing twenty-five rooms; the work done under the direction of Professor Fewkes, the clipping follows:

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, January 15.—The most striking prehistoric ruin yet unearthed by archaeologists in America has been found by Doctor J. Walter Fewkes of the Smithsonian Institution, who made his report to the interior department to-day. The mound, the largest of any thus far located, was in Mesa National Park in New Mexico, and apparently was built for religious rites and ceremonials. It has been named Sun Temple. There are twenty-five rooms, and the walls, which total more than 1,000 feet in length, average four feet thick. Cedar and pinion trees growing above the mound would indicate that the mound had been built about 1300 A. D."

In order to satisfy myself as to the correctness of the report I wrote Mr. Fewkes, and received the following letter which will certainly be of interest to all believers in the Book of Mormon.

Very truly yours,

DELOIT, IOWA, January 26, 1916.

CHARLES J. HUNT.

MR. CHARLES J. HUNT,

Deloit, Iowa.

Dear Sir: The newspaper accounts of my work last summer on the Mesa Verde National Park given out by the Associated Press are substantially correct, and are taken from my manuscript report to the secretary of the interior.

I am told this report will be published shortly—the report to the secretary of the Smithsonian may not appear in print for some time.

Very truly yours,

J. WALTER FEWKES.

ERSKINE, MINNESOTA, January 11, 1916.

Editors Herald: Full many a letter have I enjoyed reading in the columns of your paper, so now I venture to greet you. May the year 1916 bring greater success to each earnest worker for the Master, and more hearers become doers than in the past years, is my heartfelt wish.

I was one of the outsiders who have been privileged to comprehend the work of the latter days. When after much devoted work in a place all the fruit is one or two baptisms, the reward oftentimes seems very small; but to the one who is thus permitted to enter the fold it is not an insignificant matter, and we are glad the Lord sends his servants to seek his one lost sheep. Then let us who are thereby favored so live that the light planted within us shall shine in the darkness, and, when possible, help to increase the fruit of the labor so given for our sake.

One of the strongest human evidences to me of the sincerity and genuineness of the work was the life of Saints: the consecrated, devoted, persevering labors of the efficient, enlightened and powerful men in the work, from the young to the old, but especially of the aged soldiers standing by the banner till the last shot is fired, or as long as the arm will hold. Had they not the assurance of better things, would they not in their declining years retire to a well-earned rest? and enjoy the fruit of their labors?

With other churches men may be sincere, yet be far from right, thinking their doctrine must be right because their forefathers accepted it as right, traditioned by the doctrine of man; but with our claims, our doctrine, how could it be sincere and not be true? With the manifestations, the revelations and direction, how could we be far mistaken?

Outsiders tried, and in fact some try still to tell me I or anyone does not learn the principles and the object of the church until we have been members for a year, two years, three, or more. Since I was assured of the divinity of the work, and became a member, I have no fear of what I shall find or learn of the work, so long as we continue faithful in the light given us. And I surely have found nothing to be ashamed of. I rejoice to know what I have found, and never expect to regret stepping into the water of life. I have found more joy and greater comfort in the gospel than I had even hoped for.

In the year and a half that I have enjoyed in the church, I have been much strengthened in faith, and I love the work more dearly as time goes by. I long to understand more fully to be able to live in accord with the word. One of the least pleasing features of the work, as I see it, is that there are those who have received the light who still live indifferently, and carelessly toward it. This, however, is not a principle of the church, but a failure to comply with its most urgent teachings.

I hope that some day this, the work of the Lord, shall be established in this place, and go out as a witness to the people in this community.

May I have wisdom, willingness, and ability to do my duty before my Master in my home and community, here somewhat apart from the Saints. However, in gospel bonds I am near—yes, with them. I gathered strength and gladness from attending the North Dakota conference at Fargo at New Year's time, which I hope will continue with me.

We need the good work to caution, correct, enlighten, and encourage us in our daily duties, and not having the opportunity of meeting very often, we treasure up the word more carefully, perhaps. I am glad for the rich provisions for the scattered Saints in the good literature and home work of the church.

I appreciate the prayer of anyone who will ask in my behalf that I may do right, and grieve not my Master who has done so much for his child.

News from Missions

Scandinavia

I just arrived home from a trip to different places where I have labored in planting the seed of gospel truth. By invitation of our genial Brother Peter Muceus, it was my privilege to visit a little place in Norway by the name of Bon, where the gospel has found some ready and willing to accept. Through the instrumentality of Brethren Muceus, Peter Anderson, and others, a branch has been raised up there, and lately, by the efforts of Brother Muceus, assisted by the local brethren, a neat little chapel has been built, which surely is a credit to the cause. By the way, this is the first meetinghouse our people have built in Scandinavia.

I have labored all alone so long that I thought it would be very nice to be associated with Brother Muceus for a time, but to my surprise upon my arrival he had made arrangements to leave, which he did, and I was left to battle on alone as best I could, being assisted by local brethren. I began at once to hold forth in the new chapel, with fair congregations and the best of interest. I continued about four weeks, and before I left two precious souls, husband and wife, accepted the message we bear, and I had the privilege of burying them in baptism. I left these newly-born Saints strong in the faith, with others near the kingdom, and the Saints rejoicing in the blessed truth.

With these additions, and the organization of a Sunday school and partly of a branch while Brother Muceus was there, we hope they will make progress in the great work in which we are engaged.

On my way back home I again met Brother Muceus near Christiana, the capital city of Norway. A meeting of the Saints was arranged for that evening, and because of my being a stranger it fell to my lot to do the preaching. Also on my way home I stopped at Goltenborg, where I had the privilege of preaching in a temperance hall Thursday evening. I could not secure the hall any more that week, so I met with the Saints on Sunday in prayer meeting, when we partook of the Lord's supper. I then went on my way home.

There is plenty of work for a lone missionary in the whole country of Sweden. I hope some one will be sent there by the next conference. I believe that in this country good honest people will accept the truth if it is properly presented. My intention is to make some effort in Helsingborg. There are a few here who are interested. I will then go to Goltenborg for a few weeks, to Stockholm, the capital city of Sweden, and other places, as I shall be able. I endeavor to do the best I can to build up this grand and glorious work.

The condition of the work in this country is just as good now, if not better, than before the war broke out. Yet the effect of the war is felt in almost everything, in all business transactions especially. The wage earner is made to feel the burden more than anyone else, because everything is raised in value; in some places the price has been doubled. Yet everybody is struggling along, hoping for better times, though it is doubtful if such will come soon.

I send all laborers for Zion's great cause my best wishes.

C. A. SWENSON.

Ohio.

I am still interested in the angel message. I labored during the year in the Kirtland, Youngstown-Sharon, and North-western Ohio districts. While I have only been permitted to baptize eleven during the year, I have been privileged to present the gospel to many that never heard it before. I have made many friends for myself and the cause we all love.

The latter part of December I was permitted by the minister in charge, Brother G. T. Griffiths, to go home for the holidays and labor in my home town and vicinity until after the district conference at New Philadelphia. While at home I renewed an opening I made seven years ago, two miles west of Cuyahoga Falls. At that time the prejudice was so strong that I could only hold a few meetings, and only a few came out. This time we held forth nearly five weeks with good crowds all the time, and good interest. I sold one Book of Mormon and three others requested that they be furnished with one. These requests I placed in the hands of Brother Bush, of Akron, who looks after the publications for the Akron Branch, and will see that these people are supplied. We closed our meetings there on Thursday night, to attend the district conference at New Philadelphia, leaving some near the kingdom and others much interested. I hope to be able to return and continue the work there before long.

The district conference was considered a success. Everything passed off pleasantly and in order, with Brethren G. T. Griffiths and A. R. Manchester in charge.

Brother John Carlisle, who in company with the writer, entered the missionary field last spring, has been the recipient of a great blessing. He had been laboring in the Pittsburgh District. He was taken ill and by permission of the missionary in charge, went home on February 6, taking to his bed that same evening, where he remained until the 11th, when he went to the New Philadelphia conference. The physician at this time gave him an X Ray examination, pronouncing his trouble tuberculosis in a bad form, and advising him to go home and not to engage in reading, or studying, or other work for at least six weeks. The brother had already lost twenty-five pounds. He came to the conference and was administered to. Brother Griffiths advised him to go home and rest for a few weeks, and not to think of going out to preach until he was again strong and well. He went home and stayed just one week, and then joined me at this place on the 20th, and has been preaching with me night about. He is gaining daily and his cough is almost gone.

All the people here were glad to see Brother John at his work again. He has been around here for the last year, and has made many friends, both in and out of the church. He had just made a new opening at the Rogers Schoolhouse, two-miles from Charley Roi's where he had created quite an interest and left with many requests to return.

With the consent of the minister in charge I was permitted to come and help carry on the work. We have been holding forth each evening with good crowds and much interest. Because of our success Satan has become enraged. Sunday we received notice that we could not have the schoolhouse longer than next Friday night. The good people of the community are up in arms, and are circulating a petition to submit to the authorities, asking that we be permitted to use the schoolhouse as long as we wish to occupy. We have made many friends here for ourselves and the angel message. One lady gave us her name for baptism last night, and several others are talking of obeying the truth. Brother John and I are going to stand by our guns. We are meeting the enemy on their own grounds, and they will have to fire a bigger shot than they have done yet before we give up the fight. It is no wonder Satan rages, when he sees so many good, honest people joining the army of the Lord.

All praise be to our heavenly Father for the blessing bestowed upon our dear brother and associate, and for the success we have had in our efforts at this place. May our kind and loving Father be with the coming General Conference and those who are in charge of the general affairs of the church, that they may be directed by the Holy Spirit, that all that is done at the coming General Conference may be of that character that during the next conference year the church may stand on higher ground.

Let us live in harmony with the celestial law, that Zion may soon be redeemed and the people of God enjoy the blessings that he has promised his people, is our prayer.

Your brother and coworker,

JAMES MCCONNAUGHY.

News from Branches

Wichita, Kansas

J. Arthur Davis and T. C. Kelley have been in Wichita the past week holding meetings. Good interest was shown. Thursday Brother Davis left for Conway Springs, where there are a few Saints, but no branch. Sunday he will be with the branch at Winfield, where they have a membership of twenty, under the leadership of Brother Vickery.

It is gratifying to note the interest taken throughout the district in the reunion to be held at Wichita next August. Saints are discussing this event and planning for it. Saints from other districts are arranging to be here. One dear sister from far off Wisconsin has written that she is planning to be in attendance.

Saints visiting Wichita should not fail to come to our church. Come and make yourself known. We shall enjoy having you with us, and are sure you will be pleased with our reception.

MRS. IDA H. STEWART.

Indianapolis, Indiana

I enjoy reading the many letters in the HERALD from Saints, even though I have not seen them. These cheerful letters give encouragement to the longing soul seeking enlightenment.

Indianapolis is one of the largest inland cities in the country, but there are only a few of God's chosen people living here. We organized a branch December 11, 1911, with eleven members. Elder Charles H. Fish was elected president, and with his untiring efforts, assisted by Elders R. C. Russell, J. W. Metcalf, H. E. Moler, A. C. Barmore, Jacob Halb, and the local priesthood and faithful members, who have come through sunshine and rain, our membership has increased to eighty. We are making a strong effort to be ready to meet the Bridegroom when he comes.

At the district conference held in May, 1915, Elder Charles H. Fish was elected president of the Southern Indiana District. He is spending this month visiting the different branches of this territory. At the regular branch business meeting, held January 6, 1916, Elder James E. Warne was elected branch president. By our united efforts and faith in God we hope to add to the church daily such as should be saved.

Brother and Sister George E. Sackfield, of Matherville, Illinois, Brother George Hartsell, of Taylorville, Illinois, and Brother Edmund Perry, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, spent a week in our city attending the Twenty-Fifth Convention of Mine Workers. We enjoyed having them with us. Brother Hart-sell occupied the pulpit January 23 at 7.30 p. m. and Brother Sackfield, January 30 at 10.45 a. m. These sermons were enjoyed by all.

It is now only a few weeks until General Conference. We notice a letter from R. C. Russell suggesting that there will be an attempt made to change the date from April to September. This seems to me a very wise suggestion. According to my observations, it has few objectionable features, chief of which would be taking the missionaries out of their fields at the best time of year to hold meetings; yet if it is the best time to hold local meetings, it certainly would be the best time of the year to gather together for General Conference.

Your brother,

J. E. WARNE.

Independence, Missouri

The last Sunday in February was pleasant and springlike, and in the early morning as the Saints met in the basement for prayer, and took their wonted seats they felt a degree of pleasure and satisfaction when viewing the newly polished floor and furniture, and the cleanly, bright appearance of the room.

The young people generally meet in the hall, but lately a few of them worship with the older ones. We noticed among the young men our brother who on last evening at the mid-week prayer meeting was set apart as a priest. He is the youngest son, Edward, of our late Brother Emsley Curtis.

The brethren from abroad continue coming on their way to the General Conference. We have with us now Brethren J. W. Wight, J. W. Metcalf, and Brother Rowe, who bring excellent reports of labor done in the missionary field.

We have of late been having excellent sermons from the bishopric. Bishops Bullard and Siegfried occupied last Sunday, and two weeks ago Bishop J. F. Keir. The Saints by the zeal and plain setting forth of the principles of the law are built up in the faith.

The Sunday afternoon prayer meeting was filled with spiritual life. The gift of prophecy was manifested to our joy and comfort, the Lord being pleased with his people. They were admonished to faithfulness, receiving wonderful promises of his love and watchcare.

At the business meeting February 28 delegates were chosen to the stake conference to be held March 11, at Knobnoster, Missouri. The Ladies' Aid Society from a supper held February 25, raised twenty-five dollars for the benefit of the branch.

The weather is again wintry, and snow is in evidence, but the efficient corps of workers preparing the Lord's house for use of General Conference are kept busy, and the Saints are looking forward to their conventions and conferences, both stake and general, with high hopes, and prayers for success.

In gospel bonds,

MRS. ABBIE A. HORTON.

Central Chicago

The last union sacrament meeting at 3.30 p. m. on February 20, was a comfort and strength to all who were permitted to be present. These union meetings should be attended by all of our scattered members. They are a source of great encouragement and enable each one to surmount the daily difficulties that beset our pathway.

Brother Doctor Elmer Schwartz gave us a very instructive lecture at the Religio Friday evening on the subject "How to eat." He has very kindly consented to continue these lectures, five in number. We cannot learn too much about our bodies, so that we may keep well and be happy.

Brother David Dowker is now at Clark Lawn to straighten out some misstatements about our people. Persecution has started up in that little town because of the gospel being preached, and honest souls being gathered out.

The work in this part of the vineyard is steadily growing. We have a priesthood of eighteen, who meet at 6.30 for morning prayer service the first Sunday of each month. They are alive, and eager to be up and doing.

Success to God's work.

Mrs. L. M. HORTON

The Bust Fund

The movement for a bronze bust of the late President Joseph Smith was begun some months before his sudden demise, some money having been promised by certain interested brethren, and the work of modeling having been practically completed at the time of his final illness. The work of raising enough funds for this bust had been placed upon the present President of the church; but because of his many duties he was considerably handicapped in doing the work, and his secretary, Brother O. W. Newton, and Brother I. A. Smith relieved him of this labor. These brethren wrote personal letters to those of the Saints who they supposed would like to contribute to the fund. Their efforts met with a hearty response, and many donations were made by those not approached, but who had heard of the project and desired to be included among the donors.

And thus it was that about the time of the death of President Joseph Smith the money was in hand for all expenses connected with the work. The bust has been finished and is on exhibition at the Sanitarium in Independence, a splendid example of the sculptor's art, that will in all probability prove a joy to many hundreds and thousands of the Saints.

The balance will probably be used to start a fund to provide for busts or paintings of other prominent church men.

We herewith give the name of those who contributed to the bust fund:

UTAH MORMONISM EXPOSED. A book by Elder J. D. Stead. The full title is Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism Exposed, and it is an attack on the perverted teachings of the dominant church in Utah rather than a personal affair. Numerous verified quotations from their standard publications on various debated points. No. 125$1.25

BOOKBINDING. The Herald Publishing House is equipped for all kinds of bookbinding in connection with the printing plant. Let us bind your HERALDS and other church papers in attractive volumes for your convenience. Many a good article will be unused unless you have it where you can find it easily. Then we bind magazines and rebind old books, and do special work of all kinds. If in doubt, write us, and your letter will receive the personal attention of an expert in that department.

SUNSHINE PARTIES

are every day affairs in the South in the Winter time--for when blizzards, slush and snow are quite the fashion in the North, balmy breezes, sunny skies, moonlit bays and tropical flowers are the fashion in the South. And those who pack their grips and go South at this time, reap rich rewards in health dividends and delightful recreation and return, realizing more than ever before, the real value of a winter vacation in that romantic, historic and beautiful land south of the Mason and Dixon Line.

The cost is low--perhaps not as much as you thought it would be. Come in and let's talk it over.

THREE EASTER BELLS

By Ralph W. Farrell

Ring, glad bell, and may thy sound
Go forth upon its way,
Telling the glad news all around
That Christ was born to-day!

Thou earnest bell, what is thy song?
The Great Redeemer works! 'Tis well;
For right must triumph over wrong---
Ring on, and on, thou earnest bell.

How sad thy tone, thou solemn bell;
'Tis death and gloom fall over all;
Ring soft and low the Savior's knell,
Ring soft, ring soft, thou solemn bell.

But now, thou bells, break forth and ring;
Let music waft from shore to shore,
The Great God lives, the risen King
Has conquered death forever more!

THE FIRST GENERAL CONFERENCE

“On the first day of June, 1830, we held our first conference as an organized church. Our members were about thirty, besides whom many assembled with us, who were either believers, or anxious to learn.

“Having opened by singing and prayer, we partook together of the emblems of the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. We then proceeded to confirm several who had lately been baptized, after which we called out and ordained several to the various offices of the priesthood.

“Much exhortation and instruction was given, and the Holy Ghost was poured out upon us in a miraculous manner:—many of our number prophesied, whilst others had the heavens opened to their view, and were so overcome that we had to lay them on beds, or other convenient places. Among the rest was Brother Newel Knight, who had to be placed on a bed, being unable to help himself.

“By his own account of the transaction he could not understand why we should lay him on the bed, as he felt no sensibility of weakness. He felt his heart filled with love, with glory and pleasure unspeakable, and could discern all that was going on in the room; when, all of a sudden, a vision of futurity burst upon him. He saw there represented the great work which through my instrumentality was yet to be accomplished.

“He saw heaven opened, and beheld the Lord Jesus Christ seated at the right hand of the Majesty on high, and had it made plain to his understanding that the time would come when he would be admitted into his presence, to enjoy his society forever and ever. When their bodily strength was restored to these brethren, they shouted ‘Hosannas to God and the Lamb,’ and rehearsed the glorious things which they had seen and felt, whilst they were yet in the Spirit.

“Such scenes as these were calculated to inspire our hearts with joy unspeakable, and fill us with awe and reverence for that almighty Being by whose grace we had been called to be instrumental in bringing about for the children of men the enjoyment of such glorious blessings as were now poured upon us.

“To find ourselves engaged in the very same order of things as observed by the holy apostles of old; to realize the importance and solemnity of such proceedings, and to witness and feel with our own natural senses the like glorious manifestations of the power of the priesthood; the gifts and blessings of the Holy Ghost; and the goodness and condescension of a merciful God, unto such as obey the everlasting gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; combined to create within us sensations of rapturous gratitude, and inspire us with fresh zeal and energy in the cause of truth.”—From Joseph Smith’s account, Church History, vol. 1, pp. 87, 88.

ELBOW ROOM

A man's gift maketh room for him.—Proverbs 18: 16.

The church truly gathers into her domain of every kind, as the Master predicted. Even among those who are good and worthy, the only kind we wish to consider at this time, there exists the utmost diversity of characteristics, interests, and abilities. This in itself is immensely to the advantage of the church, and adds greatly to her strength and efficiency, if only we look at the matter in the right way.

But if we do not look at it in the right way there is trouble. Whenever one man, or a group of men of similar individuality, conceives the notion that all men should be recast in one mold, in an exact replica of themselves, there is trouble. If they are at all successful in their efforts the church is impoverished.

Here is one man, perhaps typical of a class, a missionary in a leading quorum, who has acquired considerable culture. He has read quite extensively and intelligently, and thus has enriched his mind on many subjects. He is interested in history, science, art, music, the languages, ethics. True, he does not often preach "an old-fashioned doctrinal sermon"; probably he would not be much good to meet an Adventist on the Sabbath question or on the question of "soul sleeping."

Some may be very suspicious of this man's influence. Concerning a man of that type, a certain brother remarked not long ago: "I have heard him preach a whole series of sermons and one could not have told from any one of them that he was a Latter Day Saint."

But another brother said of the same man: "I never heard him preach a sermon that I did not consider a Latter Day Saint sermon. He always fills me full of religious enthusiasm."

Surely this man has his field of usefulness. By him the church is enriched. It is enabled to compass a broader field. Because we are inclined to stick pretty close to the first principles most of the time, we ought not to deny this man elbow room to do his work.

Here is another man of a different type, a "chapter and verse man," a "first principle man," who sticks to doctrinal themes and always has his scriptural quotations at hand. He is a four-square man, armed at every angle against theological aggression,—prepared for Adventists, "Campbellites," Catholics, Spiritualists, Dunkards, Methodists, Christian Scientists, what not.

While admired by many this man has his critics, those who allege that he is too dogmatic, too narrow, too old-fashioned. But he is just the man to use in many places along the thousands of miles of frontier that the church must defend. He is a splendid prose-lyter. He is rugged and fearless. He does not shrink from the trenches.

He is equipped to instruct and reach many inquirers who, like the vast majority of worldly people, are hardly yet in the primary class in theology. He is preeminently successful in those fields that demand and must have "first principle preaching," where all the cry must be repentance.

The church is really fortunate to have these two men, widely as they differ. Why should either crowd the other or seek to depreciate his usefulness? Suppose all our members were just like one or the other of these two? Let each man ask himself:

What kind of a church would our church be,
If every member were just like me?

Most of us will admit that it would be a very lopsided affair,—exceedingly strong at some points, but terribly weak at other points. No one man completes the circle of perfection. Most men are made up of a mixture of strength and weakness,—"iron mixed with mirey clay." Let every man throw his strength into the work in his own way, if it is not an unlawful way. We are enriched and strengthened by this great variety.

How broad is our commission. No one man can cover the entire field. Why should one complain because all do not specialize on the theme that he has selected for himself? Read the following:

Also, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth. And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.

Why, that ranges all the way from geology to astronomy, from earth to heaven, from the historian to the seer; it opens a field for the theologian, the lawyer, the sociologist,—any man who thinks.

One man is a great student of books. He keeps abreast with contemporaneous thought in the universities, and reads all the new books as well as the old. Shall we crowd him out because he has "book learning"? or discount him because his sentences are grammatical? Shall we allow the "contempt of the unlearned" to fall upon him and hinder his work? Shall we dismiss him with the epithet, "high brow"?

Most certainly not. Use him. Give the man elbow room,—room according to his strength.

But here is another man who does not care for books. He may even feel a degree of misplaced pride in the mistaken idea that he is not educated. He fails to realize that he gets his education from men. He is a student of man. He talks and questions and observes. Socrates got his education in that way. He was not much seen bothering his head over books. He was in the market place, at the banquet, on the street, wherever men were, asking questions, "cross-questioning humanity," as one writer expressed it.

How about this man? He has no university degree; sometimes he gets badly mixed up in the mazes of the king's English. But he may have most excellent judgment in homely, practical matters. God can use him, too. And there is not the slightest reason why these two men should run afoul of each other; or that either should affirm, "The church has no need of you."

The church needs real men. If they are not all alike, so much the better. Are they upstanding men? That is the question. Can we trust them? Are they loyal men.

There may even be among us here and there a man of the iconoclast type, who may challenge ancient truth at some points. Or rather he may challenge our interpretation, or perception of truth. What shall we do with him? Shall we come down on him quick and hard and crowd him out of the church? Is there or is there not elbow room for such a man?

Must we join the hue and cry that has pursued the heretic in all ages? The "heresy hunt," as President Joseph Smith called it, formerly ended at the stake. The methods are different now. How about the spirit? We will not answer these questions, but leave them for our readers to ponder, merely suggesting this true principle: whatever steps may be necessary in order to curtail or prevent the preaching of error should be taken with kindly care, with a broad and enlightened comprehension of human characteristics and divine truth and compassion, and not in the hard, bitter, dogmatic spirit of the ancient heretic baiter.

We plead for a broad and liberal attitude; one that will recognize the varied richness of our church enterprises, and the strength and beauty in the aggregation of the wonderfully diverse characteristics of those whom God calls,—"according to the gifts of God unto them."

Let every man have elbow room to stand up and work, providing, of course, his work is in any sense productive of good and destructive of evil. Let all the members work together without interference and with mutual confidence and honor.

Paul must have had some such thought in mind when he wrote his famous analogy of the church and the body (1 Corinthians 12). He says: "If they were all one member, where were the body?" He goes on to rejoice, "But now are they many members, yet one body." He affirms that "God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him." And he concludes that the eye cannot say unto the hand, "I have no need of thee," and so on.

Yes, it is said in modern revelation, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." I cannot labor with your gifts; nor you with mine. I should not seek to force you to conform to my type; but all should seek to approach, each in his sphere, the Christ type. In that way all, by unity in diversity, may make up the perfect church, the efficient body of Christ, "that there should be no schism in the body."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

HIS HOBBY

We produce herewith a cut taken from the Sunday Advertiser, Honolulu, January 30, 1916. The cut is one of a series running in the Advertiser, entitled "High Honolulans and Their Hobbies." This particular number is devoted to our brother, Elder Gilbert J. Waller. It is not accompanied by any text excepting the title as given herewith.

The application is seen at a glance by referring to the small picture of Brother Waller appearing in the corner of the larger cut. Whatever hobbies other high Honolulans may have, the particular hobby of Brother Waller is preaching the gospel.

"HIGH HONOLULANS AND THEIR HOBBIES."

One of our men could hardly ask for a better recommendation than that which is contained in this little drawing. Brother Waller has held various positions of honor in the community in Honolulu, and is widely and favorably known in both business and political circles.

Yet after all is said and done, the thing that gives him pleasure in this life is to preach the gospel of his Lord and Master. The moral of this picture does Brother Waller more credit than the picture itself; as a likeness the picture is not very satisfactory.

We wish that this particular hobby might become the hobby of all Latter Day Saints, for all are called to preach the gospel, if not in one way, then in another.

CURRENT EVENTS

LOST AT SEA.—The Spanish steamship Principe de Asturias sank after striking a rock off the South American coast the 5th, near five hundred of the passengers and crew being reported drowned.

MILE APIECE.—Automobile manufacturers expect during the year 1916 to dispose of one million machines in the United States. This would make an automobile for every mile of highway in this country.

TYPHUS IN TURKEY.—The American Medical Association's Journal is quoted as reporting that typhus is raging in Turkey, one hundred and fifty thousand persons having already fallen victims to the disease.

ROADS IN COURT.—The Michigan two-cent railroad rate law has been upheld by the State Supreme Court. The New Jersey Supreme Court recently upheld the State law compelling railroads to grant free transportation to State officials.

BAKER WAR SECRETARY.—Mr. Newton D. Baker, former mayor of Cleveland, and who declined to accept the post of Secretary of the Interior in the original Wilson cabinet, has been appointed Secretary of War to succeed Mr. Garrison, resigned.

PROBABLY NEEDED.—At a session of the annual Synod of the Episcopal Church, held recently at Kansas City, Missouri, it was suggested that a course in "common sense and tact" be submitted for Greek, Latin and Hebrew for candidates for the Episcopal ministry.

DEFENDS POLICY.—In a memorandum filed with Secretary Lansing and made public the 9th, the German Government defends its policy of sinking armed merchantmen on sight, on the grounds of alleged unlawful British interference with German trade, the arming of allied merchant ships for offensive purposes, which, it is claimed, justifies the German policy of reprisal and sinking of armed merchantmen.

HOUSE SUPPORTS WILSON.—On the 7th, by a vote of two hundred and seventy-six to one hundred and forty-two, the House of Representatives tabled a resolution to warn Americans off armed merchant ships of the European nations at war, sustaining President Wilson in his contention that merchantmen may legally arm for defense, and that the United States citizens on board such vessels are within their rights. This action follows that of the Senate on the 3d, which also sustained the President.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The terrific fighting for possession of Verdun has continued with unabated fury. The lines at various points have surged back and forth. The Germans have gained a slight advantage in territory, but at appalling loss of men. Cannonading continues throughout the entire western front. The French report slight gains in Alsace. The Russians still follow up their successes in Armenia, taking additional territory. They also report further gains in Persia. The Russian Baltic sea fleet has bombarded Turkish coast towns, inflicting damage and sinking sailing vessels. Aerial operations are becoming more numerous and deadly. In a Zeppelin raid on English territory east and north of London on the night of the 5th, the Germans killed twelve and injured thirty-three. Several hundred Austrian soldiers in barracks are said to have been killed by bombs dropped from Italian aeroplanes. Germany declared war on Portugal on the 9th. This declaration followed the seizure by Portugal of German ships in Portuguese ports, which was the last of numerous offenses, as represented by Germany. Italy, not heretofore formally at war with Germany, has requisitioned the German ships in Italian waters. The allies are said to be in need of more tonnage to replace the merchant ships used in transport service.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—A Villa outlaw band estimated at one thousand, and said to have been led by Villa himself, raided Columbus, New Mexico, the 9th, setting fire to buildings and killing United States soldiers and citizens. While part of the bandits engaged the United States troops stationed on the border to protect the city, the rest perpetrated the work of looting stores, applying the torch, and shooting civilians. Eight American civilians and seven United States soldiers were killed, and six soldiers wounded. The Mexican losses are estimated at considerable more than the American. United States cavalymen followed the retreating Mexicans under orders not to advance beyond two miles over the international border. Formal request was immediately made by United States authorities of Carranza for permission to send American troops across the border to hunt down Villa and his bandits. On the 10th, evidently without waiting for word from Carranza, President Wilson ordered troops across the border to take Villa. This order is held to follow precedent, and to be in harmony with international law sanctioning punitive expeditions against factions in a foreign state which cannot be, or are not prevented by the constituted authorities of that state from attacking their neighbors. President Wilson on the 10th issued the following statement:

An adequate force will be sent at once in pursuit of Villa with the single object of capturing him and putting a stop to his forays. This can be done and will be done in entirely friendly aid of the constituted authorities of Mexico and with scrupulous respect for the sovereignty of that republic.

Carranza has replied to the note of the United States by requesting permission to cross the border into American territory in pursuit of bandits. The Mexican note neither definitely approves or disapproves the American expedition in pursuit of Villa.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

WAR CLAIMS ISLANDERS.—Elder Clyde F. Ellis, writing from Papeete, Tahiti, to Elder C. I. Carpenter, says, among other things:

All is well in the islands, with a few exceptions. War has extended her arm of blood to these islands and is now taking our native boys to the front—a few of them from the ranks of the church.

“FROM SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE.”—In Autumn Leaves for April there appears a letter written in the trenches “Somewhere in France,” to one of our Canadian girls in Graceland College. The letter is short, but gives a very vivid picture of trench life on the firing line, and the gruesome features of the present titanic struggle. The writer was one of a few who had just escaped from bursting shells while attempting to construct barbed wire entanglements. Others were blown to atoms.

INCREASE IN CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.—The general church Recorder in his report to the coming General Conference will make the following statement:

It is with considerable satisfaction that we present our report to you this year. Our last report closed with 73,899 as our total membership to which we have added this year by baptism 4,907, by transfers 2,870, making a total gain of 7,777, from which we have lost by transfer 2,645, by expulsions 85, by deaths 620, or a total loss of 3,350, leaving a net gain of 4,427 and making our present number for 1916, 78,326. The reports further show 499 ordinations, 625 marriages, 1,410 children blessed, 31,339 are reported as absent from branches, and 5,308 hold the priesthood.

He goes on to say that the largest number of baptisms was reported from Missouri, which shows 782; Michigan being second with 719; Canada third with 418.

LECTURES TO THE PRIESTHOOD.—In harmony with the custom obtaining at the last two General Conferences, two of the brethren will deliver lectures to the priesthood during the coming General Conference at Independence, Missouri. Professor Floyd M. McDowell, of Graceland College, will deliver a series of lectures on applied psychology. Elder Walter W. Smith, pastor of the First Church of Philadelphia, will lecture on logic. He suggests that those attending the lectures secure a copy of Jevon's Elementary Lessons in Logic. This book will be on sale at the Conference at the Herald book stand. As heretofore these brethren will occupy alternate mornings. The priesthood will do well to come equipped with pencils and notebooks.

FROM ONE OF "THE OLD GUARD."—Elder Charles Derry, for many years active as a general church representative, and prominent among what has come to be known as "The Old Guard," has always been an active man to the extent of his ability, and a man of unsullied honor. Burdened with the infirmities of age and unfitted for extensive service, yet his interest continues with faithfulness and diligence, and keeps ablaze the fervent fire of his stalwart manhood. Such zeal, and withal such quiet resignation to the changes of time, are an inspiration to men upon whom now rest the activities of the church. Brother Derry writes:

My health is fairly good for my age. Of course I cannot travel much, but I try to hold up the banner of truth at home, and occasionally at places near at hand. I would like to be at conference, but deafness and partial blindness unfit me for the journey, and my strength is not equal to the continual services. I pray that the Spirit of God may direct in every measure.

ON THE LAWYER AND THE PREACHER

A CLERICAL SUBMARINE.—Church service was over, and three prominent members of the congregation walked home together, discussing the sermon.

"I tell you," said the first, enthusiastically. "Doctor Blank can certainly dive deeper into the truth than any preacher I ever heard."

"Yes," said the second man, "and he can stay under longer."

"Yes," said the third, "and come up drier."—Wind-sor Magazine.

REGULATING THE CLOCK.—When Senator William Hughes of New Jersey was a judge in Paterson he was presiding at a trial in which a woman who kept a boarding house was trying to establish an alibi for a boarder. The man was accused of a crime committed at 2 o'clock in the morning, and she swore he was at home at one o'clock on that morning.

"How do you know?" asked the cross-examiner.

"Why, he always comes in at one o'clock. He doesn't vary five minutes in a year."

"And you heard him that morning?"

"Yes, sir."

"And you are sure it was one o'clock?"

"Yes, sir; it was one o'clock exactly."

"Did you look at the clock?"

"Yes, sir."

"But," persisted the lawyer, "if he always comes in at one o'clock in the morning, why did you look at the clock on this particular morning?"

"Perhaps," said Judge Hughes, "she wanted to see whether the clock was right!"—Saturday Evening Post.

ADAM'S EXAMPLE.—A Scotch preacher one day said to his gardener:

"Man Tammas, I wonder you don't get married. You've a nice house, and all you want to complete it is a wife. You know the first gardener that ever lived had a wife."

"Quite right, sir, quite right," said Tammas, "but he didna keep his job lang after he got his wife."—Exchange.

LONG PRAYERS.—A Scotch lawyer had to address the Caledonian equivalent of our Supreme Court. His "pleading" occupied an entire day. After seven hours of almost continuous oratory he went home to supper and was asked to conduct family worship. As he was exhausted his devotions were brief.

"I am ashamed of ye," said the old mother, "to think ye could talk for seven hours up at the court and dismiss your Maker in seven minutes."

"Ay, verra true," was the reply, "but ye maun mind that the Lord isna sae dull in the uptak as the judge bodies."—The Bellman.

LAMENTATIONS.—Ripley Hitchcock, the noted critic, was talking at the Century Club about harsh criticisms.

"As harsh criticism as I know of," he said, "was compactly and neatly uttered by a bishop last spring. A minister wrote a commentary on the Lamentations of Jeremiah and sent it to the bishop, along with a note asking for a few critical words. The bishop sent the book back after he had read it, with this judgment:

"There is but one thing that I regret about this work—namely, that Jeremiah is not living now to compose a fresh book of lamentations on your commentary."—Tit Bits.

EPISCOPALIAN. An Episcopalian rector traveling in the South met a native, also by his own profession, an Episcopalian.

"Who confirmed you?" asked the rector.

"Nobody. What's that?"

"But didn't you tell me you were an Episcopalian?"

"Oh, yes," said the old man; "and I'll tell you how it is. Last spring I went down to New Orleans visitin'. While I was there I went to church, and I heard 'em say they had left undone them things they'd oughter done, and done them things they hadn't oughter done, and I said to myself, 'that's just my fix, too.' I found out that was an Episcopalian Church, and so I've been an Episcopalian ever since."

AMONG OUR POETS

Teach Me to Teach Thy Way

BY EARNEST A. WEBBE

O Father who maketh the earth
And the air and sea and sky,
And planteth the restful pastures
Where the cooling brooks run by;
And setteth the mighty oak to brood
O'er the peaceful, grazing kine;
O God of all that is kind and good,
Be ever and surely mine!

Teach me to love in the old, sweet way,
The way that can do no ill;
When friends in easier paths would stray;
Teach me to love them still.
Teach me to follow "Thy will be done,"
As onward I press each day;
O God of all good that is fought for and won,
Teach me to teach thy way!

Haste to Prayer

BY ANNA SALYARDS

Haste, my weary soul, to prayer,
When thou'rt sore oppressed with care.
When the burden of the day
And the long and toilsome way
Thy spirits wear,
Haste to prayer.

Haste, my tempted soul, to prayer,
When thine enemy is near.
When thy high resolves are failing
And thy holy courage quailing,
Flee the snare;
Haste to prayer.

Haste, my joyful soul, to prayer,
When thy life seems glad and fair.
On thy bright and happy days
Raise to heaven meet words of praise;
E'en then beware,
Haste to prayer.

Pray, always, and without ceasing;
Always thou dost need his blessing.
'Mid life's passing joys and crosses,
'Mid the changing gains and losses,
Trust God's care;
Haste to prayer.

Gospel Gates

BY ERMINA PERKINS KEARNEY

Ope ye gospel gates, and bring
From immortal sages,
All the mysteries that ring
Down through countless ages.
Gifts and blessings most divine,
Thrill this raptured heart of mine;
Earthly joys I would resign,
For this blessed hope of thine.

Blessed hope it brings to me
Of a bright to-morrow;
How a Christ on Calvary
Lightens every sorrow.
How he heard the sinner's sigh,
How he left his throne on high,
Came among us here to die,
That we to him might draw nigh.

That when life's dark hours are past,
And we pass death's portal,
With a blessed Christ at last
We might live immortal;
When the dead in Christ shall rise,
With our loved ones whom we prize,
Meet our Savior in the skies,
Reign in earthly paradise.

Solace

BY DOLLIE RODGER OLSEN

All day have the clouds hovered low in the sky,
And sadly the North Wind his tune whistles by.
The branches are bare,—not a vestige of green,—
Yet close to my window a bluebird is seen.

Thy plumage is lovely, thy wee heart is light,
Wherever thou wishest to take thy love flight
Thou hast but to spread thy wings and away
O'er the scenes that are sorrowful, scenes that are gay.

What matter to thee if the ground is all white?
And clouds overhead keep the sun out of sight?
No sorrow or grief hath thy gentle heart stirred,
Oh, would I were like thee, thou beautiful bird!

But away thou hast flown and the landscape is drear;
Save the desolate wind not a sound do I hear.
Sweet bird, come again to my window, I pray,
And gladden my heart as thou hast done to-day.

The trees all their verdure of summer have lost,
Long ago they were chilled by the cold and the frost;
No beauty is left, and yet bravely they stand,
The heart is still warm, oh, the thought it is grand!

They will pass through the sleet and the storms until spring,
Then see what the sunshine of gladness will bring;
Again they will wave in the soft, gentle breeze,
Though at present it seems, just to look at those trees,

That nothing could ever their luster restore,
So changed are they now from their beauty of yore.
Like the forest in winter, sometime in our life,
We stand 'mid a hailstorm of sorrow and strife—

Yet the spring it will come, and the sun shine more bright;
Though the storm leaves its traces, the heart will be light;
Perhaps not so light as it was once before,
But more like the calm when a storm has passed o'er.

Wait! wait! restless heart, cease thy longing, I pray;
We are not like the bird,—we cannot fly away.
We must wait, though 'tis hard, we have waited so long;
But in prayer there is strength—to be patient is strong.

He who calmed the rough waters of far Galilee
 Will quiet the billows on life's troubled sea;
 Though our lifeboat may drift 'mid the breakers' wild roar,
 We will finally land on some beautiful shore.

God knoweth the heart, and on him we depend—
 Our solace in sorrow, our Guardian, our Friend.
 With the sunset of life sinking fast out of sight,
 May we peacefully say to all Nature, Good-night.

STUDY ARCHÆOLOGY

BY CARRIE E. POINTER

PREPARATORY NOTE: We are pleased to present to Book of Mormon students throughout the world the privilege of following a carefully planned study of American archæology under the direction of Graceland Extension Institute. As instructors in the course, individuals have been selected whose preparation and experience qualify them to select the best texts, references, and helps, and to guide the student by the use of outlines and suggestions which will make the study interesting, connected, and profitable.

The following is from the pen of Mrs. Carrie E. Pointer, of Independence, Missouri, who is one of the instructors. We commend the article to the careful reading of all Book of Mormon students, and gladly offer the services of the institute to all who wish to enroll as students.

fee is nominal and the range of subject courses as broad as it is possible to make it.

Write us for full particulars and a catalogue.

LAMONI, IOWA.

CHARLES B. WOODSTOCK, Registrar.

To those who are, or may become interested in the study of archæology through the course so liberally offered by Graceland Extension Institute, it seems advisable to present some features for consideration. In its broadest sense anything ancient is archaic, while the narrowest view of it is "A few old musty ruins down here in Central America," and while the entire scope of the subject could not possibly be handled in this limited way, even if we were capable of doing so, to attempt to study from the latter view-

AMONG THE CLIFF DWELLINGS OF COLORADO.

Looking into one of the ancient "Kivas," said by scientists to have been used as places of worship.

The institute now has enrolled over one hundred students, pursuing fifteen courses under twenty instructors. Instruction under the institute has been aptly styled "Self-improvement courses," under the caption "For all who desire to study."

This movement within the church is organized on the personal service plan anticipated in the gospel, by which those who have had special educational advantages share what they have gained with those who desire to study. The enrollment point could only result in a biasing and dwarfing of our mentalities.

It is clear then that neither of these extremes will answer the requirements of the average student, so we will try to confine ourselves to that phase of the subject which will naturally be most attractive and beneficial to Latter Day Saints,—the Religians. And in so choosing we will find this particular side of the subject with its many ramifications a liberal education if we will but approach it rightly.

There is no denomination in the world that has as much to gain or lose as the Latter Day Saints, from the discoveries of science along archæological lines; for while we have an equal interest with others in the discoveries of Bible lands, we also have the added burden of maintaining the Book of Mormon in the face of future revealments in America. The very thought of this responsibility is enough to make us enter upon the study with an earnestness and caution void of all speculation.

AZTEC CALENDAR STONE AND IDOLS, NATIONAL MUSEUM, CITY OF MEXICO.

Unquestionably the most wonderful archaic development of modern times was the bringing forth and translation of the Book of Mormon. Thousands have rejoiced and are rejoicing from a gospel standpoint because of the placing together of the two sticks (Joseph and Judah) as spoken of by Ezekiel. Thus they were made one; but the union is not complete unless they are one scientifically as well as spiritually. While the Book of Mormon tells us of God's dealings with the Nephite and Jaredite people, it also tells of another phase of worship, and while the ancient writers do not give us the details, the mute testimony of stelæ, temple ruins, graves, high places, and altar mounds, still bearing the remains of human sacrifices, show that idolatry was in a highly developed state.

In Nephi's record we find that Laman and Lemuel would not partake of the fruit of the tree of life, according to Lehi's vision. In many instances they rebelled against Nephi and their father, holding to the idolatrous people at Jerusalem, saying that "they knew they were a righteous people"; while in the very next generation from those who landed in America we find the Lamanites "full of idolatry, and the Nephites trying to restore them to the true faith."

So we see the two religions brought from Jerusalem and developing side by side in the promised land. First the one, then the other, was in the ascendancy, until finally idolatry triumphed, and all who would not deny the Christ were put to death. This much with many other glimpses into the Lamanite religion we find in the Book of Mormon; but if we wish to complete the story we must turn to the stick of Judah, in which we find the Jews at the time Lehi left Jerusalem worshipping at the shrines of Baal, Moloch, Beelzebub, Ashtaroth, Osiris, and Isis, with many tutelary deities and "all the hosts of heaven."

These forms of worship were of course not original with the Israelite people, and whether taking the form of pantheism, tutelary, or hero worship, were all borrowed from the surrounding nations. The American aborigines being acquainted with the conditions, or as Nephi puts it, "I of myself, have dwelt at Jerusalem, wherefore I know concerning the regions round about," we need not be surprised if we find evidences of either or all of these cults among the ruins, myths, and traditions of this continent. But to get the real meaning of such worship we must go to the country which produced it and study to some extent the political, social, and religious settings for such developments.

We see then that some of the branches from this main archaic stem will include history, ancient and medieval; religion, comparing their different forms, sculpture, architecture, tumuli, glyphs, and symbols, together with the traditions of the people: all of these only as they have a direct bearing on the subject in hand.

Many other features will naturally present themselves as the study progresses. Geographically the ground covered is from Egypt to the Euphrates, and from Jerusalem to the "utmost bounds of the everlasting hills"; the interval of time is from the Garden of Eden to the present day.

However, none need be frightened at this vast scope, for while the subject is unlimited, we can only handle one topic at a time. The main textbooks will be the Bible and the Book of Mormon, but we will also use the most authentic histories available to us. For the American feature we will use mostly the books recommended as a study course by the Archæological Institute of America, government reports, etc.

Writers who have special theories to prove or are inclined to speculate will be discarded. And what we desire of authors we also ask of students; do not approach this subject with your mind filled with preconceived ideas, but follow the course and draw your conclusions afterward. The study will be found full of interest, and as fascinating as could be desired by any studious mind.

WITH AN AUSTRALIAN GOSPEL WAGON

BY ELDER C. EDWARD MILLER

[Elder C. Edward Miller has recently returned from Australia after a very devoted, active, and successful mission there for two and a half years. At the time this article was written he was still in Australia.—EDITORS.]

An experiment is being tried over here to get the gospel before the people. It would be premature to say it is a decided success or a possible failure. Personally, I believe if the right men are placed in charge to handle it, the wagon will be one of the best means ever devised to get the gospel into new territory, in a country with a climate such as Australia is blessed with.

As the wagon was not put in operation until late in the fall, it was not in use long enough to test it thoroughly; but those who operated it are enthusiastic devotees of this means of carrying on God's great work.

I have had no personal experience on the wagon thus far, except on its journey from Melbourne to Glen Forbes, a distance of seventy miles. I shall here give a little sketch of the trip and its object.

Money was provided by one of the brethren to purchase the wagon, another young brother giving us a good horse. Both of these brethren are of the Glen Forbes Branch, so I thought it proper we take the wagon there and dedicate it.

We left a suburb of Melbourne, where a brother fitted up the outfit for missionary purposes, and three of us started away at 5 p. m. We drove until 8. Then we were ready for "tea," as they say here. We selected a nice spot on the side of the road, and there is where we made our camp. The novelty of the situation added zest to our appetites, and we fared long and well.

Now a difficulty confronted us. The wagon had been built to accommodate two sleepers, but there were three elders to take care of. I was the oldest; but there were to be no favors shown, so we drew lots as to who was to sleep on the ground, with the stars to keep guard. The lot fell to the writer!

I rather anticipated the experience with pleasure. But as we were preparing my bed by the light of our lantern, we discovered hundreds of "bulldogs"! Not of the canine species, but ants! They were speeches were made. An original composition by Elder Rawson, who was one of the party of three, Elder George Eden being the other, was sung by Brother Rawson. We then went outside where the horse and wagon were. Little Evelyn Emmerson, dressed in white, was placed on the preaching platform of the wagon, and with a large red fire torch in her hand, she waved it over the horse and wagon and dedicated them with these words, which I had previously sent her.

As this horse and wagon are to be used in spreading the light of the restored gospel, in the name of the Master whom we serve, I hereby bathe this horse and wagon in light, and dedicate them for the purpose of spreading the kingdom of God on earth. Amen.

It was a very pretty scene.

The print shows us in the bush after having finished our dinner. The climate is very mild, but in the winter there is much rain, and while it is not cold, yet the air is very penetrating, making it impossible to use the outfit during about three months of the year.

We expect to get it in operation again about October. Some street preaching will be done, tracts distributed from house to house, and an effort made to reach the people in the smaller towns. The horse can be taken care of when the grass is good on a little over two shillings a week. The brethren lived on a little over ten shillings ($2.40) a week for the two of them, so it is a very cheap way of getting the gospel before the world. I want to go out on the wagon before I return home.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING IN AUSTRALIA

BY ELDER W. J. HAWORTH

Having done considerable open-air preaching in Australian cities, I willingly respond to the invitation to write my views upon it for publication, though I find it more difficult to do so that I do to speak.

As a beginner considerable nervousness was felt, which prevented effectiveness; but as time wore on that feeling gradually diminished until it has almost disappeared and has been supplanted by confidence and joy in the presentation of our message.

It is a trying task to begin speaking to passing people with the hope of arresting attention, for upon the street everything seems to combine to discourage one: there is commotion on all sides, and a variety of noises and activities which tend to distract the mind and cool the courage.

IN CAMP.

about three fourths of an inch long, and when they became attached to you, the affinity is so marked, it is remarkable, hence the name. So I concluded I didn't care to risk my person on the ground, and tried to make a bed under the arrangement we had for the other two sleepers.

I remember one of the elders in a sermon at New Philadelphia, Ohio, in a striking illustration tell of a man who was so thin that his back touched his stomach! It would have taken such a man to find proper accommodations in the "first floor" of our wagon, so that had to be abandoned.

Finally we divided up and I slept in the middle, where there were two poles, over which the brethren generously placed their mattresses. The next morning they asked me how I felt. I told them I felt on "edge."

I was puzzled to know how to dedicate the outfit, as we had no precedent to go by. When we arrived at Glen Forbes, we had a meeting in the hall in the evening, where we held the services, and

In my experience there never comes a time when opening to a moving crowd is not difficult and trying; but experience with men and confidence in God soon teaches and gives courage sufficient to push on to victory on each separate occasion. One must be bold and confident, yet humble, to command a hearing; for backwardness and timidity suggest weakness. Men love strength, consequently that quality must be manifest to arrest and hold their attention.

Will power must be exercised both in getting and keeping an audience; one must make up his mind and determine to get a hearing; he must feel that his message is of such import that men must stop to listen—his feelings have power as well as his voice and message.

He must be emphatic and enthusiastic, not too dogmatic in manner and tone, for the crowd loves a little fire and is not averse to straight and kindly home thrusts; but if the speaker becomes caustic or sarcastic he will eventually lose hold on the people.

Temperate and if possible powerful language, combined with kindly consideration for the feelings of others, is vitally necessary if permanent good is to be accomplished on the street or in the market place.

There are times when the unruly element will manifest itself and endeavor to break up the meeting, but if judiciously handled this may be turned to account in your favor.

The speaker should be quick to detect any element in his congregation which might lead to confusion, for it will spread like an epidemic if not checked. The most effective way is if possible to turn any spirit of opposition into humor by taking things kindly and returning a soft, humorous answer. If this is not successful, then an appeal to the manliness and fair play of the people will usually succeed.

Answering questions or replying to interjections during the discourse must be very carefully indulged in. If there are only two or three hearers one may safely stop to reply and argue the point; that draws others; for people love controversy; but when the audience becomes numerous one must diplomatically defer questions until he finishes his discourse, his main object now being to preach to the crowd.

Ill humor should never be permitted to actuate the speaker's remarks, no matter how the crowd may heckle him. The least manifestation of it is quickly detected and the speaker's influence immediately lost, while the enemy is not slow to turn to advantage the speaker's indiscretion and kill his influence.

If working near a branch or in conjunction therewith, it follows that the cooperation of the Saints is essential to the missionary's success. We cannot reasonably expect outside people to take sufficient interest in our outdoor work to come to hear if our own members are not interested sufficiently to attend.

The missionary should have the sympathy, prayers, and active cooperation of the local ministry and the members. This will foster and keep alive the missionary spirit without which the church would slowly lose power and finally die. Members may assist either by forming a "ring" round the missionary—a kind of base—or they may help make up the audience. After meeting they may give tracts and tell the people of our work and meetings. They should avoid argument: "Don't argue; nothing to argue about," should be their motto.

If forming part of the audience, they should set a good example and not turn their backs to the speaker and hold a little sideshow of their own, for this discourages the speaker and gives the passers-by the impression that he is of no importance, and they pass on.

Some have thought it lowering to their prestige to participate in open-air work, and that may be true if they belong to some worldly or fashionable social set, who place convention before Christianity; but I have experienced the fact that publicity really strengthens the Saints spiritually, makes them better workers for the Master, causes their love for the gospel and sinners to increase, and enhances their value as Christians in the public mind.

I hear also that some missionaries consider open-air work beneath their dignity. This is evidently a proud misconception, for Christ and the apostles were open-air speakers; and in latter days such successful evangelists as Wesley, Whitefield, Booth, et al, were of that order.

Open-air work is most economic, as it costs only the oil for street lamp and the effort, and one is almost certain always to reach some soul who has not previously heard the gospel, and that cannot be said of indoor work.

Is the result of street work commensurate to the effort put forth? To this query I would answer, Yes. There is no more effective way of breaking through the cordon of prejudice by which our meetinghouses are sometimes isolated than by open-air work.

We must do as Mohamet did to the mountain, go to it (the people) when it will not come to us.

Does it unduly injure the speaker? When I was in Adelaide, a man of note, himself a public speaker, said that if I continued as an open-air speaker I would soon become a squeaker. That was alarming; but I am pleased to say that has not resulted, for after nine years my voice is still good and strong. I consider this is the result of having in the first place a strong voice, and, secondly, a result of careful using.

Once a week is sufficient for open-air speaking, and the discourse need not, except on special occasions, last over forty minutes.

It is also a mistake to engage in discussion privately after speaking, for it uses one up and accomplishes little.

Deliver your message and then retire, unless your cause is assailed and your presence needed.

In the presentation of our message we should remember that the soil is in its crude stage and needs clearing; prejudice and ignorance of our true position being the main obstacle. This means that we must explain our position in contrast with that of the people of Utah, and this should be done with the utmost good feeling towards them and with the sole object of placing ourselves in that position in the public estimation which our message is entitled to.

After the clearing process we may proceed with plowing and sowing operations.

Our failure to see immediate results should not discourage us, for we set out with the chief object in view, viz, warning the world,—preaching the gospel as a witness, in all nations, to every creature.

I have felt greater blessing after preaching to an interested open-air audience of "outsiders," than after speaking to a congregation of Saints indoors; the reason, no doubt, being that "there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons who need no repentance."

The open-air speaker would do well to remember the parable of the sower wherein some seed "fell by the wayside," some "among thorns," and some in "stony places," but above all he should keep in his mind's eye the encouraging fact that some fell on "good ground."

Thus we learn that much of our effort will seem waste; but duty has been done, opportunity has been afforded, and the world warned.

This should be a sufficient result, and we can afford to labor on under the broad, starlit canopy of heaven, realizing that all our effort will not be wasted, but that some sheaves will ultimately be garnered as a result of whatever effort we put forth in the interests of Christ and our fellow men.

PHRENOGRAPH OF FREDERICK M. SMITH

BY ORREN DUDLEY

MADE FROM A PERSONAL EXAMINATION TWENTY YEARS AGO

[This phrenological study of President Frederick M. Smith was published in Autumn Leaves, January, 1896. At that time he was twenty-two years old. Made as it was thus early in his career, the reader may find some interest and pleasure in noting how well the phrenologist (a man, by the way, not a member of the church) succeeded in delineating traits of character as they may have developed and become more marked as the years have gone by. In other instances he may believe that the phrenologist was in error; or perhaps in such instances Brother Fred took warning from the reading and made certain corrections; or possibly both the phrenologist and the reader will be at fault. In any event, each reader will feel interested, believing, as nearly every man does, that his watch and his judgment are correct.—EDITORS.]

In our present subject we have size, and as size is the measure of power, other things being equal, we, on looking for the quality, find it of a fine degree, so thus have a fine start to work from. His body weighs over two hundred pounds and supports a twenty-three-inch head. The head is set well and the intellect is the ruling power. What he works at ought to be of a deep nature, as he has the power enabling him to tackle knotty problems which would make smaller brains tremble to think they had to handle them.

He will look at such and quietly shake his head and think, "That looks hard, but I believe that by taking a small part at a time I can handle it." Some heads are high above the ear and slope each way. This kind of people will have force, but their ideals will be narrow. They have not the power to take a subject and hold it. With him it will be different; he will take the idea and could carry it, if necessary, all day, and have everything that he said relate to it. While some people have to get everything by thinking, others get by hearing. He can-do either, and will get his points by going to a lecture or by reading the report.

Memory is good and he can remember when things happened. His words will be well-chosen when he speaks, and it will not take him all day to get to his subject. He will use force when he talks and his gestures will be of the kind that express force. In music he likes the pieces that have fine expression to them. To take a piece of music and run over it without regard to time or expression would be like

FREDERICK M. SMITH, ABOUT 1895.

"At present he is working with electricity. If he has no way to get the machinery that he wants he goes to work and makes it."

applying a lash to a dog. When he plays music he will want to be able to do much modulating, and in his choice of an instrument he will get one that has this quality.

Benevolence gives him the desire to help anything that appeals to him, and while he will see through the inconsistencies of a good many of the stories that are told him, he will, if he does not watch himself, be too liberal in the way he will spread his alms. He will help the old and feeble, and also if he sees a crippled animal he will want to go to it to see if he can do something towards relieving its suffering.

Because of his force he seems, to people unacquainted with him, to use too much effort. This is simply the surplus energy working off. Firmness and destructiveness are large. While firmness makes him steadfast, destructiveness gives the power, as it were, to make the thing he is at work at move. If working in a machine shop, he would like best to use the large hammers, the trip hammer would be the machine he would like to handle. It seems to be all strength, and when the hammer fell he could see that he had accomplished something.

He would do as a manager of men. They would not stop to question his orders, as when he spoke it would carry the thought with it that that was what he meant and nothing else would do or he would have said it.

The common laborers respect a man who uses force and with him if he should see a man at a piece of work he did not seem to understand, he would not hesitate, but go and show him how it was to be done, and, if need be, go at it himself. This is the way he would get the good will of the workmen, and with such a boss there would not be strikes and differences going on all the time. If the men had a grievance he would listen to it as a judge, and after hearing their theory would give them a decision that would be likely to fit all persons concerned.

As a financier he will be a failure. He values money only as so many books or instruments according to what he happens to be in need of at the time he draws his salary. If he is in business he must let his partner handle the financial side of it and he can handle the men. He must look to this point or it will cause him to rue his neglect sometime. By watching a miser and attempting to follow his methods he will improve in this matter.

On going to a house he tries to make himself at home. He will want to go in and out and be able to go into a room and sit down and tip back in his chair and talk to the people. To go to a house and be obliged to sit in a stiff chair, talk shop, and not be allowed to ask questions about the pictures that are in the room for fear of offending the hostess, will not be to his taste. When he gets into a place of this kind he will cut his visit short. A home where one can have a good time, and if he feels like it, have a romp in the parlor, is his idea. In no case will he ever have furniture about the house that is not serviceable.

He will like to see storms and watch the lightning flash. When the wind is blowing it is a source of satisfaction to him to get out and breast it. When he is not feeling well if he gets out and takes a good walk in the open air he will feel better. He is not of the kind that will like to be cooped up in a large city; and if it happens that his work throws him into this position he will, when possible, take a run into the country to brace him up.

A good dinner is a source of much satisfaction to him. He likes a good meal and will do his share towards taking care of it. Education has shown him the folly of using stimulants, and instead of having to resort to such things he will go out into the fresh air and get more out of this kind of medicine than all the stimulants that could be piled up. Some have to have fancy cooking, while others are satisfied with plain. He is of the latter class; and while he will not care for the fancy he will want plenty of the other.

Caution is not so large as it should be; from this he will do things that would be better undone. He sometimes lets his temper get away with him, and while he does not go around trying to get into a quarrel, he will take up others' quarrels and thus get into places that it would be much better for him if he were out. The caution that he has works toward the intellect. When he takes time to think that a subject should be kept to himself it will be no trouble for him to say nothing about it.

In his likes and dislikes of people he will show the same too much. While he may not like a person, he should try to be more pleasant to them so that no one would know it but himself. At present to those that are acquainted with him and happen to be around him when some one passes that he is not fond of, if they notice his face they will know the feelings that he has for the person. He should use more suavity and have a little more of the feeling that they are trying to do right, and that if he shows them how he feels toward them it may do them an injury, so keep it to himself.

Secret societies will not have much attraction for him. He watches the work of the members and sees so many of them that do not pretend to live up to their obligations that he comes to the conclusion that he is as well off out of them as in them. What he will want to have a hand in will be societies that are of an educational nature. The deeper the subjects the better he will like them, and the more ambition will be put forth to stand at the head in the best of them.

Around home he will be spending most of his time following out his experiments; when not thus engaged he will be reading. Farm work will not be to his taste; he finds that it is a good deal harder to work with his hands than with his brain. To go to the hay fields and pitch hay all day is hard for him; but to go into an office and do the hardest kind of brain labor will not bother him in the least. As an editor of a paper he would be in a place where he would do much good. He would put forth new ideas that would take with the masses, and they would be put in a way that the people would be anxious to want to try them. He would have a corner in his paper that he would fill with these, and would want people to correspond with him in regard to them.

When he is around children he will be doing something to have some fun with them, and while he will tease them a good bit, he will do it in such a way that they will like him and the next time they meet him try to get even. While some people are always having fun with the children they cannot hold their respect, but with him it is different; he will not only hold their respect, but when he wants them to do something for him they will always be ready.

In the company of young ladies he does not look so much for beauty as he does for the amount of learning they have. To sit and talk is one thing, but to sit and hold one's end on a debate is another. We do not want to be understood as saying that he will not talk or spend the evening with a person that has not a college education, but that he wants to talk on sound subjects. For example, if he were discussing some one he would not be gossiping and telling them tales, but would say he has such an idea on this subject. How does yours correspond with it? He will listen to gossip, but will try to change the subject to deeper channels.

When he gets married he will think that he has the finest wife and that there are no others who quite equal her. Some people have this feeling for a while, but it wears off; but with him it will stay. He will find it hard work to go away from home and leave her; and when away, on seeing something that he knows would interest her, he will take pains to notice it and then write to her about it. He will idolize his children and will be more likely to spoil them with pampering than with the rod.

He will want a large house and plenty of room, so when his friends come to see him he will be able to keep them with him. The furniture will be such that it can be used. He thinks to have a room in a house that must be shut up for fear of its getting soiled, or of the curtains being raised so that the sun will fade something, is an abomination. The furnishings must be plain, so, if he happens to run across something that he thinks would be nice to have, he can drive a nail without hurting anything.

At present he is working with electricity. This he finds instructive, as it brings out the best faculties.

Constructiveness gives him a love to try to work out theories that he comes across. In his work at present he tries to get the results that he reads about. If he has no way to get the machinery that he wants he goes to work and makes it. Thus he gets practice along with his theory. As an electrical engineer he would make a success and would study out theories and thus make inventions. Inventions are not, as a good many think, picked up, but are the result of study. While some things are stumbled on, the best things come to those who devote their time to them and try to make an improvement.

If in time he turns his mind toward church work he will be a power. He will first study well the books relating to the history, and then will be ready for business. With the powerful faculties that he possesses he will be a Daniel Webster to down. As a leader he will be for going by the law as laid down in the different books, and those who are under him will have to come to it or else he will have others that can. He has more force than his father, and will not hesitate to use the same when in his judgment it is necessary. The good feature about it will be that people cannot tramp on him. He will say, "Gentlemen, that is the law; by it we must abide."

At law he would be a success, and would be known as an honest lawyer. He would not want cases that he knew were wrong, but those that were right would give him pleasure to win. As a judge he would be one of the kind that would allow nothing but straight work in his court.

The study of astronomy he would not care so much about; while he would find it easy to learn, there are others he will be better at and would get more out of.

Taking all in all, he has a very brilliant career before him. His faculty of winning friends helps him through difficulties which one who did not possess would find it hard to get over.

While he will not be a rich man, he will be one of those that when their time has come to leave this world will have been a stimulus that will have helped many to climb higher and to have set their aims higher than though they had not known him.

We deem it necessary to make some explanation here in regard to the phrenograph of Mr. Smith. He is a personal friend, but while reading him we have attempted to rely not on what we know of him, but to tell him as phrenology shows him. While we do not pretend to say that he had no faults, we think that it would not be to the best interests of anyone to read them, as it might establish a bad precedent in this way: Some would say, "Well, Mr. Smith does it, and if he does I think that I can."

SUPREMACY OF GOSPEL OF JESUS

BY ELDER EDWARD INGHAM

In the very essence of man's nature as a spiritual being there is that which renders it impossible for him to rest in the things that are seen and finite, and which forces him to rise above the world of transitory experience, and to seek after an infinite reality which underlies and transcends them. Within the bosom of the rudest savage there is a latent capacity of transcending the finite, an inalienable affinity to what is universal and infinite; and it is this which constitutes the secret impulse to the search after God—the religious sentiment common to mankind.

Mr. Herbert Spencer recognized its universal prevalence and commented on it as follows:

Should it be asserted that religious ideas are products of the religious sentiment, which, to satisfy itself, prompts imaginations that it afterwards projects into the external world, and by and by mistakes for realities; the problem is not solved, but only removed farther back. Whether the wish is father to the thought, or whether sentiment and idea have a common genesis, there equally arises the question—whence comes the sentiment? That it is a constituent in man's nature is implied by the hypothesis; and cannot indeed be denied by those who prefer other hypotheses. And if the religious sentiment, displayed habitually by the majority of mankind, and occasionally aroused in those seemingly devoid of it, must be classed among human emotions, we cannot rationally ignore it. We are bound to ask its origin and its function. Here is an attribute which, to say the least, has had an enormous influence—which has played a conspicuous part throughout the entire past as far back as history records, and is at present the life of numerous institutions, the stimulus to perpetual controversies, and the prompter of countless daily actions. Any theory of things which takes no account of this attribute, must, then, be extremely defective. If with no other view, still as a question in philosophy, we are called on to say what this attribute means; and we cannot decline the task without confessing our philosophy to be incompetent.

These various forms of worship that prevail among the different races of mankind represent attempts, more or less imperfect, to give expression and realization to the latent consciousness of an infinite being, which haunts the eager souls of men and makes them long for vision of the unseen and knowledge of the unknown. It is not what the world is, but what it is not, that stimulates the human soul to search after something that is real and permanent above and beyond the transiency and unreality of the finite world.

Mr. Dresser says:

It is the need that is felt for a permanent ground of all transient phenomena which leads men to conceive of God as eternal and immutable. To conceive of God as more real than the fluctuations of the time-world is to see that he is more than the world of his manifestation. All our conceptions prove inadequate if they stop short of the eternal. All our conceptions fail if we regard the Father merely from the point of view of our own sonship. Hence there is need of both the philosophical conception of reality as ultimate ground, and the more human thought of God as the Father. As ground, God is not the same as the universe, but is the ultimate center of the power which the universe manifests. As Father, God is not identical with his sons, yet is in an intimately personal sense the source of their life.

We hear so much nowadays about the immanent God—the reality behind all appearances, the source of, and active principle in, if not identical with, all forms of energy, the all-pervading life of the universe in which all finite beings live and move and have their being, that it should not be a matter of great surprise to us when we discover in the religious conceptions of many of the ancient races of mankind a polytheistic nature worship—the personification or deification of the phenomena and forces of the natural world. The most refined form of this order of worship was represented in the Hellenic religion—the religion of ancient Greece—which reflected the richness of the imagination and the classical genius of that remarkable race.

Brahmanism is a form of pantheism in which the search for the infinite and the transcendental has obscured the vision of life and its moral claims. Pantheism has for this reason, been over one of the most dangerous pitfalls.

EDWARD INGHAM.

The pantheistic doctrine: "All is God," invariably involves the denial of all moral distinctions, since everything is consecrated by the presence of God. Consequently the Pantheistic creed has led to a social life in which the grossest sensual excesses are not only permitted but sanctioned; for in a religion which finds God in all things—not only in the noble, beautiful and pure, but also in the mean, debasing and vile—the indulgence of all natural appetites and desires is fostered.

Pantheism in another form looks upon life and all finite things as an illusion, and God as an abstraction without attributes lying behind all finite beings and objects. This conception led to asceticism, a life of abstraction from the world and all finite objects and interests, and the stifling of all natural desires and affections.

Thus we see that pantheism leads in two opposite directions, one of self-indulgence, the other to self-repression; and the latter no more than the former will ever bring man in touch with the infinite. The thing most necessary, therefore, is a proper adjustment; and among all the philosophies and ethical teachings that have flooded this world, the doctrine of Jesus preeminently and exclusively disclosed the true principle of that adjustment.

It is not a religion, such as Brahmanism and Buddhism, which overpowered and enslaved the soul, but one which strikes the shackles from the soul and bids it come forth and breathe the air of freedom where it can enjoy a free, simple and rational growth. For as in art and literature the utmost perfection may be combined with the utmost simplicity, so it is in religion. The gospel of Jesus is so simple, clear and plain, so marvelously adapted to the mind and heart of mankind, that the illiterate and degraded as well as the enlightened and noble of the earth can discern in it the true response to what their souls had been blindly searching for; whereas, these highly abstruse religions are only capable of being apprehended, if at all, by speculative intellects.

The study of other religions is interesting, mainly because it gives us an insight into the questions which the human soul has been putting to itself during all the ages of the past, and what the answers are that it has been giving to them; and this knowledge enables us to more fully appreciate and understand the supreme comprehensiveness and aptness of the response contained in the gospel of the Son of God. Of all religions, it alone satisfies the spiritual wants of humanity; and Christ therefore is truly the "desire of all nations."

Buddha, who boasted of having raised himself to Godhead by his own power and knowledge, came with the proclamation that there is no heavenly Father, and that all existence is evil and vanity. He was the great apostle of "nothingness."

Christ came to reveal the Father, to reconcile man with God, and to bring life and immortality to light through the gospel. He was the great apostle of "Reality."

In him all the perplexing problems of the human soul find their solution; in him all the longings of the human heart are satisfied. He stands forever as the supreme example of the perfect union of the human and the divine—the fullness of the Godhead revealed in perfect manhood; and through him alone is the way unto the Father made accessible to us. To use his own expression, "No man cometh unto the Father, but by me." This is enlarged upon by the Apostle Paul in the following language, "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh"; and he further supplements this statement with the following: "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith," etc.

The new and living way that leads unto the Father, consecrated for us by Christ, is one which passes through trials and conflicts, sufferings and sorrows, wherein we may learn the great lesson of obedience which is a fundamental need of the spiritual life. Robertson made the very apt statement that "Obedience is the organ of spiritual knowledge"; a statement that fully harmonizes with the one made by the Master, "If any man will do his will, he shall know."

The whole purpose of Christ's life here upon earth was obedience to the will of God; for there could have been no adequate expression of the divine nature in him without it. The name "Immanuel" which was bestowed upon him would have been a misnomer had he in the least particular deviated from the course in which the will of God had determined that he should walk. And the implicit obedience that signalized his whole career was wrought out through suffering, according to the statement of divine writ: "Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered."

It might be noted that suffering does not always yield obedience, for frequently rebellion is its effect; but Christ understood the true method of adjustment in his contact with the world and its life. He did not, like the ascetic follower of oriental mysticism, isolate himself from his kind and seek in silent solitude to attain the Nirvanic goal; but on the contrary he mingled among men and among things, and faced difficulties and obstacles. He kept in the midst of life and tasted constantly of its bitter griefs and sorrows; for this pain and distress is part of the heritage of man, and all must suffer soon or late in one way or another. Indeed, without suffering there can be no strength of character or moral fiber, and no beauty of spiritual growth.

Mr. Dresser's comment on this subject is interesting; he says:

Whatever else the Spirit is, it is surely life, it is life-bringing, and only in terms of life can we even approximately describe its reality. It would seem delightful to enter such a state of bliss as the Hindoo Mystics tell about and to abide in such consciousness. But such is not the way of life. He who knows God only as the quiescent good does not yet know him. Our God is a God of struggle as well. He who has wrestled, who knows what sorrows and sufferings are, has a right to speak. When God is excluded from nothing he is truly God. My own life must know no exception if I am actually to realize the divine presence. I must discern to the foundation, philosophize to the utmost and fearlessly. Then shall the great conviction be born.

The remarkable question which the Master asked the sons of Zebedee very strongly implied this kind of an experience as essential to spiritual elevation. He said to them: "Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" Christ's religion is distinctively one of Spirit, and it is the quickening influence of the Spirit which seizes upon the soul and begins to fashion it according to God's good will and pleasure, in the same manner in which it operated upon Jesus and wrought in him the perfect man.

No more clear and concise statement can be added to the foregoing fragmentary thoughts than a portion of the closing paragraph of Mr. Dresser's masterpiece, "The Philosophy of the Spirit":

We declare (1st) that the Spirit is (appreciatively speaking) an awakening, progressively revealed life which pursues a certain course through the world and through men; (2d) that the Spirit is the basis of the natural as well as of the spiritual world, that the two worlds are in the most intimate relation, such that it is a question of order and degree from the lowest levels of nature up to the heights of beatific vision; (2d) that the Spirit is revealed through a gradation of realities, through a descent and an ascent, an involution and an evolution, hence everything is intelligible as real according to its place or level, not at random, as if all things were equally real; (4th) that the clew to goodness is found in this gradation of realities from lower to higher, not that all things are equally good; (5th) that the clew to truth is found in this same gradation, rendered intelligible through progressive dialectic from the lowest immediate to the absolute idea; (6th) that within man's consciousness this orderly life of the Spirit is reproduced in terms of relation such that knowledge of reality is possible; and (7th) that in relation to this progressively revealed life of the Spirit the human self is made known amidst an activity based on a natural flux, a natural response, and ideal interests culminating in a central purpose through which the will of God is achieved. The life activity or flux is thus everywhere the starting point, the initial clew, the general immediacy, out of which the various differentiations lead onward and upward to the beautiful, the true, and the good. The Spirit comes that we may have life and have it more abundantly, and that out of this life the fullness of the divine love and wisdom may be revealed.

The Hellenic religion developed the artistic temperament in man; in Brahmanism—the religion of priests—man began to seek for God in thought; in Buddhism—the religion of ascetics—God was discerned chiefly in conscience; but in the religion of Jesus, God is spiritually discerned. The gospel of the Son of God aims at the production of the perfect man. Notwithstanding his sinful nature, it discerns in him the latent possibilities of spiritual perfection and divine Sonship; and leads him on by a great hope unto a great inheritance.

A DAY WITH THE INDIANS

BY DANIEL B. SORDEN

Many readers of the HERALD have no opportunity to see anything of our Lamanite brethren. I thought, therefore, that perhaps I might write something which would be of interest to some readers, at least.

I have often accompanied Elders Clyde Smith, James E. Yates, Hubert Case, Frank Curtis, and the late Jerome Page, to the Indian camps when the elders were going to preach to them.

The Indian's nature and customs are very different which the breeze could readily blow, was a huge wagon cover, which in turn was covered with bright-colored table cloths. It was a good dinner. There was a variety of fruits, canned goods, and meat.

The greater part of their food consists of meat, but we made most of our dinner of the canned goods and the fruit. Their bread was from the bakery, and we added that to our list of desirables.

The Indian shows his independence at the table as well as in other places. When he desires something from the other end of the table, instead of asking some one to pass it to him, he just rises from his sitting position on the ground, and tucking his in many ways from ours. One of his rather disconcerting peculiarities is that one can seldom make an appointment for a certain day or hour with him, for if one did, he would probably be the only person there. The elders must always find out when the Indians are to have a gathering of their own; and then permission to talk to them after their meeting can usually be obtained.

A big day with them is their feast day, which comes quite frequently. Brethren Smith, Case, and I have often been invited to attend their big dinners, and have gone a couple of times. When the meal was prepared an old Indian stood beside the arbor and announced that the meal was ready. Immediately from each tent, from under the wagons, where they had been lying in the shade, and from the near-by creek, in groups of two or three, came the diners.

Spread on the ground under the arbor, through blanket closely about him, gracefully steps over and between the dishes to the object of his desire. However, the dishes are sometimes passed from one to the other, each person eating from the dish what he desires, then passing it to the next one, who uses the same spoon and eats what he wants.

Our Lamanite brethren showed us another habit as thrifty as the one which saved individual dishes and spoons. They helped themselves liberally from those dishes containing food that might be carried away. A portion could then be wrapped up in a handkerchief, and saved until the next time of hunger. They believed, you see, in "preparedness." When the men left the table, the squaws, who had been mincing around down at one end of the spread, eagerly stationed themselves in more comfortable (?) positions and ate their share of what was left.

It was now that we went to a large tepee where we held preaching services. Seated or lying on blankets spread about three fourths of the way around the tent, was the audience, about twenty-five or thirty aborigines. After singing a song or two, one of the elders talked through an interpreter, although most of the Indians could understand English perfectly. The elders often talk on the Book of Mormon, which seldom fails to appeal to them.

Only about one half of the audience pay attention. Some smoke cigarettes, while some sleep, usually snoring. Their sleepiness is to some extent due to an intemperance in eating, but more often the night before has been a sleepless one, due to an all-night peyote meeting of theirs.

Our work with the Indians takes considerable care in handling; they are peculiar people, to some degree, childish in nature. In the central western part of Oklahoma, Brother Case has worked among the Indians quite a little. But he is so busy he can give them only their share of his time. He is well liked by all of them. Brethren Taylor and Cook, our two Indian missionaries, never see me but they say, "Where is Brother Case now?" and, "When is he coming to Kingfisher?"

The summertime is practically the only time of year to work much with them, and they can be talked to only in small groups.

When once converted, the Indian is a firm believer, and has a reverence for the church books. One of the elders, just happening to attend an Indian meeting, when he was not expected, found one of our Indian missionaries praying, and in front of him was the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. The Indian also has that faith which we are continually told to cultivate.

THE THEATER

BY ELDER RALPH W. FARRELL

"Do I believe in the theater?" Yes.
 "Do I believe in attending the theater?" No.
 "Well, what do you mean?"

If you will listen patiently for a few minutes, I will tell you what I mean.

In the modern playhouse (as well as in the ancient playhouse), a certain type of art is produced. We call it "acting." Some call it a wonderful God-given talent. Is the impersonation of characters a talent, and if so, did God give it? And for what purpose?

Sometime in the seventeenth century (more correctly, the sixteenth century) Shakespeare wrote his plays. After the passage of many years, man placed the name of this genius among the names of the world's greatest men. Why? Because no other person ever afforded us so great an insight into human life as he. No other profane writer ever grappled the thoughts of lovers of literature as he has done.

To comprehend the genius of Shakespeare you must see his characters on the stage through the skillful acting of such remarkable men and women as Soth-ern, Marlowe, Mantelle, Terry; and to go back, Booth, Irving, and others who have passed from the scene of action.

This principle of impersonation, I believe in; but under the present conditions of things, I believe it is absolutely impossible to witness such impersonations and not do harm. And for the following reasons—among many others:

The world has monopolized the theater. It has taken what in itself is innocent and placed it to an improper use. The modern play has been prostituted, as has the game of cards, the dance, and such like. Now, in order to get the diamond of elevation, intellectually and emotionally, one has to reach his hand into a pail of pitch. The plays of Shakespeare are diamonds, the theaters are the pails of pitch.

The moving picture has come (and it has come to stay), but notwithstanding its possibilities for good, men have so soon put it to an evil use—that of making money at the expense of morals. As the light passes through its films, we see our first air-ship; visit the foreign places, that otherwise we might never see; the wonderful demonstrations of science are laid before us, and so on, and so on. But intermixed is the carnal, the obscenely sug-gestive, and the time-wasting frivolous.

What are we to do about it?

"Let such things alone," says one.

So say I; but such answer does not explain why these remarkable things appeal to us.

Is it wrong to desire to see, and enjoy seeing, an elephant, a lion? and to hear the next to divine har-monies of a symphony orchestra? The country boy can see the first only in the circus; and the last we hear only in an opera house.

Now, notice: We stand on the street and see a circus procession go by, watching with eager eye the animals as they pass, and at this very time we may be rubbing elbows with the worst criminals in the world; this is pronounced "proper" by many who say it is un-Christian to attend the circus itself. We listen to Creatore or Sousa give their celebrated con-certs in the parks, but we must not go inside a build-ing to hear them. What is the difference? These questions are being asked, and unless we can fur-nish our young some explanation that will at least appeal to their common sense, we had better cease the everlasting nagging and criticizing of their do-ings.

Lest you forget my position, I want to restate it: I am emphatically opposed to theater going. But there is a reason.

There is a logical difference between the park con-cert and the sitting in the opera house—it is the difference of effect it has upon a Saint's spirituality. This may not seem logical. Wait. We have discovered this as a result of theater going: Our young (and old as well) who attend these places are not so spiritually-minded as those who do not. They skip more prayer meetings, their testimonies are not so humble and spiritual. (And in this comparison I will distinctly state that it is given to the elders of the church—elders who are living godly lives—to discern the nature of the fruit which Saints are bearing.)

When we discover a reconverted young man or woman, one who has indulged in these sapping pastimes, but has changed his or her mode of living, they testify, without exception, that theater going weakened them spiritually. Such testimony certainly cannot be prejudiced, hence it must have deep consideration.

They tell us that the effect of attending worldly places of amusement was like a stimulant,—they needed to increase the dose in order to satisfy their appetite. On the spot we condemn this. The next thing they observe is the weakening of prayer; there is a slipping of the cogs. Their conversation becomes lighter and their acts more careless. The will weakens, and when they try to break away (as many do) they are made to realize their weakness.

It is discovered necessary to invent excuses to satisfy the conscience; the mill gate is lifted and a flood of "reasons" rush over the mind. But they will not stand the light of truth. And when the theater goer thinks he is entrenched behind an impregnable wall, just one passage of scripture will shatter his barrackade into a thousand pieces: "If meat cause my brother to offend, I will eat no meat." This is Paul. He knew what he was talking about. We know what he meant, too. He meant that there were things which he could do and not be harmed, but the weaker Saints could not; so for this reason, he would forego the pleasure for the sake of not injuring one of the little ones for whom Christ died. That is the argument in a nutshell, and we can't get around it.

I can see Sothorn in "Hamlet," and so far as I know receive only a broader view of life, of art, of talent, of the greatest profane writer in the world, but perhaps the one who is now reading this statement cannot. Perhaps I cannot. Here is a doubt. In case of doubt, examine your chart. What does it say? "Avoid the very appearance of evil." For this reason I would not go into a saloon to get a drink of water. It is what might grow out of the act. Some one might see me there; my example might lead a brother to the bar of death.

Well, what are we going to do about it? Why, cease going. Forego what might be to you a certain benefit, for the sake of the brother whom it might injure. There seems no other way.

Now comes the important use of the interrogatory: "Did you ever attend the theater?"

"Yes," I answer.

"What did you go for?"

"Because I wanted to go."

"How often have you been?"

"I have been three times in many years."

"Did you think you were doing wrong when you went?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, what are you preaching to us for?"

"Because I know what I am talking about."

"Then you mean to say that you do things that you know are wrong?"

"I am sorry to say that I have; but I wish to make this statement: I hope to secure so perfect a control over my weaknesses that I shall refrain from the very appearance of all evils."

And now, mine accuser and questioner, I have a few questions for you: If meat causes a brother to offend, why do you indulge in certain things which cause your brother to offend?"

What do I mean?—this: That the man with his blood poisoned by tobacco, willfully transgressing, every day of his life, the word of God, and holding him up to open shame, will probe at my weakness, be it whatever it may, and hold up unholy hands in holy horror. The woman whose tongue has lashed to the bleeding point the bare conscience of a defenseless girl, will tell you it is "awfully sinful to go to the circus." In thousands of ways men and women are causing their brothers to offend, but they cannot feel the beam in their own eyes. For shame!

Let me repeat, at the risk of being tedious, I do not approve of theater going. I do not believe it is right to slander, to lie, to neglect prayers, to say ill-natured things, to peck and nag, to advertise our holiness (and especially when we have none).

I pray to God to hasten the day when the Saints will be free from all these offenses; but in view of the fact that that day has not yet come, why not let the already too bloody stone rest awhile? I regret that our young people like to go to the theater. I would to the Father in heaven that they did not want to attend these places. But I can sympathize with them. It has not been long since the poison left my veins.

I know that some branches are dying because of worldliness, and that in them the theater is the root of evil; but I can only plead, beg—yes, set the proper example.

May we come out from Babylon; leave the evils of the world; awake to righteousness and sin not. And while we are trying to do this, may God help us to be charitable and merciful, and not do as the Pharisee who could see no good in anyone but himself.—Reprinted from Zion's Ensign.

CARLYLE'S BEATITUDE

BY ELDER S. A. BURGESS

Blessed is the man who has found his work, let him ask no other blessedness.—Carlyle.

Plato in his "Republic" first laid down these principles of an ideal spirit, that it would be that in which the ablest men were given the utmost freedom toward service and development and were expected to work for the good of the whole community. It meant something of an oligarchy, yet of a most benevolent and altruistic turn. Each man should do that work for which he is best fitted.

To-day we find the idea repeated in various forms, and even one of the foremost Socialist writers expresses as the ideal socialistic state that in which each man has found his proper work and does it.

This means that education should not be cast in one ironclad model. Of course the first six or seven years of school work is not education; it is only preparation for education. We think that the statement over the door at Hampton Institute expresses well the modern thought, "The purpose of education is preparation for life, the test of life is capacity for service."

The purpose of education, then, is not so much the memorizing of set matters from textbooks, but should rather be the training and unfolding of the natural capacity of the individual. Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that need not be ashamed.

As talents and ability differ, so should preparation vary. The preparation for a blacksmith, for a machinist, or for an engineer, will not be the same as for a doctor, a lawyer, or a business man, though possessing points of similarity. And though also the man of general culture in addition to special training is the one who will go to the front, other things being equal, it is not necessary that all should have a college education, and certainly not a similarity of training. It is necessary that the opportunities should be open so that those who desire and who can profit by such academic training may do so, and this, not for the sake of the man, but for the sake of the body politic and society as a whole. That is the ideal state in which every man finds his work and does it, and in which every boy and girl shall find the best of opportunity for general preparation and for that special culture and special training which will the best fit him or her for service. Then it follows that such service should be rendered for the benefit of mankind.

We are all too prone to judge everything and everyone else from the standpoint of our own limited experience and limited ability. The Supreme One, seeing more clearly, far more clearly, has peopled the world with a variety of men and women of diverse tastes and talents. There is even a tendency for the missionary to discredit more or less the auxiliary work as not needful, and treat pastoral or local work as a very secondary or of third-rate importance. This because he feels the vital necessity of the work which he is trying to do, to warn and redeem mankind. On the other hand, the pastor and local worker perceives that many a newborn babe is turned over to him unclaimed, and he feels so keenly the necessity of developing the material we already have and fitting it for proper service, that the pressing need of missionary work grows dim in comparison.

So the auxiliary workers, whether in the Sunday school, Religio, or Woman's Auxiliary, see the need, the grave need, of each of these organizations, and the splendid good which is being done. A return of the same ecstasy that was felt at conversion is not enough; there must be development and growth, though doubtless it is still true that many who should be ready for strong meat are crying for milk.

What we wish to emphasize is that all are necessary: the institutional work, the auxiliary work, the pastoral, and the missionary; and the talent which succeeds the best in one department would in many cases only do passing well in some other department of the work. Many a first-class business man has been spoiled in the making of a third-class preacher.

All are necessary; all are important; and if we find a man who is failing in his present place, it does not follow that he is good for nothing; it should be our duty and our privilege to help him to find that place where he can work with the greatest possible benefit, both for himself and humanity. A stone which the builder rejected became the head of the corner.

Judge not that ye be not judged; but judge righteous judgment, need not refer alone to wrongdoing, as almost as much if not more harm is done by wrong judgment of right doing, and a failure to appreciate another's work and preparation. Now, we may expect that each one must learn his letters and how to count, and something more, so in the church we should expect that each one will have his special spiritual experience, which will follow in part the common channel; but Paul says that there are diversities of gifts, and there are diversities of men, and diversity of service. The same preparation does not fit for every service.

All too often a man fails of his best service, sometimes from lack of proper preparation, many times through a failure of others to appreciate and support him in his preparation for his work; for so much more can be done when each is doing his full share than when part of the energy is used to retard or oppose some one else. There are men who have not given the best they could have given to the church or society, because they have not been permitted to do so; there are men who have not given the best of which they were capable, because they were not prepared to do so; as well have there been men, and we fear there shall be again, who have not given the best they could because unwilling to do so.

Real success does not consist in property; a man's life consisteth not in the multitude of the things which he possesses. Culture, taste, judgment, knowledge, all have their place in rounding out and making the perfect whole. But after all, that man is at his highest point who, upon attaining the goal of his ambition, or not attaining it, perceiving all mundane things at their real worth, devotes himself to a life of service and sacrifice.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

BY ELDER J. A. KOEHLER

MATTERS FOR DIVINE DETERMINATION

Any mode of action to be good must tend to promote human well-being and happiness. "Thou shalt not steal"; "thou shalt not lie"; "remember the Sabbath Day," etc., are all good because they are in accord with human nature: they promote the interests of human society. I repeat again, they are good rules simply because they coincide with human nature: they tend to promote life and happiness.

ELDER J. AUGUST KOEHLER.

MAN'S NATURE

Man is first of all an animal. It is true that he is also a moral agent, and that ultimately his moral acts will determine his destiny; but we have still to admit that man is such a creature as must live before he can act. And we have also to admit that in order to live, man must have the means of life. Since the animal side of man's life must be ministered to before he can do any other sort of act, it follows that those acts, or processes, or relations, which supply animal needs must take precedence over those secondary acts which we term spiritual. Cultural pursuits must be postponed to animal functions.

The question "Why are industrial relations matters for divine determination?" is already partly answered in the fact that man's life depends first upon food, clothing, protection, etc., which industrial processes supply. And I feel quite sure that God, who placed man here, can be no less interested in man understanding the relations and processes by which his needs are supplied than he was in furnishing the natural utilities toward which man must direct those processes.

In brief, the first reason is the urgency of primary needs: To live man must have the means of life.

SELFISHNESS

In promoting self-interests men prevent others from promoting their interests. The creations of God are for the use of all men; and the provisions for the race are so immeasurable and inexhaustable that there is no occasion for one crowding another out of his place.

That which cometh of the earth is ordained for the use of man for food and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance; but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

This not only specifies that the earth is for the use of man, which includes every human being, but also specifies what kind of use is to be made of it: namely, to provide him with the necessaries of life; and this implies at once productive purposes. By implication it also prohibits "land grabbing."

But the purposes of God are either not understood generally, or else they are generally disregarded. This requires no proof. It is patent that in providing for themselves and their families, men so act as to hinder other men from providing for their families. This is pure selfishness. And it is short-sighted selfishness too, for it defeats its very purpose. It impoverishes both the individual and society.

When the colonists came to America they grabbed all the land they could, regardless of their needs and the needs of others. And from that day to this, in our own land, thousands are deprived from opportunities that, under God, they are entitled to. In monopolizing large areas of land, men hinder others from adding to the aggregate of the good things that are so necessary to life.

But this is only one of the methods by which, in providing for self, men deprive others of the same kind of opportunity.

This short-sightedness, or selfishness, or egoistic tendency, or whatever you choose to call it, is in itself a sufficient reason why industrial relations are matters for divine determination.

LAZINESS

Man seeks to provide his own wants with the least effort. My boy and girl do the same thing every day. Washing dishes is supplying a need. And yet every day I witness an effort to shift the burden and escape an obligation: that is, they want clean dishes with a maximum of effort, and if possible with no effort at all. This tendency is exhibited on a large scale in society everywhere.

Two Irishmen were employed as section hands. One was laboring industriously while the other was loafing. Finally the lazy one said to the other, "Pat, either you are a fool or I am one."

"How's that?"

"Well, you know that the day is long and the pay is small, and if you do anything at all you will earn it all."

And so it is: men who prefer to profit by the industry of others think they would be foolish to give themselves over to effective labor.

It makes no odds if gambling does not enrich society, it is an easy way to live, and therefore men prefer to gamble; not only in its obvious forms, but also in its hidden aspects.

It matters nothing if we do already have four times as many lawyers and politicians as we can have any possible use for,—there may be a chance for an easy living in those fields, and so many who think they can make it go without honest labor devote themselves to those vocations.

It matters little if it is a useless occupation to run around to see if one man can be persuaded to trade property with another man; it is by such methods that part of the value of the property passes into the hands of a third party, who is thus enabled to live without doing useful labor, therefore we have many in that business.

THIS IS NOT PERSONAL

I hope none will think that I am discussing individuals. I am not. I am thinking of relations; relations which some men sustain to others because they feel that in them they see their only opportunity to provide themselves with the necessities of life. I have good friends in each vocation referred to, and I love them; but I assure all that I have no love for the order of society that impels men to such vocations.

WASTED ENERGY

All activities cost energy. If the energy of the classes just referred to were properly directed it would wonderfully increase the quantity, quality, and variety of consumable goods, it would enrich society. But not only is this energy not utilized for good ends, but the huge body of men thus uselessly engaged must live, and living demands the necessities of life. Now, since in society, as at present constituted, many do not provide themselves with food and clothing, etc. (I mean they take no helpful or necessary part in the creation of utilities), it follows that the burden of supplying them with the goods of life is transferred to others' shoulders.

How to overcome these situations is a matter that human ingenuity has never yet solved. Human ideas are for the most part superficial; especially in economics do the minds of the masses overlook basic principles. Perhaps this blindness is due in part to a secret hope that sometime, somehow, personal benefits will be derived from prevailing customs. We need no other argument than the long working hours and needless suffering that universal customs entail to prove that industrial relations are matters for divine determination.

INDUSTRY NOT AN END

That industry is almost universally regarded as an end is evident from the fact that the end it is intended to serve is almost never taken into account. The incentive to business effort is almost always to get the goods of life; whereas the immediate natural end of industry is to supply the goods of life. How many men go to their daily tasks with the thought that "to-day I am to help increase the supply of the good things of life"? Is not the thought rather that by this act I get so much money with which I expect to be able to get good things? Of course if a man is supplied he must "get," but men forget that the amount of utilities that may be gotten is determined by the amount that is produced; and the idea of production should take precedence over the idea of consumption. But does it?

True, some must be engaged in productive enterprises; but this initial activity is regarded by a large portion of society as little more than an opportunity for them to speculate in the products of industry. The fact that some are producing is a signal to many to "get theirs" by whatever methods the law will allow, and some that it does not allow.

Naturally a more remote end is not apprehended. If man were an animal only, present customs must still be regarded as foolish. But man is more than an animal. Man has cultural ends that need to be served. And instead of "business for business' sake," industry should serve to set men as free as possible to develop the moral side of his nature. But if man is so engrossed in business that the real goal of human effort is forgotten, the ultimate end that industry is intended to serve is defeated. Business for business' sake is poor business; it makes society as a whole poor, too. But that is the way man looks at things; and were it not for what God has said in the past, and what he has inspired in the minds and hearts of man, I doubt not but man's ways would have multiplied even present sorrows. Man needs to take God into his councils.

ARE LATTER DAY SAINTS CONSISTENT?

Yes, in one respect at least. Being compelled by the testimony of human experience to admit that, "the way of man is not in himself," and that if it were we could not trust human judgment, because it seems that "the heart is deceitful above all things," Latter Day Saints have admitted the right of God to speak. We have even said he has spoken to us. We say that the message he has delivered is precious above all other things. But as to our confidence in its workability—well, that's another matter.

We admit that our salvation is in doing things God's way. We claim that the world needs the same message that has been given us. But the world is not going to accept our say-so about the workability of our scheme. And why should it? If it is good, we ought long ago to have demonstrated its utility. That is our mission: to demonstrate to the world the superiority of the divine over the human. In this we are not as faithful as we ought to be; and we lose as a consequence.

But, thank God, it seems that we are getting up "steam," and that the machinery of Zion will soon grind out the error that has been ground into the mind of man. I wonder, in this connection, if we can give up our individualistic traditions freely enough to follow leadership? and participate in a movement that promotes the interests of the individual through the activities of the group?

We have cheated ourselves long enough. We have gotten but a meager return for our worry and our effort. It is time now to come to our own. It is time to do things the right way. Who knows what the aftermath of this present war will be? Already the hearts of men are beginning to fear the consequences. And why? Why, with our endless resources? Simply because we sustain wrong relations; we engage in business of the wrong sort and from wrong motives.

Primary industries are sacrificed to secondary schemes. If we are wise we will speedily promote in our own group those industries which yield the goods of life. It will be time enough to think about grocery stores and clothing stores and coal yards, etc., when we have assured a supply of things which give rise to mercantile pursuits.

I call you to witness that in the revelations to the church much has been said on this very point. "Buy the land, buy the land" has been God's continuous appeal to us. "Put workmen on it to labor for the Saints of God."

Some one said to me not long ago that money enough was being spent in the present war to relieve the suffering of the whole world. I reply that money never did nor never can relieve one moment of suffering. Money is but a medium of exchange. I give the products of to-day's toil for my wage, not for the money's sake, but because I can conveniently exchange the money for other things that I wish. If a community of people can produce all they need, it makes no odds whether the supply of money is great or small.

Suppose that the allies had been successful in isolating Germany; suppose, too, that Germany had within her own territory all the resources the present war demands; what difference would it make if she didn't have an ounce of gold in her treasury? or a cent of credit in the world? What good is money? Does it satisfy your hunger? Does it clothe your nakedness? Does it protect you from the inclemency of the weather? These ends are met with food and clothing, not with money. And back of the food and clothing are the processes by which they are produced. And back of the processes are not only human energy, but also those absolutely indispensable natural utilities—earth, water, etc.

These are the things that a people desirous of securing their own interests do well to take into account. These are the things that the only economic plan that makes a pretense of being divine advises. These are the things, which, when a people are occupied with, assure them an adequate supply of the goods which are all men desire.

GRACELAND AS A JUNIOR COLLEGE

BY ELDER FLOYD M. McDOWELL

The school year 1915-16 has brought the first real test of Graceland as a junior college. The test has been passed successfully and the future is clear.

That this new venture in the educational field has been so soon marked with success may be due to several factors. Chief among these is the inauguration of Professor George N. Briggs as president of the college. Mr. Briggs came to us from the United States Bureau of Education where he had been employed for fifteen years. This experience had not only given him a most valuable experience in administrative work, but through his contact with the leaders of educational thought he had become keenly alive to the most vital problems of the day. The value of this personal contact was brought to us very forcibly when we learned that through him the cooperation of both Federal and State authorities had been secured. Mr. Briggs has been unceasing in his efforts to bring our work up to the standard, and we are glad to say that under his administration the prospects of Graceland seem to grow brighter every day.

Another reason for the success of Graceland as a junior college may be found in the loyal support of the people of the community, especially of the local high school graduates. The largest freshman class in the history of the institution enrolled last September. A large number of these came from the local high school. We are greatly indebted to them for this support, and recognize that only by providing standard work can we hope to receive such each succeeding year. There seems to be a much closer contact between the college and the community this year

1. Most of the smaller institutions are not equipped to carry on four years of work efficiently. Any college that limits its work to that which it can do well goes on record for honesty, a virtue much needed in our educational world.

2. Professional schools such as those of law and medicine are now requiring for admission at least two years of collegiate work. The junior college offers the student the opportunity to meet this requirement under desirable conditions at a minimum expense.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

than ever before. We believe this is as it should be.

But more fundamental than either of these reasons for our success is the fact that in becoming a junior college Graceland moved in accordance with the most recent thought in the field of higher education. The United States Commissioner of Education in his report for 1912 states that there are at least two hundred colleges that should make this move. The writer through a personal study of this problem and through correspondence with colleges in representative sections of the United States agrees with this position. Among the many things which favor this plan the following will suffice for the purposes of this paper:

3. The junior college furnishes a place of transition between the high school and the university. No one who has experience with the immature and undecided high school graduate will deny the value of keeping him under close personal and moral supervision for at least two years longer.

4. By centering all of its resources on the first two years of the college course, the junior college offers the advantages of a large institution coupled with the close contact and personal supervision which only a smaller institution can offer.

5. The advent of the junior college more clearly defines the relation of the higher institutions one to another. It will tend to eliminate the costly duplication so common in many of the States, and if the cooperation of the State university is secured, the smaller institutions will be better able to serve their constituency than ever before.

During the year we have been putting forth every effort to make the junior college standard in every respect. We have centralized our supervision, added to our equipment, lengthened the class hour, and have stood for good hard work first, last and all the time. We have secured the cooperation of the educational authorities of Iowa and Missouri in this work. Graceland is the first institution of this kind in this State, and consequently no official standards for a junior college have yet been adopted. We feel assured, however, that it will only be a matter of time until such are more clearly defined. Graceland may well be proud of the fact that she is a leader in this State in a movement that seeks a permanent improvement in the organization of the work of higher education.

Just a word in conclusion: No college can live without support. Nor do we refer to financial support alone. There are a number of young people in the community and throughout the church who could help Graceland in a very adequate way by attending there instead of going to other institutions. There is perhaps a larger number who are not attending any school, but are wasting their time day after day, year after year. For such we can only express pity and the hope that something may happen shortly to awaken them from the lethargy that seems to have enchained them, and bring them to a realization of the responsibilities and opportunities that are theirs.

PROFESSOR G. N. BRIGGS.
President of Graceland College.

ELDER FLOYD M. MCDOWELL.

Professor of psychology, history and education, and Dean of the Junior College.

The Christian economy provides no encouragement for the sluggard. Everywhere we are commanded to prepare, to seek wisdom, to study all good books, to go on unto perfection. God has given each a talent and will hold each responsible for the use of it. Wake up, young people! Set your ideals higher, broaden your ambitions, prepare and serve. Graceland is ready to serve you to this end if you will give her the opportunity to do so.

The beautiful law of Christian love, life, and truth, is that the more we give of our own capital, the more that capital increases. The widow's cruse of oil and barrel of meal increased as she distributed them; and a Christian's sunshine and happiness, faith and hope, will be invigorated and multiplied in proportion as he tries to make others hopeful, trustful and happy.—John Cumming.

First Presidency

GENERAL CONFERENCE ANNOUNCEMENTS

District secretaries who have not forwarded credentials to the church secretary are urged to forward immediately on appointment of delegates. The credentials report must be printed before the opening session of conference.

The secretary in connection with the committee on credentials will furnish cards and badges to ex officio members and delegates. Such evidence of ex officio and delegate membership will be required to entitle to place on the main floor; therefore all ex officio members and delegates should report promptly on arrival to the committee on credentials, sign the register, and receive cards and badges.

The credentials committee consists of C. I. Carpenter, R. J. Lambert, and E. E. Long. The committee will be located in the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

ELBERT A. SMITH, for the Presidency.

The Bishopric

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT

Saints and friends of the Portland District, please take notice that upon the resignation of Brother P. G. Hager, bishop's agent in and for the district before-named, Elder C. E. Jones, Condon, Oregon, upon due recommendation has been appointed bishop's agent in and for said district and will enter upon the duties of the office at once.

The Bishopric extend special thanks to former agent, Brother P. G. Hager, for the faithful labor performed in the office the present year, and trust that peace and the blessing of the Lord may be with him in his work in the future. Elder C. E. Jones has been laboring the past year in the Portland, Oregon, District, and we trust that the Saints and friends of said district will become more fully acquainted with him and be interested in helping him along in his work as bishop's agent and in every other duty required of him as a representative of the Master's cause.

Bespeaking for him the ready help, assistance and consideration of the Saints and friends in the Portland District, and trusting that the Lord will especially bless and direct him in his labors, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric,

Very truly and respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE

Passenger associations will make no special rate because of the prevailing interstate rate of 2.4 per mile and the intrastate rate of two cents. Rates are made from eastern points by roads named, as follows:

Baltimore & Ohio, New York to Saint Louis, $20.82; clergy, $12.40; Saint Louis to Independence, $6.53.

Delaware Lackawanna & Western and Wabash, New York to Saint Louis, $21.75; clergy, $12.40; Saint Louis to Independence, $6.53.

New York to Kansas City via cut-off, $27.35.

New York to Chicago, $19.10; Chicago to Kansas City, $10.90.

New York Central and Pennsylvania Lines, New York to Chicago, $21.10; Chicago to Kansas City, $10.90.

Baltimore & Ohio, Delaware Lackawanna & Western and Wabash, party of ten, New York to Saint Louis, $20.55.

From Philadelphia: To Kansas City via Pittsburg and Chicago over Pennsylvania and Burlington routes, $28.75 each way.

From Philadelphia via Washington and Saint Louis, Baltimore and Ohio and Chicago & Alton combination train direct to Independence, Mo., fare $16.80 each way to Saint Louis; with clergy rate between Philadelphia and Saint Louis. Buy to Saint Louis clergy and rebuy Saint Louis to Independence. By buying from Burlington people at Saint Louis a sleeper will be set off at Independence from Saint Louis over the Chicago & Alton. Parties from Philadelphia and vicinity who wish to travel with party, consult W. W. Smith, 112 West Ontario Street, Philadelphia, who will give information on regular and clergy tickets, trains, etc.

In connection with Notice "Conference via Chicago" from Brother D. E. Dowker, in HERALD March 8: Tickets may be purchased Chicago to Independence via Chicago and Alton, party rate of ten or more, at $10.49. Should parties wish to purchase a party ticket to Louisiana, Missouri, "for $5.40 per capita and some one of the party get off the train at Louisiana, Missouri, and purchase the regular one-way ticket at $4.08 each, the single-trip selling rate from Louisiana to Independence, making a total of $9.48, they could enjoy the reduction of $1.37 over the regular rate, or $1.01 over the through combination rate." The plan is to leave Chicago April 1, 6.30 p. m., per Brother Dowker's notice. Another train for such a party will be arranged to leave at same time April 5 if sufficient number notify Brother Dowker. Trains will be equipped with reclining chair, regular and tourist sleeping cars, according to requirements as arranged through notifications to Brother Dowker.

Persons traveling from all points are informed: That while in the State of Missouri and in other states the state rate is two cents per mile, the Interstate Commerce Commission has granted a rate of 2.4 per mile on interstate travel. Many avail themselves of the state rate by buying to state line points and there repurchasing, thus making the journey at intrastate (state) rates. Thus persons from the west crossing the state of Kansas may buy to Kansas City, Kansas, and finish the journey to Missouri by electric or other line to Kansas City or Independence, Missouri. Some of the railroads claim that interstate travel should pay the 2.4 rate. The information is furnished, the traveler left to act upon his own initiative.

The Transcontinental Association announces the usual nine months tourist rates from California and North Pacific Coast Common Points to Kansas City and other Missouri River gateways and to eastern points at the rate of two cents per mile, equivalent to a fare and one third for the round trip. For particulars inquire of passenger agents.

Quorum Notices

FIRST SEVENTY

First session of First Seventy will meet Independence, April 4, 8 a. m. The place of meeting has not yet been assigned. It is expected that the Presidency will secure places as they have heretofore. The prayers of the brethren are requested in behalf of the quorum president that he may be able to be present. At the present he is in poor health. Come to exercise the spirit of our high calling in Christ Jesus.

J. F. MINTUN, Secretary First Seventy.

PRESIDENTS OF SEVENTY

First meeting of Presidents of Seventy will be at the home of Sister P. Peterson, where we have previously met, Independence, Missouri, March 27, 7.30 p. m. Matters of quite importance are before us, and we desire that all of the council will be present. Our president needs your prayers, that he may be blessed physically that he may be with us.

J. F. MINTUN, Secretary of the Council.

Requests for Prayers

Sister M. A. Hughes, Clarinda, Iowa, requests the prayers of the Saints, that if it be God's will she may be healed of an affliction that has troubled her for a long time. This sister is isolated. She should have the prayers of all the Saints.

"In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage"

BY ESTELLA WIGHT

No recommendation of this story is needed for those who have followed it, wholly or in part, in Stepping Stones.

To those who have not, we can say that it is an original and natural presentation of the gospel cause. The characters are unusually well drawn and the situations are real—many of them exciting, tense with life and action. The domestic pictures, especially, are pretty and realistic.

Altogether it is a splendid Latter Day Saint work, and deserves the attention of readers. A fine book to lend outsiders.

Illustrated cover, excellent cloth binding, inside illustration; 320 pages. Price, $1, postpaid.

We all join in singing, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord."

But do we realize what it means to the conference appointee waiting for the appointments to be read at General Conference? Or perhaps waiting in his field, a long way off, for tardy mails to bring him the news?

What would it mean to you to be taken from a field near home and appointed to a field a thousand miles from wife and baby?

In Autumn Leaves for April, Elder J. A. Bronson tells what it meant to him. He makes you feel it. Did he go? Read and see.

TWO PHILOSOPHIES IN CONTRAST

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday morning, January 30, 1916.)

Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness.—Matthew 6: 33, I. T.

Take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.—Luke 12: 19.

I wish to present in contrast this morning, two philosophies. They are stated briefly in two passages of scripture. The first of these is, "But seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness."—Matthew 6: 33, I. T.

The second is, "Take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry."—Luke 12: 19. (Another text adds, "For to-morrow we die.")

The contrast between these two philosophies is very striking even before we begin to analyze them. You see that in these two passages of scripture we have philosophies in essence. They are concentrated into a single sentence in each case, and yet either of them is powerful enough to transform the world, and each of them has revolutionized individual lives and the lives and history of nations.

We give our attention first to this second rule of life: "Take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die."

This is a philosophy that is very old. We hear it said frequently, "One world at a time," "Live while you live, because you will be dead a long time," and expressions of that kind. It is essentially sensual and animal in its nature. It is a philosophy that appeals to many, for it takes absolutely no thought of the future.

THE SALOON

This morning we want to examine the nature of some of the avenues of expression of this philosophy, some of the institutions, if you please, that pander to the tastes of the disciples of this philosophy. In examining these institutions I do not wish to do so in a radical or extreme or harsh manner. I do not want to present anything that might be considered as having sprung from religious fanaticism, but only that which may be sustained by the cool and sober judgment of students of social conditions.

First of these institutions, and the most notorious, perhaps, is the saloon—notorious as it is for its pandering to drunkenness and gluttony. The ruin and wreck that it has brought humanity, the crime, suffering, and poverty that result from its activities can never be computed. It is not necessary for us to dwell long upon it this morning.

THE SOCIAL EVIL

The next institution that we might note is that of commercialized vice, the "social evil" as we term it; sexual debauchery in all of its various forms. Here too the misery that results from indulgence by devotees of this philosophy, "Eat, drink, and be merry," is beyond computation.

Vice commissions who have studied this matter tell us that from thirty-five to forty per cent of men, and from fifteen to twenty per cent of women the country over, bear in their own persons the evidences of God's disapproval of the sins that have been committed under the guise of this philosophy and along this line.

There is some ground for the statement in the Book of Covenants, that in the last days all flesh shall become corrupt.

The next institution that we might note is that of gambling in all its phases, that has taken such a hold in all the world in all ages upon the interests of humanity.

THE MODERN DANCE

And next we mention the modern dance. I know when we approach that subject that we may be met by diverse opinions. We will encounter those who tell us that to dance to strains of music in and of itself is harmless, and we are willing to concede that contention. We are well aware that it presents itself to us with an appeal that is alluring and that it comes to us under the guise of innocent pleasure and recreation.

And yet the spirit of the dance is the spirit of this philosophy, "Eat, drink and be merry," as it was at that memorable ball before the battle of Waterloo, when the cry was, "On with the dance, let joy be unconfined!" No regard is had for moral consequences.

Turning from many expressions of religious fanaticism against this institution, we find that those individuals whom we have referred to, careful students of social conditions, assure us that the modern dance in all circles of society is a feeder of prostitution, and that evil and designing men and women continually and everywhere take advantage of it for that purpose.

It has, if we stop to think about it, a sensual and sexual basis. A good brother in another branch not long ago wished to organize dancing classes, and in order to rob it of all danger, he proposed that the men should dance by themselves. If he tries that experiment he may be wiser than he is now. You could not get men to attend that kind of a dance if you were to pay them wages. It would be about as interesting as a convention of grave diggers or undertakers.

I want to read now in support of what I have stated, from a book that is written by a physician of national repute, Doctor James Foster Scott, a graduate of Yale University and Edinburgh University, and formerly vice president of the Medical Association of the District of Columbia. He says:

There is a habit of laughing at ministers of the gospel who thunder out denunciations against dancing, but from a purely medical standpoint the customs of the ballroom are perfectly indefensible. . . . In opposing such a popular institution we tread on delicate ground indeed, so that we may anticipate the strongest disapproval from many quarters unless the subject is attentively analyzed. But from the well-informed physician, the humanitarian, the student of the times, and from the experienced man of the world, we confidently expect a unanimous verdict of approval. This is no mere matter of opinion, but an incontrovertible fact; and those are blind indeed who cannot see that the modern ball, with every feature in it sensuous and seductive, is what we call a secondary sexual love feast, and that its present tendency is not in the direction of purity or a high civilization.

This comes from a physician of repute. Evidently the church was right when it adopted this resolution: "Resolved, That we consider the practice of dancing and card playing as unbecoming true Christians, and should be avoided by all Saints." (General Conference Resolution, number 377.)

"Well," some one says, "we will take this institution into our homes and make it respectable." You cannot change the nature of a tiger by putting him to bed in my lady's chamber. You cannot change his nature by calling him a tabby cat and putting a blue ribbon around his neck. It is a dangerous experiment, and it surely will have disastrous results wherever it is tried.

THE THEATER

The next institution that we note is that of the theater. Here too we enter upon ground that is debatable. I am aware that people say there are high grade shows, and theaters that are elevating in their nature, that appeal to all that is best in humanity. I will concede that contention right on the start for all it is worth.

Personally I have attended a few of the higher grade productions when I thought that the circumstances justified so doing—possibly six in the past ten years. Some of them I found were elevating, and some I thought were not, but I feel inclined to draw the line even more rigorously in the future, for this reason: When one individual goes to a production of that kind, that is absolutely unquestionable, some one else, taking advantage of his example, will go to all kinds continuously, so perhaps it is better to refrain, under the example of the Apostle Paul, who said that if eating meat caused his brother to offend he would not eat any more meat.

Well, you concede, that will apply very well in my case—but is it any more binding on me than it is on you? While we might select some excellent productions that are educational it is quite evident that indiscriminate running to all kinds of shows, including the cheap and vulgar, is demoralizing—even if we lay aside every consideration of the enormous waste of time and money and nervous energy.

We know, if we stop to think about it, that the average strolling theatrical company that shows in the smaller and cheaper houses in the great cities and visits the smaller villages, is mediocre in ability (to say the very least) and by reputation most shady in morals. Such a company could not, if it would, interpret any great message for intelligent and refined people, and I fear that in most cases they would not if they could. The proverbially loose, immoral, and disorderly life that goes on behind the stage everywhere inevitably protrudes itself upon the stage, and will surely have its effect on the audience.

In support of this conclusion, I read again from this Doctor Scott:

The modern stage is an important factor in debasing public opinion and sexually overstimulating the passions of a large number of individuals. . . . But we cannot fail to notice that a large majority of the modern plays and operas have as essential elements of the plot, or of the costuming, something which is unmistakably immoral, salacious and erotic. In fact, there is a glorification of vice, and modesty and morality are put to shame. Lasciviousness and the waving of enchanting petticoats have largely replaced oratory and fine acting. . . . The modern stage is known to be the hotbed of impurity and divorce, and the actress of note who is not a divorcee or who has a clean reputation is the exception.

Evidently then the church was right in 1912 when it adopted this resolution: "Resolved, That the practice of theater going should be discouraged, and that members of the church should be urged to avoid the practice as detrimental to spirituality."

I am aware that there are many other details upon which I might dwell, but perhaps this is enough as illustrating the institutions that appeal to those who choose to become disciples of this philosophy, "Eat, drink and be merry, for to-morrow we die."

Let us turn from that now to the other philosophy, vastly more pleasing in its nature—and I find that it is like turning from darkness to light,—the philosophy, "But seek ye first," (let others do as they please) but "seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness."

CURRENT EVENTS

IN EXPLANATION.—Conditions under which this column will be edited beginning with this issue and continuing until after the coming General Conventions and Conference will make it impracticable to present it as would otherwise be done.

ARMY INCREASE.—Following action in the House with only one dissenting vote, unanimous action in the Senate, and the signing of the joint bill by President Wilson, the United States army is being recruited to full war strength. The peace strength of the army is 85,000, the war strength 105,000.

WILSON ON RUN.—Some idea of "yellow journalism" as adapted to the Mexican situation may be formed from the following: It is announced from El Paso, Texas, that a newspaper printed in Spanish at Durango gave the "information" that Villa had taken New Mexico and Texas, and was pressing on north, while President Wilson and his family were fleeing to Canada.

TO OUST ZAPATA.—Report from Mexico City is that preparations are being made for a campaign against Zapata throughout Morelos and Guerrero. In the latter state, Zapata forces are said to have taken strong positions in the mountains, accessible only through passes, and defensible by small parties. General Obregon has been appointed minister of war in the Carranza cabinet, and is directing these preparations.

AFTER VILLA.—It was announced on the 15th that four thousand United States troops under command of General Pershing had on that day crossed the international border in pursuit of Villa and the men who raided Columbus, New Mexico, the 9th. Carranza forces are cooperating with the American expedition to take Villa, and Mexican authorities announce that the Carranza Government will cooperate with the United States to the fullest extent in his effort. The United States Government maintains a rigid censorship, and the movements of the troops and the plan of campaign are not known outside of official circles. Aeroplanes are being used for scouting purposes in connection with the American expedition.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The German advance on Verdun seems to have abated somewhat in fury. The week covered by this report has been marked only by slight gains for the Germans, the French defense continuing firm and invincible. The Russians report advances in Persia. They have also taken additional territory from the Turks in Armenia, having carried their line to a point sixty miles west of Ezerum, the stronghold taken some weeks ago. Violent artillery firing has been engaged in on the north of the Russian line. The Italians have developed a strong artillery offensive against the Austrians on the Isonzo front. The Turks have taken an advanced position from the British on the Tigris. The sinking of two Dutch liners is under investigation by both the Dutch and German governments. Report from Berlin is that Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, whose stand for the rights of neutrals has caused the resignation of General Admiral Tirpitz, has been given a vote of confidence by the Bavarian ministry. Persistent reports of peace talk in Turkey are given out from London, rumor being that the Turkish Government has considered a separate peace with the entente allies.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

ELDER W. P. BOOTMAN ILL.—The editors are in receipt of a letter from Mrs. J. J. Phay, dated March 14, and written from Altorado, Alberta, in which she states that Elder W. P. Bootman is at her home seriously ill. The prayers of the Saints are asked in his behalf.

A BIG LECTURE.—Reporting a lecture given by Elder S. W. L. Scott at Knox, Indiana, on the subject, "The eastern conflict as seen through the tubes of prophecy," the Starke County Republican says:

The speaker wove into his subject prophecy and history, ancient and modern, in such a fascinating manner as to leave the conviction in the mind that he is master of his subject. A big lecture is this, and should be heard everywhere in vindication of the Bible as the Christian revelation of God to man.

SEQUEL TO "JOE PINE."—A new story begins in the April number of Autumn Leaves. It is entitled "Called to be an apostle." This story is a sequel to "Joe Pine," the story by Elbert A. Smith that has been running in Autumn Leaves since November. It is an attempt to delineate the "ministry of material things." Joseph Prian Brady (Joe Pine) feels the call to be "an apostle after the new order." He conceives the idea that business and the accumulation of wealth may become a consecrated calling providing it is undertaken in harmony with the Book of Mormon ideal: "To do good, to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick and the afflicted." The author desires to arouse in the hearts of the young a longing to engage in such service. This story should be brought to the attention of every young Latter Day Saint. Autumn Leaves is published monthly. It costs only one dollar per year,—less than the average novel, less than first-class theater tickets for two. You can afford to take it. You can't afford to not take it.

"METHODISM FORGETS ITSELF."—Under the foregoing title the Cleveland Saints have distributed an interesting folder. It is a reply to an attack made by one Mrs. Diefenderfer at the Glenville Methodist Episcopal Church in Cleveland. In the course of her lecture she is said to have made some very slanderous and extravagant statements, alleging that the church in Utah and the Reorganized are affiliated and believe and practice the same things; that members of the Reorganized Church go to Utah to take the endowment ceremony in the Mormon temple; that polygamy is practiced close to Independence, Missouri, by members of the Reorganized Church, and is winked at by the officials. The folder in question has the following introduction:

A Mrs. Diefenderfer appeared at the Glenville Methodist Episcopal Church, February 27, p. m. to lecture against "Mormonism." A committee from the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints of Wade Park Avenue and Seventy-first Street, sought to have the speaker make due distinction between that body and the dominant church of Utah founded by Brigham Young. Mrs. Diefenderfer preferred to give her hearers many moth-eaten fables and proven falsehoods, and deliberately garbled the whole matter into one nasty mess. Failing to get a hearing and an honest correction, we have recourse to the public print, and hereby present some of her misstatements side by side with records from more reliable authorities, and a reminder that in its early days "Methodism" was as ill-thought of as "Mormonism" once was, but having grown in opulence and power, it now stoops to sanction such injustices as once it also suffered at the hands of the ignorant or maliciously disposed.

The introduction is followed by three parallel columns. The first sets forth the charges made by Mrs. Diefenderfer. The second quotes from Senator Burrows, Chief Justice Armour, The Kansas City Star and Times, Bancroft's History, and other sources, setting forth the position of the Reorganized Church. The third gives an account of persecutions endured by John Wesley and his followers. The leaflet closes with the following statement:

We let you judge for yourself. We would have preferred a fair statement from the platform of the Glenville Methodist Episcopal Church, failing which it should in all honor now apply the Golden Rule and let "the accused" be heard in their own defense; it should at least honor our proofs as accepted by law rather than sensational charges that will not stand the test of public examination where both sides are fairly represented.

These leaflets have been distributed from house to house, and have been mailed to every Cleveland minister with a letter telling "how to avoid making such mistakes."

He who rises early will gather wisdom.—Proverb.

The New Motherhood

If she had lived a little while ago
She would be wearing tranquil caps of lace,
Withdrawing gently to her quiet place,
Sighing remotely at the world's drab woe.

To-day she fronts it squarely as her foe,
Not from the inglenook, but face to face,
Marching to meet it, stoutly keeping pace,
Armored in wisdom, strong to overthrow.

This is the work she always understood—
The world in terms of home. Set free to flower—
Unhindered now, her own brood long awing—
In broader, all-embracing motherhood,
Calm with the years and ardent with the hour,
Indian summer with the urge of spring.
—Ruth Comfort Mitchell, in March Century.

Leaves

One by one, like leaves from a tree,
All my faiths have forsaken me;
But the stars above my head
Burn in white and delicate red,
And beneath my feet the earth
Brings the sturdy grass to birth.
I who was content to be
But a siken-singing tree,
But a rustle of delight
In the wistful heart of night,
I have lost the leaves that knew
Touch of rain and weight of dew.
Blinded by a leafy crown
I look neither up nor down—
But the little leaves that die
Have left me room to see the sky;
Now for the first time I know
Stars above and earth below.

—Sara Teasdale.

Love Unfailing

Though all the world is full of strife,
And brother claims a brother's life,
Love never faileth.

Though winter's cold and famine gray
Like wolves ferocious bar the way,
Love never faileth.

Though many hearts are callous, cold,
And glory in the greed of gold,
Love never faileth.

Though earth and heaven pass away,
And angels cease to sing and pray,
Love never faileth.

For He that loves is from above;
He can not fail, for God is love.
Love never faileth.

—Arthur B. Rhinow.

OBTAINING SALVATION

(Sermon preached by Elder H. O. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, January 26, 1916. Reported by Winsome Smith.)

I have always endeavored to have two objects in view in appearing in the pulpit, and I believe that those two objects should be always in evidence whenever anyone undertakes to speak to the people. One of the objects of preaching is to convert sinners. The other object is to strengthen those who already believe; for it is quite obvious to every thinking individual that we are none of us too strong in the faith, and I presume that it would be practically impossible for us to become too strong in the faith. And hence any effort we may put forth, either to consummate the first object or the second, will not be in vain.

To-night I am going to take for my text the twenty-first verse of the first chapter of Matthew, or at least a portion of that verse, which reads: "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins."

OBEY AND MOVE ON

I presume there is no more concise expression of the Master's mission than that which is contained in this simple statement. Yet I believe that in many instances, speaking from the standpoint of the Christian world, in most instances this simple statement has been misunderstood; that men have formed the conclusion that our salvation depends entirely upon Jesus Christ, and that through his blood we are cleansed from our sin without any special effort upon our own part.

For five years of my missionary life I made an especial effort to combat the thought that by one single act of our lives we might be assured of salvation. Those people who to some extent bear the same name that we do, and who have their home in the valleys of the mountains, maintain that by one single act wherein they pass through the endowment house rites they are sealed up unto eternal life, and no matter what sin they may commit from that time on, they are assured of eternal life, unless it is the shedding of innocent blood,—and they do not consider that there is very much innocent blood in this world outside of their own ranks.

We do not find them the only people who hold to this view, for there are people who claim that by a simple confession that Jesus is the Christ, they are assured of salvation, or to use the common term, they are saved.

I believe that this does not do justice to the statement made here in the record of the angel message that came to the earthly father of Christ, and which stated, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins"; for this would be not a saving of the people from their sins, but saving them in their sins, if we accept the common acceptance of the statement made here.

One of our inspired poets, and I believe that there is much inspiration in the poetry of to-day, has made the declaration,

Salvation is not begged nor bought;
Too long this selfish hope sufficed;
Too long men reeked with lowless thoughts
And leaned upon a tortured Christ.

I believe it is time we understood the fact that obeying what may be termed the first principles of the gospel of Christ is not sufficient for us; that if we hope for eternal salvation we must avail ourselves of the privileges that Christ grants to us, and move on unto perfection.

DOCTRINAL PRINCIPLES

A number of years ago it chanced that I was in the city of Independence—it has been something of a chance for me to be there for quite a number of years—and I listened to a sermon by one of the brethren whose name I cannot recall just now. At the conclusion of the sermon I walked out of the building behind two old, gray-headed brethren. One of them turned to the other and made some comment upon the sermon, and the other answered with, "Yes, but we don't hear the good old-fashioned doctrinal sermons that we used to hear."

And it chanced that the president of the branch, or stake, called upon me the following Sunday to deliver the morning address. I took this incident for my text, and I asked the question, "What is doctrine? What is a doctrinal sermon? Does it mean that I must confine myself to the presentation of the principles of faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment? or are there other principles that have been taught by those whom we believe understood the gospel of Jesus Christ thoroughly, that are essential, that we not only teach but that we obey?"

I am not going to make the statement, however, that we do not need to preach that which we term the first principles of the gospel of Christ, or that we will ever outgrow them so far as our doctrine or practice is concerned; but I believe there are other doctrines or principles that are of more worth to you and me. As long as we have already obeyed these principles, there are others essential for us to obey in order that we may go on to perfection. If I need any justification in holding this view, I simply turn to the Master's statement—I cannot tell you now just where it is found—but you will readily recall it when I quote it. In speaking to the Pharisees and Sadducees he said to them, "Ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, but ye have omitted the weightier matters of the law: judgment, mercy, and faith. These ought ye to have done and not to have left the other undone."

I want to warn all Latter Day Saints wherever I go, and I believe I do, that simply living your life so that you may retain your name upon the records of the church is not sufficient. I do not believe that we should live a passive religion only. I believe our religion ought to be an active one, and that we should be anxiously engaged in a good cause. Anxiously engaged! That means that we leave no stone unturned, no obstacle unsurmounted, that may lie in our pathway in the accomplishment of the great work that God has intrusted to you and to me.

RESPONSIBILITY SHARED

I sometimes like to draw comparisons—though they tell me that comparisons are odious—between that which is expected of a missionary and that which is expected of any member.

Now if I should be chosen to represent this church as a missionary, and should in the least degree fail in placing myself in the proper condition to represent this church; if I should in the least degree fail to do all that lay in my power to perform my work or my mission; if I should allow any sacrifices to stand between me and the performance of my duty, or in any way disqualify myself to act as an efficient minister in the cause of Christ, I would meet with your disapproval, and you would clamor for my recall.

But in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants I read a statement that tells me that the burden rests not alone upon the shoulders of the ministry, but the burden rests as well upon every individual who may hold membership in the church.

The Lord said to us in section 119: 8, under date of April 11, 1887:

Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

This does not except any. Each of us has our place to fill in this great work that God has intrusted to us all. This church can make progress only as its integral parts make progress. When an individual comes to me and asks me what progress the church is making, I say to him, "It is making just as much progress as you are making and no more, because you are an integral part of the church, and the church in a spiritual sense cannot outgrow the spirituality of its membership. Not at all." Each individual must find his place and fill it to the very best of his ability if he hopes that success will finally crown the efforts of the missionaries, and the efforts of the church in the world.

MAKING MISSIONS SACRED

I believe there is a mistaken idea connected with the work of God by a great many people who are wont to cast a halo in their imagination around the man who occupies behind the sacred desk. These imagine that his mission is just a little more sacred than the mission of other men and women in the church; but this is not true. Our mission becomes sacred as we make it sacred.

The housewife who attends strictly to her duties, and sees that the house is well kept, brings cheer into its rooms. Studying carefully to make herself efficient in the concoction of the food that she offers those who are dependent upon her, she makes herself efficient in caring for the loved ones. Though she may never, so far as her personal influence is concerned, go out from those walls, she is doing just as much, and just as sacred a duty, as the man who stands behind the sacred desk, or who may occupy in the highest position within the gift of God in this church. And she cannot fail to let her influence go outside the walls of her home, so far as that is concerned, perhaps not in her own person, but in the persons of those whom she serves. They will carry her influence out into the business marts of the world. The world will have been better because she has lived in it, and no greater eulogy can fall from the lips of the Master than that, so far as I am concerned.

The man who yields the blacksmith's hammer, or shakes the carpenter's saw, or stands between the handles of the plow, or teaches the young in the schools, or stands behind the counter and sells goods, can make his calling a sacred one if he will consecrate that labor to the advancement of the work that he claims to love. And if that individual will consecrate every dollars he earns, every dollar that comes into his coffers for the advancement of God's cause and the uplift of man, then his calling is just as sacred, and will be so considered by God himself, as any calling that he may choose in this world.

* Then why throw a halo about the head of the man who stands behind the sacred desk? and expect more sacrifice, more devotion, and more consecration from him than the individual who may lead a merchant's life, or fill any of the vocations or avocations of the day?

LOOKING AFTER THE HOME NEST

Three or four years ago I attended a conference here at Lamoni, and when I returned home I took up the Ensign and I read the items from a certain branch. The pastor had gone to General Conference, and in his absence he had designated two young men to take charge of the work of the branch. They did their work so well that the corerspondent from that particular branch commended them for it, in these words: "They showed unexpected strength, and some day we have no doubt they will leave the home nest and go forth to carry the glad tidings to other honest hearts."

At once there came to my mind, Why should they leave the home nest in order to work for God? Why? Is there no other way in which a man may devote his life to the cause of Christ and the advancement of the church besides going out and leaving the home nest and carrying the glad tidings to other honest hearts?

I stated one time in discoursing upon this question in a certain branch not very far distant from this, one that is not very many hundred miles away, that it did not take very much of a man to be a missionary. And I understand that that remark was quoted in this building during a convention that was held here last spring in such a way that the wrong impression of my position went out in regard to this matter. But I am going to make the statement again, that it does not take very much of a man to be a missionary. Of course if you are very successful in your missionary work, extremely successful, it takes considerable of a man to be a missionary; but I have known men who were successful proselyters, capable of bringing men and women into the church, perhaps by the hundreds, that could not preside over a branch, could not remain in a branch very long without making trouble.

I have known men—one particular man whom you would remember distinctly were I to recall his name, one of the most successful and one of the most eloquent preachers that I ever listened to, but he never studied.

I was with him in my early missionary life, and I never knew him to study. He had a certain set number of sermons that he would preach in a locality, and then pass on to the next and preach them there almost word for word, and those who had never heard them before thought them splendid. They were worth listening to, and they converted hundreds of men and women I presume to the gospel of Jesus Christ. But he was not what I would call an efficient worker for Christ. The result was that he deteriorated instead of growing and becoming more and more powerful and efficient in the work of God.

While I recognize the fact that it takes something of a man to be a successful missionary in every sense of the word, yet I am ready to take off my hat to the man who can take charge of a branch of this church and develop it as that branch should be developed. I have tried both ways, and give me the firing line every time. Give me the firing line, as we call it. Let me go out upon the frontier. Let me meet with those who have never heard this glad message, and let me deliver that message to them. I have tried both places, and I claim that if I want to do a good work, work that will be of lasting benefit to mankind, I can find ample opportunity to do that work right among the membership of this church.

And so I have often asked myself the question since I read that statement, Why leave the home nest and go out into this world to carry the glad tidings to other honest hearts? Why not seek for opportunities at home? Why not seek for opportunities to develop along the lines that God would have us develop, and so sustain the hands of those whose calling it is to go out into this world and preach the gospel to those who have never heard that gospel? Why not?

Perhaps if you have a real ambition to do for the Master's cause in the missionary field, if you are faithful in the little things, as you sometimes call them at home, and work for their development, God may see fit to intrust you with the other burden as well.

APPLYING THE GOSPEL

It does not take very much of a man to go out and hew down a tree and cut the logs. It doesn't take much of a man to delve into the bowels of the earth and bring forth the ore. It doesn't perhaps take much of a man, that is, I mean from the standpoint of skilled labor, to saw the logs into boards. Perhaps it doesn't take much of a man to attend the smelter that extracts the ore from the dross after it is found. But when that material has been brought into the proper condition to be molded and fashioned into machinery, into houses, into buildings, then it requires skilled workmen, men that have studied carefully laws and rules, and who have trained their hands and their brains to bring forth the finished product.

So I believe it is with this great work of God which is intrusted to us all. We go out in this world—and oh how often I have longed when I have been out preaching this gospel of Jesus Christ to be able to make the statement to those to whom I preached it—when I led them into the waters of baptism, and my hands were laid upon them for the reception of God's Holy Spirit, how often have I longed to be able to say to them, "Go into such and such a branch. There you will find the exemplification of this gospel that I have taught you. You will find at that place that every man and woman is putting into practical operation the great principles that I have taught you." But I could not do it, not fully as I would liked to have been able to do. I could to some extent, it is true. I am not going to be pessimistic in my views at all. To some extent I could say that this was true, but I could not say it to the fullest extent—not to the fullest extent.

I believe there is opportunity for us, as members of the church, to put into operation the gospel of Jesus Christ in its fullness, not only by the principles that can be seen outwardly, or the performance of baptism and laying on of hands, but as the Master said, "Ye pay tithes of mint and anise and cummin, but ye have omitted the weightier matters of the law; judgment, mercy and faith. This ought ye to have done and not to have left the other undone."

I do not know of a place in the whole world where you could put these principles into operation better than you can right here in Lamoni, Iowa. You have the majority in population; you have the balance of power in your vote, and you can have things your own way much better than we can in Independence, and we have made ourselves felt there in a political way in every movement that has been brought up for the betterment of the city. Here in Lamoni I believe is the place where you can, to a greater extent than any other place in this world, and perhaps you think you do, I do not know, put into operation the gospel of Jesus Christ and make it powerful for good. But from my little observation here in this town I do not find it just exactly what I would like to have it, and what I believe it ought to be in a community of Saints, where they have the balance of power.

I find in the institutions that pay wages in this city, the minimum of wages, and in the city the maximum of house rent. Now I do not know why this is, but it is a fact. I have made the statement a number of times since I have been here that I cannot understand how any individual can afford to pay the rent for homes here upon the wages that he receives. I cannot understand it, and I believe it hinders the civic development of the city. It drives men out and keeps men out who might otherwise be conducive at least to the welfare of the city. This is simply one line. It is not the only way you can make this field a missionary field for Christ.

ESTABLISHING ZION

In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants I am given to understand that there are ways in which this gospel may be spread, and in which it is to be spread at sometime or other, but we are waiting all the time to do it in a collective sense, not in the individual sense. In the ninth paragraph of section 102, a revelation that is called the "Fishing River Revelation," I believe, we read:

But firstly, let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, that it may become fair as the sun, and clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations; that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ; therefore, let us become subject unto her laws.

Now God wants Zion and her stakes to become fair as the sun, clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations. I do not apprehend that her banners shall be terrible because of the size of her battleships, the caliber of her guns, or anything of that kind; I believe that there is another way in which one individual may become terrible to another, and that is by righteousness. That is, he will be terrible to the individual who does not desire righteousness, who hates righteousness, who despises the principles of righteousness, and that individual will get just as far away from him as he can.

God designs that Zion shall become so pure in heart and so efficient in the practice of the laws and principles that govern, not only in a religious way, I apprehend, but in a civic way as well, that the nations will be attracted to Zion, and they will say: Let us become subject unto her laws, because verily, in her is represented the principles of the gospel of Christ. Verily, Zion is the kingdom of our God and his Christ.

The world generally, the Christian world at least, has a conception of the mission of the Christ. They have a conception of the millennium! and millennial conditions have been pointed out frequently, and even men who make no profession whatever of religion and may not believe that Jesus is the Christ, have a conception of what you ought to be and what I ought to be as followers of the meek and lowly Man. I think that one of the strongest evidences I have ever had of the value of this gospel of Jesus Christ to me is the fact that just the moment an individual enters the church the world expects him to be a better man.

I had an amusing incident happen to me in North Dakota a few years ago. I was attending a reunion at the town of Dunseith, and a lady came to me and asked for baptism. Her husband was upon the grounds, and I said, "Does your husband know you wish to be baptized?"

She said, "No."

So I said, "I shall tell him." I went over to where he was and said, "Your wife has made application to me for baptism. Have you any objections?"

"Not at all," he said. "I have been hearing you people preach for a number of years, and so far as my conception of the gospel of Jesus Christ goes, you are teaching it, and I have no objections at all."

I said, "If that is the case, and you believe we are teaching the gospel, why not accompany your wife into the waters of baptism, and start this Christian life together?"

He said, "I am going to wait a while and see how it affects her before I join."

"Why," I said, "how do you expect it to affect her? What effect do you expect it to have upon her?"

He said, "I expect it to make her a better woman in every sense of the word."

Well, this is the general conception of this gospel of Christ all over this world. Wherever an individual has studied the gospel at all he recognizes the fact that if it could control this world it would be an ideal place in which to live. They recognize that fact.

And so God says of Zion that he desires her to get into that condition that the nations of the world shall acknowledge, because of the example she sets, not only in spiritual rites, but in civic rites, and all that goes to make a good government and a good nation, that she represents the kingdom of our God and his Christ.

INDIVIDUAL ZION

Now that is collectively, but I believe every individual in this world can establish Zionistic conditions in himself or herself. I was preaching in the little town of Auburn, Iowa, quite a number of years ago. I noticed a couple enter the building one day at the Sunday morning service who were strangers to me. They had not been in my audience before. I went down to them at the close of the service and made myself acquainted so far as I could, inquiring of them where they lived, and they told me. It was a cold morning in the winter.

"Why," I said, "you have driven twenty miles this morning to hear me preach."

"Yes."

"Well," I said, "we will not permit you to return home without food for yourself and your team."

I went to the brother with whom I was staying and told him the circumstances, and told him to go and invite these people home with him for their noon-day meal. He did so.

While the good wife was preparing the meal, I said, "I have some curiosity. I want to know just what prompted you to drive so far to hear a stranger preach."

They said, We will tell you. We lived in Illinois before we came to this place. We lived by the side of two members of your church, a man and his wife. We never heard them preach their faith very much, that is with their lips. We did not see them or hear them boring their neighbors with their faith and their doctrine, but wherever there was distress these people were found; wherever there was death or sickness, or relief was necessary, these people were found, always.

The man said, "My wife and I watched them for a number of months, living side by side with them, and always that was the result of our watching. These people were the first to present themselves in every case of distress, sickness, death, or poverty, and we came to hear you preach this morning, because we wanted to hear that doctrine taught that could produce such Christians as that man and his wife."

That is exactly the condition that God desires that we shall obtain collectively. This man wanted to hear the doctrine taught that would produce Christians like that man and his wife. The world will want to hear the doctrine taught that will produce not only spiritual growth in the individual, but civic righteousness and conditions surrounding that will conduce to the welfare of every individual in the neighborhood in every way, in the laws that are created and taught, in the method by which we carry out this great work that has been submitted to us.

PREACHING THE GOSPEL

When God made the statement to you and to me that I have read here, "Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad, so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that labors in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all," he did not mean that you should only give of your substance for the spread of God's work. If you are engaged in business he meant that you should actively live your religion in actual business, in actual transactions, carrying out the gospel of Christ in your daily life, carrying your religion in your dealings with your fellow men, and making your life, and your work, and your business, conform to the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ as laid down by him. That is what he meant. He did not mean that a man who labored in business should cheat his neighbor in order to get more money to pay into the church, or oppress his neighbor in order to pay more money into the church.

No, he meant that though you might never accumulate a surplus dollar, that in all of your dealings, they should be such as would be approved of the Master. And he would count this ten times more valuable for the advancement of the gospel of Jesus Christ, than you can do by giving of your substance if you have to spare or consecration of money or of means for the work of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Ten times more will the example that you set impress your fellow men than if you had endeavored, as the poet says, to "buy salvation by the giving of the means God may have blessed you with."

Salvation is not begged nor bought,

Too long this selfish thought sufficed:

Too long men reeked with lawless thought

And leaned upon a tortured Christ.

So I believe in the statement made here that we are to prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and widely as we may; that all are called according to the gifts of God unto them; that some are endowed with the power and faculty to obtain and accumulate the things of this life; and

I say accumulate all that you can honestly. God demands it of you. I believe that he demands that every man that has the power to accumulate the things of this life shall exercise this faculty, as much as I believe that I should exercise my faculty in preaching the gospel. I must exercise my faculties in preaching the gospel. You should exercise your energies to God's honor and glory, and the advancement of the cause of Christ.

Should your talents only reach so far as to accumulate those things that are necessary for the keeping of your loved ones that depend upon you, be an honorable man, and so sustain the gospel of Jesus Christ, and cause others to see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

So the preacher is not the only one who should work for the advancement of the gospel of Jesus Christ in this world. Everyone who comes into the kingdom and fold of God has his or her place to fill in the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

TO CONCLUDE

I do not know that I could conclude this sermon any better than by reading to you a little poem that I have here. It is called "The easiest way," written by J. W. Foley. I took it from the Saturday Evening Post:

If you, the grocer, readjust your scales
To give full sixteen ounces to the pound;
And you, the lawyer, scorn the fairy-tales
You tell to win the case you know unsound;
If you, the doctor, frown on quackeries
And strive your best to practice as you frown—
Then we shall need few far-sought remedies
To better the conditions here in town.

If you, the statesman, quit your noisy rant,
And be one half the man you claim to be;
And you, the preacher, cast away the cant
And empty creed, and need Christ's "Follow me";
If you, the loafer, will go back to work
And be a bee and not a useless drone;
And you, the laborer, will strive, not shirk—
I think we'll solve our troubles all alone.

If you, the orator, will give us deeds
To thicken up the gruel of your speech;
And you, the gardner, will pull the weeds
And cleanse your field as far as you can reach;
If you, the milkman, gives us honest milk
And leave the added water in the well;
And you, the agitator, and your ilk,
Will toil, not talk—we'll have few woes to tell.

If you, the voter, will be just as clean
As you think every government should be;
And you, the officeholder, make the scene
Of your activities a joy to see;
If you, the citizen, by every act
Will prove your loyalty to civic good—
Our ills will be in dreams much more that fact,
And our Country will be nearly what it should.

If you, the man, will strive to reach the plane
You claim you want the nation rested on;
And you, the dreamer, wake up now and gain
A place in the procession ere its gone;
If you, just you, remember, cast the beam
From out your eye—I pledge it, signed and sealed,
This life of ours would be one blessed dream,
And all the ills we suffer would be healed.

CONCERNING ZION--PART 5

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

THE INHABITANTS OF ZION

Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.—Revelation 22: 14.

In that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah; We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks. Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in.—Isaiah 26: 1, 2.

It will be readily observed that the inhabitants of a city are its chief consideration; so when we think or speak of the city of Zion we must also think of the inhabitants of Zion. We have heretofore spoken of the city, and we now wish to consider for a few minutes the kind of people that shall occupy this pure city. The revelation of Saint John says they shall be those who do his commandments who shall enter through the gates and have access to the tree of life. Notice carefully: it is not those who profess, but those who do. Doing, then, is the word upon which we are to place special emphasis. In the past we have been content to observe the formal, conventional, or the ritualistic part of the law; but we have often woefully neglected the real spirit of it.

Our second text says it is a righteous nation that keepeth the truth, that is to be permitted to enter into that city. Men and women of truth then, are to inhabit Zion. There can be no mistake in this matter: the important thing is to keep the truth, and do the commandments.

As we dwell upon this thought, permit me to direct your attention to one other thought contained in our text, viz, "Salvation will God appoint for walls." The old Jerusalem was a walled city. The stone wall surrounding it was intended to be a protection to its inhabitants; but this new city, the city of holiness, is to have walls, not of stone, but of salvation. I desire to draw especial attention to this fact. It is salvation that will protect the inhabitants of Zion. Material walls amount to nothing.

Salvation means infinitely more than we are often aware of. It does not mean an asylum into which we may enter in order to find personal protection against outer conditions; but it does mean all the word implies in affecting an inner condition that will save us from ourselves, from our own littleness of soul, our narrowness of vision, our selfishness and our animosity. It is those who are surrounded by a wall of this kind that will be permitted to dwell in Zion. It is the spirit of love and divine goodness that presents itself in a perfectly rounded and developed life that is the crown of being, and the chief end of wisdom and knowledge upon earth, and hence which fits men and women for Zion. The man or the woman who lives a life of truth is the one who has truly found shelter within the walls of salvation that are to surround the city of Zion. Remember, it is only the righteous nation who keep the truth that will be permitted to enter through the gates and pass within the walls of salvation that are to surround the true city.

So long as men commit sin they are servants of that sin, and if servants, then in bondage. The only wall that can protect the inhabitants of Zion is that which has power to lift men out of sin and thus save their lives for better and nobler purposes. It is the righteousness of the lives of the inhabitants of Zion that will protect them against all that is evil or destructive in its nature.

Reader, what is your conception of salvation? Does it mean to you the developing of a pure life and a noble character? that will admit of nothing but the purest in thought, word, action and habit? Or does it mean to you merely the observing of external rites, that cannot change the heart or bring the comer thereunto to perfection? The wall surrounding Zion is a salvation that saves men from wrong thoughts, lives and habits. James Allen asks:

You say that you have tasted of salvation in the love of Christ. Are you saved from your temper, your irritability, your vanity, your personal dislikes, your judgment and condemnation of others? If not, from what are you saved, and wherein have you realized the transforming love of Christ?

He who is not surrounded by this kind of salvation cannot have a part or place in the city of Zion. It requires a new heart and a new mind, and hence a renewed life, to fit men to become the inhabitants of the land of Zion. The life essential for the inhabitants of this city is described most beautifully in the following words of James Allen:

He who has realized the love that is divine has become a new man, and has ceased to be swayed and dominated by the old elements of self. He is known for his patience, his purity, and his unalterable sweetness.

The inhabitants, then, of this city must be, "a righteous nation that keeps the truth." Jesus says: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Therefore, before we can keep the truth we must know the truth; to know is to become conscious of, and to become conscious of, is a possibility of possession. If our lives therefore, are made up of truth and virtue, we will be competent to inhabit the pure city. What we profess counts but little; it is the life we live, the character we manifest, that is of paramount importance.

James Allen describes it thus:

Men formulate perishable dogmas, and call them truth. Truth cannot be formulated; it is ineffable, and ever beyond the reach of intellect. It can only be experienced by practice; it can only be manifested as a stainless heart and a perfect life.

Who, then, in the midst of the ceaseless pandemonium of schools and creeds and parties, has the truth? He who lives it. He who practices it. He who, having risen above that pandemonium by overcoming himself, no longer engages in it, but sits apart, quiet, subdued, calm, and self possessed, freed from all strife, all bias, all condemnation, and bestows upon all the glad and unselfish love of the divine within him.

He who is patient, calm, gentle, and forgiving under all circumstances, manifests the truth. Truth will never be proved by wordy arguments and learned treatises, for if men do not perceive the truth in infinite patience, undying forgiveness, and all embracing compassion, no words can ever prove it to them.

It is the soul thus overcoming and thus growing a divine life and stainless character, that will be permitted to dwell in the city or land of Zion.

The inhabitants of Zion are to be a peaceful people. It has been declared by the voice of inspiration that they shall be the only people that will not take up the sword against their neighbor. This suggests more than peace keepers, it suggests peacemakers; and it is such that shall possess the kingdom of heaven.

The supreme reason why the people of Zion will not take up arms against others is because they have already taken up arms against self, and have completely conquered selfishness. Let men learn to love truth, and they will forsake error; let them love peace, and they will not stir up strife; let them love justice, and they will not practice oppression. Love is the law, "he who loveth is born of God"; and he who is God's son in the true sense will not injure his fellow men, for he shall be a brother unto all mankind.

We often sing: "O Zion, lovely Zion, thou city of the faithful," but we often fail to sense the real meaning of "faithful." It means the renewing of our lives, the forsaking of our perishable theories, and the accepting of the unadulterated truth.

Says James Allen:

Let men, therefore, cease from vain and passionate arguments about truth, and let them think and say and do those things which make for harmony, peace, love, and good will. Let them practice heart virtue, and search humbly and diligently for the truth which frees the soul from all error and sin, from all that blights the human heart, and that darkens, as with unending night, the pathway of the wandering souls of earth.

It is this inner truth and virtue that will enable us to be numbered with the righteous nation, that will be worthy to enter in through the gates into the heavenly city.

Take courage then, my brother, be strong for the right, and in the language of William Shakespeare, remember that God's goodness hath been great unto thee; let never day or night unhallowed pass; but still remember what the Lord hath done.

My next will be, "The social condition of Zion."

Of General Interest

INFERIOR AND SUPERIOR RACES

There is only room for one race, one group, and finally one individual to be superior, if superiority consists in holding a place on top with everyone else somewhere between that place and the bottom. On the other hand, there is opportunity for almost everyone to be superior if superiority consists in performing some kind of useful service in an exceptional manner. Almost every race and almost every individual possesses some gifts that make it or him exceptional. There is almost certain to be some directions in which an individual or a race may be of greater service than in others. To seek and find that place is to be successful. To fill that place in an exceptional way is to be superior. . . .

What we should strive to do, to put it simply and squarely, is contribute our part toward bringing into existence a civilization in which superiority is based on service and not contribute more than we have to maintain a civilization in which superiority is based on force. We should look forward to a civilization based on racial peace rather than one based on racial war and racial subjugation. . . .

However, it will be a long time before the little brown people of the world will be in a position to enforce their claims in this way. The black people of Africa may never be in that position.

Meanwhile it is well to remember a very large part of the actual progress of the world in the past has been made by the farmer and the mechanic, those who reap and those who build, rather than by the soldier with his implements of destruction. Thrift, industry, and patience are still the staples of human progress, and the peculiarity about them is this, that, while they may belong separately to individuals or races, they are counted as part of the common capital because while they make no man's life poorer they make the whole world richer.—Booker T. Washington, in the April, 1915, number of The North American Review.

IMMIGRATION AFTER THE WAR

[The following from the Current Opinion for December, 1915, is reproduced here as much for the information given with reference to the problems before European countries as suggesting the probable problem before America. Our people are directed to obtain a knowledge of history, of countries, and of peoples, and the history of a people or country is at no time more interesting than in the making. Incidentally, it may be suggested that the shifting of social conditions and the many long years of economic burden facing nations now at war will in all probability be counted among the things making necessary a Zion, or a place of refuge, for the Saints who may have the inclination and for whom it may be possible to flee thereunto.—EDITORS.]

More people have left America in the last ten months than have entered it. The tide of immigration has turned. It has fallen to one sixth of the prevalent net rate of six to seven hundred thousand incoming foreigners yearly, mostly from Italy, Austria-Hungary, Russia and the Balkan States. But when the European war is over may we not be faced with the most serious immigration problem that has ever confronted us? This is the question raised by Frederick C. Howe, commissioner of immigration at the port of New York, in Scribner's Magazine. Think of the size and confusing elements in the problem:

A population four times that of the United States is in a state of industrial and social chaos. The old order can never be reestablished. Millions of men are in movement, and tens of millions more are destitute, disabled, and close to poverty. Millions will never take up their old life again. Millions more will be unable to do so. Women and children will be a burden, and taxation and public needs will tax the resources of the nation to the limit. National boundaries may change. Some countries may never emerge from the war. Great stretches may become barren waste.

Under such conditions as these all Europe may turn wistful glances to a country that is free from war and the hazards of war; to a land of political liberty and low taxation; and millions in Europe may clamor at the ports of embarkation in the hope of a new chance in a new world.

Against the physically unfit, criminals and those likely to become a public charge, Mr. Howe asserts that legislation appears to have been adequate. In 1914 16,588 persons, or 1.64 per cent, were denied admission. Decisions against those who come in hope of an asylum are likely to be greatly increased. But the test will come if Europe fails to find work for its people and its millions of returning soldiers after the war. And the pressure of sympathy and the profound desire on the part of foreign and racial stocks in this composite country to help in rehabilitation will complicate the problem.

Germany, the most socialized state in the modern world, may be counted upon to permit as few of her people to emigrate as possible. The war has also socialized Great Britain, so that she will not go back to the individualism of former days. Similar tendencies in France and other European countries are by-products of the war. The loss of six to ten million men in war will create a labor vacuum to be filled and doubtless raise wages possibly approaching the American level. But those so kept at home constitute desirable immigrant classes, from the United States' point of view.

It is in the other forces likely to drive people to this country that Commissioner Howe sees cause for anxiety. Six to ten million widows or dependent women, twice as many children bereft of providers and in many cases of homes, make up an immense burden not wanted by any of the contending nations during the period of reconstruction. Moreover, these women and children have friends and relatives in the United States to whom they will extend appealing arms. Russia, Austria-Hungary, Poland, Italy and the Balkans are not so efficiently organized as Germany, England and France, and in them the ravages of war have brought terrible desolation. Jewish immigration from the eastern war zone with its outrages will be stimulated more than ever before and will be assisted by the organized agencies in this country.

The immigration of women and children will also undoubtedly reach large proportions. This change is already manifest. They, too, will be assisted to come. Not by foreign government seeking to dump their undesirables, but by relatives in this country who send money, who write about conditions in America, who lure old neighbors by stories of high wages, improved social and political conditions, by tales of achievement on the part of their children, and who advance the cost of transportation and sufficient "show-money" to enable the alien to pass the immigration inspector. From seventy to eighty per cent of the immigration from the south of Europe is probably assisted in this way, and fully eighty per cent of the incoming immigrants are ticketed to some friend in this country, who "grub-stakes" them, finds employment, and cares for them until they secure a footing.

Among other factors in the situation Mr. Howe foresees in the fifteen to twenty million men taken from work to war an experience which will breed a restless, roving disinclination to return to the old humdrum life, a kind of freedom and resourcefulness, in fact a change of psychology in all Europe. Add to these the crippled, weakened and enfeebled men, many of whom have friends or relatives in America. Will conquering or defeated nations absorb men under a foreign flag or will they be thrown adrift? How powerful will be the expelling force developed by the added burden of war debt and taxation, which was at the limit of endurance in one half of Europe before the war? After exhaustion by military service, will exhaustion by tax service be insupportable? Indeed it would seem to be difficult to exaggerate the complications or importance of the immigration problem ahead of us.

What shall we do about it? asks Commissioner Howe: How shall we face this human appeal, the most pathetic that has ever confronted us; an appeal, too, that will be repeated from among the 13,000,000 foreign-born already in America and the 18,000,000 immediate descendants of those of foreign birth? Shall we tighten our laws and close our doors to those who, for three centuries, have found an asylum from religious and political oppression? or shall our traditional policy of an open door to the fit and able-bodied be maintained?

Beauty lives with kindness.—Shakespeare.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS,

The Children's Home

We have from time to time written and admitted to this column statements reflecting credit upon those who have had the care of this institution. We hope none will mistake the intended meaning of these statements. The compliments to one were not intended by comparison to reflect upon another. This has not been the intention in anything we have written, nor have we understood anything written by others to have that purpose. To contrast one time with a former time is not intended to reflect on anyone.

We are learning by experience, and we hope, improving. We think there has been a gradual development ever since the home was opened, and every day should be better than the last without reference to who has occupied. We heard one gentleman commenting with approbation upon the improved appearance of the barn, the silo, the stock, and the basement. We were encouraged to hear this but did not think it was a reflection on anyone.

The boys who were complimented for the neatness and thoroughness of their work did not learn this in a day or a week or a month, nor necessarily from one person alone. It may be the result of long training in which several persons had a part and in which all should rejoice.

The ability of the girls at the home to cook, sew, embroider and otherwise make themselves useful may be the result of long training, and the fact that their efficiency is coming more prominently into notice reflects credit upon all who have contributed to this end.

This is the principle running all through our gospel work. We all build upon the foundation laid by others and should profit by their examples. Many an elder has done hard, wise and earnest labor in a neighborhood without any visible results. He has perhaps gone away feeling discouraged, and fearing that his labor was lost. Another comes along and reaps the harvest by gathering souls into the fold. The last might have failed had it not been for the work of his predecessor. Should not both rejoice together, conscious of the truth of the principle expressed by Paul?

"I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase.

So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase. Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one; and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor. For we are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building. According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise master builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon."

Conditions, at least in some respects, are improving in the Children's Home. Shall we not all rejoice in this, and be permitted to express our thankfulness and also to bestow praise when and where we think praise is due without exciting jealousy, or being accused of reflecting upon others?

Surely our divine Master will approve of every humble effort and motive that has been exercised to bring about these happy results, already becoming apparent, whether in the sowing of the seed or the reaping of the harvest.

The trustees have doubtless erred and may err again and again. We are doing all we can to encourage and help those who are working with us. While we hold in grateful remembrance the good done by those who have before associated with us, we hope that our successors will see better conditions obtain than we have realized.

Should this be the happy result, we hope to be able to rejoice in their success and to be entitled to some reward for what we are trying to contribute; but should we live to see them fail, we would feel remorse to think that our work had not been of a character to insure their success.

Let us all "labor together with God," in this and every other good work intrusted to our care.

We have no fault to urge. Saints and friends have done nobly, and in the hands of such devoted and unselfish friends as have supported the Children's Home and with the approval and help of God, no cause can fail.

Coming Event

"There is something marvelous in music. I might almost say it is, in itself, a marvel. Its position is somewhere between the region of thought and that of phenomena; a glimmering between mind and matter, related to both and yet differing from either. Spiritual, and yet requiring rhythm; material, and yet independent of space."—H. Heine.

It is with pleasure we present to our readers this month an issue devoted to announcements and articles from the pen of our church chorister, Brother Hoxie. His fine enthusiasm breathes in every word of his communications, and the singers and musicians of the church which shall assemble next month in Independence should respond to that enthusiasm in full measure. It is a joy to work under a leader whose interest is as unbounded as his capacity for labor, and such an one deserves the very best and most loyal support of those who will be under his direction.

Combining voices from everywhere, in a work as stupendous as the "Messiah" oratorio, with only the short and hurried snatches of rehearsal left in the busy conference season, is a task great enough to try the strength and courage of any but the most indomitable. However, with loyal, enthusiastic, faithful support from the singers who have been preparing for just this service, he can surely spell success. In this case, after a careful study of the great work to be presented, we should feel the inspiration of the message to be delivered, and should be thoroughly imbued with its spirituality and significance, and thus be able to the more fully and completely "sing with the understanding."

Annual Greeting

We can appropriately begin our annual greeting by saying that this message is virtually from the firing line. Almost every mail brings inquiries, while the reports of our district choristers and leading spirits show that the interest in the choir movement is keener by far than any year since its inauguration. And now we are upon the eve of another General Conference. How the weeks and months have flown! Of course if you have been waiting for conference the time has dragged heavily, but if you have been preparing for service in that wonderful gathering of singers then the time is going much too quickly. And by the way, have you looked over your anthem series to see if they are in good condition? We will probably need them all, from 1913 to our present issue. We had a good time learning them, and it will be a pleasure for us all to review the most interesting of the collection. Look them over before you come—and by the way, are you coming? Possibly you haven't made up your mind fully just yet, but remember that sometimes it only takes but one or two to influence and enthuse many others. This year will bring from all parts of the country the largest aggregation of directors, singers and individuals that we have ever known, and no one can afford to miss these never-to-be-forgotten associations.

Much has been said about preparation. Do we need to linger here and insert our plea, or shall we be content with the big thought of our assistant director, Brother Bell, who in a recent letter spoke in glowing terms of the enthusiasm of the Independence Choir and singers in the vicinity, who have responded to the cause and are "working with a will, ready to do their individual best, right from the very opening tap of the baton"? We felt a warmth and a pride and an added sense of responsibility, too! Rest assured we are expecting much of our singers—more than ever. And you know that the success of our work this year will create a new vision of our greater possibilities.

Perhaps our greatest interest lies in the oratorio. We could not have selected a greater work—nor, we hope, a more opportune time to present it. Two of our Eastern renditions will be over by the time this goes to press and we hope to chronicle the results in a later issue, but will mention in passing, that in all my experience we have never seen greater enthusiasm in preparation for a work of this character. It has required the usual round of tedious, painstaking work, but the results more than justify the means. The same reports drift in from some parts of the West—with some yet to hear from, but the writer feels sure that by April 15—which is the tentative date for the first of the two or three performances at conference—we will feel that our great effort is not in vain. This is not all, however, for we are arranging an institute, or a series of topics, for discussion pertaining to our work. Bring your notebooks—and suggestions for our consideration. This work is one which we desire to inaugurate in every district, with an end in view of getting the Saints in touch with the work we are endeavoring to accomplish.

The orchestral feature, too, will come in for a share of the discussion. So the instrumental players will feel that we are at last turning our attention to their part in the work. It will be a busy time for us all, yet we hope to have the work so well organized that no confusion will occur.

The few announcements in the letter will help to avoid misunderstanding. Follow them carefully. It will be a wonderful privilege to be associated with you again, and we hope to be able to give you an idea of the progress of our work when we next meet. And by the way, lest we forget, a great big part of our preparation is prayer. Keep in touch with the Spirit of the living God, and the outcome of our work no one will have to fear.

Until I see you, God be with you,

Yours,

ALBERT N. HOXIE.

"The Messiah"

"The Messiah" represents the ripened product of Handel's genius, and reflects the noblest aspirations and most exalted devotion of mankind. Among all his oratorios it retains its original freshness, vigor, and beauty in the highest degree, in that it appeals to the loftiest sentiment and to universal religious devotion, and is based upon the most harmonious, symmetrical, and enduring forms of the art. It was begun on August 22, 1741, and finished September 14. It is an illustration of Handel's almost superhuman capacity for work, that at the age of 56 he should have written his masterpiece in twenty-three days. The text was taken from the literal words of Scripture, and the libretto arranged by Charles Jennens, who, singularly enough, was not satisfied with the music which has satisfied the world. The first public performance took place April 12, 1742. "The Messiah" was performed thirty-four times during the life of the composer, but never upon a scale commensurate with its merits until the Handel commemoration at Westminster Abbey in 1784, when the largest choir and band that had ever assembled before, with the renowned Madam Mara at the head of the soloists, first gave the oratorio to the world in accordance with the grand ideal of the composer.

The oratorio is divided into three parts. The first illustrates the longing of the world for the Messiah, prophesies his coming, and announces his birth; the second part is devoted to the sufferings, death and exaltation of Christ, and develops the spread and ultimate triumph of the gospel; while the third part is occupied with the declaration of the highest truths of doctrine,—faith in the existence of God, the surety of immortal life, the resurrection, and the attainment of an eternity of happiness.

The first part opens with an overture, or rather orchestral prelude, of majestic chords, leading to a short fugue, developed with severe simplicity and preparing the way for the accompanied recitative ("Comfort ye my people"), and the aria for tenor ("Every valley shall be exalted"), which in turn leads to the full, strong chorus ("And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed"), the three numbers in reality forming one. The prophecy is announced, only to be followed by the human apprehension in the great aria for bass ("But who may abide the day of his coming?"), a fugued chorus closing in simple harmony. Once more the prophet announces "Behold, a virgin shall conceive," followed by the alto solo ("O thou that tellest") which preludes a chorus in the same tempo. The next aria ("The people that walked in darkness"), with its curious but characteristic modulations leads to one of the most graphic fugued choruses in the whole work ("For unto us a child is born,") elegantly interwoven with the violin parts, and emphasized with sublime announcements of the names of the Messiah in full and beautiful harmony and with the strongest choral power. The grand burst of sound dies away, there is a significant pause, and then follows a short but exquisite pastoral symphony for the strings, which with the four succeeding bits of recitative tells the message of the angels to the shepherds on the plains of Bethlehem. Suddenly follows the chorus of the heavenly hosts, "Glory to God," which is remarkably expressive, and affords sharp contrasts in the successive clear responses to the fugue. The difficult but very brilliant aria for soprano "Rejoice greatly," the lovely aria, "He shall feed his flock," originally written entire for soprano, in which Handel returns again to the pastoral style, and a short chorus "His yoke is easy," close the first part.

The second part is the most impressive portion of the work. It begins with a majestic and solemn chorus "Behold the Lamb of God," which is followed by the aria for alto "He was despised," one of the most pathetic and deeply expressive songs ever written, in which the very keynote of sorrow is struck. Two choruses, "Surely he hath borne our griefs," rather intricate in harmony, and "With his stripes we are healed," a fugued chorus written a capella upon an admirable subject, lead to the spirited and thoroughly interesting chorus, "All we like sheep have gone astray," closing with an adagio of great beauty, "And the Lord hath laid on him the inquiry of us all." This is followed by several short numbers, "He trusteth in God," the accompanied recitative, "Thy rebuke hath broken his heart," a short but very pathetic aria for tenor, "Behold and see if there be any sorrow," and an aria for soprano, "But thou didst not leave his soul in hell," all of which are remarkable instances of the musical expression of sorrow and pity.

These numbers lead to a triumphal in the chorus and semichoruses "Lift up your heards, O ye gates!" which reach a climax of magnificent power and strongly contrasted effects. After the chorus, "Let all the angels of God worship him," a fugue constructed upon two subjects, the aria, "Thou art gone up on high," and the chorus, "The Lord gave the word," we reach another pastoral aria of great beauty "How beautiful are the feet!" This is followed by a powerful descriptive chorus "Their sound is gone out into all lands," a massive aria for bass "Why do the nations," the chorus "Let us break their bonds asunder," and the aria "Thou shalt break them," leading directly to the great "Hallelujah chorus," which is the triumph of the work and its real climax. It opens with exultant shouts of "Hallelujah." Then ensue three simple phrases, the middle one in plain counterpoint, which form the groundwork for the "Hallelujah." These phrases, seemingly growing out of one another and reiterated with constantly increasing power, interweaving with and sustaining the "Hallelujah" with wonderful harmonic effects, make up a chorus that has never been excelled, not only in musical skill, but also in grandeur and sublimity. After listening to its performance, one can understand Handel's words: "I did think I did see all heaven before me, and the great God himself." This number closes the second part. It is worthy of note in this connection that when the oratorio was first performed at Convent Garden, London, in 1743, the whole audience, with the king at its head, arose during the singing of the "Hallelujah" and remained standing until it was finished,—a custom which is still observed, not only in England but also in the United States.

Had the oratorio closed at this point, the unities would have been preserved, but Handel carried it into a third part with undiminished interest, opening it with that sublime confession of faith "I know that my Redeemer liveth." It is followed by two quartets in plain counterpoint with the choral responses, "Since by man came death" and "For as in Adam all die," in which the effects of contrast are very forcibly brought out. The last important aria in the work "The trumpet shall sound," for bass with trumpet obligato, will always be admired for its beauty and stirring effect. The oratorio closes with three choruses, all in the same key and of the same general sentiment, "Worthy is the Lamb," a piece of smooth, flowing harmony; "Blessing and honor," a fugue by the sopranos and altos on the octave, closing with full harmony on the words "forever and ever" several times reiterated; and the final, "Amen" chorus, which is treated in the severest style, and in which the composer evidently gave free rein to his genius, not being hampered with the trammels of words.

Other oratorios may be compared one with another; "The Messiah" stands alone, a majestic monument to the memory of the immortal composer, an imperishable record of the noblest sentiments of human nature and the highest aspirations of man.

*Note. Owing to the length of the oratorio a number of the solos and choruses have been omitted to bring the rendition within a two-hour period. Selections to be used are noted by a star.

Programs for Music Institute Sessions

(Subject to change, and time and place to be announced later.)

FIRST SESSION

Theme: The choir; "As we see ourselves."

1. "From the director's stand; What should a leader expect from his choir?" Seven-minute papers by P. N. Craig, Omaha, and H. C. Burgess, Lamoni. Discussion led by E. C. Bell, Saint Louis.

2. "From the organ bench; how much responsibility rests upon the accompanist?" Seven-minute papers by R. G. Smith, Independence, and Mrs. Jeannette Craig, Omaha. Discussion led by Mrs. Belle James, Kansas City.

3. "From the choir loft; should the individual consecration of the choir member equal that of the director?" Seven-minute papers by M. H. Siegfried, Independence, and Mrs. Louise Robinson, Kansas City. Discussion led by Mrs. Anna DeJong Smith, Saint Louis.

SECOND SESSION

Theme. The choir, "As others see us!"

1. "From the pulpit; what place has the choir in church services?" Seven-minute papers by F. G. Pitt, San Francisco; S. W. L. Scott, Coldwater, Michigan; and W. W. Smith, Philadelphia.

2. "From the congregation; how does 'special' music impress the listener?" Seven-minute papers by A. E. McKim, Excelsior Springs, Missouri; Mrs. Miola Short, Independence; and Mrs. Florence McNichols, Kansas City.

3. "From the missionary standpoint; does music attract the nonmember?" Seven-minute papers by R. C. Evans, London, Ontario; J. A. Dowker, Lincoln, Nebraska; and H. E. Moler, Holden, Missouri.

THIRD SESSION

Theme: Our combined interests.

1. "The combined choir; is the district choir a practical and beneficial thing?" Seven-minute papers by W. L. Christy, Saint Louis; and Mrs. May Skinner, Lamoni. Discussion led by Mr. Bell.

2. "The combined orchestra movement; is the outlook for combined orchestras an encouraging one?" Seven-minute papers by A. H. Mills, Independence; and J. H. Anthony, Lamoni. Discussion led by Mr. Hoxie.

Should there be demand for further sessions provision will be made, at which times other phases of our music work may be taken up, such as the children's chorus work, the local orchestras and their difficulties, the subject of community music, which is becoming one of the powerful assets in welfare work, etc.

COMMITTEE.

Announcements

Help to properly organize our work for conference by cooperating with us. Upon your arrival, even if you are visiting for the day or week end only, take time to meet the general chorister and his assistants. We will find a place for you in the chorus provided you have made a study of the anthem work. We wish to meet you anyway, and put you in touch with the next year's work.

Yes, ladies, white dresses for special occasions; thank you! And, gentlemen, white ties, just for the sake of uniformity.

Remember our rehearsals on anthem work and "The Messiah" follows every service. Special rehearsals will be announced on the bulletin.

Anthem books, all series, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916. We will require them all. Also the services of several willing, able-bodied, punctual men, who will assist the local librarian in collecting and distributing books, arranging seats, etc. We will, in fact, have several important positions to offer when we arrive. We cannot at the present time announce the time and place of the institute work, but this will be arranged for, and the program will be of unusual interest to music lovers and general choir movement enthusiasts.

And don't forget the choir slogan, "All in favor hurry up!"

ALBERT N. HOXIE.

"The Messiah" in Philadelphia

Sunday, March 5, was a climax day in the history of the Philadelphia choir. On that day they brought to a brilliant culmination the result of many months work, when they sang "The Messiah." For a week the Saints and the choir were preparing for the event. Revival services opened on Sunday, February 27, with a house full of visitors, and a choir that sang beautifully. During the week in the absence of Brother Hoxie, the choir members sat in the audience and assisted the spirited congregational singing, under the leadership of Brother Hale W. Smith, pastor of the Second Philadelphia Church. The attendance increased each night. Many who are not of our faith were there. Some of our friends volunteered to sing solos for us, and we were glad to have them do so. On Friday night the church was practically full, the Saints were rejoicing and looking forward to the Sunday services.

On Saturday some of the Saints from Elk Mills, Maryland, came to town, and later in the day seventeen from Brooklyn, including Sister Ethel Kinnaman, of whose wonderful talent we are so justly proud. At six o'clock one hundred and ten choir members, and visiting guests sat down to a banquet together. The basement had been decorated for the occasion. A corps of sisters, under the direction of Brother and Sister Arthur Moulton had prepared and all was in readiness. The place cards bore a few measures of "March on," a hymn set to an adaptation of the "Pilgrim's chorus." This hymn was the first piece of music that Brother Hoxie gave the Philadelphia choir. "March on" has been the slogan of our choir, as they have sung triumphantly, from the simple hymn onward through anthems and cantatas to the glorious oratorio, "The Messiah."

At a suitable place in the banqueting, the choir stood and sang "March on." After that we had the pleasure of hearing an inspiring address by Mr. Percy Hemus, one of the country's foremost baritones, who has encouraged and sympathized with Brother Hoxie's efforts since the inception of the general choir movement. He spoke briefly of Handel's life, dwelling upon his determination to conquer. He praised Brother Hoxie's work unstintedly, and he commended him in these words, "I marvel at his unselfishness. He is the most sincere and unselfish man I have ever known." He ended by having the entire company give Brother Albert three cheers of "Success! Success! Success!" He did more than that—he reminded us that Sister Hoxie had been constantly his helper and inspiration, and we gave her three successes, which left her speechless, although she blushed as beautifully as she used to in her high school days, and bowed her thanks. Mr. Hemus was followed by Brother Walter W. Smith, our pastor, who spoke briefly of Handel's oratorio, and finished by a speech of presentation, the climax of which was a huge basket of flowers, carried forward by little Clara Feldmeth who said, "Mr. Hoxie, these flowers are from the members of the Philadelphia choir." Brother Albert admitted that he was completely "flabbergasted," and made a speech that was entirely too modest, sounded as if there were tears in his eyes.

The banquet ended with a practice. That sounds somewhat prosaic, but it was quite a necessary conclusion. Most of our visitors came to Sunday school at 9.30, and the church was full for the inspiring sacrament service that followed.

In the evening the doors were opened at 7 o'clock, and at 7.30 people were standing in the aisles and in the back of the church while many were turned away. Promptly at 7.45 the augmented choir and the soloists, Miss Adelaide Fischer, Miss Ethel Kinnaman, Mr. Gilbert Wilson, and Mr. John Price, all of New York City, took their places before us. "Yes we trust the day is breaking," was sung by the choir and congregation with much spirit. After the invocation Brother Walter Smith spoke briefly of the oratorio about to be sung. And then the tenor, Mr. Price sang in his sympathetic voice "Comfort ye my people." From the minute he began we were entranced. The choir seemed to gain inspiration by the presence of such an eager, enthusiastic audience, and sang as they have never sung before, surely with the Spirit and the understanding. Some of us have attended their rehearsals and listened with great interest to the growing perfection of the choruses, but we scarcely dared dream of such a smooth, sympathetic and perfect rendition. We held our breath when they began the first chorus, and we could have wept for joy when they finished with such sweetness and symmetrical harmonious beauty.

The soloists were inspired too, not only by the audience, but by the splendid chorus. It is possible that they had not expected such work from a mere church choir. They arose to the occasion. Mr. Price's "Comfort ye," was soothing and sympathetic. Mr. Wilson of Century Opera Company fame, sang, "Why do the nations so furiously rage together?" with great dramatic power and sustained quality. Miss Fischer who was one of the soloists in the famous Mahler symphony which was rendered in Philadelphia March 2, 3, and 4, was unusually pleasing in her numbers. It is rare indeed to hear one sing so artistically as she did. She reached her climax in "I know that my Redeemer liveth," for the adaptation of this aria in our hymnals is one of the most loved hymns of the Philadelphia Saints, and they rejoiced in hearing the beautiful aria so wonderfully sung. Sister Ethel Kinnaman said, "Wasn't the chorus wonderful?" But her generous question did not make us forget her splendid part. Her popular solo, "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd" was beautifully sung and brought comfort to the hearts of her hearers; but when she sang "He was despised and rejected" the sympathetic sweetness of her voice, the touching words melted our hearts, and love for the lowly and loving Son of Man thrilled us.

After that exciting first chorus was safely over, we could listen in security. The choruses were each more wonderful and more beautiful than the one before. The great climax came when the choir began the Hallelujah chorus. At the words, "For the Lord God omnipotent reigneth," the whole audience (emulating that English king who could not sit when those words were sung) rose to their feet. Ian MacLaren makes one of his characters say that the word "grand" should be saved for the twenty-first chapter of Revelation, but I am sure if he had heard the hallelujah chorus, as sung by the combined choir and the soloists, he would have allowed us to use the word.

Thank you, Brother Hoxie, for your patience, your careful preparation, and your generous consecration of yourself in this way. Thank you, Sister Clara and Mr. Estelle, for your accurate, painstaking, inspiring accompaniments. Thank you, Sister Ethel and friend soloists, for giving of your greatness to us. Thank you, visiting singers, for coming to us at this time and mingling your voices with ours. Thank you, dear Philadelphia choir, for your many hours of faithful, self-sacrificing practice—you have given us one of the happiest memories of our lives. The sweetness, the joy, the gentle spirit of it all has been in our hearts throughout the week, and it will remain through the years to come. You who have labored and practiced so long to sing "The Messiah" that you can never again be satisfied with inferior music. Your tastes, your desires, your very lives will be changed by this glorious experience.

March on, oh Philadelphia choir, march on, oh General choir movement! until thousands of Saints shall sing daily about their work, in their hearts, the great music that has been inspired of God, and that adequately expresses our praise to him.

EUNICE WINN SMITH.

Be noble! and the nobleness that lies
In other men, sleeping, but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own.

Concerning the Sabbath

We wish to express our appreciation to those who are responsible for the truth, knowledge, scope, and beauty of your pages, and to offer a thought for those who are interested in coping with the Seventh-day Advent question, and who desire to meet the error with added efficiency.

We would suggest that "Sunday the True Sabbath of God," by Samuel Walter Gamble (I think the price at the Herald Publishing House is one dollar), be obtained. The scriptural arguments are good, and he is the discoverer of the old Jewish calendar, showing that Sabbath, Seventh-day, and Saturday are not synonymous terms, but that the Jewish Sabbaths were fixed events, as immovable as our birthday, Christmas, or the Fourth of July.

His chart is patterned after the Egyptian calendar, and has thirty days to each month, adding three days to their sixth month and two to their twelfth month to complete three hundred and sixty-five days to their year. It is very comprehensive, in its weekly Sabbaths, illustrates annual Sabbaths, jubilees, and shows the remarkable relationship to each other, and that it is impossible that the Sabbath shall fall on Saturday two years in succession, but must fall on each day of the week as the years go around. Also about every twenty-eight years a week was added, which balanced up, the same as our leap year.

Now if you turn to Exodus 23 you will learn that the children of Israel came out of Egypt the 15th day of their month, Abib and after seven Sabbaths were complete, and also on the fiftieth day, "Ye shall offer a new meat offering" (Exodus 23: 5, 6, 15, 21). From verse three we learn that "six days work shall be done" between Sabbaths. The 10th, 14th, and 16th days were permanent labor days in the first month Abib, and could never be Sabbath Days. (Exodus 12: 3, 5, 6, 24, and Leviticus 23: 15).

You now follow the chart counting from Abib 15, the Passover, to Abib 22, 29, Iyar (second month) 6, 13, 20, 27, Sivan (third month) 4 and 5, which is Pentecost and includes two days, remembering "six days shalt thou labor," before another Sabbath arrives.

Now if the Passover, Abib 15, began on Saturday, it will be noticed that after Pentecost all the Sabbaths must fall on Sunday till the end of the year or Tamuz (4th month). Ab. Elul, Tisri, Bul, Chisleu, Tebeth, Shebat, till Adar 26. It was required that they work six days from that date, and to do so two days were added. The first of Abib (about April 5) "Shall be a Sabbath" (Exodus 40: 17, 23), which would occur on Sunday the second year, and continue on that day till Pentecost, when it would change to Monday.

Your brother,

J. W. LEA.

POTTER VALLEY, CALIFORNIA, Box 93, February 6, 1916.

BASEL, SWITZERLAND, October 12, 1915.

Editors Herald: I have just been studying with my husband, Elder Frederick Roos, Brother Columbus Scott's The Christian Sabbath, and corresponding articles in the HERALD. It awakens sad experiences with a goodly number of Seventh-day Adventists, who in former years promised to help me in my work among the poor, which while on the threshold of death I vowed to God I would perform. I engaged these in the sale of my Confidential Communications Towards Preventing Sickness, Poverty, and Revolution, which since 1897 has appeared in six languages.

None of these Adventists of different countries sent in the least farthing of what they took in by the sale of this work. I was told that some of them were found spending the money intended for the poor in a profligate and sinful way. I had come to like very much some Adventists for their earnest searching into the Scriptures, and for the hearty piety they showed, but such sad experiences suffered from those engaged in distributing my work brought me to the conclusion that there must be much wanting in their teaching, else so many could not fail in the first temptation occurring to them. I concluded that there must be much of "money catching" among them, and little care for the truth.

It horrified me when, according to the Bible, I submitted the case to their leaders in several countries, every one of whom, as if they had concerned themselves about the matter, which was not the case, declared that they did not consider this an offense, or sin, and worse, publicly warned their members, as if we had committed the wrong their members had done, probably to prevent my communicating with their branches to tell them the truth.

I have often asked myself what my duty is towards the membership of the Adventist Church. I have thought it might be best for me to go to their meetings and take advantage of every opportunity to show them, by the experiences I have suffered, how much their teaching is lacking, and how far superior is that of the Reorganized Church, in leading its members higher and higher in self-annunciation, in the care of the poor, through the consecration of all for the poor brethren of the Lord, according to the provisions for the Order of Enoch, and so rid the church of all covetousness.

This I can best do on their Sabbath Day. On their last Sabbath I had an opportunity to show several families what a firm stand against covetousness are the consecrations as provided in the Reorganized Church, and how far from perfection is the Adventist teaching. I brought them to earnest thinking, and to inquiring as to whether there were books to be had, presenting the faith of our church. We felt thankful for even this little opportunity to do good among them, and entreat God to lead them higher and higher to the full light of truth.

As the Book of Mormon shows the zeal of repenting sons to bring to the Lamanites the tidings of great joy, so I was filled with a desire to find the children of Israel among us to a belief in Christ, which can best be done on their Sabbath Day, by going to the synagogues in this town. I did this, and after the services one day I began relating to a lady who sat next to me, the discoveries by Joseph Smith in America.

In another Jewish family I was enabled to help in my work among the poor by giving lessons to the children, going with them to the synagogue every Sabbath. I gained the sympathy of some of the rabbis who came to visit the family, especially. One old rabbi asked me to read for him the passages of the Bible announcing the coming of the Messiah. Another, a doctor of the law, explained, "Our people are ashamed before the Christian lady, who knows more of our prophets than do they." When he left the town he said to me, "I shall never in all my life forget what you have told me."

As the Reorganized Church is called to spread the fullness of the everlasting gospel throughout all the world, every member who has been baptized with water and the fire of the Holy Ghost ought to devote all of his time and strength, as well as his means, to that great duty, even if, like the Apostle Paul, he has to work for his daily bread with his hands while sowing the gospel seed, and in doing so sacrifice, if need be, also his rights.

Doing this, we find ourselves in the ranks of the priests and Levites, of whom the Lord said, They worked more on the Sabbath Day than on any other day, and were not judged guilty. We find ourselves in the ranks of those to whom one day is like another. As Paul says, We find ourselves in the ranks of the sons of God. The morning stars, as the Lord said to Job, run their course day by day, glorifying the Lord by their tremendous work one day like unto another.

We find ourselves like Paul: The Holy Ghost commanding every thought, every look, every word, every deed, to partake of love and wisdom, preventing in us every thought which is not of God; every look which is not of love and wisdom; every word which is not of love and wisdom; and every deed not of love and wisdom, making us search our thoughts, looks, words, and deeds.

Thus is love fulfilling the law of Christ in us.

Your sister,

JULIA ROOS.

ASHLAND, WISCONSIN, January 11, 1916.

Editors Herald: The Ashland Saints cannot complain. We are more fortunate than many isolated Saints. We have a priest and his family with us, and are prepared to be organized into a branch at any time the authorities see fit to organize us.

We have among our membership five heads of families, all owning their own homes. Brother Dennis and I are always glad to entertain Saints who come our way. According to Brother Joseph's teachings, we are in "the regions round about," as we can leave here any evening except Sunday and reach Kansas City in less than twenty-four hours.

We have a beautiful location here, on a natural harbor, where we can see from our window four other towns or cities.

If any of the Saints have friends or relatives in this place or any of the surrounding places I would be glad to receive their address or addresses. Your influence by correspondence, and ours by calling, might be the means of bringing them into the kingdom. Many times in my travels I have to wait between trains, and would be very glad to know if there are any Saints at these places. If we could hear from the isolated Saints occasionally through the church papers, giving their addresses, we might tell them of some of our friends or relatives who live near them and who we would like to have them meet.

I have waited some time to get in touch with some of the Detroit Saints. At last I saw a letter with the name and address of the writer. Although they are not isolated, they may be just the ones to do what we want done for relatives and friends who live in that city.

I would like to know if there is anyone in Clare, Clare County, Michigan, who is interested in our church. I have an uncle in College View, Nebraska, and also one in Wallville or Everett, Washington, to whom I have sent the Ensign for a year, and who I would like to have meet some missionary-spirited Saints.

My father and mother are at the Wisconsin Veteran's Home, Waupaca, Wisconsin, and would be glad to meet any of the Saints. I would like to have some one meet them and talk with them concerning the gospel. They are not yet members of the church. While visiting there I found a Mrs. Emily C. Southerland, who said she was baptized by one of our elders at Cadott, Wisconsin, with others. I think she said the elder's name was Grant. This woman had never received a certificate of baptism. She said she was sure this was not a Utah elder, for he talked against polygamy. If anyone can tell me anything about this case I would be glad. This sister and her husband seem to be nice people. I did not have much time to visit with them and they have not answered my correspondence.

We hope some of the missionaries will come and bring some more of the Lord's sheep together in this place. We have a live Sunday school and Religio, but are working under disadvantage for want of a greater working membership.

We enjoyed the reports of Brother and Sister Pitt concerning the exposition at San Francisco.

Ever desiring to be of use in helping to establish righteousness on the earth, I am,
Your sister,
1711 Fifth Street East. MABEL M. DENNIS.

FULTON, IOWA, January 12, 1916.

Editors Herald: The Old Year has now gone into history. Are we as Saints any nearer the standard our dear Savior gave us? Has the last year made us stronger, so we can surmount difficulties easier? or have we lived an easy life, careless in regard to our duties as Saints? Those who have greater light given to them will have more required of them.

Let us resolve this coming year to be more faithful, study God's law more, and set aside those things that have a tendency to draw us away from that which is noble, elevating and holy to things false. I believe we as Saints are given too much to the pleasures and things of the world, and not enough for the furthering of God's work.

We are holding our own here, we think, keeping up our services regularly, but of late there has been so much sickness that our meetings have been reduced.

The missionaries of the Eastern Iowa District have all been here and preached for us in their turn, and we hope some good was done by them.

December 14 I was called to Viola to administer to Sister May Hart, an old Saint who had been thrown out of a buggy and had her hip dislocated. She had then been in bed five weeks, and other complications had set in. The doctor said he could do no more, and wanted them to get some one else. She was administered to, and I read some out of the Bible to those present with her. The Methodist minister was there when I anointed her, and as he left he said to me, "May God bless you in your labor."

Four weeks later I was called to Viola again to preach the funeral sermon of a brother. Sister Hart took dinner with us at the table. So you see the good Lord is still hearing and answering prayers.

It seems too bad to see Saints growing cold and careless; no one to feed them, no one to encourage, to build them up. Some who could do them good are not energetic themselves. Oh, for better shepherds; who are prayerful, living above reproach; shepherds who present God's work, not their own theories, trying to lift the Saints to a higher standard.

I wish to thank the Saints who at the close of the year so freely and faithfully helped financially with their tithes and offerings. I was short a good share of the year, but at the end of the year the Saints did nobly. May the kind Father bless all.
JOHN HEIDE.

MOUNT JULIAN, ONTARIO, January 14, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have been isolated for twelve years where there are no Saints or church privileges. I am lonesome, but though I am alone I have a good deal to be thankful for. The good Shepherd has not forsaken me. I can truthfully say he has stood beside me when the wild beast raged and the storms beat heavily. Suffice me to say that all my life belongs to him. I pray that his loving-kindness will always keep me near the cross, and that I may be numbered with the pure in heart of Zion, with all those who are near and dear to me.

I have had some severe trials in life, the greatest of which seemed the parting with my dear mother, who has been a faithful Saint, and who departed this life the last day of May, 1915. We miss her, oh, so much. Still God doeth all things well. Our loss is her gain, and we would not call her back into this cruel world. If only we can live to be as faithful in the discharge of duty until we shall be called to resign our work here, we shall depart in peace, as did our dear mother, to enter the celestial glory, which is the glory of the sun.

May God hasten the time when Zion shall be redeemed, and those who mourn shall be comforted. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be faithful, and set an example before my children, and by the grace of God teach them to do good, and some day see them brought into the ark of safety.

I received a letter from dear Sister Leader, of Port Elgin, and also one from Sister Ida Jensen, Honey Creek, Iowa. I will write these sisters soon.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your sister,
MRS. JOSEPH HARTHEY.

News from Missions

Southern California

The recent Southern California district conference was the most important ever held in the district. The attendance was much larger than usual. Ministry well represented. The results of the conference will be far-reaching. Perfect harmony prevailed. A general "get-together" spirit was in evidence. Every important action was unanimous. Old lines of cleavage were wiped out. No evidence of factional feeling.

Every action taken was temperate and well considered. All important matters were referred to committee for consideration and report.

The preaching was of high order. Brother Rushton acquitted himself with dignity and grace. The ministry was a unit in declaring for constructive missionary service.

An aggressive tract distributing campaign was outlined by the district president and unanimously concurred in. It is also planned to provide a series of two-day meetings for various points in the district; the purpose being to rally the workers and concentrate on isolated and weak places. New openings will be effected wherever possible.

It was decided to hedge on expenses for the coming reunion, thus making it possible for all to attend.

The faith of the membership was strengthened, and the ministry were impressed with the necessity for close living and diligent service.

We believe that a brighter day is just ahead. The Spirit gave evidence of divine approval and satisfaction over the work accomplished.

Fraternally,
T. W. WILLIAMS.

Eastern Colorado

During the past year I have been laboring in the Eastern Colorado District, mainly in the Arkansas Valley in the vicinity of Wiley and Lamar.

We are rejoicing in the fact that the past year's endeavors to spread the angel message have not been in vain. Twenty-six have been added to the fold in the Arkansas Valley, and two branches have been organized, one at Wiley and the other at La Junta, and the gospel has been preached in a few new openings. Since the organization of the two branches the latter part of January, ten have been baptized.

The Saints at Wiley are building a chapel which should be a credit to the church when completed. Including choir loft and vestibule, it will be fifty-two feet long and thirty-two feet wide, with a nice large basement and baptismal font. When I left Wiley the Saints were busy as bees on the building, which will be under cover by this time. The Saints there hope to finish the church in less than two months.

Before leaving Wiley I was asked to deliver a farewell sermon, but it proved to be a social gathering, and refreshments were served. The needs of the missionary were remembered. It was with feelings of reluctance that we parted with the people here. There are now about eighty Saints in that locality, and prospects are bright for future work.

After leaving Wiley I went to La Junta, where three more were baptized. Greater interest than ever manifested in the meetings. From there I wended my way to the Denver conference, stopping at Rocky Ford, Pueblo, and Colorado Springs, making short visits with the Saints at these places.

The conference at Denver was a success and all in attendance seemed to enjoy the meetings; the business sessions, the preaching and the prayer meeting. I left Denver, Sunday evening, and arrived here early Monday morning, where I am enjoying a short visit with Brother John E. Bozarth, son of one of the old Pioneers, Elder W. T. Bozarth. I found Elder Shower in the midst of a series of meetings, and am assisting him in the dispensing of the angel's message. Eight have already been baptized in this place, and last night others presented their names for baptism. A branch organization is badly needed here. There are now about thirty Saints here, and indications point to an increase in membership, providing present interest continues.

It has been something over four months since I left loved ones in Independence, whom I hope to meet in a few days.

Ever praying for the advancement of the cause of Christ,
J. CHARLES MAY.

The Pacific Coast

The writer has just returned from a short sojourn in California. I went there in company with Sister Barmore who has recently gone to Australia. She left San Francisco, accompanied by Sister Ina Wright, February 8. She wrote from Honolulu under date of February 13. Up to that date she had been very seasick, which is unusual for her. Mal de mer, however, will, no doubt, soon pass away, for the roughest part of the trip is this side of Honolulu. Beyond there the warm weather is more in evidence and the sea, especially at this season of the year, is very smooth.

Sister Barmore has for some time been in very poor health, so we considered it wise for her to return to her own people. With them she will feel more at ease, in case of sickness, and I shall be more contented concerning her. I feared, at times, while she was here that her illness might terminate fatally.

I spent, altogether, nearly a month in San Francisco. It is needless to say I enjoyed my stay. I was a missionary in the State of California for three years, from 1897 to 1900, and am, therefore, acquainted with quite a number of the Saints, some of whom I brought into the church. Wife and I made our home with Brother and Sister Anthony, who did all they could to make our stay pleasant. While we were there Sister Anthony's son, Brother George Andrews, and his wife, paid a visit to the city. We were pleased to meet them too. Their presence also reminded me of "Auld Lang Syne."

I was permitted to speak several times both in San Francisco and Oakland and was also invited to participate in Sunday school and Religio work, all of which I very much enjoyed. The association with the young people was very agreeable. The older I get the younger I grow. Perhaps I am getting into my dotage, though that is not quite the thing for a man who has just passed forty. Of one thing I am sure, I enjoy the society of young people more than I ever did before. The principal reason for this is they are less Puritanical than those who are older, and are not so prone to attempt the regulation of other people's opinions.

In addition to the foregoing, wife and I did all the visiting we could. We could not respond to all the invitations. Her health would not permit of it.

Since returning to Oregon, which was February 12, we have held our district conference, which convened February 26 and 27. It passed off pleasantly, for the most part, and the weather was delightful. One item caused some controversy and was finally referred to the minister in charge for his decision and action. We were very sorry Brother Rushton could not be with us. His absence marred the conference, in some measure, for he had written that he would be present. Later he felt obliged to cancel the appointment. Before conference I took up a series of meetings, which is still in progress at this place, where the conference was also held. This is the first of a series of protracted meetings which I am intending to hold in this district. I am remaining here at the request of Brother Rushton, instead of going to the General Conference.

I enjoy the good old HERALD as of yore. I have been reading it since I was a boy. Indeed, I have read old numbers as far back as its beginning. Some news it has brought me has been glad and some sad. I regret, for instance, to read of the death of so many of our stalwart workers. Have noted, especially, the death of several good men during the last year or so. Of these I mention Brother W. H. Kelley, T. W. Chatburn, and F. C. Keck.

The first always appealed to me as an especially broad-minded man although, at times, he appeared to be radical. His conversation was particularly agreeable to me because it was so easy to talk with him along liberal lines. I had several chats with him during his late illness. He seemed, as usual, opposed to everything narrow, and confidently expressed himself as believing that the church will ultimately incline, more and more, toward a liberal sympathetic policy. He was of the opinion that there is less bigotry among us than in other churches.

Brother Chatburn was one of my old missionary companions. We always disagreed, more or less, and yet we remained good friends. He considered me too easy and I thought him too hard. However, he was not vindictive or revengeful, hence, when the argument was over, he was still a true friend. That is not true of every man who has a reputation for wisdom and piety.

Brother Keck I met, near the last time, when we were in the Sanitarium together. His case was not as promising as mine. Mine was a simple one, while his was a complete breakdown. He partially recovered and entered into the work again, for a time. I met him subsequently at the General Conference, but it was apparent to me that his work on earth was done.

We have had some good weather of late, but it is stormy again now. This has been a hard winter everywhere on the Pacific Coast. Places not accustomed to it have had snow, and others, usually with little, comparatively, have had much rain. Through it all I have kept remarkably well. Have not even had a common cold.

With prayers for the success of the coming Conference, I am
Your brother in bonds,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

MYRTLE POINT, OREGON, March 4, 1916.

Southeastern Mission

To-day after ordaining Zenas B. Booker an elder, and Thomas F. Vickrey a teacher, I organized a branch at this place to be known as the Local Branch. Officers were elected for one year as follows: Z. B. Booker, presiding elder; T. W. Vickrey, presiding priest; T. F. Vickrey, presiding teacher; A. M. Vickrey, assistant; Laura M. Bass, secretary. The membership of this branch when all are enrolled will be about forty.

I feel sure this energetic little band of Saints, with their church building now paid for and in a good location, in connection with their Sunday school which is now thriving, will meet with much success in the Lord's work if they keep courageous and determined to go on as now manifested. Zenas B. Booker, the president of the branch, is the son of Elder W. J. Booker, lately deceased, commonly called Uncle Billy in this part of the South. He seemed to have great confidence while his boys were growing up that they would sometime be an honor to the work. Two of these sons are now elders, and both are presiding over branches; Jason presides over the branch at Bay Minette, Alabama, having the confidence of the Saints, and meeting with success.

February 14, Brother R. C. Russell and the writer organized a branch in Mobile, Alabama, with F. P. Scarcliff, president, T. W. Smith, presiding priest, David Tillman, presiding teacher, Irene Scarcliff, secretary. While they have no church in which to worship, and are required to have their Sunday school and other services in a private house, yet there is much success before each member in a spiritual way, by working in complete harmony with the law of Christ.

From there Brother Russell and the writer visited different parts of my field, looking after the needs of the work. I believe the labor performed has been fraught with good.

Yours sincerely,

F. M. SLOVER.

Conference Minutes

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.—San Bernardino, February 26 and 27. The weather was nice, and attendance the largest for several years. A good feeling and spirit prevailed throughout. Basket dinner was served on Sunday. An official welcome was tendered the conference by the mayor of the city, Brother George H. Wixom, responded to by Brother T. W. Williams. Reports were in hand from nearly everyone who was supposed to report. Action was taken to secure reports from those who habitually neglect this duty, and in case of persistent refusal to comply without good reason a forfeiture of license may ensue. Statistical reports showed a present number of 997, net gain of 6. Bishop's agent reported receipts $9,048.36; disbursements $8,816.41, on hand, $231.95, consisting of real estate $150. balance due from former agent $76.11, cash $5.84. District treasurer reported: receipts $10.85; disbursements $12.91. Reunion report showed $561.56 received and $555.04 paid out, with $6.52 in bank, and a balance of $130 due the Sisters Economic Catering Club of Santa Ana for cooking in the cafeteria last reunion. H. F. Backer, H. S. Pankey, W. E. Badham, N. Carmichael volunteered to sign a note to secure this money, as the sisters wanted it to apply on the church debt at Santa Ana. It was shown by the secretary that by doing our own work next reunion we could save that much and more and come out square on all accounts. T. W. Williams, W. E. Badham, H. F. Backer, N. Carmichael, G. H. Wixom were appointed a committee to assist in cooperating with Santa Ana Branch to liquidate balance of church debt, about $750, and arrange for its dedication. Convention Park Company reported, receipts $541.34, disbursements $472.72. Delegates chosen to General Conference: J. W. Rushton, T. W. Williams, Nils Paulson, R. T. Cooper, W. E. Badham, Francis L. Keeler, G. H. Wixom, R. F. Slye, V. M. Goodrich. On recommendation of Sunday school and Religio a district reunion program committee was formed, consisting of minister in charge, district president, and secretary, district Sunday school superintendent, district president of Religio, one member chosen by each of these societies, and one by the church. The members chosen were Lola Mitchell, Frieda Klein, and Celia Wixom, respectively. An active campaign of tract work was advocated by the district president, and it was provided that the local good literature committees should cooperate under his direction in organizing for the purchase and distribution of tracts as extensively as possible. J. F. Lacey of Pomona was ordained an elder, and John Lorne Swain of Ontario a priest. The special report of the minister in charge on the matter of the former bishop's agent, Brother Adam, occupied the Saturday evening session. The final report of the district auditing committee was also presented in detail, showing variations from the report as published by Bishop Kelley last year, as found by the auditors and Bishop Albert Carmichael, together with some special features which were referred to a committee of fifteen of the representative men of the district. This committee after weighing all the conditions and circumstances of the entire matter arrived at the conclusion that the ultimate good of the church would be enhanced and the confidence of the people reestablished and faith in the church strengthened by standing back of the church's duly accredited financial representatives to the extent of maintaining the integrity of their dealings with the members while occupying in their official capacity, even though a technical legal liability might not exist, believing that such a policy would be vastly better and would also result in the finances dependent upon the confidence of the people and voluntary response to the church financial laws being replenished much more than they might suffer by such action, and recommended that the church assume such responsibility, providing for its reference to the proper tribunals, and placing it in the hands of the minister in charge to secure such consideration. The men composing this committee were, H. F. Backer, F. B. Van Vleet, W. Schade, T. W. Williams, R. T. Cooper, Nathaniel Cooper, H. S. Pankey, Peter Kaufman, W. E. Badham, V. M. Goodrich, J. W. Rushton, R. F. Slye, F. W. Burton, W. J. Burton, and G. H. Wixom. The report together with all correspondence was presented. The people sustained the recommendation of the committee by unanimous vote and an exhibition of good feeling and desire for right that was quite refreshing. Brother Adam was present and his demeanor and frankness in all matters and questions of the people went a great ways towards composing the troubles of the district, which it is now confidently hoped will soon be accomplished, and that the good will and spirit developed may continue and grow. Brother G. H. Wixom is doing a splendid work in getting a correct knowledge of our church before the people of San Bernardino, and a marked improvement in the attitude of many towards the church is manifested. Brother Wixom was the speaker at the First Congregational Church, San Bernardino, by urgent invitation. The report in a recent communication from Los Angeles that Secretary R. T. Cooper had moved to Long Beach was an oversight; he still resides in Los Angeles, 289 Forty-eighth Street. R. T. Cooper, secretary.

WINNIPEG.—February 19 and 20, Winnipeg. A good spirit prevailed throughout. Motion prevailed providing a reunion to begin about July 1, 1916, exact time and place left to district presidency. Motion prevailed to hold district conference between Christmas and New Year's instead of in February. Officers elected: N. Wilson, president; W. I. Arnold, first vice president; O. L. D'Arcy, second vice president; Sister Pugsley, secretary; W. I. Arnold, treasurer; Ed MacGregor, member library board; Sister Wellington Wilson, member social purity board; W. I. Arnold, sustained bishop's agent. Adjourned to meet at call of presidency. Sister Pugsley, Estella Hayward.

NORTHWESTERN KANSAS.—Union Star Church, March 11 and 12. Twin Creek Branch reported. There being no report from bishop's agent or auditing committee, the committee was continued, and district president authorized to investigate. Scandia Branch having been previously disorganized, secretary was authorized to transfer names to Twin Creek. Rural Sale found disorganized, members were transferred to Twin Creek, on branch record but not on district record. District secretary was instructed to make necessary transfers. Mount Olive disorganized, and secretary instructed to get in touch with membership and transfer to nearest branch. Hill City Branch on motion was transferred to Rexford, Kansas. Treasurer's report approved. Delegates to General Conference: J. D. Shower, J. H. Jemison, Etta Sellers, Sister J. A. Bozarth, instructed to cast full vote, majority and minority, and to vote against change of General Conference date. By motion next conference was ordered to meet same time and place as reunion. Preaching by J. D. Shower and J. B. Ansley. This conference was one of blessing to all. J. B. Ansley, secretary, Osborne, Kansas.

INDEPENDENCE STAKE.—Knobnoster, Missouri, March 11 and 12. This was said by some to be the best conference held in some time. Secretary's report showed gain of 123. Ordination of J. A. Harrington, second counselor to president of Second Quorum of Elders, and ordination of Lester Brackebury to the office of elder, provided for. Delegates to General Conference and twenty alternates selected. Stake officers sustained, subject to change by General Conference. James Bunt declining to continue as stake secretary, matter of a successor in this office was referred to the stake presidency and stake bishopric. J. W. Gunsolley selected member library board. Resolution was passed recommending to the various branches that they hold their "annual election of officers the first business meeting following adjournment of General Conference." The following was passed: "Resolved, We favor that the presidency of the stake place under silence all members of the priesthood who refuse to work in their office and calling, and request the surrender of that license, subject to appeal." Adjourned to meet September 9 and 10, with Second Independence Branch. James W. Stobaugh.

KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE.—Foundry Hill Branch. Reports: Foundry Hill, Eagle Creek, Mays Hill. Tent committee was instructed to secure new tent. Delegates to General Conference: J. R. McClain, C. A. Nolan, Brother and Sister Sam Pinson, J. M. Nunley, authorized to cast majority and minority vote. Motion passed to strictly enforce rules relative to the use of tobacco among the priesthood, and to sustain none who continue using the same. The peaceful influence of the Spirit prevailed throughout. Adjourned to meet with Mays Hill Branch first Saturday before first Sunday in June. C. A. Nolan, secretary.

NODAWAY.—Guilford, Missouri, February 26. Reports: Guilford 104, gain 4; Ross Grove 71; Bedison 67, loss 2; Sweet Home 40. Bishop's agent, W. B. Torrance, reported: Receipts, $757.25; expenditures, $519.79. Appointment of W. T. Ross by A. N. Hoxie as district chorister concurred in by President Frederick M. Smith, confirmed. Ordination of H. P. Larson, Guilford Branch, to office of deacon provided for. Delegates to General Conference: J. W. Powell, R. K. Ross. Secretary authorized to have sufficient number of by-laws printed to distribute among membership. Treasurer, Alec Jensen, reported: Receipts, $6.60. Ross Grove Branch selected as place for next conference in October. Auditing committee reported bishop's agent's accounts correct, last 3 vouchers to be accounted for. Preaching by Peter Anderson and James F. Kier. W. B. Torrance, secretary.

Crabb, B. F. Backson, James Bailie, A. E. Sprague, R. L. Tilden, George Robinson. Adjourned to meet at Fanning, August 11. Mrs. F. G. Hedrick, secretary, Fanning, Kansas.

Requests for Prayers

Sister G. F. Snellen, of East Jordan, Michigan, requests prayers of the Saints that she may be healed of Bright's Disease.

A sister whose husband is not a member of the church, and who she represents is not doing right, asks prayers in his behalf. She also asks that she may be remembered. She desires to be strengthened that she may be a true and more dutiful Saint, and that she may be able to bring up her children in a way that will please the Lord.

Notice

Arrangements have been made with the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad Co. for special rates from Toledo, Ohio, to Saint Louis, of $10 the round trip, good from March 31 to April 25, if party of ten can be arranged, each to have individual ticket. Special chair car if party of 25 can be arranged. Notify me at 609 Chestnut Street, Toledo, Ohio, or Mr. C. E. Rose, assistant general passenger agent, Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad Co., Toledo, Ohio, as to how many will be in your party, not later than March 29. Matthew W. Liston.

Died

WILEY.—James Wiley, born June 9, 1833, at Tempo, Farmanagh, Ireland; died at his home London, Ontario, February 7, 1916. Baptized July 31, 1904, Silverwater, Manitoulin Island, by John Shields. Deceased was noted for his love for the gospel, and his cheerful and kindly disposition. His last testimony was that he would not take all this world for his hope of salvation. Leaves wife, 2 daughters, 3 grandchildren. Sermon at the home of John Shields, assisted by J. C. Mottashed and G. H. Henly.

SMITH.—Emma Elizabeth Wright Smith, born Lestershire, England, November 18, 1844; died February 9, 1916. Came with parents to America in 1848, to Iowa in 1860. Married Albert Benjamin Smith, April 9, 1862. To them were born 8 children, 1 having preceded her when 2 years old. Husband, 3 daughters, and 4 sons: Lottie Land, of Canada; Elizabeth Gittens, Clara Larson, G. R., B. J., of Boomer Township; D. D. and T. J., of Council Bluffs; 3 brothers, Fred, George, and William; other relatives and a host of friends are left to mourn the loss of a loving and true wife, mother and friend. With her husband she was a pioneer settler of Boomer Township, Pottawattamie County, Iowa, having resided here from before her marriage. It was here their children were born and grew to manhood and womanhood. When taken ill her earnest prayer was that she might live to see her children grow up. The desire was granted, and all her children have united with the church and are honored members. Baptized in 1862, and although having been confined to her bed for 35 years, she never lost faith in the precious promises of the gospel. She was always mindful of others, speaking words of comfort to those in affliction. In the language of the Apostle Paul, she fought a good fight and kept the faith. A loving husband at her side daily ministered to her wants, making life as pleasant as possible for the patient wife. Services at the Grange Church by D. R. Chambers, assisted by H. N. Hanson.

WILLIAMS.—H. B. Williams died at his home in West Virginia, February 12, 1916, aged 73 years, 6 months, 19 days. Married Lucinda Baker, November 17, 1867. To them were born 3 daughters, 5 sons; Mrs. Mark Smith, Parkersburg, West Virginia; J. B. and Mrs. Thomas Mills, Columbus, Ohio; W. H., West Union, West Virginia; C. F., Greenwood, West Virginia; H. C., Toll Gate, West Virginia; L. H., at home; Vivian R., deceased. Also survived by 2 sisters, Mrs. Mary A. Osborne, Grafton, West Virginia; Mrs. Eliza J. Leeson, Columbus, Ohio. Services at the home by A. V. Closson.

HOSTERMAN.—Pearl Mathewson, born at Pelican Lake, Minnesota, June 28, 1887; died February 20, 1916. Married Henry Hosterman, January 2, 1907. To them were born 3 sons, 1 daughter. Besides husband and children, there remain father, 4 brothers, 1 sister, large number of other relatives to mourn the untimely passing of a sweet spirit. Services attended by a large number of relatives and friends, evidencing the esteem in which the departed was held, P. W. Martin officiating.

SOCRATES MASTER OF LIFE.—By William Ellery Leonard. Open Court Publishing Company, Chicago. Price $1. The author of this work states that Socrates divides Greek history into two parts. He did this by sheer weight of mentality. He was not born of aristocratic parentage, being the son of an artisan stonecutter. He was never wealthy, being entirely satisfied with a mere competency. He was ungainly in person and far from handsome in feature. Yet he propounded a system of philosophy, and by his mental vigor as well as his moral courage and personal dignity so impressed himself upon Greek history and the history of the world, that it can now be said of him that he divided Greek history into two parts. Not having been born of aristocratic parentage, and leaving no great posterity, it may be said of him that he was like a mountain peak springing out of the plain. Some have even ventured to compare him with Christ. The poet Shelly says: "Socrates, the Jesus Christ of Greece." Socrates himself, if now living, would repudiate the comparison. He was a very humble man, and stated that the only way in which he excelled others was that he knew that he knew nothing. This little book of one hundred and eighteen pages makes a very interesting study, and cannot fail to profit those who read it.

WHO IS JESUS.—By W. B. Murray. The Nuncet Licet Press, Minneapolis, Minnesota. Pilate asked the people of his time, "What shall I do with Jesus?" The answer that the people gave was, "Let him be crucified." But the answer did not satisfy the world, and the question has been propounded again and again, "What shall I do with Jesus?" Many answers have been given. The author of this work approaches the subject by way of another question, "Who is Jesus?" feeling that the answer to the first question will depend upon the answer to this. "Is he God? Or God in man? Or man only?" are questions appearing upon the title-page. The author approaches his subject with these words: "I have a very definite message to present to the world, one that cannot fail to be supremely interesting to multitudes, for it is about Jesus, and beyond all controversy Jesus of Nazareth, whom all good men admire, and some men worship as the Savior of the world, is the most fascinating figure of history."

ECONOMIC ASPECTS OF THE WAR.—By Edwin J. Clapp, professor of economics, New York University. Yale University Press, New Haven, Massachusetts. Price $1.50. This book, which the author says contains the story of international lawlessness during the first year of the great war, is the outgrowth of a public lecture given at the New York University in March, 1915. It is written, the author states, because he has become convinced that Americans are paying too much attention to the affairs of belligerents and too little to their own. He feels that we are to be touched by the war, that it imperils not only our present military interests, but also the neutral rights upon which the material interests of all peaceful nations in the future depend. He holds that the neutral world is waiting for America to realize and assert their rights and her own. Hence his attempt to define those rights and to record that which seems to have threatened them. Chapters are devoted to The rights of neutrals under international law; Great Britain's orders in council and their effect on the export of foodstuffs; Foodstuffs under international law; The blockade; The effects of the blockade; and many other subjects of kindred nature. A valuable work for those who wish to understand the situation and its effect upon neutral nations.

Conference Daily

A daily Ensign will again be issued during the General Conventions and General Conference in April. The compliments on the make-up of the Daily Ensign published in April, 1914, encourages another venture this year. As our force is small it will help very materially if subscriptions are sent early. If our friends will begin now to send subscriptions it will be appreciated, but if all wait till the last moment more or less confusion may ensue and mistakes be more apt to happen. Help the office force by sending soon. Price 25 cents for the time of conventions and conference.

SUNSHINE PARTIES

are every day affairs in the South in the Winter time---for when blizzards, slush and snow are quite the fashion in the North, balmy breezes, sunny skies, moonlit bays and tropical flowers are the fashion in the South. And those who pack their grips and go South at this time, reap rich rewards in health dividends and delightful recreation and return, realizing more than ever before, the real value of a winter vacation in that romantic, historic and beautiful land south of the Mason and Dixon Line.

The cost is low---perhaps not as much as you thought it would be. Come in and let's talk it over.

TWO PHILOSOPHIES IN CONTRAST

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday morning, January 30, 1916.)

Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness.—Matthew 6: 33, I. T.

Take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.—Luke 12: 19.

Who is the author of this commandment to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness? The greatest philosopher that ever lived. I have been reading a little book entitled, Socrates, Master of Life. In this book the author says that Socrates naturally divides Greek history into two parts, the period before Socrates, and the period after Socrates. This is more remarkable when we pause to consider that Socrates was born of common parentage. His father was an artisan stone cutter. Here was one of these mountain peak men who spring from the level plain, in the sense that he had no great ancestors and no great posterity. Socrates himself was poor. He never accepted any of the high political positions, (excepting one term in the Senate) and yet he achieved such an eminence that he is said to divide Greek history into two parts; the period before Socrates, and the period after Socrates.

But this sinks into insignificance when we remember that a Jew, the son of a common carpenter, another mountain peak man, divides the history of the world into two parts, and that chronologically every event of history in all civilized nations is recounted as having happened before or since his birth. And it was this eminently great teacher, whom you recognize as Jesus Christ, who propounded this philosophy, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness."

A PHILOSOPHY OF FAITH

This philosophy is a philosophy of faith. It is an eternal philosophy. It is a philosophy of high ideals. It is constructive, "Seek to build up the kingdom of God;" it is active, "Establish his righteousness," as opposed to the other, "Take thine ease, gratify every passion. Eat, drink and be merry, for to-morrow it will all end."

The one may be the philosophy of pleasure; but the other is certainly the philosophy of joy and happiness.

There is a difference between the two. The condemned murderer eating his last breakfast before he goes to the scaffold may have pleasure. He enjoys the fried chicken and strawberries. They tickle his palate, but he certainly cannot have joy and happiness, because joy and happiness are based on a sense of well-being, and the knowledge of future safety and salvation.

How shall we obey this divine injunction to build up the kingdom of God? We have noted some of the activities that draw along the other line, and so we will note the activities that appeal to us along this line.

DEVOTION AND WORSHIP

First of all is the devotional feature. The feature of worship. We are told to neglect not the assembling of ourselves together for prayer. We should pray in public and in secret. Jesus taught his disciples to pray, and the first petition in that prayer was, "Thy kingdom come." We may help to build up the kingdom by prayer, if nothing more than by getting ourselves into that condition by which we are ready to receive and welcome the kingdom of God. "Thy kingdom come." In fact a pledge: "Lord, we will do all that we can to be ready for it and hasten its coming."

SELF-CULTURE

The second method which we note is that of self-culture. This is a form of selfishness that is perfectly justified. For a man to conserve and develop himself in the interests of others and to serve God and man is a sublime form of selfishness, and the Lord admonishes us that we shall so qualify ourselves. This will include anything that helps a man physically, mentally, or spiritually, not excluding athletics or any wholesome recreation.

But I wish to consider first of all the development of one's self along mental and spiritual lines, and of course we have already remarked that prayer will do that.

We are commanded that we should seek knowledge by faith and by study, and the extent of that research, its breadth and depth, is indicated in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 85, paragraph 21, where it is stated:

I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.

SEVEN HUNDRED BOOKS

There certainly is a commission for the widest kind of study and research. I heard a story about Theodore Roosevelt to the effect that a friend of his requested that he send him the books that he had been reading on the subject of woman suffrage. The next day to his surprise, he received in a dray, seven hundred books and pamphlets that Roosevelt had read on that subject. I do not know how true this may have been. Possibly it may have been exaggerated.

How many of us ever read seven hundred good solid books on any one subject in all our lives? How many of us have read seven hundred books altogether on all subjects in all our lives? How many of us read one good book every month? How many read one good book every six months? And yet it is a commandment that we shall study all good books.

Whenever you find a man who is growing after he has reached the age of thirty-five years, I mean one who is growing mentally, you will find a man who is studying, a man who is reading good books. Every good book that you read stimulates you to individual and personal thought.

Whenever you find a man approaching the age of sixty years, we will say, who is progressing, and alert, you will find a man who is obeying this injunction to read good books. Whenever you find a man who is not growing after the age of thirty-five years, who stagnates, who never has a new thought, who always preaches the same old sermons, you will find a man who doesn't read, you will find a man who doesn't study.

A GENTLE USURER

Possibly right now I might acknowledge a debt that I owe to Sister Marietta Walker. When I first came to Lamoni as a boy, for some reason she thought she saw something in me that was worthy of development. I do not know why. I must have been as awkward and bashful and green an individual as ever came out of the corn field, but for some reason she thought she saw some promise, and she took an interest in me, and thus took out a mortgage on me. For I felt that I must live up to her expectations. God only knows how many mortgages on young people that woman has taken out in years gone by, and she has foreclosed on those mortgages during all these years and turned all the proceeds over to the service of God. I wish we had more women of the same high character to serve God in this church.

Her advice to me was, "Now don't spend all your time in amusements and social pleasures, but study." I endeavored to follow her counsel. It cost me something, of course, in a social way. I had to miss a great deal. I was working ten hours a day in the Herald Office bindery. I had not enjoyed the privilege of high school or college; and I had to pay the price, if I were to get the mental education I felt I needed. Later the fruits of my labors came back to me as a result of following her advice.

This is simply in line with the admonition that God has given us in his revelation. I am glad personally that I did have that experience, because now when people say, "I have to work ten hours a day and do other work at home, so I do not have time to read," I know they are mistaken, because I have demonstrated to the contrary. I know that as a rule men can find time to study if they want to. (Of course there are exceptions to all rules.)

I heard about one young man who worked out here on a farm near Lamoni, who got up at four o'clock every morning in order that he might read and study an hour or two before he went out to his work.

That is the kind of spirit that we need in this community. We want to develop a people who are studious and are qualifying themselves for the service of God; a people who are in earnest, and a people who are divorced from that pernicious philosophy, "Take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." A people who sense something of the meaning of the commandment, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness."

SERVICE

Another way in which we can build up the kingdom is by service to humanity—individual service if you please. The Master says even if we give but a cup of cold water it shall not be forgotten. Also by organized service. Organized service, such as we are rendering in the Sanitarium, in the College, Saints' Homes, and other places. Organized service will develop when we can give employment and stewardships and help people to help themselves, not simply come to their rescue in times of distress and poverty.

And right here it occurs to me that I will mention the philosophy of money making, that is set forth in the Book of Mormon.

When I was in Independence last I talked with two bright young men who are in business. They went there from Lamoni. One of them said to me, "A certain brother in Lamoni told us that it was wrong to try to get money." I picked up the Book of Mormon which lay on the stand and read to him this injunction from Jacob 2: 22, 23:

Before ye seek for riches, seek for the kingdom of God. And after ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them for the intent to do good, to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted.

I said to these young men: "If you have that ambition, if you have that incentive, go out into the world then and corner every dollar that you can get your hands on honestly. Get hold of all the money you can."

I wish we could get at the hearts of our young men and fire them with the incentive to go out and earn money in harmony with that statement, and with that purpose in mind.

PREACHING THE GOSPEL

We can serve humanity best of all perhaps, by preaching the gospel. That was the primary commandment given to us, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." We serve humanity when we do that. But some may say, that is the work of the preacher.

I want to read again a statement from the book of Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8:

Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

The time that is given to us to complete our work is short. We do not know how soon the Master may come. We have a great deal of work to do, and the events that are going on in the world to-day are enough to make us sober; enough to make us think, "Is there not something more that we can do to advance this work?" for the statement is made that the responsibility of preaching the gospel rests on all the people. The burden is diffused. With the Saints everywhere you must bear your portion of it just as the preacher bears his.

And in conclusion, in order that we might sense something of the meaning of that statement, I wish that we might be permitted to take a sort of spiritual vision of the situation as it presents itself to us, in harmony with that statement.

A VISION OF THE WORLD

Imagine if you will, that we are permitted like Enoch of old, to stand on an eminence where we can look out over all the world, everywhere. We see scattered here and there the wide world over, groups of Saints, and individual Saints. Here is a farmer plowing and sowing. Here is another reaping. Here is a man in the factory; and another down in the mines. Here a man in the bank; here a lawyer; and there a merchant. The statement is made that all these men are called according to the gifts of God unto them, and the responsibility of prosecuting this gospel work rests on all of them.

Suppose with telescopic vision we are able to look over the broad oceans and the continents, and into the city of Jerusalem. We see the narrow streets and the old ruined walls. We see a group of Jews and a man who is talking to them. We recognize him as one of our own men. We will say for instance, that it is Apostle Griffiths. He is preaching the old Jerusalem gospel to the Jews in the old city of Jerusalem, and we say, "What a high privilege. What a consecrated calling to go and preach to the Jews in the city of Jerusalem."

But the scene changes, and right down here at our feet we see an Iowa corn field, and an Iowa farmer picking his corn. We hear him whistle at his work, and we hear the ears of corn as they strike in the wagon box. That man pays his tithing annually into the church. He gives his consecration of surplus from time to time. That man is helping to support the family of Apostle Griffiths as he goes and preaches to the Jews in Jerusalem.

Cannot you see that his is a high and sacred calling? He is working with the apostle to preach to the Jews in Jerusalem. Is there any difference? What a sacred mission to go into an Iowa cornfield with such a purpose in mind.

And so as we look here and there, we might look into the Sanitarium, and see the nurses going about their work, also the physician in charge, or we glance toward Hiteman and at the mouth of the pit we see our brethren going down into the darkness of the coal mine singing gospel songs as they go. We see our sisters working with the children in the primary classes at Sunday school. We see men and women working everywhere, and we realize that God has said that the responsibility of this work rests on all.

Speed the day when all realize it, and when from these farms, and these factories, and these banks, and these stores, from everywhere there shall come the sound of voices of all the Saints singing:

Send the sound, the earth around,
From the rising to the setting of the sun;
'Till each gathering crowd
Shall proclaim aloud,
The glorious work is done.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

CHINA REPUBLIC AGAIN.—The press reports that a Chinese state department mandate issued the 22d, announced the abandonment of the monarchy and the resumption of the republic, which in effect would end the Chinese rebellion.

ROOSEVELT RETURNS.—Theodore Roosevelt on the 24th returned to New York from his trip to the West Indies. Suggestion continues to associate the name of Mr. Roosevelt with the Republican nomination for president, it being intimated that certain Republican leaders would favor it should such sentiment develop in the coming convention.

DON'T WANT "MORMONS."—Press report states that admission by Utah Church elders that they hoped to establish a "Mormon" congregation at Watertown, New York, was followed by police action refusing the elders permission to conduct services on the public square at that place.

BACK FROM ANTARCTIC.—Sir Ernest H. Shackleton has returned to the Ross Sea base from his Antarctic expedition. The purposes of this expedition were: To open navigation across the Antarctic on a meridian; and to conduct scientific work. Statement of the developments of the explorations is withheld for the present.

WOULD CUT PRICE.—Following the passing in the Senate on the 21st of a bill to provide a Government armor plate plant, the House naval committee, on receiving the bill, received also a proposal from the Bethlehem Steel Company to cut the price of armor plate from $425 to $395 a ton, an offer which had been ignored by the Senate committee.

GIRARD STAYS.—It is announced from Berlin that on account of probable important developments, United States Ambassador Girard has cancelled arrangements for a vacation, and will not return to America the coming summer. President Wilson has authorized a statement denying that the purpose of the ambassador was to remain at Berlin awaiting peace proposals from Germany.

WIND AND FIRES DESTROY.—Fanned by high winds, on the 21st fires at Paris, Texas, East Nashville, Tennessee, Spray and Greensboro, North Carolina, in the Cushing, Oklahoma, oil fields, and on western Kansas prairie lands, resulted in property losses amounting into the millions, and in loss of life. A hurricane in Indiana on the 22d caused heavy property damage, at least three deaths, and many injuries. On the night of the 22d a fire at Augusta, Georgia, destroyed property valued at five million dollars.

ARMY INCREASE.—An amendment to the Hay Army Reorganization Bill to raise the regular army to two hundred and twenty thousand men, an increase of eighty thousand over the provisions of the Hay Bill, was defeated in the House on the 20th by a vote of 183 to 103; on the 23d the same amendment was defeated by a vote of 213 to 191. On the 21st the House passed an amendment to this bill giving the President power without action by Congress to increase the army to full war strength, or from one hundred and forty thousand to one hundred and seventy-five thousand, and to call out the sixty thousand reserves the bill would provide in four years; a second amendment would reduce the time a soldier must serve before being furloughed to the reserves. The amended bill passed the House on the 23d by a vote of 402 to 2.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—General Carranza on the 20th replied to the request of the American Government for use of Mexican railroads for the movement of supplies to support the American army, by requesting more complete information covering what the War Department wanted. Pending final word from Carranza, motor trucks are being used. General Funston has asked for additional troops to protect the line of communications in Mexico. Washington authorities have assented to Carranza's suggestion that the hunt for Villa be carried on under a formal written agreement. The arrival at Casas Grandes of United States troops has relieved the Mormon colony at that place, threatened by Villa bandits. The rigid censorship covering all movements across the Mexican border continues, nothing definite being generally known as to the whereabouts of troops, or the prospects of taking Villa. High winds have made aeroplane scouting hazardous. One American aviator has been slightly injured; another has been reported missing. The "Carranza dollar" has fallen in valuation at San Antonio, Texas, to two cents in American money, the lowest price quoted since the money was recognized by local banks. The highest quotation was ten cents, immediately after the Carranza Government was recognized by the United States.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Violent German attacks on French position in the vicinity of Verdun have been followed by short periods of inaction. The Germans report minor gains. General successes attend the Russian arms on all fronts. They have continued their aggression against the Germans on the north of their line, where heavy artillery fire has been followed by infantry attacks and the taking of short lines of German trenches. General Kuropatkin of Russo-Japanese war fame, is directing the campaign in this territory. The Russians also report gains over the Austrians in Bukowina. They are said to be concentrating a large number of troops in Poland.

CONCERNING ZION--PART 6

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

THE SOCIAL CONDITION OF ZION

A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.—John 13: 34.

When we speak of social conditions, we mean the conditions of society, the laws and principles governing or affecting the every day life of men. We do not live for ourselves alone; we cannot separate ourselves from others and reach the highest and best in life. We therefore draw attention to a few thoughts touching the social side of life that must exist in the city or land of Zion.

As we have observed, the city of Zion is to be occupied by real, living people. We have already learned that right laws are to prevail there; but let us reason further upon this point.

There are two kinds of law; an inner law, and an outer law. So also there are two kinds of social life; the inner and the outer life. The legislative law affects the outer social condition of men only; it is this outer social life that obtains in the world at large. But since it is impossible to legislate righteousness into men, or even bind the consciences of men, it will be quite obvious that an outer, restrictive legislation cannot bring men to the highest state of efficiency in the social realm. It is for this reason that we desire to make clear the thought that the social condition of Zion must be built upon a law that has greater potency than the mere legislative and restrictive code.

Moses long ago produced a law of this kind, but it failed to bring the Hebrew nation unto perfection, because it dealt only with outward conditions. Its weakness consisted in this; that technically speaking, men could keep the letter of this outer law, and yet, at the same time, transgress the very spirit and purpose of the law. It lacked the potentiality of the law that converts men. Jesus says: "That which from without, entering into a man defileth not the man, but that which cometh out, that defileth the man." So also that which is exterior in its restrictive power cannot regenerate the life of man; but the law that proceeds from the heart, and grows outward—that, and that alone, can regenerate the life of men; and hence, regenerate society and effect the proper social conditions.

In his last hours with his disciples, Jesus said: "A new commandment I give unto you." Think of it! They had for years understood the letter of the law which said, "Thou shalt have no gods before me"; and again, "Thou shalt not covet." No doubt they had committed to memory the entire decalogue, but the Christ now tells them that he gives them a new commandment.

Christ's commandment is law; therefore, Jesus is virtually saying to them, I give unto you a new law. Was not the other law good? Yes, most certainly; but it was weak, unprofitable, unable to accomplish its purpose, seeing it dealt with outer actions, and not with inner thoughts.

What was this new commandment he gave to his disciples? Did you ever give it real serious thought? Let us now consider it; at least hear his kind and gracious words: "That ye love one another, as I have loved you." This deals with social conditions. The old law was a law of compulsion, of restriction, of penalty; but the new law is to be the law of love, a very potential law indeed.

The social condition of Zion, then, is to be governed by the law of love, filial and brotherly love. Good will between man and man must prevail there. Think of a social circle, a community, where pure love, the love of Christ is the ruling power! This law precludes all selfishness, all malice, all envy, all hatred, all jealousy, and in fact all evil. The facts are that no place can rightly be called Zion where this pure social condition does not exist.

The social condition of Zion can admit of no jar-rings, no contentions, no prejudices, no superstitions, no injustices. If I love my brother, I will not do him harm; if I injure him I do not love him as Jesus loves humanity. When the law of love proceeds from the hearts of men, it will lift them above hatred, vengeance, retaliation and the like; and it will bring about a spirit of sympathy, a bond of love, and an earnest desire for the weal of society.

We attract to ourselves the things that correspond with ourselves. The things we send out return to us with an increase. If we think evil, evil will be returned to us; but if we continually send out thoughts of peace, and good will, we shall forever dwell in peace, and receive the good will of all men. Jesus says: "Give and it shall be given unto you, pressed down, well shaken together, and running over." This at least suggests the thought that the reason there is so much war in the world is because the new commandment, the new law which Christ gives has never been realized or known.

Any place where social purity does not exist is not Zion. Zion at least suggests pure affiliation among men. The law of love will accomplish this, but all else must fail. Jesus' love brought him in such close union with God that he could say, "I and the Father are one."

I therefore insist that at-one-ment with God, and hence the highest social condition, can only be reached and realized when the law of love has been fully accepted by us. Jesus prayed that we might be one as he and the Father were one. The word of inspiration to us is: "Be one; for if you are not one, ye are not mine." Can we be one, think you, unless our social structure is the outgrowth of the law of divine love? If we are in possession of the love of Christ, we will be pure within, individually pure. This inward purity will make collective and social purity a possibility. Ralph Waldo Trine in speaking of this, says:

I and the Father are one, said the Master. In this we see how he recognized his oneness with the Father's life. Again he said, The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. In this we see how clearly he recognized the fact that he himself could do nothing, only as he worked in conjunction with the Father. Again, My Father works and I work. In other words, my Father sends the power, I open myself to it, and work in conjunction with it.

The thought is this, We must be pure ourselves before our social condition can be purified; and it is only as Christ dwells in our lives that we will be able to bring to light the social purity of Zion. Says Henry Churchill King:

Jesus clearly believes that such purity in heart can belong only to those who have a deep reverence for the sacredness of the person—who are reverent throughout and under the severest temptation. And social purity is one of the chief forms of such purity in heart. No love is a pure love that lacks some real reverence, to which the one loved is not really sacred. And a pure love becomes, for this very reason, the strongest of all human motives to self-control. The pure in heart recognize the child of God in every soul, and treat him, accordingly, not as a thing but a holy person.

So it is also, that the social condition of Zion is the consistent and legitimate outgrowth of the law of divine love, which has power to regenerate the hearts and lives of men.

There can be no schism, and no class distinction in the social structure of Zion; each one should consider himself his brother's keeper. Our main effort should be to labor for the best good of all, for love can do nothing short of this. Men and women whose lives are clean, and whose hearts are pure, can mingle together in purity; and their social relations will be peaceful and blissful. To be socially pure is to be morally strong, and Zion is to be a city possessing these virtues.

Are we ready to build Zion, think you? If not, what preparation are you making for the effecting of the Zion conditions among men? Zion can never be established without people; therefore, it is quite necessary that we give the Zion question a little serious thought. We need men and women of sterling character, who will give the best there is in them for the establishing and maintaining of this condition. And so with the poet we say:

Give us men, strong and stalwart ones,
Men who highest hope inspires,
Men who noble action fires;
Men who trample self beneath them,

Men who make their country wreath them
As her noble sons, worthy of their sires.
Men who never shame their mothers,
Men who never fail their brothers,
True, however false are others,
Give us men, I say again,
Give us men.

May the church give us such men.

My next chapter will be, The economic condition of Zion.

SATAN'S FINAL DEFEAT

Straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.—Jesus.

Billions of souls to save, and a few hundred thousand saved! Billions for God or the Devil, and the Devil gets the bulk! Is this all for the glory of God? If God is so marvelously glorified by saving a fragmentary minority of all his creatures, it is to be suspected that Satan will claim some little glory for conducting his generalship so successfully as to capture and damn the mighty majority.

I wonder if it is not just barely possible that there is some mistake about interpreting scripture so as to have it seem to mean that the Devil is to conduct so much more of a successful campaign than the Lord. Wonder if it is not possible that accepted theology overworks the text quoted above, and its scriptural parallels, when such texts are made to apply to conditions further than this present world.

Possibly these texts are merely to be applied to show the temporary success of evil in this present world. If so, a serious dilemma is averted, and Christ's ultimate victory appears. If the accepted theology of "Once in hell, always in hell" is correct, all honor to the Devil! for he is king of conquerors. If the success of the personal ministry of Christ upon earth were measured by the number of souls who followed him, as compared with the number who rejected him, his mission to earth was a most stupendous failure.

INCORRECT RULE OF MEASUREMENT

If the success of Christianity is to be measured by the number of all the souls who have professed conversion to Christ, as compared to the vastness of the number who have been openly rebellious, or indifferent, then Christianity can be only such a limited success that failure is by great odds the predominating feature.

Subtract the hypocrites and the wolves in sheep's clothing from professed Christians, and the failure grows. Subtract again, those who run well for a season and are then overcome by the cares of the world or some of Satan's snares, and we see the comparative littleness of Christian success in regenerating souls shrink to microscopic proportions, while the increasing majority who walk the broad way multiplies Christianity's failure to a frightful magnitude.

Is the Devil thus to outgeneral the Lord by such an avalanche of victory and sweeping show of superior power? No. This rule of measurement (though by far the most popular notion as to the final results of the work of Christ) is not the correct standard by which to measure the mighty work of the Lord. Such a false standard permits of no escape from a sickening view of Time's climax, featuring a magnificently successful Devil, and a defeated, diminutive Christ.

REVERSING THE SCENE

What church in modern times reverses that awful scene and presents the light which shows a diminutive Devil and a glorified Christ? The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

In what way does the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints reverse the horrible view of billions totally damned, and a pious handful saved? By simply teaching the plain scriptural truth: That truth which shows the Devil's large victories in this present world to be only temporary; that truth which shows that none will be completely and wholly lost except the comparatively few who commit the unpardonable sin—the sin for which there is no forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come—the willful denial, and sin against the Holy Ghost after having been once enlightened.

Satan is wroth against the cause of the Lord, but God will make even wrath to praise the Holy One and "the remainder of wrath shall be restrained" (see Psalm 76: 10).

THE SCOPE OF CHRIST'S MISSION

Look at the scope and boundless success of Christ's mission as announced by himself: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me" (John 12: 32).

He draws all unto himself! Some few depart into the second death with the defeated Devil and his wicked but vanquished angels, while the greatness of the kingdom of the glorified Christ increases. "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end" (Isaiah 9: 7).

The gospel of Jesus Christ even now is a blessing to millions who having heard it still neglect to obey its requirements. It is impossible for one who directly or indirectly imbibes even a small part of truth contained in the gospel to be touched or exercised in the least by that truth without being blessed thereby. By reason of the love of God toward his creatures, and his tender mercies in their behalf, even the wicked who spurn the Lord and his cause abound in blessings which could not have reached them but for the operation among men of the very gospel which they spurn.

In view of these facts the splendid success of the cause of Christ among men begins to appear. It is true that in the world now there is much evil unsubdued, but it is not unrestrained; and but for the work of a Redeemer, which continues active in all the world as good leaven working to leaven the whole lump, the earth would be a veritable hell, lost, undone, and without one ray of light or hope.

Who then, under the sun, is not made by hope a positive beneficiary of the gospel of our Lord? We are also assured that the mission of Christ was to "destroy the works of the Devil." In this also victory and not defeat appears. The gloom of even temporary reverses is to flee before Christ the mighty conqueror, when clay theologies are shattered, the lost are redeemed, and truth arises to claim and possess her own.

THE LATTER-DAY CHURCH

As the church in the early age gathered in the few, blessed the many by diffusing truth in such measures as the people were able to grasp, so the latter-day church gathers in the few, blesses the millions who are touched by the smallest degree of its sanctifying power, and qualifies her elect for yet larger service in ages unborn.

Billions are blessed through the lightening power of the latter-day evangel, who least suspect the source of their illumination. Measure not the work of the Lord by the number of the few who embrace the message of the church.

Many hear the message, love its cadence, partake measurably of its spiritual soundness, give its cause their moral support, and are blessed therein, who never unite with the church in this life. They might receive a more abundant blessing by being more valiant; but all are not under unforgivable damnation who have heard the gospel, appreciated its worth, and failed to obey. It is the direct rebellion and active enmity against the truth which brings the just condemnation of God upon the wicked. And some who are not members of any church have a far better chance for heavenly felicity in the sweet by and by, than some hypocritical professors who are so filled with venom that they are most ready to crucify any who would dare dispute the correctness of their theology.

AN ILLUSTRATION

The following incident illustrates the two characters. The one is a mean, narrow-minded persecuting spirit, the other broad enough to appreciate truth even though not of its own cult or clique.

It was in the month of December, of the year 1909, that the writer and Elder Hubert Case were conducting missionary services in the town of Arapaho, Oklahoma. Much ill-tempered talk was going the rounds among certain groups of church folk about the awful menace of the "Mormon" religion. Sinner tales of the danger of young girls being kidnaped and the like were indulged in, and the people warned to stay away from the meetings. This was by the narrow-minded, or malicious class, from which no community is entirely free.

There was an old man living there, a familiar person about town, of rather eccentric independence, having a manner peculiarly all his own, who was known as "Old Bob." He was skeptical upon religion, spoke his infidelity freely, and was so well acquainted with the knotty theological points of the Scriptures, and with the contradictory creeds of the churches, that he grew to be a formidable opponent to the preachers. It was said of him that he would attend the various revival meetings and ask the preachers in public such pointed and seemingly unanswerable questions that he would spoil the effect of the sermon, etc., and that thus he would delight to confuse the religious people whose teachings he considered as mere prattle.

As a sort of a champion against what this old man considered to be religious trashy inconsistencies, he of course had quite a following all his own. We were informed that his theological questions propounded in various meetings, revivals, etc., grew to make him an unwelcome personage in a revival service. And so "Old Bob" was a thorn in the flesh to several preachers, and welcome to stay away.

Some who seemed to think that the "Mormon" meetings should be interfered with in some way, by fair means or foul, remembering that "Old Bob" had been a sort of a disturbing element in several other meetings about town, conceived the idea that he was just the right man to question the "Mormon" religion in public, and put the missionaries to route. Accordingly Colonel Robert was urged to go up and hear the two new preachers, and on Tuesday night, December 7, 1909, Bob was there.

Seemingly imbued with the spirit of adventure, others who knew that Bob could be depended upon under such circumstances were there to see the fun. The meetings were in the opera house. Elder Case delivered the sermon that night, and took for his subject the matter touched upon in the foregoing part of this writing: The ultimate success of the work of Christ, the defeat of the Devil, the degrees of rewards and punishments, and the redemption of the race of mankind.

This subject being presented from a Latter Day Saint standpoint came with greater light and more power than some had ever heard it. At the close of the sermon the usual opportunity for questions or remarks from the audience was given. All eyes turned toward the champion of infidelity to see what would be the line of his attack. Expectancy pervaded the moment.

The invitation for questions was given the second time, and then an uneasy rustle ran through the audience as the colonel arose in response. The champion free thinker of the place who never failed to point out the weak spots in accepted theology when opportunity presented was coming into the arena against these "Mormon" intruders.

"Ladies and gentlemen," said the colonel, "it seems that 'Old Bob' is expected to say something just here, so I arise to have my say. I do not care to ask the speaker of the evening any questions, but I would like to make a few remarks."

He then proceeded with his remarks and summed them up as follows: "I will just say that I am now — years of age, and that discourse we have listened to to-night is the first gospel sermon I ever heard in my life." And the colonel resumed his seat. From that hour the gospel messengers had that broad-minded colonel's moral support and good will.

And now I ask: Are such men who make no profession of Christianity, yet who live honorable lives, worse than religionists who dispute each other's creeds and secretly hate their successful opponents? Surely not; for virtue, is virtue, whether found on Christian or on heathen ground; and true worth, as measured by God's own scale of value, will be the exact standard of judgment.

BREASTING OPPOSITION

(Synopsis of a sermon delivered by Elder O. R. Miller, at Hibbard, Indiana, amid a flood of opposition.)

The first sermon I delivered here, in the Evangelical Church building, proved to me that the people of this community were famishing for the genuine gospel message. However, it was soon apparent that those who had a monopoly on religion here would seriously object. You are all aware that some ministers at a recent quarterly meeting got their heads together and soon the building was ordered closed against us. We repaired to the school building, and now I hear that a movement is on to close that against us also.

In the face of it all, let me say that this people are hungering for truth, and shall be fed. They may close the school building, thinking that such a move will forever banish us from this part; but I want it understood, here and now, that the closing of every building in the town and community will only advertise our work, and if necessary, I shall go to the street and under heaven's blue dome these people shall hear that which priestcraft has feared, hated, and tried to destroy since its restoration, almost a century ago.

We fearlessly proclaim that the beautiful church which Jesus established when here in person, soon began to drift into apostasy, and ultimately produced, by wickedness, the darkest age that man has ever known—the midnight of the world! Finally a number of brave men began, one by one, to fearlessly denounce ruling priestcraft. A reformation was dreamed of! But not one of these reformers even claimed that he was directed by a revelation from heaven. They did their work nobly as far as human wisdom was concerned. They no doubt thought they were doing the best ever. We do not for a moment question their sincerity; but we remember that the wise man declared: "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Proverbs 16: 25). The way that seemeth right to each one differs from the plan of the other, and thus each leader goes his way with his little following, and the result is, "the ways of death." The tallow-dip answered its purpose in its time, but those who cling to such crude inventions in this age of enlightenment are a century behind the times—dead! and on their road to decay.

OLD WAY RESTORED

The gospel we teach is not a new gospel, but the old way restored. Electric achievements are not new in the true sense, but as ancient as time. Paul declared things that caused priestcraft to roar with indignation.

Then certain of the philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoics encountered him. And some said, What will this babbling say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods: because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection. And they took him, and brought him unto Areopagus, saying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is?—Acts 17: 18, 19.

Yes, it was new and strange to them because they were ignorant of truth. Your reverends as well as some others among you have heard us quote plenty of scripture to vindicate our theory, and at once the declaration has gone forth that we are using a "Mormon" Bible, when the fact is, I have used no other version than the one owned by your dear, dead mother. I have been using the Bible that many of you love (?) so much that you have thought it too sacred to open and read. The reason my quotations sound new and strange is because you are not acquainted with the contents of your book. So, while some of you have been free to charge me with dishonesty, I shall plainly state that the trouble has been caused by your lack of knowledge. You have allowed priestcraft to fog the film. It is a case of the blind leading the blind, and the destiny is the ditch.

I find that our opponents are good soldiers when it comes to "submarine warfare" or the use of the "dum-dums!"

A HALF-BAKED CAKE

Now, in order to be "up-to-date" I presume I had better take a text. It is simply a traditional habit, but here is my text—"Ephraim is a cake not turned" (Hosea 7: 8).

A newly married bride attempted to bake cakes for breakfast, and of course the smiling husband had to brag on them, whether they were good or not. The husband lived over it and went to work. The young wife went across the street to see her mother. The kind mother anxiously inquired as to how she got along with her first breakfast. She replied, "All right, excepting the cakes. They were not the best, for somehow they would not brown on top." She had failed to know the art of turning cakes. They were extremely brown on the bottom, but dough on top. They were like some folks—half baked!

All that I blame some of you for, is that you have allowed the reverends to do your thinking. Their authority is of men. They are sent by the vote of men, and are therefore teaching the traditions of men. You are not to blame altogether for being "half baked." They have failed to turn you over. In fact, they could not if they wanted to, for they have not been authorized.

Some of you hesitate about uniting with the church of Jesus Christ because you say you have been taken into the evangelical association or church. That is—you have been taken into the church, but not baptized yet. That within itself is one indication that the minister who took you in is not sent of God. If he were he would teach the things of God. He has failed to learn from his mother's "dear old Bible" that baptism is a door of entrance into the church. He no doubt has taken you into his society or church, but not the church of Jesus Christ.

STANDING FOR THE TRUTH

I have come here to tell you that as the sun of the restoration rises, all fragmentary Christianity will be melted from the deceptive clutch of priestcraft.

The Pharisees became offended because Jesus told them the truth, and the disciples seemed to think that he had possibly been a little harsh, but Jesus said: "Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up" (Matthew 15: 13). Paul said: "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel,"—he did not seek to please men!

I know I shall never grow rich by preaching the truth, and popularity is out of the question. But I am a Latter Day Saint because I like the sound of truth better than the glitter of gold; and I prize eternal life above worldly popularity. I have been sent of God to declare this message, and it is to him that I must answer. I have been misrepresented and lied about, while in this vicinity, right from the start, but I am not above my Master.

He was slandered and shamefully abused, and finally murdered by a cruel mob. He labored in the heat of the day with the sinners, and the Pharisees called him a wine bibber and a gluttonous man. Yes, his tired and blistered feet were pinioned to the tree; those hands that fed the hungry, blessed the babes, healed the sick, and raised the dead, were nailed to the cross; that brow that deserved a crown of glory at the hands of those he came to save was crowned with thorns; and that great and noble heart that "so loved the world" was pierced with the cruel spear! In the face of his noble example, I beg of you, men and women, to take up your cross and follow him.

RENOUNCING DOGMATISM

The poet has well said:

Though the world despise and leave me;
They have left my Savior too.
Human hearts and looks deceive me;
Thou art not like them untrue.

Go then earthly fame and treasure;
Come disaster, scorn and pain.
In thy service pain is pleasure;
In thy favor loss is gain.

That is what it means to renounce religious dogmatism and "half-baked," fragmentary Christianity. You may be pushed from the plush pew, but so was Jesus cast from the synagogues! Friends, and even relatives, may disown you for a time, but by your devotion to truth you may some day win them over.

A society miss once accepted Jesus as her Savior. Her father demanded that she should give up her "fanatical" belief or leave home immediately. The second time he came with his demand. She concluded to go, but she said: "Papa, before I go please come and listen to this hymn."

She played the piano and sang from the heart the above-quoted verses. As she finished, she expected to turn and look upon the stern countenance of her father, but instead, she saw a face wet with tears. And he said: "Mina, my child, if your religion means that much to you, stay at home and keep your religion."

She was willing to give up society, riches, and home, for the sweetest influence the world has ever known; and by her true devotion and steadfast faith, she led the family out from vain society to Christianity.

It is easy to drift with the world. Lifeless objects can go with the current, but it takes courageous strength to stem the tide, or row to the harbor above.

STEP OUT FEARLESSLY

People have said that we teach much scripture, but we are "Mormons." They tell you we are good preachers, but we are "Mormons"! They refuse to meet us in public discussion because they know we will turn the search light on their man-made creeds, but we are "Mormons"! Jesus said, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and we are ready for that test any time.

Some of you have told me that you had pictured in your minds Latter Day Saintism (nicknamed, "Mormonism") as a hideous monster. Since hearing the truth of the matter you have changed your minds.

I remember reading in one of my early school books a story about Harry and the guidepost. Harry came to the crossroads at night. He had often seen the old guidepost, but he had been listening to ghost stories, and that night the guidepost was transformed into a fearful giant. He could see the outstretched hands to take him by the hair! "Poor Harry felt his blood run cold at what before him stood." But upon gaining presence of mind he discovered it was only the old guidepost quietly pointing him homeward.

And so it goes, my friends, that which often seems our worst enemy proves to be our salvation.

Let the enemy howl and fill the air with dust, I am here to tell you that the gospel as taught by Latter Day Saints, if complied with, will conduct you safely to heaven's celestial glory. Are you willing to pay the price? May God help you to step out fearlessly for Christ and his saving grace.

COMPROMISING WITH THE WORLD

Ephraim mixed himself with idolatrous nations in order to gain strength, but failed to discern that therein was his weakness. Many people want to compromise with the world and religious error, and in doing so they partake of worldly things. They become, as the prophet said: "half baked" . . . "and as a silly dove."

We see some half-witted flip that likes to attract attention by flirtation or gaudy dress, and as she passes, some one remarks, "Ain't she (or he) a bird!" Some folks would rather "be a bird" with fine feathers than a human being with Christian graces. They imagine that everyone who looks at them is admiring them, when possibly the gazer is thinking, "What a fool!" Some fear persecution, when in fact our persecutors are to be pitied. You remember we once baptized some from another church and the critics said, "That's just like the 'Mormons'! They do not try to save the sinner, but are eternally proselyting from other churches." (I must confess that some of the chief sinners are in some church.)

ANSWERING CRITICS

Again we baptized and some of the candidates confessed to a wicked life, and the same critics said, "Just look at the class they are getting into their church!" Our critics seem to be troubled with the "foot and mouth disease,"—every time one opens his mouth he gets his foot in it! They think they see a "mote" in some one's eye, but fail to discover the beam in their own eye.

Some will go from here declaring that I am too harsh, but I am convinced that this is no time for soft-pedal work. If my language seems rigid to you an explanation might help: I was born in Egypt (Southern Illinois) and raised on corn-bread, biscuits, beans, "speckled sop," and greens. People down there are big-hearted, and friendly, but plain. They call a spade by its name and not—"a flat, sharp-pointed instrument, used for excavating"; therefore, my phrases may not be as flowery as you have heard drop from the lips of some of your "surgeons of divinity." But I am happy in the thought that you folks all know what I am talking about.

Some folks say I am insulting because I tell them that they have not fully come out from Babylon. They say that such talk proves that I am none of Christ's. Well, the Pharisees were full of religion, and bubbling over continually with self praise, and yet "dear kind Jesus" said, You Pharisees,—hypocrites! you strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. . . . You are whited sepulchers, filled with dead men's bones.

Some may say they are satisfied where they are and with the religion they have. Many spirits are abroad, and Paul says, "Try the spirits." God, through Isaiah, says, "To the law and to the testimony." If our consciences have been traditioned, they are not a true guide. That which brings a false contentment impedes progress, and discourages investigation—I do not hesitate to brand as traits in Protestantism inherited from mother Rome. The council you have received, asking you to stay away from our meetings, is akin to the thumb-screw, the rack, and the fagot of the Dark Ages. Some do not like me because of what I say. Jesus said to ancient faultfinders, You hate me because I tell you the truth.

PERFORM THE PART UNDONE

The young man went away sorrowing because Jesus told him wherein he lacked. He had done some mighty good things, but he was yet "lop-sided," and "half-baked"! Many of you people have lived noble lives, but have not yet become members of the church of Jesus Christ—that much you lack. Some have believed Jesus to be the Son of God, and that is more than the jailer had done. When he cried out in agony, "What shall I do to be saved?" Paul told him to believe. He had not yet complied with that principle, but had locked Paul and Silas up for even teaching it!

You are simply asked to do what you have not done. If you want a good rounded-out character—one that will stand the test of eternity—you must come into the church of Jesus Christ by complying with the plain and simple ordinances taught in his word. Then you are adopted children—in the brotherhood with the Christ, and by the help of his great church you go on to celestial glory. "Not everyone that sayeth Lord, Lord," not even everyone who becomes a member of the church, "but he that doeth the will of the Father" shall inherit celestial bliss.

May God help you to accept his word in spite of opposition and the scorn of those who know him not. Let him who will, come and partake of the water of life freely.

I thank you for your attention.

Of General Interest

WHICH CHURCHES ARE GROWING FASTEST?

The churches of the United States did not, after all, gain so many new members during the year 1915 as during the year previous. In that year—1914—they gained 782,000. In 1915 they gained only 653,000. These figures are compiled from the best available sources by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

They seem disappointing, but they furnish no real cause for anxiety on the part of church leaders. This fact will appear when we look at the figures of church membership for 1915 compared with the figures of 1890. From 1890 to 1915, during the space of a quarter century, the total membership of all churches in the United States increased at a rate of 91 per cent. It is a larger rate than is shown by the increase of the whole population of the country—very considerably larger. The number of church members has increased in the United States much faster than the number of inhabitants.

During that quarter century there were seven great religious organizations which increased at a rate greater than the average.

The Roman Catholic membership increased 125 per cent. The Lutheran Synodical Conference membership increased 130 per cent. The Lutheran General Synod membership increased 116 per cent. In these three cases it may be assumed that large numbers of members were added by immigration.

In the remaining four cases it does not seem that immigration needs to be considered. The Southern Presbyterian membership (white) increased 116 per cent. The Southern Baptist membership (white) increased 111 per cent. The Disciples of Christ membership increased 113 per cent. And the Episcopalian membership increased 96 per cent.

The increases in all the other really important organizations were less than the average—that is, less than 91 per cent; but in all cases they were more than thirty-seven per cent, and in most cases they were more than fifty.

One observes with special interest that the Latter-day Saints of Utah do not seem to be disappearing very fast. Their rate of increase from 1890 to 1915 was 77 per cent.

In the year 1915 there were just seven great churches which had reached a membership of more than 1,000,000. As follows:

Roman Catholic	14,079,000
Methodists (16 bodies put together)	7,472,000
Baptists (15 bodies)	6,307,000
Lutherans (21 bodies)	2,434,000
Presbyterians (12 bodies)	2,104,000
Disciples of Christ (2 bodies)	1,522,000
Episcopalians	1,051,000

The numerousness of the Disciples of Christ is astonishing. If a European should read American books and American newspapers he would most certainly conclude that there were ten times as many Episcopalians as Disciples among us. Yet the Disciples outnumber the Episcopalians by almost fifty per cent. The Episcopalians take a great deal more of the limelight than they numerically deserve.

There is a similar, but ever more astonishing disparity between prominence and numerousness in the cases of certain other religious groups.

The Quakers are known to every man and woman and child. Yet they number only 120,000.

The Christian Scientists get enormous attention from the whole world in print and in conversation. Yet their last statement of membership was only 85,000.

The Unitarians are an intellectual avalanche which Billy Sunday is holding back with his own shoulders from falling upon and shattering the Christian community. Yet, in the whole United States, the total number of Unitarians seems to be 70,542.

As usual, we are pleased to notice that there continue to be, apart from all other Christians, some 1,043 "Schwenkfelders." Schwenkfeld was a German Protestant preacher who lived at the time of Luther and who was more Protestant than Luther himself. He has no followers in his own land any more. He continues to have 1,043 in the United States.

Religion is broadening, and the mental interests of ministers are broadening with it. A few years ago music was hardly a popular pursuit among theological students. Now—to give just one instance of the change—the lectures of Mr. Clarence Dickinson at Union Theological Seminary on the history of music are packed—although attendance is voluntary.—Everybody's Magazine, March, 1916.

GOING HOME

There is no picture which touches the hearts of men more closely or tenderly than the figure of the tired man or woman going home at the end of the day. The fierce heat of the sun has passed, the intense high light of midday has softened into a restful glow, the strain of effort is over, and the passion of work has given place to the peace of deserted fields and streets. It was a normal instinct which sent the worker forth, eager and alert, in the morning; it is the response to a deep craving which sends him home at nightfall. The reward of labor is the rest which it achieves, and the joy of rest is the sense that it has been earned.

The alternation of day and night is a symbol of the order of life in which work and rest succeed one another in a beautiful and health-giving rhythm. The worker goes out of himself when he takes up his tools; he returns to himself when he lays them down at the end of the day. He pours out his vitality as the water pours out of a hidden spring; if he is a real worker and not a mere drudge, he gives himself in the toil of his hand and his brain, and when night falls his weariness is not mere fatigue of body, it is depletion of vitality. Before he can give himself again he must find himself; and when one goes home he finds himself.

To a vast multitude of men the thought of going home makes the heaviest burdens bearable, the most crushing responsibilities a spur to effort, the most complete surrender of ease and pleasure, not a sacrifice, but a price gladly paid for a happiness which is beyond price. The strain of the day is forgotten at the door which opens into the peace of perfect understanding, the pressure of hours and tasks is relaxed by the sound of a voice which is musical with love and faith and peace. In such a homecoming there is not only the supreme reward for the work of the day that is ended; there is also the renewal of strength and courage for the day that is to bring new strife and toil.

The joy of going home is not in the ease and comfort that are waiting there; it is in the peace that flows from love, the stillness that follows the tumult of storm, the clear atmosphere in which the dust of the highway is laid and the worker sees again the ends for which he is striving; in the quietness of such a home the toil of life is not only sweetened but its spiritual meaning shines clear again after the confusion of details has vanished. Under the heat and burden of the day the strongest man sometimes wonders if life means anything but prolonged strain of muscle and brain; in the stillness of home its blurred ends, its ultimate achievements, shine like the stars above the highway when the dust has been laid.

The home is not primarily a place for work, but for life; work lies below and beyond it, but the companionship which transforms a house into a home is a sharing of the rewards of work: freedom, repose, refreshment, vision. There are houses full of conveniences and luxuries in which no one is at home; the men and women who live in them are homeless. To such men and women, as to the men and women to whom marriage is a mere social contract and the family a mere social arrangement, there is no going home, no refuge for the spirit, no place of understanding and vision. There are no more pathetic figures in the world of to-day than these homeless men and women; restless, discontented, and unhappy, and utterly blind to the tragedy of a life in which there is no going home.—The Outlook, July 21, 1915.

Men deny the doctrine of trust, and feel less the duty of service in respect of money than of all other things. And if Christ could return and sit in judgment upon us, and show us the way of duty, the consecration of money would be the great thing, I believe, which he would strive to impress upon us; and if he could call us all before him with our coins, one of his most serious questions would be: "Whose image and superscription is this?" And as he saw them so generally stamped with the figures of pleasure and mammon, he would ask, in a tone that would search the secret places of our souls: "Where are those that have been rendered unto God by the good that they have done in the world?"—Starr King.

STORY-TELLERS' INSTITUTE

As a continuation of the work begun in the conferences of Monday and Tuesday there will be held two other similar meetings, following the convention, time to be announced before the close. This subject is of vital importance to all parents and ministers as well as teachers. All are invited to attend. The following is a tentative outline of the program to be followed at the two meetings.

FIRST MEETING

Subject: "The Bible the great source book for stories," with references also to Book of Mormon and Church History.

1. Building stories, "Solomon's temple."
2. Sacrificial stories, "Jephtha's daughter."
3. Mother stories, "The story of Samuel."
4. Deliverance stories, "Daniel."
5. Stories of love: "Judah's plea for his brother"; "Ruth and Naomi."

SECOND MEETING

Subject: "The Bible literature."

1. Narratives of the Bible, "David and Goliath."
2. Fables of the Bible, "Fable of the trees."
3. Allegory of the Bible, "Eightieth Psalm."
4. Poetry of the Bible, "David's lament."
5. Folk story, "Cain and Abel."
6. Parables, "The ewe lamb" and "The prodigal son."
7. Philosophical treatise on "Love." 1 Corinthians 13.

Superintendent's Report to Convention

Thirty-five per cent, a little over one third of the baptisms recorded during the past year were under the age of fifteen. This shows the fine opportunity lying at the door of the Sunday schools of the church—not the opportunity to do all the work of securing to the church its own natural increase, but the privilege of being a help to church and to parents upon whom the Lord has placed the major responsibility. Nor does the responsibility cease there. It has two phases: First, to prepare them for baptism; second, to hold them. We are more successful in the first than in the second.

The closest cooperation must exist between the home, branch and school if we are to accomplish this mission. The sentiment upon this is in evidence but the practical operation is only partially so. The fullest possible coordination in this respect has yet to be realized. This is one of the greatest needs of our work in behalf of the youth of the church.

The secretary's report will show that we are growing. There is an increased interest and activity over the whole association which is very gratifying.

During the early part of the year we devised a set of blanks for report of local to district superintendents and from district to general. These have been gratefully received and used by the majority, as many letters testify, while about ten per cent of district superintendents have not given the support they should. A still larger percentage of local superintendents failed to respond to the call of their district heads who have labored nobly. The information in these new reports reveals conditions not known before and will enable superintendents, district and general to plan more effectively for greater efficiency in every department.

CHRISTMAS OFFERING

Ten years ago when the association numbered 20,459 we made a "jubilee offering" of $5,742.06, or an average of 28 cents a member. Since then we have nearly doubled our number and also in exact ratio we have doubled our annual offering. The Blue Stepping Stones will show the last offering was $10,904.24 for a membership of 38,938, showing the very same average of 28 cents a member. We are pleased with the effort and it is a welcome gift to the church at a time when much needed. Yet there is a mathematical uniformity about it that we should not tolerate. We would like to see the association excel itself next Christmas and break the monotony by making it at least fifteen thousand. We can do it if we begin now to talk and plan for it in every school. Too many leave it till the last moment, and the offering does not represent as many as it should. "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." Above all, keep before the children the right motive when talking about the offering.

LESSONS

All lessons are written up to October, 1916. Our editors are laboring faithfully. We are not supplying the helps for teachers and side lights for pupils that are needed. And it will be impossible to furnish them until our lesson matter is made sufficiently permanent in text, and edited far enough ahead to permit of helps being prepared in time to be published. For this we must have manuscript in hand at least a year ahead. Then we could get persons of experience whose valuable service is not to be had at a few weeks' notice to prepare blackboard outlines, maps, pictures, notes on prophecy, archæology and pedagogy. We started behind schedule and have not yet caught up. The above only emphasizes the need of a definite course of study upon which to build permanent lesson material. That should be the settled policy of the association. Such is the present aim in writing a series of graded lessons.

The first three Quarterlies are edited to be taught in story form; and yet the association does practically nothing to teach or train teachers in the art of story-telling, the oldest of all methods of teaching. This must be said no longer. Having seen the light we must follow on. We plan to have more institute work on this important subject in the future. A course in this study will hereafter be offered through the normal department.

THE BUSINESS SIDE OF IT

So many of our schools are pursuing the hand-to-mouth policy of ordering lessons only by the quarter (one issue at a time), that we are unable to estimate accurately the number of Quarterlies to print, resulting either in running short or having too many on hand. The first is an annoyance to our patrons who accuse us of bad management, while the second is a loss to the association.

We are urging all schools to subscribe by the year, which is cheaper for them and it would enable us to estimate quite closely enough the size of each issue. In this effort, we crave the cooperation of every missionary as well as district and local officers in our effort to get the schools on to a better basis. Surely, where schools haven't funds ahead anyone would favor them with the loan of the amount necessary to pay for a year's supply.

During the year we have published as usual the five grades of Gospel Quarterly. The issue for April-June, 1916, we ordered as follows: Senior, 17,650; Intermediate, 7,100; Junior, 5,500; Primary, 5,800; Beginner, 5,650; total, 41,900. We have more than doubled the issue of Quarterlies in the last ten years. The increase has averaged 2,250 a year.

On March 18, after the second mailing of April-June issue, there remained of Senior, 3,620; Intermediate, 2,400; Junior, 950; Primary, 2,500; Beginner, 2,250. Our Junior list has grown in three years from nothing to over five thousand, which meant a readjustment of Intermediate list, and they have not yet settled down to normal. Far too many schools rush their orders in at the last moment, which is unfair to teachers, pupils, and publishers.

In this connection we wish to remind our patrons of a rule passed by the General Association that Quarterlies are payable in advance. The other method entails employment of bookkeepers, which would increase the cost of Quarterlies.

The revenue from these publications furnishes the sole support of the association. We do not need to appeal to the church for help nor make a levy on districts or schools. Our treasurer reports a fair balance notwithstanding administration expenses have been heavier than ever before.

During the year there have been a few requests from missionaries and home department superintendents to be supplied with Quarterlies devoid of references to Inspired Translation, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. They say they find it difficult to interest strangers to our faith in the lessons. To all such we have replied that much as we would like to do such missionary work through our Quarterlies, we feel we are obliged to stick to our own line of work. Our lessons are written primarily for our own people and their children. We must teach out of the three standard books. Until we have supplied all helps mentioned above we think the association would be inconsistent in launching a missionary Quarterly. We have advised in every case the use of the new series of "Angel Message Tracts," instead of the Quarterlies, until sufficient understanding has been instilled to create appreciation of our standard books.

DEPARTMENTS

The home department continues to be an important arm of service to the shut-ins, the Sunday laborer, the restoring of indifferent ones, and a large body of isolated Saints. Only the Master knows the full measure of service being done for the church through this department. It is worth the time and talent of any consecrated Latter Day Saint. If not consecrated, it will help to make them so.

We regret to say that library boards, district and local are reported from sixty per cent of districts as inactive. We have been hampered during the year by the want of leaflets of instruction. In some districts the conception of library work is a bookcase with books in it and some one to hold the key. Others are content on having appointed a member of the board.

Very little social purity work has been attempted under Sunday school auspices this year. We are advising caution in public efforts, as this work should be done by competent, trained persons.

Our normal superintendent has been doing good work. There is some difficulty in conducting the work through state superintendents, because the plan does not coincide with our district organization. A number of districts have appointed superintendents to boost the work, without any responsibility as to conducting examinations. The course of study has been revised, making a great improvement.

TRAINING WORKERS

Last July, the Northern Wisconsin district association appointed the superintendent and Elder J. W. McKnight, a committee to see what can be done toward establishing a summer training school for auxiliary workers at Lake Chetek, where the church has permanent buildings on one of the finest locations for summer meetings in the United States—fully as good as the site of the summer training school on Lake Geneva, established at great expense by the International Sunday School Association. When a body of workers ask for a training school, it is a sign that we cannot afford to ignore, since the need of training is one of the foremost we have to-day. Not training of teachers only; for teachers must have trained officers to lead them before our training plan is complete. We are constantly corresponding with officers who come to their work without previous experience. Of the two million Sunday school officers in America, very few have had any training. This applies also to more than six thousand officers in our own association.

While preparing to report on the above, we are impressed to urge upon your notice the need of something larger, and more general, and continuous in its scope than a local summer training school. We want and must have something centrally located that will give the whole church a constant supply of trained auxiliary workers.

OFFICE WORK

Our correspondence the past year has trebled that of the year previous, due in part to getting in touch with more workers, the activity of our secretary and the increased demand for information created by the new report blanks.

Cradle roll work has been growing faster than we could take care of it. To systematize that work we have devised temporary blanks which have brought us reports showing a field of work which can be made worth while to any Latter Day Saint. Sixty districts have reported cradle roll work in 262 schools, with more to hear from. Twenty out of the sixty districts have elected cradle roll superintendents who have been asking for instructions. This work needs a general officer to supervise it. We ask that amendments on this subject laid on the table two years ago be taken up and considered.

We have been seriously hampered at times when work was pressing by failure to secure stenographic help. Our office work does not require that help constantly but we find it hard to pick up help at the moment needed. If our association could make arrangements for part time service of help with some other department or auxiliary similarly situated, it would assist in prosecuting the work with greater efficiency and less worry and nerve waste. The correspondence is sure to increase.

As the magnitude of the work looms up full of problems we feel our limitations most keenly. Nevertheless, we have been blessed in our planning and have felt the leading of the good Spirit in much of our work, quite a lot of which was out among the following districts: Reunion work in Northern Wisconsin and North Dakota. Convention and all-week institute work in Chatham, London and Toronto districts of Canada; Eastern and Northern districts of Michigan; Chicago, Illinois, and Burlington, Iowa. It was while thus out that our correspondence ran almost hopelessly behind, and we did not secure the necessary help until lately.

We have much sympathy with the workers in war-stricken countries, where the ablest of their older scholars and officers have been taken from the churches and Sunday schools of all denominations. But the spirit of sacrifice and service is inspiring those who are left. Sunday schools were never more needed in those countries. We have heard nothing from the German schools. The workers in England partially organized an association intended to cover the whole of the British Isles Mission, where twenty-four branches support schools. We were asked to go over during the year and complete the organization and otherwise assist the workers, but our advisers thought it best not to go this year. We have done all we could in furnishing them supplies free and also Quarterlies to schools and home department members, unable to pay for them.

Advantages of Education

Having had for many years an interest in the education of both old and young, and especially the latter, I thought it might be profitable to HERALD readers to learn some of the facts that it has been my opportunity to obtain from authentic sources.

AFFECTING CRIME

I had heard it said that a large percentage of the prisoners in our various State prisons were college graduates, and I thought it best to get my information from those in connection with those institutions, so wrote to the wardens of the Fort Madison and Anamosa institutions, and from both received very courteous replies. I will quote from the one from Fort Madison:

"Could you see the men's faces as they march in or out of the chapel, you would see ignorance stamped upon the majority of them. A great many learn to read and write in our prison school. Some of the men realize the lack of education and are striving to make up all they can in our school and in correspondence schools. Our last biennial gives twelve per cent illiterate. (That means those who cannot read or write). Only about six per cent ever attended public school above the eighth grade; many only the sixth and seventh grades. Not over two per cent are college men, and some of these attended college only one or two years, some attended business college."

From Anamosa I learned that the warden had commenced his career of prison work when a boy of sixteen. He was an assistant teacher in the prison at Joliet, Illinois. He says:

"Since my own graduation from college I have been more or less burdened with the care and education of prisoners, especially during the past twenty-five years. I have found very few college graduates among the fifty-seven thousand prisoners I have handled. I think it would be entirely safe to say that not one per cent of the men who get into the penitentiary have ever attended college, and that a much less number have graduated."

From La Follett's, a magazine published in Wisconsin, I get what follows from the statement of Doctor Sleyster, the prison physician. In sixty-five years, three hundred and eleven prisoners received life sentences. Of that number two hundred and ninety-seven had committed murder.

"About a third of these men have never been to school; a half have reached the fourth grade; and but three per cent have finished high school. Nearly a quarter of those who attended school gave a record of truancy. Before the age of twelve was reached fifty-five and seven tenths per cent were at work—before fifteen years ninety and nine tenths per cent. A half have never learned a trade or become skilled in any line of work."

In 1915 in several Chicago daily papers appeared sensational articles in reference to immorality among Chicago high-school girls. Because of such serious charges an investigation was ordered, and the information gained was from the courts, the special function of which it is to deal with juvenile delinquency. Observations were made from the Chicago Tribune of the first week in December, 1915.

Judge Yhler of the morals court said no high-school girls had been in his court during 1915. The Beulah Home had fifteen high-school girls in twenty years. Miss Mary Bartelma of the juvenile court said of six hundred cases only six had ever been in a high school in Chicago. Doctor Clar P. Serppel of the juvenile court had examined one thousand, one hundred and thirteen girls for 1912-13-14; only ten had ever been in a high school. The Salvation Maternity Hospital had one hundred and eighty-five inmates; seventy of them became mothers, and only one had ever attended a Chicago high school.

It is only fair to assume that other high schools would make as good showing as the Chicago schools, and with the best of reasons that some might be better.

AFFECTING EARNING CAPACITY

In one of our daily papers last year appeared a report from an expert in his special line of work in which he said that the earning capacity of a man in forty years, who had been educated in a high school, was forty thousand dollars, while that of a common laborer who had not been to such a school was about eighteen thousand dollars in the same length of time.

What here follows is from a public document, and is well worth the consideration of every young man and woman and their parents.

"THE EDUCATION OF 10,000 SUCCESSFUL MEN"

("By William W. Smith, Chancellor of the Randolph-Macon System.")

"The editors of Who's Who in America, have rendered the country a service by inducing more than ten thousand of the men now living in the United States who are 'most notable in all departments of usefulness and reputable endeavor' to report their education. These men have won enviable distinction, and the facts they give will help answer the questions, 'Does education help one to success?' and 'What amount of school training helps most?'"

"According to the last census there are in the United States 14,794,403 males over thirty years old. The United States Bureau of Education estimates that these are divided educationally as follows:

"Class 1. Without education	1,757,023
"Class 2. With only common-school training or trained outside of organized schools	12,054,335
"Class 3. With regular high school training added	657,432
"Class 4. With college or higher education added	325,613

"Omitting the few persons under thirty years old, the report from 10,704 notables shows: Without education, none; self-taught, 24; home-taught, 278; with common-school training only, 1,066; with high-school training, 1,627; with college training, 7,709, of whom 6,129 were college graduates. This is:

"From the 1,757,023 of class 1 no notable reported. From the 12,054,335 of class 2 came 1,368, one for every 8,812, (24 of these report themselves as self-taught; 278 as privately taught). From the 657,432 of class 3 came 1,627, one for every 404. From the 325,613 of class 4 came 7,709, one for every 42. It thus appears:

"1. That from 1800 to 1870 the uneducated boy in the United States failed entirely to become so notable in any department of usefulness and reputable endeavor as to attract the attention of the Who's Who editors, and that only 24 self-taught men succeeded.

"2. That a boy with only a common-school education had, in round numbers, one chance in 9,000.

"3. That a high-school training increased this chance nearly twenty-two times.

"4. That college education added gave the young man about ten times the chance of a high-school boy and two hundred times the chance of the boy whose training stopped with the common school.

"5. That the A. B. graduate was preeminently successful, and that the self-educated man was inconspicuous.

"From the nature of the case it cannot be claimed that these classifications are exact, but they are based upon the fullest statistics ever obtained, and the necessary estimates have been made by Government experts. It is also doubtless true that other circumstances contributed to the success of these trained men; but after all reasonable allowances are made, the figures force the conclusion that the more school-training the American boy of that period had, the greater were his chances of distinction. How will it be in this century?

"It is unnecessary to extend this inquiry to woman. Education is practically her only door to eminence.

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF EDUCATION, "WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, March 22, 1904.

"The above estimates have been verified carefully in this office and are believed to be substantially correct.

"W. T. HARRIS, Commissioner."
EDWARD RANNIE.

MERRITT, BRITISH COLUMBIA, January 14, 1916.

Editors Herald: We are all enjoying good health. Though being located on a preemption in British Columbia, I find we can still be of benefit to our fellow men, and sow the good seed, which perchance may take root and bear fruit. Although isolated from the Saints and church privileges, we have the consolation of the Scriptures, if the requirements are complied with.

In a way it is a good place to rear a family in the ways of righteousness, as the contending power is not so great as in city or town. But we do not expect to stay here very long, as the winters are too long and cold, beginning about the first of November and lasting until April and even later, with the thermometer running from zero to forty below during January and February.

We are expecting the way to be opened for us to gather to Zion ere long. We find that through all our trials and tribulations the dark clouds have a silvery lining, in the hope of the gospel. This helps to strengthen our faith in Him who is all-wise and merciful to his erring children.

I sincerely hope that my future mission may be more important than the past, for the advancement of the Master's work. Realizing that the harvest is ripe and the laborers few, I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that the Lord will hasten the time when I can lift my voice in defense of this work, to the convincing of many of their error.

We would be very glad to hear from any of the Saints. We know of no Saints near Merritt, or Aspen Grove. Should any read this letter, we would be glad to hear from them.

In gospel bonds,
WILLIAM FOSTER.

WINDSOR, ONTARIO, January 16, 1916.

Editors Herald: I wish to say that the HERALD has been a great teacher for me. Many interesting letters are found in its pages.

We have been organized as a branch for two years, and the greater part of the Saints are alive. The good work is progressing in this territory. Elder Leslie Brown is our presiding elder. He is young in this ministry, yet is a willing worker. He has many times been blessed with the Master's Spirit. As a band of Saints, we are trying to let our light shine.

Our Sunday school and Religio are both live departments. All members are trying to do their work. Sister Nellie Hunter is a live secretary. I have endeavored to fill the place of superintendent of the Sunday school for the past year. I find much to do in trying to please all. I have always tried to be a helper. God has no use for a leaner. He wants those who are willing to make sacrifice. While I may not have made many, our heavenly Father knows our hearts. Holding the office of priest, and acting as presiding priest of the branch, I feel one cannot be too humble.

We meet with discouragements at times, yet I do not feel like turning back. Our heavenly Father has promised that he will not leave us alone if we put our trust in him. I can testify to the truthfulness of the latter-day gospel. I have received many evidences from time to time. Nine years ago I was sorely afflicted, and suffered much with rheumatism. Through prayer and the applying of olive oil, the Lord removed this affliction, and it has not returned, for which I feel very thankful.

I ever pray for God's people. I feel that I need the prayers of the Saints, that I may be able to fill the place our heavenly Father has given me to occupy in.

In faith,
A. H. BENNETT.

NORTHWOOD, IOWA, January 17, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have been in the church for eleven years. I have never regretted the step I took when I came into the true fold of Christ. I know this work is of God. I hope to hold out faithful to the end.

We are isolated from all church privileges. We are lonesome with no church to go to. We once lived at Wilburton, Oklahoma, where there was a branch.

I am glad that we live in an age when the true gospel can be preached again. My husband and I were members of the Baptist Church when we heard Brother Peter Adamson preach the truth. He baptized us. We have had our trials and troubles since we came into the church. We have had to give up three dear children. We are trying to live so we can meet them again, for we know that if we hold out faithful we shall see them.

We ask the prayers of the Saints that we may always be found doing what we can for this work. This is the only way to be saved, and it is my desire to live the gospel. If there are any Saints in Webb City, Missouri, and they read this letter, will they call and see my sister, Mrs. Jess Perry, 417 West John Street. My sister is not a member of the church.

Ever praying for God's people, I am,
Your sister,

LAURA PLUM.

LOGAN, IOWA, January 19, 1916.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the HERALD, especially the testimonies of our dear brothers and sisters, which are very strengthening to me.

I have been in this beautiful work two years last November, and can truthfully say these have been the happiest years I have ever spent.

Before I was baptized I had suffered for years with gallstones. I had not received much help from medical attendance. As I was going to the creek to be baptized, something seemed to say to me that if I would ask God to heal me I would receive a blessing. I asked for this blessing, and can say that I have had no trouble since.

I know our heavenly Father is ready to direct and bless us if we will only do our part. We have received help when we have called on the elders. I thank God for this gospel, and pray that I may ever be found faithful.

Your sister,
MRS. J. J. KILLPACK.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.

Editors Herald: Little do any of us who feel our weakness in any endeavor to speak of God's goodness know what we have done to further his cause until it comes to light in the great beyond where the books are opened. We long to praise him oftentimes in words we are unable to utter, then the blessed Spirit comes and gives us the language of expression. Let us not forget that Christ has said, If ye abide in me I will abide in you.

My thoughts go daily to the beautiful words of the Savior when he bade us follow him. He also said, "I am the way of truth and life." What more can we ask than the privilege of following our blessed Redeemer? We should never lose sight of the fact that he suffered for us that we might have life, and have it more abundantly. He said, Ye are my witnesses of these things. Behold, I send a promise of my Father unto you, but tarry ye until ye be endowed with power from on high. We are not our own, but have been bought with a price, therefore our whole ambition is to please our new Master.

Christ said we were his friends when we did whatever he said. It is a privilege to be his friend, for we are laborers together with God if we are interested and helping him in the things in which he is interested, and to carry out the plan of salvation.

Peter says we are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, the people of God. If we separate ourselves from the evils of the world, God will be a Father unto us, and we shall be his sons and daughters. If we suffer with Christ we shall also partake of his reward in heaven. Eternal life is ours if we will accept it. Let no one lose the pearl of great price in grasping for a handful of pretty pebbles.

There is a gospel highway leading forward to the goal,
There is a path that leads us onward to the home land of the soul.

Every hour we must be nearing, not a moment to delay,
We must find our home in Zion, in the good old-fashioned way.

In the paths of sinful pleasure we must never, never, stray,
And though the way be narrow, it is wide enough to-day.
It was wide enough for Moses and others in their day,
And we should be glad to follow, in the good old-fashioned way.

There is an old path that is brighter than any new can be,
So ask for the old path ever, and never from it stray.
God's glory shines about it, yes, all—all the day,
And will never be deserted if we will follow in his way.

Your sister,
MINNIE ROCKHOLD.

LITTLE WOODY, SASKATCHEWAN, January 24, 1916.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the letters in the HERALD. We often read letters from Saints whom we have known, and which call us back to former days, when we resolved to serve God and keep his commandments, and since when we may have allowed ourselves to drift and fall away from God.

I was baptized in September, 1901. I believe this to be the true church. In 1911 I moved to my homestead where I was located twenty-six miles from any of the Saints. For a long time I did not know there were any Saints even that near me. In 1912 I persuaded a family to move near me. There were three in this family. In June, 1912, I married a sister in the church. She had nine children, five of whom were Saints. After this I made a request in the HERALD for an elder to come, and Brother T. J. Jordan, of Viceroy, came to see us. Arrangements were made for meetings. An audience of sixteen to thirty-six attended.

E. R. Davis was sent to hold meetings. Five were baptized by Brother Jordan, two by Brother Darby. In 1915 seven more were baptized by Brother J. L. Mortimore. Brother S. M. Tomlinson, of Niagara Falls, was with us at a later time, for three weeks. Since he left we have had Religion home study.

The Saints have nearly all left now for the winter, but we hope spring will find them together with us again. We hope also that an elder will move here soon. I desire to learn more about the good work. In reading the letter in the HERALD from Brother E. R. Davis, I am reminded of the good work for each of us to do. I am a man of little learning. I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may be given wisdom.

Yours in bonds,
J. A. LOUCKS.

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA, January 28, 1916.

Editors Herald: We sit by the cheerful fire in the old brick fireplace, looking out of the window at the flakes of snow as they sail majestically downward to earth, already covered with a mantle of whiteness to the depth of about ten inches. This reminds me of Iowa, my native State, where cold and snow are common in winter. The little birds are perching on the window sill for the crumbs placed there for their benefit.

On account of the inclemency of the weather I have been confined to the house. We seat ourselves around the fireside and listen with rapt attention to the book, Beatrice Witherpoon. So interested are we in the ups and down of the heroine that we are loath to close the volume when the old clock strikes ten, and we must prepare to retire.

Some days ago during January one of our friends had occasion to remain over night with us, owing to the inclemency of the weather. He was a poor wayfarer, looking for employment. We gave him bed, supper and breakfast. In the course of the conversation he mentioned that he had been in Utah. I informed him of the difference between the two churches. He had not heard of any other people called Saints than those in Utah. He had been a Catholic, coming from the Emerald Isle. He listened attentively to the plan of salvation as taught by the Reorganization. He said he heard more Bible doctrine in our two hours' talk than he had heard in all his life before, and that he intended to investigate and would like to read our literature, some of which we promised to send him when he should be located.

A few nights ago, a neighbor, a fine young man, came to spend the night with us. He had not been a member of any church, and felt that he could not unite with any of which he knew. He asked about our church, etc. I explained our doctrine. He was so eager to learn more that we sat up until twelve o'clock, and when we were about to retire he said he could listen till morning. He will read our literature, and said he would become one with us ere long. His wife was a Catholic, but has left that church. He said he intended to bring her to see us, and desired me to explain the restored gospel to her as it was explained to him. He remarked that he had heard more Bible than he had heard in all his life before.

We have just received the Autumn Leaves and have read the last installment of "Joe Pine." We are anxiously awaiting to hear the outcome. Elder Yates' experience as a missionary is well worth the price of the Autumn Leaves.

We are doing what we can to advance the cause, but accomplish very little, as the minds of the people run in a different channel. We will talk about Nebuchadnezzar's image next Sunday.

Yours in bonds,
E. F. ADAMSON.

News from Missions

Spokane District

It is now March 6, and I have finished the year's work. Wife, babe and myself are in the depot at Newport, Washington waiting for the Oriental Limited, which is about ten hours late because of the big storm in the Cascade Mountains.

This has been a very pleasant year in the field. Peace has prevailed throughout the district. Two branches have been organized, four new openings effected, and nearly one hundred added to the church by baptism.

I spent nearly six weeks on our homestead in Montana last fall taking care of the crop, after which I brought my family out to this district with me for the winter. We located at Valley, Idaho, a beautiful little valley in the mountains. The Saints there were always mindful of our needs and supplied us with everything we needed to be comfortable, in the way of furniture, fuel and eatables. When the time came for us to break up housekeeping we had to tell the Saints several days before to stop bringing in things for us to eat, as we had more than we would be able to use. The Saints all rejoiced in caring for us, and we know that they were and will be rewarded for their kindness.

Early last spring Brother S. Andes, of Montana, spoke to me by the Spirit of prophecy, and I was told to go at once to the place that I had been planning on going to. Brother Andes knew nothing of the thoughts of my mind, only as the Spirit spoke to him. He told me to go at once, that I would be received with open arms, and that there would be a great work done there. He was at that time president of the Culbertson Branch in eastern Montana.

I had labored in the valley before. It seemed that it was most impossible to do anything there because of the spirit of indifference; but now that I had been spoken to I obeyed the call, and am glad to say that yesterday, the last day in the district this conference year, we organized a branch at that place, Valley, Idaho. Brother Omans, the district president, was with us and organized the branch. I have labored more at that one place than any other place in the district this year, and, as I was promised, the Saints received me with open arms, and the people were ready to hear the gospel.

The Baptist minister put out seven of Charles A. Shook's books, The True Origin of Mormon Polygamy. He did not have courage enough about him to meet the issue face to face before the people, and his unmanly attacks only helped to advertise our meetings until the house would fill for us. For himself, he killed his influence even with his own people.

As I wrote him: "This book of Shook's is similar to a book I have of Robert Ingersoll's, both attacking the prophets of God, using the same method, the principal difference being, Ingersoll attacks the prophets of several hundred years ago while Shook attacks the prophets of to-day. They have the same spirit and will have effect only on one class of people."

I had baptized twenty-eight there since spring, three have been ordained, and, as I before stated, a branch was organized there yesterday with about thirty-five charter members. How good it is, that God directs to-day in his work as he did in former days!

In answer to an earnest request, I visited Brother and Sister S. P. Harper, at Silcott, Washington, where we made a new opening and baptized three fine people, thanks to Brother and Sister Harper for their good, faithful lives.

I have made two trips to the Gifford Branch, baptized three there at one time and five another; also ordained Brother Peter Klaus to the office of priest, and Brother Dan Kent to the office of teacher. Brother Johnston, holding the office of elder, has moved there, which will prove a help for the branch, as Brother Johnston is a good humble man, and one who understands the work. Brother Aldrich has been faithful in service there, and though he is well advanced in years and has not had the advantages that many others have had, he has proven to be a man of God, and God has used him to his honor and glory. The Gifford Branch is in splendid condition in every way, and the Saints there are rejoicing in the work.

I made a new opening in Culatesac, Idaho, where I baptized two fine young men, and where many more are interested, including the mayor and his wife, the high-school professor and his wife, and several of the teachers. As several stated, "the brains of the town were in attendance."

The Methodist people were holding a series or revival at the same time, but only a few of their own people attended their meetings in preference to ours. A "Methodist 'Mormon' eater" was sent for, and on his appearance at the hall I read before him propositions for debate in which each of us was to affirm for six nights that the church he represented was in harmony with the New Testament church in organization, doctrine, gifts and blessings. He had not expected this, but signed the propositions with me before the people. The debate is to start the first Sunday night in June, next, and will continue for twelve nights.

I wish to mention in this connection our Brother and Sister Miller at Culatesac, who are trying to do what they can, and have done a great deal in talking the gospel. Sister Miller keeps the post office, and she never lets a chance go by to get in a word. She is very well posted and seems to be gifted in explaining the gospel.

We held a series at Couer d' Alene, Idaho, where we had a splendid interest but no baptisms, the only place in the district that we have not had baptisms this year where we have preached. Some could have been preached into the water by using "the personal persuasion" method, but we do not believe in this. Unless a person is ready of his own free will to ask for baptism, he ought not to be baptized. I have known some of our people to coax people into the church. Some of these who have been coaxed into the church have to be coaxed about every so often to keep them in the church.

Brother and Sister Hower and Brother Wing are working faithfully at Couer d' Alene, and have done good there by keeping the campfire blazing. Brother S. N. Gray has done some very good work there.

Brother and Sister L. E. Holmes, at Mansfield, Washington, are doing a good work, and have made it possible for us to hold a series there this winter. At the close of the meeting there we baptized three adults. A new opening.

We held forth at Spokane for two weeks with good interest, in spite of the bitter cold weather. Two were baptized. I might also state that a few days ago while passing through Spokane, I stopped over night, and while at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alvie Nice they asked me to baptize them. Of course this was happy news to me. We had been expecting for a long time to see them come in the church, but prior to that night they had never said a word to anyone about being ready. Others there are ready for baptism.

I am sorry that it becomes necessary for me to have to be out of the field at all, but I must be with my family a little while on the homestead; I will spend perhaps a month with them this spring and a month or six weeks next fall, but this is the last year on the homestead, and then I can have them with me in the district.

Saints, do not forget the big reunion to be held at or near Valley, Idaho, next June; start to plan on it now! Don't wait until the last minute. Begin to get ready now, and when the time comes you will be prepared. We expect a big time. Friends are coming from all directions; many are planning on driving autos. Letters even from the East say that some are planning on coming from there. Saints are coming from Idaho, Montana, Washington, Iowa, Missouri, Nevada and other places. This is our first reunion and we should have a patriarch, an apostle, a Sunday school and Religio field worker (if we can get them, and where there is a will there is a way, and we have the will) and other good speakers. There will be notices published later. Anyone who cares for advice about the reunion at any time may write to Brother A. G. Crum, Palouse, Washington, as he is the chairman of the reunion committee. He is a live wire in gospel lines and will be glad to serve you.

If the appointing powers see well to send me back to this district, I assure you I will be pleased, and we can look forward to the coming year with pleasure, knowing that there is to be a great work done. You will be pleased to know that we hold the banner for the Rocky Mountain Mission again this year, and that we are far ahead of last year.

Ever praying God to bless his great church, I am,

Your servant in service,

J. A. BRONSON.

Lamoni Stake

Since writing last I spent over two weeks at Hiteman. Conditions were adverse to the services, there being many sick, and the roads and walks being extremely icy, but judging from what I felt and heard I believe much good was done. Would have continued had the conditions been favorable in a material way, and feel that the invitations to return when conditions are more favorable should be complied with. I was generously remembered by the Saints, the greatest kindness was shown, and several marked evidences of God's power were experienced.

Here as at many other places there is the tendency to not want that said that corrects conditions socially. It is, as written by Brother Clyde F. Ellis of conditions in the island mission, the Saints "do not need so much emphasis of first principles, as teaching along social lines. That is the thing they do not desire." This is not true of the majority at Hiteman, for they seemed to desire the instruction necessary to help them to be on the way toward perfection.

From there I went to Avery, and found a welcome by the few Saints there, resting under the hospitable roof of Brother Angell, who is trying to keep the Saints looking towards better things, although greatly handicapped. He is spoken of favorably by all. Found our new brother of Frederick, Brother Reeves, rejoicing in the power of the gospel and the fact that he has received strength to keep himself free from the filthy habit of tobacco that enslaved him for so many years. He is zealous for the work, and is arranging for a series of meetings in the near future.

From there I went to Lamoni to attend the conference, and to look after business pertaining to the work of the seventy. I was present at the Wednesday evening prayer meeting, and found to my enjoyment that an improved condition spiritually appeared to be enjoyed, and this conclusion was affirmed during the late stake conference. I think I never saw a more devoted spirit to let God have his way, and to eliminate self. I know that I never saw this condition so fully prevailing at Lamoni, and this is the third year that I have been closely in touch with conditions there. God is surely prevailing with many, while a few are losing out by reason of trying to bring the world into the church, or into their church life. God wants full consecration to him and his law that leads to life.

I spent the 3d, 4th, and 5th inst., at Kent, occupying in the Christian church. Never have I been more generously treated by the members of that church both by their attendance, and their manifest interest in what was spoken. I was greatly blessed. The elders and trustees of the church there spoke very highly of the enjoyment they had received in listening to the preached word. By the consistent life of Brother James Kent, his wife and sisters, the only Saints there, there seemed to be but little prejudice. I was cared for by Mr. John Bowman and sister, and more could not have been done to make my stay and ministrations pleasant.

I thought to remain a few days at Creston, but revivals were being held in nearly every church, and it was thought inadvisable to make any effort for the present. Previous to going to Kent I preached two nights at a private house here, the home of Bro. John Baker, who with his wife are enjoying gospel life in their old age. The few Saints here are faithfully keeping up their Sunday school and Religio, and Brother George B. Hall has preached to their edification a few times. All the Saints speak well of his efforts.

On arriving home I found reports and correspondence piled high enough that it has taken me this week and will take a part of next to do what is required with it all. Never have I more fully enjoyed the guidance of the Spirit in the subject matter to be presented and in the presenting of it as during the last few weeks. My joy in service is increasing.

I am inclined to believe that Reverend Frank Crane of Chicago is right when he says being neither a pessimist nor an optimist is recommended as the best condition to be in to promote right doing and active service. He suggests that a "meliorist" is not paralyzed by either of the extremes, but is "one who believes that the important thing for him to believe is not some view about the purpose of destiny, but the truth about his own attitude towards things." Hence he believes that bad things can be bettered, and that he ought to help along. We are living in the times spoken of by the Savior, as recorded in Matthew 24, when iniquity shall abound, and the love of many shall wax cold. Also the times in which we live are portrayed by Paul, in 2 Timothy 3: 1-7, in which is found, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come."

Everything is not getting better, not even in the church, yet those who are maintaining their devotion and holding on to the "rod of iron," the word of God, and delighting in its security and safety, are growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, and the things that are befalling others who are falling or failing do not ill effect them; but they look with sadness upon such, and the Spirit of the Christ to try to lead from the error of their ways is becoming a greater joy to them, and greater consideration is being shown. Dominating and radical measures are being laid aside for the purpose of following the Master's instruction to his ministry to be ye, therefore, wise servants, and as harmless as doves. This is the spirit that God's children should cultivate and permit to abound in not only their ministrations to the world, but in their deliberations in conferences and business meetings, and in our homes—everywhere.

I see what to me purports to be too great an estimate put upon history of the reformers when they were in the spirit of persecuting those with whom they differed. There is enough written in the histories of the reformers as contrasted with the history written by those whom they thought to reform to guide us to conclusions that will be more in harmony with the prophetic utterances, and we as a people believe that that which is written by those who think to correct us and to bring about a reformation should not be taken without considering what we have to say about it. This is following the golden rule. From some utterances I have heard I fear that some have been inconsiderate of the writings of those who have written as conscientiously as did the reformers. By considering both we come more nearly to the truth. To love our enemies will not permit us to accept as truth everything that is said about them that is bad, and to accept nothing that is said about them that is good. This principle is what causes conditions that result in strife and contentions, and finally war.

There is seemingly of late a more prayerful consideration of the importance of the work done by our General Conferences on the part of the Saints. When it is known that what is done effects the whole world, greater consideration should be had, and our moderation should be known in all things said and done. Every Saint should feel the responsibility of supporting the servants of God in their quorum deliberations and council work, and both the servants and handmaidens in the work of the general sessions of the conference.

I feel very hopeful of the work of the coming conference. Day by day I am assured that God is qualifying those who are presiding over his church on earth for their great responsibilities.

In the one faith,

J. F. MINTUN.

They report further important gains in Armenia. They are bombarding the Turkish Black Sea port Trebizond, strongly defended. Russian forces have also entered Ispahan, the old capital of Persia. The British steamship Sea Serpent, and the Norwegian Kammish, have been sunk. On the 19th German seaplanes raided British coast towns, killing eleven and injuring about thirty. What is described as the greatest aerial battle of the war occurred recently when twenty-three allied aeroplanes raiding Mulhausen, Upper Alsace, were opposed by about the same number of German aircraft. It is announced that one fifth of the five million Serbs have met death during the war by sword, starvation and typhus.

Addresses

Elder J. F. Mintun's address till April will be 332 South Grand Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are requested for Sister Charlotte Crow, of Rockford, Illinois, who is afflicted with a tumor on her hip, and a sore resembling a cancer on the other limb. She is a very earnest Saint and a good worker, and should be remembered.

Died

MOTZ.—William C. Motz, born near Modale, Iowa, December 22, 1862; died at home of his brother, Jacob L. Motz, March 14, 1916. Baptized October 15, 1901. He was a faithful member of the church, and looked forward with a bright hope of a glorious resurrection. Survived by 2 brothers, George W., and Jacob L., 1 sister, Mrs. Mary E. Pratt, other relatives and a host of friends; father, mother, 2 brothers, 5 sisters having preceded him. Sermon by R. C. Chambers, interment in Calhoun Cemetery.

SACKFIELD.—Hannah J. Givens, born January 17, 1840, Sugar Creek, Pennsylvania; died March 5, 1916, Matherville, Illinois. Married John Sackfield, September 20, 1862, at Minersville, Illinois. To them were born 4 sons, 3 daughters. Baptized February 2, 1908, by Amos Berve, confirmed by J. S. Patterson and John Chisnall. She continued firm in the faith to the end. Survived by husband, 3 sons, George, Albert, and Edward, all of Matherville, Illinois, 1 daughter, Mrs. William Zarring, Albia, Iowa. Funeral by C. E. Willey, Saints' Hall, Matherville. Interment in near-by cemetery to await the resurrection of the just.

GIVENS.—John H. Givens, born September 1, 1825, Barnwell County, South Carolina; died March 10, 1916, at the home of his daughter at Fort Bayou, Mississippi. Came to Skipperville, Alabama, when 18 years of age. Married Martha J. Barfield, in 1845. To them were born 10 children. Baptized May 8, 1869, Santa Rosa County, Florida, by Isaac M. Beebe. Ordained an elder March 15, 1870, by C. G. Lamphear and Alex Kennedy. He was faithful, and gave his testimony at death. Leaves 4 children, many relatives and friends to mourn their loss. Funeral by A. G. Miller, interment in Fort Bayou Cemetery.

EWING.—Norman G. Ewing, born March 31, 1883, Eagleville, Missouri; crushed to death by the Lake Shore Railroad while on duty as switchman, March 15, 1916. Baptized July 18, 1915, by J. D. Stead, at Lansing, Michigan. Leaves wife, 2 children, father, 5 brothers, 3 sisters. Funeral at home of his father at Lansing, Michigan, by Elder Doty. Interment at Muir, Michigan. He was a devoted father, and a good man.

KIDWELL.—George Kidwell, born February 11, 1859, near Wetherford, Texas; died February 7, 1916, leaving wife, 1 son, 2 daughters. Though not a member of the church, he was a firm believer in the faith. Services from Methodist church by B. F. Pollard. Interment in English Cemetery.

BOTKINS.—W. J. Botkins, pioneer farmer of Harwood, North Dakota, died at his home February 20, 1916, aged 62 years. Services from the farm home by Reverend O. E. McCracken, of Fargo. Interment in Harwood Cemetery. The funeral was well attended by loyal friends. Though in ill health since last fall, the death of Brother Botkins came as the result of a paralytic stroke. About six weeks before his death, Brother Botkin's life was saddened by the death of his wife. Brother and Sister Botkins united with the church about 15 years ago, and were faithful to the end.

JECKLING.—Mary Ann Jeckling, born December 7, 1826, East Zora, Ontario; died February 1, 1916. Baptized July 26, 1886, Saint Marys, Ontario, by Samuel Brown. Had no relatives in the church. Lived with her daughter for many years prior to her death, her husband having preceded her. Although isolated from the church, she remained firm in the gospel covenant to the end. A few hours before her death she requested her daughter to have G. C. Tomlinson preach the funeral sermon at the home of the daughter. Interment at Saint Marys.

KNIGHT.—Jane Knight, born at King, Canada, August 6, 1835; died at Elmhurst, California, February 20, 1916. Baptized March 22, 1875, by D. S. Mills, Los Angeles, California, confirmed by Andrew Ames. Husband preceded her some years. Deceased leaves 4 sons, Ether, Charles, William, George, 5 daughters, Mrs. Hortense Brown, Mrs. Ella Randolph, Mrs. Henrietta Hoffman, Mrs. Phoebe Teale, Mrs. Cattie Thompson. Services from Oakland Church, attended by numerous friends, who expressed their sympathy by beautiful floral offerings. Sermon by C. A. Parkin, interment in Evergreen Cemetery, Oakland.

LILLEY.—Mary Helen Lilley, born March 2, 1857, Wethersfield, Ohio; died Des Moines, Iowa, February 23, 1916, after about 9 weeks of severe suffering, which she endured patiently. With parents moved to Braidwood, Illinois, in 1868. Married Joseph Lilley, February 17, 1869. To them were born 7 children. There survive, husband, sons, Charles, Joseph, E. B., daughter, Emma Sachrider, all of Des Moines; two brothers, Frank James, Colfax, Iowa, John James, Scranton, Iowa; 2 sisters, Mrs. Elizabeth Britton, of Illinois, Mrs. C. R. Johnson, Des Moines, other relatives and host of friends. Baptized April 29, 1880, Braidwood, Illinois, by J. S. Keir. Confirmed by Peter Dewlin and J. S. Keir. Was member Des Moines Branch about 25 years, taking an active part in church work. Was valiant in testimony. Was ready to go only for leaving her husband, saying that if it was God's will, for his sake she would like to remain. Was charter member of Des Moines Ladies' Aid, and when health permitted was present at their meetings. This society herewith submits words of condolence: "In the providence of God our beloved and esteemed coworker, Sister Ellen Lilley, has been removed from our midst. Sister Lilley was a faithful member of the Ladies' Aid of the Des Moines Branch of the Latter Day Saint Church for more than twenty-five years, and by her departure we lose a tireless and energetic worker. We, the members of the Ladies' Aid, hereby extend to the bereaved family our sincere sympathy, feeling assured that our sister has entered into that rest prepared by the Savior, having earned a just reward in the kingdom of our heavenly Father. Committee." Services February 27, Saints' church, Des Moines, about 400 being present. Sermon by J. M. Baker, assisted by E. E. Long.

WAYS TO LASTING PEACE.—By David Starr Jordan. The Bobbs Merrill Company, Indianapolis, Indiana. Price $1. The world longs for an end to war in lasting peace. Doctor David Starr Jordan, perhaps the most distinguished American pacifist, here analyzes and compares the noteworthy theories so far advanced to attain this much-desired end. Ways to Lasting Peace is a clear, compact, digested summary of the thought of the nations on this all-important subject. To this comparative study Doctor Jordan adds his own views. He defines peace as of three kinds: The peace of contentment, of which the dove is the symbol; the armed peace, which is a condition of balanced hatred—the watchful hyena; and the permanence of law—the guardian Saint Bernard. And to this last his hopes are bent.

MARXIAN SOCIALISM AND RELIGION.—By John Spargo. B. W. Huebsch, publisher, 225 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Price $1. In this work the eminent and popular exponent of Socialism, Mr. John Spargo, enters into a discussion of Marxian Socialism and its relationship to religion. A work that cannot fail to interest and benefit those who are interested in Socialism, whether as advocates or opponents, or merely as students. The author says: "After a careful analysis of religion, ending with a definition of religion which is entirely candid and free from the charge of evasiveness, I have carefully outlined the Marxian synthesis, with special emphasis upon the one doctrine in it which has been held by most Anti-Socialist writers, and some Socialist writers, to be incompatible with religious belief. I have tried to show that there is nothing in the Marxian theories, or in any of their necessary implications, which the essential principles of religion either explicitly or implicitly oppose or deny."

PHILOSOPHY OF MASONRY.—By Roscoe Pound, LL. D., professor of Jurisprudence in Harvard University, and deputy grand master of Masons in Massachusetts. The National Masonic Research Society, Anamosa, Iowa. Price 75 cents. This work is reprinted in book form from the columns of The Builder, there having been added an introduction and dedication by the author. Of the work the publishers say: "Clearly and concisely written, by an American scholar who is thoroughly familiar with his subject, this book deserves the title 'A Masonic classic.' The bibliography alone is worth the price of the book, and should be in the library of every Masonic student." This is the first book to be published by the National Masonic Research Society, located at Anamosa, Iowa. The objects of this society as outlined in its by-laws are: "(1) the collection, preservation and indexing of all materials of value in Masonic study; (2) the compilation of lists of names of Masons interested in distinct lines of Masonic study or activity, for the stimulation and guidance of Masonic intercourse; (3) the promotion and supervision of meetings of Masons for Masonic study and discussion, and the foundation and maintenance of a bureau of Masonic lectures; (4) the collection and circulation of data bearing upon distinct Masonic activities, such as plans and specifications for different kinds of Masonic buildings; systems for the financing of Masonic projects; the results of practical experience upon different phases of Masonic charity, and the like; (5) the foundation and management of funds for the financial aid of Masonic students and Masonic research; (6) the production and publication of courses of Masonic study; (7) the publication of books and pamphlets on Masonic subjects, and (8) the publication of a magazine devoted to the study and interpretation of the history, philosophy and purpose of the various rites, orders and degrees of Freemasonry."

THE FOUNDATION OF THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE.—By Herbert Adams Gibbons. The Century Company, 353 Fourth Avenue, New York City. Price, $3 net. An authoritative, and in many respects a new, view of the origins of the Turkish Empire. Covering the period 1300-1403, it deals with the four great rulers under whom Turkish rule was gradually consolidated: Osman, with whom a new race appeared in history; Orkhan, under whom the race became a nation and came into contact with the Western World; Murad, who laid the foundations of the Empire in Europe; and Bayezid, whose reign witnessed the passage of the Byzantine Empire into Turkish hands. It is the view of Mr. Gibbons that the Turks, far from being barbaric Asiatic invaders of Europe, ruthlessly destroying an effete Christian civilization, were, at the moment of their emergence, a new race formed by the fusion of elements already existing at the place of birth. The appearance of Islam was, in fact, greater than that of Christianity, and pagan and Christian alike, in their conversion to a new, fresh faith, joined in the formation of a new race and the establishment of one of the greatest empires the world has known.

SUNSHINE PARTIES

are every day affairs in the South in the Winter time--for when blizzards, slush and snow are quite the fashion in the North, balmy breezes, sunny skies, moonlit bays and tropical flowers are the fashion in the South. And those who pack their grips and go South at this time, reap rich rewards in health dividends and delightful recreation and return, realizing more than ever before, the real value of a winter vacation in that romantic, historic and beautiful land south of the Mason and Dixon Line.

The cost is low--perhaps not as much as you thought it would be. Come in and let's talk it over.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE STRAIGHT AND NARROW PATH

(Sermon by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa.)

Scripture reading: 1 Nephi 2: 48-63.

I wish to talk this morning on the philosophy of the straight and narrow path. My texts will be as follows:

Straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life.—Matthew 7: 23, I. T.

And I also beheld a straight and narrow path, which came along by the rod of iron, even to the tree by which I stood.—1 Nephi 2: 63.

The common expression that we use, the "straight and narrow path," probably is derived from this statement by the Master: "Straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life." It appears also in the text that I have read from the Book of Mormon.

The straight and narrow path. There is to me a deep significance in the terms as they are here used. Of course we understand that they are figurative. We could not literally apply the rules of geometry to moral questions, but the figurative application is very striking and harmonious.

STRAIGHT MEN AND CROOKED MEN

We habitually speak about anything that is honest, virtuous, and moral as being straight; and we speak about the individual who is honest and moral and virtuous as being a straight man. Sometimes we fall into the vernacular and say that he is a "mighty straight man." We vary it perhaps by saying that he is "square," or that he is "on the level."

On the other hand we habitually speak about things that are dishonest, ignoble, and evil as being crooked, and we say that such a man is "a crook." We speak about an aggregation of individuals of that character as a "bunch of crooks."

These expressions have divine sanction. I do not mean the slang expressions, but the figure or simile is sanctioned in the word of God. For instance, speaking about God in the Book of Covenants, it is said: "For God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight."—Doctrine and Covenants 2: 1.

A GODLY MAN

God is the preeminent type of straightforward rectitude. Not for any consideration does he deviate morally, either to the right hand or to the left. He is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever.

A Godlike man is one who, like his Creator, pursues a straightforward walk; who on moral questions does not change to the right nor to the left. He is not tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine and swayed by every breeze of circumstance.

When we wish to pay a high compliment to some one, we say, "I like that man because he is always the same. You can always tell where to find him."

We do not mean that he never changes his mind. If he changes it, however, it is to abandon error and take up truth, which leads him in a straightforward course; and he takes his stand on the principle of truth and does not change from day to day. Like God, to the extent of his ability, he moves forward, and we can depend on him.

But unfortunately men of the reverse type are not so inclined. Hence we read: "The way of peace they know not; and there is no judgment in their goings: they have made them crooked paths; whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace."—Isaiah 59: 8.

"A PATH NOT KNOWN TO ANY FOWL."

The path of the righteous man is of a different character:

"The path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."—Proverbs 4: 18.

Heavy the shadows stray
Along the narrow way;
But, like a ray of light,
The path itself is bright
And leads to day.

The Psalmist says, in the 23d Psalm: "He leadeth me in paths of righteousness for his name's sake."

The poet Bryant, one evening watching the flight of a wild fowl across the sky, was moved to write his wonderful poem, "A hymn to a waterfowl." He begins it like this:

Whither, midst falling dew,
While glow the heavens with the last steps of day,
Far, through their rosy depths, dost thou pursue
Thy solitary way?

And he concludes it with this verse:

He who, from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone
Will lead my steps aright.

Another poet and philosopher who lived in centuries gone by also must have watched the flight of the waterfowls in the evening sky. He has recorded in one of his verses:

"There is a path that no fowl knoweth: and which the vulture's eye hath not seen: the lion's whelps have not trodden it."—Job 28: 7, 8.

He realized, like Bryant, that though God shall guide the flight of the waterfowl in unseen paths from zone to zone, there is a higher path that is not known by beast or bird, the path of rectitude and righteousness; and God guides the feet of his Saints along that path—the straight and narrow way. "He leadeth me in paths of righteousness for his name's sake."

THE SHORTEST DISTANCE

Do you know the scientific definition of a straight line? The shortest distance between two given points. If you draw a line on the map from New York City to San Francisco so that it will cover the shortest possible distance, it will be absolutely straight.

The straight and narrow path is the shortest possible distance between man and God; between imperfection and perfection; between the sinner and redemption; between the place where we now stand and celestial glory in everlasting kingdom of God.

That is why it is called the straight and narrow path. But paradoxical as it may seem, the crooked path leads straight to hell. And so we say that when a man is traversing the crooked road morally, that he is "going straight to hell." For such men "the longest way around is the nearest way home."

Now I must confess that I like the straight course in all things. If a man has anything to say to me I like to have him say it. If he has a sermon to preach I like to have him go right to the subject and say what he has to say and then quit. And if he is going to try to live the life of a Latter Day Saint I like to see him go ahead and live it and not spend half his time flirting with the world and so have to stand up in prayer meeting every week and say, "I have made many crooked paths."

WHY CALLED NARROW

I wonder what there is in the expression "the narrow way." What is the philosophy of that thought? Does it mean that the path of righteousness is narrow, pharisaical, creedbound? I do not believe it.

It includes all truth. It includes all legitimate pleasure. The Book of Mormon tells us that man is that he might have joy. It includes all profitable learning. We are told that we should study all good books. But is a narrow path in the sense that it excludes a great deal that the world accepts. It does not embrace anything that is wrong; it shuts out evil of every nature.

You know there are a great many liberal-minded, advanced thinkers, so-called, in the world, and the essence of their philosophy is simply this: "Whatever I want to do is right."

We read in the Book of Covenants where it is said that a certain class will not abide the law, but choose to become a law unto themselves; and so we find all kinds of evil in the world countenanced by individuals who feel that because they have an impulse to do a certain thing, that impulse must be natural and right and ought to be gratified.

A little while ago in Chicago a young girl not yet twenty years of age and a married man about forty years old, with a family, became infatuated. They sanctioned and cultivated that infatuation, and the result was that the man killed himself and his wife and two relatives. The poor girl, imprisoned, disgraced, in tears, was asked how she justified her criminal intercourse with this married man. Her only answer was, "We loved each other so much. It could not have been wrong. If he had only lived we would have been so happy."

She did not realize that a crooked path never leads to happiness. He followed the path to its legitimate conclusion.

The straight and narrow path is narrow in the sense that the wandering feet of those who are a law to themselves can never follow it. That is the only sense that I see in which it is narrow.

The Apostle Paul says that we are not our own. We have been bought with a price. We cannot do as the world does. We must follow a more straight and narrow path, to celestial glory.

RANDOM PATHS ALWAYS CROOKED

I wonder how it happened—no it did not happen—I wonder why it is that this is a straight path.

Did you ever see a path that was struck out by man or beast at random that was straight? I never did. Men and animals always strike out a crooked path when they go at random.

As a boy I lived on the unbroken prairies. I never saw a stage line or a trail made by any man or animal that was straight. I have been in the forest primeval where we saw the tracks of the mountain lion and the deer, and I never saw there a straight trail.

If you ever saw a straight road, an absolutely straight path, or street, you may know that it has been struck out with care and with thought, and with the aid of instruments of precision, towards a pre-determined goal. That is true about roads, either ancient or modern. The most celebrated road of all history, the Appian Way, leading south from Rome, built three hundred years before Christ, for many miles pursues on almost straight courses over mountains and through swamps. That ancient road did not just happen to be straight. The Romans built it with care.

The Lincoln Highway across the United States, wherever it follows a straight course, does so because some surveyor with care and with instruments of precision marked out the way over which that trail was to follow.

Paths laid out at random are always crooked. Last year after we had completed the high school building here in Lamoni, and leveled up the campus, the first man across that campus had a smooth, unobstructed course, but he went across it making a trail as crooked as a serpent; others followed him, and in a week's time there was a crooked path that probably would be there yet if we had not leveled up the campus again.

The path laid out at random is always crooked. The life lived at random is always a crooked life.

The straight and narrow path is straight because God laid it down with care. It is in harmony with divine wisdom; and the principles of the gospel cannot be changed or removed except at the expense of a crooked trail.

And so with those who try to walk the straight and narrow path. It requires thought. It requires courage and conviction to pursue its course. We cannot go dodging around every little obstacle. We cannot go wandering to and fro.

The individual who lives a straight life does not alter and from day to day determine his course by circumstances that arise. He lives in harmony with divine principles that are eternal. His course is pre-determined and every day he follows it in harmony with the divine plan. That is the philosophy of the straight and narrow path.

OUR GUIDES

We must have certain guides, and those guides must not be changeable. It is said that the main street of one of our eastern cities was laid out along an old cow trail. Hence its main street to-day is crooked. A poet, presuming that this trail was first struck out by a wandering calf, has written a poem about it, and he says that "men for two centuries and a half, followed the footsteps of that calf." This was not a "calf," but an old-fashioned Yankee "caff"—it had to be to rhyme with "two centuries and a half."

Human beings are prone to follow a crooked trail when they have a wandering guide or follow their own erring heart, or the course struck out by some other erring heart. We need divine, unchangeable guides.

The most important of these guides perhaps is that which Nephi mentions in his vision. He says he saw right along the side of this straight and narrow path a rod of iron that led to the tree of life whose fruit was whiter and sweeter than any other fruit. And he tells us that rod of iron was the word of God. Those who clung to it came at last to the tree of life, but those who loosened their hold, wandered off into many crooked paths, and some of those who looked up and saw the world scoffing at them, became ashamed and turned aside.

The word of God should be our guide, our instrument of precision, our surveyor's compass, helping us to lay out a straight course along the journey of life.

A LANTERN IN MY HAND

The Spirit of God also is a guide, a most essential guide, because it is to guide us into all truth..

The way may be long, it may seem perilous, and hard to follow, but it is the only path of peace and of joy, and it is the only path that does not lead into darkness, sorrow, and death.

I will conclude with a verse from one of our modern poets, Joyce Kilmer, who says:

Because the road was steep and long
And through a dark and lonely land,
God set upon my lips a song
And put a lantern in my hand.

JAMES MOLER PASSES

We are made sad in chronicling the demise of Elder James Moler, which occurred at Creola, Ohio, March 23. The absence from the office of both the Editor and Assistant Editor on other church work accounts for failure to note in the HERALD of last week, the passing of our friend and brother.

Brother Moler died of cerebral hemorrhage, following a second stroke of paralysis. The funeral services and interment were at Creola, the 26th, the sermon being preached by Elder A. B. Kirkendall, a long-time friend of the deceased.

Elder James Moler was a clean man, and one diligent in service. He represented the church for many years as a traveling missionary, in a manner to bring honor to his memory and to the cause he so dearly loved. Full of years and laden with many sheaves, he passed to the rest and reward of the faithful.

The HERALD joins the many friends of the family in extending sympathy in the hour of sadness incident to the separation, and expresses with all the encouragement that it is only for a season.

J. F. GARVER.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

IS THIS THE LIMIT?—In the Apostolic Review for January 25, Elder Daniel Sommer, of the no-organ Christian Church, complains of the influence of certain Southern ministers of that faith, who seem to have gone West to grow up with the country. He says:

Some of the hobbyists there have gone as far as to contend for communing only at night, and that a woman should pray only when she can place an artificial covering on her head. With this view some of them propped up a woman, supposed to be dying, and forced a bonnet on her head in order that she might have the privilege of praying before her death. This may seem to be the limit, but we are liable to be surprised by other technical notions advocated by such men.

This might indeed, be reasonably considered as the limit for even these men, misled as they are. But, while it might shock Mr. Sommer, we would not be surprised at most anything from them—considering the start they have had.

Hymns and Poems

(SELECTED AND ORIGINAL)

Faith, Hope, and Charity

There are three lessons I would write;
Three words as with a burning pen,
In tracing of eternal light
Upon the hearts of men:

Have hope. Though clouds environ now,
And gladness hides her face in scorn,
Put thou the shadow from thy brow,
No night but hath its morn.

Have faith. Where'er thy bark is driven,
The calm's disport, the tempest's mirth
Knows this—God rules the hosts of heaven,
The inhabitants of earth.

Have love. Not love alone for one,
But men, as men, thy brothers call,
And scatter, like the circling sun,
Thy charities on all.

Thus grave these lessons on thy soul—
Hope, faith, and love—and thou shall find
Strength when life's surges rudest roll,
Light when thou else were blind.

—From the German of Schiller.

Meeting of the Waters

There is not in the wide world a valley so sweet
As that vale, in whose bosom the bright waters meet;
Oh, the last rays of feeling and life must depart
Ere the bloom of that valley shall fade from my heart!

Yet it was not that Nature had shed o'er the scene
Her purest of crystal and brightest of green;
'Twas not the soft magic of streamlet or hill—
Oh, no, it was something more exquisite still.

'Twas that friends, the beloved of my bosom, were near,
Who made every dear scene of enchantment more dear,
And who felt how the best charms of Nature improve
When we see them reflected from books we love.

Sweet Vale of Avoca! how calm could I rest
In the bosom of shade, with the friends I love best;
Where the storms that we feel in this cold world should cease,
And our hearts, like thy waters, be mingled in peace.
—Thomas Moore.

The Savior's Love

There is no love like the Savior's love
As he tenderly watches his own,
And those who have tasted its sweetness know
They tread not their pathway alone.
But all through the storms and the darkest nights
Of the weary and troublesome way,
His rod and his staff they are comforting still
To all who will trust and obey.

There is no love like the Savior's love,
As he blesses his children dear;
No doubts beset them, no fears annoy,
When they to his voice give ear.
E'en though through the vale of the shadow of death,
In the distance they hear its call,
They may safely follow its leading there,
No evil shall ever befall.

There is no love like the Savior's love,
As he gently leads the way
To the pastures green and the waters clear
Where the soul may rest each day;
And happy are they who have walked along
In the paths that his feet have trod.
Sure goodness and mercy shall follow them on,
They shall dwell in the house of God.

There is no love like the Savior's love,
As he filleth their cup of bliss,
With joy and gladness their hearts o'erflow,
What marvelous bounty this!
Though foes pursue, their souls are fed
From the storehouse of his love,
And choicest blessings crown each head

BY MEN AND EDUCATION

What I say unto one I say unto all: Pray always, lest that wicked one have power in you, and remove you out of your place. . . . And verily I say unto you, that it is my will that you should hasten . . . to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 8-12.

Probably there is nowhere to be found in the written word a statement bearing stronger relation to the present needs of the church than this text. It was directed to the ministry in particular, and to the church in general, over eighty-two years ago: To those who wanted to know how to accomplish "the salvation of Zion." Here was the answer, and it is still applicable: "It is my will that you should hasten . . . to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man."

When we look at the signs of the times, at the carnage in the most highly civilized portions of earth, and think of the purpose Zion is to serve, have we longer time to wait?

Should we not hail with joy the Graceland Extension Institute, calculated in its nature to help us obtain this knowledge? This is said to be "the hastening time," and the Lord tells us it is his will that we should hasten.

We are pleased to read so much in the HERALD recently in favor of a better educated ministry, and highly pleased that the time has come that the appointing powers have better educated men to select our missionaries from.

A KNOWLEDGE OF LAWS

It is possible that it would hasten the salvation of Zion if we first obtain a knowledge of ancient countries and kingdoms; but all nature protests that development begins at home, commences within and grows outward; first, set our own house in order, as commanded in a former part of this revelation, and this will require a knowledge of the laws by which we are at present governed.

Therefore the quickest way, in fact the only way we can bring the salvation of Zion, is to hasten and obtain a knowledge of our own country, and the laws by which we are governed, diligently comparing them with the laws of God, and acting according to our knowledge.

A knowledge of our country, our schools, our language, our grammar, our most wonderful resources, will fill us with gratitude to God "for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and the fullness thereof and for the good will of Him that dwelt in the bush."

Moses' description of Joseph's land, includes God's loving watchcare over us; oil, gas, coal, wood, air, and electricity for fuel, and light and power; all kinds of fruits, vegetables, cereals, flocks and herds, cotton and silk for raiment and food; all kinds of minerals, our mighty forests, and quarries for building, for the development of our homes, and art and science. Our astonishing inventive genius and our tremendous exports all conspire to awaken our gratitude that we have plenty for all, and an abundance to spare.

And then a knowledge of the laws of man by which we are at present governed will acquaint us with the exact cause of the squalor of poverty, and of actual starvation in this overflowing land of plenty. We will know why so many millions of our able-bodied working men, anxious to earn honorable livings, are idle; why nearly two millions of our children are crowded into our mines, mills and factories, being denied the benefits of our free schools; and why over five millions of our people over ten years old are without a knowledge of letters, over one million of these being native born whites.

What percentage of graduates from our colleges become acquainted with the laws that make this possible? Will it not be necessary for these colleges to add another course to their numerous studies ere their graduates can be made familiar with modern methods of business? [Every good college now has courses in economics, sociology, banking, etc.—EDITORS.]

I wonder what percentage of them can explain how it is that according to the reports of the controller of currency, and the sworn statements of the bankers in the United States, they have on deposit many times the total amount of money in existence in our country? And then how they manage to collect interest on fourteen times the total amount of money actually in their banks?

Ere we become acquainted with all these laws, we will have traced the payment of this monstrous sum of usury direct to the consumers, and the rapidly increasing cost of living will no longer be a mystery to us. And not until we become acquainted with them can we compare and contrast them with the laws of God, the blessed gospel of love and cooperation, which when adopted will bring a sure remedy—a permanent relief, the salvation of Zion.

I know how unpopular and how unbecoming it sounds to a nonthinking patriotic people, when we talk of an education that will place us in opposition to the moneyed interests. But a tithe has not been told about the frightful conditions that actually exist, and are rapidly growing worse. Year by year the percentage of owners of homes decreases; the number of men who cannot find work, and the number of children in the cotton and beet fields and in the mines increase. These conditions are made possible by the laws of man, and God commands us to hasten and obtain a knowledge of these laws. What are we going to do about it?

MEN

It has been well said that the crying need of the church is men who think more of truth and of humanity than of money; whose honor cannot be bought with gold, or anything that glitters. Men good and great and strong enough to say "Get thee behind me Satan."

Now I do not believe one dissenting voice can be found in this church to this known truth. It is this kind of men that the church needs, and the writer fully believes that taking our ministry as a whole, we have just this kind of men at heart. He believes that God made no mistake in his choice of men with which to "thrash the nations;" and that whatever lack of qualification there may be in these men at present, it will be made up just as soon as they learn how far and how rapidly the laws of our nation are drifting from the spirit and letter of our grand old constitution.

It is natural that a variety of opinions should develop relative to the course our great men should follow.

AGITATION

As intimated above, some of us may not like agitation; but stagnant water breeds filth, miasma, infection and death, while violent agitation soon purifies it. Stop the agitation of our atmosphere, and animal life would soon become extinct. Stay the agitation of our blood and instant death ensues.

Emanuel Julius has said, "Agitation is life itself."

When societies or churches or nations throttle agitation, they commit suicide.

God sent prophets to ancient Israel who stirred things to their depth, and thus prolonged the life of that stubborn nation many years; but when Israel stopped agitation by destroying the prophets, their national life suddenly ceased.

Jesus upset the tables of the greedy money changers, and scored national corruption to its tender core.

The restoration of the gospel in latter days not only agitated the religious world, but social and political waves were tossed mountain high and lashed into angry spray.

EFFECT OF KNOWLEDGE

What effect will it have on our lives when we comply with this urgent command, and obtain the knowledge required? What effect will it have on the salvation of Zion? We will have learned that we cannot anoint ourselves with the unction of the world, smoothly glide along in neutral ways, and follow the pattern of the Man of Galilee, who aligned himself with the interests of the working class.

When we really look into the class legislation that is pauperizing the nation, our righteous indignation will burn the silence out of our souls until we will find ourselves crying out again at it from the rooftops. We will no longer be able to hold our peace and persuade ourselves that we are stepping in the footprints of him who preached the sermon on the mount. The education that God commands us to hasten and obtain will find out for us our place in the greatest class struggle this nation has ever seen.

We will be made to realize as never before that "the love of money is the root of all evil"; and seeing the enormity of the ways of the world, we will be prepared to lay our hands to the task of redeeming Zion.

If I succor and abet these crimes by refusing to cry out against them, am I not accessory to them?

When calling upon these guilty ones to repent, it may not be necessary for us to say to them, "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers: How can ye escape the damnation of hell?" It may not be needful for us to follow the example of the immaculate One in his sermon on the mount, at all times, or even a majority of the time; but a minister whose education is deficient along these lines, who studiously avoids referring to these high crimes, or who does not feel led to speak in defense of the oppressed, gives much greater cause for offense than one whose pronunciation is not always exact.

TO ILLUSTRATE

Let us suppose the following to have been true:

A missionary without a knowledge of grammar chanced upon a certain place. The Holy Spirit fired him to commence preaching to whomever would listen, at any time, or in any place, and he was soon preaching to goodly crowds in a well-furnished hall, and made warm friends to the cause. We think he could have done more good with a "finished education." It so happened that such an one followed him, and was greeted with a full house the first night, and in his effort to get next to the workers he exhorted them to be manly enough to avoid strikes, and to arbitrate their differences, etc.

Suppose the following report was handed into the next labor union meeting: "The new minister is genteelly educated; he is a polished orator, a clever reasoner, but wickedly ignorant of the decision of the supreme court of his own district as touching arbitration." And presto! the good brother was left with mostly empty seats to talk to, and no one took the pains to tell him why.

Suppose another minister, thought to be as nearly faultless in diction and grammar as careful training could make him, delivered a Fourth of July oration in a new place, using Lincoln as his hero. He was drawn out in open conversation on the subject of money. We next listen to the running conversation of a bunch of coal miners, standing in the genial evening sun, returning from their work.

"What's your opinion boys, about the new preacher?"

Answer, number one, "Slick as a greased eel."

Number two, "I never listened to a better speaker," etc.

"Jack! tell us about it. Jack? Jacky, me boy, come Jack," came the solicitous calls from half a dozen mouths.

"My opinion of the gentleman," said Jack, "is that he is either ignorant or vicious. And it is not for me to say which. He used Lincoln as his hero, and he either does not know a thing about the greatest exemplary lesson that martyr ever gave to his country about legal money, or he was too viciously mean to tell us about it. In either event he is born of Babylon the great, his naval string not separated from the gilded institutions of the day," etc.

As the sun kissed the snow-capped crest, and the men moved toward their bath, one said, "We will go a long way before we find a better educated man than our speaker Jack."

In this day of great organizations, with their numerous committees, and the class line at a terrible tension, it is not strange that a slight discordant note, a slight remark, or an apparent lack of education along the lines of the class struggle may give offense to whole communities. The quicker we recognize these existing conditions and school ourselves for the emergency, the sooner will Zion arise and shine.

A TWO-EDGED SWORD

Under proper circumstances, when conditions demand it, and we feel that infinite urge impelling us to deal with our national crimes without gloves, we should be sure to stay within proper bounds, and deal strictly with principles, not with individuals. And then if we are severely rebuked for having "confessed other people's sins," if we are called "muck-rakers," "calamity howlers," "faultfinders," "treasonable," etc., we will find ample support by knowing that these pet terms are more applicable to Jesus and his sermon on the mount than to us. We will find strength in the calm assurance of the Holy Spirit, and modern revelation will be our bulwark and our rampart.

There comes a time in the life of every missionary

(if properly educated) when meek, silent submission to great wrongs heaped upon the masses ceases to be a virtue, for God has said:

For verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated; and the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the house-tops; and their secret acts shall be revealed; and the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days, and they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them.—From the Lord's preface to Doctrine and Covenants.

Go ye forth . . . reproving the world, in righteousness, of all their unrighteous and ungodly deeds, setting forth clearly and understandingly the desolation of abomination in the last days; for with you, saith the Lord Almighty, I will rend their kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 83:24.

Open ye your ears and hearken to the voice of the Lord your God, whose word is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of the joints and marrow, soul and spirit, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.—Ibid. 32:1.

Why should a sword have two edges if it is not to cut both ways? And how is the word of God "sharper than a two-edged sword," if it is not to divide asunder the joints and marrow of the monstrous institutions of wicked men and devils?

How is God to accomplish his work if his servants refuse to rebuke what he condemns?

We are exhorted to arise and use our influence and our franchise against the curse of intoxicating drinks. The writer shouts, Amen! But since the eighteenth annual report of the commissioners of Labor shows that drunkenness was the cause of but twenty-six one hundredths of one per cent of idleness, and the report of the New York Association for Improving the Conditions of the Poor (1911) shows that intemperance caused a trifle less than two per cent of poverty, what shall be our attitude toward the real cause of so many workless workers?

Shall we agitate, and organize, and legislate against minor evils, and wink at that which makes life a bitter struggle for untold millions?

Will not the hunger that gnaws at their shivering souls move us to action? Does not the spirit of the times warn us to action?

Does not a humane feeling, and duty, and justice, and mercy, and love, each add to the infinite urge to action? Yes, and the Spirit of the living God sternly commands action. For society cannot be aroused and adequate sentiment created against social sins without agitation and education.

But agitation alone cannot clear our souls from the blood of this generation. The laws that we must obtain a knowledge of, that are lavishing the wealth of the world upon a few greedy souls, and robbing the masses of homes, and education, have been enacted by class legislation. And spurn the fact as we may, righteous legislation is the only means of setting things right. God himself can do it in no other way.

ORGANIZATION

If any think organization is not needed, they should at once explain how the workers in many places can hold to themselves one single constitutional right only through their organized unions? How can farmers, or stock raisers, or fruit growers, or Saints, cooperate without organization? How can branches, or districts or stakes, or schools be organized without organization? God commanded a long while ago that the school of the prophets be organized, for the education of the ministry, that we may prepare the way for the Lord, and make straight the way for his advent.

CONCERNING ZION--PART 7

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

THE ECONOMIC CONDITION OF ZION

All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets.—Matthew 7:12.

And the Lord said unto Cain, Where is Abel thy brother? And he said, I know not: Am I my brother's keeper?—Genesis 4:9.

It is not my purpose in this paper to consider all the intricacies of the economic side of life; neither time nor space would permit. I shall be satisfied to suggest a few fundamental thoughts underlying the principle or science of economics.

Economics is defined as "The science of the application of wealth;" and it is this definition, or the application of wealth in Zion, that we are particularly and profoundly interested in. Whether or not we shall be able to cause others to see our position, or point of view, remains yet to be seen, but I think we are safe in one position; that is that "a just weight, and a just measure" will be the first and the last requirement. The Golden Rule upon which Jesus says all the law and all the prophets are dependent, is to serve as a basic principle in this matter.

Zion is to be a place in which equal rights for all and special privileges to none shall be observed. This at least suggests the thought that I have no moral right to claim for myself any privilege that does not rightly and equally belong to my brother. In a word, it suggests equality. Equality has far greater significance attached to it than we are often willing to concede; it works both ways.

Too generally we think of equal rights and privileges in connection with receiving and getting, but we often fail to think or understand that we should also be equal in doing and giving. I trust we will be able to see that equal privileges are to be the first consideration in connection with the economic side of Zion. The science of the application of wealth can only be properly applied to a people when all have been given the privilege and opportunity to become helpers; to contribute their quota according to their ability and substance for the collective good of humanity.

God asked of Cain, "Where is thy brother?" and his answer was, "I know not." Did it ever occur to your mind that God is asking that same question of you and me? Ask yourself the question, "Where is my brother?" Will the question be answered, "I know not?"

Do you know where your brother is economically and socially? If you do not, he is dead to you, just as Abel was dead to Cain. Might it also be that we are responsible for his death in this direction? For the sake of getting gain, pecuniary gain, Cain took the life of his brother. Did it ever occur to you that often for the sake of pecuniary gain we take the life of our brother, economically speaking? I am asking these questions for the purpose of creating and stimulating thought along this line.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" If I am not my brother's keeper in the sense that I give him an equal opportunity with me, to help himself, I am no better than Cain was. I must not only learn to live and let live, but I must learn to live and help live, i. e., I must help my neighbor to become able to help himself. A Zion condition does not suggest pauperism, but quite the opposite; it suggests industry, thrift, wealth. It also suggests the applying of that wealth for the common good of all, and not for the enriching of a select few. No man who has the proper exercise of his faculties wishes to be a dependant, and object of charity; he desires to be able to help himself, and also contribute to the good of others. If therefore, I would advance the economic cause of Zion, I must see to it that my brother has an equal privilege with me.

Joshua divided the land of Canaan between eleven tribes. The twelfth tribe, the Levites, received no inheritance. They were given cities in which to live, cities among each of the other tribes; and they were to be supported by the tithing of those who had possessions. The Levites contributed their quota to the common wealth of Israel by serving their brethren as moral and spiritual teachers, while the rest of the tribes contributed according to their increase, a tithe of all, for the support of the Levites. The Levites became the keeper of their brethren in the moral and spiritual sense, while the other tribes became the keepers of the Levites in a temporal sense. Their united effort in this direction developed into a cooperative commonwealth.

This suggests to us the proper application of the economic side of Zion. For not only did the law of Moses provide that each should contribute his quota, but it also made provision for the unfortunate ones among them, that they too might be made free to help themselves. The Apostle Paul says Moses' law was a shadow of good things to come, so while it only suggests to us the real type of Zion, of which the law is but a faint shadow, it gives us a rule by which economic equality may be reached and realized.

So Zion must have a bread-and-butter side, as well as a go-to-church side. The development of either at the expense of the other would be an abnormal growth, and thus prove an injury in place of a blessing to men. I often hear people asking, When will Zion be redeemed? and my answer is, Whenever you are ready and willing to do your part necessary for its redemption. If I waste or squander on myself the means that might otherwise be used for the building of Zion, the economic Zion, I am totally unfit to have any part in that city. When I cease to exact of my brethren that which I am not willing to do myself, I will be able to assist in the redemption of the city Zion.

Can I advance the cause of Zion economically, think you, if I am all the time reaching out for the benefits accruing from it, and at the same time fail or refuse to contribute my quota towards its development and success? Or in other words, do you think there is any place in Zion for a lazy or selfish person? Selfishness will preclude every possibility of Zion ever becoming a reality. The Golden Rule is the only basis upon which an economic Zion can ever be built.

"Where is thy brother?" Cain didn't know where his brother was—he only knew he was dead, had perished as a result of his own selfish act. He didn't seem to care very much, either, where he was.

Do you know where your brother is? Do you care anything about his condition? Does it concern you that your brother is oppressed, so long as you have an abundance? Or does it only concern you that you are oppressed while your brother has an abundance? Economically speaking, are you the keeper of your brother? Do you look for the Order of Enoch to help in the redemption of Zion, and you at the same time fail or refuse to help the Order of Enoch? If we help the order, the order can help us, but if we fail or refuse to help the order, it becomes helpless, and thus it is of no effect.

Therefore, economically speaking, Zion can only become a reality when we have all become equal as helpers. Now when I say equal, I wish to make clear the fact that I mean that every one shall contribute according to his means and ability. The poor widow who only cast two mites into the temple treasury the good Lord declares had done more than all the rich who had cast in abundantly. She had given her all, while they had only given a small gift. Equality, therefore, means that we impart according to our means and ability, and that we receive according to our just needs. And when I say receive, I don't mean charitable gifts, but I mean economic advantages or privileges, such as shall give men a just and equal opportunity to help themselves.

Zion, then, suggests the idea of brotherhood. In the language of Shailer Mathews, "If men are God's sons, then must they be each other's brothers." If we are not the brothers of men we cannot rightly or justly claim to be God's sons. The entire law of God teaches this, all the prophets have taught this, and Christ himself not only taught it, but he lived it.

Where is my brother? Has he an equal privilege with me? If not, what is required of me? If I am not willing to economically liberate my brother, it argues strongly that I have but little interest in his spiritual welfare. No one who is at all himself expects to get something for nothing, and no one should be supported in idleness, for it is written: "The idler shall not eat the bread of the laborer."

When we learn to be our brother's keeper, morally, spiritually, socially, and economically, Zion will be a reality. Christlike-ness must be acquired by us before we can assist in this work successfully. In the language of Shailer Mathews, "Christian ideals must be incarnate in Christian men before social forces will be Christianized." Before Zion can arise and shine, our economic laws and ideals must be incarnate in the children of Zion, the church—and then the vision of the prophets will become a reality.

THE PERSONALITY OF GOD

Is God a personal being? Some of the most popular creeds deny the existence of a personal God. For instance, the Church of England Book of Common Prayer says:

There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body, parts, or passions; of infinite power, wisdom and goodness; the maker and preserver of all things both visible and invisible. And in unity of this Godhead there be three persons, of one substance, power and eternity; the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.—Article 1.

In harmony with the above, the Presbyterian and Baptist confessions of faith affirm that God has neither body, parts, or passions. The Methodist creed is the same as the above, except that they have eliminated the word passions. Notice that while they say God has neither body, parts, nor passions, the next sentence declares that the Godhead is composed of "three persons of one substance."

Article 4 reads as follows:

Christ did truly rise again from death, and took again his body, with flesh, bones, and all things appertaining to the perfection of man's nature; wherewith he ascended into heaven; and there sitteth, until he return to judge all men at the last day.

If it is true that the Godhead has "three persons of one substance," and if Jesus, as the second person of the same "substance," has a "body" of "flesh and bones," does it not follow that God, too, has a "body"? The wonder is that such a glaring inconsistency could stand the test of modern criticism and remain a cardinal principle of faith for enlightened men and women.

Life itself suggests the personality of God. The higher we ascend the scale of animal life the more perfect becomes the form, and greater the intelligence manifested, until the climax is reached in the "human form divine."

It is beyond the bounds of reason to assume that man is the result of evolution, because it is a universal law of nature that like begets like. The law of propagation is the same now as it was at the dawn of history, and tradition. There is nothing in all the realm of the law of nature that even hints at any other method of procreation. It is true that the tadpole loses its tail and becomes a frog. It is just as true that the frog's egg hatches a tadpole. The frog has never been known to evolve any higher in the scale of animal life. The same may be said of the caterpillar and butterfly.

Everything in nature suggests a beginning, and since like begets like, it is reasonable to assume that the beginning was not with the protoplasm, but precisely as we see it at the present time; and since it is impossible for man, the highest type of animal life, to create any form of life by any other means than by the law of procreation it follows logically that the creative genius was greater in power and intelligence than any type of creation; and since the highest type of creation is a personal being endowed with intelligence, we must assume that the creator is a personal being of greater intelligence, wisdom and power.

Scientists have written volumes in the attempt to disprove the Bible story of creation, while at the same time they record the discovery of fossil remains of unknown antiquity supporting the claim of inspiration that "that which hath been is now" (Ecclesiastes 3:14). About the only tangible demonstration of scientific research is the fact that man by his wisdom does not know God, neither indeed can he find him out. So that, after all, for what little knowledge we have of God and his creative work we are indebted to revelation. To that revelation, then, we must go to ascertain whether or not God is a personal being.

The very first announcement concerning the matter is as follows:

And I, God, said unto mine only begotten, which was with me from the beginning, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and it was so. . . . And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them.—Genesis 1:27-29, I. T.

The pronouns, us and our, indicate at least two persons in the work of creation. It was proposed to make man in "our image," and "after our likeness." Thus it is expressly stated that man is in the "image" and "likeness" of both the Father and Son.

When Jesus was baptized of John a voice was heard from heaven saying: "This is my beloved Son." The testimony of Jesus was: "I and my Father are one" (John 10:30). "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" (John 14:9). On the eve of his crucifixion he prayed: "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was" (John 17:5). After his resurrection he appeared to his disciples in his glorified state, to whom he said:

Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I, myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have. . . . And they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of a honeycomb. And he took it and did eat before them.—Luke 24:39-42.

Peter says that he with others "did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead" (Acts 10:4).

Jesus prayed to the Father that he might have the same glory that he had before the world was; and we see that he had a body of flesh and bones," identical in form with his earthly body, and that he partook of food. The Apostle Paul says he was in the "express image" of his Father's "person" (Hebrews 1:3), and, further, that he is the "image of the invisible God," (Colossians 1:15), and that he was "in the form of God" (Philippians 2:6).

Since after he had received the "glory" that he had with the Father before the world was, he was still a personal being and had a body of "flesh and bones"; since he was the "image of the invisible God"; since he was the "express image of his person;" and since he was in the "form of God," does it not follow that God is a personal being? Else what could he mean when he said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the father." John says he was "in the beginning with God," and that he was "made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth" (John 1:14). So that if man was made in "our image," and after "our likeness," and if Jesus had the same glory after his resurrection—a body of flesh and bones, identical in form with his earthly body—does it not follow that God, too, has a body? Surely such a "cloud of witnesses" cannot be set aside by the creeds of men. Moreover, Paul says:

God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.—1 Timothy 3:16.

Christ in the material world was the manifestation of God in the spiritual world. God, through Jesus Christ, was revealed to man. Therefore God is a personal being, with body, parts and passions. Jesus represented the Father both as to his attributes and personality; the parallel was complete.

That God is a personal being is further attested by the fact that Moses, Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel, saw him in Mount Sinai (Exodus 24: 9-12). He appeared to Abraham and conversed with him (Genesis 17: 1-22). Jacob saw him face to face (Genesis 32: 30). Stephen said, "I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God" (Acts 7: 56).

It is seen, therefore, that the sectarian God who has neither body, parts nor passions is incapable of any creative power; is destitute of intelligence, and on a par with the idol gods of the heathen, to be neither feared nor adored. To honor one is to despise the other.

IS BAPTISM FOR THE REMISSION OF SINS?

Baptism is undoubtedly for the remission of sins. But a statement of the face of these words is misleading.

I call to mind when I was growing up in the church, at home, in the Sunday school, in the pulpit, when reference was made to being "saved by faith," parties were always careful to explain, "Not by faith alone." I believe an examination of the Scriptures on baptism will warrant the same explanation, "Not by baptism alone."

Let us examine Mark 1: 4. "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." While the text may to some read baptism for the remission of sins, others contend as earnestly that to them it reads repentance for the remission of sins.

Now repentance and baptism are connected in the clause; and in Acts 2: 38, the same two principles, repentance and baptism, are used with the conjunction and: "repent, and be baptized . . . for the remission of sins." Doctrine and Covenants 32:2 reads "Repent, and be baptized . . . for the remission of sins."

In each of these passages it is expressed that we must both repent and be baptized—do both—in order to receive a remission of sins. In 2 Nephi 13: 24 we read, "For the gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water and then cometh a remission of your sins." Remission comes after we have done both. This harmonizes nicely with Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7, "Those who . . . desire to be baptized" are to "witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins," before they "shall be received by baptism into the church."

We get a better understanding of how we are separated from our sins by referring to the following:

Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins.—Acts 22: 16.

Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed.—Romans 6: 6.

Now the terms "body of sin being destroyed" and the sin (which is the old man) being washed away, are similar expositions used to describe the culminating or final event in the remission of sins, which started when the seed was sown in the heart, which sowing was vividly described by the Lord in the parable of the sower, Luke 8. In verse 11 the Lord says: "The seed is the word of God"; in verse 12, the seed falls in the heart. The Book of Mormon, Alma 16: 26, says: "And now my brethren, I desire that ye should plant this word in your hearts, and as it becometh to swell, even so nourish it by your faith."

In John 3: 5 Jesus says, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom"; and as quoted from 2 Nephi 13: 24 the gate into the kingdom is "repentance and baptism."

We see from these scriptures that seed falling in the heart, faith, repentance, and baptism, are all a part of the process of being born again, or of becoming a new creature, as Paul puts it in 2 Corinthians 5: 17, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature."

Added light is thrown upon the necessity of the seed in the heart of the old man, the man of sin, by James 1: 18: "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth"; and 1 Peter 1: 23, "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but incorruptible, by the word of God."

By all the foregoing Scriptures we are convinced that being born again is a real birth, by which we become a new creature, in fact, and which process of birth first starts when the seed falls in the heart "on good ground." The seed is "nourished by faith;" then follow repentance and baptism, and when we "arise to walk in newness of life," we are in fact "a new creature," the old man, the man of sin having been destroyed, washed away, in birth.

The new creature, the one just born of the "incorruptible seed and the word of God," is a new man who has not sinned since his birth of the "incorruptible seed." The old man of sin has been buried. This new child must then receive the "breath of life" of the new and heavenly kingdom, which is the Holy Spirit, by the laying on of hands. Then his name can be written in heaven: "Rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven" (Luke 10: 20).

From the above-mentioned Scripture we are led to believe that remission of sins or our separation from our sins comes not by baptism alone, but by the processes of being begotten again of the incorruptible seed; the development of the new creature up to birth; then the birth; the separation, where the old man is buried, the body of sin destroyed, washed away, the new man arising to walk in newness of life.

His name is no longer retained on the book of life to be judged at the great day of judgment (Revelation 20:12). His name is written in heaven, as we read in Hebrews 12:22, 23:

But ye are come unto Mount Sion unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven.

Psalm 69:28 says, "Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous." The new man just born, has his name written in heaven: "Whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." (Revelation 13:8). There is nothing on this book against this newborn child of God.

How thankful the sinner should be and is when he sees that he can become a new man, having his name written on a new clean page in the book of life of the Lamb, the former things all buried, washed away, blotted out forever, if he continues faithful to the end, which the loving Father will help him to do.

Again, we say, undoubtedly baptism is for the remission of sins, but not baptism alone.

EARL D. BAILEY.

MAY READING—ADOLESCENCE

A LESSON FROM STATISTICS

"Each year in our country seven hundred and seventy thousand boys enter their sixteenth year and so may be said to cross the border line from boyhood into manhood.

"But alas! we learn that four hundred and fifty thousand—almost two thirds of this great army are doomed to become the victims of two of the most terrible diseases known to the human race, and ninety thousand of these, be it understood will become thus infected before they are twenty-one years of age—in other words, before they have reached years of judgment and discretion. . . .

"Eighty per cent of the inflammatory diseases which are classified as peculiar to women have come to them as a direct result of the existence of those diseases which are the penalty paid for the transgression of moral law. Seventy-five per cent of the special operations performed upon women and sixty per cent of the work of specialists are directly traceable to the same cause. Thousands of women are rendered invalids for life because their husbands sowed a few wild oats in their thoughtless, ignorant youth. . . .

"Here, too, we find something of an explanation of that condition of affairs which has been termed race suicide. The existence of these two diseases is more responsible than any other one cause for the large number of involuntary miscarriages, and fifty per cent of the sterility of men and women must also be laid at their door.

"It is not alone the wives who must pay the penalty, but helpless, innocent children are deprived of their rightful inheritance because in early youth their possible parents were left through ignorance, to fall victims to habits of thought or of act which led them straight on to moral transgression.

"We are told by those whose word we cannot well dispute, that one fifth of all the blindness in the world is directly traceable to the results of immorality in parents. Children born of infected parents can hardly themselves escape infection, and sixty to eighty per cent of all infected children die, or are born dead, diseased, or doomed to early death. Those who survive will in all probability suffer from blindness, deaf-mutism, idiocy, insanity, paralysis, or locomotor ataxia, and their descendants will, in turn, suffer from organic defects and degenerative changes.

IGNORANCE THE GREAT FACTOR

"Ignorance of the facts of life has more to do with this sad condition of affairs than any other one factor. Thousands of young men are led into wrongdoing because they have never been taught any better; and the same thing may be said of young women. In a great many instances the evil was begun in the early years of childhood. Physical habits were taught them, it may be, which rendered it almost impossible for them to resist temptation later in life. They were given a misconception of the most sacred facts of being and wrong ideals of life were imparted to them.

PROTECT BY WISE TEACHING

"It is to make impossible the continuance of this sad state of affairs that mothers to-day are being urged to give their children the protection of a wise teaching of the beautiful facts of life.

"But still mothers hesitate, and they ask, 'Aren't you afraid if you talk to your little children about these things it will arouse their curiosity and make them think about it more than they would do otherwise?'"

"If by maintaining absolute silence we could be sure of keeping our little ones from wondering about these mysteries of life it might be well for us to follow that plan. But the events of daily life will force the question upon every child of average intelligence before he is six years old. . . .

"We must remember that curiosity is only aroused by the unknown—the mysterious. Therefore the surest way to prevent his being curious for any length of time about the mystery of life's beginnings is to tell him about it in such a way that he feels he understands it. It then drops into the background of his mind, with the other facts he has acquired, while his attention is focused on some other fascinating problem. Thus wise instruction saves him from giving undue attention to these questions. . . .

"If the question were, 'Shall I tell my child or shall I leave my child in ignorance?' the answer might be very different. But the experience of thousands of mothers has proven that the question of to-day in reality is: 'Shall I tell my child the truth in a wise and beautiful way, or shall I leave my child to be told by some one else, no one knows what and no one knows how?' As soon as the little one leaves his mother's side he runs the risk of coming into contact with some one, whether child or adult, who will proffer him tainted information. . . .

KEEP YOUR CHILD'S CONFIDENCE

"If you answer your child's questions with falsehoods or with half-truths, he will in time discover your subterfuge, and will suffer that heart-breaking tragedy of childhood, the loss of confidence in his mother. Or, if you refuse to answer his questions, he discovers there are others who will give him the information he desires, and so he begins to live a thought-life apart from you.

"But if you answer his serious questions truthfully he will continue to feel that complete confidence in you which is the birthright of every child and you in your turn will be able to keep track of all the influences that are being brought to bear upon his character from the various sources with which he comes in contact."—Mrs. Woodallen Chapman in How Shall I Tell My Child?

Where this bond is lacking it will be as Miss Fish says, "Only the little children who will ask questions; the adolescents are generally too shy, unless unusual confidence exists between father and son, mother and daughter. The aim should certainly be to so win the confidence of the children when they are little that all troublesome questions at adolescence will be referred directly to the parent instead of being turned over and over in the young mind or incorrectly satisfied from questionable sources."

WITHHOLD THE TRUTH OR GIVE PLAIN INFORMATION

Doctor Hall tells us: Specific studies of the minds of childhood and youth show that they contain weltering masses of falsehoods, half truths and errors, some of which are quite prone to bring moral and physical disaster, and that the budget of information that they actually possess contains deficiencies unsuspected by parents or teachers. . . . More than this, the errors due to withholding truth cause incalculable waste of mental and nervous energy, bring distrust of the veracity of parents, false theories, worries and uncertainties galore, and arrest the very intellect, muddle conscience, and mislead the will, disorient the feelings and lay the foundation for many a neurosis and psychosis [nervous and mental disturbance] later, when plain information would disentangle anxious perplexities, remove deep and often unconscious worries and tensions, bring a great peace and normalization of soul and enable youth to face the world with new courage, and hope, and resolution, to say nothing of causing marked reinforcement of health. . . . Like fire, sex is a wonderfully effective servant but the most disastrous of all agents if it becomes master. . . .

"Children's minds are very fertile as well as active here and they very often develop ideas which later cause great trouble. Often strong natures come into more or less open rebellion against parents' authority on other matters on account of concealment or deception here. Some torture themselves in secret and devise the most grotesque and absurd explanations, which they whisper to each other with some sense of shame and guilt and this lays the foundations for regarding these matters as repulsive and perhaps nauseating later. . . . Nearly all lose their way for a time at least and wander, often with great risk and waste of energy before they learn the simple right way of nature. . . . They will reach the goal in the end; but how vastly much might have been saved them by a little plain, sane teaching betimes! . . . Whether they are saved to virtue or lost to vice often depends upon their getting or failing to get the knowledge their whole souls are consciously or unconsciously seeking. . . ."

THE PROBLEM OF THE ORIGIN OF CHILDREN

Docor Hall here quotes an authority who "urges that children strongly and early come to feel that something is being concealed from them and therefore their curiosity is kept at unwholesomely high pitch. . . . Parents he says, live in a fool's paradise. The zest of the child for the riddles of this aspect of life is awakened very early. They should not be repressed abruptly by being called dirty or guilty. . . ."

"In no field is ignorance so dense and false explanations that have to be tediously rectified or painfully moulted, so many. The stork legend and a score of foolish nursery inventions on this plane are at first accepted as an answer to the most vital and first of all the great questions which the child puts its parents with a faith so implicit that when these silly answers begin to be doubted, a deep distrust of father and mother is implanted. They have given a false answer to the most serious of all the questions children ask them."—G. Stanley Hall.

Professor T. W. Shannon in How to Tell the Story of Life says: "An angel could not be more sincere or ask a purer question. This is no evidence of the child's depravity, but an evidence of the child's mental awakening and demand for knowledge that it is prepared to receive. . . ."

"The most natural and satisfactory way of telling the story of life to a child is to approach the question gradually by telling first how God or nature brings every sprig of grass, plant, vegetable and tree into the world. Here you can go into every interesting detail that the child can comprehend. It will save going into the details when you come to the higher animals and man. The child's mind comprehends a great deal more than most parents know. If the details are brought out clearly among the plants and lower forms of animal life, the child's fancy will fill out to his own satisfaction the details among the higher animals and man."

DO YOU KNOW HOW TO GIVE THIS TEACHING?

Many parents are convinced of the necessity of giving such enlightenment to the child but they feel unqualified to give it. In recent years a number of very helpful books on these subjects have been published, some of them of small size and low price which make the information easily accessible both for money cost and time to read. The Edward Bok Books of Self Knowledge (Fleming H. Revell Company, New York and Chicago) are twenty-five cents each. These little books are most excellent, each in its place: For parents, How Shall I Tell My Child; for young children, The Spark of Life; for girls, The Changing Girl; for boys, When a Boy Becomes a Man; for young men, Instead of Wild Oats. The Shannon books may be had at the Herald Publishing House. How to Tell the Story of Life (price 20 cents) contains very attractive, plain and helpful instruction. Plant and Animal Children; How They Grow, by Helen Torelle is highly recommended.

In all the books for children here mentioned the teaching follows the plan outlined by Professor Shannon. Doctor For-bush believes this method of teaching is needlessly tedious and that we prefer it because we are shy rather than because the method is helpful. Other eminent writers believe that sex teaching should not be given by itself. With it there should be intellectual, moral and religious interest, lifting the thought to these higher planes. If the subject is isolated there is danger of stimulating the sex instinct. Even with older children it "should be briefly taught in connection with the sense of honor and responsibility. It is thought better to give this instruction in conversation with one child alone, or if necessary, to read to the child rather than to place the book in his hands to read for himself. At all times the subject should be dealt with "simply, sincerely, respectfully, as befits the primal instinct of life."

It is important that the right teaching should be given at the right age and at the opportune time. With younger children interest, and curiosity will usually open the way for it and, if given then, it simplifies the problem later on. Doctor Hall says that sex teaching with slightly premature delicate girls is often a very grave problem, quite distinct from that for healthy ones. . . . Young girls and women shrink from all discussion of such matters and as a result their ignorance and credulity make them easy victims. They little suspect the risk to which they commit themselves. Young working women are generally strong enough to face the truth, and if so it should be taught without bated breath, biologically and as one of the most interesting, beautiful and sacred of things. The bare facts are never enough. . . .

"Women's clubs should study this problem. Nowhere is greater tact and caution necessary." Educators are telling us that because of neglect in the home, the schools must prepare to give this teaching.

THE HOME ATMOSPHERE

"In how many homes are the precious moments together with the children frittered away upon silly gossip and coarse jests. How ready are the elders to pass back and forth comments upon the unlovely side of life, and by their laughter over situations which the children cannot and should not understand, awaken in them a curiosity, which just because it cannot be satisfied is almost sure to work harm in the child's inner life.

"In fine, this much we may say with entire assurance: In the intimate conversation in the home the real life is laid bare, whether it be noble or coarse and low. The things which really interest the parents, they will usually talk about, and what the child sees the parents truly care for, he is apt to care for himself. His sense of life's values is thus largely formed and it will be very difficult for any other power to make him have a high regard for what he hears slightly referred to by his parents."—Irving King, Ph. D., in Parents and Their Problems.

"Lives grounded in moral idealism withstand temptation far better than lives which have been taught only a prudential chastity. Though parents have the tongues of physicians and though children know all sex mysteries and have not cleanness of mind it profiteth nothing. And cleanness of mind is caught rather than taught."—Matthews.

"If we will turn our attention away from man's misuse of his marvelous, God-given powers which were in the mind of the Creator when he thus shared with man his most distinctive attribute, we shall receive such a revelation of divine beauty as shall forever after render all of life sacred and holy to us. After this revelation has been made to our souls we shall be ready to undertake the sacred task of initiating our little ones into life's mysteries."

The Children's Home

Points of Difference--Number 2

If our Children's Home, toward which we are paying the sums we think we can spare to care for the neglected children, should be conducted merely to supply the physical wants of those who are there placed, would the people of the church be satisfied to continue the support of the home?

It has seemed to the Board of Trustees that with each child who has been placed there by Latter Day Saints whether those placing them are the parents or only those in temporary charge of the subjects, these guardians have one predominating idea in placing them at this particular place, and accordingly the following action was taken at a meeting of the trustees on September 8, 1915:

"Whereas it is the understanding, expressed or implied, of the parents or guardians of children placed in the Saints' Children's Home at Lamoni, that the children will be reared under the influence and taught the doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints;

"Therefore, be it resolved, That while we believe there are many homes among other people that are as elevated and pure, in their moral atmosphere, as are the homes within the church, the board is not at liberty to place children in permanent homes where the prevailing influence is not in harmony with the expectations of those from whom the children are received."

It often occurs that the authorities receive application from parties outside the church for the custody of a child, and sometimes it would seem that the child could not be cared for any better than he could and would at the home of the applicant, and still we refuse to let loose our hold because of what we sense as a moral obligation.

The mode of operation of other homes with which we are acquainted has no such impediment, and hence other homes are able to make a showing of having done more to help in this great work than have the Latter Day Saints. Colonies of children are taken from these homes and into communities where they have reason to think they may be placed in private homes, and anyone showing financial and moral ability to care for a child can obtain one.

At least four cases of this nature have arisen within the year just passed, and if the bars were thrown down, it is reasonable to suppose many more would apply. When funds run low, and help is scarce, here is one way in which we could ease up on the tension, but you do not want us to do so, neither do we care to, and for the very special reason that a child so situated would in all probability be lost to the church. It therefore takes more money to support our home than it otherwise would.

The question may now arise in the mind of the reader, Does the instruction at the Children's Home in Lamoni have any particular religious character?

We think that not only does the instruction at the home have a distinctive religious flavor, but the influence of the community bears in this direction.

Our information leads us to think that from the very opening of the home until the present time there has been in vogue a system of scripture and religious study suitable to the different children. This system has at many different times shown its fruit, more especially at such times as when the children have asked for the ordinance of baptism, and when there has been sickness and the children have shown their faith by offering of prayer for those in distress and affliction.

Those who have been fortunate enough to be in Lamoni at such times as when Children's Day has been celebrated, and have witnessed the touching scenes of orphaned children in charge of our home performing their parts under the tuition of our own people in charge of the home, can never forget the occasions. Do you think the children who participated could ever forget such times? We feel that we have these children practically saved to the church, if reasonable care is used to guard them until they reach the age of their majority.

Now, there are still many improvements to be made, and this is not intended to reflect discredit upon those now in active charge, nor upon those who have been in charge of the children. If we have occupied along lines which have been profitable to the church, and it has cost you a little more per capita than it would have done if the home had been conducted upon the ordinary methods of conducting such places by other corporations, are you not glad the extra amounts have been used? Would you not, then, be glad and rejoice if we were able to institute a system whereby boys could have all the advantages of an industrial education of the highest class, and the girls likewise be fitted and prepared for the ordinary and the extraordinary duties and responsibilities placed upon those who go out into the world prepared to occupy such positions? The writer has in mind a time in the future when all the necessary tools and equipment for the training of the children according to the latest and most approved methods will have been secured by the authorities.

It will be no hardship to provide these conditions. It can be done at such a small additional expense as would seem trivial to those who are now supporting the home. This small addition per capita would seem shortsighted indeed, if denied by a father to his children in the private home. Are not the children of the parents who are overtaken in misfortune or sin just as precious to the church as the children of the happy and fortunate parents living in the stakes and branches of the church?

Last of all, remember that this is not a complaint at the way in which the institution has been supported by the membership of the church. We have nothing but gratitude to express for the way in which the institution has been remembered by the good people of the church, and we still further believe in your confidence and good will for the children placed there, to the extent that you will increase your support that we may provide more and better care in the future.

I said it in the meadow path,
I say it on the mountain stairs,
The best things any mortal hath
Are those which every mortal shares.

The air we breathe, the sky, the breeze,
The light without us and within,
Life, with its unlocked treasuries,
God's riches are for all to win.

The grass is softer to my tread,
For rest it yields unnumbered feet;
Sweeter to me the wild-rose red
Because she makes the whole world sweet.

Into your heavenly loneliness
Ye welcome me, O solemn peaks!
And me in every guest you bless
Who reverently your mystery seeks.

And up the radiant peopled way
That opens into worlds unknown,
It will be life's delight to say,
"Heaven is not heaven for me alone."

Rich by my brethren's poverty!
Such wealth were hideous! I am blest
Only in what they share with me,
In what I share with all the rest.

Lord Bless the Conference!

There will no doubt be a harmonious response or unity in offering this prayer. As members of the one fold of Christ we are always anxious that in attending a General Conference we shall receive divine aid, added light, and understanding of the work in general, and of our own duty in particular. I am keenly anxious that the next General Conference shall be a glorious success for our cause, and a great spiritual benefit individually, not only to myself, but to all the Saints. The last three conferences I have missed. I expect to attend the coming conference.

How can this prayer be answered? In the word of God I read: "He that turneth away his ear from the hearing of the law, his prayer shall be an abomination to God." Suppose we were not willing to hear the law on all points. Could we reasonably expect our prayer to be answered?

From my earliest recollection I have been taught that "where there is unity there is strength." This is accepted as an axiom. The opposite also is just as true: Where there is division there is weakness.

In the general condition of things I have long since believed in the existence of two spiritual powers—two invisible forces, which operate and influence the human mind. And it should not be amiss here to use the language of the inspired Paul: "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" We are also admonished by the same writer that we should put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood—one man contending against another in religious controversy and arguments—but against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world. "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." The enemy of God is the Devil, Satan, the prince of darkness, the author of sin, confusion, envy and strife.

Some years ago one of God's faithful servants saw a vision, wherein he beheld "Satan in council"; he also heard some of the words of counsel. Satan said to his emissaries: "We have labored to overthrow and destroy the latter-day work by attacking it from the outside; by mobs, violence, etc., but that is a failure; we must enter into the ranks of the church, get among the ministry, cause division, strife, envy, jealousy and heresy, and thus destroy the work of God." I wonder if that time has come.

In our anxiety for knowledge it is natural and becoming to ask of one of our esteemed brethren. The minister being held in high regard, etc., his advice, counsel, and interpretation is taken for full value. And thus the "living oracle" is sometimes accepted as a safe guide, while the Word of God remains on the dusty shelf. "The law and the testimony," as referred to by the prophet, can refer to nothing else than the written word. That is what we elders always make it mean when we try to thrash the world with this text.

For three years I have been out of the mission field. I have been trying to work at my trade as a bricklayer. The building business has been worse than dull. I have not succeeded well financially, but have trusted in divine providence that all would end well, and so it has—at least it seems so now. I have sold my farm in Dewey County, Oklahoma, which permits me to pay all personal accounts, debts, etc., and resume my labors in the gospel ministry. Therefore, I expect to attend the coming General Conference.

The pure unchangeable gospel of Jesus Christ admits of no conflicts in doctrinal teachings. Our claim and position before the world for divine revelation and direct inspiration from God demands that we "all speak the same thing," to be of the "same mind." Coming to General Conference heavily laden with the desire and determination to foster and maintain our own pet ideas, etc., might have a bad effect, and hinder the answering of our prayer, "Lord bless the conference." The great exponent of the Christian faith once wrote: I determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified. Paul was willing to "become a fool" that he might be made wise.

Three years of labor and association with wicked, worldly men has made me feel at times like a prodigal son; but the love and interest in my Father's work and house has never left me; and the prospect of again mingling with the church, quorum meetings, etc., brings life, joy and gladness. Whatever I may contribute to the conference, I shall most earnestly pray that it shall be in sweet harmony with the faith of the church and the gospel of Jesus Christ. I have no personal ends to gain, no side issues to foster, no hobby horses to ride, or saddle for others to ride.

The General Conference will be composed of the delegates from the districts. Those districts carry the same material, physical and spiritual, which comprise the branches; the branches are constructed of the same material that constitutes the homes: Lord bless our homes! that our homes may bless the conference.

Those who join in this prayer will need to dismiss heresy from their teaching, unkindness toward brethren, pride from their hearts, and self-will from their minds, and in love, humility, and obedience, be willing to be influenced by divine providence and the spirit of peace. Our prayer then shall be answered: Lord bless the conference!

Conference Prayer Meetings

The writer is somewhat surprised that some one of the leading ministers of the church has not offered suggestions or criticisms upon the manner in which some of our prayer meetings are being conducted during our General Conferences. Be it said to the credit of many of our brethren, they show good judgment in conducting these prayer and testimony meetings; yet there is a tendency to pattern after those who are impatient and urgent in their demands upon those who participate in the exercises of the hour.

The service should be opened by the singing of appropriate hymns, such as invoke the presence of the Holy Spirit. The prayer should be directed to the spirit of the occasion and the great need of divine aid and the solemnity of the hour, rather than to generalities, with the object of the meeting mentioned incidentally only.

If those in charge of the meeting occupy from ten to nineteen minutes in talking to the Saints at the opening of the meeting, and then urge the great need of brevity in testimonies, calling attention to the fact that there are a great many present, and that as many as possible should take part, a kind of paradox is developed to start with.

The natural trend of the worshipers will be to sing considerably more at the fore part of the meeting than later, and this is psychologically correct. The spirit of song unifies, blends, transforms and causes refractory elements to coordinate. Sometimes the presiding officer when a hymn is being sung shouts, "Now just one verse," irrespective of the sense or connection. This rigid enforcement of the "one-verse" rule in the beginning of the exercises after the meeting is given over to the Saints for prayer and testimony, is a suppression of an internal and natural desire to give expression in song. As early as July, 1830, the Lord speaks in Doctrine and Covenants 24:3: "My soul delighteth in the song of the heart; yea, the song of the righteous is a prayer unto me. And it shall be answered with a blessing upon their heads. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 119:6.)"

Now if the song sung is a prayer and the Lord promises to answer it with a blessing, why should the rights of the congregation be invaded to the extent of "Now just one verse only"? Why not be patient and let the whole assembly worship in unison? and why not have an intelligently uttered prayer? It may be argued that the congregation will sing too much. That may be so. But even if it is so, why not wait until we have reason to know that they are doing so? If the presiding officer loves music and song there will be far greater liberty exercised towards those who may commence a hymn than by those who like Cassius of old, of whom Julius Cæsar said, "He hears no music."

Moderation is the golden mean, the fulcrum for two extremes. The one verse proposition often does great injustice to the meeting in the beginning of the prayer and testimony service.

Again, some brother or sister begins telling of his or her experience when opposed to the work, of strong prejudices against the church, and of how the Lord gave unmistakable evidence of its truthfulness. Here comes the cry again, "Be brief, be brief," anticipating, I presume, that the brother or sister is going to talk at length. Is it not just possible that the spiritual experience about to be related may be of more real value to the auditors than three or four testimonies without a reason for conviction or conversion? Then, too, since there are so many that say simply a few words when they get up to speak, why be so formal with men or women who have had large experience in church affairs? Of course, during the long prayers offered by some, the presiding officer is handicapped.

Sometimes we hear the one in charge tell the congregation, "Now we have just eight minutes, (or some other number) before we close. Let us see if we can get eight one-minute testimonies." At the preaching service to follow, just one speaker will discourse to the assembly for possibly one hour. Why these extremes? Why not give opportunity for men and women to give an intelligent statement of their testimony?

There is one other matter to which we ought to call attention. That is that at almost every conference there are those who persist in testifying in every meeting, repeating almost verbatim the same incidents; and as a rule this class of witnesses have an intensified zeal and feel that should they fail to take part in the meeting they will incur the Lord's displeasure and grieve the Holy Spirit. As it is the intention to give opportunity to as many as possible to express their feelings and experience, we should avoid repeating our testimony until others get a chance, largely upon the principle that during a business session we are not allowed a second speech until after all have spoken who desire to do so.

The above is written suggestively only, for an arbitrary rule may prove both obstructive and in some instances destructive of the object sought. EVAN B. MORGAN.

News from Branches

London, England

For the past week we have been having real American weather, with a considerable fall of snow which ended in a blizzard. Snow is very rare in London. When it first came gently falling it reminded us of the expression made by our Brother Metuaore, of Tahiti, deceased, who said it reminded him of what he had read concerning the manna falling from heaven. Though the weather is cold we are trying to keep the camp fires blazing as best we can, and although we have not succeeded in illuminating the great city with gospel light, yet we do not feel altogether discouraged as there are a few honest hearts seeking for light. Until spring weather begins, little preaching can be done in the parks.

We had a very enjoyable visit from the editor of the Ensign, Brother Charles Fry, and the week he spent with us was surely a treat to us. How we wished we could keep him as a missionary, but, alas, we had to part with him. We hope he has arrived safely at Independence by this time.

We were again made sad to have to say good-by to our beloved Sister Clark and family, who is leaving us for America to join her husband, Brother Charles Clark, of the Ringling Circus. She expects to locate at or near Chicago. We shall miss her much, but we hope it may be a happy change, and that there may be no dreaded watching for German Zeppelins over there in the land of peace and plenty.

Brother Worth's oldest son, John, has been to the battle front in France and has had some exciting experiences. He was wounded and brought to a hospital near London. He has since recovered and is practicing to serve as a signalman.

Our young Brother William Goullee is also serving in the navy as musician, and in other important work, which has been a pleasure so far, he not having been called out for a sea battle as yet. Saints, think of these dear brethren, that they with many others who have been called into the war service may have the protection of God over them, that they may return safely to their homes and loved ones, and yet do service for the King of peace and righteousness and lead souls into the light of his kingdom.

Brother May is making arrangements, and expects to start on March 11 to cross the ocean to meet with the brethren at General Conference. It will be a treat for him after so long an absence. We are praying that the spirit of union and peace may prevail at the conference, and that all that is done may be to the glory of God and the building up of his kingdom. That all Saints may be encouraged to press onward is the prayer of

We are alive and strong in the faith. I believe we have a very poor excuse for being otherwise, as we have the true gospel with the strongest friend at the head of it—Jesus Christ.

We have recently organized a Religio and are encouraged very much, as we have a good attendance; also have an orchestra, and they are doing fine, considering the length of time they have been organized. The music is entertaining and helps to attract the attention of outsiders.

District conference convened here on March 4 and 5, under the supervision of G. T. Griffiths and Jesse Hardin. It was well attended, and God's Holy Spirit was manifested. The testimonies and experiences of our brethren were strengthening. They left many good thoughts and hopes. This is the first conference we have had, as we have just recently been set apart from Kirtland District. We hope to increase and do the Lord's work here to the best of our ability.

The branch is surely doing fine. We are blessed spiritually. There has been a great deal of sickness here, and I believe our fasting and praying for the sick keeps us close to the Lord, and is one reason we are so spiritual.

Our desire is to continue in this way, so we shall be worthy of God's many blessings. We desire to be a shining light here. We realize this district is ripe, and we have a great work to do. We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, and our prayers are for all of God's people.

Your sister in Christ,

Saint Louis, Missouri

At our district conference, which convened March 11 and 12, we were reported as being in a good spiritual condition. While we have not been free from trial, and the temptations of the Adversary of souls, God has been with us and abundantly blessed us.

Another conference year has closed, and we feel thankful for the blessings that have come, not only to Saint Louis, but to God's work everywhere. We trust, however, that even more will be accomplished during the coming year, and that each year will find us in advance of the previous one.

There was a very large attendance at our district conference. Brother Ward L. Christy was the speaker in the morning, and Bother Russell Archibald in the evening, both sermons being full of instruction.

The elders' quorum met at 1 p. m., and a profitable prayer and testimony meeting was enjoyed from 2.30 to nearly 5 p. m., after which Brother E. C. Bell called a meeting of the district choir and all interested in music.

At the afternoon service Brethren J. M. Hampson and George Reeves were ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood. The Spirit was present during these ordinations. Both of the brethren earnestly expressed a desire to fulfill to the best of their abilities what God requires of them.

Two were referred to the Saint Louis Branch for ordination to the office of deacon. These brethren, Stanley Parrish and Hermon Gilesby, were ordained at the prayer service Sunday the 19th.

The June conference will be held at Lansdowne, Illinois.

Requests for Prayers

To The Sisters' Prayer Union; Dear Sisters: There is a young man here afflicted with consumption and other troubles. He has never heard much of this gospel, but has seen the power of God manifested on his sister. And he has great faith in it, and makes this request. Brother H. A. Doly was out here two weeks ago and administered to him and he told my husband with tears he could not tell how much God had helped him. He wants to hear more and obey as soon as there is a chance. Pray for him.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. D. E. DUNSHEE.

THOMPSONVILLE, MICHIGAN.

Died

MANUEL.—At Canton, Illinois, March 19, 1916, aged 87 years, 8 days, Elizabeth Manuel, born Murthishville, Glenmorganshire, Wales. Married Thomas Manuel in England. Came with companion to Saint David, Illinois, in 1852, and to Oren Township where she was baptized by M. T. Short. Her husband died 3 years ago. Leaves one adopted child, W. C. Manuel of Galesburg, Illinois. Funeral at the home in charge of D. S. Holmes.

SACKFIELD.—Mrs. Hannah J. Jones-Sackfield was born January 17, 1840, at Sugar Creek, Pennsylvania, died March 5, 1916, at Matherville, Illinois, at the age of 76 years, 1 month, 17 days. She was united in marriage to John Sackfield, September 20, 1862, at Minersville, Illinois. To this union was born seven children, four sons and three daughters. One son, William, and two daughters, Emma and Hattie, preceeding her to the spirit world. Those surviving her are George, Albert and Edward, of Matherville, Illinois, and Mrs. William Zarring of Albia, Iowa. These children, with the aged husband, remain, sorrowing, not as those that have no hope, but looking forward to the happy reuniting in the resurrection of the just. She united with the church February 2, 1808, baptized by Amos Berve, confirmed by J. S. Patterson and John Chisnal, continuing firm in the faith to the end. Service in charge of D. E. Sade, sermon by C. E. Willey, at the Saints Hall in Matherville, Illinois, after which remains were laid to rest in nearby cemetery, awaiting the resurrection of the just.

WILEY.—Notice of death of James Wiley, previously published in the HERALD, instead of reading "sermon by John Shields, assisted by J. C. Mottashead and G. H. Henly" should have read "sermon at the home by John Shields," etc.

CHRISTIE.—Martha E. (Bacon) Christie, at her daughter's, Sister Laura Fry, on Enoch Hill, Independence, Missouri, March 25, 1916. Born February 13, 1858, at Philadelphia, Pa. Baptized by John Stone in the spring of 1872. Married Ogden T. Christie July 20, 1877. To them were born 1 son, 2 daughters, 1 died some years ago. Deceased was a faithful Saint, known for her hospitality. Her mother lived in Nauvoo in the days of Joseph the seer and lived for many years isolated from church privileges till the work was opened up in Philadelphia about 1866. Sister Christie came to Independence to visit her daughter about eight months ago, and was taken sick for which there seemed to be no help. She left to mourn their loss a faithful husband, daughter and her family, a son whose whereabouts is not known, three brothers in the East, many friends here and at her home in Philadelphia. Service at Enoch Hill Church, in charge of George Jinkin, sermon by A. H. Parsons, with fitting remarks by U. W. Greene. Interment in the Mound Grove Cemetery.

WILLIAMS.—Ellen Williams, born June 22, 1854, at Peoria, Illinois, died at Albia, Iowa, March 16, 1916 of asthma. Married Thomas R. Williams, December 1872, at Knightsville, Indiana. To this union 9 children were born, husband and 3 children having passed before into the Spirit Land. Of those remaining to mourn are Lizzie Pecke, Thomas David James, adopted son, of Chariton; and Maggie, Daniel; and Ethel Williams of Albia. Services from the Saints' Church, Lucas Iowa, by Parley Batten, assisted by John R. Evans and E. B. Morgan.

Conference Daily

A daily Ensign will again be issued during the General Conventions and General Conference in April. The compliments on the make-up of the Daily Ensign published in April, 1914, encourages another venture this year. As our force is small it will help very materially if subscriptions are sent early. If our friends will begin now to send subscriptions it will be appreciated, but if all wait till the last moment more or less confusion may ensue and mistakes be more apt to happen. Help the office force by sending soon. Price 25 cents for the time of conventions and conference.

Book Reviews

MILITARY OBLIGATION OF CITIZENSHIP.—By Leonard Wood, major general of the United States Army. Princeton University Press, Princeton, New Jersey. Price 75 cents. This work contains three chapters: First, the policy of the United States in raising and maintaining armies; second, the military obligation of citizenship; third, civil obligation of the army. These chapters were first delivered in the form of lectures, the first of these being an address in Princeton, April 15, 1915, the second an address delivered at Lake Mohonk Conference, May 20, 1915, and the third an address delivered at Saint Paul's School, June 15, 1915. Coming as this work does from a recognized authority in the United States army, it cannot fail to interest those who are studying and investigating the present campaign for preparedness.

THE MIS-TRIALS OF JESUS.—By Charles Edmund DeLand. Richard G. Badger, Publisher, Boston, Massachusetts. Price $1.25. This book presents in forceful and graphic form an exposition of the so-called trials of Jesus, a subject which is more and more engrossing the attention of Christendom, as a closer knowledge of the ethics of his daily life are seen to be necessary in awakening the private and public conscience of the present day. Both the Hebrew and the Roman criminal laws and procedure in force at the dawn of the Christian era are early and exhaustively presented by the author, together with a copious citation of authorities supporting the text. The book is not, however, merely a law-book. It is intended to serve the purpose of the general public, while being of special interest to the bar and bench of the country.

The glance that doth thy neighbor doubt,
Turn thou, O man, within,
And see if it will not bring out
Some unsuspected sin.
To hide from shame the branded brow,
Make broad thy charity,
And judge no man except as thou
Wouldst have him judge of thee.

SUNSHINE PARTIES

are every day affairs in the South in the Winter time---for when blizzards, slush and snow are quite the fashion in the North, balmy breezes, sunny skies, moonlit bays and tropical flowers are the fashion in the South. And those who pack their grips and go South at this time, reap rich rewards in health dividends and delightful recreation and return, realizing more than ever before, the real value of a winter vacation in that romantic, historic and beautiful land south of the Mason and Dixon Line.

The cost is low---perhaps not as much as you thought it would be. Come in and let's talk it over.

NUMBER 15

Joint Convention

SUNDAY, APRIL 2.

7.45 A. M.

The twenty-second annual convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society convened in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, in a joint prayer service with the General Sunday School Association, G. R. Wells and J. A. Gunsolley in charge. A good meeting was enjoyed. The remaining convention meetings of the day were also held conjointly.

9.15 A. M.

The Independence Sunday school met in regular session, with the local officers in charge. At this session 1,016 were present, including 150 visitors. The collection was $20.11.

10.45 A. M.

The conventions reassembled in the upper auditorium, where the remaining services of the day were held, J. A. Gunsolley being in charge.

The Independence Juvenile chorus, of 250 voices, directed by Sister E. C. McNichols, and assisted by a juvenile quartette from Atchison, Kansas, furnished excellent music at this meeting.

J. W. Rushton addressed the assembly on the subject, "Legitimate amusements for the young."

2.30 P. M.

This session was in charge of Daniel Macgregor. A juvenile quartette and trio pleased the attendants.

F. F. Wipper discoursed on "Bridging the chasm," and L. F. P. Curry on "The teacher's magnet."

4 P. M.

Workers conferences were held as follows, and in charge of the parties named: Home department, F. F. Wipper; librarians, E. H. Fisher; teacher training, L. F. P. Curry; organized classes, W. O. Hands, Sister D. H. Blair; social work, Sister M. A. Etzenhouser; gospel literature, Harvy Sandy.

7.30 P. M.

T. J. Elliot was in charge of this session. The Euturpean chorus, directed by Nellie Brocaw, furnished music.

G. N. Briggs gave an address on "The present tendency in religious education."

L. F. P. Curry, who was to appear Monday evening on the subject "Course of study for presiding officers," having been summoned to return to his secular work, was given place at this session on this subject, addresses by T. J. Elliott and E. D. Moore being held over until Monday evening.

MONDAY, APRIL 3

8. A. M.

At this hour a joint conference of teachers was held, on the art of story-telling, in charge of Sister W. W. Smith. The story, its value and use by educators, illustrated by stories told, was the ground covered, followed by round table.

Religio Convention

9.30 A. M.

With J. A. Gunsolley in charge, number 37 in Zion's Praises was sung. Prayer was offered by J. A. Gunsolley, followed by singing number 42.

The report of the credentials committee was approved, subject to correction.

The convention was organized by the selection of J. A. Gunsolley, president, to preside, assisted by Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, vice president; A. E. McKim, secretary, as secretary, and who chose Sister Donnie Lehman as assistant; the presiding officers being authorized to appoint, subject to ratification, committees and officers necessary to complete the organization.

The following appointments by the officers were approved: To have charge of the music and chose assistants, A. H. Mills, P. N. Craig, Nellie Brocaw; local and visiting deacons to usher; A. E. McKim, Charles Fry, J. F. Garver, press committee; Granville Trowbridge, B. J. Scott, G. N. Briggs, resolutions committee; J. A. Becker, M. C. Fisher, J. R. Grice, appropriations committee; W. W. Smith, C. E. Blair, ratifications committee.

President J. A. Gunsolley reported:

REMINISCENT

To the Convention of 1916: Twenty-three years ago the young people of the church said through their representatives that they desired to unite in an effort to secure better development and training for usefulness, and service in the church. Zion's Religio-Literary Society came into being as a result of the combined wisdom of those who participated in the movement, impelled by a sense of their duty in sharing the responsibility of giving direction to youthful activities. Comparing now with then, who shall say that Divinity was not back of the desire, and that there was not an overruling Providence in the deliberations of that convention of 1893?

The secretary one year ago reported 13,737 as compared to the membership reported to the convention of 1894 of 1,000, an average increase of over 600 a year, which is indeed a very commendable showing. Not only has there been this satisfactory growth in membership, but equal advancement in methods and scope of work has also been made. We advanced from a little four-page "Program," each page about four by six inches, to our Religio's Arena and two grades of Quarterlies in our publications. A definite and consecutive course of study has succeeded the four departments, and classes for study purposes have taken the place of the whole society studying and reciting together. The assessment plan for gathering funds has been rendered unnecessary by the revenue derived from publishing the Quarterlies. In many other respects, which cannot be referred to in a brief report, improvement of marked character has been made.

DEPARTMENTAL WORK

The last convention adopted the departmental idea, thereby specializing more definitely the work to be done by various executive officers, with the hope of inspiring greater activity. The objects sought have been realized to some extent; just to what extent, the report of each officer will show. So far as the work particularly outlined for the president is concerned, matters arose after the adjournment of convention, which have made it impossible to carry out more than a small part of the special work indicated. The cause that interfered was that the executive committee secured his services for writing the Senior Quarterly, which with his engagement with Graceland College has made the work along the specialty line quite limited. There would seem to be no question but that the action in specializing more fully the departmental duties was in the right direction, and that as time passes more and more will be done.

FIELD WORK

In harmony with counsel given by the leading missionary quorum of the church, field work has been left largely for local authorities, or other Religio workers, so that the general officers did less than in former years. The president attended reunions at Lamoni, Iowa, and Stewartville, Missouri. The vice president attended the reunion at Joplin, Missouri. The treasurer attended the reunion at Kirtland, Ohio. The home department superintendent attended reunions at Plano, Illinois, and Madison, Wisconsin. The superintendent of normal department attended the reunion at Kirtland, Ohio. The superintendent of the General Sunday School Association very kindly put Z. R.-L. S. on his program and ably presented our society work in a number of localities. . . .

PUBLICATIONS

By joint action the Executive committees of the Religio and Sunday school authorized a committee to arrange with the Board of Publication to enlarge the Autumn Leaves with a view to making it more distinctively an auxiliary periodical. A definite proposition has been made by the board but final action by the committee has not been taken, though favorable action seems likely.

The Junior Quarterly has been continued under the same editorship. An additional feature has been added in the matter of helps for teachers of the classes of young children.

The Senior Quarterly since the first of the year has been upon the Book of Mormon, in harmony with the order of last convention. The executive committee secured the services of your president to write these lessons, and two quarters are now before the membership. The demand for these Quarterlies has steadily increased, so much so that the supply has been entirely exhausted for both quarters this year and many orders could not be filled. An effectual remedy for such an unfortunate condition would be that all order by the year who could possibly do so, and see to it that subscriptions be kept paid in advance. The publishing house is under orders not to send Quarterlies beyond date of expiration, and when orders are made by the quarter instead of by the year, it is a very difficult matter to estimate two or three months in advance just how many will be needed. The estimates evidently have been rather too conservative, but an excess in the supply is a dead loss, so that in an effort to economize upon the part of the society, some of the members have been inconvenienced and hindered. The moral is plain. Order by the year, and far enough in advance that the printers may know more definitely how many to print.

LIBRARY

Brother S. A. Burgess, having decided to spend a year in Clark University, voluntarily retired from the office of librarian and the executive committee appointed Sister Louise Sheldon to fill out the term. Attention should be given to library interests that greater activity may result, and greater efficiency be shown. Our library theory looks well on paper but that it is a good workable system has not been fully and satisfactorily demonstrated. It seems that districts have not felt the support coming from the Library Commission that they should have felt was due, and advice has been received to the effect that considerable difficulty has at times been experienced in getting replies to inquiries. This is not offered as a criticism against persons, but to call attention to facts with the thought that the situation might be remedied.

TEACHER TRAINING

The superintendent of this department has suggested, and recently advised that the handling of this department in some way be under the auspices of Graceland College. It seemed that the conditions up to now would not have justified doing this; but now the situation may be somewhat different. Graceland Extension Institute is becoming quite well established, and courses in correspondence are offered allowing credit in the institution. Then, too, there is a proposition under contemplation looking towards making Graceland of much more direct service to the church by enlarging this field of extension work. Should such a thing materialize, it is possible that a solution to the teacher-training question may be found.

OUR MOTIVE

This report will not attempt to deal with items that properly belong to other departments, as it will be brief. As a whole the work of the society has gone forward during the year.

There is danger, however, that the leading motive for which the society was established may be crowded to a second place. The history of the first thirteen years of our life as a society clearly sets out the idea that the development for service in the church was the dominating principle. This training was to be given in two ways, study and practice. The study was to be directed mainly to the standard books of the church and incidentally to all good books. The practice was to be along lines tending to train by doing for the things needed to be done. Skill in writing in order that the printed word might be more widely disseminated; ability to speak in public, in order that the work in the pulpit might be made more efficient; and cultivating the gift of music and of song in order that public worship might be made more acceptable. These were the leading reasons for our efforts as understood then. They are still the leading reasons. Of course there are others; for instance training for presiding, visiting, looking after the needy, and doing clerical work, all are important. Not so much was thought about amusement and entertaining. That is a later idea, and is important. But there is a difference between being amused and entertained. We amuse the baby with a rattle box; we entertain the individual of more mature years with music, literary productions, lectures, good books, and so on. Let us not drift too much to amusement, but seek wholesome entertainment. Then, too, the individual who is employed, especially if pleasantly occupied, needs no entertainment; he is entertained.

Recreation may be different from either. The word means the act of creating anew, or again. Recreation is demanded only by those who are run down, weary or worn. We are recreated when we sleep, or sit down to rest. A change of activity is likewise a recreation, sometimes. Strenuous physical exertion could hardly be called bodily recreation. Mental recreation is not found amidst scenes that call for strenuous mental activity.

So we should not be deceived. The child that is amused too much acquires a morbid desire to be amused, and soon the rattle becomes too tame; he must have a squawker. The youth or adult that is entertained too much develops a distaste for any activity that is not pleasing for the time. Many people think they must take a vacation each year and spend the time at a resort imagining that a change is rest, but return home and to work, more tired than when they left.

But how about the social side of life? Yes, how about it? It does need attention and cultivation. But most that is needed will come incidentally, if careful attention is given to the other ideas already presented. To be sure the mingling in a social way should not be confined to our regular meetings, but occasions should be provided where greater freedom is enjoyed and attention given to the courtesies that make for good manners and good feeling one towards the other. A wise and harmonious blending of all these objects is a consummation devoutly to be wished.

The vice president, Sister M. A. Etzenhouser reported as follows:

As vice president I have counseled with the president whenever called upon, helping him as best I could. Have acted on executive and lessons committees, attending all the meetings called by the president.

Have especially pushed the phases of the work in the suggested outline that was passed at our last General Convention, under duties of vice presidents.

Have written leaflet, "Recreation and Socials," which gives suggestive outline of work for local social committees, and outlined report blank for district vice presidents and local vice presidents with their social committees. Both leaflet and report blank were approved by our general president and printed at the Herald Publishing House. Letters were written to the district vice presidents and a sample copy of leaflet and report blanks sent them. They were asked to order leaflets and send sample to each local chairman of the social work, and suggestion was made that locals provide leaflets for each member of social committees, both of the local and organized classes.

Solicited article from Apostle J. W. Rushton on "The church as a social center" and one from High Priest Joseph Tanner on "The boy and girl as the pastor's helpers." These articles were published in the HERALD and letters written to each district vice president calling their attention to them, and suggesting that they adopt such parts of them as suited their conditions.

The general officers received a very urgent invitation to occupy the columns of Autumn Leaves (Arena) and the Glad Tidings, so contributed two articles to Autumn Leaves and three to Glad Tidings. Have written about a dozen papers to be read before various district conventions. Some of these were solicited and others were sent to try to awaken the district conventions to the need of supervised social work, and clean athletics and games for the development of the youth of the church, keeping them from amusements that were questionable.

Each district has received three letters outside of correspondence that has been promptly answered, where suggestions were asked for, etc.

Attended the reunion of Spring River District as field worker and held daily sessions with good interest and attendance, though some thought that if the young needed exercise "let him plow corn." Have done a little work throughout the Independence Stake. Have felt that I could not accomplish much in a general way unless I kept vitally in touch with local work, so have taught a class of young people. The class is an organized one, with a membership of about forty, and our attendance has been from twenty-five to forty-two. Organized classes have done good work in Independence; three of them assisted the deacons, collecting funds for branch expenses and were successful to the extent of $275.60.

In reference to summer camps, we tried to establish one at Bean Lake for the young people of Independence Stake, but were only successful in interesting local Religians. Brother Etzenhouser and myself chaperoned the camp for two weeks and had a very enjoyable time, as did all those who attended.

If I were to count the success of the social features of the year by the reports received, I might feel very much disappointed, but it has been a year of sowing the seed, and perhaps others will have the pleasure of reaping the harvest. We have received all kinds of letters, some have said they were enthused, and the social work had "put a little ginger in the local." Others have said "they wondered what we would do next to keep the young people away from prayer meeting." Our largest local reports "over 250 games, 9 basket ball games, 1 automobile ride, 2 weenie roasts, 3 marshmallow roasts, 3 hikes, 3 camping trips, 2 picnics, 11 parties, 1 social without charge, 2 sleighing parties. There have been ice skating, coasting, bicycling by small parties. One line party to prayer meeting. Perhaps I might explain what is meant by this. Every member of a large organized class promised to attend prayer meeting and sit together and come with enough of the Spirit that it would flow from one to the other "as oil from vessel to vessel."

From reading the above list of legitimate pleasures the youth have indulged in in this local one might say, they must have done nothing else, so a word of explanation may be necessary. Most of the work was done by social committees of organized classes, and having several of these classes, each of which try to give some pleasurable affair once a month it does not take long to count up. The young people made two tennis courts, doing all of the work themselves, and one other court was offered to a class, and so tennis games were very popular and to the most of the youth of this locality who sit at desks all day long it proves a very enjoyable recreation. Other places write us they are getting the work under way, and will have favorable report to make next year.

We were especially pleased to receive a report from Brother Greenwood of England. They have had 3 outings, 1 excursion and 7 socials. They have been doing work along educational lines as fostered by the president; he reports history classes, etc. Considering the conditions I think this a very excellent report.

The following are statistics from various districts: Australia, N. S. W.: 4 outings, 4 excursions, 10 socials. Australia, Queensland: 1 outdoor game. California, Northern: 2 sportings, 3 outings, 1 toast and roast, 6 socials. Dakota, North: Nothing done. Conditions unfavorable. England: 3 outings, 1 excursion, 7 socials. Indiana, Southern: Nothing done. Conditions unfavorable. Massachusetts: 5 socials. Michigan, Central: 1 outdoor game, 1 outdoor recreation. Michigan, Western: 1 excursion, 9 socials. Independence Stake: 260 outdoor games, 25 outdoor recreations, 2 sportings, 9 outings, 5 toasts and roasts, 2 excursions, 3 receptions, 5 socials, 11 parties. Missouri, Spring River: 1 outdoor game, 1 outdoor recreation, 1 sporting, 1 outing, 2 toasts and roasts, 1 excursion, 1 reception. Oregon, Portland: 1 outdoor game, 1 reception, 1 social. Ohio, Kirtland: Planning next year's work. Total: 264 outdoor games, 27 outdoor excursions, 5 sportings, 20 outings, 8 toasts and roasts, 9 excursions, 5 receptions, 43 socials, 11 parties.

I have felt that I could not push the matter of vice presidents reporting their social work too vigorously, as constitution does not call for such report. Hope this feature will be corrected by suitable amendment.

A. E. McKim, secretary, reported:

To the Zion's Religio-Literary Society: As secretary my report is largely one of statistics and that will appear separately, in full. Some few items may be mentioned particularly, however.

During the year five new districts were reported as having been organized. South Queensland, Australia, Montana, Spokane, Pittsburgh, and Youngstown-Sharon. The last was taken from the Kirtland District. Utah was the only district disorganized.

There is a fine increase for the year as you will note by the printed report. Forty-eight new locals were chartered, and a membership of 921 added direct in that way. We have a net gain for the year of 29 locals, 1,261 members, and 1,035 gain in average attendance. This gain is made, and there are five districts not included. I was unable to get reports from New South Wales, Eastern Oklahoma or Southeastern Illinois. Montana and Spokane are new districts and have not yet got their work in shape to report.

By convention action last year, a standard of excellence was adopted for districts. I have tried to get this before the district secretaries as best I could, and have reports on it from a large majority of them. It is new however, and I did not expect to get returns from everyone. I did not have new blanks printed but typed a form for use this year, as an experiment. Another year a blank should be made up, on which the district secretary could make both his statistical report and the standard of excellence report. It can be made standard size then, too.

A new, standard size blank was made up for the district secretary to report on. Some changes have been suggested in it, and it may be well to revise one or two features of it when the present supply runs out. An effort is being made to standardize all books and reports throughout the Religio.

As a new officer I have found many things to learn, and have found everyone willing to help me. I have always felt the Religio had a distinct mission to fill, and I believe that she is coming into her own.

Hoping for a successful year for the Religio.

The report of the treasurer, J. A. Becker, showed a cash balance last year of $2,919.86; cash receipts $578.42; expenditures $1,021.46; balance on hand March 1, 1916, $2,477.83, with a credit balance with the Herald Publishing House of $662.39.

Louise Palfrey Sheldon reported as a member of the library commission:

To the General Convention of the Religio Society: I do not feel that I have much to report, and the reason is partly because I have not had time and strength to do more, and because of impracticabilities about our commission organization that hinder rather than facilitate the doing of things.

I completed the book catalogue and turned the manuscript over last spring. It only made its appearance in print a short time ago.

I investigated, and found that the Old Folk's Homes in Independence and the Orphan's Home at Lamoni, have no libraries. The old people would like a small library, consisting chiefly of church books. Reading would be a comfort to them, and help to pass the time away. We all feel the importance of supplying the children in our own homes with suitable literature, and provision should be made for our unfortunate little ones. I was promised that these matters would be taken up with the other members of the commission; I know of nothing further.

I have corresponded with a number of districts and locals, and given information whenever requested to do so.

I appreciate the confidence that was expressed in asking me to serve on the commission, but must decline to act another year.

The report of F. F. Wipper, home department superintendent, included the following:

NEW SUPPLIES

Immediately after the last General Convention, auxiliary workers and missionaries were interviewed, and the benefit of their experience was obtained to increase the efficiency of our department. We are indebted to these workers for many good suggestions which we were able to adopt.

The following new supplies were provided for this period: A general home department booklet of fourteen pages, a convenient pocket "Visitor's record," a "Local home department yearly record," two new report blanks for local and district workers, standard size.

Towards the end of the period, a "Workers' handbook" was prepared and published. This is a complete book of instructions for all Religio home department workers. . . .

EXTENSION CIRCLE

To assist those already engaged in the work of this department, and to reach a greater number of isolated Saints, a correspondence system was devised, which has thus far proved its worth, and which is certain to remain as a permanent appendage to the work of this department.

Thus far one hundred twelve correspondents have enrolled, each taking care of from one to six isolated Saints. These correspondents range in age from seven to seventy-five. Some are crippled or otherwise prevented from doing the active work others are permitted to do. Hundreds of letters have thus far been written to isolated Saints. Some of our correspondents supply their own names, but the most of them are supplied with names which were originally furnished to this office by the missionaries.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRINTED MATTER

About 8,000 home department booklets were distributed among missionaries, district and local workers, and isolated Saints.

Several thousand circular letters were sent to different workers and isolated Saints.

Sample sets of new supplies, instruction matter, etc., were sent to each district home department worker.

Each superintendent appointed in places outside of organized locals or districts was supplied with the necessary matter to do work with, including lesson Quarterlies.

Whenever possible, reunions and conventions were provided with the necessary matter to advertise this department.

CORRESPONDENCE

As near as can be estimated, about one thousand, five hundred personal letters were written by this office to missionaries, workers and isolated Saints. Many of these were written in longhand, while the writer was on the road on missionary work.

COOPERATION

The missionary arm of the church was appealed to to assist in reaching the isolated Saints, and quite a number responded. A number of good workers were located through their splendid efforts, and territory opened up that would otherwise have remained barren of any fruit.

District Religio presidents have been recently appealed to for cooperation, and some have responded favorably. We look for better results later. . . .

ORGANIZED TERRITORY

At the present time there are forty-nine district superintendents at work in organized territory. Six of these are located in Canada; the balance in this country. A number of these are splendid workers indeed, whom we are proud of and glad to be associated with. Our district officers have been urged to turn over all work that can and should be done by local workers, to the local superintendents. Many have responded to our suggestions, with a consequent corresponding increase in the efficiency of their efforts. The point of contact between district and local workers is not as free as we would like to have it be, but as our new suggestions are more generally adopted, we look for better results. Our district workers have been also urged not to confine their efforts among organized locals only. . . .

UNORGANIZED TERRITORY

There are at present nineteen district superintendents in unorganized territory. The most of these are new appointments. Splendid results are being accomplished by some of these workers.

Unless certain handicaps are removed, which will be handled later on, much of the good that can be accomplished through this means will be smothered.

FOREIGN FIELD

The work in Canada continues to grow. Conditions here as elsewhere would be much better but for the effects of the war.
