Regarding the British Isles, from correspondence received from Brother Greenwood, the prospects for establishing the home department work there appeared quite bright at one time this period, but nothing has been received from that field by us since that time.

Australia responded favorably to our appeal through Brother C. A. Butterworth, and we are now awaiting the action of their convention, regarding the appointment of a division superintendent.

The islands are still interested in the work of this department, and we are awaiting their report. . . .

ISOLATED SAINTS

The right to assume to undertake the stupendous task of reaching thousands of isolated Saints may be questioned by some, but it should be understood that we assume to do no more than which we humanly consider it a duty to do; and if our effort is limited, it will be limited only by ingredients of selfishness, which will undoubtedly warp and shrink our capacity to encompass or mother that which should be done. We aim to extend to all isolated Saints terms of genuine Zionism fellowship. We aim to increase the efficiency and power of each isolated Saint to witness to the world the fact that he is a Saint indeed.

LESSON "QUARTERLIES"

We must mention the fact that our Quarterlies are quite well adapted for use of the home student. The material for these lessons is surely quite well prepared. We hope that it will ever be borne in mind that the home student is not usually in possession of facilities and advantages within reach of others more favorably situated.

It is unfortunate that our Quarterlies are depended upon as a principal source of revenue for the general society. Under this system the Quarterlies are not permitted to circulate as freely as they should.

We urgently recommend a plan that will liberate the Quarterlies from this restriction, and permit them to circulate more freely as a medium of spreading light, and as a stimulus to a greater home department, and to a larger Religio Society.

FINANCES

Nearly all of our district workers report that owing to a lack of funds the work of the department is being hindered. Many of our workers are obliged to do without equipment very necessary to their work.

We have been urging our district officers not to confine their efforts among organized locals only in trying to extend the work. If we ever expect to make a proper growth it must be through this channel.

Workers appointed in places outside of organized locals depend upon the district officer for necessary supplies and equipment until the work in that place becomes self-sustaining. It takes some money to do this. But there is none to be had because most of the district treasuries are empty. The result is that the worker appointed in any certain place cannot supply the demand and the effort dies. In some places we have been fortunate enough to secure a worker who was able to advance the funds from his own pocket.

We believe that Religio workers are not any poorer than other workers. The fault evidently lies in the Religio financial system.

Money spent by this department is not an out and out expenditure without any returns. It is virtually an investment because a properly directed effort will result in an increase in enrollment, with a consequent increase in contributions. The home student makes a voluntary contribution. Why not adopt this same system in all of the societies?

We believe that the present financial system is deficient, and urgently recommend the adoption of the amendments covering this point.

GOOD LITERATURE

The advantage of our workers cooperating with the different local, district or stake library boards and good literature committees, to supply the isolated Saints with good reading matter, was clearly seen early in the work. This plan was therefore suggested to our workers in our book of instructions.

An effort has been made to interest one of the executives of these departments, but we hope that something more definite can be accomplished in the near future.

COMBINING FORCES

The methods employed by the Sunday School Association identify it as a specialist among the auxiliaries. This is equally true of the Religio Society.

Yet upon close examination we discover that there are certain lines of work in which the methods employed are common to both organizations. This appears to be especially true of the work of the home departments.

This suggests several questions. How far can the home department of both organizations work along common lines and where is the point of separation? Are the methods which may be adopted by both organizations in the work of this department, of such magnitude and importance, that it would warrant combining the work of these departments?

The superintendent of the temperance department, James Bunt, reported:

In some of the districts excellent and progressive work has been done, many lectures having been provided for and a host of literature distributed, a great amount dealing with the liquor traffic. Our people have been very active both in this country and in Canada in the promotion of prohibition, the results from such activity on all occasions having proven favorable.

With further reference to district representation, it need hardly be said that the accomplishment has not been without a great deal of correspondence being necessary in order to point out the necessity of the cause being taken on in all organized districts and locals not coming under such jurisdiction. Letters received have not all been encouraging, for it has taken much of my time in writing to some of our members as to why we should have direct representation, for the position has been taken that when our society invested this department it was a superfluous move. Even now, there are some disposed this way, they believing that in the teaching and preaching of the gospel, the principle of temperance is involved. While this is true, it also bears relationship to all departments of our society, and the same argument, (if it can be called such), must be aimed at our society as a whole. Then again, some of the districts are so small, and crowded out so much with other work, that it has been thought inadvisable to engage in temperance work for fear of other departments being neglected. I believe this is a wise course, as one thing done well is far and above the attempting of doing many things and losing out in the long run.

From the foregoing, I verily believe we can say that the temperance department has accomplished satisfactory results for the past twelve months, seeing that it has a representation of thirty-two districts out of a total of fifty-four.

Am pleased to state further of a growing interest in the fighting of the tobacco evil, and the general superintendent for the ensuing year should make a special feature of this work, for in so doing, we shall be reaching quite a large percentage of young folk who are being sapped from moral integrity because of allowing themselves to be enslaved with the tobacco evil. . . .

The church must continue to reign as the mother of human greatness—this means diligent and efficient workers—and as our society is part and parcel of the church, its membership should engage themselves in the practice and promotion of principles along the line of protection of the weak from the snares of the world, especially among the young who are so liable to be led astray by indulging in those things which at first only seem to be a sort of innocent pleasure, yet from the very beginning possess destructive agencies, which slowly but surely eat up the very things which must go to make perfect manhood and womanhood. The church must exist as the greatest unifying factor of all institutions of the earth set for the amelioration of the human race. This being so, the young of to-day are to be the laborers in a few years to come. What is their standing to be in that direction? It is up to all members of our society to ask themselves the question and to be ready to give a response. The temperance department covers an extensive field, and in the pursuit of this kind of work the best is being done in conforming to the rock-bottom principles upon which our society is founded, and we cannot afford to lose out in any direction. We must ever be on the increase and labor not alone in the interest of our society, but as a great factor to the church as a whole, for in this way the effect will be felt as a power for good in the world and the crowning blessedness and Spirit of the Master will be there to aid in bringing about our greatest hope in the permanent establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth.

Normal department superintendent, L. F. P. Curry, submitted the following:

During the year two aims have been held, first, to establish the work more firmly by increasing the number of local workers, and second, to arrange a course of study which might be taken instead of the Hurlbut text or the Religio Normal Course text, as a first course.

As to establishing the work more firmly, this has been done by appointing or through the election of district superintendents of the normal department, in all cases, practically, acting as joint officers for the association and the society. The plan, which has proved successful, has been put in operation in several States, the largest territory involved being that included in the Independence Stake.

The course of study provided as a first course has just been completed, and literature explaining it is now being prepared. It includes in the order named texts on child study, and the adolescent period; Sunday school pedagogy and story-telling; the Sunday school, with reference to its origin, evolution, and conduct; and Bible study. A course for pastors has also been prepared, in view of the advisory relation which these officers now bear to the auxiliary department. An experimental class has been organized in Providence, Rhode Island, and has completed a portion of the work in a highly satisfactory manner, demonstrating the practical nature of the study provided. Contemplated changes in the method of handling the teacher-training feature of our organizations may affect the continuance of this course.

During the year I have made a number of talks before conventions in various places, and have submitted papers to others. Besides this have written a large number of letters for the department, and during last summer conducted an institute for auxiliary and church workers at a reunion held in Kirtland, Ohio.

Details of the enrollments and examination follow:

Enrollments, Hurlbut and Religio courses, 320.

Examinations, all courses, 364.

Graduates, Hurlbut, 43; Religio, 11, advanced, 5; total, 59.

Classes being organized, but not reported, in Wisconsin, North Dakota, and Ontario, Canada, one each, 3.

These figures are not nearly as large as we desire, but represent the best efforts of those laboring in the interests of training work. They do not adequately indicate the sacrifices which have been made to place our teaching force in the auxiliaries on a firmer basis. One state superintendent who has been under severe physical disability, but who has nevertheless rendered active service, writes:

"I regret so much that more has not been accomplished during the year, but, it seems to me, the hardest thing to do is to convince the Saints the necessity of preparedness for the work before us. . . . I feel that we claim so much and do so little that people looking on cannot help but have little confidence in our assertions."

This is the comment of one of long experience in the work. It is encouraging to know that the condition described is gradually being eliminated because we are realizing with almost painful clearness that the price of divinely blessed success in training the youth of the church is on our part much study, constant prayer, and a great deal of hard work. The figures quoted, then, represent not only actual results, but give also a record of that which has been done under a handicap.

Reports have been made to the respective treasurers of the General Sunday School Association, and the Zion's Religio-Literary Society of the receipts and expenses of the department. These items summarized show receipts of $56.05, including a small balance of 35 cents from my report of March 20, 1915; expenses total $43.31, leaving a balance on hand of $12.74. The amounts are, of course, apportioned equally to each organization.

Harvey Sandy, superintendent of gospel literature bureau, reported 227,974 pieces of literature distributed, an increase of 58,123 over last report, and approximately eleven times as much as reported in 1911. This report included the following:

Insofar as our time and abilities would allow, during the past year, we have waged a most relentless fight in order to carry out the responsibilities we believed imposed. We have urged in every honorable way we knew to secure the appointment of district superintendents in every place where there was a district organization. Forty-five districts have organizations more or less complete; some not working, if reports or lack of reports is any criterion. Almost without exception, the reports indicate increased interest and zeal in this department. Its importance is recognized everywhere. Notwithstanding the encouraging features of the work, it is not without its drawbacks. In a number of instances, appointments have been made without the consent of the appointee. There are a number of instances of this kind, where after repeated correspondence (on my part), and finally asking for report at the close of the year, we are informed that the appointment was made without their consent, that they had not tried to do any work, and the hope expressed that better success would follow our efforts another year. . . .

We have tried to cooperate with the Bureau of Publicity and Board of Publication as per resolutions of the last convention, but made little or no progress. Have written several letters to district superintendents and others urging them to take advantage of the offers of the publishing houses, especially the folder series and Angel Message tracts, which are especially adapted to our needs; also endeavor to increase the circulation of the church papers by showing the necessity and importance of the membership keeping in touch with the progress and development of the affairs of the church. . . .

We wish to make mention of the valuable and cheerful assistance rendered by Brother G. R. Wells, General Superintendent of the Sunday School Association, by way of institute work in his travels through the northern part of the United States and Canada. Also Brother F. F. Wipper of the home department, and possibly others. There is demand for this kind of work everywhere, and it would seem that with proper cooperation in all the departments of the association much good might be accomplished.

The following districts that have organizations, have failed to make reports: Winnipeg, Canada; Eastern Iowa; North-eastern Kansas; Far West, Missouri; Eastern Oklahoma, notwithstanding three appeals have been made to them. . . .

It was indicated in our last report that there should be a union of the forces of the church, Sunday school and Religio in order that the work of the Gospel Literature Bureau might be carried on more effectively. We are of the same opinion still, and now recommend that a committee of three be appointed by the chair or otherwise if thought best, to formulate a plan to inaugurate the change.

There seems to be quite a demand for the leaflet gotten out several years ago, entitled "28 Reasons Why the Gospel Literature Bureau." The supply has been entirely exhausted. A revised issue should be gotten out at the earliest possible date. There should also be gotten out a small folder leaflet, entitled "What to Do," etc. This would eliminate considerable correspondence. Our object in mentioning these matters is for the guidance of the appropriation committee.

An additional report from the superintendent of gospel literature, same being the report of the work done in Australia, was submitted.

Sister Emma Snead at this time favored the convention with a violin solo.

Louise Evans addressed the assembly on the subject, "The district secretary in the field."

A motion prevailed authorizing the appointment of a committee as recommended in the report of the superintendent of gospel literature, to take under advisement the unification of efforts of the Religio, Sunday school and church in the distribution of literature.

The general historian, Sister J. A. Gardner, reported:

To the General Convention, Greeting: During the year 1915 about 400 circular letters were sent out to the district and isolated locals, calling their attention to the important items of history connected with the early work of the Religio, where various movements originated and when. We emphasized the necessity for keeping a record of all activities, not only for the purpose of giving credit for push and progress where it belongs, but that the historian's record may be of service in compiling statistics on any phase of the Religio work, the results of which may be used in a general way as a basis for future work.

We have received reports showing that 6 district historians and 12 local historians have been appointed. . . .

Nothing has been added this year to the history of the Religio, which is in the hands of the president and is complete up to 1900. The succeeding years will not be as difficult to write as the preceding ones, since the secretary's record will furnish items more in detail for the last 10 years. We have not been permitted to do anything with this part of the Historian's work this year, not because of disinterestedness, however, but because other work has crowded and because of home duties.

We suggest that it is very necessary that a record book be kept by the General Historian and the District Historians, showing the statistics reported. Also a suggestive report blank should be printed for the use of the locals.

The hearty response from all parts of the country to the request to appoint historians, both locally and in the districts promises to make the historian's work interesting.

With best wishes for the Religio work as a factor for much good with the young people.

The executive committee submitted the following:

The executive committee held a number of meetings following adjournment of the convention last April and action was taken upon the following:

It was decided to make no special effort towards translation fund this year.

Pearl Gardner was sustained as society historian.

Harvey Sandy was continued as superintendent of Gospel Literature Bureau.

C. B. Woodstock was continued editor of the Junior Quarterly.

President J. A. Gunsolley was chosen to write the Senior Quarterly, lessons to begin January, 1916, using the Book of Mormon as the text. R. W. Farrell was continued to finish the lessons for 1915.

Three hundred dollars was recommended for aiding in the purchase of an X-Ray machine by the Sanitarium, to be paid when enough cash should be raised to pay cash for the instruments.

The president and librarian were authorized to represent the executive committee in conference with the Board of Publication and Church Historian in matter of publishing normal book.

Standardized report blanks and binders were adopted for use of various officers.

Fifty dollars was appropriated for incidental expenses of home department.

The following were chosen as lessons revising committee, Heman C. Smith, Flora L. Scott and W. J. Mather, the first two being continued from previous years, and the last chosen to succeed J. A. Gunsolley.

A copy of the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants in best binding with names on cover was awarded to each member of the revising committee as a slight evidence of appreciation of their service.

A meeting was held jointly with the Sunday School Executive at which the following items of business were transacted.

L. F. P. Curry was continued superintendent of the normal department.

The appointment of field workers was left to the superintendent of the Sunday School Association and the president of the Religio. They were authorized to appoint local field workers whenever and wherever occasion justifies or requires, and that every officer of the Sunday school and the Religio be recognized as field workers subject to appointment by those in charge of field work.

A committee of three was appointed, consisting of G. R. Wells, Daniel Macgregor and J. A. Gunsolley and empowered to act in making arrangements with the Board of Publication to enlarge the Autumn Leaves with the idea of making it more distinctly an auxiliary organ.

The lessons committee reported:

The lessons committee consisting of J. A. Gunsolley, T. J. Elliott, C. B. Woodstock, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, present, met and took action as follows:

Suggested that the editor of the Junior Quarterly write about one half column of "Suggestions to Primary Teachers" with each lesson.

Recommended that editor of Senior Quarterly follow narrative of the Book of Mormon beginning with the Jaredites and that doctrinal points be emphasized and collateral evidence be produced from the Bible, Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon Proven by Archæology, and Stebbins' Lectures on the Book of Mormon, citing page and paragraph.

The revising committee reported as follows:

The committee on revision of lessons have received the lessons from those appointed to write them with but little delay. This is especially so regarding the Seniors.

The committee have passed upon the lessons promptly and come nearer having them in the hands of the publishers on contract time than ever before.

We have in general been pleased with the lessons presented.

The committee on amalgamation reported:

To the President and Convention, Zion's Religio-Literary Society: On behalf of the committee appointed by the Religio to consider the question of merging or amalgamating the work of the two auxiliary organizations, we report:

Owing to the prevalence of conditions which at the present time are unfavorable to fuller consideration of the question, we recommend that the committee be continued. The committee is of the opinion that in view of general needs and well-grounded expectation of early developments involving the general interests of the work, well-defined plans for better coordination of the work of the two auxiliaries may be reported and considered at no distant day. We hope to make such report to the General Convention of 1917.

The social purity board submitted the following:

To the General Religio Society in Convention Assembled: The Social Purity Board has continued its work under the same painstaking care that it has endeavored to exercise from its appointment, and we are of the opinion that the effort should be carried forward in the same careful manner. Especially will it be well to be certain of the wisdom of new steps before they are taken.

The church has undoubtedly entered this field permanently. The social evil and kindred curses have hardly a competitor in their effect on morals. It becomes the duty of the church to grapple with this death-dealing scourge, as with all enemies of human progress. This may best be done at present, at least, through some such organized plan as is now provided; not because purity work is a thing apart from the gospel, but because it may at this time be more effectually handled under special provision. Sharing as a church in the achievements of the age, it becomes us to perform well our portion for the betterment of that society of which we are a part, and it certainly devolves upon us to adapt the purity movement to the needs of our people, that in our coordinated efforts as a church we may draw from this as from all other sources in realizing the development that shall make us the Zion of prophecy.

SOLVING THE PROBLEM

To this end the board has continued to study the work before us. And in this connection there has been published during the year a pamphlet by J. W. Rushton, The Problem of Social Purity. As its title suggests, this leaflet is more of an effort to call attention to the purity problem, and to offer a few general suggestions, than to present definite plans for its solution.

What shall be our part as a people in the great world movement to combat the evils of impurity? What shall be our line of procedure to bring about the best conditions within our own ranks? These are the questions now confronting us, and it is with the latter that we are at this time especially interested. When prepared to serve ourselves, we will be prepared to serve others.

SUITABLE LITERATURE

We are persuaded that when we have finally settled upon a fixed policy we should provide literature suited to our purposes and carrying the ideals and spirit of the latter-day work. For this we shall need the most studious preparation, and a reasonable amount of experience, so that such literature as we produce shall be practicable and adequate. The outside literature that has been recommended has been used because we have none of our own. The board has selected it as the best coming under their observation. In time we should have our own.

The literature heretofore recommended is on sale at the Herald Publishing House. During the year eight hundred copies of Shannon and Lowry books have been sold through this institution, which, together with twelve hundred the year before, we think makes a creditable showing. In addition to this we have collected a few purity books, forming a loan library from which workers may be supplied with such as we have in this line.

First of all, perhaps, our constructive literature should contain an appeal to parents and instruction in how to teach their children the secret springs of life, and the potentialities of purity; and for such of them as may not feel qualified even with this help to teach, literature adapted to the child, so that at the opportune time he may be furnished it by the parent. Literature suitable for both sexes and for different ages would follow. This special work might be supplemented by articles and stories in our church periodicals, carrying the spirit of the purity movement and incorporating its lessons.

OUR MOST FERTILE FIELD

We wish to especially emphasize the conviction that the home is the most fertile field for our operations—for it there is no substitute. The church should in a general way do its part; the school may perform its part; but it remains for the home under the most intimate associations possible, and guided by the help of God through the leadings and influences of his Holy Spirit, to teach the child the truths coming generations must know if they shall escape the consequences of ignorance, incontinence, and sin. How to bring these duties to the attention of the parent, and how to qualify him for them—as we have indicated, this is our present work.

Sermons and lectures can be made a strong feature in all fields of purity work. The board has been slow to urge this kind of work, particularly special lectures, because their own limitations have persuaded them that persons qualified for this work are not many. Members of the Social Purity Board, missionaries, auxiliary representatives, and local workers are developing along these lines. Time should give us specialists, if we shall think wise to direct them in fields where conditions advise such work.

A number have come to urge that local officers should be qualified to cooperate with the home in the features of purity work best handled in that way. This would be ideal where men are sufficiently acquainted with the work and family needs, and possessed of tact and wisdom. It occurs to the board, however, that it will be some time before this plan could be generally adopted. Where branches have men who could take up the work among their constituency, it would be to the advantage of the work for the board to be informed as to developments.

FURTHER ORGANIZATION

The board has authorized nothing in the way of local organizations, branch or district. Leagues and societies have in a few instances been organized to forward the work, especially among the young, and in some cases district and local superintendents have been appointed, on authority of the auxiliaries. The board has given counsel to these workers, as it has been sought. If local organizations and appointments are to be generally encouraged, it would be well to provide some centralized uniformity of action and effort. Any suggestions or instructions from the general bodies along these lines would be necessary before the board could act authoritatively, and, as at present constituted, before it would act.

THE OUTLOOK

The board is pleased to note a tendency toward organized efforts looking to the activity of our young people and others along athletic and cultural lines. We recognize these movements as potent forces for development along avenues that will bring the Saints to an atmosphere of physical and mental vigor and cleanliness which will permit the fullest expression of purity ideals among us. Constructive work of this kind, employing mind and body, is more wholesome than a world of warning, and is what is advised by purity workers everywhere.

Past pleasant associations with the Woman's Auxiliary have continued. This society in its excellent work does much that is supplementary to the purity effort, where it is not a part of that work directly. Responses from missionaries show a growing interest and more careful and efficient work on their part. Inquiries from local men and auxiliary workers indicate a widening interest and investigation. Reports and observations evidence a lessening emphasis on the livid reflections of uncleanness, and increasing emphasis on the fruits of purity. All these developments assure us of the onward march of this department with others in the great cause we represent.

R. W. Farrel, treasurer of the social purity board, reported total receipts $73.14, including a cash balance of $21.45; expenditures $32.72, leaving a balance on hand of $40.42.

Elbert A. Smith, editor of the Arena department in Autumn Leaves, reported:

To the Convention; Greeting: During the year most of the work of editing the Arena Department has been done by Sister Estella Wight. Both the Religio and the Sunday school should make better use of Autumn Leaves. The Religio is already represented, as also the Woman's Auxiliary. If the Sunday school should add another form of sixteen pages to our magazine and fill it with good matter, and all get behind it and work for new subscribers, much good could be accomplished.

Evidently during the very recent years we have permitted the literary part of the magazine to become filled with much matter too prosy and heavy for the young people. But during the past year we have endeavored to correct that error, and we will continue to solicit and no doubt obtain contributions better calculated to appeal to the young, balancing instruction with a due measure of entertainment.

Autumn Leaves needs three thousand new subscribers. Will you help get them?

J. A. Gunsolley, editor of the senior Quarterly, re-reported:

By action of convention the new series of lessons was to begin January, 1916. The lessons have been writetn in harmony with the direction of the Lessons Committee, and have been finished on time. Third quarter is nearing completion but may be just a little late. Many commendations have been received and so far as known the lessons are giving fairly good satisfaction. The work has been pleasant, though just a little strenuous, and a satisfactory degree of the Spirit has been felt in the writing of the lessons.

The report of the editor of the junior Quarterly included the following:

The year's lessons have covered the period of one hundred and fifty years just preceding the birth of Christ. I would suggest that the series be continued through the coming year, covering the remainder of the Book of Mormon records.

I wish we had some new, revised, colored maps for use in the Quarterly as well as suitable illustrations of Book of Mormon life with which to enrich the lessons. It seems that the need of a qualified illustrator for church quarterlies, periodicals and books is a crying need of our day.

The "Helps for the Primary Teacher," have not been extensive but may have served the purpose for which they were intended.

The library commission submitted a report as follows:

To the General Religio Society: The Library Commission held several meetings during the General Conference of 1915, and did such work as seemed necessary to prepare for the conference year.

E. H. Fisher was elected secretary; Heman C. Smith, purchasing agent; and Estella Wight, librarian. The chairman of the commission was not able to attend any of these meetings, owing to the press of conference duties, and has not been able to give the work very much attention during the year. S. A. Burgess having resigned during the year, Sister Louise Sheldon was appointed in his stead for the balance of the year.

During the year the commission in addition to performing its usual functions, has published at least two important pieces of literature which will enable the general officers to keep in closer touch with the stakes, districts, and locals, and will furnish the library workers material to meet their needs.

These two pieces of literature are, First: A printed list of books and authors to be sent out generally to the library departments and to individuals who may inquire for a list of preferred books. This pamphlet, prepared by Sister Sheldon, contains a classified list of books under different headings, and arranged for readers of different ages.

Second: A Library Commission pamphlet of instructions to stake, district, and local boards. It has been endeavored to make this pamphlet so complete that library workers everywhere may find assistance within its pages that will help them in solving every problem that confronts them.

The commission has rendered some further assistance to the Sanitarium library, supplying a small appropriation and a number of books. We have made some inquiry into the needs of the libraries in the homes for the aged people at Lamoni and Independence, also the library at the Children's Home.

During the year the commission was represented by Heman C. Smith at a meeting of the Iowa State Library Board, at Colfax, Iowa.

A new steel library stack has been purchased and installed. This stack is like the one previously purchased, and will insure better and more extended shelf room. The cost of this stack, $85, comes out of the cash balance reported on hand.

Attached hereto will be found report from E. A. Blakeslee, treasurer; H. C. Smith, purchasing agent; and Estella Wight, librarian.

E. A. Blakeslee, treasurer of the library commission, reported total receipts, $320.20, expenditures, $155.84.

Heman C. Smith, purchasing agent of the library commission, reported total receipts, $179.75; expenditures, $112.47.

The general church librarian's, Estella Wight's report included:

I have occupied in the capacity of General Librarian only during the last four months, my active service beginning November 1, 1915. Since taking charge have rearranged to some extent the majority of books, the remainder being left for rearrangement until the arrival of new shelves. A new bookstack, arriving March 3, will give the additional shelf room so much needed.

A number of additional books had been acquired, by gift and purchase.

2 P. M.

J. A. Gunsolley announced number 206, after the singing of which J. F. Garver offered prayer.

The convention was favored with a vocal duet by Sister Myra and Brother Edward Brackenbury.

The minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

Credentials committee submitted an additional report, which was approved.

James Bunt delivered an address on "The temperance department."

B. H. Doty was added to the ratification committee.

As the committee authorized by action in the morning session growing out of the report of the superintendent of gospel literature, Harvey Sandy, Vernon Lee, Horace Roberts were appointed.

F. F. Wipper, Florence McNichols and Sister W. H. Deam were appointed as a committee to look into the matter of coordinate working relations of the home departments of Sunday school and Religio, to report to this convention.

The following was submitted by a committee representing the organized class movement:

Resolved, That we indorse the organized class movement, and petition the executives of this society to appoint a department head to push and further the interests of the organized class movement.

The resolutions committee approved the resolution. Its adoption was moved.

The chair ruled that since the proposed action would create a new department not provided for in the constitution it was out of order, and should hold over until next year.

The executive committee was by motion instructed to include an active campaign in favor of organized classes in the program of the coming year's work.

The constitution was amended substituting for the term librarian the terms, member of the library commission, and member of library board, and to otherwise change the wording so the constitution would conform to the present system in vogue in the library work.

The constitution was amended to provide that the superintendent of gospel literature in the general association, the district and local organizations, be an elective instead of an appointive officer, and that he be one of the executive committee in each instance. The same action was had affecting the temperance superintendent in the departments named.

The constitution was further amended to allow each district or stake to provide its own rules of representation for local conventions, the basis of which must not exceed one for every ten members or fraction over five.

Amendments to the constitution were adopted enlarging and otherwise defining the work of the home department; authorizing collections in locals for local, district and general work; further defining the duties of the secretary; and authorizing annual instead of semiannual elections in locals.

One verse of number 99 was sung, and B. J. Scott dismissed the assembly.

7.30 P. M.

The juvenile orchestra rendered a selection.

With G. R. Wells in charge, number 62 was sung.

T. J. Elliott addressed the assembly on the subject, "What the association can do for the small or average school."

E. D. Moore spoke on the subject, "What the small school can do for itself."

Harvey Sandy delivered an address on, "Another step in gospel literature work."

Number 56 was sung, and H. J. Davison dismissed the assembly.

The following communication from the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve was read:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 3, 1916.

To the Convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society; Greeting: By direction of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College and on invitation of the Presidency of the church George N. Briggs, President of Graceland College, appeared before the joint council and presented the matter of making Graceland College more of a training school for the purpose of better equipping our young people for service in the auxiliaries of the church. This would be done by having the districts and larger branches send one or more students to Graceland each year for the purpose of taking the regular college work, and in addition take the training which will prepare them to become workers, teachers, officers and organizers in the different auxiliaries of the church.

After due consideration of the matter the following action was taken by the council:

"Resolved, That we look with favor upon the suggestion of Professor George N. Briggs that there be a chair or chairs established, or some other provision be made in Graceland College for the training of workers for the auxiliary societies of the church, and further that the general conventions be advised of our action."

Respectfully submitted,

E. A. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

JOHN W. RUSHTON, Secretary Twelve.

Recommendations from the executive committee on the foregoing proposition were read as follows:

1. That the proposition to make Graceland College more of a training school for service in the church as suggested and recommended in the communication from the joint council be approved; and that the executive committee of the society be authorized to cooperate with the executive council of the Sunday School Association in establishing and endowing a "chair of Religious Education" in the college.

2. That the work of this department be to train the young people of the church in a knowledge of its three standard books in methods of organizing and prosecuting all the various phases of Sunday school and Religio-Literary work, and such other forms of church activities as may properly come within the scope of its purpose.

3. That an appropriation of not to exceed seven hundred dollars be made for that purpose, provided the Sunday School Association appropriate at least an equal amount.

4. That the appropriation be placed in the college treasury to be used for the furtherance of the work of this department.

It was moved that the proposition be looked on with favor, the recommendation of the executive committee approved, and the committee be authorized to make such appropriation as suggested.

It was moved to defer action for one year.

After discussion adjournment was taken till 1 p. m., the benediction being pronounced by L. G. Holloway.

1 P. M.

After the singing of number 111, Granville Trowbridge offered prayer.

The discussion pending at the time of adjournment was resumed. The previous question was ordered. The motion to defer action for one year was lost by a vote of 65 to 80. The motion to approve the proposition was lost by a vote of 54 to 93.

For expenses of the offices named the appropriations committee recommended the following: For use by the president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, home department superintendent, temperance superintendent, gospel literature superintendent, normal superintendent, social purity board, library commission, $50 each, and for the Graceland scholarship fund $300.

It was moved that these recommendations be amended by substituting for the home department superintendent $100 instead of $50. The amendment was lost. The recommendations of the committee were approved.

The committee appointed to draft resolutions of respect for the outgoing president submitted appropriate articles, which were unanimously adopted.

Benediction by J. A. Gunsolley adjourned the convention.

Sunday School Convention

TUESDAY, APRIL 4

2.30 P. M.

The twenty-fifth annual convention of the General Sunday School Association was called to order in the lower auditorium of the Independence church by Superintendent G. R. Wells. Number 96 was sung. F. A. Smith offered prayer.

The report of the credentials committee, E. E. Corthell, J. W. Stobaugh, Sister W. S. Pender, was approved.

Superintendent Wells, under provision of the constitution assisted by first and second assistant superintendents, Daniel Macgregor and T. J. Elliott, proceeded to preside over the convention, and E. D. Moore to act as secretary.

The chair was authorized to appoint necessary committees and officers to complete the organization. The chair announced that choristers from various districts would have charge of the music; for resolutions committee, M. A. McConley, P. N. Craig, Blanche I. Andrews; notifications committee, B. H. Doty, David Taylor; assistant secretaries, J. W. Stobaugh, Nina Davison; ushers, local and visiting deacons.

Superintendent G. R. Wells reported in part as follows. The full report appeared in the Sunday School Department of the HERALD of March 31.

Thirty-five per cent, a little over one third of the baptisms recorded during the past year were under the age of fifteen. This shows the fine opportunity lying at the door of the Sunday schools of the church—not the opportunity to do all the work of securing to the church its own natural increase, but the privilege of being a help to church and to parents upon whom the Lord has placed the major responsibility. Nor does the responsibility cease there. It has two phases: First, to prepare them for baptism; second, to hold them. We are more successful in the first than in the second.

The closest cooperation must exist between the home, branch and school if we are to accomplish this mission. The sentiment upon this is in evidence but the practical operation is only partially so. The fullest possible coordination in this respect has yet to be realized. This is one of the greatest needs of our work in behalf of the youth of the church. . . .

CHRISTMAS OFFERING

Ten years ago when the association numbered 20,459 we made a "jubilee offering" of $5,742.06, or an average of 28 cents a member. Since then we have nearly doubled our number and also in exact ratio we have doubled our annual offering. The Blue Stepping Stones will show the last offering was $10,904.24 for a membership of 38,938, showing the very same average of 28 cents a member. We are pleased with the effort and it is a welcome gift to the church at a time when much needed. Yet there is a mathematical uniformity about it that we should not tolerate. We would like to see the association excel itself next Christmas and break the monotony by making it at least fifteen thousand. We can do it if we begin now to talk and plan for it in every school. Too many leave it till the last moment, and the offering does not represent as many as it should. "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." Above all, keep before the children the right motive when talking about the offering. . . .

THE BUSINESS SIDE OF IT

So many of our schools are pursuing the hand-to-mouth policy of ordering lessons only by the quarter (one issue at a time), that we are unable to estimate accurately the number of Quarterlies to print, resulting either in running short or having too many on hand. The first is an annoyance to our patrons who accuse us of bad management, while the second is a loss to the association.

We are urging all schools to subscribe by the year, which is cheaper for them and it would enable us to estimate quite closely enough the size of each issue. In this effort, we crave the cooperation of every missionary as well as district and local officers in our effort to get the schools on to a better basis. Surely, where schools haven't funds ahead anyone would favor them with the loan of the amount necessary to pay for a year's supply. . . .

In this connection we wish to remind our patrons of a rule passed by the General Association that Quarterlies are payable in advance. The other method entails employment of bookkeepers, which would increase the cost of Quarterlies.

The revenue from these publications furnishes the sole support of the association. We do not need to appeal to the church for help nor make a levy on districts or schools. Our treasurer reports a fair balance notwithstanding that administration expenses have been heavier than ever before. . . .

TRAINING WORKERS

Last July, the Northern Wisconsin district association appointed the superintendent and Elder J. W. McKnight, a committee to see what can be done toward establishing a summer training school for auxiliary workers at Lake Chetek, where the church has permanent buildings on one of the finest locations for summer meetings in the United States—fully as good as the site of the summer training school on Lake Geneva, established at great expense by the International Sunday School Association. When a body of workers ask for a training school, it is a sign that we cannot afford to ignore, since the need of training is one of the foremost we have today. Not training of teachers only; for teachers must have trained officers to lead them before our training plan is complete. We are constantly corresponding with officers who come to their work without previous experience. Of the two million Sunday school officers in America, very few have had any training. This applies also to more than six thousand officers in our own association.

While preparing to report on the above, we are impressed to urge upon your notice the need of something larger, and more general, and continuous in its scope than a local summer training school. We want and must have something centrally located that will give the whole church a constant supply of trained auxiliary workers.

First assistant superintendent Daniel Macgregor reported:

The year that has just passed has been marked by evidences of patient plodding rather than by an meteoric display. This is well.

It has been a time of proving out the policies of the past; and we believe that proving out must continue until the utmost benefit anticipated shall have been realized. Continued interest borne by a sense of duty and necessity is being maintained in school work.

If any suggestion of mine could emphasize the greatest need of our schools to-day, it is in line of better teachers: teachers qualified by increased consecration. A real converted teacher can do more than any other factor in our school work to develop our children individually and our schools collectively. Needless to say it is not within the power nor province of the association to impart this qualification. Consecration is voluntary and grows in the soil of human agency.

However, as an association interested in the work of developing teachers, we believe it our impressive duty to advocate unto urging, that they who take upon themselves the work of our Lord shall adorn themselves in the apparel of devoted consecration. With such a preparation on the part of our teachers, all other adjuncts will mechanically tender their assistance and will be just as spontaneously received.

Give us genuinely converted teachers and we'll have converted pupils and resultingly a converted and consecrated church.

Second assistant superintendent T. J. Elliott reported as follows:

During the year just passed I have tried to fill all the responsible duties that have fallen to my lot. In every way I have tried to respond to the call of duty and at such solicitation for direct work and individual participation where it was possible, I have tried to give our work the best representation. I was unable to respond to one call from our general office to represent the work in a distant locality owing to it being impossible for me to leave my employment just at that time. In every other way I have tried to support our general superintendent and in our correspondence I have tried to be prompt, ready and willing to counsel in our work.

I feel from my personal observation our work has had a greater impetus than ever before. Our Sunday school work has been growing, the local schools have been thriving through the introduction of new and beneficial features that have brought splendid results to the work. Special institute and conference sessions have been alive and teeming with eloquent measures that have both surprised and pleased beyond all expectations.

In these gatherings wonderful thought and light has been developed; new talent and live workers have been brought into the forefront. Thus our work is gradually and positively shaping towards the destiny intended and we feel sure there will come out from the young now growing up a corps of workers who will transcend anything that has yet been accomplished in the Sunday school world. Yet we must look about us, for in the world the Sunday school work is being pressed to the very utmost and it is our responsibility to bring into execution all the best methods and plans for successful and advanced work. Many good things may be adopted and yet in our own ranks we feel we have those who are capable of producing original work to compare favorably with any.

I feel our methods, lessons and different departments have been a success, so far as we have gone. Let us all unite toward the greater goal, the best in every way for the success of our especial work and the glory of God.

Secretary E. D. Moore reported:

During the year we have been in touch with workers in all parts of the land and elsewhere, and in most of the places there is a distinctively alert attention to the needs of the district. While our experience in this capacity has been short, it seems the districts are demanding more efficiency of their officers. This is as it should be. Sunday school work demands consecrated efforts to make it advance and keep out of the ruts, and a district officer can do a great deal to this end.

As has been the case from the beginning, we are continually hampered by a constant change of officers, but we hope those taking up other lines of activity will continue to lend their support and aid with their knowledge of conditions. We also appreciate the marked enthusaism of many of the new officers.

A considerable number of districts have adopted standards of excellence by which their schools may be graded as the districts are graded by the standard adopted for them. This invariably increases the efficiency of the schools if properly attended to by the district officers. We are pleased to report six districts as first grade. . . .

There are 81 districts this year, and 14 schools not in districts—a gain of four districts, and two schools. . . .

The routine work is quite heavy much of the time, and never is there a time when good work could not be done by still more correspondence. We have answered all inquiries promptly and sought to infuse the personal element into our efforts. The installing of the new supplies has brought a number of inquiries from local officers, but so far as we can learn, they are giving satisfaction where intelligently used.

About five hundred personal letters have been sent out this year, and everything is in such shape that anyone can take up the work where it is and not have to duplicate our efforts. The card index system used in this office and that of the superintendent enables us to aid each other very materially in our reporting system.

A new report blank form was sent out to district secretaries, proposing an easy method of reporting items from schools to district conventions. The response has been very favorable and the blanks will be printed and put on sale with others. We appreciate the disposition to accept any move that is progressive in its nature.

Sister E. S. McNichols, home department superintendent, submitted the following:

The work of this office has been done in addition to various other duties and obligations. The routine work has its pleasant and enjoyable features, but nevertheless, levies heavily upon time and energy, leaving too little of either for consummation of plans and ideas which would extend the work and broaden the field of action. Statistics at hand will not accurately portray home department conditions as our reporting system is somewhat neglected. Some few districts fill out report blanks in detail but the majority are decidedly incomplete.

We have written about 1,600 letters in the interests of this department during the year in addition to sending out supplies and much literature. Reports indicate much activity in isolated and unorganized localities, but many schools are negligent in providing for home class study. Some of our superintendents of schools and of districts do not properly attribute to this splendid feature of Sunday school procedure the tremendous importance it deserves and we should awaken to the fact that where there are neglecting classes, there are also neglected ones. Can you afford to have that imputation laid at your door, you who have accepted this sacred trust?

The supreme test of all our work is its humanizing quality and we should be as much interested in those who have not the opportunity of meeting together in communal association as in those who enjoy this much-to-be-desired privilege. Three districts and 153 local schools are without a home department member.

However there are some encouraging features in the year's work. Four hundred and two members have been transferred to schools during the year, which is to be commended, although it reduces the present membership. Financially the home department is a most healthy organization and cannot be accused of being a drag any longer. One district with but 37 members contributes $18.90; another with 60 members gives $20.23, etc. These as well as many other districts are not only self-supporting but donate a generous sum to the local treasury. Many of the ministry have aided by sending us names of isolated ones and presenting the merits of the home department.

Total reported membership for the year, 6,078.

Transferred, 402.

Contributions (incomplete), $2,120.90.

Present membership, 5,675.

The home department superintendent reported total receipts $36.41, expenditures $34.72.

John Smith treasurer reported a cash balance of $2,423.99, other receipts, $8,636.07; expenditures $9,128.43, balance on hand, $1,931.63. The auditors reported the accounts correct, and the report of the auditors and of the treasurer were adopted.

The library commission, the social purity board and the superintendent of normal department submitted copies of the same reports made to the Religio convention, and which appear in the report of same in the HERALD.

The report of the treasurer together with that of the auditors was by motion approved.

It was moved that a committee to confer with the joint council of First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve to receive nomination or nominations for superintendent of the association as provided by convention of two years ago, be selected.

It was moved as a substitute that the action of two years ago providing that the joint council nominate for superintendent be rescinded. The substitute prevailed.

A greeting from the Quorum of Twelve sent by the notification committee was read.

Various resolutions were referred to the resolutions committee.

Articles from Central Illinois, Spring River, and Eastern Michigan concerning quarterlies were referred to the resolutions committee, with H. O. Smith, J. W. Wight and Lee Quick added to the committee for consideration and report the petitions named.

One verse of number 100 was sung, and Daniel Macgregor dismissed the meeting.

Mrs. E. C. McNichols addressed the meeting on the subject, "Unexpected resources of music in auxiliary work."

The following was submitted by the executive council:

Regarding the matter of providing something to fill the place of the Exponent, which was referred by last convention, we report that our sub-committee has found that we can secure 16 pages in Autumn Leaves (added space) to be edited under direction of the association, monthly, on condition that the association will secure 1,000 new subscriptions to that journal; or we can have eight extra pages monthly for 600 new subscribers. For the present, we are favorable to accepting the last proposition and hereby present this to you as a basis of action.

It was moved that the association accept the offer of the Board of Publication of eight pages in Autumn Leaves, providing 600 subscribers be secured. It was moved to amend by adding, and that the chair appoint a committee of three to secure these subscriptions. The amendment was lost, the original motion prevailed.

The revising committee, John Smith, Albert Carmichael and R. S. Salyards, reported all matter submitted revised.

W. H. Greenwood, superintendent of British Isles, reported progress. The work there had been hindered by inroads made by the war among the young men. A district association had been organized. Though not fully organized yet, a complete organization is expected soon.

After the singing of the Doxology, T. J. Elliott dismissed the assembly.

WEDNESDAY APRIL 5

8 A. M.

An executives' conference, with the general officers in charge, was held.

9.45 A. M.

With Daniel Macgregor in charge, number 75 was sung. Prayer was offered by W. T. Shakespeare.

The chair was resigned to T. J. Elliott. Minutes were approved.

Communication from the joint council of First Presidency and Twelve referring to making Graceland College more a training school for the young, copy of which appears in the report of the Religious convention, was read.

It was moved that the matter be referred to the General Conference.

Moved as a substitute that the communication be looked on with favor.

The matter was tabled.

Representatives of the organized class movement submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That we indorse the organized class movement and petition the executives of this society to appoint a departmental head, to push and further the interests of the organized movement.

It was moved that the resolution be adopted. A motion that the matter be referred to the resolutions committee was offered. Moved to amend to read, that the executive be instructed to conduct an active campaign in favor of the organized class movement. The amendment prevailed, and the motion as amended carried.

Referring to the petition of the Far West District requesting the convention to consider the loose-leaf lessons system for use in the Sunday school, the resolutions committee recommended that the matter be referred to a committee of three to take under advisement and report to next convention. The recommendation was adopted.

The matter of making Graceland College more of a training school for the young of the church was by motion taken from the table.

It was moved to amend the substitute by striking out all after the word moved and insert "that we adopt the document coming from the Presidency and Twelve."

The question was discussed until 12 o'clock, when adjournment was had till 1.30.

Ward L. Christy dismissed the assembly.

1.30 P. M.

With T. J. Elliott in charge a selection was sung. Prayer was offered by Otto Fetting.

The minutes were approved.

The discussion of the proposition pending at adjournment was resumed.

The previous discussion was ordered.

The amendment was denied by a vote of 100 to 149.

The substitute was lost by a vote of 91 to 142.

The original motion to refer the matter to the General Conference prevailed by a vote of 167 to 56.

The executive council announced that according to former action, Nellie M. Anderson had been appointed as general historian of the association. The appointment was by motion approved.

Concerning the matter covered in petitions from Eastern Michigan asking that in the Sunday School Quarterlies wherever references are made to the Inspired Translation, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants same be printed in full; from the Spring River Kansas District asking that the convention provide a series of quarterlies with texts from the King James Translation; and from Central Illinois that a simpler Senior Quarterly in addition to the one now in use, based mainly on the King James Translation, be supplied; M. A. McConley, Blanche I. Andrews, P. N. Craig, J. W. Wight and H. O. Smith of the committee reported as follows:

As special committee on resolutions we believe that the question of the source of quotations, the printing of full texts from the standard books of the church, and the issuing of an additional quarterly based solely on the Authorized Version of the Bible should be referred to the lessons committee, with power to act.

Lee Quick of the committee reported as follows:

As the text of the present Quarterlies includes reference to the standard books of the church which are not clearly understood by new members and nonmembers in isolated schools, we therefore recommend that quarterlies be issued to meet the needs of such schools.

It was moved that the majority report be adopted.

It was moved as a substitute that the minority report be adopted.

The substitute was denied. The majority report was adopted.

It was moved that there be added to the lessons committee, one from the Quorum of Twelve, one from each of the quorums of seventy, and one from the high priests to act in the matter of reference just passed, carried.

The chair was authorized to appoint a committee to cooperate with one appointed by the Religio Society, one asked for from the church to formulate definite plans for unifying the forces of the organizations named in the forwarding of the good literature work.

The election of officers was taken up.

The following were nominated for the offices named, each receiving the unanimous vote of the convention: For superintendent, G. R. Wells; for first assistant superintendent, Daniel Macgregor; for second assistant superintendent, T. J. Elliott; for secretary, E. D. Moore.

General Conference

THURSDAY, APRIL 6

10 A. M.

The Sixty-Third General Conference of the church was called to order in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, by President Frederick M. Smith. Number 158 was sung. J. W. Rushton offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we meet this morning with our hearts filled with gratitude as we look upon faces from whom we have been separated for the course of a year. We thank thee that we are permitted to gather once again in this place; and, reviewing the victories that have been achieved, and the tasks that have confronted us which have been accomplished, and the way in which thou hast been leading us, we offer unto thee our most reverent and heartfelt thanks. And as we stand upon the threshold of the experiences of this conference, of this new epoc, we would not venture into all the intricacies and difficulties of this occasion unless we were sure of the companionship of thy divine power, and the influence of thy holy Spirit. And so we pray, oh Lord, at the commencement of this gathering, that thou wilt be with us in all the business, and in all the work, and in all the labor that we have to perform. And may the questions that shall be presented to us for our consideration and for our action be illuminated in our minds, so that we shall understand what is thy mind and will, and be enabled to legislate in such a way as shall safe-guard the interests of thy cause, and result in the establishment of thy kingdom and the glorifying of thy great and holy name.

We pray that all those who are gathered here may be united and fused together under the influence of thy love, and that in strong faith we may break away from the influences of discouragement and disruption; and, under the influence of that strong hope which is born of a purified life, we may look forward to the ideal of the coming time when the city of God shall come down from heaven, and the tabernacle of God shall be established among men. Lift up the light of thy countenance upon us, bless the ones who shall preside and all who shall take part in these meetings, and glorify thy Son's name in the faithful service that shall be rendered in these sessions, for Christ's sake, Amen.

A motion prevailed selecting the First Presidency to preside over the conference, to make appointments necessary to complete the organization, including the direction of the meetings, appointment of speakers, presiding officers, etc.

The chair announced that R. S. Salyards, church secretary, would act as secretary of the conference, with T. J. Elliott as assistant. A. N. Hoxie was announced as chorister; R. G. Smith organist; W. W. Smith and Chas. Fry press committee.

The order of meetings was announced as follows: Prayer services daily at 9 a. m., preaching 10.45 a. m., business session 2 p. m., preaching 7.45 p. m., subject to change for special meetings on some of the evenings.

Lectures for the priesthood were announced for 8 a. m. each morning, (alternately) by W. W. Smith and F. M. McDowell, on the subjects, "Logic," and "Applied Psychology," respectively, the first of which had been given the morning of the 6th by W. W. Smith. A special lecture by Professor Shannon was announced to be given to the priesthood the morning of the 7th.

The report of the credentials committee, R. J. Lambert, E. E. Long, C. I. Carpenter, was approved, subject to necessary changes.

The report of R. S. Salyards, church secretary, given largely to a detail of clerical work done, contained the following:

The work of this department consists of keeping of minutes and records, general correspondence with ministers, members, and the general public; compilation and furnishing of information; preparation of matter for the public press and other publications; proof reading; regulation and oversight of railroad matters affecting rates to general meetings, securing clergy credentials; issuing licenses to all general church officers; general committee work, etc. In connection with the work of this department I have continued to act as one of the presidency of the Lamoni Stake. Not only church correspondence, but the multiplying requests for information from the public generally, indicate rapidly increasing interest in the work of the church.

The report of C. I. Carpenter, church recorder, included:

It is with considerable satisfaction that we present our report to you this year. Our last report closed with 73,899 as our total membership to which we have added this year by baptism 4,907, by transfers 2,870, making a total gain of 7,777, from which we have lost by transfers 2,645, by expulsions 85, by deaths 620, or a total of 3,350 leaving a net gain of 4,427 and making our present number for 1916, 78,326. The reports further show 499 ordinations, 625 marriages, 1,410 children blessed, 31,339 are reported as absent from branches, and 5,308 hold the priesthood.

The largest number of baptisms are reported from Missouri which shows 782, while Michigan is a close second with 719, Canada third with 418, and Iowa fourth with 382; Michigan, however, makes the best showing, for with a total membership of 7,119 and 470 ministers she has 719 baptisms while Missouri with 12,392 members and 989 ministers, nearly twice as many members and more than twice as many ministers has only 782 baptisms, further than this, Michigan's reports included only the work of the current year while the figures for Missouri includes two years' work for the Independence Stake. Iowa, with a membership of 10,568 and 685 ministers, has 382 baptisms, and Canada, with 6,453 members and 423 ministers, has 418 baptisms.

Of those baptized during the year 2,208 were males, being 45 per cent of the entire number baptized, while 2,699 were females, being 55 per cent and 1,717, or 35 per cent were under 15 years of age.

Our net gain of 4,427 represents an increase of 59 per cent; the 620 deaths makes our death rate eight tenths of 1 per cent; 67 per cent, or 5,308 of our members hold the priesthood, 40 per cent or 31,339, including those not enrolled with any branch, are reported as absent from the organized branches, while 3½ per cent of our total membership changed their location from one branch to another.

It will be noted that only 1,410 blessings of children were reported this year as against 1,451 last year, but we find upon investigation that out of the 322 elders on the list of missionaries only 134 reported any blessings, besides many local elders whose names have never come to us as officiating in the ordinance.

Reports were received from 560 branches, many of them reporting from two to four times during the year, making in all 1,166 branch reports received, together with 1,692 letters and other communications making in all 2,858 documents demanding our attention. The recording of the membership data alone has required 12,351 entries, exclusive of indexing and necessary correspondence. . . .

Some work has been done on the general records of quorums, but as yet we are not prepared to make a report of quorum statistics.

As the volume of the work of the department increases, the need of more adequate office facilities becomes more imperative. We have done the best we could under the circumstances however, and anxiously await the time when conditions may permit a greater amount of work to be done by us that our department may be made more valuable to the church.

The church historian, Heman C. Smith, reported, in part:

MISSIONARY WORK

This arm of the church has been vigorously prosecuted though the disturbed conditions existing in some parts of the world have interfered with extension of territory. . . .

The missionary force appointed consisted of twelve apostles of the Quorum of Twelve, one hundred and thirty-two of the seventy; sixteen evangelical ministers, five bishops, thirty-five high priests, one hundred and fifteen elders and twenty-four priests, total of three hundred and thirty-nine (339), not including the First Presidency, the general officers of the church and those laboring in local capacity. . . .

YOUNG PEOPLE'S HISTORY

The manuscript for second volume is in process of preparation, but not complete.

PRESS AND PULPIT

The tone of these agencies still improves and disposition to be fair and honorable becomes more apparent. Those who are disposed to be unfair and partial receive less credit with the better class than in the past.

INDIANS

These people still publish their Quarterly Journal of the Society of American Indians. It is a high character magazine and its influence not only elevating to the race it represents but a power for good in securing to them deserved recognition.

MUSEUM

But few additions have been made to this collection, but these have been a few very important ones including the sword, scabbard, sash, epaulets and military trousers of Joseph Smith.

LOCAL HISTORICAL WORK

Local historians have generally been faithful and careful in transmitting information to this office, and are entitled to more recognition in their commendable efforts than has hitherto been extended to them; but there are some who have not been as prompt as the importance of the work demands.

OFFICE WORK

The demand for the Historian to travel from place to place as provided for in the law becomes more apparent, but at the same time the office work gets more voluminous and pressing, and not until the church is prepared financially and otherwise to meet the demand will this department be able to assume the position that its importance demands.

The two-volume history of Decatur County, Iowa, mentioned in our last report has been published and the work of the church receives therein just and liberal recognition.

The Journal of History finds its way into the most advanced historical circles and is an indispensable help in the work of this department. This, its most important function is however not financially remunerative, and hence the Jour- nal should be more liberally supported by the Saints in order that this demand may be met without loss to the church.

It is now necessary to beg the privilege of representing ourselves in encyclopedias and histories to the extent it once was, but we have received from several publishing houses invitations to write sketches and short biographies, including an invitation to write biographies of the late President Joseph Smith and our present presiding officer, Frederick Madison Smith, for Encyclopedia Americana.

The historian has been received into several of the leading historical societies of the country, including the National Historical Society with headquarters at New York City. Of this he has been elected to life membership and chosen a vice president of the society.

No further progress has been made on the manuscript for volume five of the Church History. We expected to work at this as much as possible the past winter but the General Conference placed upon us a heavy and long-continued burden as one of the committee to prepare an authorized concordance to the Book of Mormon.

We are still at the service of the church if needed and desired but ready to retire when usefulness ceases.

The library commission, E. A. Blakeslee, treasurer, Heman C. Smith purchasing agent, Estella Wight librarian, submitted duplicates of reports made to conventions and already reported in the HERALD.

The trustees of the Children's Home reported:

The board at present constituted is: Heman C. Smith, chairman; Sisters Callie B. Stebbins, Minnie B. Nicholson, and Lucy L. Resseguie; Brethren Oscar Anderson, Joseph Roberts, treasurer, and R. J. Lambert, secretary. The one change in the board of trustees since last report being the election of R. J. Lambert, of Lamoni, Iowa, to succeed Richard Bullard, of Independence, Missouri.

During the past year the Home has not had less than nineteen children as inmates at any one time. At present there are twenty-five children, and four helpers, including the matron and superintendent.

Eight children have gone out from the home, most of them by adoption; two have been returned. Six children have been received into the home, and arrangements for locating and caring for several others have been made by our organization. The efforts of those directly in charge of the children have been quite successful, in that the health has been good, and school has been attended quite regularly by those of school age.

Brother W. P. Robinson was superintendent of the home and Sister Robinson its matron until November 1, when they terminated their work, the selection of Brother and Sister E. D. Briggs as superintendent and matron having taken place. Sister Helen Robinson, who was assistant matron, also left the home November 1. Brother and Sister Briggs began their services on November 4, and are at present much interested in their work.

The financial effort of the trustees has been in the direction of liquidating the debts of the institution, and the people of the church have responded to an unlooked-for degree, having made it possible to pay all the old debts and at the same time keep up the running expenses of the institution.

During the coming year the main effort in financial lines will be first to keep up the running expenses, and next to improve the grounds and equipment. In this connection it will be necessary for the Saints not to forget their donations.

The Childrens Home trustees reported a cash balance of $132.25, other receipts $4,500.61, expenditures $3,960.63, leaving a balance of $674.95.

The report of G. N. Briggs, president of Graceland College, to the Board of Trustees, and made by the trustees their report to the conference, included the following:

JUNIOR COLLEGE

I am highly gratified to be able to report that your action in making Graceland a junior college has received the hearty approval of the State Department of Education, the officials of the State University and of the United States Bureau of Education. They feel that the change is a very decided step in advance.

The Junior college has a distinct place in the educational organization of the country and you should be proud of the fact that Graceland is the pioneer in the field in Iowa. She is the only junior college in the State and because of that fact full recognition by the State University authorities has been somewhat slow. They have no standards for such an institution in Iowa. They do have in some few other States and the movement is such a well recognized one in educational circles of the country that Iowa must fall in line. State inspectors have already visited us and it is only a question of time and some few possible changes until full recognition is accorded us, if we have the support of the church which is necessary. That support must be forthcoming in a very decided way if Graceland is to take her deserved place in the list of higher institutions of learning in this country and serve the church and its young people as she should and can very easily do. . . .

In order to make Graceland College the most effective as one of the branches of the work which offers great opportunities for service to the church, full recognition must be secured for it from the State University of Iowa, for upon this recognition will depend the recognition given by the other universities of the country. The association of Universities and Colleges of the United States requires recognition in one State to be accepted in all others and an institution which is not accredited in its own State will not be accredited in any other. Our work is now recognized to the extent that students who enter the University of Iowa from Graceland receive full credit for the Graceland studies if they show by the quality of work done during their first year in residence at the university that they are entitled to such credit. I am happy to report that almost without exception the first year at our State University has demonstrated our students' superior qualifications, and full credit for Graceland work is given. I have been assured again and again during the past few months by university authorities that the moral and religious standard of our students almost without exception is far above the average. This standard, they tell me, makes them better and stronger students in every way.

However, full recognition must be secured and to do that the proper financial support is required. In other denominational institutions of higher learning this financial support is secured by large endowments. This church has taken the position that because of our financial laws, peculiar to ourselves, it prefers to support its institutions of higher learning as well as its other institutions which are auxiliary to and interest themselves in the working of the general church by annual appropriation rather than by endowment. This is in line with some of the very best educational and business thought of the present day. Our needs, most conservative and skimmed to the very limit, are presented in the report of the treasurer.

In addition to our current expenses, some definite plan of paying off the college debt should be entered upon. This debt bears too high a ratio to our income and resources to enable us to make the required showing before the educational authorities who will soon pass upon our eligibility for recognition. It is believed that a definite program should be entered upon to pay off this debt. To this end it is recommended that in our annual budget to the coming General Conference one fifth of our total indebtedness be included, and that for the four succeeding years the same procedure be followed so that with the year 1920 we will have a clear slate in so far as debt is concerned.

With the annual appropriation for current expenses in the form of a budget already agreed upon as the policy of the church and some definite provision for the payment of the debt there will be absolutely no reason for not being placed on the list of fully accredited colleges of the country. With that accomplished, Graceland will begin to come into her own and the time will shortly arrive when she can branch out into a full standard college. . . .

LARGER SERVICE

Graceland should be the training school for the young people of the church to a much greater extent than she has yet been. This result can be brought about in the following way: for each district in the church and as many of the larger branches as possible to send at least one student each year to Graceland to take the academic work there provided and in addition to receive instruction in auxiliary church work. . . .

By this method Graceland could begin to play the part she should in the activities of the church.

If the financial recommendation made in the early part of the report be favorably acted upon, it would relieve your board of the obligation of going to the individual members of the church, to the branches, or to the districts for financial assistance in paying the college debt, thus making it possible for branches and districts to invest their money in the young people of their own home branch or district to be sent to Graceland for training as workers along various church lines and return to the home branch or district to give value received, and it is hoped many times more than value received, in service rendered. . . .

CORRESPONDENCE DEPARTMENT

In addition to the correspondence courses offered through the Extension Institute to those who are not particular about receiving college credit for their work, the Correspondence Department of Graceland offers correspondence courses of full college and academic grade, for the completion of which students receive full college credit. It thus enables those who contemplate the completion of a regular high school or college course an opportunity to do part of their work at home before entering Graceland or any other institution, thus materially shortening their course of study. . . .

WIRELESS STATION

As one more of the many evidences that Lamoni is intensely interested in the chief educational institution of the church, her citizens, aided by the faculty, student body and one or two outsiders, contributed enough money to construct one of the best amateur wireless stations in the Middle West. We are in daily communication with other educational institutions of surrounding States and receive daily dispatches from all leading wireless stations of the country as well as from vessels on both oceans and the Gulf. Graceland is thus once more placed on the educational map of advancement and progress. . . .

SPIRITUAL INTERESTS

It is with a very high degree of gratitude that I am able to report the great interest taken by a large majority of the student body in the activities of the church. With the prayer meetings at the college chapel, the union prayer meeting at the Brick Church once a month, the regular church services, the Sunday school and Religio, all of which are actively participated in by college students, it gives a fine opportunity to train workers along auxiliary church lines.

The regular Bible classes and classes organized for the study of particular phases of church work afford ample opportunity for investigation and research along the lines of general church interests.

The earnestness of the participants, the degree of the Spirit of God manifest in their efforts, the many evidences of divine presence and the exercise of the gifts are conclusive proofs that the hand of the Designer and Director of all good and perfect gifts is in the work of the young people gathered at Graceland.

J. A. Gunsolley, treasurer of Graceland College, reporting on college finances, stated that the college had run within the budget allowed by last conference. This report included the following:

OFFICE HELP

Experience has shown that it is poor economy to intrust so responsible and important a work as the keeping of the books to student help, as the errors resulting from inefficiency are a source of embarrassment both to the college and to the other party affected by the mistake; so that this year a competent person has been employed as office assistant who does the stenographic work for both the president and business manager and keeps the books. Though the expense has been increased somewhat the change has been satisfactory and profitable. . . .

COLLEGE BONDS

Owing to financial stringency, incident no doubt largely to the great world's war, several of those who were holding our notes in the larger amounts and who had befriended the college to a very unusual extent, some of whom are not members of the church, found it necessary to ask that the notes be paid. So that your Board of Trustees, the Presiding Bishopric concurring in the persons of E. L. Kelley and E. A. Blakeslee, authorized its executive committee at a meeting, May 26, 1915, to issue $35,000 and sell same of 5 per cent gold bonds, interest payable semiannually, maturing in five years from July 1, 1915, secured by first mortgage on Graceland College real estate. Money received from the sale of these bonds to be used solely and only to liquidate the indebtedness of the college existing at date of the above action and authorization. Since to mortgage college real estate to secure these bonds made it necessary to raise nearly nine thousand dollars to pay off existing mortgages, eight thousand nine hundred dollars was disposed of immediately with the proviso that so fast as the money was received from the subsequent sale of bonds it was to be applied in redeeming this $8,900 until all is paid, after which further returns are to be applied on the debt as stated previously. Eleven thousand dollars worth of bonds have been sold, and two thousand one hundred of the $8,900 redeemed as per agreement stated above.

The fiscal year closes June 30, at which time the inventories are taken and a complete statement of assets and liabilities is made and the books closed.

LOAN FUND

The loan fund created by the Sunday school and the Religio and continued by an annual appropriation of $300 by the Religio, has proven an efficient means of help to deserving students. The Sunday school fund has been reimbursed by loans repaid this year to date to the amount of $69.58, making balance on hand $140.14. The Religio fund has been similarly reimbursed to amount of $85, making the balance on hand $135.15. Applications have been made for a part of this balance and will be loaned before the close of the year. We should like to see these funds kept up and increased, if practicable, from year to year.

The Board of Trustees of the Independence Sanitarium reported:

W. H. Callin has served as business manager up to February 1, 1916, when he resigned, and M. A. Etzenhouser was engaged to occupy till May 1. Quite a few donators responded to the solicitation of the board for contributions for the institution, all receiving due credit and acknowledgement of the same. Patients admitted during the year was 462—78 more than last year. Six young ladies graduated as nurses and have entered into the duties in a general way for the good of those who need their assistance. The following is a brief of the financial condition: Expenditures, $19,872.75; receipts, $22,105.02; leaving a net gain of $2,232.27 plus the depreciation declared by the board of fifteen per cent on the furniture and fixtures, after the business manager had made his report, $1,118.35.

Patroness Society reported March 4 as having enjoyed a very encouraging year in their work in behalf of the Sanitarium; the report follows in full:

"We have held eleven sessions during the past year. Sisters have volunteered every week to go to the Sanitarium to mend, as well as make articles that were needed. We have received donations from private individuals also from branches in many places, such as sheets, pillow cases, gowns and towels, also cash. The society has made thirteen pairs of curtains, doctor's towels for operating room, other towels, dresser scarfs, tray cloths, and gave $100 toward laundry equipment. We also gave pictures for waiting room. We have various plans made for the coming year and intend to carry them out if possible."

The Committee managing the Saints' and Liberty Homes, Lamoni, Iowa, reported:

To the General Conference: During the year 1915 the homes at Lamoni have been filled to their capacity most of the time. There have been five deaths at Liberty Home, and two have left. At the Saints' Home there have been two deaths, and one left during the year. This makes a death list of seven for the year, and three having left for private homes. At the present time there are at the two homes twenty-two men and thirty-three women as inmates—a total of fifty-five. During the year there has been a total of sixty-five inmates. . . .

The superintendent and farm help have, in addition to the routine work, been able to re-fence almost the entire farm with good posts and heavy woven wire fencing; they have cut out many trees of large size; have worked over large parts of the farm buildings, making of them more commodious quarters for both live stock and feed, and much more comfortable quarters for the stock.

In October the management made a sale of cattle, disposing of the herd which had been at the home farms for years, composed of grade and scrub cattle, and in November replaced them with a herd of high grade and thoroughbred Holstein-Friesian cows and heifers. This movement involved an expenditure of several hundred dollars more than was realized, but the farms are now occupied by cows that should show a good profit, whereas the old herd was not profitable for the kind of farming which must be done here.

Our needs for the coming year are not so urgent as at times in the past, yet there are two lines in which the present board will move if they are continued, providing they can secure the necessary money. The first is to provide laundry facilities in order to relieve the drudgery of the present inadequate and primitive methods, which are dangerous and worn out. The second is the instituting of a canning outfit for the purpose of preserving fruit and vegetables in tin in large quantities, for consumption on the tables. These we spoke of last year, but were unable to reach because of other matters pressing and lack of means.

In order to place these institutions on the basis of comfort and as near to self-support as we can approach, we should be able to spend near to fifteen hundred dollars more than the ordinary running expenses. We will be contented, however, to reach this a little at a time, if the church body is satisfied.

The financial report of the committee in charge of Lamoni Saints' Homes showed cash balance, $102.34, other receipts $9,417.97, expenditures $8,122.51, balance $1,397.80.

The social purity board submitted a duplicate of their report to the conventions which has already appeared in the HERALD.

The United Order of Enoch of Independence, Missouri, reported:

At the close of another year we the board of directors of the United Order of Enoch discover that there has been some growth numerically as well as financially. . . .

Two members were dropped after proper labor had been performed. Twenty-one new members were added, leaving a net gain of fourteen, and the total membership at 202. The treasurer's report shows a gain of $2,436.73 and present worth $32,529.49. The treasurer's report follows in full:

The financial report of the Order of Enoch showed a net gain of $2,436.73, with net assets amounting to $32,529.49.

The Board of Publication reported:

We have been endeavoring in the past year to provide for the Publishing House a thorough system of carrying on the business efficiently, yet elastic enough to provide for the expected growth. Making this change at the present time necessarily causes a lot of extra work.

We also wish to call the attention of the General Conference to the fact that all materials for printing are rapidly increasing in cost on account of the war. Nearly all of the book firms, through whom we do business, have notified us of the increase of from 20 to 25 per cent in prices. Should the Herald Publishing House be obliged to increase the price of its books, and papers, especially books, the cause will be found in the added cost of material.

We are more and more impressed with the thought that the legitimate field of operation of the Herald Publishing House is not fully recognized by the majority of the constituency of the church. To the end that the Herald Publishing House may meet the wants which the Lord intended it to meet, we are studiously working. We ask a sincere cooperation of the missionary force of the church as well as all others, and sincerely hope that all will remember that the publishing interests of the church, as reflected in the Herald Publishing House and Ensign Publishing House, belongs to them, and, as stated by one of the members of the First Presidency, that the editor and business manager are but here for a year, but the Herald Publishing House belongs to all and will always be theirs.

We are very much impressed with the thought that the time has come when we should actively comply with the command of the Lord and publish our tracts and books, as much as possible, in foreign languages.

The letters that reach us from the handicapped missionaries in various parts of the world—handicapped for lack of proper literature in the various languages—has appealed very strongly to us and we sincerely hope that something can be done very soon along this line.

The Herald Publishing House statement showed a net gain of $12,116.64.

G. R. Wells, superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, reported conditions of that society. This report will appear in the HERALD with published minutes.

J. A. Gunsolley, president of Zion's Religio-Literary Society, reported for the society. This report will also appear later in HERALD supplement.

The Womans' Auxiliary reported:

The work of the auxiliary in the past year shows substantial growth in every department and reports are very encouraging as to the spirit and unity of purpose displayed in the workings of the locals. . . .

The secretary reports a membership of 2,775, covering twelve district organizations with an enrollment of 1,146, and 70 active isolated locals numbering 1,629; an increase of 2 districts and 27 locals and 767 individual members for the year 1915. Our six departments are represented as follows:

Home and Child Welfare, 64 locals with enrollment of 1,111.

Literary and Educational, 15 locals with enrollment of 298.

Home Economics, 5 locals with enrollment of 105.

Sewing and Aid, 120 locals with enrollment of 1,774.

Young Woman's, 29 locals with enrollment of 300.

Reports from our sixteen active field workers show they have visited or corresponded with 82 branches and organized 9 of our 27 new locals. . . .

The treasurer reports that the total receipts for the year have been $1,079.27. This includes special funds as follows: Per capita tax, $156.51; Graceland College, $15; Sanitarium, $7.50; the contributions to the Children's Home have amounted to $743.35. Our report is incomplete as to the sum total of the financial support given to the church institutions by the women of this organization, for the reason that many local organizations of the auxiliary have contributed to the various funds direct. The total expenditures for supplies, etc., have amounted to $189.79. . . .

No mother can afford to be without the valuable readings to be found in the HERALD, and the fund of information of a general nature given in the Ensign adds greatly to the usefulness of that paper as a "home missionary."

As for the general work of the auxiliary, we need more leaders. Many localities do not know what the Woman's Auxiliary means. So many sisters lack knowledge in home making and in the simple matters of cleanliness and bodily care; also the proper methods of child care. This is why, first, we must secure more willing and intelligent workers; second, we must encourage the women to read the church papers; third, we must provide more literature of a practical and easily understood variety. The outlook of the Woman's Auxiliary under the suggested outline of the new constitution is large and full of inspiration to get and give the best of life. An awakening of our women is seen throughout the church and a vision of their possibilities and obligations is gradually opening before them.

The Board of Auditors submitted the following:

To the Church in Conference Assembled: The undersigned members of the Board of Auditors have examined the books of the Ensign Publishing House and find same correct and in agreement with the statement submitted.

We find that the real estate and building are carried in the same account, no depreciation being shown on the building. We are of the opinion that the real estate should be entered in one account and the building in another, both at present estimated value, the building to be depreciated one and one half per cent per annum as provided by General Conference resolution number 629, and we so recommend.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 27, 1916.

To the Presidency and Church in Conference Assembled: Representing your Board of Auditors, we, the undersigned, report that we have examined the books of the Herald Publishing House, Graceland College, the Saints' and Liberty Homes, and the Children's Home, Lamoni, Iowa, and find them severally correct and in agreement with the statements submitted.

Some changes suggested by us to the various managers on methods were accepted in good spirit, and we are assured will be carried out.

We find that on May 26 last, the Board of Publication by resolution authorized its executive committee to enter into contract of sale with a company to be organized under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric, to operate the Electric Light Plant as outlined in the law under the stewardship plan.

This instruction has been carried out, the company, known as the Lamoni Electric Company organized, the transfer made by Herald Publishing House to said company, and all papers pertaining to the transaction placed in the hands of President F. M. Smith in escrow, subject to the approval of the Joint Council of the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric.

We further find that the Board of Trustees of Graceland College has authorized the issue of $35,000 of five-year, five per cent, gold bonds. We find also that by action of the Board of Trustees the sale of bonds is for one purpose only—the liquidation of the debt existing at the time of the authorizing of said issue of bonds.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 15, 1916.

To the Church in Conference Assembled: We your auditors report on the Independence Sanitarium as follows:

We have checked the books and accounts and find them correct as per statement.

We find, however, that no depreciation has been allowed on the building. As a matter of fact no depreciation on the structure has been allowed since the establishment of the institution. We are of the opinion that a depreciation should be charged and that a depreciation of one and one half per cent per annum, as provided by General Conference resolution number 629, and applying to church publishing house buildings, would be just to the Sanitarium. Such depreciation if it had been effected each year would have necessitated an annual reduction of about $681, or $3,406.50 to date.

We recommend that an immediate depreciation of one and one half per cent on the present valuation be made and that this procedure be observed annually hereafter.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 20, 1916.

The committee on archæology reported archæological developments conformant with the Book of Mormon. This report was of considerable length. It will appear in the published minutes of the HERALD in the form of the usual supplement.

The committee on Bible normal book reported:

We are convinced and have been for some years, of the need of such a work. The General Sunday school officers are very anxious to secure its preparation in such a way as to be approved by the church, and at as early a date as possible.

However, we do not consider the time lost, as the past several years have permitted more careful study of our exact needs, and the best manner of preparation.

Shortly after the appointment of this committee, a communication was received from Elder J. W. Peterson, and he submitted a few chapters of his work, which appeared to possess marked merit. He has spent a good part of the year in revising and perfecting his work. Since your committee have not as yet had an opportunity to examine his work, except a very small part, we are not prepared to express an opinion as to its suitability. We fully agree with Elder Peterson that the work has doubtless proven of great value to him, and we hope on examination that it will also prove so to our work. A very careful examination should be given this work during the coming conference year.

Mrs. R. S. Salyards was also approached by the committee. She has no written work at the date of this report, but has had the matter in mind for several years and has it outlined in mind. Her work on these lines for twenty-five years makes a recommendation unnecessary. We believe that regardless of our conclusion on other works, provision should be made to preserve, as far as possible, the results of her years of study; especially as we are of the opinion that an elementary course is first needed, and then a more elaborate work. If this is to be done, provision should be made for sufficient means, so that the committee can remunerate sufficiently, so that those doing the work may have their hands free from other care. By this, we mean that provision should be made to meet stenographic expenses, and also that it is possible at times to secure the services of a competent sister, if provision could be made for some help with her household work. Provision should be made, so that this will be possible.

Though we consider the work urgent, we do not think that it should be pushed too rapidly for accuracy, as we want a work, or works, which if possible, will meet our needs for several years to come. The committee are of the opinion that we should preserve the results of such work, as that done by Elder Peterson, and also that done by Mrs. Salyards.

Committee on biographical dictionary reported:

The preparation and publication of this work having been referred to the Board of Publication and the Historical Department, soon after the adjournment of the Annual Conference the matter was taken up, and the Historian authorized to collect material for the proposed work. Considerable material is now available, but it is not sufficiently complete to justify its being published.

To publish hastily would result in omitting much that properly belongs in a work of this character.

The committee on Book of Mormon concordance reported the work under way. This report included:

Though the nature of the work is very tedious and will require patient application for a long time, considerable progress has been made. Some help has been employed, and every means to expedite the work, known to the committee has been used.

The work should be completed at as early a time as practicable either by this committee or another, as the conference may determine.

The committee on Church of Christ reported no occasion to be called together. The committee stands ready to act when necessary or when opportunity affords.

The committee on General Conference resolutions submitted the following:

All General Conference resolutions to date have been compiled, and in connection therewith, all editions of the Book of General Conference Resolutions, including indexes to such editions and their supplements, have been combined into one, which will be reprinted and reissued by the Herald Publishing House as the 1916 edition of said book.

A majority of the committee join in the recommendation that the committee be discontinued and the work heretofore assigned it be considered part of the routine work of the Presidency and secretary.

The committee on memorial to the martyrs made the following report:

The action of the conference was very indefinite so far as instruction to the committee was concerned, but as the banks of the river were receding, thus endangering the graves, the committee proceeded to protect the grounds along the water front of the entire block 155. The east half of the block only belonged to the church, the title of the west half being in the name of President Frederick M. Smith, but in order to protect the east half it was necessary to extend the wall across the entire block.

This work was done under the direction of Bishop G. P. Lambert of the committee who also filled in behind the wall so that the drain from the surface of the lot would run over the wall and not sink down behind. This fill was seeded to grass and the lot cleared of brush. The entire cost of the improvement was $403.42, two hundred of which has been paid by Bishop E. L. Kelley, the balance Bishop Lambert is responsible for.

The power company having raised the water higher than was anticipated and there having been much high wind and waves, it has been a severe trial on the wall, but it has stood the pressure well.

It has been fortunate that the wall has been erected, as the waves would doubtless have encroached upon the graves, if not washed them into the river; and there are several graves whose exact location cannot be determined; nor do we know just who were buried in the lot.

The committee on revision of church history reported as follows:

The committee appointed to revise the work of the Historian before publishing additional volumes of church history has to report that the past year has seen no necessity for calling the committee together, hence no work has been accomplished. We very much regret to report that a vacancy exists in the committee because of the decease of William H. Kelley. If the committee is to be maintained this vacancy should be filled.

The report of the committee on a teacher's edition of the Inspired Translation was as follows:

Reporting for the committee on the teachers' edition of the Inspired Translation, we advise we have given this matter careful consideration but have found quite a number of difficulties in getting this work out; the main one being the sinews, of war—cash; also another difficulty we have had is to find proper help to do this work. It is one that will take very discriminating minds and close application. We succeeded in getting Brother D. F. Lambert to work for us for about three months during the last summer vacation. The result of this work is that the four Gospels are finished. Of course this work of Brother Lambert will have to be reviewed carefully. It will take quite a while for us to have this work completed. We report progress.

The committee on translation reported:

Following adjournment of the General Conference of 1915, the Committee on Translation held a meeting at Lamoni. The matter of providing tracts in the French language for use among the French-Canadians was considered. An appropriation was made, and it was resolved to publish a translation of the Voice of Warning in the French language.

It was later arranged to have this translation done by a competent French scholar under the direction of Walter W. Smith. The work has not yet been completed.

Elder Philemon Pement reports that he is translating the Angel Message Tracts into French.

No other work has been done by the committee during the year.

The Board of Publication and church historian reported a part of the material for the second volume of Young People's History already written, but the manuscript is not yet ready to submit to the committee on revision.

Reports from various ministers in charge were submitted.

Bishop E. L. Kelley submitted a financial report of the work of the office of the Presiding Bishopric.

Number 99 was sung, and U. W. Greene dismissed the assembly.

Life as history shows it to be is what the dreamers have prophesied it should be. And as we represent the best that nature has produced, we owe it to the past to project our very best into that future wherein all values that are immortal shall be found.—J. W. Rushton.

Which Do You Prefer?

It is important for reasons of health and practical economy for every housekeeper to ask herself this question:

"Do I prefer a pure baking powder like Royal, made of cream of tartar derived from grapes, or am I willing to use a baking powder made of alum or phosphate, both derived from mineral sources?"

The names of the ingredients printed on the label show whether the kind you are now using or any brand, new or old, that may be offered is a genuine cream of tartar powder, or merely a phosphate or alum compound.

Royal Baking Powder contains no alum nor phosphate.

SUNSHINE PARTIES

are every day affairs in the South in the Winter time--for when blizzards, slush and snow are quite the fashion in the North, balmy breezes, sunny skies, moonlit bays and tropical flowers are the fashion in the South. And those who pack their grips and go South at this time, reap rich rewards in health dividends and delightful recreation and return, realizing more than ever before, the real value of a winter vacation in that romantic, historic and beautiful land south of the Mason and Dixon Line.

The cost is low---perhaps not as much as you thought it would be. Come in and let's talk it over.

WAR'S TERROR AT VERDUN

[French soldiers, wounded and transferred from the scenes of the recent terrific onslaught at Verdun, France, describe that bloody conflict in a way to sicken the hardest heart unfamiliar with the awful spectacle of modern warfare. The following account is taken from the Des Moines (Iowa) Register.—EDITORS.]

The following description of the French retreat from Ornes, six miles northeast of Verdun, was given by a wounded French soldier who was in the engagement:

On the twenty-first we started giving ground, with the Germans at our heels like a pack of angry dogs. No sooner had we traversed Ornes, firing as we went, and took the road to Moncourt, than our artillery opened on the advancing Germans. I've seen some bloody fighting in this war, but they were only sham battles compared with this conflict. Shell after shell ripped gaps in the German lines.

ADVANCED TWENTY LINES DEEP

As our seventy-fives flamed death against the oncoming, close-packed battalions, twenty lines deep, the corpses were piled up in mounds. We were so near them that fragments of bloody flesh, from human bodies torn asunder by exploding shells, fell amongst us. There was a rain of human flesh and the blood ran in rivers.

That night we spent in Moncourt under the ghastly radiance of star shells, which the Germans fired continuously.

Under the lurid glow of these bombs the bloody battlefield was shown with its carnage. I saw long lines of German dead where machine gun volleys or shells had torn through the ranks. In some places the bodies were piled so thick that corpses stood upright, lodged against their fellows.

All the while the guns in the Verdun forts kept up a continuous bombardment against the German positions. So terrific was the cannonade that blood poured from our ears and noses from the concussion.

Far away was heard the continuous crash of exploding projectiles as they fell upon the German lines, and still further away in the distance the big German guns were replying with a steady roar of thunder.

GREAT GAPS IN RANKS

A soldier who was in the ranks fighting at Ornes, told this harrowing story:

I fought since the beginning of the war. I saw the shambles at Suippes and Souain. They were nothing to what I saw last week.

The Germans advanced and we retired under orders, but we killed them by the dozens. It was so terrible that I, who have watched my comrades fall around me almost with indifference, shudder as my memory recalls those scenes.

As their battalions advanced upon us they were in serried masses, by files of twenty. The shrapnel from our 75-millimetre guns and the projectiles from our heavy artillery fell among them, and you could see the great gaps as if a mower had passed with a sythe. Then high explosive shells which burst on contact fell and limbs shot into the air.

We were so close that pieces of their torn flesh fell among us. Eventually we reached Moncourt and took shelter for a time in the wood. Although it was 3 o'clock in the morning, the bursting shells made it as clear as day, giving the battlefield the aspect of a fairy scene.

DEAD STOOD IN GROUPS

From behind us the French artillery fired into the German masses, the German shells flying over our heads toward the Douaumont section. Then our machine guns, placed in batteries every five yards, began to play, and we saw the dead in groups upright, where there was not room to fall. From Moncourt followed the supply road to Fleury, where I took the light railway toward Verdun. The heavy guns near Douaumont and Damloup were firing as fast as they could be loaded.

When we passed between the two points the air pressure produced by the continuous discharges, was so terrific that blood rushed from our ears and our lungs almost ceased working.

To live content with small means; to seek elegance rather than luxury, and refinement rather than fashion: to be worthy, not respectable, and wealthy, not rich; to study hard, think quietly, talk gently and act frankly; to listen to stars and birds, babes and sages with open heart; to bear all cheerfully, do all bravely, await occasions, hurry never; in a word, to let the spiritual, unbidden and unconscious, grow up through the common—this is to be my symphony.—Channing.

Conference Reports

2 P. M.

President Elbert A. Smith called the assembly to order, announcing number 141. Gomer T. Griffiths offered prayer. The minutes were read and approved.

Belle Robinson James with Ruth Lewis as assistant were appointed as official stenographers of the conference.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 5, 1916.

To the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve and Bishopric; Greetings: The matter of selecting one to succeed Bishop E. L. Kelley in the office of presiding Bishop has received by me careful and prayerful consideration. At the time of the General Conference of 1915 I was not prepared to name the successor to Bishop Kelley, and by telegraph communicated to you through the other member of the Presidency the suggestion that Bishop Kelley should not be released then; but the Conference, adopting an action of a council of Presidency, Twelve, Order of Bishops and Seventy, made provision for his release referring the execution of the release and the reorganization of the Bishopric to the Presidency and Twelve. This council, meeting in May, as has been published, adopted measures which were in turn referred to a committee to execute, the committee being composed of the Presidency, president of Twelve, and Bishop, the measures providing for an enlarged activity on the part of Bishop Blakeslee, having in view that he in due time assumed the responsibilities of the presiding Bishop, or that in the event of his declining to do so a temporary provision be made by associating two bishops with Bishop Kelley to assist him.

No definite answer being secured from Bishop Blakeslee, Bishop James F. Keir was asked to enter the office as an assistant or acting counselor, which he did, coming about the first of November and Bishop A. Carmichael acted for a time as "traveling bishop," assisting as best he could in this way.

Despite conferences with Bishop Blakeslee and correspondence, his definite answer was not secured. In the light of the previous revelation, indicating him as the successor it was not felt wise to move towards selecting a successor until a positive declination on his part should be given. Communication with Richard C. Kelley had brought the information that he could not accept the position of counselor, his final answer being given to me about the holiday season last. Under the circumstances, therefore, without further light on the matter, I, as one of the committee, did not feel free to move.

Some weeks ago, however, there was presented to me the name of the one to succeed Bishop Kelley. It came as a surprise, and served but to increase my perplexity over the attitude of Bishop Blakeslee, and it remained for the recent trip to Chicago, where Mrs. Smith and I met Bishop Blakeslee and wife for a long consultation, to remove that perplexity. When on March 29, about five o'clock in the afternoon, he gave his final and positive refusal to accept the responsibility, there came freedom to act. I am therefore now prepared to say that the voice of the Spirit to me is that Bishop E. L. Kelley should be released from the responsibilities of presiding Bishop, though he may act as traveling bishop, counseling and advising on the law of temporalities in harmony with his successor and the Presidency. Let Benjamin R. McGuire be set apart and ordained presiding Bishop of the Church, and two of the brethren be set apart as counselors to him, one to be selected by him and supported by the conference, the other to be Bishop James F. Keir.

I admonish the Church, and particularly those of the priesthood, that the hastening time being upon us there is great necessity of confidence in the men of the church chosen for positions of great responsibility, and all should consecrate of their talents, abilities, and substance for the prosecution of the great work entrusted to us. Everywhere the demand for greater activity exists, and for the accomplishment of our work the great essential is fraternal cooperation in service to man and devoted consecration to God and his work.

Your servant,

Frederick M. Smith.

The following quorums and orders formally reported that they had approved the document just read and had accepted that portion purporting to be a revelation from the Lord as such: High Priests, seventy, Order of Evangelists, Order of Bishops, mass meeting of elders, Aaronic priesthood.

The following was moved:

Moved that we approve the document presented by President Frederick M. Smith and endorse as revelation that portion which contains instruction by voice of the Holy Spirit to the church.

The motion by unanimous standing vote prevailed, the membership being given opportunity to vote after the delegates and ex officios had recorded their votes.

The audience responding to response from the chair stood and sang "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

J. W. Rushton offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we pause in the midst of our legislation to give thanks unto thee for thy condescending grace, that in this, the commencement of our conference exercises, it has pleased thee to dispel the clouds and to send forth once again the sunshine of thy light upon the congregations of thy people. And with peculiar emotions at this time, amid the noises of warfare and of competitive commercialism and of impure politics, we rejoice that the still small voice of thy Holy Spirit can speak to us in these days, quiet our hearts, adjust our minds and control our individual and collective movements.

And so to-day at the close of the long years of anxiety and of worry and of uncertainty in which the hearts and minds of strong men and noble women have been distraught, it has pleased thee to give to us respite, and to give to us leading and direction through him whom thou hast called to be thy servant.

We thank thee, O Lord, that thou hast honored him, who taking up the onerous duties and responsibilities laid down by a venerable, affectionate and esteemed father, has not been left to move in these great emergencies by the strength and power of his own wisdom and judgment, but in thine own way thou hast spoken to him thy mind and will, and through him there has been conveyed to us with such assurance and power that our own consciousness, our reason and our hearts approve of that revelation and of that message in such a way that bids us hope for the future, and to move forward in the line which thou hast marked for us without hesitation or fear. We thank thee for honoring him, and for approving of our faith and confidence in him.

We thank thee also for these new men, who come to us with the vigor of youth, with the training of a lifetime, and with the consecration of spirit to take upon them the duties of another of thy servants who lays down the duties because of advancing years and increasing infirmities; and as we pray that upon these two young men thy grace and power may rest with becoming grace, and with enduring power, and with incisive wisdom, we remember our beloved brother, who turns his back upon these official duties to-day; around him our affections are centered, and to-day we remember nothing but the good and great and generous things of all of his long and useful ministry.

Give to him thy grace and favor, and give to him the comfort and assurance of his brethren, that in love and affection as we bid him official adieu and we bid welcome to these young men, that to-day our hearts may be fused in strength and power that thy church has never known before, and may we go forward into all the great opportunities and conquer the great continents of activity that lie before us, establishing the blood-stained banner of Jesus Christ in the remotest parts of thy vintage, until the time shall come when the noise of war shall cease and the pæns of praise shall arise and the Prince of Peace shall be crowned as King of kings, and Lord of lords.

Hear us and bless us for Jesus' sake. Amen.

A committee of three consisting of J. W. Rushton, C. J. Hunt, and R. S. Salyards, was appointed to draft resolutions expressing the thanks of the church for the long years of service Bishop E. L. Kelley had rendered in the Presiding Bishopric of the church.

The document just accepted as containing the word of God was by motion referred to the President of the church to prepare for publication in the book of Doctrine and Covenants that portion expressing the will of God to the body.

The chair called attention to the passing during the year of leading church men, including W. H. Kelley, T. W. Chatburn, and F. C. Keck.

The following document presented by the Quorum of Twelve was read:

To the Officers and Members of the General Conference; Independence, Missouri, Greeting: I am instructed by the Quorum of Twelve to present the following memorial, and letter of condolence to the family of the late William H. Kelley:

Whereas, it has pleased our heavenly Father in his providence to take from our midst our esteemed and beloved brother, William H. Kelley, who closed his earthly labors in death on the fourteenth day of August, nineteen hundred and fifteen; after a long and painful illness, endured with the fortitude, cheerfulness and hope which characterized his long life of faithful and efficient service; and,

Whereas, in this sad event which removed one of the historic personalities from the ranks of the ministry of this church, we have suffered an irreparable loss; for we remember with deep appreciation his influence in proselyting, in council work, in church literature as well as in the influence which he exercised as a man, our brother was always in the van and never shirked his duty as a leader among us; his fervid eloquence, scintillating wit, keen logic and passion for justice were consecrated with all the unstinting generosity of his nature to the cause of truth, righteousness and virtue. We remember that in times of stress and storm he was ready always to uphold the weak and erring, for the cause of principle he was uncompromising and declined to have dalliance with expedients, he was always impatient of the conventional restraints on personal rights and liberties; yet with profound passion he was the unafraid champion of toleration:

In this hour of regret we think of his untiring service to the church he loved, which began when the "Sun of the Reorganization" was just rising above the night-clouds of doubt, apostasy and disruption; of the thirteen years which he gave as a seventy and sacrificed home, love and comfort in the days when money was scarce, friends were few and opponents abounded; after the apprenticeship in these stern demands of pioneering he was called to the Apostolic Quorum, for forty years with zeal, ability and grace worked as an honored member of the leading councils of the church; and

Whereas, for sixteen years our brother served as President of the Apostolate enjoying the affection and support of his brethren until owing to advancing age with its attendant infirmities he was honorably released by the same inspiration which had called him to life-long service;

In all of these years amid a multiplicity of duties and under all kinds of trying and tense situations he proved himself to be a warm and affectionate friend and a generous opponent;

Therefore be it

Resolved; That while in reverent submission to the will of God in this dispensation of death, we mourn our brother's departure, we nevertheless congratulate him on the victorious conclusion of his task and the consequent transfer from the ranks of the church militant to the comradeship of the church triumphant; and earnestly pray that his family which has suffered the loss of father, brother, friend, and counselor, will enjoy the blessing of almighty God who, in all generations has been the refuge of his people; and under the hope of the gospel of the resurrected Christ will anticipate the coming reunion when he the Resurrection and the Life shall have been hailed as King of kings and Lord of lords.

In appreciation of his memory and sincere condolence to the family

We subscribe ourselves on behalf of the Quorum of Twelve,
GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 6, 1916.

The document just read was by motion adopted as the sentiment of the body.

The Quorum of Twelve reported on the matter of the ordination of the First Presidency of the church, which occurred at Independence, Missouri, May 5, 1915.

Petitions from branches of Toronto District asking for a division of said district were by motion referred to the First Presidency and minister-in-charge of the territory including Toronto District, with power to act.

A document from Detroit, Michigan, Branch asking that the rules of representation be changed to allow district presidents to appoint delegates to General Conference in the stead of delegates already appointed and not be able to attend the conference, was by motion referred to the committee on board of rules.

The following was submitted by the First Presidency:

To the General Conference: The First Presidency has had under consideration the standing High Council of the church.

Various members of this council are now quite well advanced in years, making their service on the High Council rather too arduous for their vigor.

Another matter to be considered is the fact that the members of the High Council are widely scattered so that it is quite difficult and inconvenient, as well as expensive, to assemble the council for consideration of cases. Hitherto the council has usually been convened during General Conference, at which time it is very inconvenient to give attention to cases owing to the press of other duties that claim attention. The Presidency feels that the time has come when the standing High Council should be organized with members resident in or near Independence, Missouri, so that they can be called together on short notice to hear and decide cases, and with but little expense to the church.

Therefore, the First Presidency recommends that the General Conference authorize the immediate reorganization of the standing High Council.

Respectfully submitted,
FREDERICK M. SMITH.

The document together with the recommendation was adopted.

To the General Conference; Greeting: The following is presented for your consideration as the action of the Joint Council of First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve, adopted April 1.

"It is the opinion of this council that the intention of Resolution Number 560 was that the labor of superannuated ministers should be in the vicinity of their residence, under the local authorities, and of the missionary in charge where such labor is missionary in character; and that where any superannuated minister desires to labor in fields other than his residence he should secure the consent of the First Presidency and the missionaries in charge of the fields concerned."

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 7, 1916.

To the General Conference: By order of the Joint Council we herewith submit the following action had by the Joint Council of Presidency and Twelve; the matter having been presented to the Joint Council by the First Presidency:

"The members of the First Presidency, after having had the matter under advisement and having given it due consideration have decided to make the following recommendations relative to the Independence and Lamoni stakes.

"The territory now comprising the Independence Stake contains a church membership sufficiently large to justify a division of territory and we therefore recommend that for the present the city of Independence be organized into a separate stake, to be known until such time as it be organized as the center place of Zion, as the Independence Stake, with the First Independence Branch as the nucleus of the stake, the stake president to be president ex officio of the First Branch, the other branches now organized in the city of Independence, or which may subsequently be organized therein, to be presided over by high priests elected by the branches on nomination by the stake presidency.

"We recommend further that a stake be organized with the First Kansas City Branch as the nucleus, the territory to be greater Kansas City, and the territory lying east of Kansas City and west of Independence.

"We recommend further that the remaining territory of the present Independence Stake be organized into a stake with Holden as the nucleus.

"We recommend further that the Lamoni Stake Presidency be reorganized, the Presidency having received from Brother John Smith his resignation as stake president owing to his advanced age, and he being entitled to honorable release after long years of faithful service. We suggest the name of John F. Garver for president of the Lamoni Stake.

"For president of the new Independence Stake we present the name of Walter W. Smith, and for bishop, Mark H. Siegfried.

"For president of the Kansas City Stake we present the name of Joseph A. Tanner.

"For president of the Holden Stake we present the name of David J. Krahl, and for bishop, Charles J. Hunt."

We have suggested also that the Gospel Standard, our church paper there, be placed under the care of a board of three under the direction of the general Board of Publication.

Benjamin R. McGuire, who had been by revelation presented and by the body received as presiding bishop to succeed Bishop E. L. Kelley released by the same revelation and body action, had reached Independence from his home in Brooklyn, New York, and on being introduced by President Frederick M. Smith, addressed the conference as follows:

Mr. President, Brethren, Sisters and Friends: While this call to the office of Presiding Bishop is not altogether unexpected—I might just here tell you why. Some years ago, at the time of the departure of that stalwart defender of the faith, Bishop Hilliard, I was impressed or received what you might term a premonition that sometime I might be called to occupy in this office; and you can believe me when I say that as every General Conference has come I have scrutinized the action of these conferences very closely, and with some misgivings and fears lest this impression which I had might come true.

Some time in March of this year, to be exact on the 15th or the morning of the 16th, my companion, Sister McGuire, said that she had had a dream the night before, the substance of which was that we were going to Independence. My business relations, my personal affairs surely did not warrant any such supposition; and you may be surprised if I tell you that the following morning I related to my wife that I had had a similar dream in the night that was just past—that we were going to Independence. Taking that in connection with what I had already received, you may feel assured that I expected that this conference might mean something to me.

On the 19th of March, Sunday night of the 19th, I received what I believe was a spiritual dream. The next morning I spoke to my wife about it, but I pledged her to silence. I said, "This seems to me so wild and so ridiculous, viewing it as men would view an affair of this kind, that if there is nothing to it I would not want it to go outside of our home, our own little circle." Of course she wanted to know immediately what it was, and I said, "I dreamed that a revelation was received, and indorsed by conference, that I should be the Presiding Bishop."

After some days we received from President Smith a telegram announcing the fact that my name had been received by the conference, and unanimously accepted as your Presiding Bishop. To say that I was stunned would be putting it mildly; but at the same time it raised very clearly this issue, accept or reject.

Rejection meant a closer alliance with the world. It meant a greater ambition for its praise, for its pleasures, and for the wealth necessary to secure them, the search for which, though, as I believe you know, would defeat its own purpose.

That was not all. Rejection also meant the trampling under foot of your tenderest, most generous and most sacred confidences; it meant the reversal of the Christian order, "Thy will be done." While delay would not necessarily be a denial of this principle of life, yet it would suspend the rule, it opened up the avenue of possible refusal to do the Lord's will.

On the other hand, acceptance meant severance of business relations, smothering of professional ambitions and aspirations. It meant sacrificing the fruits of years of work and successes. It meant breaking of social and home ties. It came home, home the foundation of our government, the bulwark of our liberty, the index of our Christian development. Home must be consulted and respected. The fireside council was called. To disregard it would mean unfitness for efficient service. It would mean injury to the cause that we love, which could not be remedied or repaired by any zealous misapplication in office. A house divided against itself cannot stand. I realize, my brethren and sisters, that actions speak louder than words. I want to tell you this afternoon that our home is a unit.

I would that I might have the undaunted courage, the unwavering faith, the sterling integrity, and the unabated love that has so endeared my predecessor to us all. I feel assured and grateful for your undivided, generous support, and I believe it will be continued. Consequently, we hope to participate with you in the redemption of Zion.

I accept this widened field of opportunity to become your colaborer, this royal privilege to serve God, and with you experience the joy resultant from the love conceived therein.

I might say that the first night while enroute here, lying in my berth, I felt a calm and peace that surpassed description. There was born or reborn that love of souls, that love of humanity, for which I am with you willing to spend and be spent.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 6, 1916.

To the General Conference: The following document was unanimously adopted by the seventy in joint council, April 6, after due deliberation, and it is presented to you for your favorable endorsement:

"One of the distinctive duties of a seventy being 'to travel continually,' he should not refuse appointment except for imperative reasons, such as long continued illness in his family, personal disability, or failure of the church to provide for the just needs of himself and family, whereby he becomes involved in debt. If for insufficient reasons he seeks release from appointment, it should be with the understanding that he may be refused appointment in subsequent years if it is considered inadvisable to restore him to the mission field, and if for such reasons he should remain inactive three consecutive years, he may be dropped from the Quorum of Seventy.

"The reasons assigned for declining an appointment should be clearly stated, and if in the opinion of those making the appointments these reasons are insufficient, the matter should be referred to the Council of Seven Presidents for their investigation and action thereon.

"In cases where no charges are formally preferred against a seventy, he should not be refused appointment until proper action has been taken by which the church releases him from his office as a seventy. When it appears that he should no longer be continued in the said office, for any reason, the matter, including available evidence, should be referred to the Council of Seven Presidents for their action thereon as early as practicable."

To the General Conference: The board of auditors have examined the books and accounts of the office of the Presiding Bishop and find them as represented by the published report.

It is not practicable under present conditions for the committee to determine the true assets and liabilities of the church, nor can this be done until full statements in detail of all such assets and liabilities together with a new inventory of all church property is made.

For these reasons and from the further fact that provision has been made for a new administration of the financial affairs of the church we do not attempt to make a report in detail to the conference.

The board in submitting the foregoing held themselves subject to your further instructions.

The following was submitted by the committee appointed to formulate articles of respect and appreciation in commemoration of and for the long services of Bishop E. L. Kelley:

To Edmund L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop, Independence, Missouri; Dear Brother: Through the message of the president of the church, Frederick M. Smith, expressing, we believe, the divine will, you have been honorably released from the office of Presiding Bishop of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, this release being because of the increasing burdens of the office incident to the widening activities of the church's growth, and the declining vigor consequent to advancing age.

We congratulate you on the conclusion of a mission which has been performed with such splendid consecration of talent, ungrudging toil and rare sympathy, securing the gratitude of the whole church.

We shall feel keenly the sense of loss sustained in your retirement as a presiding officer, bishop and judge in the ecclesiastical circles of our society; and still more as we shall lose in you as presiding bishop a brother and a friend, for your ministry and official relationship have been vitalized by these qualities equally as impressively as in other ways.

Recognizing in the present stage of church development the moment is not only tense with a peculiar solemnity, but that solemnity is in the realization of the new epoch into which we have been moving for some time, we gaze with forward-looking eagerness into the future, straining for a vision of the ideal to which we aspire; and in so doing we can but think in retrospect, and so develop a sense of gratitude which is at once the reward of the past and the hope of the future.

As we mark the salient features of your personal experience we note the parallel strides of the church's progress in those eventful years.

It was in 1871 as a young man of twenty-seven years you commenced your career as a priest and volunteered for missionary service. In 1872, as though having premonition of future possibilities, the study of law was engaged in, and during the interim up to 1881 law was practiced as a profession, while performing ministerial work on Sundays and during spare time. During these years also your interest in educational matters was manifested and cultivated, and some time devoted as superintendent of schools in Mills County, Iowa.

These were surely years of preparation for a service which has always been characterized in the ministry of preaching, administering justice, sympathy with the unfortunate, and championing the cause of education.

In 1881 came the appointment to the committee which represented the interests of the Reorganized Church before the United States Congress, during the passage of the Edmunds-Tucker Act relating to polygamy in Utah.

In 1882 your ordination to the eldership was the prelude to occupancy as counselor to Bishop G. A. Blakeslee. Nine years of faithful service in this capacity prepared for the call to that the office when the then incumbent was removed by death—ordained to the office of high priest and presiding bishop April 10, 1891, since when the influence and uplift of your work has made increasing mark upon the pages of our ecclesiastical history.

In 1897 to these onerous duties was added that of being counselor to President Joseph Smith, and for five years this honor was carried.

The events of 1902 were destined to mark a new era of development, and into the presidency as well as the other leading quorums new men were called, and with the vigor of youth and the spirit of the new age, who had formal introduction to the problems of the time. In this severance of your official association with the presidency you were able to devote with concentration all your time and ability to the fiscal and economic interests of the church, and with unabated enthusiasm and undaunted courage you pursued your course, not only giving attention to the detailed work of your office, but found time to make many official journeys to all parts of the States, the Canadas and the United Kingdom as well as to Southern Europe.

In the Temple Lot Suit as well as in other lines of legal effort before state and United States courts, and before the Supreme Court of the United States your work and influence have been valuable and efficient.

With much appreciation we express our admiration for the exhibition of generosity, chivalry, mercy, sympathy, almost exhaustless patience, and indomitable courage, together with a depth and range of faith which in all the varied activities of your career were in evidence, whether as preacher, lecturer, or debater, in days when opponents were not always without acrimony and vindictiveness, in the tedium of office work the exacting demands of ecclesiastical jurisprudence, and the multifarious dispensations of benevolence trying to meet the ever-growing demands of charity with an always inadequate supply.

We are sure that no sufferer or hungry or distressed person, whether in the church or out of the church, made his appeal for help to you in vain. Such virtues have given you right to be recognized as a Christian gentleman.

In your administration we have seen the church grow from 6,903 in 1871 to 78,326 in 1916. Financially the growth is seen in the contrast between the income of $1,376.42 and expenditure of $912.32 in 1871, and the income of $567,290.29 and expenditure of $560,142.22 in 1916.

Besides this there has been witnessed the erection of many church buildings in various parts of the world; the establishment of Graceland College, the several homes for the aged and infirm people and the Children's Home.

It is not too much to say that your personal influence and strong idealism have been reflected in church legislation, interpretation and practice as but comparatively few have been, and we take this opportunity to express our appreciation of this fact at this time.

As you remove the harness and trappings of your official position and they are placed upon your successor, we reverently invoke God's blessing upon you, desiring that peace and well-earned rest shall be your portion in the years still left to you; and while the shadows lengthen and the sun of your life is westering, may it be your privilege to see these younger men who now shall carry your arms and wear your armor under the ægis of the King we serve and attain the glorious triumph for which you have so ardently striven, and in their work and its results find the crystallization into fact the dreams and visions of your truest and noblest aspirations.

As we express these heartfelt words of affectionate esteem and hope for your future, we would not forget your wife, who in all of these labors has stood by your side, and with unobtrusive grace and dignity has supported you, making it possible for you to reach the success you have attained.

May the promise of our Lord Jesus Christ be verified in your experience that the kingdom is for those who have given a cup of cold water to the fainting, a word of comfort to the discouraged, and a helping hand to the downtrodden.

On behalf of the church.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

COOPERATION

In The Outlook for February 16, 1916, there appeared an article by N. O. Nelson under the caption "Cooperative Stores," which is well worth the attention of Latter Day Saints generally. It is as follows:

The cooperative movement in the United States has had a checkered career in the last forty-five years; but it must be added that all countries have gone through the same course.

England is the birthplace of modern cooperation, but Robert Owen, the world reformer, carried it through two decades of disaster.

It was after his several hundred cooperative stores had failed that the famous twenty-eight weavers and Socialists of Rochdale, England, started the present successful plan in 1844. These twenty-eight pioneers insisted on self-help and independence; they contributed five dollars apiece in four-cent weekly installments until they had one hundred and forty dollars. With this they bought staple groceries and retailed them at the full market price, for cash in hand, out of the little "Toad Lane Store," costing about a shilling a week rent. They had no hired help, and they found themselves possessed of about two hundred dollars when the first stock was sold. Every member received a token, showing the amount of his purchases, and at the end of three months he received credit on additional shares; on the shares he received interest. Nonmembers received half-dividends in money.

The essential of this Rochdale plan, which has spread the world over, was cash payments and the profit going to the purchaser instead of to capital. This unique plan was noised abroad; neighboring towns started similar stores; it was self-contained and self-acting.

Jumping a period of seventy years, Great Britain's cooperative stores now have a membership of over three million, retail sales of four hundred and eighty million dollars a year, manufacturing and wholesale business of two hundred and twenty million dollars, and annual net profits of seventy million dollars.

The same principle has spread into practically all the civilized countries, not only in storekeeping, but in manufacturing, in farmers' business, in banking, and in insurance. The system is democratic; every member has the same vote, whether he holds a single share on which he has made a small initial payment, or whether he holds the maximum shares allowed. Every member pays the same price in a store and gets the same price in a productive enterprise, and whatever profits are made he gets his share according to the amount he has contributed.

Roughly estimated, there are fifty million members of cooperative associations, representing a population of two hundred and fifty million. The plan has been spreading at an accelerating rate; it doubles itself, say, every ten years.

There is no limit to its expansion. The very large profits that are earned and returned are a pressing inducement. Experience has shown that cooperative concerns secure as good managing ability at moderate pay as private concerns at high salaries.

The Americas have lagged far behind Europe and the Orient in this movement, but there is a substantial start, and it is sure to come.

In the '70s the Patrons of Husbandry movement ran largely to cooperative stores; the country was full of them. It was a protest against the supposed exorbitant prices and the rigid terms of the merchants. The patrons took the cooperative idea, but not the Rochdale plan. They sold on credit; they sold at cost; they limited the membership to a class. Any of these motives was obstructive; combined, they made success impossible.

Innumerable stores have been started from that time to this, but rarely on the Rochdale plan—always with some Yankee improvement, always catering to the needy. The Rochdale plan is self-help, not aid to the helpless, not reprisal against the prosperous. The twenty-eight Rochdalers raised their own capital, they bought the goods they had cash to pay for, they sold them to members or others at full market prices. They economized expenses, got more members, more business, more capital. John Smithie, with the help of the others, did the dealing out evenings. They saved the entire gross profit, which, at the shop credit prices, was large; they had this increase as fresh capital. With this profit and new members they could lay in a more varied stock.

In these times and in this country the number to start a store with should be at least one hundred, with a thousand dollars capital. The size of the start is comparatively unimportant, if the spirit, loyalty, and clear-headedness are there. At this date, as at any date in the past forty years, there are probably a thousand cooperative stores in the United States; few of them are five years old. They start with wrong ideas, without sufficient membership, or capital, or competent management, and, of course, fail. There are a number of stores in the United States fully established and prosperous, but probably not over one per cent of those that have been started in the last forty or fifty years.

The Johnson County Store in Olathe, Kansas, is a notable survival of the Grange stores. It started in 1870, has always prospered, and is the chief store in that town or section; but, unfortunately, shareholding is limited to Patrons of Husbandry, and, these gradually dying out, it has long been merely a joint stock company, earning large profits for its few and fewer stockholders.

A cooperative association must be open to all comers on equal terms; it must give at least half-dividends to non-members; it must give an equal vote to every member regardless of his stockholding.

There are a goodly number of cooperative stores in California, in Washington, in Minnesota, and in New England; but few of them are on the genuine plan; few of them save money for their members, and few of them are of any considerable age. Much more progress has been made by productive associations, such as creameries, fruit and truck shipping, and the like; but this is another story. Canada has about a dozen stores on the Rochdale plan; but only a part of them have succeeded in saving money for the members or surviving for any length of time. The movement is led by Mr. Keen, an Englishman, who devotes a large part of his time to publishing a monthly journal correspondence, and addresses. He will make it a success in time; devoted leadership is needed.

In Central and South America I have not learned of any attempts at cooperation.

In my own home town of Leclaire, Illinois, we started a cooperative store in 1902, strictly on the Rochdale plan. It has about one hundred and fifty members, about forty thousand dollars a year sales, and regular dividends on purchases of eight or ten per cent, besides paying interest on its capital and accumulating a surplus fund.

After thirty years of active participation in promoting cooperation, I concluded, five years ago, to begin operations in New Orleans, without adhering to the Rochdale plan as far as starting was concerned, but aiming at the same purpose. I planned to establish the business first, then organize a cooperative association later. I adhered to the Rochdale plan of buying and selling for cash, but, instead of selling at the full market price in order to accumulate capital, I sold at as low net prices as economical expenses would allow, and supplied the capital and management myself. I could see my way clear to undersell the current market prices about twenty-five per cent. The goods were sold and paid for at the counter, without any wagon deliveries. The first day's sales were $2.12; the first week's sales, $48; the sales of the ninth month, about $12,000 in the three stores then established. The sales of this year will be about one and a quarter million dollars.

At the beginning of 1915 I organized a cooperative association, made up of twenty thousand $5 shares or membership. These can be paid for in any way down to ten-cent weekly payments; the dividend begins when the share is paid in full, at the rate of seven per cent per annum. The association owns all of the stores, a good bakery, a good creamery, a condiment factory, and the stock and equipment on a rented farm. It has a few more than three hundred employees. It is intended to make a net profit of two or three per cent over and above expenses and interest and depreciation, which will create a free capital for expansion. Several thousand shares have already been taken, and in due time all will be taken off my hands and thus be completely cooperative. One fourth of the net profits are awarded to employees as dividends on their wages. The managers of the stores make a bond to account for the goods put in their hands, the goods being charged to the manager at selling price. The clerks are girls. We have no credit business whatever.

Recently I have opened stores in country towns near New Orleans; I have made it a condition for opening a store that two hundred householders should subscribe as members for not less than three hundred $5 shares and pay up not less than $500; only members are allowed to buy. This has worked successfully, and will be my working plan in other country towns and other city localities.

The plan which I am operating here may be used by any capitalist or by any number of people who choose to provide the money and give it the necessary business attention. The low prices insure the patronage; the membership of the people insures its permanence and its growth.

Among the practical cooperative authorities there is a divergence of opinion as to centralization in federated stores or autonomous productive associations and consumers' associations. The English and Scotch "wholesales" illustrate the former view; the copartnership associations of Great Britain and the farmers' associations of Ireland and the United States illustrate the latter. I favor the centralized body. In my own undertaking the cooperative association will be the central body for storekeeping, for manufacturing, and for farm production, radiating from the center as far as required.

Mr. Nelson has had a wide and successful experience in the operation of profit sharing lines of business, and naturally his mind inclines to the plan which in his hands has been operated so successfully at Leclaire and elsewhere. Personally I incline more to the truly democratic system established by the eight weavers and socialists of Rochdale, England, in 1844.

Robert Owen, the world reformer, truly did, as Mr. Nelson writes, carry on his system of cooperation through two decades of disaster, but before doing so he had shown clearly at the New Lanark mills that it paid to care for his human machines or factors in his business, at least as well as he did for his inanimate machines. As early as 1816, having reduced the hours of labor then averaging seventeen hours a day for men, women and children, to ten and one half hours; having furnished wholesome, sanitary, well-lighted and ventilated work buildings in which to work, he erected cheerful, well-lighted cottages, public library facilities, and other conveniences to make lives more livable; and he found as a result so much greater efficiency that his business showed handsome profits to his stockholders.

The trouble was that he sought to interest men of capital engaged in similar lines, to use similar measures but failed in his own country and in this to get a fruitful cooperation on their part. The manufacturers, or many of them, declared that he must be crazy to think of effecting a change in this way of the profitable business they had been carrying on, the principle underlying which was to buy everything including labor, at the cheapest market, and to sell everything, including the product of labor, in the highest market, and let the individual human units look out for themselves.

But the consumer comes first in this world. Dame nature is the original producer. So the consumer's interest is the paramount interest, because universal.

To buy for cash and sell for cash is the ideal way, which should it become universal would reduce to a minimum the expense of doing business. Mr. Nelson's method at New Orleans of making an immediate dividend by cutting out all delivery expenses and cutting down the prices to the amount of twenty-five per cent is excellent, but notwithstanding this, there is something in the universal ownership and control which appeals to the imagination of the people, as of working for the common good.

However, no hard and fast system to the exclusion of all else should be considered, but whatever is done it should be with the ultimate ideal of the "autonomous productive associations and consumer's associations."

Men of philanthropic thought, coupled with wide business experience and knowledge like Mr. Nelson, can be of untold benefit in the creation of business concerns of this character, putting into the business their own capital; giving it the prestige of their own names and managing ability; their capital to be a practical advance or loan, which they will accept back with interest and leave to the cooperators the profit otherwise; and I prefer the method which will make quarterly division of profit, retaining a given percentage for extension, granting to employees participation in profit on the basis that the amount of their wage earnings shall be considered as consumption to that amount.

It is unquestionably true that selling at cut or low rates obtains the quickest result in advancing sales, and equally true that many who enter into cooperation are led and misled too, to go to those who offer such inducements as baits; but the saving habit is more likely to be induced in those who wait for the profit.

It is the chain of stores which brings the capacity to buy in such quantities as to command bottom prices, and hence, granted that we have the right men for management, the quicker this chain can be welded the better for all concerned.

The experiment made by the New England Co-operative Society exemplifies what may be done in this regard.

The manager of what is practically a chain of stores conceived that if the money could be obtained to finance it, various concerns with good men in charge might be purchased and transformed into co-operative stores with the former owners as managers.

The New England Co-operative Society was formed; the men who financed it took preferred stock, and as showing their altruism in the transaction, they have no vote. They put up one hundred thousand dollars for this purpose. Control of the central society is vested in the subsidiary societies who have joined, which at the date of the article in Collier's Weekly, referring to this organization, August 22, 1914, numbered thirteen, and in a board of nine directors, but, as each society and each director has one vote, the subsidiary societies outnumbering the directors. To quote the language of this article, "the balance of power lies with the beneficiaries of the system rather than with those who administer it."

Three avenues exist under this system to get in touch with the consumer, namely, by taking over cooperative stores already established; by purchasing stores privately owned and converting them into cooperative stores; and by establishing stores in favorable locations.

Where a society is already organized it must adopt new by-laws and name a representative to attend meetings of the central organization.

Where a privately owned store is purchased, or where a new store is established, a cooperative society is recruited from among the store customers.

It is the latter feature which appeals to the large class of Americans who would like the benefits of cooperation, but they must be shown first.

Mr. Purington, the manager of this New England institution has thus adapted the Rochdale plan to the New England conditions. Of all people under the sun the Latter Day Saints should be cooperators. The idea underlies the whole church polity, and in no way can the thought of unity be better exemplified than in this union of economic interests, which may be extended indefinitely and include the products in every department of human industry, in which every one of course is a consumer.

In all classes of merchandising the cost of delivery to the consumer should be calculated and deducted, making the net result the selling price at the store. If customers want it delivered, charge for delivery, and let there be a schedule in which size of package and distance shall be considered.

In every town of any size delivery organizations should exist to take care of the general needs in this regard at a reasonable rate.

Looking over the system of business of the Herald Publishing House, I have strongly recommended that it be transformed into a cooperative organization. Say that shares of stock be ten dollars per share, so that each family of our people should have at least one share, and feel a proprietary interest in this church institution. I would make it purely cooperative after the old plan, each member to have one vote and no more, confining the aggregate amount of shares in one individual to one thousand dollars, unless the conditions of the business in the judgment of the Board of Directors would warrant the acceptance of more; but in any case one member would have but one vote. This stock would be preferred stock, and bear six per cent interest.

Additional to this, members would be privileged under this plan to receive a discount from their purchases, whatever their character, except on items priced net, or those sold at a loss of ten per cent, and this not only on their own direct purchases, but on orders procured from persons not stockholders.

There are many ways in which those identified in this way with the Herald Publishing House, making it their own, could forward the general cause and their own ultimate good.

As money would come in from these cooperative shares of stock the bonded and other indebtedness of the Herald Publishing House would be gradually reduced, or a sinking fund be established for their payment. Holders of bonds could exchange them for stock.

The church stock would remain, but its interest would come only after the payment or credit is made of dividends, and really it would be wise to let the dividends remain and the stock accumulate, at least with the smaller holdings, and as a matter of fact the more widely spread the stock the better.

The stock could be made payable at say one dollar a month, no interest to be allowed on any share of stock until it was fully paid for.

When such amounts had been subscribed and paid for as to cover the needs of the business, or it be clearly evident that it would be forthcoming to meet the needs of a constantly extending business; then the funds representing the old Herald Publishing House interest could be withdrawn and applied to such purpose as would be productive of the greatest good, and possibly along cooperative lines, direct or through the Bishopric and Orders of Enoch.

The plan that I have submitted would include in its scope the cooperative ideal as regards the employees of the publishing house; bring them into relation with profit sharing in the ratio in which their annual earning bears to the interest of the capital employed; treat their wages as an equivalent of purchases; and let all profits after interest is paid on stock be distributed on the cooperative principle there is upon the amount of purchases or consumption.

Coupled with this and on the same cooperative principle it was proposed that a society be formed to indemnify each member against loss by fire, as one department; and in the other and more important one to insure against loss of earnings up to seventy per cent in event of accident, sickness of any kind whatever, including maternity; in event of death for such term of years as will enable the beneficiaries to adjust themselves to the new relations of life; and for annuity or pension for the caretaking of advanced age, it being a fact well known to statisticians that all men who reach the age of sixty years, ninety-five per cent are down and out, having no definite or regular basis of subsistence.

It is coming generally to be understood that each industry should bear the cost of its using up of human energy, and should provide for the exigencies of life that we have enumerated, so in the plan which has been submitted, of the premiums whatever the amount may be within the limit named, the employer should contribute one half, and in consideration thereof, the society will stand between the employer and any of its members in case of trouble. If the employer is to blame, provision is made for his making good.

Bearing in mind the vicissitudes of business, it is best that this provision should be arranged through cooperative means and a wise provision which should make it to the interest of each concern to foster the well-being of its operatives.

The plan is a safe one. It must, however, have the approval of those church officials upon whom rests the duty of safe-guarding the economic interests of our people.

ROBERT WINNING.

It is only a poor sort of happiness that could ever come by caring very much about our own narrow pleasures. We can only have the highest happiness, such as goes along with true greatness, by having wide thoughts and much feeling for the rest of the world as well as ourselves; and this sort of happiness often brings so much pain with it, that we can only tell it from pain by its being what we would choose before everything else, because our souls see it is good.—George Eliot.

Demise of James Moler

Leaving my field of labor on the 16th, I arrived home in Holden on the 17th. On the 23d, a telegram was received announcing the death of my father. The same day, accompanied by my daughter-in-law, Ticy Moler, we started for Ohio, arriving at Creola on the evening of the 24th.

I felt sad to think that I had been with my father and had left him so near the time of his passing away—when, had we but known, we could have remained with him. He seemed to be getting better when last I saw him, and I felt very hopeful. But the pain in his head was almost continuous after the first stroke of paralysis. The second stroke occurred early on the morning of the 23d, death occurring from cerebral hemorrhage.

The loss of my father is the saddest blow that has come to me in many years. He was a father to me in every sense of the word; but he was more than that: he was a companion. We both heard the latter-day gospel at the same time, and both believed, and accepted it within a few weeks of the same time. Spiritually speaking, we grew up in the work together. I was only fourteen years old at the time, and he thirty-eight. Being of more mature age, he more readily grasped the things of the kingdom than myself, hence I depended much upon his teaching, listening eagerly to every conversation on the gospel, or "the work," as it was commonly expressed, when opportunity presented. Many hours of my boyhood were spent in his company reading the books of the church and exchanging thoughts together.

In later years, after I entered the active ministry, we were sometimes in the same field together, and at times traveled together occupying the pulpit alternately. For many years our work has been apart; but our former companionship has never been forgotten.

The funeral and interment was at Creola; the sermon by Brother A. B. Kirkendall, who had been intimate with the deceased for nearly thirty-five years. Saints came from different parts of the district to show the last tribute of respect. Many of those present had accepted the gospel under the administration of the deceased. The grief and sorrow of the bereaved family seemed to be shared by the entire congregation, both of Saints and outsiders. Different ones have remarked that they never attended a funeral where the entire congregation were so moved to tears.

While we mourn the loss of him who was so dear to us, we rejoice in the good he did during the years of work and service in the church, for he baptized hundreds of people into the church. Moreover, we are proud of the clean record he made. This, however, is known to the Saints and friends in every place he has labored.

I am remaining a few days to assist and comfort the family as much as possible, but will soon turn my face homeward again to attend the General Conference.

We ask the Saints everywhere to give us an interest in their prayers.

Yours in the gospel,

H. E. MOLER.

TULSA, OKLAHOMA, March 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: I would like to ask for space enough in your paper to correct an understanding gleaned from article in the Children's Home Column in HERALD dated March 8, 1916.

Now I was in that home most every day for about four and one half years and I am able to state facts with no guess-so or think-so about it. Neighbors and friends and those most interested in the welfare of the home also know what has been done there.

I can truthfully say that there never was a sixteen-year-old-girl, who was not feeble-minded, at the home during our stay there but what was taught and did do most any kind of house work before she left. Several of them took entire charge of the cooking at the home for a term.

The girls in the home down to eight years of age were taught to make bread, for I taught them myself. At times we had cooks who did not feel like being bothered, and the work being heavy enough, we did not deem it wise to ask them to take our girls into the kitchen. Yet they were being taught in other lines of housework. They were taught to sew, hem, hem-stitch, make buttonholes, mend clothes and stockings, tat, crochet, and embroider, beside ironing, learning how to clean and set in order every room in the house, to dust, and make beds in a systematic way. Great pride was shown in the care of their dining room and many were the compliments they received from those visiting the home.

I cannot recall one child there who did not take a great interest in his work, too; not only the girls, but the boys also, and the letters received from those who have left the home are full of thanks for the teachings received while there.

It was seldom a day was missed without some lesson being taught to the children while they were all together before beginning the duties of the day. Every child was taught to work, even the little ones picked up paper and playthings from the floor.

Every day God's blessing was asked for and we know the Lord watched over us, and he knows we, speaking of my parents and myself, together with those in our employ, did what we considered for the best good of the children under our care.

They were taught to respect the Lord's Day and we look back with pleasure to think of the interest we know was created there among them in the reading and study of good books.

Those who know us personally know our whole heart and interests were in the welfare of this auxiliary of the church.

We are willing to leave our record in God's hands, yet we feel like every Latter Day Saint who is trying to live his religion, we wish we could have done more than we did do.

Now what I have stated here is to correct the impression given those who do not know about the work done in the home during the time we were there.

It is my desire to tell it in a Christlike manner and our best wishes are for the good of our Children's Home.

SCRANTON, KANSAS, January 29, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have been a constant reader of the HERALD for more than twenty-five years, ever since I came into the church. This was the first request that Brother E. E. Brand made to me, that I should secure the HERALD and keep informed on what the church was doing since I was now a part of the same. Though my part has been small, like a drop of water in a bucket, yet I have always been interested in the progress of the church and all of its departments. I hope to remain one of your interested readers until the change comes. Many of the editorials and spiritual letters are a hundred times more valuable to me than what the HERALD has cost me during all these years.

I am expecting more rapid progress soon than has been heretofore. The hastening time has come. We read that in the thirteenth century there was no advancement in fields of knowledge. Men barred themselves from knowledge by a delusive habit of thought. They finally discovered that they had given their time for the promise of wisdom, and had been cheated in their bargain, though little advancement, if any, was made for three or four hundred years.

The same cause would produce the same effect to-day. If we would progress, we must study to show ourselves approved. Then ask God if it be right, and if it be right he will cause that our bosoms shall burn within us. Therefore we shall feel that it is right (Doctrine and Covenants 9:3). We are commanded to teach one another words of wisdom, to seek learning from the best books, even by study and also by faith (Doctrine and Covenants 85:36). This is God's way, and hence is the best way to secure knowledge.

We are thankful to our heavenly Father for the truth and knowledge of faith and righteousness contained in the books we are commanded to read and study. We are also filled with gladness to know that the church is progressing on this line, and developing more love for God and for the workmanship of his hands, and that means for all mankind. Anything else will not please our Father. Anyone living in a lower condition than the gospel law requires—his loss will be great. It is our duty to try to live under the conditions that God has laid down for us. Jesus said he would draw all men unto him. His drawing attraction is love. Have we love for our fellow men? By exercising under this divine order we will be doing missionary work in helping God, and working with Jesus Christ to build up the church and kingdom.

Anything short of this cannot build up, for this is God's way. If we wish to be efficient in this new year's work, let us cultivate more love. The more we give the greater will be our store.

May God help us all to do our duty in his way.

JAMES BAILLIE.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are requested for Sister Sherman Foster, of Greensburg, Indiana. This sister is sorely afflicted. The doctors tell her her only hope is in an operation. The sister has faith in the ordinances of the gospel, and wishes an elder to come to administer to her. If one of the elders is passing this way on return from General Conference he is especially requested to call on the sister. Any one living in the territory will address the sister at Greensburg and arrange to visit her for the administration.

Prayers are asked for Earnest Skeegs, of Outlook, Montana. This man is not a member of the church, but has requested baptism. He is suffering from a cancer of the stomach, and has been sent home from the hospital. He has faith and prays that the Lord may have mercy on him.

Sister L. A. Tyson, of Tolar, New Mexico, requests prayers for Sister M. E. Umphries, of Amarillo, Texas. This aged sister has suffered great pain, is blind, partially paralyzed, and helpless as a babe. It is desired that the Saints pray that if it is the Lord's will she may be restored, and if not that she may pass peacefully away.

NOTES ON THE 'LATE CONFERENCE

Probably it is true that we are prone to say of each succeeding General Conference that it is unique and important. Possibly such a statement would be justified, as each year brings its own peculiar events, and General Conference attacks its own peculiar problems.

Certainly it is true that the conference just closed was unique and important. For the first time President Frederick M. Smith presided in his own right as president of the high priesthood, to which position he had been ordained during the conference year, pursuant to the action taken by the preceding conference.

The opening day of the conference was made memorable by the presentation in regular form of a revelation, first submitted to the quorums and then to the conference. We were encouraged and cheered that God should condescend to speak to us thus early in our session. This pronouncement of the divine will coming at that time was doubly valuable to us.

It determined the selection of the person to succeed Bishop E. L. Kelley as Presiding Bishop, thus quickly removing a very probable cause of difficulty and division. A situation whose devious involutions need not to be elaborated by us to be appreciated by the enlightened reader was immediately set right, to the apparent satisfaction of all.

The newly appointed bishop, Benjamin R. McGuire, was received without reservation as the one divinely selected to take up the arduous work of the Presiding Bishopric. Both he and his associate, Bishop James F. Keir, command the confidence of the people, and we are persuaded that they will continue to merit that confidence, not lightly forfeiting it for any worldly consideration; and in due time, as their acquaintance widens, they will no doubt reap a rich harvest of personal affection, such as has come to the retiring bishop, Brother E. L. Kelley, into whose hands God seems to have delivered a key to the hearts of the people, for it is quite apparent that few men in the church have received more generally the love of the Saints.

Another purpose served by the revelation was to assure us that the Lord is ready and willing to recognize the instrument of his own appointment in the person of our chief presiding officer. Some among the nonmembers may have been so presumptuous as to hope, and some among our own membership so lacking in faith as to fear, that revelation to the church would cease with the passing of President Joseph Smith. If so, such presumption and such fear were rebuked very early in the conference.

Men must learn that prophets are not all cast in one mold. In fact they differ as widely as other men differ,—and with incomprehensible versatility the divine Creator so endows all men that no two are exactly alike. Between Joseph the Martyr and President Joseph Smith there was as great a difference as between President Joseph Smith and his son. Why then fear that a difference of temperament should preclude the possibility of revelation? Has God forgotten the language of any child of his begetting, that he cannot speak to him?

But some have feared that our president was too much given to education. His college degree was considered a barrier. The man in question had assured the writer some years ago that personally he had never given the question of revelation a moment's anxiety. He felt serenely sure that God could speak to him as well as to any other man whenever it became necessary to do so. Such simple faith certainly would find education no handicap, but rather a great help in church service. Some seem to have forgotten that in section eighty-five and paragraph thirty-six of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants God himself associates two great words in one sentence—study and faith.

The reorganization of the Presiding Bishopric was not the only important work accomplished by the conference. Next in importance, perhaps, was the action providing for the reorganization of the Independence Stake. Three stakes are to be formed of the territory formerly occupied by the one. These will be Independence Stake, including the city of Independence; Kansas City Stake, including "Greater Kansas City," and territory lying between Kansas City and Independence; and Holden Stake, including all the remaining territory of the former Independence Stake.

In an assembly of the Presidency, Twelve, Seventies, and Order of Bishops, President Frederick M. Smith stated that he was thoroughly persuaded that such reorganization was based on divine inspiration. We may then hope that time will demonstrate its wisdom. The time has come for intensive cultivation. A little plot thoroughly cultivated will yield more than a large field poorly tilled. Benjamin Franklin's ideal of "a little farm well tilled, a little barn well filled," may be applied to spiritual matters.

The personnel of the new force of workers in the proposed new stake commands our confidence; as presidents, Joseph A. Tanner for Kansas City Stake, Walter W. Smith for Independence Stake, and David J. Krahl for Holden Stake,—with Charles J. Hunt as Bishop of Holden and Mark H. Siegfried as bishop of Independence.

In the Lamoni Stake there is to be a reorganization of the stake presidency, Elder John F. Garver to succeed Elder John Smith as president. We trust that the second John may be as successful as the first in winning the love and respect of the people, and that his ministry may be as long and honorable. We shall miss him from our editorial sanctum, but cheerfully speed him to the field that we believe to be divinely appointed to him at this time.

Our good wishes also go with Elder George E. Harrington, who has labored long and arduously in the Independence Stake, and who now goes to the Southern California District. We are sure that his zeal will be unflagging in the new field as it has been in the old.

For the first time during a conference Lamoni and Independence were in communication by wireless—our station at Graceland College regularly exchanged messages with our newly erected station at the Independence church.

This work was in charge of young men, Brother Arthur Church and others. One remarked, "These young fellows delight to play with the elements."

Some comment was indulged in by the daily papers on this feature of our work, under the caption, "Thirty-nine B. C. and 1916 A. D." It was considered strange that a faith in the ancient principle of divine healing as advocated in the days of Christ should be entertained by a people so up to the moment as to use a wireless station at their conference. They did not realize that principles of truth are eternal, always in season, while methods and customs change. Truth by wireless to-day is the same as truth by courier in 39 B. C.

Music played its accustomed role in the conference. The General Choir movement is a practical demonstration of the merits of cooperation. Our singers, though far scattered during the year, work arduously upon the same themes, under one leadership, and inspired by one spirit, consequently when they meet at the conference they are prepared for united effort—there is concert and concord.

"The Messiah" was rendered Thursday, Friday, and Sunday evenings, and though all were urged to attend but one evening each, the church was crowded to its utmost capacity and hundreds were turned away each evening.

The annual stroll about town of the choir singers Monday night after the conference closed was much enjoyed, especially by those so fortunate as to receive their favors—at our place of sojourn they sang: "The Saints shall wear robes as the lilies." Impressive thought: If we are to be decked in robes like the lilies by and by, we must be pure and clean now,—each spirit receives adornment suitable to itself.

The keynote of the conference, sounded in speeches, sermons, prayers, and songs, was consecration—consecration of self, of service, of money, of talent. Hundreds of Saints, particularly among the younger members, begin to thrill to that keynote. It is the dominant note of practical Christianity. When we are in tune with it we are in tune with God. Discord and confusion predominate in the world when it is forgotten.

It is argued that by and by we shall have biannual conferences, in the interests of economy. That time may come, possibly sooner than we expect—yet will there not be a distinct spiritual loss? The conference work is dreaded, 'tis true; yet it brings to all an uplift and a quickening that is very valuable. It is also a unifying force, welding the Saints together as no other single event in the church calendar can do.

After all, the spirit of fellowship is the thing that makes the conference so enjoyable and the time of parting so melancholy. No one member of the conference can possibly get in intimate personal touch with all other members, yet each one meets many others and learns them better and loves them more.

The groups overlap and intertwine, so that a great bond of friendship is established. Fellowship! That is what makes our work so congenial, so worth while.

Another conference is ended. Another milestone is safely passed. Now let us enter unhesitatingly upon another year of service, trusting the good Spirit to guide us all aright in our labors.

CURRENT EVENTS
 SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

CONFERENCE OVER.—The rush of the work of the late General Conference being over, we again take up the editing of this column.

ARMOR PLATE PLANT.—A bill to provide a government armor plate plant, passed by the Senate on March 21, has been by the naval committee favorably reported to the House.

SUGAR REPEAL.—The Senate has adopted the sugar repeal bill in an amended form, limiting tariff extension to May 1, 1920, and the bill has gone to the House for concurrence in the Senate amendment.

IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION.—The House has passed an immigration bill imposing a literary test for immigrants, exempting refugees from religious persecution. This bill has been reported to the Senate.

CHINESE UNREST.—Unrest is said to prevail throughout the Chinese Empire. Kwang-Tung, the important southeastern province, having Canton for its capital, has declared its independence. There is little definite news from this trouble-stricken country.

ARMY INCREASE.—An army increase bill fixing the peace strength of the standing army at 250,000, and eventually providing a regular army and reserve forces aggregating 1,000,000, passed the Senate on April 18 without a recorded vote. The Hay reorganization bill which passed the House on March 23 would provide a peace strength of 140,000. The differences between the Senate and House bills will be worked out in conference.

JAPAN PROTESTS.—The Japanese Government through its ambassador at Washington, Viscount Chinda, has protested against the immigration bill which has passed the House and is pending in the Senate, because it would legalize the agreement under which the Tokio Government has prohibited emigration from Japan to the United States and its dependencies, and because it classes Japanese with Hindus and other oriental races.

VON PAPEN INDICTED.—Captain Franz von Papen, recalled military attache to the German embassy at Washington, was on April 17 indicted by the New York grand jury as the organizer and financier of an alleged conspiracy to blow up the Welland Canal in Canada. Wolfe von Igel, von Papen's former secretary, was on the 18th arrested on a charge of conspiracy in connection with the case, two others having been indicted with von Papen on a similar charge.

SUBMARINE CONTROVERSY.—The sinking of the French passenger steamer Sussex in the English channel on March 24, brought to a critical point the controversy between the United States and Germany over the German submarine policy. The Sussex was unarmed, and did not carry munitions. She was sunk without warning, and with Americans on board. Germany announced that the Sussex was not sunk by a German submarine. The United States Government after investigation, concluded that it was a torpedo of German manufacture which sank the vessel. In a note to the German Government made public April 20, the United States reviewed the German submarine policy, closing with the words:

Unless the imperial government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight-carrying vessels, the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether. This action the government of the United States contemplates with greatest reluctance, but feels constrained to take in behalf of humanity and the rights of neutral nations.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—The rigid censorship which has covered the operations in Mexico looking to the disbanding of the Villa forces has continued. It is known, however, that these troops have been in a large measure broken up in small bands and scattered. At least two engagements have occurred, in which sixty Mexicans were killed and four Americans wounded. The American lines have been extended as far south as Parral, near the southern boundary of the state of Chihuahua, where a serious situation has developed. American soldiers who seem to have gone into the city unarmed for supplies were on April 12 fired upon by a mob of Mexican civilians, said to include Carranza soldiers. Returning to their camp outside the city, the Americans were attacked by the mob. Two Americans and forty Mexicans were killed. Excitement has run high, and Carranza in a formal communication has suggested the withdrawal from Mexico of the American forces. In this note the Carranza government urges that the United States army was sent into Mexico under "a crooked interpretation of the note of March 10, as the Government of Mexico was disposed to sustain its proposal regarding the reciprocal passage of troops, but that an expedition could not be sent in the meantime, as the terms and conditions relative to the agreement were not defined." The note further contends that this note of March 10 was to provide for future outrages, and could not be plead in justification of attempts to chastise for past offenses, or the Villa raid on Columbus. Major General Hugh L. Scott has been dispatched to the border to investigate conditions first hand. Carranza on April 14 entered Mexico City with ceremony, and took up his residence at the national palace.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Unfavorable weather conditions have prevented operations on a large scale on any of the war fronts. The more local centers of activity have continued the scenes of struggle, as has been the case for some weeks. The Germans have again and again renewed their attack on the French stronghold Verdun, so long coveted and so desperately fought for. The French have yielded their first line of defenses, netting the Germans about one hundred thousand square miles of territory, but they feel secure in the conviction that they cannot be driven from their stronger positions. Losses have been appalling on this the greatest battle field of the war. The activity in this region has lessened. The British report gains south of Ypres. The Russians have for the more part been pressing the fighting on the eastern front. They report slight gains in Galicia. The Italians announce greater activity on the Isonzo front, to prevent the Austrians from sending troops to Verdun. There has been no change in the Balkans. The Russians have advanced their lines in Armenia. They report the capture of Trebizond, the important Armenian Black Sea port, seventy-five miles east of Constantinople. The British have been on the aggressive in Mesopotamia, and have advanced their lines up the Tigris to within a few miles of Kut El Amara, where they have suffered recent slight reverses. The British garrison at this place still holds out against the Turks. Many merchant ships have been sunk by mines or submarines, including some on which Americans have taken passage. Chief among these is the French Sussex, the sinking of which has brought to a crisis the long controversy between the United States and Germany, dealing with the submarine policy of the latter country. The activities of the air craft of all nations have continued to attract attention. In German Zeppelin raids on England fifty-nine civilians have been killed, and one hundred sixty-six injured. Aeroplane contests along the western front have been of almost daily occurrence, many on both sides having been brought to the ground. The Swiss army has been reduced from 5,000 to 2,000 men. The British cabinet has for some time engaged in a sharp contention over the proposed extension of conscription, but has concluded not to extend the practice further at this time. Conscription sentiment is said to be growing in Canada. Russian forces, estimated to aggregate at least 250,000, have disembarked at Marseilles, France, to assist the French and British on the western front. The route by which these men were brought from their homeland is not publicly known.

USE AND MISUSE OF QUARTERLY

(An address by Elder C. B. Woodstock, editor of the junior Religio Quarterly, delivered at a joint session of the Lamoni Stake Sunday School and Religio convention, at Lamoni, Iowa, February 25, 1916.)

We have been asked to discuss this subject from the standpoint of one who prepares the quarterly. It may be a fortunate time for us to have a heart to heart talk with those who are to use the quarterly as teachers in the various classes. What we shall say may not fairly represent the thought and desire of the editors of other quarterlies, but for ourselves we are convinced that the quarterly does not accomplish its greatest purpose unless it is used understandingly and with care. It is only one of the means or helps by which the Sunday school and Religio are to accomplish their great missions, but as such help we are desirous that it may perform well its part. To this end we shall seek to determine the position the quarterly occupies in the general scheme of Sunday school and Religio work.

As a public-school teacher, it may be natural for us to look upon the problem confronting the Sunday school and Religio teacher as but little different from that before the public-school teacher. We mean that in the main the purpose of the process is the same, and that both may follow a natural and well-defined program which is calculated to accomplish the greatest good.

THE OBJECTIVE FACTORS

In our analysis we find three main objective factors in the teaching process. These are the teacher, the class, and the subject matter. As factors, these three each have their respective places, values and functions, although the relative importance of each may vary. By this we mean that in some cases either the teacher, the class, or the subject matter may be the great controlling and determining factor. With the average class with splendid subject matter well arranged, with an abundance of references and other helps, yet all in the hands of a poor teacher, the results may be almost nothing. On the other hand, a most excellent teacher may be seriously handicapped with a class too large in number, poorly seated, and with limited teaching material.

THE TEACHER

Let us then look at each of these factors briefly. We are convinced that of the three the teacher is the one of paramount importance so far as teaching results are concerned. Probably there are few really great teachers if we consider all that an ideal teacher ought to be. And yet we are thankful that there are so many who through diligent, prayerful application, even though working against difficulties, are approaching the ideal, and achieving lasting results. For the great body of Sunday school and Religio teachers we have but the profoundest respect and sympathy and reverence. In many cases these are pioneers, who without training, with small opportunity, and burdened with the ordinary tasks of life, willingly do what they can under those conditions to assist in the educational branch of the Master's work.

It was Doctor Arnold of Rugby, who made the classical remark, "I wish my boys to drink from a running fountain rather than from a stagnant pool." He meant by this that as a teacher it was his duty to make constant preparation for all his class work; even though he was a teacher of many years' experience.

The successful Sunday school or Religio teacher is a live, active student, broad as possible in reading, rich in the experiences of ordinary life, and strong in his own spiritual conviction and experience. His life is not stagnant by any means; his mind is continually active, acquiring, comparing, reasoning, judging; he is looking for an opportunity for growth and expansion.

The successful teacher is keen in sympathetic analysis of human nature, especially of child nature, if he be the teacher of children. Without a sympathetic relationship between student and teacher, there can be no real fellowship, no mutual attraction; no resulting spontaneous interest and response on the part of the child.

The successful teacher is tactful. He is quick to take intelligent advantage of the unexpected. Who has not seen a class entirely thrown off the line of study by some unexpected remark, or question, or criticism introduced by some capricious youngster? The wise teacher is quick to see his advantage in such a case and turn even the unexpected remark to good advantage in some way in emphasizing a point not altogether foreign to the lesson.

The successful teacher is able and willing to make consistent preparation of the lesson before entering his class, so that he may appear before the class with the lesson well in hand, and able to conduct the recitation quite independent of the quarterly. By this we mean that the preparation made by the teacher has so filled his mind with the subject matter that he can lay aside the quarterly, and simply lead the discussion. We do not mean that teachers must discard the quarterly, but that it is too frequently followed slavishly. The quarterly has its place, but it cannot take the place of the teacher. If the teacher can come to his class well prepared he will lend an inspiration to its membership without which the best results cannot be expected.

THE CLASS

Of the second factor, the class, we need not say much here. It is presupposed that the class is a normal one, with room sufficiently adapted to its needs, and comfortable. We may suppose also that the membership of the average class make some effort at preparation of the lesson at home before they come to the session. Perhaps we should say that the quarterly is a text to be studied by the student, as well as the teacher, and hence is provided that he may have an opportunity to make this previous preparation at home.

THE SUBJECT MATTER

Of the third factor also, we need not say much. It is supposed that the quarterly deals with subject matter which is adapted to the needs and interests of the student for whom it is prepared. Sufficient helps by way of maps, reference books, pictures and the like, should be provided. These all help to illumine the text and make it appeal to the student.

RESULTS TO BE OBTAINED

Subjectively considered, the results we expect to be obtained in the teaching process may be briefly gathered under three heads, namely, the acquisition of knowledge, mental growth, and spiritual awakening and development. Too often we lay the greatest stress upon the memorizing of facts, dates, the names of men, etc., as though the great thing to be accomplished were this acquisition of knowledge. It is true this may be the material with which we have to work, but, after all, our study of the problem of teaching convinces us that this alone is not the important result to be reached. What we desire in auxiliary work is that our people, young and old, shall gain a rich fund of information, and that in acquiring this knowledge they shall grow mentally and make provision for strong and spiritual development.

By mental growth we mean the developing and growing of mental life. This can only come with exercise and use. Teaching must make such use of the learning faculties as to give opportunity for the development of such mental activities as observation, comprehension, imagining, reasoning, and judgment. Through a proper appeal the desirable emotions and sentiments of love, reverence, sympathy, charity, sorrow, gladness and righteous ambition and the like should be exercised. This unfolding of the mental life of an individual is a matter of natural growth through exercise and development according to natural laws. Hence our teaching in Sunday school and Religio must be planned in harmony with the laws of mental growth and development.

It may not be safe to assume that spiritual awakening and development parallel mental growth. We may have mental growth without much spiritual awakening, but we are not sure that the highest spiritual development is not more or less conditioned by the stage of mental growth of the individual. Thus moral tone comes only with the growth of the conception of right and wrong as applied to life's activities. Moral standards depend upon life ideals which result from experience and judgment based on the action of one's self or others. Spiritual ideals are further reached through properly guided and exercised mental activities, under the benign influence of the Spirit of God, through which an appeal is made to the noble side of human instincts, hopes, aspirations and interests. Divine inspiration as we understand it, is the response of the human mind and heart developed by careful study and diligent application, and exercised in paths of righteousness and holiness, attuned in close harmony with the Master Mind by obedience to the laws of God. To assist in fostering this mental growth, and in providing conditions for the truest and best spiritual awakening and development within the church, and especially among the young,—such is the province, the duty, and the responsibility of those who are privileged to teach.

USE OF THE QUARTERLY

We must now turn more definitely to the subject assigned us, the use of the quarterly. The quarterly provides the subject matter for the respective lessons, and as such should serve as a guide to the preparation of the lesson which follows. It is supposed that the editor of the quarterly has organized the subject matter, has looked over the whole field and divided it logically into certain units which may best be studied in the order assigned. As a guide, the quarterly should be had to direct the trend of study, to give it a definite purpose, or aim, and to suggest such helps and references as may best be used. But we must emphasize the point that the quarterly is supposed to be a guide, and not a master, or a complete compendium which in and of itself is all sufficient.

How absurd for a tourist through the Yellowstone-National Park to purchase a guide book and then turn his back to the window and bury his face in the pages of the guide! The guide books are provided to furnish bits of information; to suggest the best points of observation; and to offer brief descriptions of all the beauty and grandeur and marvel of scenery that is passing on the outside.

Such we feel the quarterly should be in the hands of the teacher. The path of life teems with interest, with its scenes of grandeur, of pathos, of happiness, of sadness, of sublimity, and yet too often we bury our faces in the pages of the quarterly as we stand before the class and forget that we should be looking out into life, and not into the dumb, dull pages of any text. The quarterly should serve to point the way, to direct the course, to outline the subject matter and to offer bits of rare information, but the teacher should ever bear in mind that he is teaching the class and not the quarterly.

PREPARATION AND PRESENTATION

We have said the quarterly provides a means for the preparation of the lesson. We hope most of our students prepare, but we must urge if we do not insist, that every teacher make the fullest possible preparation before he assumes the grave responsibility of standing before a class, to lead and direct their thought. Into his hands is committed one of the greatest trusts ever given to mankind, next to that of parenthood. The teacher's preparation of the lesson must be made with the composite life interests and needs of his class membership constantly in mind. He must not only grasp the content of the lesson, but he must see it in terms which the class can understand and appreciate.

Not all in the class are alike, and the elements of the lesson must be searched out and planned for in such a way that the interest of each student shall be aroused, and his thought quickened. In our own normal training class we urge our students in preparing for the recitation, to close their eyes and think of each child as he sits in the class before them, and to be certain that they can present the truths to be learned in such a way that each child shall be able to grasp and comprehend them. Our lesson may have an appeal to mother love, but in our class is a boy who has never known a mother. How shall we present this feature so that he shall know what we mean; that his own stunted little life may come to see more of what a mother's love really is? And yet our lesson deals with that side of life's experience. What simple illustration, what bit of a story, what incident of our own experience can we use to make the point clear? And so on and on through the whole class. Let us study our pupils, and then seek to plan our class recitation as we prepare it in such a way that all may be benefited.

Again, the teacher must not only see clearly the essential teaching points, but also their relation to past lessons and to the lessons yet to come in the quarter. We wonder how frequently Sunday school and Religio teachers make use of the general outline of the quarterly lessons? Do they try to grasp the general thought of the quarter, and then see how the editor has broken up this large theme into topics and smaller units which make up the respective lessons?

Too often, we fear, the quarterly is snatched up hastily and the class entered without previous thought. We doubt if some teachers remember the lessons which have preceeded, and with them no effort is made to see what relation this lesson has with the lessons which are yet to come.

Again we must emphasize the fact that the teacher as he prepares the lesson must seek to become inspired with the thought and spirit of the lesson which was experienced by the editor of the quarterly. This may sometimes be accomplished only by repeated study and consideration. But inspired he must be if he would hope to lead his class to see in the lesson what he sees, to feel what he feels, to desire what he desires, to approach the ideal which he himself has set.

In this connection we call attention to the fact that the teacher whether he will or not, becomes for the present the ideal of the class. Its members see through the teacher's eyes. They will appreciate what the teacher appreciates. They respond to the influence which he exerts.

FORMAL STEPS

We have said that our conduct of the class work should follow certain logical order if we would take advantage of the natural development of the mental faculties. Let us turn for a brief consideration of what in teaching has been termed the formal steps.

1. Preparation. Let us assume that the teacher has made the desired preparation beforehand, and that the class are now gathered ready to proceed upon the study of the lesson. With some tactful introduction or salutation, the teacher catches the interest of the class and wins their attention. With a few well chosen questions and thoughts on the previous lesson, what may be termed the ground work of the present lesson is brought out. This may come best perhaps in the form of voluntary reports from members of the class.

Next will follow a statement of the aim or purpose of this lesson. It is essential that not only the teacher but the members of the class, should see clearly the point at which they hope to arrive in the lesson study. This statement should be clear and definite and interesting, outlining briefly the course or scope of the lesson. In this way the minds of the pupils should be prepared to receive and interpret the incidents of the lesson as they are reached.

2. Presentation, or acquisition of knowledge. This may cover a study of the lesson as a whole, or in convenient units into which the quarterly or the teacher may have divided it. For primary or junior classes it will be the lesson story based on the lesson text. It may be told by some pupil, or if necessary it may be told by the teacher, or read directly from the the quarterly. The subject must be presented in the form best adapted to the needs of the class. We suppose that the teacher has the plan previously thought out now clearly in mind and ready for use. No distraction should be allowed. Unfortunate occurrences or interjections should be turned to good account or ignored. Wandering discussions and suppositions should not be countenanced. Superficial guessing and haziness of thought and expression indicate a lack of depth of thought and true consideration. The wise teacher will direct the thought into deeper channels, or lead the minds of the children away from considerations which have no purpose. The stream of thought should grow deeper and broader as the lesson progresses.

The teacher's manner in the class must ever be earnest, interesting, enthusiastic, sincere, and convincing. His questions must be such as to require all members of the class to think and to react. How often we find classes in which questions are directed to one pupil, while two-thirds or more of the class are totally unaware that any teaching is going on. It requires tact and ability, but the successful teacher by his manner, his preparation, and interesting presentation commands the attention of the whole class.

In the presentation, whether by the teacher or if given in the form of reports or discussions by members of the class, an appeal must be made in a somewhat objective way to the perceptive senses, the imagining power, motor activity, or other native interest, if we would hold the attention of our students. Here scripture reading, pictures, maps, references, hand work, dramatizing, and the like have their part. The wider the range of sensory appeal and the greater the provision for self-expression on the part of the class, the more certain we may be of the lasting effect of our teaching. This appeal may change as occasion requires, or opportunity offers. It will be now one form of appeal, and now another, and still another, in order that all members of the class shall be reached, and that the thought desired may find lodgment in the mind of the class.

To arrange this appeal and to direct these powers toward the acquiring of the aim of the lesson, to put the pupils in possession of sufficient, clearly understood, and vividly imagined data to enable him through comparison and inference to reach true and proper conclusions, is the purpose of this part of class work.

3. Comparison. It is supposed that in the presentation some new ideas have been developed. In the third step these ideas must be compared with previous ideas had by the children, arranged in proper order, and assigned their logical place in mental life: such as, "Was the action of this man of whom we have studied good or bad?" "Why do you answer good?" "What other event was it like?" This is the type of question which aids the children to form some judgment as to the events studied. The teacher must nicely suggest standards of comparison and bases of judgment when necessary, and correct wrong impressions, avoiding false, superficial conclusions. Children especially may have immature, or illy founded standards. It is the teacher's part to correct these standards, and to give a proper basis for judgment.

Perhaps it is here that the teacher's responsibility is greatest, for standards which are thus acquired may last through life and serve to guide the whole future of the individual. How necessary that the teacher's basis for judgment shall be well founded in the teachings of the church, and lived out in the experiences of early life.

Again, comparison tends to form important thought groups. Our human minds group things by comparison. We group things which are like, or which are different. We group them under cause and effect, in parts and wholes, etc., and thus they become fixed in memory. Not only do birds of a feather flock together, but also do these thought groups of ours. True mental growth comes when pupils establish these thought relations and formulate their expression for themselves.

4. Generalization. Arriving at general conclusions which seem to underlie principles of action, is the fourth step in the teaching process. This comes as a natural result of clearly establishing or imagining the new idea, or comparing it with those we have had before. If a pupil makes this judgment for himself, it has been attended by mental growth, and the new judgment has become permanent property. Thus the pupil acquires new standards which are going to serve in future comparison and in making future judgments. Thus it is that the ideals of life are always formed. It is our privilege to help form them if we will, under the favorable conditions provided by the auxiliary societies.

5. Application. If all the above processes have been followed in our recitation, and yet the class has seen no real relation between the lesson as we have studied it, and the lives we are living to-day, they have lost a great point to be gained. In the first place the lesson should have some statements which are capable of immediate application in the life of the members of the class. In the second place its application should be clearly presented, not by moral platitudes on the part of the teacher, but if possible brought out in the self-expression of the members of the class. In this manner the lesson truths should be clearly related to the life problems of the present, and so far as possible the determination made to carry out these principles in the daily activities of life.

In closing the recitation; a summary of the main truths should be made, in order that the lesson shall be rounded out, and stand as a complete whole in the minds of the children.

WORK TOWARDS THE IDEAL

We are not certain that all we have tried to present has been clearly understood. Perhaps we have tried to cover too much ground, but we trust that our main points will be seen: see the place the quarterly occupies in the scheme of lesson work; see the necessity for broad, consistent, prayerful preparation of the lesson on the part of the teachers; see that the lesson study, though based on the quarterly, is by no means satisfactorily accomplished when the word and letter of the quarterly are slavishly followed. The lesson study in the class should be lively, interesting, thought producing, inspiring, related to life problems.

We trust that what we have presented may serve some little good in improving the general character and tone of our lesson work. Do not be discouraged if you feel that in the light of this discussion your own work has been something of a failure. We must each do our part the very best we can, assisted by the divine Spirit of God which is promised as our helper. If you cannot be an ideal teacher, make your teaching as nearly ideal as you can.

SANCTIFICATION

The linking of the two dispensations by their comparative likenesses was a favorite way the apostles and Jesus had of appealing to the Jews in preaching the gospel to them. The Hebrew people had much faith in the ordinances of the Mosaic dispensation, and it was this faith that was used by the ministers of the gospel to reach Jews.

We find Jesus using the brazen serpent, linking it with his own sacrifice, to convince them of the divinity of his mission, teaching them that from the truth and facts of their own faith they had a convincing witness of himself.

We find Peter in his memorable sermon on the day of Pentecost, using what David had said of himself and his Lord, as a witness that Jesus was the Christ.

The writer of Hebrews, in the 9th chapter, 11th to 15th verses, links the ordinances of the two dispensations for cleansing, comparing their likenesses, and demonstrating the superiority of the gospel ordinances over those of the Mosaic dispensation.

Reverting from Hebrews 9, we find in Numbers 19 a recital of the ceremonial process of sanctifying the waters of separation or of purification. The children of Israel were commanded to bring a heifer without spot or blemish to Eleazer the priest, and he was to take it outside of the camp and kill it and dip his finger tips in the blood and sprinkle it before the door of the tabernacle, and then the heifer was to be burned in its entirety, the ashes to be picked up by one who was clean, and put somewhere in a clean place outside of the camp. The ashes were intermixed with running water, and the mixture was called the waters of purification or separation, for the expressions are used interchangeably, and mean the same.

When one became unclean by coming in contact with some defilement he was commanded to cleanse himself or have himself cleansed by having some clean person sprinkle these waters of purification on him. And Paul says:

For if the blood of bulls and goats, and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth it to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?—Hebrew 9: 13, 14.

In sprinkling of blood of bulls and goats and of the ashes of heifers there was a type of the cleansing process of the blood of Jesus Christ.

In the first place we note that after the killing of the sacrifice it had not effect without an application to the individual by direct contact, or anything else that had to be cleansed. So then as the first was typical of the second, it is reasonable to believe that some method of application must have been adopted in the second, or gospel ordinance, and an application thereof by each individual affected complied with.

The blood in the first to be applied was of bulls and goats, and ashes of heifers. The substance to be applied in the second was the blood of Jesus Christ. The method of application in the first was sprinkling. Now in looking up the method under the New Testament, the gospel covenant, we find that it is by drinking: for Jesus says, "This is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins" (Matthew 26: 28). And in the last of the previous verse he said, "Drink ye all of it." So we learn that the application of the blood in the New Testament is by the drinking thereof. By the application of the first, the sanctifying of the flesh was accomplished, for we learn in Hebrews 9: 13 that "it sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh," or it purged the flesh to cleanness. But there was not any sanctification accomplished without a proper application, for we learn in Numbers 19: 20, that the man that shall be unclean, and shall not purify himself, shall be cut off from among the congregation.

So also in the typifying ordinance of the gospel there must be an application, for Jesus says:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day—John 6: 53, 54.

We learned that the Mosaic ordinance sanctified the flesh, but the gospel ordinances sanctify the conscience, wherein is the remission of sins, as well as the overcoming of the evil inclinations of the soul. This leads us to the thought that sanctification is a development of the spiritual life by the application of the sacramental communion, for Jesus says there is no life in us if we eat not his flesh and drink not his blood.

This corresponds with the experience I have had in partaking the sacrament. I was made conscious that the sins that seemed obstacles between me and God were removed, and along with that came an indescribable determination to resist evil and do good, which would last for weeks at a time. I want to say here that I have not partaken of the sacrament for nearly eight years, not having any opportunity to do so.

Then, in the partaking of the sacrament there is a remission of sins, for that is what the blood of Jesus Christ was shed for. For so we learn in the statement "this is my blood of the New Testament which is shed for many for the remission of sin."

So in the partaking thereof the application of the blood of Jesus Christ to your soul is consummated, if so be you have approached the communion in a consecrated manner. So in the sprinkling of the waters of purification we see the symbol of the sacrament. But also we see in the sacrament a communion of the Spirit, for by the remission of our sins our temple is made clean and a fit place for the Spirit to enter and dwell therein.

With the indwelling of the Spirit, strength for resistance of evil is developed. Not only is this strength developed, but the desire to sin is absent from us to a great extent. Now this is what certain professed followers of Christ call sanctification, and indeed and in truth I suppose it is sanctification, but the method of procedure by which they profess to arrive at this stage of spirituality is different from that prescribed by the word of God.

Usually they profess to get their sanctification at an altar service, which is constituted of a lot of fanatical praying. Jesus says that anyone entering the fold in any other way than through the gate, the same is a thief and a robber. And if it so be they get the sanctification they talk about, they get it another way than the God-ordained way; and under the circumstances I will say that it is logical to assert they do not get that sanctification that God bestows, but are deceived.

In the sacrament at the time thereof, the Spirit is present to commune with the participants. (Commune means talk one with another. That is why it is sometimes called communion.) At such times it imparts God's counsel, shows the things of the Father to his children; reveals things to come; in fact, performs the God-ordained functions of the Holy Spirit. How blessed it is to be a child of the living God, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; the God of the Saints of eighteen centuries ago, the same God that manifests himself in the same way to-day as then.

I do not mean to say that the wine is the actual blood of Christ, but it typifies the blood; and the sacrament is the means of applying the blood to our souls, and without an application we receive no benefit from the blood of Jesus, which was shed for us; so it behooves us to partake thereof in a worthy manner, every opportunity we can.

The soul that would not apply the waters of separation under the law of Moses was cut off, and we are admonished in Hebrews 10:29:

Of how much sorer punishment, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the spirit of grace.

I have never heard a sermon on this topic, viewed from this standpoint. Would like to hear from some of the elders. I am not an elder.

G. W. LINDSEY.

MOTHERS AND THEIR RESPONSIBILITIES

Upon the faithful and scientific application of the all-important office of mother hinges the success and happiness of the home, government and nation. The mother raises the boys who in after life become the preachers, doctors, legislators, and governors. She reigns as queen over the home, and as such wields an important influence, either for good or bad, that will have an effect upon her family and her neighbors. They should study well to cast their influence for good; should the mothers and wives of the church.

Love is the essence of admiration and respect. We love God because we admire and respect him. Then the wise mother and wife who would bask in the sunshine of her companion's and children's love, will strive to gain and retain their admiration and respect. Love is the dynamic of the soul, and wherever this dynamic force is at work it must work as all forces work, to unify all things with itself; and, conversely, must destroy all things antagonistic to itself.

God has said the first rule in heaven is order; and his church is established on a well-defined plan as a basis for our development. If we reach that standard of perfection that this church will ultimately bring us to, we will reach it only through a systematized effort.

If the mothers desire to be useful and valuable servants of the Lord, they should first establish a plan and a system of doing the right thing at the proper time in their home duties—strive to become more efficient in a well-defined system of home regulation, even as God has systematized the work of his church.

If we would have our children form good habits we should lay the foundation by forming good habits ourselves. Therefore, the mother who establishes a well regulated and uniform system of government in her own home, by force of habit her posterity will imbibe that same habit of doing things right at the right time. Herein lies the sequel of success and a happy home.

The wife who as a rule leaves her dishes from one meal to the next unwashed, or her house unswept, or her children dirty to greet their father when he returns at night from work, or visitors who might stop in, has not sensed the import of the gospel message. She is slowly but surely undermining and severing the sacred, reverent admiration and respect of those whom she loves, which to her should be more precious than gold.

Our branches would be much more spiritual if the members would bring about a system of order in their own homes, and thus we would collectively lay the foundation of spiritual communion. When from different angles we approach the house of worship, having put our own homes in order, we can expect the gifts for our good. God has said for his servants, the priests, to visit the homes of his children and teach them his laws of rule and order, that through continuous practice of order and efficiency here we can meet the measure of requirement that will be our passport to the life to come, and insure for us happiness while here.

In Proverbs 22: 6 we read, "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." The influence we cast in our own home, be it good or bad, will manifest itself upon the surface, in our children's actions.

The surroundings of our homes are an index to our true character. Where do you mothers stand? Are your homes as pleasant as you can make them? or is there room for improvement? The child respects all you smile at. He stops in his play to see if you are pleased with him. Our very presence imposes our common law upon our children, viz, That of keeping our good will and avoiding our displeasure. As the plant unfolds toward the light, so will the children unfold in the directions of our wishes. In other words, the child absorbs the spiritual atmosphere of his home, and is as much affected by it as his body is affected by the fresh air of his physical environments.

The latter-day gospel is heralding the fact that we are approaching the time when the Savior will come again. This being true, our personal appearance and that of our children, our homes, and all over which we are custodians, should be governed by a well-defined system, that we at any time might swing wide our doors and welcome him into our homes and gladly invite the closest inspection.

These are the rudiments of the mother's duties, and if carried out will lay the foundation of a useful and happy life, will gain for her the love, admiration, the respect of her own household, and that of her neighbors and friends, and will be the greatest asset in creating within her the elements that will elevate her into the realms of spirituality.

Thus the office work of the mother is a high, holy, and sacred calling, and should be regarded as such if she desires to be of most help in God's work, assisting to launch his church far on the road to perfection, draw heaven and earth closer together, and bring out those latent talents that are smoldering behind walls of disappointment.

Let us put into operation these suggestions, and in the not far distant day we will hear a voice repeat the words of Revelation 19: 7, 8:

Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white, for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.

Of General Interest

RUSSIA ABOLISHING LIQUOR

[Writing for The New Republic, anti-saloon league periodical, published at Westerville, Ohio, General Alexis Polivanov, Russian Minister of War, has the following to say of prohibition in Russia. We quote from The New Republic for November 26, 1915.—EDITORS.]

The purpose of the universal prohibition in Russia of the sale of whisky and wine, which was introduced by the will of his imperial majesty at the beginning of the present war, was to concentrate the national spirit upon the heavy trials which were in store for the people, to remove the factors which have a detrimental effect upon the physical strength of the nation and a demoralizing influence upon its spirit, and to improve the economic prosperity of the nation, which sustains heavy injuries on account of any war, but which at the same time, is the source of power and means for armed conflicts between nations.

WELL-CONSIDERED MOVE

And yet, the measure was not accidental. His imperial majesty's will and thought was directed to it even before the war. This was expressed in the imperial rescript, addressed to the minister of finance on January 30, 1914. From the height of the throne, it was firmly declared that it is no longer "possible to place the prosperity of the treasury in dependence upon the destruction of the spiritual and economic powers of a large number of my subjects." The war merely hastened the practical realization of this decision.

At the present time, the government, entirely occupied with the conduct of this unparalleled war and the organization of the national forces for a triumphant termination of the war, is, naturally, deprived of an opportunity to make an extended study and to determine the results of this "enormous and noble reform," as you have so aptly termed it.

Yet one can say with firm conviction that this measure has fulfilled entirely the purpose for which it was introduced. We feel it throughout our public life, as well as the governmental activity. . . .

The beneficial results, brought about by the abolition of the liquor trade, affecting the population of the whole Empire and the life of the peasantry, are evident to the ministry of war from the manner in which passes the process of calling to the colors of new conscripts, as well as reservists.

Everywhere the men appeared promptly, quietly and in all cases the clothes and footwear brought by them were entirely satisfactory.

SOBER PEOPLE AND ARMY

You ask me what effect the abolition of the liquor trade has had upon the army. As far as the army is concerned, at the present time, more than ever before, one is justified in saying that it is the "armed people." And a sober people has a sober army.

Moreover, the army has always been in the forefront of fighting against the drink evil. The war department wants men who are strong both morally and physically. Drunkenness has always been its greatest enemy, but attempted to keep it out of the army only by means of punitive measures..

PROGRESSIVE WAR ON DRINK

However, towards the end of the nineties, the war department decided to wage war against alcoholism by means of positive measures.

An enumeration of these measures would be too long and cannot be given here; therefore I shall mention only the most recent and important steps undertaken against alcoholism in the army.

In 1908 the "government glass of wine" was forbidden.

In 1910 alcohol was eliminated from the military stores, used in time of war and is no longer purchased even during mobilizations.

Finally, directly before the war, in May, 1914, a special order (number 309) was issued by the war department, after being confirmed by his imperial majesty. This order introduced a series of measures, directed against the use of alcoholic drinks in the army. All these measures aimed at guarding the army from the evil effects of the use of alcohol and "to conserve in the army its strength, health and spirit, which are so essential for military efficiency, both in times of peace and war."

As you see, his imperial majesty's rescript to his minister of finance, as well as this order to the army, followed the same general aim, viz., conservation of the national health, they were links of that same chain, whose last link was the abolition of the liquor trade at the beginning of the war.

What do the people expect from this measure in the future? Let me answer this with the nation's own words, as they are expressed in the pamphlet I have already quoted: "If there will be no more liquor, Russia will be the richest country in the world."

LIMITED TO ONE

Because a Colorado militiaman shot and killed a twelve-year old lad a couple of years ago, John D. Rockefeller, jr., has undertaken to reform the worst boy that can be found in America. He was spurred to this action by "Mother" Jones, the miners' friend, who has gained considerable influence with the oil king's son since their unusual meeting before the federal committee on industrial relations last year.

"Mother" Jones has found the boy for reclamation. He is Herman Copps, who at the age of fourteen years slew a woman and two children and is serving a life sentence at Joliet. He is now seventeen years old.

The younger Mr. Rockefeller believes, and rightly, that he is doing a commendable act in this effort at reclamation. So he is, even though it is an expiation of a crime in Colorado for which he has never been able to escape partial responsibility. If he succeeds, one more useful life has been added to the community. If he loses, or if the right to make the attempt is denied by the State of Illinois, he has the satisfaction of having made an effort.

But it would do Mr. Rockefeller good to go off by himself and think about all the boys in the United States, of better natures than Herman Coppes, possessing all the attributes of fine citizenship, who have been driven into crime and into prison because of the uneven distribution of wealth—those who have never known a home, and those who would have been better off without the kind of a home they possessed.

If, at the end of his reflection, he judged that he and his father, and all the rest of the two per cent who have accumulated great wealth, were absolutely innocent of responsibility for the living conditions which dragged hundreds of boys to prison and thousands into sodden lives, he might still find that if it is worth while to take the worst boy in America out of prison, it is worth while to prevent the rest of our boys from getting in. But would he deny the responsibility?—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register, February 11, 1916.

From the Conference

Greetings from the conference!

In the midst of the many activities we sit down to tell you a little of the musical news of this annual gathering.

The first assembling of the singers occurred Saturday evening April 1, and a gratifyingly large assemblage it was, too! Brother Hoxie was greeted with unbounded enthusiasm, and inspired his coworkers with a large portion of his own joyful fires of consecration. The rehearsal was on the anthems to be used during the conference.

Sunday morning the chorus of two hundred children under the direction of Sister E. S. McNichols stirred the hearts of every music-lover who listened to their sweet concourse of harmony and praise. A quartet of children sang some four-part songs in a really unique manner, the tenor and bass parts coming out clearly and accurately.

At 4.30 the big choir met for the first rehearsal of the Messiah choruses, and here was given the proof of the excellent, hard and arduous work which has been done by the local singers and their director, as well as the valuable assistance given at times by the assistant general chorister. Brother Hoxie expressed much pleasure at the excellent work evidenced, and finds that he will be able to put on the finishing touches in the limited time at his command.

At the evening services a junior choir of forty voices under Sister Brocaw's direction furnished special numbers. It truly looks as though our church will never be without its big choir—with these young voices perfecting themselves in this blessed art of praise.

Thursday evening we held our first session of the musical institute. The lower auditorium was well filled with a most attentive throng, interested in the cause of music, and from the excellent thoughts brought out in the papers and the discussions which followed was much gleaned that will be of practical benefit.

The second session will be held to-morrow afternoon, with President F. M. Smith in charge, and the "big choir" on duty, also a "Messiah" rehearsal is to follow the program, and in the evening we are to hear a combination of both national choir and orchestra!

Don't "you-all" wish you were here with us? Since this is impossible, we are sure you will appreciate reading the papers we offer this week, just two of the many good ones presented here.

Notes of the Staff

Omaha and Council Bluffs choirs "came through" with two enthusiastic renditions of a "Messiah" program on Sunday March 19. The first was given at Council Bluffs in the morning, with a choir of thirty voices, and the second in the evening in Omaha, the choir numbering thirty-five. The short sketch of the life of Handel, written by Brother A. E. McKim, and published in the Staff a couple of years ago, was read, followed by an excellent paper on the oratorio itself, by Sister Lorena Leeka. Then followed the musical program of ten or twelve numbers from the oratorio. The effort was splendid, and well received and it is the intention to give other composers' concerts in the future.

The Choir

FROM THE DIRECTOR'S STAND—WHAT SHOULD A DIRECTOR EXPECT FROM HIS CHOIR?

The choir, from the director's stand, is a hard problem, and trying to write about it is still a harder one.

As it appears to the writer, the volunteer choir is somewhat like a spoiled child. When it is in the notion and wants to be good and work, it works and works hard; but when it is out of the notion, it is a rather discouraging proposition, but by exercising a little patience and at the same time earnestly plugging away, it is surprising how well the desired results are obtained. As already stated, a choir has whims, and a director has to be ready to partially satisfy them.

Another phase of the choir is the changing membership. Singers come and singers go, sometimes coming faster than they go, and other times going faster than they come; sometimes too many sopranos and sometimes not enough and so on, and it is a difficult task at times to keep the parts properly proportioned.

Again, choirs do not seem to fully appreciate the responsible position they hold in church work. We all know what power music has, how it is used on the battle fields to urge soldiers on to greater activities, how the sweet strains of music from the dance hall lure the young folks in, and so forth. I hold that in church work the choir has as important a part to play as in any other organization, and on the success of the choir depends to a large extent the success of the church. In other words, wherever you find a branch with a good, live choir, you will invariably find a good live branch. As you all know, music goes in hand in hand with religion, and without music religion would be dead. In this connection I would refer you to a hymn in Zion's Praises which reads:

"My heart's a tuneful harp when Christ abides within, There's music in the name of Jesus."

On the other hand, take the religious, the divine, out of music and music becomes degraded.

It is therefore the duty of the choir to constantly keep before the church the necessity of music and the right kind of music in all church services as well as in the homes. It is the duty of choir members to become consecrated workers the same as others who are vitally interested in the success of the church, and unless the singers are consecrated and devoted to the cause, the director's task is a hard one; but with a choir composed of earnest workers, the leading of it is one of the greatest pleasures there is, and it is then possible to make the service of music and song so uplifting and inspiring as to lure people to church and to urge them on to greater activities.

Next comes the question, What should a director expect from his choir? I would answer this by saying that he should expect all he can get.

A choir may generally be divided into about four classes: First, those who come and take part because they love to sing and love to come to church and do church work. In this class comes the old faithfuls, on whom you can always depend, and who are always ready and willing to do anything—in other words, you can expect as much as you wish, and they are always ready and willing to do.

Second, those who come as a matter of duty. This class is quite good and dependable also, but nevertheless there is a certain restraint.

Third, those who come because you keep continually after them. This class you can generally get interested in a cantata or something of that kind, but as soon as that is over they imagine they are through and want to stop coming.

Fourth, those who don't come, or rather come so seldom that they might as well not come. This last class, if you expected them to attend once a week, would think it a hardship; and if they should happen to attend a practice or a service, it is as a rule necessary for them to stay home for a couple of weeks to rest up.

Taking everything into consideration, a choir should be expected to attend at least one practice a week, and sometimes two; they should be on hand promptly at all preaching services ready to help in the service of song. At least one cantata a year should be worked up, and above all, singers should be expected to practice at home. In addition, the choir members should be expected to do some missionary work. In other words, a choir should be expected to do anything and everything they consistently can to help draw people to church and to help spread the gospel.

As to the choir being ready to fill any demand for music at any and all places and times, Fourth of July celebrations and the like, I hardly think this should be expected of them. However, I do not think it necessary for a choir to adhere strictly to what is termed sacred music. I believe it would be well to study some music outside of sacred music and render it at suitable times and places, but always let the music be of a high class, and in this connection it might be suggested that all good and noble music is sacred.

We are admonished to study all good books. To this should be added for the benefit of singers and musicians for it is just as important, study all good music.

"The Choir"—From the Organ Bench

"HOW MUCH RESPONSIBILITY RESTS UPON THE ACCOMPANIST?"

The very close relationship of choir and organist makes it well worth our consideration as to how we can best help and support each other.

In an associated sense, the organist is always the servant of the choir, and his main work must be to give the choir the right balance of organ support, not to overdo the volume of tone, and yet give enough of real support; to be ever on the alert to catch the eye and baton of the chorister, to respond quickly to the emergency call, and to so play that he will do his part to help build up confidence, if a weak spot shows up in the singing of the choir.

From the chorister, the organist has the right to expect more attention than is given to any other individual member of the choir. If the organist sees the directing by way of the mirror, the chorister should see that the singers are so placed that tall choir members are not in front of the mirror. The organist has the right not only to see the baton, but—a very essential feature—the eye of the director, and this, too, without contortions on the part of the one at the keyboard.

The work of the organist, especially if at a pipe organ, is often a character that makes it hard for him to do his best, if the chorister, with his many-sided responsibilities, forgets at times his associate's needs.

In the natural order, the chorister should lead and the organist follow. It should not only be a privilege, but their duty, to counsel with each other.

In some branches of the church there may be a poor chorister, doing the best he can, and a superior organist. Under this condition the organist could assume more of the lead, especially if urged to do so by the chorister.

The organist should be prepared to cheerfully accompany any soloist when called upon. If possible he should be given sufficient notice so that he can find time to rehearse with the singer. To carelessly come to him at the last minute when, perhaps, he is busy, is not fair to the player or singer. The right cooperation is a good thing. Where there are a number who can accompany singers (and much of this work is better done at the piano because written for the piano), it is well to encourage others in this service, and give the singers the chance to use their usual or favorite accompanist. The organist should not feel hurt at this, but be glad others can do it, and rejoice that we are a body of workers, and that it is not a one-individual affair.

When the soloist makes a break, it is surely unkind to the organist to turn around and look at him and perhaps give the congregation the impression that it is the player's fault. If it does happen to be the error of the hard-working organist, be good to him and don't advertise it. He will appreciate this consideration on the part of the singer.

The organist certainly does not want to make a break, not only for the singer's sake, but for his own. In return, sometimes when the soloist comes in at the wrong place, or skips a measure or two, he will be good and skip with the nervous singer, and not turn around and publish the mistake. Tact, courtesy, and forbearance, are necessary to success.

A courtesy that is due the organist from the choir is silence during his organ solos. They may not be much, but it is a free service on his part, and in these days of paid singers and organists, we ought to appreciate those who work for us with only the desire to help in God's service. If the organist hears talking while he is playing it is apt to discourage him; he reasons if the choir members do not care for his work, it is not likely the congregation does.

The selection of hymns should be made by the chorister, unless otherwise arranged for. The organist should "declare" the hymn in strict time, and when the full choir and congregation sing, use a good strong organ combination, not so much, however, for a hymn of tenderness and prayer, as for one of joy and praise.

The choir with its organist is not primarily a concert organization, but a religious body formed for assistance in the regular church service.

It is well for us to try our wings in the concert field occasionally, but above all, there there should be a deep consecration to our special work on the Sabbath Day. It has been said, "Music is the handmaid of religion," and we should truly work to make it so.

Let the organist help create the serious, and if he can, the religious atmosphere by his opening prelude, and the choir, with both words and music, help make the service one of prayer and praise to our God.

Ministerial Reports

[The following extracts from the reports of the various ministers in charge to the late General Conference will be of interest to HERALD readers.—EDITORS.]

J. A. GILLEN

The work of the ministry this year has been greatly hindered because of the prevailing rains and floods during the summer season, covering a period when we expect the greatest results. A general survey of the mission, with a few exceptions, shows a decided improvement over the preceding year. The work of the general missionary force has been greatly augmented through the cooperation of local forces. In summing up the situation and the demands made upon the church, to my mind, it can be epitomized in the following:

A better organization of forces and a systematic plan of tracting such, for instance, as the placing of a well written tract, having its sequence in the one that is to follow. The indiscriminate distribution of a few pamphlets cannot possibly accomplish so much. The mission, as a whole, has no reason to be discouraged.

F. M. SHEEHY

Fair condition. Trend upward, although humanity is in evidence as well as divinity.

G. T. GRIFFITHS

There have been a large number baptized by the local ministers in the several branches. The spiritual condition of the mission as a whole is fair with ample room for improvement. Quite a number of the branches are not up to the standard in point of faithfulness. We are pleased to note that the mission is free from any serious disturbances, though there are a few which cause anxiety and we earnestly hope for the day to come when Saints will cease to contend against each other. Not only do these local disturbances cause anxiety to the ministers in charge but also cause a great deal of expense in time and money, which certainly could be avoided if all were living consecrated lives. However, we are glad to note the bright prospects ahead and if we could get the brethren to do their duty there is no reason why the church should not move forward into a more useful effectiveness. Considerable carelessness has been exhibited on the part of the local and traveling men in the past year, and it is to be devoutly hoped that there will be an awakening on the part of the ministry and the membership this coming year. Trusting that the Spirit of the Lord will be in attendance this coming conference, I remain, your brother and colaborer in the conflict.

R. C. RUSSELL

Though the European war has badly crippled the finances of the South, the hospitality of the people has not lessened. . . . The local workers have assisted nobly and the membership in general have done their part in an excellent and praiseworthy manner. I recall but one expulsion from our church, that being a sister in an isolated locality who signed a statement admitting that the Utah Mormon elders had taught to her the doctrine of polygamy which she believing, had been led astray from the true fold. The spiritual condition is in my judgment quite good. May the Lord seal the work with his approval.

J. W. RUSHTON

Touching the Hawaiian mission, my supervision has largely, if not altogether been a sinecure. Brother Waller is practically in charge. . . . All I can say of the work there will be found in the following excerpt taken from a personal letter addressed to me by Brother Waller on March 8: "From the letter I wrote to Brother Frederick M. Smith, relative to the work, you would perhaps notice that eight individuals had been baptized by officers of the Honolulu Branch during the past year. The total number of members according to our branch record was, at the beginning of this year 271. All of these are not living in Honolulu, but a number are scattered on different islands." The present aspect of the work in the mission is encouraging and the evidences of increased spirituality, unity and interest very definite. The future is bright and our hopes for coming success are high. With profound gratitude we again acknowledge the goodness of God, the splendid help of the local and general ministers as well as the unflinching support and generosity of the Saints and friends who altogether have worked for this end.

J. E. KELLEY

There has been an increase in the number of our tithes-payers; in the number of baptisms; and in the interest of Saints in the work, especially the young people. While among the laborers there has been a feeling of brotherhood, a willingness to labor in harmony, and a desire to learn and to labor that is most commendatory. It has all made our work pleasant, and it points to progress, and righteous growth in the future. We need more laborers and means of transportation. While my individual labors have been small, because of physical limitations, they have been more than the year previous. The Lord has guided and blessed me in the same in such a way that faith and hope have been enlarged, my love of God and my fellows made to grow, while my soul is filled with thanksgiving and my prayers increased for the early success of Christ's work.

PETER ANDERSON

There has been an increase over previous years as to baptisms, organizations, etc., and this year's report is, so far as I know, the best ever made of the Rocky Mountain Mission. While in some parts of the field the prospects and opportunities for labor are not so promising, in other parts they are exceedingly good. With some exceptions the Saints are growing spiritually, and the local ministry is striving to develop greater efficiency in their work, and with considerable success. We hope for great good to be accomplished in that mission in the near future.

U. W. GREENE

Owing to the terrible war raging in the greater part of my field, the condition of the work has been very unsettled. Several of those appointed to labor for the kingdom of Christ, have had to respond to the call to arms and are in the armies that are fighting to-day. So many men have thus been called that our local work is badly crippled and the missionaries have had to care for branch work. Several of our brethren in Germany have lost their lives, while others are seriously wounded. Our hearts go out in sympathy for the suffering, and bereaved ones. Let us pray for the dawn of peace and the hastening of the time when men shall learn war no more. Under present conditions it is very difficult to prosecute mission work abroad and becoming more expensive with each passing month. I have received no statistical report from Palestine. Brother Jenkins has been critically ill during the year and unable to leave the country. Great difficulty was experienced reaching them with funds, but at present they are amply supplied. During the year J. H. Hansen and P. T. Anderson returned from Scandinavia, leaving us with but two missionaries in that territory. In the British Isles, W. H. Greenwood has acted as associate minister in charge and the work has been ably cared for by him. With three exceptions, the men appointed to that country are employed during the week, and give their time only Saturday and Sunday. They have made an excellent record. Reports from the British Isles have not been received since January first, presumably delayed by the censor, hence this report is not as large as it should be. Conditions, over which I have no control, made it impossible for me to go abroad last year and I labored in the field assigned to G. T. Griffiths. Our relations have been pleasant and my report will be included with his. I have greatly appreciated his kindness. The financial report of the British Isles is very encouraging. Brother May writes: "I am exceedingly pleased to announce that financially we are increasing year by year, notwithstanding the terrible calamity that has befallen the country by reason of the war." We commend the Saints upon this creditable showing. The Saints scattered abroad, in these troublous times will remember the word of God as given to the church through the Palmyra Seer, and will look to us for the establishment of the city of Zion, the place of refuge, to which they can flee for safety. May this year see the opening way prepared for them, that they with us, may rejoice in the Lord, surrounded with peace and plenty.

W. M. AYLOR

Condition of the field is much improved in many ways. . . . Plenty of opportunities for church work in this field in all departments. No one need to be idle that wants to work. We have not made much headway with the Indian work this year, partly because of not having men adapted to this kind of work that can give sufficient time and attention to it. We are thankful for what we have, and hope for better.

C. A. BUTTERWORTH AND P. M. HANSON

During the year five of the brethren have been under the necessity of dropping out of the missionary work and engaging in secular affairs. Brother C. Ed. Miller has returned to America. We are endeavoring to fill the ranks with others and considering the difficulties imposed by the war as well as other hindrances we feel that the work is moving onward hopefully and we look for brighter days.

C. F. ELLIS

The districts near Tahiti are in much better condition than the others. During the year two Chinamen were baptized in the island of Kaukura. I believe these are the first full-blooded Chinamen ever baptized in these islands. During the past few months a number of the leading elders have died, among whom were, Wiriamu a Teihoarii and Alfred Sanford, president and first counselor to the Elders Quorum in the islands. One new chapel was dedicated at Arutua during the year and others are near dedication, including our chapel in Papeete. The mission paper has been kept up during the year with an increase in subscriptions. The visit of Bro. Paul M. Hanson and wife to the mission in the month of July was a source of strength to the natives, and firmly we believe that if this could be experienced by the native brethren every year or so, great good could be done the mission, or if one of the Twelve could on his way to a foreign field stop in this mission for one year out of three or four, immeasurable good could be done. We are continually endeavoring to raise the standard of virtue in every island and we find that the missionary's companion can do as much along this line as the missionary himself. The governor has given his consent for our conference in Papeete this year, hence we are busy preparing for it. This means much, as five quarterlies must be printed and finished beforehand. What we need sorely is help in this mission. A young missionary who is willing to sacrifice and work for the cause of truth among a peculiar and strange, yet kind people. We are still in the conflict for the victory.

J. F. CURTIS

Ninety-one new openings is a good showing for a field so old as this one. We are making new openings as fast as it is possible to do so, while we are trying to hold the ground already in use. Some have been hindered in their work by sickness, but at present all are able to be at work. Six reunions have been held during the year and the results have been fair to good. Many of the Saints gather to these places from year to year and enjoy the association of Saints and friends and show great activity in the church work. While the outlook is good and we have a large band of workers who are helping to carry on the work, yet there are others that are not doing their part, and some have turned back into the world; however with some difficulties to meet, which is not an unusual thing, we are hopeful, as we see so many that are trying to follow the footsteps of the Master.

Bryant-Knisley Debate

Our community has been in the throes of quite an excitement for a period of time resultant from a debate just concluded between Elder Alvin Knisley representing our people and Reverend J. M. Bryant of the Missionary Baptist Church.

The controversy involved the respective churches—ours and the Missionary Baptist Church, two propositions.

I am young in the work, having been baptized only last December by Elder C. W. Prettyman, who was here for a while. Occupationally I am a school-teacher, which line of employment I have followed for a number of years. Acquiring the school situation in this neighborhood some time ago, I found it convenient to board with a large family by the name of Fender, all but one of whom belong to the church. Through them and their literature I became acquainted with and convinced of the true gospel, in regard to which I am now so happy to testify. Such a serene and peaceful influence has been shed upon me, and such increased scriptural understanding, that religion has become a desire and a pleasure instead of a form.

Our family lives northward in the State, and I have the promise conditional from Elder Knisley that he will conduct an opening there the coming summer.

The recent discussion and the discourses of the said brother have contributed intensely to my increase in strength and to my confirmation.

The discussion lasted for seven evenings, two-hour sessions, half-hour speeches. Sunday evening they alternated as usual, but each following an affirmative line of thought and without an attack upon each others position, by mutual agreement as a matter of propriety in respect to custom pertaining to the day.

The surprising, unique and extraordinary aspect of the proceedings was that Mr. Bryant, Brother Knisley's opponent, yielded to nearly everything the brother presented, objecting to scarcely anything but the advocacy of immortal soulism. A thrust and parry ensued over that question, recurrent for several sessions, until Mr. Bryant showed weakness and failed to come back.

He rejected the Baptist Church, which, for the sake of the debate, he had signed to defend. His time was spent mostly on his charts. He lectures on the war and the Jewish question.

Mr. Bryant's attachment for his charts was such that he seemed most sensitive of their criticism, and he stood between them and Brother Knisley like the Jews between the temple and the Romans under Titus. It was almost pitiful to see the old man chafe under the deliberate, studied and unflinching strokes of an able opponent with the truth and the Lord at his back.

The final session was occupied by Brother Knisley alone; Mr. Bryant having said his say, gave way both the floor and the hour.

It was amusing when Brother Knisley followed him on the soul theory. Our brother said that "breath" is often suggested by soul sleepers as a variant for spirit. He said that two words that are equal to the same thing are equal to one another. Then he read from Genesis 41:8, "His Breath was troubled"; Exodus 6:9, "Anguish of breath"; Deuteronomy

2:30, "Hardened his breath"; Proverbs 25:28, "Rule over his own breath," etc.

Mr. Bryant interrupted and said that was not his position, after he heard the audience convulsed with laughter. When his turn came he told the audience that he believed spirit meant thought, intelligence, rather than breath. Replying, Brother Knisley showed that the terms suggested helped him not, and made his case little better. The brother read from Acts 7:59 where, to substitute thought it would read: "Lord, receive my thought"; Luke 24, "They supposed they had seen a thought," etc.

Mr. Bryant even approached Brother Knisley one evening preceding the brother's last speech of the session and urged him not to attack his chart, to withhold till later in the debate at least.

One thing, our representative acted the gentleman all the way through, restraining his passion at ridicule on account of a degree of expectation on his part that his opponent would be converted.

Mr. Bryant finally informed our brother that, being without a church of his own and convinced that ours was the angel-restored church, he determined he would be baptized into ours. Such baptism was to take place to-day, but the old gentleman upon further consideration notified Brother Knisley that it would be indefinitely postponed in order that he might learn still more about us, and obtain divine assurance on the subject. So he has departed on his lecture tour, whatever he does, whatever his decision.

The debate has certainly done good. People who heard us not before opened their ears and now know where we stand. The heads of those who trusted in Bryant are drooping, for he surrendered, and wherein he refused to surrender he was crushed.

Were it not for my school, I would attend the General Conference. May God help me to learn more of this beautiful gospel, and enable me to extend its knowledge and a confidence in its precepts by my voice and practice.

An infant sister in Christ,

MAE MATTHEWS.

News from Missions

Among Oklahoma Indians

I thought an item of news concerning the work among the Lamanites might be of interest to some.

A recent visit, in company with Brother Sanders, to the camp one mile north of Clinton, Oklahoma, revealed the deep interest these people have in this church. They put up a big tent, carpeted it, and made ready for Sunday visit. We had not met them at that point in two years. They came in and filled the tent. We asked Chief Three Fingers to lead in prayer, and the writer preached forty minutes. Then the chief talked about ten minutes, and Brother Sanders ten minutes. They were all well pleased.

We announced another meeting for Friday at the same place. Then Brother Sanders, who is the district president, and I, drove on in his car to visit the district. We had a very profitable trip, visiting scattered Saints and branches.

After a busy week, we returned to fill our appointment with the Indians. They greeted us with a hearty welcome. The tent would not hold the crowd. After over an hour of very intense interest, listening to our explanation of the big Book of Mormon chart, three of their number were baptized, and many more expressed themselves as being very desirous of coming into this church, and want a church building there where the meeting was held.

A fine young man from the camp about thirty miles west was present with an urgent request from his people for us to come there and hold meetings; they had met Brother Christensen two years ago.

Yesterday Brother Rowland took the writer in his car for a visit with the Kingfisher Indians. They greeted us with a keen interest in church work. John Bull has his large new seven-room house completed, with one room large enough to seat one hundred, and Philips and Reuben have been holding meetings there.

Nettie (Tyler) Starr has decided to move her house on the section line and use the two large rooms for a church, as that was Leonard Tyler's request before he died. Brother Sanders, the president of the Calumet Branch, has agreed to hold regular appointments with them there, Brother Hesseltine to fill the Clinton appointment, and Brother Rowland the Kingfisher appointment. This is what we have desired for years—to put the work on a systematic working basis.

Another big-hearted Cheyenne, Rush Harris, two and one half miles from Kingfisher, at Reuben Taylor's camp, told us yesterday he desires to join this church and donate the land on which to build a church near his modern new house. Here is where the first Lamanite church should be built, and we hope to do this in the spring.

Our next meeting is to be among the Otoes, near Red Rock, before General Conference.

We need a car to visit these points, for they are nearly all miles away from the railroad. This work should be pushed. The Lord is surely working with this people, and we feel the Spirit among them. The Baptist missionary is trying hard to keep them from this church.

With abiding confidence in the promises in the books concerning this people, and with an earnest prayer for Zion's cause everywhere, I am,

Your coworker,

HUBERT CASE.

PIEDMONT, OKLAHOMA, March 16, 1916.

Kentucky and Tennessee

Since last contributing to your pages I have been very busy. I have labored at Sharon, Paris, and Buchanan, Tennessee; Joppa, Illinois, and Mayfield, Kentucky. The first of the year I joined Brother R. C. Russell at Paris, Tennessee, where we held a few meetings in the Dixie Theater and the courthouse. The weather was cold and the heating bad, so we thought best to close the effort. Brother Russell went south and I went to Eagle Creek Branch, where we held forth with good interest.

While in Paris I received an urgent request to come to Joppa, Illinois, and hold some meetings. I concluded to go, and on my way stopped in Mayfield one night. I was requested to hold some meetings in Mayfield when I returned from Joppa, to which I agreed. Brother J. H. McGregor's family are the only Saints living in Mayfield, and so far as I know there had never been a sermon preached there by our people. Brother McGregor secured the courthouse and had some cards and bills published and advertised our meetings a week ahead.

I held forth in Joppa a week with increasing interest. The little band of Saints there have a lively Sunday school of twenty-four members. They hold their meetings in private houses. Prospects are fair for a branch to be raised up here, and already some talk of a church building. Some are almost persuaded, and we look for an ingathering in the near future.

I returned to Mayfield the 19th, according to arrangement, and was greeted by an audience of about forty, and continued each night with increasing interest. Although the Methodists were holding a revival within a stone's throw of the courthouse, several of their members attended our meetings regularly.

I was asked by the "anti-organ Christians" to submit propositions for debate, which I did, and which in turn were presented to their pastor who refused to sign up. He said he would meet any other faith except the Latter Day Saint.

Mr. Burton, the photographer, was determined to get a man if possible, so he phoned to F. O. Howell, of Fulton, who agreed to come. Church propositions were agreed upon, each to affirm his church to be in harmony with the Scriptures, "identical with the New Testament church," to begin the following Tuesday night, and continue four nights. Mr. Howell declined to sign the Book of Mormon proposition, agreeing to discuss only the church propositions, we to affirm first.

Mr. Howell boasted of being a great debater, claimed to have held fifty debates, five of them last year, but he proved to be very weak and utterly unable to answer my affirmative, and spent most of his time demanding a miracle. In his first reply his moderator had to call him down for his ungentlemanly conduct.

The second night after I had closed my affirmative, Howell saw that he could not answer my argument, and began a tirade on Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. Of course we objected to this, since we would have no chance to reply. Howell declared that if he was not permitted to bring in this matter he would quit, and abruptly dismissed the assembly. I then called the house to order, and announced that I was ready to meet Howell the next night on the Book of Mormon proposition, and he might leave off his church proposition. He also refused to do this. I then answered that I would preach the next night, which I did, and had many invitations to return. There is a fine interest here.

This makes four debates I have held with the nonprogressive "Campbellites," and not one held out to the conclusion. I published a challenge in the Mayfield paper to meet any accredited minister for twelve nights on the same propositions signed by Howell.

From here Brother Nolan and I went to Foundry Hill to attend district conference on Saturday the 4th. The weather was fine, and a good crowd turned out for conference. A spiritual time was had.

On Monday night after the conference, I came to Jones Mill and began meetings. Good attendance and fine interest were manifested throughout the meetings. This is a new opening we made last fall with the tent. We held forth this time in a large schoolhouse. We are requested to come with the tent again next summer.

We went to Bethel Saturday and spoke at night to a good audience. Met with the Saints Sunday and encouraged them to revive their Sunday school and prayer meetings.

After a few warm days we are again having a snowstorm. I received a letter from Joppa, Illinois, this week, requesting me to return as soon as convenient, as some are ready for baptism.

I would like very much to attend General Conference this time, as I have only had the pleasure of attending once in six years, but prospects are not very flattering now, owing to financial conditions.

With best wishes for Zion's weal, I remain,
Hopefully yours,

J. R. MCCLAIN.

Western Nebraska and Black Hills

I left North Platte on December 10, for Keystone, Nebraska, where I had arranged by mail with Brother Fender to hold a series of meetings. I continued there until the 24th, as weather and health would permit. On December 23 I baptized two, one of them a school-teacher, a brilliant young woman who bids fair to be of much worth in the work. Keystone is a new opening. Our people had not been represented there before.

While there a gentleman called on me one evening to see if I would debate if he would bring a man there that he knew of. He said the man was a Bible student—a Bible teacher. I told him I would meet him, and reminded him that the more his man knew of the Bible the better opportunity I would have of learning something. The gentleman stayed for my service. After I closed, I talked with him and he seemed a little in doubt as to whether he would get his man or not. Brother Fender went to see him next day to encourage him, but he didn't get him.

I went on to Minatare and Gering, then back to Bayard, where I baptized one. After I left Keystone, Brother Alvin Knisley dropped in to Roscoe, a point about six or eight miles south of Keystone, and about as near Brother Fender's as Keystone. Brother Fender learned that they were still "on the warpath" at Keystone, and mentioned it to Brother Knisley. The result was that Brother Knisley met their man in debate. From what Brother Knisley said it was a rather tame affair, as the man had but little objection to our position.

I came back to North Platte and distributed tracts a while, and visited Tryon, where we have a branch and a small church building in the country. From there I went to Angora, where we had made an effort some years before to introduce the gospel but failed to get a hearing. This time the audience was rather large, and interest good. Sister Wein and her husband are good supporters of the work there, as also are Brother John Vandell and wife, though they live quite a distance from Angora. I left a good interest there. People were talking Bible on the street generally. I came here a few days ago after an absence of about five months. I find the work here in fair condition.

I have been blessed this conference year in my efforts to deliver the gospel message. Was hampered some this winter on account of poor health and inclement weather. Western Nebraska is considered a hard field for gospel work, but our numbers are gradually increasing each year.

May the Lord bless and prosper the work of his people.

A Trip to Makatea

The Saints in the island of Makatea had finished their church and planned for the dedication at Christmas time, but because of various hindering causes, the dedication was postponed until February. There is a small steamer plying from one to two times a week from Papeete to Makatea. Accommodations are fairly good upon this miniature steamer, and we had planned to go up on it to the dedication. But contrary to our expectations, she did not make her usual runs, and we were at a loss to know how we were going to span the one hundred and twenty miles between the two islands. We received word that sixty-four people from the island of Tikahau were in Makatea, awaiting our arrival for the church dedication. We were perplexed, as there seemed to be no possible way of reaching the island before the next Sunday, and as the Tikahau people had already waited nearly two weeks, we were more than anxious to make the trip as soon as possible. So we took it to our heavenly Father in prayer and an unexpected avenue was opened up for us.

On Wednesday morning, Brother Ellis went to the city, and in a short time came rushing back, saying that there was a small boat going to Makatea, due to leave at that very minute, but it would wait two hours for us, if I wanted to go on it and thought I could get ready in that length of time. I was washing at the time, but answered, "Yes, I will be ready." Brother Ellis warned me that it was only a small boat, and I would have to lie outside on deck as there were no cabins of any kind; but we had waited so long for a boat and now the Lord had opened up the way, I felt that I could go if the boat had been many times smaller.

There was no time to be lost; clothes were to be packed, food and camping outfit of dishes and many other things needful for a trip to the other islands to be looked after. We always take a box of food, for fish salmon and sardines get to be a rather stale diet, unless one takes a few onions and potatoes from Papeete to help out.

Two hours later found us sitting upon the hatch-way of a small machine boat, waiting for the engineer who had been taken before the doctor for examination for a soldier. It was, indeed, a small boat but clean, and best of all, provided with a good gasoline engine. As we sat waiting for the engineer, we felt that we must give the praise for this opportunity of going to our heavenly Father, as this boat had never before gone to the island of Makatea, and was now making the trip to take some two thousand watermelons to the island, thinking that many people would be present at the dedication. After waiting patiently for three hours, the engineer arrived, the flag was hoisted, anchor taken up, the gasoline turned on, and we were leaving Tahiti, for me, the first time since arriving from America.

Sailing inside the coral reef is very pleasant; Tahiti presents a beautiful scene as we pull away from her shores, with her high, green mountains in the back ground and the small city, nearly hidden in tropical foliage, nestling at their base. But soon we are tossing on the "shining big sea water," and unless one is a good sailor, his pleasure comes to a sudden end. Slowly but surely comes the nauseating feeling known as seasickness. I found that lying down, even though on the hard floor, helped a little.

It is impossible, however, to describe seasickness—it must be experienced. I found it hard to feel the same degree of thankfulness in my heart for this opportunity that I had felt when the little schooner was safely anchored in the harbor at Papeete. I thought of all the former missionaries to the islands and their frequent trips on small boats; I thought of the Nephites and their long voyage across the ocean, and irreverently wondered if they were seasick; of Columbus and his sailors upon their first voyage to America, and I could almost sympathize with the sailors who wished to throw Columbus overboard, if land was not seen. And thus the night wore on. Our little engine was faithful, and we were gradually nearing our destination. In the morning all the sailors were looking for land, which was seen as a dim outline about ten o'clock.

Makatea is a peculiar island. At a distance it appears as a high, flat table, with perpendicular sides, very much like the table lands in Mexico. The rock formation is very peculiar. Deposits of phosphate are found upon it, and are the chief source of its value. Occasionally there are large cavities in the perpendicular sides; in these the natives have for generations buried their dead.

At two o'clock Thursday afternoon we neared the small village of the Saints. The Saints did not know that we were coming on this boat and were very much surprised to see us. The word was soon circulated that we were on board and quite a company awaited us at the shore. I had been somewhat worried as to how I was to land, as at this island the pass in the coral reef is so small that nothing more than row boats can enter, and the larger boats cannot anchor outside the pass but continually drift, while small row boats and scows carry passengers and freight ashore.

I had been wondering how I was going to get off from the large boat which was constantly moving, into the small boat, some few feet lower, which was continually rising and falling according to the raise and fall of the ocean waves. As soon as the small boat from ashore came along side the larger one, one big native grasped me by the feet and another by the shoulders, and before I realized what had happened, I was sitting in the smaller boat, oars were plied and we were pulling for the shore. As we neared the pass or small break in the coral reef, we waited an instant for a big wave to help carry us in. When it came the oarsmen rowed vigorously, that they might not lose the benefit of its boost, and our boat soon came through the pass, amid the many exclamations and suggestions of the bystanders to the oarsmen as to which way to steer. Before I had time to think, I was clinging to a native who was carrying me to a dry place on shore.

After shaking hands with all, we went to the house which had been turned over for our use, where we began preparations for something to eat, as we had neither eaten nor drank since the morning before.

We immediately began to put into execution our plans for work for the next few days. As we did not intend to remain long, we endeavored to make good use of our time while there. Brother Ellis held meetings for the priesthood nearly every day and sometimes twice a day, in an effort to instruct them along the line of their duties as servants of God, and to help them solve the perplexing situations they meet in their work. Each morning I gathered the children to the assembly house for Bible story-telling and teaching. Afternoons, mothers' meetings were held, in which we tried to impress upon them the sacredness and responsibility of parenthood and the duties devolving upon them.

Teaching along social lines is what the native needs. The majority of them are firmly grounded in the faith, but are lacking along social purity lines. But strange enough, these are the things they do not care to hear. The native loves to discuss Bible propositions when purely of a doctrinal character. He sees only the spiritual side of the gospel; he fails to recognize that keeping his physical body pure and undiseased is a part of the gospel, and if not obeyed, his spiritual development is hindered.

We are made sad many times to see the little children, running wild, simply "coming up." The natives have thought it impossible to teach a small child anything—their method has been to leave the children until they are grown young men and women, and then they will teach them. But alas! the golden opportunity has passed, their hearts are hardened, and another generation of ignorant, deceived young people is thrown upon the world. Therefore, we are making an effort to save the young, to impress upon them the fact that, although the Lord loves the repentant sinner, he prefers the people before they sin rather than after. We find many natives traditions to fight, and the native does not change his mind quickly or easily. However, we trust that some seed has been sown that will bring forth fruit in time to come.

Sunday morning was the day set for the dedication. Prayer meeting was held at 7 o'clock at the assembly house, as the natives never upon any condition use their church building before dedication. Dedication services were held at 9.30. We all gathered outside the church to await the arrival of the French Governor of the island and his party. In due time they arrived.

The Saints from Tikahau sang a song of reception, arranged especially for the occasion. Another song was sung, with an occasional rest for the dramatic firing of several guns. The French flag was raised above the church building, the Governor turned the key, Brother Ellis opened the door, walked in and we all followed, while Tikahau continued singing a narration of the events which had just taken place. However, the Governor and Brother Ellis were half way up the aisle before the Tikahau singers came to the place in their song which said, "The Governor will now turn the key, and 'Taraita' will open the door."

Brother Ellis preached the dedicatory sermon, after which the feast, the big thing of the dedication to the natives, was participated in. If left to themselves the natives would spend immense sums for these feasts. The brethren have objected strongly to this waste of money. The feast at Makatea was somewhat smaller than usual, but no small sum was spent as it was. Services were continued in the afternoon and evening and thus ended the dedication in Makatea.

We continued our work among them for the next few days, waiting for a boat to return us to Tahiti. We visited a large cave in the mountain side, in which Brother Thomas Smith baptized some fifty people at one time. Two weeks passed, with no boat in sight. Brother Ellis was impressed that there was yet work for him in the branch; conditions were not right, and the longer we stayed the stronger the evidence became, until he found it necessary to make some changes. The next morning after this was accomplished a boat was seen in the distance, and upon coming near it was learned that it was bound for Tahiti, and would leave Makatea the next day.

Copra was loaded all that day, wind and sea being fine for the work. Only three tons remained for loading in the morning, and we would be off for Tahiti. However, when we arose in the morning (Saturday) we found a fierce sea outside, with the wind blowing a gale. It was impossible to load the copra as the small boats could not go through the pass. All day we anxiously watched the sea, hoping it would subside sufficiently that we might leave, as there was work awaiting Brother Ellis in the printing office in Papeete. However, the wind and sea raged all day, and the captain said we could not leave until Monday. Services were held Sunday and some other branch matters settled.

Monday, the sea was as calm as if it had never been troubled. In the morning the Saints gathered under a tree for song, prayer and the farewells. By 9 o'clock we had been handed from the scow on to the larger boat and were setting sail for Papeete, which we reached the next afternoon at 3 o'clock. At Papeete we learned that a boat had made attempts to leave Papeete for Makatea four times the week before, but could not because of heavy sea and wind. If the boat had reached Makatea, we would have left for home nearly one week sooner, and some of the work would have been left unaccomplished. Thus we could but feel that, as the Lord had overruled in our going, his hand had also been over us in our stay on the island.

News from Branches

Perry, Iowa

We are still busily engaged in keeping the camp fire burning. While we are many times discouraged, when our efforts do not seem to bring the hoped for results, yet as we look back over the past, and are reminded of the many discouragements that were met by the faithful few who labored in this field for many years before the branch could be organized, we take heart and go on with renewed courage and firm in the faith. God has been very mindful of the efforts of his people and will continue to bless our efforts, if we but exert ourselves with an eye single to his glory.

It is interesting to hear Sister Robinson, Sister Doss and Sister Martin tell of the many struggles that were made by the two or three families living here, to keep a little Sunday school and hold an occasional service at the homes of the members. For years it seemed impossible for the little band to secure a place for meeting. Having been refused the use of a hall, they finally succeeded in obtaining one where services were held as often as possible, until 1913, when the Perry Branch was organized and the lot provided for the site of the present church, which was built under the supervision of Brother William Doss, now deceased. At the time of the organization there were only about fifteen members, young and old, and to their efforts we owe the pleasant little church we occupy to-day.

Something over two years ago, Brother H. H. Hand located here. He was soon afterward called to the Melchisedec priesthood and placed in charge. The wisdom of the Lord's work has been very manifest, as through Brother Hand's splendid leadership we have grown until we now have a membership of seventy-three. About fifty-eight of these are resident and the majority active. We have Brother Fred Settles and Brother M. B. Skinner, both of the Aaronic priesthood.

While there has been much sickness to detain, at our regular services we have an average attendance of between thirty and forty members. As compared with a former attendance of from three to six or seven at the mid-week prayer service, we now have an average of about twenty or more.

While these statements may seem insignificant, we give them to show the results of a united effort together with the Lord's fostering care. He has sent good men here including O. Salisbury, J. F. Mintun, C. A. Butterworth, J. S. Roth, E. E. Long, J. L. Parker, D. T. Williams, and Earl Hall, to labor among us, and to their efforts we attribute our present growth.

We recently had the privilege of hearing Brother C. B. Woodstock of Lamoni. Both he and his wife spent the day with us. His lectures on social purity were very uplifting, and we hope will be productive of much good.

Several Sundays ago Brother Henry Castings, of Runnels, occupied at three preaching services. His texts were remarkably well chosen for the hearers, as we all felt the need of the admonitions contained in his discourses.

Under Superintendent J. O. Salisbury, our Sunday school is forging ahead. He has introduced many interesting features which have proven helpful in raising the standard of the school. The average attendance is now about fifty, with several prospective new members.

The Religio is always well attended. Many of the older members are equally interested with the young in this most important help to the work. The Woman's Auxiliary has been quite active, in the Home and Child Welfare Department as well as in the Aid Society. The Aid Department has much work planned. Their help has been a powerful factor in placing the branch on a firm financial basis.

One of the most important helps to our present flourishing condition is the splendid work of the choir, under Brother J. O. Salisbury's direction, with Sister Nellie Martin as organist. One can but feel, after listening to their song service which occupies the half hour between Religio and evening worship, that it has much to do with the inspiration of the later service.

While these figures and facts may seem insignificant compared with conditions in larger branches, in view of the fact that much opposition had to be overcome, and since we still labor under many disadvantages, they impress us as sure signs that the work is true and advancing, and are offered as an encouragement to those struggling along as we were.

That we may continue to find favor with the Lord, and through him receive strength for our every need, is the hope and prayer of

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral

To the Missionaries of Mission Number 4, namely, Ohio and Pennsylvania: Having been appointed in charge of the above-named mission, I herewith request the following brethren, namely, J. M. Baker to act as president of the Southern Ohio District, Columbus objective point; Brethren H. E. Moler, Jacob Halb, William Kelley (Middletown objective point), T. D. Harnish in said district.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT

James E. Bishop, Alma Booker, J. D. Carlisle, William Neitzel and Leon Burdick, Pittsburgh and Youngstown and Sharon districts.

YOUNGSTOWN-SHARON DISTRICT

R. Baldwin, T. U. Thomas (Youngstown objective point) and C. E. Bozarth. Brother Burdick will labor part of the year in said district.

KIRTLAND DISTRICT

James C. McConaughy and R. Baldwin, the latter brother only part of the time.

NORTHWESTERN OHIO DISTRICT

William Anderson, Matthew W. Liston, and Everett Fincken.

We sincerely hope that brethren herein named will reach their fields of labor just as soon as they can conveniently.

I hereby urge you to be prompt in sending your reports to the general minister in charge, the 1st of July, October, January, and March. Quite a number of the elders were lax in reporting last year. Remember that we want you to report on the first of the months named. Address me at Willoughby, Ohio, Route 2, until further notice.

Brother Greene will look after the eastern end of Pennsylvania, as my wife's and daughter's illness will not permit of my going so far from home at the present time.

I am proud of the men that are associated with me, and by the grace of God I expect that a good work will be accomplished during this conference year. We earnestly seek the cooperation of all the local ministry and Saints.

We will have two reunions in August, one at Kirtland and the other at Wellston. It is to be hoped that one of the First Presidency will be with us at both of these reunions.

Your brother and colaborer,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

To the Saints of Southern Missouri District: Our newly appointed missionaries will soon be among us. The appointing authorities have favored us with fine missionaries, and we hope the Saints will try to help in every way, both in tithing and free-will offering. Four of these missionaries have families. To whom should they look for support if not among those whom they labor? The other is a young man, willing to give up all to serve, only asking food and clothing. If he can sacrifice all, cannot other young men sacrifice also? With this force of missionaries, something will be done if we can have the support of all.

I expect as district president to be able to give more time to the branches than last year, as Brother Tucker will likely relieve me of the tent work. Would like to hear from any scattered Saints who want preaching, and from all branch officers who need services. I wish all elders and priests who can, or who are holding appointment, to write me. I want to learn who the active workers are. George A. Davis, Thayer, Missouri, is our bishop's agent. I also carry a receipt book for him. Do not wait until you have a large amount, but send in what you have.

May the Lord bless all with good crops and healthy bodies, and a willingness to assist in the work. Do not fail to let me know your wants. I will try to help you or send help.

Your coworker,

HENRY SPARLING.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, 2002 Kelhem Street.

To the Saints and Friends in the Southeastern Mission: As assistant minister in charge of this field, I take this method of requesting the Saints and friends in Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina and South Carolina to write me in regard to the opportunities for missionary labor in their respective localities, in order that we may be able to spread the work of the Lord in the above-named field as far and wide as possible. I have associated with me in this work as missionaries, Elders E. Rannie, A. E. Warr and A. G. Miller. Remember, we do not expect to be backward in the least in our work. We ask the hearty cooperation of all without delay.

We have lately been told that the hastening time is upon us. The missionary is expected to stay out in the field and work faithfully for the Master, and we earnestly ask the help of all. "It becometh every man who hath been warned to warn his neighbor." All the membership can assist in this work, and we ask you to respond to our request at once. We will be glad to correspond with you and do all we can to advance the work in your part.

The evidences are clear that heretofore there has been a steady progress in the work in this large field, all of which was fully attested in words of encouragement last year from both the Presiding Patriarch and the general minister in charge while laboring in our midst. This progress and uplift to the work is due largely to the fact that both missionaries and local force have as a rule labored in complete harmony, with no other object in view than to edify each other and build up the work. That this feeling of love and unity may continue to grow is my prayer.

We expect to do our part by the help of the Master, and we earnestly solicit the hearty cooperation of everyone in order that all may share with us in that sweet peace and blessing which are received in this life, and enjoy a rich reward in the life to come. Who will be the first to respond?

F. L. SLOVER.

South-Central Iowa Normal Training School

There is at Graceland College presented to the young people of the church and the community an opportunity to make additional preparation for teaching, under the most favorable circumstances.

Graceland College has been designated as one of the places where teachers have the opportunity of doing approved normal training work. The State Department of Public Instruction has approved the work and State Superintendent A. M. Deyoe will be present and deliver a series of lectures before the teachers.

There will also be a series of lectures by President Frederick M. Smith, and numerous round tables conducted by prominent educators from the University of Iowa, Columbia University, and instructors from some of the largest high schools in the country.

If you care to make any inquiries with regard to your work, they will be given careful attention.

Begin now to make preparation for your school work next fall.

HOW HE DID NOT DODGE HIS DUTY
Once in a while even a preacher gets tired and thinks he would like to sit back and watch some one else do the work.
This may be excusable if the preacher is also a traveling salesman with a large field and nearly a hundred men under him.
Elder O. Salisbury, who is president of the Des Moines District is also a very busy traveling salesman.
In Autumn Leaves for April he tells how he thought to take a little rest from active service in a new town and in a church where no one knew him.
Also he tells how the Lord sought him out and made him work that day and gave him at least one convert as a result.
This is one of many very interesting Mission Anecdotes now running in Autumn Leaves. Read them.
Autumn Leaves is only one dollar per year. Monthly. Illustrated. Interesting. Send all orders to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Died

ASHTON.—Lovinia S. Ashton, born at Glossop, England, April 30, 1861; died March 3, 1916. Came to Fall River, Massachusetts, with her parents when 3 years of age. United with the church August 8, 1875. Married Samuel W. Ashton. To them were born 2 sons, 1 daughter, who, with the husband, survive. Our sister was richly endowed with musical ability, and possessed an intellect above the average, and like Dorcas of old, was also gifted with the needle, bestowing upon many tokens of her love and appreciation. She devoted her talents to the Master's service in church and Sabbath school, and was constant and faithful in the discharge of her sacred obligations until illness incapacitated her from serving. She demonstrated in her life that rare combination of virtues. At the last reunion she attended a spiritual experience was enjoyed that gave her the necessary faith, hope and courage to patiently endure the affliction preceding her departure. Her earnest request was, "Ask the Lord if it be his will that I may be restored to continue my work in the church." The Master, however, took her home, and, like him, we can say, "She is not dead, but sleepeth." Services in charge of J. August Koehler, sermon by Horatio W. Howlett. Interment in Oak Grove Cemetery.

TIRRELL.—Laura J. Tirrell, born May 7, 1884, Marshfield, Massachusetts; died March 3, 1916, at her home, New Troy, Michigan. Baptized November 13, 1890, by Willard J. Smith. She is survived by husband, 3 children. A noble woman has fallen asleep to await the morn of the first resurrection. Services by Samuel Stroh, interment near her home. May comfort and strength be given the bereaved ones, especially the aged companion who is left alone in the home.

Practical Economy

Baking powders made from alum or phosphate may be bought for a trifle less than Royal Baking Powder, which is made from cream of tartar, derived from grapes.

Alum powders are not only cheap, but they differ greatly in leavening power.

If a cheap baking powder is used for a fine cake and the cake turns out a failure there is a waste of costly materials worth more than a whole can of the cheap baking powder.

Royal Baking Powder produces the finest food, and its use therefore, results in an actual saving.

THE ORGANIC FORM OF THE CHURCH

All life operates through organic forms. Ordinarily we see no manifestations of life in this material world excepting through organic form. The church is the organic body through which God works for the perfecting of men and the salvation of men: "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

Added to this is the thought that every organic form that God has created is perfectly adapted to perform the work that it was originally intended to do. Every part of every organic form is perfectly adapted to the work that it was originally intended to perform. The foot of the camel is admirably constructed for its work of treading the desert sands. The wings of the eagle are perfectly adapted to their work of beating the upper air. The fins of the fish are exactly in accord with the needs of the fish as it moves in the channels of the great deep. Every creature is organized according to its wants and needs. Otherwise existence would not be possible.

The human form when in a normal condition can not be improved upon in any particular by the skill of man. To remove a single member would be to impair, perhaps destroy. To add some part not included in the original plan of anatomy would be to produce a deformity.

In the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians Paul says that the church is the body of Christ: "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular."

He also says: "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." Also: "But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him."

He goes on to say that the eye cannot say to the hand; "I have no need of thee," nor can the head say to the feet, "I have no need of thee."

In the church the pastor should not say, "We have no need of the apostle and the prophet." Yet we have heard pastors make that declaration in apparent sincerity, evidently forgetting that God has set the members in the church as it pleased him.

For when Jesus organized his church, in full accord, and in constant communication with God the Father, he organized it after a certain plan. Some people argue that Christ never built a church. But he himself said: "Upon this rock I will build my church."—Matthew 16: 18.

He kept his promise. He did build his church. And to assume that he proceeded in a haphazard manner is to discredit divine wisdom. He followed a carefully considered and foreordained plan upon which the divine architects were fully determined and agreed. Human presumption could go no further than to attempt to alter or improve that plan.

When Jesus built his church he set in it certain officers, including apostles, prophets, seventies, bishops, evangelists, elders, pastors, teachers, and deacons. The reader is asked to consider carefully the following passages of scripture:

And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.—1 Corinthians 12: 28

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two.—Luke 10: 1.

And when they had ordained them elders in every church.—Acts 14: 23.

Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers.—Acts 13: 1.

Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons.—Philippians 1: 1.

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but, speaking the truth in love, may grow up in him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.—Ephesians 4:11-17.

The passage last quoted is especially fruitful of thought. From it we learn that Jesus set these apostles, prophets, and other officers in the church for certain purposes.

They were for the work of the ministry—surely the work of the ministry still needs to be done.

They were for the perfecting of the saints—surely the Saints still need perfecting.

They were to keep the people from being tossed about by every wind of doctrine—that work still needs to be attended to.

They were to continue their ministry until we all come in the unity of the faith and attain to the stature of men in Christ—we have not yet reached that stage of development, as attested by the lack of unity among so-called Christians.

Thus Jesus set these officers and members in place in the church, joining and compacting, that the body might increase and grow, and they were to continue there. The apostles understood this, and they kept these offices filled by direction of God. Even in the Quorum of Twelve apostles, when a vacancy occurred, it was filled, and that was the rule from time to time, for these were perpetual offices in the church. (See Acts 1: 23-26; Acts 13: 2; Acts 14: 14; Galatians 1: 18, 19; 1 Thessalonians 1: 1; 2: 5, 6.)

The church had a certain organic form through which to express life, growth, activity, power. This was a divinely appointed form. In the organization of the church Jesus and the Father brought to bear upon their work the same divine wisdom that designed the form of man, and all other organic forms so perfectly adapted to perform certain acts.

The church as they designed it was perfectly adapted to perform the work which it was originally intended to do.

Consequently in these later days when God moved upon certain men to restore his church, he directed that it should be organized after the original plan. Joseph Smith began his work of organization, April 6, 1830. He proceeded upon that plan, and though he started with only six members, and there was little to indicate that in his poverty and with his limited influence, there would ever be more, God worked with him, drawing the hearts of men toward the great work that had been projected.

And so men came, as they were led, from here and there, and in due time were called and ordained, as of old, until the church was fully organized according to the New Testament plan.

It seems strange that other church builders had never thought to organize after the original pattern. But they had failed to do so. There were fragmentary organizations, some with elders, and some with deacons, or pastors, but none like the original, until this church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints stood forth in the nineteenth century, unique, unlike any other spiritual organization then on earth, yet exactly like the New Testament church in which God had set these members as it pleased him.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

DEFENDING SMITHS

The Nauvoo Rustler in the issue of March 7, comes to the defense of the good name of the Smith family, and especially to the defense of Emma Smith, than whom there has been no nobler character connected with the latter-day restoration, and to whom was intrusted the care and safeguarding of the future prophet of the church. In discussing an editorial appearing in the HERALD of March 1, the Rustler says:

Elbert A. Smith, Editor of the SAINTS' HERALD, at Lamoni, Iowa, in the last issue of that paper, refutes statements made in a leaflet spread in which it speaks of the wealth of Joseph Smith, the prophet. Elbert A. Smith says that Joseph Smith never at any time was immensely rich, as enemies now have it. The leaflet also says that the widow refused to leave Nauvoo because of property left her in that place.

We never knew Joseph Smith, the prophet, but we have often heard from people who did know him, that he was never a rich man, but only one in comfortable circumstances. As for his widow, Emma Hale Smith, who died here in 1878, and whose body was buried here, we can say that she never had anything more than what she needed to get along with for herself and her family.

She was married to Major L. C. Bidamon, and for a time he conducted a hotel here, called the Riverside Mansion. Mrs. Smith was a lady highly respected by the people of Nauvoo. Her sons were considered the best of citizens. Joseph Smith, jr., was elected justice of the peace in the sixties, and was regarded as a man whose character was above reproach. He was a poor man, ran a threshing machine and did farming here on the Smith Farm, in Sonora Township, consisting of about eighty acres. Later he was elected as head of his church. His brother Alexander was also a poor man, honest and exemplary, as were everyone of the children of the prophet, Joseph Smith.

They had a good and noble mother, who saw the trials of this world equal to that of the great majority of mothers.

Emma Smith, afterwards Mrs. L. C. Bidamon, remained in Nauvoo, with her family, and chose not to follow Brigham Young. Here she was buried, and here lie buried Joseph and Hyrum Smith, who were killed in Carthage Jail.

Mrs. Smith-Bidamon was rich—very rich in the respect which people held for her—rich in character, and motherly love—but poor in the goods of this world.

The blasphemers of religion and character we always had with us, and always will have with us.

Let it be remembered that the Rustler is published in the community where the Smiths had their home, both before and after the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum, and where the sons of Emma Smith were reared to manhood. It is sometimes urged that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country; but in this instance the family of Joseph Smith lived on in the community where they were once assailed, to finally put to shame defamers of character, past, present and future, as represented by the leaders of thought, and the leaders of sentiment in that same community.

As the Rustler so tellingly emphasizes, Emma Smith was a rich woman—not in what men ordinarily count as riches—not in houses and lands and moneys, but rich in name, and in character, and in good works; and she handed down not only to her sons, but also to her grandsons, and to all the sons of the church, the interests of which she so courageously and so jealously guarded—to all these she has handed down a heritage which makes for their peace and honor, and which, if held sacred, as it is, will make for the final triumph of the cause they have espoused.

Let the purloiners of character read this defense in the Rustler, and meditate upon the baseness of their craft and the failure of their propaganda; for the fair name, the saintly character, and the noble works of Emma Smith will live on to shame the opposition, and to aid in the advancement of the cause of Christ.

PROHIBITION WORKS

The stock argument of those who have opposed prohibition in the past has been that it does not prohibit. Since it has been shown that prohibition may be made to prohibit, it is urged that it would be damaging: it would throw men out of work; make profitable plants worthless; decrease money holdings; empty the treasury and increase taxation, and in general demoralize business and dam up the stream of commerce. And most disastrous of all would be national prohibition, especially the total prohibition of the manufacture, importation, and sale of all intoxicants for other than medicinal purposes.

These arguments have all been made in wet territory. As prohibition has been established and effectually put in operation, such arguments have been depreciated and discontinued; for in territory from which spirituous liquors have been excluded, they cannot be brought.

Practically the universal testimony from dry territory is that more men are at work; former breweries, distilleries, warehouses, and saloons, are put to better use; money is more plentiful; and the treasury is better supplied than in the days of rum.

Iceland has the distinction of being the first country to enact laws for the total prohibition of the manufacture, importation, and sale of alcoholics, and from this country comes the strongest possible argument in favor of national prohibition. Doctor David Ostlund, a leading prohibition worker of that island, writing of conditions there since the operation of this law, says in The New Republic of April 28:

The Icelandic prohibition law went into effect January 1, 1912. It has proven to be a marked success. Iceland enjoys at present a greater prosperity than ever before in its history. One item speaks for itself: Iceland has in the past never been able to keep up navigation to other countries. It has had to receive service from other lands in this respect, and—of course—paid the full price of such service. The short time since prohibition was enacted in Iceland, has witnessed a change. The Icelanders were able to raise among themselves the funds necessary to build their own steamship line, and the new enterprise was started last year.

As to conditions generally under the prohibition regime, nothing but good can be said. And the good is overwhelmingly much in favor of total prohibition.

So the people who under the saloon have spent their earnings for rum, and for its by-products—poverty, and disease, and dependency, and insanity, and crime—instead of purchasing these, the same people under prohibition set in operation steamship lines, and like industries.

And better still, a sober and an industrious people build character—men and women. With such a people, if they be also righteous, there is hardly an ideal that shall not finally be realized.

Let the good work go on.

CURRENT EVENTS

EXAGGERATED ADVERTISING.—In defining what constitutes dishonest advertising through the mails, the United States Supreme Court on April 24 held in effect that advertisers, even though they give purchasers value received, are guilty of fraud if by exaggeration they lead them to expect more.

GERMANS INDICTED.—The New York federal grand jury on April 29 returned indictments against eight Germans recently arrested and charged with conspiracy to place incendiary bombs on ships, carrying munitions, and against Doctor W. T. Scheele, president of the New Jersey Agricultural Chemical Company, alleged leader of the conspiracy.

HAITIAN AFFAIRS.—After dissolution of the Haitian senate, by the executive, and the creation of a national council by the same authority for the purpose of framing a new constitution in conformity with the treaty with America, the Haitian senators on April 27 met in hired premises and constituted themselves a national assembly.

ARMED MERCHANTMEN.—On April 29 the United States Government issued a memorandum recognizing the right of a merchantship to arm for defense, and imposing on an enemy warship the duty of testing "by actual experience," "by direct evidence," whether such ship proposes to offer defense by use of its guns. This memorandum holds that "the right to capture and the right to prevent capture are equally justifiable"; that an enemy merchantman may be sunk only when it is impossible to take it to port, provided always that persons on board are put in a place of safety; that the sinking of neutral mer-chantships under any circumstances is doubtful; it insists on visit and search, except in the case of absolute knowledge.

IRISH UPRISING.—Sir Roger Casement, Irish separatist leader who left England after the European war began and entered the service of Germany, has by the British been taken from a German ship in an attempt to land arms in Ireland. Following this event, Dublin, Ireland, became the scene of serious fighting between members of the Sinn Fein Society and regular troops reinforced by loyal volunteers. The trouble started April 24, when, organized for a holiday parade, the rebels seized a park, the post office, and houses in various parts of the city. The park has been retaken by government troops, several hundred of the rebels have been captured, rebel leaders are surrendering, and the uprising is said to be on the verge of collapse. It is estimated that one hundred men have been killed. John Redmond, leader of the Irish nationalist party, and Sir Edward Carson, unionist leader, strongly condemn the uprising, as do other Irish leaders and sympathizers, and who are concerned for the success of British arms in the European war.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—After a temporary slackening, following the recent friction at Parral, the hunt for Villa has continued. The American troops under Colonel Dodd encountered Villa forces on April 22, when six Mexicans were killed and sixteen wounded, the Americans losing two men killed and three wounded. In another engagement four Mexicans were wounded. Additional Carranza forces are said to be concentrating in Northern Mexico. American troops have been drawn up at advantageous points on the border. A conference is being held between Major General Hugh L. Scott, chief of staff of the American army, and General Funston, in charge of the American expedition against Villa, and General Alvaro Obregon, minister of war in the Carranza cabinet, and General Trevino, military commander of Northern Mexico, at which the general situation is being considered. It is presumed that the Mexicans desire the withdrawal of American troops, and that America desires the full cooperation of the Mexicans in the hunting down of the Villa bandits.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The week covered by this report has been marked by the surrender of the British troops, about twelve thousand in number, so long bottled up at Kut El Amara, Mesopotamia, and for the rescue of which the British relief expedition has so valiantly fought its way up the Tigris. The relief expedition had penetrated to within a few miles of Kut El Amara, but had not been able to advance further against high water and the Turkish forces. This is the closing scene of the ill-fated British expedition against Bagdad, which some months ago all but succeeded. Successive German attacks have failed to gain on the Verdun front, where infantry fighting is said to favor the French. The Germans report gains in the northern district of their Russian front. The Russians continue their advances westward in Armenia. The British report additional gains in East Africa. A naval battle between British and German warships followed a German raid on the north coast of England April 25. Four civilians were killed in the German raid. The German vessels sunk a British destroyer and two scout boats. The Germans also claim the sinking of a British submarine. A German submarine has been sunk by the British. A Dutch and a British steamer have been sunk by German submarines. The British warship Russel has been sunk by a mine in the Mediterranean. This is the eleventh British battleship to be lost during the war. A bill providing conscription for all available unmarried men was withdrawn in the British Commons April 27, after universal service advocates had vigorously attacked it.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

FACING THE FRONT.—Pastoral and other notices, letters, and reports reaching the HERALD Editors indicate that the missionary and local forces and auxiliary representatives are getting at the work of the conference year early and earnestly. And there is every evidence of a full desire for cooperation in thoroughgoing effort on the part of all departments in the work of the church. These qualifications, promptness, earnestness, thoroughness, and cooperation, tempered and directed by the Spirit of God, should and if persisted in will make for results which will gladden the hearts of all when another conference brings our people together again. The church and the Saints stand upon the threshold of a golden opportunity. Let all face front and step into the forward movement just now before the people of God.

BRANDS SUNDAY SCHOOL.—The Christian Church after the days of Alexander Campbell, became divided over the Sunday school and other points of difference. The position of the Antis on the Sunday school is well defined in the following language from the pen of W. T. Kidwell, in Firm Foundation for April 25:

Brother Gearhart thinks the Sunday school question of more importance just now than any other question that disturbs the church. Be it so, still it may be easily, promptly, and scripturally settled if those making the disturbance would de-carnalize their minds, cleanse their hands, purify their hearts, and invest themselves in holiness of life, the love of man, and the fear of God. . . . I have regarded as unscriptural and sinful the existence of the . . . Sunday school.

Little wonder progressive men dissent from this view; and little wonder the Christian Church was divided into two factions when many of its men came to urge such radicalism.

Original Articles

BUILDING THE KINGDOM

(Sermon delivered by H. O. Smith at Lamoni, Iowa, January 24, 1916, reported by Grace M. Briggs.)

I have often contemplated the thought as to whether we fully sense the object in meeting together from time to time in meetings such as this. I have often drawn a comparison between a service held in this way and a school, the minister as teacher, and those occupying the pews as students, and have tried to impress upon my hearers the thought that the essential element in making a successful meeting is for each individual to be interested and pay careful attention to that which may be said. It is obvious that no one can produce good results in striving to teach an indifferent scholar.

I presume that every individual is here for the purpose of hearing the sermon, and has come with determination to take away something that will be of benefit to him in his every-day life; something that he could use; something that would make him a better man in every sense of the term; something that would better qualify him for the duties and responsibilities of life. If you attend a service in which you do not carry away something that will be of benefit to you, that service so far as you are concerned is a failure, and might just as well never have been held. The speaker may do his best, the subject matter may be of utmost importance to you, but unless you use that subject matter for your advancement, the service is in vain so far as you are concerned, no matter how much the speaker may be exonerated by having done his duty.

TO IMPRESS IT

In order to impress this thought upon the minds of those who may hear; I wish to relate something that occurred in my ministry while in the Southern States, in Louisiana. I presume I hold the record to-day for the number of sermons preached in a certain length of time. You may possibly not believe it—I hope you will have confidence enough in me to do so—on one occasion I preached twenty-four sermons in eight days, and nearly every one of them was attended by a certain individual, an old gentleman. I noticed him in the audience, and that he paid excellent attention. I interviewed him and endeavored to ascertain if I could just why he paid such strict attention, yet did not seem to be ready to accept the message I had to give to him.

He told me that when he was a boy his father—and for some reason it was impressed upon my mind that his father was an old Latter Day Saint who had drifted away in the dark and cloudy day when apostasy crept into the church, and had never become interested in any other religion—his father never attended church, but insisted whenever his boy did, that he take a tablet and pencil, telling him that when he returned he expected him to give him the preacher's text; and he expected him to bring home upon that tablet the principal points made by the speaker.

He said, "I had to do it, too. If I did not I was compelled to remain at home while my young friends went to church, or received a punishment from my father, because he said Satan always finds something for idle hands to do, and that if I were not paying strict attention to the sermon preached, I was doing something in that audience that I ought not to do." I thought it was a pretty good idea.

THE LESSON

The lesson I desire to read is found in the 16th chapter of Saint Matthew:

When Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

I am not going to enter into a discussion of the question of the foundation upon which Jesus built his church. I want to if I can impress upon those who may hear me the importance of the work of the building of Christ's church, and why it was built.

NEED OF THE CHURCH

I presume many of those who have been out in the field preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ have met with the objections, when they have urged the necessity of becoming a member of the church, that it doesn't make any difference to what church you belong, just so you belong to some church. It is upon this thought that I desire to especially dwell to-night—that it doesn't make any difference whether you belong to a church at all or not.

Many have come to me with the statement, I am just as good as a church member, and hence I cannot see why or how the church could benefit me. I can be saved without the church as well as I can be saved in the church. We wish to examine this thought just for a moment. We are going to make an assertion here to-night, and we believe it cannot be successfully controverted, that we believe that no man can be saved without the assistance of Christ's church. Without the church, no man can be saved.

Some make the statement, The church cannot save me, and I agree to that. The church cannot save me. If I am saved in the kingdom of God, or attain to that condition that we call salvation, it must depend upon my individual efforts. I agree with that, but still insist that an individual cannot be saved without the influence of Christ's church around him.

I base my conclusions on this thought: The battle cry of the Latter Day Saints at least, and that which has appeared upon our banners more than any other one motto perhaps, is that there are no nonessentials in the gospel. Everything that Christ did, every law he established, every principle upon which those commandments are based is essential to the salvation of man. He did nothing in vain. If that be true—and we believe that every individual who believes fully in the gospel of Jesus Christ, or in Jesus Christ himself, will agree to that,—he, being the greatest lawgiver that ever came to this world, having given that which we call a perfect law, would have done nothing in vain.

Jesus said, And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. I will build my church. If Jesus Christ determined to build a church, then he saw a necessity for it, in carrying out the great plan of salvation. He came into this world to save men from sin; and the church, we believe, becomes a mighty factor in the accomplishment of his purposes.

To make the statement that we can be saved without the church and without its environment, is to declare that Jesus Christ did something that was in vain. Yet notwithstanding the church may throw round me its influence and protection and care and guidance, I may forfeit all that, and fail to be saved, if I do not put forth an individual effort in that direction.

PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH

Now what is the purpose of the church? Some think the church is organized as a proselyting institution, and that all the energies that can be gathered for the upbuilding of that church must be centered along the line of the gathering of members into its folds. I do not so view it. I believe the church has even a greater work than this to do, and that the proselyting part of the church is a secondary matter compared with the work that the church must do in the preparing of God's people for that great event for which we are all looking, the second coming of our Savior.

In order to call attention to the functions of the church I wish to call your attention to a few statements made by Saint Paul. In Galatians 6: 10, he calls the church the household of faith. That conveys a certain impression to you doesn't it? In Ephesians 1: 22, 23, it is called the body of Christ. In Ephesians 2: 19, it is called again a household, and here too it is called the household of God. In Ephesians 3: 15, it is called the family of God.

Now if we analyze the purpose for which God has instituted the family and the wonderful effect that the family has for betterment in this world, then we can, to some extent at least, realize the wonderful work the church of God has to do in the development of mankind—the church family of God, the household of God.

We believe family life was instituted that those who come into this world might be sustained, that they might be nurtured, that they might be taught and brought up in a proper way. I presume there is no more helpless animal born in this world than the human animal, the child. If left but a few hours to itself it will die and pass out of existence. God has instituted the family that those who come into this world as infants, as babes, may have the opportunity to be protected and cared for, that they may be nurtured and strengthened; that as they grow to womanhood and manhood, they might be prepared to establish family relations in the different places where they may reside, propagate the species and fulfill the command to multiply and replenish the earth.

So we believe the church is established that babes in Christ, those gathered in by the proselyting arm, shall have a home, a place where they may be nurtured and strengthened and taught in the ways of Christ. And unless the church puts itself in that condition that it may fulfill its destiny along this line, it is failing in the accomplishment of its purposes.

THE FAMILY AND THE CHURCH

Again we find the family the foundation of all good government. It is a historical fact that whenever a disregard for the family ties has crept into a nation, that the seeds of dissolution are sown in that nation, and sooner or later there will be placed the handwriting upon the wall, "Weighed in the balance and found wanting." That nation will drop out of existence, simply because it has failed to perform its work in the family life, the family relationship.

We find that there are certain commands in this record here that illustrate the work of the family. Paul compares this condition to that which the church was to occupy. He says in the 22d verse of the fifth chapter of Ephesians:

Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church: and he is the Savior of the body. Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything.

Sometimes when we read this passage we see a smile pass over the faces of the men in the audience, who perhaps slightly nudge their wives, that they shall take notice of what is demanded of them in the marriage relationship. But there is one thing that I have noticed, and it has created a respect and an admiration for whatever God has ever given to man, all that he has ever given directly or through the voice of his servants, and that is that there is no class legislation. Whenever he speaks to one class he speaks to the other class likewise. And so we find in this instance.

Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.

We maintain, and have always maintained, that the man who loves his wife as Christ loved the church and gave himself for it, will never, under any circumstances, humiliate that wife by demanding anything of her that he would not be willing to do himself. Under no circumstances will he humiliate that wife, but every energy of his soul, every power of his being, will be exerted along the lines of making that wife happy and contented, protecting her from evil, and nourishing her even as Christ nourished the church and gave himself for it. If I love my wife to such an extent that I am willing to lay down my life for her, then under no circumstances would I demand anything difficult for her to perform, or that would humiliate her in any way.

I have observed this, that in every well-regulated family where the husband loves his wife and the wife loves the husband, and the children obey and honor their parents, success attends that particular family, success attends that household.

My mind reverts to the statement of Christ when he says, Upon this rock will I build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. The gates of hell and all the powers of evil cannot prevail against a family where the husband loves the wife and the wife loves the husband and the children honor and obey their parents. Prosperity, long life and success attend such a family. I cannot recall a single instance when God's promise has failed when families have kept their part of the contract.

So we find that if all the families in a nation are well regulated, educated along spiritual lines, and the boys and girls reared in these families have the proper conception of law and the proper conception of government and obedience, then there are proper individuals to be called to the legislative halls to legislate and direct the affairs of the government. There are also the proper individuals to enforce the law. They can recognize the worth of the law and what it has done for them, and hence they can see why it is that family life lays at the very foundation of the success in a civil way, in a civil government.

And so we believe in the same function of the church: that the church should live in such a way that those who come in from the outside may find a home.

This has been so with me, and I believe it is so with you and every individual, when we go into a family where there are bickerings and strife we want to get away. It is true also of the church. When we go into a church or branch of the church where there are bickerings and strife, evil speaking and backbiting and evil doing, evil deeds, we find no encouragement in the performance of the work God demands of us, and we cannot go out with a recommendation for that particular household, as it is called.

APOSTASY CONTINUOUS

The church remains God's church just so long as God can use it in the accomplishment of his purposes. We talk about apostasy, the apostasy of the church, and the rejection of the church in the different ages of the world. It is going on to-day in various parts of this country. For I believe that every branch of the church, or each branch of which this church is composed, has its responsibility just in proportion to its membership, and the influence it may shed around it; and I have yet to find the church God has rejected, and it has been disorganized, that has lived up to its privileges as a part of this great church. But there have been many branches of the church disorganized because God could not use them in the performance of the work that the church should do.

We have a beautiful organization. That organization is composed of a presiding elder and his helpers. And when the presiding elder is performing his duty and each of his helpers is performing the work that is assigned to him, then that branch grows; it not only performs those functions as a home for the babes in Christ, it performs the other functions for which it was organized, which is proselyting. And its influence grows and becomes greater and greater. But just as sure as the individuals of which this branch is composed fail to perform the work God has assigned them to perform, then this particular branch is rejected and it fails to accomplish its work. God cannot use it for the work that he designs to accomplish. Hence I say that apostasy is going on all along.

I have been out upon the firing line a good deal of my time. A great deal of my work has been on the frontiers, and nearly everywhere I go I am met with this question: Well, how is the church prospering? I am compelled to answer that the church is prospering just as each integral part of that church is prospering, and no more. Branches are integral parts of districts, and districts are integral parts of the general church. Branches are composed of integral parts, that is, members of the church, and just as the integral parts of the church are progressing, so this church progresses, and no more.

Then the burden of responsibility rests not on the individual who stands at the head alone, but upon each individual of which the church is composed; and I do not care how lowly a place that individual may hold, how slight his influence may be, if that influence is for good then we may conclude that the church is prospering. I cannot individually do anything in this life that is evil, without affecting the whole body of Christ. It affects the whole body, for I am hindering its progress, just to the extent that I am failing to progress from time to time.

A CRYING NEED

One of the principles in law is that no judge will give a child into the care of a parent who is not capable of caring for that child. If a man and woman come before the court for divorce, and there have been children born unto that couple, then the judge decides by evidence and testimony as to which of them is best fitted to take care of the children, and assigns the children to that one. If neither is worthy, he finds a worthy institution and commits the children to it. So I believe with God. He will not bless us and we cannot hope for proselyting and success until we are in condition to take care of those who come into our midst.

I was amused by a characteristic statement made by one of the brethren. I relate this incident because of the crying need of this church for men to occupy in a local way, to build up and increase in spirituality that which we have. I believe this is the crying need of the church to-day—good presiding officers to help develop those who come into the church. This brother was presiding over a branch down in Indian Territory, it was then, Oklahoma now. One of the proselyting brethren was there, a very successful proselytist, but that was about all he was good for, who was holding a series of meetings, and baptized seventeen or eighteen.

One night the presiding elder rose in his place and said, without consulting the preacher or any body else, "These meetings will close to-night." A wave of indignation passed through the audience, and they asked him what he meant by closing the meetings when they seemed so successful. His answer was, "We have got about all the raw material we can work up just now."

So if we work up the raw material we have to-day we have a work before us, and a God-given work, that will accomplish wonders not only in developing, but also in drawing in the raw material from without.

WORK AND CARE FOR EACH

Now we want to draw the comparison further along the line between the church and the family. The family is instituted and composed of a husband and wife. The husband has a work to perform. It is his business to furnish the means by which his family shall live, a place for them to live.

It is the mother's duty to take care of the home. It is her duty to see that children are properly cared for within the home. Her duty is at home, and hence she cannot go out and earn the things that are necessary for the sustaining of that home. That depends on the husband, and he must perform his work, and she must perform her work.

The children as they grow to manhood and womanhood, or while growing at least, must be provided for with the necessities of life, schooling, food, clothing, everything needful for their development; and as they grow to manhood or womanhood they begin to contribute to the support of the family as opportunity presents itself.

What would we say of an individual in that family who failed to do his part of the work? A husband who failed to do his part? a wife who failed to do her part? or a child after he grew up if he should fail to do his part what would we think of that? If the children, having grown to that age when they could contribute to the support of the family, should each one selfishly provide dainties at the table for himself; if the husband should selfishly provide for himself with no regard for the wants of others, should buy things for himself that would feed him or clothe him better than the rest of the family, imparting nothing to the support of the others, what would we think of that kind of an individual? We would despise him.

We have a great family, the family of God, the household of God, the household of faith, and I believe the same care for each one should control the minds and hearts of those who come into the family of God, that controls the family bound together by earthly ties or fleshly ties. That is why we call each other brothers and sisters to-day. But we do not always treat each other like brothers and sisters.

One desires a better home, to be better fed or better clothed than his poor brother; and that he may ride in an automobile or something of that kind that will give him greater pleasure than his poor brother has that is by his side. But God did not so intend it. He intended we should have care for each other to that extent that we should be willing to take the things of this world for the support of all, and that they should be freely distributed, that there should be no poor, and that there should be no rich.

OUR INCENTIVE

We find this sentiment expressed in the Book of Mormon very forcefully, in the second chapter of Jacob, that chapter which we so frequently look and appeal to when we are dealing with the great evil of polygamy. Jacob is talking to the people and pointing out to them how their riches have cankered their souls, and how they have despised their poorer brethren; and then says:

Before ye seek for riches, seek ye for the kingdom of God. And after ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted.

A brother one time came to my table at Independence where I lived. I had ministered the word in his particular district where he lived. He had accumulated money and many of the things of this life. During the meal, we were discussing the question of the church and its work, and he asked me what I thought about consecration. I said I can explain it perhaps by using an example. Suppose you are worth $10,000: You engage in a business that uses $5,000, and you need no more than that to carry on your work, in fact your capacity will not permit you to engage in business to any greater extent, the $5,000 that remains over and above what you need should be consecrated to the good of the church.

"Well he said, suppose the investment of $5,000 which you allow me to use, according to your theory, earns me another $5,000 at the end of a year or two, what should I do with that?"

I said, "You should consecrate that, too."

He looked at me a moment and he said, "There would be no incentive to work would there?"

I said, "No, unless you loved the work of God. But if you loved the work of God, if you loved God and the people of God, and desired the progress of the work of God, then there would be the incentive to exercise what talent and powers of body and mind you possessed in the performance of your work in a secular way. There would be your incentive and your heart would be in it. But unless you loved God, his people, his work, and loved to see it progress, there would be no incentive for you to accumulate the things of this life and turn them over to the church."

And after you have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted.

RULES THAT SHOULD GOVERN

I am just briefly mentioning some of these things, and you can draw comparisons yourself. The church should be like one great family, and the rules that govern the family and their relationship to each other should govern the church and its membership.

Again I draw the comparison: I suppose there is not an individual before me but what would agree that the most dastardly crime an individual can commit is the violation of his own sister's virtue, his sister in the flesh; or a father his daughter, or anything of that kind. And next to that I suppose would be the crime of traducing or injuring a brother or sister's character by slander, by tales. Next to that great crime would be this. And no one for a moment, except those who are most utterly depraved, would think of destroying the virtue of a sister or daughter, or of destroying the character by slander of a mother, a daughter or a father.

Now the same relationship should stand between the membership of this church, and the brother in the church should hold the virtue of his sister in the church just as sacred as he would a sister in the flesh. The character and honor of his brother in the church should be as sacred as the character and honor of his brother in the flesh.

All these questions come in when we begin to contemplate the question of the influence of the church in this world. And so we discover as we pass along and examine these passages of scripture in which Paul refers to the church as the family, of what the functions of the family are; and we ought to put them in operation and carry out our obligation and make the church of God what God intended it should be, that men and women might come into it and find that which would make them better men and women, not only by the teachings but by the example which we set before them from time to time.

TIES THAT BIND

There is another work of the church—I may perhaps have time to refer to that. The family brings people together of different disposition and character. I was born down in Southwestern Texas. My wife was born in Wales, and came to this country when but four or five years of age. We lived without any knowledge of each other's existence until were grown to manhood and womanhood. We finally came together and cast in our lots together. I had a different nature—my ideas of right and wrong, and of this and that were different from hers. She had her own ideas.

Sometimes those ideas clashed. Once in a while they did, though I can truthfully say that we have lived nearly forty years as man and wife and have never had a quarrel. But our opinions differed, and I discovered that once in a while I had to yield a point. She discovered that once in a while she had to yield a point.

A softening influence thus came into my life. Experience taught me that sometimes and in some ways I was wrong. If my wife had remained a maiden lady all her life, she would have missed those softening influences that taught her that sometimes she was wrong.

So it is. We come together from different families, different nationalities, we mingle and associate, and our association should have a good influence by bringing about the same results in your life and in mine, softening us. We yield this point, and hold to that, when we know we are right, in loving-kindness, realizing as we live together from time to time that these rough places in our lives can be smoothed off. And only as we rub up against each other once in a while do we realize this great truth.

When one came to Jesus and said, Your mother and brethren are without seeking for you, Jesus said, My mother and my brethren are those who do the will of my father. He recognized no fleshly ties, but in all these things he recognized those wonderful ties that bind us together. So I believe that is one of the things that brings us together—living in the same community, the same branch, the same general church, and by expressing our opinions from time to time and yielding here, and yielding there, exerting ourselves here when we know we are right, and striving to bring ourselves in harmony one with another.

BUILDING ZION

I have often thought of this, and have mentioned it many times when I have preached in the outlying districts and on the firing line. Sometimes people tell me they could live better if they could be in what we call Zion, in Independence, or some of the stakes, like Lamoni, here. I tell them that to get on the train in New York, Boston, San Francisco, or Denver, and make a trip of a few days, is not going to change their dispositions or their natures. If you are in the habit of quarreling with your brother and your sister where you are, you will quarrel with them here. What you want to do, no matter where you are, is to live in harmony with those with whom you are associated, have faith in each other and bring an influence into their hearts and into their lives that will make them better as well as yourselves, and all your efforts will then be along the lines of building up each other.

I was preaching down in Oklahoma, and staying with a brother a few days, became acquainted with him. He concluded to move to Independence. I took him in and took care of him and his family about two weeks while he was locating. After he had settled a while he came and he said to me, "Brother Smith, I do not find things as I expected to find them here."

"Why," I said, "how is that? how did you expect to find them?"

He outlined an ideal condition, and I said, "Brother, are you prepared to show to the man who follows you just what you expected those that preceded you to show to you? in character, in disposition and in works? Are you prepared to do it?"

He looked at me a moment, and walked off without answering. But I had opportunity to say, "If you are not prepared to present this ideal condition to those who follow you, then do not come to me or to any one else and say you did not find things as you expected. You have no right to do that unless you are prepared to present an ideal condition yourself."

I believe in the functions of the church, and believe the church should fulfill its duty and teach the law of God; and not only to teach it—and it must be taught in full to be the church of God,—for the church in order to be used by God in the development of his people must practice and put into operation the principles of the gospel. If the church shall so far forget its allegiance as to fail to accomplish the work God designed, then God will reject it, whether it be a branch, district, or the general organization.

ABRAHAMIC FAITH

Have faith in God.—Mark 11: 22.

Ye believe in God, believe also in me.—John 14: 1.

What saith the scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness. . . . And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also; and the father of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised.—Romans 4: 3-12.

But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.—Hebrews 11: 6.

THE ABRAHAMIC CALL

There never has been a call to service and blessing given to man or people but that it has carried with it the demand to forsake those things which seemed to be of value to the individual or people so called, and an exercise of faith in God and his ability to execute his pleasure, even unto the completion of the work whereunto they are called.

"Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee," was not a call to self-denial peculiar alone to the call of Abraham; nor did the promise, "And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed," call for any more explicit faith in the ability and sureness of God to complete his work, than has been required of the disciples of Christ in all ages.

EYE SALVE NEEDED

If we grow "lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot," in our service, we will be apt to lose sight of the "prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," and will need to anoint our eyes with the "eye salve" of faith; and the prayer of Elisha, "Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see," must needs be offered for us before we can fully realize that one with God is always in the majority.

THE CALL OF MOSES

When Moses, in response to the call of God, visited his brethren and began what he supposed would be the delivery of that people from bondage (See Acts 7: 23-25), he had to refuse to longer be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, and forego the accompanying pleasures of sin, having "respect unto the recompense of reward" which God had promised (Hebrews 11: 23-28).

The immediate effect of this choice was that he had had to forsake his native land and sojourn in a strange country forty years, while and where, by the experiences of his life, he was better prepared to endure "as seeing him who is invisible," and accomplish the stupendous task demanded in the delivery of God's people from their bondage to Egypt, and bring them into a new birth which would make them a nation, chosen of God.

THE CALL TO THE DISCIPLES

Not less exacting were the demands of the believer in the days of the Christ. The apostles were not the only ones to whom the call to "Leave your nets," came. The call was, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden," and the condition upon which the rest is promised is, "Let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." And the reason for this condition was, For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it.

THE COURAGE OF CONVICTION

Surely the men so called to a work demanding the sacrifice of everything which the world holds dear, even unto life itself, must needs be convinced of the divinity of that cause for which they labor.

Peter's declaration, We ought to obey God rather than men, was founded upon more than a passing fancy. It had its foundation in that faith by which "we understand that the worlds were framed by the Word of God"; their eyes had been opened until they saw the kingdom of God and were willing to lay down their lives, if need be, to establish that kingdom.

THE CALL TO LATTER DAY ISRAEL

As in the days of the ministry of Christ in Galilee, the message to the world is "The gospel of the kingdom of God," and the prayer, Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as in heaven, takes on a more intimate meaning. We are called to seek first to build up the kingdom of God, and establish his righteousness.

To the early elders it was said:

Ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect, for mine elect hear my voice and harden not their hearts: wherefore the decree has gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered unto one place, upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts, and be prepared in all things, against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked: for the hour is nigh, and the day soon at hand, when the earth is ripe; and all the proud, and they that do wickedly, shall be as stubble, and I will burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that wickedness shall not be upon the earth; for the hour is nigh, and that which was spoken by mine apostles must be fulfilled; for as they spoke, so shall it come to pass; for I will reveal myself from heaven with power and great glory, with all the hosts thereof, and dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years, and the wicked shall not stand.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 2.

A COLLECTIVE SALVATION

One of the main differences between the concept of the founders of this church and other church builders of the same generation was that here we are called to establish a kingdom of God on earth. It is a call to collective salvation and, like those of old, we seek a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God, where the people shall be all righteous, and we realize that "except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it"; hence we recognize the necessity of present-day revelation, and a called ministry, with authority from God.

A REPETITION OF HISTORY

When Jesus startled the religious world of the Jews by speaking as one having authority from God, and not as having authority from the Scribes, that fact alone was sufficient ground for his rejection by them.

Their prophets had fallen asleep, and they could not muster enough of the faith of Abraham, to credit unto God the wisdom and power by which he worked. As a possible way out of their dilemma they credited it to the prince of devils, even though devils were cast out and suffering relieved thereby.

The vital fact of the message of every prophet of God held no meaning for them—the fact that here was an officer to put them in touch with divinity, so that they should "know of the doctrine" for themselves. That this was their attitude was made very plain by the Master when he declared, "I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not: If another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive."

How often, to-day, do we see men rejecting this gospel of the kingdom on that basis alone! We have the Bible and we need no prophets to-day, or, The day of prophets is past. If Joseph Smith had said that he got this by his own understanding, I might accept it, but I can't believe in a prophet to-day.

The fact that the same vital principle is in this work that was in the message on the day of Pentecost when Peter made the promise, "and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost," and assigned as the reason for making such a promise the fact that "the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call," carries no weight with them, because the messengers claim to come by other authority than of man.

GOD IS CALLING

To all such, and to all mankind we say, This is the call of God and through his ministry to-day. The Master is saying as of old, Have faith in God, ye believe in God, believe also in me.

Surely, if the end of the conversation of those who bore rule over the Hebrew saints was, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever," and this entitled them and their message to a thoughtful consideration, then the message of the ministers of this cause is worthy of more than passing notice.

How often we hear a comment something like this, after some one has listened to a sermon by one of our ministers: That's the gospel all right; it's scripture, but I don't see what we need of a prophet to-day. Some will even go so far as to say, I wish our minister could preach the Bible like he does, yet they ignore that which makes possible such preaching—the necessity of revelation from God to-day. As in olden times, it is only "he whom God hath sent," who may speak the words of God with confidence and without reserve.

THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE

Another thing which militates to keep many from an acceptance of the message to-day is, as it was in the days of the Master, that there can be no reservation of "what shall a man give in exchange for his own soul." As it was then, the requirement is, Sell all and purchase this great treasure—"Seek first to build up the kingdom of God."

More than once has it been said to us, You require too much of a man; or, That's the gospel you're preaching, but I can't live it; or, You don't know what it would cost me to accept this message. To all such we say, It is well to count the cost before you commence to build; but if you feel that you lack strength to do this, and yet desire to do the will of the Master, he has promised assistance through the Holy Spirit, and his promise is sure. If you are fearful of the cost, be assured that this work will cost you more than anything else in this world, but it will bring greater returns on the investment than anything else, if you will invest all.

GET THEE OUT OF THY COUNTRY

It is indeed a call to a new country, which the Master will show to all those who will answer, Here! with all their hearts. But sometimes when we commence to enter in we are like Ananias, and would make a comfortable reservation of our time and means, lest the work should not come out all right and we suffer the loss of our all; or we like to keep hold of an occasional "leek" or "onion," from Egypt, that our old appetites may be satisfied instead of put behind us.

If we are to prepare our hearts and "be prepared in all things," that may only be done by getting in harmony with the Master in all of his requirements. "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments," was the message to the early church through him whom God had called as his prophet in these latter days. And this was followed by the command of consecration.

The inequality of the economic conditions of the world was pointed out as the cause of much, if not the most of the sin in which the world is lying to-day (see Doctrine and Covenants 49:3). And the church was told, "In your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld" (Ibid. 70:3).

That this condition of equality might obtain, the law of tithes and offerings was given at length unto us, and in unmistakable terms.

In answer to the question, O Lord, show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing? Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion; . . . and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord. . . . And I say unto you, if my people observe not this law, to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy, behold, verily I say unto you, it shall not be a land of Zion unto you; and this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion. Even so. Amen.—Ibid, 106.

LORD, INCREASE OUR FAITH

It may be like one of old who was told by the Master, "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth," we have need to utter the prayer, "Help thou mine unbelief."

Surely, the work before us to establish a place of refuge, where safety will be found while "the wicked slay the wicked," calls for devotion to principle which will not permit our love for material things to stand in the way of its accomplishment.

Do we believe God who has declared he will do this? Then will it be accounted unto us for righteousness, provided, that belief is transmuted into terms of obedience.

Is the sacrifice too great for us to make? Then let us remember that the Master's dictum is, He that will not forsake all for my sake is not my disciple, and that it bears with fully as much weight upon us as it does upon those to whom we carry the message of the kingdom of God.

Are we walking in the steps of faithful Abraham, who offered up his only son, "Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead?" when we withhold our substance from the work because we are fearful that some of our authorities may not use it as wisely as we would?

Let us not forget that there has been a requirement laid upon the ministry of this church that they shall fully live this law of consecration, and that none are more strenuous in their demand that they comply with this law than those who are withholding their substance on these grounds.

If we desire the "abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit that we may see eye to eye, and be able to move onward and upward in this work, shall we not each see to it that we are keeping all the commands of the Master to the best of our ability to understand them? If we so do, then will the promise that we shall know of the doctrine be ours, light will be given, and we shall "press on to the consummation designed of God for his people—unity, honor, sanctification, and glory."

Let us give all diligence to make our calling and election sure, that we may not fail in the great work intrusted to us of preparing and being prepared for the Master's coming.

A. M. CHASE.

No man would last twenty-four hours in the mission field who sees only with the eyes of flesh. The horizon is banked with difficulties. Everywhere obstacles are sky-high. All around are hate, ignorance, sin, and sensualism. To one who stops with the sight, this is discouraging. He must look beyond and catch the vision of the chariots of Jehovah. Then victory is sure.—J. J. Vance.

Of General Interest FOR CHURCH UNITY

On behalf of the pope, Cardinal Gasparri, papal secretary of state, sent a letter to the World Conference in Faith and Order, a Protestant gathering now in session at Garden City, Long Island. The vatican's communication, advocating church unity, follows:

THE VATICAN

Your project of an international convention of all who believe in Jesus Christ as God and Savior to accomplish the speedy fulfillment of the final prayer of the Lord, that all may be one, I have, in obedience to your request, submitted to the most holy father.

I need not here describe the affection with which I saw the august pontiff kindled for you.

For you well know that the plans of the Roman pontiffs, their cares and their labors, have always been specially directed to the end that the sole and unique church which Jesus Christ ordained and sanctioned with his divine blood should be most zealously guarded and maintained, whole pure and ever abounding in love, and that it should both let its light shine and open wide its door for all who rejoice in the name of man and who desire to gain holiness upon earth and eternal happiness in heaven.

The august pontiff, therefore, was pleased with your project of examining in a sincere spirit and without prejudice, the essential form of the church, "or the inner essence of the church."

He earnestly hopes that under the spell of its native beauty you may settle all disputes and work with prosperous issue to the end that the mystical body of Christ be no longer suffered to be rent and torn, but that by harmony and cooperation of men's minds, and likewise by the concord of their wills, unity of faith and communion may at last prevail throughout the world of men.

Thanking you, then, that you have thought well to request the aid and support of the Roman pontiff in expediting your worthy project, his holiness expresses his earnest desire that the end may answer your expectation.

He asks the same of Christ Jesus with fervent prayers, all the more because with the voice of Christ himself sounding before and bidding him, he knows that he, himself, as the one to whom all men have been given over to be fed, is the source and cause of the unity of the church.

The august pontiff, therefore, kindly permits that copies of my letters, which, though a faithful, are yet but a faint, portrait of pontifical love, shall be sent to all to whose welfare and peace you believe they will contribute.

It is a pleasure to repeat the encouragement that the aid and earnest prayers of the Roman pontiff will never be lacking to anyone who, having freed himself from prejudiced opinions, with a true and sincere will, strives with all his strength that the unity of faith and fellowship instituted by Christ and built upon Peter may be restored, and that all who are enrolled in the name of Christians may betake themselves to the bosom of the one most loving church, and may be joined and associated as members with Christ the head.

Church dignitaries of twenty Protestant denominations attending the conference heard the vatican's plea for universal peace.

They met in the ballroom of the Garden City Hotel. The letter telling of the pontiff's interest in church unity created a tremendous stir.

The letter was received in silence. It was utterly unexpected. But a moment later the ministers applauded vociferously.

The Right Reverend C. P. Anderson, Protestant Episcopal bishop of Chicago, presided. In opening the convention he said:

In the midst of the European conflict the world asks, "Has Christianity failed?" It is a fair question as to whether the united church might not have preserved the peace of the world.

We look out upon the church to-day. Instead of an interior indestructible and united, we find it externally rent and torn asunder, largely disintegrated, and incapable of molding the nation's conscience. Isolation, separation and disintegration are repelling the power of the church of Jesus Christ. A bewildering world and a divided church are crying, "How long, O Lord, how long until peace be established between nations and a unity made amongst the churches?"

In face of the religious conditions of the day is there any Christian who will care or dare to stand aloof from a movement so thoroughly filled with mutual trust and confidence and so charged with loyalty to Jesus Christ and his church?

The report of Robert H. Gardner, the secretary, contained a review of the commission's activity and included the letter of Cardinal Gaspari.

INTEREST IS WIDE

According to Mr. Gardner's report, a deputation was about to confer with the pope and European churches just prior to the outbreak of the war.

Correspondence has since been continued, he stated. A wide and increasing interest was aroused, he said, for clearer recognition that nothing but the visible unity of the church will suffice to establish his law of peace.

Fifty-seven communities have appointed representatives to the conference, Mr. Anderson reported.

Out of two hundred and five invitations issued, seventy-six accepted, sixty-six did not reply, fifty-four declined, and nine were doubtful. . . —Boston American, January 5, 1916.

WHAT WOULD WE DO?

"Suppose," writes Savannah Madrid, an eighteen-year-old Indian lad attending Haskell Institute at Lawrence, Kansas, "a man should invent a drink that would make people sick; the husbands cruel; people insane; and mothers indifferent about their children. The world would be shocked and the drink would not exist perhaps a day."

It is well said.

Suppose that some one would invent something like the itch and ask the people to license its introduction and propagation on the ground that people who had the disease or who should contract it would get a heap of pleasure out of scratching themselves and for the further reason that there would be money in it for the public school fund.

What would we do about it?

Would there not be as much sense to it as it would be to license and authorize the saloons to make trouble for the people?

And a lot of well-regulated itch would not make nearly as much trouble for the people as the alleged well-regulated saloons do.

Hats off to Savannah Madrid. He has said something worth while.—The New Republic.

Letter Department

A Word for Our Publications

Having been a subscriber to the HERALD for nearly a half century, I feel that I owe its columns an occasional letter. In fact, this is true of every member of the church, as it is true with reference to our responsibility toward the Autumn Leaves, the Ensign, and other church publications. Every dollar expended for these goes directly to the church coffers, and not to the editors, or some private ownership. For this, if for no other reason, our publications should be found in the homes of every true Latter Day Saint.

Think of it! Less than seven cents a week will pay for the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Ensign, three of the best and cheapest papers on the face of the whole earth! I challenge the world to produce their equal, all things considered, either in price or quality. Because some of the weekly newspapers can be had for twenty-five cents a year is no evidence whatever that our publications are high in price. This price of twenty-five cents would hardly pay for the blank paper alone. If we allowed the same amount of advertising matter in our church papers as appears in these cheap publications, and admitted less reading matter, we might have free subscriptions at a greater profit to the church than under the present system. It is the advertising that pays much of the upkeep of the worldly newspapers, many of which are of very little real value to Saints or anyone else; while our own publications are full of good, wholesome, and valuable reading matter—gospel truths, and good news.

It must also be remembered that our publications have not the circulation equal to that of many other religious journals and worldly publications. Yet it takes the same amount of labor to set the type for one hundred subscriptions as for one hundred thousand. If my memory is not at fault, the HERALD was first issued as a monthly, and at not half its present size, at the price of three dollars a year, by reason of the small subscription list—from 1860 to 1875, the church membership was very small. But even at that price we anxiously looked for our welcome monthly visitor, and read its contents with joy. As the church grew numerically the HERALD was enlarged and lowered in price from time to time. From a monthly it passed to a semimonthly, and for years has been continued to us as a weekly at the low price of one dollar and a half per year.

Who is it that cannot afford to take the church publications? Some who say they cannot are among those who disagree with the Word of Wisdom, and who have money to spend for coffee, tea, tobacco, and snuff, while others have meat daily at a cost of from ten to thirty cents. Many buy worthless Christmas and New Year's toys for children to destroy in a day, or less time. One says, "Oh yes, but you know children are children. We love them, and must please them." Very well, adults are adults, and should use more wisdom than children. Would not a nice garment, suit of clothes, shoes, overcoat, or dress, please the child, and give comfort and service that must be supplied sooner or later anyway?

Then, too, often gifts are bestowed when and where not needed.

The church is in debt. Money spent for useless articles is worse than thrown away, and might better be used as a Christmas or free-will offering. Will God not hold us responsible for how and what we spend our money for? He will hold us at least for that part which belongs to him. The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof. At best we are living on borrowed property, or capital.

My heart has been pained when I meet Saints who are not supplied with any of our papers or publications; and more painful is the thought of the ripening harvest field, with Saints paying out from thirty-five to one hundred dollars a year and more for life insurance, yet able to pay but little or no tithing into the church coffers.

The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are at the head of the best and strongest insurance company in the world. Why not take out a policy in this company at the same rate? There is no danger of the company's failing. They furnish a policy for eternal life at full pay, if faithful. We say, It should be God first, last, and all the time.

We are met with the complaint that the church is poor and not able to help always in time of need. That may be true, but if the same amount of money were paid into the church coffers that is being paid into worldly institutions, more poor might be cared for, more missionaries might be sent into the field, and Zion might be redeemed. As it is, the church is doing well in caring for the poor, old, and disabled. In five established homes, one children's home, together with people not in the homes, many are receiving a helping hand.

Why should we not put our trust in God? whose people have never been forsaken?

Yours in the faith,

J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

Unsolicited Testimonies

It is gratifying that at the church exhibit during the San Francisco world's fair, testimony as to the character and work of Joseph Smith should have been developed. It is the more gratifying that it was voluntary, as shown below.

Most gratifying of all is the fact that people are still found who know through direct avenues and will testify contradicting the long-time-supposed-facts, written by enemies, found in encyclopedias, histories, etc., some of which for a few years have been making corrections, as all should.

Joseph Smith and his work will yet be exonerated. Consider well the three following instances. Sister Pitt did well to report them, as appearing in the HERALD of October 27, 1915. Others will do well to clip and use them:

"An old gentleman came and looked at the painting of Joseph the Martyr, and said, You may be surprised to know that my father knew that man well. I said, I am pleased to know that, and shall be pleased to know what kind of a man he was, according to your father's statement. He replied, Well I do not belong to any church and neither did my father, but he always said Joseph Smith was a fine young man. He always liked him and spoke well of the family. This old gentleman, aged about seventy-eight, I should judge, is a librarian. He told me many interesting things. I asked him to be seated and rest. He gladly accepted and we talked for an hour or more."

"A very fine couple, a lady and gentleman of Ohio, came, and she stopped and remarked as she looked at the painting of Emma Smith, Well there is the picture of my Aunt Emma! Sister Holling inquired and learned from her that she is not a member of either church. She said that it was untrue that Joseph Smith had more than one wife, that Aunt Emma was his only wife. The evidences from those not in the church are pleasing. They gave us their address, and we hope to have the pleasure of meeting them again."

"Another pleasant half hour was spent in conversation with a minister of the Church of England. He came and looked at the painting of Joseph Smith and said, You may be surprised to know that my grandfather knew Joseph and Hyrum Smith. I said I would be glad to hear what was told him regarding them. He answered: My father always told me that his father declared that Joseph and Hyrum Smith were fine men, though continually persecuted, and that they never had anything to do with polygamy. That, he said, is what my people have always said about those men. I did not like to ask him where he resided, yet I would like to have known, for reference for others. But I am sure we can appreciate such statements, especially from a clergyman, one who has no interest except justice in the matter."

In the interest of right and truth,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

[Elder R. Etzenhouser furnishes the foregoing suggested by the letter of Sister Rosa Parks Pitt, appearing in the HERALD. It was the purpose of Elder Etzenhouser to insert the quotations from this letter in his scrapbook. It has occurred to him that by submitting it for publication in this form he may not only himself have it conveniently arranged, but will be suggesting it to others for like use.—EDITORS.]

SNOVER, MICHIGAN, March 7, 1916.

Editors Herald: Elders Savage and Grice have helped the work at Sandusky, resulting in several being baptized. The writer began a series of meetings at Macgregor, continuing the first week alone except one night, when Elder Goheen, of Deckerville, occupied. Elder Leverton, of Minden City, was the principal speaker the next week, and after that O. K. Green assisted as he could. Elder O. J. Hawn, of Bay City, who was conducting services at Carsonville, then came and preached one night. After this the writer was again left alone. The crowd was held, however, good interest was manifested, and good liberty enjoyed. We closed Sunday night, the 5th, with a full house. There were no baptisms, though several will obey in time.

The Saints as usual did all they could to assist with the music and in a financial way. The writer is thankful for a new overcoat, a Christmas present, and other needed things. We will meet with the Macgregor Saints every two weeks and do all we can to keep up the interest gained.

Brother Myron Carr, of Pigeon, held forth at Snover for two weeks recently, with good interest. Brother Savage has created an interest at Harbor Beach. We hear that Shabbona has also had some preaching by Elder William Davy. The local brethren there have sensed their responsibility and have opened up the work at a place called Deckes, also at the Brown Schoolhouse. It is an encouragement to see everyone working; and results will follow.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 24, 1916.

Editors Herald: "I never saw such a clean and intellectual body of men as the missionary force assembled at this General Conference," an Iowa school teacher remarked. Others made similar statements. The divine instruction to the church, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," was truly in evidence from the saintly appearance of the delegates and assembled hundreds as well as the conference missionaries, a fact worthy of praise—no liquor, no tobacco, no bad language used.

Twenty-four years ago I was appointed to labor in the Gallands Grove District, and I have been reappointed to that field every year since, until the late conference directed me to labor in the proposed new Holden Stake. However, the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric have requested me to return to my old field and continue in charge of the church finances, gathering tithes and offerings, until an agent is appointed to take my place. I take this opportunity of requesting the Saints of the Gallands Grove District to continue their good work of paying their church offerings as before. My mission address will continue to be Deloit, Iowa, until further notice.

The district conventions and conference will be held in the new church building at Denison, June 9, 10 and 11. This will be an important meeting, as the Saints at Denison desire to be organized into a branch during the conference. The selection of a district presidency and a bishop's agent, as well as other important business, will be considered at this meeting.

This conference year opens with bright prospects, and every Saint should resume his various duties with increased interest and activity, so that all departments of church work can be forwarded faster than ever before, heeding the instruction, "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only."

Yours for service,
C. J. HUNT.

NORTON, KANSAS, January 31, 1916.

Editors Herald: While reading the last HERALD and the many good things written by the brothers and sisters, the desire comes to me as it has many times before to contribute my mite. While I may not have anything of interest to others to write, I want to thank the many writers of the HERALD for the comfort I have received from reading their letters. The HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Stepping Stones are all the preachers we have.

We seldom see an elder in Western Kansas. It seems to me we are neglected by our missionaries, but I don't want to be called a faultfinder. As this is a large field with few missionaries, they may do the best they can. But we feel there are many good souls here who have never had an opportunity to hear the gospel preached in its purity.

There have been but two Latter Day Saint sermons preached in this community that I know of. Brother J. J. Teeters preached the funeral of our dear baby girl one year ago last September. A Dunkard sister came to me afterwards and said she was well pleased with his remarks. Brother Shower preached one sermon a year ago last November to a fair crowd in our schoolhouse. They said they heard more Bible preached that night than they ever heard before, and seemed desirous of hearing more. The school board say our elders can have the schoolhouse to preach in any time they want it. We think they could get a hearing most any time if they will come.

This is a good moral community, but not many seem concerned about their souls' salvation. So we are very anxious that they may have the opportunity of hearing our elders preach. Our family and Brother Greer and his daughter, Sister Frank and husband, of Norton, are the only Latter Day Saints that I know of in Norton County. Brother Shower preached some at Brother Frank's residence last summer one year ago, and some became very much interested. I think if he could have been followed right away some would have come into the church. We have so little preaching the people lose interest from one time to the next.

I sincerely wish we could have an elder locate here and devote his time to a small territory, and then I think much more good would be done than there is by just hearing a sermon once in a while. Besides, we that do belong to the church would have our spiritual strength renewed, which I feel we stand much in need of.

While I love this gospel better than anything else in the world, I feel my faith is very weak at times. I used to think my faith was strong, and perhaps I might have been a little boastful (I hope not), but that was before it was tried very much. At one time our family belonged to the Crescent Branch, in Pottawattamie District, Iowa, and there we had all church privileges and not much to try our faith, so we thought we were strong. It seemed easy to live our religion where there was not much opposition. But since coming to Kansas we have had our faith tried in many ways. I never felt the force of that dear old hymn, "Oh, for a faith that will not shrink," so much in all my life as I have since we came here, nine years ago last December. I hope we made no mistake by coming.

Although we are deprived church privileges, we are here ready to furnish a home for any of God's servants that are sent here, and would gladly do so. I have always told the Lord if he could use us in any way to spread the gospel we are willing to be used. While we know we are weak, I want to do what little good I can while my life is spared, and live so that my little influence may be felt for good wherever my lot is cast in life.

We would welcome any elder passing this way to other fields. We will meet one at Norton any time. We may be reached by farmers' phone 528, or address Norton, Kansas, star route.

I close by asking one and all to remember us isolated ones in your prayers.

Since writing the above we learn that Brother Shower is in Norton this evening and will come out and preach some for us. We pray that he may meet with success in preaching the truth to the people.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. J. N. BOYD.

ALEXANDER, KANSAS, January 30, 1916.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a welcome visitor in our home every week. We certainly enjoy the good letters from our brothers and sisters in the church, also the sermons by the elders, many of whom we have been permitted to meet.

We live at Alexander, Kansas. It has always been my home since I was small. This has been a place of persecution against the Saints. Some fifteen years ago people were bitter, no members living here. God's servants were sent in.

Brother Mannering was the first to present the gospel in Alexander. I could see a great difference in the spirit and way in which he prosecuted the gospel from any other I had ever heard. People came out to hear him, but prejudice seemed to be strong. One of our family was the first to take the step, and was baptized. Finally my father and mother were baptized. Schoolhouses were closed, and the ministers preached in our home for four years before the house was opened again for the Latter Day Saints.

I was prejudiced for a few years, wanting to be popular. I held out many years, then when I could not stand it any longer, having made up my mind to defend the true church, to accept the gospel, and shun the worldly amusements, I was baptized by W. E. Peak, at a reunion, in the beautiful Walnut Creek on my father's land. We had moved into town some two years before this time.

This reunion was held in a tent and large crowds attended, lasting five weeks. We had good singing, good sermons and good attention. I was baptized seven years ago last September. I was married seven years ago February 21, 1916, to Clarence Thompson, nephew of Leonard and Columbus Scott, the family moving here from Beeler, Kansas. We have two little boys living, one dead.

We held meetings in the big tent, sometimes in the school-house, for a number of years. Brethren Pender and Gurwell did much good here, for which we feel they have a great reward. Brother Knisley has held meetings here, also Brethren Shower, Hilliard, Parsons, and Vaughn, who labored here many years ago. Also Brother Samuel Twombly.

We erected a church over two years ago. We haven't many members here, so did not have the finances to furnish it ready for dedication at first, but now we have beautiful church pews, communion stand, pulpit, organ, carpets, furnace, all complete except a bell, and free from debt. We can do without a bell for a while. When the walls have another coat of paint and a little other work the church will be ready to dedicate. We hope our church may be dedicated before the next General Conference.

We have some cases of sickness here now, but we trust all will soon be well. We have had our times of rejoicing and times of trial and discouraging conditions. Prophecies have been given here and it rests with the Saints if the work is to be built up or die out. Many here believe the gospel true as the elders have preached it, but they stay away. The past two years Satan has influenced people to stay away from our church. We trust these conditions will not last, and that we may be blessed with many of the elders coming here and preaching and encouraging us.

I do not regret coming into this church, but I do regret that I haven't devoted all the time I could to studying and learning more of the Bible and noble church books. I have always attended church as faithfully as possible, but in many ways I could have let my light shine more, and could have spoken a word in defense of the true church.

I feel we can do very much good by visiting the sick, doing little, kind deeds for people, spreading sunshine where we visit. A kind word will often do more good than we know. A harsh word causes many a tear to fall. We need more love, more unity. These conditions we like to see, and we can enjoy them if each one tries hard to do his part, being faithful. Let us be faithful as possible, and prayerful, and I feel sure our church will gain.

We hope to be a help in the church, trusting in God. Remember us here. Pray for the church to be built up here, that all the honest in heart may be gathered into the fold, if it is God's will for us to remain here. We hope to endure to the end.

In the one faith,

MRS. MAY THOMPSON.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.

Editors Herald: I am convinced that our late President Joseph Smith consecrated his life unto the establishing of our church in the world, said establishing taking the form of its members living in peace and growing in numbers, and finally bestowing upon the church an honorable and respectable name.

At present we seem to be upon the verge of a new era,—the demonstration of the practicability of the revelations concerning Zion and the gathering of the church members into communities or stakes, for the purpose of advancing the cause of the kingdom of God upon earth, and the improving of our social conditions governing and resulting in our existence.

My understanding of the condition of the social welfare of the people immediately succeeding our progenitors, Adam and Eve, is that they must have been very primitive, depending wholly upon inspiration or the experiences of life to teach them knowledge; and as the people had few books, tablets, or scrolls, containing information and established rules, they were often swayed by the desires and passions of their physical being, instead of their reason, unto the losing of the medium of education—inspiration.

The desires and passions of our physical being oftentimes make us feel like taking advantage of our fellow men, and in many instances might have ruled the weak, and the weak have paid the tribute of family, possessions, and oftentimes their lives.

Sometime in the history of this world men united themselves and formed communities, or cities, and every thinking person must agree that the people did this for their uplift and as a protection against the common foe, might posing as right.

In the course of time we find that people uniting were in a position to acquire the things essential to social prosperity, not to arise from a condition of vassalage, to receive remuneration for services, or work done, for some other person; this is the condition we find the world in at present, the mighty men of the commercial world ever striving to secure a large return upon money invested and the working man striving to secure a larger remuneration for his services. This dual striving is not conducive to common unity; it makes commercial troubles; and it makes labor troubles because men are not yet endowed with an heavenly disposition that accepts everything for the best.

As all wealth must come from the air, earth, and labor of men, and as the Scripture says, the earth is the Lord's, and we are his creation, it stands to reason that all wealth must eventually be for the work of God upon earth among the children of men and the social equalization of all God's children.

Our church is endeavoring to establish a temporal Zion, which in my opinion must mean: a people living and directed by the revelation of God's will unto the eliminating of all social strife, and the equal distribution of the things of this world necessary for a clean, intelligent existence.

The kingdom of God is likened unto a grain of mustard seed, which when placed in a proper condition and environment must grow; so Zion should begin in a small way and grow. It is true that many people will suffer loss in temporal things, but every person who gives his life, or possessions, for the work of God and the uplift of humanity, should grow in intelligence, by inspiration, which will be the true riches that Jesus Christ taught about, and shall merit the commendation "Well done." The only thing we take with us when we depart from this life are our character and what we know; the more we know of God and Jesus Christ the better our chances of receiving eternal life.

If it were possible for people to arise from a condition of vassalage unto receiving wages for work, should it not be possible for people to advance unto the equal distribution of things essential for our earthly existence?

A question arises as to what shall determine our worthiness to continue in Zion, and protection against evil men, knowing as we do that human beings err in judgment many times.

It is a fact that we possess an inherent, or God-Given, motive, which when directed by the law of God brings benefit and blessing to us; when it is not governed by law it brings to us disaster and sorrow. My experience in life has taught me that many persons think that motive alone is sufficient, and that a person with a good motive has no need of any law to direct him; but who can truly say that any motive is good without law, for the law is not to destroy motive, but is coordinate with it.

As the children of Israel received the law, written in stone from God through Moses, so we should receive the Zion law from God through Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit, not written in stone, but in our hearts and minds, and this law is commonly called conscience. The world is filled with action; most of this action is directed by laws and rules. The laws and rules often are the result of misdirected activity. Any person filled with activity and who uses the same for God, must eventually develop within him a conscience that will guide and direct his efforts, restraining the wrong, encouraging the good, assisting in good words, good deeds, and good deportment. Should our good conscience ever become seared, or in not good working condition, through our secret or open wickedness, we shall surely show our wickedness by our words, our deeds, and our deportment, and in a very short time make ourselves unfit to live in peace and unity, and not worthy to dwell in Zion.

I think it is safe to say that persons being obedient to the gospel law and receiving the Holy Spirit, then for some cause losing the Spirit, show their loss by carnality and sensual desire.

To me the question "Has Joseph Smith succeeded his father," is answered in the affirmative, because the Spirit within him kept him clean and enduring to the end, and will keep Zion clean and enduring to the end.

The higher we rise, the farther we shall fall, if we should fall, and many people in this world judge our church by the falls, instead of judging by the sublimity and grandeur of our object, and the endeavor to reach it in spite of worldly knowledge and opposition.

JOHN PILLING.

LITTLE WOODY, SASKATCHEWAN, February 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the testimonies and sermons of the HERALD. I receive much good from the same. We have no elder here and only a few Saints. We hope the time will come when we can live among Saints, and learn more about this gospel.

I ask an interest in the prayers of God's people that we may be more faithful.

Wishing success to all the Saints, I am,

Your sister,

MRS. C. PERRY.

BATH, ILLINOIS, February 5, 1916.

Editors Herald: The old-time missionaries who have labored here, and others, will be glad to know that the Master has blessed the seed sown, and that to-day at Snicarte there is a good spiritual branch of thirty members. Most of us are young Saints, only two years old in the work, but we may have had some experiences not had by older Saints. We have held the ensign up before the people here amid the most severe persecutions, even having, in the beginning, to carry our pump guns to prayer meeting in order to protect our lives, and the lives of our loved ones. And strange to say, the worst persecutors were the strongest members in our neighboring church. When they needed bricks to throw at our meeting house, they got them out of the foundation of their own church, and the hole is there yet.

We were spoken evilly of, and our women were slandered. We were accused of theft, and our speciality along this line was "white hogs," so our kind Baptist friends said. As in the days of Christ, so it is to-day, the way of truth is evilly spoken of, and by the very class of people who were at the head of the mobs then; people who made loud, long, hollow prayers, that didn't go any higher than their heads. Do you know, dear Saints and friends, this testimony, and this persecution has been to us a great blessing, as it has kept us in the bond of brotherly love one for another and made us meek and humble. As a result the Master has blessed us with his Spirit, and made us strong in the faith and ready to do his will at all times.

I think the boat of the Saints is sometimes on too much water, as a result of which it glides along, the members go to sleep at their posts, and the boat drifts with the current, never getting anywhere, doing no harm and not much good. When the boat is being rent and torn by the gale, and the waves of persecution and trials are beating upon it, then the sailors are awake to their duty, every one ready and listening with strained ear for the captain's order, as they know it takes united effort to save the ship, and bring the cargo of living souls safely into port without the loss of any.

Saints, your duty may be a small one, but let us all keep our hand on the rope, ready at any time to do our Master's will, for our captain may call at an unexpected time. May we always hold the light of this gospel high before the people, that it may be an ensign to all who are seeking the truth, is the prayer of your brother.

In bonds,

P. R. BURTON.

ALPENA, MICHIGAN, February 8, 1916.

Editors Herald: We are still alive in this part of the Lord's vineyard. We have been privileged to have Elder Alvin R. Ellis with us. He came on January 8 and remained until the 12th, preaching each night. Not many outsiders attended the services, but we feel that much good was done. The Saints are trying to set a godly example to those who do not believe.

Our branch has a full quota of officers, and all are trying to work in their respective offices. We have not seen a time in our experience with the branch here when unity prevailed as at present. The work is in the hands of young but earnest workers. With the help of God, we labor to build up the kingdom.

We have a neat little church, dedicated last fall. Elvin Hall is priest of the branch; Andrew Emil, teacher; Thomas Hardy, deacon; George Smith, secretary. The writer is presiding elder, having the assistance of Elder S. W. Rudd. We are in need of an organist. Our children are growing up under the influence of spiritual parents, and will be of a great help in this work. We have been fortunate this winter in having had little sickness. We expect the district conference to be held here next June.

With God's direction we are striving to spread the angel message.

In gospel bonds,

WILLARD PARKS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 8, 1916.

Editors Herald: I was baptized June 26, 1910, by J. E. Matthews, confirmed by Brethren Griffiths and Matthews. Soon after I united with the church I left Columbus and located where there were no Saints. I strayed from the path of our Lord. My father, James Moler, learned that I had left Columbus, and wrote me that I had made a mistake, and that I should have stayed near the church. After a year I began to see my error. I made my condition a subject of prayer, that if it were the Lord's will, the way might be opened for me to return, so I am here again.

For a long time I did not go to church as I should have done. The Lord began to show me in a dream my condition. I went to a prayer meeting and found some young boys holding a meeting. I resolved then and there to be one of them as often as I could. I began to receive spiritual strength. I studied the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

The more I read the more I realized I was not acceptable to the Lord. I have been a member of the Knights of Pythias for fifteen years and was always in good standing. I have decided to forsake the lodge. Christ tells us we cannot serve two masters. Christ told the young man to go and sell what he had and follow him. He told Peter and Andrew to leave their fishing and follow him.

My prayers are that all who claim to be Saints will lay aside everything that is not of God, and become pure in heart. Let us conserve our funds to spend in advancing the cause of Christ.

Your brother,
W. A. MOLER.

MIMICO, ONTARIO, February 15, 1916.

Editors Herald: Time flies, tide waits for no man; and lost time can never be regained. The wrapper on my paper says time is up, that is, for me to receive it until my subscription is renewed.

Some years ago I was taught a lesson by a neighbor who was reading my HERALD, and who said, "Why, you Saints do not pay your debts. Your editor is asking for the Saints to pay their back subscriptions." I came to hesitate to loan my papers unless the subscription was paid.

It may seem hard for our poor Saints to pay at the proper time, yet many daily and weekly papers are paid for during the year. If I could manage it so, every Saint in good standing would receive the HERALD each week. Where there is a branch the lot could be sent to the librarian. In the HERALD we have departments ranging from international interest to the Mothers' Home Column. What about a Fathers' Home Column?

The prayers of the Saints were asked nine years ago through the HERALD in my behalf. I was about to be operated on for a cancer in the large intestines. Two elders of the church administered to me. After this two doctors examined me and disagreed. Third was called, and after examination said the hospital was the place for me. When I was taken there this physician said he did not dare to operate, that I was too far gone. Six more physicians examined me. They said the same, that I was too far gone. When I was taken from my home my neighbor said, "There goes poor Mr. Freeman for his last ride on earth."

A specialist was called. He said he did not know what might be done, but he could try. He said I only had four more days to live unless relieved.

It would take too much space to give a full account of my experiences in the hospital, and during the many months I was helpless as a babe in bed at home. After two years and nine months, I returned to my work again, and am now enjoying very good health, having been at work for the last seven years. I can walk as much as eight miles without a rest. The specialist who performed the operation says I will live to a good old age. I am sixty-eight the 9th of next May.

I write that the Saints who have known me in past years may learn of my good condition of health. Since affliction I can truly say, "Nearer my God to thee." It may be asked, Why was I not restored under the hands of the elders? I can only answer that question by referring to John 9:3, where it is said, "That the works of God should be made manifest." Doctors and nurses said my case was a perfect miracle.

Your brother,
F. M. FREEMAN.

GALES FERRY, CONNECTICUT, February 9, 1916.

Editors Herald: We are still among the scattered Saints. We endeavor to walk in the light, but in these days of hurry and strife we find it takes a power higher than our own to enable us to keep on the high plane required of the Saints.

I was privileged to attend our district conference at Fall River Massachusetts, and was greatly blessed and edified by the prayers and testimonies of the brothers and sisters. It did me good as I listened to the word of the Lord in prophecy at this conference, saying that the Saints should put aside all strife and endeavor only to push forward in the gospel. We were especially admonished to bring in our tithes.

Brother S. A. Burgess and his wife, the daughter of Brother and Sister Amos M. Chase, were present at this conference, from Worcester. Brother Burgess was to have been the morning speaker, but there being a large number present, with the sacrament and three ordinations to be attended to, it was thought best to occupy in a testimony meeting until noon.

Elder U. W. Greene delivered a timely and powerful sermon concerning the gathering to the regions round about, referring to the command for the people in the eastern countries to send moneys to buy lands in Zion as still being in force. We were all blessed. I for one came home with a renewed determination to accomplish all that the Lord requires at my hands.

My health is not good. I ask the prayers of the Saints that our heavenly Father may bless me spiritually and physically.

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

Palestine

Some time ago I wrote to you giving a brief statement of my late illness and the reason why I am still in Jerusalem. I am glad to say I am better, though it seems it will be a long time before I shall regain the strength I have lost. When I was taken ill the promise was made to me that after I should pass through my sickness my health would be better. This promise gave me the hope of recovery when the doctors said there was none. And so through the manifold mercies and blessings of God I am still permitted to be numbered among the living.

I regret I was unable to go home when the call came, but there is no escape from the inevitable. Sister Jenkins has certainly had a hard time of it, and is still having it. Sister Brown has been ill in bed for over a month with pneumonia, and being eighty years of age, has been quite helpless. I am glad to say, however, that she is better, and we are beginning to entertain hopes of her recovery, notwithstanding her advanced age.

The early rains were rather late last fall, and we were becoming anxious lest we should be short of water this summer, but, thank the Lord, we have had more rain this winter than we have had since 1911 and 1912. We had snow also, the first since 1910 and 1911. Our prayer is that the locusts will not come this summer.

We need and ask the prayers of the Saints. We are still at work, still hoping, for the work of God must triumph.

REES JENKINS.

News from Branches

Oelwein, Iowa

We are still holding up the gospel banner at this place, that all who will may gather round it. Elders Holloway, Long and others preached in a church east of Oelwein before Christmas. There were a few, four I believe, added to the church. Yesterday Sister Marie Moffet was received by letter from Lamoni, Iowa, Branch. She has been living in the community for some time.

Elder W. B. Weston, of Lamont, has been elected president of this branch. C. D. Shippy has been ordained teacher. We are doing fairly well, but there is room for improvement. One of our good literature committee, Sister Laura Clark, assisted by her husband, has done a noble work east of Oelwe in, scattering tracts and telling of the doctrine. They were instrumental in bringing the above-mentioned members into the church.

We hold Religio services at the residence of Brother E. G. Speers. Other branch meetings and Sunday school are at the residence of Brother C. D. Shippy. Brother Weston comes from Lamont and administers the sacrament, leads in the prayer and testimony meeting, and speaks for us the third Sunday of each month.

In gospel bonds,
GEORGE G. HODGES.

What Do You Live For?

Why do you live, my weary friend?
What purpose have you here?
Is it to cheer the lives of men,
Removing doubt and fear?

Or do you live for selfish ends—
To seek some great reward?
And when things don't go as they should,
Complain your lot is hard?

If you are selfish, life is vain—
You're wretched, poor and weak;
But if you live for others' good,
You're blessed, pure and meek.

It isn't what we claim to be,
It's what we are that counts.
Our lives consist of little things
And not of large amounts.

So, brother, you may bless the earth,
Or you may be its curse;
Your life is what you make it
For better or for worse.

You may assist some needy one,
You may give hope and cheer;
Or you may blight the hopes of life,
And cause men doubt and fear.

Of course you have your choice in this,
To do just what you will;
And whether you do good or bad,
You'll answer for it still.

So, brother, think before you act,
And seek to help your kind—
To lift them to a better state
With purer heart and mind.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

The Little Armchair

Nobody sits in the little armchair;
It stands in the corner dim;
But a white-haired mother gazing there,
And yearning, thinking of him,
Sees through the dusk of the long ago
The bloom of her boy's sweet face,
As he rocks so merrily to and fro,
With a laugh that cheers the place.

Sometimes he holds a book in his hand,
Sometimes a pencil and slate,
And the lesson is hard to understand,
And the figures hard to mate;
But she sees the nod of his father's head,
So proud of the little son,
And she hears the word so often said,
"No fear for our little one."

They were wonderful days, the dear sweet days,
When a child with sunny hair
Was here to scold, to kiss and to praise,
At her knee in the little chair.
She lost him back in the busy years
When the great world caught the man,
And he strode away, past hopes and fears,
To his place in the battle's van.

But now and then in a wistful dream,
Like the picture out of date,
She sees a head with a golden gleam
Bent o'er a pencil and slate;
And she lives again the happy day,
The day of her young life's spring,
When the small armchair stood just in the way,
The center of everything.

The Lane

I trudged along a country lane
When I was only nine;
'Twas moist and fresh from recent rain
And oh, the air was fine!
Along the path were asters blue,
And yellow goldenrod,
And here and there a wild bird flew,

Again I walked a country lane—
A youth of twenty now—
'Twas wet the same with recent rain,
But now frowns marred my brow.
My suit was of the latest cut,
I wore new, shiny ties,
Oh, how I scorned the cart wheel's rut!
And those drear, lowering skies!

Last week I found a little lane—
(I'm seventy-five to-day)—
'Twas damp with trace of misty rain
And smelled of new-mown hay.
It took my memory back once more
To those sweet boyhood hours.
And once again I could adore
The fields of autumn flowers.

Oh, now, of life I used to know,
Pray give me just a day
That I a-down the lane may go
With boyish laughter gay!
Would that I might for aye forget
That once such pride was mine,
I lost the charm of roadsides wet,
And autumn's shade and shine!

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral

To the Saints and Friends of Mission Number 13, Comprising the Virginias, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Southern Indiana; Greeting: By the all-wise providence of our heavenly Father, we are spared to begin another year's work for the furtherance of his cause.

This is a time of stern realities and there is no other employment that man can be engaged in that will bring him as certain and bountiful rewards as that of building up the kingdom of God and establishing its righteousness. To this end it is our duty to bend every legitimate effort so that when the year is ended and the sheaves are garnered we can individually say, "I have not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God" not in word only but in deed as well.

There is ample work for the "helps" as well as the "governments" throughout the mission, therefore let the auxiliaries work with their whole heart to prepare the young for the time when greater responsibilities shall rest upon them as the chief supporters and executives of the earthly kingdom, and see that the undefiled faith is thoroughly instilled in the pure minds of the coming stalwarts.

Without perfect coordination between the local and missionary arms of the kingdom, the work will be badly retarded in its progress; therefore we hope that the local priesthood will work assiduously to warn their neighbors of the true conditions that we are confronting in the world, and expound to them the law which if obeyed will guarantee to them the only true safety that can be found in the world when wars will be poured out upon all nations—the threshold of which times we are apparently now upon; and where there is more work than can successfully be carried to a triumphant conclusion, do not be backward in applying to the minister in charge and he will go himself or send those at his disposal. Remember that the Lord has promised great rewards to those who save even but one during their entire life. Then let each individual of the kingdom in this mission make a special effort to get one or more during this conference year.

In the Virginias Brother H. E. Winegar will be my assistant in charge, having as his special helpers Thomas Newton and J. M. Nunley.

J. W. Metcalf will be in charge of southern Indiana and northern and eastern Kentucky, assisted by Brethren S. S. Smith, L. C. Moore, A. Gratz and W. R. Kapnick.

Kentucky and Tennessee not included in the above-named territory will be under the direct control of J. R. McClain, whose coworkers in the missionary line will be F. A. Rowe, Fred Moser, jr., and C. A. Nolan. These brethren will also work over into the Carolinas as much as possible.

F. M. Slover, assisted by Edward Rannie, A. G. Miller, A. E. Warr and what local men may be mustered into service, will care for the work in Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, and as much of the Carolinas as may be possible.

Those throughout the mission who may have a need for assistance of the missionary arm of the work should not be backward in making their wants known to the minister in general charge as well as to the assistant in charge, and after consultation we will do the best we can for you. The evangelization of the world is the object of all, and whether you may be designated a local or traveling minister, your object should be to pour out your lives into that of others, and by means of the virtue that you have obtained from the Master so influence others that the course of their lives, in the future would be following Christ.

The wise admonition of the Apostle Paul to "lay hands suddenly on no man" is a part of wisdom to-day as well as when given, and it will therefore be advisable to get the sanction of the district president and minister in general charge, or the district conference, as well as the sanction of the prospective minister's home branch before ordaining any person to any office in the priesthood. We so advise that the sacredness of the priesthood might the more carefully be safeguarded.

As all opponents who offer terms of debate are not generally overanxious to grant our debaters equally favorable terms as they desire for themselves, it is advised that consultation be had with the minister in general charge before signing up propositions except the disputants be the assistant ministers in charge, and where possible I would wish to assist in arranging the time of such debate.

Where conferences and reunions have not previously set the time of their meeting I wish the assistant ministers in charge and district presidents or the committee who have such in hand to consult with me before determining the time of such gathering, for I wish to arrange so as to provide the best possible missionary services for the occasion.

The late General Conference was a source of great spiritual encouragement and development to all who went there with the hope of being so blessed, and the optimistic glow on the faces of the missionaries as they started out to their new appointments was encouraging indeed and bespeaks for the work of the year an impetus not hitherto felt.

If we estimate ourselves individually in the true light as our heavenly Father does, and then collectively realize that we are workers together with God, great good must be accomplished.

I will be pleased to receive your communications on the different phases of the work when you so desire.

Address me at 44 Balaclava Street, Saint Thomas, Ontario, Canada.

Respectfully your colaborer for the cause we love,

R. C. RUSSELL.

To the Saints of Mission Number 12, The Great Lakes Mission, comprising Northern Illinois, Northern Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Ontario, and Quebec; Greeting: The General Conference is a thing of the past and the laborers for the Master have been assigned to their respective fields. The year is before us and we enter upon the work confident of success in our efforts. Last year was a good year for the church and the results of the missionaries in this field were good, resulting in 620 baptisms by the missionaries. We hope that we may be able to do as well or better the coming year. Our President told us at the late conference that the hastening time was here. Every officer and member should be ready for service for the Master. This latter-day work is the most important work in the world to-day. We can be colaborers with the Master if we will. The missionaries will need the help of the local officers and Saints. Let all work together for the onward progress of the work intrusted to all.

I have made choice of the following brethren as my assistants in their respective fields: W. E. Peak, Kewanee, Illinois; J. O. Dutton, Northeastern Illinois; Leonard Houghton, Northern Wisconsin; L. O. Wildermuth, Southern Wisconsin; E. N. Burt, Western Michigan; Alvin R. Ellis, Northern Michigan; G. W. Burt, Central Michigan; William M. Grice, Eastern Michigan; J. D. Stead, Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana; R. D. Weaver, Chatham District, Canada; W. D. Ellis, Toronto District, Canada; G. C. Tomlinson, London District, Canada.

All missionaries should report direct to me the first of July, October, January, and March. Please report promptly. Send reports to my home address, 426 South River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri.

In gospel bonds,

J. F. CURTIS.

April 28, 1916.

To the Saints of Southern Indiana: Having been appointed to labor as assistant minister in charge of this district, I earnestly ask the cooperation of all the Saints, and especially the local forces. All who hold the priesthood, fall in line with the missionary and labor together with God for the accomplishment of the great work that must be done to prepare the bride for the coming of the bridegroom.

I hope to see a report from all the local priesthood sent to the district conference to be held at Indianapolis, Indiana, May 21 and 22.

Let those in the unorganized parts of Kentucky write to us and tell us their needs, and the needs of that part of the country. I hope to meet all the missionaries who have been appointed to labor in our district at the conference at Indianapolis, where we will plan our work for the year.

My field address will be 315, North Thirty-second Street, Louisville, Kentucky, home address, 813 West Kansas Street, Independence, Missouri.

J. W. METCALF.

To the Far West and Nodaway Districts: Having been appointed to labor in the above field, I would like to hear from the branch presidents, as to the advisability of laboring in their respective branches, and naming the dates preferred. Please bear in mind that there are a large number of branches, and, of necessity, I must be permitted to have a voice in fixing, or naming the date, which I shall try to do satisfactorily to all, and give ample time, so that all may be able to assist in making the services successful. We shall try to give the branches in the country (farming communities) the benefit of the good moonlight, and at a time when not overtaxed with work. Please let me hear from you soon, so that I can arrange accordingly. Respectfully,

Your coloborer,

WILLIAM LEWIS.

"In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage"

BY ESTELLA WIGHT

No recommendation of this story is needed for those who have followed it, wholly or in part, in Stepping Stones.

To those who have not, we can say that it is an original and natural presentation of the gospel cause. The characters are unusually well drawn and the situations are real—many of them exciting, tense with life and action. The domestic pictures, especially, are pretty and realistic.

Altogether it is a splendid Latter Day Saint work, and deserves the attention of readers. A fine book to lend outsiders.

Illustrated cover, excellent cloth binding, inside illustration; 320 pages. Price, $1, postpaid.

SUNSHINE PARTIES

are every day affairs in the South in the Winter time---for when blizzards, slush and snow are quite the fashion in the North, balmy breezes, sunny skies, moonlit bays and tropical flowers are the fashion in the South. And those who pack their grips and go South at this time, reap rich rewards in health dividends and delightful recreation and return, realizing more than ever before, the real value of a winter vacation in that romantic, historic and beautiful land south of the Mason and Dixon Line.

The cost is low---perhaps not as much as you thought it would be. Come in and let's talk it over.

SAY TO THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL, GO FORWARD.—PART I

(Sermon preached by Elbert A. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday morning, April 30, 1916. Reported by Winsome Smith.)

Mindful of the conference that has recently closed, and of the peculiar conditions in which we find ourselves, I have endeavored to cast about and find some particular text that will be of especial importance to us on this occasion. I find such a text in Exodus 14: 15:

"Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."

If I were to pause now, without saying anything more, you would have the burden and keynote of my message on this occasion: "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."

We are of the children of Israel by adoption. Israel, you will remember, obtained his name in the first instance when he wrestled with the angel and received a blessing. In these latter days we have received a blessing from the angel's hands, and by means of that blessing we are numbered with the children of Israel. And the same message that came to them in that age comes to us to-day with equal force: "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."

We have reached what we consider the end of a period of transition; a period of change. The church, to a certain extent, for a number of years, has been marking time, accumulating force, as we believe, and now the time has come to say unto them, that they shall go forward.

MISSION WORK FIRST

The question presents itself to us now, along what lines shall we go forward? And I believe that you are all in accord with me when I contend that we should go forward first of all with our missionary work. The Order of Bishops presented certain recommendations during the late conference, as follows:

As representatives of the financial department of the church, we herewith submit what we consider are the present needs:

1. Sustaining the missionary force and the poor and needy.
2. The paying of the church debt.
3. The erection of proper offices for the general church officers as provided by General Conference Resolutions numbers 533 and 644.

I find myself in accord with these resolutions, especially with the idea that the primary need is to preach the gospel and take care of the poor and needy, and also, most positively, that we shall pay off the church debt.

The first great commandment to the church is, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel unto every creature." There is no other consideration of equal importance; there is no other duty equally great devolving upon the church to-day.

This commandment has been reinforced from time to time, or restated. In section 119 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants we are told: "Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may."

There is no limit set excepting the limit of our ability and our power. "So far and so widely as you may." Nothing is required beyond that; and if we come short of that we are under condemnation.

It is true that at present we are hindered in the work of preaching the gospel in foreign fields, but by and by there will surely come conditions when those fields will be opened up, for the statement is made by divine authority that this gospel shall be preached in all the world, for a witness, and then shall the end come.

So we say, first of all, Let the children of Israel go forward in the preaching of the gospel in all the world so far and so widely as they may.

STAKE WORK

In the second instance, we may say that our attention should be given to the local, and especially the stake work. The missionary work and the local work are closely associated, and the time must come when the local men and the missionaries shall work together with a better cooperation than they have ever hitherto achieved in order that all may be warned.

All these local men who hold the high priesthood, and such priests as can do so, should be engaged in missionary work in the regions round about the localities in which they live, and we trust that arrangements may be perfected by which their services may be enlisted, and that before long.

All the local church laborers of the lesser priesthood, the "standing ministers," priests, teachers, and deacons, ought to be busy, going forward, occupying in their office and in their calling. Why did they receive ordination? Clearly in order that they might accomplish good and labor in harmony with the divine will.

Most important, perhaps, of this local work, is that which confronts the stakes at the present time; and we believe that there is before the stakes a period of activity, or at least a period of great opportunity.

In harmony with the communication from the Presidency and Twelve, the late conference recommended the reorganization of the stake presidency here in Lamoni. Our President John Smith, mindful that age sets a limit to aspiration, told us, possibly more than a year ago, that his resignation was at our disposal at any time when we should conclude that the stake presidency should be reorganized. That, I believe, was a noble example. The conference passed upon this recommendation and approved it—that the stake presidency should be reorganized, with Brother John F. Garver as stake president.

It may be said that this should not have come before the General Conference; but it was considered in the joint council in connection with other stake matters, and went to the conference all in one document. It will come in due time before the Lamoni Stake, and the fact that the General Conference has passed on it will not rob the people of any right they ever had to either accept or reject.

REORGANIZATION OF INDEPENDENCE STAKE

At the same time the Presidency and Twelve recommended the reorganization of the Independence Stake, the territory formerly included therein to be divided into three stakes, to be known as the Independence Stake, the Kansas City Stake, and the Holden Stake.

This recommendation, as those who were present very well know, met with opposition. That was all right. We do not feel at all disturbed when those who cannot agree with a document coming from the leading quorums have the courage to oppose it. In fact, I would feel a degree of concern if the elders had any fear or any hesitancy in so doing. I will say in passing that I have no fear that such a time is imminent. There is no evidence that there is any waning of that disposition to stand by what the people may believe to be their rights.

But the question was passed upon and indorsed by the conference, by a large majority, and that, of course, is the end of controversy in the matter, or should be. However, for the benefit of those who were not present, I wish to make one or two statements, as it appears to me, from things that I have heard, that the situation has been misunderstood by some who were not there.

The opposition was based, mainly, I believe, on the thought that such a reorganization of the Independence Stake ought to take place following divine revelation. Now the question would arise, of course, should such a recommendation come of necessity as the result of a formal, written revelation, passed upon by the quorums, and then passed to the conference?

In a joint council meeting of the First Presidency, Twelve, Seventy, and Order of Bishops, held after this matter had been considered in the conference, President Frederick M. Smith made the statement that he was positive that this recommendation was based on divine inspiration. That statement has the more force when you pause to reflect that Brother Fred M. is exceedingly cautious when making claim to divine inspiration or revelation. It is true that he did not make that statement before the conference, one reason perhaps being that he did not get to make a speech on the main question; but he did make it before the joint council, as I have observed, and you may have it for what it is worth. I think it no violation of confidence to refer to it here.

We believe that so far as custom is concerned, this matter was in harmony with the precedent set by the old church, as we sometimes refer to the church during the days of Joseph the Martyr. It is true that in 1873 the Lord, speaking on stake organizations, said that there should not be any stakes organized until he should command it; but in 1901 he did command that two stakes should be organized, indicating that the period of prohibition had passed. The absolute prohibition against the organization of any stakes being lifted, we may assume that the church might go forward, under divine inspiration, operating through those quorums to whom this work properly belongs, so far as oversight is concerned.

I have mentioned the example set by the old church. I believe that practically all of the stakes in the old church were organized without direct, formal, written revelation—nearly all of them at least. But it does not follow that the spirit of inspiration did not direct in the matter.

Well, it is alleged that in the old church they made some mistakes, and that is very evidently true. But in order to rob these historic instances of stake organization of the virtue of precedent, formally observed, it must be proved that in this instance they made a mistake. We believe that the church from 1830 to 1844 was the church of the living God. True, it was not infallible. They made some mistake, but we, being in succession, must honor their conference actions just as much as our own, excepting in those instances where we can prove that they were acting in opposition to the will of God and the revealed law of God. So the burden of proof would shift to those who are making the opposition along this line, and they must prove that the church was wrong in its work of stake organization in those early days in order to give their objection any force or weight. The assumption must be that they were operating under divine inspiration and in harmony with law.

The stake at Nauvoo was organized without any written, formal revelation, but later the Lord referred to it as "this stake which I have planted"; so we may confidently infer that their work met with his approval rather than the reverse—certainly he did not thus indorse a wrong procedure.

I have simply made these observations for the benefit of those who were not present. You may take them for what they may be worth, and if you do not agree with them, it is your God-given privilege to disagree, so far as that is concerned.

SOME STATISTICS

The time evidently has come for intensive cultivation along this line of stake work, and I may give you a few statistics to show how unconsciously we have been growing in numbers, in Zion.

When the Independence Stake was organized in 1901, there were approximately 1,900 members. The new Independence Stake, consisting of Independence alone, the city of Independence, within the city limits, will have 3,300—nearly twice as many as there were in the entire Independence Stake at the time of its organization. Kansas City Stake will have 1,778, or very nearly as many as there were in the entire stake; while the stake at Holden will have 1,172 members. So you can see we have gradually been gathering, almost unconsciously, and the divine prediction that those who were faithful should remain, and return, they and their children, to their inheritance, has been fulfilled to a degree.

I believe that we may apply our text to this line of church work and say to the children of Israel, that they shall go forward in their stake work, not only here at Lamoni, but also in Independence Stake, in the Kansas City Stake, and in Holden Stake.

MORGENTHAU RESIGNED.—Henry Morgenthau, ambassador to Turkey, and who recently returned to this country, has resigned.

ENORMOUS PROFITS.—The United States Steel Corporation for the first quarter of the present year, realized a net profit of about $60,000,000.

PARCEL POST SUSPENDED.—Because of lack of steamship transportation facilities, parcel post service between the United States and Holland has been suspended.

LABOR TROUBLE.—Two men were killed and a score wounded when on the 2d shots were exchanged between strikers and deputy sheriffs and guards at the Carnegie Steel Company works at Braddock, Pennsylvania.

CESSION RESUMED.—It is rumored that the American and Danish governments, after a lapse of fourteen years, have resumed negotiations looking to the cession of the Danish West Indian islands, Saint Thomas, Saint Croix, and Saint John, to the United States.

TEACHERS SUSTAINED.—The appellate court at Chicago on the 1st, discredited the rule of the Chicago Board of Education designed to compel public-school teachers to withdraw from the Teachers' Federation. The decision was on appeal of the board from an injunction issued by the Supreme Court restraining it from enforcing the rule. President Jacob Loeb, of the board, and author of this rule, is quoted as saying that the bill will be taken to the Supreme Court.

ARMY INCREASE.—Failure of the conferees to agree on fundamental provision of the House and Senate army reorganization bills has been reported to the House. The matters at issue include the size of the army, and the volunteer army plan, which the Senate proposed to substitute for the National Guard feature of the House bill. The House conferees are reported willing to compromise on the size of the army, but the Senate conferees are said to stand firm for the volunteer army plan. The present authorized strength of the army is 100,000. The House bill would increase the army to about 140,000, the Senate bill to 250,000.

IRISH UPRISING.—All Irish rebels have surrendered, and conditions throughout the territory affected by the uprising are assuming a normal condition. Several hundred dead and wounded are reported, with property damage mounting into the millions. Seven men, signers of the republican proclamation issued at the outset of the uprising, including Patrick H. Pearse, "provisional president" of Ireland, have been court martialed and shot. Sixteen others were sentenced to death, but their sentences have been commuted to ten years imprisonment, with one exception, which is eight years. Others have been imprisoned, and trials are still pending.

FREEDOM FOR FILIPINOS.—After voting 213 to 165 to strike the Clark amendment from the pending Philippines independence bill, the House, on the 1st, by a vote of 251 to 17, passed a substitute for the entire measure the Jones Bill, providing for a greater degree of self-government, and carrying a preamble declaring the intention of the United States to grant independence ultimately, but not fixing a date. The bill as passed by the Senate on February 4, with the Clark amendment, would have provided independence for the Philippines in from two to four years, at the discretion of the President, or on further action by Congress. The matter now goes to a conference between the two houses.

EUROPEAN WAR.—If reports, or lack of them, is an indication of the present status, the week past has been one of little activity on all fronts, except that of Verdun. In the vicinity of Verdun the French have assumed the offensive, where they have made minor gains, German action being confined mainly to artillery fire. There has been no change elsewhere. Reports from the Balkans deal only with political unrest in Greece. Germany announces the loss of a Zeppelin in a raid on the eastern coast of England the night of the 2d, and it is reported from London that two more Zeppelins were destroyed on the 5th, making thirty-one of these German airships to be destroyed during the war. A British army yacht and a mine sweeper have been sunk by mines in the Mediterranean. A bill for general and immediate compulsory service is under consideration by Great Britain.

GERMAN REPLY.—The German reply to the late American note covering the sinking of the Sussex and the German submarine policy, was made public in the press of the 6th. This note admits "possibility" that the Sussex was torpedoed by a German submarine, and asks time for further investigation. It states that German submarine commanders have heretofore been instructed to conduct their warfare in keeping with international law, except "against enemy trade carried on enemy freight ships encountered in the war zone surrounding Great Britain." Germany further accedes to the demands of the United States in the matter of submarine warfare in the following language:

In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and the destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared a naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives unless the ship attempt to escape or offer resistance.

The concession, however, is accompanied by a complaint that Great Britain is violating trade laws, and the hope is expressed "that the Government of the United States will now demand" that the British Government conform to international law, the note incorporating the words:

Should steps taken by the Government of the United States not attain the object it desires, to have the laws of humanity followed by all belligerent nations, the German Government would then be facing a new situation in which it must reserve to itself complete liberty of decision.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—The conferences between Generals Scott and Obregon have continued at El Paso, Texas. A tentative agreement reached, as announced by the press, would provide for an active campaign by Carranza troops against bandits in the regions south of the present line of the American expedition, and for gradual withdrawal of the American forces to the border, as the ability of the Mexican troops to adequately police the country were demonstrated. This arrangement was satisfactory to the United States Government, and it is reported that Carranza approved it save in a few minor points. At this juncture unknown Mexican bandits crossed the Rio Grande, into Brewster County, Texas, on the night of the 5th, and attacked a detachment of nine cavalymen, at Glen Springs, killing three, and a ten-year-old-boy. Two American cavalymen were wounded and one is missing. A posse of civilians are reported in pursuit of the bandits, and United States troops have been ordered to the scene of trouble. The conferences before referred to, were interrupted for consideration of the bandit raid on Glen Springs. One engagement between United States and Villa forces is unofficially reported. The American troops seem to have been shifted so as to be advantageously stationed for the protection of their positions and lines of communication. Carranza forces are reported to be in a vigorous campaign against Zapata in the south. Carranza has issued a decree doubling taxes throughout the country, to continue until the substitution of the new currency has been affected. Another decree restores freight and passenger rates on the national railway to the basis prevailing before the revolution. All concessions in the state of Sonora have been annulled, including public service concessions and franchises. No more exclusive franchises are to be issued, and no further tax exemptions allowed.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

ITEMS OF INTEREST.—We learn that the work of transferring and reorganizing the affairs of the Presiding Bishopric is going forward. We are informed by wireless from Independence that before going East Bishop McGuire took over the cash account in the Bishop's office and left Brother James F. Keir in charge of the office. Bishop McGuire elsewhere in this issue announces his permanent address is Box 125, Independence, Missouri. President Frederick M. Smith was to have gone East May 8 to be absent for about two weeks. It is expected that the reorganization of the Lamoni Stake Presidency will take place after his return, probably about June 15; and the reorganization of the Independence Stake, also of the Standing High Council, at a little later date.

Original Articles

ZION

In the Mosaic economy was reflected a "shadow of good things to come" under the operation of the church of Jesus Christ. (Hebrews 10:1.) Inasmuch as the substance was to be found in the church as established by Jesus Christ, its work of freeing men from bondage of every sort and leading them to God must, when faithfully performed, transcend in magnitude the great work accomplished under the Mosaic regime.

It is therefore evident that provision exists in the gospel of Christ for the members of the kingdom of God doing more than merely loving God in an abstract sense, saying prayers or rejoicing in the glories that belong to a future state. Too often have men been simply religionists and not Christians. The result has been that their works, though in the Christian dispensation, were a "shadow" of the marvelous accomplishments of the people under the Mosaic polity. This ought not to be, for the precepts, powers, and governmental principles of the church under the rule of Christ far exceed the imperfect covenant through which God wrought with Israel.

CONCERNING THE GATHERING

We look forward as a church to the establishing of Zion. As a social ideal fervently cherished by many is attended by a collective effort to secure its benefits, it follows that in various localities there may be gatherings of the people in an attempt to have their ideals meet with realization. In the times of Moses God led the people to Palestine; which fact identifies God with the principles of a gathering of his people. Christ has also identified himself with the principle of a gathering of his people: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" (Matthew 23:37.) This was spoken in the Christian dispensation.

It is thus seen that the disciples of Christ believed in a gathering of the people under divine direction. The gathering of a few people or of many together under the same influence of the precepts of Christ can not conflict with the rights of other citizens, the object being to live altogether in accord with the law of the land and at the same time to carry into execution the following two commandments, without which there is no true expression of the power and possibilities of the Christian religion:

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Matthew 22:37-39.

Zion is the practical realization of the ideal of the church; a condition where men do not merely eulogize the divine character of Christ and pass encomiums upon his perfect law, but where they with joy carry into operation all of his teachings relating to the salvation of men. Harmonious social relations between man and men are as necessary as a proper relation between man and God. In fact, without a true relation among men there is no proper relation between man and God. How high and precious is the ideal of the church!

VITAL PRINCIPLES

The world is suffering to-day from industrial oppression, unequal distribution of the necessities of life, selfishness, religious confusion, and despair, resulting from troublesome times. Who is it that does not hear the great throbbing heart of humanity?

No social order is destined to be permanent or to meet fully the needs of society that does not contain all of the vital governmental principles in properly balanced proportions. Any vital principle left out will later on prove the ground of social revolt.

Under the rule of Christ in his church we note several principles: The theocratic principle of government which provides for God having a leading part in directing his people; the representative principle, which provides for the selecting of delegates, thereby securing to the people self-representation; the democratic, which throws on the people responsibility for the success of their undertakings and consequently leads to their development; and, in a sense, the aristocratic, such as is found in the law providing for those holding the priesthood declaring, when necessary, what is the law of the church. (Doctrine and Covenants 119:7.) Zion, having in it all the governmental principles essential to mankind's welfare, is destined to abide.

The administration of the law of Christ under a divinely authorized ministry must, like in the days of Moses, lead to the freeing of the people from bondage of every sort. The only thing hindering the moving into a higher altitude would be the indisposition on the part of the people to exercise in a favorable manner their power of choice. The Lord does not compel. The true relation is for men to be willing "laborers together with God."

The story of how the Israelites were led out of industrial slavery, were lifted out of degrading conditions into beautiful home life, and enjoyed communication with God, is rich in its symbolism of the principles leading to Zion's redemption, in which the people of God will be gathered and his power be over them. In the Mosaic order the help and direction of God were indispensable to success. The people were reminded that "man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live." (Deuteronomy 8:3.) The relation of God is therein revealed to the industrial, social and religious life of the people. Without his help and direction there can be no true Zion's advancement. The way to freedom is by acknowledging God and following his directing hand. It is essential that the richness of character springing from obedience to the will of God as revealed in his law, should adorn all engaged in Zion's redemption. What freed man in the past must not be neglected in freeing men to-day.

Children of God should beware lest they be caught in the current of a luxury loving age and give not a fair consecration of their talents and means to the establishing of righteousness on earth. The cry of those so neglected will be finally, "The summer has passed, the harvest is ended, and my soul is not saved!"

CONDITIONS TO OBTAIN

The mission of Christ is revealed in part in the following words, read by him in the synagogue of Nazareth:

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.—Luke 4:18, 19.

The gospel of Christ must function in all the secular activities of life; its spirit should affect all institutions and undertakings.

Zion is a condition in which the depths of divine life are sounded, not by a mere contemplation of the divine character and the perfection of his law, but through works as well. James, the brother of our Lord said, "But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead." (James 2:20.) The church has yet a great deal to learn before sensing fully the profound meaning of those words, affecting as they do health, spirituality and Zion's redemption.

In respect to the riches of earth, Zion will produce abundantly, distribute justly, and consume rationally.

In Zion there will be a reduction to a minimum of poverty, as a result of cooperation, and the elimination of selfishness, injustice, and special privilege; disease will to a very large extent be warded off by living in harmony with the "perfect law of liberty," concerning which is written, "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed"; crime will largely disappear, because of the people having become "new creatures in Christ," their lives transformed, and the law of God written in their hearts.

A vast amount of the misery of human life will disappear through the abolition of alcoholism, an intelligent use of the franchise under the influence of spiritual ideals, the abolishing of iniquitous competition, and a disappearance of women being placed in occupations where they are robbed of home, wifehood, and motherhood, and where the effects of employing immatured children resulting in physical, mental, and moral degradation will not be known and should not be known in any community professing civilization.

And, too, the law of environment will work with all its beneficent influence in Zion. The perplexed will be reassured, mourners comforted, the poor cared for, the rights of all classes considered, and the "pure in heart shall see God."

It is written:

Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion: for the time to favor her, yea, the set time, is come. For thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof. So the heathen shall fear the name of the Lord, and all the kings of the earth thy glory. When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory.—Psalm 102:13-16.

Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined.—Psalm 50:2.

And before the coming of the Lord there will have been constructed by the united efforts of his people a "temple" to which the Lord will "suddenly come," and which standing in the midst of Zion will be a perpetual delight to all who know the Lord. (Malachi 3:1-5.)

TO BUILD ACCORDING TO RIGHTEOUSNESS

One's life does not consist in the abundance of one's possessions; but in the qualities that make one a useful and valuable member of society and of the kingdom of God. The attributes of God do not change; and he is concerned about any weak who may be downtrodden, sick neglected, poor uncared for, widows neglected, low wages paid where higher could be paid and are needed, discouraged hearts, and all inequality.

The church has not enlisted to fight the battle of a class against a class, but to announce the principles that apply equally to all men. The following cannot be safely set aside:

Woe unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation, and of judgment and of indignation; The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved! Woe unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, who will not labor with their own hands!—Doctrine and Covenants 56:5.

All must build according to the principles of righteousness found in the Sermon on the Mount and in the Golden Rule in order for their work to be abiding and accepted of God. In all of God's dealings with men, the stamp of sovereignty is placed upon spiritual forces. The mainsprings of life must be brought in contact with God. No system for the perfect amelioration of the conditions of the distressed and oppressed of men is possible with God left out of consideration. The religious element must enter into any true state of social life. Without it the qualities of unselfishness and fidelity will not long continue. The whole question affecting the interests of society is not merely one of dollars and cents; it is one of the true relation of men to men in all of the complexities of civilized life, which must grow out of a true conception of God through Jesus Christ who came to save the world. In Zion the religious element will provide a sense of individual responsibility. The truth of Christ must affect every corner of society. Zion's ideal is in perfect harmony with the vision of the seer of Patmos, which will in the by and by meet with fulfillment: "The tabernacle of God is with men and he shall dwell with them."

Costly dinners, expensive clothing, vain exhibitions of wealth, unnecessary indulgence in pleasure, energies directed toward individual and selfish ends, paraded before the eyes of the world, is one way of proclaiming to them that those things are the chief things of life, and are the gods men ought to worship. Continuing to participate in such things removes one from the companionship of the Man of Galilee.

ALL VOCATIONS SACRED

The true interests of farmers, men of business, mechanics, et al, are closely interwoven with the welfare and building up of the kingdom of God, as is indicated by the following:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that labor-eth in the ministry and him that toyleth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Ibid., 119: 8.

Every vocation that contributes to the well-being of social life appears to me to be sacred. In social life the head cannot say to the foot, "I have no need of thee." The Spirit of the Master of men through the fundamental principles of the gospel of Christ most influence all who give direction to the affairs of human life.

THE NEED OF THE HOUR

The need of the hour is for such a searching diagnosis as will remove all spiritual astigmatism from every member of the church.

Will Zion be redeemed? Most assuredly. But Zion's light is burning now, much more brightly perhaps than some imagine. Look around and behold the moving of God's hand in the church and in the world to accomplish his purposes and fulfill the covenants made with the fathers! Why live altogether in the future? When Zion's redemption is fully accomplished, there will be no more nor greater opportunities for doing good or rendering service to our fellow men than the present affords.

If one is interested in the local work of the church, what a privilege is offered to cooperate! If one is interested in missionary work, the department of the bishopric could be sustained. And among other helps and institutions awaiting the opportunity to bless, and calling for the support of Zion's children are the Sunday school, Religio, Woman's Auxiliary Society with its various departments, college, homes, for the aged, and the home for children, Sanitarium, United Order of Enoch, etc. What an opportunity and royal privilege to take part with God in his great work of latter days! To me Zion exists today; I know of no time when there will be more avenues to enter upon in service to my fellow men.

Behold, I say unto you that Zion shall flourish, and the glory of the Lord shall be upon her, and she shall be an ensign unto the people, and there shall come unto her out of every nation under heaven.—Ibid., 64: 8.

And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we cannot stand. And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy.—Ibid., 45: 13, 14.

Zion is called to stand forth as a deliverer—to be an ensign to all people. Saints, respond to the trumpet call of latter days. Cast in your interests with the church, and let the chief end of life be that happiness which comes from a consecration of your all to the building up of the kingdom of God. "When the Lord shall build up Zion he shall appear in his glory."

May the happy relation God has forecasted he would sustain to the industrial, social, and religious life of his people, be hastened, that it may be said in our day concerning the church: "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined."

AZTEC TRADITIONS AND CUSTOMS

TAKEN FROM PRESCOTT'S CONQUEST OF MEXICO

The most convincing witness of the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon is found within the book itself. The genius of the record is in the spirit that accompanies it. Yet the external proofs of every fact stated in the Book of Mormon are being established in so many ways, and by men so disinterested in our faith, that our claims challenge the attention of every thinking man, and give great strength to our cause.

By far the most advanced of all the native Americans found here by the first discoverers were the Incas of Peru, and the Aztecs of Mexico. Two wonderful histories have been written of these peoples: The Conquest of Peru, and The Conquest of Mexico, by William H. Prescott. These writings are not of recent date (the first was published in 1843) but they contain so many striking facts, corroborative of the Book of Mormon, that they are worth recopying and notice. Prescott is ranked as one of America's greatest men of letters, and perhaps the most gifted of all her many notable historians. With his beautiful style, and keen sense of relation, he combined an indefatigable industry and patience. After he had become fired with the ambition to write a history of Mexico's conquest, he spent seven years in preparation, and when he began to write, he brought to his subject no chance knowledge. He searched through the royal libraries of Europe and of Mexico; copied out the chronicles of the conquerors themselves, and read through thousands of pages of original documents beside. Prescott, while he writes a literary history, writes advisedly, and is sure of his statements.

His first conclusion is, as is that of every other writer acquainted with the subject, that the civilization of the ancient Mexicans, at the time of their discovery by the Spaniards, was in a stage of retrogression, rather than of progress. He states positively that while they display remarkable advancement in society and government as well as in the arts, yet this is an eclipsed glory and far less than their former state. All that the Aztecs had of culture and attainments at the time of their conquest they owed to the great race that must have preceded them.

This is vital to the Book of Mormon claim, because in that book, the rise of the Nephite nation; their great enlightenment; their skill in the arts; their free government and remarkable religion; are all described in detail, together with the history of their utter destruction, and the Lamanite degeneracy. While the historian is at a loss to explain how the Aztecs came by their civilization, and what became of the former enlightened races, the problem is easily solved for us. In the Aztec we recognize the Lamanite, and know the source of his civilization to have been the Nephites, to whom Christ himself came, and among whom he established his church.

First as to the Aztec idea of God, Prescott says:

The Aztecs recognized the existence of a supreme Creator and Lord of the universe. They addressed him, in their prayers, as "the God by whom we live," "omnipresent, that knoweth all thoughts and giveth all gifts," "without whom man is as nothing," "invisible, incorporeal, one God, of perfect perfection and purity," "under whose wings we find repose and a sure defense." These sublime attributes infer no inadequate conception of the true God.

This is Prescott's explanation of the origin of the Aztec religion:

In contemplating the religious system of the Aztecs, one is struck with its apparent incongruity, as if some portion of it had emanated from a comparatively refined people, open to gentle influences, while the rest breathes a spirit of unmitigated ferocity. It naturally suggests the idea of two distinct sources, and authorizes the belief that the Aztecs had inherited from their predecessors a milder faith, on which was afterward engrafted their own mythology. The latter soon became dominant, and gave its dark coloring to the creeds of the conquered nations—which the Mexicans, like the ancient Romans, seem willingly to have incorporated into their own—until the same funereal superstition settled over the farthest borders.

None of the deities of the country suggested such astonishing analogies with Scripture as Quetzalcoatl. . . . He was the white man, wearing a long beard, who came from the East; and who, after presiding over the golden age of Anahuac, disappeared as mysteriously as he had come, on the great Atlantic ocean. As he promised to return at some future date, his reappearance was looked for with confidence by each succeeding generation.

This is strong and unprejudiced evidence that Christ really came to this continent, as he said in the Bible he would; and that he lived with the people and taught them the true faith, and when he left promised to return to them.

The Aztecs had a distinct tradition of the flood.

They believed that two persons survived the Deluge, a man, named Coxcox and his wife. Their heads are represented in an ancient painting, together with a boat floating on the waters, at the foot of a mountain. A dove is also depicted, with the hieroglyphical emblem of languages in his mouth, which he is distributing to the children of Coxcox, who were born dumb. The neighboring people of Mechoacan, inhabiting the same high plains of the Andes, had a still further tradition, that the boat in which Tezpi, their Noah, escaped, was filled with various kinds of animals and birds. After some time, a vulture was sent out from it, but remained feeding on the dead bodies of the giants, which had been left on the earth as the water subsided. The little humming bird was then sent forth, and returned with a twig in its mouth.

"Another point of coincidence is found in the goddess Cioacoatl," "our lady and mother," "the first goddess who brought forth"; "who bequeathed the sufferings of childbirth to women, as the tribute of death"; "by whom sin came into the world." Such was the remarkable language applied by the Aztecs to this venerated deity. She was usually represented with the serpent near her; and her name signified the "serpent-woman." In all this we see much to remind us of the mother of the human family, the Eve of the Hebrew and Syrian nations.

Prescott says the Spaniards were greatly impressed by evidences of the true faith as they believed it. That:

They could not surpress their wonder, as they beheld the cross, the sacred emblem of their own faith, raised as an object of worship in the temples of Anahuac. They met with it in various places; and the image of the cross may be seen at this day, sculptured in bas-relief, on the walls of one of the buildings of Palenque, while a figure bearing some resemblance to that of a child is held up to it, as if in adoration.

Their surprise was heightened when they witnessed a religious rite which reminded them of the Christian communion. On these occasions, an image of the tutelary deity of the Aztecs was made of the flour of maize, mixed with blood, and, after consecration by the priests, was distributed among the people, who, as they ate it, "showed signs of humiliation and sorrow, declaring it was the flesh of the deity." With the same feelings they witnessed another ceremony, that of the Aztec baptism; in which after a solemn invocation, the head and lips of the infant were touched with water, and a name given to it; while the goddess Cioacoatl, who presided over its birth, was implored, "that the sin, which was given to us before the beginning of the world, might not visit the child, but that cleansed by these waters, it might live, and be born anew."

These are but a few of the many corroborative evidences of the historical accuracy of the Book of Mormon. They are to be found in every ruined temple and buried city in the Americas, and are scattered all through Indian tradition. The Book of Mormon bears the historical as well as the Bible and moral tests, and not the weakest of the three is the testimony of the ancient nations found to-day graven on the enduring stones, and buried ruins.

BUILDING CHARACTER

There is a statement which says, "Whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are holy, think on these things."

Man is wonderfully and awfully made. One of the greatest gifts bestowed upon the human family is that of speech, the ability to express thought in such a way as to convey that thought to another. This coupled with the ability through the special organs of hearing, designated to make that exchange complete, furnishes one of the greatest sources of education at our command.

We are living in a great day of education and progress in various directions. Many theories and basic principles which have been held aloft and stood the test for years become undermined and crumble away to be superceded by others seemingly of more durability. These conditions show the need of heeding the admonition to "prove all things and hold fast that which is good." And when we consider the true purpose of this life to be one of a preparatory period, or a day of preparation for something better, as we believe it to be, it behooves us to use all the means at our command to bring ourselves nearer the great goal, and make of self that fully-developed and rounded out character in all its powers as designed by the great Master Builder. This means growth; growth along the line of education and the development of the intellectual powers as here implied.

Now in order for growth to take place there must be an organism or individual entity which has within it the power to react upon or absorb from some source, that which will create within that entity a change toward perfection.

Believing as we do that these bodies are made up of two forms of organization, so to speak, viz, the spirit, and the fleshy organization, or mortal body, we are sometimes almost ready to say that the intellect or understanding and the spirit are one and the same thing. It is not the purpose of this paper, however, to enter into the consideration of the spirit of man further than this: The functions of the body and spirit in this united condition and the power and possibilities of this union by reason of growth and development. Knowledge in general may be considered as being derived from two sources.

There are intellectual states of external origin which are dependent upon the existence and presence of external objects, something which is exterior to the intellect itself.

There are intellectual states of internal origin, such for instance as are expressed by the words truth, falsehood, power, merit, honor, obligation, etc., these are conditions which depend upon the operation of the mind itself for generation: originating within.

The body may well be viewed as the instrument for the use of the mind or spirit, and as such the matter of education of our children rightly demands the very best efforts and methods possible for this development. The Lord has designated the age of eight years as the approximate period in life to reach the degree of development for the assuming of the responsibility of one's own actions.

Accountability or responsibility is inconceivable without a degree of freedom in the choice of one's course in life. This being the case, would it not be the better method to pursue in child government to early in life strive to direct by giving the child a reason why we desire it to do certain things, or refrain from doing others? and in this way we can through suggestion often call forth the exercise of decision in the young mind in favor of reason rather than passion or fancy.

To think, and to will, or choose, are attributes of the mind. The power to choose, or the freedom of the will, does not necessarily conflict with the influences or limitations which one constantly sees thrown around individuals in this life by reason of environment and heredity; nor does it imply the ability to promptly overcome such obstacles, but rather the setting right of one's course, or the maintaining of a true attitude of mind and purpose. Though the complete victory may be temporarily lost, the ground may be gained little by little until the final triumph is reached. This may be questioned by some, as in a case where a strong hereditary tendency for certain evils exists.

Herein lies the great need of the teacher, and the inestimable value of her work—careful, earnest and persistent, along sound basic lines. And when occasion has asserted itself and the judgment has decided against a certain course, or series of actions, or habit, that is the first step toward the new standard that has been raised. And when one feels the power and influence of an effort to overcome if it be only a desire to resist, this is an awakening not to be ignored, but one to build upon and add to; and if this desire is born of sincerity and determination, it will be supplemented by truth from heaven.

Here we have the promise that he that will do the will of God shall be made free indeed; and when we find that of ourselves we cannot build fortifications strong enough to resist evil, the gospel brings us this promise that his grace is sufficient for us. And with the support of this promise that desire can be repeated again and again, which furnishes material for growth in the direction sought.

The power or ability to accept or reject an offer of aid or support is also evidence of that freedom of power to choose or to will. There is no wider field for doing good than that open to the teacher of the Sunday school, of the Religio, of the public school, the parent in the private home,—everywhere, every day, by all who can create in the child mind one good strong desire for the right thing because it is right and for a true purpose.

This is the strongest incentive and the greatest spiritual freedom that can be delegated to anyone: The power to try.

See the little one as day after day he makes an effort to get upon his little feet. By and by he stands erect in the center of the room, tottering, but there he stands. And how those eyes sparkle with delight and triumph! He has reached the goal, and now the way is open for greater achievements.

So it is all through life. If we would make development we must have an aim, a purpose ahead, and we must see it clearly. Though the goal is not the final resting place, let it be a guidepost for the present mile we are traveling. With the strength gained and the development made in that mile, and the additional experience, and realized hopes, a new goal still farther ahead, a little nearer perfection, can more easily be located.

Self-confidence is a prerequisite to confidence in God. Self-activity is also a prerequisite to self-confidence. Without this action of self, the power of initiative, the power to begin action without compulsion from another (although the way may first be pointed out), the human soul would not be responsible for its own acts. We would still be slaves, and the cultivation of character through education would be an impossibility.

In early life the growth of the mind is almost wholly dependent upon things external, and through the channels open by means of the five special senses comes our primary education. These sources of knowledge supply material for that mental development which gives rise to and exercise of those intellectual states of internal origin.

The boy sees the apple on the tree. Through the agency of sight he learns of the existence of objects. He picks the apple up. Immediately he discovers its nature as to smoothness of surface and density, it being firm to the touch. Here the exercise of comparison is brought into play. The apple is heavy, it has weight. Again the exercise of the same faculty is brought into use.

He eats the apple, and upon finding the taste to be such that it is pleasing to the mind, the process of mental action goes on, and a decision of approval or acceptance based upon information gleaned through these various sources is reached. The apple is promptly placed with that class of things to be desired for their good.

That same boy on his way to school with older companions on passing by a fine orchard, hears the conversation of his friends: "Let's crawl through the fence and get some of those fine apples and fill our pockets."

"All right, but where is Mr. Jones? Is he around anywhere to catch us in his orchard? If he is, we can't go, for they are his."

Here is a new mental picture brought into play: creeping into Mr. Jones's orchard, but not to let him find it out. The apples are all right and greatly to be desired, but that new feeling from within, is it fear? or an effort to put back that something which seems like a conflict between doing and not doing? I wonder if the boy has been taught, or is being led by wise and loving parents?

It seems that all things in this life are placed in contrast: the good and the bad; the right and the wrong, ever vying with each other in a wave of influence to and from the individual. We move this way and that in our personal experience, now moving toward absorption of influence for good, now toward influence or feeling of evil; now toward a decision in our course leading to a great crisis in life for better or worse.

The great responsibility and glory of the teacher and parent is that he is permitted during the minority of the child, and during its inceptive age, to suggest standards and supply motives till such time as the immature person shall have become mature, the weak strong, the ignorant intelligent.

LABORERS TOGETHER WITH GOD

For we are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building.

The thought conveyed in this passage of scripture by the Apostle Paul without a doubt referred to all those who were of the household of faith, or all that had come under the bonds of the gospel covenant, including those of the priesthood as well as those of the membership.

Yes, we are laboring together in this great latter-day glory—the kingdom of God here upon the earth, helping to erect the visible structure, the church. It is also important to note that every day of our lives we are erecting or adding to our spiritual structure those things that will determine where we shall stand on that great day when Christ comes to call his own.

God is blessing those who are faithful through the means of this visible structure, through which he at divers times and places gives those who labor together divine blessings and gifts as he sees fit, "dividing to every man severally as he will."

God did not intend that his Saints should be selfish and labor for themselves only; and it seems that the apostle understood this when he directed that message of information to the Corinthian saints, "For we (all who have laid the foundation) are laborers together with God.

This seems to the writer to be one of the greatest privileges and honors that can be given to any individual, that is to have the opportunity in life to work in partnership with the great divine Being that created the heavens and the earth, the one that said, "I am Alpha and Omega the beginning and the end," the one that said, "Let there be light, and there was light." Have we then as Saints of the Most High realized our responsibility in this great work in which we are engaged? or have we through the weakness of the flesh begun to erect inferior foundations, which have not been provided for in the written word?

This work of laboring together with God should not be confined to the one day in the week known to us as the day of rest (Sunday), when we retire from our toil and hardships of the week. We should continue to labor for God during the six remaining days. We observe the faithful laborer who toils week in and week out, going and coming from his labor six days in the week, working probably for a small compensation to provide for wife and children. What would be the result now if this man who was a faithful worker would begin to shirk his duty—probably just because things did not work out to suit his own individual ideas? If he did not continue faithful he would lose his compensation. So it is with those who are laborers together with God. His Saints should take heed how they build the foundation that has been laid, and try seven days each week to add those things to their lives that are typified as gold, silver and precious stones.

Did you ever stop and think that it is the character of God's people that testifies to the world that they have built upon a good, substantial foundation? Let us begin to sense our responsibility regarding the building of the structure, so that our compensation will be the greatest and highest obtainable in the celestial kingdom of God. As God gave the Apostle Paul and others wisdom to be wise builders, so, in his wisdom, love, and impartiality, he has given us wisdom and knowledge that we might improve every moment and "redeem the time."

Let us note the man who contemplates erecting a home. The first thing he does is to go to the architect or one who has a knowledge of construction, and has plans and specifications drawn up to suit his requirements and means. Then he advertises for bids for the erecting of the structure or building, as the plans and specifications call for. If he is a wise man he will place a clause in the specifications granting him the privilege of accepting or rejecting such bids as he sees fit for he would realize that some might be inferior builders. Finally, after the bids are let and opened, he selects the one (probably the lowest bidder) that suits his requirements.

The contractor then starts on the job after the material has been ordered and ready, observing every detail of the structure, from the foundation to the completed building. First he begins by staking off the foundation the required size; he then digs the trench and the foundation is laid. The building has just been started, and it would not be wisdom for the contractor to leave the work unfinished; or to place inferior material upon the foundation, or other than that which was called for in the specifications. He must abide by the laws or rules governing the building of the structure, as drawn and detailed by the architect.

So dear Saints, we who are laborers together in this great latter-day work should watch the spiritual structure that we are building, and be admonished by the beautiful thoughts which have been given us through divine revelation in these the last days as recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants, and "come up higher." God, the great architect of the universe, is feeling after all, and desires that his people be faithful and diligent, with charity extended toward all mankind, so when we are called to leave the church militant we can enter the church triumphant in the celestial kingdom of God, and hear that, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Of General Interest

THE WAR'S CARNAGE

If the European war consisted of nothing but the battle of Verdun, it would go down in history as a bloodier war than the American Rebellion.

More men have been killed, with the slaughter still going on, than were killed in the Civil War.

More men have been continuously engaged in this battle than were continuously engaged in the Civil War.

Only the great list of casualties from disease and the immense captures put the total losses in the Civil War above those of the battle of Verdun.

The losses at Verdun are, of course, still a matter of speculation. All accounts agree, however, that it is the bloodiest battle of the war. Approximately 1,500,000 men have been engaged, exclusive of those fighting in Champagne and other points where supporting actions or counteroffensives have been carried on.

The French estimate of German losses puts them at 250,000. Although the defensive armies have naturally had slighter losses, the fierce character of the French counterattacks before Douaumont and to the westward must have made the French casualties as heavy as the German in that section of the battlefield, and they may safely be placed at a total of 150,000.

These estimates are for the fighting up until two days ago. Some of the heaviest struggles have come since. Therefore, making allowance for undue liberality in the first French estimate, it is still reasonably certain that the total losses to date surpass 400,000. More likely they are over half a million.

In close quarter fighting of this type, with massed charges of infantry into machine gun and high explosive fire, and later hand to hand engagements, the percentage of dead to wounded is enormously greater than in trench fighting. It is likely that 150,000 have been killed in the nine days of fighting about Verdun.

In the Civil War, 67,058 Union soldiers were killed in battle, and the Confederate losses, never accurately stated, are conceded to have been smaller. The total number killed in battle was therefore less than 135,000.

The heavier losses of the Verdun battle are due to improved methods of man-killing. Science has brought the art . . . to a perfection undreamed of in the crude days of the Civil War.

This enlargement of killing capacity is reflected in the disuse of the word decimated which was one of the favorite verbs employed in Civil War times to denote terrible slaughter. To decimate is literally to kill one man in ten. Such a death rate was considered so enormous, only a few years ago, that "decimated" was almost as strong as "annihilated."

But to-day the word is worth nothing. A regiment which loses only one man in ten in a charge is considered the beneficiary of a modern miracle. Fifty per cent losses are not esteemed unduly heavy. In scores of cases, battalions have been wiped out, and regiments have been left with only a sprinkling of their former strength.

The enthusiastic writer who tries to give an impression of the horror of modern warfare by using "decimated" in its figurative sense merely arouses a smile. The figurative meaning is destroyed by the insignificance of its literal meaning.—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register, February 29, 1916.

THE RESTORATION OF ISRAEL

[Under the caption, "The Restoration of Judah and Israel to their Own Land," one Joseph Keevil discusses in the Christian Standard of February 26, 1916, the return of the chosen people of God to their home land with a clearness and directness seldom observed outside of the latter-day persuasion. This discussion will be of especial interest to those of our elders who have had to defend the promises of God as made in this connection in the Scriptures, and against attacks of the brethren of Mr. Keevil and supporters of the Standard. The Christian Standard is one of the most influential periodicals of the Christian or Disciple Church, and it is to be presumed that Mr. Keevil is a member of that Church.—EDITORS.]

That the Jews shall be brought back from their wanderings and be permitted to dwell in their own land is a truth clearly revealed in the Old Testament. A subject dealing with the future can be safely presented if the word of God is permitted to speak. What saith the Scriptures on this most interesting subject? My aim will be merely to call attention to the statements of scripture, and let each reader draw his own conclusions.

1. The Jews will return to Palestine and be privileged to possess their land in peace.

Behold, the days come, saith Jehovah, that it shall be no more said, As Jehovah liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, as Jehovah liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the countries whither he had driven them. And I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers.—Jeremiah 16: 14, 15.

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord will set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, that shall remain, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hameth, and from the islands of the sea. And he will set up an ensign for the nations, and will assemble the outcast of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth—Isaiah 11: 11, 12.

Fear not; for I am with thee: I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west; I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back; bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth; every one that is called by my name, and whom I have created for my glory, whom I have formed, yea, whom I have made.—Isaiah 43: 5-7.

The children of Judah and the children of Israel shall be gathered together, and they shall appoint themselves one head, and shall go up from the land; for great shall be the day of Jezreel.—Hosea 1: 11.

They shall know that I am Jehovah their God, in that I caused them to go into captivity among the nations, and have gathered them unto their own land; and I will leave none of them any more there; neither will I hide my face any more from them; for I have poured out my Spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord Jehovah.—Ezekiel 39: 28, 29.

2. The Jews, after returning to their own land, will accept Christ as their Messiah.

I will take you from among the nations, and gather you out of all the countries, and will bring you into your own land. And I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh. And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep mine ordinances, and do them. And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people and I will be your God.—Ezekiel 36: 24-28.

I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and supplication; and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced; and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his firstborn.—Zechariah 12: 10.

In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness.—Zechariah 13: 1.

Thus saith the Lord Jehovah: Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the nations, whither they are gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them a nation in the land, upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all. . . . Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them; and I will place them and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore. My tabernacle also shall be with them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And the nations shall know that I am Jehovah that sanctified Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore.—Ezekiel 37: 21-28.

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto thee! how oft would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.—Matthew 23: 37-39.

A hardening in part hath befallen Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in; and so all Israel shall be saved: even as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer; He shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: And this is my covenant unto them, When I shall take away their sins.—Romans 11: 25-27.

The above are but a few of the many prophecies predicting the restoration of the Jews to their own land and their accepting the Christ as their Messiah. So clear is the teaching of the Scriptures on this question that it admits of no doubt. The only question raised is whether it will be a literal or a spiritual restoration. Possibly the latter view is the generally accepted theory. However, if we note carefully the prophetic utterances concerning the Jews, and divide them into two classes—(1) those dealing with their dispersion, and (2) those dealing with their restoration—it will aid us in coming to a just conclusion. All the prophetic utterances dealing with their dispersion were literally fulfilled. The actual facts are before us. The Jews to-day are scattered. Who can say Leviticus 26 is not literally fulfilled to-day? No words could picture more perfectly the condition of the Jews. Or the words of Amos (9: 9): "I will sift the house of Israel among all the nations, like a grain is sifted in a sieve; yet shall not the least kernel fall upon the earth." Such outstanding facts compel us to recognize the truth. God has kept his word and will keep his word. As the prophecies dealing with the dispersion of the Jews were literally fulfilled, so will those prophecies dealing with their restoration be literally fulfilled. The Jews will return to their land and enjoy it in peace, governed by one King—Jesus the Christ, King of kings and Lord of lords.

In the providences of God, mighty movements are now taking place. What the day or the hour will bring forth no one knows but God. Who is able to say that God is not using some of the present mighty movements to work out his purposes? The present world war; Zionist movement; the religious unrest of the Jews generally; the growing conviction of the injustice done to the Jews the world over may be used by God to open the way and make possible the return of the Jews to their own land. That they are going is a fact, for their God has promised it, as the scriptures above clearly teach; the events crowding so rapidly upon us indicate the time is drawing near.

Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean. Shake thyself from the dust; arise, sit on thy throne, O Jerusalem: loose thyself from the bonds of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion.—Isaiah 52: 1, 2.

Upon their return a mighty work for their redemption will be accomplished; for then will come those events that will bring about their accepting the Christ as their Messiah and the ushering in of that time when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and Christ; when that most wonderful condition so strikingly presented by the prophet (Isaiah 65:17-25) will be realized by the chosen people of God.

In the preparation for the return of the Jews to their own land, a work of evangelization must be done to prepare the leaders for the task of leading Israel back again to God. What a challenge to the church of God to-day! That we may see this challenge stand out in bold relief, let us note Israel's claim upon the church of Christ to-day.

1. Israel gave to the world a knowledge of the true and living God. 2. Israel gave to us the sacred Scriptures. 3. They established the Christian religion. 4. All the spiritual blessings we now enjoy have come to us through the Jews. Common gratitude should lead us to enter upon this work, and give to the Jew a knowledge of the Christ, and return to him some of the blessings he first gave to us. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to the Jew first. The command to disciple all the nations includes the Jew. The great heart desire of the Apostle Paul was that his brethren according to the flesh may be saved. God has placed upon us the duty, a responsibility we cannot escape, to bring the truth concerning the Messiahship of Christ to the "seed of Abraham," the children of the covenant and of promise. Shall we heed this call of God, and discharge this obligation? The ultimate redemption of the race is waiting for the redemption of the Jews. Read once more that wonderful eleventh chapter of Romans, and grasp the full significance of Paul's statement.

If the casting away of them is the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead (verse 15)?

"Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee."—Psalm 122: 6.

They that did the king's business, helped the Jews (Ether 9: 3).

No road is a good road unless it will take you to your destination. A bypath that ends in the underbrush is disappointing. And a road that is cut by a broken bridge only leads you part way, and means time lost. At a country crossroads stood a rudely painted board indicating "bridge down" on one of the highways. Consequently no traveler passed that way until the sign was gone and the bridge was repaired. But men are not always as wise in the life roads that they follow. Everyone knows that any road of sin always has bridges down, and the way has been posted with warnings, and gets no repair. Only loss and disappointment lie in that direction. It is well for man that there is One who knows and is the way. There are no broken bridges to trouble us in that direction.—Sunday School Times.

JUNE READING.—ADOLESCENCE

RELATION TO THE RACE

"With the coming of puberty, the child leaves its hitherto individual existence and enters upon the life of the race as a whole. Instincts and activities become racial—that is, the boy and girl reach out to those interests and occupations which are fundamental to the human race as a whole. . . . Foremost among these purely racial instincts is that of reproduction of kind. . . . Since, then, the desire to marry and rear offspring is as old as the race itself, is it any wonder that hundreds of our young people marry at too early an age, or, worse still, fall into habits which will unfit them for marriage later? But does the blame lie wholly with them? . . .

"Why are so many unfortunate marriages to-day ending in the divorce courts? Why are so many young couples under thirty—yes, under twenty-five—with several children to feed and clothe, appealing to the charity organization societies or else fighting along by themselves in galling poverty with children only half clothed and a quarter fed? Are not both of these deplorable conditions due to a lack in education—the education for life as it really is and not as young people dream of it? What does the average boy of twenty or even twenty-five know of the importance of right fatherly influence over his infant son, even if, perchance, he has been fortunate enough to select a wife who shall be a real helpmate for him? What does the girl who marries at seventeen or eighteen know about the habits, good or bad, which she will find in her husband? What does she know about caring for and training the little ones who in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred are sure to come in the first years? What has she been taught regarding their discipline that should be commenced in the first few months of the infants' lives?"—E. V. Fish.

IS HOME MAKING LOSING ITS HOLD?

But there is another grave danger to the race in the increasing tendency to disregard marriage and to seek happiness in freedom from the cares of home and children. Of this Miss Fish says: "The dignity of the womanly accomplishment of home-making in every sense of the word seems to be losing its hold in many, many cases, and girls prefer the independent life oftentimes stuffy office or the public service of professional life to what they consider the narrow limits of a home of their own with its cares and responsibilities. . . . The swing of the pendulum away from the restrictions of centuries has been too far—it remains now for the philosopher, the teacher, the parent, who deplore any extreme, to bring the feminine ambitions back to the middle ground where love of home, of husband and of children shall be balanced by an intellect fully equipped to meet all the emergencies of home making and by a will, not dominated by masculine authority, but respected by the husband because of its efficiency in matters of importance."

As a result of various studies of the ideals held by boys and girls, G. Stanley Hall states that "While boys rarely, and then only when very young, choose female ideals, girls' preference for the life of the other sex sometimes reaches sixty and seventy per cent. The divorce between the life preferred and that demanded by the interests of the race is often absolute. Saddest and most unnatural of all is the fact that this state of things increases most rapidly during just those years when ideals of womanhood should be developed and become dominant" . . .

MOTHERHOOD THE HIGHEST IDEAL FOR WOMAN

Doctor Hall says further: "To be a true woman means to be yet more mother than wife. The madonna conception expresses man's highest comprehension of woman's real nature. . . . The elimination of maternity is one of the greatest calamities, if not diseases, of our age. . . .

"While I sympathize profoundly with the claim of woman for every opportunity which she can fill, and yield to none in appreciation of her ability, I insist that the cardinal defect in the woman's college is that it is based upon the assumption, implied and often expressed, if not almost universally acknowledged, that girls should primarily be trained to independence and self-support, and that matrimony and motherhood, if it come, will take care of itself, or, as some even urge, is thus best provided for. . . .

"For one, I plead with no whit less earnestness and conviction than any of the feminists, and indeed with more fervor because on nearly all their grounds and also on others, for the higher education of women, and would welcome them to every opportunity available to men if they cannot do better; but I would open to their election another education, which every competent judge would pronounce more favorable to motherhood, under the influence of female principals who do not publicly say that it is not desirable 'that women students should study motherhood, because they do not know whether they will marry; who encouraged them to elect no special subjects because they are women,' and who think infant psychology 'foolish.' . . . In its largest sense maternity might be the heart of all the higher training of young women."

"More than training in domestic economy we need training in sufficient domestic motives. Young people must be taught to establish homes, not simply because they feel miserable when separated, nor because one needs a place to board and the other a boarder, but because the largest duty and joy of life are to enrich the world with other lives and to give themselves to high love in making those other lives of the highest worth to the world.

"Taking the home in religious terms will mean, first of all, that we conceive it as an institution with a religious purpose, namely, that of the willing self-devotion of our lives to a spiritual, personal purpose, the giving to the world of children who are adequately trained and sufficiently motivated to live the social life of good will.

"A home is the elementary social organization for the fundamental purposes of breeding the species, nurturing and training the young. But you can never make a home on a physiological basis alone. You can never discharge its duties on the physiological plane alone. The business of a home is greater far than multiplying children; you cannot measure families by their size. If quality counts anywhere it counts here, though it is well to remember that it takes some reasonable quantity to make the right quality in each."—Henry F. Cope in Parents and Their Problems.

Professor Irving King designates as the normal home "the home formed by honest, hard-working parents whose lives are ruled by ideals and who are anxious to do their very best for their children, who believe it is the main purpose of their lives to rear a happy group of right-minded children, who indeed look at this in no sense as a burden or as a restriction upon their performing some larger, more ostentatious duties, but rather as their very highest privilege."

PURITY FOR THE INDIVIDUAL AND FOR THE RACE

"Wedlock with children should enter into the life plan of every young man. He should know that nearly all lewd women are diseased and that, 'the greatest criminal is he who poisons the germ cells, for he poisons life at its fountain head.' . . .

"It is hard for the young to realize that the first purpose of sex is procreation and not pleasure, that sex is a creative function, that youth cannot become mature unless the glands continue internal secretions, which must not be interfered with by those that are external. Sex is a great quickener of mind, intelligence and especially of the imagination and the higher sentiments. If there is excess or defect it is self-respect, will, mind power that suffer. The individuality is not completed because general nutrition is interfered with. . . . The sex organs have two functions: the first is reproduction and the other is to give force and energy to all other parts and to character generally. The most unfortunate falsehood in regard to sex is the notion that exercise of this function is a physiological necessity and preserves virility. It is precisely as physiological to speak of exercising the lachrymal, mammary or other glands to keep them from atrophy. . . .

"I hold that the rudiments of eugenics should be in some way imparted to every boy and girl in the early teens and that it should be continued in the high school and in college. . . . It sublimates the intense natural interest in sex during the teens, long circuits it, elevates it and besides great intellectual there lie in it also even greater moral possibilities. It broadens the historic sense by showing the individual's relations to his ancestors and to posterity, and inculcates the sacredness of the germ plasm which must be served as a center of supreme interest in all human affairs."G. Stanley Hall.

"If our system of education were rational, if it were shaped less by tradition and more by the needs of human nature, our young people would not be left without guidance when their susceptibilities awaken, but the significance of their impulses would be explained. They would be made to realize that the sex instinct exists not merely for its own satisfaction, but points forward to parenthood and the continued life of the race. Moreover, the years intervening between puberty and marriage are not merely a time of peril but also of precious opportunity. If the imagination and the heart are awakened while the impulses are controlled, the new energies overflow and are diffused through other parts of life. . . . Furthermore, these impulses, powerful as they are, are not solely responsible for the social evil with the misery which it brings in its train. Vice is largely due to false ideas and ideals which are perpetuated in our social traditions. . . .

Among the untruths which youth acquire . . . is the impression that the whole subject belongs, not in the realm of the sacred, but in that of the obscene. . . . When the immoral silence and needless mystery have been done away with, and clear information and a correct emotional attitude have replaced the unclean mind and filthy imagination, the purely physical impulses will be seen to be surprisingly amenable to control."—George R. Dodson, M. D., in Parents and Their Problems.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

"So often I hear the complaint of mothers that their daughters are becoming 'boy-struck' and silly. Usually these very mothers are to blame for this unwomanly trait. Have you not heard mothers talk to their girls about their little sweethearts? Have you not heard fathers tease their daughters about the boy friends whom they happen to know? Frequently I have heard children under ten talking about being jealous because a certain little boy is going with another little girl! What wonder is it, with such silly sentimental ideas put into the minds of our girls both before and at the period when the sex nature is awakening, that at sixteen or younger they become boy crazy and begin to talk about beaux and marriage and do all in their power to attract the attention of men and boys."—E. V. Fish.

Writing from the boy side of the problem Hanford M. Burr says, "It must be confessed that the attitude of many adults to boy and girl attractions is so inane and silly as to be almost criminal. Sometimes it seems as if the whole idea of sex relation had been permanently poisoned for the boy by those who ought to have shown him its beautiful character."

WHOLESOME ASSOCIATION

"Happy is the boy who is influenced only by noble women and pure, true-hearted girls. . . . There can be little question that the companionship of the right kind of girls under natural and wholesome conditions is one of the best possible moral safeguards. Many a boy is kept from secret vice or licentiousness by an attachment for a pure girl, who unconsciously exerts a greater restraining influence than parents and teachers combined." . . .

LOYALTY TO WOMEN

"The susceptible boy yields successively to the charms of different types of girls. . . . But natural and perhaps unavoidable as this succession of interests may be, it is a source of very real peril to the boy. It is liable to develop an inconstant habit of mind, to dull the fine sense of loyalty, and produce that most unmanly thing, a male flirt. The best preventives and correctives would seem to be these: first, the boy should be prevented, as far as possible, from being thrown with girls under conditions favorable to the development of abnormal sentimentality. The companionship of other boys is perhaps the best antidote and of sensible girls the next best. In the next place the boy should be trained to a high sense of loyalty to all womankind, and made to feel that to win love and then cast it aside is not only cruel but unmanly. . . .

"Much is said and written in these days concerning the instinct of gang loyalty, a very ancient and very useful instinct, though sometimes distinctly unmoral. Is it not high time for us to place more emphasis on the development of loyalty to the girl? . . . This much is clear—consciously or unconsciously the boy will imitate not merely the manners but the habits of thought of his elders. The man who treats his mother or wife or sister with neglect or subtle disrespect can never teach a boy that respect and reverence for woman, without which social purity is impossible. . . .

MAN BEFORE LOVER

"Again the youth should be helped to the realization of the fact that he is not yet a finished product, that his tastes and character have not matured, and that he is in no more condition to make a final choice of a partner for life than he is to enter at once upon his trade or profession, and that he has thus no moral right to give pledges or expect them. Careful parents and teachers have made much of the sacredness of the human body and that is well; but more care should be taken to magnify the sacredness of love and therefore of the love language. In doing so it is easy to appeal to the natural shyness and reticence of the boy.

"But when all is said, the very best preventive for the evils of adolescent love-making is preoccupation with other things. The main business of the youth is getting the physical, mental and moral training which will enable him to do a man's work and play a man's part in the world, and he should be held rigorously to it. He must be made to feel that he must become a man before he can become a lover."—From Adolescent Boyhood, by Hanford M. Burr, B. A., B. D.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

Our Children's Home

Like all other well regulated families, our home family has its troubles and reverses. Since our last appearance in these columns this has been demonstrated more emphatically than ever before. One of our little girls was taken sick and when our family physician came to see her the malady was pronounced diphtheria, and hence were were quarantined and for several weeks have been isolated from the world including schools, which was and is a serious sacrifice to our girls and boys.

However we have been greatly blest, and though the embargo has not been raised, danger has passed and life is about as happy as could be expected under the circumstances. The little girl who first took the disease was in a dangerous condition for a time, but in answer to our urgent request, the Sanitarium at Independence sent us a trained nurse; the afflicted children were placed in a ward by themselves, and soon through the blessings of God, the skillful treatment of the nurse, assisted by others of the home force, the disease yielded to treatment and success was apparent. If no other cases develop, we will all be at liberty again soon.

This affliction has not been without its lessons however, which we hope others as well as ourselves will note and be benefitted by. Sometime ago by advice and direction of the State Inspector we made a rule that the application for admittance of a child should be accompanied by physicians certificate showing that the child is free from contagious and infectious disease. Notwithstanding this a child was sent here without such a certificate. Instead of sending it back, as we probably should have done, we had an examination made, and before the physician was sufficiently satisfied to grant the certificate this epidemic broke out and caught the child there and the case is still undecided." In this case the trouble did not originate with this particular child, but if it had, how great would have been the responsibility resting upon the parties moving so unthoughtedly.

Again we have persistently urged that arrangements be made, and understanding had with the board before children are brought to the home. This was disregarded in the case referred to, and the result might have been the placing of the child's life in danger.

Another serious trouble and anxiety has been occasioned by this neglect of proper understanding. A mother with two small children came unannounced, went to the home and without noticing the quarantine flag walked into the house. A member of the board opened her own home to the strangers and they were hurried out of the stricken house. The bishop of the stake had to take charge of the mother and children thus thrown upon the community without support or protection. This was a hardship upon the parties, upon the home, and upon the Lamoni Stake. All this could have been avoided by paying heed to the rules of the institution. We want to insist as strongly as we can that these things ought not to be, and if such disregard of our repeated warnings continues the board may be compelled to use more heroic measures by promptly returning any and all who come contrary to rules governing.

Criticism has been made that operations are slow and sometimes injury results on account of conclusions not being reached promptly. This is possible, and better regulations may be possible. We would be grateful for suggestions along these lines, but we are sure that the execution of such rules as our best wisdom has suggested will cause less delay and less trouble than the disregard of such rules, as our late experience has amply demonstrated.

The terms of office of trustees Joseph Roberts, Oscar Anderson, and Minnie B. Nicholson expired at our late General Conference. Brother Roberts and Sister Nicholson were re-elected. Brother Anderson, upon his own request, was not appointed, and Brother Alva J. Yarrington was chosen to succeed him. The reorganization of the board resulted in the choice of the same officers who served last year.

Permit us to suggest to our friends to whom we have never appealed in vain that we are not in as good condition financially as we were at last report. This is in consequence of the large extra expense occasioned by our late sickness.

A Spring Song

(When our doors again are opened and the children roam the fields, they will appreciate the following verses.)

Listen, listen, little children!

Thrushes sing across the morn,
Blackbirds chuckle, sparrows twitter,
"Yesterday the Spring was born."

Yesterday I saw a snowdrop,
Heard her ring her silver bells,
Heard the violet tell the crocus
It was time to weave her spells.

Come and walk with me, O children!

Walk where pine trees whisper low,
In a thousand scented murmurs,
"It is time for frost to go."
Watch with me the glad news leaping
Blue beneath a bluer sky,
Towards the brown, wide shore where bubbles,
Painted foam balls fading lie.

All the world is fair in springtime.

All last year seems gone away—
Gone the storm or angry tumult,
Gone the dim, depressing gray.
Earth, who has a new fair garment,
Seems to greet us as we pass,
Seems to smile in each new daisy
That peeps at us through the grass.

Sin and sorrow in the springtime

Ever seem to stand aside,
All the world is fresh and lovely,
Nought seems ever to have died.

Each wee comer has its secret,
That wind doth spread abroad;
Each pale wheat-field has its minstrel,
That at dawn towards heaven has soared.

Ah! my children, you have springtime
In your childish hearts so fair;
You have never known a sorrow
Never pain or never care;
And the God of little children
Says his springtime aye shall last,
Till their growing time is over,
Till their childish time is past.

Then though summer's heat must search you,
Autumn's harvest work be done,
In that fair and lovely country
That shall need no moon nor sun.
You shall find your spring days waiting,
Sweet with flowers, and undefiled,
For God's gift to all who love him
Is a heart like to a child.

More Concerning Clark Braden

My letter in the HERALD for February 23, in regard to what has become of Elder Clark Braden, has called out an inquiry from parties who are asking the reasons why Elder Braden refused to meet the Reorganized Church upon church propositions. In respect to Elder Braden and his friends, I give the reasons why in Braden's own words as near as my memory serves me now. In my last debate with Mr. Braden, and after the Reorganized Church proposition had been discussed, Elder Braden said in part during his first speech upon his church proposition:

My people are a set of fools! The elders of this Reorganized Church will come around and preach first principles—faith, repentance and baptism, just about as we do, and then challenge for debate, and our people at once accept. Then this Reorganized Church presents church propositions, embracing organization, doctrine and practice, in harmony with the Church of Christ, set up by divine authority nineteen hundred years ago. This looks very plausible to our people upon its surface, and they readily accept and bind themselves in writing for me. No man can meet this Reorganization upon such proposition. For instance:

The church of Christ, set up by Christ and his apostles nineteen hundred years ago, had living apostles and prophets in it; and when we face this Reorganized Church with that statement, they will blurt out, "We have them!" and so on down the list of evangelists, teachers and miracles—such as speaking in tongues, healing the sick, etc.; it's always "We have them"! Thus the burden rests upon me to prove their so-called apostles and prophets are false ones; and the same with their so-called miracles, etc.

Then when our Church of Christ has to be compared with the one Christ and his apostles set up, where are we? Our brethren know we have not an apostle or prophet in our church; neither have we the gifts of the Holy Spirit in comparison with the church of Christ in the New Testament. Our brethren make fools of themselves by allowing themselves to be dragged into such a debate. To do so is to tie our hands and feet, and throw ourselves into the laps of the Mormons. As for me, I have met this Reorganization for the last time upon church propositions.

This statement Elder Braden made good to the day of his death, notwithstanding, early in his warfare against the Saints, he decreed he would put "Mormonism to the knife, and the knife to the hilt."

Elder Braden almost encompassed land and sea to prepare himself to make good his threatened annihilation of "Mormonism"; and in his frenzied assault upon the faith of the Saints, he met in public debate E. L. Kelley, four times; S. W. L. Scott, twice; J. W. Gillen, J. F. Mintun, J. F. McDowell, T. W. Williams, J. W. Wight, once each, and I. N. White, six times—the last being in the opera hall at Thayer, Missouri, January and February, 1902, at which time Elder Braden made it apparent by his own statement, that his big knife had failed of its intended mission, had been broken at the hilt, and had fallen at the feet of "Mormonism," as powerless as though it were a basswood sword; and in his failure to accomplish his ends he was forced to leave the debate facing a challenge from me to "repeat the Thayer debate in every hamlet, town and city where Clark Braden shall be selected and indorsed to preach or lecture against the faith taught by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, during Clark Braden's natural life."

This challenge followed Mr. Braden to his lecture field, and so disconcerted him in his plans of bluster over annihilating "Mormonism," that he closed his lectures before his advertised schedule was more than one half filled. Friends of the Saints' cause dropped the printed challenges into the baskets that were used in taking up collections for Mr. Braden, and he met the issue by saying, "This is one of I. N. White's tricks"; further than this, my challenge was never met, and Mr. Braden left the lecture field, and soon his advertisement appeared in the papers to sell his vast collections of books which he used in his attempt to defeat what he termed "Mormonism."

During Elder Braden's debates with me, he used the large edition of the Book of Mormon—first edition. He discovered a few typographical errors in it, and he wrote President Joseph Smith of the same, suggesting a change or two in some other parts of the book, which he intimated might be mistakes made in the same way in some of the former editions. I do not call to mind Joseph's answer to Elder Braden, but President Smith wrote me in regard to it, and in his letter suggested that were it not possible and fair to believe that Elder Braden had become conscious, and even convinced, that we had the truth. And should he prove to be as honest as was Paul of old in accepting what he once opposed, would he not make a similar defender of the faith? This statement from President Smith was very significant—viewing it from what had just occurred with me and Elder Braden, which President Smith could not have known of.

I had closed my affirmative upon, "Was Joseph Smith a true prophet of God?" Then Mr. Braden followed upon his church proposition; and in his first, and opening speech, made the following comment and acknowledgement: This Reorganized Church is both logical and reasonable in their contention that in the baptism of the Holy Spirit the miraculous gifts—such as prophesying, speaking in unknown tongues, and healing the sick, and such other like gifts of the Spirit, can be enjoyed by baptized believers in our day and age of the world. Our Methodist and Baptist people contend they have the baptism in the Holy Spirit, and at the same time deny all the miraculous gifts that are promised to follow such baptized believers; in this they are neither reasonable nor logical. My contention is, that we cannot receive the baptism in the Holy Spirit in this day and age of the world—all of that ceased with the New Testament apostles; though some of my brethren contend we can receive baptism in the Holy Spirit, which thing I contend is not granted to them in the New Testament Scriptures.

If I believed we could receive the baptism in the Holy Spirit in this day of the world, I could believe Joseph a true prophet of God, as easily as I can believe Jeremiah or Isaiah, are true prophets of God. And again, If I was convinced we had a scriptural right to the baptism in the Holy Spirit, I could as easily believe this Book of Mormon (holding it up before the large assembly) to be the Word of God, as I can believe our Bible is God's word.

I took occasion, at the time, to thank Elder Braden for these statements, since he had made an effort during the discussion to discredit Joseph Smith's claims, and the divine origin of the Book of Mormon, similar to what the infidel does in considering the Bible and its prophets. I pitied him in his apparent blindness, but admired his sincerity as expressed before the people.

Ever after that statement of Elder Braden, I believed he was really conscious of the Reorganized Church having the truth; but, seemingly, he had too much at stake, and too much to take back to accept it, hence his refusal to debate the Reorganization further upon church propositions.

And is it not fair to believe that the truth he had to meet in his debates with nearly a score of the ministers of the Reorganization, was the reason of him "softening a good deal towards his former antagonists," during his last six years of earth life? And when once moved far from the din and smoke of his old battle field, where he had decreed death to "Mormonism," the "new field" was probably more inviting to a "change of mind" in his former religious views; and while he was not inclined like Paul of old to join in with the way he once claimed as heresy, he could afford to die on a side track—a "Christian Socialist." In Appreciation of God's Direction

My heart is filled to overflowing this beautiful spring morning, with thanksgiving to the giver of all good gifts. I feel it a joy to live and feast my eyes on the beauties of the earth, given by an all-wise and loving Father to gladden the hearts of the children of men: roses in abundance, both indoors and out, and other flowers of varying hue that greet the eye at every turn; trees, beautiful in their rich green foliage, and birds fitting from branch to branch, and from tree to tree, in their very gladness that the warm sunshine of spring has come again.

But the chief cause of my joy this morning is this—the Lord has spoken. Yes, it is the knowledge of that, and the light of the unerring Spirit which gave that knowledge that casts an unusual brightness over all my surroundings—the reassurance that the Lord is still at the head of his church and will direct in time of his people's need. And though the revelation only contained the names of two persons who were to take their places in the church, it was sufficient for me that he, the Lord, had spoken.

The spirit of it came to me in great force and filled me—and seemingly the whole room also, with a joyous light, and from my full heart the words burst forth, "this latter-day work is the best, the grandest thing on earth!" And with this thought all the little troubles and perplexities in connection with the work sank into insignificance.

It is beautiful to contemplate the assembling together of the men chosen of God to transact the business of the kingdom, the Master being one with them. I have been present when other revelations have been read to the congregation, but none ever appealed to me as did this one that I read in the first number of the conference "Daily"—notwithstanding the distance rolled between—giving to me the testimony that I wanted. How good, how condescending is our God!

It mattered not to me what the message was, just so I knew the Lord had spoken. For to know that the Master is at the helm is what is needed in these perilous times—perilous to both the church and the world.

How truly are we now living in the time spoken of in Doctrine and Covenants 61:3, when the destroyer rides upon the waters, when it is dangerous for even the Saints to journey upon them to the land of Zion "lest their faith fail and they be caught in her snares." And since the Lord did not revoke the decree, it is probable that the days will come when it will be even more dangerous on the waters than now; so that only the upright in heart, those who go by faith, can travel the waters in safety.

I think few, if any, expected to witness such a terrible fulfillment as is now in operation. It was supposed that the destruction would be by the elements alone; but we live to see that it is the elements and the destructive works of man combined.

And how little those destroyers know that they are fulfilling the decree of him who holds the destiny of all nations in his hand.

Truly it behooves us, as Saints, to live near to the Lord. Let us seek ever the Christ Spirit, then we need fear no evil.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, April 20, 1916.

MISSOURI VALLEY, IOWA, May 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: I write to request prayers for myself. I have been badly afflicted for a number of years. I cannot do hard work without a great deal of suffering. About seven years ago I was administered to and was promised that on certain conditions I should have the desire of my heart. I was better for a time. Three years ago I did some heavy lifting which brought on my present condition. Since then I have been gradually growing worse, until my strength has largely left me. I have a wife and four children to support. Unless I secure relief from my present physical condition I will soon have to give up heavy work. I am now farming, which is too heavy for me.

I believe that the Lord will in time heal me of affliction. I feel, however, that there is something lacking on my part. I trust that the Saints will pray that the Holy Spirit may show me wherein I lack, and give me strength to do what is required. I shall strive to be humble and prayerful.

Your brother in Christ,

Editors Herald: "For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do."—Romans 7:19.

Did you ever, in trying to do good, discover that you had made a mistake, and then feel as if you wished the earth would open up and let you hide yourself in it for a while until your mistake had been forgotten? That is how I felt when I again read the article "Nuts for Adventists." I refer particularly to the paragraph in which I referred to Father Ricard.

I do not know how I happened to refer to Father J. S. Ricard as Father J. S. Jerome, using his Christian name for his surname, unless it was because curiosity caused me to look up Saint Jerome in the encyclopedia, and Jerome became impressed upon my mind.

Father Ricard's article appeared on pages 30, 31 and 32, of the November, 1915, issue of Sunspot, and not on page 29. I can only account for this error by the fact that, for convenience in reference, I pasted a copy of my letter to Father Ricard containing the questions on page 29 of my copy of the magazine, and in that way page 29 became connected in my mind with Father Ricard's article.

I wonder what mistake Saint Paul made that caused him to say: "For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do."

Yours respectfully,

FREDERICK W. LOCK.

STONINGTON, ILLINOIS, February 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is the best paper on earth to me. I enjoy reading the many letters from different parts of the world. I have just read "Homeward Bound" by C. Ed Miller, an old-time friend of ours, whom we knew when we lived in Fayette City, and who was then president of the Pittsburgh District.

On February 9 my wife was called home to Monessen, Pennsylvania. Reaching there the night of the 10th, she found her mother, Sister Arthur Barker, very ill, and who passed peacefully away the morning of the 13th. I was called there to attend the funeral. She was a kind and loving mother, and loved most by those who knew her best. She was a faithful Saint, having a desire to do good, and will be missed by many outside of the church as well as those in the church. While it seems hard to part, we all feel to say, "Thy will, not mine, be done." Sister Barker was well known by many of the elders, and by the Saints at Saint Thomas, Canada, where she first heard the angel message.

I had the privilege of meeting two of our old-time friends, Elders Richard Baldwin and James McConnaughy, both noble men in the work. Brother Baldwin preached the funeral sermon.

The Baptists have just closed a two weeks' revival at Stonington, and now the Methodists think it is their turn. They commence to-night for a three weeks' series. They are trying to raise a choir of fifty singers. When I attend these services I think of what Brother Elbert A. Smith said in his sermon, "A city set on a hill," remembering what he said about Shaker bonnets, long robes, bare feet, etc. I have seen many different kinds of worship myself. It seems that everything goes that pleases the people.

I have tried several times to get the gospel established in this place, but the people seem to be troubled greatly with the spirit of indifference. We have had Brethren A. M. Baker, R. L. Fulk, Jesse Paxton, and others at different times. Many promised to come, but few made their appearance. We expect Brethren Baker and Fulk to give us a call with the tent next summer.

I am willing to do all I can to help the great cause along; if it is but the saving of one soul I know I shall be amply rewarded.

With best wishes to all the Saints, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

WILLIAM SOTTON.

SKIATOOK, OKLAHOMA, February 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: I write with a sad, sad heart. On December 24 the death angel visited my home and took from me my dear companion. Since I am left alone without home and companion, I feel it my duty to live my life all for the Lord, and to help every dear one in every way I can.

I am afflicted and not able to do hard work. I ask the Saints to pray for me, that if it be the Lord's will I may be healed. I want to live as a true Saint, so that when it comes my time to pass over I may be prepared to meet the loved ones gone before.

I wish to thank the dear Saints for their kind treatment and sympathy for me and mine. Pray that in my lonely hours I may find rest and sleep.

May God bless all the Saints.

Your sister,
DELLA WATSON.

CENTRAL LAKE, MICHIGAN, February 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have been reading old HERALDS. I enjoy reading the letters. I was thinking how I was once helped by a letter from a sister. At that time she was undergoing trial which lasted for one and one half years. So when my trials began I said, I can stand them one and a half years too, and trust in God. When the year and a half had passed I could see no sunshine yet. I thought of the man who was God-fearing, though two years in prison. I am now waiting for the two years to pass. I shall endeavor to trust God so long as I live.

There is no church here and I am lonely. I long to be with God's people. I have been in the church nearly three years. As soon as I joined the church the Evil One began to hinder me, but if God is for us, who can be against us?

I was left last spring with six little ones. My husband went to the Soldier's Home at Grand Rapids, Michigan. I was shown in a dream that I was to lose two of my children. I prayed over the matter and told the Lord he might take them if it were best. On New Year's morning my baby was taken. I am trying hard not to complain.

The last of January I sent my oldest daughter, eleven years of age, to Ann Arbor, four hundred miles from here, to the University of Michigan Hospital. She was nearly blind, and had other ailments. I received a letter from her yesterday saying she was getting better, but that it was the Lord's help that was restoring her.

It is trial that makes us pure. I ask for help to endure, and to pray, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." God is good to me and blesses me in many ways. I am trying to live the life of a Saint. I enjoy hearing from the Saints. I pray God to send an elder here sometime. I am glad I am a Latter Day Saint. Many say, "I don't see how you can be so cheerful." I tell them I could not if it were not for the trust I have in God.

Ever praying for the Lord's people, I remain,

MRS. JENNIE ADAMS.

DAFOE, MICHIGAN, February 14, 1916.

Editors Herald: I wish to communicate with the Saints of Flint, or Laingsburg, if there be any at Laingsburg; and not knowing the address of any of the brethren or sisters, I thought I would try and reach them through the HERALD. I have a father and brother, also stepmother, living at Laingsburg, Michigan. Father's name is John Keyes, and my brother's name is Arthur. The latter is fifteen years of age, and as far as I know has never heard the gospel preached except when a small boy of five or six years.

Would some of the Saints, if possible, try to find a way to get him to attend Sunday school and church? Father is a member of the church, but, I fear, does not attend nor teach his son to do so. I would consider it a great favor if some of the Saints would get acquainted with him.

Brother Ernest Orton, if still living at Flint, used to know him when he was a small boy.

Hoping and praying for the advancement of the gospel, I

MRS. GEORGE E. CARPENTER.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, February 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: Our district conference has just closed, and it was in the opinion of many the best ever held in this district. We were unfortunate in not being able to have any brethren from outside points with us, owing to unforeseen conditions arising; but the local brethren proved equal to the occasion, and we listened to some very inspiring sermons. There were not very many Saints from outside points who made the effort to attend, but those who did felt well repaid for the sacrifice made.

Throughout the business sessions a good spirit prevailed. The Saints seemed anxious to do what they could for the up-building of the work in this part of God's moral vineyard. Some in this district are endeavoring to show their faith by their works in this regard by complying with the temporal law. We feel that if all will strive to come more in harmony with that which has been given for our direction that the work in this part will indeed progress.

Our Sunday morning prayer and sacrament service was one not soon to be forgotten. The Spirit of God was poured out upon us as a mantle; all felt its quickening power. The Lord spoke to his people, saying that which they had felt was but a foretaste of that which we would receive in Zion, and that God was desiring to bless his people in this part if they would obey him. Brother Ed. Macgregor was called to the office of a priest, and it was also suggested that there were others of whom the Lord required greater service if they would be faithful.

That which seemed to impress itself on our minds throughout the prayer and preaching services was the fact that it was required of us to be more diligent in our service, and to come up higher and occupy a higher plane of spiritual and moral excellency; to let our light shine more brightly. The assurance was given, that if we would move out in this way the blessings of God would be poured out upon us abundantly.

Our district is small and many of the Saints are scattered, but we are not by any means discouraged. We desire to see a work accomplished in this part of God's vineyard.

SISTER PUGSLEY,
ESTELLA HAYWARD,
Press Committee.

Extracts from Letters

Elder John Shields, writes from Acton, Ontario: "We are having some of the heaviest snowstorms and severest weather of the winter. The few Saints here are well. Brother King Cooper who was my companion in an eighteen mile walk to Damascus, Ontario, twenty-six years ago, where our late Brother William Brothers, of Buffalo, New, York, was one of the first to receive the message, to-day takes me by team sixteen miles to Cedar Valley."

Elder A. H. Christensen writes from Papeete, Tahiti, under date of March 8, 1916: "We are getting along nicely here, not feeling any ill effects of the war, except that the membership here are troubled on account of enlistment for the war. There have been a good many selected and who are awaiting the steamer to take them away. The natives say they don't see why the government wants to send them to fight when they are not angry with anyone. Like the 'Light Brigade,' 'Theirs not to reason why; theirs but to do and die.'"

Thomas G. Whipple, Gales Ferry, Connecticut: "It is with gratitude that we receive the weekly visits of the HERALD, and it with pleasure and profit that we peruse the many excellent articles and letters that fill the pages of our silent preacher, or teacher."

Margie M. Davis, Independence, Missouri, writes: "I am still in the faith. The past conference has been a spiritual feast to me. Pray for me that I may continue faithful. I feel that I am one of the weak ones, but I am striving to come up higher. I desire to do my whole duty."

L. C. Donaldson, Riverton, Iowa: "I am seventy-seven years old and in the faith, trying to do all I can for the good work we are engaged in."

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral

To the Church in Mission No. 2 comprising Missouri, Kansas, Central and Southeastern Illinois; Greeting: As we enter another year of church service under the leadership of the Savior of men, our hearts are responsive with appreciation for such blessing. To be "called of God" as fellow laborers with his Son is the opportunity of all possibility for highest success. May our zeal and wisdom be commensurate with this end.

Tanner over the Kansas City Department; D. J. Krahl, as president, and C. J. Hunt as bishop of the Holden part; I. N. White as patriarch of Independence; L. E. Hills, as missionary; F. L. Sawley to labor as health will permit at Marshall and vicinity.

Spring River: Charles Fry, as president of the district; A. C. Silvers and R. S. Budd will work together as missionaries; Lee Quick to continue his labors as formerly.

J. A. Davis in charge of the unorganized territory in Southwestern Kansas; A. C. Martin and E. T. Draper under his direction.

Fraternally yours,
F. M. SHEEHY.

Having been placed in charge of Mission No. 9, comprising Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, and Louisiana, I take this means of addressing the priesthood and Saints of this field through the church papers. The opportunities and openings for work are many, and I feel we should make this a banner year.

Brother J. T. Riley will continue as my assistant in charge of Arkansas and Louisiana. Those appointed to that field will report to him. Those appointed to Oklahoma and Texas will report direct to me. The time for reports is July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. I will expect reports from all the men on those dates. Please send all reports to my home address, 824 South Chrysler, Independence, Missouri, unless otherwise directed.

Elders John Harp, of 3427 South Flores Street, San Antonio, Texas, and S. W. Simmons, of Davidson, Oklahoma, have been appointed to Northwestern Texas. Their field is known as the Panhandle country, and it will extend as far east as Fort Worth. All wanting work in this part will please address those men.

Brother E. L. Henson, has been ordained a high priest, and given Southwestern Texas District, with the expectation that he will be chosen as district president at the next district conference. We hope to see by the cooperation of the local brethren of this district with him, a good work done.

H. N. Pierce has been appointed to Central and Western Oklahoma districts, with a view to his giving about half of his time to helping the Indian work, to be associated with Philip Cook and A. W. Sanders in this work. Brother Pierce comes to our field highly recommended as a missionary and has had some experience in Indian work.

I want to advise again that the men preach more sermons in a place where they have an interest, and not be in a hurry to leave such places. It is better to do our work well and not cover too much ground—we will get better results. And I think we should preach our faith and let other churches alone. If we tell our story that is hard enough on the creeds. Watch for new openings and be sure to use them for all they are worth.

We are going to try to have a State reunion for Oklahoma this year and also organize the elders into a quorum. We have not settled on the place for holding it yet, but are quite sure the date will be August 4 to 14, and will make announcements on this later.

I want to urge the local priesthood to do more work. You should have some regular appointments in new places near you. See to it that this is done, please.

Sincerely yours,

May 1, 1916.

W. M. AYLOR.

To the Saints of the Kirtland District; Greeting: As I have been appointed to labor in this district for this conference year, I wish to be able to make a number of new openings. For me to be able to do this, I will need the assistance of all the Saints who are interested in this part of the work. We call the attention especially of the isolated Saints. As this part of the work seems to have been neglected somewhat in the past, I wish to make this my special work this year. Although I know I will not be able to record nearly so many sermons as in the past, this work must be done by some one.

If any of the Saints know of any new opening that needs attention, or where there is a possible chance to make a new opening, please let me know as soon as possible, and I will try to take care of it.

I don't want the branches to think I have forsaken them. Not so. I am willing to lend them all the assistance I can. Any wishing my assistance will please notify me at my home address.

Let me hear from some of you right away. My home address is Lawndale, Ohio.

Asking the Father's blessing upon this district, and a prosperous year for all, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

JAMES MCCONNAUGHY.

May 4, 1916.

To the Saints of Oklahoma, the Eastern Oklahoma District, the Spring River District, and All Unorganized Territory in Southern Kansas; Greeting: In entering upon the work of the coming year I am led to state, that I do so with unhesitating faith in God, in his work, and also faith in his chosen servants.

At the General Conference it seemed to be the consensus of opinion that the outlook for the universal spread of the message we bear was never more favorable, notwithstanding perilous times, war and rumors of war are on every hand.

Thousands of people to-day are inquiring, "Where is our God, and what is the service he requires at our hands?"

Are we not better able to make answer to this query than any other people?

E. L. Kelley, as Presiding Bishop, has for twenty-six years served the church with untiring love and toil, securing the respect and confidence of the people, and we trust that respect and confidence will be given our new Presiding Bishop, Benjamin McGuire and his councilor, James F. Keir, who are taking hold of their work with considerable faith and zeal.

I trust that faith will prompt the Saints to be mindful of their part of the work—the placing of tithes and offerings at the disposal of the church, thus enabling the men who are in charge of temporalities to meet the demands that are upon them. That is, looking after the families of a God-loving and loyal ministry, who must be cared for as well as the sick and destitute so we trust that those who have helped so nobly in the past will show as great activity in the future. To those who have had mental reservations, we desire to urge the necessity of a close cooperation with God if they expect to receive his divine protection and counsel in this the hastening time.

At our late conference our beloved president, made the statement relating to the hastening time, "We need not say that it is near or that we expect it soon. It is upon us now, it is here." So if we are to receive grace, favor and the benediction of God, it will be through honoring his decrees and appointments and by all laboring together with God to accomplish the work intrusted to all. Not just the ministry, not just the priesthood, but everyone who has entered into covenant relation with God.

The traveling ministry, viz: W. M. Aylor, Elam Erwin, Joseph Arber, J. E. Vanderwood, J. Arthur Davis, J. T. Riley, Charles Fry, Earl D. Bailey, Lemuel Dyke, and all agents in the branches of the above territory, will collect and receipt for tithes and offerings.

ELLIS SHORT, Bishop of Above Territory.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

To the Saints and Friends of the Northeastern Missouri District: By reason of the decision of the appointing powers, I am to assist you in the effort to spread the gospel of the kingdom of God in your district of the church. Since the field of labor is entirely new to me, and nearly all strangers, I ask that I may be informed of the location of scattered members of the church, and where the branches are located, and who are presidents of the branches. Would also desire to know when your next district conference is to be. Anyone who may have friends in that part of the world that they are desirous of having visited with the gospel, please to write me, giving particulars.

I am not sure just how soon I can enter the field of active work, but am busy as possible getting my work as secretary of the presidents of the seventy completed, and preparation of home affairs so my companion can be cared for in my absence. This preparation could be more speedily done had one the means to hire work done, but when one has to do all the work, or nearly all of it himself, it makes slow progress, but we are thankful to say that progress is being made.

I request an interest in your prayers that I may be guided by the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the efforts that I shall make to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness where my labor has been appointed. I request to cooperate with all who are interested in Zion's redemption.

We trust that the actions of the late conference will in some ways advance the work of God more speedily, and that more of inspiration will prevail in the future, both as to the labor to be done at the gatherings of God's people and in the fields of labor.

With an increasing interest in things divine as the years pass and the closing of my active work begins to appear in the horizon,—but the close of what work is possible will not be this side of eternity for the good of humanity, and with all the powers of my being I desire to be engaged—I am,

J. F. MINTUN.

DES MOINES, IOWA, 1205 Filmore Street, May 2, 1916.

To the Saints and Friends of Northwestern Texas: As I have been appointed for another year to labor among you in the great work of the Lord, I take this means of notifying all interested that I am ready and willing to answer all calls for preaching, especially for those who will arrange for the meetings first. Brother John Harp has also been appointed to this same field, so we are to have help which we have all seen the need of heretofore.

Now come one and all to this great effort. Let us make the year 1916 a banner year for Northwestern Texas. Remember, it takes effort and sacrifice, but we ought to be able to make the sacrifice for the Lord's work. I am also to serve the church as bishop's agent. I will gladly receipt for all tithes sent or put in my hands. Remember, it takes money to grease the railroad track and support the preacher's wife. Bear in mind both preacher and wife are on the altar to spend and be spent as sacrificial offerings to the Lord's work. We want you to share with us, both the preacher and wife. We will get out of the gospel and kingdom just what we put in—no more, no less. Come one and all, let us put much in and get much out. The hereafter will take care of itself.

Saints, this is a new era of the Reorganization. I feel hopeful. I want all the people among whom I have labored in this great State to wake up to the fact that this is indeed the hastening time for all of us, and unless we really move, the work of the Lord will hasten on and leave us behind so far we cannot catch up. Let us run the race set before us. Can you not see it is to be a run? Hasten now. I want to say I am on the track, ready to begin the race with you for the year 1916. You furnish grease for the track; that is a part of your work, and John and I will be on hand to tell the angel message.

May God bless you all and open the way for the spread of his truth. S. W. SIMMONS.

Married

BEARDSMORE-LAWRENSON.—An interesting wedding occurred at the home of Sister Newlands, Denver, Colorado, April 16, 1916, when Brother Joseph Beardsmore and Sister Jennie Lawrenson were united in marriage. The young bride looked very beautiful in white with bride's roses. She was attended by Sister Manchester in blue and the groom by Brother Albert Beardsmore. The parlors were beautifully decorated with apple blossoms and easter lilies. They entered to the strains of Lohengrin wedding march. Brother Herbert Bartless officiated. After the wedding supper, the young folks departed to their new life amidst the congratulations and well wishes of all present.

Requests for Prayers

An isolated sister requests prayers that they may be able to sell where they are and move where they may have the association of the Saints. She also desires to exert the proper influence as a Saint upon her husband that he may be induced to become a member of the church and together properly rear their children. Heretofore she has received help through this means, and has faith that the Lord will again answer prayers in their behalf.

A sister from Yuma, Colorado, Mrs. Raymond Auld, desires the prayers of the Saints. Her limbs are badly burned, and she suffers greatly.

Died

HENDERSON.—Mary Jane Henderson, nee Trout, was born October 20, 1833, near Lexington, Clinton County, Ohio. In 1839 she removed with her parents to Eagle Town, Hamilton County, Indiana, where on April 24, 1851 she was united in marriage to James B. Henderson. To this union were born the following children: George W. of Barnsville, Ohio; the late Eliza Goff, of West Branch, Michigan; William B. of Marion, Illinois; Alma D; Mrs. Nellie Durbun; Mrs. Lucy Flynn; Mrs. Elizabeth O'Reilly, and James B. Henderson, jr. Her parents were faithful members of the Latter Day Saint Church and followed the exodus of 1847 as far west as Council Bluffs, Iowa, where, upon discovering they were being deceived by false leaders, they returned to Whitestown, Indiana. In 1861 the deceased was baptized into the church by James Blakesly. Her greatest pleasure was to serve her Maker, and as long as strength lasted she was always found at the shrine of devotion. When the tender thread of life had nearly broken, and her limbs would no longer obey duty's summons to take her to the gatherings of the Saints, the sacrament was brought to her, and she would stand, while trembling under the weight of years, and bear faithful testimony to the cause of Christ. Forty-five years ago her companion, who was an elder in the church, and whose devotion to the cross of Christ made sacred his memory in the hearts of all who knew James B. Henderson, answered the summons of death's angel, leaving a widow to care for a family of seven and give life to his unborn son. Her children all grew to maturity. Only once has the circle, encompassed and nurtured by the mother love, been invaded. This time God called her oldest daughter, Eliza. We can say with a reasonable degree of safety, that death's sting, at her departure was robbed of its venom by the reunion with her loved ones gone on before to welcome her home to rest eternal. She passed from this earth life April 15, 1916, at the home of her youngest daughter, Mrs. O'Reilly, where she had found a happy home for many years, at the age of 82 years, 5 months, 25 days. Besides these children, she had scores of grandchildren and great grandchildren, and a host of friends to mourn her departure and revere her memory. And while she is now tasting the realities of eternal life, she yet lives with us in the ideals of a better and a grander life, as inspiration for kindness, patience, love and godly devotion. Louder than any words her unselfish life itself bespeaks the fact, that when all her children and friends are gathered safely into the kingdom of God and not one has been lost, she will say with the Psalmist to her God: "When I shall arise in thy likeness I shall be satisfied." Services held at the West Side Church, Chicago, Illinois, April 17, at 2 p. m.; sermon by C. B. Hartshorn, assisted by Harry Passman; interment in Woodlawn Cemetery.

RICE.—Henry M. Rice, born at Marlboro, Massachusetts; died April 27, 1916, at Plymouth, Massachusetts, aged 70 years. He was a Civil War veteran, having served in Company 1, Fifth Regiment, M. P. M. He did not belong to the church, but was always glad to hear the gospel and expressed the desire that he might be baptized during his last illness, but opportunity did not permit his desire being carried out. Funeral from his home. Sermon by Benjamin W. Leland, prayer by N. R. Nickerson.

BAKER.—Rillie May Crooks, born July 23, 1880, Lucas County, Iowa; died April 26, 1916, at Lamoni, Iowa. Married William Baker, November 18, 1896. To them were born 2 daughters, Zora E., and Edna E. They removed to Lamoni in 1912. She leaves to mourn, husband, 2 daughters, mother, sister, brother and many relatives. Funeral remarks by C. Scott before a large concourse, which attested the esteem merited by her. Interment in Graceland Cemetery, Lucas County, Iowa. She died in the glorious gospel hope.

Experienced travelers, who know what's what agree that in the sustained beauty and grandeur of the scenery it far excels the Park itself, except in one particular—the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone River.

The route lies through the "Buffalo Bill" country, up the great Canyon of the Shoshone River and across the evergreen-covered mountains of the Absoraka Range via beautiful Sylvan Pass.

SAY TO THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL, GO FORWARD.—PART II

(Sermon preached by Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday morning, April 30, 1916. Reported by Winsome Smith.)

Text: "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."—Exodus 14: 15.

OUR INSTITUTIONAL WORK

Passing now from missionary and stake work, we turn to a consideration of another line of church activity, that of our institutional work, and when we come to institutional work some of our people put after it a great big question mark. They feel that it has been robbing the missionary line of service. Well then, the question may be raised, if that is true, what particular institution has been doing so, and which one shall we abandon? We do not want to make a mistake and go backward under the belief that we are going forward.

Have we lost any of our vigor that we must abandon some of the lines of work that we have hitherto prescribed? Or is the church abundantly able and strong, if it is only willing to carry forward all that we have undertaken, and even take on new burdens we have not yet dreamed of? Are we withered up in any way? Has God cut off the source of our strength? Is it not more a question of willingness than it is a question of ability?

GRACELAND COLLEGE

Take for instance Graceland College, because it is usually in the forefront of the fight at every conference, or comes up for consideration at least. Personally I will confess that at times in the past I have had my doubts about Graceland College. I have felt that it was a burden that possibly we could afford to drop and turn our attention to other matters, but of late those doubts have vanished, and I feel confident that we cannot afford to relax our efforts in behalf of Graceland College.

A FEEDER TO THE MISSIONARY FORCE

I do not think that Graceland College is robbing the missionary work. I believe that it is a feeder of the mission work; and we might name some of the strong men who have come out of Graceland College and gone into the mission field to represent the church, who possibly would not have done so had it not been for the influence cast round them in Graceland College. And I am quite sure that there will be many other like men in years to come. We are adding to the list from time to time.

I believe that the college was never in a better condition than it is to-day to go forward with a great and noble work. You know the force of men and women that we have there as instructors, I will not name them,—I will not embarrass some of those present by naming them—but you know the professors who are in that college, men and women of consecration and devotion. I am just as sure that if it be true God raised up Gomer T. Griffiths to be an apostle, and Frederick M. Smith to be the president of the church, he also raised up some of these men to go into Graceland College and labor among our young people. I believe they are working in harmony with the Spirit and inspiration of God along that line.

A LOCAL INSTITUTION

Well, some one says, and we meet that objection frequently, Graceland College is a local institution. Of course it is local in one sense, it has to be located at some point. It cannot revolve around the earth like the moon. It cannot do its work in the saddle, like a Methodist circuit rider; or perambulate from place to place like a peripatetic pedagogue. It has to be located in some particular place. And I may say in passing that I think it is very happily located.

The college is a local institution in a physical sense only. In a spiritual sense it is not a local institution, and that is demonstrated by the fact that constantly we draw students from various parts of Canada, from practically all parts of the United States, and even from foreign fields. By and by we expect to draw them from all the world.

It is further demonstrated by the fact that the college has put its stamp on men who go to far fields. It is true it has put its stamp on John F. Garver, who is to preside over the Lamoni Stake, but also on Frederick M. Smith, the first graduate from the college, who presides over the church work in all the world. It put its stamp on Myron A. McConley, who is going to Hawaii this year, and who has already filled one successful island mission. It has put its stamp on Paul M. Hanson, who is one of the men now in charge of Australia. And so its spirit and its influence are not local, but go into all the world, and we trust will increase rather than diminish.

THAT CHAIR OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

This year there was a recommendation brought in that a chair of religious education should be established. That came from the Presidency and Twelve also, and it was laid on the table, or adversely acted on at least—again in harmony with the rights of the people—and that having been disposed of by conference is no longer a matter of controversy. But the main objection that was urged against it, I believed, was the question of economy, and we hope that that question will presently be disposed of so that by and by the matter may again be taken up in due and regular form and the chair be established, or at least proper consideration be given to the merits of the proposition.

I believe that the main argument that was brought against that proposition was that of expense, the question of economy, and I am willing to concede that to be an argument worthy of consideration, and the conference having decided that it was, I have no objection to urge. Other arguments I did not consider of great importance. The statement is made that this is the germ of a theological course. Well, that may or may not be true, but you know that some germs are said to be beneficent.

Is there anything wrong in the study of theology? God tells us in Doctrine and Covenants 85 that we shall study doctrine and theory and practice. Can you find any better definition of theology than that? Just because sectarian churches have sustained religious institutions, known as theological seminaries, that have been, as a leading pastor from Chicago said, "theological cemeteries," is that an argument that we should not study theology? Because they have not understood doctrine, is that a reason that we should not study doctrine? And if it is proper for a young man to study theology in the corn field, is it wrong for him to study it in the college? Would it be wrong for a dozen, or forty young men, to get together in a class in Graceland College and study theology under a leader, and all right for them later to go out one by one to separate fields and study it alone without a human instructor, at a time when they should be prepared to teach and not to be taught?

NONSECTARIAN

Well, some one says, this is a nonsectarian institution. Let me tell you, if that word nonsectarian is to be taken in its usual narrow application, then the sooner it is chiseled from the corner stone of our college the better it will please me. Graceland is sustained and attended by Latter Day Saints, and embodies their ideals. It is, and should be, a Latter Day Saint college in spirit and in fact. It is nonsectarian in the sense that the church itself is nonsectarian. We have never conceded that this church is a sect—it is the church of God, not one of the sects. And in that broad sense Graceland College is nonsectarian, as I view the matter.

I believe that we should make the college more useful, that it should reach out and draw from every stake and district and branch young men and women who shall come in there and receive its benefits. It costs just about so much to keep it up anyway, and the more students we can have there the greater will be our gain and influence. Personally I feel the only thing I can say about Graceland College is that the children of Israel should go forward with it.

THE SANITARIUM

Then I turn to another of our institutions, the Sanitarium. I presume that there will be less objection urged against the Sanitarium because of the fact that it was established in harmony with a divine, formal, written revelation that is in our church books. Such inspiration as may be back of Graceland College we must discover to a degree by inference.

The Sanitarium is certainly doing a wonderful work, and there are many here, our aged stake president among others, who can testify to the benefits that are received from it. I remember myself, when I went there—my companion being stricken with what I at the time feared was a fatal illness, and almost distracted myself with watching and anxiety, and work, I took her there. And as we came in at those doors, it seemed to me I felt the Spirit there of that man who said, "Come unto me all ye who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And there we did find rest, and the Spirit of God, and the spirit of healing; and there are thousands of others who directly, or indirectly, have received a similar blessing, and have only words of praise and thanksgiving for that institution.

HEALING THE WOUNDS OF JESUS

"Inasmuch as you have done it unto the least of these my disciples you have done it unto me." And so I see in the Sanitarium an institution that is ministering to Christ himself, healing and alleviating his wounds that are present in the bodies of his disciples.

In the Sanitarium in 1915 there were four hundred and sixty-two patients who received treatment. There are so many there now that the nurses have been driven out from the third floor, and have been obliged to seek quarters elsewhere, and the third floor is to be occupied as a first-class maternity ward.

Brother Harrington in writing to me says they have a class of nurses who will graduate this year, and they must be replaced; so if there are any Lamoni girls who wish to enlist for service, they may find an opportunity in that institution.

We believe that it is a place, not where men and women may go to be operated on surgically, or dosed with drugs of necessity, but where they may receive intelligent care, and also come under proper spiritual influence, where there is peace, and religion in its broadest sense; where the physicians and the nurses in the morning meet together for their devotional service before they go about their day's work; where the physician in charge himself may come in and put his hand on the head of the afflicted patient and administer to that patient in the name of God. It is a unique institution, there being no other like it in all the world, for that reason. Hence we believe that we should go forward along that line of service.

THE SAINTS' HOMES AND CHILDREN'S HOME

In our Saints' homes and in our Children's Home, we cannot afford to relax our efforts. Of course they take money, but they are pursuing a legitimate work, the Children's Home having been instituted in harmony with a revelation, the Saints' homes having been built to meet an imperative need.

The bishops say that next after preaching the gospel we ought to take care of the poor and needy. Where will you find those whose necessity so touches our hearts as among the little orphan children, or among the tottering and aged people who have passed the years of vitality, and now need our succor and support?

These homes are not in any sense poor houses. Some of our people have stood aloof who really needed their help, because they have thought of them as poor houses. We think that the presence in Liberty Home (that building that in years past was sanctified by the presence and the prayers of our late President Joseph Smith) of such a man as Joseph R. Lambert, and Brother Roth in the Saints' Home, ought to have an excellent influence along that line. These men have served long and nobly, yet go there without any thought of degradation. They go there happily, finding a safe refuge.

CURRENT EVENTS

TEACHERS ORGANIZE.—The American Federation of Teachers, to be affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, has been organized at Chicago.

NEW CHINESE REPUBLIC.—Press dispatches from Peking announce the formation of a southern Chinese republic at Canton, including four provinces, with president, vice president, and premier.

SANTO DOMINGO TROUBLE.—Trouble in Santo Domingo has resulted in the impeachment of the president, who has declared the capital to be in a state of siege, and has removed the seat of government to a suburb. American marines have landed to preserve order.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The fighting on all fronts seems to be increasing in intensity. Attacks by the Germans indicate the renewal of their offensive in the regions of Verdun. On this front trenches have been taken and retaken, first one side and then the other showing the greater strength. The Germans claim slight gains over the Russians. The Russians and Turks both announce gains in Armenia. The Italians have realized slight advantage over the Austrians.

IRISH SITUATION.—President Asquith, on the 11th, announced in the British Commons that the casualties among the citizens in the Irish uprising up to May 9 included 180 killed, 614 wounded, and among the military, 124 killed, 397 wounded. It was announced in the Commons on the 11th that 14 Irish rebels had been executed; 2 others had been sentenced to death, but the sentences had not been carried out; 73 had been given prison sentences; 6 imprisoned at hard labor; 1,706 had been deported. Premier Asquith has gone to Ireland to secure first-hand information necessary to the formation of a new policy toward that country.

ROOSEVELT IN RACE.—By letter to Guy Ferguson, secretary of the Roosevelt Nonpartisan League, organized to carry out what are called the Roosevelt policies in a matter of national preparedness, etc., and, it is said, to try to obtain the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt for president by uniting the Republican and Progressive parties, Mr. Roosevelt says:

Your league emphasizes its devotion to these principles and supports me only as representing these principles. This is emphatically the proper attitude to take; and because this is your attitude, and because you are working in this spirit, I very earnestly approve your work.

Mr. Roosevelt, therefore, now formally enters the race for nomination.

GERMANY TO UNITED STATES.—In a note to the United States made public the 11th, after further investigation following the late note to the United States concerning the Sussex and announcing changes in submarine policy, "the German Government frankly admits that the assurance given to the American Government, in accordance with which passenger vessels were not to be attacked without warning, has not been adhered to in the present case"—in the case of the Sussex. The German note also includes the words:

It therefore expresses to the American Government its sincere regret regarding the deplorable incident and declares its readiness to pay an adequate indemnity to the injured American citizens. It also disapproved of the conduct of the commander, who has been appropriately punished.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.—The House and Senate conferees have reached an agreement in the matter of army reorganization. The bill to be introduced in Congress would provide a regular voluntary army, exclusive of auxiliaries, of 175,000, and for an increase of twenty-five per cent, or a full strength of near 240,000, on authority of the president in time of emergency, with a provision for a minimum of 160,000, below which it would be the duty of the War Department to see that the number did not fall. The National Guard plan of the House has been adopted, and would provide for the apportionment of 800 guardsmen for each senator and representative from each state, or for a combined strength of 425,000, the guardsmen to take a double oath of allegiance, to state and nation, and to be subject to call for national defense.

UNITED STATES TO GERMANY.—In a note to Germany made public in the press of the 9th, the United States Government accepted the German Government's "declaration of its abandonment of the policy which has seriously menaced the good relations between the two countries"—that is, the submarine policy of Germany—relying "upon a scrupulous execution henceforth of the now altered policy of the Imperial Government." Referring to the discussion in the German note of alleged practices on the part of Great Britain, and reservations in connection therewith, the United States note states and closes with the words:

In order, however, to avoid any possible misunderstanding, the Government of the United States notifies the Imperial Government that it cannot for a moment entertain, much less discuss, a suggestion that respect by German naval authorities for the rights of citizens of the United States upon the high seas should in any way or in the slightest degree be made contingent upon the conduct of any other government affecting the rights of neutrals and noncombatants. Responsibility in such matters is single, not joint; absolute, not relative.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—The conferences at El Paso, Texas, between Generals Scott and Obregon, have come to a close without a formal agreement. Carranza finally failed to approve the tentative agreement which would have provided for an active campaign by Carranza forces against Villa bandits, looking to the capture of Villa himself, and the gradual withdrawal of American forces to the border as order was restored. Carranza insisted that a time limit be placed upon the stay of the American troops in Mexico, while President Wilson insisted that they remain to cooperate with Carranza troops until the Villa bandits were disbanded. The shifting of Carranza troops to points of advantage and the failure of the attempt to reach an agreement have advised further precautionary measures on the part of the American Government, including the calling out of the national guardsmen of Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico, and further reinforcement by three regiments and two battalions of regular soldiers, that the American expedition in Mexico may be strengthened against any possible contingency. The American forces in Mexico are being placed to best advantage, and additional troops have been sent across the border. The handling of the situation has reverted to diplomatic channels. The United States is still laboring to the end of cooperation with Carranza for the elimination of Villa and raiding bandits. General Scott is at this writing enroute on his return to Washington, and it is hoped that while no written agreement has been reached, the conferences above referred to may have resulted in a better understanding, and may make for a fuller cooperation. Under late developments and movements, the hunt for Villa on the part of the United States soldiers has practically ceased. Official reports tell of skirmishes between Mexican and American soldiers and posses across the Rio Grande. Carranza victories over Zapata forces in Southern Mexico are reported.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

WHAT NEXT?—A writer in Firm Foundation, published in the interest of the no-organ faction of the Christian Church, discussing conditions arising in localities where "some have split up congregations" over the dividing of Bible classes for convenience, and to group members according to ability, etc., asks, "Well! What next, for an excuse to get up a little Satanic notoriety?" Division and subdivision has been the history of this people since their early contention over the organ and other points of difference. In fact, this faith, conceived in dissension and brought forth in strife, has persistently continued under the same spirit until even its own are made to wonder "What next!"

THE ACACIA.—There has come to our desk a copy of the "Acacia," for 1916, the Graceland College annual. This book is a very acceptable production, beautifully illustrated with half-tones and excellent pen and ink drawings. There are articles of historical nature concerning each department, statements of the work of the past year, pictures of the students in each department, with reference to the work they are taking. Every Graceland alumnus and friend of the college would appreciate a copy of this annual. It may be secured by sending one dollar to R. W. Travis, business manager, Lamoni, Iowa.

PAYING THE DEBT

Another thing that I have noted down is that of our tithing and consecration. One of the best ways in which to pay this church debt, over which we are alarmed, and which I believe ought to be paid (we ought to have a reserve fund instead of a deficit)—one of the best ways in which to pay that debt is for all the people to turn in their tithes and their offerings and consecrations. It is not a question of whether we are able to meet these debts, it is a question of whether we are willing to meet them. We can pay the debt, we can run the college, we can carry on the missionary work, if we only want to do so.

STEWARDSHIPS

Another matter is that of stewardships. We have made a start along that line. The Lamoni Electric Light Company, for instance, has taken over the lighting plant in this community. Some of those who took it over with the idea of taking it as a stewardship, have felt very badly because they have been criticized. Some have circulated the rumor that they were trying to rob the church, that the church was simply handing this out to them as a gift. I will venture the prediction that when a man gets a stewardship (for a while at least) he will be an object of criticism and suspicion, unfortunately; but shall we stand still, or go backward, because of that?

The facts are that these men are buying this institution for all that it is worth. They are obliging themselves to pay sixty thousand dollars for it, in all probability all that it would sell for anywhere—and the church is obliged to sell it anyway under the state law.

The brethren who entered into this transaction now come to the Presidency and Twelve and say, "How can we take this over and run it, that forever it may be a stewardship, and all the profits received over and above the living expenses of those who actually work there may go into the church?" And that proposition is now in the hands of a committee appointed by the joint council. They wanted to get it in shape to report on at the late conference, but could not do so. In the meantime the deed of transfer and signed note are in the hands of President Frederick M. Smith, in escrow, waiting for the time when this matter shall be satisfactorily adjusted.

We ought not to hesitate because there is a certain degree of feeling even along these lines. The time has evidently come when we should go forward in this matter of stewardships and consecration.

THE LATE REVELATION

The late revelation to the conference came to us, bringing with it a great degree of satisfaction. It cleared up, as you know, the question of the reorganization of the Presiding Bishopric. I believe, however, and I am more and more convinced, that the action taken at the conference held here a little over one year ago, was the best that could have been taken considering all the circumstances. The matter of reorganizing the Presiding Bishopric, as you will remember, was referred to the Presidency and Twelve, and during the year they were criticized because they were so slow in accomplishing anything tangible along that line, and some of them, like your speaker, probably, were very impatient themselves because nothing seemed to be accomplished, but it all worked out satisfactorily under divine direction; and the joint council to whom it was referred, did accomplish some very valuable preparatory work.

Now in conclusion, I want to revert to the opening statement, that we have been going through a period of transition; and yet during all that period, the thing that was encouraging was that the people everywhere seemed to retain faith and confidence in the ultimate onward progress and triumph of the work. Everywhere I went in the districts, at their conferences or reunions, there was a splendid spirit of confidence. There was no especial effort made from headquarters to cause that, and you may have supposed under conditions existing that there might have been an opposite feeling, but instead the Spirit of God everywhere seemed to be inciting the people to go forward and move up and get ready for important events.

A LIVING, CONFIDENT, FORWARD-LOOKING INSTITUTION

To me that is encouraging. It would not do any especial good for a few men, like myself and others, to be optimistic and call for a move forward, if in the great body of the church there was a feeling of lethargy, of decay, and of backward looking. Whenever you find a man that is always looking into the past, you may know that he is getting old. He will never do anything any more of any great consequence. Whenever you find an institution that is looking into the past, its days are numbered; but when you find an institution that feels within itself the upwelling and abundant forces of divine growth and power, an institution that intends to go forward, and expects to go forward, the chances are that it will go forward; and most certainly so under divine direction, for the Apostle Paul says, "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

So I will give you, in conclusion, again, the admonition and the counsel that came to Israel so long ago, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."

FOUNDATION OF FAITH--PART I

BY M. H. BOND

In a recent lecture by Doctor Max Hardman, a university professor of Kansas City, upon the subject or text, "The mob," he said:

The mob might be in the majority, but it was never right, because it was made up of unthinking individuals who accepted ideas ready-made.

In a democracy such as ours the menace of the mob is particularly apparent. Most of us think by label. We believe in a certain thing because it is popular, because we see other people believing or doing it. Democracy must stagnate and die if it does not allow individual thought, and yet we accept ideas simply because we feel that not to accept them is to become an outcast. You must conform. It is for personality, for individuality, that I plead.

He described the typical conversation on conduct as this:

Don't do that.

Why?

It isn't proper—well, it has never been done before."

Again he said:

I beg of you to subject everything to the crucial test of thought. That means that we cannot accept anything on faith. There is nothing we can refuse to talk about; there is no subject too delicate, no subject too dangerous, for if they are ignored we can have no assurance that our opinions are right. Courage to think is fundamental, courage to say what you think is equally important. You can't let well enough alone, for there is no well enough.

With much, if not all of this, the writer is in agreement. The right, the courage, and the duty to think is fundamental, and necessary to the progress of the individual, the community, or the church, if its solidarity is to be permanently preserved.

The single exception to the doctor's statement in regard to the use of the word faith may be noticed hereafter.

When, as recorded in John 8: 31, 32, Jesus said to those Jews that believed on him, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," he unalterably committed himself to the idea of intimate and inseparable association of truth with freedom. Freedom! the antithesis of slavery; and slavery, as we have been properly, though perhaps sometimes superficially taught, is by every possible means a thing to be avoided.

In an article in Hibbard's Journal, by Professor John Erskine, of Columbia University, New York, entitled "The moral obligation to be intelligent," he states that in "Paradise Lost" Milton attributes intelligence of the highest order to the Devil. To this opinion of Milton, if it be correctly stated, the writer would urge serious objection.

In Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6, we have it stated that "the glory of God is intelligence, or in other words, light and truth." Our object in calling attention to this matter is that we may emphasize or call attention to the prevalent lack in the world of letters, and among so-called professors of learning and wisdom, in their application of the word intelligence, especially to religious matters; as for instance, the indorsement of Milton's idea that the Devil possessed and exhibited intelligence of the highest order.

As I interpret the Scriptures, God and Jesus Christ alone are the interpreters in the highest and best and only perfect sense of the word intelligence.

In John 8: 44, Jesus is made to say that the Devil was a murderer and a liar, and that he "abode not in the truth," and if he ever was possessed of the light and truth and glory of God, it was lost by transgression.

In 2 Thessalonians 2: 13, Paul tells us that those who had been called to be Saints had been chosen from the beginning "through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth," consequently the man who is led to believe something other than the truth, no matter how attractive or plausible the form, by just so much is he neither saved, or in the proper, the best, or the gospel sense, an "intelligent" person.

"If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine," said Jesus. Knowledge and intelligence, in their highest analysis, will be found to be absolutely harmonious, and may be used as interchangeable terms, or as meaning the same thing.

Again, Doctor Hardman says, "I beg of you to subject everything to the crucial test of thought; that means that we cannot accept anything on faith." One of the prophets in the Book of Mormon defines faith as a belief in things that are true. The antithesis of this must be: any religious tradition or belief that may be proved to be untrue, we are not warranted in denominating faith. Herein lies the fallacy of a host of so-called intelligent people in their terminology regarding problems of religion.

"I beg of you," says Professor Hardman, "to subject everything to the crucial test of thought." Well! the all-absorbing questions that men have been and are still discussing regarding the existence of God, the book or books that has or have been, and still is or are claimed to contain the sole revelation of God's will and of his character, etc., has or have been and still is or are being subjected to "the crucial test of thought." As a result, what has the modern and up-to-date thinker given to the world in settlement of the question as to the oft-repeated question of Pilate, "What is truth?" There is to be found no greater divergence and conflict of opinion, or a greater variety of product of their thought crucible, than is to be found among the ranks of those who are in the common habit of calling the "intelli- gent" people of society, or of the world at large.

Thus, we are far from finding fault with the writer in Hibbard's Journal who claims that we are under "moral obligations to be intelligent," yet as Latter Day Saints, by the terms of our gospel covenant, we are not only religiously bound, but must believe that we can be saved only by and through intelligence.

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent," whom to know aright, is life everlasting.

In Paul's day there were "gods many, and lords many." The many and diversified mental conceptions of God that largely control our worship and service to-day, through creed formula and acceptance, reveal to us the fact that the situation has not materially changed, and as a result of creed propaganda and belief, we have the statement by the modern thinker and skeptic, that "an honest God, is the noblest work of man."

While this statement may have still a semblance of irreverence to some, yet it obviously contains in its implied sarcasm a truth that is rapidly being made apparent by abandonment of unworthy, unjust, and unreasonable contention concerning God's character.

"The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth; light and truth forsaketh that Evil One."—Doctrine and Covenants 90:6.

Why should we or anyone hug our delusions, our traditions, our superstitions, our carnal fears to know the truth about ourselves, our neighbors, our religion? Why should we fail to inquire after light, truth, intelligence, and to earnestly seek for the permanent and abiding glory of God? Why seek for vainglory, the flattering notice, or the temporal and fleeting favors that man is able to bestow? and be willing to continue to live in the "fools' paradise" of ignorance, only to be wakened on the morrow to that sense of loss that can come only to those especially, who having opportunity, who refuse the glorious message of God, the "light and truth" that he is willing to reveal or place us in possession of, under conditions which we are able, if so disposed, or willing to fulfill?

How does God communicate his intelligence, his truth to men? Is it orally, or after the manner or speech through which men seek to convey information? These are the methods or means by which the natural man, or the carnal mind, has in the past sought to "find out God." With what results has, or is history furnishing us?

For those who are earnestly seeking for the process or a knowledge of the law by which this "secret of the Lord," or an acquaintance with "his covenant," by and through which only a man may know of the doctrine of Christ, and its truth or falsity be absolutely and unassailably determined, we call attention to a statement to be found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants 85:17, 18:

Behold, that which you hear is as the voice of one crying in the wilderness; in the wilderness, because you cannot see him: my voice, because my voice is spirit; my spirit is truth: truth abideth and hath no end.

God's Spirit "is truth;" and in the examination of occult forces, spirit communications, or revelations purporting to come from God, or angels or spirits that once inhabited bodies upon the earth, or from any source whatever, the "moral obligation to be intelligent" through the agency of the highest and most reliable sources of information possible for man to attain to, is the only path that duty and safety points out to the truly rational mind. To "try the spirits" that (as in John's day, so to-day) are manifestly present, and so successfully augmenting the number of their adherents, and followers of their claims, is only a wise precaution against the obscuration of our intellectual privileges. We must not only heed the instruction of Paul, that "with the heart man believeth with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life," we must also make investment of our interests in a belief, or so-called "faith" in things that pertain to our welfare both here and hereafter, whose foundations the infinite "intelligence" alone is able and willing to furnish; if we do not invite trouble, disappointment and ultimate failure.

We are willing, then, to agree with Professor Erskine, that we "are under moral obligation to be intelligent." But that intelligence must be of a character that insures permanency of conclusion, or that is the equivalent of a knowledge of things permanent in their character. If it be conceded, even in a hypothetical way, that there is a God, a creator of men and things visible to the natural eye of man, it would stand to reason that any "intelligent" presentation of claim for a revelation from him should have at least equal consideration and opportunity or field for explanation, with any other materialistic, occult, or so-called "spirit manifestations" that are to be found in the field of human inquiry or investigation.

For the last eighty-five years modern history has recorded the rise and organization of a church that has challenged the almost universal and popular claim that revelation from God ceased with the death of the chosen apostles of Jesus Christ, or that the canon of authorized scripture was forever completed and sealed against further communication in the apocalyptic vision of John upon the Island of Patmos. This is of itself largely an explanation for the hostility urged by press and pulpit. From almost every quarter, as a result of past traditional teaching or religious training by self-appointed teachers, who, hopelessly divided among themselves, yet seemingly, by a similar instinct and impulse, by every species of intent or opposition that once characterized the war against "the sect everywhere spoken against," two thousand years ago, have sought to annul or destroy the influence of a religious propaganda, or church that has, in the aggregate perhaps already persuaded one half million of people that there can be neither reason nor scriptural argument of a stable character assigned for the denial of the proposition that if God ever has spoken to mankind, the necessity and demand for a vindication of the unchangeability of his methods of salvation for the race calls for an interference upon his part and an explanation from himself, as to a remedy for the confusion that exists in the religious world to-day.

Still another and perhaps more dangerous and subtle enemy to the "foundations of faith" which Jesus Christ once laid, is to be found in the prevalence in our day of fraudulent "occult" manifestations. These are arranged in various groups or cults, or "churches," such as modern "spiritualism," "faith cures," "speaking in tongues." Among them may be properly classed the claims of Mrs. Eddy also, while at the same time constituting practically a denial of the hitherto prevalent and popular claim of the "evangelical," or "orthodox" churches in this regard, yet seeking a remedy which does not "cure," but seems rather to augment the prevailing skepticism or indifference concerning religious matters.

We are in a world to-day that is in a war with itself. "Faith, hope, charity, or love," the greatest and most permanent and abiding things, according to Paul—where are they to be found?

Hope, permanent, stable and abiding hope, secure from illusion or failure, or destruction, must have its foundation in a faith, or intelligence, whose author is God alone. To deny this is to leave mankind literally without God, and without hope of any stable character. It will drive the people farther and farther into the atmospheres of stoicism, indifference or worldly and unprofitable ambitions, or pleasures that destroy the treasures of the souls of men: selfishness, hatred, war, and everything destructive of his permanent happiness and welfare.

It is true that there are many, as yet, interested in the problem of the possibility of a future life, as we have inferred. It is true that mankind in many quarters is daily and hourly reminded with King David that "our days are as a shadow, and there are none abiding." Mankind must realize that our present tenure of life hangs upon a thread which the accident of a moment may sever. In their seeking for an answer to the old-time cry of the ancient, "If a man die, shall he live again?" they are obliged to grope their way among the confusing, unsatisfactory evidence offered by either honest, or "fake" curists for our doubts and fears.

To leave the purely materialistic field of inquiry and investigation, evidence or argument, and be forced to explore a literally "unknown country," or one untraversed for centuries by man, with eyes so blinded and confused by our former religious training in regard to truths that are spiritual only in their character, and which, by any possibility, may be only determined or "spiritually discerned," is but to make it not only impossible to build a sure and certain "foundation of faith," but to aid in the destruction of the slender and attenuated "hope" of thousands of honest people. They are left to be further preyed upon by the danger of "spirit forces" that may seek, by "lying signs and wonders" to engage the attention of the spiritually unintelligent and the unwary, or, if possible, to "deceive the very elect."

THE IMMUTABLE LAW OF GOD

AS REFERRING TO TITHING

Of all the eternal laws that God has laid down for his children to live, prosper and abide by, it would seem that the law of tithing is the one least used, and the most abused of any which are taught and practiced by our church.

When considered from the viewpoint of obedience on the one hand, and the final and triumphant gathering of God's people to Zion on the other hand, it would seem impossible to dispense with such a divine command, if we are to attain the results which the Saints so strongly believed in and advocate, that we as a church may be as a bride adorned for her husband and ready to meet him at his coming, and ultimately realize the consummation of all things.

We have the law of tithing preached to us, and many are the well-written articles on the subject. We find it presented in the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and the church history; yet many of us seemingly do not sense the full and complete meaning of this God given law. I do not believe that there are any true Latter Day Saints that do not believe this law to be divinely appointed, and none question the unqualified supremacy of the law of tithing; hence we might say we are a unit in belief on the subject, but not so in giving, therefore, we are somewhat inconsistent as a church body.

Judging from my own sad experience, I am persuaded to believe that many of the Saints fully intend to obey this law, at some future time, when it will be more convenient to pay the amount due in a lump sum, and thus surprise the good bishop in so doing, and at the same time make their peace with God. But alas, that certain piece of property is not sold, the deal that was pending does not materialize—if it does the tithing question is again deferred until certain other long-pending matters have been cared for financially. The resolution that had germinated is quashed; the bishop is left to struggle along as before; the missionary and those dependent upon him are left with only a meager allowance; the work is retarded; faith is oftentimes weakened; God is robbed of what is rightfully and justly due him in tithes and offerings, say nothing of the untold millions that fail to hear the angel message, and the world is not redeemed.

I well remember my own experience which no doubt in some ways is little different from many others. I was cashier of a good little bank on the eastern slope of Colorado, I was making money and had a comfortable home, yet I do not remember of ever paying one cent of tithing while holding that position, which I did between six and seven years. This is a very sad confession to make, nevertheless it is true. Either wife or I would bring up the subject occasionally, and having constantly in mind a desire to sell out our holdings and locate where we could have the privilege of associating with a good live branch of the church, the paying of tithes would be put off until such time as the sale could be made, when we would pay in a large sum of money as tithing to gladden the bishop's heart, and at the same time appease the ever-smiting conscience of the unfaithful that we were.

Finally the sale was made, but did we pay our tithing? No. We would now wait until we got settled again, somewhere—didn't know where, but we waited, and Satan smiled no doubt. The new location was sought for most diligently, and much money spent in trying to find the much-coveted green pasture that the other fellow is so persistently holding up before the unsettled mind. Several months were spent in looking around, and our patience as well as our money was being rapidly exhausted. Finally we invested in some mortgages, also in some high-priced land, which, owing to the sharp decline in property values about that time, lost us heavily.

About a year after selling out reverses began to come quick and fast, until ill health overtook us and we found that our little nest egg had almost entirely disappeared. God had been robbed and Satan had been enriched by the transaction; and it was only after we found that we were not able to give to the church that we came to repent in sack cloth and ashes. What a cruel monster procrastination is, and how indiscriminately does he play with the human race, clothing them with the spirit of indifference. The would-be willing hands hang idly by, and the work of to-day is not done, the harvest is past, and the celestial glory is not won.

Our own financial affairs for the past two years have been very depressing to say the least, yet we are firmly resolved to place "tithing" at the head of our monthly list of expenditures. While we are not able to pay as much as we would like, yet by wearing the shiny suit a few weeks longer, and having the worn shoes repaired instead of being replaced with new ones, we are able to do this. May we humble ourselves so the Lord may be able to use us together with the mere pittance that we are able to give to the Master's cause, that his name may be glorified upon the earth.

Our retiring bishop, Brother E. L. Kelley, has won the admiration, love, and good will of thousands of the Saints, and has borne a great burden for the church for lo, these many years, until God in his wisdom and mercy has seen fit to relieve him and sends to us Brother Benjamin R. McGuire, who in the prime and vigor of life has assumed the grave responsibilities of this office. I would to God that at this time I were able in some way of proclaiming a message to the seventy-eight thousand, three hundred and twenty-six Saints who make up the membership of this the only true church of the living God, impressing the importance of systematic giving, whether in the matter of tithing, free will offering, or for local branch work.

I firmly believe there are comparatively few adult Saints that could not give at least one dollar each month, and some could give many times that amount with scarcely a sacrifice of any kind on their part, which in the aggregate would mean much to the church, and would soon remove every embarrassment from the bishop's office, and God would surely bless and prosper his church as never before, as the promise is ours; and all of his promises are sure and steadfast, and never failing.

Dear Saints, many of us have not only been slothful servants, but have deliberately abused a sacred privilege. Let us therefore, rally to the support of our worthy brother whom God has so recently called to act as our bishop, that we may lighten his burdens, that God may be honored, and that we may as individuals magnify the office whereunto we have been called, whether we labor as members, or have been sought out as chosen vessels of the Lord. When we get our pay check, let us remember the extreme need of the church, let us act to-day, as we have no promise of to-morrow. Let us not wait to get the big lump sum to pay in, but rather give the nickel, dime, quarter, or the dollar, as these are placed in our hands as stewards of the Lord, that many stars may adorn our crown as the Lord the righteous Judge will give in that day, when if obedient and faithful to the end we are ushered into celestial glory.

I pray that God will humble and prosper his people, and that this feeble effort may be the means of bringing forth many abler and more far reaching appeals for obedience, until all from the least to the greatest may be fully aroused to sense the keen responsibility of their stewardship here below.

DAVID S. BOYD.

HOME

Home. What tender memories cling around that word. The magnetic needle seeks the pole by the law of attraction. So has home an attraction above any other thing in this life. I remember a man who, while young, left Denmark for America. After he had been over here a while, he wrote home, saying, "America is a blessed land, but there is no place so dear to me as the place where I was born." What home really means to us can never be realized or appreciated by us until after we have passed through some experiences.

To build up a true home should be the aim of all the Saints of God. But in order to do this many things should be considered. It takes the same kind of material to build up a home it does to build up Zion.

Jesus said: "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him."—John 14: 23.

If we expect to have the Spirit of God to dwell with us in our homes, our homes must be builded up of true character, of love, humility, meekness, kindness, righteousness, frugality, unselfishness, liberty of thought, and purity of life. There should be no selfishness, extravagance, envy, or greed. As Brother Vanderwood says about Zion, so we might say about home: Home means a life, not an argument, a reality, not a theory, a character, not a profession. The Lord has told his people to come up higher, and said, "Ye must practice virtue and holiness before me continually." (Doctrine and Covenants 46: 9.)

The cause is onward, and in order to keep pace with its onward march we must cultivate all the higher and nobler powers of our nature, and a harmonious action of all the faculties of our being—mentally, morally and spiritually.

Order is heaven's first law. Our homes should be homes of order. There should be system about all our work in such a way that it would be pleasing to our heavenly Father, that his will might be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Until our homes be thus ordered and conducted, we will never be able to build up or redeem Zion. Charity begins at home.

In the great school of life home should be made the center of attraction for the young—a place of rest and comfort. There should be a variety of good reading matter. Its teaching should be chiefly by example. We are in a sense partially made up for good or ill of what others have been.

Gladstone has said, "One example is worth a thousand arguments."

Professor Draper says:

The child camera, like the photographer's, impartially receives whatever passes before it. A kind or inspiring word, a beautiful action, a loving look, to those it is no less sensitive than to their opposites. To repress the disagreeable, the discreditable, is only to do half one's duty. The other half is to give amplest expression to the agreeable and the honorable. Thrice fortunate is the child whose memory is a gallery filled with pictures of lovely words and deeds. To confer this good fortune upon their children is the precious privilege of parents.

Andrew Carnegie said:

Give me the life of the boy whose mother is nurse, seamstress, washerwoman, cook, teacher, angel, and saint, all in one, and whose father is guide, exemplar, and friend.

The greatest and best men and women look back to their homes for the impulses which under the blessings of God made them what they are.

One writer says:

Let home stand first before all other things. No matter how high your ambition may transcend its duties, no matter how far your talents or your influence may reach beyond its doors, before everything else build up a true home. Be not its slave; be its minister. Let it not be enough that it is swept and garnished, that its food is delicious; but feed the love in it, feed the truth in it, feed thought and aspiration, feed all charity and gentleness in it. Then from its walls shall come forth the true woman and the true man, who shall rule together and bless the land.

Of General Interest

JOSIAH STRONG

In the death of Doctor Josiah Strong, April 28, our country has lost an eminent representative of a fine type of American citizenship. A patriot to his heart's core, his ideal of patriotism was not devotion to our country only, but rather to our country for the world. To him our country meant our countrymen, who make it what it is, and should make it what it must become, an inspiring example of the equality of high and low in reciprocal duties, rights, and opportunities.

Of this patriotic ideal Doctor Strong, for five of his earlier years in home missionary service, has been for the past thirty years our foremost missionary by voice and pen at home and abroad. His pioneer book, Our Country, appeared in 1886. Pronounced by Mr. Spofford, then chief librarian of Congress, "one of the best books in the world," it gave a stimulus to Christian work fairly comparable to that of Uncle Tom's Cabin to the antislavery movement. Nearly the whole of it has been republished in portions by pamphlets and the daily press, American and British, some of it even in Chinese, and it has gone into European tongues.

Other works followed rapidly, among them The New Era, The Twentieth Century City, Religious Movements for Social Betterment, The Next Great Awakening, Social Progress, The Challenge of the City, Our World: The New World-Life, Our World: The New World-Religion. This last remains unfinished. In 1898 Doctor Strong organized the American Institute of Social Service, of which he was president till his death. Organizations on its plan have been formed in five European countries and in Australia. Several of Doctor Strong's publications have been translated into European and Asiatic languages. Some have been used in our colleges, seminaries, Bible classes, prayer meetings, and daily readings at family worship.

What the great Belgian economist, Emile de Laveleye, had asserted, "The earthly welfare of mankind was a capital principle of the Founder of Christianity," Doctor Strong saw on the face of the gospel. He saw that its neglect by a church intent only on the salvation of individual souls had alienated the masses of workingmen suffering under social wrongs. Only Christ's gospel of social as well as individual salvation could regain their respect, their confidence. "Try the untried half of the gospel," was his awakening cry. Among the now manifest signs of this "conversion of the church to Christ" that Doctor Strong preached is the program of social reform put forth some years ago by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, and emphasized lately by the Men and Religion Forward Movement.—The Outlook, May 10, 1916.

BIBLE STUDY IN THE SCHOOLS AN INTERESTING EXPERIMENT

Two experiments have been initiated in the West for adding to popular education some study of the Bible in connection with the public schools and under the direction of the state. These experiments are certainly of interest and may prove to be of importance.

Professor Huxley with his characteristic clearness and vigor urges the importance of religious teaching and of the use of the Bible for that purpose. The following paragraph, condensed from his essay entitled "The school board," must suffice here to give our readers his view:

My belief is that no human being, and no society composed of human beings, ever did, or ever will, come to much unless their conduct was governed and guided by the love of some ethical ideals. . . . I have always been strongly in favor of secular education in the sense of education without theology; but I must confess I have been no less seriously perplexed to know by what practical measures the religious feeling, which is the essential basis of conduct, was to be kept up in the present utterly chaotic state of opinion on these matters, without the use of the Bible. . . .

For three centuries this book has been woven into the life of all that is best and noblest in English history; it has become the national epic of Britain; it is written in the noblest and purest English, and abounds in exquisite beauties of mere literary form; and, finally, it forbids the veriest hind who never left his village to be ignorant of the existence of other countries and other civilizations, and of a great past, stretching back to the furthest limits of the oldest nations in the world. By the study of what other book could children be so much humanized and made to feel that each figure in that vast historical procession fills, like themselves but a momentary space in the interval between two eternities, and earns the blessings or the curses of all time, according to its effort to do good and hate evil, even as they also are earning their payment for their work?

The opposition to any introduction of the Bible as a textbook in our public schools comes curiously from both its admirers and its critics. The admirers, believing that the Bible is an infallible rule of faith and practice, are unwilling that it should be taught by anyone who does not believe in its infallibility and does not use it as an authoritative rule of life. The critics, who do not believe that it is an infallible rule of faith and practice, object to its use lest the teacher shall lead the people to believe in its infallibility and accept it as an authoritative rule of life. Thus the two combine to exclude it altogether.

As a result our boys and girls are growing up in almost total ignorance of the life and literature of an ancient people whose spiritual, ethical, and political ideals have had a greater influence on our national life and character than those of any other ancient people. They are permitted to know Homer, but not Job; the institutes of Justinian, but not the Ten Commandments; the Jupiter of the Romans, but not the Jehovah of the Hebrews.

More than that, they are growing up under a system of education without any systematic attempt to furnish them with any ethical and spiritual ideals or even any political ideals, except such attempt as is made by occasionally singing a patriotic hymn and occasionally saluting the American Flag. Afraid of sectarian theology, the American people have banished the unsectarian Bible. They have decreed, to quote Mr. Huxley again, "the abolition of all 'religious' teaching, when they only want to be free of theology—burning your ship to get rid of the cockroaches!" We hope the time will come when the Bible will be taught in our public school as the life and literature of the ancient Greeks and the ancient Romans are taught, and the pupils will be left to compare for themselves the spiritual and ethical ideals of these ancient peoples; as we teach the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the history of the Republic without any attempt to impose upon the readers the duty of accepting the political ideals of America as a fundamental and infallible standard for political life.

The two plans initiated in the West, one in North Dakota, the other in Colorado, seem to us interesting and important because they at least recognize the present defect in our systems of education and make some attempt to cure that defect.

The first plan was proposed by Professor Vernon P. Squires, of the University of North Dakota, in 1911. He proposed that as a guide to systematic Bible study the State Board of Education should authorize a syllabus for use by students, and to anyone passing an examination by state authorities a half unit of credit in the high school course should be allowed. Religious instruction as such must not enter in the syllabus or examination; every suspicion of sectarianism must be avoided; no textbook was prescribed except the Bible; and either the Roman Catholic, the King James, or the Revised Version might be used. While the syllabus is prescribed and the examinations are conducted by the state, the studies are pursued outside of the public school.

All Christian bodies have taken part in this movement, most of the Bible classes meeting on Sunday in connection with the various Sunday schools. The difficulty at first of getting the boys and girls to do serious academic work has been largely overcome, for the pupils were not long in discovering that the old-time Sunday school work did not fit them for high school standards. The examination questions employed are indicated by a few illustrations taken from those given out last June:

What connection with the life and work of Paul did each of the following men have: Agrippa, Barnabas, Felix, Festus, John, Mark, Luke, Peter, Silas, Stephen, Timothy?

Name and classify twenty books in the Old Testament and twenty books in the New Testament.

Write a memory passage from the New Testament at least 150 words in length.

Explain the Biblical allusion in each of the following quotations:

"He, who lone in Patmos banished,
Saw in the sun a mighty angel stand,
And heard great Babylon's doom pronounced by heaven's command."—Burns.

"The airy hand confusion wrought,
Wrote 'Mene, mene,' and divided quite
The kingdom of her thought."—Tennyson.

And home to Mary's house returned."—Tennyson.

"He changes the self-satisfied Pharisee into the broken-hearted, self-abashed publican."—Newman.

"Known voices are as David's harp Bewitching Saul's oppressive woes."—Faber.

"Nor did Israel escape
The infection, when their borrowed gold composed
The calf in Oreb; and the rebel king Doubled that sin in Bethel and in Dan."—Milton.

In Colorado a different method is pursued, though with substantially the same purpose in view. The Teacher's College at Greeley recognizes credentials brought from approved local schools, as credentials on other subjects from other normal schools are recognized, except that a representative of the faculty must approve the textbook and the teacher, and to this representative must be submitted, not only the student's record, but also his notebook and a short thesis. The Colorado plan differs from the North Dakota plan in refusing even to consider students unless their teachers have been approved and have scholastic attainments equivalent to graduation from a college and some special training. But in both plans the Sunday school class has been the chief means of preparation, and, as might be expected, the result has been in both states to raise the standard of teaching in the Sunday schools. At the same time many young people have been either kept in or brought back to the Sunday schools.

The general plan of securing in some way cooperation between the state and the church schools has extended to other states. At a recent meeting of the Religious Education Association in Chicago it was shown that in Indiana in over twenty cities and towns classes of Protestants, of Catholics, and of Jews had been organized in accordance with a similar plan of cooperation; in the State of Washington more than thirty high schools are giving credits for Bible study pursued outside the school; and Birmingham, Alabama, has extended the system to the elementary schools as well.

There are doubtless objections to any plan of cooperation between the church schools and the public schools; but there are also objections to the present method, which leaves our children to grow up in complete ignorance of a book which has exerted a far wider influence over the moral and spiritual life of Christendom than any other. The Outlook regards the experiments here reported as tentative only, but, whatever may result from them, we welcome the indication which they afford of the growing purpose of the American people to incorporate in their systems of education some method of supplying the children of the Nation with ethical and spiritual ideals for the guidance of their conduct and the inspiration of their life.—The Outlook, April 26, 1916.

X-RAY AT SANITARIUM

Doctor Leonard Harrington, in charge of the Independence Sanitarium, has just completed the installation of a large new X-Ray machine. The machine and installation cost $2,000.

This is the last word in such machines. Marvelous things can be done with this machine and it is a great help to the surgeons. With the machine is, of course, the attachment for the making of photographs and for every varied use such machines are put to in the aid of health giving work.

Doctor Harrington said yesterday that in a short time he expected to give a clinic and take pictures and make examinations practically without cost to introduce the work.—The Jackson Examiner; April 7, 1916.

SARCOPHAGUS FOR PRESIDENT SMITH

A deed signed by Benjamin R. McGuire, Presiding Bishop of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints Church, to Frederick M. Smith, the President of the church, which was filed for record in this city Saturday afternoon, conveys lots 101 and 102, block 3, Mound Grove Cemetery. This ground is to be the site of the proposed mausoleum for the body of the late President Joseph Smith. The body has been in the Criley family vault since the death of the late president on December 9, 1914.

The mausoleum is now being constructed of Vermont granite, in the East, and will arrive here, it is expected, in time to be set up in the cemetery about June 20. A large drawing of the monument was exhibited during the recent session of the General Conference in this city. The women's organization of the church made a large contribution, and undertook to raise the balance by subscriptions from other friends.

The deed to this ground is the first that has been filed bearing the signature of the new Presiding Bishop. He has just taken charge of his office as successor to E. L. Kelley, who retired on account of his age and the increasing burden of the office.—The Jackson Examiner, May 5, 1916.

THE SUNDAY TABERNACLE

Just how much of a furore Billy Sunday is creating in staid old Boston with his tabernacle plans may be judged from this item of news with regard to Governor McCall.

The legislature of the commonwealth finally passed a bill to allow a tabernacle to be built and the governor, who is potentially a candidate for the presidency, took it under the most careful advisement, as the Transcript assures us:

One matter to which he gave his attention was the bill to permit the erection of the Billy Sunday tabernacle in Boston without complying with the building laws. The governor has until midnight to-morrow to sign the bill, to allow it to become a law without his signature, or to veto it. His intentions are unknown. Governor McCall intended to hold a hearing on the bill yesterday afternoon, but was unable to do so, because of his indisposition. It is barely possible that he will give a hearing to-morrow.

We sometimes suspect that one of the explanations of the tremendous vogue of the Sunday meetings from the start is this preliminary quarrel over the tabernacle. It occurs in every city in one form or another, and with precisely the same result in all. By the time Mr. Sunday actually arrives the community is in a fever heat of interested attention.

Who could believe that in Boston, the cradle of liberty, the legislature and the governor should debate for weeks over acquiescing in a Sunday tabernacle?—The Des Moines Register.

LOW MORTALITY FROM WOUNDS

The present war is distinguished from all others in history by many features besides its unexampled magnitude and its unparalleled methods of human destruction. One of these features is the surprisingly small percentage of serious wounds that prove fatal. If the usual proportion of deaths had followed in the hundreds of thousands of cases carried back wounded from the front, the armies would long since have been decimated. As it is, there are untold legions who are so injured and maimed that they are forever unfitted for further service. But on the other hand there are scores of thousands who have been cured and restored, perhaps more than once or twice, and are again at the front.

France has been conspicuously successful in reducing mortality at her sanitary formations. In a recent lecture by the director of the medico-surgical statistics of her army, remarkable results in this particular are noted. This official declares from the records that out of 100 soldiers in hospitals 98 are cured—only 2 succumbed; while in the hospitals in Paris in time of peace the mortality was six times greater, or about 110 deaths for every 1,000 cured. The military figures above given, it should be remembered, include both "sick and wounded"—the showing would be no less encouraging if the two classes were distinguished. It is believed that the mortality among the sick is only about 13 in 1,000, notwithstanding the fact that the present sick are generally older and more exhausted men than in the beginning of the war when the mortality was higher.

Such statements tend to answer in some measure the agonizing question as to what becomes of the wounded; and they also help to explain how the armies are kept up so nearly to their original strength. If only 20 die out of 1,000 borne wounded from the field, and the most of the remainder soon come back to fight again, the supply of "fodder for cannon" is not being exhausted as fast as the onlooking world has been wont to believe.—Deseret Evening News.

There are many definitions of forgiveness, but a very good illustration of it was given by a little boy who, on being asked what forgiveness of injuries was, gave the answer: "It is the scent that flowers give when they are trampled on!"—Sunday at Home.

An Inspirational Conference

At memory's door only a slight touch is needed to bring to view many beautiful pictures, and to re-create many joyous experiences. Among these which concern the late conference, no feature is more prominent with those who love music than the very great impression made through the medium of this art. Many fine sermons had their settings in gems of voice and orchestral production, and, on other occasions, the joy of our gospel was expressed entirely in music—many forms of beauty and enjoyment being presented for our edification.

The institute program on Sunday afternoon—the second of the series—had for its theme, "The choir; as others see us." It was presided over by President Elbert A. Smith, who, through his alert and appreciative perceptions, managed to blend into his duties a charming mixture of humor, emotion and unconventionality, which added much to the enjoyment of the listeners. Several of the "papers" turned out to be addresses, and we feel, in a way, a sense of loss that we are not able to pass them along to our readers. Brother Pitt's paper, forwarded from California, we give you this month. Brother Scott's we hope to present later, as well as others read during the convention.

The third session of the institute was held Tuesday evening, April 11, and proved to be a "heart-to-heart" affair, in which many spoke freely of their experiences and desires along this line of service. Of the five excellent papers read, and the three addresses made, we present the one on "The combined orchestra movement," by Brother Mills. The excellent work done by the organization in Independence, known as the "National Orchestra," in the five months since its beginning, promises great things for the future. The big number, Farmers Mass, in B Flat, in which this orchestra of forty pieces supported the conference choir of one hundred and fifty voices, was truly an inspirational thing, and made us feel that no discouragement should be allowed to hinder our upward progress.

We hesitate to approach the subject of the "Messiah" renditions for the reason that we feel words to be inadequate, and our own powers altogether too limited to do the matter justice. It is not simply because this is the first time we have ever undertaken so worthy a task; it is not that our efforts were perfect; but the thing that stays with us is the wonderful spirit that accompanied the rendition. It was the message, expressed with such masterful art, that captured the hearts of us all, and that message was pointed out, emphasized, and enhanced by the inspirational leading of our director. His example as well as his counsel, constrained the singers to feel that we were "treading on holy ground,"—that a commission was intrusted to us—a message was to be delivered through us, and that only to the extent that it should be given with true humility and an "eye single to the glory of God," would it be carried straight into the souls of the listeners.

This, dear singers of Israel, is the secret of our power; this is the key which, used wisely, will unlock the hearts of the people, and help us to assist God in bringing about the salvation of Zion. All true eminence is only reached through a submergence of self and self-interests; all real service is centered in others; and, as we sense this, and see its real significance, and are able to follow the leadings of such a faith, we are endowed with the added power from above, which becomes irresistible. Is it worth cultivating, think you? Will it be worth our efforts to qualify ourselves for effectual service in this as in many other lines of activity?

We think yes; and we trust the musicians of our church will sense the great possibilities which are before them; will pray over their work; will renew their diligence to the end, that God may find helpers who are not only willing but able!

The "Messiah" was given three evenings, April 13, 15, and 16. Hundreds were turned from the church on each occasion, owing to lack of room, which was a powerful demonstration of the crying need, even at the present time, for a larger auditorium for the assembling of the Saints. "Give us room that we may dwell," is being echoed in the hearts of all conference goers. What a pity it is, that the oratorio, with its wonderful appeal, should not have reached everyone that desired to hear it! We hope that when next we prepare a great musical message for the people, we may have room—room for the singers, room for a good-sized orchestra, and room for the great mass of people who are eager to receive that message.

Before we leave the subject of the oratorio, we must mention the soloists. Sister Robinson, with her beautiful and highly-cultivated voice is not a stranger to the congregations of our people, and she was heard at her best this spring, the climax of perfection being reached, perhaps, in the masterpiece, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." The lovely consecration which characterizes Sister Robinson, the readiness with which she gives of her talent, her time, her means, her encouragement, and her own preparation along musical lines, acquired through years of study and application, makes her gift all the more admirable, as one feels that she regards it as a gift from on high,—a thing to be used for heavenly purposes.

Sister Ethel Kinnaman (who, by the way, changed that name to one a trifle longer, on the evening conference closed) is not altogether unknown to our people, as she sang for us four years ago. Since that time she has improved really valuable opportunities for advancement, and her rich contralto voice comes back to us enhanced by its years of cultivation, to a degree which won its way directly into the hearts of its hearers.

Brother Paul N. Craig sang the bass solos, and the fire and enthusiasm of his interpretations were only equalled by the natural beauty of his young voice. The consecration and devotion of his life make his offering of praise in song all the more acceptable, and it would be well for us all to emulate the humility and earnestness which characterizes his study and interest in this dearest of arts.

The tenor solos were taken by Mr. George Deane, of Kansas City, and were sung with taste and finish. He is an artist, with a voice capable of wide interpretations and range of expression, and he seemed to catch the spirit which permeated the renditions, preceded as they were by earnest prayer each evening. May the successes of this spring but presage many, many more, of every variety with which we may add to the influence and efficiency of the powers for good which are inherent in the church and its earnest workers.

Should we mention the annual choir serenading stroll? The evening was ideal and thirty homes were visited and cheered by song. The eastern Saints, departing in their "special" at 10.30 received a farewell concert, appreciated,—even by Brother Greene, ill in his berth! Later, the footsore and weary, but still light-hearted singers, found at the home of President Frederick M. Smith rest and refreshment,—both for body and spirit, the joyous service of song closing with an eloquent plea from the beloved leader to the God above, that he may guide and control these singers, inspire them with his own will and wisdom, endow them with patience and consecration, that through them he may work out his wonderful plans for the redemption of the world.

Is Outlook for Combined Orchestra Promising?

With seductive smiles and enticing words, your speaker was approached to write this paper, and in a burst of enthusiasm he yielded, and promised to do the best he could. We did not then comprehend just what the task meant. Since the work of the combined orchestra is as yet prospective and hardly in experiment, the answer to the question contained in our subject must largely be in the nature of a prophecy. We never did think very much of those prophets who, in prophesying, just simply went around doing "the best they could," but in this instance we are compelled to do just that very thing. But we feel that there is a large field of deduction from which we may base many of the elements of our prophecy.

Yes, the outlook for the combined orchestra is a promising one. In fact, we cannot remember to have ever before seen so much outlook attached to a young and healthy movement. There is outlook on every side of it, and its beauty is in the nature of that beauty that greets the eyes of him who in vision beholds the ultimate triumph of God's work.

Do you in spiritual fancy conceive the musical service of the church made more ennobling and elevating? Do you in spiritual perspective behold the people of God brought, through the medium of their music, into greater spiritual rapport with the divine life? There is outlook there, pleasing and promising; and your soul and mine, if we keep truly in tune with the infinite plan, will partake of its saving grace, and eternity only will reveal its glorious fruition.

Why is the national church orchestra? What is the meaning of this newly-born orchestral movement of the church? Prior to the inception of the general choir movement the various choirs of the church existed as a result of individual effort and incentive, called into being from their own spontaneity. Now the fostering care of the church is over not only the choirs that are under the banner of the choir movement, but the influences of the church are being used to encourage and enlarge those already formed, and to call into being and stimulate choirs yet to be. So with the orchestral field.

Heretofore no general plan or system was had. Individual instrumentalists and bodies have had to shift for themselves very largely as best they might, with such encouragement as generous and interested auditors would give them. Now the church is stretching forth its hand to nurse this budding material and movement. It means that the church is realizing more than ever before the value of its musical assets and is determined to cultivate them. It means that the church is beginning to properly sense the wondrous wisdom of the divine command to "cultivate the gifts of music and of song," and to employ the various instruments of music devised by man in conjunction. Providence was but bringing to our notice what has been long recognized by constructive reformers for years past,—that where a peoples' hearts are set to the pursuit of the beautiful and the refined, their feet are not found in the ways of evil.

Hence this orchestral movement, but now in its infancy, will be the channel through which will flow to the church a rich harvest of good to its people. Already the impulses of its beginning are being felt over the whole church, and here and there are springing into being little nuclei that will gather into concrete organizations in time. In fact, the promoters of the movement now fear that they have started something that they cannot stop.

The success of the combined orchestra is merely a question of the success of the various individual orchestras which will eventually contribute to its work. In getting at the measure of what may be expected in this direction we are going to be reminiscent. About five or six years ago a number of musical souls banded together for the purpose of organizing an orchestra for service in the Independence Sunday school. Just ten instruments in all were represented in that small beginning. Our playing was noted for its enthusiasm rather than its poetic quality. But we had the prime quality of perseverance, and our auditors were patient.

We progressed. In time new material was added to our ranks; old material became more proficient, and we continued in our process of development, until what was accepted at first with tolerance was later received with welcome. Our work, at first crude and in a measure grotesque, gradually became more pleasing and refined. Visitors from over the church witnessed our work, and a desire to emulate our achievements was felt in other branches of the church; here and there a germ was planted that was later to spring into being. Now the leaven is permeating the entire lump, and we are to-day beholding its workings. It is this saturation of the mass with the fertile life-germs of development that is the assurance of our future and the basis upon which we found our prophecy.

Now for that "prophesying" at which we promised to do the best we could. The metes and bounds of a force for good cannot be definitely described and measured; neither can we accurately preestimate the development that may be realized. Yet we prophesy for this orchestral movement a growth that will be normal and continued, and a success that will be gratifying to all, as well as a rich compensation for the labor involved. We look forward with ample confidence to the fulfillment of our dreams; to the day when many, very many, of the "young men and the maidens" of the church shall be insistently cultivating the gifts that are within them, of music and of song; when many, very many, of the branches throughout the church will equip themselves with orchestral bodies, for service in both the Sabbath school and the church.

We look forward to that time, we say, because the church has within itself the elements of its own growth, and because these things are but one part, one manifestation of that spiritual renaissance within the church that will not be denied. When that day shall come, and come it will, the church will have enlisted a power such as it has never before employed: a power that will draw all men unto it, and the musical service of the true faith will assist the spoken word as never before. When that day shall come, and come it must, the combined orchestra shall sit with the combined choir in a united service of the house of God.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

The Choir

WHAT PLACE HAS THE CHOIR IN CHURCH SERVICES?

Music has always performed an important part in Christian worship, in ancient as well as in modern times; and since the song service has been indorsed by the Lord and he has given direction concerning this service, in order to make the worship in the house of the Lord complete, we should therefore be earnestly engaged in this work as the Lord has directed.

There is something in the sweet strains of music which seems to penetrate the soul and sometimes melt the hardest heart when argument and reason fail. We have all read how King Saul employed the sweet singer of Israel, David, to drive away the evil spirit, with his music; and many a sad heart and sin-sick soul has been relieved, comforted, and strengthened, by some sweet song.

The modern revivalist has learned the importance of music, both to attract the multitude and to soften the hearts of hearers. It is sometimes a question which has the most telling effect on the congregation—the music or the preaching.

To say the least, both can be made to work harmoniously together, and sometimes may be of equal benefit.

The choir, composed as it should be of good people with cultivated voices led by a good chorister, one possessing not only good musical ability, but one possessing a strong spiritual nature, who like the preacher seeks the leadings of the Holy Spirit in his work, can be of excellent service in the congregation of the Saints. Such a choir will be inspired from on high, the hearers will catch the inspiration and their hearts will be attuned to the service and be better fitted for the word of truth proceeding from the pulpit. The place of the choir, therefore, should be very near the minister, and closely associated with him in his efforts in bringing souls into closer touch with God.

For a choir to be able to occupy this important position and to be qualified to accomplish such a grand work, it is necessary for each member to remember the divine injunction of the Master to do all things with an eye single to his glory. This will prevent jealousy and envy creeping in, for these are weapons of the Adversary, calculated in their very nature to hinder the good work.

The spirit of self-sacrifice will also be necessary, that each member may not only be present at church service, but also present at choir practice, for this is very essential, in order to render the selections in unison and in harmony; and some rule should prevail to exclude those who thus fail in their duty.

It should be clearly understood, however, that the choir is only to lead the congregation in the singing, and not to do the singing for them, excepting it may be in special numbers, such as anthems, solos, etc. These should be selected with a view of keeping within range of the hearers' ability to appreciate what is rendered, and many times the more simple pieces are most appreciated by the majority, as comparatively few are able to appreciate extremely classical music; therefore, these should be the exception rather than the rule, bearing in mind that "that which edifieth is of God."

Congregational singing should be encouraged by the choir in the selection of such songs as the congregation can most readily join in singing. We have met one choir in our travels whose leader was an extremist. Most of the hymns were sung too fast. The holds were three times the length intended, and the last note ended with a sudden stop, as though the leader was jabbed with a pin. Of course the congregation could not sing, much to their disappointment, and a number became exasperated as a consequence. This choir was a hindrance and in no sense a help to the worship.

The best choir I ever heard was in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, New York—Henry Ward Beecher's. It was composed of nearly one hundred voices, the congregation numbering over two thousand, with songbooks for each member. One pleasing feature was that there was no choir leader in sight. He doubtless had wielded the baton in choir practice, and the choir was so well drilled that it was not necessary for him to be in evidence with his baton in open service. The songs of praise which rose from this vast audience led by this choir of well-trained voices was grand and most inspiring.

In striking contrast to this, I see a small congregation numbering some thirty or forty people, with a choir of about six members, the leader swinging the baton with great energy and no regard to time, while most of the audience are looking on in silence. Such a scene suggests the question whether so much physical exercise on the part of the leader is really necessary before a small congregation. Generally speaking, as little public display as possible will be found to be most edifying in the congregations of the Saints.

It is very gratifying to see the work along musical lines engaging the attention of the Saints. They have much to encourage them, as they not only have the natural talents which others possess, but in connection with this, they have the Holy Spirit's influence to inspire their minds and enable them to sing with the spirit and the understanding. It is this which makes the singing of the Saints attractive to others.

May the Lord bless all those engaged in this service of song, and may they keep in memory "The service of song in the house of the Lord with humility and unity of spirit in those who sing, and for those who hear is blessed and acceptable with God," and may the choir service continue to improve and go on to perfection, and continue to be a power for good in the church.

Sunday School Department

EDITED BY GOMER R. WELLS, LAMONI, IOWA

Our New Official Organ

This is the last time our Sunday school department will appear in the HERALD. We are glad to know that the space will be occupied by the Woman's Auxiliary, two pages each week. On behalf of the association, we wish hereby to express our appreciation for the free space we have occupied the last year, the value of which was no less than five hundred dollars if paid for in a business contract.

The consensus of opinion of Sunday school and general church workers is known to be that it is not wise to increase the number of our church publications until we have utilized our present periodicals to the fullest extent. Autumn Leaves is considered to be the logical channel of expression. The Board of Publication has shown a willingness to cooperate. It would be necessary to enlarge the magazine if we used it as our organ. We could not expect the board to bear that extra expense without some help from us. We are able and willing to give it. The late General Convention thought so and accepted the liberal offer of the board to grant us the free use of eight extra pages, indefinitely if we secure only 600 new subscriptions at $1.00 a year, paid in advance. The executive council has appointed your general superintendent to edit this department and the undersigned were directed to execute the will of the convention in securing the requisite number of new subscribers.

HERE IS OUR PLAN

We expect to begin the department in the July number of the Leaves. We expect also that our fellow workers everywhere will stand by us and send in the subscriptions before that date. (We are only carrying out your wishes after all.)

The association has about 750 schools. One subscription from each would bring more than the number asked for by the board. But remember, if we raise 1,000, we can have just double the space, 16 pages. Thus we would reach more workers with more matter. How does that look—shall we stop at 600?

We want every local and district superintendent to take stock by finding out how many officers and teachers take the Leaves, make an active canvass and urge all to subscribe. We have 5,000 officers and teachers, district and local, who should support our new official organ. Perhaps some are already subscribers—that doesn't mean you, of course.

AND IT'S WORTH IT, TOO

The general officers are constantly sending and receiving information that should be printed so that all—every district and local officer and teacher could get the benefit. We answer hundreds of questions every year that would never be written if we had this larger means of passing on information—a saving of time, energy, stamps and stationery, as well as a gain in efficiency all round.

Autumn Leaves is already worth anyone's dollar. In addition to the fine editorials and articles of general interest, it is the official organ of our sister society through the Religio's Arena. This would make of it an ideal auxiliary magazine. Auxiliary workers must take it to keep abreast of the work, in spirit, in method, and as to where it is being done.

STOP; LOOK; LISTEN

Caution Number 1.—Renewals to Autumn Leaves do not count on this proposition. Let them be taken care of in the usual way when the time comes.

Caution Number 2.—The Herald Publishing House will receive subscriptions on this, but if sent in the usual way they will not be credited to our department. Unless you specify, "Credit this to the Sunday school department," the clerks will take it for an ordinary subscription. For your convenience we are sending out thousands of special order blanks for this purpose. Use them and avoid mistakes.

If you prefer, you can send your subscription to either of the undersigned, at Lamoni, Iowa, and we will turn them over to the Herald Publishing House with proper instructions.

Caution Number 3.—Don't make the mistake of canvassing only Sunday school officers and teachers. Autumn Leaves is worth while to any other church worker, even leaving out the auxiliary departments. You would confer a favor on anyone to take his money for Autumn Leaves. Don't hesitate.

We have written in this cautionary manner because we know there are a lot of workers so full of enthusiasm they may not stop to pick out all the details and may make some mistakes. We make it so plain that "he that runs may read."

Subscriptions are already coming in, unsolicited on our part. Brother Thomas Forbes of Detroit was the first to subscribe. Sister Ruby Jackson, one of Saint Joseph's live wires, sent us a crisp five-dollar note with five new subscriptions, as a result of a little boosting as soon as she got home from General Conference. She thinks she can send five more. If that is any sign, we are going to reach the 1,000 mark and have the sixteen pages. Why not! We can do if we only think so. We hope every district and local officer will make everyone he talks to think so, too. If officers are asleep on this proposition, let some one else take hold of it. Everybody can work, but it is better to bunch your subscriptions and send them through some one person. If the superintendent does not lead out, let some other officer or teacher or member do so.

Now, here goes for 600, or 1,000—which shall it be? We'll tell you later.

G. R. WELLS,
E. D. MOORE,
Committee.

Still Boosting

Since writing the above, we have received the following:

Dear Brother Wells: I am pleased to be able to enclose seven more subscriptions to Autumn Leaves to credit of "our Sunday School Department."

Saint Joseph is quite fortunate in having some very loyal soldiers who respond to calls for assistance whenever possible for them to do so. Then, too, we have tried to make them understand that the magazine is well worth the price, and in addition they are helping the Sunday school association in the work they are trying to do.

Will keep on boosting and the first Sunday I can spare, will run down to the other branches and say a good word for you. When I get another dollar you shall hear from me again.

Cordially,

RUBY JACKSON.

This makes an even dozen from this one school.

If every school will exert such energy as this, the Herald Publishing House will surely feel impressed with the power there is in this, the strongest auxiliary the church has. We'll get those sixteen pages yet.

Senior "Quarterly" to Missionaries

As usual, we will place all General Conference appointees on the free list for the next twelve months, if they will send us their field address. Old lists are cancelled every year. If you have no settled field address, give home address and have the Quarterly forwarded, which takes a one-cent stamp, amounting to only four cents for the year. Surely it is worth that much to keep up with the course.

Missionaries and others can do a service by calling attention of all students of the Quarterlies to the fact that the editors are following a course marked out by the lessons committee appointed by the body. If that course is not satisfactory, don't blame the editors, but send delegates to General Convention instructed to tell how we can make the course better. If any quarter's lessons seem too historic, or are otherwise not to the taste of some, remember that all quarters are not on the same theme. It may be more satisfactory next quarter. Anyhow, follow the course and criticize it as a whole, not piecemeal.

They Like the Lessons

"CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, April 5, 1916.

"ELDER GOMER R. WELLS,

"General Superintendent.

"Dear Brother: The officers and teachers of the First Chicago Sunday School desire to express our gratitude, through you, to the editors of all the Quarterlies and the lessons committee for the excellent work which our Quarterlies represent.

"We have heard many words of praise for the present graded lessons and heartily appreciate the labor and talent which has produced them.

(Signed) "C. B. HARTSHORN, Superintendent.

"By order of the school, April 3, 1916."

What the Convention Did

About the first thing was to rescind the action of two years ago which gave to the Joint Council of the First Presidency and Twelve the power to nominate the general superintendent. This carried by a vote which in proportion was: fifty-four per cent for, and forty-six per cent against.

This puts us back on the old ground when the convention might elect an officer who was obligated to General Conference, and might be appointed to some other work. It had been thus for years. For a number of conventions prior to the action of two years ago (now rescinded), the conventions were unanimously expressing the need for securing the whole time of the superintendent. The joint council was asked to consider it three years ago. That body could give no relief as long as they had no voice in the selection of the superintendent.

It was suggested that if they had the power to nominate, there would be cooperation in the matter. It was clear that with such power, granted with the understanding that the one nominated was to give his whole time to the Sunday school work, there would be no clash. The joint council would be obligated to not appoint such a nominee to other work, if elected by the association. As the association has now withdrawn that power, this cooperation ceases, and the appointing powers are not obligated to consider the release of a superintendent who might be one the said council had already decided to appoint to other work. It might be detrimental to the work in a certain place or field to release him, or it might not be. We are now working independently. Before we worked coordinately with the council. If we did not like their nominees, we still had the power to say so, and they were obligated to make further nominations.

Immediately after the election of superintendent this year, a motion obtained to the effect that the association request the joint council to release him from other appointment, so that he might give his whole time to the Sunday school work. This was graciously granted this year, but will they be in a position to do this every other year? Time will tell. The noble spirit exhibited by the council is commendable.

TRAINING WORKERS

There was presented to the Religio convention, Sunday school convention and General Conference, by the joint council, a recommendation that Graceland College be made to serve the church in a larger way by training auxiliary workers, by the establishment of a chair or chairs for that purpose.

The Religio convention after an animated debate laid the proposition on the table. The Sunday school convention after a still longer debate referred it to the General Conference, thus refusing to commit itself. There again it came up in a still longer discussion, culminating in the recommendation being turned down.

The arguments urged were: (1) We ought to pay off the college debt first; (2) such a proposition as that recommended would violate the articles of incorporation of the college, wherein it is provided: "The college shall never be sectarian in its work or instruction, but its advantages and privileges shall be open alike to all. . . ."—Article 16.

According to article three, it is the purpose of the institution to establish "a school of an academical and collegiate character, which may include collegiate, scientific, normal, law, and such other departments with such course of instruction and elective studies as the board of trustees may determine. . . ." Had there been a proposition to include religious instruction in the course and make it compulsory to obtaining a diploma, there would be something in the sectarian argument. There was no such hint, however. The instruction proposed would be entirely "elective," which in an American college means, "a study or course of study which a student may choose from several alternatives."—Webster.

The admonition, "Pay the debt" was declaimed so often and persistently that the college budget, including a plan to pay off the debt in five years, one fifth each year, was passed unanimously without debate. We rejoice in this determination, and hope that the church will steadfastly set its face in that direction until the debt is all paid. By that time the church may see its way clear to train Sunday school and Religio workers, choristers, and other such kind of auxiliary workers, without violating the articles of incorporation of Graceland College.

MATTERS REFERRED TO EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

After a strenuous debate on the foregoing matter and the question of issuing a special quarterly to satisfy new members and nonmembers, the following was referred to the executive council with power to act:

1. A motion to appropriate five hundred dollars to Graceland College debt. The action of the executive on this is: "That it be the sense of this body that we do not have sufficient funds to make this appropriation at this time."

2. A motion requesting that an active campaign be conducted in favor of the "organized class movement." This matter was given over to the general superintendent to attend to.

3. A request to provide loose-leaf lessons. This was referred to a subcommittee: Superintendent, secretary, and treasurer.

4. Request to provide a Sunday school room for the Japanese Sunday school in Honolulu. This was referred to the superintendent and treasurer for investigation and report to the executive council.

5. Proposed amendment to by-laws making the basis of representation from schools to district conventions one for every ten or a fraction over five. This was adopted and will be inserted in the next issue of the constitution. Order Number 69, ten cents a dozen, from Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

6. Proposed amendment specifying that districts with one thousand or less of membership might change delegate convention to mass convention for that convention only. This was adopted, and is now binding on all districts. The Rules of Order and Debate are considered binding, but they are no less so than our constitution and by-laws. Latter Day Saints are always law-abiding—they believe in order and system. Some day an emergency may arise in which a district will be very glad it worked under the delegate system—it will be a time when it will not be just or wise to turn the meeting into a mass convention. A word to the wise is sufficient. The privilege of voice and vote, one or both, "except when the full delegate vote is called for," is permissible at any convention. It satisfies those who think the delegate method is too restrictive.

7. Proposed amendments making all references to librarian read member of library board or commission, were all adopted as proposed.

The new issue of constitution and by-laws will contain all the above-mentioned changes, and corrected up to date. Every district and local superintendent should see that every officer in the respective executive councils and every teacher in the school is supplied with a copy of the latest amended constitution.

CRADLE ROLL OFFICERS

The convention placed in constitution all amendments providing for general, district, and local cradle roll superintendents, making them members of their respective executive councils. No district or school need hesitate now to elect such officers. District or local superintendents should make a temporary appointment where the time of next convention or business meeting is some time off. Confer with your assistant in office.

The general cradle roll superintendent is Mrs. H. B. Roberts, 1407 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri. Write her if in need of information or advice.

MISSIONARY QUARTERLY

In response to a request that new members in isolated schools and nonmembers be supplied with quarterlies based entirely on the King James Translation of the Bible and devoid of references to the three standard books of the church, the executive council and lessons committee were asked to consider this matter. For this special purpose there was added to that committee one from each of the following quorums: Twelve, high priests, first, second and third quorums of seventy, making a committee of twenty, of which all were present except three, viz, editors of senior, intermediate and junior Quarterlies. This special committee had "power to act." After two meetings the committee passed the following:

"Resolved, That the editors of all grades of the Quarterlies be instructed to base their lessons upon the King James Translation, and that all other translations and books of reference be used only as corroborative authority."

The editors have been so instructed. One district asked that all quotations from the three standard books be printed out in full. This is hardly practicable. It would make the Quarterlies too bulky. In order that our students may be well equipped, it is necessary that they study the text from the books. Latter Day Saints should know their books from cover to cover. If every reference or citation was printed in full in the lessons, the books would not get thumbed as they do now. A more serious objection is that the reader's ideas would be cast in the very same mold as the mind of the editor. Our people are noted for habits of independent thought. Our present system is favorable to that. It may be inconvenient for a comparative few who have to study their lessons on the cars going to and from work, but it is the greatest good to the greatest number that we must consider.

READY TO ASSIST

All district secretaries and others interested in our department are urged to be free to call on us for any help it may be thought we can give.

During the past year it has been our pleasure to acquire an extensive acquaintance with willing workers all over the land. We have appreciated this privilege, and would like to still further extend this association. What we have learned we are glad to pass along. Some of the features we have had reported to us might be of interest to you, should you have similar problems.

We are always glad to receive suggestions as well as give, as this work is dependent upon a cooperative spirit. Write to me often. I will respond promptly, and seek to make your affiliation with the association as beneficial as possible.

LAMONI, IOWA.

E. D. MOORE.

To District Superintendents

Your next report will not be due till July next. You will receive blanks in plenty of time, furnished to you by the general superintendent at association expense. Please provide yourselves with blank number 60b, for report of local superintendents to you, at district expense. Order by number from Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, at ten cents a dozen, 75 cents a hundred. Get plenty, as it is necessary to send two to each superintendent, one for report and one for a duplicate to keep. These are punched ready to file in loose-leaf binder, number M-EA 1 1-2 R, $1.90, postpaid from Herald Publishing House. Lasts for years. Keeps your records clean and orderly, ready to hand on to your successor. Every district should provide one each for secretary and superintendent.

Concerning Social Purity

(The following letters are given place here that they may be helpful to any who are not fully acquainted with the work of the Social Purity Board, on which the association is represented by a member elected by the convention.)

Dear Brother Farrell: I noticed your name on the Sunday school Quarterly as member of the Social Purity Board. Just what that means I do not know. However, I am interested.

I have read a few books along the purity line, and have been surprised to see members older than I almost quench the notions I had imbibed. Seeing your title on the Quarterly, I thought I would write to you for some information. I am told that the church should lead in all things, so I would like to have my ideas when arguing the points backed up by our church books, and not have to hand a friend a book written under spirit control or supposed spirit control. Encouragement from you would be thankfully received.

Dear Brother: As you know I must have received your letter several weeks ago; but it was misplaced and I forgot about your request. However, I trust I am not too late with my answer.

Yes, I am one of the committees on the Social Purity Board. Some years ago a few interested members of the church decided that something should be done to extend the light of sexual purity into the lives of such as might be innocently ignorant of facts they ought to know. A committee was appointed by the Religio, to consider the matter. This committee reported that good could be done by wise efforts along the purity line, and suggested that inasmuch as the matter covered general lines a board should be appointed or elected, consisting of a member each from the church proper, the Sunday school, and the Religio. The suggestion was acted on favorably, and the Social Purity Board has been busy since. Our work has consisted chiefly in selecting a few assistants, who have placed literature and in other ways created an active interest in the subject.

There is no mystery or fanaticism attached to the work. Realizing the seriousness which attaches itself to the subject and the far-reaching effect of a wrong method, the board has moved slowly, and, it feels, wisely. The first need was to procure literature dealing with the purity subject and written in a safe and simple manner. After reading many works written by many minds and in various styles, the board selected the works of Mr. Shannon as being the best adapted to the needs of the members of the church. These books are imperfect in some respects, but the precious metal in them far outweighs the dross. These works may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Our hope is to place at least one book in the home of every Saint. The expense makes the progress slow; but over a thousand were sold last year by the Herald Publishing House.

What we might call active ignorance has militated against the large extension of the purity work. Men have thought that darkness rather than light should cover the subject of sexuality. This course has resulted in much avoidable distress and misery and death. We believe that thousands of boys and girls in the world, and many in the church, will be helped by receiving proper instruction from fathers and mothers who are being enlisted in the fight against that impurity which is the result of ignorance. To tell the "story of life" to children at the right time and in the right way is not to put wrong suggestions into their minds, but is to impart knowledge of value to be used in time of need. The alphabet is taught to children when they have no appreciative sense of its significance. Every parent should read Shannon's work, How to Tell the Story of Life.

The words social purity have been made to stand for a lot of good and a lot of evil notions. But this may be said also of the word religion. There are fanatics found in every walk of life. There is nothing intricate about the work of the Social Purity Board. It is said, "What is everyone's work is no one's work," or words to that effect. This is true in purity work, in part. Everybody should be interested doers, but organizing, advertising, circulating literature, interesting parents, etc., etc., must rest first, and perhaps always, in the hands of a competent committee. The work of the great church is divided into parts under the care of quorums. A specialist is a man prepared to speak or represent his line or lines of work. The word efficiency has been sadly overworked, but notwithstanding this, who would not prefer to rest his case in the hands of one qualified to handle it? Fathers and mothers should be specialists in purity work in their homes; and it is to assist them to be such that the Social Purity Board was appointed.

Command me at any time.

I am interested in the spread of a fullness of the light.

RALPH W. FARRELL.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA, May 5, 1916.

Editors Herald: Having arrived in my field and desiring to do all I can for the spread of the work and the building up of the same, I take this means of soliciting the assistance of the Saints throughout the districts where I am to labor.

I have been appointed to the Saskatchewan District for three months and Eastern Iowa for the balance of the year. I came to this place the 2d inst., and expect to visit Waterloo, Oelwein, Aurora, Strawberry Point, and other places; will likely remain in this district until after the district conference, and probably go to Saskatchewan about the middle of June, then return here for the fall and winter. So I desire to ask the Saints to cooperate with me in the great work of which we are a part.

If you are prepared to help in this work, don't hesitate to write me, making known your wants and the possibilities for work in your locality. The missionaries need and must have your assistance if they are to make a success of the work. Not only in a financial way, but in many other ways do we need your help. Remember that we appreciate the little things as well as the big ones.

I know there are those who because they cannot help in a big way sometimes withhold the little support that they might give. This is a mistake, as it takes the little things to make up the big things; it takes the nickels and dimes to make the dollars; so if you cannot do much, do not hesitate to do the little you can do, and it will be appreciated. Remember that the widow's mite was considered more than the large offering of the rich man.

You can help the missionaries by helping to open up new places, and providing places in which to hold meetings, distributing tracts, advertising matter, etc., and one way that you can materially help is by your presence at the meetings whenever opportunity affords. There is nothing more harmful to the work, and discouraging to the missionary than, when meetings are being carried on, to find half or more than half of the Saints in the community absent, some of them with no more substantial excuse than a snow ball in a July sun.

As the Lord has again spoken, and strengthened the financial arm of the church, let us move forward in the line of duty, supporting the work by our tithes and offerings, and the many promises which have been given of late through tongues, and prophecy, will be forthcoming, for the Lord never made a promise yet that he did not fulfill, if we lived up to our part of the contract.

So let us take new courage, cease to complain and find fault, renew our diligence, and arise to maintain the cause which we have espoused. May God's peace abide with and his richest blessings rest upon his people, is the prayer of your humble servant.

Any mail addressed to 1500 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri, will reach me in due time. E. R. DAVIS.

LOWELL, ARKANSAS, April 3, 1916.

Editors Herald: I would like to say to the Saints and friends of Arkansas and Louisiana that as I am sent back to this field of labor I would ask your cooperation in preaching the word to the people this year. Let's see just how we can work together in spreading abroad the angel's message. If there are any who want meetings, write me about it, so we can arrange for them. To wait is to disrupt our arrangements.

In this arrangement it will be necessary to consider the needs of others. You are aware that we can be at only one place at a time, and the time that you may want your meeting, may be the time others will want theirs. So let's not be discouraged if we are not successful in our first effort.

Selfishness no doubt is the greatest evil with which we have to do; let no suggestion of it control you. I believe if the missionaries were to sit down and consult their own feelings and needs (in selfishness), they would immediately go home; but we cannot afford it. Then if we must work, let us do so systematically. Since the time Satan began his work in the world, the laws of righteousness have been so disturbed that it takes an unselfish effort on the part of the advocates of truth to accomplish anything. Let us try to make this the best year for service that we have ever had.

I hope that the Saints of this field will make special effort to make it possible for the missionaries to make some new openings. You can help in a number of ways. For instance: You have a friend living in the country or town; send the church papers to him and get him interested in the work, and then inform him that we have missionaries in his field who would like to call on him and instruct him in the things pertaining to the gospel. Have him write to us and give us an invitation to come and preach for him. If he is interested, he will get us a place to preach in and care for us while preaching. I might mention many other ways in which we could reach the people, but I think this will suffice.

If every Latter Day Saint in Arkansas and Louisiana were to effect a new opening, and these be filled by worthy missionaries, there would still be, in this field, thousands of honest-hearted souls left without warning. But you say, I'm not able to sacrifice the time to hunt up subjects of this kind; I'm not able to pay an elder's way to come to my place; I'm not able to spend time for the accomplishing of all these things. I grant that one now and then is not able, but where there is one not able there are a thousand that are. I grant you that to bring the world back to its normal condition is a ponderous task, but will waiting make the task lighter? Verily, no! but the longer we wait the greater the difficulties.

Let us work together. Write now.

JAMES MARION SMITH.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, February 28, 1916.

Editors Herald: I do not intend to be without the HERALD. It has been much help to me. I look for it eagerly the day it arrives, and I can hardly wait till I find time from my duties to read every word of it. I have sent my HERALDS, all but the last four, to some one else after reading them, the most of the time to outsiders, so that in this way I might do all the good possible. I feel that every line is too valuable to be lost.

My husband has just been baptized into the fold. I have many other relatives and friends I am trying to reach. I feel that with my husband's aid my talents for service have been increased. I want to do my duty, and I know I can do it better with the aid of the HERALD. I would like to take more of the church publications; I know we would be benefited by them, and I sincerely believe the way will be opened for me to do so in the near future.

Convention Minutes

WESTERN MAINE.—Sunday school, met at Stonington, April 22 and 23. Owing to bad weather attendance was poor. Program was interesting and instructive. Next convention to be held at time of district conference. Mrs. L. J. Eaton, secretary, Deer Isle, Maine.

Pastoral

To the Saints and Friends in Utah, Nevada, Oregon, California and Hawaiian Territory; Greeting: We suggest the following arrangement for the conference year's work:

Utah: A. V. Closson will concentrate his efforts in Salt Lake City. N. L. Booker will take care of the northern part of the State. B. L. McKim will locate at Provo and take care of the southern part of the State. So far as practicable, we advise that a special effort be made to use the tent in missionary work by Brethren Booker and McKim.

Nevada will be provided for by S. M. Reiste, and we would like a special effort to be made in Lassen County, California where we had some interest years ago and there are calls at the present for some one to go and preach. This point can be reached from Reno easily.

Oregon: N. T. Chapman will labor in the eastern part of the Portland District, making Condon a base. C. E. Jones will make Oregon City a base, and cooperating with G. M. Shippy will develop the interests already cultivated and make new openings as far as possible south of Portland. M. H. Cook as president of the district and the Portland Branch will no doubt find plenty to do, and as much as possible will cooperate with the brethren in these efforts. We extend a hearty invitation to Swen Swensen of Washington to step over and render any help he can in the places where he did so well last year.

Southwestern District: Brethren A. C. Barmore and R. F. Slye will be united in the efforts which we trust will be made in this district this year and we suggest that the eastern portion of this field offers a good field taking in the towns on the Southern Pacific Railway, and we would like to see an effort made with the tent by these brethren this year.

Northern California District: H. J. Davison will make his headquarters at Oakland and render what help he can to the Saints there, and also in San Francisco. Should it be agreeable to the Saints at Oakland, Brother Davison is eligible for election as pastor. Charles A. Parkin will represent the financial interests of the church as heretofore. F. G. Pitt will be with us again and continue the good work he is doing as evangelist in the district.

Arthur Allen will take care of the work in the section including Sacramento, Stockton and Ceres and also the work begun by Brother McConley at Auburn. We recommend that Brother Allen be elected president of the Sacramento and the Stockton branches and have the cooperation of the local brethren until the work in these places is more fully developed.

Brethren Brooner and Headding will labor together in the southern portion of this district and we hope to see an effort made in the San Joaquin Valley beginning with Modesto and going south, using the tent in special missionary effort. We also desire that the work on the coast line especially at Monterey be taken care of this year also by these brethren.

Brother McConley will labor with Brother Cady as long as he can in the field where work was done so effectively last year. Then when Brother McConley leaves for Hawaii we hope that Brother Hawkins will be able to cooperate with Brother Cady as much as possible. We also request that effort be made this year to reach the various points from Santa Rosa to Ukiah from whence we have urgent calls for preaching.

C. W. Hawkins will devote all of his time to the work this year and we feel sure our brother will have the hearty support of the Saints in his efforts throughout the district.

Southern California District: Brother Goodrich this year will concentrate at Santa Ana and as far as his health will permit will take care of the work in that vicinity.

G. E. Harrington will probably locate at San Diego and will be available for work throughout the district.

I also expect to make my home in Los Angeles for this year and will unite with these brethren in doing what we can for the success of the work in this district.

We urge upon the missionaries the need of systematic and persistent effort; haphazard work and occasionalism are just as fatal to success in ministerial work as in commercialism.

We would like that each one engaged in proselyting will tract from house to house and cultivate thereby an acquaintance with the people. To devote from two to four hours a day in this sort of work will bring surprising results and a peculiar satisfaction to the one doing it. Where it is not possible to hold tent meetings we might secure good results by street meetings, especially in cities.

We trust that the same good will which has prevailed between the local and general ministry may continue with us, and hope that we shall get nearer to the ideal presented in our conferences last year in which the work of each section of the ministry shall be supplemental to the other.

The need of financial help is obvious and we hope that all the Saints will pay their tithes and offerings as regularly as possible to the local bishops and agents so as enable these officers to meet the demands made upon them.

Regarding the Hawaiian Territory, we shall be grateful to avail ourselves of the splendid help of Brother Waller with whom we will be associated this year, C. Ed. Miller and M. A. McConley; the first in Honolulu and the latter in Hilo. As heretofore, we recommend that the advice and counsel of Brother Waller be secured by the brethren in their work.

Finally, send all reports to me not later than the 1st day of July, October, January and March; to me at this address: Marsh-Strong Building, Los Angeles, California.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 8, 1916.

To the Saints and Friends in the Virginias; Greeting: Since the appointment of Elder H. E. Winegar to the Virginias, certain developments have caused the authorities to deem it advisable to transfer Brother Winegar from the Virginias to Idaho, where he did such a splendid work last year, and I have therefore appointed Elder Fred Moser, jr., as my assistant in charge of the Virginias.

Elders Thomas Newton and J. M. Nunley will therefore communicate with Brother Moser at once, at 404 Stealy Avenue, Clarksburg, West Virginia, for further instructions.

Respectfully,

R. C. RUSSELL.

SAINT THOMAS, ONTARIO, 44 Balaclava Street.

To the Saints of the Southern Nebraska District: Having been appointed to labor in your district for the coming conference year; I would like to get the names of as many scattered Saints as possible. Those knowing names and addresses of any Saints, please notify,

CHARLES J. SMITH.

LOGAN, IOWA.

To the Saints of South Dakota; Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ: Having been appointed to labor in your State, I take this means of communicating with you.

I have met some of you in past years and shall be glad to meet you again if in the prosecuting of my work as a servant of the church and of Christ I may be permitted to do so. But time works changes, and I am not fully acquainted with conditions there, so I write to ask that you will advise me of conditions in your immediate vicinity; the opportunities for preaching, etc. So far as possible I would be glad to visit the scattered members and give to them what encouragement I may be able. I crave the hearty cooperation of the Saints throughout the State in the effort to reach the people with the message of the restored gospel.

Please write to me at my home address, Inman, Nebraska. Do so at an early date, so I may be able to get into the field as soon as possible. In the meantime I will try to do some work in Central Nebraska District as bishop's agent for that district.

Wishing you all a successful and prosperous year in all lines of proper effort, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

LEVI GAMET.

Dear Saints and Friends of the Eastern Oklahoma District; Greeting: Having been appointed by the powers that be to act as your missionary another conference year, I beg for your full cooperation, chiefly the branch authorities. All differences and difficulties that the local officers may not be able to cope with, or settle, should be reported to me. And local elders and priests who are able to give all, or a part of their time, outside or near their respective branches, without neglecting their duties towards same, should do so, and make new openings. If you need help, I will respond or send some one if possible.

The laborers are few, the field is large, there being fourteen counties in Oklahoma, thirty-five in Texas, and seven in Arkansas, western boundary, parallel 96, hence the need of constant and untiring labor and push.

Remember that we are in God's own true church; by him we have been called into service; to him we will be held responsible. Answer to him we must, sooner or later, as to our labors, character, and deportment. Our example should be worthy of imitation. The hastening time is at hand and before us. Come, let us carefully and prayerfully as officers and members, labor hand in hand together. Our salvation and that of others is at stake. The strongest, most far-reaching testimony that we can possibly bear is a Godly walk and conversation. Let us preach the pure gospel of Christ as accepted by us, and let other churches alone, unless assailed.

Don't forget our district reunion to be held at Fort Towson, Oklahoma, August 4 to 14. Let success be the watchword.

From the branch presidents I shall expect quarterly reports promptly, June 25, September 25, December 25 and February 25, so I can make out my quarterly reports on the first.

Having moved my family to Independence, Missouri, my home address will be Independence, Missouri, West Walnut Street, Box 1440. My field address will be Haileyville, Oklahoma. All communications and reports should be sent to field address.

Branches and scattered members throughout the territory will please write me of your wants.

The Bishopric

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT

Owing to the resignation of Brother B. F. Spicer as bishop's agent of the Central Texas District, we hereby appoint Elder A. J. Banta of 949 Yale Street, Houston, Texas.

We desire to express our appreciation of the services rendered by Brother Spicer in looking after the work of the Bishopric in that district, and we heartily commend to the Saints our newly appointed agent. Brother Banta is the son of Elijah Banta formerly of the Bishopric, and we truly pray that the mantle of his father may rest upon him and that he may prove a blessing to the Saints in the Central Texas District.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 12, 1916.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Northern California; Greeting: Everyone is rejoicing over the last conference, and the missionaries hastening to their fields full of zeal for the progress of the greatest work on earth, the building up of the kingdom of God among men. Let us all ask ourselves, "Am I doing my part? If not, what lack I yet?" Paul says, "Let no man deceive himself," so there is a possibility of doing so.

Some people think if they save a sum of money and when they die leave it to the church, they have done their part. That may be a good work, but it does not meet the requirements of the divine purpose. "Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, that delighteth greatly in his commandments." (Psalm 112:1). He commended Malachi to say to the people: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith. . . if I will not open unto you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing." (Malachi 3:10).

To begin with, he asks the question, "Will a man rob God?" Could you rob your friend of that which does not belong to him? When we hold the tithe of all our increase, we rob God. Do you want to do that? This is a testing time, to see if we will obey his word which is to be a "lamp to my feet and a light to my pathway." We are to be tested now. If we are not faithful in handling that which belongs to God, who will commit to your trust the true riches? (Luke 16:9-13.) The true riches are eternal life, are they not? He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful in much.

God is not going to put us in possession of eternal life until we have proven ourselves worthy of it. Let us not forget that. Equality is plainly manifest in God's rule. All are to pay the tenth, and then if you have more, other means are provided and are mandatory if you desire to live in harmony with the divine rule. It must not be forgotten that the tithe is a part of what a person has been blessed with.

"Verily I say unto you, it shall come to pass that all those who gather into the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. . . . And this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion." (Doctrine and Covenants 106:2.) Some have stumbled over this thought, that tithe always means a tenth. If we say they are to be assessed of their surplus, there might not be so much objection. Some say, "I am in California, and do not come under that rule." But the direct application of the order of surplus is in Zion and her stakes, but the privileged administration is coextensive with the residence of the Saints and a proper officer to administer. "He that sendeth up treasures unto the land of Zion, shall receive an inheritance in the world, and his works shall follow him."—Doctrine and Covenants 63:13.

Any who expect to pay in to the church funds, will confer a favor if they will kindly do so at once to relieve the present needs.

Reunion Notices

Southern California, at Convention Park, Hermosa Beach, August 4 to 14. Radical measures have been introduced to reduce the expenses. Members have volunteered to do all our own work this year to save hiring the cooks and all other work is to be done by our own men's and boys' clubs. Peter Kaufman is chairman of the tent committee. All who are willing to assist in this work should communicate with him at Montebello as early as possible. The cafeteria will be continued, but under management of a committee. No wages are to be paid this year and meals to be served at cost, so it is desired that all who can assist in this service and that those willing to help signify their willingness to H. F. Backer, 463 North Grand Avenue, Los Angeles, as soon as possible. The district now owns quite a good supply of cots and mattresses. It was decided to reduce the price one half, so that this year the price will be for single cot and mattress $1; double cot and mattress, $1.50; tables 25 cents each so long as the supply lasts; it will therefore be desirable that those wishing them should put in their order early and accompany the order with the money, for after the supply is exhausted the charge will be whatever it costs to hire them from other parties. The prices of tents will be the same as usual, 10 by 12, $2.50; 12 by 14, $3; 12 by 16, $3.50. Chairs 15 cents. Send all orders for the tents, cots and mattresses to the secretary, together with the money. It is probable that the conference session will be at 10 a. m. An Opportunity to Help

The work in the study of the Bible and Religious Pedagogy in Graceland College has expanded very considerably during the present year and has reached the point where use could be made of a small collection of modern textbooks and reference books on Bible and religious subjects.

It is hoped that there may be members of the church who will be willing either to donate textbooks which they may have on these subjects for use in the library, or may be willing to make a small money subscription for the purpose of purchasing such texts. Any who will be willing to do this will be assisting the department very materially and their donations or subscriptions will be very thankfully received.

Please send any donations or subscriptions to the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

HOW WE WERE TREATED IN A CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

Some people imagine the day of religious persecution and abuse is ended. Others know that it is not. In Autumn Leaves for June Elder Leonard G. Holloway tells how he was treated in a community in Iowa only recently by a congregation of so-called "Christians"—or as they are sometimes termed, "Campbellites."

Yet it came out all right. The Lord turned it to our good and to the defeat of those who forgot Christian charity.

This is but one of many interesting Missionary Anecdotes now running in Autumn Leaves. You will like them.

"THE PRESBYTERIAN" SPEAKS

JOHN CALVIN ON THE WITNESS STAND

Our attention has been called to the following article, appearing in The Presbyterian, April 6, 1916, under the caption, "Both are Mormons," and credited to "Investigator":

There are two "Mormon" church denominations. They call themselves "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints" and the "Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints." The world calls them both "Mormon," because both accept the Book of Mormon as scripture, equal in authority and superior in authenticity to the Bible; and because both accept and proclaim as a prophet of God, that Joseph Smith who founded the whole fraudulent institution.

For long years, both seemed to be willing to accept "Mormon" as a designation. While often proclaiming their technical or official titles, their written and spoken utterances teemed with the words "Mormon" and "Mormonism." Of late, and particularly in Philadelphia, the Reorganized Church has sought to escape from odium, and to make a deceptive approach to evangelical Christianity, by denying the title "Mormon" and by denouncing "Mormonism."

Let no one be deceived. The facts are plain. We shall endeavor to state them justly and with every desire to stimulate any effort to win men and bodies of men into Christian communion.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has its headquarters at Salt Lake City, Utah. Its present prophet is Joseph F. Smith, nephew of the original prophet. It teaches polygamy. Its prophet and many of its priests practice polygamy. It teaches disloyalty. It misuses public trust funds. It is engaged in a vast treasonable conspiracy against the civil government. It is powerful in numbers, and more powerful in intrigue.

The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints has its headquarters at Independence, Missouri. Its prophet is Frederick M. Smith, grandson of the original prophet. It does not teach polygamy or treason. It is not as strong in numbers and intrigue as the other Mormon denominations; but it is just as insolently insistent upon the claim that Joseph Smith restored the power and authority of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

So far as we know, there is no crusade against the Reorganized Church, although there is resistance to its absurd pretensions. The great fight now moving forward in the United States is against the crime and disloyalty and pledge breaking of the polygamous church.

But both churches are "Mormon" churches—one as much as the other. Both get their existence under the pretense that the gospel was lost and that its saving power had to be restored through Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet. Both set that ignorant and willful quack as the earthly head of Christ's church in the latter-day. Both accept Smith's blasphemy as gospel. Both set up Smith's "revelations" as divine. Hence both are fraudulent. And one of them is criminal. The Reorganized Church is fighting the unreorganized church on polygamy, right of succession, and other points. At the same time, it is pushing forward everywhere for recognition among Christian bodies; and it wants to drag its false prophet, Joseph Smith, and his profane scriptures in with it.

We offer our earnest objection and warning. The reorganized "Mormon" church is not entitled to affiliation with evangelical Christianity, while it holds Joseph Smith as the "restorer" of the gospel. Its creeping approaches should be resisted at every point. Setting aside for the moment, all possibility that the two Smith "Mormon" churches may ever come together; the Reorganized Church is not intrinsically entitled to Christian fellowship.

And, not setting aside for the moment that possibility, there is double reason for watchful resistance against the Reorganized Church. It might be the thin end of a wedge.

The entire scheme of Smithism in both churches is too much like Mohammedanism.

Evidently the writer of the foregoing article desired to be fair and impartial in his statement, and to the extent of his success we congratulate him.

We may even concede that making due allowance for his viewpoint, theology, and denominational affiliation, his statement is all that we could reasonably ask for or expect. Of course in making that concession we may not be any more guilty of flattery than he. To concede that a thing is all that could be expected considering the source, may or may not be eulogistic—that would depend upon our opinion of the source.

In this instance we do not wish to either eulogize or defame. The writer of the article, belonging to an old-line, orthodox denomination, one of those whose creeds were denounced by the revelation of 1820, could not be expected to indorse our claims regarding restoration—certainly not until he has a change of heart. In conceding the differences between the Reorganized Church and the Utah church on moral questions, he goes about as far as we could expect him to go.

To a degree, at least, he takes the issue from the realm of morals, so far as we are concerned, and transfers it to the realm of theology.

We are weary of repudiating doctrines and beliefs which we have never indorsed, and welcome even so grudging and almost churlish a statement as that made by the writer in question, as it opens the way for defense of that which we do believe.

Our main objection to the word "Mormon" has been that it has generally been taken to denote Utah Mormonism—if it is to be taken merely as indicating a belief in the Book of Mormon and in the restored gospel, we would not urge so strenuous an objection.

The writer brands Joseph Smith as a false prophet, his revelations as blasphemy, the Book of Mormon as profane, the idea of an apostasy and restoration as absurd.

This verdict is easily reached so long as he may pose as judge, jury, and prosecuting attorney in one person. But our appeal is to another court. "Our defense is prepared before us." Our claims are supported by the Scriptures and by "profane history."

Regarding the apostasy, John Calvin, patron Saint of Presbyterianism, in a letter to Charles V and the Diet at Spire, said:

Divine worship being vitiated by so many false opinions, and perverted by so many impious and foul superstitions, the sacred majesty of God is insulted with atrocious contumely, his holy name profaned, his glory almost trampled under foot. Nay, while the whole Christian world is openly polluted with idolatry, men adore, instead of him, their own fictions. A thousand superstitions reign, superstitions which are just so many open insults to him. The power of Christ is almost obliterated from the minds of men, the hope of salvation is transferred from him to empty, frivolous, and nugatory ceremonies, while there is a pollution of the sacraments not less to be execrated. Baptism is deformed by numberless additions, the holy supper is prostituted to all kinds of ignominy, religion throughout has degenerated into an entirely different form. If we are negligent in remedying these evils, God assuredly will not forget himself.—The Necessity of Reforming the Church, pp. 168, 169.

We quote the foregoing from a book published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, 1844. In its preface to the book the board says:

It is now within a year of three centuries since this work of Calvin, on The Necessity of Reforming the Church, was written, and yet, with reference both to its subject and its contents, it looks as if it had been intended for the present day.

The horrible condition of apostasy pictured by John Calvin and still evident three centuries later was not to be remedied by human reformation, but by divine restoration.

Calvin was right. God did not "forget himself."

The writer says that we should be excluded from "evangelical Christianity." As we have often pointed out, this cannot be done consistently under any proper definition of the word evangelical.

The true definition as set forth by Webster indicates that to be orthodox and evangelical is to be sound in doctrine, in harmony with the gospel of Christ and the truth, as taught in the New Testament.

Under such a definition we maintain our stand. In teaching and doctrine we are in accord with the New Testament. But if to be recognized as evangelical we must come under another rule and be found in accord with "popular opinion," we shall cheerfully remain without the pale of "the elect" who are designated and foreordained by boards and federations as evangelical.

If to be recognized as evangelical we must become unevangelical, we prefer to remain evangelical and unrecognized. But we trust a better perception of truth and justice may presently obtain.

To the charge that our church is tainted with Mohammedanism we reply by challenging the writer to name one point on which the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is so nearly in accord with Mohammedanism as Presbyterianism is and has been in its historic allegiance to the doctrine of predestination as set forth in the Westminster Confession of Faith.

In his Ten Great Religions, Clarke says of Mohammedan theology:

Accordingly, when God—so runs the tradition,—I had better say blasphemy—resolved to create the human race, he took into his hands a mass of earth, the same whence all mankind were to be formed, . . . having then divided the clod into two equal portions, he threw the one half into hell, saying, "These to eternal fire, and I care not"; and projected the other half into heaven, adding, "and these to paradise, and I care not."—Ten Great Religions, part 1, p. 479.

Compare that with the following from the Westminster Confession of Faith, for centuries generally accepted by Presbyterians the world over:

II. Although God knows whatsoever may or can come to pass upon all supposed conditions; yet hath he not decreed anything because he foresaw it as future, or as that which would come to pass upon such conditions.

III. By the decree of God, for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, and others foreordained to everlasting death.

IV. These angels and men, thus predestinated and foreordained, are particularly and unchangeably designed; and their number is so certain and definite, that it cannot be either increased or diminished.

V. Those of mankind that are predestinated unto life, God, before the foundation of the world was laid, according to his eternal and immutable purpose, and the secret counsel and good pleasure of his will, hath chosen in Christ unto everlasting glory, out of his mere free grace and love, without any foresight of faith or good works, or perseverance in either of them, or any other thing in the creature, as conditions, or causes moving him thereunto; and all to the praise of his glorious grace.

VI. As God hath appointed the elect unto glory, so hath he, by the eternal and most free purpose of his will, foreordained all the means thereunto. Wherefore they who are elected being fallen in Adam, are redeemed by Christ; are effectually called unto faith in Christ by his Spirit working in due season; are justified, adopted, sanctified, and kept by his power through faith unto salvation. Neither are any other redeemed by Christ, effectually called, justified, adopted, sanctified, and saved, but the elect only.

VII. The rest of mankind, God was pleased, according to the unsearchable counsel of his own will, whereby he extendeth or withholdeth mercy as he pleaseth, for the glory of his sovereign power over his creatures, to pass by, and to ordain them to dishonor and wrath for their sin, to the praise of his glorious justice.—Westminster Confession, chapter 3, sections 2-6.

We have quoted from the version published by the United Presbyterian Board of Publication, at Pittsburgh, 1888.

Who strikes hands with Mohammedanism? It is to be noted that this delectable document states that God did not decree because he foresaw. (See third section.) He did not foreordain individuals to be damned or to be saved because he foresaw or even considered their works, whether good or bad, (see section 5) but simply as it pleased him—or, to borrow Mohammedan phraseology, which might well have been written in, "These to eternal fire, and I care not; and these to paradise, and I care not."

This creed was in full force when the angel spoke to Joseph Smith in 1820 and said that the creeds were wrong. Did he tell the truth?

Who is entitled to affiliate with "evangelical Christianity"? the Reorganized Church, with a pure and scriptural doctrine, or Presbyterianism, with this Calvinistic monstrosity upon its back?

ELBERT A. SMITH.

CHINESE AFFAIRS.—Fighting is reported at Tsinan Fu, Province of Shantung, where forty rebels have been killed. It is said that President Yuan Shih-Kia is likely to be deposed because of lack of loyalty to the republic.

METHODISTS UNITE.—In the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Saratoga Springs, New York, on the 16th, action was had looking to the uniting of that church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The press reports that the scene was dramatic, the senior bishops of the two churches standing hand in hand as the conference sang, "Blest be the tie that binds." This action is subject to the concurrence of the Methodist Church South, which meets in conference in 1918.

SHIP PURCHASE.—A bill designed to build up the American merchant marine through Federal aid, passed the House on the 20th. This bill would authorize the expenditure of $50,000,000, raised by the sale of Panama Canal bonds, for the purchase and leasing of merchant ships to be used in carrying domestic trade. The ships purchased would be sold or leased to private carriers as rapidly as possible, the Government retaining the right to recall them in case of war, to be used as auxiliaries to the navy, all vessels to be disposed of or operation thereof discontinued within five years after the close of the present European war. A shipping board of five would be created by the bill, to prevent rate discrimination of all ships in American waters, and to fix maximum rates.

IRISH AFFAIRS.—Premier Asquith has visited different points in Ireland, investigating various phases of the recent Irish uprising, and gathering information to guide the British Government in its future policy in conducting the affairs of this little country. Mr. Asquith has been made a member of the Irish privy council. This is the first time for a British premier to be a member of this body, and indicates a greater share on the part of the premier in the executive government of the island. Sir Roger Casement, taken from a German vessel in an attempt to land arms in Ireland, and thought to be otherwise implicated in the recent uprising, has by a court martial been committed to trial on the charge of high treason. J. C. Lynch, a naturalized American, has by a court martial been convicted of participating in the Irish rebellion, and sentenced to ten years imprisonment.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—Report from Washington is that as a result of the conferences between Generals Scott and Obregon, a better understanding prevails in Mexico with reference to the motives of the Washington Government in sending troops into that country, which is not for intervention, but only to disperse or capture the bandits that infest the border country and outrage American territory. As a result, it is said that the Carranza Government has ordered a more thorough search for Villa, and a more effectual guard for the international border. Three Mexican bandits were killed by an American detachment in a skirmish near Lake Itascate, Mexico, the 15th. The troops of the first expedition into Mexico, following the Villa raid on Columbus, New Mexico, have been drawn closer together. Their search for Villa has not been resumed. The troops under Colonel Sibley, sent in pursuit of the bandits who raided Glenn Springs, the 5th, have reached El Pino, one hundred and twenty-five miles south of the Mexican line, where, it is announced, they will probably remain for a time.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The French and Germans both report minor gains in the regions of Verdun. Fighting on the western front has extended to the Champagne and Argonne regions. Activity on the eastern front continues, though no decisive engagements have occurred. The Austrians have assumed the offensive on the Austro-Italian line, where they are conducting a vigorous campaign. The Italians have yielded territory in the region of Trent. The Russians continue their advances in Armenia. It is reported that they threaten the rear of the Turkish troops in Mesopotamia, and are in striking distance of the railroad which supplies the Turkish forces in the vicinity of Bagdad. Clashes have occurred along the Greek border and Bulgarian troops have been transferred from the Rumanian to the Saloniki front. Differences between the entente powers and the Greek Government are reported settled amicably. One French and three German steamships have been sunk by enemy submarines. Germany has served notice on neutral nations that merchantmen that turn their guns toward her submarines, thus assuming a position from which they may fire, will be sunk on sight.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

A BIG LECTURE.—Referring to an effort of Elder S. W. L. Scott in the Fairy Theater, Knox, Indiana, March 5, on the subject "The eastern conflict as seen through the tubes of prophecy," the Starke County Republican of March 9, says:

The speaker wove into his subject prophecy and history, ancient and modern, in such a fascinating manner as to leave the conviction in the mind that he is master of his subjects. A big lecture is this, and should be heard everywhere in vindication of the Bible as the Christian revelation of God to man.

SHANNON REPORTS FAVORABLY.—Professor T. W. Shannon, editor of Practical Eugenics, and a well-known social purity worker, delivered two lectures at the late General Conference, under the auspices of the Social Purity Board of the church. His report of this visit to the conference in Practical Eugenics for May, is favorable, and will make to the advantage of our cause. Mr. Shannon says:

The editor recently lectured twice at the international conference of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints, at Independence, Missouri. At this conference were some eight hundred ministerial delegates representing this denomination in many states of the Union, as well as several foreign fields. We were interested in learning that for many decades this church has stood firmly in her opposition to the use of tobacco by the ministry, and in teaching the members that they should likewise abstain. In recent years, these people have taken advanced steps in the teaching of personal and social purity as a department of church work. They have circulated many thousands of our books. During the two days spent at the conference we made a host of friends, added nearly two hundred members to the P. E. M., and nearly one hundred subscribers to Practical Eugenics.

GIFTS POSSIBLE.—One of the most bitterly contested points in the doctrine as taught by the Latter Day Saints has been that of present-day spiritual gifts. Men have contended that the gifts ceased with the last apostle, or with the last man who had received gospel ministration under the hands of an apostle, or at the end of the apostolic age, and are not possible with us. It is therefore interesting to note the statement in the Christian Herald of February 23, 1916, than which there is no more influential or more widely recognized religious journal published in the United States, to-day, and which statement concedes that "these gifts are possible." Answering the question of "Subscriber," "How is it, in view of the church officers mentioned in 1 Corinthians 12: 28, that we do not have apostles and prophets in the present-day church?" The Christian Herald says:

In this verse Paul is describing the church as it existed at the time of his writing. Some of the twelve apostles were at this time still alive, and Paul himself claimed to be a true apostle because he himself had seen the Lord. (1 Corinthians 9: 1; 2 Corinthians 11: 5; 2 Corinthians 12: 11. See also the greetings of most of his epistles and 1 Corinthians 15: 8, 9.) The office of prophet, however, was clearly meant to continue. The gift of prophecy is referred to frequently in the New Testament, and seems to be equivalent to our modern church acts of preaching, testimony and exhortation. The particular duty of the prophet, even in the Old Testament, is not to foretell events, but to receive messages direct from God, which he repeats again to the people. In this sense the modern preacher should and must be a true prophet of God. Teachers are recognized in the church now as then, and the preacher combines in his office the work of prophet and teacher as well. "Miracles" and "healing" should accompany the modern church as they accompanied the church of the early day. "Helps and governments" are as much in need now as then, while the gift of tongues may be put down last, as it was in the days of Paul. You ask whether any church believes in all the spiritual gifts mentioned in this chapter. We think that all the churches recognize these gifts as possible. But, on the other hand, it is perhaps not necessary to believe that Paul was giving here a rigid, unalterable, formal list and plan of organization for the church. Note particularly that bishops, elders and deacons are omitted from this particular list, offices which some denominations hold to form the chief and most distinct classes of ecclesiastic organization.

A WELL-SPENT LIFE

(Synopsis of the funeral sermon of Elder James Moler, preached at Creola, Ohio, March 26, 1916, by Elder A. B. Kirkendall.)

For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept my faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me.—2 Timothy 4: 6-9.

Dear friends, we read this selection of scripture, as it is especially applicable to the life work of our departed brother, and because we find it in his own Bible, that bears so many marks of constant usage, underscored probably by his own hand.

We have met to pay our last duty to James Moler, son of Andrew and Nancy Moler, born October 24, 1843, in Galia County, Ohio; died at Creola, Ohio, March 23, 1916, aged 72 years, 4 months, and 29 days.

He enlisted in the service of his country June 21, 1861, and served three years in Company B, Fourth West Virginia Infantry. Was honorably discharged January 20, 1864, and on the following day reenlisted in the Fourth West Virginia Veteran Infantry, in which he served until July 16, 1865, having served four years and six months. He participated in some of the great battles of the Rebellion, acquitting himself with honor and credit. He was wounded at the battle of Winchester.

August 16, 1866, he was married to Miss Sarah A. Wildman. To this union five children were born: H. E. Moler, of Holden, Missouri; Martha, of Creola, Ohio; William and Oscar, of Columbus, Ohio; and one son who died in infancy. His wife died January 10, 1889. March 20, 1890, he married Miss Abigail Wine. To this marriage two children were born, Joseph Burton and Frances, of Creola, Ohio. These with the widow, one brother, David, of Nebraska, and one sister, Mrs. Martha Willis, of Wellston, Ohio, survive.

Brother Moler all his life was of a religious turn. He united with the Disciple Church in early manhood and was an elder in that organization until August 4, 1881, when he united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, being baptized by his brother-in-law, Elder T. J. Beatty. January 8, 1882, he was ordained an elder and immediately entered the missionary work. September 10, 1888, he was ordained a seventy, and later, August 14, 1896, he was ordained a high priest, occupying in that calling until his demise.

He resided in West Virginia six years, thirteen years in Missouri, the remainder of his life being spent in Ohio. He prosecuted missionary work in all these States.

He was a wise counselor in the affairs of his church, and while never eloquent as the term is usually used, yet he was an interesting and convincing speaker, always supporting his thoughts by numerous quotations from the Scriptures. Few men were so familiar with the Bible as Brother Moler, and the beauty of his life consisted in emulating the Master.

Very few men were more intimately acquainted with Brother Moler than your speaker. Thirty-nine years ago last holidays I first met him and formed his acquaintance. From that time until the present we have been intimate friends, closely associated in the affairs of the church in this district. Hence I am speaking from my personal knowledge when I bear testimony to the truthfulness of the statements concerning his life and work just made. He was to me more than a friend and brother. I was in his confidence as much as any man of my acquaintance. All the years intervening since I first met him, with the exception of the thirteen years that he resided in Missouri I was in close touch with him. He was a wise counselor, and a father in the gospel to me. When I first met him he had just united with the church, under the teachings of his brother-in-law, Elder Thomas J. Beatty, of sainted memory, who also has gone to his reward.

Brother Moler united with the Bible Christian Church in early youth, afterwards changing his church relationship to the Disciple of Christ. In this denomination he was an energetic worker, being chosen an elder. When he first heard the message of the restored gospel he gave it careful, painstaking and thorough investigation, and having been convinced of its truthfulness he accepted it. Shortly after coming into the church he was ordained an elder, and immediately began preaching.

For the benefit of those who are not familiar with the organization of our church, I will state that there are three quorums in the church, each equal in authority. The first is known as the First Presidency, and consists of three men, who preside over the entire church in all the world. The second quorum consists of twelve men who form the head of the evangelistic department of the church. The world is divided into twelve fields, and each of these men presides over his allotted district. The third consists of quorums of seventy, men who are the evangelizers of the church. On volunteering and entering into the ranks, they go wherever they are sent.

Into this body Brother Moler was chosen and ordained, and immediately made preaching his life work. Forsaking home comforts and family, he laid his all upon the altar of sacrifice, spending many years in the active service of the church. And in all those years no word or act of his ever brought reproach upon the work he loved so well. His entire life brought honor to it.

As years crept upon him he was transferred, as stated, to the high priests' quorum. This body consists of men who by reason of their experience in gospel work and of their adaptation to the work, are chosen to preside over the larger branches and districts of the church. Brother Moler held this position until the time of his death. He was of a judicial turn of mind, giving every question mature thought, careful consideration before deciding; and having once reached a conclusion it was hard to move him therefrom. Being convinced of an error in his position, however, no one was more ready to make a change than was Brother Moler.

No text other than the scripture reading has been taken by your speaker. However, his mind goes back in scripture times to one of the prophets of God, one who was a precursor and forerunner of the Master. Of him it was recorded, "He was a just man and devout." What was said of Simeon the prophet, can be said with equal truth of Brother Moler. He was a just man and devout: just in that he disdained false weights and short measures, both in business affairs and in morals. Double dealing was held in abhorrence by him. He was a man of sterling character, always maintaining his integrity, living a life of honor and purity of thought and action, and insisting and urging that these attributes be manifested in the lives of others. Devout in that he recognized that there was an all-wise and supreme Ruler of the universe, and as one of the creatures of this great Creator, he recognized that due adoration and reverence and worship should be given him.

Speaking of Brother Moler as a man, he was, as I remember him when I met him more than thirty years ago, a man of robust stature, formed in rugged outline, but with the upright mien, fearless eye, beaming with intelligence, and high forehead indicative of intellect, a man that would attract attention wherever he might be—a man among men.

Speaking of him as a Christian, as a follower of the meek and lowly Nazarene, he had many of those attributes possessed by the Master himself. Brother Moler was a man who made no claim towards absolute perfection of character, but only claimed to be a lawful striver in the service of the Master. As a Christian he was a Christian among Christians.

He was beloved by the Saints wherever he labored. These young people in the choir here to-day came from their various places of work, from the school-room, from college, to pay their tribute to his memory because of the tender feeling that they had toward him. They, as well as others, recognized in him a father, and one who loved them. From all parts of Ohio District are friends here to-day who have left their homes to pay their last respects. All these evidence to us the high esteem in which he was held by them.

After an absence of thirteen years Brother Moler returned to his native state that his last days might be spent among the hills of old Ohio he loved so well, and that his ashes might mingle with his native soil. He chose this place as the spot in which to spend his declining years, because of tender feelings which existed for the people here. He loved the young people of Creola.

This morning his son, also a minister of the gospel, said to me, "Father was more than a father to me. He was a counselor and a companion." Think of it! Father and son standing shoulder to shoulder for years in the same cause, often occupying the same pulpit alternately, laboring as coworkers together for God, endeavoring to present the angel's message to the sons of men. And while thinking over the past, standing by the side of the casket containing the remains of his father, Brother H. E. Moler penned the following lines. Inspirational they are, containing a prayer that is worthy of our consideration:

O God of love, bow down thine ear,
And hear our mournful cry;
Unto our saddened hearts draw near,
O, come thou, very nigh.

By hand of death from us is torn
Our father, loved and dear:
To paradise his soul is borne,
Beyond this vale of tears.

Great God, in pity look thou now,
Upon our heartfelt grief;
Beneath affliction's rod we bow,
Come thou to our relief.

No more his face our eyes shall see,
No more his voice we'll hear,
But still his life of purity
Our mem'ries shall revere.

But then, O Lord, "we sorrow not
As those who have no hope,"
In God's own plan so wondrous wrought,
But on in darkness grope.

For on the resurrection day
When dead in Christ shall wake,
Shall they who've kept the gospel way
Their bed of clay forsake.

Oh then shall our dear father stand
In immortality,
Among the hosts of Enoch's band
Through all eternity.

Then may our lives like his be pure,
Our trust like his grow strong;
Like him unto the end endure,
Let life be short or long.

Speaking from my personal knowledge of the man after years of intimate acquaintance, I can say of Brother Moler what I can say of no other man, that is, that I never heard an unclean word or an impure thought expressed by him. Never did I hear him relate an incident in which the name of his Creator was used profanely; nor did I ever hear him relate a story suggestive of impurity, or reflecting upon the virtue of womanhood. He was a clean man, a man of purest thought. And if it be true that if we sow a thought we reap an act, if we sow an act we reap a habit, if we sow a habit we reap a character, if we sow a character we reap a destiny, we can in the case of Brother Moler eliminate all those intermediate terms, and, judging by the purity of his thoughts crystallized into pure actions, we can say without hesitation that his destiny is salvation in the kingdom of our God.

There is a beautiful thought, and I believe that I have never officiated at a funeral in which I did not refer to it, because it is one of the most beautiful illustrations of the condition of our departed contained in the word of God. Reading from the Apostle Paul we can understand how one evening, after a day of arduous labor in which he had preached the message of salvation to the people, he sat down in that beautiful Palestinian country, and lifting his eyes heavenward he saw the beautiful glory of stars.

Jupiter and Venus may have been in conjunction, as those of us who are interested in these matters saw them in the heavens a few weeks ago, like lovers wooing. The Pleiades were then as now, exerting their "sweet influences." The sun had just gone down over the western hills, the moon in her fullness was rising in the east, and as the Apostle Paul looked upon that wonderful sight, sensing what the Psalmist said, that the heavens declare the handiwork of God, his mind was directed toward the condition of the departed Saints, and in poetic strain he exclaims: There is a glory of the sun, there is a glory of the moon, there is a glory of the stars, and as one star differeth from another star in glory, so also is the resurrection from the dead; Christ the first fruits of them that slept and afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming.

What a beautiful thought! From the glowing orb of day to the little twinkling star scarcely discernible to the human eye, each one typifies the condition of a departed one, varying in degrees of brilliancy as our lives have been, as stated in the scripture reading, whether their deeds have been good or evil.

Judging the life work of Brother Moler, it is the belief of your speaker that his life is typified by the brilliant noonday orb. While we shall soon place his body in the tomb, there to molder back to the elements from whence they came, dust returning to dust, his spirit is in the paradise of God, there awaiting the redemption of his body, and when the angel shall stand with one foot upon the sea and the other upon the land, and swear by him that liveth forever and ever that time shall be no longer; and when the Master himself shall come with a shout, and all that are in their graves shall come forth, among that number will be our departed brother, who will then enter into the celestial glory typified by the sun and will throughout the ages of eternity enjoy the fruition of his labor, the association of departed ones that have gone on before together with those who will come after, and above all, the instruction of the Master himself.

To mourning friends we say, Be of good cheer. Time, the wonderful healer will bring the balm of Gilead to your souls, and you will look forward to the meeting rather than back to the parting.

Brother Moler left a precious legacy—a fragrant memory of a well-spent life.

Break the beautiful vase if you will,
But the scent of the roses remains with us still.

So it is with our dear brother. God bless you.

THE GATHERING

Let my commandments to gather into regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me.—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 11.

There ought not to be any misunderstandings as to where the "regions round about" are. The Reorganization has maintained that the followers of Brigham Young made a mistake when they taught that Salt Lake and vicinity was the gathering place, also that the followers of Strang made a similar mistake in claiming that Beaver Island was; and Lyman Wight and his followers made a similar mistake when they claimed that Texas was. If I should say that Pennsylvania, New York, or Maine were just as much the gathering place as Jackson County, Missouri, or adjoining counties, I would also make a mistake and not be in harmony with the law.

Inasmuch as the law is to "gather into regions round about," may I ask, Where is that territory, and how far does the regions round about extend?

Hearken O ye elders of my church saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together according to my commandments. In this land [which is the land of Missouri], which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the Saints. Wherefore, this is the land of promise [Missouri], and the place for the city of Zion, and thus saith the Lord, your God, if you will receive wisdom, here is wisdom; behold, the place which is now called Independence is the center place, and the spot for the temple is lying westward upon a lot which is not far from the courthouse; wherefore it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the Saints; and also every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile. And also every tract bordering by the prairies, inasmuch as my disciples are enabled to buy lands. Behold, this is wisdom, that they may obtain it for an everlasting inheritance.—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1.

From the above we learn that Missouri is the land appointed and consecrated, or set apart, for the gathering of the Saints, and not Utah, Pennsylvania, or New Mexico.

A commandment I give unto all the churches, that they shall continue to gather together unto the places which I have appointed, [Jackson County and the adjoining counties in Missouri]; nevertheless, as I have said unto you in a former commandment, let not your gathering be in haste, nor by flight; but let all things be prepared before you.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 9.

The contrast between the Saints of 1830-35, and the Saints of the Reorganization is marked: the former were overly anxious, too hasty; so much so that the Lord several times admonished them not to be in haste, but to have all things prepared before them; while we of the Reorganized Church have gone to the other extreme—moved too slowly. As early as 1873 the command was to the Reorganized Church, to “gather into the regions round about.” That was forty-three years ago. At that time, and for ten years after, unimproved land could have been bought for $5 to $10 an acre, improved farms from $10 to $20; and to-day this land is worth from $75 to $125 per acre. Many of the Saints who emigrated from the various States, east, west, north and south, paid no attention to the command to gather into the “regions round about,” but located hundreds, and some thousands of miles away, in localities where there were no church of church privileges. They may have made a success along temporal lines, but as a whole, at a great loss spiritually. Many of their children have grown up, isolated from church and Sunday school privileges, and are strangers to the church. Had these families located in the “regions round about,” they would be just as well off financially, and their families would have had church privileges, and would have been in harmony with the command to “gather into regions round about.”

In 1870 my own family and my wife's parents moved from Ohio to Nebraska. We took homesteads. After obtaining a deed for our homestead we sold out, and in December, 1875, moved to Stewartsville, Missouri. We were quite prosperous when we left the homestead, but for five years we had had much to contend with, as the grasshoppers destroyed three crops. From a financial standpoint we had made a mistake in moving to Missouri. The land in Nebraska was advancing in price. Often my wife's father would remind us of the great mistake we had made; he was not in the church at that time, and he made it unpleasant by referring to the mistake, as he called it, so much.

Just before leaving Nebraska, I saw in a dream a Catholic church near our home. I give it but little thought, for there was no visible sign then that the dream would be fulfilled soon. Twenty-five years later, my wife and I visited our old home. There stood the church just as it was seen years before. Our neighbor's children had married into Catholic families. I remarked to my wife that we had often been reproved for leaving that neighborhood, and had been told that it was a very unwise move, but I said, “If they gave me the whole State of Nebraska, I would not exchange, for as it is, our sons and daughters are married to members of the church, and our grandchildren are in the church. The chances are if we had remained on our homestead, the children—like our neighbor's children—would have gone out into the world, and would have been lost to the church.”

When we returned home from this visit, we informed grandpa that we were more than ever convinced that the locating in the “regions round about” was a wise move. There is more to live for than the accumulation of wealth. The true riches is a life of righteousness, bringing up our children under conditions where they can be encouraged in the service of the Lord, which is the duty of every father and mother. The parents who have only the accumulation of wealth and deprive themselves, as well as their children, of church privileges, make a serious mistake.

In Doctrine and Covenants 102: 8, eight months after the revelation in Doctrine and Covenants 98, we have the following: “To have sent wise men to fulfill that which I have commanded concerning the purchasing of all the lands in Jackson County [Missouri], that can be purchased, and in the adjoining counties [not states] round about.” From this we learn that Jackson County and the adjoining counties are the places that the Saints were commanded to gather, as in the beginning and in paragraph 4, of section 98, we are informed that:

There is no other place appointed than that which I have appointed [Jackson County and the adjoining counties in Missouri], neither shall there be any other place appointed than which I have appointed for the work of gathering of my Saints [that is what we have been telling all those that have gathered to the various places], until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them, and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion.

Moses said, Blessed of the Lord be Joseph's land, (America) (Deuteronomy 33: 13). It is the land of Zion, and some day it will be organized into stakes; but for the beginning of the gathering, the command is to “gather into Jackson County and the regions round about the adjoining counties. Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about and counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given to me."

It is generally understood that the elders from whom counsel is to be received relative to the gathering are the Presidency, missionary in charge, and Bishopric, (Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2), but more especially the Bishopric. The late President Joseph Smith frequently advised those seeking information along temporal lines, such as concerning moving into regions round about, and concerning what locality would be best, to first consult the Bishopric. The command, "Have all things prepared before you," does not refer only to the parts we intend moving to, but also where we are leaving. If the work is going to suffer by moving into Zion, go slow; seek not only the advice of the Bishopric, but the missionary in charge also.

It is quite evident that many will be found at their post of duty when the Master comes, even those who cannot go to Zion or her stakes, because their service is needed where they are, and they will be blessed of the Lord, though they may be hundreds or thousands of miles away from Zion. The admonition of the Master should be heeded, "First seek to establish the kingdom of God and its righteousness"—keeping that thought uppermost in mind we should let other things be secondary. He who is faithful about his Master's business has nothing to fear, whether in Zion, in her stakes, or in the distant lands, or islands of the sea. Wherever our post of duty lies, let us there be found faithful to our trust, and when the way opens up, and in harmony with the counsel of those in authority, we can go into Zion, or the "regions round about." Mistakes have often been made in not seeking counsel from the proper authority, and not only has the individual suffered loss, but the cause also. Heed the admonition, Seek the counsel of the elders, Presidency, Twelve and Bishopric.

WILLIAM LEWIS.

FOUNDATION OF FAITH--PART 2

BY M. H. BOND

The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.—Paul.

That which manifests, is light.—Paul.

The glory of God is intelligence or, in other words, light and truth!—Doctrine and Covenants.

The inquiry, belief, and knowledge of truth is the sovereign God of human nature.

This motto of the ancients I saw inscribed in letters of gold upon the dome of the Congressional Library in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, a few years ago, and was impressed not only with its importance as pertains to human affairs in general, but especially in its relation to the investigation or discussion of religious questions.

We are ready to affirm that "signs and wonders" were incorporated in the gospel system and illustrated by numerous and striking examples at the hands of Jesus and his ministers in their day and time, and that they have had their reaffirmation to a greater or less extent in our day. We undertake to maintain this, but that they constitute the surest base upon which to predicate a belief that is permanent and abiding, is not true, as we shall attempt to show.

We know, said Nicodemus to Jesus, that no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him. The reply of the Savior does not seem to be of an encouraging nature to the man who may be seeking for, or may become unduly impressed, with a physical display of "signs and wonders" as a foundation of faith," that alone can successfully withstand the forces of evil that have, in the past, and yet still in our day are undertaking to bar the way of truth and the light of God from the human heart and mind.

In the days of the Pharaohs, Aaron was forced to encounter "miracle workers," but neither the superior power or skill betrayed by him in dealing with his opposers, or the long history of miraculous manifestations that accompanied the children of Israel under the leadership of Moses succeeded in the acquirement or maintenance of a close relationship with Jehovah. Indeed, open rebellion and longing for a return to the "fleshpots of Egypt" were of frequent occurrence, and manifested in their complaints to Moses whenever "miracles" were not speedily forthcoming.

The gospel was had among them, we are told, but not being mixed with that divine communion, or "assurance," which the keeping of his commandments offers to the obedient only—a possession of the faith, which is his gift to them. Being deprived of this gift, the lack of faith proved their undoing; in other words, being without any stable knowledge or communion with God, he gave them over to a worship that was in harmony with their lustful and carnal appetites. The Egyptian god of lust was set up as a physical figure to represent a god that might agree to, or consent to, supply that desire.

The martyr Stephen said to their descendants:

This is he [Jesus] that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel that spake to him in Mount Sinai, and with our fathers; who received the lively [gospel] oracles to give unto us, to whom our fathers would not obey, but in their hearts turned back again into Egypt.

The Psalmist David tells us that "God greatly abhorred them," "so that he forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh [Christ], the tent [church] which he placed among men."

False Christs and false prophets were to arise and show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they should deceive the very elect, according to the statement made by the Savior in his day. "Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe," said Jesus to the nobleman. The demand of the times was for miracles and occult signs, as in our day. Herod desired to see Jesus that he might perform some miracles. It is written by John that "a great multitude followed him because they saw his miracles which he did on them which were diseased." Of professed disciples it is written that although they had had numerous opportunities for the witnessing of his power to work miracles, the power to work permanent results was lacking. This was evidenced in the statement, "From that time, many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him." Peter, however, who evidently had acquired a more full and complete understanding, said, "To whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." It was affirmed before by the Savior in his controversy with Satan that man shall not live by bread alone, or by miracles that convince by appeal to the physical senses only. Rather should man live "by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." In other words, it is certain that we cannot always be assured that God is speaking through miracles only, or that too strong emphasis upon their value as a soul-saving agency should be had.

In 2 Thessalonians 2 we have a prophecy given to us by Paul concerning the last days in which Satan is to be permitted to work among the children of men, "with all power and signs and lying wonders"; among those who are not hungry for truth, but are willing to run after "miracles," and pay well for their exhibition. In the revelation which was given through Jesus Christ to John upon Patmos we have also the statements of Paul confirmed.

In the sixteenth and nineteenth chapters he saw three unclean spirits "come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet, for they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world."

Prominent Spiritualists have confessed to the writer that there is as much evidence as to the existence of, and of manifestations of, false and "lying" spirits as that there are spirits at all.

The miracles that Jesus wrought no doubt attracted certain classes who might not be approached in any other way. A miracle was to them the sign of the power of God and of authority, and a challenge for a following. To doubt the word of one that performed the wonders that Christ was able to manifest, was to doubt the evidences of their physical senses, the only ones the most of the people seemed to be possessed of, or capable of exercising.

The glory of God is intelligence, but in the history of the world and sometimes in the history of the church, we have seen manifestations, or listened to alleged or real miracles, signs and wonders, to which, to our mind, but little or no degree of "intelligence" could be safely attached. At least they were evidences which had their appeal to the physical senses only, in a large degree.

Man by creation is a religious being. Religion has its base largely in the emotional processes to which he is subject. Love constitutes its principal or most potential factor, and in its normal functioning has its highest manifestation in its attitude towards its Creator, God. To love best is to love God first, which necessarily and logically involves the thought of a practical acquaintance with him.

The absence of any satisfactory evidences, not only of his existence, but of his personal interest in and his willingness and ability to answer the soul's longing for "intelligence," or a personal, or stable character of a "knowledge" based upon experiences that may successfully challenge doubt or fear, has the effect of throwing mankind back upon physical forces, or an argument based largely upon inference of uncertain character.

We shall concede that there exists in humanity an almost universal desire for "immortality," and it may be argued that the mind of man could not conceive of a desire without the means of its attainment existing somewhere.

It must be so, Horatio;

Else, whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire;

This longing after immortality.

Hamlet's soliloquy in one way illustrates this thought also, and I have in the past sought to fortify myself against fear by syllogistic reasoning through this and other "natural" or physical evidences, but have concluded that there is danger in leaning too heavily upon supports of this character.

"Hope springs eternal in the human breast," but the basis of this hope lies in inference or knowledge that all must die. Man thus conceives the desire that he may live after the dissolution of the body, when at the same time this hope or desire may be traceable to a purely animal instinct for self-preservation, with little or no concept of the true meaning of the word life as Jesus Christ sought to impress it upon his disciples or followers.

Professor Huxley once said:

I am prepared to accept the proof of any alleged miraculous occurrence, provided only the proof be sufficient. I can only say that for those cited, the proofs seem to be grossly insufficient.

It is possible, in this connection, that some Latter Day Saint might say that if Professor Huxley should have had the privilege of association with us his point of view might have been changed even in this regard. However, our belief is that men of this character can only be successfully approached by higher, safer, and more convincing methods. If the ethical as well as the intellectual value of an alleged miracle cannot be made substantially apparent, we shall only complicate ourselves with an argument of a doubtful nature. In submitting claim for an alleged miracle with us, its real value must be determined by the tests of intelligence or the light of truth, as we, under gospel rule and privilege, are not only permitted, but enjoined to do, and which constitutes the only safe course of procedure.

The zeal and faith a Saint sometimes exercises in sending for the elders, in season and out of season, in order to offset the legitimate effects of unsanitary or unwholesome physical conditions, such as bad air, bad food, unsuitable and unhygienic surroundings, drugs, patent medicines for children especially, as well as the facts concerning the proportionate, or even excessive amount of sickness, disease, and death among us, as in comparison with other religious bodies of people, should be a matter of more serious consideration and thought, as we believe.

The human animal is the toughest specimen of organic or animal life, and is physically conditioned to withstand in greater degree, violations of natural law than any other kind of animal. If left alone, unhindered by our ignorance, or our fears to her own resources, we shall find that Nature as a mistress, is gentle and holy,

All that God owns, he is constantly healing.

We shall also find out sometime, we trust, that an intelligent analysis of history bearing upon the question will reveal the truth that plenary or even limited indulgence may fail to secure immunity from punishment, and that intelligence and trust as it is in God and his Christ are always to be found in the company of each other.

"The prayer of faith shall save the sick." Not elders, or oil, or desire, or even belief, as we often interpret the word, but by faith, as the gift of God, when present, the promised result may with reason be expected.

Faith in God is a belief of the truth; an assurance from him only, that the petitions we are making are the suggestions of the spirit of truth, and not of our beliefs, necessarily, or desires, or a traditional acceptance of the letter only.

(To be concluded.)

You say that you have tasted of salvation in the love of Christ. Are you saved from your temper, your irritability, your vanity, your personal dislikes, your judgment and condemnation of others? If not, from what are you saved, and wherein have you realized the transforming love of Christ?—James Allen.

METHODIST CONFERENCE

On the morning of May 1 there will convene in Saratoga Springs, New York, the twenty-seventh delegated quadrennial session of the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This delegated body of over eight hundred ministers and laymen in equal numbers meets every four years to review the work of the church and to revise and add to its legislation. The general conference is made up of delegates from the one hundred and thirty-three annual conferences, the annual conference being the working unit of Methodism.

These delegates are elected on a basis of one ministerial delegate for every forty-five, or fraction not less than two thirds of forty-five, ministerial members in any given annual conference, the number of lay delegates always being the same for each conference as its ministerial delegates. Laymen were first admitted to the general conference in 1872, and in 1900 women were acknowledged as lay members.

The first general conference of American Methodism was held in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1792, at which all preachers in full membership of an annual conference were eligible. The first delegated general conference was held in New York City, May 1-22, 1812. At this conference the first episcopal address, an utterance which has become of increasing importance, was delivered. This episcopal address is now accepted as the official declaration of the church on important theological, administrative, and social problems.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was organized in Louisville, Kentucky, May 1, 1845.

There are now twenty bishops and seven missionary bishops serving the Methodist Episcopal Church throughout the world. The former are elected by general conference and located for periods of four years each in cities which are designated episcopal residences. The latter are elected by general conference for continuous service in specific fields.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized at Baltimore Maryland, at the so-called Christmas conference, December 24, 1784, to January 2, 1785. At that time there were 104 preachers and 18,000 communicants. There are now over 15,000 preachers and 4,033,123 members. In the early days of the Methodist Church the salary of a preacher was $64. If married, he received the similar amount for his wife, with $16 for each child under 6 years of age and $2 for each child between 6 and 11 years of age.

Among the important matters that will come before the general conference at Saratoga Springs are the questions concerning organic union with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which has been under discussion with both of these important branches of Methodism for some time; the election of bishops to take the place of those who have died during the last four years and those who will retire from active service automatically by reason of this session being nearest to their seventy-third birthday; the election of editors for the church press, which includes the Methodist Review, the numerous weekly Christian Advocates, the Epworth Herald, and the Sunday school publications of the church; the election of corresponding secretaries for such church boards as the board of foreign missions, the board of home missions and church extension, the Freedmen's Aid society, the board of education, the board of Sunday schools, etc., the election of publishing agents (administrative heads) of the Methodist Book Concern, etc.—The Des Moines Register, April 30, 1916.

WHO IS THE PRESIDENT OF SWITZERLAND?

Switzerland is a republic that runs with the exactness of a Swiss watch, its machinery as hermetically concealed. I had heard that the Swiss republic set the pattern of government for the world, and I was anxious to know something of its methods and personnel. I was sorry that I was so ignorant. I didn't even know the name of the Swiss president, and for a week was ashamed to confess it. I was hoping I might see it in one of the French papers I puzzled over every evening. But at the end of the week I timidly and apologetically inquired of our friendly landlord as to the name of the Swiss president.

But then came a shock. Our landlord grew confused, blushed, and confessed that he didn't know it, either! He had known it, he said, of course, but it had slipped his mind. Slipped his mind! Think of the name of Roosevelt or Wilson or Taft slipping the mind of anybody in America—and a landlord! I asked the man who sold me cigars. He had forgotten, too. I asked the apothecary, but got no information. I was not so timid after that. I asked a fellow-passenger—guest, I mean—an American, but of long Swiss residence—and got this story. I believe most of it. He said:

"When I came to Switzerland and found out what a wonderful little country it was, its government so economical, so free from party corruption and spoils, from graft and politics, so different from the home life of our own dear Columbia, I thought: 'The man at the head of this thing must be a master hand; I'll find out his name.' So I picked out a bright-looking subject, and said, 'What is the name of the Swiss President?'"

"He tried to pretend he didn't understand my French, but he did, for I can tear the language off all right—learned it studying art in Paris. When I pinned him down he said he knew the name well enough, parfaitement, but couldn't think of it at that moment.

"That was a surprise, but I asked the next man. He couldn't think of it, either. Then I asked a police officer. Of course he knew it all right: 'oh, oui, certainement, mais'—then he scratched his head and scowled, but he couldn't dig up that name. He was just a plain liar—tout simplement—like the others. I asked every man I met, and every one of them knew it, had it right on the end of his tongue, but somehow it seemed to stick there. Not a man in Vevey or Montreux could tell me the name of the Swiss president. It was the same in Fribourg, the same even in Berne, the capital. I had about given it up when one evening, there in Berne I noticed a sturdy man with an honest face approaching. He looked intelligent, too, and as a last resort I said, 'Could you, by any chance, tell me the name of the Swiss president?'"

"The effect was startling. He seized me by the arm and, after looking up and down the street, leaned forward and whispered in my ear:

"Mon Dieu! c'est moi! I am the Swiss President; but—ah, non, don't tell anyone. I am the only man in Switzerland who knows it."

"You see," my friend continued, "he is elected privately; no torchlight campaigns, no scandal, and only for a year."

"He is only a sort of chairman, though of course his work is important, and the present able incumbent has been elected a number of times. His name is—is—is— Ah yes, that's my tram. So sorry to have to hurry away—see you to-night at dinner."—Albert Bigelow Paine, in Harper's Magazine for March.

THE KURDS

The origin of the Kurds has not been satisfactorily settled, but it is believed that in their veins flows the blood of Chaldeans, Babylonians, and Assyrians. In early times the Kurds preferred mountains for their place of habitation, and took great pride then, as they do now, in being called "Gurdu," a title which signifies "warrior." To-day the "Gutu" are better known in the Occident as Kurds, and number about two million, five hundred thousand, and have their abodes mostly in Kurdistan. Their land, which is extremely mountainous, rises to the east of the upper Tigris in the direction of Urumiah. The area of this space is sixty thousand square miles. There is not a mile of railway in the whole country, and neither is there a road fit for traveling except by caravan.

No people are more mistrusted by the Persians and the Turks than the Kurds. They do not consider a man's religion and standing; they would rob a Turk or a Persian as well as an Armenian or a Greek. The Ottoman Porte and the Persian Shah have not the power to interfere; for that very reason, I believe, the Russian rule in northern Persia was a great blessing to the peace-loving peasants, as Russia was the only government which was able to establish order and to create fear among the Kurds. Of two million, five hundred thousand Kurds, there is no one who calls himself lawgiver and ruler, no one who assumes the authority to punish his fellow Kurd. Law with a Kurd is a personal matter. Each individual considers himself his own king and prince. A monarchy of self-control is unknown among them. The Kurdish mind is his constitution, his gun and sword the means by which he enforces his law and justice. Such a state of affairs is not, of course, favorable to the establishment of a stable government, nor is such an atmosphere conducive to the development of the better qualities of human nature. . . .

Perhaps the most distinguished characteristic of the Kurds is great devotion among the members of families. This is exemplified in the following incident. A chief from the mountains of Kurdistan descended into the plains of Urumiah and there engaged in plundering the property of the citizens of the state of Azerbaijan. The militia was ordered to trap the culprits. The chief was subdued. They were brought into the city, and all were sentenced to death except the chief, who was spared for his gray hairs.

Among them was a youth of twenty, strong and healthy; his rugged appearance made an instant appeal to every spectator, and the cry rose, "Save him, save him!" Immediately the old chieftain, whom the governor had forgiven on account of his age, rushed forward and demanded, before they proceeded with the execution, to speak to the governor. After the poor old man had experienced much rough treatment at the hands of the crowd, the permission was granted. In true Oriental fashion, he thus addressed the governor:

O, eye of my home and of my family. We did come from the mountains to carry some food to our families and to our herds. We admit that we have done harm to your law-abiding citizens. You have sworn that the guilty men should die, and it is just, but I, who am pardoned on account of my age, come here to demand a favor of my lord. The youngest of my family is with me; he came here because I asked him. This is his first offense. He is young, and has hardly tasted the sweets of life; is just betrothed. I am here to die in his stead. Inshallah, inshallah (in the name of God) let a worn-out old man perish, and spare a youth, who may long be useful to his family, to feed the flocks and tend the sheep. Let him live to drink of the waters flowing from the fountains and silvery streams of Kurdistan, and to till the ground of his ancestors.

The governor was greatly moved by the old man's appeal. He granted the chief's wishes, and the old man went to meet his fate, while the youth cried wildly and became distracted with grief because the governor reversed his decree and took the more valuable life of the aged chief. This is characteristic of a system which bears to-day more clearly than any other traces of the patriarchal government.—From "The Kurds; their character and customs," by Youel B. Mirza, in the American Review of Reviews for March, 1916.

Woman's Auxiliary

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

Introducing Our New Department

At the recent General Convention of this organization, new constitution and by-laws were adopted, a committee to prepare and present the same having been appointed one year previous. Among the provisions contained therein, is one for the appointment of an editor of the press columns of the auxiliary, such appointment to be made by the executive committee. This position has fallen to our lot, and we approach the tasks involved with keen interest and a degree of enthusiasm, realizing that, with the hearty support of the sisters of the church as individuals, and of the officers of the organization, we should be able to present to our readers much that is instructive, interesting and entertaining.

It was thought wise to endeavor to obtain from the Board of Publication a greater amount of space in the HERALD, with consent to change the name of the department from "Mothers' Home Column," to that of "The Woman's Auxiliary." This was not agreed upon without some degree of sentiment and regret, inasmuch as the "Mothers' Home Column" has been endeared to us for many long years, and is inseparably connected with the name and efforts and splendid pioneer struggles of Sister M. Walker.

What a wonderful heritage this sister has left for the women of the church, as she withdraws from public activities, can only be sensed partially by a glance backward—a comparison of the small but wise beginning she so successfully laid, to the wide-reaching scope of our present endeavor to concentrate and coordinate the interests and the efforts of all the women of our faith in whatsoever lines their tastes and activities may dictate. Sister Walker has made the present achievements and plans possible; with splendid vision and indomitable courage, which recognized no obstacle, she led out, and blazed a trail which other sisters, with almost equal courage, have followed through the years past. Sister M. E. Hulmes, Sister C. B. Stebbins, Sister Anna Salyards, Sister B. C. Smith, Sister D. J. Krahl, Sister S. R. Burgess, and other consecrated sisters have kept the work active, seeking always to include in it every advanced movement every possible avenue of development open to women. Gradually they branched out, adding this or that department of study and preparation, until at last, this spring, the present broad platform was adopted, upon which it is hoped everyone will find standing room.

In the new constitution for local organizations provision is made for the appointment of a "press chairman," whose duty it shall be to keep in touch with the editor in chief, and report to her all items of general interest. Thus the department should be of a church-wide character, and should reflect the activities of our women in every locality. It is hoped that the local societies, whether organized into a central body or not, will respond to the intention of this movement, and will keep us informed of their doings. If your aid society gives a supper, or the studiously inclined take up a new line of research, or the Oriole girls give an entertainment—why, tell us about it, and pass along the good things you have enjoyed.

We present this week the "valedictory" and "salutatory" of our outgoing and incoming presidents. A more complete explanation of the changes in the organization, as well as a list of department superintendents, etc., will appear later in these pages.

Again heartily inviting and earnestly urging your full support and frequent contributions, and desiring above all that the cause of Christ may be advanced and glorified through our efforts, we are most humbly and hopefully,

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, 2009 Locust Street.

Valedictory

Seeing the need of the officers of the Woman's Auxiliary being located near enough that they could consult more readily on the various important phases of the work now under consideration, I urged that the new officers be chosen from sisters of known activity in Independence, and urged also that my name be not placed on the list for president.

My interest in the work and zeal for its progress, are as great as ever in the past, and I trust that the many sisters who have helped the work in the past will show even more activity the coming year.

The sisters have shown decided growth and development in the past year, and we hope to see even greater increase in numbers, strength, and interest for this year.

Because it means good to every sister engaged in doing gospel work in the home and community where she lives, and because the new president deserves and needs your support, we pray that not only those already enlisted, but many in all parts of the church will join the new movement for better homes, for good living, and for peace in the best sense.

In gospel love,

MRS. S. R. BURGESS.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, April 30, 1916.

Salutatory

Dear Sisters of the Auxiliary, Greeting: I had not expected to accept the office of President of the Woman's Auxiliary at this time, but Mrs. Burgess and other sisters requested me not to refuse if my name should be presented. In my few words of appreciation and acceptance I remarked that I had felt strongly of late that as individuals we should each study ourselves carefully to discover our weak points and our strong points, that is, if we expect to give our most efficient service. I added that in trying to serve you as president, wherein I might find myself weak, I felt that I should be able to reach out my hands to strong and capable sisters who would not fail me.

And thus I feel myself surrounded with a corps of strong women: Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, vice president; Mrs. Walter W. Smith, secretary; Mrs. Pearl Gardner, treasurer; Mrs. B. C. Smith, historian; and the various departmental heads.

Besides these especially mentioned, I have many loyal Auxiliary workers who are personal friends, and in passing from coast to coast and away up in Canada I have met noble sisters who are consecrated to the Auxiliary cause. We do not forget those in foreign lands, only we have not met them as yet, but we shall hope to have them with us at some conventions in the future.

We have secured the services of Mrs. Audentia Anderson as our Editor in Chief, and have been assured by the Board of Publication that we shall be given more adequate space in the HERALD to present our work. It is our duty, therefore, as members to secure subscriptions for this paper.

We hear those who have attended the General Conference, and also others, mentioning the fact that as a church we are passing through a period of transition. Many changes are and will no doubt be taking place. As to correct methods of procedure there is likely to be difference of opinion, but we must never forget that the great goal for which we are all striving is the building up of Zion.

The great problem before us, then, as women, is how to coordinate all our forces, making a strong auxiliary, and then how to cooperate with the general church in a manner which will produce the least friction.

Our leaflets, which we know have been excellent and of a high character, are to be discontinued with the present series. The members as well as the many readers of our columns who have not been members of the Auxiliary will miss these I am sure. The Yearbook which will recommend books for study circles, will take the place of the leaflets for the present.

We have received criticisms that our auxiliary work was not broad enough in its scope, and we are now enlarging our entire work in detail by sending out a Yearbook. This is the customary way for all large organizations to get their work in detail before their members.

We are offering you various kinds of work, both actual work and educational. We expect to publish this book very soon, and have every reason to believe the sisters will find it pleasing and helpful. We have spent many, many hours in the preparation of this Yearbook, and I am going to ask you to withhold criticism until you have seen it.

We were very proud and happy that the contributions for local branch work and general institutions were so large this year.

This reminds me to ask that you will occasionally send a collection from your local to our general treasurer for general expenses. The request will surely appeal to you as reasonable that we must have an occasional donation for our general fund. We cannot push the work without some funds in the general treasurer's hand.

We would urge our women to be wise and cautious and yet when necessary to be firm and true. There is much work to be done by the women of the church, which they are peculiarly fitted to do, and which, if they proffer with modesty and courtesy, our church men will gladly and gratefully accept.

I want to emphasize in all seriousness that the Woman's Auxiliary has it in its power to prove a most valuable adjunct to the church. Yet if we should prove thoughtless or unduly aggressive we may bring reproach upon the Auxiliary, and cause trouble for our church when our only desire is to help. Personally I have a great confidence in the good judgment and integrity of the women of our church. And for this confidence and faith in our women I am glad.

I would not fail to speak of our retiring officers and others who have rendered valuable service to this organization. With many of them I enjoy a warm friendship. Their splendid zeal, their untiring efforts, and their loyalty to the cause, have prepared the way for us to pass on, year by year, to fields of larger service.

Dear sisters throughout the church, we have put our shoulders to the wheel, let us push earnestly forward. We have trusted God in the past and have received many blessings as an auxiliary organization. Let us not fail to approach him now with gratitude for past blessings and with earnest solicitations for divine guidance so that our activities may abound with good to us as an Auxiliary and through us to the church which it gives us pleasure to serve.

MRS. FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Pray Always

What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul.

"Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

"I wish I could pray" the poor creature said
Then, in the same breath, "Oh, I wish I were dead."

"I wish I could pray," was her one bitter cry
Again and again as the days passed by.

Perhaps in her girlhood she had not thought of prayer,
But wasted her life in the world's garish glare.

Thinking only of having her pleasure and fun
And getting her fill, ere her life's race was run.

Slowly, but surely, the reaping came,
But no sheaves can she gather of golden grain;

What she has sown she now reaps in strife—
Nothing but tares, and wasted life.

A victim to insanity's awful curse,
She is ending her life. Could a fate be worse?

Years have passed since, but I can still hear her say,
In a broken-hearted whisper, "Oh, I wish I could pray."

These verses are but an outline of the thoughts that come to me as I think of a poor creature I once knew—a woman with whom I came in daily contact during my training for mental nursing. Day after day she would wander around the ward, apparently laboring under great distress of mind. She was about fifty years of age, with thin iron-gray hair that would persist in hanging over and around her little weazened face, and two small, gray eyes that seemed to see everything at once. Now and again she would push her unruly hair back from her face and gaze around with a look so wistful and sad that it made one's heart ache.

She was always ready and willing to help the other poor, demented creatures around her. I had often seen her helping the nurses with their duties, feeding this one, and caring for that one, and helping another lame patient to a chair. She never seemed weary, and she never slept. Even after her day's work of ministering to others, she was always on the alert during the dark hours of the night. Only a word and she was ready to help nurse, if required. It was during one of our talks together that she turned to me and said, "Nurse, I wish I could pray." Then she would try to repeat the Lord's prayer, but after a few vain efforts she would only break off with the cry, "I can't, nurse, I can't, Satan keeps on putting something into my mouth." And I can truly testify that when the words were on her lips they were cut short in their utterance, and her mouth seemed filled with something I could not see, yet knew instinctively was there.

I was a member of the church at that time, having been baptized by Elder William Newton about a year previous to the time I am writing of. I was able to discern when anything unusual was taking place. This poor creature would stop suddenly with her mouth half open, then cry, "Lord be merciful to me a sinner. Oh, I wish I could pray!"

And there she is to-day, just living her life with others, a victim to the most terrible affliction that could ever take a human being into its toils.

Saints, what of the moral in this little incident? How many of you are diligent in prayer? The injunction of Paul in his letter to the Thessalonians was to "pray without ceasing." Jesus told his disciples to "watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation." Prayer is the telephone by which we communicate with God, if anything wrong gets into our lives we at once lose the connection until we can get the wrong put right and go to the telephone again.

My message to all who read this is, Pray. Never neglect your prayers. The Evil One often puts something in our way. Perhaps he makes you oversleep your time in the morning, and you scramble out of bed and don't stop to pray, so as not to be late for breakfast. Perhaps he says, "Oh, you are not fit to pray, you have been cross to-day and you can't pray when you are angry," and a hundred and one excuses he puts into your mind. But remember, the less you pray the more likely you are to get careless, and in time neglect your prayer altogether.

Think of that poor woman, when she could have prayed, she neglected it, and now she wants to pray, she cannot. When you are tempted to leave your prayer for "just this once," think of the woman in the far-away land, in one of the most beautiful parts of God's creation, and hear her words, "Oh, I wish I could pray!" and then thank God for the gift of intelligence and the opportunity he gives you to hold sweet communion with him.

If any article that I have written has helped anyone I would like to hear from them. It is my desire to reach the hearts of the careworn and sad, and I would rejoice at any time to receive a letter from any brother or sister whom I may have helped and cheered through this world.

MISS FLORENCE WRIGHT,

LONDON, ENGLAND, 58 Ickburg Road, Upper Clapton, North-east.

An Impressive Invitation

[The following letter to one interested in the gospel, and his reply, may appeal to others who may have been constrained to believe in the truth as held by the church restored in these latter days.—EDITORS.]

Dear Brother: I trust that you will not be wearied by this letter, and that you will understand the motive that prompts it. I am writing you to appeal to your better judgment, and to offer you an opportunity to move forward in obedience to the fullness of the gospel message. On next Sabbath we shall have water in the font, and who can forbid water that you should be baptized into the fold of Israel's God? To be sure, it is "Children's Day"—but we all must become as little children before we can enter the Kingdom of God. It is not enough that you have been immersed—baptism must have behind it authority; baptism must admit into the body of Christ, which is his church, with all its members, gifts, and governments. Though a man be immersed a thousand times, it availeth him not unless such rite be administered by the direction and under the power of God.

I have been very frank with you in the past, and I have felt that you honored me for so being; I shall continue to be frank with you. Facts are the things we must have to settle the war that is raging in your mind—and facts I have to give you. In the first place, I shall give you a lengthy quotation from a work published by the Hansard Knollys Society, so named in honor of a distinguished Baptist minister of the seventeenth century. This society was organized for the purpose of publishing the works of Baptist writers. The work before me is entitled Struggles and Triumphs of Religious Liberty—An Historical Survey, by Edward B. Underhill, London, 1851. Pages 237, 238, 239:

"In March, 1639, Mr. Williams became a Baptist, together with several more of his companions in exile. As none of the colony had been baptized, a Mr. Holliman was selected to baptize Mr. Williams, who then baptized Mr. Holliman and ten others. Thus was founded the first Baptist church in America. . . . Mr. Williams appears to have remained pastor of the newly-formed church but a few months. For, while retaining all his original sentiments upon the doctrines of God's work, and the ordinances of the church, he conceived a true ministry must derive its authority from direct apostolic succession, or endowment: that, therefore, without such a commission he had no authority to assume the office of pastor, or be a teacher in the house of God, or proclaim to the impenitent the saving mercies of redemption. . . . He seemed rather to have conceived that the church of Christ had fallen into apostasy, as to have lost both its right form and the due administration of the ordinances, which could only be restored by some new or apostolic, or specially commissioned messenger from above.

Various passages in his writings will be met with which favor this view: the following from his Hireling Ministry: 'In the poor small span of my life, I desired to have been a diligent and constant observer. . . . and yet cannot, in the holy presence of God, bring the result of a satisfying discovery, that either the begetting ministry of the apostles or messengers to the nations, or the feeding or nourishing ministry of pastors or teachers, according to the first institution of the Lord Jesus, are yet restored and extant.' 'He conceived', writes Mr. Cotton 'that the apostasy of anti-Christ hath so far corrupted all, that there can be no recovery out of that apostasy till Christ shall send forth new apostles to plant church anew.

Thus you see, brother, that the founder of the first Baptist church in America (and thus the founder of the indigenous Baptist churches around Providence, including the Six-Principle-Church) disowned the baptism with which he was baptized and looked forward to that time when God should restore authority "by some new or apostolic or specially commissioned messenger from above." You, my brother, have lived to see that day, and I trust, under the white lights of God's Spirit, to see the folly of clinging long to a baptism, or immersion, which is traced to the man who introduced it and who disowned it. As Mr. Williams said, it was the dark spirit of apostasy that drove away the authority to represent God in an official manner. How could men be called of God as was Aaron (Hebrews 5: 4), when there was no revelation or prophets? Williams saw this—and if language means anything as the medium through which man expressed his thoughts, had he lived to-day he would have received joyfully the wonderful manifestation of God's authority which has been restored in our time. Just as joyously as I feel you will receive the glad tidings of the restoration of the gospel in its fullness; for you are as honest a man as Roger Williams.

As a second thought I wish to submit to you, the following point seems plain and deeply significant: This latter-day work must be what it claims to be, or else it is an imposture. You see readily that if it is not a restoration of the fullness of the gospel, it must be a deception—and you will not take the position that it is alienated from God, for you have been made a recipient of his power and goodness, through this message of healing and grace. This must be conclusive evidence that it is not a deception, for God would not bless a deception. Having evidence that he blesses it, we must be convinced that it is accepted of him.

This test may be (and should be) applied to every institution which claims to represent Christ. And when we apply the test every institution but the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints fails; for while we admit that there are individuals in other churches who are blessed of God, we have yet to find outside of the Latter Day Saint Church that church which, as a body, is blessed with the gifts of the Spirit, the complete organization, and the authority of the priesthood.

What more can I say to you? What more need be said? And I do not ask you to move because of anything I have said of myself—I only ask you to move out on faith which rests on facts—move out on the strength which God will surely give you, if you will ask him with a sincere heart. I say unto you, in the words of one of old, "Arise, and walk!"

The robe, the water, the administrator and better than all else, the Spirit of God, will be waiting and ready for you next Sunday after the Sunday school session. Will you come?

Yours in the great cause,

R. W. FARRELL.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, June 8, 1915.

Dear Brother Farrell: I have received your letter and believe that I do understand the motive that prompts it, and you have rightly guessed there has been a war raging in my mind for some time and it only needed this letter from you to make me decide now; although I think I should have decided right anyway in the end.

I have sent my resignation to the Maple Root Baptist Church, together with my intention to join the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and an explanation of the articles of faith and my reasons for uniting with said church; and I have tried to make them plain and convincing. Now I am ready to embrace the opportunity of being baptized by you next Sunday and I hope that, as you say, the Spirit of God will be waiting for me, and that I shall receive it, for I desire and intend to the best of my ability, with God's help, to obey his commands in all things.

Yours with a thankful heart,

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA, February 29, 1916.

Editors Herald: The conference of the Central Oklahoma District leaves pleasant memories in the minds of those fortunate enough to attend. The missionaries present were W. M. Aylor, Hubert Case, Joseph Arber and Glaudd Kuykendall.

To say that the Saints are proud of their little church building just completed, twenty-four by forty feet, bungalow style, corner of Seventh and Lottie streets, hardly expresses it. It is said that we value a thing according to the time and pains it takes to acquire it. The Saints have labored with their hands as well as prayed from their hearts that they might have a house in which they could meet and serve God more perfectly, and now they see their steadfast efforts rewarded. I am sure I express the feelings of all when I say that we are glad and thankful to all to whom thanks are due.

There were Saints from all parts of the district in attendance at the conference, as well as from the Western Oklahoma District, and one, Sister Vickery, from Winfield, Kansas. These brought with them the spirit of true devotion to duty, which spirit prevailed throughout the meetings. The sermons were good, real spiritual feasts, and it is to be hoped found favorable soil. Brother Case was with us several days both before and after conference.

A branch was organized, to be known as the Oklahoma City Branch, with R. M. Maloney president. Brother Kuffer, late of Topeka, Kansas, was recommended for ordination to the office of priest. The weather was ideal and attendance good. The Ladies' Aid maintained their well-earned reputation of thrift and hospitality by furnishing noonday lunch both Saturday and Sunday.

EAST PHARSALIA, NEW YORK, February 29, 1916.

Editors Herald: In reading the letters in the HERALD I am given courage in the gospel work, though I seem to be one of God's weakest children. There is no other paper that I enjoy reading as much as I do the HERALD. I think all Saints should take it, and not only take it, but read it.

We have eight members here. The work is moving forward slowly. There seems to be something to hinder most of the time. I wish other Saints could move here. We have preaching and Sunday school but no Religio.

My health has not permitted me to do much in church work the last year. It is my prayer that if it is God's will I may be restored to health, and that I might use my strength for the advancement of his work. There is nothing that brings us in touch with God as sickness does. During my sickness my path seemed very rough at times, but God has helped me in many ways. I thank him, and thank the Saints for what they have done for me. This kindness I shall never forget, nor will the Lord forget it.

I am trying to live as God would have me. Though I know I fail in many things, yet I shall ever try to battle for the right, that I may receive the reward of the faithful. I would be glad to hear from any of the Saints.

Ever praying for the advancement of God's work, I am,

Your sister,

MRS. CLARENCE GRISWOLD.

WAGNER, SOUTH DAKOTA, March 7, 1916.

Editors Herald: I am still in the faith. I have located at Wagner. This place has a population of fifteen hundred. I do not have the privilege of hearing the gospel preached in its fullness here. There have been only three sermons preached here, one by Elder Gamet, and two by Elder Chambers, of Magnolia, Iowa, two of them being funeral sermons. Different parties ask me when Elder Chambers is coming again. I ask the Saints to pray that I may not be led astray.

If an elder can come here I will secure a hall in which to preach. The Catholics are doing a great work here among the Indians.

In gospel bonds,

W. L. COFFMAN.

CLYDE, MISSOURI, March 7, 1916.

Editors Herald: I am always glad to read the letters of our brothers and sisters in the HERALD. I am sorry to say my health is not good. I have been afflicted with inflammatory rheumatism for five years. I cannot walk, I cannot even stand on my feet, and I suffer much.

I feel lonely and sad. On December 19 I was required to give up my husband who passed away suddenly. He had a paralytic stroke, and only lived about two hours after he had been stricken. It is hard for me to bear this burden, which at times seems more than I can endure. The Lord says he will not leave us in the sixth trouble, nor forsake us in the seventh, so I am trusting in him.

Pray for me, that if it is God's will I may be healed.

Your sister,

MRS. H. A. HUFF.

WEST JONESPORT, MAINE, March 12, 1916.

Editors Herald: This has been a beautiful day. The wind has been blowing from the far north and has rustled about the tree tops and crowned the mighty ocean with whitecaps, and now as I sit by the window, realizing that the sun is about ready to bid farewell and a loving good-night to so many in this part of God's vineyard, I feel the sacredness of this quiet hour. The ocean has now become as crystal, and all nature seems to be hushed in pleasant dreams.

I realize more fully than ever that all things were created by an intelligent power. I have gratitude in my heart toward Him in whom I trust, and that I have not been spoiled through philosophy and vain deceit after the traditions of men, and not after Christ. I admire that name, for it brings a vision before me of the greatest character this world ever produced. He truly organized a powerful system for good, known as Christianity, based upon simple and demonstrated facts and truths, and was obedient unto the same. I have accepted him as my ideal in life, so my standard is truly set high. Though an imperfect piece of humanity, yet there is within my soul an unspeakable longing to march onward and upward unto the dawn of the perfect day.

I fully realize that God does not look upon sin lightly. By it was man separated from his God, so reason teaches us that only by abolishing it can we ever be united again. I have charity for all, for I truly need it myself. I rejoice that God does not require more of one than another, for all shall be saved by obedience of laws that produce good works, whether apostle or member.

I desire that my light may always be trimmed and burning, and its rays be an uplifting power unto all with whom it comes in contact.

Your brother in Christ,

MERTON L. CROWLEY.

KINGSLEY, MICHIGAN, March 13, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have been sick and afflicted for some time, and would like the brothers and sisters to pray for me, that if it be the Lord's will to heal me his will may be done. If it is not his will, I am willing to suffer. I was told by the Spirit that I would be tried by affliction. My desire is the Saints ask the Lord to give me spiritual strength, and faith, and patience that whatsoever I am called to pass through I may not murmur nor complain but that I may be faithful, and realize that affliction may be a blessing from God by which he is removing the dross and refining the gold.

I want the Saints to pray that if I am taken so sick that I lose consciousness and do not know what is going on around me, the Lord may direct some of his servants to come to administer to me, or that he will send one of his ministering angels to me. I have no use for earthly doctors.

SAINT MARYS, ONTARIO, March 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: We are having very exciting times here just now. The ministerial association of the town has opened fire on us. I have baptized some fine people here lately and ordained a very fine young man, a school-teacher who was baptized last spring, to the office of elder. Inflammatory sermons have been delivered in Knox and First Presbyterian churches, the Methodist to follow suit. The Baptist minister came to my home Friday and made next thing to an apology for any part he had in the matter. We reply next Sunday night; we expect Elder S. W. L. Scott this week to take the leading part. Many of the leading citizens of the town are with me.

G. C. TOMLINSON.

SNOVER, MICHIGAN, March 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: We are receiving a good share of God's blessings in this part of his vineyard, and are endeavoring to carry on the work that he has intrusted to our care. In the midst of the turmoil existing in these perilous times, we are still looking upward to the creator of all, the great I Am. We find, as Peter says in his second epistle, that the Lord is not slack concerning his promises, as some may count slackness, but is long suffering to us.

As time passes we behold the marvelous works of God on every hand, and also behold the fig tree bringing forth her leaves, thus setting forth that the great summer of summers is nigh. Can each of us beholding ourselves in the mirror of purity, reflect there the Christ life, and thus feel to say within ourselves, "I am ready. All is well. I have on my wedding garments prepared to meet the bridegroom whom I have learned to love." And should the Savior appear, could we say as one of old has said, I have fought the good fight. I have finished my course. I have kept the faith?

"Signs of which there's no mistaking,
Tell us that the summer nears,
So the times as plainly teach us,
The day's at hand—a thousand years."

The times are such that we cannot afford to lose any time in preparing ourselves to meet our Lord. Let not pride, jealousy, malice, or hatred, be once found among us. The satanic powers are trying to creep in among God's people to separate them from his love. Let us all come to that unity of the Spirit, where none of these temptations that so easily beset us shall decrease our faith.

In these trying days it will take a united people, working in harmony, forgetting little troubles that may have existed between them, putting on the breastplate of love, and the helmet of salvation, to conquer the mighty tide of satanic powers that we are told shall exist in the latter days. May we ever be up and doing, and, as the poet has said,

"In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle,
Be a hero in the strife."

There are many to-day who are on the brink of spiritual discouragement. To such we should say, Now is the time when you would need the gospel as never before. Instead of retreating, let us all march forward into battle with all our might, having in mind gospel patriotism and milennial preparedness.

"This life is a garden, where action and deed,
May spring into gladness by sowing the seed.
God give us abundantly sunshine and showers,
And we may have brambles or beautiful flowers."

Let us all labor for the flowers by sowing the seed of truth, showing by our daily walk in life that these seeds have been planted within us.

Ever in the conflict for the right,

Fraternally

ORVAL L. THOMPSON.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO, March 28, 1916.

Editors Herald: Last Sunday was a banner day for the few Saints in Ottawa. We were just a handful here trying to hold up the banner of King Emmanuel, and praise his name, the Lord added six precious souls to our number on last Sunday.

I can truly say that if we can reap this kind of harvests in Ottawa, at all times, that the church will be greatly benefited by such additions. These people are of the finest kind. They are clean in their minds, and in their lives. Added to this they were diligent in their efforts in doing what they could with what light they had in their former church associations, while two who did not belong to any organization whatever are fine characters.

Our hall was filled with a most attentive audience. The writer felt his need of help in carrying on the work, but could only rely on the "Everlasting arms" for strength to do the work at hand. The lone and solitary missionary engaged on the frontier, as it were, very often realizes the wisdom which says that God's servants should go two by two. I hope the time will come when such colaborers will be sent here.

At last I feel the ice is broken in such shape that the people will take notice of the work done. There are quite a number here who believe our message, and I feel sure they all will come in due time. In this effort I am adhering strictly to the thought expressed by Saint Paul: "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. So then neither is he that planted anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase."

Brethren, if I am only successful in doing the part the good Lord assigns to his servants, trusting them with their part of this work, I feel that I ought to be able to trust the Lord to perform his part in giving the increase; and when such is given it will be increase of the divine kind, without very much admixture of the human.

I am receiving inquiries as to how the work is progressing here. I must say that taking into consideration the opposition waged against me, added to the unpopularity of the work I was sent to promulgate, I feel the effort has not been without some degree of encouragement. I have baptized nine very fine people during this conference year, and there are more than this number who believe the gospel who have not yet obeyed. As I said before, I am going to trust God to do his part of the work in bringing them in. And if I do my part I am acquitted in the matter.

I had to build a font, and I thank God I was mechanic enough to do so. I lined it with sheet metal, and I was able to do that too. I also put a coil through the hard coal heater and that enabled me to temper the water so that it was not so very cold, but just about right. All the candidates were highly pleased with the arrangements, and everything went off in first class shape. May God in his infinite mercy abundantly bless these children newly born into his kingdom. I was greatly blessed in the confirmations and the attentive audience witnessed something never seen in Ottawa before. There were many serious faces in that audience.

The fight is still an uphill one, but it seems that I can see the victory perched on our banners, For no weapon formed against this work shall prosper, and the nations of the earth shall bow to it; and all that God requires of us is to do our part as men worthy of the trust committed to us.

To those who have been inquiring as to how I am getting along with the literature I desired, I wish to say: I have been aiming to do as much as I possibly can with the means that have come into my hands from those who have manifested an interest in the work I have been sent to do. I realize there is a great work to do in this part of the vineyard, and I fully know that it is not the work of a day nor a year, but the work of a lifetime; and for that reason I have been laying a foundation so broad that after I have finished my part of the building others who follow can continue until the whole eastern part of Ontario and the entire Province of Quebec will be affected by it, and the gospel find its way into every part of the same. It is for that reason that I have bent my effort in getting a printing press and plates made so as to be able to produce at first cost, all the literature that I want so as to unstintingly scatter the same among the people. There must be at least from three thousand to five thousand people who come to Ottawa every week to the market. They come from a radius of fifty miles all around the city. Think of what work can be done among such a number. And with the right kind of reading matter thousands of these can be awakened to the angel's message, and brought into the church; for all that the people need is to be correctly informed as to the nature of our work in order to get the honest in heart coming our way; and by the sustaining grace of God I shall plant this gospel in the hearts and minds of as many as I can.

I have the press paid for and the receipt in my pocket. I want now sufficient means to put our literature into stereotype plates and start the wheels rolling, and through the power of God, and the printing press, I'll put our literature into every home in this town; and Ottawa shall yet know that the gospel in its fullness has come within its borders and makes demands on all to obey.

Brethren, God is in this work. I am going to try to do my part to the very best of my ability, and when I have done that I am going to leave the results in his hands, but I shall never relax my effort till I have done all that is required of me.

I am not going to General Conference, much as I would like to; the work here demands my presence and I cannot afford the expense, I would sooner put the money into literature.

I shall be pleased to hear from as many as are interested in the success of the work here in Ottawa, and I pray that God will bless each one who has already extended his hands towards me, as well as all who may.

With unflinching confidence in the outcome of the angel's message, I am, 49 Lorne Avenue.

Your brother in Christ,
PHILEMON PEMENT.

EXETER, CALIFORNIA, March 29, 1916.

Editors Herald: To-day being my birthday, I decided to celebrate it by sending a letter to my brothers and sisters. I wish to relate a few of our pleasant experiences since last we wrote.

After we left Sacramento, we went to San Jose, where we spent a week or more as guests of Brother and Sister Hawkins, and where meetings were held for several evenings. Although the weather was somewhat unfavorable, the saints did well in attending the services. The San Jose Branch is to be complimented on their fine choir, under the leadership of Sister Burgess.

Conference time drawing near, we left for Oakland, where it was to be held, and where we were very kindly cared for at the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Presley. We had a very nice conference, all passing off well. Brother J. W. Rushton was present, and his excellent sermons were much appreciated. Elder Pitt was kept busy in various ways. Many expressed themselves as having been greatly benefited in attending.

After the close of conference we departed for Fresno, where meetings were held for a week, and where good seems to have been the result. We were welcomed by Brother and Sister Carmichael, with whom we stopped while in the city, and with whom we enjoyed many delightful auto rides. One was out on "Kearney" Boulevard or drive—a distance of several miles—ten, I believe,—with great palm trees on each side of the thoroughfare. This was really the most wonderful drive we have seen anywhere.

Leaving friends at Fresno, we were soon on our way to Tulare—a fine dairy and fruit country; a distance requiring two hours and a half by train. We were met by Brother Damron and his fine big auto, and enjoyed a pleasant ride of four miles to their home. Here we were welcomed by Sister Damron. We spent almost three weeks at their delightful home.

Brother and Sister Damron have a large dairy, so we had all the rich cream and milk and fresh eggs we could consume. As my inherent love for the soil seemed to come forcibly upon me, I took advantage of the opportunity, and spent a part of each day "digging." With this and pleasant auto rides each day with Sister Mary Damron as chauffeur, one can see that our time passed all too quickly.

Elder Pitt held meetings at the Saints' church in Tulare almost each evening. Many deserve special mention for the effort made in attending the entire series—one, Sister Bedford, driving in a distance of seven miles almost every evening. As a result of the meetings, all seemed greatly encouraged to press forward with renewed vigor in the gospel. It is pleasant to labor in this work at all times, but especially so when one's efforts are appreciated as at Tulare. There we met many true and loyal Saints, Sister Walker and daughter Edna; Brother Snively and daughters Rhea and Gertrude, and brothers; Brother and Sister Powell, the Smith families, and others whose names I cannot recall. Brother and Sister Damron are included in the number of faithful ones there, for their home is always open to the missionaries and to assist in any way needed.

One day before leaving Tulare, we had a fine ride to the foothills of the Sierra Nevadas, out past Lemon Cove. How we did enjoy that ride! We passed through orange and lemon groves, fig orchards, and acres and acres of grape vineyards. The fragrance one inhales in passing through the wonderful orange groves is exhilarating, to say the least, and speeding along we soon came to the "Keweah River," where, under the shade of a large tree, we did ample justice to the delicious lunch which Sister Damron had brought along.

While holding meetings in Tulare, we met Brother and Sister B. F. Dailey, of Exeter, who had driven in occasionally a distance of seventeen miles to services. They asked us to spend a few days with them before leaving this part of the country, so we accepted their kind invitation and have had a very pleasant visit. Elder Pitt remained four days with us, then departed for Oakland, where he was to preach on Sunday. I remained here and have had a delightful time and good rest. I will join Elder Pitt in Stockton, Friday, where we will keep house for a few weeks while laboring in that city.

Exeter, where I am located is several miles nearer the foothills of the mountains than Tulare, and as I write, I can look across to the beautiful snowcapped ridge of the Sierra Nevadas. With the wonderful shadings of the blue sky, all seems blended into one harmonious whole. Then to the left is an orange grove planted high on the mountain side, and to the right are lemon groves, fig orchards, and other fruits growing in abundance. Brother and Sister Dailey have fig and olive orchards and grape vineyards, with a few orange trees and grape fruit. The country is beautiful! All nature seems to be its best. Even the birds are rejoicing in the beautiful surroundings. There are little mocking birds singing as I write, and in fact they seem to sing most of the night as well as during the day.

My pen is inadequate to describe all the beauty of landscape as I view it, but suffice it to say, I have enjoyed the pleasant associations here in the country and the rest, and especially all the good things to eat. All together has proven very beneficial to my health, for I am feeling better than in months. Elder Pitt also is enjoying the best of health.

It has been quite a sacrifice for him to remain away from the General Conference so soon to convene, but realizing that the laborers are few, and there being such a demand for service everywhere, he decided to forgo the pleasure of attending and of meeting friends at this time.

We have not forgotten our acquaintances and friends in various parts of the world. We oftentimes speak of the delightful rides we enjoyed in Australia, on that long trip with Tommy the little missionary horse, and Brother Robertson as our faithful guide part of the way, when we called on many isolated members. How we would like to meet those dear Saints once more!

With very best wishes to Saints and friends everywhere, and praying that the Lord will bless all, I am

Your Sister in the gospel,
ROSA PARKS PITT.

News from Branches

Cleveland, Ohio

We are moving along in all departments of the work. The Sunday school is registering an attendance and interest as a general thing, which not long since we counted as a record event. The Religio is following suit. There is a general livening up of branch meetings and a good social spirit prevailing among all the membership.

We were favored with a visit by Doctor Nutting, of the Utah Gospel Mission, whose headquarters are in this city. This gentleman has had much experience traveling through the Salt Lake country trying to convert the Mormons. He has written some very biased tracts in times past, and in re-writing them wishes to present our cause with due justice. We certainly hope he will be fair with the avenues of knowledge we have placed at his service.

Our library board has a complete church library now. We have recently installed a pipe organ. Other activities we shall be pleased to report at a later date.

PUBLICITY COMMITTEE.

West Pullman, Illinois

Meetings are held regularly in our hall on One Hundred Nineteenth Street, which we have occupied for the past fifteen years. While many changes have taken place during this time, and some of our numbers have passed over the river, there are still a number of the old warriors who are striving to keep the banner of King Emmanuel afloat and to maintain the honor of God in this place.

The actions of some in days gone by have left a lasting effect in the minds of a great many against the work. We feel, however, that the light has begun to break, and that the Spirit of God is working with the people to the end that there may be some who will obey.

As it is in all large cities, we find that it is an uphill effort, and almost impossible to reach the people with the gospel message, as there are many amusements and other attractions to draw the minds of men and women away from their Master. We are hopeful, however, and are praying to the end that God will open up an effectual door to those who are seeking the light and truth.

Elder Dickhout of Hamilton, Ontario, was the morning speaker, giving us some beautiful thoughts and instructions.

HELEN NANCY SMITH.

Minneapolis, Minnesota

Minneapolis is still on the map, speaking in a church way. May 1 marked the opening of a new year in our branch and on this date we met together in annual business session, electing E. H. Bennett, president. Elder Charles Lundeen, one of the pioneer members of our branch, was relieved of the responsibilities of leadership which he so faithfully occupied. Credit is due him for his untiring efforts of the past. In his time he has seen many hours of discouragements, but brighter days have blessed his efforts, and he now lays down the leadership with conditions favorable and good.

Modern improvements, including baptismal font and kitchenette, have been installed in the basement of our church, and we are comfortably located in this part of the city.

The Ladies Auxiliary recently appropriated ninety dollars, which amount was used in redecorating the interior of the church. This auxiliary of the church has greatly helped to bring about the good conditions that exist here at the present time.

Our Sunday school and Religio are well attended, and the interest manifested by our young people is promising. We are glad that these organizations are in the church, and realize that they are a help to the church in its onward progress.

MARIE BENNETT.

1719 Sixth Avenue North, May 5, 1916.

Jonesport, Maine

Our branch has not grown greatly in numbers since last report but we are happy to say there has been a small increase, and prospects are for a larger ingathering in the near future.

Our Sunday school is still prospering and growing rapidly. A normal teacher class has recently been organized with an enrollment of eighteen. This movement will prove of much value, not only in training teachers for the Sunday school work, but as a help in qualifying our school for first grade.

Our Religio is also ranking high in success. Through this channel many nonmembers are becoming enlightened upon the teachings of the Book of Mormon, and have been led to show interest in the church. In connection with this auxiliary, Brother Ebeling, to the delight of the youngsters, has organized a nonprofane baseball team, and in the near future is to organize an athletic club. Thus the young are being interested and are made subject to church influences.

We were much pleased in noting from conference report that Brother Ebeling, who has been with us the past year, has been granted at least one more year's stay with us. Though great achievements have been realized during the past year through his efforts, we have faith to feel that with the help of God and with the support of the Saints, still greater results will be realized in the year to come.

On the evening of April 29, the forty-eighth birthday of Brother Ebeling, and the fifty-ninth birthday of our branch president, Brother W. E. Rogers, a large assembly of Saints and friends met in honor of the occasion.

We call attention to an important event to occur in the near future, that is, the opening of our church. Plans will be made for special music for the occasion. A two weeks' series of meetings will be conducted. A spiritual feast is anticipated.

Your brother,
CHARLES F. CUMMINGS.

In connection with the above appointments, I desire to remind my associates that I would be pleased to have them send in their reports as early as possible on regular reporting dates. Will also be pleased to have them mail me, at intervals of not less than two weeks, information as to their whereabouts, and where mail will reach them in the near future. I am asking this for the reason that we are very often in receipt of inquiries in which information is desired relative to the location of the ministry in case of urgent calls and the usual demands for ministerial work in different parts of the district. A compliance with this request will be greatly appreciated.

I am thankful for the hearty cooperation given me in the past year, and feel to admonish the brethren it is necessary, because of the great demands made upon us for preaching, that all should give as much time as possible in the field.

Praying for the blessings of the Lord upon this mission, as well as the entire church, I am,

Your colaborer in the work of the Master,

JAMES A. GILLEN.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, May 19, 1916.

Mission Number Six; Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, and the Republic of Mexico. To the Saints of This Mission; Greeting: Colorado: Elders A. T. Higdon and J. F. Petre will look after the work in the Western District.

In the Eastern District, Elders J. Charles May, Ammon White, J. R. Sutton, and O. E. Sade will labor.

Arizona: Elders S. D. Condit and W. H. Mannering will labor as during the previous year, at least for the present.

Elder James E. Yates will as during the past year, give the city of Phoenix his special attention, and also will occupy at new points as extensively as local help at Phoenix will permit.

New Mexico will have the labors of Elder A. J. Layland.

The Republic of Mexico: While conditions prevent active work or the sending of missionaries at the present, the church is anxious to keep in touch with all members and friends in Mexico, with the idea of service if needed and to prepare for work in the future.

To the priesthood: A poor plan is to wait for "opportunity" or "an opening." We should prepare, as the law directs, for the labor demanded of us. Then go out and make "an opportunity," make "an opening." Be aggressive and be kind. And all local workers should feel to extend their labors and enlarge their talents by active work. The church needs the very best that each and all can give. Confidence in each other and earnest performance of duty will give us success at the end of the year's work.

Saints, let the undersigned or any of the above-named officials know of wants and needs and opportunities as seen by you.

Home address, Lamoni, Iowa. Field address, Phoenix, Arizona, Box 646.

To the Saints and Friends of Northeastern Missouri; Greeting: As we have been appointed by our mission president to engage in the tent work in this district, we are anxious to hear from any who may be interested and to receive such help as may be offered, either by requests for work, suggestions, or financial aid.

At present we are engaged in an effort to assist with the work at this point, but expect to get the tent into operation at Macon, Missouri by June 1.

Our program for the entire season is not yet determined upon, so let us hear from you.

Our field address is, 705 West Price Street, Kirksville, Missouri.

Sincerely your servants for the cause of Christ,

Editorial

THE AGED AND THE YOUNG

From certain sources there come to our ears expressions indicating a fear that young men are to be promoted in the church at the expense of the aged.

One writer expresses it thus badly: That he has "been told that Fred M. is to put all the old men out and put young men in their places."

The question resolves itself into two phases: the call of the young, and the dropping out of the aged. Should it not occur to everyone that this dual process has been going on for a long, long time? It is nothing new, or peculiar to a new administration.

Do we not recall the revelation of 1902 in which the president was moved to ask, "What was meant by the choosing of members for the Presidency so young in years?"

That was under the administration of President Joseph Smith, himself at the time nearly seventy years of age, and so beyond suspicion that he should favor the young at the expense of the aged, as he was in no less degree exempt eleven years later when certain of the brethren were released from the apostolic quorum "on account of increasing infirmities of age and incapacity, caused by illness of body."

But let your mind run further back to the revelation of 1873 by which such a large and remarkable group of men were called to various offices. Most of them were comparatively young men.

Among them was David H. Smith, called to the Presidency at the age of twenty-eight; William H. Kelley, Thomas W. Smith, Alexander H. Smith, Zenas H. Gurley, and Joseph R. Lambert, called to the Quorum of Twelve at the ages respectively of, thirty-two, thirty-five, thirty-four, thirty-one, and twenty-seven.

No doubt some were concerned at the time, but the promise to those men was that if faithful they should become "men of power and excellent wisdom," a promise that was fulfilled to a most striking degree, when we consider the group as a whole.

Our minds go back still further, to the youthful E. C. Briggs, for a time our sole missionary; later called to the office of apostle at the age of twenty-five.

At the age of twenty-five Joseph Smith, the Martyr, was named as the first elder of the church. The first mission of the church, that to the Lamanites, resulting also in the planting of the work in Kirtland and in Missouri, was undertaken by Oliver Cowdery, aged twenty-five, Parley P. Pratt, aged twenty-three, and Peter Whitmer, aged twenty-one (and one whose age we do not know).

We may conclude, then, that this calling of young men to office is not peculiar to any one period of church history, or to any one administration. It has been going on all the time.

In fact to assume or allege that any one man has presumed to call a certain class of men to office is to discredit our whole system. It is not President Frederick M. Smith or President Joseph Smith that calls men to office. That work goes forward under the general and often specific oversight of the Holy Spirit. And in all ages that Spirit has been calling young men to positions of trust and responsibility.

A number of years ago at a reunion the writer unintentionally overheard a conversation not meant for his ears. One was so thoughtless as to remark to Elder James Moler, of revered memory, "If you old men don't watch out a lot of these young fellows will be getting ahead of you."

Brother Moler replied, serenely, "Thank God for that. If they are humble and faithful I don't care how many get ahead of me; I'll get behind them and help push with all the strength I have left."

That remark left a warm sensation in the heart. Why not? Are we not all pushing at one load? Let us welcome reinforcements.

The other phase of the question, the retirement of the aged, may be more delicate. That the aged must relax their efforts and yield their burdens to younger shoulders may be lamentable; but, alas, it certainly is equally unavoidable.

There must come a time in the lives of all of us when physical or mental decay, or both, incident to age or illness, will curtail our work and finally bring it to an end.

How we shall face that situation, whether with resentment, with melancholy, or with resignation, remains to be discovered by each of us when that dread time shall come. Happy the man who gracefully adapts himself to the inevitable with that quiet fortitude that characterized our late lamented president, who to quote his own words, endeavored "to grow old gracefully."

Emerson, growing old, wrote:

TERMINUS

It is time to be old,
To take in sail;
The god of bounds,
Who set to seas a shore,
Came to me in his fatal rounds,
And said: "No more!
No farther shoot
Thy broad ambitious branches, and they root.
Fancy departs; no more invent;
Contract thy firmament
To compass of a tent,
There's not enough for this and that,
Make thy option which of two;
Economize the failing river,
Not the less revere the Giver.
Leave the many and hold the few,
Timely wise accept the terms,
Soften the fall with wary foot;
A little while Still plan and smile, . . ."
I trim myself to the storm of time,
I man the rudder, reef the sail,
Obey the voice at eve obeyed at prime;
"Lovely, faithful, banish fear.
Right onward drive unharmed!
The port, well worth the cruise, is near.
And every wave is charmed."

Of course the church should not make the mistake of retiring men who are yet capable of active service and wise counsel. Such things do not always go by calendar; wisdom does not always come with maturity, nor does it always depart even in extreme old age. No age limit can be set arbitrarily, for the ending of service, at forty, or fifty, or sixty, or seventy, or eighty. God and nature attend to each of us in turn. To work while the day lasts is the divine admonition.

We believe that as a rule the church is disposed to uphold men in office until it is quite obvious that wisdom and the Spirit indicate that a change is necessary. And it should be remembered that because a man is relieved from a particular work in a particular council or quorum or position, it does not necessarily follow that he can no longer serve the church in any capacity. He may still work in other capacities to the extent of his vigor and ability.

To those who have served the church well and are now partially or wholly disabled by age or infirmity, we should render the most abundant honor, as is their due. From those still able to render service, though not so strenuously as in past days, and to impart counsel rendered valuable by that wisdom which experience brings, we should gladly receive that which they are prepared to give. And such honorable and worthy men we should support both financially and spiritually, according to their needs and just wants, and that not grudgingly.

We have observed no disposition in the church to degrade, slight, humiliate, or disinherit the aged, or to unduly exalt or advance the young. If such disposition exists it should be curbed and eradicated. The fact that we are all daily growing older should call to our attention the golden rule, that we may now do as presently we would be done by.

The aged and the young should work together after the example set by the aged Paul and the youthful Timothy.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

ON OUR RETIREMENT

With this issue the writer is retired from service as assistant editor of the HERALD. We do not bid the HERALD farewell, however, for it is "ours"—it is the publication of the church that belongs to all the people. While some man, or men, must be responsible for its immediate work and policy, all feel a vital interest in, and may contribute to its success. So while we retire from the editorial staff, it is only to join again the long list of HERALD supporters, among whom we may always have part and place.

And we are glad it is not farewell, for this would be farewell to the patrons of the HERALD also, among whom we count many of our warmest personal friends. To break companionship with such a loyal band would be sad indeed. That we may march on side by side with this ever-growing company for the good of the church and all its work, is one of the many privileges made possible through association with the people of God.

We did not take up work on the HERALD from choice. Engaged fully in other church activities, we preferred to continue therein, and felt that the request to leave these was an intrusion on our calling and office work as a minister for Christ. Time, however, brought evidences which were convincing, so that we have been made to feel that the direction to assist for a season with the HERALD was right. And that work has brought a personal development, and a breadth of vision that scarcely any other could have done. Entered upon unwillingly, our work on this periodical came to be done joyously, and has brought to us an uplift and a fuller preparation for other duties.

We turn now to this other work, not from choice, but because we are constrained to follow the same course to which we have endeavored to hold from the beginning of our work in the church—that is, to perform the work asked of us by the church, and to which we understand we have been called of God. No duty has been anticipated with more hesitancy, or with a stronger feeling of lack of preparation; yet with the support of the Saints, if their concurrence in the appointment is finally had, and with the help of God, we are willing to undertake the new and arduous duties of this place and office.

It remains for us to pay due respect to our beloved brother and companion in labor, Elbert A. Smith, than whom there is no more lovable man among us. To have been his assistant for three years has been an inspiration. To part daily and intimate company with him brings a pang akin to that felt in parting with an esteemed friend. Yet we are not to be separated from him. In our new work we shall solicit and will receive his support, his counsel, and his active and personal cooperation. So, parting as editors, we meet at once as brethren and fellow ministers, engaged in the great cause of the upbuilding and the fuller establishment of a stake of Zion.

Our work on the HERALD has not always been satisfactory to us. Performed in connection with other church duties, it has sometimes been hurried, and hence has not always been done as carefully as its importance would demand. In making way for our successor, we are conscious that there is opened to him a broad field of opportunity. We can only wish him, and we feel that he will be sustained by the same helpful hands, the same consideration, the same full measure of confidence that has been our happy portion, and for all of which we shall not cease to be grateful.

CURRENT EVENTS

MAUNA LOA.—The Hawaiian volcano, Mauna Loa, is violently active. A large flow of lava is covering the same ground of that of the last eruption nine years ago.

RADIO RECORD.—The American steamship Ventura, late arrival at San Francisco, reports the picking up of a wireless message from the station at Tuckerton, New Jersey, when nine thousand miles from that place. This is said to be a world record.

BAPTISTS DISAPPROVE DIVORCE.—The National Baptist Convention, at Minneapolis, Minnesota, on the 23d, passed a resolution disapproving the action of clergymen who officiate at the marriage of persons divorced on grounds other than those "recognized by churches."

WOULD PURCHASE PALESTINE.—Henry Morgenthau, late ambassador to Turkey, in an address at Cincinnati, Ohio, the 22d, proposed the purchase of Palestine from Turkey by Jews and Christians after the war, to recoup Turkish finances, and to form a free republic, the Christian nations of the world to participate in its government. Mr. Morgenthau is of the opinion that Turkey might be persuaded to sell.

PROTESTING MAIL SEIZURE.—The United States Government has delivered messages to Great Britain and France protesting against the methods of these countries in handling neutral mail. The note contends that first-class mail is of a privileged character and should not be interfered with on the seas. British and French war vessels have taken liberties with United States mail on the grounds that by parcels post contraband has been sent into Germany.

NEW YORK PREPAREDNESS.—Preparedness legislation has been passed by the legislature and signed by the governor of New York, which provides for drafting into military service at the discretion of the governor, any person in the State of New York of military age; the compulsory training of school children above eight years; and a commission empowered to supervise military training of schools, and to enforce in summer camps the training all boys between sixteen and nineteen, except those "regularly and lawfully employed in any occupation for a livelihood."

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—The troops under Colonel Sibley sent in pursuit of the bandits who attacked Glen Springs, have returned to American soil, having rescued an American storekeeper and a negro kidnapped by the Mexican raiders. Carranza is said to have provided additional troops to preserve order in northern Mexico. Two Villa bandits and an American trooper were killed in a skirmish south of Cruces, Mexico, the 25th. The economic situation in Mexico is said to be grave. Food shortage in the vicinity of Mexico City, labor strikes extending over a large part of the Government railroad lines, and the ravages of prolonged revolution contribute to this condition.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Austrians have massed troops on the west sector of the Italian line, where they have made important gains in a formidable campaign threatening the left wing and rear of the Italian army. The fighting in the region of Verdun has been vigorous. The French have captured a part of Fort Douaumont, which was taken by the Germans early in their attack. The French have made minor gains in this territory. Heavy fighting is reported on other parts of the western line. A force of Russian cavalymen has broken through the Turkish lines and joined the British army on the south side of the Tigris, in Mesopotamia, where the British have advanced to the outskirts of Kut El Amara. Foreign secretary, Sir Edward Grey, speaking in the British Commons the 24th, stated that the war had not yet reached the point where it was possible to talk peace. King Edward on the 25th signed a compulsory service bill drafting every able-bodied man in the United Kingdom between eighteen and forty-one, the Irish excepted. Premier Asquith has returned to London, where with his colleagues he is attempting a settlement of the proposition for Irish freedom by agreement among Irish leaders.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

A CORRECTION.—The HERALD editors desire to correct a mistake that appeared in the magazine number of the HERALD for March 15. An article appeared in that number entitled "Open air preaching in Australia," written by Elder J. H. N. Jones, but by mistake credited to Elder J. W. Haworth. As Brother Haworth sent the article in, he is very anxious that the error should be corrected, in order to relieve him of any imputation of blame.

EXPRESSIVE BUT NOT CONSISTENT.—R. B. Neal, of Anti-"Mormon" fame, in a pamphlet recently coming under our observation, says:

Personal abuse is a poor weapon to use in either written or oral discussion. It is about on a par with the "Chinese stink-pot," and "kicks harder" than it shoots.

And it was Mr. Neal, who, in an article in the Apostolic Review a few months ago, said that if "ordered" to do so by our president, the men and ministry of our church would "rape and murder women and children." He is expressive if not consistent.

INFALLIBLE DANIEL.—Daniel Sommer, editor in chief of the Apostolic Review, and prominent leader of the anti-organ Christian Church, in controversy with one L. D. Perkins of his brotherhood, says in the Review of April 25:

I challenge L. D. Perkins and all others that may see what I now write, to name one person or paper that has always taken the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, as found in the Bible, that ever convicted the Review's managers of an error in regard to their teaching concerning name, doctrine, practice, worship, or work, of the congregations of Christ.

It might be thought that one of Elder Sommer's conclusions is that there is no person or paper holding to "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," since no man in this sphere of activity, nor any paper published by man, is or can be in possession of all truth; or that he is like the old lady who said, "I am open to conviction, but I'd smile to see the man that could convict me," were it not for the fact that his entire argument leads up to the one conclusion—Daniel the infallible!

BE TRUE.—Professor Benjamin Snow, head of the University of Wisconsin, is quoted as saying that scandal travels three times faster than sound, or about one thousand yards a second; flattery, he says, comes next, at five hundred yards a second; while truth drags along at the rate of two and one half yards a second. The professor seems to have overlooked the story of the hare and the tortoise, or those reporting him have failed to pass along his conclusions. Like the tortoise, truth will win out in the end, for

Not to the strong is the battle,
Not to the swift is the race,
Yet to the true and the faithful
Vict'ry is promised through grace.

A BITTER OPPONENT.—One Reverend S. McLean, pastor of Knox Presbyterian Church, Saint Marys, Ontario, some weeks ago, responding to an appointment by that body, in an address before the ministerial association of the city on "Mormonism," confined his effort largely to an attack on Joseph Smith and the reorganized Saints. This address was published in the Saint Marys Journal. Our brother Elder G. C. Tomlinson replied through the same paper, and subsequent replies and counter replies were also published. The spirit which actuates the reverend gentleman, Mr. McLean, is shown in the language herein quoted. Speaking of Joseph Smith he says:

Joseph Smith . . . was immoral and wicked, . . . He had no spirituality whatever, and he constantly made merchandise of his pretended prophetic position, so that it secured for him houses and lands, and valuable corner lots and lucrative offices.

Of the Saints he says:

If the Brighamites were the natural product of Joseph Smith's life and teaching, and of his book, "The Book of Mormon," why may we not suspect that by and by the Latter Day Saints or Josephites of Ontario may not produce a second Brighamite system.

In one of his replies to Elder Tomlinson, Mr. McLean says:

No wonder Joseph Smith and his brother, Hyrum, were lynched by a community who were enraged by Smith's life and teaching and who would endure it no longer. How long shall Saint Marys tolerate Elder Tomlinson's championship of the life and teachings of such a character as Joseph Smith?

Saint Marys nor any other community would long extend to freemen their constitutional rights if men like those who incited the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and like Mr. McLean, could have their way; but, thank God, there are not many such men these days, and those who do continue with us fail in their purposes to incite to violence a fair-minded and liberty-loving people. Mr. McLean is bold as well as bitter in suggestion, but slow in action: He would have Saint Marys well rid of "Mormonism," but, wisely, perhaps, he declines to meet any of our representatives in public discussion at that place. Like many other critics, Mr. McLean, according to his own admission, has not been "in a position to make personal investigations," which makes his observations all the more ridiculous—he knows nothing about the cause he so bitterly condemns.

FOUNDATION OF FAITH--PART 3

BY M. H. BOND

In the beginning of anything like serious study of religious questions, circumstances led, or forced me into an examination of the creeds of different bodies of people, or of churches calling themselves "Christians," and followers of Jesus Christ, with the result that, as represented in their creeds or confessions of faith, I was not bound in reason to conclusion that an infinite, loving, and all-wise God could have been the responsible author of any of them; and in the study of the Old Testament, especially, with a view to indorsement, I was confronted with numerous challenges to my reason and sense of justice, and was led to the conclusion that the Israelitish Jehovah was not bound himself to moral considerations, and especially as were enjoined by Jesus Christ, as recorded in the New Testament Scriptures when he said:

Ye have heard, that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that spitefully use you.

Why, and for what reason were his disciples thus enjoined?

That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth his rain on the just and on the unjust.

I could not then escape the conclusion that either the Almighty had changed his mind in some regards, or that the God of the Old and the New Testament were separate and distinctly different characters. I must also conclude that the militant and sanguinary disposition of professed followers of Jesus Christ as manifested in the history of the Christian church might account for their indorsement and practice of Old Testament methods in inaugurating and carrying on wars of extermination, or of "converting" people through the methods of the "autoda-fe," into hypocrites by recantation of their honest convictions, when physical torture was employed, for the prevention of the spread of "heresy" upon the part of those who held different opinions in the interpretation of religious questions, or scriptural text. "As like father, like son," the application of this motto in their case, or as true sons of the Israelitish Jehovah they were justified in the imitation and practice of his servants who were commanded, as in the case of Ai, and of other cities and countries to wage war of extermination of "all that breathe," innocent women, children and all, or, as in some cases of exception, where they were reserved for spoil, etc., and which seemed to constitute the glory of their achievement, as well as to invite the commendation of the Almighty.

These, with the numerous contradictions that seemed to abound in the Bible, the record of miracles that were contrary to the laws governing the courses in which our natural life flowed, and totally unauthenticated in my experience, and even relegated by the Christian churches as a story of long past event, and without possibility of any indorsement or proof by a repetition in the present or future history of the world had the effect upon my mind of producing, if not the open and avowed disbelief or conclusion like that of Professor Darwin that there never had been any revelation, at least the oppressive sense that I was "without God, and without hope in the world" of material things of which I was a material part only, or as to a future life, or possessed of any serious inducement to make provision for such contingency. All this, as was natural, was accompanied by the danger of a feeling of irresponsibility or respect for other than purely human law, the law of parents, or the opinions of society.

At this important period in the history of my life, a severe and continued sickness in which my life was despaired of by almost everybody, took place. During my confinement for a period of two years or more, I had ample time for reflection upon questions of a religious character, of the possible existence of any God or of a supreme ruler or governor in human affairs. I thought much of the inadequacies and incompleteness of our human lives, the possibilities of opportunity and continuous growth beyond the tomb, and was finally moved to utter my first real prayer, the burden of which was, "O God, if there is any, show me the way out of darkness, for I have no other recourse!"

Led as I was, sometime after my recovery, to something like normal conditions of bodily health, and by what I now know to be the unseen hand to build a home in the West, and where I was thrown into intimate association with my uncle, Brother S. S. Wilcox, and a company of Latter Day Saints at Manti, Iowa, religious problems, through my new environment, naturally became more interesting to me. The examination of the Book of Mormon and its claims having been made a study for some time, together with the prayer habit which I had formed, I may say the new-found pleasure, and interest in association with religious people of liberal belief, as distinguished from the claims of so-called "orthodox" professors, finally convinced me that a majority of new witnesses were lined up against my former attitude of indifference, or positive opposition to religion and the Bible, as a plenary, or in any other reasonable sense, a particularly inspired book, or as against the claims of the followers of Confucius, Mohammed, Buddha, etc., for their sacred writings.

Although my mind or convictions as I now recall matters, were in what I would denominate a state of flux, I came to the conclusion that obedience to the "first principles" was morally safe, and that I had no good reason to postpone the experiment of trying to find out something about God, as the Scriptures and the preachers informed me, and that it would be to my interests, as well as a reasonable duty to unite with the church. As a result I was baptized in the Nishnabotna River by my uncle, S. S. Wilcox.

If I had been expecting anything of a miraculous nature then, or subsequently at confirmation, I should have been disappointed. The Lord seems to have taken another way of convincing me. I have never been sorry for it. I may say that in the forty years or more of my church membership and association, I have, as a rule, especially in later years, never been confirmed in the faith or unduly exalted by the witness of miracles, signs or wonders, real or imaginary, to the extent that some others seem to have enjoyed. It is of miracles of a somewhat different nature from those to which I have alluded that I now wish to speak, reference to which is made in the appeal of Peter when he enjoins the saints to whom his first epistle was addressed to "arm themselves with the same mind" that was in Jesus Christ, in whom, as Paul has affirmed, "are hidden all of the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

Mind armament therefore, through properly associated and truthful environment, is the condition, as I was led to believe, upon which the intelligence and glory which emanates in perfected form and sense from God only is acquired, for "the ways of God are always right." My mind, then, as I have stated before, was as yet in a state of flux as to the plenary character of the Old Testament particularly, so as to hold in abeyance indorsement of many of the miracles chronicled; and at this late date holds itself immune from just condemnation for heretical opinion because of a lack of proper data or information upon which to base a firm belief or foundation of faith as to just how much of misrepresentation of the Almighty, or the God that I was and am trying to worship, might be safely attributed to the human misunderstanding, the personal environment, education, or superstition of the recorder or scribe employed to give his opinion or version of the display of God's character, intent, or purpose.

As a mind sample of present conclusions or attitude I wish to call attention to the reading of scripture to be found in the twenty-eighth chapter of Isaiah, asking you to read uninterruptedly from the beginning of the sixteenth verse to the close of the twenty-ninth chapter. There is a description of closely connected events relating to unfulfilled prediction in the history of the human family. I call the reader's attention particularly to the twenty-first verse, which reads as follows:

"For the Lord shall rise up as in Mount Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of Gideon." What for? "That he may do his work, his strange work, and bring to pass his act, his strange act," and reaffirm in the following chapter, fourteenth verse, in strikingly similar language, "Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish," etc.

Connected with this, the whole chapter abounds in a prophetic description of an event which can have no possible connection with traditions of men, their superstitions, or accredited personal religious beliefs that existed in the world, in the day of their fulfillment; and to the challenge of its being "a marvelous work and a wonder," no serious or successful attempt has been made.

The "more sure knowledge of the word of prophecy," which the Apostle Peter refers to in his second letter (see Inspired Translation) that has been vouchsafed to me, the exact literal fulfillment of which, in my day and in my time, and the truthfulness thereof has become a part of my being as much as is the knowledge of my existence, so that I feel a large measure of warrant in appropriating the words of the beloved disciple, who said, "which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the word of life!"—the origin of which, in this stream of pure intelligence, of light and of truth, could, in my analysis of the case, have proceeded from no other source than the God of the Hebrew Bible, and a product of a revelation from Jesus Christ, through the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, the Spirit, an essence of truth, the gift of God, and of his Christ to the true discipleship in all ages, and every age of the world.

We wish, before leaving this part of the subject referred to in the quotations from or reference made to the prophecies of Isaiah, as we find recorded in the twenty-eighth chapter and twenty-first verse, to examine the evident indorsement of the event recorded in the book of Joshua, (Joshua 10:12,13) and which reads as follows:

Then spake Joshua to the Lord in the day in which the Lord delivered up the Amorites before the children of Israel, and he said in the sight of Israel, Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon; and thou, moon, in the valley of Ajalon. And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. Is not this written in the book of Jasher? So the sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down about a whole day.

With this story which had long been taboo with myself, and which is now confronted with scoffs and sneers by very many even of the "orthodox" ministers and world of to-day, the disarrangement and catastrophe which should have naturally followed such an event in our solar system would seem to furnish prima facie evidence of its unauthenticity, and there you are. What shall we do with this and other "tough" stories, or seemingly "inspired" errors with which we are confronted? What and where are the facts to be found? Where does "the truth" that alone can make us "free indeed" lie?

What I have to say at this present time, or as expressing my up-to-date conclusion concerning the actual association of the Almighty with the alleged happenings in regard to the performance of the sun and moon at the command of Joshua, is this: It may be claimed that the chroniclers of this event may have alluded to a sensual phenomenon which had its existence in appearance only. We say and chronicle daily, "the sun rises," "the sun sets," a thing which has as yet never happened only in scripture narrative. Yet it is our common expression of appearances that are constantly manifesting themselves in the sidereal universe that is all around us.

Again it may be urged that as a world-maker, the knowledge of law by which it not only was made and by which it is still controlled, rests with its author, God. It may also be urged that intelligence, power or will to suspend or introduce by introduction of the force of another or higher law, the order of his creations is as much a possibility with him, as it was to create, set in order, or control; that it is as reasonable a thing to believe possible, as it is to profess faith in him at all, and that we have no fundamental substitutes or explanations that are needed.

But to these and other similar expressions or defenses for the letter of the world I may have to offer: Is it unnecessary to be unduly concerned about this, as about other matters of record or testimony from various sources that may strain or have strained our faith or credulity?

The recorder of the prophetic utterances of the prophet in his reference to the stopping of the sun and the moon in their usual course, seems to have given as a principal reason for his reference and comparison to events that we know are happening in our day, what some other chronicler had written concerning this event, and when, after seeming indorsement of his writing he adds, "Is not this written in the book of Jasher?" The idea occurs to me what Jasher had said about the matter constituted his authority for a repetition of the statement. I think that I am rather glad, upon the whole, that the writers of the book of Jasher and of Joshua have not made further demand upon my faith or credulity by adding that "there was no day like that before or after it." Once is enough, if you have plenty of other and easier and effectual arguments or evidence at hand.

I do not know anything about Jasher, or his sources of information, and I doubt if others have any reliable information. I prefer, with Peter, to rest my case in "the more sure knowledge of the word of prophecy," the actual fulfillment of which, in my day, offers to me a more sure and substantial evidence of God's willingness and ability to "convert" an honest doubter by these and other similar methods, by an appeal to his powers of intelligence as a created son of God, and furnish him with a more substantial and satisfactory hope, or foundation of faith, than can be by alleged or real appearance of celestial or terrestrial "signs and wonders."

The coming forth of the Book of Mormon in the manner of an exact fulfillment of the predictions of Isaiah made over twenty-six hundred years ago, furnishes tangible evidence or proof that the world's "great Companion" is not dead, as has been affirmed, but that the prescient mind is trying to project itself into our troubled and oftentimes despairing minds through the instrumentality of "a marvelous work and a wonder," that is unexplainable except upon the ground of being true, and its inauguration the result of forces that are alone under the control of the Almighty, and to the mind of the writer of this article, the same intelligence that controlled the mind, and spoke through the man and Prophet Isaiah ages ago, without any possible collusion, wrought upon, and governed the mind and action of the "boy seer," Joseph Smith, and its fulfillment constitute proved himself a blunderer in trying to counterfeit.

It is written of Jesus, "that being in the form of God, he thought it not robbery to be equal with God," etc. We talk of equality sometimes as though it were a uniformity of earthly habit, or as if temporal environment might constitute millennial conditions; but equality of opportunity, of service, and of accomplishment along intelligent, moral and spiritual lines are synchronious, and we should accustom ourselves without prejudice to this form of grouping of forces as altogether necessary to the production of a true and lasting "equality."

"Beloved," says John, "now are we the sons of God." There may be no doubt about it, or that we are acknowledged as such in a demonstratable way, at times. "But it doth not appear what we shall be," for our vision of him is indistinct, or mayhap somewhat distorted. We "see through a glass darkly," and as it were, not "face to face." We do not "see him as he is."

We believe, then, that our analysis should become more exact as regarding our environment, and the dangers that attach to the introduction into our lives of things that are not true. The exhibition of wisdom displayed in the answer of King Solomon, when, upon his ascent to the throne of David, his father, in answer to the proffer from the Lord as to what he would desire of him, when he said, "Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad people," (1 Kings 3:8; see Inspired Translation) should lead us to pray for wisdom that will enable us to avoid mistakes.

It is true, as we are told, that all good is from God, and if men by birth, environment, education or inclination, have drifted or struggled toward the truth, and are measurably controlled by it, we are bound to recognize and give credit wherever it belongs to the record of good with which reason and history may furnish us. But the elements of fiction or falsehood that truth has been forced into association with, constitute the danger that confronts mankind to-day. Religion, churches, beliefs, may be so permeated with error that it may become a hard matter to determine what or where the forces are that predominate.

The Devil has a church, a religion, and a belief, and possibly or probably a varied assortment of samples of them. But it must not be forgotten that the Devil is a liar, and a most successful one at that, and without a church, a religion, and a belief, and an offer to sustain by successful appeal, would be of necessity shorn of much of his power for mischief.

His wars are largely or chiefly wars that have dealt with religious questions—the most sanguinary, cruel and unreasonable, with which history has furnished us account; and if it is conceded that there is a devil in existence, it seems to have become the conviction of the minds of a great many people of the honest and thinking sort, that he is mixed up in religious affairs in our day.

In what, then, are the foundations of our belief in God and his Christ laid? (I would have preferred to have used the word belief, as a title to this article, as it ought to be clear to us that faith is the sequence or outcome or result of an acquirement of "a belief of the truth," for by it only can we be "sanctified," or "saved.") A permanent and unshakable "faith in God" is the ultimate goal of Christian or Sainly achievement.

I believe that the wisdom of Solomon or the advice of Paul in this matter, if heeded, will aid us in laying permanent foundations, and that in seeking after confirmatory evidences through spiritual agency, we should earnestly and intelligently "covet the best gifts," gifts that "edify," instruct and tend to place us in touch or communion with "the mind of Christ," or the thoughts of God. We shall learn that permanency and stability for a foundation for a religious belief does not rest in nor is it to be found in the pursuit of signs and wonders that exhilarate for the time, but which alone would leave us without adequate defense if confronted by a score or more of other religious or occult demonstrations or organizations which are relying largely or principally upon this uncertain class of support for evidence regarding their various claims.

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my thoughts higher than your thoughts.—Isaiah 55:8, 9.

To think as God thinks is to be Godlike. Let us improve upon our thinking processes and rise to the great companionship!

And, behold, the Lord passed by, and a great strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rock before the Lord; but the Lord was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake; but the Lord was not in the earthquake; and after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice. And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entering of the cave.—1 Kings 19:11-13.

But he said unto them, Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my fingers into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe. . . . Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing . . . Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen, yet have believed.—John 20:25-29.

"I shall know him, I shall know him! By the prints of the nails in his hands." Are you singing it?

Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures.—Luke 24:45.

But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him.

PREACHING SERVICES

I assume that there are two main ideas back of the subject outline: First, decorum as a factor in securing interest in the service and fixing the attention upon the preached word; and second, such a division of subject matter with respect to order and time as most effectively to supply the needs of the congregation.

HOW CONDUCTED

First, according to a well-defined plan or order; which plan should be carefully executed by those upon whom the several duties of the service rest. Nothing has a more demoralizing effect upon a service than the failure of each officer to be in his place on time, with every arrangement for his part of the service completed before the time the service is to begin, and a failure to act at the proper moment and in a calm manner, with dignity and according to etiquette.

To me it seems quite immaterial whether a congregation remains standing, is seated, or kneels during prayer. It is important, however, that the congregation understand what posture to assume; also that one rule be observed in the regular services. Unless this is done, confusion will result. If the congregation is to arise at a signal, it should be understood what the signal will be, when it is to be given, and by whom it is to be given. And it should be done in just that manner and at that time.

As things usually go now, the one in charge of a service is in doubt as to the order of procedure; and oftentimes the congregation glances back and forth, first at the presiding officer, then at the chorister, perhaps, to see who is going to give the signal to rise, or whether the congregation is to rise at all or not. This is bad. It creates disorder, minimizes the importance of the service, and robs it of much of the sanctity it should have.

To overcome many such defects, I propose that the presiding officer of the branch shall conduct his own services as a rule. We have been traditioned to believe that a man must be assisted in preaching service by another member of the priesthood, and that we are not showing proper respect for other officers when we do not have them open services occasionally. That is, we have come to think more about the individual than about the needs of the service. I see no reason why a man who is qualified to conduct a service should not be used in that kind of work when needed; but I do see a reason why a man who has failed to qualify by attention to and discipline in the details of the service, and who may be indifferent and disposed to ignore the regular procedure, should not be invited to conduct a service. Some men are so thoughtless that after they have been apprised of the order, they either willingly ignore the advice, or are so absent-minded that they forget it; in either case they should not be used in conducting a service.

Especially when we are trying to develop a service does it seem important that the presiding officer shall conduct personally. When the officers and congregation have come to understand the order of the service, then it will be time enough to think about courtesies to other members of the priesthood.

What we have suggested about prayer will apply to each detail of service. To the seating of the congregation by the ushers, organ preludes and postludes, the number of songs and order of singing, collections, announcements, etc. In carrying out all of these details it is very important that the deacons and others shall avoid walking around the room and talking, and arranging details, such as ventilation, light, and heating after the service has begun. The practice of visiting by the members when the hour for meeting is nearing should always be discouraged. Let the visiting be done after the service.

DIVIDED AS TO CHARACTER OR SUBSTANCE OF TEACHING—MORNING, EVENING

Here we must take into account separately the peculiar needs of each congregation. I should say that, generally speaking, we can lay down no rule for a division of subject matter other than this: seek to divide the word to each congregation according to its needs. Here we may need more inspiration than at any other place, with the possible exception of the work of preparation.

It does not follow because a morning congregation is made up almost entirely of Saints that no doctrinal sermons should be preached in the mornings. It does not follow because we have a good attendance of visitors at the evening service, that then we must preach a doctrinal sermon. It often happens that those who attend one service do not attend the other; in which case if all the sermons at one service are of one character, and all the sermons at the other service of another character, those who attend one service only will receive one kind of food only. This would make lopsided Saints. We want rounded-out church members, and to have them they must be exercised in all directions.

Again, in almost any congregation there are members in all stages of development, and with a variety of needs, in which case a fixed class of sermons must fail to meet the needs of the congregation. Saints often need instruction in the fundamentals of our religion as do outsiders; and outsiders (as we are pleased to call them) enjoy what is called a sermon for Saints fully as well as do many church members; and what we call sermons for Saints are often very influential in molding sentiment in favor of the church. For this reason sermons at morning and evening should be of all classes: expository, textual, subject, or topical, and composed of ideas ranging from the simple to the complex. In regard to this latter clause, I mean to assert that all classes of minds should be ministered to in a single sermon if possible. While we are giving milk to the simple, let us not forget to give some meat to those who need meat, and will be unsatisfied if we are always talking the very, very simple things that relate to a religious experience.

TWO CONTROLLING IDEAS

There are two ideas that should control in the division of subject matter: First, in reference to the amount of subject matter to be included in a given discourse; and second, in relation to unity: that is preaching something, not preaching about everything.

The average mind cannot take in many new ideas at one sitting. Instead of crowding many ideas into one sermon, we should confine ourselves to the amount that can be adequately elaborated and made comprehensible. More than that is worse than a waste of the extra ideas introduced; it is an obscuring of that part that might otherwise be absorbed and assimilated.

Second, all the matter included in one discourse should relate directly to the one question under discussion. We should not ramble all around the woods in an effort to locate something that might be amusing, whether instructive or not. In order for the subject matter of any discourse to be a connected whole, it must be constructed on some plan, or it is no discourse at all. The thoughts should follow one another naturally, or logically. The mind delights to have it so whether it knows the qualities which make a sermon instructive and attractive or not.

Some will not take the trouble to do this. They imagine themselves possessed of wonderful extemporaneous powers of arrangement, but they are usually alone in their hallucination.

ARRANGEMENT

In a general way the arrangement of subject matter within a discourse should be about as follows: First, The introduction. We seek here to lead the congregation to the contemplation of the matter to be treated. We do not like to have a flood of light burst in upon us suddenly; we like the indirect rays of the sun to precede the full force of the noonday rays. Just so we should have an approach to the body of the discourse.

In the introduction we seek to prepare the mind to understand the subject matter to be treated.

Second: The explanation or proof. In this we seek to lead the mind over the route that will unfold gradually and effectively the full meaning or import of the matter treated. To bring conviction to the mind is the object of proof.

Third: The conclusion, which should be carefully prepared. In the conclusion we sum up the matter of the discourse and seek to make our appeal. This final appeal is to both the intellect and the emotion, and its purpose is to intensify the conviction of truth, and move the audience to action appropriate to the word. Here we make the final impress. It should be the strongest and best.

KINDS OF SERMONS

There should be a large variety: subject, doctrinal, moral, historical, experimental, and special. But whichever it is, the matter should be treated specifically, not generally.

I think it a good plan to preach several sermons of one class, then several of another class. This prevents monotony, and makes the preacher "last" or "set" well with his congregation. Of course we do not for a moment suggest that we should not leave ourselves open to direction in the choice of subjects, or to the forms in which our ideas shall find expression. On the other hand, I would be ashamed to debit God with all the inspirations (?) men charge to him. It is very easy to confuse our emotions, yearnings and ambitions, and enthusiasm, with inspiration. I am ready to judge any discourse that is rambling, and that does not aim at any definite thing, to be uninspired, no odds how demonstrative the speaker may have been.

THE DEFINITE AIM OF ALL SERMONS

In conclusion I wish again to say that in the division of the substance of sermons it is not so much a matter of determining which particular class of sermons should be preached in the morning and which in the evening, as it is a division with the thought of securing variety and unity—of dividing in proper quantity, and of arranging matter within each discourse in a way to lead the congregation to better understand its duty to God, and to wish to be at peace with him.

This is the end of the preaching effort; and any division of subject matter that proves to be adequate to this end is a good division, whether it is according to established ideas of homiletics or not. God works by law; and it seems impossible that any path in which he leads in this connection will be out of harmony with the truths that we have discovered and included in our textbooks on pulpit work.

We should seek to coordinate all the agencies within the branch to one end: of an attractive, devotional, preaching service, in which the people are edified, and God is magnified.

CONSECRATION—PROPERTY SENSE

1. What is it?

To consecrate is to set apart for a special purpose, or use.—The Law of Christ and Its Fulfillment, p. 102.

Direction is also given to the Saints to consecrate of their properties for the use and benefit of the church in providing for the poor, and carrying out the work of promulgating the gospel. To consecrate is to set apart for these special church, or sacred uses.—Ibid., p. 101.

The above has the indorsement of the leading quorums of the church as well as that of General Conference.

2. Who should consecrate?

It is the duty, and should be regarded as the privilege, of every person to consecrate everything he has and is to the service of God, to be used for the advancement of his work as he may direct.—Ibid., p. 105.

And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.

Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."—Ibid., 101: 2

It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe the law.—Ibid., 106: 2.

3. To whom should consecration be made?

Consecrations are made to the Bishopric of the church. These are "men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the Saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, freewill offerings, and consecrations." (Ibid., 129: 8.)

4. Where are these consecrations kept?

In the Lord's storehouse.

The storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church.—Ibid., 82: 2.

Therefore, the residue shall be kept in my storehouse.—Ibid., 42: 10.

The storehouse is the same to the Lord now, in the Reorganized Church, as it was when the above revelations were given. (See Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6.)

5. What church interests have claim upon this storehouse that is to be kept by the consecrations of the church?

The "widows," the "orphans," the "poor." (Doctrine and Covenants 82: 2.) "Every man who has need may amply be supplied, and receive according to his wants." "Adminster to the poor and needy." "For the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church." "Building houses of worship." "Building up of the New Jerusalem." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10.)

6. Are all consecrations that may be made used for general purposes as those indicated in answer to question number 5? or may some be of a specific character?

There may be moneys or properties transferred in the form of special or specific consecrations that would not be proper to use for any other purpose than that specified. For instance, consecration to homes for aged, the home for children, the college, a certain mission, erection of the temple, etc., would come properly under the head of special consecrations.

7. What is the relation of the Order of Enoch to the storehouse?

The organization is to regulate and establish the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of the Lord's people.

The time has come, and is now at hand; and, behold, and lo, it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

This organization is referred to as a "permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church."

It is not difficult to understand the proper relation between the storehouse and the order when we recognize the purpose of each. The Order of Enoch being a helping order, organized for the benefit of the poor and needy, and the storehouse being kept by the consecrations of the Saints that the poor and needy may be supplied therefrom, the order has but to occupy its divinely appointed position, namely, to regulate and establish the affairs of the storehouse, to accomplish the end designed in providing for the poor and needy.

8. Does not, then, the order take the place of the Bishopric in the providing for the poor and needy?

It does not. The Bishopric are the ones authorized in the law to receive consecrations from the Saints and to disburse moneys and properties gathered in this way. The Lord, in Doctrine and Covenants 128, has made this function of the Bishopric very clear. To effect these "organizations contemplated in the law" (the Order of Enoch), "those who by command of God are made the custodians of the properties of the church; and these by their appointment are empowered to prosecute the work of caring for and using such properties as are confided to their care to accomplish the end designed."

The Bishopric as men are to perform under the law of God and in harmony with the law of the land their duties as keepers of the storehouse in connection with the organization of the people, the Order of Enoch, which is a helping order, to assist in providing for the poor and needy, placing of stewardships, and rendering of accounts of the same, etc.; the Bishopric and order all working together for the bringing about of equality under the law and establishing of the Zion of latter days.

POLYGAMY AND MODERN STYLES

Joseph F. Smith, the Mormon prophet, declares that modern styles for women are resulting in their moral ruin, and that no girl can be both decent and stylish.

Undoubtedly Prophet Smith is wholly sincere in his views, but it is surely an interesting commentary on the relative values which human beings place upon the different things that go to make up what we call a moral life.

This declaration that the women of America are being ruined by daring styles in clothes should be compared with a statement made by former United States Senator Frank J. Cannon of Utah in last Sunday's New York World. Senator Cannon was quoted as follows:

Joseph F. Smith, the president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, who is the "Mormon prophet" and absolute head of the church, lives openly with four wives. These have borne him twelve children. This American citizen transports his harem from coast to coast. When the attention of the department of justice is called to so gross a violation of the Mann white slave act an unseen and mysterious power sweeps aside the law and permits the prophet to proceed in polygamy and peace.

Which is the more likely to ruin the morality of women, polygamy or present styles of clothes? Which is the more fit subject for legal regulation, the number of wives a man may have, or the style of clothes a woman may wear? Senator Cannon says:

Polygamy flourishes to-day among the young men and young women of the church as it has never flourished before.

If there are any constitutional amendments to be adopted, they will not be on the subject of women's wardrobes.—The Des Moines Register.

A GLANCE AHEAD

FORETELLING FUTURE OF INDEPENDENCE

We have often referred to the unique situation of Independence [Missouri] historically and prospectively. That Kansas City has the forces now that attract the thought and attention by no means implies that such was always the case or will continue to be the case. Kansas City is the incident now, but Independence is sure to gain her comparative prestige, sure to be a part of the metropolis so rapidly building on Gilpin's map of Centropolis.

We are building streets now radiating over Jackson County. The higher intelligence is laying off ways of trade, not dreaming that they are giving direction to future avenues and boulevards on which will be erected department stores and skyscrapers.

It was said that the cow paths of the territory on which Boston is built became the streets of that Hub of the Universe, as seen by its literati. The streets of a city are not necessarily straight and the angles on the side of so many forties of our roads will probably serve the future city builders better than straight lines or diagonal roads.

Observe the topography of the territory north of Independence and south of the Missouri River: compare it with the territory on which Kansas City is built; consider the policies of the Missouri River as the northern base, the high healthy locations for home, the lanes and valleys for manufactories. The imagination is eclipsed in the prospective, and the coming Independence looms as assuredly in the distance as did Kansas City a half century ago.—The Jackson Examiner, May 12, 1916.

JEWES IN EASTERN WAR ZONE

[The terrible plight of the Jews in the eastern war zone is suggested by the following from the Review of Reviews for May. These poor people it would seem have borne their full share of the consequences of the crucifixion of Christ and the rejection of light, invited by their forefathers in the language, "His blood be on us, and on our children." May it please God to move soon for the release of this downtrodden people, and for the recovery and gathering of the remnant of promise.—EDITORS.]

The American Jewish Committee publish a report of the condition of the Jews in the eastern war zone as a message to the people of America, that gives utterance to their protest against the cruelties to which the Jews have been subjected in certain belligerent countries. It is stated by the committee that the report is not intended as a polemic or for partisan purposes, or to arouse prejudice. "Its sole object is to appeal to human sympathy and to the conscience of the world in the cause of justice."

When the war broke out one half the Jewish population of the world was trapped in a corner of Eastern Europe that is absolutely shut off from all neutral lands and from the sea. Russian Poland, where over two million Jews lived, is a salient. South of it is Galicia, the frontier province of Austria. Here lived another million Jews. Behind Russian Poland are the fifteen Russian provinces, which, together with Poland constitute the Pale of Jewish Settlement. Here lived another four million Jews. Thus seven million Jews—a population exceeding Belgium by one million—have borne the brunt of the war. Behind them was holy Russia, closed to them by the May Laws of 1881. In front were hostile Germany and Austria. To the south was the unfriendly Rumania. They were overwhelmed where they stood, and over their bodies crossed and recrossed the German armies from the east and the Austrian armies from the south. . . . The contending armies found in politic, in a measure, to court the good will of the Poles, Ruthenians, and other races in this area. These sustained only the necessary and unavoidable hardships of war. But the Jews were friendless, their religion proscribed . . . the old, the sick, and insane, men, women and children, were shuttled from one province to another, sidetracked for days without food or help of any kind—the less fortunate driven into the swamps to die of starvation.

The report states that all the evidence regarding Russia has been obtained directly from Russian authority, and that the accuracy of the many accounts of atrocities has been verified beyond all reasonable doubt.

The Jews, unlike the Belgians, have no England to fly to. The sympathy of the outside world is shut off from them. They have not the consolation of knowing that they are fighting for their own hearths, or even for military glory, or in the hope of a possible reward or indemnity. Jews are to-day fighting each other in all the armies of Europe. Russia alone has over 350,000 Jewish soldiers; Austria has over 50,000; altogether there are probably one-half million Jews in the ranks of the fighting armies.

It must not be lost sight of in the consideration of the evil fortunes of the Jews in Russia, that all the liberal elements of that country have protested against the ruthless campaign of extermination pursued by the military government. Priests, publicists, writers, municipal bodies, trade and professional organizations have tried in vain to persuade the Imperial Government to admit the Jews to human equality, or at least to cease the policy of persecution. The sufferings of the Jews in the towns that bore the brunt of actual fighting have been terrible beyond description. Their plight should call forth generous response from those countries which have undertaken the task of alleviating, in part, the untold miseries inflicted by war upon nonbelligerents.

A vivid example typical of many other instances is given by the Jews in the villages of Vissiltsy, District Busak, province Kielce. Our delegate found the place razed by hostile shells. The population—mostly Jews—for over three months had been huddling together in cellars where they had taken refuge. They were not to leave their shelter by day; no food was to be cooked; no fire lighted at night—such were the orders from military quarters. A humane military chief permitted them to crawl out of their dingy holes by night and feed out of the soldiers' cauldron. But soon another chief took his place and the unfortunate Jews were left to starve in cellars. Those that succumbed were buried in holes that the survivors dug for them in the very same cellars.

In Galician provinces, within Russian occupation, conditions were very much the same. One of the members of the investigating committee writes:

I found them huddling together in damp and dark cellars, half-naked, sick, and starving. They showed complete apathy, appeared to be in a trance of terror. Only a madman—he had become insane because of the superhuman suffering—followed me into the street shrieking for bread. I handed him a coin, but he threw it down and clamored for bread. . . .

The Jews in Rumania are deprived of rights as citizens, and the Rumanian Government since the beginning of the war has maintained a hostile attitude towards the Jews. They were expelled in July, 1915, from all the border towns and localities and sent to the interior. If Rumania becomes involved in the war, it would probably be her desire to win back from Austria-Hungary a territory that would include Transylvania and Bukowina, which would increase the Jews under the Rumanian rule to more than one million.

Resolve to cultivate a cheerful spirit, a smiling countenance and a soothing voice. The sweet smile, the subdued speech, the hopeful mind, are earth's most potent conquerors, and he who cultivates them becomes a very master among men.—Elbert Hubbard.

Notes from the General Convention

GLEANED FROM THE SECRETARY'S MINUTES

The first appearance the auxiliary made during the recent conference, was on the evening of Monday, April 10. The exercises were presided over by Sisters Burgess, B. C. Smith, Gardner and Yingling, of the Advisory Board, the General Conference Choir opening with Buck's "Festival te deum," and closed with Gounod's "Unfold, ye portals!"

Sister Burgess, in her address on "What the women of America have done for the community," spoke of the work of many notable women, including those of our own church, such as Sisters Emma Smith, Marietta Walker, B. C. Smith, and others.

The Oriole girls of the local circles, representing the Young Woman's Department of the auxiliary, attired in their khaki uniforms, rendered "The Oriole Call; an original song written by one of their members, Sister Madeline Higgins, of Armstrong, Kansas. This was charmingly given, and the appreciation was shown in the enthusiastic applause. These young girls, enriching their lives by deeds of service (which is the spirit of their organization), are not only maintaining the highest standard of morals, but increasing their efficiency in many ways. Some months back, a prize of an Oriole pin was offered to the girl who would contribute the best song. This pin was at this service presented to Sister Higgins in a fitting speech by Sister J. A. Gardner, superintendent of the Young Woman's Department.

"President Frederick spoke on 'The church and its auxiliaries.' He enumerated all the activities of the church, including the wireless boys, the Oriole girls, and the new kodak movement. He urged the necessity of coordination of all these activities, each working parallel with the others, though at times their work might overlap. He said that if the accomplishment of this coordination should be a part of his life's work, he should be satisfied. His entire speech was very encouraging to all departments of the church."

Beginning with Tuesday morning, April 11, almost daily sessions of the auxiliary convention were held, in which some very instructive lectures, talks and papers were interspersed with the business.

Sister Vina Goffe, of Pittsburg, Kansas, gave a lecture on "Bacteriology," which, by means of elaborate charts, and a clear, concise manner of explanation, she managed to make entertaining as well as instructive.

At this first meeting, also, the work of the Patronesses of the Sanitarium was put before the assembled women, by its president, Sister E. L. Kelley; its secretary, Sister Madge Knowlton; its corresponding secretary, Sister F. O. Thomason;

Miss Cook, head nurse of the sanitarium, and by Brother Edward Rannie, of the board. The need of the sanitarium, for an almost constantly replenished store of linens, sheets, pillow slips, towels, and, not least necessary, old, clean rags, was mentioned as well as the larger need of a fully equipped laundry apparatus.

"Sister Walter Sandy of Kansas City, spoke on the subject, 'The church and state together for the education of the home.' Besides many splendid suggestions for future work, Sister Sandy presented letters from Doctor G. L. Harrington and Professor G. N. Briggs, expressing their willingness to cooperate with the Woman's Auxiliary. She also spoke of the reading courses furnished by the Government, and presented to the association pamphlets and bulletins which she had collected from the State and Government, as well as from the public library of Kansas City."

At Wednesday's session reports of officers and department heads were submitted. These reports in full may be given from time to time in this column, and will make interesting reading for all women of the church, as they indicate, very clearly, the progress being made by the auxiliary, both as to actual accomplishment, and in vision of what may still be planned and executed.

Thursday's session was marked by the adoption of a resolution to approve the document presented by the joint council, looking to the establishment of a chair in Graceland College, for the training of church workers. The Woman's Association was the only auxiliary of the church which passed favorably upon this recommendation from the council at the conference, and backed up their resolution by offers of financial aid to the enterprise.

A conference in the interests of the Oriole girls, in charge of Superintendent Sister Gardner, and her able assistant and coworker in the department, Sister Della Braidwood, was held early Friday morning. Some very interesting articles, in the way of fancywork, beadwork, painting, weaving, collections from forest and field, etc., were placed on exhibition in the basement of the church. These things represent the handwork of young girls in this department, and were an indication of the originality and industry which membership in these Oriole circles is bound to stimulate.

This same forenoon, at the woman's meeting which followed, Sister Goffe gave a lecture on "Eugenics." "She treated the subject in a general way, but the very interesting discussion which followed brought out the fact that the women had given consideration to this subject in a more specific way."

Sister Etta Weidman, of Saint Louis, read a paper written by Sister Anna DeJong Smith of the same city, upon the subject of "Graded sermons for children." "This was a splendid, sincere appeal to all, to give the children that special religious training that will reach them, and have a permanent effect upon their lives."

Sister Frederick M. Smith talked upon "Woman's suffrage." "She treated the subject in a general way, giving the audience a practical, conservative viewpoint of the question."

Sister D. J. Krahl on "Moral Basis of Woman's Suffrage," and Sister A. L. Yingling on "The refining influence of women in politics," both emphasized the good which may follow the entrance of women into the conduct of our country's affairs. The interest and enthusiasm of our church women could not be directed to a better or more vital question at the present time than this, which affects in so many important ways, the welfare and safety of the home.

On Saturday the election of officers for the coming year was completed. We have for our new president, Sister Frederick M. Smith. Associated with her will be Sister M. A. Etzenhouser as vice president, Sister Walter W. Smith as secretary, Sister J. A. Gardner as treasurer, and Sister B. C. Smith as historian. These constitute the executive board, and according to the new powers given them, they met and appointed the following heads or departments:

Educational Department, Sister Helen Silsbee Smith, Omaha.

Home Department, Sister George N. Briggs, Lamoni.

Child Welfare Department, Sister Walter Sandy, Kansas City.

Relief and Service Department, Sister Edith Cochran, Saint Joseph.

Young Woman's Department, Sister J. A. Gardner, Independence.

Editor in chief, Sister Audentia Anderson, Omaha.

A Yearbook committee was elected, as follows: Sister M. A. Etzenhouser to serve three years, Sister J. A. Gardner to serve two years, and Sister F. M. Smith, to serve one year.

It was decided to discontinue the leaflets as sent out for several years, after Sister Stebbins' series on "the adolescent" is completed. Sister Burgess as outgoing president presented Sister Smith the auxiliary's gavel, together with a neat little speech of confidence and encouragement.

Sister M. E. Hulmes and Sister C. B. Stebbins were approved as assistants to the historian.

The adoption of the new constitution and by-laws was a matter that occupied attention at various meetings. The committee appointed last year to draft these new laws, presented a rather lengthy but carefully-planned document, which, with but few and slight alterations, was adopted by the society. This will be printed in the Yearbook, which is soon to be published, and in which will be found a very complete guide for the organization, of district or stake associations, and of local societies, all in conformity, at least approximately, with the general plan of our church organizations.

This Yearbook will also contain, it is planned, a list of the newly-systematized departments of the auxiliary, with explanations of their scope and aims, and such other information as will be of assistance to local organizations, seeking to get in step with the general movement forward. Also there will be messages of encouragement and appreciation from many of the men of our church, expressing their ideas of what the women of the church may do for its upbuilding and redemption.

Under the new rules, each district and each local organization of the Woman's Auxiliary is to appoint a "press chairman," whose duty it shall be to furnish items of interest to the editor in chief for the press columns of the auxiliary." This is a point which your editor is very anxious not to have overlooked, as it means a great deal to the body of the church at large to have the columns reflect the activities of the women of the church in all localities. This can only be obtained by universal cooperation, and a careful complying with the provisions by which the editor may be made acquainted with those activities. We would suggest that until locals are reorganized under the new constitution and by-laws, the present president of each local appoint a temporary press chairman, who may send in at once and frequently, any items of interest from that locality. Any lecture, or new study class formed, a picnic, or social, or any of the various pleasant instructive ways in which women are wont to exercise themselves; told of in bright entertaining style, will prove stimulating to others, and thus the good works will grow, and the good influence be spread abroad.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

Little Children as Teachers

Comparatively speaking, there has been but one great teacher in the world. One of his chief qualifications, that contributed to his unequal success, was his power to open the understanding of the pupil to understand the lessons he had to impart. The exercise of this power is significantly expressed in Luke 24:45, "Then opened he their understanding that they might understand the Scripture."

To sow the seed is a great thing, but to have the soil prepared for its reception is greater. Many can sow the seed of life successfully, pleasantly, eloquently, and some may in a measure influence the fertility and receptive qualities of the soil, but this power is so limited that the souls of men are saddened when they think of occupying as teachers. Reason, experience, and observation, all teach us that the nearer one approaches the divine character the more of this power he can exercise. Little children naturally, though unconsciously, approach nearer the source of divine purity from which this great teacher partook than anyone else, hence this teacher said, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." It is in the preparation of the soil that little children are preeminently teachers. Older people may sow the seed effectually, and to even better advantage than children after they have been touched with this childlike, Christlike love and tenderness, but they cannot approach the child in power to effect the soil with qualities of growth and development.

Often the child can penetrate and melt to tenderness the calloused and hardened heart upon which all other influences have failed, and the heart that cannot be touched by the presence and association of innocent childhood is beyond the reach of human influence, and we can only pray that God will have mercy upon that soul. Nor can we be surprised that such inherent power is resident in the child when we read and consider such statements as the following: "Little children are alive in Christ, even from the foundation of the world," (Moroni 8:13). "In heaven their angels do always behold the face of my father which is in heaven" (Matthew 18:10).

With such association there must shine through the little child the rays of divine light that will gladden the heaviest heart, purify the heart poisoned by sin, and thus quicken the soil for the sowing of the good seed of life. The children's natures were not changed when Christ visited the Nephites; these natures were simply given divine power of expression when as related in 3 Nephi 12:7, "He did teach and minister unto the children of the multitude. . . And he did loose their tongues and they did speak unto their fathers great and marvelous things," Again, "They both saw and heard these children; yea, even babes did open their mouths, and utter marvelous things" (9th verse).

In keeping with these things is the incident related by eye and ear witness who attest that at the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, and when under the power of the Holy Spirit the entire assembly arose, a little child in its mother's arms joined in the shout thrice repeated: "Hosannah, hosannah, hosannah to God and the Lamb." This is in accord with the declaration of Jesus, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight" (Matthew 11:25, 26).

Considering the divine character of these little teachers, and the unfortunate homes without the refining, inspiring, and developing influence of these little ministers, the church would not have performed its whole duty had it not provided an institution in which these little missionaries could be protected, and equipped to go into the dark corners with their refining, softening rays of light, that quicken the latent powers of the soil in which the seeds of life are sown.

PRESENT CONDITIONS

Though the children at the home who were affected with diphtheria have apparently recovered and no new cases have developed, the town authorities with commendable care and prudence have not raised the quarantine, and the expected liberty is still delayed. Another exhibition of carelessness has occurred by the sending of a mother and three small children to the home without consultation or notice to the trustees, and no knowledge of the expected time of arrival came to the trustees until an hour before their arrival. By direction of the mayor they were stopped before they reached the home, and provision had to be made to keep them elsewhere at extra expense, which is proving burdensome to the institution.

No one should come or be encouraged to come until correspondence is had with the trustees and information had that the way is clear. We must again insist on this.

The extra expense occasioned by the sickness and quarantine and these expenses occasioned by parties coming in on us without notice has placed us in a financial condition which it was impossible to foresee, when we gave a favorable report; hence we are under the necessity of urging the friends of the home to make an extra effort to come to our relief. Please send directly to Joseph Roberts, treasurer. Some have been sent to the home, and letters have been detained by quarantine.

Who, What, or Where Am I?

For a third of a century an active minister for the church, and now near the point of Oslerization, and after having for the sake of the church endured many privations, always going at the behest of the church, whether to foreign or local field and at times actually living on about one-half of the prescribed "allowance" the which at best is but a pittance, and especially so under present prices, and noting the tendency of the church and especially so at the last General Conference to shelve the "old men," is it little wonder that the question of the caption confronts me?

OSLER THEORY PROVED A FALLACY!

Such leading papers as the Chicago Herald have taken up the above question as it relates especially to the present war in Europe, and have pointed out the fact, patent to all observers, that the leading and dependable generals are the ones who have passed the age of sixty and some of the most brilliant as to achievement are a number of years over the Osler prescription. And this not the exception but the almost universal law rule. It is true that the young men are more apt to have the "red blood" coursing their veins, but it is also true that incident thereto there is a much stronger tendency to "hotheadedness" from the standpoint of impetuosity. It is also true that there is not the tendency to exert the mellowness of age, hence the more danger of dealing harshly in cases of judgment to be rendered. In fact is the statement, "Old men for counsel and young men for war" to be relegated to the scrap pile of a meaningless aphorism? Were it not better to "make haste to go slow"?

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT

It is fully conceded that such a movement is not only commendable but a living necessity. In fact the church can never reach its true goal without it. But on the other hand it will not do for any of us, individually or otherwise, to lay down "hard and fast" rules and say thus and so or else you are to be relegated to the "backward looking" class.

OPTIMISM AND PESSIMISM

Of the two the former is more preferable by far, but it will not do to go to the extreme as an optimist and thereby become removed from the vantage ground the occupancy of which will help us to see "when good cometh" as well as to be able to see when evil cometh. Be an optimist by all means but not an extreme one. It was the extreme of optimism that led latter-day Israel into the follies of "Brighamism" by blinding their eyes to the follies of file leaders.

LOOKING BACKWARD

Here again is the danger of the extreme view being exercised. To say that we should never look back for examples of guidance would be but to place ourselves in the position of "I am holier than thou!" It would also place one in the position of virtually saying that no preceding age ever had the ability that this age has and no people before had the knowledge that we possess, all of which would be but rhodomontade, and if any in this world should be relegated in preference to age, the uneducated or otherwise, it should be the vain boaster!

Fortunately I have never believed in "looking backward" in the sense of "living in the past" but be alive to the ever-living present should be the motto. Still it would seem that we can draw lessons of value from both the virtues and follies of the past by being able to determine the strength of the virtuous and the weakness of those who turned to folly. "Looking backward" without any modification but means the danger of becoming an extremist to our own hurt and folly. The golden mean is the true strength of one's position; the extreme is the rotten plank that breaking under the weight of our ponderousness but carries us to destruction. Let us all then as brethren, "both the aged and the youth," exercise that spirit of true charity that "thinketh no evil!"

J. W. WIGHT.

Men Who Smoke and Chew

In the past much has been said about the use of tobacco. Various essays have been written concerning the man who has created and cultivated an appetite for the habitual use of tobacco. However, the writer is of the opinion that the right thing, the most necessary thing, has been left unsaid.

All are agreed that the use of tobacco by men, in any form, is both a filthy and an unnecessary habit; but this of itself is not sufficient to cause the user to discontinue this unnatural, filthy habit.

Before we can get anyone to forsake an old custom or habit, we must enable him to see the grave injury that habit or custom is working, not only for himself, but for all around him. If we can cause men to see that such habits are essentially sinful and injurious; that the fruits of those selfish habits cause untold suffering to others; then it seems to the writer that every man thus addicted would be ready and willing to amend his ways and his doings.

In the first place, let me say that men who smoke are the most selfish and inconsiderate beings that ever lived. This I confess, may sound a little harsh, but perhaps when I have analyzed and proven my point, it will be seen and admitted by those who are given to the habit.

The man who through ignorance, the folly of youth, the lack of manly courage, or whatever reason might be ascribed, has created a false appetite (I say false, for such it is) for the use of tobacco, is the man to whom I desire to make an earnest appeal. He is the man whose reasoning faculties I would like to arrest. If he is an habitual smoker, if the unnatural appetite he has created has so robbed him of his manhood that he has lost his self-control, and his consideration for other people; if he thinks only of the gratifying of that unnatural appetite, I would like to have him pause, and look at himself for a moment.

So exceedingly selfish is he that he will pollute the pure air that is given us of God, and will compel others to inhale his filth. So little manhood has he, that he will make deathly sick a score, or a hundred men, women and children—for what purpose? Just for the sake of gratifying his selfish, unnatural appetite. He feels perfectly justified, and at ease in compelling all the people around him to inhale the poisonous fumes of his pipe or cigarette, regardless of its offensiveness to them. He corrupts the pure air, and thus deprives others of their God-given rights. What is the matter with this man, did you ask? Simply this: his manhood, if he ever had any, has been sapped out of him by reason of this destructive habit.

The writer is personally acquainted with a family: The man is an inveterate smoker; his wife is one of the nicest and most refined woman he ever knew. The smoke she is compelled to inhale daily is destroying her health, and giving a pallid look to her otherwise beautiful face. This man has grown so exceedingly selfish, and has so far lost his manhood, that he would rather cause his beautiful, innocent, virtuous, loving wife unnecessary suffering, and perhaps cause her to fill an untimely grave, than to deny himself the gratification of that unmanly habit he has contracted.

The writer was once riding on a train where but one coach was used. It was well provided with men (shall I call them men?) who had contracted the smoke habit. In a short time the smoke was so thick in the coach that one could nearly cut it in blocks and carry it out. I endured it as long as I could, and was obliged finally to open the window that I might again get a breath of God's pure air. When I had done this I overheard a murmur among the smokers as follows "Some people are so selfish that they will have a window open and thereby unnecessarily expose other people to draft."

From their point of view it was selfish for anyone to desire a breath of pure air as God had given it to men. To them the tobacco smoke was a necessity, but God's pure air was not a necessity. For them to cause others to suffer with a sick headache by reason of their smoke, in gratifying their unnecessary, selfish appetite was quite legitimate; but for one to desire a little pure air in order to survive was considered a very selfish act. The reader may be able to judge in this matter for himself.

Again, the writer is personally acquainted with a family that, to use a common proverb, are as poor as church mice. Quite a number of children belong to this family. The wife and mother seems to be a noble woman; the man has the tobacco habit. They are crowded into one little room, which is used for parlor, living room, dining room, kitchen, pantry and bedrooms; the last must be expressed in the plural, for such it should be by reason of the number in the family.

Notwithstanding their almost destitute condition, if the good lady should take a couple of dozen of eggs to the grocery store, the first thing on the list would have to be a pound of chewing tobacco, and the good lady admits that if the husband didn't get it, they would hardly be able to live with him. Often there is but little or nothing left out of the price received for the eggs with which to get groceries for the family, but that matters little, for so long as he is able to get his tobacco he is satisfied.

So exceedingly selfish is this man that he is perfectly willing to let his wife and children go without necessary food and clothing, but he cannot deny himself the gratification of that unnatural appetite he has cultivated. He must chew his tobacco even if his children and wife must go hungry. There is much more that could be said of this case, but I will let this suffice.

Another circumstance that is personally known to the writer is a case where the man of the house both chews and smokes. It is a sad picture to behold. The wife and mother is poorly clad, and sickly. An older daughter by reason of undue exposure and improper clothing, is gradually yielding to that most dreadful disease, consumption. The little girls walk a distance of two miles to school in cold weather, with only a little calico slip to cover their bodies. The weather was so cold that the writer felt uncomfortable with proper clothing and a good overcoat; but these little girls came home from school with nothing but their thin stockings to cover their little limbs. They were compelled to go without underclothing (did you ask why?), because their father had no money with which to buy underclothing for them; but let it be remembered that he always had money with which to buy smoking and chewing tobacco for himself. No wonder Paul said men would be "without natural affection" in the last days.

Did I exaggerate think you, when I said men who smoke and men who chew are the most selfish creatures upon the face of the earth? I think all will agree with me that I did not. Such men as I have described mean to be good, but they have no sense of right. Rather than deny themselves the gratification of their appetite they will sacrifice their own bosom companions, or their own children, their flesh and blood. No wonder the old Hebrew prophet said, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."

It is said that a hint to the wise is sufficient. May a little wisdom be granted to some men is the prayer and earnest desire of the writer.

Very sincerely,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, April 12, 1916.

Editors Herald: I feel like I am a long ways from Zion, but still I realize that God is over all and cares for his own wheresoever they may be located. This has been my experience in time past, and I feel thankful for the Lord's kindness to "usward."

I am located in the capitol city, where many church spires pierce the southern skies, and where nearly all brands of religion may be found, except the true Church of God. So far as I know I am the only Latter Day Saint in this city, and you will not be surprised when I say that I feel quite alone. Those that have had the privilege of visiting and living for a few months in every stake of Zion, and know what it means to be associated with the leaders of the church and the advantages to be had in the large branches, cannot help feeling isolated when they find themselves alone in a city of 138,000 population.

I find by visiting the different churches here that many of them are teaching more of the gospel than in previous years. For example, the Missionary Baptists now advocate the law of tithing, and believe that the people of the Lord shall reign a thousand years on earth, instead of their former idea that we may fly away to some unknown place and be no more than imaginary beings, years without end. However, they are yet far from the full and complete gospel.

Coming to this city as a stranger, I found it very nice to stop at the Young Women's Christian Association, at which place we meet people of various religions. The members of the association are expected to take some interest in church and Sunday school, therefore it seemed altogether advisable that I should also move out in the good work. Learning that there was a young ladies class at the First Baptists Church open to all faiths, I decided to become a member of that class. Having attended a similar class while attending high school at Paris, Tennessee, I knew that it was the best substitute obtainable to what I so much like—our own school.

At first they could not believe that I was not a Baptist, because I showed so much interest in the class. I told them from the very start that I was a Latter Day Saint, not a Baptist. Many said that I was the first of our faith they had ever seen, and expressed a desire to learn what we believed. I have tried in my weak way, to explain our position.

At first my Baptist friends seemed disappointed with me because they thought I was a Mormon; so I had to prove that we are not connected or associated with the people of Utah. They say I have shown them doctrine that they never before knew were in the Bible. They are afraid of my doctrine, especially my name, but cannot find fault with me personally. We must needs bear the reproach brought upon the true church by the apostasy of latter days.

About two years ago I was told in a dream to prepare myself, that I would have to defend the truth amid great opposition. I could not realize then how that could ever be, as I only thought of being located in Zion, where all things run smooth so far as persecution is concerned; but I understand its meaning now. Let me say that when we get away from the church, where only God can help us, and are surrounded by people who care only for the attractive side of life, people who are amusement wild, who care not for religion, know not God, and don't want to know, we are much in the same position as the missionaries in difficult fields. We feel our weakness as never before, and have opportunity to draw nearer to God, or to drift with the tide in the ways of the world, which leads to death.

When we get out into the world we can comprehend the meaning of what Jesus said when he told his disciples that they were not of the world. There is a difference between being in the world, and being of the world. If we truly desire to serve our Master, even when in the world and surrounded by all the evil of the age, we will strive to draw near to Christ that we may have his Spirit to guide us in all truth, and to enable us to meet the temptations and enticements of the Adversary bravely, and be able to stand in the trying hour.

Nashville is considered a cultured city. It has the best educational facilities to be found in the southland. Here one may meet the best ministry that modern theology can produce, trained in the art of twisting Bible truths to fit human creeds, claiming the highest knowledge to be obtainable of God and his church (but the world by wisdom knows not God). How very little these people know of our God! We can see as never before how true the statement that the greatest wisdom and knowledge cometh alone from God, and that it is he that doeth the will of the Father who shall know of the doctrine.

Seeing the gross darkness that has covered this people, and how well satisfied they are with what they have, only makes me stronger in the gospel. I at one time thought it strange that some people of the church could ever be guilty of denying the fact that they were members of the church when the disclosing of such information might cost them position and popularity, but I have learned by experience that it takes some strength to stand up in the midst of enemies and say "I am a Latter Day Saint." This test may come to everyone, it will come to you, and at the time least expected.

I am near enough to attend some of the district conferences and other meetings of the district, and am proud to report that the work here is prospering, and that the Saints have taken new courage and are moving onward and upward. This promises to be a banner year in the Kentucky and Tennessee District. The Saints are rejoicing over the ordination of some of our young men to the priesthood. These men are strong in the faith, and have the confidence of the Saints, which will enable them to render valuable service, cooperating with the district officers and General Conference appointees. We have many talented workers just coming to the front in Sunday school work, and the work should prosper as never before.

We have had some dark hours in the recent past; shadows have hung over our district, and many have grown indifferent because of the burdens they must bear; but the darkest day must have an ending, the worst storm must pass by. Although we may grow weary and our faith be tried to the utmost, yet after the clouds are broken the sun beams forth in all its splendor, and after the storm, all is peace and calm. So it is with those who stand true and put their faith in God when all things seem to be out of harmony with the right: when the tempest is past we can see the silver lining and the smiling countenance of Providence, and are thankful that his grace has been sufficient to keep our feet in the narrow way.

Our desire is to move on in the good old way, trusting in the promises that cannot fail, trying each day to walk in the light as he is in the light. Dear Saints, pray for me that I may not be overcome by the evil power that holds sway in this city, but that I may let my light shine that others may see the truth, and that I may be worthy of the name I bear.

Yours in bonds of love,

LOUISE A. WALL.

DREWRY'S BLUFF, VIRGINIA, May 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: My mother has been bedfast since December, 1915. She is a Saint. There are none of her church, no Latter Day Saints, in this section that she knows of. Her condition is such that we expect her death most any time. She wishes if there are any ministers in this section that they would come to see her. She says it would do her good to know before she died that there would be one to preach her funeral sermon.

Mother's address is Mrs. Clara D. Hines, 320 North Thirty-Sixth Street, Richmond, Virginia.

Best wishes to all the Saints.

MRS. W. S. FUQUA.

MERLIN, ONTARIO, May 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: I will not attempt to write at any great length, but hope at no distant date to acquaint your readers with some of the doings on the Manitoulin Island and at the Canadian Soo.

As I have been appointed for another year to that mission, I hope with the assistance of the noble band of Saints to accomplish more in the future than in the year just past. I expect to leave for the Soo in the near future.

While at the Soo this winter I baptized a sister from Minneapolis, Minnesota. At her request, any of our elders will find a welcome at the home of Mr. George Foreman, 1404 Vine Place. Mr. Foreman does not belong to our faith, but is very favorable.

I remain,

Yours in bonds,

ROBERT T. BROWN.

TOLEDO, OHIO, April 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few lines from the Northwestern Ohio District would at this time be appreciated by the membership in general. Of course those who have met, and met with us, feel more interested in us than those who have not formed our acquaintance. It is true, familiarity does not always result in true and everlasting friendship without charity intervening, and this charity must be exercised by all who claim to be the sons and daughters of God. Otherwise we become as sounding brass or tinkling cymbals.

Thus I feel in regard to our first district conference which was held on March 4 and 5, 1916, which has now passed into history. It was truly a success, being presided over by our beloved brother and apostle of Jesus Christ, Gomer T. Griffiths, assisted by our humble brother and elder, Jesse Harden, which was pleasing and acceptable to our loving Father, who doeth all things well. Thus we feel to lift our voices in prayer and gratitude to him who spoke to us saying that he was well pleased with our labor, and admonishing us to continue and press on to the mark of the high calling; thus the divine influence and Spirit of our Master was in our midst. He was there as an unseen guest, to bless, comfort and direct.

I believe I am safe in saying also, voicing the sentiments of those who met with us, that it was the most spiritual meeting we ever had the privilege to attend. And I would not forget to thank the visiting brethren from Detroit, Michigan, and Cleveland, Ohio, and elsewhere, for the loyal support rendered us by them in our labor and songs of love. And while our spiritual bodies were being fed on food divine, our physical bodies were well supplied with the viands of life, prepared by committee appointed to that end.

I will add that several promising young men were called and ordained to the priesthood, Brother Matthew W. Liston to occupy as elder; Brother Herman Rose and Brother Willie Liston, priests; Brother John Collins, teacher; the ordination meeting being held at the home of the writer, which was spiritual in the highest sense, the Lord being there to bless and direct.

Within the period of about eighteen months we have baptized forty-three precious souls into the kingdom of God's Son, and so the good work rolls on under the guiding hand of our beloved branch president, W. S. Hettrick.

Hoping and praying for the welfare of Zion and God's people, that they may so live that when the judgment is set and the books are opened their names may appear written in the book of life, that we may all be worthy to enter into celestial glory, is my prayer in Jesus' name.

W. G. KIMBALL.

MARLIN, TEXAS, April 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: As a band of Saints we are trying to let our light shine. Our branch is gaining in membership. We had Brother E. L. Henson with us not long since. He gave us some good advice, which we feel thankful for. If we could have more men like him and like Brother John Harp the work would move on.

We had a good conference in February at Houston, Texas. The Spirit of the Lord was present to a marked degree.

The writer has labored in the Central Texas District for the last year with good results. I just opened a new place. Had a fine meeting. The people wanted me to stay longer. There are only two Saints at that place, but I made many friends while there. When I left they bade me good-by and asked me to come again.

I would that I could give all my time to the work, but I cannot, as I have to see after my duties. I have baptized about twenty-five this year, or during the last twelve months.

A wonderful healing took place under my hands at our home town. I give all the honor to the Lord for the same. May God help the Saints to live so that they can call on him in times of need and realize his answer. I have seen the blind healed.

May the Saints ever be watchful as well as prayerful.

Your servant,

B. F. SPICER.

STANDISH, MICHIGAN, April 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: We are alone in the gospel work here, wife and I, and we feel lonely at times. We have not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon for two years. We read the sermons and letters in the HERALD, which are food for our hungry souls.

I was a member of the United Brethren Church for twenty-three years, and class leader for six months at one time. I united with the United Brethren Church when seventeen years of age, and remained with them until forty years of age. My wife had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for several years, when, sixteen years ago February 18, after cutting through two feet of ice, Brother David Smith led myself and companion into the waters of baptism. We have never had any reason to regret the step we have taken.

At times when reading the testimonies of the brethren and sisters in the HERALD I am reminded of our own experiences. This was especially true when I read Sister Plum's testimony.

The Lord in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to take from our midst five precious jewels. On March 17, 1916, he took from our midst five precious jewels. On March 17, 1916 he took from us the fifth precious one. There now are five little souls resting in a group in the Woodmere Cemetery. We often wonder if we will be fortunate enough to meet out little boys. Our only desire is to so live and conduct ourselves that we may lead the two children God has seen fit to spare us to live to meet their little brothers, and above all to meet our blessed Savior when he comes, and that we too may be permitted to reign with him.

We hope and pray the time is near at hand when we may have the privilege of hearing the gospel preached every Sabbath, and of mingling our voices in prayer and testimony with our brothers and sisters. When I read the letter from Brother A. N. Boomer, of Marion, Michigan, it brought back memories of the past, when we were in Cadillac. Brother Boomer was then a teacher. Since that time he has been ordained an elder, as has also Brother Thomas Hartnell. This reminded us that we too have a work to do. God promised me in my patriarchal blessing that if I were faithful there was a great work for me to do, and my companion has the promise of being a mother in Israel, if faithful.

So we must be up and doing while the day lasts. Pray for us that we may meet the Savior when he comes, that we may be an unbroken band of Saints.

In gospel bonds,

WILLIAM GILLILAND.

News from Branches

Minneapolis, Minnesota

On May 7 we had the privilege of having with us O. Salisbury, of the Des Moines District, and Leon A. Gould, our bishop's agent, from Bemidji. Brother Salisbury gave us a very instructive sermon Sunday evening. He took for his subject, "Preparedness."

We had our regular sacrament meeting at 11.15 a. m.. It was a very spiritual meeting; the time was profitably spent and enjoyed by all.

We are looking forward to the reunion, which will be held at Clitherall, Minnesota, June 10 to 20. Quite a number will likely attend from here.

MARIE BENNETT.

1719 Sixth Avenue, North, May 16, 1916.

Burlington, Iowa

We have begun the conference year with a sense of gratitude for the progress of the year just past, and with keen desire to make this year one of still greater development, both numerically and spiritually. The branch with one accord welcomed the news of the reappointment of Brother David J. Williams as pastor of the branch, whose energy is untiring in musical lines and in cooperation with auxiliary workers.

We had with us for a few weeks, Brother John Jenkins and Brother Alex Miller from Hiteman, Iowa, and were hoping that the branch would gain by the addition of themselves and families, but that has proved uncertain, for the present at least, though we understand there is still some "hope for the future."

Brother E. R. Williams and family moved to Burlington from Ottumwa a short time before the General Conference, bringing to Burlington two more of our district executives, Brother Williams as Religio president, and Sister Williams cradle roll superintendent. Brother Williams also is helping materially in a musical way, and has found work to do in Religio programs, etc.

The male chorus which Brother Williams has organized is progressing, and has furnished the special music for Sunday evening services for some weeks past. They are expecting to attend the district conference at Farmington, Iowa, in a body, for Sunday, June 11, prepared with special numbers for the Sunday services.

The South Hill Aid has recently adopted the plan of the North Hill Aid, devoting an hour to the study of the Sunday school lesson, and serving a light lunch. We understand that the attendance thus far has indicated good interest. This plan affords another opportunity to interest neighbors and friends, which we believe will be used to advantage.

The Mother's Day program, in the hands of our standing program committee for the year, Sister Esther Ortleb and Sister Alma Bauer was well rendered, and the attractive decorations were thoroughly in keeping with the occasion. The branch had granted the morning service time, and after the program by the Sunday school was rendered, Brother Williams gave a short talk on the theme of the day, and the exercises were brought to an appropriate close with a song by the school, "Mother," during which white carnations, the emblem of the day, were distributed to the "guests of honor." A pleasant feature was the presence of the mother and father of our pastor, Brother and Sister Joseph Williams, of Hiteman, who arrived unexpectedly Saturday night. They were present at the various meetings during the week, and again Sunday morning the 21st, leaving in the afternoon.

Brother Orman Salisbury of Des Moines arrived in Burlington late Friday, and remained over Sunday with Brother Williams. He gave us a short talk at Sunday school, seasoning his suggestions palatably with "molasses," saying among other things that the school, while well regulated, reminded him of the appearance an express wagon would present loaded with a ton or two of coal, or the way he might look riding down the street on a Shetland pony. (The comparison may be explained by the fact that our attendance has been ranging from 75 to 100, with a seating capacity of approximately 130, including the choir corner and beginners corner, both of which are occupied for class work.)

Brother Salisbury balanced his talk to the Sunday school nicely by prefacing his sermon on "Charity" with a promise to "tread on the toes of everyone present." If he did so, however, it was with all apparent good feeling, and in an entirely impersonal way, free from the aggressiveness which would antagonize rather than help. The sermon was clear-cut, practical and to the point. He spoke again in the evening, to a larger congregation than was anticipated, owing to the fact that a heavy rain began just a little after seven.

We are looking forward to a visit from Brother Elbert A. Smith, from June 18 to 25.

CORRESPONDENT.

Wichita, Kansas

Southern Kansas, unorganized district, is an important field. With two branches located in two important cities and many isolated Saints scattered in country and city as far west as the western border of the State, it presents an expanse of territory and an opportunity for gathering the Saints into small branches and preaching the gospel to many who are dissatisfied with their present church relationship and are hungry for the truth, that may not be realized except by those who have occupied in the field.

The missionaries who were sent here last year and the local ministry have been diligent and faithful. Missionaries J. Arthur Davis and A. C. Martin who labored here last year, and have been returned by General Conference, are assured of a welcome. Expressions of pleasure and satisfaction are heard everywhere among the Saints.

Home class work in Sunday school and Religio is helping the work of the missionary. At Conway Springs, twenty-five miles away, we found people investigating and receiving instruction from Sister Bertha Kanady. If we are not mistaken, some baptisms will occur there soon.

Elder J. H. Amend, of Townsend, Montana, has decided to make his home in Wichita. We are glad to have him with us; his sermons, testimonies and administrations are a strength to the Saints.

Brother and Sister E. C. Nelson and son Paul, have moved to Warrensburg, Missouri. Brother Nelson holds the office of deacon and was superintendent of our Sunday school. Sister Nelson was secretary. We miss them greatly.

Sister M. A. Eames, of Woodward, Oklahoma, visited relatives in Wichita and attended Religio. Sister Eames is a Religio home class teacher and much interested in the work. Come again Sister Eames.

Brother Sam McKnight has a route on the Missouri Pacific to Fort Scott, Kansas, and attends church when in that place. That is right. If more Saints would be as anxious to find the Wichita Branch we would be pleased. The lid is on in Wichita and it is a good place in which to live.

We meet at 116 North Elizabeth Street. It is easy to find. Take a Mount Carmel car on Douglas Avenue; get off at North Elizabeth and go a half block north.

We are planning great things this year, God willing, and will tell you about them later.

MRS. IDA H. STEWART.

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral

To the Ministry and Saints in Mission Number 7, Comprising Wyoming, Idaho, Montana, Washington and British Columbia; Greeting: The ministers appointed to this field will labor as follows this year: J. M. Stubbart in Wyoming; H. W. Winegar and J. T. Davis, Eastern Idaho; G. W. Winegar, Central Idaho; J. H. Hanson, Western Idaho; J. C. Page and L. W. Bronson, Eastern Montana; A. J. Moore and G. W. Thorburn, Western Montana; J. A. Bronson and R. Newby, Spokane District; J. M. Terry, William Jonhson, S. Swenson, and R. D. Davis, Seattle and British Columbia.

Deviation from these appointments, should such seem necessary, should be made upon consultation with, or advice by, the minister in charge. Where conditions justify, I advise prolonged and concentrated efforts with a view to the establishing of branches. In order to more closely cooperate along this line I renew my request of last year, that the ministers write me at least once a month, if only a few lines, and keep me informed of their whereabouts and conditions in the parts of the field where they labor.

Blanks for the quarterly reports, due July 1, October 1, and January 1, may be had in the Herald Office. Blanks for the annual report, due March 1, will be furnished by me in due time. I request that you report promptly and inform me as to conditions, prospects, etc., in your respective fields.

The local ministry and the Saints should cooperate with the general ministry to the extent of their ability, that all may be partakers of the blessings that come to us by reason of faithful service in the Master's cause.

I invite all to carefully consider the financial program of the church, as briefly outlined by the quorum of bishops: 1. Sustaining the missionary force and the poor and needy. 2. Paying of the church debt. 3. The erection of proper offices for the general church officers as provided by General Conference Resolutions. No fault can be found with this. All Saints should be willing and anxious to support the bishopric in their effort to care for the financial interests of the church. Without means the work cannot progress.

It is my intention to visit as many parts of the mission as possible during the year. My headquarters in the field will be Spokane, Washington, 231 South Smith Street; home address, 1420 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri.

Your brother and colaborer,

PETER ANDERSON.

To the Saints and Friends of the Alberta District; Greeting: As I have been appointed to labor for another year in the district mentioned, I take this means to inform all isolated Saints and friends of the cause, who desire to have preaching, that my field address will be Warner, Alberta.

I expect to be in the southern part of the province, as there are several ministers in the northern part. The southern part of the field is practically new, the work only being introduced there last year. Let us all work together.

You can advise me of the opportunities in your locality and I will do my best to answer the calls. I will not reach my field until in June. Many of you know I passed through a severe case of pneumonia this spring, and my lungs are not strong yet. While I am gaining, I do not think it wise to overtax my lungs. I ask an interest in your prayers, and I pray that we may have a successful year in the work, so that when the year is ended, we can with rejoicing say like Paul. Thanks be to God who has given us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Hopefully and sincerely,

In gospel bonds,
W. P. BOOTMAN.

RACE TRACK, MONTANA, May 15, 1916.

To the Saints and Friends of Central Oklahoma District; Greeting: By the decision of the appointing powers, I have been returned for another year to labor in your district. I hope to be enabled to do all the good possible, with the assistance of the Spirit of the Master, and the cooperation of the Saints.

We trust that which was accomplished at the late General Conference will be an impetus to the work of the Lord, and that more of inspiration may be given to all in their lines of work, that all may be blessed in the great work to be done.

Let each one of us feel the responsibility that has been placed upon him. Remember, it takes courage, effort and sacrifice, but we surely ought to be willing to make the sacrifice necessary for the success of the work of the Master.

It is our hope that we shall not alone have the assistance of those holding priesthood in branches, but also those not appointed: elders and priests. We are desirous that you shall with us magnify your calling by making new openings and when you feel you need assistance we will gladly render all the help possible.

We expect to have a reunion in the district this year, at which the district conference will be held. Place and time will be announced later. Reports from branch presidents, can be sent to me from which to make my quarterly report. Elders and priests should send reports to the district secretary, Mrs. A. M. McGeorge, Terlton, Oklahoma.

I am also to serve as agent under Bishop Ellis Short, and will gladly receipt for tithes and offerings sent to me at my home address, 1517 West Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri. All mail sent there will be duly forwarded.

May the grace and the blessings of God attend all the Israel of modern days.

Your brother and colaborer for Christ,

JOSEPH ARBER, District President.

TULSA, OKLAHOMA, May 19, 1916.

To the Church Membership and Ministry of Southern Kansas, Unorganized; Greeting: As I have been appointed to labor in the above field, also bishop's agent, brethren A. C. Martin, E. T. Draper are associated with me as the missionary force.

We desire to do all the good we can. I realize we must have the cooperation of all the Saints in order to do an effective work. Would be pleased to have all the Saints write me in regard to opportunities in their localities, so I can arrange our work to save time and expense.

Bishop Ellis Short writes me that our new bishop wishes a report each month from bishops and agents. I would like our mission to make good this year along financial lines.

The Lord requires something from all, in order to speed his work on. Please assist, as the Lord has blessed you, so we may receive greater blessings and help in building up Zion.

E. L. Barraclough, of Wichita, Kansas, will be my assistant in the city of Wichita and will receipt all there. A. C. Martin and E. T. Draper will operate the tent. To the Saints and Friends in Central Nebraska District, and South Dakota; Dear Brothers and Sisters: Having been appointed to labor in your vicinity, and not being acquainted with the needs of the work there, I wish you would kindly write me with reference to the work and your wants. I desire to hear from the isolated ones and the opportunity to present the gospel in your several localities.

Dear brothers and sisters, the Lord has told us that the hastening time is on, so let us rally to the great cry, "Go forward," and see that we do our full duty.

Your brother in Christ,

C. W. PRETTYMAN.

COMSTOCK, NEBRASKA, May 24, 1916.

To the Saints of the Toronto, Ontario, District; Greeting: According to the decree of the appointing powers, I am to labor among you again this conference year.

The president of the mission has invited me to act as assistant minister in charge. As we have done the past two years, we will again divide the district into sections, and give each missionary a division to labor in, as it will save expense and each man will know just where his work is, etc.

R. T. Brown will care for the work on the Manitoulin Island, and at the Soo. When laboring at the latter place he can work in conjunction with the one laboring in the American Soo. This is by mutual consent of those having the oversight of the work on the American side. Henry Ribbel will labor in New Ontario, and as far south as the northern boundary of Muskoka District. Philemon Pement, Ottawa City; J. L. Mortimore, Lincoln and Welland counties, and that part of Haldimand County in the Toronto District; J. W. Davis, Wentworth and Halton counties, Hamilton objective; F. A. Pement, Piel, York and Ontario counties, and as far east as he can work the territory; S. G. St. John, when not actively engaged in district work elsewhere Simcoe County, and Muskoka District. I will look after the interest of the work in Bruce, Grey, Wellington, and Dufferin counties. We hope each man will work his territory as thoroughly as possible, and be diligent in the service of the good Master.

We invite the hearty cooperation of every Saint and lover of truth in the district. I will try to be in the mission by June 5. My home address is South Boardman, Michigan, box 45. My mission address will be Clavering, Ontario, care of D. B. Perkins.

Trusting that the blessings of the divine Master may be enjoyed by all the people who love truth, I subscribe myself,

Your colaborer,

W. D. ELLIS.

The Bishopric

Book Reviews

NATURAL EDUCATION.—Winifred Sackville Stoner, $1 net, Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis, Indiana. A preeminently practical and comprehensive account of how Mrs. Stoner trained her daughter from the cradle to the age of ten years. At the age of five the child could converse in several languages and write for periodicals; besides having many other accomplishments unusual for her age. While few mothers will be able to attain these results because of not having the education the author had, the principles used, which are termed "natural education," will undoubtedly appeal to every thoughtful parent. To be sure, we may wish the author had been privileged to train several children at the same time, and experience difficulties incident to public school attendance, but so far as her experiences are the average, we can appreciate the situation. Some few of her deductions seem wrongly drawn, but as a whole, we have only words of praise for this most excellent book.

NUMBER 23

"I HAVE MEAT THAT YE KNOW NOT OF"— PART I

(Sermon preached by Elbert A. Smith, before the graduating class of the Lamoni High School, Sunday morning, May 14, 1916, at Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Winsome Smith.)

Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me. If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him. Philip saith unto him, Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us. Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father? believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but of the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or else believe me for the very works' sake.—John 14: 6-11.

The occasion that calls us together this morning is one that is very inspiring to your speaker. I would much rather assist in launching this graduating class upon the sea of life than to preside at the launching of a battleship. I believe that it means more to the Nation and more to the community, and I know that it means more to the parents of these students who are graduating from our high school. It is a community affair, and we feel a degree of community pride, and we can sympathize with the pride that the parents feel now that their children have completed the prescribed course in the high school.

A MOTHER'S PRIDE

It is said that a couple were watching a company of recruits drilling in London, recently, and the husband turning to the wife, said, "Mary, aren't they a fine looking company of men?"

The wife answered, "Yes, John, and our boy is the handsomest one in the company. And see, John, he is the only one in the company that is not out of step."

That was a mother who said that. English, German, French, American—they all speak the same language. If all lived up to the faith their mothers have in them, every man would be a peacemaker for the world.

The text that I wish to call your attention to this morning is couched in the language of the Master:

"But he said unto them, I have meat to eat that ye know not of." (John 4: 32.)

We gather from this somewhat oracular statement of the Master to his followers that he was in touch with spiritual supplies that they did not know about—not that some one had surreptitiously brought him some literal meat while their backs were turned.

THE LESSON OF THE WIRELESS

I might illustrate this old text by a very modern illustration. I am told that at the wireless station at Graceland College they receive commercial messages from various great cities, that is, they hear them. They pick up messages from the Atlantic fleet, and from the secretary of war, and even, I have been told, the Kaiser's war orders in cipher.

Now to my mind, the singular and dramatic thing about this is that these messages are passing about our heads at the time. They may be vibrating through this room at this moment, but I do not hear them, and you do not hear them. We do not know of them, because we are not in touch with them. But those individuals who have the equipment and are attune can hear these messages.

We might almost say that they are like gods, listening to the conversation of humanity the world over. Greenland's icy mountain speaks to India's coral strand, for the delectation of these audacious eavesdroppers of the universe.

I say that I am told that they do this. I do not literally know it, but when I send a message from this station to Independence and receive in the same day an intelligent reply and afterwards confirm it by letter, I may say that I believe to the point of conviction, if not to the point of knowledge.

SOME ARE BOTH DEAF AND BLIND

And I believe just as sincerely that the otherwise stagnant atmosphere of this old earth is vibrating with spiritual messages from on high; but we do not hear them unless we are in tune and equipped to receive them. What folly it is for an infidel to say that he will not believe anything that he has not demonstrated with one of his five senses—refusing to attune himself to these messages, and yet denying that any other man receives them or has ever received them. Such individuals truly are not only deaf, but blind.

I have here a little poem by Harry Kemp, which I wish to read:

The Spring blew trumpets of color;
Her green sang in my brain.
I heard a blind man groping
"Tap-tap" with his cane;

I pitied him in his blindness:
But can I boast "I see"?
Perhaps there walks a spirit
Close by, who pities me,—

A spirit who hears me tapping
The five-sensed cane of mind
Amid such unguessed glories
That I am worse than blind!

Jesus said to the Jews, "Ye are both deaf and blind." But Jesus was in touch with those spiritual messages, and hence could say to his disciples, "I have meat that ye know not of."

TWO SUGGESTIONS

Let us go back to the text. It contains for us two suggestions. First, that of duty. He went on to say, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work"; but we note also the secondary suggestion that he was receiving spiritual direction and communication. He was in touch with God.

Taking the first last, in harmony with the scriptural statement that the last shall be first, we take up the suggestion that comes to us through the text, that of spiritual communion. The lesson of the wireless warns us to be careful how we reject those claims to divine direction or inspiration that have been made in all the ages of the world.

Even so great a scientist as Sir Oliver Lodge says that the methods of science are not the only methods by which men may arrive at truth. Even profane history is full of examples or instances that we cannot account for unless we shall concede that the individual concerned had spiritual meat that the world knew not of. I will cite you to two instances from "profane history," as it is called, to bear me out in that statement.

THE VOICE THAT DIRECTED SOCRATES

The first of these is Socrates. He claimed from early childhood, I believe, to be directed by an audible voice that spoke to him, though others could not hear it. It especially spoke to him in warning at different times, telling him what he ought not to do, as well as what he ought to do.

Here was a man, born of very humble parentage, very homely, even grotesque in appearance, and poor so far as wealth was concerned. But directed by this voice that he heard, and despite these handicaps, in some way he managed to propound such a philosophy, to live such a life, and finally to die such a sublime death that he is remembered now as the greatest of all the great Greek philosophers, the central figure in the life of Athens at that time, the man who "divides Greek history into two parts."

Well, possibly we might give some credence to his claim. It is true that some try to explain it away. They say that Socrates was an epileptic. Well, it is a pity that more men are not epileptic if they might consequently live as he lived, and die as he died, if epilepsy will confer upon the world such almost divine examples of teaching. Others say he was subject to mental aberrations. What a pity that more men are not afflicted with the same sublime insanity that actuated him in all his life.

JOAN OF ARC

The next example that I call to your attention is that of Joan of Arc, born I believe about the year 1412, in a peasant's family, very poor, uneducated, never having even learned to read or write. She was born at the time when France was in a ruined condition, when the Hundred Years War had been raging for generations, (as the term generations is often used.) Children had grown up, married; their children had been born and grown up, and their children; and still the war had gone on. England had almost overthrown France, and had her strongholds everywhere throughout the country, when this little French girl was born into the world.

At the age of thirteen years she said that voices began to speak to her and tell her how she should live, and finally on one occasion they brought to her this message:

Jeanne, you are summoned to lead a different life and to do marvelous things, for it is you whom the King of heaven has chosen to restore happiness to France and to aid King Charles. Put on a man's clothes, arm yourself; you shall be the chief in war and all shall be done according to your advice."

This strange promise was fulfilled.

Imagine one of the girls from this graduating class placed at the head of all the armies of the United States. When only a little older than that, this girl, without any military training, without any schooling, finally forced her way into the presence of the uncrowned King Charles, convinced him of her mission, and was made commander in chief of all the armies of France, and was told that all the generals should obey her implicitly.

Clothed in her shining silver armor she went out at the head of the armies, and broke down one stronghold after another, and in a few weeks' time practically destroyed the power of the enemy, and taking her uncrowned king to the city of Rheims, she assisted at his coronation—we might say she literally placed the crown upon his head.

The world, as Mark Twain truly said, has never accounted for Joan of Arc—those military achievements which she accomplished, when all the great generals had failed. Possibly she had meat that others knew not of. It is unnecessary for us to decide the source of her inspiration. France said she received it from God; the English attributed it to the Devil, and she, poor girl, was finally burned as a sorceress.

FROM SACRED HISTORY

The point that we are interested in is that there are supernatural forces at work in the world: Jesus drew upon those supernatural forces; and he drew, without doubt, from the right source.

Of course when we turn to sacred history we find so many such instances that it is impossible for us to name them all.

We see Moses watching the burning bush on Mount Horeb, and receiving from God the idea of monotheism, and the revelation of the Great I Am. We see him on Mount Sinai receiving the ten commandments, the basis of all civilized law to-day.

We see David, who rose from a shepherd's hut to the throne of a king; and who perhaps was greatest of all when he wrote the twenty-third psalm: "Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies"—and there David ate of the meat that others knew not of.

We see Paul on the road to Damascus receiving on the highway in broad daylight the vision that not only changed his life, but the history of the world.

We see John on the Isle of Patmos, viewing the new heavens and the new earth, and hear Jesus say to him, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me." Thus he promised to share with humanity the meat that he spoke of when he talked with his disciples on that occasion.

EVERY WORD THAT PROCEEDETH

In a recent number of the Outlook, Lyman Abbott truly says that the attitude of Jesus was not that of a man seeking after God. It was the attitude of a man who had found God. And the statement which Jesus made early in his ministry, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," is in harmony with our text. Note, "every word that proceedeth."

Constant divine direction from God was the lot of our Savior. "I do always the things that please the Father," he says; and in Revelation 2:17 he extends to us the promise, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna."

A SPIRIT IN MAN

And so when we return to Jesus and examine into his life and realize the influence it had upon the world—his teaching, his life, his death—we are compelled, as he says, to "believe for the very works' sake." The very work that he did convinces us that he told the truth when he said, "I have meat that ye know not of."

And that, too, we may also say of the lesser prophets and seers and poets. They too received divine direction. Job truly said, "There is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."

(To be concluded.)

GOLDEN JUBILEE OF NEBRASKA CITY BRANCH

It was the good fortune of the Editor, in company with Brother Heman C. Smith, to attend the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Nebraska City Branch. This event was celebrated in Nebraska City, Sunday, May 28. Services were held during the entire day, morning, afternoon, and evening, the Overland Theater being rented for the purpose.

Both of the daily papers of the city gave very favorable and lengthy comments on the occasion. The Nebraska Daily News has the following historical items:

Sunday was indeed a gala day for the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints of this city, as it was the golden jubilee of the organization of the local church. The organization was effected April 8, 1866. In 1862, Mrs. Hannah Fuller was made a member of the church, and was the first in this country to take such action. This was the first branch south of the Platte and was known as the Weeping Water Branch. The first meetings of the local church were held in what was known as McLennan's Hall, situated on Sixth Street, just across the street from the fire house. It was a two-story frame structure, the lower floor being occupied by a restaurant and the Chronicle Printing Company.

The first presiding elder was a Mr. Baldwin, and later he was succeeded by Reverend R. C. Elvin, and later by Elder R. M. Elvin. The late J. W. Waldsmith was for many years the presiding elder, and it was under his efficient management the church grew so successfully. Elder Forscutt was also a strong and able minister and did much for the advancement of the church. Elder Higgins is now in charge, and is one of the ablest young men they have yet had.

In 1881 they purchased the brick edifice on Second Corso, between Sixth and Seventh streets, which they lately overhauled and enlarged and they now have a commodious church.

At the services yesterday there were visitors from many of the surrounding towns, the Overland Theater being used to accommodate the large audiences. . . .

It was stated by the historian that only three of the charter members of the branch were living, those being Robert M.

Elvin, of Lamoni, Iowa, and Richard Meredith, sr., and Mrs. Richard Meredith, of Nebraska City. Mr. and Mrs. Meredith were present and occupied conspicuous places in the congregation as a distinguished mark of their long identity with the church.

It was a very successful meeting and will long be remembered by those taking part.

The Nebraska City Daily Press has an account of the meetings, from which we extract the following, relative to the morning services:

Doctor S. P. Cresap made an address of welcome on behalf of the mayor of Nebraska City and the Business Men's Association, which was very cordial and much appreciated by the audience. He especially impressed the thought that the most valuable asset of any city was not in its beautiful homes or wide avenues, but that it was in the high standard of morality and citizenship to which its citizens had attained.

A fitting response was made by President Elbert A. Smith of Lamoni, Iowa. He impressed the thought in the minds of the audience that though the Saints may differ with other churches on doctrinal points it was not essential that those differences affect our fellowship as citizens in any way whatever, and that in all of our association as members of different churches we should not seek the point of differences but rather that of agreement, though it may lead us at times to agree to disagree, at which time we should still be friends, closing his remarks by quoting a statement from the epitome of faith [Doctrine and Covenants] which says that "those who keep the laws of God have no need to break the laws of the land."

Heman C. Smith, General Church Historian, of Lamoni, Iowa, then gave a very brief history of the church, emphasizing the thought that true history is found where the reader can trace the hand of God in shaping the destiny of mankind, and that he was sure that this could be done in following the history of the laying of the foundation of this great American nation. He could very plainly see the working of divine Providence in the bringing together of men who were instrumental in organizing the church in 1830.

CURRENT EVENTS

MUNITION SHIPMENTS.—To May 1, the United States had shipped $338,000,000 worth of guns and ammunition to Europe since the beginning of the war.

BARS KEPT UP.—By a vote of 435 to 360 the recent Methodist General Conference retained as a part of the discipline of the church, a clause which provides that those who play cards, dance, or attend theaters may be punished by expulsion.

GOVERNMENT ARMOR FACTORY.—By a vote of 165 to 95, the House adopted amendments to the naval appropriation bill which provide for a Government armor plate plant, to cost $11,000,000. The amendment had been previously passed by the Senate.

BRANDEIS INDORSED.—On the 1st, the nomination of Louis D. Brandeis as a judge in the supreme court of the United States was confirmed by the Senate after five months of bitter opposition. The vote was 47 to 22. The fact that Mr. Brandeis is the first Jew to hold a position on the supreme bench adds special interest to the case.

JAMES J. HILL DEAD.—After a brief illness, James J. Hill, one of the world's greatest railway financiers, died on the 29th at Saint Paul, Minnesota. He leaves an estate estimated at $200,000,000, chiefly railway properties, which will be managed by his son, Louis W. Hill, who is spoken of as the "world's biggest railway man." Every wheel in the Hill railway system in the Northwest was silent for the first five minutes of the funeral service. The Hill offices the world over, and the public schools of Saint Paul were closed all day and practically every commercial and industrial house in the city observed the five-minute silence in memory of the much respected financier.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Serbian army, estimated as numbering between 80,000 and 100,000 men, has been transported from the island of Corfu to the northwest of Greece, to Saloniki, in the northeast part of Greece. Allied vessels made the transfer through the Ægean Sea without loss. Bulgarian forces have taken several Grecian forts on the northeastern frontier after some opposition from the Greeks. Furious fighting continues at Verdun with little territorial change. The Austrian advance into Italy has made little gain the past week though sharp conflicts continue. A gigantic naval engagement between German and British war fleets occurred on the afternoon and evening of May 31. While reports disagree, the losses seem to have been: British: three battle cruisers, three armored cruisers, about a dozen destroyers, and one submarine. German: two battleships, two battle cruisers, four light cruisers, six destroyers and a submarine. Practically all the men on the destroyed vessels were lost.

MEXICAN SITUATION.—The Carranza Government submitted a note to the United States on the 31st, among other things demanding an immediate withdrawal of our troops now on Mexican soil. The note asserts that the troops crossed the border after the Columbus incident without permission from the Mexican Government. It is further stated that the time has come when the United States must clearly and unequivocally declare itself as to future intentions toward Mexico. In Washington the note is not regarded as an ultimatum, but a continuation of negotiations. While no answer has been given, it is authoritatively stated from Washington that the troops will not be withdrawn until the Carranza Government demonstrates its ability to police the border. It is thought that a later distribution of 20,000 Carranza soldiers who had been mobilized at Chihuahua City is a move to that end rather than to oppose General Pershing's army. Minor conflicts between scouting parties of Villista men and United States troops are reported.

THEOLOGIANS ON ORGANIZATION AND DUTIES--PART 1

THE OPINIONS OF FORTY-TWO PROMINENT MINISTERS AND PROFESSORS OF THEOLOGY ON CHURCH ORGANIZATION AND DUTIES OF OFFICERS

BY CHARLES J. HUNT

This article will include two direct questions on ecclesiastical polity and the answers thereto by forty-two preachers, editors and theological professors, representing twenty prominent churches. A careful reading of their replies may help you to exercise charity for Professor E. D. Starbuck, Ph. D., who after a survey of divided Christianity, said: "The study of religion is to-day where astronomy and chemistry were four centuries ago." (The Psychology of Religion, page 3.) However sweeping the statement of Doctor Starbuck may seem to be, we wish to advise that the long-expected Old Jerusalem church and gospel is here, fully restored; and fully equipped for service, although not observed by the forty-two contributors named in this reading.

Permit me before the interrogations and replies referred to are given to the reader, to preface the article with the ever-growing reality that there has come on the swift-moving wings of time a change in the trend of religious thought by many students of theology in regard to Bible fundamentals in church organization, doctrine, and duties of officers.

These discordant teachings give full liberty for the bringing of Israel's beloved prophet Isaiah to the witness stand, who centuries ago challenged the so-called doctors of divinity (then unborn, but now their names are legion) that following a certain eventful time when "a marvelous work and a wonder" (Isaiah 29: 14) would come forth to the world, when "the wisdom of their wise men should perish (come to naught—be exposed), and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid."

Peradventure this "new truth" may greet the ears of many for the first time. The following may help prepare their minds for it: "It is a misfortune, frequently lamented, that new truth, the most precious attainment of each generation, is also the most unwelcome."—Professor O. F. Cook.

You are hereby apprised that the new truth which has been so vigorously opposed, is the "marvelous work" referred to by the Prophet Isaiah, and is the angel message—the restoration of the gospel of Christ by angelic visitation, ordination, and organization of his church, (Revelation 14: 6, 7), and also the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, "the sealed book" of Isaiah 29: 11-24.

The responsibility of carrying this prophetic message, so new, yet so old, to "all nations" before the end of the world, is intrusted by the Lord to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, whose headquarters and seat of the Presidency are at Lamoni, Iowa, and Independence, Missouri.

Before inserting a copy of the questions indicated by the heading of this article, it should be observed that the "kingdom of God" and "the church" are terms used interchangeably in the New Testament; both referring to the Church of Jesus Christ, organized and officered before the day of Pentecost (Acts 2: 1-47). A few of the many quotations proving that claim to be true, are: Matthew 16: 18, "I will build my church"—Jesus. Matthew 18: 17, If the second effort to settle trouble between members failed then, "tell it unto the church"—Jesus. Ephesians 5: 25, Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it—Paul. 1 Corinthians 12: 28, "God set in the church first apostles"—Matthew 10: 1-7. Twelve apostles chosen, and Jesus commanded them to preach, saying, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand," Luke 10: 1, 2. The seventy missionaries were sent out to preach the same gospel of "the kingdom of God," Mark 1: 14. Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom of God. Matthew, Mark, Luke and Paul all teach that Christ's church was organized before Pentecost.

We now return to the record of Isaiah, who forecasted the time when "the wisdom of the wise men" would perish, which time is also indicated in the world's prophetic calendar by other sacred writers as "the hour of God's judgment," "the fullness of times," and "the last days."

You will observe that the many answers to the following questions by the noted ministers will help every reader to decide as to "the wisdom of the wise men" settling the many controverted problems confronting the religious world; their "wisdom" being contradictory and "perishing," when God's eternal truth, the searchlight, is turned on. The only safe instruction is, "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." (Isaiah 8: 20.)

John Ruskin said: "Wheresoever the search after truth begins, there life begins; wheresoever that search ceases there life ceases."

James M. Hopkin in Homiletics, observed that, "It is no easy or common thing to 'rightly divide the word of truth,'" and on the question of controverted problems. Elder John W. Rushton wrote: "Doubt and denial therefore are not always manifestations of superior intelligence, but oftener a lazy way of getting rid of problems and difficulties which mean work and time and care."

We sincerely trust that a careful reading of the following will mean a deeper search after "the old paths," to find the good way "and walk therein."

Question Number 1: In what order did the following officers occupy or take precedence in office in the church organized by Christ and the twelve apostles, namely: Apostles, prophets, elders, bishops, evangelists, seventies, pastors or priests, deacons, and teachers?

Question Number 2: Does the Bible give the duties and privileges of the above-named officers so specifically that each one could understand and perform his duty as an officer in the church to-day?

Reverend Lyman Abbott, D. D., of New York City, editor The Outlook, preacher, lecturer, and author of international fame, replied July 23, 1915:

In my judgment Jesus Christ did not establish any church organization nor did he lay down any rules to be followed by churches in their organization and business methods. He came to teach certain fundamental truths and principles and still more to inspire, by his example, his teaching and his personal presence, the life of faith and hope and love, and he left his followers to form such organizations and establish such rules as, from time to time, the changing conditions of society might make desirable.

Reverend R. A. Torrey, D. D., member of Montrose Bible Conference Association, Montrose, Pennsylvania, and editor of The King's Business, a Christian magazine, said:

We have no reason in the Bible for thinking all of the classes you mention were regular officers in the church, as it existed after Pentecost; for example: there is not the slightest indication that there were any seventies in the early church, nor any priests as officials in the church. In the new testimony [New Testament] economy, every believer is a priest, there is no high priest other than our Lord Jesus in the glory. It is clear from the fourth chapter of Ephesians that pastors and teachers were not two separate officers.

The Christian Herald, New York City, one of the most popular religious weekly papers in the world, replied to the foregoing questions, July 15, 1915.

Jesus Christ did not, in any literal sense, organize a church. He organized a company of disciples and trained them to carry out the work he himself began. The word church is first applied by Luke to the company of original disciples at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2: 47), and is afterwards frequently used in the Acts, Epistles and Apocalypse. In the various epistles the question of church officers, their duties and responsibilities, is fully discussed.

Williston Walker, Ph. D., Congregationalist, professor in Harvard University, wrote June 11, 1915:

In reply I would say that no question of early Christian history is more perplexing, and on none do the scholars of good standing more widely disagree than on that of the question of church organization. . . . In my own opinion, the organization of the early church was a development from very small beginnings. . . . I think it is impossible to assign any definite order and rank to these various leaders, and I am therefore unable to answer your first question, and do not believe anyone can, save on one point, that as the immediate companions of Christ, and in many instances as the planters of churches, it seems to me that the apostles always had the highest rank in the esteem of the early church. Second, I do not believe that the New Testament intended to lay down the duties, and privileges of these officers so specifically that each one could understand and determine his duty as an officer in the church to-day. . . .

Reverend Parris T. Farwell, associate editor of The Congregationalist and Christian World, Boston, wrote June 30, 1915:

I can only say in general that the early church in apostolic times was, according to the New Testament records, a thoroughly democratic church, in accordance with the statement, "One in your Teacher, and all ye are brethren." . . . There is much difference of opinion concerning the functions of these various offices, but I think that you may feel assured that so far as the early church is concerned there was no precedence in office, except the natural position of the apostles as organizers and advisers of the churches. Christ himself did not organize the church. The apostles as missionaries apparently organized the churches about as our home missionaries organize churches, by calling people together and guiding them in making their own organizations. . . . The Bible does not give the duties and privileges of the above-named officers so specifically that we can have no doubt as to what their duties were and how they can be performed by a similar officer in the present day. . . . There have been many books written on the matter of the organization of the apostolic and post-apostolic ages of the church, but you will find that they are all very vague as to the functions of these various officers, and there is much difference of opinion concerning them.

Reverend John D. Nutting, Congregationalist, wrote from Cleveland, Ohio, June 10, 1915:

If you will carefully study the 12th of 1 Corinthians, which is the most full statement about such things as you inquire about, and also the rather parallel passage in Ephesians 4: 4-16, you will see that the subject of both is not officers or organization—the mechanics of the church, but spiritual gifts, the talents given spiritually by the Holy Spirit, who is God; each member of the church being given some gift by which he or she can help in the common, spiritual work for which the church exists. . . . The fact is that the true church had NO organization at all for some time after it began, on the day of Pentecost; and its officers were the outgrowth of needs as they came into its life, under guidance of the Spirit: the first being deacons, who were also everything else that the church needed, it would seem, as the days went by; preaching, administering the ordinances, healing, and all. . . . Hence it is impossible to answer affirmatively your second question; the duties of those having the above gifts often overlapped, and specific duties are rarely mentioned. (Emphasis, Mr. Nutting's.)

Archibald McLellan, editor The Christian Science Journal, Boston, wrote September 13, 1915:

I, too, am a student of the Bible, but I shall have to admit that I have not "studied up" on the point you mention sufficiently to be considered an authority.

John L. Randall, Christian Science minister of Des Moines, Iowa, replied July 21, 1915:

I have never given much thought to the question which you ask as it has never occurred to me that Jesus established any church organization and discipline. The matter of organization, as I understand it, was an after consideration. Neither did Jesus establish any creed. . . . I do not understand that the Bible gives the duties and privileges of any church officers for the reason that the Bible as I understand it, did not contemplate any order of precedence whatever, except in the ratio of one's spirituality or spiritual understanding of truth.

Reverend Charles S. McFarland, general secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, (thirty denominations in all) wrote from New York City, August 16, 1915:

The Federal Council has not given consideration to the questions you raise because these are matters which must be left to the autonomy [power or right of self-government—Webster—C. J. H.] of the various denominations.

James H. Ropes, professor of New Testament literature in Harvard University, replied August 20, 1915:

I should be quite unable to arrange in order of precedence the list of officers and other leaders of the early church which you have drawn up. Many of them—indeed most of them—did not exist in the lifetime of Jesus Christ, and I do not believe that he had them in view as a part of the organization of his disciples, or that he meant to give to the apostles or the early church any rules for their organization. He left the church free to adopt such organization and government as they might find convenient and advantageous for the promotion of his cause. That freedom belongs to us, and it is a precious privilege of divine appointment.

In saying this I have already answered your second question, to which I should reply with an unhesitating NO.

Reverend William H. Ward, D. D., who will be an Octogenarian ere this article has left the printer's hands, former editor of The Independent, wrote from South Berwick, Maine, July 1, 1915:

Christ never organized the church. Its organization grew up as needed. 1. An extra apostle and witness. 2. Seven deacons. 3. Pastor, bishop or elder or whatever the local leader might be called following the example of James as head of the Jerusalem church. I take it that the prophets, evangelists, etc., were hardly part of a regular organization. . . . Your question does not seem to recognize how flaccid was the condition of organization in those early days. So your questions cannot be very definitely answered.

His answer to the second question was: "No, not permanent and binding."

Reverend W. H. Griffiths Thomas, of Wycliffe College, Toronto, Canada, who is identified with the Quarterly Lessons in The Sunday School Times, said July 3, 1915:

I do not think it would be possible to state definitely the precise precedence in office of all the names you mention in your letter. Generally speaking, it is thought that the twelve apostles occupied a unique place (thirteen with Saint Paul) and that in some respects they may be said to have been the founders and leading officers of the church (Ephesians 2: 20). Then it is thought that prophets come next as inspired preachers, possessed and led directly by the Holy Spirit. Elders and bishops represent the same office in the New Testament. . . . Evangelists seem to have been a separate order of men, intended for the purpose of preaching the gospel to the non-Christians in various places. Pastors seem to refer to the settled ministry of teaching and can hardly be distinguished from those who are called "teachers." Priest in the New Testament is exactly the same as presbyter or elder, while the deacon seems to have been mainly intended for secular duties in connection with the church. But as I have said, I do not think we can speak strictly of precedence in office in regard to most of these, nor can I discover, beyond what I have now said, that the duties and privileges of these officers are so specifically mentioned in the New Testament that each one could understand and perform his duty as an officer in the church to-day.

L. A. Smith, Seventh-Day Adventist, editor of The Watchman, and author of The United States in Prophecy, in a letter of August 18, 1915, Nashville, Tennessee, said:

I have never seen any statement from anyone who professed to know the exact order of all the officials which you mention in your letter. I do not understand that the Bible specifically defines the duties and privileges of these officials. . . .

Editor Francis M. Wilcox, Seventh-day Adventist, of the Review and Herald, Washington, District of Columbia, said July 29, 1915: "I regret that I cannot reply to your inquiries."

Pastor Charles T. Russell, Brooklyn, in his book, The New Creation, said,

Upon this foundation (Jesus Christ) our Lord, as the Father's representative, began to rear his church, and in so doing he called twelve apostles, . . . in conformity to the divine plan. Not only did the Lord not choose more than those twelve apostles for that position, but has never given authority since for any more,—barring the fact that Judas, having proved himself unworthy of a position amongst the twelve, fell from his place and was succeeded by the Apostle Paul. . . . We cannot recognize the choice of Matthias recorded in Acts as in any sense of the word the Lord's selection. (Page 208.) Seventy other disciples were sent forth later, by the Lord." . . . (Page 214.)

Prophets, evangelists, teachers, bishops, overseers, elders, pastors, deacons, ministers, etc., are named by Pastor Russell, but he does not mention the order in which they took precedence in office in the New Testament church.

Wilbur Glen Volive, general overseer of The Christian Catholic Church in Zion, of Zion City, affirmed the published statement of John Alexander Dowie: "The apostolic office comes first, the prophetic office next, the teaching office next," and they are "permanent" offices in the Lord's church, he said. Numbering those holding apostolic office in the New Testament church, Mr. Dowie said: "the twenty-first apostle was Jude."

Reverend D. S. Phelan, LL. D., Roman Catholic, editor The Sunday Watchman, Saint Louis, Missouri, printed the two questions in his paper July 4, 1915, and we excerpt the following from his answer:

It would take too much space to answer any one of the questions in the foregoing letter. Some of the offices mentioned in the New Testament were temporary and intended to meet a present emergency; others were constitutional and remain in the church to the present time. Some official attributes were personal and died with the holders. . . . The full apostolic office lapsed with its original holders; but bishops and priests and deacons remained.

Cardinal Gibbons, in Faith of Our Fathers, chapter 9, says, "Jesus, our Lord, founded but one church, which he was pleased to build on Peter."

Right Reverend William W. Webb, D. D., Episcopalian, Bishop of Milwaukee, wrote July 22, 1915, and from his letter we quote:

We know the New Testament mentions a number besides the original twelve as apostles. The term at first was used for what we know as bishops. Then gradually was restricted to the original twelve, usually including Saint Matthias, and sometimes Saint Paul. Presbyters were what we know now as priests.

Reverend Charles S. Lewis, Episcopalian, Rector of Saint Mary's church, Burlington, New Jersey, replied:

Your whole point of approach is, in my judgment, wrong so far as the truth of the New Testament is concerned. The several "officers" were not all at the same time in all places.

Reverend Cortlandt Whitehead, D. D., LL. D., Episcopal Bishop of Pittsburgh, answering August 9, 1915, said:

You propound questions which I do not think any living person can definitely answer. I can only refer you to the writings of Bishop Lightfoot, Saint Paul's Epistle to the Philippians; the Reverend Doctor Moberly's Ministerial Priesthood; and Bishop Gore's The Ministry of the Christian Church, which treat the subject exhaustively. I think they all agree that in the apostles was the fullness of the ministry, parts of which they delegated to the deacons and elders, (the elders sometimes called presbyters and sometimes bishops, pastors and teachers) and that prophets and evangelists were not different orders, but persons who "specialized" in certain duties of the ministry; the one point being that all authority to minister came through the apostles.—(Emphasis by Doctor Whitehead.)

Clinton R. Woodruff, member of The Federal Council of Churches, wrote from Philadelphia, August 3, 1915:

Being a member of that branch of the Catholic Church known in this country as the Episcopal Church, I believe that there are three orders: Bishops, priests and deacons, and that our bishops are the direct successors of the apostles who received their authority from our blessed Lord himself. While the duties of these orders are perhaps sufficiently defined in the Bible, the Catholic Church as the body of Christ has sufficient authority within herself to determine these matters.

Reverend John S. Littell, Episcopal, Rector of Saint James Church, Keen, New Hampshire, answered July 13, 1915:

Pardon me if I accord your interesting letter more space than you asked. Your important question cannot be answered by marking the list, at least not to my satisfaction. I conceive that in the church organized by Christ there were first in order and rank, apostles. In time these were preceded by the seventy; some of the apostles may have been in the seventy. But the seventy were sent to announce the coming of Christ to other places to which he wanted to go and minister. Evidently theirs was a temporary mission for a special purpose. . . . The apostles remain as the first order. . . . Elders (priests), or pastors or bishops were the local heads of Christian communities, or congregations. . . . The elders or bishops at the head of larger groups received all functions of apostles without exception. When apostles passed away, ordaining elders came to be called bishops and elders (priests) were those who could ordain only in conjunction with the bishop. This was the guarantee of the perpetuity and continuity of the church as our Lord had promised it. . . . Prophets, evangelists, teachers, may be defined as three classes of workers having personal call and assisting in local or missionary work. I suppose they were very particular about being loyal to the apostle, bishop, elder; and local church. . . . Deacons may have continued from their foundation in the Acts, or have been appointed by local churches, or both.

To your second question I should answer yes except for the seventies for reasons already given. Yet it would be within the power of the church and I should say quite effective in her work if some such work as the seventies did, were taken up by seventies now, and there is nothing to prevent it. They would combine work of prophet, evangelist, teachers and perhaps others.

Reverend John N. W. Haas, D. D., Lutheran, president of Muhlenberg College, Allentown, Pennsylvania, July 26, 1915, observed:

It is not possible to answer your questions without entering upon a long discussion. In my judgment, however, there are no distinctions of work indicated in the New Testament. There are different kinds of service, but the distinctions are a result of post apostolic development. We cannot number New Testament servants of Jesus. The apostles are only superior as direct witnesses of Jesus. They have no inherent authority of rank or office. Bishops and elders are interchangeable terms. Prophets and evangelists were purely temporary types of service.

In the Pauline Epistles which are late in date, you will find a list of duties for congregational servants.

In the History of Religious Bodies, 1906, part 2, page 342, the Lutheran Church officers are named as pastors, elder, and deacon.

Reverend J. H. Moore, representing the Church of the Brethren (Dunkards), as office editor The Gospel Messenger, Elgin, Illinois replied June 23, 1915:

So far as I understand the New Testament, the office of apostles, as well as the office of the seventy, have expired. It was not intended that these offices should be continued longer than the life of those filling the position. Or, in other words, the apostles had no successors in office; neither did the seventy.

Under the New Testament arrangements there remain elders, evangelists, pastors, teachers and deacons. The term "prophet," as it relates to a New Testament officer, applies to the duties pertaining to elders, as well as evangelists and possibly teachers. The terms "elder" and "bishop" as well as the term "pastor," all refer to the one and the same office. The order in which they should stand, in the light of authority, may be regarded as follows: Elders, evangelists, teachers and deacons.

The duties of the different officers are set forth in the New Testament with sufficient clearness to be understood. The elder, or the bishop, or the pastor, is to be looked upon as the overseer of the flock. . . . An evangelist would seem to be one who is to give his special time to the preaching of the gospel, without having charge of any flock. A teacher would appear to be one who is looked upon as a beginner in the work of the ministry. . . . The deacon becomes a helper in carrying forward the work of the church. He becomes a helper in a special manner to the elder or the overseer of the flock. In fact, all of the officials in the body of Christ are under the control and special direction of the elder in charge.

Reverend H. B. Brumbaugh, Church of the Brethren, (Dunkard), corresponding editor of The Gospel Messenger, gave the order in which the New Testament church officers took precedence, as follows. First, apostles, second, elders, bishops, evangelists, seventies; third, pastors or priests; fourth, deacons; fifth, teachers.

As a matter of precedence it is hard to place those different ones you name above as the best of Biblical exegesis differ. The apostles or ministers were first called. After this were the elders or bishops. The evangelist is self-made or called because of aptness in a special kind of work, and deacons called to assist the ministry. The pastor is an efficient minister. The prophet is a minister who has a spiritual gift in or foretelling or interpreting the word—a close student of the Scriptures.

BAPTISM

Allow me space for just a word further on the subject of baptism. Are some of us unnecessarily confusing the mind of the people when we over-emphasize the meaning of the term, "baptism for the remission of sins"? What does the preacher mean? What do the people think he means? What does the term mean?

I cannot answer the first query, but as one of the people I can say what I thought the preacher meant. I thought he meant that there is attached to the ordinance of baptism a peculiar saving grace that is not so closely connected with other principles of Christ's doctrine, such as, faith, repentance, prayer, confirmation. I seemed to get the understanding that baptism itself remitted sins—that there was a mysterious virtue in water. Hence, the query arose, What part does the blood of Christ perform? Are there two ways to receive forgiveness of sins, one through baptism, and one through the blood of the Lamb? Here was confusion.

And people around me began to cry out, "Those preachers are discountenancing the virtue of Christ's atonement; they do not believe that forgiveness comes only through the Father's grace. Away with a doctrine that teaches salvation by water! Were they wholly responsible for the confusion which arose in their mind? Let us see.

What does the term "for remission of sins" mean? The words when written by the first recorders were spelled thus: eis, aphesin, hamartion (Mark 1:4; Luke 3:3; Acts 2:38). A very comprehensive translation reads thus: "With a view to the forgiveness of transgressions." The new translations of the Scriptures use unto as the correct translation of eis. This is consistent, for the candidate who enters the waters of baptism certainly looks forward to receiving a forgiveness of his sins. Unto meaning towards, forgiveness does not come before baptism, nor while the ordinance is being performed, but after the offering has been made. And it is important that the full meaning of baptism be noted here.

Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection, knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin. . . . Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.—Romans 6:3-7, 11.

Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses.—Colossians 2:12, 13.

We are taught here (in the foregoing scriptures) that when a person is to be baptized, he comes a repentant, faith-quickened being, yet not forgiven, not free from sin, but looking toward the remission of sins. The man of sin is to be buried, and a life is to be consecrated to God. The candidate surrenders himself, and the authorized priest, acting for Christ, or in Christ's stead, presents the penitent one to the Father, who accepts the offering and forgives all trespasses.

Only God can remit sin, or send away the consequence of sin; but this cannot be done except by the processes of law. The nonrepentant is outside the pale of forgiveness; the nonobedient must suffer punishment—God and his laws are inseparable—and great is the mystery of godliness. To the Greek the preaching of the gospel is foolishness; to the Jews it is a stumblingblock; but to them that believe it is life everlasting. Nicodemus did not comprehend the plan of redemption. And his question has earth-quaked the centuries: "How can a man be born again? Can he enter the second time into his mother's womb and be born?" How wonderful, how simple, how plain the answer, in the light of history as written by the sacred penmen: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:5).

A large number of Protestant commentators have endeavored to explain this passage away, as if it did not apply to baptism at all. But by all the laws of correct interpretation, we are compelled to admit that "born of water" has here a reference to immersion in water. This was the understanding of the early writers. Paul speaks of baptism as a "burial" (Romans 6: 4), as the laver, washing, or bath of regeneration (Titus 3: 5); Tertullian refers to the saints as being little fishes "born of water"; other postapostolic writers frequently use the term, "baptism of regeneration."

It is true that many years after Christ, baptism became, in the minds of men who had wandered away from the full light of the gospel, a sort of fetish. Men not understanding the real purpose and intent of baptism, would postpone the day of their initiation into the church, believing that baptism alone would remit all past sins and fit them for the kingdom of heaven.

Another phase of this superstition was manifested when Brigham Young and the other apostate members of the quorum of twelve, were rebaptized "for the remission of their sins," and encouraged others to have the ordinance performed many times for the remission of their sins. I say superstitious, because there is only "one baptism" (Ephesians 4: 5). (In my judgment, be it sane or insane, the teaching and practice of rebaptism for expelled members is a snare and a delusion.)

"Born of water" is equivalent to regeneration by baptism. There are those who object to this formula of Christ's church, because it seems to them to tell of a magical or miraculous power in the hands of the priest. Not so, however, as I have hitherto explained; the authorized servant is simply acting for Christ, or in his stead. The "keys" given to Peter, and by which he was enabled to remit sins, was simply a term used to represent the bestowment of authority to preach the gospel and officiate in its ordinances. The disciples used these "keys" when they went forth in harmony with the great commission recorded by Matthew:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28: 19, 20.

By the use of these "keys" they opened the door of the kingdom of God and hundreds times hundreds passed into the ark of safety, being "saved by water," only, however, in a figurative way, as Peter states:

In the days of Noah, . . . eight souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ.—1 Peter 3: 20, 21.

We have in this text a powerful argument in favor of immersion as the mode of baptism, also an explanation of the object of baptism. A few drops of water placed on the head of the candidates, would not justify the remark that baptism was not for "the putting away the filth of the flesh." The body was immersed into water as it is in taking a bath, but the object was not to put away the filth of the flesh, but rather the answering of a good conscience toward God, a step in fulfilling "all righteousness." (Matthew 3: 15.) So Paul writes to the Hebrews:

Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having a high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.—Hebrews 10: 19-22.

It is called the "baptism of repentance," because baptism without repentance will avail nothing. Faith and repentance go together, and precede baptism; these three steps lead into the church of Christ, which represents his body. (Ephesians 1: 22, 23; Colossians 1: 18, 24.)

For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.—Galatians 3: 27.

In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace.—Ephesians 1: 7.

This redemption, or forgiveness of sins, does not come to us until we enter him, which entrance is made possible only by keeping the commandments of God, by obeying the gospel.

Seeing you have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit . . . being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God. . . . But the word of the Lord endureth forever, and this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you.—1 Peter 1: 22, 23, 25.

For this reason, expressed by Peter, Jesus sent his disciples into the world to preach the gospel to every creature, that they might be saved by believing and being baptized. (Mark 16: 15, 16.) "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (John 1: 7.)

On one occasion, Jesus said that he was the truth, the way, and the life. (John 14: 6.) In order to receive the cleansing application (mystically) of his blood, a person must enter him, enter the way, be baptized into the church, which is his body, for therein only are experienced the laws governing eternal life.

Baptism, then, in its outward significance, is simply the door into the external church, the church we see, the body of visible members, the holy place of the temple; but we must take this visible step before we can enter the second door, which has been opened to us by the atonement of Christ. This second door leads into the holiest place, which in the temple represented the abode of God himself. Into this sacred place of the church, where we can commune with the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, we cannot enter till cleansed by the blood of the Lamb; we must be forgiven before we can be baptized by the Holy Spirit, for the Spirit will not dwell in unclean temples.

Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for that he had said before, This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them; and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin. Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having a high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.—Hebrews 10:15-22.

Just a word on the ambiguity of verse 22. The sprinkling of the heart and the washing of the body had taken place in the lives of these Hebrew saints, and for this reason they were instructed to draw near to God, to enter the holiest place. Both the water and the blood had been applied. It was not necessary for the translators to leave this somewhat confused impression, for the Greek statement when literally translated reads, "We should approach with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having been sprinkled [as to] the heart from a conscience wicked, and having washed [as to] the body with water pure." (With this translation, the American Bible Union agrees: "having had our hearts sprinkled . . . having had our body washed." Also Sawyer's Translation: "let us approach . . . sprinkled in heart . . . washed in body.")

In this epistle to the Hebrews, Paul (or whoever wrote it), in a masterly manner treats on the fulfillment of the types of the old Jewish economy. Many of the things done by Moses and his assistants were types, or patterns, of things in the heavens: "The holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true" (Hebrews 9:24).

In the matter given in the tenth chapter of Hebrews, we have a statement of Christian experience, as well as a manifest allusion to the things requisite to procuring to a defiled Jew admittance to God's sacred presence in the temple or the tabernacle. (Read carefully Leviticus 16:14-34; Numbers 17:12, 13.) In the prototype, or real substance of things, of which the type was only the shadow, Christ was the infinite offering: he took upon him our sins, he offered his precious blood (1 Peter 1:19), by which, in a mystical sense, but none the less real, our hearts are sprinkled from an evil conscience; but the "washing" or "bathing," which was a type of literal baptism, as is plainly taught by this inspired writer, prepares us for this forgiveness, and has been well termed, baptism "for [with a view to] the remission of sins."

We conclude, therefore: Baptism is for the remission of sins. But it does not forgive sins, such power being resident in God alone.

2. Baptism is a door into the kingdom of God, the church, the body of Christ. It does not admit into the holiest place, because it does not forgive sins; but when accompanied with faith and repentance, baptism entitles us to, or brings us in contact with, the cleansing blood, or power, of God's Son.

3. We cannot approach the Father except through his appointed way, which was revealed to the children of men by messengers appointed by God. This way is sometimes called the gospel; hence, he said, "Go . . . and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16:16.)

4. We cannot take the second step until we have taken the first. Paul has named some of these steps in the sixth chapter of the Hebrew epistle: Repentance, faith, baptisms, laying on of hands. Jesus has left us an example that we should follow in his steps, obeying him as he obeyed his Father in all things. We must abide in his doctrine or we cannot be saved (2 John 8, 9, 10; 1 Timothy 4:6). We must be baptized in order to be saved. He has commanded it. (Matthew 3:15; 28:19, 20; Mark 16:16; Luke 7:29, 30; John 3:5; Acts 2:38; Romans 6:3, 4; 1 Corinthians 6:11; Galatians 3:27; Ephesians 4:5; etc.)

WHAT IS CHARITY?

Charity, Webster tells us, is the disposition to think well of others, also universal love. Jesus set this example of love by his lowly life while here among men.

If it were not for this living example life among us would be hard indeed. We find many willing enough to preach brotherly love and charity, but not so many willing to show by their manner of speaking about others that they are trying to live up to the teachings of Jesus.

It was Jesus who gave the glad news to all when he said:

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

"Judge not a friend until thou stand in his place," is a copy book text that we would do well to remember when speaking of others.

Sometimes we hear when strangers come to the church, "Oh we do not want that class to associate with us." And yet our Bible tells us that God is unchangeable and, that he is no respecter of persons. We all have a soul to save, and surely the soul of a sinning man or woman is as precious in the sight of the Lord as the soul of one who has not fallen.

The story of Mary Magdalene, methinks, is one of the sweetest in the whole Bible. She it was who washed our Savior's feet with her tears and dried them with the hairs of her head. She also covered his feet with kisses, and anointed them with precious oil. Could anything be more humble? Our Savior said, she loved much because she was forgiven much. Do you think the upward path she was striving to walk in was easy? I do not. Christ knew her life, knew her many temptations, knew how hard she resisted before she fell, and in his loving-kindness had compassion on her. We say that Christ is our pattern and guide. Why, oh why, are we following so far behind? Is it from fear of what the world may say?

Are we striving to make life nobler, to lift the fallen, and help the weak, like the one who lived his life for noble ends? Or are we following blindly in the ways of the world? I do not mean that we are to wink at sin, but rather, is it not our duty to help the fallen regain their feet again, and show them by our living example the higher path wherein mankind was meant to walk: show by our lives and conversation that we are striving to keep body and spirit in the condition in which God was pleased to make them; for we left our Creator's hands pure, and not until we reach that degree of purity again will we be allowed to dwell with the redeemed on the sanctified earth.

We have many beautiful things to talk and think about, namely, good books, pictures, art, nature, and last but not least, the gospel. Why spend our time in idle gossip? in spreading some rumor we may have heard? or in warning others against certain individuals? We believe the good shepherd is caring for us. Have we any right to build a wall of class distinction around ourselves? These are questions we might well ponder over.

We condemn the fallen ones of womankind. But pause a moment and think, are they really fallen? Or is it as the poet has said,

They have but stumbled in the path
We have in weakness trod.

Is it not our duty, then, to Speak gently to him, brother;

Thou yet mayest lead him back,
With holy words, and tones of love,
From misery's thorny track.

Forget not thou hast often sinned,
And sinful yet must be;
Deal gently with the erring one,
As God has dealt with thee.

The old Jewish custom of stoning the woman and letting the man go free had no place in the religion that Christ taught. While the practice of this custom has fallen into disuse, I am afraid some still harbor the spirit of it.

If we wish to get fine and noble things out of life, we must put fine and noble qualities into it. And what is nobler than being always willing to say a kind word to or about our fellow men?

How often a heart is wounded by a careless word! How often a resolve to do better is killed by a cruel and thoughtless remark! Many seem to be striving for some worldly honor, and in their haste forget the weak and discouraged ones among men. They forget in their haste that honor only comes to those who have striven long and faithfully to do their best, and then only when they have through long years of prayerful service become fit.

My prayer is that we may one and all become fit in the Master's service.

Of General Interest

THE ORIENT

New and important problems affecting the distribution of world population, and the pressure of races, are to be discovered in the western gift to the Orient of a knowledge of sanitation and medical science.

As an example, the Malay population of the Philippine Islands may be cited. During the last two centuries, the population of the Philippines has increased from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000.

This is not a large gain, even for a people so isolated that there is no increment from immigration. But when the conditions existing upon the islands during the period of Spanish authority are contrasted with to-day, it becomes plain that the Filipinos may easily become one of the numerically great races of the earth.

During these two centuries, head-hunting was carried on unchecked among some of the tribes, and tribal wars were almost continuous among them all. The islands were swept by repeated epidemics of smallpox, cholera and beriberi. The annual death rate from these diseases alone was close to 120,000 a year.

On the basis of the American birth rate, the annual natural increase in the Philippine Islands would be 160,000 a year, or twenty births to the thousand among 8,000,000 people.

If to smallpox and the other diseases listed above be added bubonic plague, malaria and dysentery, all of which was epidemic, it becomes apparent that the Filipinos would diminish rapidly in population, except that their birth rate is much higher than that in the United States.

A recent review of the work of Doctor Victor G. Heiser, director of health for the Philippines, describes the wonders by which the islands have been converted into one of the most healthful sections of the world.

From a smallpox death rate of 40,000 a year, the number of annual victims has dropped to 600, and there has not been a smallpox death in Manila since 1906.

This change means that because American sanitary methods have triumphed over smallpox, plague and other preventable diseases of the Orient, the population of the Philippines is certain to experience a vast increase. Where there has been a gain of 10,000 a year for two centuries, there will be in the future an increase of at least 100,000 a year, possibly twice that.

These same sanitary methods are being extended into practically every oriental country, except China. They are bound to exercise an enormous influence upon the world's population, and while there are certain reactions which tend to cut down overpopulation—such as famine and wars—the one great reaction of pestilence is removed, and the problems arising may be fraught with greater political than scientific interest.—The Des Moines Register, May 11, 1916.

THE MENACE OF WEALTH

It is true that prosperity creates new problems. Wealth often produces inequality, changes modes of life, separates rich from poor, and sows the seeds of hatred and distrust. As a poor, undifferentiated community acquires wealth, and this wealth comes to men unequally, classes arise, and men dress, live, get money, marry, and fight according to the traditions and morality of their own class. Luxury enters. Sparta cannot maintain her strict regimen, her iron money, her rigid simplicity and hardness of life, once the Lacedæmonians acquire wealth. When, under Solomon, Judea becomes opulent, classes arise, morality and religion itself become gilt-edged, and eloquent prophets preach in vain against the avarice, cruelty, and pride of the rich. In Egypt, Babylon, Carthage, great wealth involves subtle and revolutionary changes.

There are men who believe that as Rome grew rich and fell, so America will grow rich and fall. Wealth will beget luxury, and luxury will breed a weak race of soft-handed men. We shall surrender ourselves to a feverish, unresting search for gold. The rich will despoil the poor and corrupt the law. In such a mercenary commonwealth, writes a great American teacher, "the magistrates of the nation will judge for a consideration, the priests thereof will teach for hire, the prophets thereof will divine for money, the princes thereof will be companions of thieves; every-one loving gifts and following after rewards."

The error in these doleful predictions lies in a failure to distinguish between ancient wealth and modern. The analogy with Rome halts on all-fours. Rome suffered not because it was wealthy (it was poor compared to the England, France, Germany, or America of to-day), but because its wealth was ill-gotten, ill-used, and ill-distributed. Wealth came to Italy through exactions from conquered populations, not from the labors of free Roman citizens, and such spoliation destroys booty in the taking. Nor did the wealth, so obtained, go back into productive enterprises. It was squandered on palaces and arches, on armies, and on hordes of destitute, careless, and oppressed proletarians. It flowed into the leaking coffers of gluttonous senators, instead of spreading wide among an industrious population.—Walter E. Weyl, in Harper's Magazine for March.

THE USEFULNESS OF PRAYER

I used to wonder why folks pray.

If God were everywhere and knew all things, surely—so my reason told me—he needed not a human prayer to let him know of human needs; or the human appeal to quicken the action of his infinite compassion.

Then my little daughter fell sick and hovered for days near the border of the great unknown. And oh, how I prayed!

It was the prayer of the stricken soul crazed with anguish unbearable—a selfish prayer, as I think most prayers are. But it brought immediate relief—relief as appreciable as comes to the troubled soul who enters a vaulted sanctuary, with its soft music and subdued light and hears from the pulpit a message of inspiration and cheer.

It was the voice of the finite lifted to the infinite for pity and aid; and while we may not be sure what the effect upon the infinite was, this much is certain—reflexively the finite was moved and soothed and comforted.

So I know now that prayer does good. The good I see in it may not be the good that others see; others may see more than I. But at least I no longer scoff at prayer. No man may scoff at prayer who has gone into a deep experience and found a time when, alone, his spirit irresistibly reaches out for a communion with the all pervasive spirit which men call by various names, but which, under any name, means God.

To realize that man, in spite of all that he has done, in spite of all that he can see or feel or know, is weak and small; and that in the wonderful universe of which he is so tiny a part there is a force, a power, compared with which his boasted best is but a chip on the wave or a leaf whirling in the storm, is good now and then; and prayer is one of the instinctive expressions of this chastening realization.

Prayer is a voice of faith; and faith removes mountains.

We have in us that which is more than reason. We have in us sensibilities, will. Reason needs exercise that it may grow in power. The sensibilities need exercise that they may grow in power. The unused will becomes as flabby as the unused muscle.

The reason may not explain for us all the mystery in prayer, but we know that our sensibilities are mellowed and enriched by prayer; and that our will then gains a firmer purpose.

So I say, do not affect to despise prayer.

Try, instead, to grow up to a capacity for its helpful use.—Liby S. Richard, in The Des Moines News.

The Outlook

In the general readjustment of conditions throughout the church the woman's organization has not escaped the widespread impulse to move up and occupy higher and broader grounds. Of this fact, the new constitution and by-laws adopted by the general convention are evidence, and were carefully planned to cover the needs of an organization designed to meet all requirements and activities found among our women.

The outlines made for departmental work cover territory both old and new; some familiar activities have been classified and systematized perhaps under new titles; some new lines of activities and study have been suggested or emphasized. These follow lines legitimate to us, as women workers in the church, and many are truly inspirational or prophetic in their character, looking forward, as they do, to future achievements.

Of this latter class, the "preparational" studies in the educational department are perhaps, the most prominent.

They embrace all those studies which, by their nature and scope, will prepare and qualify us, as women, as mothers, wives, neighbors, and—shall we say it?—citizens, to take up life's duties with greater conception of their far-reaching importance—their vital meanings, and serious consequences. We truly desire to know the inner and deeper meaning of the experiences which come to us; we wish to understand their relations to us and our development, and, through us, to those about us; for it is when we have learned how to adjust ourselves to the conditions about us, with the center of our attention fixed upon the influence for good to others that those conditions and our efforts may bring about, that we have solved the great problem of human responsibility, and thereby found our real selves, through finding and accomplishing our real mission. The study of psychology helps us to understand ourselves as well as the workings of the minds about us; the study of sociology helps us to understand the fundamental principles which are at work in the steady upward stream of human life of which we are but fragments; the study of history helps us to understand how we may profit by the mistakes or triumphs of the past; and so with many other lines of thought and research which help us to understand life and its problems better, and thus enable us the more speedily and accurately to arrive at their eternal solutions.

This week Sister Helen Silsbee Smith gives us a brief sketch of what the educational department stands for, and what it is hoped may be accomplished thereby. It is urged that all women who are interested in this line of preparation, who, (either for themselves or for the benefit of a group of sisters) wish to become acquainted with the opportunities which will be offered them, in the way of outlines for study, references to books and materials, or suggestions as to subjects or courses, will write to Sister Smith at once, and receive from her the very intelligent and capable assistance she is so willing to give concerning this department work.

Notes

The Omaha Auxiliary gave a program on the evening of May 16, in which the work of the organization was put before the many people assembled in response to invitations general and specific. The work of women in general and our church women in particular, was spoken of by Sister Lorena Leeka, Brother H. A. Scott, president of the branch, told of the many ways in which a local woman's society is of assistance and service to the branch. Sister Anderson explained the aims and work of the Oriole girls; and Sister Helen Smith, president of the local auxiliary, spoke of the work it was doing, and of the plans for the immediate future. Musical numbers were interspersed with these talks, and later, strawberry shortcake was served in the basement, netting the local over $17.50.

The ladies of the Woman's Educational Society at Lamoni, gave a cutting from "The Merchant of Venice" at the high school building Monday, May 8. The cutting included six scenes from the play. It was given without costume or scenery, but was quite a clear interpretation of the play, centering on the Shylock and Portia stories, and bringing them out in contrast to each other. This afforded pleasant and profitable teamwork for the ladies taking part in the play, and also afforded entertainment to the women of the society and their husbands and friends who came to hear the program.

This is a practical example of how the educational department may cooperate with the home department. Their study was not only a pleasure and profit to themselves, but was given out again in a way to be of real benefit to the community by providing legitimate recreation and entertainment. Many expressed themselves as having greatly enjoyed the production, and having gained, as well, a greater appreciation of this delightful play of Shakespeare's. G. B.

Cooperation

The following excerpts from the letter of a gifted sister will serve to illustrate the wonderful spirit of cooperation, of consecration and of humility which is permeating the minds and hearts of many of our church women at this time. The spirit is beautiful and truly inspirational, as it shows how God is working to accomplish his purposes: warming the hearts of the people with this splendid desire to be of service, to place their powers, natural and acquired, at the feet of the Master.

"I shall always consider my time at the disposal of the church for whatever purpose she may wish. . . . I am indeed glad of the opportunity to get in close touch with church matters. There are several forward movements in the church which have interested me very much. . . . The Woman's Auxiliary seems to have great potentialities, just as our 'Federation of Women's Clubs.' I am so glad our women are putting their oar in the great woman's movement of the world. Women have so much, socially and economically, as well as religiously and politically, which they can do; and more and more that they will be able to do in the future."

The new constitution and by-laws, adopted by the recent convention of the Woman's Auxiliary at Independence, is a very encouraging indication of the desire for progress felt by the women of our church. We, as an integral part of the whole church, are partaking of the wave of enthusiasm for advancement in educational and intellectual lines which is sweeping over not only our church body, but the entire country. We fully realize that in order to keep up with the onward march of civilization and progress, we must fall into line and step with educators of the time, or we will be left in the background as stragglers and deserters from the vast army who are giving their lives to the upbuilding of the race.

The intention of the committee who formed the constitution was to broaden the outlook and to increase the scope of its activities so as to satisfy the yearnings, and fill the needs of every member.

In doing this, the individual members are not to be left to struggle alone, or to work out their problems without assistance. The spirit of service is in our midst, to the extent that women, selected from the rank and file of consecrated workers, by the executive committee, have agreed to devote their time and energy to helping and advising those who desire to take up any line of work suggested under the different departments.

The educational department furnishes the basis for study in problems which confront the woman in the home, the mother, and the one who will accept intellectual food in scientific and cultural lines which have to do with the betterment of our people, outside as well as within the confines of the home. The purpose of this department is to establish classes for study, to furnish the stimulus to engage in various mental activities which will make the women of the church better wives, better mothers, and better members of society in general, as well as of the church body.

Lists of textbooks and working outlines will be gladly furnished to any local desiring to take up any specific line; and to those who wish to establish some sort of study club. Under this department, but who have formed no special plan of procedure, suggestions and information and help will be given by the one in charge.

The spirit of cooperation, which was felt so strongly in the convention, must permeate to the most remote branch of the church; each local, each isolated member must feel that the sisterhood is holding out its hands lovingly and whole-heartedly, and is not only willing, but anxious and glad to help in any way possible. In this way we will be doing our share toward building up Zion; we will be helping to make our organization one which will be worthy the name of God's chosen people.

HELEN SILSBEE SMITH.

Reports to the Late General Convention

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

The work has grown the past year in interest and in numbers—all departments have been active, except perhaps the "Home Economics," and this one does not seem to have accomplished the good it is capable of; however the heads of departments have shown much activity and have done a commendable work.

Letters have reached me from all parts of the United States, from Canada, England, Tahiti and Australia, some very encouraging, and many asking for literature and advice. We can see the necessity of new leaflets in every department and are expecting our new by-laws will meet the requirements of locals.

Several hundred letters and post cards have been sent to workers, and over one thousand pieces of literature have been mailed to locals, reunions and private individuals from this place, and no doubt each superintendent has sent out many more.

So many of our most willing helpers and those most efficient are handicapped by home duties—knowing how to meet and handle these situations renders them more capable advisors, but we must furnish helps in the way of printed matters that can be easily mailed and we suggest:

First, That every department superintendent write subject matter for one small leaflet as soon as possible after May 1, to be sent to our department in one of the church papers.

Second, That some provision be made to supply reunions with literature showing the good of the auxiliary work.

Third, That we ask the ministers in charge of districts to send us names of one or more sisters (in the locality where they labor) who would be capable of helping the women of her neighborhood, also write us what help is most needed.

Our readings have been especially good and helpful to the young as well as the elder ones. Many letters of commendation have been received from those reading Autumn Leaves, HERALD and Ensign. Much more good could be done if we had means to put the best and most complete of these readings in leaflet form for distribution at district conferences and reunions.

Sisters, we need your help in all the church. Let us make the world better because we have lived and worked. Help us by your prayers, your means, and your cooperation.

Do not say you have not time for this; you can save time by knowing the best and shortest way to achieve results.

Much good has been done and so much more can be done in the homes of the church members and in the world to pave the way for the spread of the gospel that we must be united to do our part and labor together for good.

We need more leaders. Many localities do not know what "The Woman's Auxiliary" means. Many sisters (and indeed women in our localities) lack knowledge in "home making" and in the simple matters of cleanliness and bodily care; also proper methods of child care. This is why—First, we must secure more willing and intelligent workers; second, we must encourage the sisters to read the church papers; third, we must provide more literature of a practical and easily understood variety.

Preparedness is very necessary to help the young meet the issues of life, to fit the women to fulfill their mission in the home and community and nowhere more so than in abolishing malice, envy, and jealousy and nourishing the seeds of peace, love for each other and unselfishness.

Brother F. M. Smith's address to the sisters at Independence opened a vision of the good we can do that made us feel to pray, "Father make us worthy of the great trust and responsibility—raise up those of the sisters who can live and teach the joy of service."

MRS. S. R. BURGESS, President.

REPORT OF VICE PRESIDENT

As the report of the advisory board to the General Conference covers the work done during the year, there is but little that I need to report.

As vice president it has fallen to me to take charge of our board meetings except on one occasion when our president was with us for a few hours.

I have tried to keep in touch with our president and to carry out her suggestions so far as possible, though at times it has been necessary for us to take the initiative.

We labor under great disadvantages with our president in one place and our secretary in another, but we have been very fortunate this year in having so competent a person in our general treasurer who not only has acted in that capacity, but has been secretary for the board, also, and the amount of work she has done for the society is almost incredible.

We really think the society should take some steps to make it possible for those who are competent to do the work of the auxiliary, but have home duties that hinder them, by remunerating them so that they may be able to give some of their time to the work. This work has grown to such an extent that we cannot afford to make it a side issue. If we do so, we are neglecting our opportunities to labor in the great harvest of the Lord.

May the Spirit of the Lord bless and direct in all the meetings of this convention, is the prayer of EMMA E. SMITH.

Zion As I See It

It has been some time since I have made an effort to write, yet it has not been because I have lost faith in the gospel work. Since leaving Southern Indiana in November, 1912, and locating in the Independence Stake, I have tried to observe the various movements of the church work, and all of the many important events. I have, I think, from careful study, seen many things to gladden my heart in the onward progress of this great latter-day work of God. And to say that I have lost interest would not be the fact. It sometimes is well for us to all take a careful study of events in order to form a right conclusion.

Now, to be at my task, as I see Zion, I believe that any who conclude that Zion is at a standstill should get such a thought out of their minds. In nearly four years of personal observation I can see a continued progress for good. Some make the unwarranted statement that we are drifting backward, but I cannot agree with these. I am frank to admit that I have not lived up to the standard required in God's holy law, but this is only because Satan has had his part in my life, I never had such a fight to combat his influence as I have had since locating in Zion. But this I expected, and I was not deceived. I firmly believe that no one who desires to serve God will escape the powerful influence that he brings to bear upon the personality of all who seek to serve the Master.

I have full confidence in the work as outlined by the Presidency of the church, and believe that the last conference took a forward step.

It is true that some have had doubt as to the wisdom of certain conference actions, but I for one can see in the new organization of the stakes in the central place by dividing the Stake of Independence into three, an important move, and believe President Smith, with his associates, was directed by the "divine power." The need for more active work by fuller organization is very apparent. We have several thousand members to care for, and the number is on the increase very rapidly. Surely none can help but observe that some of the branches are too large, and I look to see some of the larger branches divided. It seems when a branch once has five hundred members it is entirely too large for one set of officers to care for. Again, I think that when a branch has that many members, yes, even three hundred, all the time should be required of the presiding officers, as well as the priest and teacher.

We must go forward, and those who labor in the affairs of life should be taught that the financial side should be cared for by them. There was complaint made that dividing the Independence Stake would add expense in providing for additional officers. Surely no one who is thinking can help but observe the need for several competent men to give all their time and service to the new stakes; and I for one am willing to put forth all my best efforts to support those chosen to do this work.

Walter W. Smith, J. A. Tanner and D. J. Krah, are, to my notion, men well qualified for the work in the new stakes, and they should have the full support of every member. I look to see the conditions of the branches built up, and believe these men will put into effect organizations not only in the central branches, but in all branches and missions, that will advance Zion in the onward progress, as has never been before. Those who had charge in the past did well, but they had more than they could possibly do.

Again, I can see the beginning of the work of the bishops of the new stakes, as they may be organized,—planning their work that every member may be taught the financial side, that the time may soon be here when all who can do so will be required to contribute to the aid of the church. What we want is more confidence in our brethren. Why look at the faultfinding side? We have all we can do by pushing forward the work of God. "Plenty of men will continue to build Satan's kingdom," but that is not the work of good Latter Day Saints.

So, in conclusion, let me say that I can see in Zion an increase of noble men and women, more than I saw four years ago. I see more effort along right lines, and can see an increased tendency on the part of most of our people to develop a greater desire in helping one another. I can see purer lives, nobler characters, stronger manhood, stronger womanhood, more love, more desire to do the right. I can also see a stronger effort on the part of Satan to destroy confidence, to destroy manhood and womanhood, to destroy the work of the living God.

Let us beware and think often before we speak. Let kind words go forth to those overtaken in a fault. Let us pray for them. Let us encourage those who are stronger, that they may fulfill their work, and in the end that we may all rejoice in Zion the home of God's chosen and faithful ones.

JOHN ZAHND.

[The following letter from Elder Rees and Sister Hannah Jenkins, laboring in behalf of the church at Jerusalem, Palestine, written to Elder R. M. Elvin, Lamoni, Iowa, under date of February 25, 1916, will be read by the Saints with interest.—EDITORS.]

Dear Brother: It has been quite a long while since we heard from you, and we are wondering how you are. We are with you in mind often, and we pray that we shall meet you again soon.

It is likely that you have heard of my late illness. It was the worst thing I ever had. I almost lost hope of recovery. The doctors had no hope, and had it not been for a promise I had about the time I took sick, that I should recover and have better health, because I had a great deal yet to do, I think I would have lost hope also.

In the midst of my sickness, when I was beginning to take a turn for the better, the HERALD containing the prayer offered in the ordination of President Frederick M. Smith, came. Sister Jenkins took it up on the Sabbath to read. Just as she began to utter the first word of that prayer the Spirit rested on both of us in power. My pain ceased. A calm and powerful influence rested on us. The Holy Spirit bore witness to our souls that the call and ordination was divine, and now we know for a surety that President Frederick M. Smith is president of the high priesthood, not by right of lineage only, but by God's own calling.

We sometimes wondered whether or not God would bear special evidence to our souls concerning the successor to our late president. He did it in a most impressive manner, and oh, what comfort and consolation it is to know that God is at the helm—that he is directing and calling to the presidency of the high priesthood his chosen.

We are glad to say our health is improving, but I am a long way from being all right, and it is my sickness that has kept me in this land so long after being called home.

With kindest and best wishes to you and the Saints, we are as ever,
Your humble brother and sister in Christ,
REES AND HANNAH JENKINS.

JAY, FLORIDA, April 2, 1916.

Editors Herald: I do not know what I could do without the HERALD. It comes as a silent preacher to me. My very soul is filled with joy on reading the good letters in the HERALD.

I joined the church in 1881. I am trusting in the Lord that I may hold out faithful to the end, and do unto all men as I would have them do to me. Though I have combats with my neighbors, I love them. I ask the prayers of all that I may never turn back to the world, but hold on to the rod of iron and be saved in the kingdom of God.

My husband is a minister of the church. Though we are a little band of unorganized members, we have meeting in our house.

Your sister,
ELIZABETH BOOKER.

LOOKING GLASS, OREGON, April 8, 1916.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is all the preacher I have of our faith. A Methodist preacher comes here twice a month. There are a dozen different faiths represented in this valley. These count among their number fine people, but they cannot see the right way. I attend the Christian Church when I go to Roseburg. My daughter and children attend Sunday school there. I hope we can secure one of our elders to come to Roseburg this summer. We are doing all we can to let our light shine. I have twenty of the church books, but not all of them.

May God bless all the Saints.

Your sister in Christ,
OPHELIA BUELL.

WEYBURN, SASKATCHEWAN, April 6, 1916.

Editors Herald: I wish to locate the officers of the Weyburn Branch, and take this means, thinking it may be the best way of doing so.

We have read the HERALD ever since we came to this country, and have always found it interesting as well as helpful. Our branch is in a scattered condition, yet the few here are not discouraged. We are always glad to welcome any Saints or visitors who may be stopping off here.

The heavenly Father manifested his love and kindness to us last winter through Elder Frank Jordan. Our little boy had pneumonia, and the morning before Elder Jordan came the doctor told me he was in for a long siege. He was administered to that evening, and the next morning was up and well. We are thankful to our heavenly Father, and feel that we must serve and love him better.

Should Brother Robert Boardway or Brother Daniel Sandage, each holding the office of priest and holding membership in the Weyburn Branch, read this, I wish them to send me their addresses.

Ever praying that I may be found faithful, I am,

Your sister,
MRS. J. R. DICKSON.

BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND, April 18, 1916.

Editors Herald: I am writing to let all know of our change; instead of 53 Upper Grove Street, Smethwick, please note our present address.

We are endeavoring here to keep the gospel going, and are doing our best under the unrestful circumstances which are prevailing. We find it hard to make converts, but are praying that our efforts will at some time prove successful. There are many of the Saints called into this great war, and we pray that God will protect them.

We are all anxiously waiting to read the news (which we hope soon to arrive) of the General Conference. We have all prayed that it may be a success and a blessing to the church in all lands. We were glad Bishop R. May arrived safely, and hope he will return blessed and strengthened by his experience.

As for myself, I am still glad to be a Latter Day Saint, though very imperfect. I am doing what I can to develop myself, that I may grow more like the pattern Jesus set for me to follow. Under present conditions one finds it hard to struggle against the evils of this world, but I know God is with me, and if I will keep faithful he will bring me over victorious. We hope that your country does not become involved in this war; it is awful enough without any more joining to kill and destroy. We hope the end will soon be in sight.

Ever praying that the gospel will spread and God's peace soon reign over all lands,

Your brother in the gospel,
W. B. ARROWSMITH.

230 Newcombe Road, Hundsworth.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN, April 16, 1916.

Editors Herald: Milwaukee Branch wishes to call the attention of those who may have relatives or friends in this place who might be interested in gospel work to the fact that we have rented a hall on the south side of the city in the National Building, corner National Avenue and Grove Street, easily reached by all city cars. This location is one block east of the Chicago-Milwaukee Electric station.

We would appreciate it if Saints who write to friends or relatives residing here would call their attention to our meetings. We have heretofore met from house to house, but have recently decided to let our light shine before all. We are a small band of only sixteen active members, but we have secured more than enough to cover hall expenses. We are receiving visitors and are going to make a great effort to double or triple our membership in the near future. Elder T. V. Dreyer is delivering a series of sermons Sunday evenings which are very interesting to all. This is one way of holding the attention of visitors.

Hoping this will find favor among the Saints, I remain,
In gospel bonds,

W. E. GITTINS.

SHELLBROOK, SASKATCHEWAN, April 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: It is with great pleasure that I look forward to the coming of the HERALD. I miss it very much if a copy fails to reach us. We have had a late spring here, the ground being covered with snow, and there being sleighing until a short time ago. Even now there are large drifts of snow. The buds are coming, however, the grass is beginning to look green, and everything is putting on new life.

Elder Jordan was with us and held meetings in the school-house in January. Considering the bad roads and cold weather there was a good attendance. There were never less than thirty present, and one night there were fifty or more, some coming three and four miles. Some who had never heard a Latter Day Saint preach before were there and said it was the best they ever heard. Elder Jordan has done a good work here. The outsiders are looking forward to his return. Those who have not heard him preach, but have heard of him, are anxious for him to come again. Elder E. R. Davis, too, is well liked by everyone.

Much prejudice is being removed here, and a good work can be done if the Saints will awaken to their duty. We have no church building, but have held meetings, also Sunday school and Religio, in private houses. It seemed no use trying to persuade outsiders to attend until we had a two-day meeting last summer, Elders Jordan and Davis preaching. At this time we secured good crowds. Now outsiders are anxious to go to our services. We are looking forward to Elder Jordan's return, and are also planning a reunion to be held here some time during the summer, notice of which will appear later.

I would have enjoyed attending General Conference and meeting with the Saints and old friends and relatives. We always have a longing for the homeland.

Ever praying for the spirit of the gospel, and the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your sister,
EFFIE J. DENTON.

VASSAR, MICHIGAN, April 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have read with interest the discussions in the HERALD of the part music has in drawing people to the gospel. I heard and obeyed the gospel forty-four years ago in Canada, at a time of much opposition. It was hard then to get the gospel before the people.

God blessed my sister and myself with the gift of song, though we did not have a book containing notes at that time. We only had the dear old Harp. We did not have much time for learning music, either. We would sing with the Spirit and the understanding. People came to the meetings to hear "the Mormon girls," as they called us, sing. Old Brother Brown and Samuel Brown were among the number who came out to hear the new singers, and they, with the rest of the family, excepting one, embraced the gospel, as did many others in that place.

I always longed for a musical training, but never had the privilege of taking it up, and now as my days are coming to an end, I love music with all my soul, and often pray that it may be my lot to sing the lovely strains with those who gather home to Zion.

My prayer to God each day is that those who are assisting along this line will be blessed with power, and will teach the honest in heart everywhere that the power of song may redound to the honor and glory of God. I love the work more as time goes by, and feel certain of the final redemption of Zion. Let us all labor as one family to accomplish this end.

Your Sister,
LIZZIE HARTNELL POHLY.

DES MOINES, IOWA, April 25, 1916.

Editors Herald: I saw a letter in the HERALD some little time ago from a brother, saying if all the church members would save five cents a week to pay on the church debt, we would soon have the church debt all paid off. I thought I would put by five cents every week for that purpose. I began New Year's Day, and I intend to try and keep it up. I laid by fifty cents, that paid for ten weeks. Then when that time expired I laid by another fifty cents for another ten weeks. If half the church members would do that, what an amount of good we could do in paying off the debts of all the church institutions, and in placing money in the bishop's hands to help the missionaries' families.

I am in my seventy-second year, I have been in this church forty years. I regret I have not been able to do more for this cause than I have, which grows dearer to me every day. It is the greatest enjoyment I have on this earth. I can testify that it is the only true church on the earth to-day.

I have passed through many afflictions and sad trials, but God in his tender mercy has helped me to bear them all, and with his help I intend to sacrifice more for this gospel from now on. I feel my time is short here on earth, but I will do all I can while I am permitted to remain.

I can truthfully say I have my first nickel to spend for a movie show or theater. I wish I could say the same for some of my children. I talk to them and pray for them that they may see differently before it is too late. I have no desire for worldly pleasures.

I hope soon to be where I can attend church when I am able, and mingle with the Saints. My health is very poor. I ask the prayers of all the Saints in my behalf, that if it is God's will I may be healed of my afflictions. I intend to go to Hamilton, Missouri, in May, to make my home with my daughter, Mrs. J. H. Bullard, if I am spared till then.

I don't believe Christ would be pleased to come and find debts hanging over his institutions, and his children with money in the banks drawing interest to leave to some one else who has plenty of this world's goods and to spare. So brothers and sisters, let this be a banner year for sending in our tithes and offerings for the spreading of this gospel. We see the awful calamities and destructions coming upon this earth to-day, and we know the end is near, for the appearing of our Savior. Let us have our lamps trimmed and burning, and be prepared.

If Sister A. B. Cochraine sees this letter I wish she would write to me. I have lost her address and would like to hear from her once more.

Ever praying God to bless his people, I am,
Your sister in the true faith,
Mrs. R. L. G.

GRAND VALLEY, ONTARIO, April 26, 1916.

Editors Herald: Your valuable paper reaches us every Saturday evening, and I must say I enjoy reading it, coming at it does laden with food for thought. The editorials are certainly grand, and the letters also. These two departments receive my first attention.

It gives me encouragement when I read of how others are spending their whole time, talent, and energy, in the service of God, reaping abundant blessings as they go along, and making sure their hold upon eternal life.

I have just finished reading the last number of the HERALD (April 19), containing the minutes of General Conference, and as I meditate upon the revelation contained therein, I am comforted with the thought that although Satan is working havoc among the nations of the world, God is watching over and caring for his people, ever being willing to bless and ready to direct when occasion demands.

Many of the young men here in Ontario have enlisted in the service of King George, many have crossed the waters never to return. It prompts me to greater diligence when I read of the many young men enlisting also in the service of King Emmanuel.

When we think of conditions as they exist throughout the world, we feel like saying with one of old, "When shall the earth rest?"

In looking over the different appointments I notice we are to have our same old "staff" with us again this conference year: Brethren John Shields, S. G. St. John, W. D. Ellis, R. T. Brown, and others, and these are not to be despised either; they can tell you all you want to know—and a little more sometimes.

Wishing you every success, I am,
Your brother,
EARNEST CLARK.

LEON, IOWA, April 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: On receipt of a letter from my sister-in-law from Manzanola, Colorado, I concluded to write the HERALD in the hope that the officers in charge of the La Junta Branch, Colorado, might write or call on her. Her name is Mrs. Charles Adair. She should be addressed at Manzanola, Colorado, Box 274. She is isolated and discouraged. If she is written to she should be referred to the place of meeting at La Junta. She might be able to go to church if she knew where the meetings were held. Her husband is not a member of the church.

I ask the Saints to pray that she may be strengthened and encouraged, and that she may press onward at all times and do what she can for the Master's cause.

Your sister,
MRS. E. H. BAILEY.

SAWYER, IDAHO, April 20, 1916.

Editors Herald: We rejoice in being privileged to read the many spiritual letters in the HERALD. The HERALD is a welcome visitor at our home. We have with pleasure read the Daily Ensign, which we enjoyed very much. Idaho is many miles from Independence, but we were just as anxious to get the daily as those nearer there. This has been the first General Conference we were ever interested in. In fact, the first we ever had any knowledge of. We are thankful to read and know that God has so blessed his children, and that we are made to know that we please him in our efforts to do right and keep his commandments.

As a family, we find much joy and happiness in the latter-day work. We study the church books and Bible, that we may be ready to tell the gospel story to our fellow men, our friends, and kinsmen. It seems easy to distinguish those who are interested from those who do not care to hear the story. I find the Christian Scientists the hardest people to talk to. They place their whole faith in Mrs. Eddy and her works, or writings. They read what their "lessons" tell them to read. They do not "search the Scriptures" for themselves. I find it difficult to persuade them to believe even that the people whom Jesus healed were really sick. They say these people only thought they were sick.

Dear brothers and sisters, let us lift our hearts to God in thanksgiving for the restored gospel, and the fruits of its benefits to all true Saints. It seems hard for us to see honest-hearted people reject when we know it is so plain. I sometimes feel when people turn away from my talk, that it is not wise for Saints to urge the gospel on an uninterested people. We find many, however, who are hungry spiritually, and eager to hear the truth.

We certainly rejoice to know our faithful laborer and missionary, J. A. Bronson, has been sent back to us. We see Brother Sidney Gray is sent south. This is quite a change for them. Idaho is noted for its cold nights, the northern part is, we know, as all who attend our reunion will also know. We pray for a good attendance at this reunion, and the Holy Spirit to rule and guide us as one family. We think all Saints near here are expecting to do all they can to be ready. I know all the Crabb family are working to this end. All are looking eagerly forward to the reunion. We hope to have a patriarch with us, and many new Saints. I believe God will abundantly bless his children if we pray the prayer of faith, and ask for what we need, expecting to receive the same. We have his promise, Ask and you shall receive. So I do not feel it is asking too much to ask for a patriarch at this our first reunion, and I believe with all my heart we shall have one. Elder J. A. Bronson was instrumental in getting the reunion, and we have good workers on our committees, hence it should be a success.

We hope to see the latter-day work opened up to the north of us this year. There is about eighty miles of territory between Sagle and the international line to traverse yet. Sandpoint and Bonners Ferry would be good places to plant the work.

Brothers and sisters, let us put forth every effort for the cause, and present our bodies a living sacrifice, which is our reasonable service.

Ever praying for the oneness of God's great church, I am,
Your sister in bonds,
JENNIE CRABB.

Extracts from Letters

William C. Chapman, of Higbee, Missouri, writes: "Brethren A. M. Chase and John Ely are with us, and we are having some good meetings. They hold a short service on the main street each evening."

Elder H. W. Savage writes from Independence, Missouri, under date of May 19, 1916, as follows: "We are leaving Independence to-day for Spokane, Washington. Will stop a week there, go on to San Francisco, and sail from there on Steamer Maitai of the Union S. S. line, June 21. Will stop at Papette, Tahiti, for one month, and go on to New Zealand, landing there in August, about the 10th."

Elder Clyde F. Ellis writes from Papeete, Tahiti, May 6: "We are all well at present and hopeful of good this coming year. We are laboring to that end."

News from Missions

South Sea Islands

We are all waiting anxiously for the news from the conference in America, which will reach us in a few hours, as the mail steamer arrived from America this morning, meeting the one bound for the States here in Papeete Harbor. We sincerely hope that the news reaches us that more help was sent us this year, for we have many islands that need laborers, among those both in and outside of the church, and who at the present time are suffering for help because of there not being a sufficient number of missionaries in the mission.

The Taronia church, which has been in construction for two or three years, was finally completed, and on April 2, at 10 a. m. we were permitted to dedicate it to the service of the Master. It is, I believe, the third church building of the church to be erected in the city of Papeete, others having been destroyed. The one just completed is a nice, neat building which is a credit to us, and which is the realization of many desires of the former missionaries. It was completed at a cost of $2,333.63, which is very cheap for being so far from the States, as all of our lumber and material of every sort had to be imported.

On April 3, the Religio convention convened and performed its regular routine of business. Brother A. H. Christensen was elected president of Religio in the mission, with Pori a Bellais as his assistant. Delegates were elected for the coming convention.

On April 4, the Sunday school convention was opened, continuing that day only. The writer was elected superintendent of the mission, with Tapu a Moana as assistant. Delegates were selected for the coming convention.

On April 5, the natives had what they call a "Mahana Oaoaraa," which means, "rejoicing day." It was spent in songs, readings, and varied selections of native origin. We tried to impress upon their minds in these conventions and in this peculiar program of theirs the need of spending such time in ways of profit, and in the endeavor to learn their duties in these auxiliaries. All in all I believe that good was done, and that desires were instilled in them to seek a higher plane, instead of being satisfied with their present condition.

On the morning of the 6th, the mission conference was opened in the usual way, with not a very large representation of Saints from the distant islands, due to the drafting of soldiers among them. The poor native is so frightened over the war that the drafting of their own race has completely undermined them. Two of our people have been drafted and have left, and others are expecting to leave soon. Notwithstanding there were not many from the distant islands, there was a good spirit present throughout the sessions. Many things were considered, among which were the following:

Resolution was passed that the former request to President Frederick M. Smith to visit the islands be extended until he complies with it.

Resolution prevailed that the bishop of the church be requested to not permit individuals to build individual houses upon the church property in Taronia, but that instead it be given to branches and districts, which is in accord with the object in mind at the time of the purchase of this land.

Resolution prevailed that the mission take steps toward the building of a small printing office aside from the missionary house, and that there also be purchased a larger printing machine for the same.

Sometime before conference we were successful in purchasing a secondhand organ for the Taronia Branch. This is the first organ that has ever been purchased, except a small hand organ here in the mission. It proved to be a profitable addition and a great assistance to us in our conference throughout. It brought about quite a discussion among the natives, so much so that a resolution was presented by one of the elders requesting that all the branches be commanded to purchase organs for their branches. The native who can never see the happy medium could not understand why that would be unwise. However, the majority overruled and the resolution lost. The influence that it had upon the native mind was for good, and we believe that we can see the native going above his former tradition into the more excellent and better way. We are laboring hard for that end. Sister Ellis at the present has a music class of eight, and progress is being made by them. It will be productive of good.

The several quorums met during conference, and we, that is Brother Christensen and I, were very busy throughout, meeting with them and assisting them to get over some things that to them were monsters. Owing to the death of the president of the elders quorum, whose name was William a Hoarii, Tapu a Moana was chosen as his successor. Alfred Sanford, first counselor to Brother William, also died during the past year. Tapu chose as his counselors Paia a Metuaaro of Manihi, and Hiti of Tikahau. We believe that they are all good men.

Sisters Ellis and Christensen held meetings for the sisters and children each day during the conference. Their work was profitable and timely.

Conference continued until April 11, when we adjourned to meet with the Tikahau Branch for the conference of 1917.

We are endeavoring to get the branch records in a shape so that we may be able to report to General Conference of 1917 the standing of the mission. They have been straightened many times, but because we have not capable secretaries it seems an impossibility to keep them in proper condition.

We are all happy in the conflict in which we are engaged, and are trusting for the advancement of the mission during the year that is before us.

Hoping and praying that all is well with the church in the land of Zion, we remain,

Yours in the conflict,

CLYDE F. ELLIS.

News from Branches

San Bernardino, California

Out of courtesy to Brother George H. Wixom, mayor of the city, Sunday, May 14, Company K, National Guard of California, decided by unanimous vote to attend the church of which he is pastor, for their annual church meeting.

The house was well filled to standing room, the soldiers attending in a body, under command of Major Byron W. Allen, and Captain V. B. Hogue.

The police department of the city also attended in a body under chief W. A. Shay, Desk Sergeant, Brother Will A. Boren and Captain V. B. Hogue.

A musical program was rendered by our members, assisted by some of the best talent of the city, and this friendly mingling of the forces is one of the most pleasant experiences of such an occasion.

As the soldiers approached the church door Mr. Harry Russel, formerly a bugler in the English navy, also with the Canadian army, and for four years chief bugler and master-at-arms on the U. S. S. McCulloch, blew the "Church Call" by which the men filed into the church. The hymn "Redeemer of Israel" was sung by the congregation.

Brother Will A. Boren, Sergeant of Police, was in charge and presided; invocation by the chaplain, Reverend Shaw.

The sermon was by Brother George H. Wixom in his usual forceful, vigorous strain, making a beautiful comparison between the life of Jesus Christ who laid down his life for others and "that we might have life and have it more abundantly," and the soldier who under the Stars and Stripes is prepared to lay down his life for the people of his country if need be.

While the flag of other nations stands for the protection of their own people, the flag of the United States stands for freedom and protection of an ever widening cosmopolitan population who seek freedom and liberty, material and religious, under the folds of the Stars and Stripes.

It is no disgrace for a soldier to be a believer in God. The great Lincoln and Washington who have immortalized their names, were frequently found on their knees and not ashamed to acknowledge their faith in divine assistance; reference also was made to the army of Gideon.

"We do not believe in taking life, but if necessary to defend our country and preserve peace, our soldiers should be so trained that they would be the 'best shot.'"

On Sunday, April 29, at San Bernardino, Brother T. W. Williams, although suffering severely from physical ills, including a boil on his neck, delivered what is reported to have been one of the most powerful and inspirational addresses of his experience before the Young Men's Christian Association, and a good representative attendance. His topic was "A look into the future."

The meeting had been arranged by Brother George H. Wixom, and was enlivened by an orchestra of eight pieces, made up of the members of various city church orchestras.

Invocation by pastor of First Methodist Church, Reverend Geyer. Mr. Holobaugh, general secretary of the San Bernardino Young Men's Christian Association, presided. Vocal solo by Brother Frederick Hogben, of Leeds, England. Benediction by Mr. J. B. Phillips, manual instructor in the San Bernardino Polytechnic High School. R. T. COOPER.

The Presidency

APPOINTMENT OF MISSIONARY

To Whom It May Concern: The General Conference having referred the name of Elder E. J. Goodenough to the First Presidency and minister in charge for appointment, we hereby appoint said brother to labor in the Northern Wisconsin District for the remainder of the conference year.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

J. F. CURTIS, Minister in Charge.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 29, 1916.

Pastoral

To the Officers and Members of the Church in the Eastern States and European Mission—Great Britain, Scandinavia, Germany, Switzerland and Palestine; Greeting: The appointment of the late General Conference provides that we are to be laborers together during the year, so I extend to you hearty greetings in the Lord, and pray we may have a year of great success and rich spiritual blessings.

After prayerful consideration of this great field, we have decided upon the following program: To organize our local officers for an energetic proselyting campaign throughout all parts of the land, wherever openings can be obtained. All elders, priests, and lesser officers, whose time is not fully occupied by branch work, are urged to devote one or more evenings a week, and a portion of each Sunday to missionary work. There are many houses in cities and country, where they will welcome the workers, who come to preach the word and strive to build up the kingdom of God. Park meetings, street services, tentwork and tracting can readily be done. Many have volunteered for this work, and others whom we have not personally reached, will be glad to join the movement. Send in your name. It is our intention to issue certificates of appointment for the year to all who will thus labor. Said certificates will be indorsed by the First Presidency.

Information Wanted. Detailed information as to the location of churches, halls, schoolhouses, private residences, parks where services are held, and the addresses of people who will thus help, or care for the laborer. This will enable us to file for reference, with the proper officials, such items as will enable us to follow up the work. Much valuable time has been wasted in the past, as missionaries have changed, for want of such information.

District and Branch President. Assist us by furnishing the addresses of all Saints who have moved from your branches. Help us to locate them. We may keep alive their interest and reach others through them.

The following appointment of missionaries has been made: New York District. A. B. Phillips in charge. A. E. Stone and James Pycok will work together in the tent during the season. Later Brother Stone will render such assistance to the branch as is found necessary. Patriarch A. D. Angus is granted the privilege of visiting any part of New York and Philadelphia District where his services are required.

New York and Philadelphia District. Ward L. Christy, Brooklyn, New York, objective. J. A. Koehler, First Church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. H. W. Smith, Second Church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. J. R. Lentell, Scranton, Pennsylvania. Edward Gleaser, Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, and vicinity. George Morris, Elk Mills, Maryland, and vicinity.

Brethren Morris and Gleaser will occupy in the district tent during the season.

Massachusetts District. R. W. Farrell, Providence, Rhode Island, objective. E. B. Hull, Fall River, Massachusetts. S. A. Burgess, Boston, Massachusetts.

Western Maine. H. A. Koehler and G. W. Knowlton, will prosecute missionary work, extending their labors into the eastern counties of the State. Patriarch I. M. Smith will labor in Nova Scotia during the summer, returning to Western Maine for the winter.

Eastern Maine. F. J. Ebling and J. F. Sheehy.

Great Britain. I have no changes to recommend in the disposition of laborers at present. As I expect to visit that field in June, and hope to ascertain its needs before the mission conference, changes will not be made until that date. Brethren W. H. Greenwood and Abel Hall will prosecute missionary work in England, and Thomas Jones in Southern England and Wales. All local appointees are urged to do all they can.

Germany. No missionaries were appointed to this field. All local officers are urged to do all they can to build up the branches, and win souls to Christ.

Scandinavia. Peter Muceus will remain in Norway until fall, when he is granted permission to remove his family to America. C. A. Swenson will labor in Sweden and Norway, and will be in charge there after the return of Brother Muceus.

Palestine. It was not thought wise to appoint men to that field under present conditions. We shall do all in our power to care for our members there.

Reports. Remember the dates for reports: July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. We expect you all to be prompt in reporting and to supply fully the information asked.

Praying that God will richly bless you all, and that the year may be the best in our history, I remain,

Your colaborer in the Lord,

ULYSSES W. GREENE.

The boon his love had given;

The soul is safe in heaven.

Book Reviews

CHILDREN OF HOPE.—Century Company, New York City. $1.50. Mr. Whitman's new novel tells the story of Aurelius Goodchild, of Zenasville, Ohio, and his three lovely daughters. Aglaia, Euphrosyne, and Thalia—the "three graces"—who, having come into a legacy of $100,000, set out to win in Europe the goals of their various ambitions. Aurelius, as quaint and lovable as Don Quixote himself, inventor, poet, photographer, piano tuner, portrait painter, botanist, chemist, shabby-genteel and imperturbably romantic amateur in a hundred fields; Agalaia, thirty, dreaming of the opera; Euphrosyne, twenty-five, with George Eliot in mind, determined to be a great novelist; and Thalia, twenty, filled with emulation of Rosa Bonheur;—these are the principal characters. Paris and other parts of the Continent, and especially Florence, form the setting of the story. This attractive and original family meet with many adventures in Europe. Singing and painting masters, pension keepers, fellow travelers, waiters, impostors, an endless procession of types are attracted by their charm or their money. Above all young men—from the four corners of the world—gather about the engaging daughters of Aurelius and make off with them one by one. These and the old world background so skillfully wrought by the author form the elements of a kaleidoscopic narrative which can be described as equally romantic and realistic.

"I HAVE MEAT THAT YE KNOW NOT OF"— PART II

(Sermon preached by Elbert A. Smith, before the graduating class of the Lamoni High School, Sunday morning, May 14, 1916, at Lamoni, Iowa. Reported by Winsome Smith.)

Why do I dwell on this theme this morning? It is because I want to arouse in the minds of these young people in particular, and in the minds of all those present, the thought that this world is not altogether material, but it is also spiritual. They will go out into the world, and find many living on a very material plane, and I do not want them to make the mistake that others make of gorging the body and starving the spirit. They will go out and find men given over to materialism, everywhere.

If they go into the country they will find men whose mental horizon is bounded on the north by corn, on the south by oats, on the east by cattle, and on the west by hogs. And if they go into the city they will find those whose horizons are bounded by stocks and bonds, and real estate, and insurance; and their desires and diversions within that domain are sensual and material.

IDEALISTS

I want these young people to go out as idealists. I take it for granted that they are idealists, all young people are idealists until they have been spoiled. A true idealist is not a fanatic. He has a substratum of common sense, and so the Apostle Paul in 2 Timothy 1: 7 says, "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."

When Paul was brought before the Roman ruler, he said, "Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad." He thought Paul was crazy. But Paul says that he had received the spirit of a "sound mind." Paul was the sanest man in the court room. The others all thought he was crazy, but he was the only sane man there; he was in touch with God and the truth.

It is said that in those days when many of the steamboats on the Mississippi River were equipped with steam calliopes, one boat came into the city of Burlington on a certain occasion, and when a tune was played, the musician, who was also the fireman on the boat, discovered (as did also all who were within a mile of the landing) that one note made a horrible discord. So he took a monkey wrench and went to work to tune it up, and in course of time he discovered that the note that made the discord was the only note in tune.

And so it was on this occasion. Paul was in tune with the universe, and all others were out of tune, and so they thought that Paul made the discord, that he was mad from much learning.

The idealist is sane, and the true idealist has been the true conferrer of blessings upon the world. You have but to turn the pages of history to convince yourselves of that. Paul himself was an idealist, hence he carried the gospel of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles. He dreamed of preaching it in Rome, and he preached it in Rome. He was one of those men who build air castles, and then put foundations under them.

MAKING DREAMS COME TRUE

Columbus was an idealist, and so he saw, first in meditation, and afterwards in reality, a new earth.

Galileo was an idealist, and so at the age of nineteen, watching a lamp swing to and fro in the dim cathedral at Pisa, he perceived a natural law that others knew not of.

John Brown was an idealist. He saw the horror of African slavery, and so, almost single-handed, he went down to Harpers Ferry and grappled with the iniquity. He died; but in a very short time great armies were raised up and half a nation was singing, "John Brown's body lies a moldering in the grave but his soul goes marching on."

Abraham Lincoln was an idealist, and so with the help of God he carried this Nation on his back through the valley of the shadow of death.

But Jesus Christ was the greatest idealist of all, and we want these young people to follow him. We want them to be dreamers, and we want them to have the common sense and the stamina to make their dreams come true.

DUTY FIRST

Last of all, turning to the first suggestion that we got from our text, the Master says: "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me." We want to impress on the minds of these young people that this should be their duty also.

Jesus said, "I must be about my father's business." Let these young people go out with the idea that they will not do what they wish to do, but do what they ought to do. Let them not pay too much attention to what men want them to do, but rather pay attention to what God wants them to do. We should obey God rather than men. We cannot please men, some one or many will bring in an adverse verdict; as one poet has said, not too sublimely:

Weep, and you're called a baby;
Laugh, and you're called a fool;
Yield, and you're called a coward;
Stand fast, and you're called a mule.

You will be criticized anyway. The thing to do is to find that which God wants us to do, and then do it, as Jesus did, without regard for the popular verdict.

THE PURSUIT OF TRUTH

What is the object of all this search for truth? The pursuit of truth has engaged man from the beginning of time. It is the most sublime pursuit that he has ever entered upon. It justifies all the innumerable sacrifices that he has made. It justifies the bleached bones of those who sought the north pole, and those who died on numberless unmarked trails in desert and mountain. It justifies the death of those who died in Panama, studying the yellow fever and the malaria fever. It justifies the death of those who died in the Roman arena, testing promises made by a Jew.

This pursuit of truth has engaged our attention also. It is our ideal. That is why we have a high school building. The high school building represents our ideals; that is why when the high school burned men wept, not because of the loss of brick and mortar, but because our ideals seemed likely to be defeated.

We go on in search of truth, because before we can do the will of God we must know the will of God. That must be the ultimate great object of this search. But all the time we are defeated in this way: that each individual, looking at truth, sees it distorted more or less by his prejudices, by his individuality.

THE STORY OF THE MIRROR

Probably you have all heard the legend of the old Japanese countryman, centuries ago, who went to a city one day, and wandering into a shop, for the first time in his life saw a mirror. Looking into it, what do you think he saw? He saw the image of his father as he remembered him. And so taking all the money that he was possessed of, he bought this mirror and took it home. He climbed up the ladder into his attic and put the mirror on an altar, and every day he went into the attic and there worshiped the spirit of his departed father. And every day the spirit of his father would look out at him as he looked into the mirror.

But this man had a wife, and she was one of those rare creatures, a woman with a curiosity. Her suspicions were aroused. She could not imagine why her husband should go into the smoky attic every day; so she watched her chance, and one day when he had gone from the house, she climbed up the ladder into the attic. There she found the altar, and looking into the mirror, what do you think she saw? She saw the image of a rather good-looking woman.

Ah, that was why her husband came to the attic every day! You sisters can imagine her feelings better than I can portray them. Down the ladder she went, and when her husband came there was trouble. He persisted that what he saw in the mirror was the image of his father, and he told the truth. But she declared that the spirit in the mirror was the image of a woman, and she told the truth. But neither would believe the other.

Finally they sent for a third person, an aged woman who was a sort of female hermit, to decide the dispute. She climbed the ladder laboriously, puffing and groaning, and went into the attic and found the altar, and looked into the mirror for a long time. Then she climbed back down and said to them: "The spirit that dwells in the mirror is the spirit of a very old woman, who is very bald-headed, and the wife need not to be jealous." And she told the truth. And then all three fell into a quarrel even more violent than any that had preceded it.

YE SHALL KNOW THE TRUTH

You see the point, I presume. Each one of these individuals perceived the truth relatively, but all three of them together failed to come at the absolute truth, and so they quarreled. That is the way with you and me. We see relative truth. I see truth colored by my prejudices, my personality, but I see the truth—part of it. You see it in a similar way. And then we quarrel about it. And sometimes we kill each other. If there had been a fourth person there with wisdom and knowledge to have told those three people of the mirror legend the absolute truth, they would have understood the situation.

Jesus came into the world with absolute truth. He says that his Spirit shall guide us into all truth. He said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

It is your business and mine that we should seek for the truth. As that wonderful hymn says:

In the beauty of the lilies, Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in His bosom that transfigures you and me;
As he died to make men holy, let us die to make men free,
While God is marching on.

I would change just one line of that, and have it read, "As he died to make men holy, let us live to make them free."

If we discover the truth, and teach the truth, and live the truth, we shall not only make ourselves free, but make others free.

(Concluded.)

THE METHODIST QUADRENNIAL CONFERENCE

THE RITUAL REVISED

The Methodist world conference met at Saratoga Springs during May. As a comparison of methods, procedure, and teachings, is often instructive, our readers will no doubt be greatly interested in the following pen pictures of the conference from the pen of Lyman Abbott, in The Outlook for June 7:

"Would you like to see how the Methodists transact their business in their quadrennial conference?" asked my friend. "Very much," I replied. About a couple of hours after breakfast he called for me, and we went together to Convention Hall at Saratoga Springs, a hall erected, I believe, for political conventions, with a seating capacity of five thousand. The floor was fairly well filled with delegates to this conference, numbering, including bishops and other officials, about a thousand. A fair sprinkling of visiting spectators occupied the galleries and the reserved seats under the galleries.

I was favored with a seat on the platform with the bishops, where I had an admirable opportunity to witness the proceedings. They had a certain resemblance to those which one witnesses from the gallery in the House of Representatives at Washington, with four important exceptions. A tribune had been erected in front of the platform, and to this tribune speakers who desired to address the house at any length were expected to come. Although all the speeches were published in a Daily Christian Advocate, there was no "buncombe" in the speeches; though all resolutions were referred without debate to the appropriate committee, there was no indication of any desire on the part of any one to stifle freedom of speech; and, although intensity of conviction was apparent and at times decided differences of conviction, the atmosphere of the conference was wholly good-natured—the earnestness was without bitterness. To a large extent the business of the conference was threshed out in committees. The mornings were given to what I may call parliamentary business, the afternoons to committee work, the evenings to mass meetings. At the one evening meeting which I attended, which was given to Sunday school work of the church, the house was packed to its utmost limit. When I arrived there, fifteen minutes before the opening of proceedings, belated visitors were being turned away, and I was told that not a few of the seats had been occupied for nearly or quite an hour before the time for opening. This conference, it should be added, includes representatives of the Methodist Church from all over the world. Germany was the only country not represented.

The spirit of the conference was unmistakably practical rather than theological, and therefore liberal rather than reactionary. Thus its answer to the absurd charges by a heresy hunter against Doctor George P. Mains for his excellent book entitled Modern Thought and Traditional Faith was a resolution, passed without question and, I believe, unanimously, entering his name in the records of the book committee as publishing agent emeritus of the book concern and directing that in view of his long years of faithful and valuable services the book committee be instructed to make such use of his services and on such terms as might be deemed advisable. The report of a commission on the ritual of the church indicated the same spirit. It struck out from the baptismal service for children the words "Forasmuch as all men are conceived and born in sin," a phrase which, transferred from poetry in the Old Testament to theological doctrine in a modern ritual, connotes original sin, infant depravity, and baptismal regeneration. The commission also recommended that candidates for membership should not be required to subscribe to the apostles' creed and the twenty-five articles of religion, but simply to affirm that they receive and profess the Christian faith as contained in the New Testament; a return, it may be remarked, to the position originally held by John Wesley, and by the Methodist Church up to 1864. This report was accepted by the conference, and then referred to the board of bishops with power for final action.

The practical questions apparently interested the conference much more than ecclesiastical or theological problems. They passed a resolution strongly recommending that in those States in which the Bible is now banished by law from the schools the laws be changed so that it may be read; a resolution condemning Government appropriation for sectarian schools, especially aimed at the appropriation for Roman Catholic schools working among the Indians; approved a petition to Congress to provide an adequate censorship for the moving picture shows; and passed with enthusiasm resolutions commending total abstinence, condemning the license system as a colossal blunder, condemning also the issuance of internal revenue tax receipts by the Federal Government "to criminals engaged in violating State laws," favoring the uniform marriage bill prepared and urged by the American Bar Association, and urging the adoption of national prohibition and, pending the submission of an amendment to the Constitution to make universal prohibition possible, prohibition by congress to the full extent of its present constitutional powers.

Probably no subject brought before this conference will be more interesting to Methodists than the important steps taken toward uniting the Methodist Church, South, and the Methodist Church, North, in one American Methodist Church. Such a proposed union has been pending for some time. The wiser heads, both North and South, have realized that such a union, to be effective, must be the product of a growth in fellowship. Their conviction was well expressed by one speaker in the statement: "I was in doubt, because I did not want a union that was not a real union, and I was afraid that we did not sufficiently understand one another to come together in one great organization for the upbuilding of God's kingdom." How far this good understanding has really been brought about I have no means of knowing. Theologically the Methodist Church, South, has been more stationary, the Methodist Church, North, more progressive. No real union is possible unless both in the North and in the South there is granted that intellectual and spiritual liberty which, judging from the action of this conference, pervades the northern church. The action of the conference indicates a prevailing opinion that this necessary good understanding has been already largely, if not entirely, attained. The entire body adopted by a rising vote a resolution providing for a commission of twenty-five members—five bishops, ten ministers, and ten laymen—to confer with the commissioners from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and from other Methodist bodies in the United States in carrying forward negotiations for a union of all the Methodist bodies of the United States in one American Methodist Church. . . .

Some of the things noted by Mr. Abbott may be worthy of comment. The custom of requiring each speaker who is to speak at any length to come forward and occupy a position where he can be both seen and heard by all persons in the assembly may have in it a suggestion worthy of our consideration.

More interesting perhaps to our theologians was the action of the conference in striking out the opening words of the very first paragraph of the ritual, wherein the baptismal service for little children it is affirmed, "Forasmuch as all men are conceived and born in sin."

Having begun at the beginning they may well proceed and revise the balance of the ritual, particularly that pertaining to the baptism of children, as for instance that part wherein the minister in behalf of the child prays the Lord to "wash him and sanctify him," and to "grant that all carnal affection may die in him."

Jesus said of little children, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Why pray God to "sanctify" the heavenly host and cleanse them from "carnal affections"?

More in harmony with Jesus is the Book of Mormon, which says, "Little children are alive in Christ, even from the foundation of the world."

Some decades from now our Methodist friends may even abolish the entire provision for the "baptism of infants," and thus come more fully in accord with the Book of Mormon, which says further, "He that saith little children need baptism, denieth the mercies of Christ."

Jesus himself did not baptize little children—he took them in his arms and blessed them—perceiving them to be already pure as the lily or the lamb.

We note also that candidates for membership are no longer to be required to affirm the twenty-five articles.

This is well, for various reasons. For instance, the fourth of these articles affirms that Jesus "suffered, was crucified, dead and buried, to reconcile our Father to us."

This is a strange reversal of truth, as the Bible distinctly tells us that Christ came to reconcile us to God—not God to us. (2 Corinthians 5: 18-20.)

As these articles were among the creeds extant in 1820 when the angel told Joseph Smith that the creeds were wrong, this action of the Methodist Church in ceasing to require members to affirm the articles in question but confirms us in the belief that the angel told the truth.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

STAKE REORGANIZATION.—Notices in the Miscellaneous Department of this issue concerning the reorganization of the Lamoni and Independence Stakes will be of special interest to our readers.

COLLEGE YEAR CLOSSES.—Bishop E. L. Kelley delivered the graduating address before eighteen graduates from Graceland College the evening of June 2. The past year's work has been very satisfactory and every indication points to a larger enrollment and still better work next year.

A LEADER EXPELLED.—From the Evening and Morning Star for May, 1916, we quote the following editorial. Elder Frisbey has for years been one of the most influential men in the Church of Christ, commonly called Hedrickites:

By request of some of the members of the church we hereby insert the findings of the elders court, which tried the case of George P. Frisbey. By the evidence presented to them against him he was found guilty of unchristian conduct because he became possessed of a contentious spirit and refused to abide by the rules of the church. It has always been the custom and law of the church that nothing should be appointed to the church but by the common consent of the church, and he refused to abide by same.

CURRENT EVENTS

DOMINICAN TROUBLES.—The native rebellion in Santo Domingo is becoming more and more serious. An American officer was killed while leading a force of our troops against the rebels. There is widespread opposition to any president who may be elected by the cabinet. The revolutionary force continues strong.

POLITICAL SITUATION.—The national convention of the Republican Party has nominated Charles E. Hughes for president, and Charles W. Fairbanks for vice president. Following the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt for president by the Progressives, he wired his declination. The national committee meets June 25 to consider some one else for the place.

CHINA.—President Yuan Shih Kai died on the 6th, evidently from poisoning. President Li Yuan Hung, who had been acting as vice president, has been inaugurated president. The situation is quiet, yet the American troops at Tientsin, China, have been ordered to be in readiness for any disorder which may follow. French troops have already proceeded to Peking.

KITCHENER DEAD.—Carrying Lord Kitchener and a number of war officers to Russia on a war mission the Hampshire was sunk off the Orkney Islands, north of Scotland, with the loss of all on board, on the 5th. It was struck by a mine or torpedo. All England mourns the loss of the man who has been

FROM THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

God has again spoken. With joy you have recognized the voice of his Spirit and approved his counsel. I have heeded the call and become your servant for Christ's sake. Since the close of General Conference you have desired to hear from me, and I, too, have been anxious to speak with you about the work of the Lord that we all love. In order that his purposes in us be accomplished it is essential that we continue to respond to the light and guidance of his Spirit.

We are permitted to enter upon our work with the awakening interest aroused, the broadening conceptions formed and vitalizing love unfolded during the sessions of our late gathering still fresh in our memory. Our vision becomes clearer and our resolve to greater consecrated efforts grows stronger as we recall how all these blessed experiences were blended and intensified under the benign grace bestowed during the service of music and song.

We behold the moistened eye and hear the earnest assurance of loyal support as we receive the hearty handclasp and our heart overflows with gratitude to God as our soul is thrilled with this foretaste of the endowment and the vision of our mission opens before us.

God being with us, why should we fear? Only let us see to it that we perform our task in meekness and humility that God may be with us.

The Bishopric, administrators of the temporal law, recognize their dependence upon the eldership, custodians of the spiritual blessings, to strengthen the faith and loyalty of the Saints and create and renew an interest which will be expressed in a closer cooperation with the Bishopric, thereby bringing to themselves spiritual as well as material increase, and to all of God's servants the encouragement to more efficient labor for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all. The earnest efforts of all to occupy in their respective callings accompanied by the Holy Spirit, qualifying them for their work and adapting their teachings to the needs of the Saints are already bearing fruit in tithes and offerings.

The Bishopric aim to consistently follow the order adopted at their quorum meeting, and sustain the missionary force and the poor and needy, discharge the existing indebtedness of the church and carry out the resolution of a former General Conference to erect a suitable office building for the general church officers. We solicit information as to your particular problems so far as it is directly or indirectly related to our work, and assure you it will receive our prayerful consideration.

The several orders of the Aaronic priesthood, by utilizing the opportunities afforded, will find they are not restricted in the work of their respective offices to a narrow construction of the letter of the law but that the Lord intended and they are expected to and may rejoice in occupying in ever widening fields of helpfulness to God's people within the scope of their official duties. Strength and inspiration commensurate with their needs will not be denied the faithful.

When we become more fully informed as to the conditions existing throughout the church we shall, in consultation with our brethren of the Bishopric, formulate such measures as may be deemed necessary to more effectually conserve and advance the interests of the church, and enlist the participation of the Saints in a practical demonstration of the merit of the law, having in view the progress of the general work and the redemption of Zion.

In conclusion I feel constrained to direct your attention to Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7, 8, with the fervent prayer that the Spirit of the Master that inspired the words may create within you the desire and grant you the power from henceforth to make them your rule of conduct.

I remain, your fellow servant,
BENJ. R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

THEOLOGIAN'S ON ORGANIZATION AND DUTIES--PART 2

THE OPINIONS OF FORTY-TWO PROMINENT MINISTERS AND PROFESSORS OF THEOLOGY ON CHURCH ORGANIZATION AND DUTIES OF OFFICERS

BY CHARLES J. HUNT

Reverend J. W. Kitson, Church of the Brethren (Dunkard), of Goshen, Indiana, wrote June 17, 1915:

There is not sufficient internal evidence to indicate with certainty their duties and privileges, yet if the Greek word be taken in conjunction with the scripture references with each suggests their probable meaning. In the primitive church there seems to be the following order of arrangements concerning the workers named: "1. Primarily, apostles, prophets, evangelists, bishops, or elders, whose sphere of service, probably, was of a general character. 2. Secondarily, pastors, teachers, deacons, whose labors were of a local nature. 3. Thirdly, seventies, priests. These were not of any standing in the early church and should be considered as having no place in official distinction.

In The Church Members Handbook, a Guide to the Doctrine and Practices of the Baptist Churches, William Crowell (1855) writes:

The church officers are (page 37) pastors, and deacons. The pastor is sometimes called overseer; the elder or presbyter, the president or bishop, of the church according to age; or as viewed in the discharge of some particular functions of his office. The meaning of all these words is properly and pleasantly summed up in that one word, pastor—shepherd.

Professor Charles E. Brewer, Baptist, president of Meredith College, Raleigh, North Carolina, said in a letter July 30, 1915:

I have never undertaken to make out the order in which the various officers in the apostolic church were ranked. I think that is a very small matter anyway. I do not believe that you can find out from the New Testament what the order of authority was, or what the specific duties of each class were.

Reverend David S. Kennedy, editor of The Presbyterian, Philadelphia, answered:

1. The apostles were endowed with special authority for the establishment of the church and for writing of the scriptures. They have no successors. 2. Prophets were advanced teachers with some gift of prediction. 3. Elders were the essential local church officers and the only ones. 4. Bishops or overseers is another name for the teaching elder. 5. Evangelists. This was not an office but the name of a work which was exercised by any or all officers. 6. The seventy was a company of disciples sent out on a particular missionary tour. 7. Pastor was a work associated with teaching. 8. Priest is a name and relation common to all believers. Deacons had the care of the poor and sick. Teachers were men with gifts of instruction.

Reverend Doctor Samuel J. Nicolls, for fifty years pastor of Second Presbyterian Church, Saint Louis, wrote July 19, 1915:

The apostles, as such, had no successors and that office is not continued in the church. One of the qualifications necessary for the apostolic office was to have seen Christ personally and to have been an eyewitness to his resurrection. Manifestly those who call themselves apostles, or claim to be in their succession, have not that qualification. The office of prophet was simply that of a preacher who sometimes, under the influence of the Spirit, predicted coming events. . . . They had no ruling power in the church. Elders and bishops are mentioned as holding office in the early church. These terms are synonymous. . . . The office of the bishop or elder in the church is a permanent one, and it is regarded as the highest office in the church. Evangelists were those who were without charge but were sent on missionary journeys preaching the gospel. . . . Deacons and teachers do not exercise rule in the church and their office is simply administrative. The Presbyterian Church believes in bishops or overseers of the church, but not as having a distinct order and as standing as successors for the apostles.

Reverend W. F. Tomlinson, a district superintendent (sometimes called presiding elder) Methodist Episcopal, wrote from Platteville, Wisconsin, July 23, 1915:

In my judgment your questions cannot be answered in the form you state them. Apostles plainly ranked first, elders or bishops were subordinate to apostles, deacons to elders. Deacons and elders were often prophets, pastors, teachers or evangelists. The organization of the church was a growth, and the later epistles indicate quite a different scheme from that reflected in previous decades. As to the duties and privileges of each office, these also are a development. The church is not a dead thing, but living and the forms through which it organizes and works must be constantly adapting themselves to conditions, like any other live body.

Reverend L. H. Murlin, president of the Evangelical Alliance of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Boston, said:

In the present day the one you have named last should be first. There is so much to do in the world to-day helping those who need help in practical, vital matters, that questions of order are of no interest to me. I wonder what Jesus would think of this nonsense?

Reverend R. E. Shaw, Methodist Episcopal, district superintendent, Boone, Iowa, July 23, 1915, said:

No influence nor conclusion can be drawn from the Biblical record, such as would warrant insistence upon the same order to-day. The whole matter raised by the inquiry is foreign to the purpose and spirit of the New Testament. Neither Jesus nor his disciples ever instituted an ecclesiastical system. To attempt to correct the method and authority for such a system from the Scriptures is to revert to Judaism again, and to lose the chief things with which Jesus enriched the life of men.

To the second question Reverend Shaw said: "By no means, does the Bible define the duties of all the officers named in question number one."

Professor Ross L. Finney, Ph. D., Methodist Episcopal, wrote from Valley City, North Dakota, August 8, 1915:

In my opinion your question is misconceived. It is based upon the assumption that the organization of the primitive church was intended to be followed by the church in later centuries; that there rests upon us, in other words, the obligation to copy the organization of the early church. This is not true; and no church leaders who participate in the thought life of the present time would for a moment recognize any such obligation. . . .

Thomas N. Ivey, Methodist Episcopal (South), editor Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tennessee, wrote August 5, 1915:

I would state that the only orders and officers of which Episcopal Methodism takes cognizance are those of deacon and elders. We have bishops and pastors, of course, but the bishops are elders and the pastors both elders and deacons. There is very little sentiment in Episcopal Methodism which regards the bishopric as a third order. It is regarded only as an office. We do not hold that the Bible gives the duties and privileges of any of these officers so specifically that each one could understand and perform the duties of that office in the church to-day.

Reverend Frank A. Cone, Methodist Episcopal, Superintendent Marshall District, Mankato, Minnesota, wrote July 26, 1915, from which we excerpt the following:

So far as the record goes Jesus gave no instruction for the organizing of the church. He talked much of the kingdom, but makes almost no reference to a church. No one of his chosen twelve can be said in any real sense to have organized the church. The appointing of deacons as recorded in the New Testament was rather a matter of convenience than of ecclesiastical polity. . . . I believe the Bible is a great book of inspiration for all times, but I do not believe it is a substitute for judgment and discretion in the prosecuting of God's work. I do not think we can go to the Bible to determine the duties and privileges of these various offices. . . . God did not become silent with the completion of the Bible. Prophecy is not ancient history, and revelation is not confined to past centuries.

E. V. Zollars, (Christian or Disciple Church), president Emeritus of Phillips University, Enid, Oklahoma, said August 9, 1915:

First: Apostles constituted the company who were chosen by Christ and commissioned to go into all the world and preach the gospel. The essential qualification of an apostle was that he should have seen Christ after his resurrection and be able to bear personal testimony to that fact.

Second: Prophets in the New Testament church were first of all teachers, but their distinctive qualification was their ability to communicate the divine message at first hand, and especially concerning the future. In this sense prophets were limited to the Jewish and apostolic ages.

Third: I regard elders and bishops synonymous terms. They are interchangeable and constitute the ruling officers in the church. . . .

Fourth: Evangelists were traveling preachers who went from place to place preaching the gospel. Sometimes they were located for longer or shorter periods. They seem to have been commissioned to set the churches in order wherever they went; that is, to see that the churches were properly officered and conducted.

Fifth: Pastors were elders first of all, whose duty it was especially to instruct the local church. The seventy sent out by Christ was a special case preparatory to Christ's personal visitation and his work of setting up of the kingdom. We have no such class now.

Sixth: All Christians are priests. Under the old dispensation a high priest was the type of Christ and the ordinary priest was the type of a Christian. There were no priests in the New Testament church, except the priesthood we all enjoy, Christ being our great high priest.

Seventh: Deacons were officers whose primary duty was to look after the secular interests of the church, caring for the sick, the needy, etc.

Eighth: Teacher is a comprehensive term embracing practically all of the duties, more or less, of all the church officers. . . . I think there is no trouble at all in understanding the specific duties of the various officers named by simply the study of the New Testament. It is when we depart from the New Testament simplicity that we get into trouble.

Professor W. R. Walker, (Christian or Disciple Church), Phillips Bible Institute, Canton, Ohio, wrote August 5, 1915, from which we quote:

From the qualifications required of a man to be an apostle (Acts 1:21, 22) it is clear that the apostles could have no successors in office. A personal appearance of Jesus was necessary to qualify Paul for that high office, (1 Corinthians 9:1). That prophets were not found in later times is a historical fact rather than a scriptural teaching. "Prophecies" were to cease, but just when is not stated. We find no trace of prophets, however, after the apostolic age. . . . The following designations all refer to the same office: Bishop, overseer; elder, presbyter; pastor, shepherd. These names are the English and Greek names for the same officials, named from different bases of classification. The work of ruling is suggested in the first pair above. The fact that these were chosen from the older members of the church is suggested in the second pair of terms. The personal responsibilities of those filling this place is suggested in the third pair of terms, viz, caring for the spiritual welfare of the church. . . . Evangelists were simply preachers of the gospel, and of course were needed as long as the gospel remained the power of God unto salvation. . . . Priest is a designation never employed in the New Testament for a church official. All Christians are priests. . . . Now, I think you will see from this brief statement, that I do not understand the New Testament to say anything on the subject of precedence of officials of the church. . . . The questions which the Federal Council and the Commission of Faith and Order are discussing, important as they are, can never be settled by an appeal to any churchly authority other than that of Christ and his apostles whom he authorized to speak in his name.—(Matthew 28:18-20.)

Reverend Grant W. Speer, pastor Central Christian Church, Toledo, Ohio, said the officers in the New Testament church took precedence in office as follows: 1. Apostles, 2. Prophets, 3. Elders, bishops, 4. Evangelists, 5. Pastors, 6. Deacons.

Reverend Doctor Peter Ainslee, pastor of Christian Temple, Baltimore, and popular lecturer of the Disciple or Christian Church wrote, July 1, 1915, from which we excerpt the following:

Evangelists follow apostles and prophets and are named before pastors and teachers. . . . Seventy, of uncertain date, perhaps after Jesus had been driven out of Jerusalem the second time by the mob. Pastors and priests are not the same terms—pastors arose in the apostolic period. Deacons appear to have been named before elders. (See Acts 6.) Teachers are the last named and work especially at the close of the apostolic ministry. . . . Of course, the apostles were first and here all are agreed. The order appears to be purposely unmarked, leaving much to common sense and the development of the church, under the Spirit of Christ, where no man seeks to be over the other, but instead, each servant of the other.

Reverend J. W. Darby, pastor First Christian Church, Tulsa, Oklahoma, said, August 6, 1915:

First let me say that Christ did not organize a church. The apostles were not church officers—merely one who pleads the cause of God with humanity just as a high priest was one who pleaded the cause of humanity with God. Prophets were not church officers but those who foretold the events of the coming kingdom before Christ's time. Those mentioned in Corinthians were some who doubtless had been given a power for the time being. Paul said that power would cease. Elders were the same as bishops and were the overseers of the flock. . . . Evangelists were not church officers but merely preachers of the word who went about just as evangelists do to-day. Seventy were the ones Jesus first sent out and they were not church officers. Pastors were the same as the elders. There were no such persons in the early church as priests. They belonged to the Jewish economy. The officers ordained in the New Testament church were: Elders, deacons. There being none other save possibly those such as we have to-day, such as treasurer, etc. Your question numbered second. Referring to the Scriptures giving the duties of the above-named officers. Yes, sir, the Scriptures are explicit on this matter and there can be no question whatever. . . . We need no legislative body for the church, we need no new creed, we need no new expression of faith, all we need is a return to the Old Jerusalem gospel in faith and practice and we have the union for which the Master prayed in John 17.

In the History of Religious Bodies, 1906, part 2, page 238, we read the officers of the Disciple or Christian Church are: "Pastors, elders, and deacons. A visiting minister is called an evangelist."

The foregoing statements of the forty-two "wise men" (Isaiah 29: 14) on church polity of former and latter times, represent twenty religious bodies. It will be conceded by the careful reader of the above questions and the answers thereto, that the combined "wisdom" of the learned world cannot, without direct revelation from God, reproduce or reorganize the church of the New Testament, or define the duties of all its officers with a certainty.

The churches differ so widely, that their knowledge, when sought and published, is not, and never will be, a safe guidebook to the penitent ones who are following the instruction, Seek first to build up the kingdom of God—the church as constituted in the time of Christ and the apostles.

God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit, are unchangeable. The church of Christ is also unchangeable. It will advocate the same doctrine, the same church offices, and the officers will occupy in the same order in which they took precedence in New Testament times. That church in doctrine, organization and duties of its officers defined, is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which church has received, and continues to receive, revelation from God.

There is very strong inferential testimony coming from the eighty-two scholars, who, from 1870 to 1884, gave to the world the Revised Version of the Bible, that they were unable to produce a perfect work without divine inspiration. These "wise men" acknowledged that their work of translating was not satisfactory to themselves, testifying "that such a work can never be accomplished by organized efforts of scholarship and criticism, unless assisted by divine help."

That being true in making a translation of the Scriptures, the same word failure can be written at the conclusion of all human efforts of the religious world to reproduce the church of Jesus Christ in all its primitive beauty, in organization, faith, and practice, as it was in apostolic times. This could only be done by divine help—with revelation from God.

Elder R. W. Farrell, editor of the Religio Quarterly, said:

Remove the spirit from the body, and it ceases to hear, feel, see; it is dead; outwardly it may appear perfect, organically. It is so with the church (the body of Christ). If God takes the Holy Spirit away, the church is dead; it hears no revelation, speaks no prophecies, sees no future events.

The great apostasy which took place after the apostolic period, shattered, scattered, and destroyed the church. The church lost the Holy Spirit—revelations ceased. The long night of darkness continued on the earth until the angelic proclamation, the restoration of the church and gospel in the nineteenth century. Joseph Smith the Seer, and others, by the direction of the Lord, were authorized to organize the church in fulfillment of Bible prophecies.

Bible students must concede the fact that if the church of Jesus Christ is on earth to-day, it must be here by succession, evolution, or restoration. The Bible foretells the latter, but contains no hint of the two former.

It may be considered a truism, that no church is wiser in its organization and doctrine than the wisdom of its organizers and perpetuators. This fact is proven by the testimony of the forty-two "wise men" in their efforts to place in order the church officers and to define their duties. Their efforts to have settled the great question of water baptism, its mode, etc., would have ended as disastrously.

Some may think that to include the Latter Day Saints would only invite more disaster. But Latter Day Saints are not considered orthodox by the above churches, and the Latter Day Saints themselves accept no favors coming from them or authority through them. We are, however, orthodox and evangelical. In harmony with a multitude of scripture, God himself sent an angel from the courts of glory to reorganize his kingdom on earth. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was the result. In the latter we see the wisdom of God; in the former, the wisdom of men.

Surely the prophetic eye of Isaiah must have been sighted towards them and their theological institutions when he wrote: "For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the [minds of the] people." (Isaiah 60: 2.)

If the reader will procure a book at the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, entitled, The Interpreter, (50 cents) he will find the officers of the church named in order and their duties defined by divine inspiration of latter days, and also agreeing with the New Testament so far as the fragmentary account there reveals.

They are as follows:

1. The chief apostles or pillars of the church who are also prophets, answering to Peter, James and John. (Mark 10: 40-44; Galatians 2: 9.)
2. The Twelve Apostles, who have charge of the missionary work of the church.
3. The seventy, who are itinerate ministers.
4. The patriarchs, who are the evangelists among the congregations.
5. The high priests, who are the chief pastors.
6. The elders, who are local pastors.
7. The bishops, who manage the church finances.
8. The priests, who are assistant pastors.
9. The teachers, who reclaim and encourage erring members.
10. The deacons, who assist the teacher and care for places of meeting.

A few verses in hymnology often heard in the congregations of the Saints express in few words the kernel of this matter:

When earth in bondage long had lain,
And darkness o'er the nations reigned,
And all man's precepts proved in vain,
A perfect system to obtain.

A voice commissioned from on high,
Hark, Hark! it is the angel's cry,
Descending from the throne of light,—
His garments shining clear and white.

He comes the gospel to reveal
In fullness to benighted man;
Restore the priesthood, long since lost,
In truth and power as at the first.

And now commissioned from on high,
God's servants faith, repentance, cry,
Baptizing as in days of old,
Into one Shepherd and one fold.

DID ADAM FALL FROM CELESTIAL GLORY?

We read and hear a great deal about the fall of man, and we see all around us unmistakable evidences that he did fall; but I do not think I ever heard any one attempt to declare from what condition he fell. If I be permitted to express an opinion on the matter I will unhesitatingly say, "He fell from celestial glory." He certainly was in some glory. If it were not for celestial what was it?

We are on this earth required to strive for celestial glory. Can you imagine the great Creator producing an inferior thing, and then expecting that thing to become more perfect than he made it?

If he did he will surely be disappointed in the results, for it is a law in nature that a stream cannot rise above its fountain head. If the fountain from which the human race sprang did not bubble up from the mountain peaks of celestial glory, we need never expect the stream that flows from it to be forced up to that supernal height.

THE BEGINNING

During the days of creation our Maker repeatedly reviewed his work with admiration, pronouncing it "Good"; and he finally declared it to be "Very good." (Genesis 1:31.)

Does it not seem reasonable that God should make man and his surroundings right in the beginning; and that whatever defects we now behold have been the result of man's failure rather than imperfect creation?

Three chapters of Holy Writ only are used to tell the story of creation, the condition obtaining, and the loss of that estate. But even in that limited space there is considerable to be learned.

The earth enjoyed the unalloyed blessing of its Creator, and was graced with his presence: a perfect paradise! This was its normal condition, which would have endured eternally, had its Maker's work not been interfered with.

Man was in control of this wonderful heritage, and he, too, was possessed of everlasting life in the presence of God, with whom he communed face to face.

What gave him this power to endure the presence of God? There can be but one answer: the Holy Spirit.

"The glory of God is intelligence"; and as we consider this, our first parent, we are moved with admiration, seeing how freely divine intelligence flowed through his mind.

Without any previous experience or training, Adam stepped into the new world and took control. He exercised dominion over the fowls, fishes, beasts and reptiles. He gave appropriate names to their myriad hosts, and did it so well that the Almighty indorsed every name that was given. By trade and divine appointment, he was a gardener and a vine dresser.

What could God have given man that was not bestowed upon him? He had everything but experience, and even God could not give him that. It had to be obtained, through effort.

Let us summarize: Adam had everlasting life in the presence of his Maker.

He was in possession of the earth, an uncursed heritage.

He was surrounded by the lower animals in their highest state of development, association with which fills a large place in the life and happiness of man.

He was occupied in congenial and useful labor and dominated the situation in which he was placed.

And last, but not least, he was blessed with domestic peace and love.

The surroundings of this man were all that we, who have had experience with evil, could desire. What more does celestial glory hold?

THE TRANSGRESSION

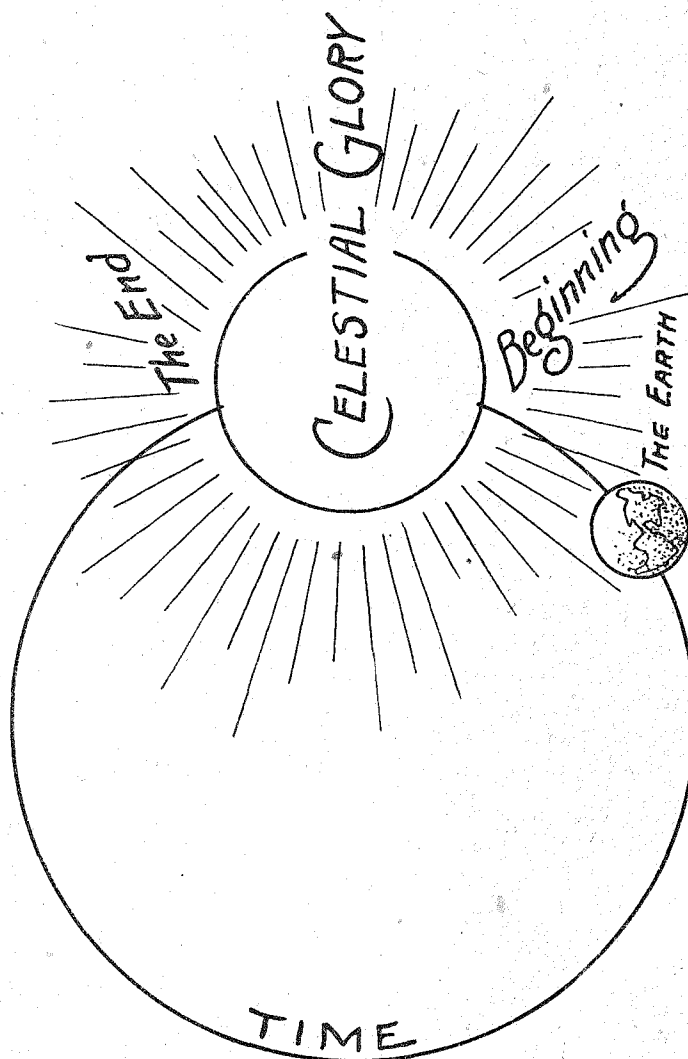

The story of the fall is too well known to need repeating. That Adam and Eve understood the commandment that was given them, and, to some extent, the consequences of transgressing it, is shown by the defense Eve offered before the tempter. Satan, however, succeeded in deceiving her inexperienced mind, and she was brought into subjection.

Adam was not deceived. (1 Timothy 2:14.) He knew certain consequences would follow if they broke the law. With him it seems to have been a lack of appreciation. Never having known any other condition, he could not compare it with inferior places; he really did not know the value of it.

There was one thing Adam could understand by contrast: he had once been without a companion, and now he had one, and he knew which estate was the better. He enjoyed his social and domestic life, and rather than endure the separation which he knew must come, now that his wife had partaken of the forbidden morsel, he made his choice between heaven and home. He chose the latter, and ate the fruit she proffered him, willing to go with her into death rather than remain in life without her.

If there is any one act in history that we think would draw forth the sympathy of a Redeemer, and make him willing to give his life a ransom for man, it was this act of Adam.

We would not glorify sin, but we believe in judging not only the deed but the motive behind it.

The earth is not totally devoid of that chivalry yet. Only a few years ago a couple from Toronto were on the ice bridge at Niagara Falls when the bridge broke and the ice floated down the stream. The husband could have made his escape, but refused to do so when it could not be shared by his wife.

THE BANISHMENT

The transgression changed everything. No longer was man a fitting companion for celestial beings, so the Lord drove him out of his presence. The earth was too glorious for his habitation, and it was cursed for his sake. Death spiritual and death temporal were pronounced upon him. The tree of life of which he had freely partaken in the past was guarded by cherubim lest he reach it. In every way man was impressed with the fact that he had fallen.

But again the question arises, Fallen from what? Let us examine.

We read in Doctrine and Covenants 28: 8:

The first shall be last, and the last shall be first in all things, whatsoever I have created by the word of my power. . . . Yea, all things both spiritual and temporal."

From this statement we may look for a reestablishment of former conditions; and if we can learn what the last estate will be, we shall know what the first estate was.

The first glory that crowned the earth will be its last glory, for it was created by the word of God's power.

The first life conferred upon man will be the last enjoyed by him—eternal life in the presence of his Maker. If that is celestial glory in the future, then it was celestial glory in the past.

The first death pronounced upon man will be the last death to which men shall be doomed—the second death, to which, the sons of perdition, alone, sink. (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.)

Wherefore, I the Lord God caused that he [Adam] should be cast out from the Garden of Eden, from my presence, because of his transgression: wherein he became spiritually dead, which is the first death, even that same death, which is the last death, which is spiritual, which shall be pronounced upon the wicked when I shall say, Depart ye cursed.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 11.

Adam must have been spiritually alive before he could have died spiritually, and if spiritual life in that abundance which enables one to abide in the presence of God is not celestial glory, what is it?

THE REDEMPTION

When our first parents were driven out of the Garden of Eden, from the presence of God, and away from the tree of life, one ray of light followed them from the eternal world. It was the promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head.

This reference to the work of Christ is corroborated by John: "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil." (1 John 3: 8.)

Let me ask, When the seed of the woman has bruised the serpent's head, and the works of the Devil have been destroyed, what will be the prevailing condition?

The work of the Devil has been the overthrow of man and his dominion. The destroying of the works of the Devil will be the restoration of man and his dominion to their former place and glory. In fact this is precisely what redemption means: to buy back.

Abinadi understood the work of the Redeemer to be the undoing of the fall, for he said,

Thus all mankind were lost; and they would have been endlessly lost, were it not that God redeemed his people from their lost and fallen state.—Mosiah 8: 76.

Alma speaks of it also:

Therefore as the soul could never die, and the fall had brought upon all mankind a spiritual death as well as a temporal; that is they were cut off from the presence of the Lord; therefore it was expedient that mankind should be reclaimed from this spiritual death.—Alma 19: 90.

When God's people are "redeemed" from their "fallen state," and "reclaimed" from their "spiritual death," where will they be? Exactly where they were before they fell, with the additional wisdom which experience brings. Their glory will be no higher, but their sense of appreciation will be greatly increased.

Notice the words used by the prophets, redeemed and reclaimed; the first meaning, to buy back; and the second, to bring back.

Where men got the idea that they were going to be exalted beyond the glory wherein they started, is a mystery. They surely did not get it from the inspired records, for they are united in the story of redemption, reclamation, restoration, reconciliation. Did not Christ come to reconcile men to God? What is that but a restoration to former relationship?

This thought of future exaltation, instead of restoration to our former estate, does not seem to be a good one. It gives too free a hand to the unlimited ambitions of man. In some cases it has carried him in fancy far above angels and gods, real or imaginary, and placed him as a creator and ruler in worlds unknown.

Had men understood the doctrine of redemption from the fall, and restoration to former glory, they would not have given way to such foolishness. Jesus only asked to be restored to his former glory. Why should man expect more than his Maker?

There is comfort in thinking of restoration. It is a humble thought. Much more so than the idea of rising to heights to which we have never belonged. I like to think of Jesus restoring to us the treasures we lost; the same ones he gave before, but which have slipped from our unguarded grasp.

It is so like God to give us a wealth of good things, and so like us to lose them; again like him to stoop down and recover the lost treasures, as the mother restores the article dropped by the child.

WHAT IS CELESTIAL GLORY?

Let the Almighty answer.

Therefore, it [the earth] must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory, even with the presence of God the Father; that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it forever and ever; for this intent was it made and created; and for this intent are they sanctified.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.

Here we learn that God will sanctify the earth from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for celestial glory, even the presence of God the Father. But, Saints, it has been in that condition before. If in the future the presence of God the Father on an unsullied earth is celestial glory, then that condition in the past was celestial glory.

Again, the Lord, in speaking of the earth when time shall be no more, says,

The earth hath travailed and brought forth her strength; and truth is established in her bowels; the heavens have smiled upon her, and she is clothed with the glory of God: for He stands in the midst of his people.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 17.

This seems conclusive. Speaking of the future as though it were already here, he says, "She is clothed with the glory of God, for he stands in the midst of his people."

No one will question that this is celestial glory. But, reader, this is exactly what existed in the beginning: a sinless man and woman occupied an unsullied earth, which was crowned with glory, even the presence of the Father.

We will examine one more text on this subject:

And thus we saw the glory of the celestial, which excels in all things; where God, even the Father, reigns upon his throne forever and ever, before whose throne all things bow in humble reverence and give him glory forever and ever. They who dwell in his presence are the church of the First-born; and they see as they are seen, and know as they are known, having received of his fullness and of his grace; and he makes them equal in power, and in might, and in dominion. And the glory of the celestial is one, even as the glory of the sun is one.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7.

MAN IS OF CELESTIAL ORIGIN

We read in Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4, 5-6:

Ye were also in the beginning with the Father; that which is spirit, even the Spirit of truth.

And again:

Man was also in the beginning with God.
Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning.

From these texts we are forced to conclude that the untaverned spirit of man was with God in the beginning, and if with God, it was in celestial glory, and was a celestial spirit.

Relating to the flesh, Paul indorsed the sentiment expressed by the Athenian poets, that we are God's offspring. (Acts 17: 28.) And Luke, in tracing the genealogy of Christ, declared that Adam was the son of God. (Luke 3:38.)

How harmonious this is! Celestial spirits were not taken from their exalted station and placed in terrestrial bodies, but were given bodies suitable to their spiritual status.

Just so it shall be in the resurrection. Listen:

They who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body, which was a natural body: even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened. Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:6.

Celestial spirits receive celestial bodies, and terrestrial spirits terrestrial bodies. Harmony is preserved; system and order are perpetuated.

MICHAEL AND LUCIFER

The contest between Michael and Lucifer has been long and severe. As enemies they first met in heaven. Lucifer was in rebellion over the agency of man, and he fought for celestial dominion. Michael led the army of loyal spirits. These two archangels with their followers met in uncompromising conflict, and Lucifer was defeated. He lost his glory and became an outlaw of heaven. But as he was being driven from the grandeur to which he had been accustomed he virtually defied Michael, hissing from lips that thirsted for vengeance: "We shall meet again."

Next they meet in Eden's bowers. Michael (Adam) is veiled in flesh, and Lucifer is disguised in the body of a serpent. This time Michael suffers an ignominious defeat, in which he is captured with all his resources. Lucifer gains control of the situation, a celestial domain.

Jesus comes to the rescue and redeems the lost inheritance, liberates man, and gives him the opportunity of regaining his lost position and place.

Once more shall Michael, our Prince, and Lucifer, the enemy of man, contend for the victory. Just as the earth is about to enter celestial glory, when the gleaming gates of the capital city are almost in view, Lucifer musters his forces and makes one last move for supremacy. Michael and his army of celestialized saints are ready for the conflict. They have learned his tactics in six thousand years of contact with him, and this time he is defeated, captured, and condemned to perpetual banishment, while Michael and his hosts are restored to their former status in their redeemed inheritance.

EARTH TO BE CELESTIALIZED BY RESTORATION

And he [Christ] shall utter his voice out of Zion, and he shall speak from Jerusalem, and his voice shall be heard among all people, and it shall be a voice as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder, which shall break down the mountains, and the valleys shall not be found; command the great deep and it shall be driven back into the north countries, and the islands shall become one land, and the land of Jerusalem and the land of Zion shall be turned back into their own place, and the earth shall be like as it was in the days before it was divided. And the Lord even the Savior shall stand in the midst of his people and shall reign over all flesh.—Doctrine and Covenants 108:5.

The leveling of the mountains, the elevation of the valleys, the returning of the waters to the north, the uniting of the islands to the mainland, and the joining of the continents are all required before the "earth shall be like as it was in the days before it was divided."

The great division of the earth into continents seemingly occurred in the days of Peleg, in the fifth generation after Noah; but that was not the first change that took place in the form of the earth. We read of mountains and islands (a new land that came up in the sea) as early as the days of Enoch. (Genesis 10:16; 7:15-18, I. T.) Therefore this restoration to conditions that existed before the earth was divided must reach back at least as far as the days of Enoch.

John tells us just how far back it will extend: the earth must be restored to the condition existing when there was no curse on the land; when the tree of life blossomed by the river of water that was clear as crystal, and man communed with his Maker face to face. (Revelation 22:1-3.)

This is celestial glory, whether it relates to the past or the future.

GOD'S COURSE IS ONE ETERNAL ROUND

When we think of these things, the words of the wise man come vividly to mind:

I know that whatsoever God doeth it shall be forever. Nothing can be put to it nor anything taken from it; and God doeth it that man should fear before him.—Ecclesiastes 3:14.

The work of the creation was perfect; and although a shadow has fallen upon it, the handiwork of God will emerge from beneath the cloud in all its former glory; for,

The thing that hath been is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun.—Ecclesiastes 1:9.

THE FATE OF PALESTINE AFTER THE WAR

That millions are concerned about what is to become of Palestine and Jerusalem, the "Holy Land" of the three greatest monotheistic religions of the world, Judaism, Mohammedanism and Christianity, is more than evident from the many discussions of this theme found in leading periodicals. It is doubtful if any other writer is in a better condition to give the facts and probabilities in the case than is Pastor L. Schneller, head of the two great Protestant orphans' Homes in Jerusalem and who was born and raised in that city. In the quarterly journal issued by him for many years under the title of Der Bote aus Zion, he reports and discusses this problem of world-wide interest in the following way:

Jerusalem has now become a great military center. The town and the public highways are crowded with soldiers and their equipment. Large camel caravans fully loaded come in from all directions. The cloisters and the pilgrim hospices in and around Jerusalem and Bethlehem now harbor thousands of Turkish soldiers. The citadel of the city, with its two mighty towers dating back to the time of King Herod, is the scene of great things. Not since the days of the Crusader have such things been witnessed in this sacred territory. The Government has by compulsory purchase secured from the French owners the railroads of the land, especially that from Joppa to Jerusalem. The Holy Land has again become what it was in the days of the great world powers of antiquity, Babylon, Assyria and Egypt—the military and commercial gateway between Asia and Africa.

And who shall be in control of this gateway when the great war is over?

Pastor Schneller declares that more than one people and government are speculating how to secure this land. When at the beginning of the war the English missionaries left Palestine and went home, one of their leaders said: "England will never permit this country, so near to the Suez Canal, again to fall into any other than English hands." The French are known to have historic claims especially on northern Palestine, particularly on the Lebanon, because of their interference in 1860 in favor of the Christians when these were being massacred by the Druses. Orthodox Russia, which, more than any other country, venerates the sacred shrines of Palestine, is only too anxious to possess it, especially as thereby it would secure access to the Mediterranean. The people of Palestine themselves dread nothing more than the fate of becoming subject to the Czar and his fanatical hosts, this dread being based chiefly upon the fearful suppression of Christianity as effected in recent years by Russia in Persia.

The Jews constitute a fourth party that hopes for the possession of the Holy Land. It is the land of their ancestors. Those Jews who are thinking of repossessing it do not expect to secure it by an overthrow of the Turkish supremacy, but by the establishment of a kingdom of Judah under Turkish suzerainty. England, indeed, has planned to make this kingdom a neutral buffer state, under the control of the allies, and has sought to gain the influence and cooperation of Zionism in the interests of this scheme. However, the Zionists have openly declared their antagonism to such a plan. The Jewish Revue, the organ of the Zionists, has openly declared that they will have nothing to do with such a fantastic project, especially as the victory of the allies, upon which the realization of this scheme is conditioned, is not materializing. The Zionists declare that they would like to have Palestine, but without interfering with the present government of the country, as the national reunion of the Jews can be consummated best with a strong Turkey.

In harmony with these ideas is the recent action of the Turkish Government, which has now removed all restrictions upon the immigration of the Jews into the land of their fathers. Jews can now settle down in the Holy Land almost without any formalities at all, and many are making use of this privilege. A leading Jewish organ, Nowy Woschod, declares that an immense immigration of Polish and Russian Jews particularly, who have suffered terribly in the war, is already setting in. It says that in Russia tens of thousands of innocent Jews have been slaughtered, dozens of programs have taken place, and with Palestine now open, hosts of these suffering people will throng to the Holy Land to secure under Moslem protection the right to live and to labor which Christian nations, especially Russia, have denied them. Schneller says that it would not be a surprise to find in Palestine within the next few years as large a number of Jews as were found there in the times of the Old Testament kings and prophets.—Current Opinion for June, 1916, pp. 422, 423.

SETTLING THE CONVICT LABOR PROBLEM BY ELIMINATING THE CONVICTS

Honorable George F. Cotterill, ex-Mayor of Seattle is now highway commissioner for the State of Washington.

As such, he has charge of the construction and maintenance of highways all over the State. In this construction and maintenance it has been the practice of the State to depend chiefly on convict labor and the saloons recruited the convicts in license days.

Now a new problem confronts the State. The dry law went into effect on January 1 and hundreds of convicts have been released in the meantime through the termination of their sentences.

In an address at Dominion Hall, Vancouver, British Columbia, on May 14, Commissioner Cotterill declared that the state-wide dry law had resulted in cutting off his supply of fresh convicts and that there were scarcely enough convicts left to operate the jute mills at the penitentiary, to say nothing of supplying labor for the highways.

For many years philosophers have opposed convict labor because, they said, it interfered with and debased free labor.

Washington is solving this convict labor problem by the plan of eliminating convicts through abolishing the principal source of supply, the saloon.—The New Republic, June 2, 1916.

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 2009 LOCUST ST., OMAHA, NEBR.

This month we present another of the able sketches of the lives of our great composers. These comprehensive little articles written for our columns by Brother McKim have proven very interesting to our readers, sharing honors for popularity with Sister Short's "Hymns we love," of which series we hope to have others soon.

We are fortunate to be able to give you, also, the valuable paper on the consecration of the choir members, written by Sister W. N. Robinson for our musical institute, held in the conference time. Read this thoughtfully and carry its convictions into your own heart and life. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed," was never more applicable than to our choir members, for all too many of them regard their membership too lightly—too casually. We are glad to note, however, that the time for the awakening along this as other lines, seems to have come, and we hear little things here and there which indicate that many of our singers and musicians, are understanding as they did not before, something of what it may mean to be a "singer in Israel." They see wherein lies effort, but also result; where charity, faithfulness, self-control, and all the long train of Christian graces, may be cultivated right in the choir service. It is opportunity not to be overlooked, and we are glad to know that so many are viewing it thus.

Regarding the recent musical activities of our choirs, we are scantily informed. In the East, we understand Brother Hoxie has given some splendid, inspirational evenings with the "Messiah," at Philadelphia, Elk Falls, and Elkton. At one of these places a church was dedicated, the choir of a hundred voices making the beautiful setting for the services.

Ye editor was permitted to help the singers of our faith at Nebraska City with the music for their recent celebration of the "golden anniversary" of their branch organization. This was held on Sunday, May 28, and consisted of three services, at which President Elbert A. Smith and Historian Heman C. Smith were the speakers.

The music consisted of anthems by the choir of thirty, vocal solos and duet, and piano and cello solos. Singing with the local choir were several of the business men of the city, who, through their regard and affection for Brother Higgins, were pleased to "help out" in this way.

Fifty years of branch organization must mean wonderful faithfulness and devotion to duty on the part of many different people. Troubles and discouragements are many, and too often people furl their banner and give up trying; but it is fine to know that the Saints at Nebraska City have triumphed over every force that sought their disintegration.

Music is the mediator between the spiritual and the sensual life. Although the spirit be not master of that which it creates through music, yet it is blessed in this creation which, like every creation of art, is mightier than the artist.—Beethoven.

Masters of Music

FREDERIC CHOPIN

In 1831 Poland was in a desperate revolution. She was struggling for her very existence as a nation, and was pouring out her best blood on the altar of patriotism. The tragedy of it yet throws a melancholy over those years, and cries out at the shame of a selfish world that would allow a noble people to be spoiled and divided and crushed down completely as a nation.

Out of the vortex of that terrible struggle came many men, soldiers whose names are now a synonym for patriotic devotion. But there came also a man, born of the same great sorrow, who was destined to speak the nation's grief in a different tongue. It was not given him to fight for his country: "He fought his battles within the walls of his soul. We may be witness of them in his music." That was Frederic Chopin.

He was born March 1, 1809, within nine miles of Warsaw, the fated city of the Poles. Revolution was brewing then, and his boyhood was spent in troublous times; before he came to manhood the country was seething with rebellion. A boy of high spirits and deep patriotism, he was heart and soul involved in the purpose to free his country from the Russians. When he was twenty-two, so active had he been, that he was apprehended as a revolutionist and was forced to flee his country. France, the native home of his father's people, was his natural refuge, and he made his way to Paris.

That was a momentous change for the young Pole. Paris was the metropolitan city of the world; the center of culture, the patron of art, the common meeting place of all whom the world called great. It was the Paris of Hugo, Blazac, Lamartine, Berlioz, Rossini, Myerbeer, Listz and Mendolssohn. It was "brilliant, enchanting, passionate, Paris," and moreover a city intensely democratic and deeply in sympathy with Poland. Chopin, handsome and brilliant, was received into high circles.

Neither Chopin's father nor his mother were musicians; but he, the only son, was a genius they said, endowed from his cradle. That is the story of all men who have achieved greatness, but certain it is that while very young, Chopin was put under competent instruction, and soon was beyond his master. His charming talent made friends for him in society far above his natural place, and he was adopted as a brother by rich young sons of nobility, and was loved by them as though he were of their blood. Then came the revolution, and they were all overwhelmed in the common ruin.

At twenty-two, Chopin came to Paris a finished musician. The piano was his one gift, and few could play like he, even at that age. He gave private concerts at which his distinguished friends applauded him and were delighted by his fresh young genius. Almost from the start success was his.

But applause did not bring money, and the disasters of his native land weighed heavily upon him. It was then that the brilliant, masterful, but conscienceless woman crossed his path, and tangled in yet deeper melancholy, the broken threads of his life. George Sand, the writer, the adventuress, met Chopin at a high social function, was interested, took the pains to enthrall him; held him a shameful captive for years, and then when the dark days came, and he became broken in health and a care, rather than a brilliant man he had been, casting luster on her name, she cast him off again and left him broken-hearted. Chopin was not as weak and effeminate as this would seem, but was temperamental, and entirely mastered by her notably strong will.

In those years he had worked hard, and had traveled much, and had spent his heart and mind to what seemed no purpose. But it was not a work without result. To-day Chopin is recognized as having been the greatest composer of piano music yet born. That his gift was restricted to that alone, makes his genius the more precious. He was wise in that he knew his own limitations. He never could be flattered into opera and but few times did he venture orchestra.

His art was of such high character that it was said of his many compositions, "The least was almost the greatest." Rubenstein, who was a native son of Poland and a pianist of power, says: "The piano bard, the piano rhapsodist, the piano mind, the piano soul, is Chopin. Tragic, romantic, lyric, heroic, dramatic, fantastic, soulful, sweet, dreamy, brilliant, grand, simple—all possible expressions are found in his compositions, and all are sung by him upon his instruments."

In 1850 he died, a broken-hearted, melancholy man. He would have fought for his country; he would have held the love of the woman he trusted; both opportunities were denied him. Greatness was his, but not that sweeter blessing, contentment. Materlinck said, apropos of him: "Most of our life is passed far from blood, cries and swords, and the tears of men have become silent, invisible and almost spiritual."

Musical Consecration

SHOULD THE INDIVIDUAL CONSECRATION OF THE CHOIR MEMBER EQUAL THAT OF THE DIRECTOR?

Consecration is individual—according to the devotion, spiritual desire, and development of the singer. Ofttimes the ambition of the leader has more artistic than religious capacity; and too, sometimes, in fact very often, great results are obtained where there is not one ounce of consecration or devotion, but strength of personality dominates and the leader has ability to hold and control his singers.

The eloquence of personality, be it from a religious development or superior knowledge, or even for a great love of the art of music, is one of the greatest requisites toward a volunteer choir—and most church choirs come under this head.

The leader, who is spiritually consecrated to his work, has but one motive, and that should be the development of the singers, in a way that will cause every member of the audience to feel a deeper thrill of emotion, and exhalt the mood of the congregation so the preacher may have their undivided attention, and his words be impressed upon their minds and hearts.

On the other hand, the members of the choir consist of many varieties of character, and disposition, whose motives in attending rehearsal are frequently as varied. The leader rarely has cause to complain of the absence of those who attend from a sense of duty and devotion, but leaders of experience, know that the responsibility of attendance so often depends upon how interested they can keep the members, how attractive the music used may be, and they have always to avoid making the work tedious or arduous.

I cannot see how the position of leader and choir member can be compared, as to equal responsibility. The leader usually, because of years of preparation, accepts the responsibility, the same as the preacher, organist, or other officers of the church, but the choir members aside from the great pleasure they get out of singing, feel no greater responsibility as a rule, than the members who occupy the pews and who exercise their own will and pleasure whether they shall attend church or not.

Most choir members have, for various reasons not had as much opportunity to develop their talent as one who fits himself for leadership, and insomuch as they differ in development and ability do they usually differ in consecration, particularly in this line of work.

The rehearsals must be made attractive, and when too much attention is paid in the selection of music, to develop and deepen the musical taste of the choir and congregation such method is liable to convert the church service into a musical lecture room, such choirs becoming autocratic, losing altogether in time their chance for consecration and spiritual development.

As I stated in a paper read last year, the choir is only a part of the service whose duty it is to mellow and put the listener in a devotional mood, and this is the real mission of church music at all services. Such results, while they are for the benefit of the congregation, are also the very means of developing the spiritual nature of the choir member, whose spirit of devotion ofttimes does not equal that of many, many of those sitting in the pews. The location in church is different that's all, and while one may sing to do his part, the other member may pray for the singers or show his devotion in a dozen other ways, to the benefit of those who come within his sphere of influence. Of course I must say right here, I am only considering the true and real condition of choirs, not the ideal.

As the choir member is interested to attend regularly, he can gradually be impressed with the great privilege as well as responsibility of his work in order to develop his loyalty and conscientious devotion; and a strong choir spirit cultivated and encouraged. When the leader accepts the position, he has realized his conscientious duty; the choir member comes to this, by a process of awakened responsibility and devotion and the time of awakening is longer with some than others. Because of this the leader is obliged to be patient with such individuals until their minds and hearts are quickened to their equal responsibility with the leader; but the choir is a graded school as duty is realized then developed by activity that person becomes a help, and benefit, and can be depended upon to attend rehearsals regularly. The preacher could not preach to empty pews nor is the consecration of his congregation as great as his, but he must touch his listeners by his proof and convincing argument as well as by his highly spiritualized character. So must the leader of the choir, because of his superior knowledge of music, devotion and consecration develop the same spirit because of his leadership in the singers, and as I said before, the development in some will always be greater than others. This difference of development is responsible for the irregularity of attendance at rehearsals, and undoubtedly will always exist, but we hope in a very small way, because, it's a rare person who will join a choir but what has a deep devotional side, which in time can be brought out. Every member will sooner or later recognize he has been slothful, where he should have been making generous use of his talent and realizing he has an individual responsibility he cannot ignore.

Until the ideal of all members at rehearsal is obtained, some of the hardships can be overcome by good management, in making use of everyone who does attend. For instance, divide and subdivide the work. Have picked quartets whose duty will be to sing all solos for a period of time, two or three months, and during their period of service nothing but sickness or death would excuse them from their duty, and let the dependable choir members have a Sunday off when they may visit other choirs and make a fair comparison as to what they are accomplishing and where they can better their work for the good of all.

In large choirs it is possible to select a number of quartets who will serve as soloists for certain periods of time, thus giving every individual who has the desire to be heard in his humble way the opportunity. This will increase the attendance at rehearsals and create the choir spirit, which a successful choir must have. The stronger the spirit the better the choir. We all know individual work creates a greater interest in things undertaken, but it all in the end returns to the leader whose diplomacy and strategy must be of a very pronounced nature. Difficulties in choirs, have often been adjusted by open discussion, beneficial ideas exchanged, and when all members cherish high ideals and a conscientious pride in making their part of the service devotional, such a choir will be successfully fulfilling its mission as a factor in church service—and the leader will have no cause to complain of lack of attendance at rehearsals—or choir spirit.

To Our Readers

This issue contains the closing article of the series Sister Stebbins has been so carefully and commendably preparing for the use of those sisters throughout the church who have been studying the welfare of the child.

These articles have been published in leaflet form, and have constituted a very valuable collection of information along this line. Sister Stebbins has kept in touch with the best that has been written upon these subjects, and her compilations and comments have been brought to us only at the expenditure of much time, thought, labor and consecration on her part. We should regret seeing this series come to a close were it not for the fact that the earnest desire to be of real service, the unflagging zeal and unflinching devotion to the cause of womanhood, motherhood and childhood which has characterized the work of our sister in the past, gives assurance that she will not be idle in the future, and that her studies and efforts will still be placed at the service of the cause she loves so well.

JULY READING.—ADOLESCENCE

WORK WITH, NOT AGAINST NATURE

"In our study of faults and their analyses we saw that behind most faults there are admirable forces that need only proper direction in order that they may be utilized for good in the development of the child's character. These faults may spring from splendid energy that has not been permitted a proper activity, from fine emotions that are undisciplined and have not been given a happy outlet, from faculties that have not been given or allowed a wholesome occupation." The writer quoted says, "The trouble is that either these splendid forces, these virtues, have somehow been distorted, or that we parents in our well-meaning ignorance of the truth have pursued exactly the wrong course to encourage their proper growth."

In connection with this we remember the advice of Professor Irving King to "redirect the child rather than to stop him point-blank," and the added counsel, "Many things that the child may want to do are neither suitable nor right, but the energy of the impulse, in most cases, can be used in some desirable forms of activity."

In accordance with the foregoing and because the independent spirit of adolescence is to be reckoned with, not crushed, Professor William A. McKeever suggests as the first help in the management of our youthful sons and daughters "always to work with the strong current of appetite, desire, or instinctive tendency, aiming to adapt it to better conditions rather than to suppress or wholly eradicate it."

This author says: "For a time the adolescent has the body of an adult with the mind and moral judgment of a child. After the form has made its sudden lurch forward we must wait for his mind to catch up and adjust itself to the new conditions. Certain nerve processes and connections seem to be lacking and only time and experience can supply them properly. His imagination soars freely amidst the enticing scenes of the world around him, but he is almost wholly devoid of what we have called 'sober second thought.'

"Nature has so ordained it that she put impulses, appetites, instincts and cravings into growing humanity. She depends upon these strong inner forces to serve as springs of action. These are the dynamic factors of conduct. 'Keep moving, keep doing something, whether it is right or wrong,' she demands of the growing child. 'Nobody can tell you how the things of the world really are; you must find out for yourself.'

"So the 'foolhardy deeds,' the 'immorality' and the 'prodigality' of youth are other names for unmorality; and this is a term merely signifying inexperience. Wherefore . . . the word of admonition is this: Go with, rather than against, your young son or daughter who is being lured on by appetite or desire. . . .

"Mild tolerance of the youth's whims is a prime necessity. . . . However, it is well during this transitional epoch of youth to forestall in every reasonable way the actual taking up of habits that are fundamentally base, such as theft, idleness and sexual perversion."

Articles on the subject of adolescence by Professor McKeever have been recommended to our readers in the past. They are to be found in American Motherhood, commencing September, 1915, and continuing to the present. Those who desire further insight into the problems of adolescence will find it profitable to read them. A few of their good points will be found in extracts here given.

YOUTH'S HUNGRY APPETITE

"Eating and drinking constitute a big element of the most desirable things of life as the youth sees it. There is a time of most rapid growth in stature, say, fourteen to sixteen, when a boy can sit down and partake heartily of a 'square meal' immediately after he has finished the last course of an ordinary full dinner. It is a difficult matter for us to recall from our own past experiences the voraciousness of this youthful hunger for food or the intense pleasure which eating gives its possessor. . . . You can never satisfy the big hungry appetite of youth with the food supply intended for a mere boy. The fifteen-year-old boy must be filled up daily with something which he considers good to eat and he must be supplied with a proportionate amount of liquid.

"The point which I am trying to emphasize is that nature takes a radical turn at this time of youth, that the voracious appetite for eating and drinking is a new and normal thing and that it is to become a most potent factor in the processes of training and character formation.

"The rule which we urged previously holds good in this case: namely, travel with and not against the force of nature. Recognize and respect the youth's hungry appetite and see that it is satisfied at least occasionally. The thing especially to avoid is any excessive rule or habit. For example, it is bad for your boy and his future strength of character for him to acquire the practice of eating a fourth heavy repast late in the evening or at midnight, as some do. However, it might be well to indulge him in this thing occasionally as a variation.

"A big 'feed' for the voracious young animal should be definitely and not infrequently provided. An evening party where the young folks will all eat enough to put an adult out of action, a camping party where the boys gorge themselves with a lot of . . . materials of their own preparation, a Sunday school picnic in the woods where the adolescents of both sexes may finish the informal meal with about nine different varieties of rich cake—these are all highly proper for your healthy fifteen-year-old boy on irregular occasions and you should deem it a joy and a privilege to assist him in obtaining them. He must realize that he and you are happy companions, even in the matter of securing in modified form those things which he just now craves in such large dimensions. Thus you acquire a firm hold on his good will and affections and place yourself in a position to help realize his slow-going transformation into a big, manly man. Do not worry if the youth appears to be somewhat stupid the next day after. That is just what he needs—to experience a sense of discomfort and to realize nature's law of exacting payment for his excesses. In a very few months, when his body is fully matured, your boy will come round to the normal appetite of a man.

THE LAW OF HABIT

"The best weapon for the parent who would deal successfully with the drink problem of youth is to know the law of habit and how it operates in the making and breaking of character. This fact is most fundamental, as well as significant for the boy trainer; namely, that the great majority of youths who acquire the drink habit before they are twenty-one are destined to continue as life victims and that nearly all of those who do not acquire the habit before they are twenty-one never acquire it at all. . . . So in dealing with the youthful tendency to drink, the parent may consider that by far the best time to begin to counteract the tendency is before the boy ever takes his first swallow.

DRINK FOR THE BOY

"As stated above, the adolescent has a very large stomach capacity. He craves liquids as well as solid foods. . . . Our rule of going with the youthful current of desire must again be brought into use. While seeking to prevent your boy from even tasting any form of intoxicants—a thing which I most earnestly urge—it is desirable to forestall the more serious indulgence with a milder one. . . . There are certain drinks which contain habit forming elements and which should be strenuously avoided as habitual indulgences. There are others, like grape juice, orange and lemonade which are perhaps harmless. Pop may also be in this class. . . . And, just as a 'feed' was suggested above as a means of indulging properly the hungry appetite, so now an occasional 'fillup' is commended in order to quench the burning thirst. On very irregular occasions, and perhaps at a time when other young company is in, fill your boy to the-bursting point on something in the class of 'harmless drinks.' It will be all the better if he gets up next morning heavyheaded because of the indulgence.

"However, you must try to provide that all this hilarity occurs at home. The running off to the soda fountain and the other too numerous soft drink stands must be avoided if possible. Conditions at these places are so drawn as well-nigh to force your boy to drink, even against his will. Keep him out of them if you can. Among the associate evils of social drinking that of treating is especially serious for a youth to take up. It is one of the first steps to loose spending and a loss of one's control over his better self as well as his purse strings. . . .

"There is involved here the matter of the boy's earning and saving and of the spending of his own money—a question important enough for separate treatment. Suffice it to say now that the young man who would squander his money treating, needs to be taught the real value of this commodity. He must learn through well-directed experience just how to lay by a small sum out of his earnings and how to make this small account work for him. . . .

"To earn, to save, to spend, to give, these are the four heavenly graces which must needs grow up evenly out of one's economic relations to life; and these, rightly balanced, constitute a large part of the true Christian character.

A REASONABLE PROGRAM OF DISCIPLINE

"Your boy will not naturally assume a fair and reasonable attitude toward the plain and substantial things of life. He must be taught to do this. Only by degrees will he learn to respect common honesty and the common work of the world to the extent of their full worth. . . . Only by degrees will he learn to detect the sham and the superficiality of those whose chief concern is to move in the daily whirl of social excess. Only by degrees will he learn to endure his share of the heavy work, the privations and the self-denial which must come into the building of the big constructive personality which you have in mind for his future. But the parent of full insight and understanding will set himself firmly, and yet kindly, against the whims, the complaints, and the threats of recklessness which so often come from the lips of the youthful son who is fretting under a reasonable program of discipline. However, in time he will come to the point of understanding himself and will seize upon the higher ideals which before have seemed so wrong for him and will claim them as his own."

A bit of good advice about the girl is this: "If you really love your adolescent daughter and if you are really concerned about her future and your own, teach her to do a regular and reasonable amount of housework, see that she has a regular income of her own no matter how small and that she saves regularly a certain portion of this. Above all things else of an economic nature, teach her to spend her earnings carefully as a rule, but allow for innocent frivolity as an exception.

A HIGHER SOCIAL STANDARD

"Adolescent young people are not capable of making their own social programs unaided, any more than they are capable of preparing a course of study for their schooling. Therefore it is wise to go over these interesting matters with the boy and help him to decide where and when to go and what social affairs he should avoid. It will help his case if he can be made a member of some youthful group of society which is conducted under reasonable management and which therefore avoids excesses. In making out this schedule, it must be remembered that the rule of the young life should be steady and regular with an allowance for only an occasional extra social strain of some kind. . . .

"There ought to be some kind of court of social justice which would call to account the overindulgent parents who permit their adolescent children to set foolish and extravagant patterns of social conduct, for these people are actually perpetrating a wrong upon society and are interfering with the promotion of a real democracy in this country. . . .

"Some one must be trained to set a high and worthy example for the others. Then why not have your own boy [and girl] do some of this constructive social work. But in order to have him do this successfully we must remember that he will need continuous guidance and an oft repeated affirmation of his highest social ideals and purpose. . . .

"Let us cease striving for so much private and selfish good for our young people and seek with more zeal and earnestness to raise the general standard. We need a new vision of social worth for young people and for possible human worth at large. I can think of no bigger business in which ordinary parents could engage, therefore, than for them to come together occasionally in neighborhood clubs and discuss ways and means whereby they may furnish, not to the select few, but to all their worthy young members a common program of social interests and activities. . . .

"How often should our young folks go out at evening? What kind of social affairs are best for them? How can we make them respect plain work and industry? How can we make them satisfied with ordinary clothes for everyday wear, and reasonably good adornments for special occasions? How can we keep them away from the allurements of gambling, drinking, the coarse vaudeville theaters, and vile literature? How can we prevent our youths and maidens of tender age from going together regularly as love mates? Thus any neighborhood group of parents may find scores of questions of the most vital nature which they may and should discuss together and from which they may derive common standards of social conduct for their young people."
—William A. McKeever, professor and head of department of child welfare in the University of Kansas.

With this reading the task assigned of providing collated material as a basis for study is completed and the leaflets containing the same will be discontinued. The Yearbook which should be in the hands of all auxiliary leaders will suggest textbooks for the different lines of study.

[The following letter to President Elbert A. Smith will be of interest to the Saints.—EDITORS.]

CLINTON, MISSOURI, April 30, 1916.

Dear Brother Elbert: Having just read your editorial in the HERALD, "Notes on the Late Conference," I feel like writing you a few words.

With me there has never been any doubt but that God would continue to manifest his will to his church under the present leadership, as in former times.

The Lord had shown me in a dream which I had on the morning of December 1, one year before the death of Brother Joseph, that the mantle of his father would descend to Frederick M. And so I had expected that there would be a revelation at this conference, and have not the slightest doubt but what there will be others from time to time in the future as the needs of the work may require.

Looking forward as I did, because of this dream and other spiritual manifestations to me, to the continuation of the Lord's leadership over his people, you can imagine with what joy, with what a feeling of confirmation it was that I read the account of this communication to the church, as given in the report of the Conference. I say you can imagine that, because it is no doubt similar to your own experience, and the experience of many others prominent in the church work, but you can hardly realize the degree of wonder, of surprise, and of thankfulness which was mine that the Lord had seen fit to single out one so lowly as myself to receive such testimony.

The dream, insofar as it concerned Frederick M., has now been fulfilled to the very letter, and whatever the Lord's purpose may have been in sending it to me, the fact of my receiving it, together with subsequent events, has greatly strengthened my faith in the Lord's watch care over his work and its final triumph.

Concerning myself I may say, I would feel better satisfied if I were not so much like a spectator standing at one side looking on. I have of late years had a great desire to get into the fray, to take a more active part of some kind in the work, but within the last few weeks I have been called to pass through a very great trial, and now I feel that if I ever do develop into a real worker, it will be as one who has "come up through great tribulation."

If you think it would serve any good purpose, you may publish this letter in the HERALD, for whatever purpose the Lord may have had in giving me this light, it is certain that it was not for the purpose of hiding it under a bushel. Others might be strengthened thereby as I was.

With best personal regards and a hope that looks toward a brighter future, spiritually at least, I am,

Respectfully,

WILLIS W. KEARNEY.

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA, May 2, 1916.

Editors Herald: The General Conference is over and the elders have been assigned their fields of labor. We rejoiced to know that Brother F. G. Pitt will again labor in northern California, and would remind him and wife that we have not forgotten his promise to visit our little branch.

Yesterday, May 1, I had the pleasure of baptizing a noble young man and his wife. As I only hold the Aaronic priesthood, would be glad to have a visit from an elder to attend to the confirmation. There are others interested.

I have sown the seed, but an elder could scatter it over a little broader area. Our little branch has been "down and out" long enough, and for the lack of numbers it has been disorganized. We now have seven live members, and we hope to make a better showing soon.

Yours in bonds,
E. F. ADAMSON.

CHESTERFIELD, NEBRASKA, May 4, 1916.

Editors Herald: I came here and took up a homestead January 3, 1916, thinking to begin the year right. The cowboys told me Uncle Sam was only betting me a whole section of land against my fifteen dollars, that I could not stay here three years to obtain a patent. I looked the country over and found that the hills are only good for grazing stock, but that on every section there is enough land to raise a living for a family. I kept wondering why people could not stay in this part of the country. When you build your house in the center of one these sections you are bound to feel proud, since you are almost the monarch of all you survey,—but when the preparations were finished for a three years' stay I began to see why conditions had been represented to me as they had.

Some of the reasons for this conclusion are as follows: Solitude may have charms for the sages and poets, but has lost all its beauty to me. Society, friendship, and love, are not to be found in this region.

The sound of a churchgoing bell has never been heard in these valleys, neither to call the worshipers together on the Sabbath, nor toll the knell of a departed one.

I would not like to run down my own country. I suppose the Lord knows why I am here. As Alexander Selkirk closed his poem, and I have found much truth in the words, so I say:

"There is mercy in every place,
And mercy's encouraging thought,
Gives even affliction a grace
And reconciles man to his lot."

If I should be permitted to live the allotted time, I hope to serve my Lord and leave at least some footprints in the sands of time that will never wash out, but point the way to eternal life. My courage sinks to a low ebb, sometimes, but I do not lose faith in the latter-day work. This is my first experience in trying to start the work in a new place, for my husband, Dine Carter, deceased, was always with me before, and letting our light shine was a pleasure in the years past and gone. I have inquired to see if there are any Saints around here, but so far have found none.

I desire an interest in your prayers, dear Saints, that I may be able to find some inquiring after the truth, that the hearts of the people in these sand hills may be touched and softened toward me, for unless the Lord does work on them I shall fail utterly.

Your sister,
MARY A. CARTER.

BISMARCK, NORTH DAKOTA, May 7, 1916.

Editors Herald: The dear old HERALD is a comfort to me. We mean to try to spread the gospel where my husband is homesteading in Sioux County, North Dakota, and hope to get a place to worship by the help of our heavenly Father. There are many Indians living there, as this is the Standing Rock Indian Reservation.

Brother Young was home last week. He said a prettier country he never saw, and very fine soil. Of course one needs a little spare money to file on land and locate, but farm work is plentiful and wages good through the summer season.

I love to read the letters of the dear Saints. Among them I read the letter of W. A. Moler, from Columbus, Ohio. James Moler, his father, who recently passed away, was a very dear Saint to us, and frequently made his home at our house when I lived in Ohio. I love to hear from the Columbus

Branch. I lived there some seventeen years ago, when there were only four or five Saints to be found in the city. Three of us met one winter and had prayer and testimony at our houses. The Saints there will remember me as Sister Green. I have been informed that the Saints have two church buildings in the city now, which I am glad to know. I trust the good work will continue to grow.

We have tried to get the gospel before the people here in this city, but have not made much headway as yet. There is only one Saint that we know of besides ourselves, living in the city. We have lived here six months and never have been in any of the churches. Have had some of our elders call. Brother Young has never been associated very much with Saints, but has been a member for a number of years and has great faith. He has no use for doctors; for all of his ailments he goes to his heavenly Father, and is greatly blessed with good health. He gave up his home in Canada on account of the seriousness of war. I said to him, "We are trying to take a new start in life, only to leave it, as we are growing along in years."

He said, "We will try to leave something for the Lord." So we hope.

May the dear Lord bless all his children and keep us faithful through our remaining days.

MRS. L. C. YOUNG.

212 Sixth Street.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 27, 1916.

Editors Herald: In part 1 of my communication to the HERALD, on page 471, in reference to quotation from Paul, the sense is destroyed by the omission of the words, "unto righteousness," and the failure also to quote in the prefix the statement, "keep thy heart," with all diligence, etc. [The following words were omitted in copying: "unto righteousness," but also the instruction of the wise man, "keep thy heart."—EDITORS.]

In the beginning of part 2, in HERALD of May 24, the sense of the quotation from motto had from the Congressional Library at Washington, District of Columbia, obscured, and made confusing by the substitution of the term "God" for good, as it should, if it did not, appear in the manuscript.

"Billy" Sunday has the stage center of attraction and interest in Independence as well as in Kansas City. "Billy" will do us but little harm, or good, if we let him alone, or are careful of indorsement or criticism.

He is saying some splendid things in a forceful if not elegant way, however, in regard to the sins that every minister of Christ is called to combat, but as Latter Day Saints we cannot forget that his position is an anomalous one, and the value of whose work as a whole, has to be considered in the light of the religious history of the world for the last three quarters of a century.

We know that one of, if not the principal objects of his campaign is the reinforcement by additional membership to the popular churches of the day. And we also know that the truth of the message from heaven nearly a century ago, declaring that they were "all wrong," radically so, suggests the inquiry, "Have they been getting better since?" or that subsequent history of men, women, and ministers whom God has called and whose work has been approved by many infallible and unanswerable signs and tokens are in abundant evidence that matters in this direction have not improved.

"Straight is the gate and narrow is the way," said the Master, whom we are trying to serve: "Wide is the gate and broad the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat."

"Billy's" gate looks crooked to me, and his "way" seems to be about broad enough to take in a good many things for which are little or no scripture, or for that matter, reasonable vouchers for, and for that exclusion which God in his mercy and divine call to me through the latter-day message from skepticism, that the mental and scriptural confusion wrought by this modern Babel had wrought for me, my daily prayer of thanksgiving goes up to the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

Your editorial in HERALD of May 24 is good and to the point in calling the attention of our people and the people of the world, who have "ears to hear," to information sadly needed in regard to a "salvation" that will "save" people from becoming ignorant opposers or persecutors of the servants and of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

SAPULPA, OKLAHOMA, June 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: I am writing this letter to the elders sent to the Oklahoma District, not knowing myself what district I am located in. [Sapulpa is in the Central Oklahoma District.—Editors.] My husband and I are running a boarding house in the oil fields near the Bluebell Schoolhouse, seven miles west of Sapulpa. The schoolhouse is open to our people, or has been. Brethren R. Sherman and Fitzwater preached here and a number became interested. Brother Fitzwater baptized some. We could take care of an elder if he would come here and preach. We would try to meet him in town, and get him out here if he would write us in advance. We live on rural route number 4, and get the mail three times a week. We live on the Stimson lease.

I would be glad to have any one come that can; he or they will find a welcome.

Yours in the faith,
MRS. HELEN THOMPSON.

FITZHUGH, OKLAHOMA, June 6, 1916.

Editors Herald: Having been transferred from Arkansas and Louisiana to Central Oklahoma District, I would ask the Saints and friends of this part of Oklahoma to write me, as this field is new to me, and inform me of their whereabouts, so we can arrange for the work of the year. Address me at Holdenville, Oklahoma.

Your brother in Christ,
JAMES M. SMITH.

News from Missions

Southeastern Mission

Leaving home on May 6, I have labored to the best of my ability at Theodore, Alabama, Biloxi, Escatawpa, and Three Rivers, Mississippi. This writing finds me at Helena, Mississippi, holding forth nightly to large, interested crowds.

"God works in a mysterious way His wonders to perform." Last March, God in his wisdom saw fit to take from this community, Orie Young, son of Brother and Sister J. W. Young. Being called here to officiate in the funeral rites, I felt especially blessed in the effort, the crowd on the occasion not being able to find seating room. This opened up the way for more work, as many became interested, and wanted to hear more. So I came here last Sunday night and began meetings in the schoolhouse which was crowded to its capacity. The attendance has been fine all the way through, some are especially interested and no doubt there will be some baptisms before I leave. These are mostly people from the North who have settled on farms here and developed the country remarkably during the last five or ten years.

I must commend the Saints of this part of the country for the loyal way they have rallied to the support of these meetings. Notwithstanding we had just closed a two-weeks meeting at Escatawpa, still they continue to attend here. They work hard in the mills, fields, or on the river or farms, then drive or walk four or five miles to meeting, night after night. Support of this character not only encourages the missionary but is an eye opener to the world, showing them that we have not followed devised fables, but that our work is attractive and worthy our best efforts. I have enjoyed my labors among these noble Saints, and all their efforts to make the missionary feel at home shall never be forgotten.

The last night of our meeting at Escatawpa the Spirit was felt in a remarkable degree, harmonizing beautifully with the subject, "The witness of the Spirit." The text was, "If ye have received the witness of men the witness of God is greater (1 John 5:9). As we spoke beneath the influence which rested upon us as a mantle, many of the congregation were in tears. We feel that there is an awakening among the Saints, and may it continue everywhere, as Paul has said, "Awake to righteousness and sin not" (1 Corinthians 15:34), until the words of the poet shall be realized;

"This dreaded slumber soon I feel
Afresh upon my spirit steal,
Rise Lord, stir up thy quickening power,
And wake me that I sleep no more!"

May 12 I baptized two children in the beautiful "Back Bay," Biloxi. Then coming to Escatawpa I held forth two weeks with splendid interest and at the close baptized seven, and we feel that others will follow soon. We have a splendid opportunity to do good at this place, and a good work will yet be done there if the proper effort is put forth, notwithstanding the fact that the history of the place shows us to have met persecutions, mobs and opposition of various kinds. We have been ably assisted in our work at this place by the Baptists. Of course they didn't mean to do it. We were especially advertised and benefitted by a series of lectures against "Mormonism," delivered there last summer by one Reverend (?) Hulbert. A challenge to public discussion was submitted in the form of a circular letter by Brother F. M. Slover, which, of course, was not accepted but had the desired effect, anyway, Brother Slover also replying to the lectures with good results. Another way in which they have assisted us is in turning many of their members out of the church because of a failure to pay their per capita assessment on the pastor's salary, thereby causing them to see that "the heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money" (Micah 3:11). How puny and unchristlike this appears when contrasted with the work of a man thoroughly imbued with the divinity and sacredness of his calling and the importance of his mission, going forth without purse or scrip! How glorious the thought and how noble the labor, striving to liberate captive souls from mental and spiritual slavery—surely there can be no worse form of slavery. Slowly but surely, we see the shackles which have been riveted upon a deluded people by a dominating priestcraft, falling away before the power which makes men free indeed, and with an eye of faith, we see through the mists of the future the realization of the dream of latter-day Israel, that ultimately freedom shall supersede slavery, virtue shall conquer vice, truth shall prevail over error, light shall banish darkness and man, made in the image of God, shall rise resplendent in the glory of universal brotherhood!

known as her greatest soldier, and who as the British war secretary has directed the army since the beginning of the present war.

SUFFRAGE NOTES.—In the recent Iowa State primary the cause of woman suffrage was lost by about 4,655 majority. Following this defeat the Missouri organizations decided not to file petitions for placing a suffrage amendment on the Missouri ballot next fall. The matter may come before Iowa voters again at a special election in 1919 or primary election in 1920. The Republican national convention has written an indorsement of woman suffrage into the party platform, "but recognizes the right of each State to settle this question for itself."

GAINING AN HOUR.—On June 14 France followed the plan previously adopted by Germany, England, Holland, Italy, and the Scandinavian countries of advancing the legal time one hour. This will be in operation till October 1. Congress has been asked to consider making it a national law with us and the matter is in the hands of a committee now. Many business houses are adopting the plan. The argument is that it gives more daylight hours during the summer months, allowing an extra hour at the close of day for recreation and other activities.

MEXICAN TROUBLE.—On the 4th 15,000 Mexicans paraded in Monterey as a protest against "possible American intervention in Mexico." A conference between Generals Pershing and Gavira took place the 2d and it is understood that plans were agreed upon for future action in hunting down local bandits. Anti-American riots in Chihuahua City on the 6th and 7th resulted in the American consulate nearly being wrecked and an exodus of Americans to the United States border. On the 8th Mexican rioters destroyed the American consulate at Durango by fire, after dragging the flag through the streets. On the night of the 10th raiders crossed the border not far from Laredo, Texas, and drove off eighty horses, but did no other damage. Minor conflicts between small parties continue.

EUROPEAN CONFLICT.—Violent activity is reported on all important fronts. The Russian offensive on the Austrian frontier has met with considerable success. They claim to have taken 118,000 prisoners, much war material, and to have advanced over fifteen miles in their recent offensive. The conflict in Turkish-Armenia between Russians and Turks seems well matched, with no spectacular developments. At Verdun the Germans have captured Fort Vaux, one of the chief French defenses of that city, bringing their forces slightly nearer the coveted goal. The fierceness of the attack has not abated. The British line near Ypres was forced to yield to the German attack, the former losing the trenches at the village of Hooge. Martial law has been proclaimed in Saloniki, Greece, and allied troops have taken possession of the port, customs house, and telegraph offices. It is reported that a blockade of the ports of Saloniki has been declared by the allies, and an embargo has in fact virtually closed all ports of Greece to other than allied boats. Twelve classes of the Greek army, totaling 150,000 men, one half the total army, have been demobilized by order of King Constantine. On the Austro-Italian front some minor gains are reported by both sides, with the balance in favor of Italy. The intensity of the conflict continues. The Italian cabinet has resigned.

The Bishopric

AGENTS' NOTICES

To the Saints of the Far West District; Greeting: The appointing powers at our last General Conference gave you my services as bishop of your district, and I am acting in my office as bishop of the Independence Stake until the organization of the stake here is effected, which has been set for July 1.

I shall remain here till that date, then I will be with you at the earliest possible date to enter upon the work assigned me. I feel assured when we have the opportunity of getting acquainted and our work mutually outlined, we as Saints and servants of the Master will be anxious to cooperate in our work and make the year one of activity and sacrifice, that will please Him who has called us to service as laborers together with him, and thus contribute to the building up of his Zion of these last days.

I will endeavor to visit each branch in the district, beginning at Saint Joseph, as soon as we can make arrangements, and will be ready for work.

The day, with its golden opportunity for service, is ours. Let us appreciate the honor of doing for Jesus Christ, who said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." If we do all that is possible for us to do, we are to say "We have only done our duty." Nothing short of this will satisfy the Master who gave his all for us.

Your colaborer in the Master's cause,

RICHARD BULLARD.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 10, 1916.

We have entered upon a new conference year with a good staff of able missionaries, who are not only able men, but are consecrated to their work as well.

We have three missionaries in the field: Elder Booker for Ogden and northern Utah, Elder McKim for Provo and the south. Elder A. V. Closson for Salt Lake City. Being under General Conference appointment, the duty devolves upon us as members of the church of Christ in the Utah District to provide for the wants of their families. To see that this is done is the prime requirement of my office as the agent of the Presiding Bishop. Last year we experienced considerable difficulty in keeping these families from want. We had to call upon the Presiding Bishop several times to help us out. This ought not to be necessary, because we have members enough that, if we would all do our duty, we could provide the means among ourselves to take care of the missionary efforts of this district. Nor do I believe it would be a hardship upon any of us. All that is required is that we will do what we can, every one of us; no matter how small and unimportant our monthly donation may appear to us to be, it should be sent in regularly. Those of us who have no tithing due the church let us pay the offerings, on the principle of the widow's mite. I urge upon each and every Saint in the Utah District to do his or her duty this conference year, financially and otherwise, and let us make 1916 a banner year. Let us each decide that our name shall be found upon the report which goes into the bishop's office for this year.

Fraternally yours, in bonds,

C. A. SMURTHWAITE, Bishop's Agent.

Pastoral

Saints and Friends of Arkansas and Louisiana: As I am again sent back to this field for another year I would be glad to hear from all that have a desire for the spread of the gospel. Dear Saints, as I have again been appointed as your assistant minister in charge, if you wish the work opened up at your place, will you please let me hear from you? If you will drop me a few lines I will try to get to you or send someone just as soon as possible. There are but three of us left to labor in these two large States, as they have taken Brother James M. Smith from us. We regret very much to lose him from our field, but we shall submit to the powers that be and do the very best we can.

Let us all labor together for the advancement of this great work. We want your help. That means you. Will you help? You may say, What can I do? Dear Saints, there is something for us all to do. We may not all be able to preach, but we can help in some other way. We can help with our substance in the way of tithes and offerings. Remember, I am acting as bishop's agent and am ready to receipt you for any amount you may have to send in. Let us try to make this the best year we have ever had in this field. We can do this if all will work together to this end.

I want the brethren who have been appointed to labor with me in this field to feel free to labor anywhere that opportunity may afford. Local brethren, will you give us all the help you can? For we need it. Don't think that just because you are not a missionary we do not want your help, for we do.

Let us all work together hand in hand, and try to make this a great year for the Master's work in this field. I expect to give considerable of my time to Louisiana this year and would be glad to hear from any of the scattered Saints in that State, for we would like to visit you and open up the work in your part of the field. Anyone wishing to write me should address me at my home address, 109 West Adams Street, Pittsburg, Kansas, and it will reach me in due time. Who will be the first to write us in regard to opening up the work at your place?

Wishing the Saints throughout the field the best of success, and ever praying that the Lord may bless us in our efforts to build up this great kingdom of God upon earth and that we may be counted worthy to be among the redeemed when the Lord shall come, I remain,

Your brother and colaborer in gospel bonds,

J. T. RILEY.

To the Ministry and Saints of Northern Michigan District; Greeting: Having been appointed assistant minister in charge of this district again, I desire the cooperation of all, that unitedly we may be able to accomplish a good work for the Master this conference year.

We have four missionaries, viz, Arthur E. Starks, Charles N. Burtch, A. E. Burr, and the writer. With your cooperation we hope to be able to reach many honest souls with the angel's message. Brother Burtch will labor at the Soos and vicinity and extend his labor as much as time and circumstances will permit throughout the Upper Peninsula. He will labor at the Soos in conjunction with the Canadian missionary force. Brother Burr will labor as much as possible in the counties of Alpena, Montmorency, Presque Isle, and Otsego. The writer will look after the work in Cheboygan, Emmet, Charlevoix, and Antrim counties. Brother Starks as district president will have the care of the branches first and do missionary work as circumstances permit in the neighborhood of the branches working in conjunction with the missionaries of the different localities mentioned above.

We feel it our duty to say a few words in behalf of our district president: He is self-sustaining this year and is also giving his automobile to the Lord's work, gratis. Some may think that a man with an auto is able to travel for nothing. It is the duty of the Saints to assist our brother with traveling expenses just the same as though he were traveling by rail. It costs money to run a car. Inasmuch as our brother is willing to give his services and furnish the car, we hope the Saints will treat him the same as the ministers who travel by rail. We think it is the intention of Brother Starks to give the branches better aid, also the scattered membership more help through the auto service.

Added responsibility, burdens and sickness at home, have hindered the writer in his ministerial labors this spring, and at times he has been threatened with the necessity of remaining at home this year, but we hope the Lord will overrule for the best that we may be able to direct our activities where they are needed. We ask your prayers.

We would like to hear from all that desire preaching; especially the isolated ones. If you want to get in touch with any of the missionary force and do not know where to find them, just write the undersigned and we will make an effort to get a missionary into your locality to assist you. Always address the writer at his home address, South Boardman, Michigan. May God speed the right.

Your servant and Christ's,

ALVIN R. ELLIS.

Corrections

In the HERALD for June 7 under the heading "The Bishopric," in the Miscellaneous Department, it was stated that Charles B. Welch had been appointed as bishop's agent for the Southern Indiana District. This should have read James B. Welch.

In Idaho reunion notice appearing in the HERALD of May 10, where it reads "Two trains daily each way stop at Sawyer and will be met with conveyance from beginning of reunion until end, including July 2," should read, "from beginning of reunion until and including July 2."

To the Photographers of the Church

A camera club was formed at the late General Conference. Mutual improvement in photography, securing prints of merit, and photographs of historical value to the church, are the objects the club has in view.

We want the amateur and professional photographers among the Saints to join the club. There are no expenses connected with membership.

During the year we want each member to send us prints from at least a dozen of his best negatives. These should be unmounted and mailed flat, and such as are suitable, will be used by the church publications. Make explanatory notes on the back of your prints.

Arrangements will be made with the Church Historian to preserve photographs of historical value.

In sending your name for membership, give your address, name and size of camera and speed of lens, etc.

Address all correspondence to the secretary, Brother A. H. Knowlton, 701 North Cottage Street, Independence, Missouri. Brother Knowlton has access to professional skill, and is in position to obtain expert advice, and is anxious to serve the members of the club. When writing, enclose stamp. Send your prints to him.

This organization has the support of the First Presidency.

"Current Opinion" for June

One of the most valued periodicals that comes to our desk is Current Opinion. In the "Review of the World" are presented terse comments on the vital issues of world events. With these are numerous reproductions of the best of the current cartoons. Among the leading articles we note, "Fate of Palestine after the war," which we reproduce in the Of General Interest department of this issue of the HERALD. Also, we note especially, "The rock that wrecks church unity," "Skirting the precipice of war with Germany," "Gayety of French newspapers in the trenches," "Was the Irish rebellion made in Germany?" Under department heads such as Religion and Social Ethics, Science and Discovery, Literature and Art, Persons in the Foreground, one finds most excellently illustrated short editorial articles, giving interpretations of the most advanced expressions on subjects that appeal to the human interest. Every number is a literary delight.

THE POWER OF THE GOSPEL

(A synopsis of a sermon preached at the Evergreen Church, near Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday evening, June 4, 1916, by Elder E. D. Moore.)

I shall read for my text this evening the statement of Paul, as found in the first chapter of Romans and sixteenth verse:

"For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

The gospel is a force which we must needs consider. It is a power which has been extant in the world since the beginning, and its influence felt in numerous ways in not only religion as such, but in all social relations of mankind. We must realize its effect in the shaping of the destinies of nations.

DEPARTURES FROM THE GOSPEL

It is true that there have been heresies, dissensions and apostasies; that there have been changes by addition and subtraction; that false doctrines have crept in, and that in various ways has the original gospel been changed.

In one period of the world's history we recall especially flagrant departures from Christianity, and that under its banner were almost unspeakable wrongs done to humanity. Especially do we think of the condition of the Jews at the time of the Spanish Inquisition, when they and others were brought to the rack, were tortured in inhuman and devilish ways, their property confiscated, their families divided, and finally as a people driven from the country, all in the name of the Christ and his gospel.

We realize that because of such wrongs the personality and gospel of Jesus Christ are unrecognized and despised among the Jews of to-day. When perchance a member of the Jewish nation is converted to the teachings of Christ, as they have been presented to him, he is met by the taunts and jeers of his fellow men as they say to him, "Christ! Christian! You believe in such an infamous doctrine! Can you not remember in the history of our nation the things that have been heaped upon us? the curses that have been hurled at us? the anathemas under which we have suffered? Is it possible that you, a member of God's chosen people, should be deluded by this false doctrine which has brought us nothing but sorrow and shame and loss of property and lives?"

This and other disheartening failures greet our ears on every side, but we have a better message, a consistent plan.

REASONS FOR OUR BELIEF

To-night we seek to establish the beauties and the glories and the wonderful properties of this plan of salvation which we term the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is well that we should become better acquainted with those things, about which we expected to be conversant. We may often be asked, "What is this gospel about which you so often speak, and so glowingly portray in your religious and other meetings? What is back of this system which you attribute to Jesus Christ? Why is it any better than any other religious system? We read admirable teachings in the Koran and the Zend Avesta, and other religious books, believed in by millions. Why is it that you make so much of this gospel?"

It is well that we should consider some of these features, that we may not only answer objections, but better portray the power of the gospel and its helpful influences in the lives of men. It has so many different phases that we may perhaps only consider a few of them to-night, but it is well that we should make this examination into that which has done so much for us.

MEETS THE NEEDS OF ALL

The word gospel is translated from a Greek word which means "good tidings." And it is indeed good tidings to those who have not heard. It is something which reaches the human emotions, and appeals to every legitimate need of humanity. It is a something which satisfies the longing of the human heart when all else fails. It is a balm to the wounded soul. It is a source of strength to the weak and faltering, and it is a dynamic power to those who need its strength. The youth, pulsating, vibrating with the exuberance of life, feeling that he should do something, and would manifest his strength in defense of mankind and its interests, when touched by the gospel power is enabled to go forth and in reality carry out his noble desires. We must recognize the gospel as a wonderful, dynamic power, a something which clings and stays, a something which when once established can never be entirely eradicated.

ITS PERMANENCY

Perhaps each of us can recall associations with those into whose hearts the gospel seed has been planted in youth, who as children have heard the gospel story, have been enthused with it, have felt the warmth and power which comes from a consideration of the beauties of the principles underlying it. We may also have seen in the development of time, these same people go out into the highways of the world, into the paths of pleasure and folly and sin, or perhaps deep wickedness, and seem to have forgotten all their early teachings; and yet has there come to the lives of those individuals, those occasions and times when they must realize that the seeds which were sown in their lives in youth bore such fruit that though they tried to bury their sorrow in pleasure or sin, though they would have thrown off all remembrance of those early teachings, still there were those remnants of it remaining as a constant source of annoyance to their consciences.

There is an influence constantly calling, pleading, telling them that they are doing wrong. It may be the voice of the Spirit calling to their remembrance the early teachings. Even though the gospel seed does not come to full mature fruition, yet it is of such a character that it retains as far as it is possible, its hold upon the human character.

WEATHERING LIFE'S STORMS

We may liken it to the seed of the pine tree, carried by a tiny bird to the top of yonder cliff, dropped into a crevice into which soil has been formed from the erosion of rocks. There it germinates and its roots run out each way, seeking sustenance from the meager soil deposited there. The tiny young plant rears its head; it meets with the opposition of the winds howling from canyon to canyon; it is beaten down by the storm's scourgings and by the withering sun; frozen by the icy blasts of winter; and yet it maintains its life struggle upon the lonely peak. It is tenacious, it holds grimly to that place in which it has sought to establish its home. We admire its qualities. It may not have beautiful symmetry, but it does have tenacious and commendable power in maintaining that which it has attained to.

The gospel maintains its place in the hearts of humanity according to the fertility of the soil and the cultivation we afford it. If we give it proper opportunity for development it spreads and grows and matures until it finally reaches a beautiful symmetry which is seen and admired by men. Religiously, socially, commercially, are men seeking those whose lives and characters have been shaped and polished by these influences, that responsibility and reward may be given them. God is constantly calling out men whose lives have been shaped by the gospel.

THE INTERESTING OLD STORY

There are books and articles and stories which may grow old, that we tire of reading or hearing. No matter how good a history is, how well developed a book on philosophy may be, what wonderful powers of thought are developed in a treatise on psychology, they interest for a time and they develop but yet is there something lacking. The old story of the gospel ever seems new. There is a subtle quality to it which appeals to and interests and holds the attention of mankind. Thousands of books have been written about it, millions of sermons have been preached concerning it, hundreds of millions of lives have been reached by it, and yet its beauties and its powers have not been exhausted. The gospel story, plainly and simply told, will ever be an interesting theme for those whose hearts are inclined to things which are right and good and true. It is as a spring of living water.

THE FOUR BLIND MEN

Everywhere do we see men with a limited viewpoint, maintaining that they have the gospel, and that others certainly must be wrong. We have no disposition to quarrel with these people insofar as they have seen the light, but we do maintain that it is wrong to select any one or two or even half a dozen principles from the gospel and place one's whole faith and conduct upon them. There must of necessity be a correlation of principles and doctrines and intelligent activity.

The disadvantages of limited viewpoints may be illustrated by the old story of the four blind men and the elephant. You will remember that they were taken out to have their first "view" of the elephant, and were asked afterwards to give their impressions as to the kind of an animal he was.

The first man approached the elephant and found his tusk. Running his fingers over it, he formed an impression as to the character of the animal and went away.

The next man found his ear, and as he ran his hand over the outside and the inside, and measured its dimensions, he decided as to the kind of an animal the elephant was.

The third man found the elephant's side, and as he went over the situation, he too, knew how to describe the creature before him.

The fourth man found the elephant's tail and he became well-informed.

Upon being asked afterward to describe the animal, the first man said, "He is a round, smooth, sharp-pointed creature, and has no resemblance to the enormous animal I have heard about. People must be deluded in thus describing it."

The second man said, "The elephant is very much like a large bed blanket; rather rough and bristly on one side, smooth and woolly on the other."

The third man replied, "To my mind he is very much like a large billboard, runs straight up and down, higher than I could reach. He is very large indeed."

The fourth man gave as his explanation that the elephant was very much like a piece of rope.

There are many whose conception of the gospel very much resembles the decisions of these four blind men. One has picked up the Bible and read, "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." Because he has seen this scriptural statement, he concludes it is the whole plan.

Another finds baptism and sees nothing else. It is the only religious subject about which he will intelligently converse or seem to care. Another can find only Seventh-day observance.

Still others believe that because they have received a manifestation of some kind, which they attribute to the Holy Ghost, and by which they are inspired to speak in some unknown tongue, or perhaps their sick are healed, that is all that is required.

There must be teachings and actions based upon the various phases which all go together to make up what we term the gospel of Jesus Christ. Simplicity is required, yet we must not sacrifice effectiveness for it. There must be sufficient principles and methods to meet the needs of humanity—just enough. God alone knows the proper balance, and we find it in his plan.

AN INTELLIGENT COMBINATION

We are met with statements of men who have specialized in branches of learning, who because they have made a study of a few special subjects assert that their opinions and deductions concerning religion should be as conclusive as their decisions in their specialty. One may be versed in numerous sciences; he may have absorbed the concentrated wisdom of hundreds of books. He may have graduated from famous universities yet know little of God's methods. It is required that we as thoroughly consider God's plan in order to be an authority. Mere

STAKE REORGANIZATION

The Lamoni Stake has a new presidency.

The 17th was a beautiful day, and the formal acceptance of the resignation of Elder John Smith and installation of the new members was of a character to fit the day. An unwelcome rain fell early Sunday morning, but the skies soon cleared and the Saints rejoiced.

Presidents F. M. and E. A. Smith presided and arranged for meetings by authority of the conference.

By action of the late General Conference of the church Elder Smith's resignation as president had been accepted and Elder John F. Garver indicated as his successor by the First Presidency.

The stake conference formally accepted Elder Smith's resignation and without a dissenting vote indorsed the selection of Elder Garver as president and the counselors he had chosen. These latter are new to the work they are to take up, though experienced in various other lines of church work.

Elder E. J. Giles, the first named counselor, is a resident of Hiteman, Iowa, in the stake, where there is a flourishing branch of Saints. He has the utmost confidence of his acquaintances as a deep student, a leader in local musical activities, a man of God. He will move his family to Lamoni in the near future.

The second named is Elder Paul N. Craig, well-known to many in the church as an enthusiastic worker—especially in music. He has been located at Omaha, the past two years, laboring in the city and elsewhere in the Northeastern Nebraska District as a missionary. He has been engaged by Graceland College authorities to take charge of the vocal music department the coming year. His pleasing personality and devotion to church work will open many doors of opportunity in his new work.

Elder Garver has served as a counselor to Elder Smith in the stake presidency for about nine years. For some time he engaged in active missionary work in the stake. The past three years he has devoted most of his time to work on the HERALD as assistant editor. All his spare time has been spent in church work, he covering many miles with the stake automobile, donated for the use of the presidency. His rugged, straightforward, spiritual character and activities have endeared him to the hearts of all who know him. His very attitude demands of the Saints what he so willingly gives, and we believe he will receive a hearty and a satisfactory response.

Appropriate resolutions of appreciation concerning the work of the retiring president and Elder R. S. Salyards who has served as counselor a number of years, were adopted.

Because of removal from the stake in some instances, and advancing years and consequent infirmity in others, the resignations of Elders Amos Berve, Duncan Campbell, Joseph Snively and John R. Evans from the stake high council were presented and accepted with appropriate resolutions. These vacancies will remain at least until the fall conference.

At the afternoon meeting Sunday, the Saints gathered, having fasted from the morning and noon meals in behalf of Elder Joseph Roberts, bishop of the stake. On the previous Wednesday evening the lower room was filled with a prayer meeting in his behalf. As has been mentioned elsewhere, the case of Brother Roberts is pronounced by specialists as hopeless from a human standpoint. He is said to have cancer of the bowels. At this evening meeting the Saints were commended by the Spirit for their loving act, rebuked for negligence in others and told that the matter was in the Lord's hands.

At this afternoon meeting fervent prayers, spoken and silent, went up from the large congregation in behalf of Bishop Roberts and other sick of which there were a number mentioned.

The ordination of the three of the stake presidency and John Smith to the office of patriarch took place at this meeting, F. M. Smith, E. A. Smith and F. A. Smith officiating.

E. F. Robertson spoke at the morning meeting; F. M. Smith in the evening, both to large audiences.

Outside, three swarms of bees were industriously engaged in storing honey in homes they had established in the church building, perhaps typical of the intelligent activity which will characterize the work of these three comparatively young men.

The meetings for reorganizing the Independence Stake will be held soon, as has been previously announced, and we hope reported to HERALD readers.

EDWARD D. MOORE.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

BABY'S PICTURE.—The business manager wants a picture of your baby. Read about it in the advertisement in this issue.

QUICK CHANGES.—It is interesting to recall, as the Pathfinder did recently, that since the resignation of Porfirio Diaz in 1911, Mexico has had no less than nine rulers. One man had the honor of being president for twenty-six minutes. It must be a disconcerting situation for the office seekers.

SISTER GRIFFITHS IMPROVED.—We are pleased to learn from Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths under date of June 14, that his wife has taken a decided turn for the better. She is not yet able to walk, but is gaining daily. His daughter also is somewhat improved in health.

CHURCH PUBLICITY.—At the coming national convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, to be held in Philadelphia, June 25-30, church advertising will have an important place on the program. More than twenty-five speakers will address the convention on the subject. Proper publicity is a highly important factor in church work. Many of our people are getting excellent results from their efforts, while others hesitate, lest wrong methods be used. In an early issue, perhaps next week, we shall quote from actual reports some interesting results in advertising a reunion. In most places there is really no reason why a reunion should be attended by just a few Saints. Proper advertising may bring out hundreds to hear the gospel message—it did in this case. We should be glad to hear reports from various quarters on this subject, that there may be a profitable exchange of views.

CURRENT EVENTS

SANTO DOMINGO.—Jacinto de Castro has been chosen by the island senate as president of the Dominican Republic to succeed President Jiminez. The selection indicates more hopeful conditions in the troubled island. United States troops remain to insure quiet.

POLITICAL SITUATION.—The Democratic National Convention at Saint Louis nominated Woodrow Wilson for president and Thomas R. Marshall for vice president. As did the Republicans, they included a suffrage plank in the party platform, reading as follows:

We favor the extension of the franchise to the women of this country, State by State, on the same terms as to the men.

TRAINMEN'S TROUBLES.—Following conference of two weeks' duration at which there was a failure to reach an agreement, more than five hundred thousand railroad employees, union and nonunion, will vote on advisability of a strike. It is expected the result will be known in a month. The demands are for, stated by one source, a twenty-five per cent increase in wages, with one hundred and fifty per cent for overtime. Another gives them, an eight-hour day and double pay for overtime.

PREPAREDNESS PARADES.—From the East to the West gigantic parades in favor of military preparedness were held in a number of the larger cities on Flag Day, the 14th. Earlier, New York, Boston, Chicago, and other of the largest cities had held similar demonstrations. In spite of these and congressional authority to increase the number of the army, enlistments are disappointingly few, according to reports.

MEXICAN DISTURBANCES.—The situation between the United States and Mexico is very tense at this time. While a strict censorship is maintained it is known that a number of anti-American demonstrations have occurred. A general exodus from Mexican territory seems to be in progress, and disturbances intellectuality will not save us. Mere superficial spirituality will not save us. We must have an intelligent combination of the best in both. One who can think only in terms of science, or only in terms of religion, certainly needs more development. His opinions are apt to be biased.

THE GUIDEBOOK

If I should go to the nearest garage and buy an automobile guidebook it would be folly for me to insist that I had all the necessary equipment for a trip over this country. Because I could tell you the number of miles between one town and another, the best roads to be had, where accommodations could be secured, would be no proof that I had traveled the road or experienced these things. If I should start out and attempt to reach Kansas City, yet stopped at the first guidepost that had the word on it, and maintained that I had done all that was required—had arrived—you would send me to a home for feeble-minded, and you should.

And yet people will come to us and say they have the Bible, that is all the gospel they need. The record is there; just believe it. They have seen the first guidepost and insist that they are saved. Some go further, yet insist they are at the goal. The Bible does contain the plan; it gives us the teachings, yet it is not consistent that we should stop at the guideposts of faith, or repentance, or baptism, and maintain that we have gone far enough.

TWO VIALS

I present before you now a crude illustration of some of the things which I would like to impress upon your minds. I have here two vials, each filled with a white powder. They are the same size and very much alike in appearance. Perhaps if I should name both of them you would not be able to dispute from your position, the truth of my statements. They have the same general appearance—both are white; both are a powder. The way to test them is by examination of the contents.

I will tell you at the outset that there is a vast difference between the contents of the two. The one contains concentrated, powdered lye. The other is merely powdered chalk. The one represents living, virulent life, the other represents a life that has been, a mere empty form of the remains of what was once alive. At one time the chalk was animate, we are told, and what we have here is the remains of millions of animals that have perished, and the residue of their bodies thus collected we call chalk. It has some commercial value of a negative character, but it is an inert, inactive substance, the antithesis of this powerfully penetrative agent by its side.

When used in their proper way either one of these substances is of value. When used in an improper way either of them may do much harm. In following out our simile, we may say that upon application of this lye, either in its present form or in the form of soap, to any impurity, it immediately attacks it, and by its aid may be removed. It is a recognized cleansing agent. Dirt and filth are its natural enemies. In the form of potash it has valuable fertilizing qualities.

A WONDERFULLY CLEANSING AGENT

When we apply the power of the gospel to the hearts of sodden, degraded, disgraced outcasts, we find it has a similar effect; that where once sin ruled, confusion reigned, in distorted and unclean minds and bodies, this truth, the gospel of Christ, performs its eradicating power to that extent that all these things are obliterated or cleansed. In their stead is placed that glorifying and uplifting cleanliness of a new heart, which enables men to rise from such conditions and take on a newness of life and strength of strong manhood, to go forth and be applied to the lives of good men and women, it makes them better, more useful, more productive of good works. The effects are of a permanent nature, and so long as a place is left for its development it will grow and develop and mature.

We read of one Christopher North, who, as he was walking along the street to preach to his congregation one night, received a note with the message that it was very important; he should read it before he delivered his sermon. As he opened it and read its contents there was before him a delineation of the wrongs that he had done, the mistakes he had made, indeed it was a record of a former evil life. Upon entering the stand he told his congregation of the contents of that letter. He told them that all it had said was true, that his life had really been as bad as those words portrayed it. Yet he believed there could be no better argument for the power of the gospel. Anything which could reach the life of a man in that condition, not only to induce him to forsake it forever, but to cleanse him from its pernicious influence, and allow him to thus stand before them and declaim the power of God was worthy of the most sincere consideration.

When the famous Charles Darwin was making his trip of exploration around the southern end of South America, he visited the people on the islands of Tierra del Fuego. He writes that they were the most degraded specimens of humanity it had ever been his lot to meet; depraved, ignorant, almost without powers of reason. They were so remarkably animal like, he made a note of it in his record of the trip.

Upon his return there some ten years later, he found missionaries had been there and told them of the gospel, and it had had such an influence upon their lives that he was astounded at its results. Though he was not a believer in the gospel, he of necessity admitted that Christ's teachings though told only in part, had had a wonderful effect upon their lives.

Mere legislation will not work these changes. Charitable aid is only a palliative. The promulgation of theories only helps. Yet practical operation of the gospel of Jesus Christ, when developed to its finality, really means helping people to help themselves. We help ourselves the most appreciably in our service to others, and in the giving out of those things which we have received do we in reality perceive their value and their worth.

As we seek to portray the beauties of the gospel to those who know it not, then do we ourselves come to a realization of what it means to us and to humanity. There is no power in the world like that which comes with the gospel. It of itself, without the power of the Creator behind it, may be as lifeless as this vial of chalk, a remnant of what has been. But when accompanied with that source of inspiration which it is promised will be given those who live up to its teachings, it is a power so virile, so effective, that all men may perceive its value.

MORE THAN LEGISLATION

There is no other power which gives birth to such emotions, which imparts that feeling of joy and rejuvenation which comes with forgiveness of sins.

Legislation, better social and moral conditions, higher planes of intellectuality, anything which is for the uplift of mankind, is proper and should be sought. They are features which go to make the warp and woof of the fabric which holds humanity together, and which allows governments to exist, and under those governments laws to be enforced which make for the happiness and security of mankind.

But following these and what they can do, the gospel power must enter the human heart as an impelling force, as a something which will reach an individual so that every one of us, developing our talents, doing those things which come to us to do, may realize that we are indeed a part of our environment, that we are not to be considered as this lifeless chalk, this inanimate debris of life gone centuries ago, but we may be considered as the contents of this other vial of vitalized power.

IMPROPER USES

As we mentioned, these materials may be put to improper uses. Should I pour the contents of this one into my open hand, it would immediately begin to have a violent and disastrous effect. Should I scatter the contents over this audience it would be criminal. Should I pour it upon this book it would immediately attack its structure and might destroy it.

So with the gospel when it is improperly used. When men use it as a cloak for their vile hypocrisies, and under its protecting mantle perform those acts of sin and crime which men have been known to do, they are bringing unto themselves those judgments which follow the perverted use of a legitimate product. Any proper material may be put to perverted uses.

Saints, friends, let us all to-night resolve that we will indeed let the gospel have its full power in our lives. Let us resolve it shall not be as the seed which was sown upon the barren soil which could not find root, but rather that we shall yield willing obedience to its principles, that we shall with open hearts receive the instructive, soul-satisfying power that comes with the complete obedience to the commands and principles it contains.

JUDGED BY THE BOOKS

May we indeed realize that nothing else has done so much for us. In no other way can we effect the good which we in our better moments resolve we will do. May we realize as well that the responsibility which comes with its knowledge will in the last day judge us. We read in sacred writ that the books shall be opened, and by the things which are written there will we be judged. We hold one of these books in our hands here to-night, the book which we call the Holy Bible. Therein are recorded those statements which contain the plan of the gospel, which contain the experience of men who have lived here in years gone by. We have access to and are familiar with this book, and when we stand before the great judgment bar of God we will be called upon to acknowledge that familiarity, that they were taught us, that we understood their import, and if we have not obeyed them they will stand in judgment against us.

We hope it may be said of each one here that the things which are written in the books, the delineation of the plan of the gospel of Jesus Christ, was of such a benefit and help to us, that we received of its teachings, we followed its injunctions, we tested its power, and we realized its blessings which were promised to the believers, and that we may appreciate conditions which the Creator has provided for the faithful ones of the children of men. The gospel is indeed "the power of God unto salvation."

It is heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.—Bacon.

OUR COUNTRY: ITS PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE

(Extracts from a sermon by Elder A. C. Barmore at the Saints' church, Myrtle Point, Oregon, under the auspices of the G. A. R., May 28, 1916.)

It is with pleasure I greet you old soldiers here this morning. Your invitation was expressed in these words: "Ex-soldiers of all wars, veterans of the Civil War, the Spanish American War, the Indian wars, and especially veterans of the Confederate service, are invited to attend." I congratulate you on the breadth of this invitation, and take pleasure in addressing you under such conditions. It means that we are growing when we can forgive the injuries and forget the animosities of the past.

As a basis for my remarks I call your attention to two portions of scripture. One is Isaiah 18:1, 2. It reads thus:

Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia: that sendeth ambassadors by the sea, even in vessels of bulrushes upon the waters, saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden down, whose land the rivers have spoiled.

In connection with this I desire that you notice Daniel 12:3 which says they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars, forever and ever.

Prominent Jewish rabbis have said that a proper translation of our text from Isaiah would read, "Ho to the land," etc., that is, indicating a land recently found or discovered. They agree also in applying this scripture to America. It should be noted, too, that the land referred to sends ambassadors by the sea. That indicates that all its ministers, political and spiritual, the latter missionaries, are sent by the sea. Is it not true? It applies to us more than to any other nation. Again, our ministers would go abroad in the interests of the oppressed, that is, politically or spiritually, and especially in behalf of the nation referred to by the prophet, the Israelite nation. While some of this prophecy awaits fulfillment yet we have already shown our friendship for the Jews, since we have not only received thousands of them, but our statute books have never been stained by laws against them. This latter remark cannot be made to apply to any other country.

We desire to consider the subject under the following headings: 1. American progress, due to liberty. Religious and political freedom. Our admiration for emancipators. Instances. 2. War: Its effect on those who have loved it for its own sake. Its status from a Christian viewpoint. 3. Our war record, compared with that of other countries. 4. Our attitude toward other nations. The question of neutrality. 5. Our advantages as a republic; the responsibilities they place upon us. 6. Our destiny.

AMERICAN PROGRESS

When we consider our progress as due to liberty, we should remember it is the liberty bounded by law. Liberty must have a limit; otherwise it becomes license. In that event one man encroaches on another. True liberty means that freedom which brings the greatest results to the largest number of people. Such a standard of conduct does not allow one man to oppress others. Christian liberty means this and nothing more. Paul says: "Ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another." George Washington was in line with this thought when he urged religious principles as the basis of our commonwealth. In his immortal farewell address he says: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. . . . And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

"Why is this so?" we may ask. It is because the great majority of people are not strong enough in mind and character to be moral without the help of God. Indeed it is doubtful if any are. Hence every nation needs religion as its primary support. The Bible says: "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people." (Proverbs 14:34.) Again, God in reproaching Israel, says: "Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" (Jeremiah 5:9.) Mark you, he does not say "this nation." He says: "Such a nation as this." That applies to any nation. It means us, in case we go wrong. Our forefathers depended upon God, and yet some of them were not religious men in sectarian sense. They were looked upon as skeptics. One of them, Thomas Jefferson, wrote the Declaration of Independence. In closing it he said: "For the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor."

REBELLION AND REVOLUTION

It is well for us, at this late date, to be reminded of the position of our Revolutionary fathers. They were rebels against the greatest nation on earth. Now we call them, and the world calls them, patriots, because of their success. It would have been quite different if they had failed. A rebel is often an unsuccessful patriot and a patriot is as often a successful rebel. There is only one chance for rebels and that is their prospect of whipping the government. Our ancestors took that chance and made good. Hence our national existence. A revolution is a successful rebellion; a rebellion is an unsuccessful revolution. Our Rebellion was a success and in consequence we are a respectable people.

The common supposition is that George Washington is considered a great man because he was in the right, but as a matter of fact, it is because of his good fortune. Others have been in the right and have miserably failed. The risk he and his associates took is couched in the words: "We pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor." When the Declaration of Independence was being signed, John Hancock gave it his signature, and rising to give place to the next man, remarked: "Now we must all hang together," that is, work in union. Benjamin Franklin, who was standing by, replied: "If we do not we shall all hang separately." Each one of those men was preparing a halter for his own neck in case of failure.

LIBERTY INCREASES RELIGION

We have mentioned our admiration for emancipators. Among those whom we most admire we mention Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, and Lincoln. We admire them because they have enlarged our opportunities by increasing our liberty. Freedom has led to invention, which has secured improvements in all the avenues of life. This applies to religion as well as to other things. Liberty leads to new methods in church work. There is a common idea abroad that there used to be more real religion in the world than there is now. This is a great mistake. It applies no doubt to the times of the New Testament, but to no period since then. The years or ages that are sometimes called the "good old times" should be called "the bad old times." Many of our people are given to conservatism, that is, praising the past in comparison with the present. And this reminds me that a conservative is one who never forgets a thing that is old or learns a thing that is new.

A very common idea is that the Bible is not as well known as it used to be. This is a miserable mistake. In the first place, the Bible was a sealed book until the Protestant reformation, and among some Protestants it has not been much studied, for the clergy restrained the people by depriving them of the privilege of Biblical interpretation. They said in substance: "This is the Bible. It is God's book; so be careful how you use it. It may be the means of your damnation instead of your salvation. We warn you against wrestling with it alone. If you do it may get you down. If any of it seems mysterious, come to us and we'll tell you all about it." Thus they gave the Bible to the people with one hand and took it away with the other. We have, however, for the most part, passed this condition, for we are thinking for ourselves more than ever before. There are, too, more Bibles among the people, they are read more, and more is known about the Bible as a book than in the past.

WAR

We now come to a consideration of the subject of war. Its nature is best determined by its effect on civilization. The question arises, Does it build up or destroy civilized society? The answer must be, It destroys. This being true, we must renounce war or forfeit the blessings of civilization. As an illustration of its effect on those who have loved it for its own sake we take the case of Napoleon I. Colonel Ingersoll says of him:

A little while ago I stood by the tomb of the old Napoleon, a magnificent tomb of gilt and gold, fit almost for a dead deity. I looked upon the rare and valuable marble where rest at last the ashes of that restless man. I leaned over the balustrade and thought about the career of the greatest soldier of the modern world. I saw him at Toulon. I saw him walking the banks of the Seine, contemplating suicide. I saw him putting down the mob in the streets of Paris. I saw him at the head of the army of Italy. I saw him at the Bridge of Lodi with the tricolor in his hand. I saw him in Egypt in the shadow of the pyramids. I saw him conquer the Alps and mingle the Eagles of France with the eagles of the crags. I saw him at Marengo, at Ulm, at Austerlitz. I saw him in Russia, where the infantry of the snow and the cavalry of the wild blasts scattered his legions like winter's withered leaves. I saw him at Leipsic in defeat and disaster, driven by a million bayonets back upon Paris. I saw him clutched like a wild beast and banished to Elbe. I saw him escape and retake an empire by the force of his genius. And I saw him on the frightful field of Waterloo where chance and fate combined to wreck the fortunes of their former king. And I saw him at Saint Helena with his hands crossed behind him, gazing out on the sad and solemn sea. I thought of the wives he had made widows and the children fatherless, of all the tears that had been shed for his glory. I thought of the only woman who ever loved him pushed from his side by the cold hand of ambition, and said I would rather have been a French peasant and worn wooden shoes. I would rather have been that poor man and have lived in a little hut with a vine growing over my door and the grapes growing purple under the amorous kisses of the autumn sun. I would rather have been that humble man and have gone down to the tongueless silence of the dreamless dust and have been unhonored and unsung than to have been that imperial impersonation of force and murder known as Napoleon the Great.

When all Christian nations become nations of Christians, war will be impossible. Then will have come the time foretold, when the nations will beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks and will learn war no more.

"AMERICANS ALL"

This reminds me of my own struggle of a half a century ago. When I think of that heroic charge and equally heroic defense at Gettysburg and similar exhibitions of valor I am constrained to say: "Americans all." One of our poets in visualizing an incident in that war has given us "The dying soldier" which runs as follows:

A waste of land, a sodden plain,
A lurid sunset sky
With clouds that fled and faded fast
In ghostly phantasy;
A field upturned by trampling feet,
A field uppled with slain,
With horse and rider blent in death
Upon the battle plain.

The dying and the dead lie low;
For them no more shall rise
The evening moon, nor midnight stars,
Nor daylight's soft surprise:
They will not wake to tenderest call,
Nor see again each home,
Where waiting hearts shall throb and break,
When this day's tidings come.

Two soldiers lying as they fell
Upon the reddened clay,
In daytime, foes; at night, in peace,
Breathing their lives away!
Brave hearts had stirred each manly breast;
Fate only, made them foes;
And lying, dying, side by side,
A softened feeling rose.

"Our time is short," one faint voice said;
"To-day we've done our best
On different sides: what matters now?
To-morrow we shall rest!
Life lies behind. I might not care
For only my own sake;
But far away are other hearts
That this day's work will break.

"Among New Hampshire's snowy hills,
There pray for me to-night
A woman and a little girl
With hair like golden light;"
And at the thought, broke forth, at last
The cry of anguish wild,
That would not longer be repressed—
"O God, my wife, my child!"

"And," said the other dying man,
"Across the Georgia plain,
There watch and wait for me loved ones
I ne'er shall see again:
A little girl, with dark, bright eyes,
Each day waits at the door;
Her father's step, her father's kiss,
Will never greet her more.

"To-day we sought each other's lives:
Death levels all that now;
For soon before God's mercy seat
Together we shall bow.

Forgive each other while we may;
Life's but a weary game,
And, right or wrong, the morning sun
Will find us 'dead the same."

The dying lips the pardon breathe;
The dying hands entwine;
The last ray fades and over all
The stars from heaven shine;
And the little girl with golden hair,
And one with dark eyes bright,
On Hampshire's hills, and Georgia's plain
Were fatherless that night!

WASHINGTON ON DEFENSE

Our attitude toward other countries as to war should be one of strict neutrality. Washington warned us sufficiently along this line, and his warnings read like prophecies in the light of the present times. He recommended friendship for all nations but "entangling alliances" with none. The nation which, in his opinion favored one nation and opposed another was a slave to either its "animosity or its affection." By avoiding "political connection" with other countries we should be able to avoid "frequent collisions" and "obstinate, envenomed and bloody contests." We should also be able to prevent the need of what he called "overgrown military establishments." Referring to our isolated position he said: "Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand on foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor or caprice." Then he qualifies by saying: "Taking care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on a respectable, defensive posture." That is the subject that is in the air now, preparedness for defense. We must not neglect it. The father of our country, in his last blessing, warned us against its neglect.

This leads naturally to reflections on our advantages as a republic. They all come under the head of the rule of the people. That means that the government is always what we make it, and is always as good as we deserve, for it must be a reflection of ourselves. When we deserve a better government we will get it. This places us under the responsibility of taking a keen interest in the people of other countries. The rulers and governments as such should receive little or no consideration, although we shall have to deal with them in the peace negotiations. It would probably be to their interests, at least in some instances, for the present war to go on, but it cannot be beneficial to any of the people.

In conclusion: Let me give you something that is more entertaining. As a boy I learned the following: Standing as we do in view of the green slopes of Monticello And in reach of the tomb of Washington,

All the cherished memories of the past come clustering around us

Like so many voices of exhortation from heaven.

And I can express no greater hope for my country

Than that the same kind Providence who smiled upon our forefathers

May enable us to cherish, protect, and defend the rights
we have inherited,

Which are the rights of our glorious Constitution.

THE AMERICANISM OF PROHIBITION

A stock argument against the "Hobson propaganda," is that prohibition is not American; that, "in asking the Federal Government to compel moral and physical well-being through prohibition, the country will be turning back to the older idea of government to which the democratic ideal offered its thrilling challenge some two centuries ago."

It is declared that it would be forgetting "Certain fundamentals of our Government—States' rights, individuals' rights, democracy—in asking the Federal Government to perform the parental function of insuring that we be led out of temptation."

The position is taken, also, that by so doing we shall come short in character building, as "one way to a sinless life lies through the cloister," and "some close resemblance to this is borne by the prohibition of temptation," and that it will lead to "the protection of the weaker ones by an enforced avoidance of the operation of the law of the survival of the fittest."

The genius of our democracy is expressed in the declaration that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and with us this means the will of the majority embodied in our constitutional laws.

The object of our efforts at self-government is not to produce a limited number of strong characters by continually placing such temptation before our citizens as will first undermine the physical and moral welfare of a large percentage of our numbers and end in their destruction, that only the strong may survive, but to protect and conserve the "moral and physical well-being" of the whole body, that the great number of our citizens may become fit, not only to survive, but to perpetuate their race and defend their homes and country against every force that would seek their overthrow.

It must be true that the "moral and physical well-being" of our democracy can only be advanced, it can only rise in the scale of efficiency as its constituents learn and apply the lessons of life that make for such effectiveness.

One of the most hopeful signs of the times for our Government may be read in the fact that not only "church men," but "the capitalistic portion of our people" are awaking to the fact that anything which weakens a man's mental or physical powers impairs his efficiency, increases the risk of industrial accidents with all their attendant evils, and generally incapacitates him to take his place as a sovereign citizen of our great commonwealth.

The churchmen were the first to realize this, with the result that "the movement throughout the Nation started as a semireligious movement," and so, naturally, the first vantage point from which this fight could be waged was the pulpit. The awaking of the other half of our citizens to the fact that this question has more than church interest, that it affects the very life of the Nation at large, shows that our churchmen were alive to the responsibilities of citizenship, which they, as well as others, carry in our great democracy.

When our athletes seek to promote their efficiency by subjecting their bodies to the discipline of temperate living we do not accuse them of having forsaken their liberties because they utterly taboo alcoholic drinks and regulate their entire diet with regard to the best interests of their bodies. Rather, we look upon them as being free in the very best physical sense.

When this Nation, stripping and training for the great Marathon of the ages, declares by their representatives at Washington, and ratifies that declaration by a majority of two thirds of the sovereign States, thereby giving the consent of the governed to this measure, thus evidencing their determination to cease to barter their birthright of efficiency for a mess of pottage; when they refuse to longer be party to crime by taking a bribe from the liquor interests in the form of special taxes, when they throw around the weaker ones the parental protection of the Federal Government and cease to kill, endeavoring to help these to come to a fitness, not only to survive, but to bear a worthy part as citizens of this great commonwealth, we are not becoming un-American, nor are we reverting to a monarchical form of government, but rather are we coming into our own heritage of national manhood, not by coercion of a dictator, but by reason of the determination of the body to be free.

This is only the awakening to the fact that ours may be, and contingent only upon our willingness to pay the price, will be the most efficient government in the world because the sovereign citizens will it so.

The prophet of old declared that without vision the people perish. May we have the clearness of vision and strength of purpose to carry this through till in the strength of the manhood of our democracy we shall be fully in line to be the winner of the battles of peace, as well as of war; and may our strength be so conserved that upon this continent there shall be neither war of extermination nor conquest.

SURGERY TO MUSIC

Surgical operations are actually being performed to musical accompaniment in Pennsylvania, and the editor of The Annotator's department in American Medicine (New York) believes that this combination constitutes "a new and valuable agent in surgery." In June last, the use of the phonograph in the Kane (Pennsylvania) Hospital was reported by Doctor Evan O'Neil, of that town; and Doctor W. P. Burdick, also of Kane, now writes to assure the medical profession of the entire success of the innovation. Says the journal named above:

There was a great outburst of wit and humor on the appearance of the first announcement, as might have been expected, and it is not improbable that the group of interns and nurses in the pit of the operating-theater irresistibly suggested to the onlookers the chorus of a comic opera, while those assistants themselves, probably young and retaining some vestige of the layman's frivolity, may have found it hard to resist lifting a rhythmical foot as the machine ground out its "trivial, fond records."

Doctor Burdick, however, is very much in earnest. . . . "If mankind was always consistent," he writes, "the idea of suitable music as an accompaniment to surgical clinics would seem entirely rational." The attitude of a patient about to be relieved of a distressing and possibly fatal lesion should be one of joyful anticipation, instead of which the subject now enters the theater, after a tearful farewell to family and friends, with such feelings of horror and dread as to be on the verge of collapse. This frame of mind is not alleviated by the demeanor of the surgical staff, the whispers of the nurses, or the almost complete silence broken by the harsh rattle and banging of instruments. In Kane Hospital they are endeavoring to change all this, to reassure the patient and dispel his fears. The phonograph suggested itself by its beneficial influence in the wards, where it gave great pleasure.

On the eve of an operation Doctor Burdick has a talk with the patient, in which he encourages him in every way, assures him of probable relief, promises absolute lack of pain during the operative ordeal, and tells him of the coming use of music as a sort of keynote to the cheerful attitude of the staff toward the operation. He inquires into the patient's nationality and asks if he has any favorite tunes; and when he is ushered into the operating room next day and the anesthesia begins, the phonograph is softly playing one of the airs thus selected. . . . The effect is all that could be desired. . . .

We think that the authorities of Kane Hospital are fully justified in their practice, and have discovered a new and valuable agent in surgery.

CATHOLIC RULE IN SOUTH AMERICA

Enraged at the success of American missionaries near Lake Titicaca in Peru, a Roman Catholic bishop "took the police out to the mission, had over thirty men and women arrested, tied to a long rope, and marched through the streets to the common jail. No such outbreak of inquisitorial fires had been seen for at least a generation, and it lit a conflagration. Public sentiment burned hot against a law which authorized such an outrage. Public meetings were held, petitions to Lima, the capital, set the prisoners free, and the senator from that district was ordered to present a bill to repeal the old law of intolerance, or lose his seat. His bill passed, to his great surprise, within ten days of its first reading, going through both Senate and House of Deputies by an overwhelming majority. Being an amendment to the Constitution, it needed to be confirmed by a two-thirds vote 'in a subsequent year.' In 1914 it was smothered in committee by a Peruvian brother of the Roman Catholic Bishop of Trijillo. But last November it was triumphantly passed by both houses of the Peruvian Congress. But another difficulty arose. The president refused to sign it. After the lapse of the constitutional number of days it was passed again, and became effective from December 1, 1915. The scenes of those last days defy description. Driven to bay in the last and most fanatical capital of the Western Hemisphere, Romanist leaders fought desperately. They flooded the city and nation with misleading pamphlets. They organized the women of Lima and had them stay for days in the cathedral and near-by churches, ready to storm the Senate and House of Deputies when the bill came up for its final passage. At the signal the women rushed to the legislative chamber. They sent for their husbands and brothers who were members. They shouted, 'Viva la Iglesia Romana!' in the corridors and offices of the building. A priest, more agile and daring than the others, leaped over chairs and seized the bill from the hand of the member who was presenting it for final passage, tore it to scraps, shouting, 'Death to the Masons!' 'Down with the Protestants!' 'Viva La Iglesia Romana!' at the top of his voice. After much turmoil the chambers were cleared, and, when the vote was recorded, only two votes had been changed by all the frantic efforts of the Romanist leaders. The bill was passed by a vote of 56 to 12, and religious liberty granted to the last nation west of the Atlantic."

I heartily agree with the conclusion of Bishop Homer C. Stuntz, from whom I have quoted this incident: "This one victory alone is justification of all the expenditure of money and life in South America by the Protestant churches from 1836 to 1861."—Lyman Abbott, The Outlook, June 7, 1916.

AMERICAN THRIFT

Henry Ford's experiment in profit sharing has nonplused some of the prophets who expected a riot of extravagance to follow the establishment of a $5 minimum wage. Bank accounts of the Ford employees have been swelled by $6,000,000, and investments in homes have totaled $18,000,000 since the new wage was inaugurated.

Mr. Ford has issued some interesting figures relative to the thrift of various race groups in his employ. Starting with the thriftiest, and working down to the most spendthrift, the race groups are ranked as follows:

Turks, Austrians, Armenians, Hebrews, Germans, Irish, Scotch, Hungarians, Poles, Italians, English, Americans.

The first four groups range from $821 down to $641, and following them is a large contingent which has a maximum of $348 in the Germans. The Americans barely beat out the English at $204 a year.

Since more than 16,000 men are employed in the Ford factories and the same wage scale prevails throughout, the summary must be taken as a fairly accurate reflection of the thrifty habits of various race groups working under identical conditions.

What is left of the theory that the Yankee is a dollar-grabber?

Native American thrift is an attribute possessed almost solely by the immigrant and his immediate descendants. They brought it with them from Europe, where low wages and small real estate holdings make the saving habit an urgent necessity.

Thrift was an American characteristic when the wealth of this country was small, but it has been many a day since the native American could be legitimately charged with possessing a miserly disposition.—Des Moines Register, June 2, 1916.

In the current issue of one of our popular women's magazines, Mr. H. G. Wells, well-known English writer, gives a very thoughtful survey of the changes which the present war will bring about in the conditions of women, and their relations to society. He recognizes that many of the changes were inevitable—impending, and that, sooner or later, they must have been made anyway, but he feels that the war has accentuated and accelerated them. Underneath the turbulent demonstrations of a few years back, when English women were striving for recognition and the vote, he perceives a strong undercurrent of preparation for it, by women from all walks of life. He finds among them a "sense of solidarity," which when the time comes, will fit them to stand shoulder to shoulder in the assumption of civil responsibility, with "an unprecedented disregard for social barriers."

He says: "Beneath the dust and noise, realities were coming about that the dust and noise entirely failed to represent. We knew that some women were shrieking for the vote; we did not realize that a generation of women was qualifying for it!"

This is inspirational! The vote for women seems to be inevitable; and the question arises, "Are we, as women, prepared to use it a-right?" We think we recognize its responsibility; we should then be stimulated by that recognition to more seriously qualify ourselves to discharge that responsibility creditably. We should study conditions—social, civic, national—for upon the welfare of the whole rests the welfare of the integral parts of that whole; our homes and their happiness are involved in every political and social question.

The message this week from our vice president, Sister Etzenhouser, urges the necessity for study—the necessity that confronts us, as women, to qualify ourselves, in order that we may successfully meet many of the issues that are before us, and wisely and profitably use the many opportunities for service which are opening. Let not these warnings go unheeded, dear sisters; do not think that you in your daily routine of work and care, have no time for these things. We must find time for them, else we will be unworthy laborers—unprofitable stones in the temple. We must get at the foundational truths of life; we must learn to weigh all experiences, judge all sensations, estimate all conditions, with minds clearly attuned to the "God in all things," with hearts willing to identify self-interests with those of the masses, recognizing that in the eyes of the Allwise, we are as one family, and all equally precious to the "Father of our spirits." We should not draw ourselves aloof; to act, or think, or feel, or speak, as though we were molded of more precious clay than our neighbors, erring though he may be; such thought or deed is unworthy those who have been made to feel, through the workings of the Holy Spirit, that all flesh is one, and that the individual, as an integral part of the human race, cannot separate his interests from those of the other units of the mass.

Thus we urge our sisters to inform themselves; to "study all good books;" to store their minds with that which will make them instrumental in God's hands for Zion's uplift and permanent establishment.

A Message from Our Vice President

Some time ago President Frederick M. Smith spoke before our women, and suggested various studies, the knowledge of which would enable us to assist in the "building up of Zion." He explained how so graphically the knowledge of certain sciences is necessary to accomplish good work, that, after his talk, when the women were to take their places for the study period, they arose almost en masse to enter the classes he had mentioned. Later when our officers interviewed the women as to which of the studies they wished to take, one good woman, with her face radiant with hope and good desire, answered; "I don't know; but I want to help build up Zion." We were touched by this almost pathetic answer; and, if we knew the hearts of our sisters, we feel that every one of them wished to prepare herself so that she may assist in the establishing of Zion, although many are like the good sister mentioned, entirely willing but do not know how!

We were pleased to note the emphasis that President

Smith placed upon the studies concerning motherhood and the home. Such studies as tend to the uplift of the home as the foundation of society he gave first place. Since each home can not be a unit unto itself, but is affected by its surroundings, women must in a measure study the problems that affect society if they wish to safeguard their homes.

A new era is dawning for women; they are "coming into their own," and it behooves us to be prepared to take our places in the world's work. The Woman's Auxiliary will help you to find your place, and then assist you to prepare that you might occupy it more acceptably.

We are enthused over this work as never before. We find there is in it a niche for ourselves, and for every other woman in the church. All have been considered and provisions made for them.

During our General Convention when the new constitution and outline for the Yearbook were being considered, one could feel that the atmosphere was charged with vital interests, because so many sensed that the enlargement of the work gave each a place in it. The young woman, the mother, the married woman without children, the business woman, the woman interested in civic affairs, the woman seeking culture, the woman interested in philanthropy and the teachers: all may find welcome and opportunity to work together.

Many women whom we had been unable to interest before, were "on the job" every business session. The comments heard were encouraging. One young business woman, in glancing over our outline, exclaimed with her face alight with interest, "Ah, here is where I belong. Now I can be one with you!" Glancing over her shoulder to see what particular phase of the work had so interested her, we noted the "Culture Department," "Music, Art, Literature, etc." A young mother was heard to express her appreciation when she learned that the Sanitarium through our Woman's Auxiliary would give "Practical helps for home nursing." Those of us who have hungered after knowledge, and have seemingly been denied the school advantages we desired (having been pressed into the ranks of bread winners at an early age), can now, if our desire be strong enough, take our places with those of our sisters who have had greater advantages. Graceland college, through the Woman's Auxiliary offers us just what we need. Other departments of educational work have been outlined from the sciences to home economics, and good women placed in charge, who are giving their services free of charge for the uplift of their sisters.

The word service has been emphasized, remembering the words of our Master, "He who would be greatest among you, let him be the servant of all." True Christianity is demonstrated through service, and our department, "Relief and Service," carries out that idea. The work of this department is both corrective and preventive. In our church organization God has placed officers whose duty it is "to care for the poor and look after the temporal affairs of the church." We, as sisters, may assist those whom God has thus appointed.

To prepare ourselves that we render efficient service we should study such books as will throw light upon our work. For instance, it is commendable to supply food for the poor, but it is more commendable to give employment that they may supply their own needs and save their self-respect.

It is a Christian act to minister to the sick, but we are wise if we make a survey of the conditions that cause illness and correct them. It is good to work with the erring and win them back to ways of righteousness, but it is better to safeguard our young people so that they will not fall into the ways of wickedness. The first we must do and the latter we must not leave undone. No matter what phase of woman's work you are interested in, you must "study to show thyself approved, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." The church is calling for intelligent service; are you willing to make the needful preparation?

We feel sure that our women will be enthused with the outlook, and that they are anxiously awaiting the publication of the Yearbook which will give an outline of our work, the new constitution and by-laws for general, districts and locals and a bibliography of the books needed for study. We hope to have it on sale some time in June. Watch the columns of the Woman's Auxiliary in the HERALD for notice of the Yearbook, with price, when it is ready for you. Prominent men of the church who have looked over the outline and in it, speak favorably of the good work planned therein. The superintendents speak to you through its pages. The Sanitarium and Graceland College in it offer to cooperate with you, and tell you just what help you can obtain from them.

The president of our association, Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, through its pages sends you a message in a foreword. Our editor in chief greets you in its pages and tells you how to cooperate with her to make our columns both instructive and full of "pep." There are other good things too numerous to mention. We want every woman to have one; so send in your orders as soon as the books are placed on sale. Then get in touch with the superintendent of the department in which you are most interested, who stands ready to help you in your chosen work, and so become one with us.

MRS. M. A. ETZENHOUSER.

Our departments in Autumn Leaves, HERALD and Ensign, have been very creditably conducted by our department editors. We deem this a very valuable part of our work for the auxiliary, this reaching far more than our membership, the very creditable work being presented open to all readers of these church publications.

We have had words of encouragement from all over the land, and the work is in better shape than ever before. A general desire "to do" for the Master is expressed on all sides. We are very grateful for the very valuable assistance given our work by the missionary force, and also the home department superintendent of the Religio, the latter having organized two of our new locals.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

The Quarantine Lifted

The restrictions imposed by the quarantine for diphtheria have at last been removed from the home, allowing the occupants and others to come and go as usual.

Special efforts have been made to have the disinfecting very thorough, so that no further danger from the disease may be expected.

Sunday, June 11, was celebrated as Children's Day by the Lamoni Sunday School and on this day the children from the home were in their accustomed places in the school for the first time since the last of March.

Arrivals at the Home

The lifting of the quarantine opened the way for some who have been waiting to enter the home. One little girl who was placed for adoption, if satisfactory, was returned to the home after the three months trial, not being just the right child to fit in that particular home.

A baby girl and two little boys, aged two and a half and four years have been received this week. These are the ones previously mentioned, who, with their mother, arrived some weeks ago, but were cared for outside of the home because of the quarantine.

A baby in the home is a great treat to the children and each in turn is ready to claim the promise to the one who may hold her next.

Departures

A little girl, greatly beloved, who has been in the home almost from the beginning was the first one to be stricken with the dread diphtheria. It seemed for a time that she would soon follow the father and mother who had been called to leave their little daughter to the uncertainties of this earth life. But, instead, she was restored to health, and on the day when the quarantine ended she started in care of a student from Graceland College to the home of her uncle in Illinois, which will henceforth be her home.

An older girl left at the same time for a new home in Michigan.

Two others went to the home of their grandmother in Missouri.

Strawberries for the Home

Nine crates of strawberries were received at the home on Tuesday, June 13, from the farm near Nebraska City, belonging to Brother E. D. Briggs, the superintendent of the home, the only expense to the home being expressage.

There is a good strawberry patch in bearing at the home, and the boys have been picking berries on shares, so the table has been well supplied and a goodly quantity canned.

A large number of plants have been set out this year under the supervision of Brother Briggs and a large yield is anticipated for the future.

Return of an Absent Board Member

At their last meeting the board of trustees were pleased to greet one of their number who has been absent during the school year, Sister Minnie B. Nicholson, who has been at Ames, Iowa, with her daughter Gracia.

Sister Nicholson occupied as house mother at a cottage connected with the agricultural college while her daughter pursued studies in household economics and music at this school.

The Serious Condition of Bishop Roberts

In all the work of the trustees there is a sense of loss in the absence of Brother Joseph Roberts, the treasurer of the board who is now confined at his home with a serious illness. Until last month his faithful attendance upon all duties connected with the home, his wise and sympathetic counsel in the meetings of the trustees were counted upon with a great degree of certainty. Then we were surprised to learn he had gone to the Independence Sanitarium for examination and this was followed by the shock of hearing that his condition had been pronounced hopeless from a human standpoint. But man's extremity is God's opportunity, and we still hope he may be restored by divine power to continue his labors which seem so greatly needed. Special seasons of fasting and prayer in his behalf have been observed by the Lamoni Branch and we trust that many others will join in this petition.

Little Feet

Two little feet, so small that both may nestle
In one caressing hand—
Two tender feet upon the untried border
Of life's mysterious land.
Dimpled, and soft, and pink as peach tree blossoms
In April's fragrant days—
How can they walk among the briery tangles,
Edging the world's rough ways?

Those white-rose feet, along the doubtful future,
Must bear a woman's load:
Alas! since woman has the heaviest burden,
And walks the hardest road—
Save for a while will make the path before them
All dainty, smooth, and fair;
Will cull away the brambles, letting only
The roses blossom there.

But when the mother's watchful eyes are shrouded
Away from the sight of men,
And these dear feet are left without her guiding,
Who shall direct them then?
How will they be allowed, betrayed, deluded—
Poor little, untaught feet!
Into what dreary mazes will they wander?
What dangers will they meet?

Will they go stumbling blindly in the darkness
Of sorrow's tearful shades,
Or find the upland slopes of peace and beauty,
Where sunlight never fades?
Will they go stumbling up ambitious summit,
The common world above!
Or in some nameless vale, securely sheltered,
Walk hand in hand with love?

Some feet there be which walk life's track unwounded,
Which find but pleasant ways;
Some hearts there be, to which this life is only
A round of happy days.
But they are few. Far more there are who wander

Without a hope or friend—
Who find their journey full of pains and losses,
And long to reach the end.

How shall it be with her, the tender stranger,
Fair-faced and gentle eyed,
Before whose unstained feet the world's rude highway
Stretches so strange and wide?
Ah, who may read the future? For our darling
We crave all blessings sweet—
And pray that He who feeds the crying ravens,
Will guide the baby's feet.

—Florence Percy.

Letter Department

From a Tobacco User

[The following letter, which we choose to print without giving the signature, was received recently at the editorial sanctum. We publish it here exactly as written because it may suggest to our readers two thoughts: First, that some of our men may be a little too drastic in their denunciation of the use of tobacco; Second, that those who use it may be a little too sensitive, and choose to cut themselves off from church privileges and from such edification and instruction as they might receive from the HERALD, simply because some one individual has seen fit to criticize their particular weakness. This individual evidently saw only a few occasional articles on tobacco, and overlooked hundreds of pages of excellent matter on other topics.]

"Mr. Elbert A. Smith: I want to ask a favor of you, and that is, to stop the SAINTS' HERALD. I don't want it in my house. It is all tobacco and no gospel, and if that fine hired man, that is, if you can call him a man, had cut himself a few blocks of that smoke and put them in his pocket, it might have made a better Christian out of him. My faith does not lie in the wisdom of man, it lies in the power of God. I let no man judge me in what I eat or drink.

"I have used tobacco fifty-six years, and I know that I have just as good a standing this world and in the sight of God as those men who write so much, (that is, if you can call them men,) about tobacco. It is apt to get away with their brain, that is, if they ever had any. I thought that I was getting in the only church. I know now that they did not come out of Rome, but they have gone in. So do not send the HERALD to me any more."

Concerning Nebraska City Jubilee

Having read with profound interest the editorial in your issue of June 7, 1916, under the caption: "Golden Jubilee of Nebraska City Branch," I felt impressed somewhat as I think Luke was when he addressed himself to Theophilus: "It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding from the very first, to write unto thee in order," to straighten out some of the kinks that have crept into the recital of events as found in the excerpt from the Daily News that has a twist of error therein.

The following is a misstatement by the News: "The first presiding elder was a Mr. Baldwin." The memory of some one seems to have dropped a cog out of the doings of things back in 1866 and been faulty in furnishing that item, but perhaps quite honest in so stating. Possibly an excuse might be coined out of the following. Under the reports of branches at the semiannual conference of October, 1865, we find for southern Nebraska: "Camp Creek: 5 elders, 2 priests; Weeping Water: 2 elders, 1 priest. Nebraska City, 1 elder. The total number of members in the three last-mentioned branches are 79." (HERALD, December 1, 1865, p. 163.) Notwithstanding that which appears in the minutes of that conference, there was not a branch of the church at Nebraska City at that date. It would not be strange that the great majority of the church, most of whom have been born since the holding of that conference should conclude that there was an organized branch of the church at Nebraska City at the time of that conference, whereas the fact was there were only Elder William Lane and family to represent the true fold and church of God at that place at that time.

The first real missionary work done in the vicinity of Nebraska City was by Elder George M. Rush, and the first meeting was held in the home of William Lane, residing on Eleventh Street near North Table Creek. At this meeting, held February 13, 1866, the work of the Reorganization was explained to a number of erstwhile Saints who had gathered to learn concerning the claims to leadership. Elder Rush returned to his home, leaving the people to arrange for future services. R. C. Elvin wrote to President Joseph Smith, and a prompt reply with HERALDS and tracts was received. Elder Rush was notified and he preached in an old paint shop that stood just south of the southeast corner of the courthouse square, one Sunday early in March. The next day he went to Hamburg, Iowa, to engage in a debate with a Methodist minister, and I accompanied him. Late in that same month on the return of Elder Rush, cottage meetings were held and it resulted in the finding, residing in the city, a score of members. During the first week in April Elder Wheeler Baldwin came also, and on April 8, 1866, at the residence of Robert C. B. Elvin, in Greggspport, a suburb of the city, Elders Baldwin and Rush organized the Nebraska City Branch with a membership of twenty-one; Robert C. B. Elvin, president and Robert M. Elvin, secretary.

In 1887 under the caption of "Historical" there was from the records of the branches a write up of the thirteen that had been organized up to that day in the Southern Nebraska District.

Another item of the News reads: "In 1862, Mrs. Hannah Fuller was made a member of the church, and was the first in this country to take such action." Most anyone would conclude that this baptism was the first one performed at the place where the "Golden Jubilee" was held, but it took place in what was then known as the Weeping Water Branch, and the record of this baptism in the before-mentioned write up reads as follows: "The first baptism on record is that of Sister Hannah Faunce, bears date of December 23, 1861, and was performed by Elder Charles Derry." (HERALD, April 9, 1887, p. 238.)

The first baptism at Nebraska City was performed by Elder George M. Rush, April 15, 1866, and the candidates were immersed in the following order: Robert M. Elvin, David Mathers, Mary A. and Elizabeth J. Elvin.

In the May following the organization of the branch, McLennan Hall was rented for a conference, and the branch continued therein until the building burned; after which there was frequent changing from cottage to hall and other places. I call to mind Odd Fellows and Simpson Hall, an old store building on Tenth Street, and the Prairie Institute, and if I should rummage pigeon holes of memory I might discover other places where we lifted up the voice of prayer and praise to the Giver of all good. I will forbear any additional detail of those bygone days and experiences, but they are still fresh and comforting remembrances upon the walls of memory.

Still in the faith,

ROBT M. ELVIN.

LAMONI, IOWA, June 9, 1916.

[We received the following letter from Elder E. E. Long, and accompanying it a clipping from the Perry Daily Chief, of June 7, which follows. We do not know who the writer of the poem may be, but we surmise that Elder Long is well acquainted with him. We have hitherto received clippings from the same daily, in which liberal space was devoted to synopses of sermons and similar desirable publicity.—EDITOR.]

PERRY, IOWA, June 8, 1916.

Editors Herald: I came to Perry on May 24 and have held meetings nightly. The interest has been good, but it might have been better had internal conditions been up to the standard. Perry offers one of the best opportunities I know of for sowing the gospel seed, every series of meetings resulting in a number of baptisms, and the end is not yet. I baptized two fine ladies on the 5th, their husbands and others being about ready to follow. There has been a steady, healthy growth since the organization of the branch.

The press is open and liberal, giving us front-page space daily. At one time, two years ago, the ministerial association tried to shut us out of the Chief, but the editor informed them that the paper was open to them to reply to our articles so long as they would not be "vicious." Instead they went into hiding and have remained there to date, working in the dark, endeavoring to keep people away from our services.

Unable to accomplish his purpose by outside opposition, Satan will enter the flock if he can and scatter the sheep. One of his most successful efforts is to destroy confidence in the leaders and devoted workers by creating jealousy and circulating stories having their origin in a distorted imagination. Talebearing is one of the most fruitful sources of evil the church has to contend with, and should be guarded against constantly. Perry has some fine talent and earnest workers. May they continue to grow in peace and harmony, avoiding every root of bitterness that would stay their progress.

With some others, I leave here to-morrow for Rhodes to attend our district conference. After the conference, unless directed otherwise by the minister in charge, my efforts will be to plant the work in new places, and I will be pleased to hear from any of the isolated Saints who desire an effort in their community. My address is Lamoni, Iowa.

As ever, in the faith,

E. E. LONG.

THE BATTLE OF THE COON

By Ephraim

Once upon a time an elder
To a city made his way,
With the message preached by Jesus
In Judea, far away.

Soon he had a congregation,
Hungry souls were being fed.
But the pastors of the city
Heaped opprobrium on his head.

Said one preacher to his fellows,
We must put that message down.
If we don't it means our finish,
And we'll have to quit the town.

Why, it strikes at our traditions,
And our cherished creeds assails,
We must rout this bold intruder,
See the havoc he entails.

So they passed a resolution,
Had it published in the Chief,

Hoping thus to close the columns
Of the press against the "thief."

But the editor informed them
That the press was free to all,
And as "soldiers of the cross" that They should either stand or fall.

"Meet the elder in the open,"
Said the man behind the pen,
"There is only one restriction,
Don't be ugly—fight like men."

But they went their way disheartened,
They had met a sore defeat;
They were not prepared for action,
So they hastened to retreat.

Then together they 'did counsel
O'er some plan of action new,
Meet the elder in the open!
Why, 'twould never, never do.

We must turn the tide against him;
See the people on the sly;
And with deadly "gas" we'll conquer
This impostor, by and by.

Thus the battle rages sorely
With the elder in the fore,
And the pastors in the trenches
Losing prisoners, more and more.

LOCK NUMBER 4, PENNSYLVANIA, May 8, 1916.

Editors Herald: As a subscriber of the HERALD for only six months, I have been made to shed tears of joy in reading the testimonies of the Saints from all parts of the world. I now feel it my duty to offer a testimony in return.

These testimonies have strengthened me in my faith and have made me feel that I was not alone in this work, for it has been as an endless well of water to me since I obeyed it, and I have not lost an opportunity to tell my friends of it when I could.

Although I meet some peculiar circumstances, I am still battling away, and hope I may continue. I am satisfied the time is here when we have no time to lose in order to accomplish the work we know must be done.

I think the outcome of our last conference should inspire every Saint to awaken to duty, and to be charitable and pay tithing regularly in order that this work may go to the ends of the world. It takes money and courage, the wind will not blow it there.

We have a great many good people interested here, and we are looking forward to an ingathering, as we have Elder John Carlisle with us in this district—a very able worker—and I feel disposed to cooperate with him in the cause, and ask the prayers of all the Saints.

Yours in the faith,
D. D. COOPER.

[The following extract from a letter to Brother C. I. Carpenter, Lamoni, Iowa, will be of interest to HERALD readers.—Editors.]

RACE TRACK, MONTANA, May 11, 1916.

We are holding down a homestead of three hundred and twenty acres, and in a little over a year expect to prove up and call it our own. After that it will be worth perhaps eight or ten dollars an acre—worth staying for. I am not at home very much.

We expect a big Campbellite debate out this way some time during the summer. I wish we had some of the big Lamoni debaters, Long or Holloway, or someone like them. I do not know whether I am a debater or not, but we may have to try it. Our opponent is a big man in the Christian Church, hailing from Arkansas. He edits a paper down there, and his members say if we down him we down the best man they have. So if you hear of the Christian Church breaking up you will know what happened.

We have had six inches of snow and it is still snowing. I was much pleased and encouraged with what was done at the late General Conference.

May the Lord bless all in this work.

Your brother in Christ,
G. W. THORBURN.

FONTANELLE, IOWA, May 14, 1916.

Editors Herald: Though we are few in number, we are trying in our weakness to do some little good. We hold our Sunday school and preaching services at Brother Hodges', as we have no church. There are only four families of us to attend. Anyone not being acquainted with the branch here would think we had quite a number according to the record. I think there are about thirty-five names, but for various reasons the branch has decreased until only a few are left. Some have moved away and others have grown cold and indifferent.

God has promised to bless us even if we are only few in number, inasmuch as we meet in the way he has appointed for us. We can say that he has fulfilled that promise to us more than once. We are thankful for the same.

It seems that Satan has put in much work here, and has accomplished a great deal for himself. The Saints never were as faithful as they should have been, myself as well as some of the rest of them. We know we cannot please God without faith, therefore I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints, that we may have our faith increased, sufficient to please God every day.

May God's Spirit abide with all his Saints, is my prayer.
In bonds,
L. O. LENTS.

Editors Herald: As I was reading the HERALD this morning and thinking of the many wonderful works of God, there was brought to my mind the promise I made my dear father, who passed away February 3, 1915, when I told him I would write his testimony and have it printed in the HERALD. When I was watching by his bedside, talking to him of his hope, I remembered that he was always faithful in testimony. I asked him how he felt about the work now. His eyes brightened, and he said, "There is no power in earth or hell that can change my testimony, or shake my faith. I know this work is true." Then lifting his eyes, he said, "Oh, Lord, come and take me home to rest." After bidding us all good-by, he said, "The Lord has tried me and my work. The Lord is with me." He then closed his eyes and sank to rest. For many years he traveled and preached the gospel, administering to the sick, and strengthening the Saints. His testimony now comes to all through the HERALD.

I hope and pray that the dear Saints may so live in this life that we may meet our loved ones who have gone before to the land of rest.

My thoughts turn to that dear old hymn:

"E'en down to old age all my people shall prove
My sovereign eternal unchangeable love.
And then when gray hairs shall their temples adorn
Like lambs they shall still in my bosom be borne.

"The soul that on Jesus still leans for repose
I will not, I cannot desert to his foes.
That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake,
I'll never, no never, no never forsake."

Ever praying for all the Saints, I am,
Your brother,
GEORGE L. BLACKMORE.

CATAWBA, FLORIDA, May 22, 1916.

Editors Herald: I have never taken any of the church papers and have not read much of them though I have had the opportunity for many years. My father has taken the HERALD ever since I can remember, and now I am trying to cultivate the habit of reading, and find more and more interesting and instructive articles in the HERALD, and am trying to gain strength from them.

I have been denied church privileges somewhat, and have drifted away and fallen short of my duty. I have turned my attention to worldly things more and more, until it seems very hard to recover. I ask the prayers of all the Saints in behalf of myself and family, that we might withdraw from all the things of the world, and be of benefit to ourselves and others. We desire to raise the two little ones God has intrusted in our care to love and obey him.

To the Saints I will say, Never turn back into the world, for it seems harder to recover the second time than to make the first start. We know the time is not far distant when we must meet our Savior. Let us try to meet him in peace.

We hope that the Saints will remember our request, and ask that the Lord will bless the efforts put forth in our behalf.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
ROBERT E. BANKESTER.

HUALIPI, NEVADA, May 24, 1916.

Editors Herald: Please find order for $1.50 to keep the dear old HERALD coming right along. I have been a reader of same for over twenty years and would be very lonesome indeed if it stopped coming.

We are newcomers to Nevada, and located in a nice valley thirty-five miles east of California and seventy-five miles south of Oregon, on a desert land tract of one hundred sixty acres of which there is more to be had if taken soon, and water rights can be contracted for on easy terms for thirty dollars per acre.

Brethren S. M. Reiste and J. W. Rushton please take notice, for we certainly will be asking for help to establish the work of the Lord here. If there are any Saints in north-western Nevada we will be glad to hear from them so we can get acquainted; by so doing we may be of some help to our lone missionary, in establishing the work in Nevada.

In the faith,
J. L. DETRICK.

CENTRAL LAKE, MICHIGAN, May 28, 1916.

Editors Herald: I wrote a letter to the HERALD sometime ago, and have received some dear letters from Saints since, so I thought they would like to hear from me, as I think we are all interested in one another.

Yes, dear Saints, we have something to be thankful for. Oh, I am very glad I am in this work. God is very good to me. I have trials, but as a sister said in her letter to me, one that tries to follow Jesus must suffer persecution. My little girl I spoke of is home from the hospital, not entirely well, but much better. But my husband has been sent to the State hospital at Kalamazoo, and I do hope that if there are any Saints in that city some one will write to me, so I could correspond with them and get them to go and see him.

Many times I think of number 155 in Zion's Praises. I work out by the hour and keep my five dear little ones together. I have good health and thank my dear Master for it. I am trying hard to live as I should. I have my faults, but with constant prayer God is helping me.

I was shown in a dream a few weeks before God took my baby last New Year's morning, that I was to lose one of my family. I am always shown in a dream when trials are coming to me. I have always been selfish with my children, so I prayed and got over it, and promised God if he wanted any of them he could have them. If he takes another I will say as Job did, The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

Pray for me, dear Saints, because I want to be gathered home with you all in Zion.
JENNIE ADAMS.

OZARK, MISSOURI, June 1, 1916.

Editors Herald: I wish to again bear my testimony to the angel's message. When I was baptized and confirmed the promise to me was that I would have evidence of the truth of this work. Some few months ago I requested prayers through the HERALD, that God would heal me of an extreme case of hernia without an operation, as I was not financially able to have it done. The prayers were not answered this way, but God made it possible by working on the hearts of my friends where I now reside, and the money to pay for the operation and hospital expenses was provided. I requested the church on East Dale Street, in Springfield, Missouri, to pray for me, that the operation might be a success. I was operated on April 21, and on May 21, just one month to a day, I was able to get out and resume my business. I now feel as though I was never afflicted, yet I suffered eight long years. My case was the worst in and around here. The doctors marveled that I recovered so quickly, but to the writer it is no marvel, as the prayers of faith through works on my part for being operated upon healed me. God assisted and hastened nature.

This conforms to the teaching of Latter Day Saints, that God gives us blessings and healing through faith and works.

The writer now not only enjoys the best of health, but also enjoys the blessings of God in tithe paying, in sending the church papers to others after reading them, to those who are hungry for the truth. God will bless us spiritually as well as temporally if we do his will. I ask the prayers of all who are interested in my behalf that I may hold our faithful.

QUINCY ANDERSON.

DOWN, KANSAS, June 3, 1916.

Editors Herald: Perhaps some of your readers will be interested in hearing from the Atchison Branch. At times we are flourishing, with a goodly number of Saints attending all departments of the work; then our number is so diminished at times we have wondered if we would be finally disorganized. So many of our members have moved away in the past year that the outlook has been very discouraging. But the Saints who are left feel encouraged just now because of the action taken by the First Presidency and Twelve in sending them a resident pastor for the coming conference year.

Brother George Jenkins has been elected president of the branch. Brother William Bolinger was called to the office of priest.

On Sunday, May 21, Brother Twombly was with us and gave us a good sermon. The week previous Brother J. W. A. Bailey held a series of meetings full of instruction and encouragement to the Saints.

The Saints feel like putting forth renewed efforts and desire to cooperate with Brother Jenkins in building up the work. Many plans are being made by both pastor and members for interesting the young people of the branch. A tennis court and croquet ground, etc., are planned. Brother Jenkins believes that by interesting them in such things he may win them to the different services of the church.

We have a good Sunday school, also have Religio and a teacher training class. Sister Jenkins is doing a good work with the children along musical lines, and we are real proud of our junior quartet.

Brother and Sister Cecil Schmid have returned to Atchison to live, after spending a winter in Nebraska among relatives.

The writer is located in Downs, Kansas, but we are fortunate in being able to go back and forth quite often, having free railroad transportation. We manage by so doing and by the help of the church literature to keep in touch with the work. We look forward to the time when we may be differently located, but we wait with patience.

May God bless the efforts to build up the work and strengthen the Saints.

Your sister,
ELMIRA MILLER.

CARTHAGE, MISSOURI, June 5, 1916.

Editors Herald: Just a line in regard to some statements published in the HERALD about tobacco, one of recent date and one sometime ago. Now, while it may be true to some extent, my honest convictions are that we might be making a hobby of these things, while there are grosser crimes to my mind creeping in wholesale, and not much said. The Word of Wisdom tells us it is not good for man, and God will bless those who heed his counsel.

Now, here is the point. We baptize people that use it. They are weak at first and cannot just understand all about these things. Of course when those teachings are mentioned, attacking their manhood, bringing up, and so on, it stirs up strife and rebellion. It is my opinion that if we are going to attack them in this manner we had better just make it a test of fellowship; it would save the feelings.

My personal experience in this is that when we have a habit that is not pleasing to God, when we go to him in secret prayer it comes to our mind the very first thing, until we have to give it up or suffer. Indeed that is the work of the Holy Spirit, to guide into all truth and direct in ways of righteousness.

Don't understand me to be upholding tobacco, for I hate it so far as I am personally concerned, but I do believe we can use harshness along these lines when we might have a besetting sin just as bad or worse.

Why not get after pride a while? The Lord has admonished us time and again against it. But still it is creeping in on every hand to the extent that in some instances we cannot be told from any other fashionable society. What could we not do if we took the money that is spent for fashion, fine clothes, and jewelry? We could serve and glorify God on the earth and build up his kingdom.

It is a pleasure to me to sacrifice and do all we can for this great latter-day work that I love. I know it is true and God's work. I want to live worthy and overcome all my faults and imperfections, and be saved in the kingdom of God.

Sincerely,
824 West Chestnut Avenue. MARTHA A. GREEN.

OYEN, ALBERTA, June 8, 1916.

ELBERT A. SMITH,
Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother: Just got home from Didsbury, Alberta, where we have been exposing the weakness and fallacy of Seventh-day Adventism in a public discussion. Believe me, things jingled, but it was a funeral dirge for the Seventh-day delusion.

Adventists in that section have been browbeating and bumping everything that came along, and were a standing scourge to the community. Everything was challenged, and of course Adventism chuckled to itself in joyful glee in seeing their opposition go glimmering.

Last spring your writer had occasion to visit Didsbury on the solicitation of Brother and Sister Patten, the only Saints in town. Responding, we no sooner reached the burg when we were confronted with a challenge to meet the issue. Accommodating our opponents, a debate was set for May.

Well, I need not worry you with a recital of the arguments pro and con, but would say that in my last speech I challenged my opponent to repeat the debate at Edmonton, or Oyen. To this my antagonist instantly replied, accepting the challenge. He had no sooner declared his acceptance when I came back with the statement: "Ladies and gentlemen, Mr. Wilson has, as you have heard, agreed to again meet the issue in debate at Edmonton, but I will prophesy here and now that the gentleman will never meet it." A vacant hush fell upon the audience as they marvelled at the inspiration or impudence of the prediction.

They were not long left in doubt, however, for upon meeting my opponent to sign up propositions he refused to come across, but backed down and out. Never have I seen the look of chagrin more deeply lined on the face of a human being. But to cover himself and work a bluff, my opponent challenged me to repeat the debate in Didsbury. To his surprise and further chagrin we took him on and the fight recommenced. Handbills were immediately struck off and the town assembled once more to witness the battle. By this time things were at white heat. Adventism, which for years had stamped the country as the invincible, was surely up against it and the several denominations were overjoyed to see it shiver and strain as the submarine of truth got into its very vitals.

The last night the hall was packed. Many were standing. Never have I felt the inspiration of this latter-day gospel in public discussion as I did upon that occasion.

On the conclusion of the debate a vote was polled of the assembly as to their verdict on the discussion. Result was, Adventists got one. Latter Day Saints got all the rest. Adventists themselves voted against this man.

Well, for once in my life I was popular, but say, it feels awfully queer. The leading townspeople congratulated us on every hand. Their Adventist enemy was dead.

Fraternally yours,
DANIEL MACGREGOR.

News from Missions

Arkansas-Texas

I am starting on another missionary year's work, and I believe it is with more hope and brighter prospects than I ever have, because of what I saw and heard and enjoyed at our last General Conference.

I believe the day that I have been praying for the twenty-three years that I have been in the gospel work, and the day that God's people have looked for in every age of the world is close at hand, when Zion will be built up and our Savior come to reign a thousand bright years.

I came down through southeastern Oklahoma and north-eastern Texas, where I labored several years. I was greeted with a warm reception by the many friends and Saints, some coming the distance of ten miles to hear the old gospel story. I could have preached in the radius of forty miles for six months and not have occupied over twenty days in any one place. Even then I would not have filled all the calls. So we see the harvest is ripe and the laborers are few. Let us be up and doing!

I stopped at Manchester, Texas, my old home place, a few days, and while there Mary Jane Thompson, the wife of Brother Fine Thompson, who was one of the first to obey the gospel in northeastern Texas thirty-five years ago, passed away. His home has always been a welcome place for the elders, and while Sister Thompson never came into the church her hands never tired of preparing her table and her home to make the servants of God comfortable and welcome. She always loved to read the HERALD and Ensign, and defended the gospel with associates.

I am now in the city of Texarkana, trying to preach the gospel to those who never heard it before. The people are made to wonder and the poor sinners are made to tremble to hear the angel's message that has come to earth in the hour of God's judgment.

Arkansas has just been visited by one of those latter-day tornadoes, killing about sixty people and injuring about one hundred and fifty. Thousands of dollars worth of property has been destroyed.

I will labor this year in Arkansas and Louisiana. Those wishing preaching in those two States please notify me at my home address, Wilburton, Oklahoma, and I will try to reach you in due time. I would be glad to get to open up some new places, so I would say to the scattered Saints, if you are in a vicinity where the gospel has never been preached, let us hear from you.

May God bless his work everywhere this year and Saints come up higher in righteousness and sinners be made to tremble under God's judgments.

Your brother,

June 6, 1916.

E. A. ERWIN.

Ohio

I came to this place on May 5 and began a series of meetings in the Saints' chapel near Marshall, continuing for over four Sundays. There was a fine interest. The attendance was good for the busy time. I closed the meetings at the chapel a week ago yesterday, on which day I led four precious souls into the water and baptized them into the kingdom of God.

I enjoyed my work very much in this place and the Saints were very good to me and made me feel at home. I mostly stayed with I. P. Woods, but some with Thomas Rhodes, Isaac Rhodes, Dan Rhodes and Dan Turley and visited others. There are a nice lot of Saints here.

A week ago to-day I started meetings in a schoolhouse two and one half miles east of the Latter Day Saint church and am having a fine interest. The house is full almost every night. Last night it was full and about as many on the outside, standing at the door and windows, listening. Have been having very good order and the people seem very much interested. I do not know what we will be able to accomplish in this place, but we will try to present it so they can understand, then leave it with them to obey or reject.

We expect to remain here for a week or two yet. We have learned by experience that the most good is done by staying with it when you have worked up an interest. Too often missionaries work up an interest and then go off and leave it.

I would like to say to the Saints of the Southern Ohio District that we desire to make all the new openings we can, and we want you to assist us by getting a place for us to preach. As we do not know where you live, write and let us know of your need and when would be the best time to hold meetings in your place.

Until further notice our address will be Marshall, Ohio, R. F. D. 1, care of I. P. Woods.

May we all do our part and let our light shine.

As ever in gospel bonds,

MARSHALL, OHIO, June 5, 1916.

News from Branches

Tustin, Michigan

Our correspondent, Sister Hubbard, has been very ill, but is improving.

E. N. Bert and Waldo Kapnick gave us a nice series of meetings this spring. We had the largest crowds and interest ever known in Marion. Two were baptized by Brother Kapnick and are making fine Saints.

Brother W. D. Ellis was with us over Sunday and preached two fine sermons.

We have had our share of sickness and trials. We are reminded of Paul's statement that we shall be brought up through much tribulation. We lost our little bud of promise, about seven months old.

Brother Harry Kleaborn of Grand Rapids passed away in Marion a few days ago.

Brother W. G. Hubbard and writer met with the Saints at Fork on sacrament Sunday. Had preaching in the afternoon. Brother Hubbard is ready with his auto when you mention meetings somewhere. Two more asked the writer for baptism after meeting Sunday night.

With gratefulness we look back over the past and think of the present. Now we have good strong men and women to help us. Those who can take the lead in our absences. There is nothing so great as this gospel work.

Sincere wishes to all the HERALD family.

A. M. BOOMER.

Kansas City, Missouri, Second Church

On June 11 we listened to a splendid sermon delivered by our presiding teacher, Brother Frank Scanlan, on preparedness, the necessity of church members becoming familiar with the law and then keeping it.

Our branch president, Elder E. W. Lloyd, is busy trying to awaken our sleeping soldiers. Every Tuesday and Thursday evening of each week prayer meetings are held at the homes of those who do not attend our branch services. Good has been done and our meetings are better attended and more spiritual.

Several weeks ago our presiding deacon, Brother J. H. Kaplinger, while at work in the railroad yards met with a very serious accident, which necessitated the amputation of his right foot, just above the ankle. Those who witnessed the accident could not understand why he was not instantly killed. He is recovering rapidly, for which we are thankful.

The last Sunday of May was observed as a day of fasting and prayer to return thanks to God for the blessings received during the past month and our prayer meeting was a spiritual feast.

The Ladies Aid Society has been reorganized with Sister Margaret Moore as president and meets every Thursday afternoon at her home 1828 Bellview.

of various kinds, including conflicts with American troops by what appear to be troops from both Carranza and Villista factions all have conspired together to make the situation serious. President Wilson has called out the militia of every State for service on the Mexican border. It is estimated that the total number of militia will be 145,000 men. Secretary of War Baker, has issued the following statement:

In view of the disturbed conditions of the Mexican border and in order to assure complete protection for all Americans the President has called out substantially all the State militia and will send them to the border, wherever and as fully as General Funston determines them to be needed for the purpose stated.

If all are not needed an effort will be made to relieve those on duty there from time to time so as to distribute the duty.

This call for militia is wholly unrelated to General Pershing's expedition and contemplates no additional entry into Mexico, except as may be necessary to pursue bandits who attempt outrages on Americans. The militia are being called out so as to leave some troops in the several States. They will be mobilized at their home stations where necessary recruiting can be done.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Russian drive continues successful. One hundred and seventy thousand prisoners are reported as being taken, in addition to 150,000 killed and wounded. Czernowitz, the capital of Bukowina, has fallen, giving the Russians important strategic points in Russian territory. On the Caucasus front there have been gains between the Russians and Turks. Activity is reported at Kut el Amara on the Tigris River, though conflicting reports leave us in doubt as to ultimate results. It is reported that Greece has moved her military base from Saloniki to Valo, about one hundred miles northwest of Athens. Canadian troops have retaken trenches lost to the Germans at the village of Hooge, near Ypres. There seems no abatement of the conflict at Verdun; no material change has been made during the week, though loss of men on both sides is still heavy. The Italians are holding back the Austrian advance, and have taken three important positions from them. The Italian fleet is reported as having bombarded the Austrian coast. An Austrian sank an Italian ship on the 8th with a loss of about half its cargo of soldiers.

The Dawn Triumphant

The dark and secret passing of a night
When love seemed dead and hope had taken flight;
When happy souls lay wrapt in dreamless sleep
Found one awake, with lonely grief, to keep A memory.

O dragging hours where once the hours were fleet!
O bitter night where once the night was sweet!
But lo! the dawn held darkness in control
And with the light he gained o'er his own soul
The mastery.

From out that restless night of throbbing pain
He rose serene, to face the years again;
With threatened loss of joy he learned to find
For all the burdened hearts of humankind
His sympathy.

ONE GOD AND A COMMON HUMANITY

THE LESSON FROM MARS' HILL

(Sermon preached by Elbert A. Smith, Sunday evening, April 30, 1916, at Lamoni, Iowa.)

Beginning with the fifteenth verse of the seventeenth chapter of Acts, I read as follows:

And they that conducted Paul brought him unto Athens: and receiving a commandment unto Silas and Timotheus for to come to him with all speed, they departed. Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry. Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him. Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoics, encountered him. And some said, What will this babbler say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods; because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection. And they took him, and brought him unto Areopagus, saying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is? For thou bringest certain strange things to our ears: we would know therefore what these things mean. (For all the Athenians, and strangers which were there, spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell or to hear some new thing.) Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars' Hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you. God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshiped with men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things: and hath made of one blood, all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us: for in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring.

A DRAMATIC INCIDENT

The scripture that I have read gives us an account of one of the most dramatic incidents recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. It occurred in the spectacular life of that most wonderful of all the apostles, Paul.

To understand it correctly we must realize that Athens at this time was the center of culture and thought for the entire world. Athens at that time was the mother of philosophers and of philosophies. We find mentioned here two of the systems, the Epicurean and the Stoics—conflicting philosophies, one teaching men that pleasure was the chief thing in life; the other teaching men that they should be sublimely indifferent to either pleasure or pain.

The very air in Athens was electrical with thought. Men came from all over the world and contended there over the living questions of the day. To this great city came Paul, and it is not surprising that under the conditions, it is recorded that his spirit was stirred within him; and usually when Paul was stirred in spirit other things began to stir, other people were stirred very quickly. And so immediately we find him down in the market place. That was a great place in Athens for the philosophers to meet in and ask questions and debate and discuss.

A NEW VOICE AT MARS' HILL

And, naturally, the next place that he visited was Areopagus, or Mars' Hill, for this was one of the greatest centers for community gatherings in the city of Athens: the great Mars' Hill where one of the principal courts sat and where philosophers met, while close at hand were the various deities of the Greek nation.

To this wonderful place came this wonderful man Paul, fulfilling the mission that Jesus Christ had placed on him when he said he should be a light to the Gentiles and stand before the great men of the earth. Coming up there to that eminence where religions and philosophies and atheism wrestled together, he found ready for him a text, for he says, "As I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you."

TEACHING THE TEACHERS

It is not strange that this man, sent out to represent a humble Jew who had been crucified in shame and ignominy, should come here to this seat of learning and on this pinnacle on which were focused the eyes of the world, stand up and profess to be able to teach these people? And yet undoubtedly he did exactly what he said he would do, "Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you."

All their searching had failed to find out the unknown God, but Paul through revelation had received a knowledge of this unknown God, and came there to teach them. From a statement he made shortly thereafter we get the theme that we want to talk about to-night.

ONE GOD OVER ALL

He went ahead to say that this God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth."

This is consistent with this other statement in Ephesians 4: 6, where he says, "One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." We have then the idea brought before us of one God over all, and under him, one common humanity all of one blood, and that is our theme, "One God and a common humanity."

He came there teaching them the idea of monotheism, of one God, as opposed to the then popular idea of polytheism, or many gods. Monotheism is a dominant idea of Judaism as well as of Christianity.

I do not now recall any sect of so-called Christians that has ever receded from that idea, with the exception of our friends in Utah. They profess to believe in many gods, councils of gods, and tell us that the God with whom we have to do is subordinate, that there are others, many others higher than he is—and by the way, Brigham Young said that that God was Adam.

But Paul says that there is only one God and Father over all, the creator of all men, and that God is the God of the Bible, the God that Jesus Christ sent him out to represent, the one and only God, the one who sent Moses when he went down into Egypt bearing the message he had received, teaching one God, the great I Am, monotheism, one God. Paul brought that message to Athens: one God over all, the God of all nations, for he said, "He hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation."

This is the God, not of the Jews only, but also of the Greeks; the God of all nations, and he says, "If haply they might feel after him," and we may assume that all nations have been feeling after him, some of them in a very dilatory manner, and some of them very persistently, but all nations have been feeling after him. Paul saw an evidence of that, on Mars' Hill, when he saw that inscription to the great unknown God that they were seeking after and had not been able to find.

REVELATION NEEDED

The nations of the earth to-day have been seeking after that unknown God, seeking to find a trace of him through science, a trace of him in geology and biology, or by astronomy to trace him in the heavens, and have not been able to find him any more than the great Athenians were able to find him. We do not believe that a science or education can find out God.

Can a man searching find out God? There must be a revelation of God, that granted, men are able to use the scientific education that they may have.

Paul's experience certainly must impress on our minds the thought that Jesus was not narrow, that he would prefer to select an ignorant, uneducated, or boorish man if he could get a man of different type, because when he sent a representative to Mars' Hill, to meet the best minds of that age, he sent a man who had been thoroughly prepared, a scholar, a man of great and broad learning, a man who had studied doctrine under the greatest of the Hebrew teachers. That alone did not qualify Paul, however. He needed a revelation from on high to unfold to him the mysteries of heaven, and when he received the revelation from heaven he could use the other. The two go hand in hand. And so Paul said in his message, "I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." That is the reason he could go to Mars' Hill and teach the teachers of the world.

Socrates had lived at Athens, and had died there, and had tried to find out God by asking questions in the market place, and on Mars' Hill, but he could not find out God. Paul received his knowledge by revelation, and if the world ever receives a knowledge of God it must be in that way.

JESUS THE GREAT REVELATOR

Jesus Christ when he came to dwell in the world, said, "He that hath seen me hath seen God," and in another place he says: "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." It was the work of Jesus Christ to reveal to the world the character of God the Father, and the Apostle Paul, as one of his servants helped to fulfill that mission when he came to the people on that occasion.

ALL MEN OF ONE BLOOD

The next division of our theme is the idea already suggested, that while there is one God over all humanity, humanity consists of one common stock. "He hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." Just one common people.

We find in the Scriptures the idea held forth that all people originated from one common stock. While scientists may differ with us as to the origin of man,

I think they will agree with us that all men sprang from one common source, that all nations of the earth are of one blood.

We are told in the Scriptures that for a while at least, humanity was together in one place, and that all spoke the one language, but by and by we are told that there was a confusion of the tongues. Some people regard that as historical, and some say it is merely allegorical, but in whichever way we look at it, we must concede that it represents facts, because quite evidently there has come, either suddenly or gradually in the past, a confusion of tongues. Granting the contention that humanity sprang from one source, in all probability they spoke the one tongue for a time, but now we find among them a confusion of tongues, and a separation of humanity into tribes and nations.

But the differences, while they are very apparent, are not fundamental; mostly they are superficial. There are differences in color, but color is only skin deep. There are differences in language, which is not a fundamental difference. There are differences in tastes and customs, but when we come to the bottom of the matter, humanity, humanity has enough in common to quite overbalance the differences. In the great fundamentals men are one.

NO NATION LIVETH UNTO ITSELF

It has been impressed upon us that no nation can live by itself and unto itself, any more than a man can live by himself. All humanity is interdependent. Japan lived for a long time by herself; she would not allow any foreigners to come into her ports; her ports were closed. She would not allow her people to go to other nations. But the Japanese found they could not maintain that system. We forced them to open their ports. Now some of our people wish the Japanese would stay at home.

The Chinese tried the same system, but they found they could not live by themselves; and this great war now in progress in Europe has impressed upon us, perhaps as never before, the fact that all humanity is bound together by many common interests. If a man goes to town and buys a pair of socks and they are faded in one or two weeks, he is impressed with the thought that we have been depending on Germany for dyes. When we try to get Paris green to kill potato bugs, we find we have been depending on some one across the sea, and so on. Thus by incidental and trivial things, perhaps, we are impressed with the fact that we are not a nation independent and isolated, but are part and parcel of one common family. We cannot escape the consequences of war. It is borne in on us in a more tragic manner when our people are slaughtered on steamships.

CURRENT EVENTS

INTERESTING SUIT ENDS.—After a prolonged legal battle, in which numerous witnesses from all parts of the country took part, the Chattanooga Medical Company, manufacturers of Wine of Cardui and other patent medicines, was awarded damages of one cent. The medical company had sued the American Medical Association for slander. This verdict is claimed as a victory by both sides.

RAILROAD WAGE DISPUTE.—The railroads have begun a nation-wide advertising campaign, which it is said, will include advertisements in all daily and weekly newspapers in the United States. This action is taken to give the public their views in the wage dispute which threatens to tie up the entire railway system of the country. In effect it is an appeal to the public in a campaign to submit the question to the interstate commerce commission.

MEXICAN SITUATION.—The various States are sending their quota of the national guard to the Mexican front, to be under General Funston's orders. It is expected that over one hundred thousand men will soon be on the border, ready for border protection or invasion. Various units of the war flotilla are being sent to Mexican waters, with others held in readiness. A complete embargo on arms is now established and it is thought Carranza will be dependent upon his own Government factory, with a capacity of thirty thousand rounds of cartridges a day. On the 30th a note was handed the Mexican ambassador, rejecting the demand that the United States troops be withdrawn, and asserting that if the de facto Government carries out its threat to resist by an appeal to arms the gravest consequences will follow. The note continues:

While this Government would deeply regret such a result, it cannot recede from its settled determination to maintain its national rights and to perform its full duty in preventing further invasions of the territory of the United States and in removing the peril which Americans along the international boundary have borne so long with patience and forbearance.

On the 23d the House indorsed the action of the President by a vote of 332 to 2. There has been a clash between United States and Carranza troops, resulting in the loss of perhaps thirteen, wounding of some and capture of about seventeen Americans. Reports coming from that section are meager and conflicting, since almost the entire American party was destroyed or captured. A considerable number of the larger business houses have agreed to pay enlisting employees for full time and give them their former positions upon their return. From several quarters reports come in that recruiting is very slow. The South American Republics are diligently seeking to prevent further complications by means of arbitration. It is hoped from all quarters that war may be averted, but the situation is very serious.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Germans have advanced somewhat in the region of Verdun, now being within three and one half miles of the much contested city. The seriousness of the fighting at that region continues. Attacks have been made by them in the Champagne region but seemingly with little result. Turkish reports indicate that the Russians in the Armenian territory have met with several serious setbacks. The Italians have not only checked the Austrian drive, but have recently regained several important points. The Russian forces are reported to have taken a city thirty miles to the south of Cznerowitz, indicating a considerable advance in the drive they have been making into Austrian territory for some time. German aid has been given, with the effect of offering successful resistance at some points. The sinking of enemy ships seems to continue with considerable regularity upon the seas. There are indications that the blockade of Greece, being maintained by the allies, will be lifted in the near future.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

REUNION PUBLICITY.—In the Letter Department under the heading "Some results of reunion advertising" will be found some extracts from correspondence that may help you. Perhaps others have done as well or better, but we because we had a well-written report of this case were able to pass it along. The notable feature of the campaign was that they used the means at hand. Rather than waiting till conditions were better, they improved them. Then everyone worked. Due credit was given all, but for lack of space the names are omitted.

MAY BE WORSE.—The late mailing of the Sunday school Quarterlies this quarter may be largely charged to delay in securing the print paper. From various sources we hear of troubles occasioned by the disturbed condition of the paper market. One publication recently came out printed on wall paper. Supply houses promise no relief, even to the forehanded publisher who orders months ahead of his needs. We trust our readers may not be seriously inconvenienced, but they should not be greatly surprised at any sudden development. It is a situation we must make the best of.

SUNDAY SERVICES.—As a result of seven weeks' services in Kansas City, "Billy" Sunday made 20,646 converts to his presentation of Christ's teachings. There can be no doubt that this remarkable man does much to change the lives of men, but we wonder how many of his converts, when they look for a plan in the churches of the world to give them a real anchor to the soul, find it. The last collection of the series went to Mr. Sunday himself and amounted to $32,000—almost $5,000 a week. Try to imagine Paul, living in his own hired house, supporting himself, being handed that sum!

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS IN GERMANY.—In a letter to the secretary of the General Sunday School Association received some time ago from Alexander Kippe of Halle a., Saale, Germany, the following is extracted. In spite of the fact that they are unable to maintain branches and church services, they find it practicable to continue their Sunday schools and thus reach many with the gospel, showing the universal value of auxiliary work:

We now have five Sunday schools, namely: At Hannover City where the work is in very good condition, a new school at Einbeck, one at Braunschweig (Brunswick), one at Raeschen, and one at Mangschutz. So far as I know one new Sunday school is going to be established at Basle, German-Switzerland, by Elder Frederick Roos (formerly at Jerusalem) and his wife, but I don't know how far matters have succeeded till this time. Prospects are good owing to the energy of Brother Roos. So in spite of the war, Sunday school work is on the progressive line in Germany. The Sunday schools at Einbeck and Raeschen are new ones, (in the latter place for grown-up people). War has killed till now, three good male members in the German field.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.—The indorsement of woman suffrage by the Democratic convention makes it practically unanimous. Socialists, Prohibitionists, Progressives and Republicans had already indorsed it. When the question comes up in any State legislature hereafter, no member elected on any of these tickets can oppose or obstruct passage of a suffrage bill without repudiation of his party's national platform. One of two results must follow. Either suffrage bills will pass and unconstitutional amendments be submitted at the next session of the legislature in every State that needs such action, or the public will have an opportunity to learn in which party there is the largest percentage of pledge breakers.—The Public.

YOUR HELP APPRECIATED.—A number of our friends have been sending us clippings and publications likely to be of interest to the readers of the HERALD. We take this occasion to thank them. We hope the custom will continue and others find it convenient to do likewise. While we may not always make special use of these, they are all noted and some found valuable. When it is not convenient to clip or send in publications some have sent us occasional cards telling us where an especially good article on a certain subject might be found. In sending clippings be careful to give name and date of publication and whether copyrighted or not.

It is true that we are reaping a golden harvest in the sale of our wheat and munitions of war, but it is a question if we will not finally lose more than we make from this, because one nation cannot live in peace and happiness and ease and prosperity, while the whole world agonizes, and the chances are that we will be drawn into it, and suffer in one way or another. If in no other way, it seems we will be compelled to build a great and expensive navy, and maintain an expensive army. Not because we want to, but because we have to, or think we have to. Great oceans roll between us and other nations, but we are not, neither can we be independent of them.

God has made of one blood all nations of the earth, and their interests are more or less in common. Whenever we truly appreciate that fact, there will be a different condition prevailing in the world.

OUR COMMON HERITAGE

The same thought will apply largely to individuals. We are all more or less alike, all of one blood. In the very best of men we discover some of the very worst of qualities. In the very worst of men we find some of the very best of qualities. The difference is that the good man has cultivated his good qualities, and the bad man his bad qualities. But the fact is that they are brothers. The man in the pulpit and the man in the slum have a great deal in common.

All men are either potential angels, or potential devils, as the case may be, and they sink to hell or climb to heaven as they may see fit to do. They spring from one source, and they have a great deal in common, most certainly.

We have common wants, we all experience love and hate and fear and reverence all the great fundamental passions and emotions that stir the heart of humanity. They are the same the world over, and in all nations. Mary Jane has the same emotions that stirred Cleopatra. John Brown has the same passions that Mark Antony had.

And finally when we have finished the course of this life, we must all come under the edict of death, we must all go down into the grave, and suffer the final culmination of that great statement, "As in Adam all die." It is the fate of all men to die once. Even the great men of the earth cannot escape. All men are of one blood.

Hamlet soliloquizing over the empty skull said,

Imperious Cæsar, dead and turned to clay,
Might stop a hole to keep the wind away.

LIVING ONCE, JESUS KNOWS ALL LIVES

Kings are no greater when it comes to that than the common man, but all must suffer the same things, because all have a common parentage. Even Jesus Christ, we are reminded, when he came here suffered the same vicissitudes of life, and we are told that he was subject to the same temptations that we are subject to, so that having lived the life of one man he could sympathize and comprehend with all men. And we, if half as wise as he, having been once alive might understand and sympathize with all who live.

But the trouble is that we set ourselves upon a pinnacle and think that we are different from everyone else, that no one else is just like we are: they have not our virtues, we have not their faults. That is where we deceive ourselves. If we would remember that we are created, all of one blood, we would understand ourselves and others better. But Jesus came with this idea in mind and presented it to us, that we might not only understand God, but that we might understand men as well.

GOD HAS NO FAVORITES

As a result of all this we are led to the idea that God has no favored people. That is, he has no favorites. It is true that he called Abraham a long time ago and said that he would be the father of the chosen people. Why? Abraham was told, "In thee and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." God was thinking of the other nations, all nations, all the time, and simply chose Abraham as a vehicle by which to convey blessing to all the nations of the earth.

The Jews from this, later in their history, thought that they were the chosen people of God, to the exclusion of others, but Paul knew better. Peter was narrower in his conception, less cosmopolitan, and had the old Jewish idea, and when Cornelius, evidently a Roman, wanted to receive the message of life, it was necessary for God to show Peter a vision before he would be willing to take him the message. And so Peter when asleep on the housetop, saw a great sheet let down from heaven, containing all manner of beasts, and a voice told him to arise and slay and eat, Peter said he had never eaten of anything common or unclean. The voice said, "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common." Peter drawing his conclusions from it, came to understand that God wanted to bless all nations of the earth and make them clean. So he said, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." (Acts 10: 34, 35.)

ALL ONE AGAIN, IN JESUS

In that great day that is to come, all superficial differences will be obliterated. Under gospel rule we are told, "There is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all." Or in other words, when the gospel of Jesus Christ rules over all, there will be neither German, nor English, nor French, nor Serbian, nor Belgian, nor Italian, nor American, but all will be one.

That may seem almost incomprehensible, but we see every day a gradual fulfillment of the prophecies contained in the word of God, in the titanic struggle that is going on at the present time, and this is one of the prophecies that God has left on record, that is just as sure to be fulfilled in course of time.

Revelation 11:15 says, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever."

In the gospel then we will find that which will break down these differences, and bring together these nations that are fundamentally all one blood.

AN UNCHANGEABLE GOSPEL

In this idea of one God over all, and under him one common humanity, we find one of the strongest arguments for our contention that the gospel of Jesus Christ is unchangeable. One God, the creator of all, could devise a gospel that would meet the needs of all people in view of the fact that they are all of one blood, and their needs the same.

Humanity is the same everywhere, and in all ages, hence God could devise a gospel that would meet the needs of every man in every age, and that is precisely what he did; hence as Latter Day Saints we argue that the gospel is unchangeable; that it is the same in all ages, and in all lands.

It does not need revision or change, or improvement, neither can it be improved, neither should it be changed, but should be preached in its purity in every age, and in every land, precisely as the Lord intended it when he said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

A professor of ethics, in lecturing before his class, drew on the blackboard the chalk picture of a man. Lines radiated from it on either side, each line labeled to designate some quality of human character. One of the students, noticing that the professor had not drawn the lines of the head together, asked the explanation of the defect. It was not a defect. The professor stated that the top of the head was left open to teach that until God came down into a man's life the whole character was incomplete. Keep the top piece off and let God in. Keep open toward the Infinite. Throw up the windows of the soul and let that presence which impinges upon your being, like the breath of the morning, into the prison house, where now brood the germs of spiritual decrepitude, and your life will become radiant with the glories of heaven.—Reverend F. I. Hanscom.

OTHER GOSPEL PRINCIPLES

(Sermon preached by H. O. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, January 28, 1916.)

My text to-night will be found in the first chapter of Romans, and I presume it is a very familiar text to all of you:

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith. (Verses 16, 17.)

In this day of criticism and examination of creeds and doctrines, and the crucible through which the gospel of Jesus Christ is passing because of the higher criticism, it is quite a thing for us to make the statement that Paul makes here, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ."

I believe that it is a misconception of the gospel and its principles and privileges that has brought that gospel into disrepute with some. I believe that our gospel should appeal to the reasoning faculties of every man and woman, and unless we can give a reason for our hope, we cannot hope to reach those who are wont to examine into that which they may accept, or be solicited to accept.

INTELLECTUAL RELIGION DEMANDED

I believe that that is one of the reasons why there is not more stability among the believers in Jesus Christ. The world has leaned too much to the side of a sensational religion, and not enough to that side of religion that appeals directly to the intellect of man.

In presenting religion from a sensational standpoint we appeal directly to those who are susceptible to sensation, and to be worked upon through their desire for sensation and excitement, and we leave out the cool, calculating individual that makes enterprises stable and lasting.

And hence to-night we wish to present the gospel of Jesus Christ in that aspect that should appeal directly to the reasoning faculties of every individual who may hear and consider. And we are not going to present, as was said in one of our former discourses, what may be termed the first principles of the gospel of Christ, but we desire to present that which Jesus Christ denominated the weightier matters of the law: judgments, mercy, and faith; and endeavor to present the gospel of Jesus Christ in a way that will appeal to every thinking individual.

"LOVE THY NEIGHBOR"

The first principle that we desire to call your especial attention to to-night, you will find in the fifth chapter of Saint Matthew, recorded in the forty-third and forty-fourth verses. It is the Master speaking, and he says:

Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you.

It is natural for you and me, perhaps, even when we let our carnal natures dominate us, to love our neighbor and to hate our enemies, and especially can we love our neighbor if we accept the definition of our neighbor that Jesus gave upon one occasion.

When he was asked the question, "who is my neighbor?" he related the wonderful parable of the man who fell among the thieves, and was passed by upon one side and left in his misery by the priest, and upon the other side by the Levite, but was succored by the despised Samaritan. Jesus Christ answered the question that the man who was kind to us, the man who was ready to succor us in our hours of need, was worthy of the title of neighbor. It is not very difficult for us to love an individual who is ready to succor us in our hours of need, to supply our every want, ready to relieve us of any distress, but Jesus said, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." He desired to change it all, and set before us a higher mark of that which he desires at our hands.

"So I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you," was the mandate of the Master.

ASKING WHY

I do not believe in the blind acceptance of the commandments of Christ. I believe that it is proper for me to ask "why," and I do not believe that God condemns me for asking why. When he approaches me with any statement in regard to what my attitude should be, I believe that when I honestly ask why, that God rejoices in my inquiry, and is ready to answer under all circumstances and conditions. For the man who asks why and receives a reason for his why, is a man who can serve God most intelligently, and I believe that God delights in intelligent service.

We find him commending the disciples on one occasion, by inference at least. I think you will find it in Matthew 13: 51, 52, where he says: "Have ye understood all these things?" (That was after he had given to them some of his parables; the parable of the sower, the parable of the pearl of great price, the parable of the net that was cast into the sea, the parable of the hidden treasure, and so on), and following this discourse he said to them, "Have ye understood all these things?" He wanted them to understand. They said unto him, "Yea, Lord." Then said he unto them, "Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven, is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old."

Every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven, (note that) is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old.

Christ here, by inference at least, invited us to understand, and commended the apostles when they answered that they understood the things that he had been teaching them.

So I do not believe that God is offended when I ask why, but he responds to the call of every honest heart who seeks a reason why he demands certain things at our hands. Hence we have a right to ask the question, "Why, Lord, do you demand that we love our enemies," and the answer is, "Because love benefits, and hate injures." That is the answer.

EVILS OF ANGER

We heard last night in the discourse that we could not hold enmity without hindering our spiritual growth, and just a day or two ago I read in one of the papers a short article in regard to the effect of anger upon the human system, and this individual, a doctor by the way, said that we could not give way to the passion of anger without affecting our physical being, paralyzing our digestive organs; and he said that a man who after a fit of anger partook of a meal need not be surprised if he had immediately a case of acute indigestion. He gave as one instance a woman who was addicted to fits of anger, and that all along the early part of her life she boasted that she had never seen a sick day. But when she should have been in the prime of her life, she was stricken with apoplexy and died, when she should have been in the fullness of vigorous womanhood. The doctor said she had undermined her physical constitution by giving way to these fits of anger from time to time, and shortened her life.

He said that no individual in his right senses, unless under the greatest distress, would think of shortening his life, and yet he insisted that every individual who gave way to the passion of anger was shortening his life.

"LOVE YOUR ENEMIES"

So we can see the reason why Christ should make the statement to you and to me, "I say unto you, Love your enemies." For love benefits, and hate endangers not only our spiritual growth, but hinders our physical growth as well.

Mr. Ingersoll makes the statement that he believes, (and mark you this is about the only criticism I ever heard Mr. Ingersoll make in regard to the gospel of Jesus Christ; he criticized man's conception of that gospel, but not many times did he criticize the real statements that the Master made,) and the only criticism that he makes is simply that those precepts laid down by the Master were so high and exalted in their ethical worth that men were not so constituted that they could reach them. But they are to the credit of the Master and his wisdom in laying down the principles of his gospel, placing the aim high enough so that there would be no possible chance of failure so far as the spiritual or moral growth is concerned, if we attain them.

But I believe that Mr. Ingersoll was mistaken. I believe that men may attain to them. I believe that men can love their enemies. We have some examples. Perhaps the greatest example was the example of the Master, when dying one of the cruelest deaths that it is possible for man to inflict upon man, and hanging upon the cross in agony, he cried out, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

We have another example in Stephen, when he kneeled before his Lord, and while the stones hurled by cruel persecution were beating out his life, cried unto his Father, "Lay not this sin to their charge."

So I believe it is possible under the influence of this gospel of Jesus Christ, to attain to that condition that Jesus Christ desires us to attain to, and has recommended to us, where he says, "But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you."

"THE BIBLE AS GOOD READING"

Several years ago I read an article in the Saturday Evening Post from the pen of Senator Beveridge, of Indiana. That article has now been published in book form, and may be obtained for a very small sum, and is entitled, The Bible as Good Reading. One peculiar characteristic pointed out by this man, and he is not the first one to discover it, it was discovered years ago, is the fact that the Bible could tell so much in so few words. And you will find throughout the Bible the peculiar characteristic, that so much can be conveyed in just a few words.

Mr. Beveridge calls attention to the stories of Joseph and David, and he said with all his command of the English language he could not tell the simple stories of Joseph and David in as few words as the story is told in the Bible, and he defied any man, no matter how great his command of the English language might be, to present that much in so little space.

And so I find in every saying of the Master that same characteristic, and here we have in just one word, or just one verse something that would absolutely transform this world if it could be put into practice, "Love your enemies."

Were men to practice that word the world would cease contention and strife. The great bond that should bind men together in brotherhood would be welded strong, and to-day all enmity would cease between man and man, and between beast and beast, and that wonderful condition foreseen by Isaiah so many centuries ago would be ushered in, when he declares in the eleventh chapter of his prophecy:

The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

You, and I to-day would witness the fulfillment of that wonderful vision if mankind would simply put into practice the principles that are contained in this simple verse, this simple statement made by the Master:

Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; all this that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust.

I have such faith in my fellow men that I believe it is natural for men to do this. "Do good unto those that hate us," and doing good to an individual will almost invariably beget love for that individual.

THE SPARK OF DIVINITY

I read a story some years ago, I do not know how true it is, but I believe in the principle presented. Two men had become enemies. They happened to follow the same vocation: hunting. They had sworn to shoot each other upon sight, and had sent warnings to that effect. One day after they had made these oaths it chanced that they were upon the same mountain hunting. One of them looking down the mountain side saw his enemy beneath him, and remembering his oath, made ready to execute his threat, but just as he was about to fire upon his enemy he noticed off to one side, a mountain lion ready to spring upon him. He dropped his gun and concluded that he would let the lion wreak his vengeance. But there is a spark of divinity in the heart of every man. There is a spark of Godlike compassion in the heart of every human being, and it sprang to life instantly when he saw even his worst enemy in danger, and turning his gun he fired at the lion just as it sprang, and the beast crashed at the feet of his enemy, powerless to do him injury. And with the firing of that gun every spark of enmity faded from the heart of the man who had rescued his enemy from death.

And as the enemy looked up the mountain side, and perceived whom he had to thank for his rescue, every spark of enmity died from his heart, and they met and clasped hands and became lasting friends.

What was this that existed in the heart of this man? It was God in him—divinity. The spark of divinity rests in the breast of every man, and makes him loath to take even the life of his enemies, only in self-defense, and even then it is difficult for men to defend themselves by the taking of the life of their fellow men. God does not want you to wait until emergencies may demand that that spark be fanned to flame, but he desires that at all times you will let the spirit of the gospel, the Spirit of Jesus Christ, the spirit of peace and love be found in your heart, ready to spring up and do good to your fellow men, no matter what they may have done to you. Do unto them as you would have them do unto you.

That is the essence of the gospel of Jesus Christ as contained in the statement, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good unto them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." And the following out of that precept would indeed make us the children of God, and that condition of which I spoke or read rather the other night, would be found among the followers of Christ, and the nations of the world would be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ, if you just simply let the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ dwell in your hearts and become living realities.

"BETWEEN THEE AND HIM ALONE"

I want to call your attention to another thought. I have not time to dwell upon this particular thought longer, but you can make deductions from it which if you will put them into practice in your daily life, I can promise you that your life will be such a life as God would approve.

Turning to Matthew 18: 15, you will find: "Moreover if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother."

How many of us practice this? Yet we boast that we are members of the church of God, we boast that we have obeyed the gospel; but how many of us practice it? That is the point we want to get at.

These weightier matters of the law, for they are weighty matters, if they were obeyed and developed by man would bring about that result that God wants to bring.

"Go and tell him his faults between thee and him alone." Most of us reverse that process. We tell everybody else before we tell the brother. If we find some fault in a brother, we point out that fault to some other individual, and sometimes it comes round that what we have told is so distorted in the telling that when it comes back to us again, we do not recognize it, and we deny that we ever said anything of the kind if the brother confronts us with it.

THE GAME OF GOSSIP

I had a little amusing experience along this line one time. I was occupying a distant mission, and before I departed from that mission, the Saints gathered together to give me a kind of farewell party. During the evening's entertainment some one suggested that we play the game of gossip. The game of gossip is played by making a class of ten or a dozen or more, and somebody at the head of the class whispers into his neighbor's ear some message. This neighbor is to whisper it just as he or she understands it, without stopping to ask for an explanation or a repetition of the statement. This one whispers it to the next, and so on down to the foot of the class, and then the head and foot compare notes, and see how much alike the message is that finally reaches the foot that began at the head.

Some people like to hear me sing, and I had some time before sung into a phonograph so that even though absent, those who cared to hear me sing could hear my voice reproduced by the instrument.

So the sister who was at the head of the class I have just been telling about, made the statement to her next-door neighbor, "If you want to hear Brother Smith sing, go down to Pleasant Grove," and when the message reached the foot of the class and the foot and head compared notes, all that remained of the original message was my name, the rest was entirely changed. Not a single word in that message had reached the foot of the class that was in the beginning, except my name. That was all. The message was changed. Its import was changed. Everything connected with it was changed. Nobody would have recognized it, and had that individual made the statement that the first individual had said such and such a thing in regard to me, she would have been indignant to think that such a thing could possibly be attributed to her.

And so we find it in the true game of gossip that goes round the neighborhood and disturbs and destroys and overthrows the good that the gospel of Jesus Christ might otherwise do.

"If thy brother or sister trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone."

CORRECTING MISUNDERSTANDING

Nearly all the difficulties that arise in this world come from misunderstandings. To go to an individual who may have offended will often smooth away this misunderstanding, and the result will be reconciliation, and no further trouble. No individual perhaps except the two involved, will ever know that enmity had ever existed, or that trouble had ever threatened, and all difficulties may be settled and smoothed out of the way and these brethren may go forth hand in hand as friends, and as the best of friends.

I heard of one individual, I do not know how true it is, a member of this church who has passed on to his reward, who had been elected to the office of justice of the peace, and who concluded to apply this principle of the gospel of Christ to the settlement of difficulties that might arise in his neighborhood or come under his jurisdiction. If any came to him with a complaint against a neighbor he simply said, "Let us get together and talk it over," and if he could persuade these two neighbors to meet in his office and talk the matter over they would go out reconciled ninety-nine times out of one hundred. If he could not get them to talk the matter over voluntarily, he would work a little strategy on them and would make an appointment with those two men in his office at the same hour, and they would meet there before him, and when he got them together he could usually persuade them to talk it over.

What a wonderful lot of trouble we might avoid in this world if we could just talk things over as man to man, as Christian to Christian. What a wonderful lot of misunderstandings might be averted and men might be united, whereas they are now divided, just by the application of the simple principle that Jesus Christ lays down here in this one verse.

PRINCIPLE OF ARBITRATION

But he continues: "But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established."

What is that? It is the principle of arbitration. It is a principle that has been recognized as a power in the world to-day. Perhaps it has been long coming in the minds of men, but it ought not to have been. If they had listened to this matchless man, this man who spoke as never man spoke, if they had listened to his message long, long ago, the principle of arbitration would have been acknowledged; and if nation takes offense at nation, they might get together and talk it over, and if their talking it over did not settle the dispute, then they could have called in one or two more.

I believe that the United States has entered into treaties with twenty-nine or thirty different nations, and these treaties embody the statement made here in this record, for "If he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more." That is the gospel of Jesus Christ, and men recognize it as the most powerful influence for good that has ever been inaugurated in the settlement of disputes between man and man, between master and servant, between nation and nation—the simple principle of arbitration, and as men see it more and more they come into a knowledge and consciousness of the fact that Jesus Christ knew best, that the principles laid down for the government of man are the best of all principles that have ever been given to mankind.

Why should I be ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, when the world to-day although it does not believe, is coming directly into harmony with the statements made by this man, acknowledging that these statements are all that they claim to be?

SAVING FROM SIN

The Master came to save this world from sin. That was the message that came from the lips of the angel when he visited the earthly father of Christ. "He shall save his people from their sins." I do not need to enter into an argument here to-night, to prove that this world needs salvation. You can go to the halls of Congress and you can sit there and listen to the speeches made upon the floor, of the Senate or House, and you can hear the bills that are introduced, and every one of them strike at some evil, some national evil, seeking for relief. They are along this line and along that line.

You can go to the hall where men congregate to discuss public questions, and it does not take very long to discover that they are discussing a means for saving this Nation from evil. If it is a Republican orator then in his speech he declares that his platform contains all those things that are necessary for the salvation of this Union. And I presume that the most blatant of all in the advocacy of his principles is the Socialist orator, who claims that through his peculiar doctrines and principles there will be found relief, politically, financially, and socially from all the evils of the world.

This shows that men need salvation, but I say that in these principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ that I have given you to-night, simple and brief though they may be, will be found all that any political platform can offer you toward a solution of the great questions that confront us to-day, and the first and greatest of all perhaps is, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you."

In this great principle laid down by the Master of getting together and talking it over, and if that would not do, of calling in one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established, you will find relief from all the troubles of this life, politically, socially, and in every other way.

"THE LAND OF PROMISE"

This seems to be an opportune time to read up on the extraordinary statements found in the Book of Mormon concerning "the land of promise." In order to bring the matter fully before us, permit me to quote at length. First, we present the statement of Nephi, or, rather, the statement which the Lord made to Nephi:

And inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper, and shall be led to a land of promise; yea, even a land which I have prepared for you; yea, a land which is choice above all other lands.—1 Nephi 1: 54.

Next, we present the teachings of Lehi on this topic, which he so earnestly sought to impress on the minds of his rebellious sons, Laman and Lemuel:

And he also spake unto them concerning the land of promise which they had obtained, how merciful the Lord had been in warning us that we should flee out of the land of Jerusalem. . . . But, said he, notwithstanding our afflictions, we have obtained a land of promise, a land which is choice above all other lands; a land which the Lord God hath covenanted with me should be a land for the inheritance of my seed. Yea, the Lord hath covenanted this land unto me, and to my children forever; and also all those who should be led out of other countries, by the hand of the Lord. Wherefore, I, Lehi, prophesy according to the workings of the Spirit which is in me, that there shall none come into this land, save they shall be brought by the hand of the Lord. Wherefore, this land is consecrated unto him whom he shall bring. And if it so be that they shall serve him according to the commandments which he hath given, it shall be a land of liberty unto them; wherefore, they shall never be brought down into captivity; if so, it shall be because of iniquity: for if iniquity shall abound, cursed shall be the land for their sakes; but unto the righteous, it shall be blessed forever. . . . Wherefore, I, Lehi, have obtained a promise, that inasmuch as those whom the Lord God shall bring out of the land of Jerusalem shall keep his commandments, they shall prosper upon the face of this land; and they shall be kept from all other nations, that they may possess this land unto themselves. And if it so be that they shall keep his commandments, they shall be blessed upon the face of this land, and there shall be none to molest them, nor to take away the land of their inheritance; and they shall dwell safely forever. But behold, when the time cometh that they shall dwindle in unbelief, after they have received so great blessings from the hand of the Lord; having a knowledge of the creation of the earth, and all men, knowing the great and marvelous works of the Lord from the creation of the world; having power given them to do all things by faith; having all the commandments from the beginning, and having been brought by his infinite goodness into this precious land of promise: behold, I say, If the day shall come that they will reject the Holy One of Israel, the true Messiah, their Redeemer and their God, behold, the judgments of him that is just, shall rest upon them; yea, he will bring other nations unto them, and he will give unto them power, and he will take away from them the lands of their possessions, and he will cause them to be scattered and smitten. Yea, as one generation passeth to another, there shall be bloodshed and great visitations among them; wherefore, my sons, I would that ye would remember; yea, I would that ye would hearken unto my words.—2 Nephi 1: 3-26.

Our next quotation comes from Jacob, the brother of Nephi:

And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles: and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles. And I will fortify this land against all other nations; and he that fighteth against Zion, shall perish, saith God; for he that raiseth up a king against me, shall perish. For I the Lord, the King of heaven, will be their king; and I will be a light unto them forever, that hear my words.—2 Nephi 7: 18-21.

Next, I quote the testimony of Moroni:

And the Lord would not suffer that they should stop beyond the sea in the wilderness, but he would that they should come forth even unto the land of promise, which was choice above all other lands, which the Lord God had preserved for a righteous people; and he had sworn in his wrath unto the brother of Jared, that whoso should possess this land of promise, from that time henceforth and forever, should serve him, the true and only God, or they should be swept off when the fullness of his wrath should come upon them. And now we can behold the decrees of God concerning this land, that it is a land of promise, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall serve God, or they shall be swept off when the fullness of his wrath shall come upon them. And the fullness of his wrath cometh upon them when they are ripened in iniquity; for behold, this is a land which is choice above all other lands; wherefore he that doth possess it shall serve God, or shall be swept off; for it is the everlasting decree of God. And it is not until the fullness of iniquity among the children of the land, that they are swept off. And this cometh unto you, O ye Gentiles, that ye may know the decrees of God, that ye may repent, and not continue in your iniquities until the fullness come, that ye may not bring down the fullness of the wrath of God upon you, as the inhabitants of the land have hitherto done. Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ who hath been manifested by the things which we have written.—Ether 1: 29-35.

The above quotations from the "approved edition" of the Book of Mormon, justify us in the belief that God's intention was that this Nation should be very different from the other leading nations of the world, and in very important characteristics.

Let us notice some of the material points contained in the above quotations:

First. This "land of promise" (the land of America), was to be "a land which is choice above all other lands." (All the italics are mine, used for the sake of emphasis.)

Second. This "land of promise" was given to Lehi and his posterity, "for an everlasting inheritance," provided they would love God and keep his commandments; and all others whom God should bring to this land, would become joint heirs to the same covenant and promise, and upon the same conditions.

Third. One of the leading promises is, "It shall be a land of liberty unto them; wherefore, they shall never be brought down into captivity: if so, it shall be because of iniquity. For if iniquity shall abound, cursed shall be the land for their sakes; but unto the righteous, it shall be blessed forever."

Fourth. The binding conditions are: True service to God, "according to the commandments which he hath given"; they must be a righteous people, that is, they must obey God and do right with each other, and all others.

These conditions, it will be noticed, have a national as well as an individual application: "Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ," etc.

In this connection the reader's attention is called to the faith and prayers of Christ's disciples, who lived upon "the land of promise" and furnished us with an authentic history of ancient America. The information to which I refer is contained in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 3, paragraph 11, and part of paragraph 12, which read as follows:

Now this is not all, their faith in their prayers was, that this gospel should be made known also, if it were possible that other nations should possess this land; and thus they did leave a blessing upon this land in their prayers, that whosoever should believe in this gospel, in this land, might have eternal life; yea, that it might be free unto all of whatsoever nation, kindred, tongue, or people, they may be. And now, behold, according to their faith in their prayers, will I bring this part of my gospel to the knowledge of my people.

It may be easily seen that all these statements and promises concerning "the land of promise," and claiming to be of divine origin (though some of them contain much more than others,) are completely harmonious. This appears the more remarkable and confirming, when we consider that the first testimony was furnished by Nephi, about six hundred years before Christ, while the last, so far as the Book of Mormon is concerned, was furnished by Moroni about four hundred years after Christ; thus a space of about one thousand years intervened between the first and the last testimony.

The quotation from the Doctrine and Covenants is taken from a revelation given in July, 1828, at which time only a part of the Book of Mormon had been translated, and nothing could have been known of the lengthy and important testimony of Moroni, taken from the Book of Ether.

Is it too much, or a far-fetched inference, to believe that the nation that has come into possession of "the land of promise," and the church of God which has been established in her midst, will receive ample protection, and never lose their promised inheritances, so long as they strictly observe the conditions referred to above? On the other hand, should they fail to observe them, and put their trust in large armies and navies, that is, so far as the Nation is concerned; and the church should seek to substitute for these conditions more popular teaching by the ministry, a better educated ministry, a more complete compliance with the ways of the world, including a cleverly arranged compromise between the restored church and other church, both Catholic and Protestant, what would be the result?

Suppose this Nation strictly attends to her own work, as having been appointed to be a leader and savior among other nations, treating all other nations justly and magnanimously, will there still remain the danger of her being invaded and "brought down into captivity"?

What, if anything, will the church lose by an intelligent and sincere observance of these conditions, treating all other churches and all other people, justly and magnanimously, readily conceding that they teach truth in a fragmentary way, and that because of sincerity, by the membership in general, they are more or less blessed of God? And what will she lose by making the plainly expressed conditions her chief means of protection and universal success? Is there any possible substitute that will secure to the church the desired results? Let all true Latter Day Saints answer these questions.

For all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword.—Jesus.

My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, etc.—Jesus.

Of General Interest

THE CASE AGAINST THE "PEYOTE"

For some time now the Indian Bureau has been alive to the danger that lurks in the little cactus known to botanists as Anahalonium Lewinii. It is the root of this plant that the Indians of the Southwest and Mexico have used as a narcotic drug in menacing quantity. In a recent article in the Survey Gertrude Seymour has carefully discussed the distribution of this noxious cactus and its effects upon those who have the "peyote" habit. Peyote is the Indian name for this cactus. Miss Seymour writes:

In Mexico peyote has been of commercial and medicinal importance since long before the Spaniards came, and was included in the Mexican Pharmacopœia till 1842. It is now used ceremonially and medicinally among practically all the tribes between the Rio Grande and the Pacific, and up to the Dakotas and even to Wisconsin—Sioux, Cheyenne, Arapahoe, Kiowa, Comanche, Osage, Omaha, Kickapoo, Winnebago, and others. As one writer expressed it, "peyote has become their religion and hearth side, their physician and their corner drug store—the preserver of their life." And this is literally true. This cactus they use in an extraordinary variety of cases as medicine; it has become the center of a religious cult for which its worshipers have earnestly fought and are still fighting; it is an article of some importance in commerce.

The Indians who have acquired an almost fanatic regard for this dangerous drug have had to face the opposition of all those who have studied its effects upon its users. Legislators and officials in the Indian Department, doctors, matrons, superintendents, teachers, missionaries, and scientific experts have all condemned peyote. Concerning the power of the Government to control the use of this drug Miss Seymour writes:

For years the only statute upon which the Indian Office could depend was the law of 1897 concerning the sale of intoxicants among Indians. . . . A definite gain was made in 1915, when the Department of Agriculture secured the inclusion of peyote under the food and drug law. . . . Those who are nearest to Indian interest believe that an amendment to the Harrison narcotic law would do the work. . . . Such an amendment is now before Congress under the Thompson bill, which adds peyote to the list of drugs brought within the Harrison law. . . . A second bill, yet more drastic, has been introduced in the House by Congressman Gandy, of South Dakota. Congressman Gandy has seen with his own eyes the effects of peyote among the Indians of his own State and elsewhere; and in unmistakable terms his bill aims to "prohibit the traffic of peyote."

Miss Seymour sees in the peyote problem something more difficult to solve than the mere question of its prohibition. She quotes a distinguished anthropologist as saying:

You must see this thing in its proper background. It is a psychological condition, this peyote worship, like several other similar institutions of recent revival among the Indians. The real trouble is the deadly vacuity of their lives.

And here is her own conclusion:

The deep religious and idealistic nature of the Indian, his poetic impulse and æsthetic appreciation, cannot be satisfied with negations, cannot perhaps be industrialized, cannot find complete satisfaction in schools and manual training or instruction in agriculture. The wider education that shall provide for philosophy and æsthetic culture, as well as a religion—this, and not less, is involved in the problem of peyote.

This testimony as to the idealistic and imaginative quality of the Indian mind is common among those who have observed the Indian at close hand. It is even alleged that some Indians, for the sake of retaining their use of this drug, may be willing to give up valuable property rights which white men covet. Surely it is a sad commentary upon the white man's civilization that, while destroying the native beliefs of the Indian, the white man had no better substitute to offer than the drugged vision of those who have succumbed to the lure of peyote.—The Outlook, May 24, 1916.

BOOKER WASHINGTON'S SUCCESSOR

The installation of Major Robert R. Moton as principal of the Tuskegee Institute, for which a distinguished company gathered from all parts of the country assembled on Thursday of last week, naturally renews the moral and historical bond between Hampton Institute and Tuskegee, the first the forerunner and, in a sense, parent of the second, for it was Hampton that made Booker Washington what he was, and it is now Hampton again that supplies his fit successor. As The Outlook has already said, the new principal of Tuskegee is a full-blooded negro; his ancestry goes back to an African slave brought to this country in 1735. It was a fortunate day for Hampton, and for Tuskegee also, when as a young man Major Moton came directly under the influence of General Armstrong, of Hampton, was taught by him, was urged by him to remain at Hampton as a teacher, and thus was put into the line of opportunity and development which now has made him the head of Tuskegee.

Major Moton fitly chose as the title of his inaugural address the words "Cooperation and Consecration." Largely the address is a tribute to the effectiveness with which Booker Washington worked for the elevation of his race in cooperation with the white people of the South, the white people of the North, and the race itself. It is significant that Doctor Washington's first welcome and appreciation at Tuskegee came from Mr. George W. Campbell, a former slave owner. From the very beginning scores of other white people of Alabama saw the helpfulness of Doctor Washington's purpose and knew that he was trying to solve the problem described by Major Moton as being "whether there could be developed within the negro race any forceful, unemotional, businesslike, harmonious working together." Booker Washington bent his effort to this end patiently and intelligently, and this made the Tuskegee of to-day a possibility. Major Moton pledges himself to carry on with all his power and ability this spirit of cooperation "between the colored workers in the school and white citizen outside of the school, and of consecration for the relief of mankind everywhere, whether in Macon County, the State of Alabama, or in the Nation."

The spirit of Doctor Moton's inaugural is hopeful, but he has too much of common sense to speak in superlatives or to fail to recognize difficulties. Thus he says that, while there is encouragement in the fact that seventy per cent of the negro population can now read and write, "it is not safe to assume that seventy per cent of the negroes are really educated." He recognizes specifically that "shiftlessness, disease, inefficiency, and crime are entirely too prevalent among our people." "Color and conduct," he declares, "still count in this question, but let us remember that conduct counts more than color."

Major Moton refers with feeling to Doctor Washington's last words on the platform at Tuskegee, when he urged the value and importance of "team work" in every phase of the endeavor of the institution, and he closes by describing the spirit of Booker Washington and the spirit of Tuskegee as the spirit of self-forgetfulness, of service and sacrifice, of cooperation and consecration.—The Outlook, May 31, 1916.

BUILDING A SHIP A DAY

United States yards are building a new ship every day. It is a record never before equaled in our country and is the sequel to our stupendous exports at a time when world commerce is upset by a world war.

There are now building or under construction 368 steel vessels, the aggregate of whose tonnage exceeds 1,129,000. Ships bearing the Stars and Stripes have more than doubled since the war began, and the increase is still going on at high tide. Prior to August, 1914, less than a tenth of America's foreign commerce was carried in American ships; but at the present rate of building new ones the period following the end of the war will see a totally different story.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The changes that have come about in the lives of the women of our country in the last half century, are not more clearly demonstrated, perhaps, than in the prevalence of clubs, societies and other organizations of many kinds, devoted to their entertainment, culture, or general interest. The day when the wife and mother found her whole existence within the four walls of her home, seems to be rapidly passing away, and every community is alive with the activities of women banded together for recreation, study, or uplift.

This is significant when one considers how recently the colleges of education and the avenues of industry have been opened for women, and speaks in no uncertain voice of the conviction which has come to them, that they must needs prepare themselves to take their places, side by side with men in the battle of life. Woman is no longer the mere idol of man, she is helpmate, as well, as many instances of the day may clearly show; she is not chattel, but joint proprietor in the combined interests of husband and wife; she is no longer a dependent liability in the property of the partnership, but a self-reliant asset. At least we are convinced that all this is her prerogative, if not already her demonstrated position; her potentiality, if not her present accomplishment.

The pendulum is apt to swing too far, however, and we must admit that some women, in the enthusiasm of their new privileges, have neglected their better interests, and carried their wider activities to such an extent that home and family have both suffered in consequence. All must concede this fact; and we, as women of the church, should strive to make our service in both lines a "reasonable" one—not neglecting either our homes, or the opportunity to reach out a helping and stimulating hand to others. "This ought ye to have done and not leave the other undone."

In our identification with clubs, and societies, and study circles, let us carefully weigh the conditions under which we find ourselves, and determine just how much time we would feel justified in using for interests outside our homes, and then let us carefully choose those activities which will make us of the greatest service, whether it shall be in study and preparation or in the perhaps more vital efforts to put into practical use and application those principles which shall build up materially. Would it be wise to study about the danger to the youth of our country that may lie in the sensational moving picture, for instance, and then content ourselves with the mere fact of knowing that the danger exists? Nay: "Arouse, arouse, why idly stand? Why sit at ease with folded hands?" when we know that there is a way to censor these pictures which impress so vividly the plastic young minds about us. Combine for good; a body of determined parents in a village can have things as they wish! It is they, and they alone who are to blame if conditions continue which are a disgrace or a menace to their children.

It is of these organizations for active work—these that seek to accomplish something, that Sister Briggs, the able superintendent of our Home Department, wishes to tell us. She is in touch with many things which will prove to be valuable aids to us, in suggesting things that we may do—things that have been done successfully by other women, to better the conditions of their homes. Sometimes all a woman needs, is to have the path pointed out; she has long been eager to explore, to tackle problems, and to conquer! Write to Sister Briggs, and see if there are some activities you may be able to take up with profit to yourselves and to your neighborhood, for none of us stand unto ourselves, or live for ourselves alone. That which elevates one home, will elevate those about it.

From the Home Department Superintendent

WOMEN'S CLUBS AND CIRCLES

This department is in the interest of all women, not mothers only, but including all classes of women. The activities are those that affect the welfare of the home, and give rest, outing, recreation or improvement to the women of the neighborhood.

It is desired to interest the women to study each her own neighborhood, as to the kind of activity most fitted to its particular needs. It may be just rest and contact with other women and relief from humdrum that some need. Then the purely social club, or recreational club, such as walking, tennis, or croquet might be very desirable. It may be the women have more leisure than they are spending profitably, and if so then there should be organized the clubs for betterment movements and improvement purposes, such as milk inspection, screening of provisions and general sanitation at the neighborhood grocery, beautifying of yards, censorship of picture shows, etc.

Anything the women could do to afford themselves and families legitimate and wholesome amusement would be helpful. Some member of the group might have a victrola or autopiano and could open her home frequently for programs, and thus make it a source of pleasure to the whole neighborhood.

The field of this department is broad; it includes the putting into application the ideas and theories gained from study in many other departments, anything that the women can actually do toward improving the home and the neighborhood. Any clubs already formed in any of the branches of the church with these objects in view should enroll themselves under this department, and thus pass on their own ideas, and receive any inspiration the general auxiliary has to give.

MRS. GEORGE N. BRIGGS.

The Year Book

The Year Book has been approved by the executive committee of the Woman's Auxiliary, and is now in the hands of the publishers.

The price will be twenty cents a copy, postpaid.

It was decided to include the new constitution and by-laws in this Year Book, as is customary with other women's organizations. The book also contains an outline of the department activities with suggestions as to recreation, work and study in the interest of each department. Information that will be constantly sought by workers in the auxiliary will also be found, and interesting features which have not previously been in print by the auxiliary organization.

The Year Book will be published and distributed by the Herald Office; hence all orders should be sent directly to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

We recommend that each member of the auxiliary at once place her order for the Year Book with the Herald Office, and that she will urge other sisters to purchase the book. It was prepared with the hope that every woman in the church would secure a copy and receive the educational advantages which it contains.

As provided for by the constitution and by-laws, the executive committee has selected one of its number, Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, to have general charge of the field work. It has also ratified Sister Etzenhouser's appointment of Sister Walter W. Smith as her assistant, to have charge of the reunion work. Please address requests for literature and suggestion for reunion work to Sister W. W. Smith, Corner, Walnut Street and River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri, her new address.

Sincerely your sister,

MRS. FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President.

Reports to the Late Convention

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT OF THE GENERAL TREASURER

The total receipts for the year 1915 were $1,079.27, and compared with the receipts for the year 1914 show a gain of $136.92.

The per capita tax receipts for the year 1915 were $156.51 and the receipts for 1914 were $84.97, making a gain of $71.54 over last year. Of this amount about $30 has been paid by our new members, the Oriole girls. However, there seems to be a more general response to the annual assessment this year.

The leaflet fund shows a decrease in receipts of $8.47 this last year. We have notified delinquent subscribers according to the order of the general convention of 1914, and in many instances the subscribers have ordered the leaflets discontinued. We have also entered a few new subscriptions. A very careful account of the receipts and expenditures for the leaflet fund has been kept for the last three years, and we have the following to report: Receipts for 1913, $14.59; receipts for 1914, $37.81; receipts for 1915, $29.34; total $81.74.

We do not have the Herald Office account at hand, but for the year 1914 the average cost of the leaflets per month was $4.17, and there has been no decrease in price since that time. The expense of printing the leaflets would, therefore, average as follows: For the year 1913, $50.04; for the year 1914, $50.04; for the year 1915, $50.04; total $150.12.

The cost of mailing the leaflets for the entire three years has been: Stamps, $29.24.

Deficit $97.62. This deficit has been met by the general fund and the general work needed the money. The advance in the subscription price ordered by the general advisory board in October will not be sufficient to meet the expense of printing and mailing the leaflets, therefore we recommend that, if the leaflets are continued, further provision be made to pay for this expense.

The Children's Home fund shows a gain of $61 over that of last year, the receipts for the year 1915 being $743, and for 1914, $682. We are pleased to report this increase but feel sure that it does not properly represent the large amount of money sent in yearly for general church purposes, by the women of the church. We are quite sure that many societies and women who are interested in, and allied with the Woman's Auxiliary have contributed to the various funds of the general church but have done so directly, and not allowed the money to pass through the hands of the general treasurer of the auxiliary. Therefore, by not making our organization the medium through which women of the church have contributed financially to the interests of the general church makes our report incomplete as to the sum total of the financial support given to the church by the women of this organization. For instance, various local organizations of the auxiliary have contributed to the Children's Home or the bishop direct when the auxiliary carries a special fund for this purpose. Other funds have been contributed to, as follows: Graceland College, $15, Sanitarium, $7.50, which we are sure do not represent the contributions made to these institutions by the women of the auxiliary.

We recommend, therefore, that all local organizations, including the various departments, when contributing money to any of the general church interests, or institutions, send such contributions through the treasurer of the auxiliary, with instructions as to how it is to be applied.

The Oriole inventory accompanying our financial report is given to show that the supplies on hand and paid for belonging to the Oriole girls amount to more than twice as much as the loan allowed by the general advisory board. The amount due the general fund from the Oriole girls is $18.65, and they have supplies on hand, the cash value of which is $41.40, which when disposed of will leave a small balance for a working basis. This report shows that this department has more than maintained its own expenses.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER,
General Treasurer.

REPORT OF THE ADVISORY BOARD

Organization. The first meeting of the advisory board, after the general convention in April, 1915, was held on May 29, the resident members of Independence being present, namely: Mrs. B. C. Smith, Mrs. A. L. Yingling and Mrs. J. A. Gardner, Mrs. B. C. Smith was chosen chairman and Mrs. J. A. Gardner, secretary.

At the second meeting, in June, Mrs. S. R. Burgess met with the board on her way to Saint Louis from Lamoni. At her request, Mrs. D. J. Krahl and Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser were asked to meet in consultation with the board at this time. Several questions of importance were taken up for discussion, especially that of reunion work, but plans were not completed at that time owing to Mrs. Burgess being called home on account of the illness of her daughter.

Eugenics Superintendent. In June the resignation of Sister Alice Harrington as Superintendent of the eugenics department was received and accepted. At the request of the advisory board, Sister Jennie Studley consented to take up the work again for the year.

Reunion Programs. A suggestive plan for reunion work was arranged by the board and a copy sent to every president or secretary of reunion committees, with a personal appeal to help the auxiliary worker who should be appointed for their respective reunion, to carry out the plans given in the program. A copy of this program was sent also to the auxiliary worker with a special request to cooperate with the reunion committee in the work outlined. She was also requested to write to the auxiliary president the result of her work.

San Francisco Exposition Pamphlet. In August the board took up the matter of representation at the San Francisco Fair at the suggestion of Sister Burgess. Accordingly a very neat booklet was prepared giving the names and addresses of officers and superintendents with a brief paragraph on the work of each department. Sister J. W. Davis, who was associated with her husband in arranging for the church exhibit, wrote, after receiving the booklets, that they were very satisfactory and complimented the board on the appropriateness and excellence of their representation.

Typewriter. It was thought advisable by the board on account of the amount of work being done by them, and the secretary of the board acting in that office as well as that of general treasurer and general superintendent of the young woman's department, a typewriter should be purchased for her use. After consultation with the president a typewriter was purchased in October, 1915.

Leaflet Fund. The general treasurer reported a large deficit in the leaflet fund, regardless of the fact that a special effort had been made to bring the subscriptions up to date. She showed that though the subscriptions were in fairly good condition, the current price of the leaflets was not sufficient to meet the expense of printing and mailing. The board thought advisable to raise the subscription price to seventy-five cents a year for ten copies a month. In November the general treasurer sent notices to all leaflet subscribers to that effect.

Report Blanks. Upon inquiry it was learned that the report blanks authorized by the convention of 1915 had not been prepared. After considerable delay and correspondence, the board authorized Mrs. Gardner, as secretary of the board, together with Minnie Scott, the former secretary, if her assistance could be obtained, to proceed with the matter of report blanks, arranging for a sufficient number for the reporting this year. According to these instructions, the report blanks were printed and sent to Mrs. Maitland for mailing, with the request that she make a sufficient number of typewritten blanks for the district and field workers.

In August the advisory board took steps to organize a stake association in the Independence Stake. In September, with the cooperation of the local officers of Independence, such organization was effected.

The board held nine regular meetings during the year, besides being in consultation at different times at other meetings.

Good Results in Advertising a Reunion

[The following extracts are from correspondence between Elder Leonard S. Rhodes, of Centralia, Washington, and the assistant editor, who was representing the bureau of publicity in the matter. We have omitted much of the correspondence of the local nature, seeking to give such extracts as may be of help to the Saints in general as they seek to meet situations similar to the ones outlined in the letters. I believe the situation was a typical one, and what this committee has done others might easily do. We earnestly advocate consistent and intelligent publicity regarding the work of our people. There is no occasion whatever for hiding our light under a bushel, but rather should we be as a city that is set upon a hill which may be seen and known by the world about us.]

CENTRALIA, WASHINGTON, March 17, 1915.

Dear Brother: We are planning a series of revival meetings here, to be held some time this spring or summer, and I have decided to ask you for advertising suggestions in accordance with your offer of a short while ago.

We are in a city of about ten thousand people, near the southern part of it, with a local membership of about twenty families. We are expecting to hold a reunion here commencing August 6.

We are going to try to get an evangelist or patriarch to do the preaching for us, and would like to know how much in your opinion we should spend for advertising, and how long before it begins should we begin our advertising? In fact whatever advice and suggestions you can give us. I thought it would be a good idea to send each Saint an invitation card with a cut of the church, evangelist, and presiding elder on it, and nice enough to be worth keeping as a souvenir. Also we might put display cards with the same cuts in windows; also in write-ups in our local newspapers. Could we not use some slogan like "The man with the message," or the like? And what would you advise in regard to large painted signs, handbills, etc?

LEONARD S. RHODES.

Dear Brother Rhodes: I would use the newspapers fully with news items and as many pictures as possible, about a month or not less than two weeks before the beginning of the events. If there are any objections to using the paper, offer to use an advertisement at the usual rates if they will publish some news items for you. But in most cases, they are willing to use any articles written from a news standpoint and glad to get them. Write them as though it were a reporter telling it. The idea is to make it up so they will be glad to put it in as something of their own and still have it tell your story as interestedly as possible. Send marked copies of all these to your own people if they are not on the subscription list.

It pays to constantly advertise, and it is not always labeled "advertising," either. Handbills are quite good in many cases, but not so effective as good posters and newspaper work. A post card campaign among the Saints ought to be easy and effective for the reunion. Send views of the place or anything that will allow you to nicely present the idea, and leave a good impression. Send one to each missionary in reach, to the prominent people in other districts near, to anyone likely to be invited as speakers. If it is a public park and there are views of it sold on post cards, it ought to be easy to simply write on the date of the reunion and little things that will make for personality. It would pay, perhaps, to have post card views taken by some photographer just to send out in this way, if there are special beauty spots. If there are not, just send neat little reminders, etc.

Try to have a large sign over the walk if you are in a favorable location for it, when the revival meetings are held. Just stretch some sign muslin over a frame and paint on a neat little sign of some kind, or have it done, and it will do much good. Hang a light over it if you can for evenings.

E. D. MOORE.

Brother Moore: In accordance with my promise I am sending you a write up of our success in advertising the reunion. You will notice I use the word success, for it surely proved a success in every sense of the word. As you have already learned a great deal about it from the papers I sent you, and as my time is limited, I shall be brief. [Copies of two dailies each for ten days have been sent.]

On May 4 our branch business meeting appointed a reunion publicity committee of five. We solicited two collections from each of the local congregations of Saints in the district, and by this means obtained a goodly sum.

We sent out cards to every available name in the district, and a few letters to the branch and inquirers. One of the members of the committee did most of this work, and in a very acceptable manner, too. During the reunion we took up a census of all Saints on the grounds, which will be used next year to advertise the reunion in a more efficient way.

You have obtained proof already that we had about sixteen write-ups in the two local dailies, preceding and during the meetings. We are fully convinced that these and all the accompanying cuts were the chief factors in drawing the crowds. We do not believe it is exaggerating it in the least to say that we had an average of two hundred and fifty at each evening service. The papers were surely good to us for the prominence they gave our write-ups. They seemed pleased and glad to get our cuts, and I tried to be impartial in my arrangement of them between the papers.

The cuts cost us one dollar each and are well worth the investment. We had seven made, one missionary furnishing his. We paid for the photos of two of the ministers, which cost one dollar each.

We stretched a big sign across the street, "Welcome to L. D. S. Reunion, North Park, August 6 to 16" upon it. One of the brethren painted it, and the cost of paint and cloth was very little, less than a dollar I believe.

We placed two hundred and fifty window cards about the town in the store windows. These are a good advertisement with but one objection: We are at the mercy of the storekeepers as to the time they shall be left, and some of them leave them only a couple of days and remove them, either because of prejudice or because they desire to change their window display.

You have in addition to the other advertising I sent, one of our reunion ribbons which we had printed in pink and blue. We sold quite a number, and they attracted considerable attention and inquiry, and served to advertise the reunion in this way. They cost us $3.25 for seventy, and we sold them for ten cents each, two for fifteen cents, four for twenty-five cents, and came out ahead on them.

The choir was not of our creation of course, but it certainly cannot be omitted as a big drawing card for a reunion. We are surprised that some of the Saints should be opposed to training our singers, but I suppose they must be educated up to that as everything else.

We had twenty-two tents on the grounds. At one time it looked as if there would be only four or five, but true to his promise, the Lord opened up the way for those who were not otherwise able to attend.

Everyone is unanimous in pronouncing this the best reunion we have held in this district. It is talked of all over this town, and many regretted that we closed when we did. The speakers removed a great deal of prejudice.

The advertising is a big success, but one must not lose sight of the fact that there is lots of hard work and grinding to do to keep it going. I missed all the morning prayer meetings except Sundays to get those write-ups to the papers in time for them to be used. The accompanying order for a Book of Mormon is for one who has become interested through the reunion.

This morning I made arrangements with the daily Chronicle Examiner to print a two-third column write-up of our faith in every Saturday afternoon paper for one year. For this privilege I am to furnish them ten subscriptions, and my articles must be in the affirmative, i. e., not attacking other denominations. So I am much in hopes of building our reunion work up in a manner far better than any tracting scheme we could devise. We did not have the banquet because we had not the time to work it up. The advertising committee has about nine dollars and ninety cents left to commence work with next year.

LEONARD S. RHODES.

Dear Brother Rhodes: I have received a number of the papers from you and have watched the character of the notices. I am very much pleased with them, and believe they cannot but do good.

They are affirmative in their character and easily go as news. I noticed that some of the first ones were marked as contributed, but the latter ones go without it. That is a good sign to me that the editors are not afraid of them, whether the readers take them for contributed or merely news items.

When you get time, let us know how you think these notices work out in increasing attendance at the meetings.

E. D. MOORE.

CENTRALIA, WASHINGTON, February 7, 1916.

Dear Brother: You asked me to say what I thought of newspaper work, in giving news items of our meetings.

The results are well worth the effort. Before we began the present methods a missionary would stop in the branch desirous of holding some meetings, the president would announce from the pulpit when they would begin, and to please come and bring our friends and neighbors. Perhaps a painted sign would be placed on some business corner, inviting people out, and that would be the sum of our advertising.

Results: Ten or fifteen Saints and from one to five non-members, growing less, with less from night to night until only a few faithful Saints attended. The missionary became discouraged and called the meetings off; it looked as though we were indifferent to the spread of the gospel. I believe it was nearly two years between the last time a missionary tried to hold meetings here and our last summer's reunion meetings.

But last summer's efforts fully demonstrated that we could get a crowd of interested listeners at our meetings, and it was largely through the newspaper write-ups, too, that we did it. Our meetings were talked of everywhere, even by those who did not attend. The mayor, who while in the ministry had warned his flock to avoid us, as "Mormons," came out, and admitted that our preachers were good speakers and that he was interested in what we had to offer. Infidels and people of every denomination read our write-ups in the papers and talked about them. When people talk about a thing they are interested. They may not come to those particular meetings, but they may some other time.

The newspapers seemed glad to publish that we would meet at Centralia next year, and were pleased to mention Brother Rushton as a high church official. Each paper was jealous for fear I would be partial with the cuts. And both papers assured me that my articles were well written, and that they were glad to have helped us. I mention the well-written point because one editor told me of a time when one of our people brought him something that he nor none of the force could read, and they threw it out. His disgust was plainly manifest.

Chehalis, three miles south, is dependent upon Centralia for a local daily; people there talked of our meetings to some of the local Saints, and they were people who did not go to our meetings, either. People came from Galvin, a little village four miles northwest of here, and were glad to meet with us over Sunday. They had been visited by the Mormon elders and were interested, but were nevertheless glad to learn that we were different. It is probable that we will never know how far-reaching or how much good our newspaper work did.

At our two weeks of meetings in November we had a very satisfying attendance of both members and nonmembers. In spite of difficulties that arose at that time we felt that many came and many were reached that would not had we not used the newspapers. Interest was plainly manifest, attendance gained, and good done that would not otherwise have resulted. My sincere conviction is that branches in cities of any size should think of protracted meetings and advertising as inseparable; and the newspapers with neat and properly prepared news items for their use is a most excellent medium of publicity.

An interesting side item occurs to me when I remember a brother, one of the seventy, who objected to sending me a photo for his cut because he did not like to make himself conspicuous. I replied that if he had the opportunity to preach the gospel to an audience as large as the circulation of those two local dailies he would wade into it with a zeal that would have no room for seclusive timidity; and I asked the difference between seeing his face on paper and before an audience.

Yours fraternally,

LEONARD S. RHODES.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, June 4, 1916.

Editors Herald: It has been many years since I have written a letter to the HERALD. This morning, being unable to attend church, I was reading the HERALD for May 21, the editorial concerning the aged and the young, and I thought it would not be amiss for me to write and tell how it brought to my mind very forcibly some truths experienced by myself which I shall bear testimony to.

Yes, I have heard Brother James Moler make that same remark on several occasions. Also many similar expressions spoken of by my husband, Brother L. R. Devore, deceased, concerning the young. I feel in sympathy with any brother or sister who has been active in church work who is either too much afflicted or too old to give satisfaction further. It takes an effort to be cheerful over it and be satisfied with what little good he can accomplish. I feel to relate my own experience.

After being a Sunday school worker and teacher for several years, through affliction's heavy hand I was forced to decline teaching longer, and as soon as I did I felt that there was something gone out of my life. My heart felt heavy with sadness. Later on Brother Devore, because of afflictions which finally took his life, was placed on the superannuated list, after being one of the seventy and a missionary for many years for the church, and while it was proper and right for the authorities to do this, and I knew that he was unfit to travel longer, again, I felt that something great and wonderful had gone out of both of our lives.

There were many weeks that I actually suffered, realizing that he could no longer go to preach to save souls into the kingdom of God. I could no longer prepare his clothes for him to go forth on his long mission, nor give him encouragement and comfort with my faith and prayers and willingness to sacrifice his presence at home.

Let me say here, that all missionaries' wives know what I mean, but since he has passed over, it has been a great comfort to me to know and hear that where he had labored he could have labored again, and had given satisfaction and had been loved wherever he had been, that he was a pure and clean man. He has passed over and I am alone and so much afflicted that half the time I am unable to attend church.

While all this former active work is done, I still find something to do for the work of the Lord, and hope to till my latest breath instead of sitting and grieving and weeping and mourning and making everyone miserable that comes around me. I meet them with kindness and love and cheerfulness, and try to bear my suffering and affliction with patience. I find that I can still give service to the church by helping others who are burdened with trials and the perplexities of life who come to me for sympathy and comfort. I hold myself in readiness to pray for them and all others that I hear of who do not come.

It is needless to always be told of the sorrow and affliction of others, for reason teaches me that they need help from the Lord that they may be sustained and comforted in their trials. But possibly being alone I notice these things more than if I had people around me. In the last year I have seen the necessity of us all living closer to the Lord than ever before.

I want to speak of the beautiful testimony given of the Lord that has sustained me in this last affliction. I had a season of reasonable health in the fall and early part of the winter, and was able to attend all the church services. But one morning when I awoke, seemingly paralyzed from head to foot, yet my mind clear and active, I cried out in my mind, "Oh, my Father, what will I do, or what will become of me?" In a very short time that still, small voice spoke to me and said, "My grace shall be sufficient for every day and trial," and even to this day I seemingly can hear that sweet, low, musical voice. I then thanked the Lord for the promise he had given me, and in a little while I was myself again and could go about as usual. Time passed on until the last days of January, 1916, when I had a partial stroke of paralysis of the right side. Brother Doctor Thompson was called, and he told me that medicine would not touch the case, but that I might be able in a week or two to throw it off by being careful, as many another had done. I then turned to the Lord and his ordinances alone for help.

The day being Thursday, I was administered to by three elders every evening until a week from the following Sunday, receiving strength daily. Soon the lagrippe and rheumatism set in, which has hindered me and I have as yet not been able to attend church, but am much better, and live alone, but cannot take care of myself altogether. The Saints and elders, and especially the sisters, have been so good and kind and helpful to me that I certainly do prize it. The church papers have been a great solace and comfort in my loneliness, for I love to know all that is going on in the church that is possible to know, and am interested in all that is done.

After the passing of Brother Devore I wondered if the church would still take care of me and would they still send me the church papers as when he was in the mission field, and after four years the papers have come regularly and the bishop has taken care of me the very same as he did before, and I have no fears, but have full confidence that they will care for me while I live.

So from the fullness of my heart I return my thanks to the editors and bishops and all others who have been so kindly considerate of me.

At the close of this long letter I wish to bear my testimony that this latter-day work is of God, and the promises that are given in his word are true and faithful. I obeyed the gospel in 1874 and I received recognition of the Lord by the Holy Spirit at the confirmation. No man gave me this knowledge and no man can take it away, and in all these years his hand has been over me for good, and though our mission to the islands sapped my splendid health, yet I feel that all this has been for my good and brought me nearer to the Lord, and even has been helpful to others.

My advice to one and all while you have health and youth, is, to give the very best that is in you to the service of the church, for in after years you will be glad of it and well paid along the way.

My prayer is that the peace of God will attend each one of you and success crown your efforts.

From your sister in the glorious faith,

MRS. L. R. DEVORE.

GALES FERRY, CONNECTICUT, June 11, 1916.

Editors Herald: It is Sunday. We are sixty miles from any branch, and as most of the folks are away and I am at home looking after things on the farm, a thought came to me that you might be interested in a little circumstance that happened twenty-five years ago this spring which changed as it were, the course of my life.

Brother A. B. Phillips at that time was a lad living with his parents on a little farm among the hills of old Connecticut. Arthur was well liked by the young folks of Ledyard where he lived. He was at that time about nineteen years old, and the height of his ambition was to develop a big neck and to excel in jumping and lifting.

But that spring, he being rather uneasy, Father Phillips told him that he could go away to work on a farm for a Mr. Malchus Trail. His mother felt uneasy about him, as his companions had not been such as to improve him spiritually; and as he was quite a ways from home and her youngest, she was quite anxious.

One night shortly after he left home there arose a terrible storm. The lightning flashed and the thunder crashed, and the little house among the hills was shaken by a crash that took the plastering off of the south side of the sitting room, and tore the center table spread from the table, taking it out from under the family Bible, which remained in its place.

The lightning also struck the bed where Arthur used to sleep, moving it about two feet away from the side of the room where it had been, and tearing the plastering away from the wall. When his mother discovered the room she felt that it might be that God was watching over her boy.

About eight months after this, Brother F. M. Sheehy opened the work near our place and Brother Phillips, who had come to work with me, attended the services. There were six of us in our family that accepted the gospel, including Brother Phillips, and a girl who helped my wife.

About six weeks before we were baptized, Brother G. W. Robley was sent up to our place to preach, and stopped at my house. It was lonesome, no houses being near and he had a wife and babies away down in old Rhode Island, and as he saw no great interest manifested, he was (I think) a little homesick. He went into the wood or fields to inquire of the Lord as to what the prospects were.

After praying, he came down where we were cutting brush and said that something from the Lord concerning Brother Phillips had been shown to him, and that he should be baptized and called to preach the gospel.

Well, it has all come to pass, and many have been made to rejoice through the word as presented by him. I wish he were here now to preach.

Hoping he may long live to lead many to the light of the gospel restored, and that the Lord may yet bring others around here into the only true church, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

RADVILLE, SASKATCHEWAN, June 13, 1916.

Editors Herald: We have not been properly represented here on account of the thoughtlessness of some of us, not stating we were members of the Reorganized Church when the census of our people was taken. Consequently, when published, it read like this, "640 Mormons" instead of Latter Day Saints.

I hope to be in Zion soon with all our family, to remain until death, or when Jesus comes. We are expecting to meet with all the Saints at Viceroy in July, praying God's Spirit will be with us. We have a fine band of workers here, but we feel impressed it is time to turn our faces Zionward.

Saints, pray for us that we may be able to abide his coming. I have had three plain warnings that it is time we moved to Zion.

Praying for the early redemption of Israel, I am,

Ever a coworker,

FLORENCE TOOVEY.

CULDESAC, IDAHO, June 16, 1916.

Editors Herald: Inclosed you will find a copy of a local paper of Culdesac, Idaho (The Culdesac Enterprise), in which there is a poem that has been written and contributed to this paper by some unknown friend. [The poem follows. —EDITORS.]

DARE TO STAND ALONE

(Dedicated to Brother J. A. Bronson.)

Don't be afraid to stand alone,
The many may be wrong
Bad judgment often has been shown
By people in a throng.
The crucifixion pleased the crowd,
But not the thinking few;
If you are right, then be not cowed,
Though none shall stand with you.

Don't be afraid to speak your mind
Or wince at hoots and jeers,
Be patient, gentle, brave and kind,
Don't dwell in fear of sneers.
If you've a principle that's right,
Then hold it as your own,
Stand up for it and bravely fight,
Although you stand alone.

The easy way is to forsake
 A truth the mob to please,
 To tread the paths the many make,
 Or sail with every breeze,
 Majorities do wrongful deeds,
 As years have plainly shown
 And, oh, the courage that it needs,
 Sometimes to stand alone.

I will state to you some of the conditions that we have been called upon to cope with, and which no doubt, as you will see by the poem, have only brought to us kind friends in this part.

In the first place we were attacked by the Methodist Episcopal people in that a Reverend DePartee, a preacher of their faith, and a "Mormon-eater" as well, was sent for to "show us up." He came to our place of meeting and when he attempted to disturb us by untimely remarks I read before the house propositions for debate and asked the brother to sign them with me and to enter into the discussion in an orderly way. After some little hesitation he signed them. They were the regular church propositions and called for six nights on each church; twelve nights in all.

In due time the debate started with a full house, about five or six hundred in attendance. He started out with much bluff and bluster but only lasted nine nights. The other three preachers in Culdesac began to see his defeat was fast approaching, so they called together their faithful few in union prayer meetings, praying for the defeat of the "Mormon" and the success of the Methodist.

Their prayers were not answered, however, and the Methodist took a very hard fall. Some of his followers fell into the safety net though (the Latter Day Saint church), and are now rejoicing in the truth. After the preachers discovered that their God was not answering their prayers, they set to the usual underhanded work, in that a noted woman was sent for to expose the "Mormons." Open-air meetings were arranged for; literature was scattered daily, opposing us. One address was made in the Presbyterian church on the subject of "Jesus Christ or Joseph Smith?" and many other things were resorted to by them to stop our onward march, but to no avail. The little stone cut out without hands could not be stopped.

When the Methodist preacher had received his fill he went home and we continued on with our meetings, with a full house. Many have been convinced and have asked for baptism, which will be attended to next Sunday. Of those that have been convinced are, the high school professor and his wife, the mayor and his wife, three of the school-teachers, three or four of the merchants and their families and many others. How many of these will be baptized I cannot say, but these have all kindly acknowledged their conviction.

Brother Newby, my colaborer, will write you more of the debate at a later date.

Am glad to report that we never felt better in the work or had greater desires to devote our all to this great latter-day work than we do this conference year.

Very hopefully yours,

J. A. BRONSON.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, June 15, 1916.

Editors Herald: Our meetings on Springfield Avenue with the tent, are still in progress, with very good attendance when the rain does not interfere. Very good interest is manifest on the part of some, and we hope and pray in time some may yield obedience to the divine plan.

News from Branches

Providence, Rhode Island

The work in Providence has a very bright future, if (and if in this case is always understood) the work is properly and persistently prosecuted. I suppose that the same thing might be said of any and every branch in the church. But the burden of performing this work does not rest wholly upon any one member. In part the axiom of Civil War days applies in branches: "United we stand, divided we fall." However there is always this difference—and the thought is very encouraging—"One with God is a majority." The faithful few will eventually, if continuing faithful, win the victory. But the work does not progress so rapidly as it would if all were united in doing good.

I do not mean to have the reader infer that the members of the Providence Branch are not united; I am not prepared to say that most of them are not doing according to the light they have. We are in transition; we are learning that our views held yesterday may not be the correct views for to-day; we are trying to adjust ourselves to proper environment; there is felt, now and then, the "growing pain." It is the still water that rots. Jesus Christ was not so much a reformer as a revolutionist. The world revolves, seasons go and come, branches that live undergo changes, old sores either sluff off or prove fatal.

I had no desire to be returned to labor another year in this branch; but man proposes and God disposes—I am here and I am glad that I am here. All I ask now is to be left until I have finished my work here. In the natural course of events, and viewed from the human standpoint, this task will require for its completion many years.

Since taking up my pastorate in this city, my work has been much hindered by various and numerous causes. Of some I need not speak. Measles visited our camp last winter, attacking the four children. This was of minor importance, however, for nothing serious happened, thanks to God's grace and good nursing. We thought that things were coming quite fast when our Delta came home from school with scarlet fever in her system, and this just after recovering from the attack of measles. Here was a foe worthy of our steel, for although measles is far worse than most people think, yet scarlet fever in its malignant state defies the most careful nursing. But thanks be to God (and good nursing again—and I state it not egotistically) we were spared from either physically suffering on her part or mental suffering on ours, nothing being necessary except isolation, care, prayer, quarantine, and patience.

It might be better for me to refrain from writing this bit of items until I have more to report—more of actual season's work accomplished. We are now in the midst of plans, and plans do not always turn out as we wish, but we hope for the best. It was not wholly an inspiration which came to me when I decided that a printing press in a city branch is as necessary as a horse on a farm. Common sense reveals the fact. When I reached black fingers into dusty printer's cases and learned the mysteries of typesetting, many years ago, I did not know that some day I should be able to use the knowledge in defense of God's work. But the time has come, and a few friends to the cause are purchasing for me a printing press. Soon this part of Providence (the home of religious liberty) will feel the "power of the press." Not extensively, of course; time will not allow. Only a small portion of a pastor's time can be devoted to printing. A live city branch needs at least one hundred dollars worth of printing matter a year. And this is putting the figure way below the average cost, and getting your work done at a most reasonable price. I should like to correspond with pastors, or city missionaries, who would like to investigate the possibilities of work along this line. Three cautions are to the point: Avoid waste of time. Avoid amateurism. Avoid trash.

Work along vacation summer school lines this season presented a problem. Since my connection with this school work, I have been endeavoring to scheme a way or devise means to adapt the movement to the distinctive needs of our church. The schools held in our church in Boston and in Providence, were a success in securing to the church some advantages, among which was that of being better understood by the people. This favor is no small factor in the great problem that confronts us. In fact it is of inestimable importance to us. It is a solid block in the foundation which must be built before much can be done in city work. In Boston and Providence one common and glaring difficulty was ever present—the absence of real summer school territory where our work was held. And especially was this true in this city. Nearly every child who came to school had a good home and was "well sheltered" by other church Sunday schools. Visiting parents brought forth the statement: "If Johnny does not like his own Sunday school, we shall be glad to have him attend yours." It is quite evident that one fruit of our work was to quicken an unusual interest in the boys and girls on the part of their ministers and teachers. The problem that confronts us is not one of abandonment of service and progressive move, but one to determine how to adapt the summer school movement to our peculiar needs and aims.

This branch is peculiarly blessed in that it has a member who is well qualified to carry on work among children. Sister Willamena Gates studied along this line and perfected her studies by faithful service. It was a real inspiration to see the many beautiful gifts that were presented to her by members of her class at the Young Women's Christian Association; one present was a superb cedar chest. She and I are planning an out-of-doors school. Details are not available at this writing. Results are also in the future, but we pass on, trusting that all opposition and tribulation will but whet the desire for victory and bring at least the companionship of the "Great White Throng."

Before this letter is published, Sister Olive Yarwood and Brother Herman Chelline will have been united in marriage. They will be the third couple of this branch who have, in the year past, embarked on the matrimonial sea. Sister Jennie Olive Mackinnon was married to Harold Lester Haywood and Sister Anna Louise Chelline to Brother William Weigle.

Another thing I expect to accomplish is holding one or two outdoor services. These will serve as advertising means largely, but one never knows where the good accomplished by such efforts will end. One thing is certain, to keep out of the clutches of Satan and to beat back the various kinds of opposition which come from human opponents, as well, one must keep busy continually advancing along the right line.

The study of human nature is a great study, full of inspiration and interest. To know when to speak and when to keep still, to be able to detect and defeat the cunning of hypocrisy, to be long-suffering and filled with charity, to be kind yet firm—in brief, to be master of the situation; this is an ideal condition worth striving for, and a thing that will surely be realized if one is willing to pay the price.

Our prayer services are gatherings we are proud of. Nearly eighty per cent of our working force attend regularly, and the meetings are characterized by a spirit of peace and uplift. The Sunday school is trying to discharge the responsibility resting upon it, as an aid to the branch in teaching its young and old. The Religio is performing its unique and distinctive function of teaching the Book of Mormon to the Saints. Our social work is struggling to become a factor of great good among the membership and friends of the branch. The bigness of this phase of our work and its great power for good is not thoroughly understood nor appreciated by some, but time will work wonders in its educating process, and as was the case with the little church in "lovely Auburn," the ones who "came to scoff remained to pray," so may it be with the work in the Providence Branch.

BABY PICTURES WANTED

In order to get out an attractive and valuable cradle roll certificate, to be issued to children who become members of the cradle roll of the Sunday school, we want to secure a number of children's pictures.

We will have halftone cuts made for attractive panels to surround appropriate printing. This will not damage the picture.

We want clear photos of any size. Bust view sufficient, but others will do. Every picture should be of a child, boy or girl, who has not reached the fourth birthday. Send as many as you like and with each one the name, as we plan to print the name under each picture.

If requested, we will return photo but not otherwise as they may be valuable in illustrating our publications later.

Get them to us by August 1 and we will have an unbiased committee choose about twenty-five for our use. By September 15 we expect to print a copy of the finished product in the Stepping Stones and will send to parents of each one chosen a finished certificate.

We want to get pictures from all over the church. Let us have a hearty and prompt response.

Send all photos to

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Hymns and Poems

(SELECTED AND ORIGINAL)

[It is suggested by Sister J. O. Hower, who sends us the following selection, which she learned to love in her girlhood, that it would be a good companion to the poem by J. E. Vanderwood, appearing in the HERALD of May 3, entitled, "What do I live for?"—EDITORS.]

What I Live For

I live for those who love me,
Whose hearts are kind and true;
For the hopes not left behind me,
And awaits my spirit too;
For all human ties that bind me,
For the task by God assigned me,
For the hopes not left behind me,
And the good that I can do.

I live to learn their story
Who've suffered for my sake;
To emulate their glory,
And follow in their wake;
Bards, patriots, martyrs, sages,
The noble of all ages,
Whose deeds crown history's pages,
And time's great volume make.

I live to hold communion
With all that is divine;
To feel their is a union
'Twixt nature's heart and mine;
To profit by affliction,
Reap truths from fields of fiction,
Grow wiser from conviction,
And fulfill each grand design.

I live to hail that season
By gifted minds foretold,
When men shall live by reason,
And not alone by gold;
When man to man united,
And every wrong thing righted,
The whole world shall be lighted
As Eden was of old.

I live for those who love me,
For those who know me true;
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit, too;
For the cause that lacks assistance,
For the wrong that needs resistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that I can do.

—G. Linnaeus Banks.

So live, that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan that moves
To that mysterious realm where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one that wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

—Bryant.

THE PERFECT LAW OF LIBERTY

I—AS A MIRROR

But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving only your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed.—James 1: 22-25.

Why did James refer to the perfect law of liberty, the gospel law, as a mirror? Evidently because in it we get a glimpse of ourselves as we are. In order to make men free it is necessary first of all that they shall see themselves as they are. It is impossible to set a man free who is satisfied with himself and with his condition of servitude. He must be made dissatisfied.

Jesus said: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." It is just as necessary that men should know the truth about themselves as it is that they should know the truth about God.

Slavery of every kind leaves its unmistakable traces in the character and in the countenance in the spirit and the body, which is the soul of man. Markham had that in mind when he wrote his classic poem, "The man with the hoe":

Bowed by the weight of centuries he leans
Upon his hoe and gazes on the ground,
The emptiness of ages in his face
And on his back the burden of the world.
Who loosened and let down this brutal jaw?
Whose was the hand that slanted back this brow?
Whose breath blew out the light within his brain?

Hell has no form more terrible than this.

Before the man with the hoe can be set free he must be made to see himself as Millet and Markham saw him. Then by the aid of the church and the state, by orderly evolution he may be set free. If these are denied, by bloody revolution he will set himself free, using his hoe as a weapon instead of an instrument. But he can never be entirely free until he accepts the perfect law of liberty.

Men must see themselves as they are. Such an experience breeds dissatisfaction. Dissatisfaction with self is the essence of repentance. We appeal to your own experience. Is it not a fact that when you have listened to the preaching of the gospel or have felt the influence of the Spirit in the prayer service you have been made to see your faults and failings. You have looked into the perfect law of liberty. If you have gone away and heeded the lesson and rectified the errors discovered to our conscience you have been blessed. But if you went away and straightway forgot what manner of man you were, no blessing came—only condemnation.

It is a good thing for a man to look into a mirror occasionally. Mirrors and soap are agents of civilization and progress. Of course a man should not look into a mirror all the time, a man who would do that would never see anything worth looking at. But an occasional look is beneficial. It is a good thing to look into the gospel mirror. "Examine yourselves," is the injunction. We should not look all the time, introspection may be carried too far. Having looked we should heed, and become doers of the word. There is a time for reflection and a time for execution.

It is the business of the ministry everywhere to hold up the mirror in every pulpit to which we have access. Peter held it up to thousands on the day of Pentecost. Looking in it they saw themselves and their deeds in a true light and became profoundly dissatisfied. "Men and brethren," they cried out, "what shall we do?" Peter then explained the perfect law of liberty.

Paul held the mirror up to Felix as he sat on his judgment throne, and reasoned with him concerning temperance, righteousness, and judgment to come. Felix covered his eyes with his arm and motioned Paul away, "Take the thing away. When I have a more opportune time I will take another look." And straightway he forgot what manner of man he was.

Jesus held up the gospel mirror to the prodigal son. The prodigal son had wandered into a far country where he had wasted his inheritance. In time of famine he sank so low that he was set to feeding swine. When he saw himself in the mirror he was filled with profound discontent. And he cried out, "Here am I feeding swine and eating the husks that they wallow over. Let me away to my father's house and I will confess that I have sinned against him and before high heaven."

He had the right kind of discontent, discontent with self and with his own manner of life, not discontent with others, such as the world preaches. Self discontent is the essence of repentance, and it led the prodigal straight back to his father's house.

A glance into the gospel mirror is worth something to man. Burns said:

Would some power the giftie gie us,
To see oursel's as others see us?
'Twould from many a blunder free us,
And foolish notion.

How much better to see ourselves as God sees us. Our friends, many of them, do not see our faults. Our enemies are blind to our virtues. But God sees us as we are. Jesus sees us as we are. He is one friend who sees both faults and virtues. Some one has wittily said: "A true friend is one who knows us and loves us in spite of it." Jesus is that kind of a friend. In the gospel mirror we see ourselves as God sees us. A look at our faults fills us with abhorrence; but the fact that Jesus saw something in us worth dying for fills us with joy.

A sinner looking into the mirror, seeing himself debauched and corrupted, all but ruined, might well feel not only discontent but desperation. He might turn away hopeless. But here a father's love enters, as with the prodigal son.

This marvelous mirror has another function that we have not mentioned. It not only shows me to myself as I am; but it also shows me as I may be, with the help of God. I see the likeness of Jesus and I am told to become like him.

But we all with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.—2 Corinthians 3: 18.

Despair gives place to hope and aspiration. The irrevocable past we may not be able to alter. But the vision we have seen inspires us to make the best of the future. The prodigal son could not regain his inheritance. It was gone. He could not call back the wasted years. They would never return. But the future was before him. He was determined to make a new start. He started from where he was.

Bourke says: "If we would go anywhere, we must start from where we are." So obvious is that as to seem absurd, at first glance, yet fruitful of thought. If we would reach celestial glory we must start from where we are. We might wish for a better place or condition to start from, but we must start from where we are.

The prodigal son started from the pigsty. It was not a nice place, but that was where he was. The past he could not undo, but he faced the future ready for a new and true endeavor. If we have not made the start, or if we have faltered by the way, let us heed his example. With Paul let us learn to say:

This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.—Philippians 3: 13, 14.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

"GOD EXPECTS IT OF YOU"

He was a bashful, unobtrusive lad. His open countenance and clear eyes were the features of boyhood rather than manhood. Yet he was neither a boy nor a man.

A district school election had recently been held in the rural community. One of the candidates had been a Latter Day Saint and by a close vote had been elected a director of the district. The lad was there and so was a belligerent "Mormon" eater. He said he was an evangelist, a revivalist.

The reputation of the Saints among thinking people was good. They had the respect and support of the best element, yet there was a smoldering religious dislike extant among another element.

At the close of the meeting in the little school-house the new man began to inform some of his friends close by, of the way things would turn out if they let the "Mormons" run things. As he proceeded, he began to orate. His manner became more and more vehement, and with sweeping gestures he declared the awful consequences of allowing such misled and evil people to help manage the affairs of that community.

"My grandfather helped drive 'em out of Missouri, and I'd like to help drive 'em out o' here."

The entire audience was crowding around, some nodding a pleased assent, and others seemingly awed by the audacity of the stranger and unable to speak.

He had gone on for five, perhaps ten minutes, hardly giving opportunity for a word of protest, when a quiet lad was seen to mount one of the desks near the center of the group.

"Gentlemen!" his adolescently changing voice demanded. Every eye shifted to him. "May I have your attention a moment?" No one spoke. Enemy or friend could surely lose or gain nothing from him.

"I want to say a few words about the subject this man has brought up."

Immediately there were protests, led on by the itinerant "evangelist."

A big voice boomed out from the crowd: "Let the boy speak. The other side has had a chance. Listen to him."

They listened.

For fifteen minutes they stood spellbound, amazed at the earnest portrayal of the true situation. The Missouri mob was mentioned and its terrible work vividly pictured. The persecution of God's people in various ages was presented to them. The true status of the Saints in the community and elsewhere was ably elucidated. He spoke calmly but decisively. There was no ostentation or affectation. Simply and clearly he answered the arguments by affirmative statements, then quietly resumed his place on the floor among the audience.

"We had better go home," the big voice suggested.

They went home, each feeling that a greater power than the lad had spoken that evening.

"How did you do it? You had never spoken in public that way before, had you?" some one inquired later.

"I have done the simple tasks my home, my friends, the Sunday school and Religio asked me. I studied in order to do them well. The occasion came when I could use the knowledge gained, and I did it. Something seemed to say to me that night, 'The church expects it of you. God expects it of you and wants to help you try.' I tried because I knew that was so."

It was a simple thing, yet it meant much to that community. There were no more public attacks on the church, and the Saints were respected more than ever.

How many duties we perform because others expect us to do them. Our natural inclination may be to shirk a little, delude ourselves by imagining we "prefer one another," but when we yield to our environment we find our associates, the church, and God expects much of us. The times demand it. When we answer the calls made upon us, we naturally expect the same of our friends. We may become an inspiration to those around us. The time may come when we shall need to stand in the breach and defend the church against the enemy. Our previous training will enable God to use us effectively. But whether we do or not, we will find that as we yield to what God and man expect of us, we will find it possible to do more and more, and thus widen our sphere of usefulness.

CURRENT EVENTS

A DAY EARLY.—On account of the holiday on the Fourth of July, we finish our items in this department a day earlier than usual, which may account for lack of the later news.

NOTE TO AUSTRIA.—President Wilson has demanded an apology from the Austrian Government in connection with the sinking of the Petrolite by a submarine on December 5.

RUSSIAN PROHIBITION.—The lower house of the Russian Duma on the 30th passed a measure making prohibition permanent. There is thought to be no doubt that the upper house will pass and the Czar sign the bill.

CASEMENT TO DIE.—Charged with instigating the recent Irish rebellion, Sir Roger Casement was recently tried before a British court in London, and on the 29th sentenced to death. An appeal has been taken. King George has ordered that he be degraded from his order of knighthood.

TEACHERS' UNION ASSAILED.—For some time Chicago school-teachers have met considerable opposition in their effort to maintain a teachers' federation. One of the recent developments is the dismissal on the 27th of sixty-eight instructors. It is said that two-thirds of the number are members of the federation.

NO PROGRESSIVE CANDIDATE.—The national committee of the Progressive Party met on the 26th to decide on future activity on account of the declination of Theodore Roosevelt to accept nomination for president. It had been thought that Roosevelt might reconsider and allow his name to be used, but in a lengthy communication he asked the party to support the Republican nominee. After a debate lasting seven hours the vote of the committee on this suggestion was 32 for, 6 against, with 9 declining to vote. It was admitted that there would be no more meetings of the committee, thus indicating the official death of the party.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Important engagements are taking place daily on the north line in France, where British and French oppose the Teutons. The British report a number of minor gains and that the Germans are rapidly strengthening their forces. The French have regained some trenches at Verdun front. Intense fighting on the Austro-Italian front is reported. Both sides claim gains. The Russians had made some advances in Bukowina, being held by the Austrians at some points. The Germans seem to offer successful resistance farther north. Spain is having trouble in Morocco where fighting between Spanish troops and rebels is reported. A considerable number of casualties are reported with repulse of the rebel force.

CARRANZA DEFIANT.—After a tense week of preparation for military occupation of Mexico in case developments demanded it, Carranza has replied to our Government. While not in the form of a reply to the note sent him, it is so considered at Washington. He asserts that any advance will result in attack by Mexicans. He seeks to justify his conduct and insists that our troops withdraw. The American prisoners taken at Carrizal have been released and they report having been treated badly. Efforts by South American nations to effect mediation have failed and war may follow at any time. Practically all the Americans who desire to do so have left Mexico. A number of States have sent their entire national guard to the front, while others depart daily. It is announced that soldiers serving on foreign soil will receive a twenty per cent wage increase, officers to receive ten per cent more. A number of incendiary fires have occurred at El Paso, Texas, supposedly set by resident Mexicans. A food embargo will be put in effect immediately on declaration of hostilities.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

BISHOP ROBERTS NOT IMPROVED.—We regret to report that the condition of Bishop Joseph Roberts of Lamoni Stake, mentioned in a recent number of the HERALD, is not improved.

"AUTUMN LEAVES" FOR JULY.—An interesting number in Autumn Leaves for July is an article from the pen of Elder James E. Yates, who visited Jaurez, Mexico, the day the United States troops crossed the border, following the raid on Columbus. It is illustrated by a photo of Constitutionalist cavalry, furnished by Elder James E. Kelley, who some years ago undertook a perilous and exciting trip through the war lines in Mexico. There is also an article from Elder C. Edward Miller, entitled "Celebrating the Fourth of July in Australia," written during his recent mission to Australia, and describing the way in which he celebrated the Fourth in that distant country. In this number there begins a series of articles on the works of Shakespeare, written by Graceland College students. The first of these, entitled "Shakespeare's tragedies," won the medal offered by the Independent in a contest conducted in Graceland College.

GOOD PLACE TO LIVE.—The Lamoni Chronicle is publishing in a current number the names of those in Lamoni over eighty years of age. Not counting inmates of the old folk's homes there are thirty-four names given.

EDITOR AT BURLINGTON.—The Senior Editor recently conducted a week's series of services at Burlington, Iowa, where he was pastor for several years. The attendance was very good and the interest excellent. Some of the influential people of the city were in attendance and lent assistance in the song services.

UNFULFILLED PROPHECY.—It has been the common experience of our brethren in meeting opponents of the latter-day work, to be confronted with the argument, "The prophecies of the Bible have all been fulfilled." Among the foremost of those who have so urged have been adherents to the faith brought forth by Alexander Campbell. In this connection it is interesting to note the discussion of D. Austen Sommer, one of the leading advocates of the Church of Christ, commonly known as the no-organ Christian Church, appearing in recent issues of the Apostolic Review, under the caption "Confusion over the prophecies." Elder Sommer says:

There is no part of the Bible about which men have differed more than about the details of some of the prophecies there, and especially the unfulfilled prophecies of the Book of Revelation. . . . There has been much agitation about unfulfilled prophecies through the past fifty years, and especially the past ten years.

It is here admitted not only that there are prophetic utterances in the Bible yet unfulfilled, but also that there is much and increasing agitation over the interpretation of the same; and Mr. Sommer proceeds to advise that men be thorough in their study and careful in their interpretation, that their conclusions and the effect thereof may conform to the truth.

MEAT PRICES HIGH.—In the past year the prices paid the producers of meat have advanced 16.7 per cent, according to recent announcements from the Department of Agriculture. Naturally, consumers pay a correspondingly greater price for the product. This is no small argument in favor of the Word of Wisdom, which (in Doctrine and Covenants 86) states that the Lord has ordained flesh of beasts and fowls for "the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine. All grain is ordained for the use of man and of beasts, to be the staff of life."

FROM AUSTRALIA.—Under date of May 20, Apostle Paul M. Hanson writes from Perth, West Australia. He says:

As you will see, I am now in the west, have been here about two weeks. Will be returning in about six weeks to Adelaide, likely get back to Sidney in August or September. From here in about one week I will be going to Kalgoorlie, where we have a small branch. The west is a very difficult mission, much gambling, drinking, seeking for money and pleasure. I really must be a long way from America; no news of any character as yet has filtered through concerning General Conference. It is probable none will reach me before June. If all goes well I shall attend the conference of 1918, not before. My labors are pretty well blocked out until that time.

A man should not be praised for doing right. It is only what the world expects of him. What he should expect of the world is censure for wrongdoing.—Common-Sense.

THE UNIVERSAL GOSPEL

(Sermon preached by Professor George N. Briggs, at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday morning May 21, 1916. Reported by Winsome Smith.)

There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh; that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.—Romans 8: 1-11.

Particular attention is invited to the last sentence of verse 9: "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

In connection with that I would like to invite your attention to Matthew 6: 10: "Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."

Also Genesis 4: 9: "Am I my brother's keeper?"

I hope to be able to show some connection in the few remarks that I will make this morning, between these three passages:

"Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

"Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."

"Am I my brother's keeper?"

PREPARATION FOR THIS LIFE

The church in times past has been a church which has attempted to make it possible for men to be prepared for the world to come, a church and theology which has primarily prepared men for life hereafter, rather than theology and a church which has attempted to prepare men for this world, or a church which has attempted to make this world a better habitation in which to live.

I want to occupy a few moments this morning in attempting to show that it was the teaching of Christ to make this world a better world, rather than an attempt as some of our dogmas in the past have attempted to demonstrate, that the purpose of the church, the purpose of theology, and the purpose of the teachings of Christ were primarily to prepare the souls of men for the hereafter.

The conceptions of modern theology and of modern church doctrines are that if we do prepare this world, prepare men and women to live right in this world, they will be prepared for the world hereafter.

Now the teachings of Christ, and the doctrines of Christ Christianity, as such, is a universal religion, an all-embracing religion, an all-inclusive religion, religion which meets the needs and requirements of mankind everywhere in this world and in this life. Putting aside for a moment its preparation, its meeting the needs of the life hereafter, consider for a moment whether or not it is a religion which meets the needs of mankind here in this world; whether or not it is all-embracing enough to meet our human requirements here; is it adequate for the solution of all human needs, sufficient for all human wants among mankind generally.

It has been tested for the past hundreds of years, and so far has never failed, has met every requirement of mankind everywhere. It has been suggested that Christianity is a failure, that it does not meet our own particular needs here on earth, and as an evidence of that the great world war which is now in progress is referred to. I heard a speaker a few weeks ago state that he had not heard a sermon or lecture, a discourse or speech of any kind for many months in which some reference was not made to the world war, so I would not be living up to my opportunities if I did not say something about it. But it is nevertheless true that the teachings of Christ, the doctrines of Jesus Christ as brought to this earth centuries ago, are sufficient to meet the problems of the great world war at the present time.

TWO THEORIES

There are two theories held by theologians relative to the present war. One of them is that God has a hand in the present war, and that it is designed for the purpose of working out some problems which could not be solved in any other way. I most sincerely believe that that is true. I sincerely believe that God has his hand in the affairs of men, and that the doctrines of Jesus Christ are such that they are sufficient unto the needs of mankind everywhere, and that this great world war which is now upon us is for the purpose of making it possible for Christianity to reach out into realms and into places, into the hearts of men that it has never before been able to reach, so I believe that this is in line with the teachings of Christ, in line with the divine plan, and that God has a purpose in this great slaughter which is going on on the other side of the world.

UNIVERSAL GOSPEL

How universal then is this religion of Jesus Christ? The proof of it lies not so much in the few utterances of Christ, in the few sermons we find from him in the few misinterpretations, or possibly misconceptions of the teachings of Christ, but the universality of it lies in the doctrines of this Christianity of Christ, the teachings of God as represented by Christ in his visit to earth, the few lessons that he gave us, the few general principles that we have from him. When we look at it and make an analysis, we find that they are not many—that Christ was not a great expounder in the sense of voluminous writings—we have only a few of them, comparatively speaking, but they are sufficient to meet all the requirements, all the needs of mankind everywhere if properly interpreted, if properly understood. So that I say, the teachings of Christ, from the fact that they do meet all the needs, cannot be based upon the few phrases alone, or the few utterances, but upon the general teachings and the great scope of the doctrine of Christ, all-embracing as it is.

There are certain Bible proofs of this universality of the teachings of Christ, certain references in the Bible, certain verses which might be quoted to show that Christ himself had the world vision; that Christ in coming to us had a conception of the universality of the teachings which he brought to us. All through the New Testament we see such expressions as "all the world," "the universe," "all mankind," "everywhere," "whosoever." There are no words in the English language more inclusive than those; more all-embracing, more universal than those expressions of Jesus Christ: "Mankind everywhere," "all the world," "the entire universe."

Christ in referring to himself in Matthew 8:20, speaks of himself as the "Son of man," not the son of a particular race of people, a particular clan, a particular number of people of the world, but the "Son of man"—all-inclusive, all-embracing, universal in its conception.

In John 8:21 he speaks to his disciples and calls them "the light of the world." Nothing could be more all-embracing, all-inclusive, than such terms as those. "The lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world."

In John 10:16, "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold," which signifies that he had other sheep of other folds.

The last commandment that Christ gave to his disciples is recorded in Mark 16:15, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

As I see these few verses I have referred to, the Bible approves of the universality of this Christianity. The Bible proves the fact that Christ himself had the world conception, the world interpretation, the world vision. The Bible is conclusive in this, that this is a universal religion.

However, the supreme truth of the universality of this doctrine of Christ, of this Christianity which Christ brought to us, has many other proofs, ample in themselves, for this world vision, that Christ had, of his purpose here on earth. The fact that the Christianity of Christ has met all needs of all men everywhere during the past nineteen hundred years is proof enough that he did have this conception of his religion being one to include and relieve everybody, everywhere.

SOME COMPARISONS

Let us look now for a few moments at the actual facts, actual conditions as they exist at the present time throughout the world, as to the reception which this Christianity has received, whether or not it is more universal, more universally accepted than other religions.

The Christianity or religion of Christ has been accepted by some six hundred million people throughout the world. Everywhere is Christianity, the religion of Christ, found. Confucianism, which represents the religion which is accepted by the next largest number of people in the world, has been received by only about three hundred million people, by only one single race, the Chinese, in one section of a single continent, whereas Christianity has met the deepest needs of large bodies of men of the most diverse races and under the most difficult conditions.

Mohammedanism, which has made its impress upon only one class of people, one race, is represented by only a little over two hundred million adherents.

Hinduism, which is little known outside of India, has been accepted by only about two hundred million adherents, as contrasted with the followers of Christianity with its six hundred million adherents.

Buddhism has been accepted by people of only one half of one of the continents, numbering about one hundred and thirty-eight million. While Shintoism, which is entirely racial in its character, is represented by twenty-five million.

Judaism, which has spread only among one race of people, is followed by a comparatively small number, only thirteen million in all.

So here we have a demonstration by figures, a demonstration that the doctrine that Christ brought to this earth, the doctrine that Christ taught, has been accepted by some six hundred million, as compared with a much smaller number of any other religious faith in the world.

Christianity had its beginning among a Semitic race, and has grown and extended until it has reached every people, everywhere. It came across the ocean to the new world—has followers everywhere—is now the missionary religion of the world—has gone across the other ocean to the people of the Orient, and is bringing to them new life, new thought, and a new vision, opening up before them fields that no other religion, no other conception of doctrine had ever before brought to them.

This conception of the teachings of Christ must indeed prove to anyone the fact that the religion as Christ taught it, as Christ brought it to us, is a universal one, is possible at least of being made an all-inclusive one.

Christianity shows its universality in other ways: in addition to this world vision which Christ had in presenting to us his doctrine when he was upon the earth the few years that he ministered unto our wants, in addition to that conception which he brought to us and which has been received by the peoples of the earth in such large numbers, there are other and perhaps as conclusive proofs that this religion of Christ is a universal one.

Let us compare for a moment the situation in the religious world as we find it in the first century after Christ lived, some few hundred years later, the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and the present time, and see how these teachings of Christ were possible to be adapted to the needs of the different classes of people in the different ages of the world, its marvelous power of adaptability to circumstances the most dissimilar.

In the first century after Christ we find as written, that Christianity was accepted by comparatively few, by only one small tribe of people: the lowly, the poor, those who had no position in the world, those who had no wealth, those who had little if any influence. Christ's religion was practiced, and had to be, under the conditions that existed in that first hundred years, for centuries after his teachings were brought to us, in the caves, in the catacombs, in the places of refuge, where the authorities could not discover the adherents and followers of this doctrine that Christ had brought to us. Yet the religion that he brought met those particular conditions, met the needs of those people, met the requirements of the time.

A few hundred years later we find the teachings of Christ, the religion of Christianity, represented by great temporal power. It was the dominant political power of that time, the center of civilization and the bond of union among nations. It exercised temporal power as well as spiritual power; as contrasted with the followers of the teachings of Christ some few hundred years before that, now the people of wealth, the people of power, the people of influence were the leaders in the teachings of Christ, exercising as they did great temporal power in addition to great spiritual power.

DIVISION INTO CREEDS

How is it to-day? Now in these first days of the twentieth century, instead of one doctrine and one creed, as we found in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, when there was practically one religion, one faith, one dogma, one creed, we now find hundreds of creeds, hundreds of religions, hundreds of sects, with every dogma possible, with every creed, or no creed, with every possible ritual, or no ritual at all. Yet the Christianity as taught by Jesus Christ without any temporal power—disclaiming every pretense of temporal power in the world to-day—is exercising greater influence, has greater power in the world than ever before. And those six hundred million adherents are doing more for the world to-day than Christians ever did before.

Comparison then of the teachings of Christ in these three periods of the history of mankind, are proof conclusive that Christ's teachings are universal, that Christ's teachings are adapted to the needs and wants of man everywhere, under all conditions and under all circumstances the most divine and the most dissimilar.

Christianity then is for the individual, for the state, for the nation, and for the world. As Christ has said in Luke 4: 43, "I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also." And in Matthew 10:7, "And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand." As God has taught us to say, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

My conception of the teachings of Christ is that he expected this world to be made a better world; a world in which men and women could live better lives and be better because of their experiences here as a preparation for the life to come. When we can bring about the proper condition, when this shall be as the kingdom of heaven upon this earth, and we shall in very fact be able to say that his kingdom has come, I believe that we will be living in accordance with the conception that Christ brought to us, to make this a better world in which to live.

SPECIAL APPLICATION TO US

If this religion, these teachings of Jesus Christ, are universal, can we not apply them to our own lives? Can we not so interpret these teachings that we will be able to assist materially in making this a better world in which to live? If Christianity is a universal religion, if it is effective for everybody, everywhere, is it not possible for us as a community, as members necessarily brought together for business and other purposes, as cities were founded, as communities were organized, as towns were laid out, to make this Christianity universal in our own lives? It has been said that God made the country, and that man made the city, and to a certain extent it is true; but under modern conditions of life it is necessary for large groups of people to come together, large numbers to be in one community, and the modern conception of this community life is coming to be not so much a place in which to transact business, not so much a place where we have to live, where because of our business relations it is necessary for us to be, but to make it a better place in which to live, to make it a desirable place in which to live. It used to be thought that the people who were under the obligation of coming to the city to make their home because of business relations, if it were possible for them they should have a country residence—a place where they could go to get away from the turmoil of city life, the disturbance, the displeasure and inconvenience of communal life. We are getting away from that conception of community life, and as we grow and develop we see the possibility of living together in a relationship which will make it possible for a better life to be lived, for many of the conveniences and many of the attractions which individual life may have in the country. We are coming to correct many of the situations and conditions which have existed in the past.

HOW WE JUDGE COMMUNITIES

It has been said that the intelligence and high standard of living of any individual community can be gauged to a nicety by the number of community activities which that particular body of people, that particular village, or that particular town has taken over, has assumed charge of, and has under its control. The time used to be when we would come into our little villages and little towns, and we would find our streets, for example, in a dilapidated condition—would find few, if any, sidewalks. We would find our streets dark at night. We would find no provision made for sprinkling the streets during the hot and dry weather of the summer. We would find no parks, no playgrounds, none of those things which we now regard as absolutely essential in any community. So when our towns and villages assume the responsibility of doing these things for the general welfare of everybody, it is an indication of the general intelligence and general standard of living of those communities. When we go into a town and find these things we know that the standard of that people is a high one, that the intelligence of that people is on a high plane. But if we go into a community and find that those things are lacking, or that many of the other conveniences and many necessary things to make the community livable are not existing, we know that a low standard prevails there.

These municipal functions have in great part been assumed by most municipalities with which we are acquainted, but there are certain social welfare activities which many communities have not felt under obligation yet to assume. In addition to these regular municipal functions which people have come to regard as essential, the general standard of a community, the general intelligence of the people, can be gauged as well by the number of the social welfare activities which have been provided in that community.

SOCIAL WELFARE ACTIVITIES

Among the social welfare activities I refer to the public school, for example. There has been a marvelous development in the public school system of this country in the last half century. In our common schools, in our high schools, and our normal schools, in the provision for vocational and industrial education, a wonderful development which can be compared with the development in no other period of the history of the world, and among no other people.

The growth of other social activities, reading rooms, public libraries, gymnasiums, public baths and swimming pools indicates a wonderful development. The time used to be when it was thought every individual must provide his own reading. It was not the duty of the community to provide reading matter for all the people. But now it is regarded as essential for every community of any size to provide some place where the people of that community who are not otherwise favored, can go to secure their reading, magazines, books, literature of all kinds.

Other social welfare activities which a great many communities have felt under obligation to undertake are: Playgrounds, recreation and social centers; all of these things which make for community welfare, make it possible for the men and women, the boys and girls of that community to do those things which are so absolutely essential for the general development and general welfare, the general progress and uplift of the citizenship as a whole.

This community of ours is very far above the average. There is no question in the mind of anyone about that. This community has undertaken many of these municipal activities and some of the social activities which are essential for our general uplift. Others have not yet been provided. There is no question in my mind but that the demand of this community is such that it will in time, and a very short time only, feel under the necessity of making provision for all of these other so-called general welfare activities, which are necessary and essential to place every community upon a high plane of intelligence and high living. The standard of living, I believe, in this community is such that these things are going to be required.

A TRUE ALTRUISM

Christ came to earth to bring to us a true altruism, a true religion and altruism, so as to make it possible for each one of us to aid everybody else, and give to everybody else the best that is within him. By community effort, by giving the best that is within ourselves, placing it at the disposal of everybody else, we will have true altruism, and will have true community life. I believe that that is a step in the direction of bringing to this earth the kingdom of God, making it possible for the kingdom of God to exist here, to make this earth a better place in which to live.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" Am I responsible for my neighbor? Am I responsible for placing at his disposal and for his use the best things that are in me? I believe that that is the true doctrine and true interpretation of Christ's teachings to us, when he put into the mouth of Cain that question, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

I believe that we must all assume the responsibility of assisting in bringing about a better communal life wherever we live.

PREACHING

The pope of Rome on March 6 of the present year, delivered a lengthy discourse to an assembled body of priests, upon the subject of preaching.

Some of the exhortation is very good, but some of the pope's advice or instructions in the matter of preaching may be of doubtful propriety as viewed from our standpoint. Undoubtedly, however, the substance of such quotations from the discourse as follow herein is worthy of being reflected upon by any man who bears the responsibility of preaching.

The head of the great Roman Catholic Church addresses his subordinate priests upon the subject of sermon making and delivery as follows:

For you, most beloved sons, we wish to deem superfluous the exhortation to preach no other than God. You certainly condemn those who preach themselves; you also extend your condemnation to those who take into the pulpit subjects not strictly religious, or who therein treat of matters profane; indeed, this condemnation should be also extended to those preachers who, whilst not going to the blameworthy excess of treating directly of profane subjects, nevertheless cannot refrain from making some allusion to profane matters, allusions so manifest as to be calculated to impress listeners more than the subject itself. Such an abuse would renew in the church those calamitous divisions which Saint Paul deplored in Corinth, when he said that the language of some of the first Christians had been reported to him: "I am of Paul, I of Apollo, I of Cephas and I of Christ." (1 Corinthians 1: 12.) Ah, it is not impossible, especially in our day, that some one go to hear a sermon to discover to what political party the preacher belongs; well do you act in such wise as not to appear to be either of Paul, or of Apollo, of Cephas, but only of Jesus Christ. . . .

No admonition could be more opportune than this, to lead the preacher to make a worthy choice of subjects; no standard can be more secure than this, to make him understand whether he has fulfilled or neglected his duty. Is this truly the "word of God"? he should ask himself when he is preparing the sermon; have I truly announced "the word of God"? he should likewise ask himself when after the sermon he returns to the silence of his cell.

The reply to these questions will be given to the preacher, not only by his own conscience, but by the recollection with which the faithful will have listened to his sermon, and better also by the fruits of conversion which he will have thereby garnered. Deserving of compassion would be instead the preacher who during the sermon should discover in the countenances of his hearers, not compunction, but distraction; not tears, but smiles, and who after the sermon should see the hearers rush to the door without reflecting for even an instant on what they had heard.

And what is to be said of the preacher who to quotations from sacred scripture, which are truly the "word of God," or to the comments of the holy fathers, who are its authoritative interpreters, has preferred quotations from profane authors, of some literary value perchance, but of no religious or moral reputation? Ah, how ungrateful to the ear of such a one should be the echo of the words whereby he had been admonished by the bishop "to announce the gospel of God!"

Unfortunately, we cannot say that we are speaking only hypothetically, for even during the year which has just elapsed we were obliged more than once to lament that some preachers had forgotten to take into the pulpit always and solely the Word of God. But we hasten to add of such forgetfulness we do not believe you capable, you, most beloved sons, who have by the competent authorities been chosen as Lenten preachers in this beloved city of Rome. Sufficient, in any case, to dissipate every fear is the certainty that you have given particular attention to the characteristics which by the very form of blessing employed by the bishop are indicated as proper to sacred oratory. . . .

Preaching cannot prove fruitful if not done in a fitting manner and with due competence, and, on the contrary, the more worthy the manner of it and the more authoritative the commission appears, so much the more fruitful should sacred oratory prove. . . .

Speaking of subjects to be selected for religious discourse the pope goes on to say:

It is necessary also to treat them with chasteness of language, with propriety of form, with clearness of exposition, and above all with lucidity of order, not devoting too large a part to moving the affections, to the end that an ephemeral enthusiasm, excited perhaps by the brilliant form of the language, do not take the place of serious reflection, mother of good resolutions. . . .

For we believe that you at least, most beloved sons, keep before your minds that your "competence to preach" comes from God. You are o many ambassadors sent to the people of Rome. The credentials of your embassy may have been signed by the representative of Jesus Christ, but whence do they derive all their value except from their having been given in the name of Christ himself? If, then, when you find yourselves in the pulpit, you keep alive the recollection that in the act of preaching you represent Jesus Christ, it is not possible that you frame thoughts, pronounce words or set forth views which should be afterwards disavowed by the sovereign who has made you ambassadors to the people. . . .

To attain such an end it will be necessary that the preacher be and show himself chiefly solicitous for the glory of God and for the salvation of souls. Here we say once more that he ought on that account to speak of himself as little as possible, and that from every one of his discourses he ought to eliminate everything which his conscience does not assure him ought to tend to the spiritual profit of his hearers; but we do not wish to omit recalling that to render preaching fruitful the sacred orator ought to adapt his language to the intellectual conditions of his hearers. A philosophical thesis, even if established by the most rigorous syllogisms or an historical dissertation, even if confirmed by the most reliable documents, would not only be useless for an audience of indifferent education, but might perhaps so indispose the minds of the hearers as to render them incapable of deriving profit from those same more commonplace observations which in other cases might have been productive of many good fruits.

And as regards hearers more select, or audiences formed of persons of unusual intelligence and who are well educated (e nutrite di buoni studii), it will not be useless to give warning that the fruit at which the sacred orator ought to aim is not to delight the intellect, is not to charm the imagination, is not to ravish the ears. The entire aim of the sacred orator ought ever, and in every instance, to be the conversion of the sinner and making the just perfect.

These quotations are extracted from The Catholic Standard and Times, published in Philadelphia.

Making just this passing comment upon the point wherein the pope associates the teachings of the "Holy Fathers" with the "Word of God" as being of equal text value for the pulpit, (other matter being referred to as "profane"), we just remark that while we give heed to the scriptural injunction to shun "profane and old wives' fables," it might be well to scrutinize some of the fables and traditions of those very same cannonized "holy Catholic Fathers," before we decide that the pope's good advice to preachers concerning the elimination of all things profane is as good in Roman Catholic practice as it is in pontifical precept.

But he who would avail himself of the good which may come from Saint, or heretic, will do well not to despise wholesome precept, even though they who exhort to the same be far from the practice of it.

SUBMARINES AND MINES

Enoch saw the sea, that it was troubled

It is the purpose of this article to call attention to the prophetic record of Enoch in Genesis 7: 73, 74, Inspired Translation, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants 36: 14.

And it came to pass, that Enoch saw the day of the coming of the Son of Man, in the last days, to dwell on the earth, in righteousness, for the space of a thousand years. But before that day, he saw great tribulation among the wicked; and he also saw the sea, that it was troubled, and men's hearts failing them, looking forth with fear for the judgment of the Almighty God, which should come upon the wicked.

In the above quotation the coming of the Son of Man, in the last days, is plainly stated. Prior to that glorious event Enoch saw great tribulations among the wicked, which is being realized now in the world's most destructive war and relative horrors known to history. This prophet of ancient days plainly states that during the time of "great tribulations" he "also saw the sea, that it was troubled, and men's hearts failing them, looking forth with fear," etc.

While it is true that the great bodies of water have, at times, given the world much anxiety on account of tidal waves, etc., during the past century, the close observer will readily call to mind that from the beginning of the present European engagement, "the world war," there has not been a day that the great waters have not been troubled with the floating mines and submarines traversing the seas, seeking to destroy lives and property until pleasure seekers, as well as the commercial world, the merchant vessels, also the dreadnaughts, feared the archenemies, the mines and submarines or sea troublers.

Emphasis to the above is given by the Department of Commerce, Washington, District of Columbia, March 21, 1916. This report states that the European war has taken more than two thousand merchant vessels of nearly four million tons from the seas. Of this great number nearly one thousand of the vessels had been sunk by submarines. The same authority says that several hundred ships were destroyed by mines, causing great loss of lives.

Though this record of destruction is very appalling, yet the admirers of the nation's greatest originator, Mr. Edison, are looking to him and to others who are inventing devices that will "trouble the sea" and cause greater destruction to life and property, if possible, than ever before.

In a letter to the writer relative to the origin and use of mines and submarines, Mr. H. H. B. Meyer, chief bibliographer to the Librarian of Congress, wrote February 3, 1916:

When or by whom the first submarine boat was built will probably never be known. . . .Fulton's experiments in France and America, . . . demonstrated that a vessel could be built which could descend to any given depth and reascend at will. Fulton provided for the artificial supply of air. It was not until about 1885 that the modern development began. Mines were first used in 1585 by Gianibelli in the form of little boats charged with powder which succeeded in destroying a bridge at Antwerp. . . . Their most extensive use previous to the present war was at Port Arthur in the Russo-Japanese War.

Now, dear reader, the Apostle Peter called prophecies fulfilled "day stars" and "lights that shineth in dark places." (2 Peter 1: 19-21.) That being true of former days, it is likewise true now. The religious world is indebted to God who did use Joseph Smith, the Seer, as the human instrument, through whom many of the prophecies of Enoch (including those quoted at the beginning of this article) have been recorded again for the instruction and benefit of man.

It seems quite evident to the writer that Enoch did see the destructive powers that are at work; and the mines and submarines troubling the sea as they do, fulfills one important prediction made by him. The same prophet also declares that the second personal coming of the Son of Man, to dwell on the earth a thousand years in righteousness, will be realized by and by. Are you a "wise or "foolish" virgin?

Shall we whose souls are lighted
With wisdom from on high,
Shall we to men benighted
The lamp of life deny?

Of General Interest

"SLACKERS" IN LIFE AND RELIGION

Of all the new words that the war has given us "slacker" is one of the surest to survive. Of course, the word wasn't new in England, but it had no general currency in America before we heard it applied to those who held back from recruiting. The Continent (Chicago) seizes upon it as a useful whip in the modern religious world. Jesus knew the slackers, says the writer, and he enjoined upon them to "let your loins be girded about, and your lamps burning, and be ye yourselves like unto men looking for their Lord." The metaphor derives from the flowing robes of the Oriental dress, which, loosened and hanging from the shoulders in times of relaxation, had to be drawn by a tight girdle around the waist when anything was to be done. The writer observes that Jesus very well knew that "any Christian who fell into the way of loosening now and again the service-belt of his life would soon forfeit the power to tighten up his belt to the old notch of thoroughness." The editorial homely proceeds:

"The piercing-point in 'slacker' is its automatic explanation of just what is wrong with a vast army of the world's ineffectives.

"Inefficiency is, of course, often manifestly due to handicaps—physical defects, lack of training, or restrictive environment. But such considerations can not compass anything like all the cases of uselessness in the world. What's the trouble with the rest?

"They are 'slackers.' That's the exact matter—they live slackly.

"Men who accomplish things and prove 'worth their salt' are men who strictly 'have themselves in hand.'

"Their first quality is purpose, and, after that, determination and self-command, which will permit neither distractions, discouragements, weariness, nor peril to divert them.

"That is to say, the life that counts is the chosen life—a life adhered to—a life pursued—a life planned and executed.

"In contrast, men who will attend neither to deciding what they ought to do nor to compelling themselves to do it amount to nothing worth respect.

"These are the lax fellows, who loll easily through life, who never stiffen up to grip a duty or manage a situation, who consent to carry no load; who will not even question what's wanted of them.

"In such life no muscle is ever tensed with any resolve. All matters go at loose ends. Nothing is taut; everything hangs slack.

"It is perfect precision to call men who live that way 'slackers.' . . .

"When the recruiting agents were visiting British towns, the slackers failed to enlist, not so much because they were unwilling, but because they couldn't. That is what made compulsion necessary.

"The summons of the recruiting officer is a summons to decide something. But the slacker has drifted along through the world without making decisions; he has always evaded when decision was in order. At length, decisiveness becomes impossible.

"His nature is unbelted; he can no longer belt himself up.

"A tight girdle, bracing him to stand stalwart and upright, is more strain and pain than he can bear.

"So the slacker's uselessness condemns him to uselessness.

"Precisely thus it is with Christian men. The member of the church who has taken his church membership nominally and from year to year has never tried to gird on himself God's soldier armor, finds in time of test that he can't support the weight of helmet, breastplate, and buckler that the Lord furnishes.

"When a man for many years has sneaked sinuously through the world, avoiding obligation, declining to brace up to responsibility, the slacker's habit gets so fastened on his character that there is no chance for him ever to be anything but a slacker.

"And everywhere, in city and village and country, the church is but half victorious or wholly beaten because its array of duty doers is so small and the discouraging company of the slackers is so large.

"The Christians who come heartily to the Lord's help are a scant few; the many fail of nerve to throw themselves into the conflict.

"From old slackers it is profitless to expect much. But there's hope in the young people, whose temper as Christians is yet to be formed.

"Surely every effort possible should be bent to save young men and women from slackers' faults and slackers' fate.

"Teach the young folk to believe with all their hearts that the only worth while manhood and womanhood is the kind able to command itself at full strength in response to the summons of Christ."

DON'TS FOR YOUNG ELDERS

Don't think you are going to have greater success than your predecessors. Don't be discouraged if you should not have as much.

Don't think to startle the world with your first efforts. Don't be dejected if you find that your audience cannot see even so much in your sermons as you thought there was. Don't think too much about yourself anyway.

Don't think because some aged lady or young girl praises your effort that you are the embodiment of intellectuality.

Don't think because nobody pats you on the shoulder the effort was worthless. One does not know how much good is done by even a few words in what might be called by some a weak effort.

Don't try to "ape" some favorite. Monkeys make poor preachers.

Don't try to make people believe the church belongs to you; you are a member of the church.

Don't think because you are young the Lord cannot speak through you great and eternal truths.

Don't ridicule the manner or language of older toilers who have not enjoyed the advantages that you have.

Don't feel timid because some older elder with a heavy voice is present. If he is a true man you will have his prayer. If he is not then don't care.

Don't try to teach the folks where you are stopping how to bring up children.

Don't hear half that is said or done in the family and don't tell half of what you do hear.

Don't be a judge to decide a contention between man and wife on either side.

Don't be a garbage cart for people to dump the accumulated culch of the branch or neighborhood into, for some other dealer may want to exchange wares and you might wish yourself out of a dirty business.

Don't appoint yourself on a committee to gather up slime, for you do not need to have any for your own use and the Devil has enough agents in that business to keep him going already.

Don't think that you are preaching the gospel when you are only insulting the members of other churches. Don't think that it is persecution for Christ's sake when you become unpopular and close up openings when you thus do preach.

Don't make an appointment without putting forth every reasonable effort to fill it. Don't let Saint or sinner lose confidence in you or your word.

Don't fail to constantly study the books. You cannot teach what you don't know.

Don't scold children, kick the dog, or flirt with the girls.

Don't forget that enemy of souls is always on the alert, and that man alone is no match for him.

Don't neglect to pray.—E X Perience, in SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 48, pp. 69, 70.

MACHU PICCHU, PERU, LOST CITY OF THE INCAS

[In connection with the following clipping from an excellent article in the Century, we suggest that our readers secure a copy of the Geographic Magazine for April, 1913. This entire large number is devoted to the expedition conducted by Professor Hiram Bingham, of Yale University in 1911. There are 188 pages, 250 illustrations, and a panorama of Machu Picchu, six and one half by eighteen inches with context describing the work. It is sent for twenty-five cents to members of the society and should be in the hands of every student of the Book of Mormon. Those not members of the National Geographic Society may join by sending two dollars to the National Geographic Society, Washington, District of Columbia, for the Geographic Magazine for one year.—EDITORS.]

The Incas, using the word broadly, showed an extraordinary liking for building on spots where they had an unbroken outlook over all the surrounding world. Lovers of nature, perhaps, though the apparent complete indifference of their descendants to its charms and moods makes this debatable, they were above all practical fellows, moved less by æsthetic reasons than by an overwhelming dislike to being weakened from the afternoon siesta by a well-aimed boulder. Yet had their only quest been unrivalled situations, that of Machu Picchu could scarcely have been improved upon. Mere words and pictures give faint idea of the unique charm of the place. The earth offers few such views as that from the intihuatana at the top of the town.

The altitude of the city is put at eight thousand five hundred feet and that of the river six thousand five hundred feet, yet it is surprising how clearly, if hushed, the roar of the river comes unbrokenly up the two thousand sheer feet to the invulnerable city. Utterly unpeopled, the visible world is one tumbled mass of gigantic forest-clad mountains rolling away to inaccessible distance-blue ranges rising afar off to snow-capped crests mingled with the sky; not the haggard and sterile Andes of elsewhere, but softened forms so densely wooded that nowhere is a spot of earth visible. Swing round the circle, and on the other side the gaze falls as precipitously into the Urubamba. Three great blue ranges rise one behind the other, growing from blue to purple farther off, the central Cordilleras shutting off all the world beyond, seemingly near at hand, yet only a week of hard travel would attain it. In another direction the rolling ranges, faded to purple, die enticingly away one behind another into the great montana and the region of the Amazon, while masses of pure white clouds come majestically up out of Brazil beyond.—Harry A. Franck, in the July Century.

MINOR EVENTS

Did you notice that little item of news about 400 people being drowned when a Russian passenger steamer was sunk by a mine last week?

Do you recall how many were killed in the railroad wreck in northern Iowa a few weeks ago, or had you forgotten there was such a wreck?

Did you think twice about the fact that American marines were fired on, and some were killed, at the port of Mazatlan the other day, while it was because he refused to salute the flag that we declared war on Huerta?

Did you know that within three weeks our military forces had engaged in a battle in one of the islands of the West Indies?

Had you observed that the Chinese revolution has come to an end?

Did you know that the United States has engaged in four foreign wars since April, 1914?

News values have changed to a marvelous extent in the last two years. It is no longer possible for a tragedy such as the sinking of La Bourgogne in 1898 to make an impression lasting eighteen years, nor is the announcement of a new military clash of vital interest.

Our war with Mexico which is actually in progress but which may not be continued, arouses anxiety yet the impression upon the public mind is as nothing compared with the state of feeling had all Mexico combined behind Huerta two years ago.

The public mind is nervously receptive, and yet it is jaded. A report that Japan is backing Mexico receives easy credence, when reflection would make it clear that for Japan to back Mexico at this time would disrupt the Anglo-Japanese alliance. All such ordinary events as the drowning of 400 people, fatal rail accidents and minor wars are glossed over and forgotten in a day or a week.—Des Moines Register, June 26, 1916.

CHURCHES FOR NATIONAL PROHIBITION

The Methodist Episcopal Church, with a membership of 5,000,000; the Presbyterian Church, with a membership of nearly 2,000,000; the Baptist Church (North and South), with 3,000,000; the Cumberland Presbyterian and other church denominations, in their conventions last month, declared themselves in unmistakable terms for nation-wide prohibition. Ringing utterances have also been made in the past few weeks by ecclesiastics high in the councils of the Episcopal and Catholic churches.—Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

OUR ARMY OF BARTENDERS

The labor problem connected with the withdrawal of the liquor industry from the American labor market is unimportant compared with the other labor problems with which we have to deal. The United States Census figures for 1913 show that the liquor manufacturers employed 62,920 wage earners, to whom $45,252,000 was paid in wages.

The prohibition advocates have not failed to harp upon the fact that the number of wage earners employed and the volume of wages paid by the liquor industry is exceedingly small when the value of its output is taken into consideration as compared with similar items for other important industries. It is pointed out in addition that by no means all of the 62,920 wage earners employed by the liquor industry are specialized laborers who might not expect to secure profitable employment in other industries.

A recent investigator pointed out that the census returns show that there are fewer than 15,000 brewers, distillers, maltsters and rectifiers in the United States. This figure is offered as comprehending all of those who would be deprived of employment in the event of prohibition. The other employees, the writer points out, are of a class of labor which is suitable for engagement in other industries, while the 15,000 who would have to find a new special line of employment compose a number only a little larger than the 10,000 artisans of various kinds in this country who are compelled annually to change one occupation for another.

The writer very properly refuses to regard the shifting of so small a number of specialists as a serious labor problem. Perhaps the worst sufferers from the effect of prohibition upon employment would be the bartenders, of whom there are 100,000 in the United States, according to the census for 1910.—L. Ames Brown, in The North American Review.

Lillian Russell has recently said, "The beauty of woman is never at its highest and best until she has experienced the joys and pains of motherhood. In bringing children into the world a woman fulfills her highest duty to nature; in looking carefully after their bodily health and promoting their physical well-being, she discharges her highest duty to man; and in implanting in their breasts a desire to live up to the highest ideals, she fulfills the highest duty which God has given her. Therefore it is only the mothers of the race who are complete in the fullest sense of the word."

There is food for thought, here. How many mothers we see about us, who struggle painstakingly to have their children finely clad, or who feed them on choice foods, even studying these things conscientiously, that they may provide what is best for the bodies, and yet, who stop there, and consider their duties discharged. They leave it to the kindergarten to teach their children manners, and consideration for others; they leave to the grade school their training in mental efficiency; they leave to the high school or the college the task of preparing them to meet life in its wider phases, and to the Sunday school they leave the task of all moral, religious or spiritual training. All these institutions are good, and we cannot do without them, but none can supply to the child that which should rightly come from its parents, by precept and example. A child receives its "bias" on almost every question through what it receives at home or through what it doesn't receive! A child is not by nature an immoral being, but it is, from the first an unmoral one. All its concepts of life are formed, one by one, as it passes through the school of experience, and it is the privilege of parents to determine largely what those concepts shall be, by determining what those experiences and environments shall be.

The kindergarten motto, "We learn by doing," is never more significant than in this connection. A child is learning every day because he is doing every day; and the mother who does not concern herself with the question of what those activities are, is shutting her eyes to consequences which may often bear bitter fruitage in tears and regrets—futile because untimely.

We have sometimes seen women on the streets, whose little daughters walked just ahead or beside, dressed in elaborate little clothes, which betokened many hours of toil at the needle or ironing board. A glance into the faces of mother and child disclosed this fact: neither was happy! Worried, hurried, wearied lines in the mother's face told of the stress under which the beautiful embroidery was executed; a certain wistfulness and longing about the eyes of the child told of lack of companionship—a sort of "shoved-aside" existence. Is this either right or justifiable? Would not a plain dress and a mother who would take one joyously by the hand and go out into the wonderful realm of nature, and unfold to one's eyes and mind untold and undreamed-of mysteries and treasure, be a far richer inheritance for any child than the combination above referred to?

Our Child Welfare Department seeks to interest mothers in what may be done, for the all around development of the child along right and reasonable lines. Much may be done, both collectively and individually, and all mothers should read carefully the message we present this week from the superintendent of this department, Sister Walter Sandy. Her suggestions are practical, and deal with specific things, which make them doubly valuable. Her work is more detailed and outlined in the Year Book, now available to you, and all should get it without delay. Write to Sister Sandy freely for any further ideas you may desire. Stepping Stones will, also, occasionally have suggestions for the children's playtime.

From the Superintendent of the Child Welfare Department

Some changes were made at the recent General Convention in the departments of the Woman's Auxiliary. The study of the theory of the work in all its phases was placed under the heading "Educational Department." It constitutes the great backbone of the structure of our auxiliary work; from it, the other departments may draw, as they need, information that will help them in their particular lines—lists of books for study, and other valuable assistance.

Some new departments were created, and these must of necessity outline their plans of work to the women before such work can be understood and undertaken. These departments must, through our columns, enlist the cooperation of the mothers, by presenting their plans in a comprehensive way, so that interest may be aroused in each locality sufficiently great to stimulate activities along these lines.

I have been asked to explain the work of my department: the Child Welfare Department. This work is intended to deal with the problems of the child in its home, at school and in its recreations, and to reach the mothers of children, individually or as neighboring groups of mothers, that the conditions of our children, and the conditions of the children with whom ours associate, may be bettered.

The need of this work is great, for there has never been a time in the history of the race, when children have been so petted and spoiled, so humored and praised, and so little controlled or guided as they are at the present time. In trying to develop the individuality of our children we have gone to the other extreme and are failing to teach them that responsibility to themselves, their parents, their neighbors and their God, that should be the foundation of their training. It is now our duty, as mothers, to turn about and face our obligations squarely, and do all in our power to train our children right.

As women, we hold the destiny of our community in our hands. Our homes are on the level of the women who dwell in them. Our towns are on the level of the homes; what women are, our homes will be, and what the towns are, our men will be, and our children will be the product of both the homes and the towns. There will always be a great need for personal service; for the weak, the sick, the unfortunate, the distressed are in each neighborhood, but especially do the children need the personal contact that uplifts.

You may train your own children ever so well; you may be ever so careful of their morals; they may reflect great credit upon you as a careful mother, but if your neighbor fails to meet her obligations as a mother and allows her children to grow up in a slipshod manner, your children are never safe, and you must not sit at ease thinking your work is well done. Through your efforts that neighbor may be aroused to better things; the mothers in your neighborhood may all be united to bring about the ideal training to the end that each home will be a safe shelter for all children. The town is on the level of the homes, and thus, through the influence of the groups of mothers the integrity of the community is raised, and the women themselves better prepared to meet issues as they arise and to settle them in a wise manner.

What will it profit you to raise your little daughter to ideals of right and purity if your neighbor fails to train her little son along the same lines? Will there be good enough in the character of the one to conquer the evil in the other, when the day of temptation shall come? God only knows; more than one pure-minded girl has gone down before like temptation!

I am sure that every mother will feel that this is a work that should be accomplished; and, busy as we all are, we must each take time to attend to it. Don't think "some one else can attend to it for me," but rather step forward and say, "I have come to help!"

It need not take a great deal of your time to interest the mothers about you, concerning the welfare of their children. Perhaps you already have a little neighborhood club that meets around at the homes. Just take your message to them one afternoon; tell them of the child welfare work under the heading described above, the outline of which may be found in the Year Book. Enter this as a new feature of your club work and watch the results. If you have no such club already, just invite the neighbors in, some afternoon, for a social visit and an explanation of the work, and thus get it started while your interest is fresh in the matter. When you meet again in one, three, or six months, have every mother bring some article or hint on child training that will be helpful to others. Some of the work may be carried on through parent-teacher associations, after the summer is over.

It is not a part of my policy to have the mothers meet in monthly sessions, in order to carry on this work, unless they so desire. This may or may not be, but any mother, even the isolated one, can become a member of this department by sending me her name and address, and paying the yearly dues to the Woman's Auxiliary, which are but ten cents. She should report to the nearest Woman's Auxiliary society, or to me every six months, of the work she has tried to accomplish in her neighborhood. I will be glad to furnish any information you may require.

The Year Book will be ready for mailing soon, and will be a great help to all of us in our work; each mother should secure a copy and get in close touch with all the phases of the Woman's Auxiliary work.

Reports to the Late General Convention

REPORT OF THE HOME AND CHILD WELFARE DEPARTMENT

The membership of this department for 1915 numbers 752. We have forty locals reporting, seven not reporting; six new locals have been added.

There were forty-seven locals subscribing for the monthly leaflet last year. This number fluctuated continually however because some discontinued their subscription and others began.

Two hundred and ninety-nine meetings have been held, the nature of almost all have been the study and discussion of the monthly leaflet. The majority of home and child welfare locals are associated with sewing and aid locals, the time of meeting being divided between them, usually an hour for study and the remainder of the time for sewing.

The total amount of money raised, according to reports of home and child welfare locals is $1,287.07. Of this $496.67 has been raised by home and child welfare locals alone and $790.40 where home and child welfare locals have been associated with other locals.

The money was raised for the Children's Home, Sanitarium, local church debts and repairs and branch expenses.

As to my personal work in the department, I prepared an article last summer on the aims and object of the home and child welfare work which first appeared in the Woman's Auxiliary column in Zion's Ensign and later in leaflet form. Some good may have resulted but only a few came forward to enlist in the larger service of greater parenthood.

I attended the Far West reunion by request of the president and presented the auxiliary work there, first caring for the children of the camp by holding two sessions per day for them where with many willing hearts and hands to assist, we conducted handwork, gave simple health talks, taught finger plays and had music and games. A young woman's department was formed and a district organization was effected.

I feel that this important department of the Woman's Auxiliary could well occupy the entire time of a superintendent, could such a one be found. I regret that I have not been able to do more and hope to see the department placed in hands more free for the furtherance of this cause.

Trusting the work of the convention will result in a great forward movement for the auxiliary.

REPORT OF EDUCATIONAL AND LITERARY DEPARTMENT

Combined locals, (those doing educational work in connection with aid work or home and child welfare work): 1, Grand Rapids, Michigan; 2, Somerville, Massachusetts; 3, Webb City, Missouri.

Educational classes or study clubs organized separately: 1, Saint Joseph, Missouri met semiannually, average attendance 5. Subject studied, "The mind and its education" by Charles M. Betts; 2, Omaha, Nebraska; 3, Fresno, California; 4, Lamoni, Iowa.

Meet now every Monday; met every two weeks through 1915. Members about 50. Many new ones last two meetings. Average attendance about 25 for the year. Two classes, one in English and one in history of education. New class organized in psychology. The two meet one Monday, and then unite the alternate Mondays for psychology.

Paid one scholarship, voted another for next year, and have nearly enough money on hand to pay it.

There are several other locals who wrote early in the year about organizing this department too. I sent material and suggestions and told them to report organizations to general secretary.

Field workers who report that they have been working and have had material sent out. One or two have just written for material recently.

1, Mrs. W. C. George; 2 Mrs. P. W. Martin; 3, Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger.

Late requests have come, to which I am mailing leaflets. There are good prospects for organizations at Spearfish, South Dakota, and Scammon, Kansas.

ROXBURY, MASSACHUSETTS, March 4, 1916.

MRS. S. R. BURGESS,

Dear Sister: I am in receipt of your communication of recent date wherein you ask for report on the work of the past year.

While I appreciate the fact that perhaps I have done but very little, I do not know as I can offer at this time even any better plan than that which has been followed. As you are aware, I have gotten out a paper on some special subject each month, and same has been printed in the Ensign or some other publication.

My idea, of course, was that in this way it would reach every branch and serve as a basis for discussion and the writing of other papers along the same line by different members. For your benefit, I am enclosing a list of the papers I have written, and within a few days I shall send a paper to be read at General Conference, and also one to be read and discussed at the regular meeting of the department. If, however, you have any further suggestions to offer, I should be very glad to hear from you.

Altogether I appreciate the fact that one cannot decline a position which has not been tendered, still I would ask you to see to it that my name is not presented at General Conference. I assure you that my interest in the work is in no way lessened, but I am really unable to give it the attention that it demands on account of my other work and duties.

Very sincerely yours,

JENNIE M. STUDLEY.

REPORT OF HISTORY COMMITTEE

During the early part of last year I made plans for my work, looking forward to having time to go on with the work of the history of the society, to the extent of getting my book out once and trying to pick up the threads where I left off before, but always there would come up questions relative to the general work of the society that needed consultation and thought, so that I could not settle my mind on the history. So I have utterly failed this year to get anything done.

Now if the body wishes to continue me on that committee, I ask that it relieve me of all other obligations.

MRS. B. C. SMITH.

Auxiliary Echoes

From the first word of the inspiring prayer offered by Brother R. Archibald, to the three-minute speech by the vice president on "Rags," our June district meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was a blessed experience.

Interested attention was given to the excellent address of Sister S. R. Burgess on "The work of American women"; to Sister Granville Trowbridge; "A plea for the Children's Home"; to the original poem of Sister H. Brunkhorst, and the reading given by Sister Kate Thomas.

A delightful chorus by the Oriole girls, Sister Louis Joerndt in charge, solos by little Celeste Peach and Sister Rob Lloyd, were very much enjoyed, rounding out a well-balanced program.

Every minute of our allotted time was indeed well spent.

"To serve thee Lord, with gladness,

This is our work to-day."

MARY VOLZ, President Saint Louis District Woman's Auxiliary.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA

A Message from the Past

Some time ago we secured a promise from Sister Walker who more than any other one, should receive the credit for the establishment of our Children's Home, that she would write something for the children to be published in this column, but since then Sister Walker has been very ill and has canceled her promise to write. As the next best thing we here present some things she wrote to children many years ago. We hope the children generally and especially our children at the home will read these words, and see to it that no evil habits or wicked deeds enter into their lives to destroy their characters as the worm destroys the bud. The following paragraphs are from her pen:

WORMS IN THE BUD

Perhaps my little friends will now say, "Since 'Frances' has resolved to reap the field, we shall no longer lack for bread." Not so fast, my little friends. I truly wish it were so, wish with all my heart that I could furnish every number of the HERALD with a well-written article for you, dear children. But alas! many other cares and duties press upon me, and then let me be willing as I may, I know that much I say is said in far too clumsy and uninteresting a manner to chain your attention and win you over to the truths I wish you to learn. But I am not going to despair, however, for I love you, and desire your good, and I wish you to grow up to be bright and shining lights in the kingdom of our God. I know that among you, are those who shall assist in building up his kingdom, and if I cannot reap in the great harvest field of the world, I will cheerfully glean the few grains of truth and wisdom I may be able to, and they shall all be for your table, my little friends, until I hope others will come forward with all the precious stores of knowledge they keep so jealously locked up, and spread you a feast worthy of a king.

The springtime is coming, the birds will soon be here with joyous songs, and the bright flowers will open their petals to drink in the gentle rain, and sparkling dew. Some will shed fragrance all about them. The gentle winds will bear it away, and it shall be as sweet incense to many a careworn heart and aching brow. The leaf will fall, and its mission accomplished, it will gently pass away. Upon the same stem perchance will grow another, but its leaves will never be unfolded, it will never gladden the eye with its beauty, nor the soul with its fragrance. A feeble attempt to open into bloom and it droops and withers, never having cheered a single heart, or given to the air a breath of sweetness.

My little readers, there is some reason for this. The same root drank in from the earth life and nourishment for both. The same sun warmed and cheered them, while the gentle shower and silvery cloud visited them alike, and yet, one is a thing of beauty to gladden every heart, the other only a thing to be plucked off and cast away. Why is it?

A worm in the bud! Is that the reason, my little friend? Yes. Well, how came it there, and what right had it to rob this pretty bud of all its future promise? What right! Softly, my little friend. One question at a time. How came it there? Perchance for want of watchful care upon the gardener's part. The bud was but a very little one as yet, and the mother worm chose this little bud to lay her egg upon, from the very fact that it was little, and therefore less likely to attract the attention of anyone who might destroy the worm before the worm should destroy the flower. What right had it there? Just this right. God suffered is to possess life, and though he never intended it to destroy the lovely flowers, those who guard them must beware and protect them from their enemies, lest they fall a prey to the destroyers of beauty, before they open in gladness to the light.

And now, dear little friends, I want to tell you; that your springtime is already here. Bright, joyous, glad springtime of your lives. You are in your homes, as the opening buds in the garden. Oh, how I wish that each one of you would grow up to manhood or womanhood like the lovely rose, shedding abroad the pure fragrance of good, honest, useful lives, to cheer, bless and gladden others, even as the lovely rose gives forth its fragrance upon the morning air, and gladdens all who look upon it.

How perfect, how lovely, how beautiful, exclaim all who behold it! Yes; it is. God made the flowers, and I love them. I praise him for his goodness while I behold them, and feel purer and better for communion with them—silent companions though they be.

Perfect, lovely, and beautiful though they are, they are not one half so lovely and beautiful as you, my little friends are—if there be no worm in the bud of your life. The rose will bloom for a few brief hours, then its leaves will fall and it will be forgotten; but for you is just opening a day whose sun shall never set, a life which shall never end. I know that you, too, like the rose, shall fade and die, you may even pass away in your glad springtime; but though we call it death, and speak of you as dead, you will live to God, and still shall live through all eternity. As the rose dies, you cannot die, for though the house in which you live may go to decay, what matter? You still live, and must live forever.

Now, dear children, there are many worms, which hide themselves in the buds of opening flowers; and when I speak now of buds, I do not mean the bud of rose or violet, pink or lily; but I mean the hearts of little boys and girls. Hiding themselves there they grow and develop, until if they be not destroyed, they will destroy all the beauty, all the usefulness of your lives, and like the worm-eaten bud you will fall to the ground, never having blessed a single life, or rendered the world happier or better by having lived.

Promise me one thing, my little friends, and I will then say adieu for the present. Hereafter I will tell you what some of these worms are, and I want you to promise me that you will search in your hearts, and see if any one of them is there, destroying the usefulness and beauty of your opening lives. Will you promise?

For we know not every morrow
Can be sad;
So, forgetting all the sorrow
We have had,
Let us fold away our fears,
And put by our foolish tears,
And through all the coming years
Just be glad.

Criticisms Examined.—Part 1

(The following reply grew out of a correspondence had between Pastor Hudgings of the Millennial Dawn movement and myself. The article answered was published in The Bible Student's Monthly, volume 7, number 8, no date, but was issued about September, 1915. The article is headed, "Reply to an elder of a Reorganized 'Mormon' Church, concerning startling divergences between the Book of Mormon and God's inspired word the Bible." The elder referred to was the writer. The reply follows.—J. M. T.)

MR. W. F. HUDGINGS,

Dear Sir and Brother: Just received by the hand of our mutual friend, Mr. Fred Nicholson, yours of the 27th ult. containing proof sheet of an article prepared for publication in answer to my communication to you.

I attribute to you the need of honesty, but as you plainly prove, honesty expended upon an error can but in the end prove a disappointment. Any theory or creed not founded on eternal truth, though honestly advocated, is disastrous in the end. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." (Isaiah 8:20.)

The whole Christian system is based on the eternal justice and wisdom and power and love of God, being perfect in all these attributes, and unchangeable. In your first effort you do violence to this principle by making man responsible for Adam's transgression. Why should I be held to account for another's transgression? The punishment referred to in our creed, also in the Book of Mormon, also in the blessed Bible, is the punishment meted out at the judgment when every man will be rewarded according to his works. (Matthew 16:27; John 5:29.) They that have done good will come forth in the resurrection of life—they that have done evil in the resurrection of damnation. Notice, each man's place is determined by what he has done, not by what Adam did.

I wonder at your straining a point to create out of whole cloth an apparent "divergence." You are encroaching on infidelic grounds in their efforts to show "divergence" between the Bible and facts. We are in this alienated condition because of the transgression of Adam, but that has been overcome by the atonement of Christ, who has paid the price, and without any volition on our part will bring us back in the resurrection into the presence of God, to be judged, rewarded, or punished each for his own life, and not for Adam's.

You can surely see divine justice in this. The Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants (Lamoni edition), all agree on this doctrine. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive: but every man in his own order." (1 Corinthians 15:22, 23.) The resurrection is to reach all, as noted in the 26th verse. The different orders are represented as different glories. (See verses 3, 6 to 44.)

I will now take up your objections in their order.

1. "It [the Book of Mormon] teaches the doctrine of future torment, which is a libel on the character and purpose of a just and loving Creator. The Bible to the contrary explains that the wicked shall be punished with everlasting destruction—not everlasting preservation. (2 Thessalonians 1:9.)"

Future punishment of the wicked as taught in the Book of Mormon is identical with the teaching of the Bible—not the extreme doctrine of everlasting burning, but a correlative punishment, a just penalty for transgression of law, with a hope of being brought out of the prison house when the penalty will have answered its disciplinary ends on the punished. The Savior says, "Thou shalt not come out till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing." (Matthew 5:25, 26.) The hosts of the high ones shall be punished—gathered as prisoners are gathered in a pit—prison house—and after many days shall be visited. (Isaiah 24:21, 22.)

Here people are "destroyed" from earth life and are "preserved" in the pit or prison house, neither unconscious nor annihilated.

"By the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth the prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." (Zechariah 9:11.) Jesus preached to the spirits in prison—conscious, living spirits. The "rich man" died and went to the prison "wherein was no water," and prayed for help, a mere drop of water. (See 1 Peter 3:18, also 4:6 gives the reason why. See Ephesians 4:8-10.) Jesus descended into the lower parts of the earth, led captivity captive, conquered the enemy, wrenched from him the keys of death and hell, unlocked Joseph's new tomb and arose triumphant, and said to John, "I am alive forevermore, and have the keys of death and hell." (Revelation 1:18.) The Psalmist David said, "The heathen nations are given to Christ for his possession and the earth for his inheritance." If you will read carefully the second book of Nephi 6:1-9, also Doctrine and Covenants 76, you will find the same beautiful truths taught.

2. "Mormonism teaches that the great Jehovah, the all-powerful One who inhabited eternity was at one time an imperfect, sinful, wretched human mortal. It is an oft-repeated phrase in Mormon literature by your foremost writers as an eternal truth, as man now is God once was; as God now is man may become."

In this you may make a misleading and malicious statement. Remember you have acknowledged a distinction in the organizations, and you state you are answering an elder of "a Reorganized 'Mormon' Church." With this view I denounce this as an unchristian, unkind effort to gain a point by unfair means. I defy you or your organization, if you have one, to produce one syllable from any of our authorized books, Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants, to support your misleading assertion. Produce your evidence or make honorable amends.

If this refers to some other people or church, why did you not as a fair controversialist, make the distinction in your article? I submit the following quotations:

"I am the Lord. I change not."—Bible.

"God is not a partial God, neither a changeable being, but from all eternity to all eternity."—Book of Mormon.

"Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the same to-day and yesterday and forever."—Doctrine and Covenants 34:1.

These three agree in one.

3. "The Book of Mormon teaches that the very body which goes down into the grave will be the body that will be resurrected. (2 Nephi 6:5.) This is in violation of Saint Paul's statement, 'How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come? Thou fool—thou sowest not that body that shall be.'"

In this you place an extreme and dangerous construction on Nephi's statement to make it conflict with Paul. A liberal and reasonable interpretation would remove the apparent conflict. Jehoiakim slew Urijah and cast his dead body into the graves of the common people. Note, this was Urijah's dead body. (Jeremiah 26:13.) Isaiah says, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise." By placing your extreme construction you would create the same conflict between Isaiah and Paul that you think you have made between Nephi and Paul. Would it not be better to place a correct and reasonable construction, and say we shall receive the same body in form and identity in which the same spirit as the life principle will dwell, as wheat from the life germ reproduces of its kind? The same body with mortality changed to immortality. (1 Corinthians 15:53.)

The apparent "divergence" disappears when a sane construction is put upon it, and the record of Nephi and Paul are to be in perfect harmony.

4. Your fourth objection is too lengthy to reproduce, but the gist of it is a quotation from Mosiah 8:6, giving the heathen a part in the first resurrection, then follows the statement, "The Bible on the contrary clearly teaches that only the church (established at his first advent) will have part in the first resurrection. (Revelation 20:4-6.) Even John the Baptist who was the last of the prophets and probably the greatest of them, having died a few months before Jesus' death, was not privileged to be counted as a member of the kingdom class, the gospel church which was not fully established until Pentecost. He, like all other ancient worthies, will come forth and be given perfect life on the human plane."

The "divergence" here is not between the Book of Mormon and the Bible, but between the peculiar and erroneous position of pastor Russell and the Book of Mormon, and we add the Bible also, both of which are in opposition to the peculiar views here stated. That the heathen will have part on this earth with Christ is plainly taught in Psalm 2:3, "I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thine inheritance." This is when the Lord will "set my kingdom upon my holy hill Zion." (Verse 6.) "When the Lord shall build up Zion he shall appear in his glory—the heathen shall fear the name of the Lord."—Psalm 102.

That there will be those on earth after the coming of Christ and the first resurrection is plainly taught by the Prophet Zechariah in his 14th chapter. Justice demands that those who knew no law shall be brought under the righteous rule of Christ during the thousand years of discipline.

As we take a second look at the theory of Pastor Russell, we discover a decided divergence between that and the foundational doctrine of all true theology, namely, God's impartiality, unchangeability, wisdom and power, and "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and forever." A theory is peculiar that will consign such men as Adam, Noah, Enoch, Abraham, Elijah, to an inferior place in the kingdom of God, and because poor John the Baptist, a man sent from God, of whom Jesus said a greater was never born, and Stephen the protomartyr, because they were compelled to yield their lives as martyrs just a short time before "Calvary" must take second place in the kingdom of God. What greater service could they have rendered? John on Patmos saw their souls under the altar, "and white robes were given to every one of them." (Revelation 6:9.)

(To be concluded.)

Bronson-Departee Debate

The Bronson-Departee debate began June 3 and closed last Tuesday evening. This debate was agreed upon for twelve nights, but the good Methodist parson was so badly whipped on the ninth evening that he called it off and left for his home the following morning. A great victory has been won for the cause of Christ. Brother Bronson is an able defender of the gospel, and gains the respect and love of all by the kind and brotherly spirit that he seems always to enjoy.

The usual church propositions were under discussion, Brother Bronson affirming our church first. Reverend Departee had very little to say against our church doctrines. He only tried to prove the founder of the church and some of the followers were bad men, but in this he was not successful, as Brother Bronson was able to show the audience that he was using our enemies to prove his statements. Brother Bronson told him to bring on the very worst evidence he could produce, as he was prepared to meet a gentleman or an infidel, he did not care which. Reverend Departee said he did not expect to do much while he was in the negative, but when he got to affirming his church, Brother Bronson would have to follow him. Brother Bronson told him he would if he stayed by the propositions, but he said he was there to expose Methodist doctrine, and that he was going to do so.

The first night that the Methodist Church was up for examination Reverend Departee said he thought he had his opponent on the run now, so when Brother Bronson got up he told the audience that Departee had him on the run to the water, for several had already given in their names for baptism, and some of Departee's own flock.

Christ spoke of sheep without a shepherd, but it looks as though there would be two or three shepherds here without any sheep. One good old lady was heard to say she had been a Methodist all her life, but she was afraid she could not be any longer. When the shepherds began to see that their flocks were getting badly scattered, they tried to put an end to it. They held two special prayer meetings that the debate would close, but the God they were praying to seemed to have gone out of business, or at any rate they could not get in touch with him, so then they got a lady minister to come in and start preaching in one of the churches, but this proved a failure also. Then they tried street preaching, but all in vain. The debate was held in the hall and about five hundred people were attending it. One lady started the report that she had seen Brother Bronson in the reform school two years before. She came out to the meetings and then she went to Brother Bronson and apologized.

Another lady said she wrote to Salt Lake City and asked if Brother Bronson was one of their men and they wrote back that he was. But the Devil was defeated in every move he undertook. One of the high-school teachers here said she had heard Billy Sunday preach, but Brother Bronson was far ahead of him.

Reverend Departee said that his grandmother used to know Joseph Smith the Martyr, that she took care of him when he was sick. So when Brother Bronson got up he said there was something queer about the grandmother's stories. Wherever he went, with but few exceptions, he heard some of those stories, and he said it seemed rather strange to him if Joseph Smith was such a bad man he could not see what so many of those old grandmothers were hanging around him for. This rather aroused the Reverend Departee. He said he did not think that Brother Bronson would stoop so low as to throw any reflection on a Christian lady, but when Brother Bronson got up he told the audience that since Reverend Departee took offense at what he had said about his grandmother, it seemed to make considerable difference whose ox was gored. He told him he would get up and slander a brother of his in Christ Jesus, but he thought he should not say anything about his folks.

Another time Brother Bronson was reading the twelfth chapter of Revelation to prove the church was removed from the earth. So when Reverend Departee got up he read from the writings of Adam Clark, that that was referring to a time before Christ, and that there were no commentators who professed or even tried to put an interpretation on the book of Revelation. Brother Bronson asked him if he was ready to buy all the works of commentators that he could produce. Then he read from over fifteen or twenty different commentators that interpreted it about the same as we do. He dropped that as he had to drop everything else he brought up. He certainly was a gentleman to debate with, as he never threw any "mud," as they generally do. The Saints are all rejoicing over the victory that has been won. I think this is one of the best ways to get the gospel before the world.

Ever praying that the gospel will continue to spread, and that we may all try to do our best. We can't all fill the place our brother fills, but the good Lord only expects us to make good use of the talent he has intrusted to our care.

May the Lord bless and protect his children is my prayer.

R. NEWBY.

CULDESAC, IDAHO, June 17, 1916.

LOCK NO. 4, PENNSYLVANIA, June 16, 1916.

Editors Herald: A little over a year ago I wrote my first letter to the HERALD, to let its readers know that we enjoy their letters. They inspire us, and make the HERALD a welcome visitor to our home. All the Saints should have the HERALD in their homes. We get meat that some know not of. That is what Jesus said to his disciples when they wanted him to eat.

We are bearing our testimony to our neighbors, to let them know that we are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. In this way we have baptized fifty into our branch the last fifteen months. This has caused Satan's company to rise up in war against the Saints.

We were holding meetings in a schoolhouse near Charlevoix, Pennsylvania, and had an extra good attendance. We had Brother J. C. McConnaughy and Brother John Carlisle, and they were greatly blessed, much to the satisfaction of the best citizens of the neighborhood, which gave us a full house. But the proselytizing preachers got after the school directors and closed the house and the people who came out to our meetings are up in arms and taking the two brethren from house to house. Many are calling for the Book of Mormon and other books of the church. The preachers had notified their members to stay away from our meetings. Their allotted salaries are not coming as fast as they used to come a year ago. Their members are demanding answers to questions and they cannot give them satisfaction. They only say, "Stay away from the Mormons, they will tell anything."

But even the outsiders invite the people out to hear the servants of God tell the message, which they bring to them who will hear and obey, and which will make them heirs to salvation. The additional members who have come in lately are helping break down the strong forts of Satan.

We are having some cheery days and some cloudy ones. While we have increased to the number stated above, we have lost four by death of late. Our Sister Arthur Barker, of Monessen, passed away recently. She was loved and is missed by a host of friends, and especially by the missionaries who always had a welcome home with her. We would like for the Saint Thomas, Canada, and other Canadian Saints who knew Sister Barker, to take notice of her death, for she always talked of the Saints and friends of Canada.

Our brother Ganble lost one of his little boys, about nine years of age. The hand of death seems to be on the world of sinners, and the Saints are visited, but there is a promise for the Saints that they can prepare to meet those who are faithful and gone before.

We have a good Sunday school at Lock No. 4, and also at Fayette City. We also have a good many friends both to our church and to our Sunday school.

We are alive yet, and want to live to see Zion redeemed and souls gathered into the fold.

Your brother in the gospel.

SAMUEL GASKILL.

TUCUMCARI, NEW MEXICO, June 21, 1916.

Editors Herald: Conditions here are not flattering. A big revival, carried on by the union of the various churches of Tucumcari, is taking place now. I inclose a pastoral notice to the Saints in this region. [See Miscellaneous Department.]

Yours in gospel bonds,

A. J. LAYLAND.

[Even though we gave two versions of the trainmen's demands, from equally good authorities, it seems neither was right. We are glad to print the following from a brother who knows.—EDITORS.]

SAN MARCIAL, NEW MEXICO, June 24, 1916.

Editors Herald: I notice on page 588 of the HERALD of June 21, 1916, that you state that the train and enginemmen are asking for an eight-hour day and double pay for overtime. There is a mistake in this, as we are asking for an eight-hour day and time and one half for overtime. That is fifty per cent more pay after the eight-hour period, if required to work beyond that length of time.

Your brother,

ANTHONY ROBINSON.

HAILEYVILLE, OKLAHOMA, June 23, 1916.

Editors Herald: On or about June 6 I began a series of meetings in Muskogee, Oklahoma, at the home of Brother and Sister Wilfred Z. Kieth. I wrote up ads for city papers with the following results: Brother and Sister J. D. Weaver, formerly of Nevada, Missouri, hunted us up and attended regularly, greeting us warmly; we troubled the waters of the city park lake on the 11th by permission of park board; found the smartest man in the world, who knew Joseph Smith the Seer and his fifteen wives real well, being near neighbors. He is now sixty years old. Wonderful memory. Twelve years before he was born. Next!

Among the Lamanites

I will drop your valuable column a few lines to let you know that I have been a busy man since I landed in Oklahoma, the first of May. Brother A. W. Sanders and wife, and Sister Ruth Sorden and I made an eight-hundred-mile trip over the northwestern part of Oklahoma as far west as Guyman, Texas County, and visited scattered Saints. At Freedom we stopped and held a two-day meeting to the joy of the Freedom Saints. We enjoyed the Spirit as we worshiped at that place. We found the field white and all ready for the harvest, but the laborers are few. There is a golden opportunity in Western Oklahoma District. Calls from far and near come for preaching.

On our way back we spoke one night at Seiling to a good house, and one night at the brick church, eight miles south of town. Brother Hight, late of Magnolia, Iowa, was put in as branch president. On June 3, we landed in Eagle City. I left the Ford at this place, Brother and Sister Sanders and Sister Sorden going on to Calumet.

I stopped and broke the bread of life to the Saints at this place for a week. Numerous calls for administration to the sick have resulted in speedy relief for the suffering ones, so the Lord follows with the signs following the believer. His promises are for the faithful.

On the 8th I left and went to Red Rock to Brother David Pettit's house. Saturday we had an all-day meeting to a good crowd gathered at Brother Pettit's place. The Lamanites were well pleased with the services and thanked me for the words I told them. I had good liberty. The Saints have been left as sheep without a shepherd. The reason is that we haven't enough men in the field.

Sunday, the 11th, I attended one of their meetings, in the forenoon, and by invitation spoke to a large crowd and ate dinner with them. They spoke as though they appreciated the talk. In the afternoon I went to one of their meetings. The lodge was full, about one hundred had gathered there. They stopped in the middle of their services and gave me a hearing. I spoke to them with good liberty and they replied to me and they were glad I had come among them to teach them of the Bible. They were glad I was not afraid to tell them what was in it, and they said they were thankful for the gospel, and came and shook hands with me.

On the 13th Brother Pettit called the Lamanites together and we had an all-day meeting again. Much good was done; they were eager listeners and seemed glad to have us explain, hour after hour, the two-way chart. They asked all kinds of questions, and liked our teachings that Christ came for all men.

Brother Dave Pettit is a good man. I believe the young generation growing up are the ones that will come in if we can get them to see that the gospel takes the place of their own way of worship, and that there is more light in it than what they have. We have done a good work. Many of them see the reasonableness of the gospel, and the Book of Mormon is another witness that the Lord is unchangeable and that it teaches the same law. The work among them is in its infancy. Much patience will have to be exercised; kindness but firmness. Morality is at a low ebb with some of them. We will have to teach them social purity and cleanliness.

Saturday, the 17th, we had another good meeting with them. I don't know what the results will be. One young man told me he was going to be baptized, and another is near. I am on my way to Witherford, to preach for the Cheyennes. They sent for me to come.

Brother Lemuel Dyke and I are going to put the tent up at Canton, June 30, and start a series of meetings. What the harvest will be we cannot tell. We will trust to the Lord that it will be good. We can only do our duty and live it with the higher powers. I feel like pushing onward and upward, and doing all I can for the Master.

Ever hoping and praying for the advancement of this glorious gospel, I remain,

Your servant in Christ,

H. N. PIERCE.

EAGLE CITY, OKLAHOMA, June 19, 1916.

Spring River District

The last time I wrote you I was at Purcell, Missouri, if I remember correctly. Two noble souls were baptized at the close of the meeting. We went from there to Carthage and had a good meeting. Five were baptized—all adults.

After the conference at Scammon, Kansas, we went to Vera, Oklahoma, where we found some of the old stand-bys at their post of duty. A good many have moved away. While there we arranged to have a get-to-gether meeting. On the last Sunday, five auto loads came over from Nowata, two from Skiatook, some in rigs, one auto from Tulsa, a number from Bartlesville, and also from Collinsville, all bringing their baskets well filled. I don't know how to express it better than to say we had a rousing time. Everybody went away feeling it was worth the effort.

Then away to the General Conference and conventions. We enjoyed the conference the best of any we have ever attended.

After the necessary things were done at home, such as fixing the yard fence, painting the house, hanging screen doors and other things too numerous to mention, we commenced another year's work. I preached a couple of weeks at Purcell and baptized a man and his wife. Then came to Carthage for two nights. I found the Saints here active in the work. Their Sunday school is getting too large for their room. At Webb City at the conference, we met Brethren Ellis Short, Stegfried, Fry, Silvers, and Dudd, all in the best of spirits. The conference was good. Some say it was the best one we have had for some time. The Webb City Saints made all feel welcome. Brother Fry and myself were at Joplin a few days, arranging for the reunion that will commence August 4 and last ten days. Don't forget the date. We have invited Brethren Elbert A. Smith and Frederick A. Smith, with Sister E. S. McNichols to take charge of the singing. We hope everybody will come that can. Let us make this reunion one of the best yet.

I came to this place the 10th and commenced meetings in the schoolhouse. We have had good crowds so far.

With love and best wishes to all,

As ever, your brother,

LEE QUICK.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

On Sunday morning, June 25, through the gift of prophecy the Lord gave cheer to his people assembled in prayer meeting, and at the morning service Bishop B. R. McGuire delivered before a well-filled house an impressive sermon, exhorting the Saints to lead a holy life, and to heed every principle laid down in the revelations of God.

Our brother, lately arrived here, greets us with a gentle yet expressive manner of speech, as though he were thoroughly awake to the needs of the hour, when the Saints are more than ever before seeking the aid of the Spirit, and praying for conditions favorable to the healing of the sick and afflicted, the turning of our young people from the allurements of the world, the supporting by our faith and works those who are chosen vessels in charge of the work, and the bringing to pass the great purpose of our Father concerning his people. Brother William Clow, a pioneer in Sunday school work, was announced for the evening service.

The Sunday school and Religio with their home department work are, with faithful teachers in charge, holding their own, being fairly well attended. Attendance yesterday of Sunday school was 859, and Mother's Day and Children's Day were occasions of delight and satisfaction to both young and old.

The musicians and speakers performed well their parts in the programs and Children's Day presented several features of special interest, among them the graduation exercises of the cradle roll, the presentation of a token of appreciation to our worthy superintendent, D. J. Krahl, and the baptism of nearly thirty children, with confirmation following.

The Sunday afternoon prayer meetings have generally been well attended and very good interest has been shown in the third-Sunday lectures and culture classes. President "Fred. M." was present at the service yesterday and gave the Saints a vital fact statement on criticism. The statement or counsel was that in case there should thoughts of unfavorable criticism arise, it is better to pray over the matter.

The church services have been in charge, of late, of our faithful home ministers, Brethren Luff, Harrington, Rushton, Parsons, T. C. Kelley, E. L. Kelley, and others who supplemented the efficient effort of our late memorable General Conference supporters.

Through the sacrifices and labors of our Woman's Auxiliary workers, aided by the Saints in general, several debts have been paid. The Brother Joseph memorial fund and other expenses have been well attended to.

A very delightful affair took place at the hall on the 23d, which was a reception given to Brother G. E. Harrington and family, an occasion long to be remembered. A slight token of love and esteem, a purse of fifty dollars, was presented.

May our vision of the beauty of this glorious work continue to brighten, is our prayer.

Your sister in the gospel covenant,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

The Bishopric

APPOINTMENT OF AGENTS

Arrangements having been made to transfer Bishop Charles J. Hunt from the Gallands Grove, Iowa District to the stake to be known as the Holden Stake, Carl E. Anderson, Box 43, Webster City, Iowa, is hereby appointed as his successor, having received the indorsement of Bishop Hunt and the district conference. We trust that the Saints of the Gallands Grove District will give to Brother Anderson the same support that they have to Bishop Hunt. When we honor the men that are placed in positions of trust and responsibility, we honor God and are entitled to his blessings.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Elder A. E. Starks, of Onaway, Michigan, is hereby appointed bishop's agent of the Northern Michigan District, to succeed J. C. Goodman. We trust the Saints of this district will support Brother Starks in this work, forwarding your tithes and offerings to him. Your assistance along financial lines is needed in order that the Lord's word may prosper. Blessings follow our obedience to any commandment the Lord has given, and there comes that satisfaction that brings comfort and peace with it.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 26, 1916.

Owing to the removal of Brother H. S. Lytle from the Northern Nebraska District, we hereby appoint Brother James Huff, 4530 South Twelfth Street, Omaha Nebraska, to receive the tithes and offerings of the Saints in that district. This appointment has received the ratification of the district conference. We appreciate very much the services rendered by Brother Lytle and trust the Saints shall support Brother Huff in his office and calling.

As Saints we should sense the fact that the gospel work is spreading more and more each year and that there are large numbers of poor among us whose needs should be considered. In reading this appointment we should like to have each one of the Saints turn to Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8, and see the emphasis which the Lord has placed upon the thought of assisting the poor and needy. This work can only be accomplished by us in proportion to your willingness to respond to the call of the law.

May God's blessings attend the Saints throughout the districts.

Yours fraternally,

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

THE PERFECT LAW OF LIBERTY

II.—A CHARACTERISTIC PERFECTION

"Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty."

—James.

James mentions one of the leading attributes and one of the chief objectives of the gospel law. The attribute is perfection; the objective is liberty: the perfect law of liberty.

Perfection is something for which man has been struggling for centuries, yet he has seldom attained to perfection in anything, even in detail. When he flatters himself he is successful it is mostly a matter of deluded self-conceit, as suggested in the cynical proverb, "Bachelor's wives and old maid's husbands are always perfect."

The perfect melody has never been composed. The perfect picture has never been painted. The perfect poem has never been written: Joyce Kilmer says:

I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree.

Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

Perfection is an attribute of the divine. Imperfection ever pursues human endeavor. This is true of our law as of all other things. Law is one of the great ideals of the Anglo-Saxon people, nor of them alone by any means, either to-day or yesterday. Back of their law is the Roman law, and back of it still other systems.

For centuries our brightest intellects have striven to perfect the law, yet we ever fall short of our ideal. We devise laws that we think are perfect, presently we outgrow them, then we change or evade them.

Human laws are always experimental, always in evolution. It cannot be otherwise when we consider Blackstone's definition of law: "Law is the embodiment of the moral sentiment of the people."

The moral sentiment of the people changes from generation to generation, from year to year, perhaps imperceptibly from day to day. The blue laws of the Puritan fathers forbade a mother to kiss her baby on the Sabbath Day. To-day if a man had a wife who would not kiss her baby on the Sabbath when she had a good opportunity, might indeed be considered unfortunate.

Humanity cannot conceive, interpret, or execute a perfect law because human brains, hearts, and wills are imperfect, and human power is limited.

God being all-wise and all-powerful can conceive, interpret and execute a perfect law. Hence the Psalmist tells us: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." And James aptly terms it "the perfect law of liberty."

The thought then is impressed upon us most forcibly, How foolish to seek to change or evade the law of God—the perfect gospel law that leads to liberty! Why all this creed making and creed changing? Why this age-long tinkering at the law and changing of the ordinances?

Most pernicious of all perhaps is that attitude of honoring the law while devising ways to evade it. Mr. Mohammed Ali from India told the people of Lamoni some years ago about a law among a certain class of his people, the Patidars.

The law with them is that a girl can be married on a certain day only, and that day comes but once in twelve years. You can imagine how distressing that would be. To pass the first day might not be so bad, but to pass the second would be serious, and to pass the third would be a calamity (from some viewpoints at least, some of course might consider it a fortunate escape).

But that is the law. Great is the law! It must be honored! This is how it is honored. On the fateful day the girl is married to a bunch of flowers. The flowers are thrown into a well. Then she is a widow. And according to the law a widow may marry at any time.

How foolish, we say. Yet we do that with our civil laws constantly. Talented lawyers are employed to teach men how they may safely evade the law to whose service they are supposed to dedicate their lives. Individuals and corporations evade the law while professing to honor it.

Nor is the custom limited to civil laws. Men profess to honor the law of God while evading it. For instance, baptism is enjoined in the law; baptism by immersion, as Jesus was baptized. Men honor the law. Yes, blessed Bible. It was good enough for Moses and it's good enough for me. But while pronouncing their encomiums they are devising a way of evasion. They will be sprinkled. That is as efficacious and reasonable as marrying a bunch of flowers, at least, and no more so.

But this is the lesson that we have ever sought to drive home. The law of God is perfect. To tamper with perfection is to achieve imperfection. The law of God is thus degraded to a human level. It becomes only the embodiment of the moral sentiment of the people, and not the will of God. To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to these it is because there is no light in them.

A perfect salvation demands a perfect obedience to a perfect law. The perfect Lawgiver has given us the perfect law. It remains for us to yield a perfect obedience.

THE KANSAS CITY STAKE

INDEPENDENCE STAKE.—Our readers will be interested in the report of the recent conference at Independence, at which a reorganization took place. See letter from R. S. Salyards in Letter Department.

By night letter from Elder R. S. Salyards we learn of the organization of the Kansas City Stake on the 8th. Elder J. A. Tanner, pastor of the Central Kansas City Branch, was chosen as president, with Seth S. Sandy as counselor. Bishop James F. Keir was chosen as bishop of the stake, and ten members of the stake high council were chosen, but for some reason the telegram only names nine, which are as follows: E. S. Wilcox, W. O. Worden, D. E. Hough, John Tucker, J. A. Harrington, Edward Tucker, C. A. Selbe, S. W. Palmer, W. S. Brown, secretary.

The Sunday school and Religio associations were organized, and details will be given later.

CURRENT EVENTS

NATIONAL GUARD.—On the 3d President Wilson signed the Hay bill which brings members of the national guard into the regular army.

IRISH PRISONERS FREED.—The one thousand and seven hundred Irish men and women now in British prisons for participation in the recent rebellion at Dublin are to be released.

INDORSE SUFFRAGE.—At their recent national convention, the Anti-saloon League of America declared itself in favor of woman suffrage. This is the first time in the twenty-three years of its history the league has taken such action.

BAD STORM.—The Southern States, especially Mississippi and Louisiana, were swept by a bad storm on the 6th and 7th, the reports indicating losses of perhaps more than one hundred lives and an immense amount of property.

TO COLONIZE PALESTINE.—The recent convention of American Zionists at Philadelphia indorsed a plan to organize a million-dollar corporation to conserve Jewish colonies in Palestine and develop the resources of the Holy Land.

NEW WAR SECRETARY.—David Lloyd-George has been appointed secretary for war of Great Britain, succeeding Lord Kitchener. Edwin Samuel Montagu succeeds Lloyd-George as minister of munitions and other important changes have been made in the British Cabinet.

SANTO DOMINGO.—Just preceding a tentative agreement for peace between the factions disagreeing in Dominican affairs, a fight occurred between rebel forces and Americans, in which one American was killed and eight wounded. Twenty-seven Dominicans were killed and five captured.

SUBMARINE ARRIVES.—A German submarine, the Deutschland, carrying a valuable cargo of dyestuffs and mail, put into the harbor of Norfolk, Virginia, on the 9th. It had left some German port June 23 and had an almost uneventful trip. It carried a special message to President Wilson which has as yet not been made public. The vessel is three hundred and fifteen feet long, and carries a crew of twenty-seven. It is supposed it will carry back a cargo of nickel and crude rubber. It carries no arms and it is expected the Government will treat it as a merchant vessel.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS.—Since the epidemic of infantile paralysis assumed its present serious form in New York City about July 1, two hundred and fifty children have died of the disease, almost at the rate of one an hour. New cases are reported from eleven States, extending to California, and some in Canada. State and national aid has been called for and every precaution is being taken in all quarters to prevent spread of the disease, but so far it has defied opposition. Playgrounds in New York City are closed to the public. Thousands of cats and dogs are being chloroformed. Any public gatherings in which children participate are being prohibited and incoming trains in other cities are all inspected for incipient cases and symptoms watched for a period of twenty days. From various States information is being issued as to precautionary measures to be taken, which include the cleaning up of all filth and quarantining of all new cases. The general public are urged to exert every measure to prevent spread of new cases.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Following a terrific bombardment of artillery of five days' duration, British, French and Belgian forces made simultaneous attacks on the western German front on the morning of July 1, and succeeded in taking first, second, and in some places third line trenches. In some places the advance was as far as five miles over a sixteen to twenty mile front. A number of fortified villages and important strategic points were taken, and a considerable amount of war material and a large number of prisoners. The French have made important gains north and south of the Somme River. The Belgians on their front have made some gains also. It is reported that Germany has brought up important reserve forces to withstand the concentrated allied drive. During the week, in spite of heavy and incessant rain the advances have practically all been maintained. The attacks on Verdun by the Germans continue with undiminished fury, though little change has been effected at that point. The success of the Russian advances in Galicia continues unabated. Thousands of prisoners are being captured and important railway points along the Austrian front are being assailed and taken daily. There has been fierce fighting on the north line of the eastern front where the Germans have control; there seems to have been no important change in that region. In Turkish Armenia the Russians seem to have made important gains against the Turkish forces, while they have met with reverses in Persia. Submarine warfare is evidently on the increase as a large number of merchant ships than for some time previous, are reported as having been sunk. It is reported on good authority that Great Britain is turning from the building of merchant ships and has one thousand submarines under construction now, launching three and four at a time.

MEXICAN SITUATION.—During the week various States have sent their contingents of the national guard to the Mexican border where they are encamped and receiving training. An order from Washington allows a release of all men who have dependents looking to them for support, and a considerable number are availing themselves of the opportunity and returning to their homes. On the 5th a note was received from General Carranza which largely relieved the tension between the two Governments and will likely prevent an armed clash. Assurances are given that Mexican troops will establish peace and order in northern Mexico and that measures will be taken to prevent further raids. It was again stated that the American troops should be withdrawn. The United States Government has received the assurance and accepted the statements in a conciliatory mood and has proceeded along such lines since. Financial aid from American banks for the de facto Government in Mexico is sought and every opportunity will be given Carranza to allow him to quell local trouble arising from a depleted and demoralized treasury. It is unofficially reported that three new border raids have been made by Villista forces, with a loss of three Americans. Villista bands have captured several cities from Carranza forces and are in a position to harass the American line in Mexico.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

FREE MAIL DELIVERY IN LAMONI.—The streets of the city have all been nicely marked and the houses are being numbered for the free mail delivery Lamoni is to have in the near future. The Herald Office number is 202 North Walnut Street.

SANE FOURTH.—With a death list of 13 and 969 reported as injured, the recent Fourth of July was comparatively the sanest in years. We are glad to note the improvement, but it is a bad record yet.

SURPRISING SITUATION.—The article reproduced in our General Interest Department on "The World's New Turning to Christianity" reveals a situation which is confirmed in reports from other places as well. You should read it.

MILITARY INSTRUCTION PROVIDED.—The University of Chicago trustees have decided to provide a course in military instruction. Beginning with next fall the course will be an available elective.

U. W. GREENE LEAVES FOR ENGLAND.—We have received word that Apostle Greene would leave New York for Liverpool on the steamer New York, July 8. Elder Greene's field includes the British Isles. His pastoral notice is in this issue.

ADVENTISTS GROW.—The net gain of the Seventh-day Adventists in 1915 was 5,720. This gives them a total membership of 73,923. The total tithing raised for the year was $1,317,810, an increase of $67,848. They have nearly 800 schools, with an enrollment of about 30,000. The denomination maintains 37 publishing houses and branches under its control.

HETTY GREEN DEAD.—On July 3, Mrs. Hetty Green died in New York City, over eighty years of age. She has been a notable character in financial circles, reputed to have been the richest woman in the world. Her life ambition was to leave her son, E. H. Green, the richest man in the world, but she failed, as her fortune was only about $150,000,000. Her son predicts there will be 17,000 contestants for a share of the estate. Thus ends a wasted life, lived in utter oblivion to the social and moral responsibility that comes with such opportunities.

PREPARING FOR PEACE.—A number of companies engaging in munitions manufacture are discharging men and planning to dismantle their plants. Some are slowing down and others closing up or turning to other lines of work. Munitions stocks show a decline in price.

A JEWISH QUESTION.—"Is this a Christian nation?" is the title of a tract the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and American rabbis have voted to issue.

WANT LITERATURE.—Battery C boys, mentioned in the letter from R. S. Salyards in this issue, want literature of all kinds. Address Private J. I. Christie, Battery C, F. A. N. G. M., 1st Reg. Laredo, Texas. We will publish their letter next week.

VALUABLE TO ARCHÆOLOGISTS.—The May number of the National Geographic Magazine is especially interesting to Book of Mormon students. The entire number is devoted to further explorations and developments in Peru where an ancient city has been unearthed not far from Cuzco, called Machu Picchu. There are many and varied illustrations from photographs, and interesting text.

HELPFUL INSTRUCTIONS.—If our newer subscribers and older ones who have forgotten will turn to the general instructions that immediately precede the "Contents" of this and every issue of the HERALD, it may materially help them to get the desired results in contributing to these columns or dealing with the office. Possible misunderstandings may be prevented, and better service rendered by observing the simple suggestions.

VALEDICTORY AND SALUTATION.—We are in receipt of "Bulletin No. 14," issued by Bishop C. J. Hunt, of the Gallands Grove District. For fourteen years Brother Hunt has labored diligently in the financial and other departments of the work in that district. In enumerating the receipts of the district he gives the total received by his predecessor and himself as $76,615.88. He says this does not include the thousands of dollars that have been paid the Presiding Bishopric and others. Brother Hunt has been designated as the bishop of the new Holden Stake, comprising ten counties near Independence and Kansas City. He is succeeded by Carl E. Anderson, recommended as "one of the progressive and faithful young church workers" of the district. We extend best wishes for continued success to each.

It is idleness, want of things to love, want of ardent interests, which open the doors to sin. Therefore, fill life with love of God and man and noble work of righteousness, and you will have no time to do wrong.—Brooke.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK

(Sermon by Elder Hubert Case, preached at Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday evening, June 11, 1916, observed as Children's Day. Reported by Winsome Smith.)

I was requested to preach a sermon this evening along the line of Sunday school work, and it affords me pleasure to speak a few words in behalf of what I consider one of the greatest factors in the world toward the uplift of humanity. I believe there is no institution to-day that comes so near to reaching common ground among the different churches as the Sunday school. And there has never been a movement put on foot for the benefit of the rising generation that has been the power for educating the little ones, that the Sunday school has.

Another thing that I want to mention, is the fact that it employs more talent than any other institution in the church.

I read the statement in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew concerning the parable of the talents that I wish to refer to. When the Master of men tells us about the kingdom of heaven, he compares it to a man traveling in a far country and letting out his goods to his servants here, and giving them certain work. He mentions their work. Everyone is given work, and he gives everyone talents. And he expects them to improve upon those talents.

THE SOWER

Another lesson I wish to refer to is the parable of the sower and the seed. And everyone who was in this church this morning, looking at this wonderful spectacle of little ones, seeing them appear here on this platform, could not help but admire it. It was a wonderful garden of opportunity for sowing seed and planting lessons for life now and for the life which is to come. But if that opportunity is neglected there is the greatest opportunity for weeds to grow that you can imagine. Just like a man neglecting his cornfield in the time of this rainy weather, and letting it go on and on, until it is laden with weeds, and then expect to accomplish anything. If he has planted the seed even, in that soil, and he neglects to cultivate that crop, what can he expect? Nothing but failure.

In the parable of the talents Jesus commends the individuals who cultivated their talents. Some of them, he said, improved their talents, but there was one at the foot of the list that had only one talent, and he was afraid to use it, so he took it and hid it in a napkin, and when the Lord of the vineyard came to reward his servants, here he found them, one after another. And this one who only had one talent brought it and told the Lord that he had been afraid to use it. He said, I knew you were an austere man. I just took that talent and hid it, and was afraid to use it. And he was called an unfaithful servant, and the talent was taken away from him and given to those who had more.

Who does that mean? It means you; it means me. It means everyone in the church and kingdom of God. He has given everyone talents, and he expects them to use them, and I am proud to-day to say that the Sunday school work has been the greatest opportunity for employing the talents, putting them to work, giving them an opportunity to develop, of any other thing in the church.

IN THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS

It has been my privilege to travel some in my ministerial work, and come in contact with the work in different parts of the world, and I wish briefly first to mention a little bit relative to the South Sea Islands. In the early part of my ministerial work I spent four years in the islands, and there I found the most ready response among all the people to take part in Sunday school work that I ever found anywhere.

Now the little drills that we had on the platform here to-day of these little folks who got up and took part in them, did them good. It not only does the child good to give it something to do, and give it opportunity to carry into effect what you wish, but you are developing the child. In the islands not only the little tots, but the gray-haired men and women are just as eager and just as anxious to take part in class work of that kind, and in drills and exercises, and every once in a while they have their entertainments, everyone of them takes part in the exercises.

NOBLE WORK OF THE WOMEN

While we were in the islands (of course it was about twenty years ago), Sister Devore had written a book on the order of that put out by Sister Walker some years ago. In that book she took up the gospel of Saint Matthew and asked questions on nearly every verse, every important feature of the chapter, so on through the New Testament, and formed lessons asking questions and giving answers.

This was their first introduction to Sunday school work. The sisters who go to the islands as assistants, the wives of the missionaries who go there, have been a most wonderful factor for doing good in the Sunday school work. We feel that Sister Devore did fully as much good in the work as Brother Devore ever did, and they spent six years there.

There was so much prejudice at that time, feeling that she was infringing on the work of the priesthood, that they decided to separate, and Sister Devore would go to one island and Brother Devore to another, and in that way she introduced the Sunday school work among them and did a wonderful work in that field.

Everyone of the sisters who have been there since that time has done a similar work; none of them excelled her. I suppose Sister Lake did as much as anyone. She was there a long time, and had an opportunity to travel among them. But Sister Devore was the pioneer of the work that founded the Sunday school work in the island mission, and I believe no one has ever sacrificed more in that mission than she did. She was an untiring worker, and one that the church has not heard from very much, but I will tell you her reward is sure, and I consider her one of our unexcelled workers in the Sunday school.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONTRIBUTES TO GREATNESS

A distinguished traveler from this country on returning to France sometime ago, was asked the question upon his return, "What one particular thing can you refer to that has made America so great?" Unhesitatingly he answered, "The Sunday school."

Think about it. To-day I do not believe that we are getting fifty per cent, perhaps twenty-five per cent of the children of America in the Sunday school. But we are getting a great number of them. We are bringing many of them in from the world and giving them an opportunity to acquaint themselves with the requirements of the gospel law. And whereas they have not all been taken by the hand and lifted up to that high standard where they ought to occupy, it is a stepping-stone, and it has been a wonderful thing, not only for this church we are representing, but for every church in the land of America, and for every place wherever a Sunday school had been planted.

I have been an ardent worker in the Sunday school I am by nature a lover of children. I like to make friends with children wherever I go, and I very seldom find a child that I cannot make my friend. Having a natural disposition and love for a child, it is easy for me to find out ways to approach that child, talk with it, get acquainted with it, find out what it is interested in. It is an easy thing if you make a child your friend, to lead that child to the place where you can teach it something. It is an easy thing, and I want to tell you to-night, that you will never teach anybody until you make friends of them.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AMONG THE INDIANS

My work among the Indians in Oklahoma, so far as Sunday school work is concerned, has been a failure. But the first thing I did was to make friends with them, with some of the leaders, and while we have not done anything wonderful among them, we have brought a number of these people into the church, and I have talked a number of times of having a Sunday school among them.

Nine months of the year the Indian children are away at school, attending some of the Government schools, or others under different churches. They have instituted some kind of class work among them like the Christian Endeavor, something of that kind, but so far as taking up Sunday school work they have never done anything. I tried to talk with them a number of times, especially to those who have been in the church some little time. I tried to get them to hold Sunday school, but here is one of the barriers: every time they meet they have to have a feast. They do not understand meeting together as we do, going to church, going back home and not coming there to eat. They have to have a feast every meeting they have, so it is pretty hard to keep them feasting every Sunday, as these feasts are quite expensive. We have never been able for these reasons, to do anything along the line of Sunday school work.

But at this last General Conference, Philip Cook and several others who were there, were much taken up with the Sunday school. When they saw the array of little folks in class work, it made them very anxious to go home and do something along the line of Sunday school. I saw that we could get these people interested in Sunday school work, and to Inez, one of the Indian ladies at the conference last spring, I said, "Inez, don't you wish you could get your people interested in Sunday school?"

"Yes," she said, "I do; and it is a strange thing to me that of all the churches that have worked among our people, none of them have had sense enough to start a Sunday school among us." I thought that was a reproof. I believe they will take hold of the work a little later.

SOWING THE GOSPEL SEED

Going back to my subject, which I stated before, of employing the talents, in this lesson referred to in the sixth chapter of Mark, where he was telling of the teachings of the Master in the lesson of the sower and the seed. While the little ones do not all sit here and listen to the preaching of the word, occasionally, there is an opportunity for these children to listen to a sermon, but that child is not half so interested in going and listening to a sermon as he is in sitting before his teacher, and listening to her talk, and having her attract his attention from time to time, and keep him interested, and teach him the lesson in the Bible.

I am a thorough believer in the fact that that teacher, whoever he or she may be, is sowing gospel seed right there, and I believe that the Sunday school, or this arm of the church, has been one of the greatest sources of income to this church that it ever has had. It has brought as many people into the church, and saved as many to the church, as the missionaries are baptizing every year out in the world.

I believe that I have baptized as many as the average elder who has been in the field for the last twenty years. I believe I have baptized an average, I say, but I know this: that a large number of those who are baptized by the elders in the field, are people of our own Sunday schools, around whom the influence has been thrown by the arm of the church that reaches out and says to the little ones, "Come in here and let us teach you of that wonderful child Jesus," and gives them an opportunity to learn about his beautiful life and the other wonderful examples in the Bible.

THE TEACHER'S PART

There is just one thing I want to tell you to-night, and it was the main thought I wanted to bring out in this talk. Who are these teachers that you have here to-night? The seventy-five teachers that you have in this Sunday school, the hundreds of teachers that we have in the various schools over the country, who are they? Are they members of the church? Yes, you say, they are members of the church, most of them. Of course in some of our little schools we have a good many, and good ones too, who belong to other churches. But here is the point I want to bring out: How much is that teacher's part in line with this gospel? How much does she live this gospel? How much does she consecrate of her talents to the service of God? Let me bring that closer home to show you what I mean by that.

I want to know how much faith that teacher has in God and his work? When these little ones are presented to the elders of this church to be blessed, the mother of that child, the father of that child, ought to have dedicated that child to God long before they brought it to the elders. I go back to the wonderful example of the mother of the child Samuel, who dedicated him to the Lord long before he was born. Why, there is example after example in Bible history that we could refer to for evidence that the child was dedicated long before it was born, and if a child is not dedicated to God before it is born, it should be so dedicated after it is born, and with faith. Is that living faith manifested in our teaching and in our sowing of the seed in these fair gardens, without a weed, without a spot or blemish? God gives us these little ones pure as the angels, and asks us to keep them from the stain of sin. Do we do that?

You fathers and mothers are copartners with your seventy-five teachers in this Sunday school here, to keep these gardens clean, so the child may grow up and become one that is an honor to God's cause. And I ask you, Where is there an opportunity for greater work and greater service to employ your talents, than to take over such a wonderful work as that? You are not only developing your talents, but you are showing your child what his talents are and what those talents can do for him.

"ALL ARE CALLED"

There is a statement in the Doctrine and Covenants that reads something like this, "All are called according to the gifts and blessings of God unto them." "All are called." That is what it says. "All are called according to the gifts and blessings of God unto them."

Another statement in the book of Doctrine and Covenants, one that is frequently used, is this one, "Let the young cultivate the gift of music and song." These are gifts. There is a special gift to each person. Everyone is especially gifted in some line in this world. I admit that a great many people work and never find their real true calling in this life. They work at things they are in a position to do, because the gift that God gave them is never developed. We should take hold of these individuals and give them an opportunity early in life to bring out the best in them, and I believe that any successful teacher in the Sunday school will soon find out the strongest point in her pupils especially in gospel work. And I do not care very much whether I limit to gospel work or not. The child's mind will naturally run upon the line in which it is most gifted, and if you give it an opportunity it will give expression to that, and it ought to be encouraged.

Now our work is to take this material that God has placed in our hands here to polish and develop, this wonderful garden that he has set before us here of human souls, and keep them as pure as the lilies and work with them and develop them. I want to tell you teachers in this Sunday school, you should realize the great opportunities set before you to do good. It is a wonderful opportunity.

GATHERING THE MATERIAL

Who is the man that packs his satchel and leaves his home and goes into the world to preach the gospel? You say he is the missionary. He goes out there to spend his time and to give of his talents. What material is he working with? Largely, in preaching to the world, we gather the material whose character is formed before we get them in the gospel work—grown people, but there must come a reformation in those persons' lives. We must get at those weeds. There is no use to take that person by the hand and lead him down into the waters of regeneration to make a change, unless you have the full consent of the man, and when you have that full consent, and take him into the water, he will come out just as a man told me in Oklahoma City one time.

He said, "Brother Case, when I was baptized into this church I came into it ready to live this gospel, every bit of it; nothing daunted me. But I found since that we are not living it, and I began to yield, and it became more and more apparent. I became careless. But now I am ready to live it again."

You take a person and let him listen to preaching. Let him come into the Sunday school, employ his time, give him something to do, and give him an opportunity to study, to develop, to grow. Help him, for you are the helpers. The teachers, the officers are simply the instruments in God's hands. Each has been called with a high and holy calling to take hold of such opportunities as that, and take this material that we are gathering in from the world and develop it. I grant greater results with branch work as a foundation when the branch has a corps of efficient workers than can result from any missionary work. But the forces that God has put in motion or operation in this church must be employed. They must take hold of and develop this material if ever we make any progress, and this church nor no other church can ever hope to be purified unless it takes hold of the means that God has given, employs the talent, develops it, and purifies and polishes the material. It must be done.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SOFTENS OPPOSITION

I met a one-time bitter opponent of this church a number of years ago in Oklahoma. He sat down and talked with me a little while one day in a little town. He said, "Mr. Case, I do not go out to hear your people preach, but I was in Independence and lived there a little while, and one morning I went over to that Stone Church and attended the Sunday school. And I will say this, that it made an impression on my mind that I will never forget the longest day I live." He said the United States army is not so perfectly drilled as that Sunday school. It beat anything he had ever seen.

What lesson did that man get from our Sunday school? He began after that to come to listen to the preaching, and to-day he is a stanch friend and defender of this work. He has not been baptized, and I do not whether he ever will be or not, but he is a friend of our people, and the impression of that one visit to the Sunday school opened the love of us hidden in his heart, and the admiration he had for good and for doing good when he saw what the officers and teachers were doing in our Sunday school.

He said, "I went down into the basement, and I went through the room where the little ones were all assembled, and I never saw anything like it in my life. It beat anything I ever saw." I suppose it did.

KEEPING IN TOUCH WITH THE BOY

I want to make one observation in regard to other Sunday schools and other churches to-night. I attended a number of conventions held in Oklahoma City and Guthrie, state conventions, and the workers of all the churches in the State united in these union Sunday school conventions, and I had the privilege of listening to some very able speakers there and it certainly did me good. One teacher whom I heard speak, a little, short, black-eyed lady from Blackwell, Oklahoma, told how she gathered the boys in from the street. I do not know whether you would approve of some of her methods or not. She said whenever there was a ball game going on in the town, she took her boys and went with them. She kept them from being unruly or anything of that kind, and she got them to see that she was interested in them. Her talk at that Guthrie convention was an inspiration to me along some lines.

To gather the children in and hold them after you get them into a Sunday school is no easy task, but she took boys from the other Sunday schools and churches into her own Christian Church, and she had one of the largest classes in the State of Oklahoma, that she had gathered in because of her interest in the boy.

Whether we adopt some of the methods or not, we must show our interest and love for the child if we ever take it by the hand and lift it up and keep it in the path that leads to life. We must take hold of the hand of that child and show him that we are his friend.

I suppose I have talked long enough, but I am interested in Sunday school work. I am an enthusiast over Sunday school work, and have been ever since I was grown and took part in Sunday school myself. I never was the superintendent of a school or helped in any Sunday school office but one or two years when I was just a young man and had not started into the missionary work. I have never done anything in the missionary work, the preaching of the word or anything else along that line, that afforded me more pleasure than that little Sunday school did. It seemed to me it was just meat and drink to be with those people and see them advance, and they did advance, too. If you show any person that you really have an interest in him, if you really have an interest in him, you are going to be able to wield an influence over him.

FRIENDLINESS REQUIRED

I hear one criticism frequently. You may have heard it. It is an unjust one, and you do not need to believe it. I heard the criticism made by a person that did not live here, but had lived here, that he found the Saints not so friendly as others in trying to get people into the Sunday school. They did not go out after them and bring them in and manifest their friendliness.

I want to tell you that wherever this church is planted, or any other church, the Sunday school has been a great help in getting people interested, and getting them to see that you are their friend, to bring them to the church, and when you get them into the Sunday school once, they will feel somewhat under obligations to you, and they will say, "Well, now, I have gone in that class, I believe I will go on." And the first thing you know the person is interested in the work. He hears some sermons. I have baptized many people in just that way.

You cannot be too friendly. You cannot manifest too much love of this work, and if there is one thing I feel to say and emphasize, it is this, that we need more true consecration of these talents of God, and a manifestation of such living faith that will bring a response from the great Shepherd who is watching over his children here in this world.

My prayer to God is that as a people we may realize that God has given everyone of us talents, opportunities, something to do, and he wants us to work; and if you work for reward, as surely then as for any earthly reward that anyone can promise you in this world, you will receive, for God's promise never fails.

ADAM'S FALL

Did Adam come into this world from an exalted planet with a celestial body bringing one of his celestial wives with him as taught by Brigham Young?

In view of what is written in Genesis 2:7, and 2:22, 23, it seems an unnecessary and foolish question to ask, but on account of its relation to a previous article it will pass. In the first place what is our conception of a celestial body? Does not our Lord and the angel Moroni appearing to many, give us the thought that celestial bodies come as thoughts, locked doors no obstacle to them? Did Adam in Eden have a body like that? As near as I can learn, his body was of the earth, a perfect earthly body. When God told Adam and Eve that vegetables and fruit-bearing trees would serve him as food, does it not prove he was human, earthly? No account of angel food or manna for a celestial body.

Dear readers, let us never lose sight of the price of our high calling in Christ Jesus. Celestial glory! Let no man take thy crown. (Revelation 3:11.) It is true that Adam is called the Son of God, in Luke 3:38, Revised Version, but not so in Inspired Translation. We are familiar with revelation on preexistence of our spirits with the Father, that some were faithful in their first estate and others not, and the promise was that those who would be faithful in their second estate, this earthly abode, would be partakers of immortal glory, and according to our degree of faithfulness would be our glory. (Doctrine and Covenants 85:5, 6.)

Our Father created the earth that celestial spirits should have a fit home and receive a knowledge of good and evil, which would enable them to appreciate the great gift of their heavenly Father. (Genesis 4:11, I. T.) That Adam had no celestial body in Eden may be gathered from reading Psalm 8:5, 9. "For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor, thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands, thou has put all things under his feet."

Our Lord, who for our sake became poor in leaving celestial glory, came into the world with a perfect human body-like unto Adam, wherefore, he is also called the second Adam. Methinks a creature can be perfect, very good "and just on a lower plane of being than another," a perfect horse would be lower than a perfect man. Christ at his resurrection was made "so much better" than perfect angels as the divine is superior to the angelic nature. (Hebrews 1:3-5.) The highest grade of mineral is inferior to or a little lower than the lowest grade of vegetables, because in vegetation there is life. The highest grade of vegetable is a little lower than the lowest grade of animal life, because such life even in its lowest forms has intelligence enough to be conscious of existence. Thus man, though the highest of animal or earthly beings, is a little lower than the angels (Psalm 8), because angels are heavenly beings. It is said that water cannot rise higher than its fountain, but it is no contradiction to this, as at the imparting of the Holy Spirit we receive a portion of the Spirit at the celestial fountain. Should the reader study the deep typical meaning of the tabernacle service, as well as the type of the court, holy and most holy, he would in it see pictured the celestial, terrestrial, and telestial glories as they serve unto the example of and shadow of heavenly things. (See Hebrews 8:5.)

TOBACCO

The Lord through Joseph Smith said in 1833:

And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill.—Doctrine and Covenants, 86:1.

D. Everett Lyon, in the Farm Journal, published at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, June, 1916, says:

The spirit which hovered about the red man's council fires, floating upward in the smoke of the peace pipe, seems to have charmed all mankind. The use of tobacco in one form or other in three centuries and a half has become world-wide. But, despite the almost universal indulgence and the praises that have been sung of the soothing effect of tobacco, science condemns it and offers an imposing array of experiments to prove the ill-effects which follow its use.

Tobacco is a drug which contains powerful poisons. Its charm lies in its drug effects. If it has any beneficial effects they are not discoverable to the scientific investigator. On the other hand, there are certain decided results tending to physical deterioration which are readily recognizable. It is a heart depressant, and experiments on animals have shown that it has a tendency to produce hardening of the arteries. Some of the foremost authorities have made clinical observations which indicate that the use of tobacco has similar effects on man.

As is generally the case in the use of drugs, there is a tendency to increasing indulgence. Those who have had experience in athletics are familiar with the fact that the use of tobacco results in interference with the breathing by depressing the heart action. There are other affections common to smokers.

To make a summary in brief, the results of all scientific investigations seem to prove conclusively that the use of tobacco is distinctly harmful to the majority of men.

We trust that the two statements made eighty-three years apart, but of harmonizing import shall awake an earnest analytical consideration as to the importance of the language employed in 1833, that the much used herb was to be skillfully used. In lieu thereof we observe that it is those without skill and without the experience of age that are the most ardent consumers of the drug.

Respectfully submitted,

Of General Interest

THE WORLD'S NEW TURNING TO CHRISTIANITY

A new experience has come to the missionaries. Now they know what it is to have their churches actually swamped with converts.

The war has a sobering effect upon the world, and there is a wholesale turning to Christianity that is bewildering and staggering the missionary forces abroad.

Three thousand converts a week in Korea! An Oriental Billy Sunday leading thousands of Japanese up the sawdust trail, this being the first time in history that the unemotional Japanese have so responded! Seven thousand of the strongest leaders of China, scholars, officials and gentry, accepting Christianity! A waiting list of 150,000 in India who have been refused baptism for the present because the missionaries have not schools and churches enough to accommodate them!

Such were a few of the items in the amazing reports brought by missionaries from all parts of the world to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church which had its quadrennial session in Saratoga Springs during May. The conditions were said to apply not merely to this church, but to all denominations having work abroad.

In the words of the supposedly cool-headed commission on finance, the present situation "far out-reaches the fondest dream of the most ecstatic vision Paul ever had."

The reports as presented to the conference were voluminous. I shall only gist them here.

There has been an average of one convert every hour in Korea since the missionaries first went there twenty-five years ago. That alone is striking. In these times, however, the average has mounted to eighteen converts per hour. In some places church services must be held in relays to accommodate the crowds. Even at the midweek prayer meeting, which in America brings out a puny thirty or forty people, it is not uncommon in Korea to have a thousand in attendance.

An evangelistic campaign is sweeping Japan, and all the Protestant forces in that country have united in order to take full advantage of their opportunity. One of the evangelists is especially picturesque. His name is Kimura. They bring great stories about him, stories which I can readily believe, for, during a recent visit to Japan, I heard Kimura preach to five thousand people in his great tent in Tokyo, and saw nearly one hundred Japanese "hit the trail" every night. In two weeks' time he made thirteen hundred conversions. Cynical Japan is an extremely difficult mission field, and such an achievement as this, though common enough in other lands, is absolutely unparalleled in the history of Christianity in Japan.

It was from Billy Sunday that "Hallelujah Kim," as Kimura is called, got his inspiration. Not that he is a mere imitator, for he had conducted many successful revivals before he began to study Billy Sunday. Recently, however, he spent ten months in America, studying the methods of the baseball evangelist.

During Sunday's month in Denver, Kimura attended every service, morning, noon, and night. He did the same in Des Moines and Philadelphia, and lived for a time with the Sundays. In April of last year he took the Sunday idea back to Japan.

All the business details of his campaign have been Sundayized, and his delivery is dramatic and acrobatic. But he doesn't quite go the Sunday limit. He uses the simple language of the street, but even the strictest missionaries confess that they have never heard him speak vulgarly.

"When I eat stewed cherries," he remarks, speaking of Sunday's methods, "I don't have to eat the stones. I put them at the side of my plate and say nothing about them."

The evangelistic movement in which Kimura and many other workers, both native and foreign, are taking part has not reached a conclusion, so that definite figures cannot yet be given out. The results, however, can be imagined from the fact that the protestant missionaries in Japan have united in a call for four hundred and seventy-four new missionaries to take care of the new business.

Then China! "If we were not all looking in the direction of Europe, the eyes of the world would be turned toward China," said Doctor S. Earl Taylor, secretary of the board of foreign missions, in his report on world conditions. China is no longer referred to as the "Sleeping giant." Great changes are taking place, and not the least important is the religious revolution.

It may well be called a revolution. It required over fifty years to win the first thousand converts in China. Recently a larger number than this were enrolled as inquirers during a single night in one city.

In a single province of China, Hinghwa, one hundred and eleven new churches have been organized during the last two years by one denomination alone.

In Hinghwa City it is necessary to hold three meetings a day in a building which seats eight hundred people and to refuse anyone the privilege of attending more than one of these meetings.

It would be difficult to imagine an American church forced to make such a rule.

Perhaps the most striking achievement is that of Sherwood Eddy, who, shortly after the war began, spoke in twelve Chinese cities to 121,000 members of the educated class admitted to his meetings by ticket only! It was an effort to reach the leaders of China. The result was that seven thousand high officials, scholars and ruling gentry, men who hold the destiny of the nation in their hands, turned to Christianity and are now enrolled in Bible classes. The influence of this upon the masses cannot be calculated.

During the past year in the Philippines five thousand members have been added by one denomination, and two missionaries report over a thousand converts each. The conversions during 1915 outnumber those of any previous year.

"Never in the history of this continent," wrote Bishop Stuntz, referring to South America, "have so many converts been gathered into the churches as during the past few months."

Churches are packed to the doors in Mexico. In previous times the sale of portions of the Bible has reached 22,000 copies, as the maximum in a year. The sale last year totaled 63,000 copies, and the missionaries state that tens of thousands more could have been sold if workers had been available.

But the most staggering success has been in India.

Not only are India's mission schools and churches full. The stupendous fact is that there stands outside these institutions a waiting list of more than 150,000 registered applicants for baptism who cannot be received into the Christian church because there are not churches enough and ministers enough to give them Christian leadership, nor schools enough to educate them. It is considered worse than useless to receive into the church thousands of illiterate, superstitious persons, knowing nothing but the barest rudiments of Christianity, unless provision is made for both their religious and secular education. The only result of such a policy would be to heathenize Christianity.

As fast as the missions can develop agencies for the training of the new converts, those who stand first in the waiting list are baptized and received.

The trouble is that the waiting list is developing more rapidly than the agencies. Whole villages and whole countries are turning en masse to Christianity. The mayors of two hundred villages recently voted in conference to use their influence to make the entire population of their villages Christian. The Christian community in India is increasing at the rate of 5,000 new members every month or 60,000 per year.

Just as religious movements have proverbially thrived on persecution, so the fact that the bitterest persecution assails the new Indian Christians only seems to add impetus to the movement.

The new emphasis on religion in Europe is well known. Each potentate claims God on his side, troops pray before entering battle, it is reported that hundreds of thousands of Testaments are being thumb marked in the trenches, revivals are on in France and Bulgaria, liquor and luxury have been tabooed, and the simple life, which is psychologically related to the religious life, has been made the rule.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to define the underlying cause of so subtle a thing as a world-wide spiritual renaissance. Perhaps the coming of the war and the revival at the same time are only a colossal coincidence. On the other hand, there is ground for the theory that the horrors and desolation of war have solemnized the world and have had the effect of driving the people back upon divine security.

At any rate the renaissance is on and missionary Christendom is faced with the greatest opportunity in its history.—Willard Price, in American Review of Reviews for June, 1916.

MENTAL AND SPIRITUAL HEALING

Doctor E. L. House spoke Thursday night to an audience that filled the First Methodist church in spite of the graduation exercises of the high school which drew many there. He spoke on mental versus spiritual healing, giving a good, clear distinction between the two. He said:

Mental healing has been going on since the beginning of the race. Its laws have not been understood until recently, but the world now knows that through suggestion and auto-suggestion, the subconscious mind can be instructed to bring forth most interesting and favorable results. This mental healing is legitimate and proper if it is not called "divine healing," for through such labeling the people have been deceived as to the reality of spiritual healing.

Spiritual healing comes from functioning through the spiritual relations, and is possible to all who are regenerated in Christ Jesus. Any other kind of healing is mental no matter what name is given to it. That it is limited must be seen when we read "that it is appointed unto all men once to die." But the right of the Christian is to a magnificent old age, and then to "fall asleep."

There is no doubt but what the church has the commission to heal, and that she is the "media" thereof. But the church has left out the "minor" of her work, while she has performed faithfully the "major" of her work in the salvation of the spiritual nature. And because the church has not done all her Master commissioned her "cults" have sprung up all over the land, and these are remedial if not doctrinal, and therefore are leading many away from the fundamentals of the New Testament. And a man had better be sick in body a thousand years than to be sick in spirit at all. The duty of the hour is for the church to restore to her curriculum all her gospel and save the people from crucial errors. If the church does not do this, God will raise up a new people, who like the Methodists will go forth to inaugurate a new movement world-wide that will save his people; and the church as constituted to-day, will lose her leadership.

Making History

We present this week a message from another of our officers, the historian, Sister B. C. Smith, who has been so long identified with the work of women in our church, that she needs no introduction. Her very prompt response to our request for an article on her work contained the following:

"I am so glad that the younger women have taken an interest in this work, and are willing to carry the burdens that have weighed so heavily on older shoulders for so many years. My constant prayer is that the Lord may direct and bless their efforts, for I certainly do feel that there is a magnificent field of service to the church which lies open to its women—a work they may engage in without trespassing upon the sacred grounds of the priesthood."

To Sister Smith has been commissioned the task of writing a history of the woman's movement in the church, from its inception—no small attempt. Were the organizations constantly cognizant of the needs of this valuable department and were they careful to appoint historians who would keep record of the various happenings and keep in touch with the general historian, her work would be greatly facilitated. It is the effort to determine dates, or locate events, or find the person who would know about this or that, which makes the task arduous.

We trust the locals will keep the needs of the historical work in mind, and not consider that it is unimportant in any way. "Great doors are turned upon small hinges," and many very important events have followed apparently trivial happenings. "I need not worry," once said our church historian, with his quaint humor, "whatever happens, even to me, is history, and so my business goes right along!"

Remember, we are all making history every day, and for the sake of clarity, let us keep record of the most interesting things that occur.

Historian's Message

Perhaps some of the sisters of the auxiliary have been wondering what has become of the historian they appointed two years ago, as they have seen no history, or scarcely any mention of it. I want to assure you now, that although nothing was added to the work last year it has not been forgotten nor carelessly neglected.

Those who have seen my report to the last convention will know that I requested that, in case I were continued as historian, I be relieved of all other obligations to the society, but what was my chagrin, when after the adoption of the new constitution, I awoke to the fact that it made the historian a member of the executive board.

Of course I recognize the advantage there will be to the historian to sit with the board in its meetings and thus become familiar with all the workings of the society; for I realize that a history should be something more than a mere skeleton of names, dates, resolutions, etc, such as might be secured from the records. So the present board has kindly consented to relieve me of other duties of the executive and allow me to devote my time to the work of history. I hope, therefore, to be able to report something done next year.

It has been suggested to me that perhaps I might get some help from the locals in this work; so I have thought best to ask them to cooperate with me in it, that we may be helpful to one another.

I have not worked out the details of my plans as yet, but think they will evolve more fully as the work progresses. However, I wish now to ask each local to appoint a historian who will prepare a sketch of its past history and continue to carry it on, giving not only dates and numbers, but motives and results, making particular mention of events that have a beneficial effect on the society; also actions that should be avoided in the future. Let the history of the past be a guide for the future; then there will be something gained by writing history.

When you have appointed your historian send her name and address to me with the name of the local appointing her. Please attend to this matter as soon as is convenient.

MRS. B. C. SMITH.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 214 South Spring Street.

A Wide-awake Local

We were rather surprised to receive early in June, the following letter which indicates an unusual amount of energy and enthusiasm on the part of one of our locals. To have gotten in touch in April with the new officers of the auxiliary, in this wide-awake manner is truly inspirational, and makes some of the rest of us feel that we are somewhat slow in comparison. We thank Sister George for remembering to pass along the good things that have come her way, too, and regard highly the evident disposition to share with others. We also ask her indulgence for publishing her letter along with Sister Smith's paper—it was too good to keep.

We hope the sisters everywhere will catch the spirit of our president's little message to these Ohio Saints. It breathes cheerfulness, consecration, and trust; she feels that the church is awakening to new responsibilities, and, along with it, the women are perceiving their work and are willing to undertake it with enthusiasm and faith, believing in the ultimate, though perhaps slow, development of opportunity, and the co-operation which will encourage its utmost improvement. It will profit us little to have these cups of opportunity held out to us, unless we reach out, and take, and use them. The strength of our church will lie in the upward progress of its individual members, and no study to improve, no effort to qualify, is lost. We gain by the very attempt, more than we realize. Sometimes we feel discouraged because the immediate results do not come up to our hopes and ideals, but we have gained positive, though unperceived, ground. Believe this, dear sisters, and when your household duties or the care of little ones seem to hinder you from studying as you wish, remember to use the margins of time you may have, with the steady light of advancement in mind, and God will supply your lack, because of your effort. He could not do this, however, were your effort also lacking. Then, too, "despise not the day of small things," and remember that while busy with house and children, one may still be making progress in spiritual things. One may learn valuable lessons of patience; of wisdom; of self-sacrifice; of kindly ministration; and who shall say that these are not the truest development after all? All this may come to us more definitely, however, when our faculties are trained to recognize the true nature and relative value of all these life's experiences. A mother who is able to think when confronted with a problem about her child: "Now, this is where the child makes mistakes because he lacks self-confidence, or self-control, or because his judgment is immature, or because of example set by another, and my best course of action will be thus, and so," such a mother is more apt to decide wisely in training her children than the one who, through ignorance, or indifference, simply thinks, "The child did wrong, and must be whipped!" without attempting intelligently to determine the causes and deal with them.

This is only one of the many phases in which the amalgamated interests of the church women, may help us to live worthily, and order our lives in accord with the pleading, so often repeated, "Come up higher, my children."

Sister George's Letter

WILLOUGHBY, OHIO, June 9, 1916.

MRS. AUDENTIA ANDERSON,
Omaha, Nebraska.

Dear Sister: In the latter part of April I wrote to Sister Frederick M. Smith, our new president of the Woman's Auxiliary, and asked her to write something for us, to use on a program, we were arranging to give in the church at Cleveland, Ohio, on a Wednesday evening, leaving to her the line of thought she might wish to write upon.

My object in doing this was to get the people acquainted with our new president. We have been so well pleased with what she has written that I feel like passing it along to others, so ask you to publish it.

There is a spirit in it of stepping right in among us, that I am sure will help all sisters to feel at home with her.

Truly we have learned to love the others who have presided over us in the past, and I feel sure that we shall learn to love our new leader, and we want to try to be coworkers with her.

With kind wishes, I am,

Your sister,
MRS. W. C. GEORGE.

Greeting to the Saints in Cleveland: I should much prefer to meet you all in person. I wish I might grasp the hand of each of you in that hearty fashion, which some of us call a typical Latter Day Saint handshake. But it gives me real pleasure to speak to you for a few moments.

To the sisters of the auxiliary, and others, let me say, that we are no longer the little band of struggling women who used to be called the Daughters of Zion (a name still dear to many of us) but we have hundreds and hundreds of loyal women, and are known as the Woman's Auxiliary to the church.

Some of us in Independence, appointed by your executive officers, have been working for weeks, even months, getting ready that which we hope will prove helpful suggestions and advice to our women everywhere.

This material will come out in what is called a Year Book; a form by which most large (?) women's organizations get their class work and actual work, with many other suggestions, before their members.

This will take place of our leaflets and some other writings in our columns. You will see that we are broadening out, when I tell you that the HERALD has given us two pages every week for our work, and that we expect to give you something good in each issue of the HERALD. It is not boastful for us to speak thus, because we are going to expect many of these spicy news items to come from each of the locals. In fact we are planning to have every local help to make this a pleasant, helpful department.

You know how, after a good dinner, the men like to get together, to talk crops or business or politics (or church affairs it usually is, in our home) and how the women just love to get together and talk over matters which appeal to women particularly. Well, this department in the HERALD is going to give us just this opportunity for our women. So do not forget that the locals in your vicinity have the privilege to help make this department interesting for all the sisters.

Just a word about our Year Book which will soon be published and can speak for itself.

We are providing for home and neighborhood betterment movements, child welfare movements, and more along the line of active work. We recommend excellent books for mothers and leaders' study clubs or circles. We have a department of sanitation and hygiene, food values, etc.

The Young Woman's Department already of over four hundred membership, is represented. The Relief and Service with its various departments will, we hope, be developed in all their lines of work and receive helpful and welcome suggestions.

We are giving opportunity for classes in parliamentary law, business women's problems, etc.—all these and other good things.

We are not going to ask the small locals to take up anything more than they find helpful and congenial, but we are giving them an opportunity under competent superintendents, to do all that they wish.

It is such a happy thought to me, that we have so many sisters endeavoring to make themselves efficient in their different lines of work.

We believe that the hastening time is here and that God expects and wants us all to work cheerfully and earnestly to help build up Zion, the pure in heart.

We can readily prove by our lives and our efforts to improve ourselves, whether or not we are in line with the great numbers, who have for their motto, "Onward and Upward."

Sincerely your sister,
MRS. FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Report to the Late Convention

MRS. S. R. BURGESS,
Saint Louis, Missouri.

Dear Sister: Concerning the year's work I have the following to report: The year so far as I have been able to judge, has been one of exceptional activity. I have received numberless letters of inquiry concerning the auxiliary and its purpose, its benefits, its mode of operation, and its laws, all of which I have answered to the best of my ability. I have sent out quantities of leaflets, constitutions, and instructions. I have sent letters all over the United States, to Canada, Australia, and the Society Islands.

Many of the letters have never been answered; some have been returned to me as uncalled for. The reason for much of this, I presume, is because the list I have has been antedated and the addresses changed. However, I have received many encouraging letters from those who are interested in the work and are making a success of it.

I am sure there has been a goodly number of additions to the Sewing and Aid department during the past year, though I have no means of telling how many, as many who have written me for information have sent the record of their organization to the secretary and have neglected to notify me, notwithstanding my request that they do so. A few have reported their societies as being inactive, and a number have told of splendid success.

Many have written to me asking for report blanks and I wonder why each superintendent of departments is not furnished with the necessary blanks. I think they are very necessary at least.

As yet I have found it impossible to obtain a correct list of the societies of my department, and this is a great disadvantage. I find that it takes a great amount of time and thought, not to speak of labor, to carry on this work, and I have been seriously handicapped by not having more of the first-named essential. I have tried to do the best I could according to my limited opportunities.

I feel that it is high time that our women were moving out in lines of social welfare, and civic affairs, helping to bring about better conditions in their various localities. The spirit of helpfulness should not confine itself to our people alone, though that, of course, should be, and is, our primary duty, but the world is full of sin, sorrow and suffering, and all men are our brethren, and there is work lying ready to our hands on every side.

May the coming year bring light and understanding of our work and our privileges, is my earnest prayer. I report the work in my department as growing, and in an encouraging condition.

Yours in gospel bonds,

MRS. EDITH COCHRAN,

Superintendent Sewing and Aid Department.

Some Successful Concerts

This is a season when we are favored with many musical programs, as the students, who have, for the past year, been laboring so arduously in their beloved art, bring their work to a close and give their friends the benefit of a demonstration of their progress. We are pleased to know that so many of our young Saints are endeavoring to follow the counsel of the Lord in this particular, and we know that God's blessing is upon every effort they make in the spirit of humility and thankfulness, and with a desire to use their talents for the uplift of the people and to help declare the gospel message. Hearts are strangely softened by the power of music, and are opened in that way for the reception of the truth, and our young musicians should recognize that they have a distinct and important mission to perform in this line.

Among the ranks of the earnest and consecrated students of the voice, is Sister Blanche Allen, of Independence, daughter of Brother Arthur Allen. Sister Blanche gave an interesting recital in the Stone Church, there, recently, assisted by Sister I. A. Smith as reader. Both songs and story were delivered in a truly artistic manner, and thoroughly delighted the large audience.

Of the closing activities of the music students at Graceland, we are in receipt of the following account:

"The music and oratory department at Graceland closed the year's work with three excellent recitals. Two of these were by pupils taking undergraduate work, a number of younger pupils appearing on the programs.

Those finishing the junior year in piano, receiving their teachers' certificates were Miss Mary O. Reeves, Pisgah, Iowa; Miss Alice Storey, Fremont, Indiana; and Miss Ella Wilson, Lamoni, Iowa. These three students played their final recital in an artistic manner, doing work which was creditable both to themselves and to their instructor, Miss Laura Kelley.

"The crowning event of the season at Graceland was the piano concert by Miss Marie Riggs of Kansas City. Every number was played in a charming manner and Miss Riggs deserves the highest praise. Such a beautiful program played with an artist's interpretation is a great means of giving inspiration and encouragement to our musical students, and we owe to Miss Riggs our heartfelt gratitude."

Two weeks later, Sister Marie gave a concert at Independence, under the auspices of the Laurel Club of that place, in the interests of the Joseph Smith Memorial Fund. Of this concert we have the following, and give it space in encouragement of the young sister who has worked so hard at her music, and who gives her services so freely at the call of her church.

"The Independence Examiner printed an interesting article giving account of the program given in the Stone Church by Miss Marie Riggs who offers her services to the Laurel Club—the faithful workers in charge of the Joseph Smith Memorial Fund. This is the first concert Miss Riggs has given in Independence, since her return from Europe where she pursued her studies under Herr Professor Joseph L'hevinne, of Berlin. She gave a most musicianly account of herself throughout an ambitious program, her playing combining wonderful technique with the most charming sweetness of tone. Mr. Charles Cease, baritone, of Kansas City, volunteered his services for this occasion, to assist Miss Riggs. It was his first appearance in Independence, and his work was much appreciated by the music lovers, who listened with delight to his two groups of songs. It was good to see our young talent in cooperation with that outside the church, uniting in so good a cause, and that it was appreciated by the large audience was evidenced not only by the hearty applause, but by the liberal offering made for the memorial fund."

Miscellaneous Notes

A recent letter from Brother Arthur H. Mills conveys the good news that he has been released from the commercial duties which have hitherto hindered him from bestowing the time he desired upon musical affairs. He is in charge of the national orchestra movement of the church, and now will be at liberty to move about among the branches near the center and coordinate the musical efforts in a way that was not possible before. Already some steps have been taken. The fine orchestra material at Holden, Missouri, heretofore kept together and developed largely through the efforts of a faithful sister (whose name has momentarily escaped our memory,) has been organized under the name of the Holden Stake Orchestra, with Brother Alma Moler as director in charge. Brother Mills met recently also with the instrumentalists of the three Saint Joseph branches, with what result we have not yet learned. We hope to hear in the near future that many more of our branches have caught the spirit of this united orchestra idea, as well as the united choir idea, the practicality of which has been annually demonstrated. Brother Mills will soon have some messages for you through these columns, and we trust he will meet with very hearty support in the new line of effort he is undertaking. We understand the National Orchestra at Independence is receiving some very valuable instruction from Mr. Heinrich Reitmeister of Kansas City, a member of the Symphony Orchestra of that place. This will, no doubt, bear rich fruit in the future, and the young men and maidens of the organization have reason to be very studious, and appreciative of this opportunity.

We are glad to hear of activities in any of our choirs. It may be late to speak of an item that reached us after our return from conference but it may encourage other small choirs to "go and do likewise." It is that of the Seattle Choir which gave a program on March 17, and netted a little over ten dollars. We presume this was of Saint Patrick's flavor, and can imagine its delightfulness. This choir is in charge of Brother Evan Inslee.

A sister sometime ago wrote us from Nevada, Missouri, speaking most enthusiastically of the work Brother H. E. Moler had done in that community in a musical way. He had given talks on the subject, encouraging them to study and cultivate music, and, leaving generalities, had shown them a pamphlet which he had found most useful in helping beginners to learn to sing. This is called, Rudiments of Music, by James R. Murray, and can be obtained from the John Church Company, Chicago, New York, or Cincinnati, for ten cents. This is good; when our missionaries sense the important bearing that music will have upon their work, and will take the pains to instruct or encourage the Saints in its development, they will find a power at their hand of no mean proportions. In this connection, it might not be amiss to suggest to the ministers that a word of appreciation from them occasionally in regard to the musical efforts that are put forth to enhance the beauty of their services, works wonders in the hearts of the singers. They do not offer their music for earthly praise any more than the ministers offer their sermons for that purpose; but just as preachers are encouraged and their hearts warmed by a few words of appreciation, so can the singers be made to feel that their efforts, and study, and painstaking hours of practice have not been in vain so far as the influence upon human hearts is concerned.

Another thing we have to offer this month for the consideration of the elders as well as the musicians. This was called to our attention sometime ago by a thoughtful sister of Nova Scotia. It has been her good fortune to visit several branches of Saints in many different localities and she finds a most embarrassing disagreement in the way many of our favorite church songs are sung in different cities. She refers to congregational singing at the prayer services and cites as instances, "Sweet hour of prayer," (of which some branches repeat the last two lines and some do not); the tune of "My Redeemer," (to which we sing the words of "Jesus I my cross have taken," as well as "Adoration," by Brother Luff); "Duke Street"; and "Nettleton," and so on through quite a long list. She suggests that the traveling ministers acquaint themselves with the way in which these tunes are sung at General Conference, and then instruct the Saints concerning them so that there will be a degree of uniformity,—at least so far as those tunes are concerned which are established and about which there is a standard of right and wrong.

News About Our Orchestras

The orchestral spirit is truly alive and seems to be permeating the entire church. From reports from various sources we know that many are already imbued with it and are thinking seriously (and very seriously, some of them) about what they can do for it and what it can do for them. Since our last General Conference there seems to be an awakening in the ranks of players on orchestral instruments looking to the formation of orchestral organizations for the purpose of rendering service in the work of the church. Holden, Missouri, which already had an excellent organization doing good service in the Sunday school, is the first to respond to the call of the new movement and enroll as a unit in the new work. This orchestra gives promise of very fine things for the church and will doubtless prove an asset to both the Holden Branch and the soon-to-be-organized Holden Stake. Brother Alma Moler is the appointed director and fully senses the importance of the work of his organization for the church's good.

And now comes Lamoni, always prompt in good works, and whole-heartedly enters the new movement. With the writer present she assembled her orchestral forces, and unanimously enrolled herself and her interests into actual alliance with the new orchestral movement; and the spirit of determination evident gives promise for future success for the church and its work. Though young, she will grow. Just watch her. Brother Joseph Anthony is the appointed director and he too has caught the contagion of the new work.

The Independence orchestra, which may be regarded as the central or "general" orchestra of the church, is feeling a rich measure of satisfaction because of the good work accomplished and the laurels gained last conference; and now is enthusiastically planning for future work and development. She hopes to do that which will enable her to honorably maintain her place and be the incentive for the development of the orchestral work throughout the church.

Saint Joseph, with its three live branches, keenly feels the spirit inciting to development and will work out her complex problem in due time with credit to herself. Other important branches of the church will in time respond and the work of music study and development will be a positive factor with us.

Greetings from the General Chorister

How little time we have to review the efforts of the past, when every day finds us pressing on towards a goal that seems even yet far distant. In this little brief period of rest which is just before us, it will be pleasant to dwell on the memories of the past; the successful achievements, the loyalty of our industrious musicians, and the work of another year. Indeed, we have been impressed by the devotion and consecration of our talented fraternity. The leader's task has been difficult, but the cooperation has been so magnificent that it has been a pathway of joyous experiences.

From now until about the first of September we will be busy outlining activities for the fall and spring of 1916-17. What suggestion have you to offer for our consideration? Have you a favorite anthem or Christmas cantata you would like to see used in our combined efforts? We want you to feel that you have a great, big part in this general choir movement. Get interested and let us hear from you about your ideas concerning the work.

May God be with us in our meditations and considerations of future possibilities.

A. N. HOXIE.

Brother Arthur Mills of Independence, is doing efficient work in coordinating the interests of the instrumental players of the church. We are anxious to be in touch with every branch of the church that is interested in this feature of the general choir movement.

Many hearts were made glad by the enthusiastic efforts of the Children's Chorus at the General Conventions. Sister Florence McNichols, of Independence, heads this department, and is ready to offer suggestions and plans to aid you in this interesting field.

Hymns We Love

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem
And crown him Lord of all."

Who among us has not felt the divine uplift and inspiring power of this wonderful hymn, voicing as it does the spirit of true praise and adoration to the "Lord of all"?

We sometimes think it must be akin to the "new song" which the redeemed shall sing around the throne of God. The same spirit which it brings, inspired it.

The following is its origin and history as it comes to us. "In 1780 an itinerant preacher known as 'Billy Dawson,' a farmer from Yorkshire, was preaching in London. He was uncultured and uncouth but had a strange ability to arouse the emotional piety of his congregations. Upon this occasion he had drawn a vivid picture of Christ as king, the pageantry of his coronation, the splendor of the heavenly host, and at the end he suddenly began to sing:

"All hail the power of Jesus' name!"

The effect can hardly be imagined. The beautiful tribute of praise and thanksgiving has come ringing down the years, though strangely enough it was not published for years after it was written. For five years afterward it was known as Perronet's Composition, and is so credited in some hymnals. It is easy indeed to believe that its origin was inspired.

Independence Stake

The steel and auto highways, one or both, traversing the beautiful land of Zion between the Lamoni and Independence stakes, have been so frequently traveled by your correspondent and others, brethren and sisters, in mutual visitations from one State to the other, that its hills, wooded dells, and waters, its many natural beauties and busy populations of cities, towns, and farms have become very familiar sights. Both distant and repeated close inspection lend enchantment and reveal moral, spiritual economic and social values and great possibilities to the view.

Under instructions from the President of the church, the undersigned was commissioned to attend and prepare minutes of conferences of the various stakes; Brother Elbert, as editor, requesting reports of Independence, Kansas City, and Holden Stake meetings for the HERALD. Fulfillment of these commissions has brought satisfaction and a substantial pleasure thus far, in the multiplied evidences that "our cause it is just"; that not without intelligent reason, "in God is our trust"—in him whose tender and benignant overshadowings have thus far evidenced his good will in fatherly considerateness.

The conference, comprising the membership of all branches in the city of Independence, met on Saturday, July 1, at 10 a. m., called by the First Presidency, Brethren Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith being duly appointed to preside; the undersigned, assisted by Brother O. W. Newton, being appointed to act as secretary.

A formal report of the reorganization of the Lamoni and Independence stakes, of organization of the Kansas City and Holden Stakes, will appear with the minutes of General Conference. Only an outline of procedure is reported here.

Nomination of Brother Walter W. Smith for president of the stake was followed by discussion which included in general terms the question of division of territory comprising the former stake, and the limiting of the present stake to the city of Independence. The discussion and the spirit of the following sessions were fruitful in removing misunderstandings and some differences of opinion growing out of the action of General Conference affecting the stake. The spirit of that divinely provided theodemocracy (the church), under the principle of common consent, was made apparent and clearly expressed in the voicings of the large number of the people who participated in a free expression of sentiment and opinion. As a result, clouds of apparent misconception were dispersed and a clearer and brighter atmosphere appeared and continued to increase throughout the conference. It is worthy of note that upon all questions but one, the vote was unanimous, the exception recording but two negative votes.

By successive procedure appointments, including provision for necessary ordinations, were as named: Walter W. Smith, president of the stake; Israel A. Smith, counselor to the president. M. H. Siegfried, bishop, with L. H. Haas and B. C. Harder, counselors. The stake high council: W. H. Deam, W. H. Williamson, A. H. Parsons, G. L. Harrington, W. D. Bullard, A. H. Mills, L. F. Stover, J. L. Gray, M. A. Etzenhouser, C. F. Davis, J. M. Cockerton, Albert Knowlton—"all good men and true," and as we believe they will be "attentive to their duty."

Appointment of a recorder, a secretary, and time of next conference were referred to presidency and bishopric. Local ushers, choristers, organists, assistants were appointed in the beginning of the session creating the new stake.

The session in the afternoon was occupied by auxiliary organizations—each of which reorganized to include their membership in the territory of the new stake. Earl E. Corthell is superintendent of the Sunday school association; N. F. Tower, president of the Religio; Mrs. E. S. McNichols, president of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The Sunday meetings included an early hour prayer meeting; a session of the Sunday school; preaching at eleven o'clock a. m. by Elbert A. Smith, at night by Frederick M. Smith; prayer meeting in the upper room at 2.30 p. m., and ordination service at 2.30 p. m. in lower room.

Brother Elbert's sermon was a plea for bigger—for big men and women; smallness, littleness, narrowness, magnifying of faults and general microscopic causes of trouble highly magnified—airy nothings, often bodied forth in imagination and given a very general habitation and a name, were delineated for relegation to the limbo of many past causes of trouble. He plead for a true vision, a point of view promotive of unity under the larger life of bigger qualities; for true manliness and noble womanliness in Christian brotherhood. The choir's service, with the organ prelude, was very fine. The dramatic forcefulness of the number, "Put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments," was well rendered and added measurably to the inspiration of the service.

The afternoon ordination service was characterized by a spirit of grace and light. Brethren were ordained to stake offices, some as members of the general high council.

President Frederick M. Smith delivered a spirited address under manifest inspiration of his calling. He recited among other things that changes in official position were not made, as some had feared, in ruthless disregard of the value and service of older brethren. He had been taught by his revered father to have respect to aged people. Himself and most of the newly appointed officers of the church were men approaching or in middle life. Past officers had borne the brunt of active service; young men should bear it now; with older men for counsel, young men for war and other strenuous service. He spoke in a spirit of considerateness and with manifest depth of feeling.

The President recited a matter of special interest: About twenty-one of our boys from Independence and Kansas City under enlistment were in military service at Camp Clark, Nevada, Missouri. He had visited them and after due consultation with the commanding officer, organized them into "Battery C Branch"; Ellis Short, jr., presiding elder, Vere Blair, priest. The boys welcomed the opportunity to enjoy and serve in church work; Sunday school, Religio service, etc. These boys, surrounded by various influences, their religion little known, were determined to keep the faith under all the exigencies of camp life and military duty. Brother Short had married a soldier and his sweetheart, his first official act; purchasing a bottle of grape juice he remarked that there would be a sacrament service held on Sunday, even if on the train en route to the seat of war. A spirit of more than human emotion seemed to approve the recital of Brother Smith's emergency procedure and give it approbation. The presiding patriarch followed with a plea for confidence and unity toward ultimate success. Brother Sheehy spoke of the necessary duty of the boys under enlistment.

In the evening Brother Frederick M. Smith preached a strong, forceful sermon. He made an earnest plea for a forward movement in the stake. His list of ideals in stake work included an active local ministry occupying earnestly, regularly covering territory which he hoped would include a radius of twenty-five miles from Independence, and include active service by one hundred ministers. Christ could do no mighty work because of unbelief of the people; officers of the church could accomplish nothing without united faith and support of the membership. The bad and misleading worldliness of the world must be discarded and let alone: dancing, card playing in Saints' homes or elsewhere, patronage of unworthy cheap theaters, all similar follies killed spirituality and led to loss of moral power. The good of the world we should include as part of our patrimony; our attitude towards its vices, follies, misuse of time and energies should be clear-cut and unequivocal. Reasonable recreation and normal pleasures and relaxations for old and young, within the spirit of the gospel, were advocated. The large assembly expressed its approbation of the address.

The conference then formally adjourned. Brother E. A. Smith announced hymn number 12, which was sung as a closing song of devotion. Brother W. W. Smith dismissed the assembly.

Criticisms Examined.—Part 2

(The following reply grew out of a correspondence had between Pastor Hudgins of the Millennial Dawn movement and myself. The article answered was published in The Bible Student's Monthly, volume 7, number 8, no date, but was issued about September, 1915. The article is headed, "Reply to an elder of a Reorganized 'Mormon' Church, concerning startling divergences between the Book of Mormon and God's inspired word the Bible." The elder referred to was the writer. The reply follows.—J. M. T.)

A creed that will thus make God a partial being, and Christ a respecter of persons, needs to be torn down and reconstructed to make it congruent with reason and the Bible, which represents God as impartial and just, to which also testifies the Book of Mormon, all of which demand equal reward for equal service. This stamps the system as human in origin and faulty in construction.

That the gospel was preached and the church existed before Pentecost is evident from Paul's testimony. (Galatians 3: 6-8.) God preached the gospel to Abraham. (Verse 8.) "Abraham believed God and it was accounted to him for righteousness." (Verse 6.) "They which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham." (Verse 7.) "They which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." (Verse 9.) This tells its own story, placing Abraham and all the patriarchs and prophets in the same kingdom with Peter and the church after "Calvary." See also Stephen's testimony as borne in his last grand sermon. (Acts 7: 38.) We heed to one Lord, one faith, one gospel, obedience to which brings the same great reward in all ages of the world, the kingdom of God, the family of God which will finally be gathered together and be one in Christ. (Ephesians 3: 15.)

5. "Mormonism teaches that man's future glory will depend upon marriage and offspring, and that propagation of species will continue in the spirit realm amongst the 'worthy ones.'" Then follows a quotation from Utah Doctrine and Covenants 132: 15-17. This is followed by an argument based on 1 Corinthians 7: 8, 9, 28, from which you conclude as follows: "Humanity even when perfected will therefore be, 'a little lower than the angels,' whereas the church who have sacrificed earthly rights shall be like unto their heavenly bridegroom, far above angels, principalities, powers."

Brother, in this number five, like in your number two, you have labored hard to formulate a solid shot, but in aiming your heavy artillery you have pointed in the opposite direction from us, hence missed your mark.

You state in the heading that you are answering an elder of "a Reorganized 'Mormon' Church." Don't you know, sir, that you cannot find such quotation in any of the books of the church you are contending against? Don't you know you are departing from the laws of honorable controversy by trying to pander to the prejudices of the public by making deceptive and erroneous quotations? The Book of Mormon, the Bible, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, are a perfect unity on the marriage question. Hear them:

"They twain shall be one flesh."—Bible.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife."—Book of Mormon.

"Thou shalt love thy wife, cleave unto her and none else."—Doctrine and Covenants.

"Marriage is for time only." "Keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives."—Doctrine and Covenants 111: 2.

"In resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage."—Matthew 22: 30.

6. "The Book of Mormon teaches that water immersion is for the remission of sins. Such a theory forces us to the conclusion that saintly Presbyterians, Methodists, and other good people who have never undergone water immersion are doomed to endless torture, or to years in purgatorial fires. It is true that John the Baptist taught water baptism for the remission of sin, but John's baptism was for Jews only."

Peter on Pentecost, after the kingdom was perfected, said: "Be baptized for the remission of sins," carrying into the gospel work the same baptism for the same purpose. John preached the "baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." "Go teach all nations, baptizing them." (Jesus.) "Can any man forbid water that these (Gentiles) should not be baptized?" (Peter.) Paul in Hebrews 6: 2 places baptism as one of the principles of the doctrine of Christ. The people at Ephesus visited by Paul (Acts 19: 1-7) had not been baptized unto the true baptism of John, for had they been they would have heard of the Holy Ghost. When they discovered their mistake they were willing to be baptized under correct faith and by an authorized messenger for Christ.

Paul, in Romans 6: 3-6, speaks of baptism as a burial with him by baptism—"planted together in the likeness of his death"—all centering and agreeing in the one thought and doctrine—baptism in water for the remission of sins.

7. "The Book of Mormon teaches that Adam transgressed in order to bring forth offspring, and that if he had not thus transgressed the race could not have been propagated. (2 Nephi 1: 8.) Now this could not be true since the Creator said unto them, 'Be fruitful and multiply.' God gave them this instruction before they transgressed. Why should not Adam seek to bring Eve and their children [how many had they?—J. M. T.] up out of sin instead of going down into sin himself? My conclusion is that the Book of Mormon is a concoction of the Adversary. I do not say that Joseph Smith was an evil person, but it is apparent that the "fallen angels" deceived him into thinking he had a revelation from Jehovah, whereas he must have received his revelation from the hosts of Satan."

To place such a stringent interpretation on this command to "multiply and replenish" as is done by you, will make man to multiply before he was given a material body, hence commit you to the doctrine of "spirit propagation," that you accused us of in your number five.

Notice carefully, after the creation as described in Genesis 1, we have this language in Genesis 2: 4, 5: "These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, . . . and every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb before it grew." Yet man had been created in the image of God, spiritually, before he was given a material body. Hence the command to replenish the earth was not applicable in the spirit state, but was one part of God's great scheme for the final happiness of man.

In 1 Timothy 2: 14, 15 Paul says: "Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression. Notwithstanding she shall be saved in childbearing." Had Adam remained faithful, the woman being cast out, it would have produced an early divorcement.

The plan was perfect and wise by which we pass a probation of trial that we might enjoy the sweets of the great redemption through Christ. That there were children born before the fall is purely presumption. If there were, what kinds of beings were they? What became of them? How many were there?

I am pleased, yet puzzled at your statement that Joseph Smith was not an evil man, yet deceived by fallen angels and inspired by demons. The puzzle is how Joseph Smith being deceived, and inspired by demons, could bring forth the work he did. Jesus said, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The fruitage of the work of Joseph Smith was the restoration of ancient Christianity, the organization of a church in precise accord with the church Christ organized, the preaching of the same gospel of faith, repentance, baptism in water for the remission of sins, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and from these a life of purity, chastity, brotherly kindness, faith and love, the church thus organized being endowed with the same divine blessings that were with the church in the days of the apostles. He gave to the world the inspired record, the Book of Mormon, containing an additional witness of the divinity of Christ as the Savior, revealing the history of the prehistoric races of America, of their religion, their wars, their origin; also he gave to the world a correction of the translation of the Bible which will stand every test.

Thus, as Jesus said, by their fruits ye shall know them. Instead of being actuated by fallen angels he was inspired by a true angel of light, spoken of in Revelation 14: 6, where John sees an angel with the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth. Joseph Smith preached this same everlasting gospel, reaching back through all the ages, the same one preached to Abraham, and by Noah, and Enoch, and Moses, Peter, John, Paul, and Jesus Christ.

This same gospel is being preached by the ministry of the church organized by command of God to Joseph Smith on April 6, 1830, and perpetuated by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and under the inspiration of the divine Spirit we bear witness to its truthfulness. Joseph Smith filled the role of a true prophet, in that he foretold events which have been fulfilled, and others in process of fulfillment in the wars now in progress; he testified to the divinity of Christ, of the Bible, and finally sealed his testimony with his own blood, on June 27, 1844.

Is it possible, Brother Hudgings, that all this good fruit could be produced by being deceived by fallen angels and inspired by demons? If this is deception, give me more of it.

Helpful to Chart Users

[We gladly give space to the following letter, and commend the work the brother desires to do for the church. Brother Cox has kindly sent one of the pointers to the editorial office and we can say that it is a beautiful piece of work. We are sure his limited supply will soon be exhausted, for we have many missionaries and others who use charts and maps in their work: We suggest that those who write Brother Cox that are able be liberal enough to at least furnish postage, as he will perhaps have extensive correspondence in his endeavors to serve the church. However, he is not asking nor expecting even that. Made a little shorter than the length he specifies for pointers, these would make excellent batons for choir leaders. Perhaps some communities may find it possible to send tips of horns, which would make very attractive pointers or batons. There are about one hundred and fifty pieces of sole leather in the specimen sent us, ranging in size from about one fourth inch at the tip to three fourths of an inch at the butt.—EDITORS.]

DALBY SPRINGS, TEXAS, June 26, 1916.

Editors Herald: Will you please say to the elders in the different parts of the field who use charts, that I have what I call pointers, that I would like to give to every elder in the field? I want to help all I can with the good work, and knowing that there are many who make use of charts and need something of this kind, I shall be glad to furnish one to each elder who will write me, giving his address. It is worth about $2.50 to make these, but I will charge nothing for them.

I feel that I have been of little help to this work that I love so well, and being a mechanic, I can make these pointers very handily, and propose to make as many as I can free of charge, and will pay the postage. I have several on hand now which I will send to those who first request them. After they are gone, those who desire them should send me scraps of leather, sole leather preferred, and I will make them up and send them out as fast as possible.

I have made some of horn, and they are very nice, but it is difficult to get horns as the points are all that will do to use, since the opening in the center must not be over one eighth of an inch. For those sending me this material I will make them up.

From the leather I cut plugs or wads and put them on about one eighth inch steel wire, about twenty-four inches long, with brass trimmings on each end, and if properly cared for, I think they will be in good condition when the millennium is ushered in.

It should be comparatively easy to get these scraps of leather from harness and shoe shops, and I believe the pointers will be a source of much satisfaction to those who have use for them.

Wife and I are old and feeble. Please remember us in your prayers.

FREESOIL, MICHIGAN, June 17, 1916.

Editors Herald: We are still busy preaching and doing all we can to advance the gospel among the people. We are getting along fine in our branch. We have good interest at Fountain. At Millerton Brother Buel Shelley has good interest. We also go from here to Hayville, thirty-six miles, and have good interest there. We are expecting to baptize some there soon. One has asked for baptism, so every officer is busy.

I find the more we do in spreading the gospel, the better we feel spiritually. I have been in the church thirty years and have enjoyed myself very much. I love to serve God; it is not a burden to me. I love to work for the advancement of the cause of Christ. I have felt his power many times. Often in preaching and having good liberty I would want to get alone and thank God for his kindness to me. So we feel encouraged; feel that we want to be faithful to the end.

OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA, June 22, 1916.

Editors Herald: Many thousands of young strong men have been ruthlessly murdered in Europe; ghastly "hell." Many thousands of widows and mothers are mourning because the lights of their lives have been taken away, and many thousands have died a civilized death since my last letter to you, still I am living and the sun continues to shine. Force of habit, the atheist might say. Still Methuselah died after a while, and we read that the sun is to be turned into darkness. I wonder what is the matter with our great solar system that the great central light will need to be turned into darkness? Or are we to understand that simply some local obstruction will obscure the light from this earth for a period? Say! but wouldn't it be fine if we had a good reliable, infallible twentieth-century Solomon among us that would explain just what is to be taken literally and what it to be taken figuratively in the Bible? Some one that can be taken literally. Language they say is the medium for expressing thought. Lots of parcels get lost and damaged in the express business, though.

It seems quite a while ago since the train pulled out of North Station, Boston, with a special car attached in which were a number en route for General Conference. Yet I can remember it all right, also remember that it was through the kindness of the dear Saints of Boston that the writer was privileged to be of the number. Furthermore, I can distinctly remember the many faces made dear by long association which spoke good will and bon voyage. There are other things beside clouds which are lightened up around the edges. Sometimes a handshake has a silver lining which the missionary is often glad to remember. Not always because of the lining itself, but because of it being the reflection of a higher light as well. The Ensign and HERALD have saved me from the necessity of writing up the convention and conference, save to say that it was distinctly and emphatically a young man's conference. None the worse for that, I'm only sixty-three. I can also remember distinctly the few days of pleasant association of many friends after the conference before taking the train for the land of flowers where the sun sets, (more or less literal).

At Santa Ana, Garden Grove, Seal Beach and Long Beach I was privileged to be for a week or two associated with friends of other days in church, Sunday school and Religio, as well as social activities. All very pleasant. I should like to mention names providing there were space for all in this letter, but if I did it would look more like a church directory than anything else, so I desist. Besides quite a number who had quite nice names a few months ago, have changed them.

Sorry that through a mistake in United States mailing system I failed to reach Fresno. At Stockton, I was glad to meet many with whom I had labored a few years ago, but some have gone over the river. Some features of the Sunday school are worthy of mention. Since leaving Stockton my time has been occupied in Oakland with the exception of two occasions in San Francisco, referred to by others.

And what shall I say of Oakland? One thing I must certainly say: Their welcome to me as a pastor was unanimous, cordial and sincere. Their vote and social reception said so; and their provision for maintenance and promises of moral support are proving it. Oakland has some fine people, both old and young. The burden and responsibility of the office assigned me presents itself in a way that can certainly be felt. All who are interested in our welfare can join with me in hoping that when the period of my labors here is ended that there can truthfully be said at least some of the good things that are being said of those who have labored here before me.

We are hopeful of good things in Oakland. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

KIRTLAND, OHIO, June 30, 1916.

Editors Herald: I desire to call the attention of the Saints in the Ohio and Western Pennsylvania Mission to the fact that we are intending to hold two reunions in said mission. The Ohio Southern District will hold their reunion at Creola, Ohio, July 28 to August 6. It has been some years since they have held a reunion in said district. The last two reunions were not well attended, hence many of the Saints united with Kirtland reunion. However, a great many of the Saints of this district are very anxious to have a reunion of their own. Therefore, we sincerely hope that all the Saints will put forth a special effort to make the coming reunion a great success. Brother H. E. Moler has had published a notice of particulars.

The Kirtland reunion will convene at Kirtland, Ohio, August 10 to 20. There are five districts represented at the latter reunion. It is to be hoped that Saints of these districts will make it a point to attend all the sessions. We urge all the officers of said districts, Sunday school and Religio to cooperate to make the coming reunions of intense interest and profit to all who will be in attendance. Officers belonging to any of the quorums should be present to get acquainted with each other and learn their duties. The Saints can camp in tents right under the eaves of the Lord's house. There are beautiful trees all around the building. We extend an invitation to Bishops McGuire and Kelley, and the apostles in the adjoining missions to meet with us, as also all the Saints who desire to join with us. There will be motor cars to take you to and from Willoughby. Bishop Becker has given particulars in church papers. Come and bring the good Spirit with you, so that we can have a grand spiritual feast.

Your brother in the conflict,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

News from Branches

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

After eleven years of loving and faithful service, our former pastor, Walter W. Smith, has directed his steps in the direction in which his heart seems ever to have been inclined: Zionward.

On Wednesday evening, June 21, a large company of Saints and friends met in the church and formally paid their hearts' tribute of respect to Brother and Sister Smith for their devoted and effective services. A very interesting program was had, after which luncheon was served. This function served also to welcome the incoming pastor, J. August Koehler and wife.

Children's Day services were held on June 18, at which time thirty-three children were baptized by Brother Smith, and during the week eight more were baptized, including three adults, so that Brother Smith's last year here has yielded a rich harvest in baptisms.

A large body of new material has been gathered in here during the past few years, and it becomes the duty of the new pastor and associates to bring about an assimilation of this new material to the church.

An "eleventh hour" request was made by Brother Smith of Brother A. N. Hoxie to produce "The Holy City," just once more. It seemed an impossible task, but in characteristic style the choir members were given three hurried rehearsals and "all was well." A large congregation were present to hear the very splendid rendition of this oratorio.

Brother Koehler discoursed on Sunday last on "The primary function of the minister of Christ" and used as a text: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations. . . ." From this sermon we got our cue as to what we may expect from him in the future.

Independence, Missouri

Sunday evening, July 2, was oppressively hot, yet there was present a large congregation to listen to a stirring discourse by President Frederick M. Smith who had for two days labored strenuously in the interest of the important new movement, namely, the reorganizing of the Independence Stake, and the seating, in their proper places, of its chief men as officials.

Providential it surely was that a spiritual, educated and gifted man of the church, in the very prime of life, stood ready and prepared to enter upon so high and important a mission. God was with him all through the sessions of the special conference, called for July 1, and in the work of ordaining he was ably assisted by President E. A. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, William Aylor and J. A. Tanner.

Saturday forenoon there was permitted a full, free, and unconfined discussion of an important subject, although it had been well disposed of at the General Conference, and at its close, the work of the Sunday school, Religio and Woman's Auxiliary was taken up and completed without a ruffle. Everything passed off smoothly, and the basement all day long was well filled with a highly interested, kindly disposed body of Saints, who were workers in the local and Kansas City branches.

Brethren Wells and Trowbridge presided at the Sunday morning prayer meeting and the chief feature was the many prayers and testimonies and the reading of a paper on "the redemption of Zion," written by Sister Sadie Burch.

The Sunday school with an attendance of 914—29 officers and 111 teachers, assembled as usual, Brother William Aylor opening with prayer and Brethren Krahl and Davis presiding.

The national hymns, "America," "Star-spangled banner" and "Columbia, the gem of the ocean," were sung.

The annual picnic was held at Enoch's Hill on the Fourth and the committee appointed spared no pains to make it a success. President Elbert A. Smith occupied at the morning church service after an inspiring rendering of the anthem, "Put on thy beautiful garments, O Zion, awake! Put on thy strength, O Jerusalem, the holy city!" and the solo part was sung by Sister Bernice Griffith who for a long time has with her consecrated talent given heartily her service at Walnut Park church.

Our beloved Brother Elbert started out in a pointed, practical sermon, with a text taken from 2 Peter, "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you," also "Add to your faith, virtue," etc., and a large body of Saints and friends listened with rapt attention.

In the evening President Frederick M. Smith also was greeted by a well-filled house, and his discourse will long be remembered for its strong reasoning and admonition, and its vigorous setting forth of our duties and aims in gospel work. Our new stake president, Walter W. Smith, welcomed into our midst, pronounced the benediction, commending the church assembled to the loving-kindness and mercy of our heavenly Father. Words fail to express the gratitude of our hearts for this strengthening effort of our brother Frederick M., in which he extolled a firm cooperation of labor and a consecration and devotion to this glorious work, with all its sacrifices, its responsibilities, and difficulties.

May our love and confidence in our Father's watch care over his people increase: and for his never failing goodness and mercy, let our song arise, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Your sister in the bond of faith, success. These brethren will receive report blanks from the men in charge of their respective fields. We trust they will be energetic in labor, prompt in reporting and improve every opportunity, so that at the close of the year we may have a splendid report to present to the conference.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

We again remind the presidents of districts and branches that we desire a complete list of scattered members, in order to extend our missionary efforts. We also desire to have them report the places where missionary work is performed, together with the address of people who have assisted in said work.

Sincerely,

ULYSSES W. GREENE.

WINTER HILL, MASSACHUSETTS, 55 Grant Street, July 1, 1916.

To the Saints of the Northwestern Ohio District; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in said district, and being a stranger, I would like to hear from isolated Saints or friends where it would be possible to open up the work. I am informed that there are many Saints scattered throughout the district. I would be glad to hear from any as to the possibilities around your home. We are commanded to warn our neighbors, so let us labor together to that end. We as missionaries need your cooperation, and will consider every application that comes, and arrange for work in your locality as soon as possible. Any of the branches in the district that desire to hold a series of meetings, if they will let us know we will try to arrange for it.

If any of the local ministry have any place in mind that could be opened, we will appreciate it if they will either attend to it themselves or get in touch with me, and I will try to arrange to look after it.

Praying that the Master will direct us in our efforts to build up his work during the conference year, I am,

Your brother,

WILLIAM ANDERSON.

Reunion Notices

[We give space to the following to show how a circular letter might be written to each branch in a district, to be read to the members thereof. Because our space is constantly crowded, we must ordinarily give mention in our Miscellaneous Department only to the essentials in matters of local interest. We trust our readers will appreciate the situation.—EDITORS.]

To the Saints of the Northern California District; Greeting: The time for our annual reunion will soon be here, and during that time we will hold our semiannual conference; and we want your presence at the meeting. Are you planning on coming? Are you getting ready? If not, you should waste no time getting ready, for the time will soon pass away. Don't fail to be there, unless attendance is impossible. Don't eat ice cream every day, and go to the movies every night, and then say, "I can't spare the money."

We want to impress on your minds, dear Saints, that this is going to be one of the reunions that you read about; one of the very best, and most educational ever held in the district; and it is very important that you be there. Yes! You! Not the other brother or sister, but you! You are one of the units that help to make up the kingdom of God; and we want you there.

If there are any in the district that have become disheartened or discouraged, and all down and out, come to the reunion and enjoy the good time we are all going to have; get your spiritual strength renewed; get some oil in your vessel, trim up your lamp and have it burning, so that you can see where you are walking, and then you will be able to see the pitfalls, and stumblingblocks that are in the pathway of life.

If there are any pessimists that think the church is all out of joint and not making any progress, and that the whole organization is going to smash, let them come to the reunion and get a good dose of genuine spiritual tonic, and get the spiritual man toned and built up, giving him a chance to get some good spiritual food, so that he can stand on his feet, and be able to do something. Then let him go to work, and not sit around and do nothing but find fault with those who are making sacrifice, and putting forth every effort they can to build up the kingdom. Take the old battered hammer that you have been knocking with, and throw it in the junk pile; get you a new bright sickle and go to reaping somewhere, and try to get some sheaves for your harvest.

If there be any optimists that are so optimistic they think everything is going smoothly and that the church is making such great strides, that we are all to be carried along on flowery beds of ease, and don't need any of their help, financially or otherwise, let them come to the reunion and have a good heart to heart talk with the pessimist, and see if he cannot be convinced that there is something he can do. Let them form a copartnership, equalize things, and go to work! Then if they feel like kicking, let them go behind the barn and kick each other because they did not go to work long ago.

The committee are going to do all in their power to make the reunion a success; are you going to help us? If you think that Irvington is not the proper place to hold a reunion, come, and bring a better place with you; maybe we can "swap." Anyway, that will be one of the propositions that will be discussed at the conference. You should be there and have your say and abide by the decision.

We are going to have the best drinking water that we can get. The toilets will be sanitary and flyproof. The dust will all be laid and remain so, till something stirs it up. We have not ordered any fog or mosquitoes, as we are likely to have all we need by donation, or otherwise. There will be separate shower baths for men and women. The water will be as warm as an August sun can heat it. There will be straw for sale, on the grounds, for tents and beds.

The cooking and eating department will be conducted the same as last reunion, and meals will be furnished at the lowest possible figure. The same sister that had the cook house in charge last year has been engaged for the present reunion, so we are assured that the food will be clean and wholesome. Let everyone come with a cheerful countenance, and a prayer in his heart, and we will have a grand, good spiritual reunion. So may it be.

Send in your orders for tents as soon as possible to me at 615 Spencer Avenue, San Jose, California.

Sincerely, in bonds,

C. W. HAWKINS, Chairman of Committee.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Mary C. Hart, of Viola, Iowa, requests prayers for her son. While visiting his mother who was very ill, he received news of the death of his wife and two sons, who had been killed in North Dakota. He has been prostrated and seems unable to recover. The sister has faith that the united efforts of the Prayer Union may be effective in his behalf.

Saints are requested to fast for one meal and fervently pray for the recovery of Sr. Mollie Lukecart, of Castana, Ia.

The relatives of Brother J. A. Lawson desire the prayers of the Saints in his behalf. He is afflicted with a breakdown of the nervous system, and his mind is much affected. He is now at Clarinda, Iowa, at the home of his parents.

Typewriter Service in Rural Communities

The typewriter is coming into more extended use in rural communities because of the assistance it renders to all classes of people. Here are a few examples of the possibilities of service:

The Farmer: Think of the possibilities of selling produce by the means of typewritten letters sent out to customers? Typewritten letters give the sender a business standing with the people who receive them and also enable the keeping of carbon copies of the correspondence, which many times does away with misunderstandings and lawsuits.

The General Store Merchant: More prompt and courteous treatment is likely to be accorded his orders and correspondence with the City jobber and manufacturer if his letters are typewritten.

In The Home: The boy or girl who is intending to follow a business career can secure no better start than a knowledge of typewriter operating. Children who learn to use the typewriter learn spelling at the same time. The housewife finds it a great convenience in writing recipes and for general correspondence.

The Minister: No Clergyman should be without a typewriter. It is of great assistance in preparing sermons and writing the many letters that a pastor has to write.

THE PERFECT LAW OF LIBERTY

III—THE OBJECTIVE: LIBERTY

"Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty."—James.

All normal men prize liberty. Patrick Henry declared: "As for me, give me liberty or give me death." That sounds bombastic. It sounds like the Fourth of July. The only thing that keeps it from being ridiculous is that Patrick Henry meant it. Thousands of others have meant it. They have made the definite choice on numberless bloody battle fields and have given their lives in an effort to obtain freedom for themselves or, more sublime sacrifice, for others.

But whether on the scaffold high,
Or on the battle's van,
The fittest place where man can die,
Is when he dies for man.—Barry.

Men who are free should be thankful. But not all men who are out of jail are free. When Jesus said to the Jews, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free," they laughed at him. They declared: "We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man."

Yet the children of Abraham were not free in any sense. They were not free politically, intellectually, religiously, or morally. But Jesus said: "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

We may make the same mistake to-day. It is possible to live in a free country, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," and yet not be free. There are thousands of slaves under the Star-Spangled Banner and under the Union Jack.

The writer met a young man who had become somewhat interested in our message. At the close of the interview, the young man said, "The trouble with me is that I know what is right but I can't do it."

He was a man perhaps thirty years of age, tall, broad, strong, active, above the average in mental and physical strength. We looked at him with some surprise and said, "You, a big husky young man in possession of all your faculties, and cannot do what you want to do! Cannot do right when you know the right! What is the matter with you?"

He looked nonplused and confused but had no explanation. What was the trouble? He was not a free man. Know ye not that whom ye list to obey, his servants ye are?

His strength defeated him. He had lost spiritual dominion and the strength of his appetites and passions was too much for him. We could discern his manner of life under the fine exterior.

The state cannot set this man free. The state has done all that it can for him. Like Paul of old who answered the captain who declared that with a great price he had purchased Roman citizenship, by averring, "But I was born free," this young man was born free, in a free land, but he lost his personal freedom.

The perfect law of liberty is the only thing that can set him free. "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

This man was dissatisfied, but not enough. He disliked his bondage, but he liked it more than he disliked it. Dissatisfaction had not become intense enough to produce real repentance. He chose to continue in bondage. Jesus will not set a man free who prefers to remain in bondage.

The law that would compel men to be free would not be a perfect law and to perpetrate an Irish "bull": The man who is compelled to be free is a slave. It is a matter of belief with us that sometime, somewhere, with clearer vision, most men will choose to be free, and will find that perfect freedom in obedience to the perfect law.
