The Council of National Defense and the Advisory Commission of the council believe that a concerted effort for economy by the people of the Nation will not only go far toward paying America's expense in the war, but will also reduce consumption of raw and manufactured materials essential to the conduct of the war.

The council urges all to refrain from unnecessary expenditures of every kind, and to bear constantly in mind that only one thing is now of real importance, and that is the winning of the war.

The Nation's resources in man power, money, transportation, foodstuffs, raw materials, and fuel, have already been subjected to heavy strain, and it is the clear duty of every citizen to guard against increasing this strain by a single wasteful act.

It is most creditable for everyone—man and woman, boy and girl—to be economical in dress, food, and manner of living. Every evidence of helpful self-denial on the part of all in a time like this is most commendable.

This war is more than a conflict between armies; it is a contest in which every man, woman, and child can and should render real assistance. Thrift and economy are not only a patriotic privilege; they are a duty.

Through books the embryo intellect becomes quickened and enlarged. Literature is a door for the unfettered soul, through which it passes on its eager journey of quest and accumulation, to the utmost bounds of the material universe.—H. J. Davison.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON | 5020 Cal. St., Omaha, Nebr.

Are You a Domestic Scientist?

Elsewhere we are publishing a communication from Sister Bertha Mader, in charge of our domestic science classes, together with a splendid outline of the work which is available for our church women in this line. It occurs to us to ask how many of you are taking advantage of these opportunities. If we are to be saved by light and truth, and if these can only be attained by thoughtful study and application, can any of us afford to remain contentedly in ignorance of any helpful subject when we have a chance to inform ourselves upon it?

The Government is sending out everywhere men and women qualified, by experience and knowledge, to educate the women of this country concerning the very vital subject of food, and its proper use in the present very serious condition of the world. If we are to avoid being in the starving situation which is gripping other portions of God's footstool at this time, if we are to properly nourish our own men who have gone forth to fight our battles, if we are to divide, in any Christian-like degree, our plenty with those whose table Nature has not so plentifully provided, we must know how to intelligently use what we have, how to save, how to discriminate, and how to share. If ever there was a time when the topic of food economy was properly a popular one, it is now. Indeed it has come to be a reproach to any woman not to understand the fundamentals concerning this branch of service.

Let us, in our plans for the summer and fall, see that we include as much time as possible for a more scientific study of our homes. Let us make ourselves qualified priestesses therein—capable of offering a more acceptable service than ever before. Write Sister Mader, and get the help she is so qualified and ready to give.

From Sister Mader

Dear Sister Anderson: Under separate cover I am mailing you an outline for the Domestic Science course, together with a small leaflet gotten out at conference time. Sister Glines has suggested that the idea be placed before our women as soon as possible, that they may know we are ready for work. Outlines for the other divisions of the department will be completed in a few weeks.

From experience I deem it best to organize classes for the domestic science work, and choose a leader or teacher. One thing I wish particularly to impress upon our sisters, and that is the advisability of using all outside local helps possible, such as home economics teachers, or demonstrators, as well as the Government aids in the shape of bulletins, pamphlets, etc.

Any isolated sisters should feel at liberty to study the course directly with me. This they can do by writing out their questions concerning each lesson, and mail to me. Perhaps I can help them to meet and overcome the difficulties of any lesson.

I have been answering letters about our work, and am anxious to get the material I have to offer in the hands of our sisters before their summer conventions, if possible, and shall appreciate any effort made by our ministers, local or missionary, as well as others, to advertise the "preparedness" in this department.

My address is Holton, Kansas, rural route 4, and I will welcome any inquiries or suggestions.

MEAT AND POULTRY

Do you buy your meat by the pound or by the so-many-cents worth? Do you ask for the kind you want by name or must you tell your butcher you would like a roast or a boil, etc.?

We suggest that most of us change our ways in this matter for more intelligent ones and thereby get more satisfactory results.

Draw or ask some one to draw for you the outline of a cow, a lamb, and a hog on a large piece of muslin or tough paper to be used for the class. Then visit some accommodating butcher and ask him to mark off on these drawings the various cuts of meat and name them for you. He may do this lightly in pencil and you can go over it with a heavier line at home.

Using the suggestions of your text on page 211, learn to locate the different grades of meat and name them.

Visit some good meat shop as a class. The one in charge of the shop, with whom you should make previous arrangements for the visit, will be able to demonstrate the difference in fresh and stale meat by appearance, odor, etc. Such a visit will also be an opportunity to review what you have learned of cuts of meat and their names.

- I. Composition of meats:
 - Protein, fat, and mineral salts.
- II. Dangers from eating meat:
 - A. Animal parasites, injurious to people, may be eaten. (Killed by thorough cooking.)
 - B. Poisons may be developed by bacteria when meat is kept too long.
 - C. Bacteria, sometimes present in meat, are directly injurious to man.
- III. Principles of cooking meat:
 - A. Fat is melted by heat.

 - C. Meat fiber softens at a temperature below the boiling point of water.
 - D. If meat is put into cold water or heated slowly at a low temperature, juices escape.
 - E. For roasts, broiling, and pan broiling, use suggestions under B at first, then C. For soups, use suggestions under D at first, then C.

PREPARING MEALS AND TABLE SERVICE

This chapter deals with the things that make up a woman's final test of efficiency about her kitchen and dining room, the place where she spends most of her working hours. We cannot advise you more clearly or concisely than does the text, so we shall attempt no outline.

Our authors have given us some excellent suggestions on table equipment and service; ways of saving time and work and yet helping us maintain a standard of practice that will keep us well within the ranks of the more refined while still giving us time for study and improvement.

In the matter of table service, we do not advocate carrying out every suggestion at every meal, but we do advise that every care be taken to have the table correctly and neatly set, though it be for only a cup of bread and milk in the kitchen. And do teach the little family the right use of the knife, fork, and spoon. Teach them good table manners and practice them every day.

Nothing, after correct speech, more quickly betrays one's lack of home training than bad table manners.

COST AND PURCHASING OF FOOD

The contents of this chapter can best be studied by considering the topics treated in their relation to your own local conditions.

It would be well to find the present cost and nutritive value of the articles given in the table on page 283.

Our telephones are a necessity but we abuse their use when we do all our shopping over them. Go, see what you buy. Purchase in large enough quantities. You will not need to order every day. Good managers never do. Buy the best quality you can afford. Bargains in food are usually expensive.

Lesson XVIII

Chapter XVIII

MENUS AND DIETANES

This is an excellent chapter. Work out the problems it suggests for your own family, not every day, to see how your food supply tallies with the body needs.

Using the tables on pages 299, 301, 310, 311, 313, calculate the number of calories the different members of your family need and how much of the usual foods on hand you must prepare to meet this requirement.

We cannot take time to work out such problems every day, but a few times trying will give us a basis from which to judge the food we supply the family.

In closing, let us say that no one is to feel that such studies as are found in the foregoing lessons are useless because every penny must be so carefully counted. We are all counting the pennies these days and should always do so not in miserly fashion but with the purpose in view of spending wisely. See how much you can do with little. It is real work of course, but the kind that makes us thinking workers and really worth while.

Civilian Relief and Home Service.—No. 2

When at last our country's soldiers and sailors return home, their families should be found to have maintained the essential standards of home life. Nothing less than this will measure up to American ideals. The Government is doing its full share to conserve the homes of its fighting men, and a majority of their families are going to be able to make good with no other aid. Many others, however, without the kind of friendly, democratic helpfulness which the Red Cross offers, would be crippled in spirit and in health by the stress of these times. Relatively speaking, only a few are likely to need the money relief described later, and from now on such relief will be the least important part of home service. It has been the least important part in the past.

Home service has already proved its ability to conserve human resources in thousands of homes by helping to maintain there good standards of child care, of physical and mental health, of education, and of working conditions. In some communities these standards have been achieved only after long toil. How can home service continue to help in maintaining them?

STANDARDS OF CHILD CARE

Living is more difficult in war times, and the first thing for a home service visitor to understand, in trying to conserve the welfare of children, is that their mothers are often lonely and discouraged. Whatever will give the mothers courage to "carry on" helps the children. The absence of the man deprives the family of the interest which he brings home with him from the world of trade and industry. "It is not merely the work I have to do," said a woman whose husband had died, "it is not merely that I have to be responsible alone for the children, but there is nobody that comes home at night." This lack and the loss of companionship must, so far as possible, be replaced. Various forms of recreation, including clubs and classes, become, therefore, very important for the mother as well as the children.

The health of the young children must be a matter of constant concern on the part of the home service worker, who should consult a physician advising the section about the obvious indications of malnutrition, adenoids, and other frequent ailments of infants. Speaking generally, any sign of debilitation, such as a persistent cold, cough, loss of weight, or appetite, mouth breathing and pallor should prompt the visitor to urge the parent that medical advice be secured.

STANDARDS OF PHYSICAL AND MENTAL HEALTH

Many people become so accustomed to a low health standard that they regard it as a normal thing. It is emphatic that families should be accustomed to a higher standard. Attention must be given to dental defects, eye defect, nose and throat defects in time, bringing them promptly to the notice of the proper medical and dental specialists.

It will be necessary, in particular, to guard against an increase of tuberculosis. The experience of foreign countries in this war, indicates the possible rapid spread of this disease. Suspected cases should be immediately referred to a doctor or to the local dispensary for tuberculosis. If the presence of the disease is determined, adequate care in an available sanitarium or hospital or at home, should be provided. Close cooperation between Red Cross visitors and the local anti-tuberculosis agencies is advised. In communities that have none, the division director or civilian relief may be able to procure advice as to treatment.

It ought to be unnecessary to emphasize the importance of diet at this time, for the whole country is going to school to the home economist and the dietitian. Mr. Hoover's messages about food conservation should be distributed by home service visitors wherever they go.

Almost as important as diet are the housing conditions that make for health and decency. These should be properly maintained, and the board of health should be sought in remedying unsanitary conditions and in removing nuisances. Often it has been possible to help families to move to better quarters, to establish those in homes who had been living in lodgings only, and to aid others, who had more rooms than they needed, to find desirable sub-tenants among their own relatives.

The signs of mental defect and mental disturbance escape those who have had no experience of either, but it cannot be too strongly advised that a specialist be consulted at once if there is reason to suspect feeble-mindedness or mental disease, either in the children or older members of the family.

EDUCATIONAL STANDARDS

Mention has been made of the importance of keeping children in school and assuring regular attendance there, but home service sections are doing more than this. Children who had been removed and put to work to meet a shrinkage in the family income are being returned to school promptly as soon as home service is called in. There is danger that other children may be kept out of school even after the Government's family allowance makes their return easy, unless attention is given to insuring this return. The right adjustment might be made by seeking information from those schools in which instances of withdrawal are known. One home service section reports a boy working illegally nearly fourteen hours a day, who has been returned to school. This section is making special provision to keep children between the ages of fourteen and sixteen in classes where they will receive a good preparation for earning their living later. Another is taking children out of "blind alley" occupations and providing special aid to give them training for better work. Another reports upon a wayward boy who has been introduced to the Boy Scouts and is now doing well in school.

STANDARD WORKING CONDITIONS

Unless we are able to learn by the mistakes of Great Britain in the earlier years of her present struggle—mistakes which she recognizes now—we shall be confronted with attempts to speed up industry at the expense of the health and strength of the workers. There is no excuse for this. President Wilson has pointed out. Strict administration of the laws now on our statute books for the protection of workers against long hours and unwholesome processes, and the earnest cooperation of every volunteer engaged in home service to assure this enforcement deserve special emphasis.

First, the home service worker should know the laws regulating working conditions and the agencies and officials responsible for their enforcement. What is a standard working day for men, for women, for children of working age. Is night work prohibited for women? for children? Children who work are required to have employment certificates. Have these been issued legally?

Home service should do its share keeping the family intact in every possible way. The sections are systematically avoiding the practice of thrusting women into industry who can serve the family better at home. Before family allowances made earning outside the home less necessary, they were assuming extra financial burdens cheerfully in order to keep mothers with their children, and it will still be important to safeguard home life on this side. When married women are childless, however, or their children no longer need constant home care, they naturally seek occupation, and home service has aided many to obtain employment who were not able to secure satisfactory placement through employment bureaus.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Temple Chimes

One of the most popular places in the whole country is the town of Kirtland—something doing every minute, and the grand old temple the center of interest.

High school graduation exercises recently conducted in the lower auditorium was a very nice affair as also the G. A. R. memorial service. At the latter, Bishop Becker was the speaker, and delivered a very fine address, appropriately emphasizing the good fight of faith by the regulation, order, and system of military tactics.

The good Spirit was present to a marked degree during a recent sacrament meeting, urging us all to "come up higher," in order to share more of the divine light, and secure God's protection in these "perilous times." The preaching services have been largely attended.

Choral organization was effected to join efforts with temple orchestra, and Brother John Lewis was chosen president; S. W. L. Scott, director, in joint work with Brother L. Curry, director of orchestra; Brother Wilson, secretary; and Sister Pauline Becker, pianist; with privilege of choosing assistants. Two dozen "Winnowed Anthems," numbers 5 and 6 combined, have been ordered. Fine chorus work is expected from the aggregation soon—anthem rendition a specialty.

The musical feature of the reunion is anticipated as a chief department. The sacred cantata "149th Psalm" by Dvorak under the direction of Sister L. F. P. Curry, of Pittsburgh, is being rehearsed by combined chorus with the purpose of rendering the same. Everyone rally.

"Children's Day" here was observed with beautiful features. The west pulpit was banked with a floral profusion on each breastwork, which charmed. Many visitors took away snapshots. The program was promptly executed, each "tot" doing his "bit" in approved fashion, and significant of efficient teachers in the background. Seven children were baptized, Brother Wilson and Brother S. W. L. Scott, officiating. These were confirmed at the evening session.

Visitors are yet in evidence at the temple, and explanation of the attitude of the Reorganized toward the Utah church is a perpetual necessity. Visitors of Salt Lake tabernacle coming here, say that they are informed in the tabernacle that there is no "break in the chain from Kirtland to Utah." Court decisions and history change their opinion of the Utah faction. Well, it is one long sermon. We are preaching, while exclamations of surprise at the beauty and purity of the temple, and the religious significance of its interior, are evoked from the lips of all.

Hopefully yours,

to visit with us and not be acquainted, with the real cause of our actions.

I refer to our unbecoming deportment in the house of God before the services, proper, begin. We forget, and even the "call to order" remains unheeded, and it was almost necessary to use the gavel quite peremptorily before the attention of the Saints could be had that the services might begin.

It would seem, upon sober reflection, that this is certainly a condition calling for our attention. And just how can we have opportunity, at these gatherings, to do our visiting which is beneficial, and have it so that when we come to the prayer meetings, especially, and in the other sessions as well, we remember to so comport ourselves, as is becoming to children of God in the house dedicated to think about it? Are we as a people guilty of a breach of decorum in the house of God, or is it all right as it is? I would like to hear from the observations of those whose duty it is to teach.

Pageant at Independence

One of the special features of the Children's Day exercises in Independence, Sunday, June 23, was a pageant given in the evening on the lawn east of the Stone Church. It dealt with the rise of the Sunday school, tracing with tableau pictures religion as taught to the people of different ages. First, the patriarch gathering his family and servants about him to tell in story of religion and God. Going on then from one picture to another we saw represented Samuel in the temple, Isaiah reading the law to the young priests, Lois and Eunice teaching little Timothy, the monks of the Middle Ages, Robert Raikes gathering the London street urchins together to form the humble beginning of our present day Sunday school, and many more scenes that led down to the Sunday school, as we know it now, with its broad scope reaching out to everyone from infancy to the aged.

The music rendered by the choir during these series of tableaux was in keeping with the time represented by each scene. So we listened to the psalms and chants, music of the reformation age down to the time when our hearts were thrilled and we stood to join the choir in the last song, "I have found the glorious gospel."

From the standpoint of the visitor who writes this, it was excellent throughout, and seemed to represent months of labor, though it was whispered to me on the side that they only spent two weeks or so getting ready for it. I'm not ready to vouch for the time in which it was accomplished but I'm sure I enjoyed every minute of it. M. S.

Order in House of God

We had such a nice meeting at Kewanee in our district conference just recently passed, and feel that good was done by our meeting together. More Saints attended than for some time past, and in many ways there seems to be the indications of growth.

And how glad we are to see each other and clasp hands and talk. We greet each other like brothers, indeed, and feel our affection increase as the years pass away and as our interests grow closer together.

We feel that the opportunity for "just visiting" at these conferences is all insufficient. And the effect seems to result in that which works to our detriment, and which must appear very unbecoming in the eyes of any who may chance

Are we always as thankful to God as we should be? When we see our fellow men in need, whether they be brothers in the church or not, if we are able to help them, we should do so. When we see people spending their means unwisely and we know the worth of a dollar, we should pity them.

When we see people addicted to the use of the filthy tobacco, and we have observed the admonition given to us in the word of God to avoid the use of it, we should thank God for the wisdom and light he has given us.

To be truly thankful to God is great. When we take to ourselves honor and forget to be humble we are on dangerous ground. There is not much danger of one falling if he is truly thankful to God. Thankfulness and humility are closely related, and if we possess these excellencies the Spirit of God will dwell with us; and as sunshine and rain make the grain to grow and flourish in the field, so will the Spirit of God enliven our souls to develop.

I remember when a boy mother would take a walk out in the field late in the afternoon to view the growing grain, and I would go along with her. And she would exclaim, "Oh, how the Lord is blessing us!" I have thought of it many times, and like mother, felt to use the same expression. After I grew to manhood, I remember that I wished I could get a little piece of land of my own. But that was almost out of the question, except with those who had means. I never thought of the blessed land of America where there was a land of plenty. After believing the gospel, my desire was to go to America. Though it was for the gospel's sake that I came here, my desire to own a piece of land was granted. Many times with tears in my eyes have I thanked God for my home, and many other blessings too numerous to mention. And I have been made glad to know that our ministers who have labored here in our field have always felt at home here with us. I would be glad to greet them all again.

Brother Scott, our stake bishop, has just been here. He preached four sermons with good results. He has won the confidence of all the Saints here. Brother Okerlind is with us, a man whom we have all learned to love. At present the fields promise a great harvest. The world is rolling in plenty, but how long it will be so, God only knows. The signs of the times indicate that there will be a change. The Lord will gather his people for some purpose and will bless his own.

To be humble and prayerful, and keep all God's commandments, thankful to him for all past blessing, and trust him for all that is to come, should be our greatest delight each day of our life.

The religion that can bring to us comfort in the midst of trials is beyond all praise.

SARANAC LAKE, NEW YORK, June 24, 1918.

Editors Herald: Last February I wrote you from Sherrill, New York, where I was holding a series of preaching services. Brother Pycock joined me on February 8, and continued with the writer until the 20th. Stormy weather hindered us some, but we felt that good was being done, and on Sunday, the 24th, I had the pleasure of baptizing Sister Sarah Taylor. We were at a loss for a while as to how we could baptize, seeing that everything was frozen up so solid, but before the time set for the baptism the town authorities ordered the stream cleared of ice that was obstructing the flow of water, so we had a nice place to perform the ceremony.

From Sherrill I went to East Pharsalia where we have a nice little chapel, but very few who have the honor of attending. A ride of ten miles with a mail man who had to stop at every mail box, was interesting if not exciting. Elder Floyd Rathburn and wife kindly entertained the writer while there.

March 6 found me at Wellsville where I held services until the 13th. I then went to Greenwood, where no services had been held all winter. It always takes some time to get the people coming at Greenwood, but they come all right after a while. On the 27th I baptized Sister Gertrude Stevens of Greenwood, in a mountain stream near her house. The next day I left for the General Conference. My daughter, Metta, received me with open arms (no figure of speech this), and I felt as everybody ought to feel in Zion—at home. While at conference I met many old friends and some new ones. While at Independence I baptized Sister Anna Hayes and Carmen McClean, the latter from Saranac Lake, New York. She is studying to be a nurse in the Sanitarium.

Sunday, May 5, found me in Providence, Rhode Island, where I preached for the Saints once. My little girl, Lillian, the last of the family, was baptized by Brother Farrell on that day. I preached for the Saints in Attleboro the next Sunday, and baptized four young men that had been members of my Sunday school class when I was pastor of the church there. I feel grateful to the Lord to know that the work is progressing in the beautiful little city of Attleboro. A trip on the steamer and I am in the city of New York, easy to say, but the getting there. My! I thought I was a sailor, but every time I get to feeling big, something comes along and takes all the conceit out of me. I have been over the "Sound" a good many times, but I never saw the boat act so. I felt lonesome anyhow and went to bed. Brother E. Squires and Brother Christy are good men to meet in New York or anywhere else, so I enjoyed their company for a day or two, and attended the ministerial conference of the New York and Philadelphia District. Two weeks spent at Wellsville and Greenwood and then we left to attend the district conference. Brother Bishop was at the conference and was elected president of the district. We were glad to see him and the rest of the brethren, and to have a chance to get acquainted with them. Brother Angus and Doctor Weegar came to the station to meet us and took us to the hospitable home of Brother and Sister G. H. LaFey. It is a fine thing to be looked after instead of having to hustle for one's self.

From Buffalo I went to Niagara Falls and spoke for the people on Sunday. Brother Pillsbury took Brother Angus, Sister Potter, and the writer for a sixty-two mile trip along the Niagara River, and around the falls. It was great.

Brother and Sister Landes as well as others, were very kind to the writer while at the falls.

Back to Buffalo, then in company with Brother Lee Lewis, an auto trip to Rochester, but I could not stop there, as I had an appointment to fill at Sherrill. I got as near Sherrill as I thought I could that night, and was about to hunt for a hotel to stop in, when I heard some one call my name, and on looking around to see where the voice came from, saw a young man who was a boarder in the family of Mr. Fred Comfort of Sherrill. He said, "Come along with me," and so I went. Brother Mesle said that he would have Mr. Comfort arrested for kidnapping me. Well, it is nice to have more than one place to go, and I am usually a debtor both to the Saints and to friends. The good people of Sherrill are somewhat disappointed in not being able to proceed with their church building as they have no public place to meet in, and the deed of the lot is held up for the present because of some opposition by some very religious (?) people. Well, our God still lives and what is right will be accomplished.

I had a nice visit with the Saints and friends at Sherrill, speaking for them in a private house on Sunday night. Brother Mesle deserted me on Sunday, but I will forgive him because he went to Fulton and preached for the Saints there. I arrived at Saranac Lake, Wednesday, and began services the next night in Sister Hatch's residence. Sunday, June 23, I baptized four in the beautiful lake and felt the approval of God on our work. Sister Polly Hoxie has kept the work alive here, by her efforts in the Sunday school class, and in living her religion. May the Lord still continue to bless her! I am to remain here this week and then go to Malone, New York.

Yours as ever,

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN, June 25, 1918.

Editors Herald: I would ask that any Saints who have relatives or friends who might be interested in the work here in Milwaukee, let us know. We would consider it a favor if we could call on them and be of help to them.

While the Milwaukee Saints have made no great gains, we have had to fight against great odds owing to outside influence, and we have little outside interest.

We have looked forward to the time when we could show a material gain both in spirituality and in numbers. Our hopes ran high. We wanted a missionary to be appointed here, as we know it would be the beginning of a great work here, as the Salt Lake Mormons have tracted the city time and time again and have done a lot of work here, but our local men are not in a position to do likewise. But we live in hope.

We still meet in the National Building, south side corner Grove Street and National Avenue. Entrance on National Avenue, and there is elevator service. Take any T. M. E. R. and L. Company car and transfer to corner of Grove and National Avenue or North Shore Electric Road to S. S. Station and walk one block east. Boys from Great Lakes training station welcome.

We meet on Sunday at 10 a. m. for Sunday school; at 11 a. m. for Religio; and 8 p. m. for evening service. Prayer meeting Wednesday night at 8 o'clock. Wishing for great success of the work,

Your brother,

BELLAIR, ILLINOIS, June 27, 1918.

Editors Herald: This leaves Brother Henry Sparling and the writer in the performance of duty trying to advance the work of the Lord in this place. We are both happy in the work, and thankful for the Spirit of the Master that is with us to cheer and bless us in our efforts in preaching the gospel, and in private conversation with the people.

I am very glad to be permitted to labor this year in the Southeastern Illinois District where I first heard the gospel and began to labor in the ministry over twenty-five years ago. I had a very deep feeling of regret when I learned, at the close of the General Conference, that I would be separated this year from that very excellent body of Saints in the sunny South where I labored almost continuously for ten years.

But being in this field nearer home will give me an opportunity to visit loved ones more often than heretofore, and this thought helps to dispel the feelings of regret. Ten years of experience in the South, and in charge of the southern field, has brought me into close touch with nearly every member of the church, and I am glad to note that there has been continual progress in the work through my efforts in connection with the help of other brethren, which includes those sent there from the north as missionaries, also those who labor locally, as well as those who have been raised up as missionaries in that part. The work spread out into new territory as never before during the time I labored there and with such an excellent army of efficient workers, I feel sure the work will be carried on to victory.

I am highly in favor of the move of putting Brother T. C. Kelley in charge of that field and trust one of experience will be kept in charge in harmony with the rule that has been successful for many years. My work in the South will be remembered with a great degree of pleasure, and I will continue to be very deeply interested in the welfare of all the Saints and friends and I trust that some sweet day we will meet again.

Lack of space does not permit me to speak of the many Saints whom I will always remember with great delight by reason of their good works and the power of the Spirit that I realized was blessing both young and old. While we are separated by distance yet we are one in the power of the gospel which unites us so strongly that this tie cannot be broken by death if we are faithful.

Many of us may never meet again in this life, but if we continue on in the work, we will meet each other face to face in that perfect condition. I make the following quotation from a letter that one of our noble men of the priesthood in the South lately wrote me!

"Dear Brother Slover: To think that this year is to go by and we are not to see you does not seem real, neither is it a pleasant thought. We are thankful for men in the church to whom we can look as being true. We are proud of the careful, humble, faithful work that you have done in the past several years. Few men have won a place in the hearts of the Saints as well as those outside, as you have done. We hope that in your new field of labor you will find those who appreciate your labors of love, and that your efforts will be that strong influence for good there as they have been with us. May the good Master abundantly bless you, that you may spend many more happy and profitable years' work in the advancement of his cause and that some of them may be with us."

To all the Saints throughout the sunny South, I wish to say, as a closing word, that while we are separated so far as space is concerned, yet I feel that the Spirit of the Master binds us together in the bonds of love which is stronger than death.

May peace and love and prosperity, both spiritually and temporally abide with you all, is my earnest prayer.

Yours in gospel bonds,

F. M. SLOVER.

RICH HILL, MISSOURI, June 28, 1918.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines from Rich Hill to let people know it is still on the map, and that we are trying to keep the gospel banner afloat.

Brother Lee Quick closed a two weeks' series of meetings here June 16. They were all very successful. We had an introductory street service Saturday night. It was held on the main street corner. It was well attended and the remarks were brief and to the point. An invitation was extended to everyone to come to the church the following evening. As a closing song we sang "The old, old path." We sang all the verses, and repeated the last one softly, while the crowd lingered for more. I wish there had been at least two or three more verses, for the music as well as the words of that sweet song is inspiring.

Notwithstanding the warm weather we had a large crowd the very first night and they grew more and more interested. One name was given for baptism the second Sunday.

We advertised in the daily paper, also placing placards in conspicuous places stating the subjects to be discussed; and the last Sunday we had a basket dinner in the beautiful East Park. Then we went to the Rock Quarry, where there is "much water," and Brother Quick led five more precious souls into the kingdom of God. Those baptized were grown people, including a brother of the writer and his wife, the last of our family to unite with this great work. It certainly was a time of rejoicing for we saw mother follow her daughter into the waters of regeneration. We do not consider it all over yet, as there are a number of excellent people interested and investigating the work. We are supplying church and other literature and hope yet to reap from the good seed sown.

Brother Quick expressed himself as having been royally entertained among the Saints, and the Saints as having been wonderfully strengthened and encouraged.

The editor and his staff, who published our notices free of charge, were treated to ice cream by the branch. We feel very happy, and trust we may live better lives and never be ashamed to say, "I'm a Latter Day Saint," but rather, as the Apostle Paul said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." And if we will live it, we will have the love and respect of our neighbors.

So may God help us all to do his will, is the prayer of your sister.

GOLDIE CONKEY QUICK.

"Men may laugh at the shrewdness of a girl in a game of cards for stakes, but she is not the girl they will trust or honor or that they care to marry. That is an argument to the quick, and may find its way home. The man who marries a gambling girl is already an incipient suitor in a divorce court."

"There is a lesson in each flower,
A story in each stem and bower;
On every herb on which we tread,
Are written words, which, rightly read,
Will lead us from earth's fragrant sod
To hope and holiness and God."

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA, June 27, 1918.

Editors Herald: Since my appointment to the general missionary work I have endeavored to learn the needs of the work in this district and I shall try to meet the demands. I resigned as pastor of the San Bernardino Branch, June 5, in favor of Brother A. H. Mills who has been sent to take charge in that city. The Saints are to be congratulated that they are able to secure his services. Before leaving San Bernardino the Saints planned a surprise for me, and at the close of the prayer meeting and after my resignation had been accepted, on the evening of June 5, Sister Ella Harris took charge and a very interesting program was carried out and at the close of the exercises Brother Fred Hogben, in a very feeling and appropriate address, presented to me a pocketbook containing a number of greenbacks as a gift from the branch over which I had for more than four years presided, as an expression of their good will and appreciation of my humble efforts to build up the work in that city. An expression of appreciation was voiced that after these years of association together as colaborers in the branch work, that the general church had seen fit to extend my labors into a larger field, and the Saints wished to take this means of assuring me that I would have their hearty support wherever I should go as a representative of the church. I thank the Saints for their encouraging words of good will.

On leaving San Bernardino in company with Elder N. T. Chapman I went to San Diego, where we held preaching services for two weeks with a good interest; fine crowds attended all these services and those not of our faith have promised to investigate our message still further. While in San Diego, upon invitation, I addressed the soldier boys at the Camp Kearney Y. M. C. A., and while there I was the guest of Lieutenant Chester Young, who is an elder in our church. I remained over night at the camp, a privilege which I enjoyed very much, as it gave me an opportunity to get acquainted with the officers and the many acquaintances of Brother Young. While on the ground I had the pleasure of hearing an address by B. H. Roberts, chaplain of the Utah Battalion stationed at this camp, his subject was: "Why have faith in God and his wonderful law?" Mr. Roberts handled his subject in an able way. He urged his men to think good thoughts which led to good deeds and to refuse to think evil thoughts which always preceded evil deeds. He said: "You cannot stop thinking, but you can direct your thoughts." He called attention to the words of Jesus when he said: "Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." He warned the boys of this awful evil. Mr. Roberts, while beginning to age, speaks with his oldtime fire and eloquence. My first acquaintance with Mr. Roberts was at the time of his meeting Elder Harris in debate at San Bernardino, an event I am sure Mr. Roberts will not forget, for he was called upon at that time to meet an argument and a volume of facts that to the present time he has never been able to overturn. Elder Harris has long since gone to his reward but his testimony and work as a representative of Jesus Christ shall live as long as time shall last.

After leaving Camp Kearney I was invited to speak at the North Island Aviation Field by Mr. Sam Coy, formerly of San Bernardino. Three very talented singers assisted me at this service, which seemed to be enjoyed by the soldiers and aviators very much. My subject was: "America and her ideals." An invitation to return was extended by Mr. Coy. I found Lieutenant Young doing a good work among the men, and he has worked diligently to keep in touch with all the members of the church who are enlisted as soldiers at this camp. The branch at San Diego is presided over by Elder Levi Hemenway, who is an earnest worker, supported by a band of faithful Saints who seem to take delight in making the missionary feel at home.

Elder Chapman and I made our next stop at Laguna Beach, where a fine crowd met us Monday night, the 24th instant. We will preach every night this week and continue over next week. Last evening the pastor of the local Presbyterian church offered the opening prayer and a member of his choir sang a solo for us, which was very much appreciated.

This place is an old historic beach town where the early elders of the Reorganized Church held their conferences and reunions thirty-five years ago, and the names of Elders Gaud Rodger, D. S. Mills, J. F. Burton, Joseph Clapp, H. L. Holt, and others are held in pleasant memory by the Saints here.

Since receiving notice of my appointment to act as district president until the convening of the district conference August 5, I have tried to get in touch with all the workers of the district in an endeavor to make complete arrangements for our district reunion and conference, which will be held at Hermosa Beach August 2 to 12, and we are anticipating a very pleasant reunion. We are very much pleased to know that we are to have with us as our guests Elder S. A. Burgess and wife, Sister Dora Glines, and Elder J. W. Rushton, also the able assistance of Elders D. E. Dowker, A. H. Mills, W. H. Garrett, V. M. Goodrich, N. T. Chapman, Hemenway, N. Carmichael, and others. The Woman's Auxiliary has volunteered their services and will take charge of the delicatessen for the reunion. We feel the need of a fully equipped tent for missionary work, but since we are left to do the best we can without such equipment, we are doing what we can to reach the people through the cooperation of the membership by holding services in their homes or on their lawns wherever possible. In this way we can reach the people of the different communities which would be hard to reach in any other way. The awful conditions in this world as a result of this war are causing many to inquire as to what the scriptures have said relative to our time and it seems to me that we should be wide awake to the splendid opportunity this is now opening before us as a church. Our wonderful message and program should be placed in the foreground.

May we all be faithful to our trust and loyal to God and each other.

Yours sincerely,

G. H. WIXOM.

Lansing, Michigan, first Saturday and Sunday in October, chosen as place and time for next conference. W. P. Buckley, secretary.

KEWANEE.—At Kewanee, Illinois, June 8 and 9. Presided over by W. E. Peak, W. M. Aylor, and Paul M. Hanson; Mary E. Gillen, secretary. Branches reporting: Kewanee 144, Joy 111, Dahinda 92, Buffalo Prairie 75, Twin City 75, Millersburg 75, Peoria 73, Matherville 67, Rock Island 51, Canton 53, total in district, 816. Absent from branches 312. Priesthood consists of 1 seventy, 20 elders, 14 priests, 14 teachers, 13 deacons, total 62. Report of bishop's agent for 1917 showed total collected $2,583.29, balance January 1, 1918, $245.88; auditors' certificate stamped correct. Request from Dahinda Branch that Fred Forquer be ordained to the office of elder was referred to the district president and his report was that he had consulted Brethren Aylor, Hanson, and Curtis and that the "consensus of opinion was that no action be taken in ordaining him to the office of elder at the present time." But that he be ordained a priest. Conference approved. At the request of the conference the reunion committee got together and considered a reunion this year. They decided to try to hold a reunion at Matherville in August. In order to facilitate the transacting of the business of the conferences, the following resolutions were adopted: "Resolved, That all the local priesthood report their labors to their respective branch presidents and that branch presidents include this with their own report to the district president; Resolved, that hereafter we dispense with the reading, in full, of the minutes of the previous conference, unless specially requested, and that the secretary give a synopsis of the actions taken, or work carried over, instead; Resolved, that the district president be the permanent chairman of the program committee, choosing such help as he desires to arrange the program of meetings for each conference." Election of officers for the year resulted in choosing W. E. Peak, president; George Sackfield, vice president; Mary E. Gillen, secretary; H. C. Ziegenhorn, treasurer; Eva Bean, librarian; H. C. Ziegenhorn was sustained as bishop's agent, J. G. Cole as chorister, and Mary E. Gillen as historian. Conference was unusually well attended by delegates from each of the ten branches, as well as many visitors from abroad. Brethren Aylor and Hanson were gladly welcomed by the Saints on this their first visit to the district. If they were as well pleased with Kewanee Saints as the Saints seemed to be with them, all will be well for a continued profitable acquaintance. The entire conference included one session each of Sunday school, Religio, Woman's Auxiliary, with a combined entertainment in evening, two business sessions, two prayer meetings, four preaching meetings, and one priesthood meeting—thirteen profitable meetings. Kewanee Saints and friends were to be specially commended for their untiring efforts to care for all the visitors. Next conference at Joy. Mary E. Gillen, 115 Clarke Avenue, Peoria, Illinois, district secretary.

Our Departed Ones

WICKES.—Minnie A. Wickes died at Independence, Missouri, April 16, 1918, aged 69 years, 1 month, and 23 days. Although ill when she left Lamoni, she wanted to attend conference and visit her children and sister, but was suddenly taken worse. Body was brought to Lamoni for burial. Service in charge of John Smith, sermon by H. A. Stebbins. Two sons, 2 daughters, and 3 sisters mourn their loss. Baptized in 1868 and loved the gospel, especially helping the cause while living in Chicago, in 1874 to 1880. Very kind to all poor and sick people.

FROM HERE AND THERE

In our items last week we stated that W. E. Harrington was in charge of the Sanitarium in the absence of Brother G. L. Harrington. This was an error and should have been W. E. Messenger.

PRESIDING PATRIARCH OFF ON EASTERN TRIP

Brother F. A. Smith left Lamoni on the 6th for an extended tour of the districts east of Chicago. He will be at a number of the eastern reunions—Low Banks, Onset, etc., and visit most of the larger places at least in the Eastern States. When it is possible to secure the services of a local stenographer he will give blessings in connection with his patriarchal office.

The editors are in receipt of two fine large photographic views taken at the Philadelphia Navy Yard Recreation Center, on May 21, 1918. It was "Community Chorus Night," and the barrack is filled not only with jackies but a goodly number of young ladies and civilian musicians, all led by Brother Albert N. Hoxie, General Church Chorister, who is now a lieutenant and in charge of the musical activities at the League Island Navy Yard, New York City.

Brother R. S. Salyards, jr., is now located at Prescott, Arizona for the summer, and with him is Sister Christiana Salyards. The climate is salubrious and he is feeling fairly well and very hopeful of full recovery.

COMMENDS BROTHER WIXOM

Members of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, both local and from Santa Ana, attended this week a series of sermons in Whisler Hall. On Monday Brother Chapman introduced Mr. Wixom, a former mayor of San Bernardino, as the principal speaker for Wednesday evening. Mr. Wixom has, besides a commanding stage presence, the three principal essentials of a public speaker, to-wit: language, imagination, and memory. The meetings were well attended and while Laguna Life, as a secular sheet, cannot possibly enter into any theological controversy, it proudly proclaims the fact of its having many good friends among the members of this church.—Laguna Life, June 28, 1918, published at Laguna Beach, California.

CHURCH RECORDS TAKEN TO INDEPENDENCE

The list of the entire membership of the church is kept in the office of the Church Recorder. For years they were enrolled in about a dozen large, leather bound books, but during the past seven or eight years the office has been in the process of transferring these names and the items concerning them to an up-to-date card system. Should the books or the cards be destroyed, it would be a serious loss, so extra precaution was taken in the recent removal, of leaving them in the fireproof vault here till such time as Brother Carpenter could return and have them taken to Independence by auto truck, thus minimizing the danger of loss by accident. They left Lamoni on the morning of the 1st, the Lamoni Stake bishopric hauling them in a trailer behind their car. They broke down at Cameron, phoned back to Lamoni for a truck, got on the train and came home. Brother Carpenter stayed with the records till picked up again.

MILITARY MORALS

One of the uses of the proceeds of the Liberty Loan that will appeal strongly to the great mass of American people is the care and attention given to the moral welfare and protection of the American soldiers.

Heretofore, with the American Army, and even now with some of the armies of our allies, the moral welfare of the soldier was and is a matter largely ignored. In the German armies provision is even made for immorality.

It is to the glory of American arms and American national character that of the men who wear the United States uniform a high standard of conduct is expected and demanded, and provided for. Kipling's "Single men in barracks" are not to find their prototypes in the American Army.

General Pershing says there is no cleaner-living body of men in the world than the American Army in France.

BLUE STEPPING STONES

As the printing costs six cents a line, it means that every name printed for a donation of less than six cents means a loss to the church. A donation of eleven cents pays the church five cents and the balance for advertising. Why don't the local Sunday school home classes look after the individual donations in each stake or district, so as to eliminate this publication from individual names? Soon they will be lonesome.

NEW ORIOLE LEADER

On request of Sister J. A. Gardner, of Independence, who has carried the work of looking after the general leadership of the Oriole girls movement since its organization by her and some other devoted sisters in 1915, Sister Grace Thompson, of Lamoni, Iowa, has been chosen as the leader of the work for the church. Detailed announcements will be in the August number of the Autumn Leaves, Young Woman's Department.

LOCATION OF SOLDIERS' HOME IN LONDON

We are pleased to note the announcement from Brother May in the Miscellaneous Department of this issue. More and more of our boys would like to visit London and get in touch with the Saints there, and if this notice is sent them they will be able to indicate an address and thereby secure the privilege of visiting the great city of London when they are granted leave.

OPPORTUNITY FOR FREE SCHOLARSHIP

The announcement in this issue by the Advertising Manager, pertaining to a scholarship for Graceland College, will be of special interest to a great many of our readers. In these days of fierce competition, an education is essential for those who would succeed in any line. It is possible to secure an education without attending a college or school of higher learning, but it is very seldom done. The equipment and devoted faculty are at one's service at a very nominal cost. In fact if an energetic young person will enter heartily into this plan, he will be enabled to secure free tuition.

Milk helps your children to keep well. Look at children who do not get milk, but get tea and coffee instead. Aren't most of them pale and sickly? There are always very many sick children in cities and in countries where milk is scarce. When milk prices go up and mothers begin to economize on milk more children become sick. Do not let your children run this risk. Give them fresh, clean milk and help them to grow up strong and well and win in their fight against disease. Save on other things if you must, but not on milk, your child's best food.—United States Food Leaflet No. 11.

THE NATIVES' DELIGHT

BY CLYDE F. ELLIS

We know of nothing that will excite and please a native more than a lot of native-roasted hogs as seen in the picture. The picture is a native gathering where hogs, flour, and oranges, as seen in the foreground, were presented to the visiting ones of their race. It is no uncommon thing for one native to get away with sometimes from four to five pounds of fat pork at one meal. They are roasted in their native made ovens which are very simple. Stones and wood are gathered and piled one upon the other. When prepared the wood is lighted, and when burned the stones are heated to the temperature necessary, then something such as leaves is placed upon the stones, the hog rolled on, covered with leaves or sacks, and then completely buried with dirt, resembling very much when finished a potato pit of Michigan. When cooked the natives are seen with their shovels and wheelbarrows, ready to uncover their greatest delight and convey it to the place of consumption. Brother Hubert Case was present at a conference when $20,000 was spent for provision and preparations for one feast. Those were days when the pearl fishing was more lucrative than now, and it was also before the war, when provisions were more plentiful.

This picture speaks for itself, but being in the Tahitian language, most of us will hardly understand it. This monthly paper has done a great deal of good in this mission where the Saints are scattered over so wide a territory.

THE DEVIL'S WORKSHOP

BY CLYDE F. ELLIS

A number of years ago, in the days of Brother Joseph Burton, a press was purchased and a mission paper commenced, which was called Te Orometua, meaning "the instructor." The press was run by a man not of the church, while Brother Burton edited the paper. During the storm of 1906 it was destroyed, and the printing of the paper was discontinued until the year 1909, when Brother C. H. Lake purchased for the mission a small hand press that is still in our possession, and with which we print our mission paper, quarterlies, tracts, and report blanks.

We have at the present time a small twelve-page mission paper, printed entirely in the Tahitian language. It is devoted to general gospel topics, a division for the priesthood and one also for the Woman's Auxiliary Society. The paper is the means of carrying the gospel to the branches and Saints who do not have the privilege of meeting us very frequently.

EDITORIAL INTRODUCTION

It is with considerable pride that we present this magazine number of the HERALD to our readers. It represents a great deal of effort, mostly on the part of our contributors, under the careful direction of Elder Clyde F. Ellis. It has been quite difficult for him to handle the matter, being so far from the mainland and sometimes out of reach of the regular mail steamers, but we are sure you will be as pleased with the results as we are.

Most of the pictures showing island scenes are from photographs taken by Brother Ellis, though there are some by Brother A. H. Christensen. A camera is a wonderful aid in work of this kind, and when we come to an effort of this kind, we especially appreciate pictures.

It would take several special numbers like this one to adequately represent the work done during the long period in which the church work has flourished in these far-away islands. There have been many missionaries, each doing his part, whose work, including that of their respective wives, might well be dwelt on, but it was necessary to use such material as could be secured and to present a few typical aspects rather than to try to cover the entire field. We are sorry it is so, for we should have been glad to have printed the pictures of many other faithful workers, of the former years and the recent past, as well as the present, but God knows, and we try to appreciate the fact, that they each did a good work, for which an abundant reward will be meted in due time.

While the historical items are necessarily brief, there are some things in them which deserve mention. For instance, note the long years that Elder John Hawkins worked faithfully on in that mission. The records show that he was baptized in 1844, and it was only in recent years that he finally died in the islands. Then there were the years of faithful labor by Brother Anton Johnson, left there as a sick sailor, became converted, ordained an elder, and worked nobly for many years.

On account of the difficulty of learning the language and the necessity for taking time to learn the local situation, the customs of the people, and becoming acclimated, it is a most commendable thing that some have found it possible to stay for years and even, as did Brother and Sister Burton, return and continue the work begun years before. But because of some prevailing customs of the natives, it is not a good place to raise children, so none of us would offer a word of remonstrance with those who would return to Joseph's land that their offspring might be reared with the advantages of our modern life, and they themselves have the benefit of association with friends in the homeland.

With hearty appreciation of the kind efforts hereby shown, and a hope that those who read will appreciate the spirit of sacrifice and devotion manifested by those who have left native land and given up other aspirations to labor among these gentle island people, we present the Society Island number for your perusal.

HERALD EDITORS.

We are confident that some of the native preachers in the islands were years ahead of us in some things. For instance, in a letter to the HERALD from Joseph Burton, as early as 1899, he tells us the average length of the sermons delivered by the local elders there was from eighteen to twenty minutes. Some were as short as five minutes, while others were as long as twenty-five. But he said they occasionally heard of a long-winded preacher who would use an hour before he could quit. "They rarely make any preliminary remarks, and as rarely make any 'application'; they tell their story and stop short off," says Brother Burton.

In the sermon which is reported from notes taken, Brother Roo, of Rairoa, is shown to have delivered a sermon which consisted of the following questions, with brief answers, after saying that he would represent the church as a ship: What is the church of Jesus Christ like? (A ship.) Who is the captain of that ship? Through whom does Jesus give his commands to the boatswain? Who are the cook, steward, and sailors? What is the chart? What is the compass? What course does the ship steer? Of what kind of cloth or canvas are her sails made? What is the wind that fills her sails and makes her move? To what port is the ship going? His answers were uniformly an apt scriptural passage, enlarged upon briefly by the speaker. It is pleasing to note that his selections of scripture were very good, and his reasoning logical.

AS WE VIEW IT

BY CLYDE F. ELLIS

As a mission we are peculiarly situated and climatically affected, causing as a result the arise of many conditions unknown and scarcely believable by those who have had no experience in such a field. These conditions with which we are confronted are the outgrowth of environment and circumstances into which this people have been thrown. In many instances they are the fruitage of years of growth, while upon the other hand many are of a spontaneous nature, showing their heads to-day but to-morrow will see their declination. The antiquity of the many traditions which are largely the cause of the unwelcome environment, the stanchness with which they have been and are at the present time adhered to, and the slothful inclination to embrace the better way, all go to make conditions which are, in their primary analysis only, very difficult.

The power of tradition upon the mind, with no alternating influence to conflict it, has left its impression upon this one of the world's primitive races, necessitating as a result the sacrifice of time, money, lifelong toil and struggle, and in some instances life itself, as a means by which the counteracting influence of righteous teaching might leave its weight, and assist in overcoming that which is detrimental to a spiritual development. Some of the many traditions are printed elsewhere in these columns, as well as evidence of the untiring and lovable labors of those who have unbegrudgingly placed their all upon the altar that these dark-skinned brothers and sisters might be assisted in bringing about a righteous environment.

Our membership is not large when compared to the large territory over which it is scattered, numbering as we do somewhere near the one thousand mark. But considering the race with which we labor, their personal and hereditary weaknesses, the almost complete starvation in a literary line, and their total ignorance of a higher code of ethics, together with their isolation from those who have experienced the profit of such a standard, we are left handicapped and must depend entirely on our own labors and the divine interventions of the One who has called us to labor. They will not frequently plant the seed for the solicitation of a better environment through their own efforts or initiative, but will follow more often the foreign missionary after the ground has been plowed and the seed sown, and even then one cannot leave them to cultivate the tender plant lest it be uprooted by the power of tradition and by their ignorance of its value. But still the native people are a lovable race and to come in contact with them and become acquainted with their condition, is but the lighting of the fire of ambition within the soul. When once that devotional spirit is aflame, no sacrifice is too great, no labor too difficult, and no trial too trying.

CLYDE F. ELLIS AND WIFE

Brother Ellis is at present in charge of the Society Island Mission, and it was his efforts that secured us the most of the material for this number of the Herald.

We find that the same conditions with which former laborers contended in this mission are still in existence, and in many places retain their influence, continually holding in their grasp the power to uproot the better environment that we are endeavoring to inaugurate. Because of few laborers we find that it is not an easy undertaking to reverse the attitude of generations, and that the reversing process is so near an impossibility upon the mind which has for so many years been nurtured by tradition, that to be to any degree successful, we have come to the conclusion that the evolutionary process must be applied to the young and tender mind of the native child. Through such an application of our energy we believe the time would not be far distant when a body of well prepared Saints could legally be admitted to Zion's ranks. For years we have gone from island to island persuading, commanding, and and at times almost discouragingly praying and laboring for the benefit of our brethren. Our wits' end has been reached in seeking means and ways by which we could eliminate these conditions. We have silenced officers, excommunicated the membership, demanded open and humiliating confession, but still the roots remain and continue to send forth their sap to the tree above. Because of the existence of these conditions it becomes increasingly necessary and imperative that we should as a church put forth greater means for the elimination of them, and establish in the stead thereof that which will be elevating, extolling, and wholly beneficial in the spiritual, physical, and mental development which must be attained by this people.

At the present time, the only education the majority of the Tuamotuan inhabitants have the privilege of receiving is what the foreign missionary force imparts, and that is not an education in the things of the world, but only includes that which can lawfully be associated with our missionary labors. The effort made to develop them spiritually only, to the exclusion of the physical and mental, is a crippled development and cannot at its best be conducive to the inauguration of the essentials desired in the emerging process of a primitive race from the jungles of darkness and uncivilization. Due to the lack of stability and initiative upon the part of our native brethren, which of course has been fostered by tradition and its long-lived influence, we have long since recognized the need of a means whereby we could take into our own hands, under strict tutorship seasoned with the Spirit of Christ, the rising generation of the native race and teach them all that would elevate and lead them from the regions of ignorance to realms of light and knowledge. Such a dwarfed condition of mind in this field is a great barrier to the spiritual development which is needed, thereby retarding the desire for the enforcement of the moral law. A broad, expanded, and considerate mind in touch with the divine will attain the righteous standard desired. We are thoroughly convinced that through some means as before mentioned many of the old traditions can be removed and the influence former teaching has had be nearly if not entirely subdued. Higher ideals can then be impressed upon the mind, and the practical benefits of the same be demonstrated continually before them, thereby regenerating the very life of the native child. Through such an undertaking we believe that there would gradually be a strong environment for good brought about in the several islands. And through this vigor of life-giving environment, closely watched and fed by increased foreign force, we believe that the rising generation would take strides worthy of notice. As before stated, such an influence should not be intrusted solely to those of our native brethren who do not fully discern its value, for should it be done they would soon be submerged and the wave of defeat take captive that which must not be sacrificed.

Were it possible for us to inaugurate such a means of assistance among the rising generation, we believe it would not be long before the native homes would take on different appearances, and a better home-spirit established therein, thereby claiming with stronger and more influential appeals the native children who so young find the ways of impurity because of the lack of parental care. Better individuals, better homes, better branches, better districts, a better mission would arise, thereby assisting to make a better church, saying nothing of the benefit such development would have upon the temporal protectorate of the land.

The straightening of the tender limb is much easier and more enjoyable than the repeated effort to straighten out a life-long twist, which has been held in place by crooked and improper splints. Ofttimes in making bare this twist by removing the long before placed splints, trouble is encountered and a quick application of some nature must be sought or death ensues. It is not so, however, with the tender twig. It is with the afore-hinted conditions that we are confronted, grappling with a strong hand, putting forth an effort to bring forth from the jungled mass a well-shaped and presentable people for abode in the land of their fathers, Zion.

As we retrospectively view the past, from 1844 to the present time, and carefully compare the conditions of those days to to-day's we are cognizant that they are better now than then. Some evils have gradually lowered their heads while truth has been exalted. Still there are many, many more to be removed of which the above is only a hint. By the interlinking of the labors of all the former missionaries to this field, there has been created a strong and powerful chain which still holds these our native brethren. We are at a loss to say which link could successfully be removed. We hope to be included in this chain of power for good when we shall leave to be succeeded by others, as has been repeated from 1844 to the present time.

Those mail periods are looked forward to with eager anticipation. Occasionally we experience a feeling of disappointment or dissatisfaction; do not know whether the fault is with ourselves in not being in harmony with certain elements that predominate, or whether in the element itself.—Emma Burton.

WHY I BELIEVE THE NATIVES TO BE LAMANITES

BY ALBERTA LAKE

The main reason for believing the natives of the South Sea Islands to be Lamanites, is because the Lord has so revealed it. All other reasons are circumstantial, but none the less confirming.

The Lamanites are the descendants of Laman and Lemuel, who were the rebellious children of the prophet Lehi, who, with his family, and that of his relative Ishmael, came to America from Jerusalem about 600 B. C. They were of Israel, descendants of Joseph who was sold into Egypt, through his son Manasseh.

In America they grew to be a great nation, part of them serving the Lord. Laman and Lemuel and their descendants, because of their wickedness, were, like Cain of old, cursed with a skin of darkness, and became the ancestors of the American Indians found in America when Columbus came here.

When the patriarchs of the church visited the Society Islands and gave blessings to the brethren and sisters there, the lineage of a number was given as of Laman, which makes it evident to those who are acquainted with Book of Mormon history that, at some time in the past, their ancestors must have come from America.

The traditions of the natives themselves, as to their origin, is, that their forefathers came from the Hawaiian Islands to New Zealand, and from there scattered abroad in the different islands of the Southern Pacific.

How they got to Hawaii remains shrouded in mystery. That the natives of the Hawaiian Islands, New Zealand, and many other islands, including the Society and Tuamotuan group, are of the same origin, is proven conclusively by all having the same root language, customs, features, etc.

But the link to connect the Hawaiian Islanders with the American Indian is lacking. There again, though the evidence may not be conclusive, the Book of Mormon furnishes us with sufficient, that, supplemented with a little faith, the last link is welded.

We read in the thirtieth chapter of Alma, that about 54 B. C. one Hagoth built an exceeding large ship on the western shore of the Pacific down by the Isthmus of Panama, in which many men, women, and children entered, and steered their course northward. After a while the ship returned, and many other men, women, and children embarked to go northward, and were never heard of again.

Later another was built and set out for the coast of America, north of the Isthmus, and were never heard of more. What is more probable than that, as they were steering their course in a northerly direction, they were driven westward and affected a landing on the Hawaiian Islands, and afterwards some of them set out to find their way back to the coast of South America and were driven farther south, to some of the islands in the southern Pacific?

The features of many of the natives of the Society and Tuamotuan Islands are identical with those of the American Indian. Occasionally we see items in the newspapers concerning the similarity in many of the traits of the American Indians and those of the Israelites.

The same thing is noticeable among the natives of the South Sea Islands, for instance, the relationship of their kindred. All the uncles and aunts are called papas and mammas, and all cousins, brothers and sisters.

We can better understand how James could be called the Lord's brother, and yet be only his cousin.

Many ideas and customs of the natives are like those of ancient Israel, which all tend to confirm us in the truth of that which has been revealed to us in these latter days, concerning their origin in common with that of the American Indian to be of Israel.

DISCOVERY AND EARLY HISTORY OF THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS

BY J. W. PETERSON

According to the Night of Toil, the South Sea Islands, later named the Society Islands in honor of the London Missionary Society, "was first seen by an English captain called Willis in the year 1767," a hundred and fifty years ago. I am inclined to think, however, that the Portuguese and Dutch discovered the islands more than two hundred years ago. Certainly such was often told us in Tahiti some years ago. It makes some difference, I suppose, whether one reads Portuguese, Dutch, or English literature, just when those islands were first discovered. Certainly Captain Cook had visited Tahiti before that date. In fact, the same book incidentally records Cook's visit prior to that date. I think perhaps it is a typographical error, and should be 1757. It is not wonderful that dates differ, for history differs as to who first discovered America and when.

At any rate, the English were the first to "colonize and Christianize" the South Sea Islanders. On the 10th day of August, 1796, thirty-nine persons, thirty men, six women, and three children, sailed out of the River Thames on the good ship Duff, commanded by a pious captain named Williams, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society, who desired to establish the gospel literally at the end of the earth.

On March 5, 1797, they beheld the lofty mountains of Tahiti, the principal island of that group. On the 7th they went ashore, but they were not the first white men to set foot on that island, even if we leave Captain Cook out of the account, for they found two Swedes dressed like the natives, named Peter and Andrew, who had a few years before been shipwrecked there. They could speak a little English and had also learned a little Tahitian. These men were of great service to the missionaries, as interpreters, though they themselves were worse than the natives in some regards.

Not all the thirty men were missionaries. Some were doctors, tailors, carpenters, or blacksmiths. But all were pious, God-fearing men, according to their manner of worship. They were of the church of England. Some questions, however, afterward arose as to their authority to confirm the natives, so that even yet the native church there is not considered really and truly Episcopalian, but the mother church sends a bishop to preside over them. They are called "The Protestant Church."

Among the men who came on the Duff was Mr. Nott, who afterward translated the Bible into the Tahitian language, and in 1836 took it to England and directed its publication. Forty years were thus spent in the undertaking. Mr. Henry, his friend and assistant in that work, could not be persuaded to leave the islands. He was one of the first to come, and the only one of the number who did not return. His son, Isaac, near ninety years old, translated the Doctrine and Covenants, in 1899 and 1900, into the Tahitian language. Who knows but the refusal of the elder Mr. Henry to leave the islands was a result of divine impulse? Certainly his son often expressed great joy while translating the Doctrine and Covenants. He came first of all to see President A. H. Smith when he visited Tahiti and expressed the supremest joy of his life to see a son of the latter-day prophet.

The names of some of the other missionaries were Messrs. Cover, Jefferson, Hodges, Hassell, Lewis, Clode, Puckey, Smith, Harris, Eyre, Broomhal, Bick, Elder, Scott, Shelley, Tessier, Bicknell, Davies, Wilson, Youl, Hayward, Watt, Ellis, Cook, Darling, Bourne, Barff, Bennett, Tyerman, Threskeld, Jones, Armitage, Aberlain, Doctor Gellham, and Wilson, son of the captain of the Duff.

They found Tahiti "more beautiful and fruitful than they could have imagined." It appeared as the "Garden of Eden" but for the debased savages. Fruit unknown to them and other tropical fruit greatly delighted them. The climate was truly Edenic. Beautiful sparkling streams and bubbling springs greeted them everywhere. Large forest trees were laden with beautiful flowers whose pleasing fragrance wafted on the balmiest of zephyrs made it all appear as a very pleasant dream. No reptiles, no savage beasts, one could as safely dwell under a palm tree as in his own house. Vines and brambles, in fact, every shrub sent forth sweet-scented flowers. Warm showers were frequent, but seldom any storms. Perhaps months passed without lightning or thunder. Rainbows nearly every day and among the brightest on earth. Fruit, flowers, and rainbows mixed in brilliant profusion. What a happy dream, only to be shattered and broken by the evil and idolatry of the natives. To their credit, it can be said, they were never cannibals.

At the very shores, and inside the corral reefs that fenced the islands from the dashing waves, swarmed myriads of the finny tribe of most gorgeous hue. Shrimp in the streams, lobsters in the ocean, bread, milk, butter, custard, and cocoa grew on trees. What more could the human heart desire? And yet the natives were among the most miserable of God's creatures. In them, however, was a spark of divinity that needed only to be touched by the candle of God when it burst into a flame of divine light and intelligence, seldom, if ever, obtained so suddenly by any savage race before or since. After the "night of toil" came the "peep of day," both of which have been portrayed in literature, to be followed by the brighter light of the gospel of truth. What an indictment against the doctrine of total depravity!

The natives were of a coffee brown color. Tall and straight, and agile as deer. Hair and eyes jet black, the latter sparkling as diamonds, a true type of the Indian race.

They have no knowledge of the origin of their race, but if pressed for an answer will say their first parents came from Hawaii. If asked how they know that, they will answer, "Our hearts tell us so." This may be a veiled tradition among them, and if true, may trace their origin to Hagoth's ships, 37 A. D., as mentioned in the Book of Mormon. Some Tahitian and Indian words are similar and others identical.

Through their Tabu man and others I learned that a society had always been among them, and that through it they knew of some of the cardinal Bible points. Their local societies were called pupus or classes. When "the heaving of the sea beyond its bounds" had tried their faith (Doctrine and Covenants 127: 5) they turned to this society, which brought them some trouble later, as it did in Book of Mormon times.

When discovered, they had two forms of government: ecclesiastical and civil. Mane-mane was the high priest at that time, or as he is now called, the Tabu man. He could tabu laws and rules. From this we get our modern expression "tabooed."

Mane-mane first visited the missionaries on board the ship, and threw his cloak of authority around Captain Wilson, making him his friend and changed names with him. When next day a few of the missionaries, the two Swedes, and Mane-mane went ashore, the natives began jumping, laughing, and shouting to express their joy, no doubt much as our children would do now on seeing a superior race from a distant planet, for so it seemed to them.

Upon their second visit ashore the natives "ran into the sea and dragged the boats toward the shore and taking the captain and missionaries on their shoulders carried them to land, so great was their delight." At this time they first met on the beach the king and queen of the Tahitians, riding on men's shoulders. A law forbade them touching the ground except at home, otherwise where their feet touched, the thing became their land or house or ship, as the case might be.

The king's name was Otu, ancestor of the present prince Hinai, who would now be king but for the French who rule those islands. Hinai's father had a special chair in the chapel, built near the royal palace by Brother T. W. Smith, where he often attended Latter Day Saint services. Otu was about twenty years old when Tahiti was visited by the first English missionaries, and of a grave and pious mind. While his queen, Tetua, but fifteen years of age, was quite the reverse. The king's father was living and so was his grandfather, but they no longer were carried on men's shoulders. His grandfather's name was Pomare ("night cough," taken upon him because he nearly strangled one night while coughing), and his wife's name was Idia (pronounced Eedeeah). ("I" has the sound of a very sharp "e," while "e" has the long sound of "a," and "a" the sound of "ah.") Pomare was a very wise man for a heathen, and was treated with much respect. He was very pleasant and cheerful. The natives never permitted him to feed himself.

The king's grandfather was named Oten, and at the time of the first missionaries was seventy years old, and his long hair and beard were white as snow. He, on account of his age, was treated very rudely and abusively by both his son, Pomare, and his grandson, King Otu. Though he greatly desired to see and converse with the captain of the Duff, they would hardly permit him to do so, a custom yet clinging to the natives, and one hard to eradicate.

The favorite god of the Tahitians at that time was Oro, a log of wood about the size of a man. I cannot find that it was carved in any manner. From the fact that it was often hidden when stolen by some conquering tribe, I am inclined to think it was a plain log. Usually he was kept in a little shed among other logs and trees, to be less liable of detection and capture. Within a stone inclosure many altars like high tables were kept and on these a number of dead pigs were kept, which filled the air with such dreadful odor few could approach the god Oro. They were also intended as sacrifices. This place was called a Marae. Men also were sacrificed and hung on the trees in large baskets. A most horrible place, both for sight and odor, as well as dreadful deeds. No woman was considered worthy to approach a Marae, neither was she considered worthy to be a sacrifice.

The priests of Oro of whom at that time Mane-mane was chief, required many sacrifices, little of which reached the Marae. In this way they obtained their food or got rid of an enemy. They never, however, ate human flesh. Many gods were kept in every house of the priests, each with a sword or hammer in his hand with which to kill all who did not sacrifice to Oro.

They had one god, Hiro, whom they thought protected thieves. He was quite popular with many. Most early accounts speak often of the thieving disposition of the early natives. At present it is almost an unknown quality among them; less so than any people I know. A tribute to Christianity, or a hereditary trait of Book of Mormon times, again predominating.

The first missionaries had much trouble from thieves. One man, chained to a dead coconut tree for stealing, climbed the tree at night, broke off the branches, and ran off with the chain and padlock. They seemed to take delight in the difficult feats of stealing, and sometimes they even stole Oro himself. Missionary things seemed to be their greatest desire. They even stole their clothes when the missionaries went bathing.

One time the missionaries hired three natives to herd seventy hogs, but soon they lost so many hogs they had to let the men go.

The king one day informed the missionaries that their servants were stealing many things, and offered them some of his servants if they would discharge theirs. As the king had employed men to steal for him, they preferred not to make the change.

Murder was quite as common as stealing. One custom was to kill their newborn babes unless some relative or friend managed to take them away. The custom now of giving their children away may have descended from that time. The missionaries labored hard to stamp out this, the most awful of crimes, and are to be commended and honored for their success. The missionaries agreed to take all the babies that the natives did not like to bring up. These they trained to a better life, and through their religious training became leaders and teachers among their race, and shortly quite overcame the terrible evil.

Human sacrifice was not so easily overcome. Ecclesiastical rules are hardest changed, for they are based on the deep-seated religious convictions that affect not only the outward, but also the inner man who is hardest to reach.

Oro was their god of war. Before beginning any important work they sought to enlist his favor by human sacrifice. When the priest desired a sacrifice he generally sent word to the king who then sent a small stone to one of his chiefs who knew the meaning, sometimes slaying the most honored guest beneath his roof.

If one man of a family had been offered up, the rest were in great danger of sharing his fate. Such men usually forsook the communities and wandered alone among the mountains in mortal fear, and became fierce and senseless, as wild beasts of other countries.

Through kindness and lives of honor in their own domestic circle, the missionaries little by little caused the natives to desire such a life. By doctoring their sick, and sympathizing with their bereaved, they won their confidence. And after patiently teaching them to read the Bible which they had translated into their own language, and no doubt aided by the light divine, the natives grew tired of their heathen customs and earnestly sought and in part found the better way. Surely full credit is due these patient, earnest men for their "night of toil." One cannot read of their work without feeling a sense of honor for them and a hope of reward for their labors which, however, was only the "peep of day" for a greater work which will be told of in these pages.

THE WORK OF THE WOMEN IN THE ISLANDS

BY EMMA B. BURTON

I am glad to have the opportunity of touching again on the pioneer work in the Society Islands mission, and want it understood that I simply speak of the leading features in the work of those missionary sisters, for all had their part in whatever work devolved upon the missionary's wife, besides much by way of helping the missionary in his work.

Sister L. R. Devore's work of reorganizing the Sunday schools and the Sunday school association, cannot be hid; it bears witness continually, while that of Sister Hubert Case was in a more quiet way, but equally as great, being as it was, in the first stages of development of class work, all of which was new to the Saints.

Sister Case's Sunday school in Hikueru was beautiful to look upon. True, she had a portion of nearly all the Sunday schools that Sister Devore had organized.

At that time of the diving, there were two hundred Latter Day Saints with the divers at Hikueru. These were from ten or twelve different islands and formed as many different classes with a teacher from their own island, for the natives do not mix. These classes more than covered the entire floor of the big new church. A few classes were outside, sitting on the ground under shade trees in front and at the side of the church.

She had a first-class assistant, Tapu, and so left the work at the desk to him, and gave herself entirely to looking after the classes, threading her way among them, giving a little assistance here and a word or two there. Having been a school-teacher, she could more readily detect friction, or lack of interest, and was soon with them to give the needed word that set them going smoothly again. This may seem strange for "grownups," but it must be remembered that it was A B C work to nearly all, never having heard of that kind of work before.

Both the order and the interest was splendid. She was certainly the right one in the right place, capably teaching the schools of all the islands in the one school, and besides much other work, writing out all the lessons each week, no printing work being done at that time.

The next to bring to pass a conspicuous work was Sister Lillie Peterson. The leading feature in her work was going from island to island organizing the Religios, and I presume the Sunday schools, too, which fairly captivated the natives. She did a very splendid and acceptable work with her self-made maps, both large and small. Map work suits the natives better than anything else except singing.

Sister Laura Gilbert had her place, too, but her poor health did not admit of much knock-about work. She, as well as all the rest, taught the natives several hymns, and she certainly excelled all others of the missionary women in assimilating her voice with the natives while singing with them. I have looked her right in the face while thus singing and could not detect her voice. So when the natives wanted to learn a nice song they sought Laura. But if the question was about the Sunday school work they appealed to Sister Alice Case, if it pertained to the Book of Mormon they went to Alberta. But if they had a pain, the toothache, or were sick, they called for "Ama" (Emma).

The annual conferences of the mission are attended by about a thousand people, as a rule. In 1899 there were 850 present, 200 of them being non-members. Brother Burton says: "We enjoyed the most spiritual meeting preceding this conference that I have ever experienced in these islands." Visions, tongues and interpretation, prophecies, and a general outpouring of the Spirit were had at the sacrament meeting, which is typical of such meetings in the islands.

ANCIENT CUSTOMS AND TRADITIONS OF THE POLYNESIAN RACE

BY H. W. SAVAGE

Being requested to write an article dealing with this subject, the first thought that came to my mind was, What good will it do? I have never written on this subject for the church papers, not because I never thought of it nor because I did not study it, for I searched diligently for years among the old customs and traditions for something good, pure, and wholesome, elevating, beautiful, or edifying; but very little or nothing of the kind could be found. Instead of the good, we find so much licentiousness, so much that is degrading, that I have thought it best for those who do not know these things to remain ignorant of them. For ignorance in such cases is innocence.

Our labors in the Society Islands consisted chiefly in a constant struggle against the effects of tradition and custom. Every step forward is met by a tradition or custom. "E parau tahito. E peu mataro roa." I have never been in the Hawaiian group, so my remarks must be taken to refer to the islands south of the equator. I am glad to learn that the Hawaiian sisters have taken an interest in those of the Society Islands, writing them a letter of encouragement. From their letter we are pleased to learn that they never had the false tradition, found among the southern islands, that celibacy will result in death to girls at the age of puberty if they continue in their virginity. This tradition has brought the inhabitants of the Society Islands down to the lowest standard of morals and holds them to the custom of mating their children at a very early age, allowing them to live with the parents, though unmarried, for years, waiting till they are old enough to be married, the companions being exchanged in some cases three or four times before a marriage finally comes to pass. This custom is known as the trial period, to see if they get along well together, and especially to see whether there will be any children.

It will be easily understood by those who read this, that this abuse of the very young children leads on and on into more sin, disease, misery, and death. Many, in fact most of the elders of the native race, still believe this tradition, and when their children come to the age the father deliberately lays aside his office work, so that he may shelter fornication under his own roof in conformity to custom and tradition rather than obey the law of God. There may be exceptions, but this is the rule.

It is always the sex problem that hinders the progress of those people. And they are bound down by so many corruptible customs and traditions relating directly to sex, that it seems like trying to move hell itself to turn them from this evil. William Ellis, in his Polynesian Researches, says: "Of all the natives of the islands of the Pacific Ocean, there are none so superstitious as those of the Society Islands."

I have been unable to find anything in their traditions that promises any better reward in the hereafter to the kind and gentle, the honest, merciful, and loving, than is promised to the most vicious and fiendish. They feared their gods as some so-called Christians do, believing that God is a dreadful being who must be kept in a good humor. They offered sacrifices to them to gain favor with them, and in cases of war the success of the petition depended on the greatness of the offering. You might gain favor with the god, but your god might be bribed by the opposing party offering a greater sacrifice. In most all cases the priest offered the sacrifice and interceded for the people at the Marae, (altar) which, in the coral islands, was a rectangular piece of ground about fifteen by twenty feet, raised about six inches to a foot, with another raised place in this about six by two feet, by about six inches high, with a pillar of stone, sometimes a carved idol, standing at the head. Here the gods or spirits were thought to dwell, or to enter into the idol when an offering was made. The priest pretended to catch the answer from the god through the song of a bird, the sighing of the wind, or the twitching of the nerves and muscles of the expiring victim offered up to the god.

Sometimes the priest pretended to be possessed of the spirit of the god; that the god entered into him instead of entering into the idol. In such cases, the priest was not supposed to be responsible for his actions or words. He was in place of the god. Then he rolled his eyes, muttered inarticulate words and sounds, rolled on the ground, contorting his body, frothing at the mouth, etc. This spell usually passed off in an hour or two, but sometimes it continued for two or three days, though not so violent. On one occasion, when the Rurutu natives called a meeting for the purpose of renouncing idolatry, at which time it was their intention to openly violate many of the superstitious laws and customs of heathenism, a certain man came among them at the meeting, pretending to be uruhia (inspired), threatened them with death and all manner of agony if they broke the laws of the gods. He was told to sit down and be quiet; but he continued the ruse. One of the Raiatea natives visiting there said, "If the god is in we will see if we can twist him out." After a long struggle the inspired one, being overpowered, hung his head and sat down. It was explained that the god, being insulted at the rough handling of his chosen vessel, had departed.

To offend the gods was to eat certain forbidden things, to set foot on the Marae before going fishing, to use wood from the vicinity of the Marae to kindle a fire, to spear certain kinds of fish instead of catching them with a net, to dry and store up certain kinds of fish, etc. Morality, chastity, mercy, love, and truth had nothing to do with righteousness. In fact the spirits after death in Raiatea and some other places were supposed to return and inhabit certain flowery dells, living an eternal life of singing and dancing, with food in abundance and every indulgence; which is the native's highest traditional idealism. This state of indulgence was called Rohutu, and was enjoyed by those spirits who had passed through the Po, state of night.

This depraved conception of the state of eternal bliss, coupled with a natural inclination to enjoy a touch of heaven in this life, is the foundation of the not only very ancient, but very modern custom of holding boisterous, riotous, hilarious festivals.

The state of night or Po was the first abode of the dead after their demise, and in order for them to escape from this place of darkness, the relatives offered sacrifice on the altars and hired the priest to offer prayers in behalf of the suffering ones in the Po, that their torture might be more speedily carried to completion and they might be allowed to pass into the Rohutu or state of bliss. The torture inflicted in the Po consisted of the spirit being scraped or grated to a fine pulp, and eaten by the Orametuas, or semideified spirits of departed warriors. The spirit had to be thus scraped and eaten and pass through the demigod and eaten again, thus passing three times through the demigod before they could escape from the Po or purgatory and enter into Rohutu where they lived as above described and came to inspire men at times or tell them of future events.

GODS AND EMBLEMS

There were many gods and demigods, each of which was honored with an image or emblem, all of which were kept in sacred and holy reverence. The tribal god was kept in the Marae, that is, temple, and others, family gods, were kept in the home and used when at prayer. These were sometimes carved stone or wood, or even shapeless pieces of wood from eight or ten inches long to eight or ten feet. Feathers of birds were also used as emblems. These emblems were brought to the priest, who took them to the great idols and asked the god that his spirit and power might permeate them that they might be a means of reminding their possessor of his duty to his god, and they also were believed to have power to ward off disease, etc. When at prayer the heathen addressed himself to the god through the emblem. Certain fishes and birds were also regarded as sacred, and when a sacrifice was placed on the altar the god was supposed to enter the birds and eat it. The cries of these sacred birds were regarded as expressions of appreciation from the gods. Even to-day the natives put out food on the graves for the dead. It is claimed that the dog, pig, cat, and fowl were originally possessed by these natives and were among the things offered on the altar to the gods. But these things and fishes were not the only things offered. Human beings were often sacrificed in times of war or great anxiety over the illness of the king. The victims were taken from among those taken prisoner in war or from among families or persons with whom the priest or chief was displeased. The victim was treated differently in the leeward islands than in the Tuamotuan Islands, where he was brought alive to the Marae and killed with ceremony; but in Tahiti and Raiatea Islands the victim was knocked down and killed without warning and brought dead to the Marae or temple and placed upon the altar, when the ceremony and prayers were performed by the priests and the body left on the altar to decompose and be eaten by the sacred birds. The bones were afterwards buried under the Marae.

POLYNESIAN TEMPLES

The temples, called Marae, were either national, local, or domestic. The former were the depositories of their principal idols, and the scenes of great festivals; the second were those belonging to the several districts; and the third, such as were appropriated to the worship of family gods. The

OLD NATIVE GODS

In the accompanying article Brother Savage finds little ennobling in the old religious customs of the islanders

Marae of the mountainous islands were more elaborate and much larger than those small ones of the Tuamotuan Islands which I have before described. The Marae of Tane at Maeva contained a depository for the gods, i. e., the idols. It was a house set up on high poles which raised the floor ten or twelve feet from the ground. This was to keep them up out of the way of the people, as it was believed they were constantly strangling or otherwise killing the chiefs and people. The ground in the vicinity of the Marae was considered sacred. Some national temples consisted of several distinct Maraes, and altars (called fata), and sacred dormitories, each of which was dedicated to some of the distinguished deities, and all inclosed in one large stone inclosure of considerable extent. The form of the interior or area of most of these temples was that of a square or parallelogram, the sides of which extended forty or fifty feet and some of them as much as two hundred feet. Two sides of this space were inclosed by a high stone wall about two fathoms or twelve feet high; the front was protected by a low fence; and opposite, a solid pyramidal structure was raised, in front of which the images were kept, and the altars fixed. The altars are said to have been ten or twelve feet high when in perfect preservation. Some of these pyramidal structures were immense. One of them which formed one side of a large square of the Marae in Atehuru is reported to have been two hundred and seventy feet long by ninety-four feet wide at the base, and fifty feet high, being at the top about one hundred and eighty feet long by six feet wide. A flight of steps lead to its summit; the bottom step was six feet high. The outer stones of the pyramid, composed of coral and basalt, were laid with great care, and hewn or squared with immense labor, especially the tiava, or corner stones. Within the inclosure the houses of the priests or keepers of the idols were erected.

LINEAL PRIESTHOOD

The priests of the national temples were a distinct class. It is interesting to note that the office of the priesthood was hereditary in all its departments; that is, it came down to the head of the posterity or eldest son. In the village, the family of the priest was sacred and the priest was also a chief. The king was sometimes the presiding high priest of the nation; or some member of his family often held this highest priestly authority. Thus, the superstitious people, governed by despotic rulers, were the more easily held in subjection by the priestcraft, superstition, and idolatry in the hands of their rulers, who often personified the gods, receiving the offerings and petitions of the worshipers. The prayers, though brief at times, were often long and full of vain repetitions. The sacrifice was called taraehara, meaning to disentangle from guilt. The word is now applied to Jesus Christ.

The only motives by which they were influenced in their religious homage, or service, were, with very few exceptions, superstitious fear, revenge towards their enemies, a desire to escape the wrath of their gods, and to secure their sanction and aid in the commission of the grossest crimes. I have induced several of them on various occasions to rehearse some of the ancient oreros or orations which were customarily addressed to the gods, by the priests, or others, and they chiefly consist of a multiplicity of words eulogizing the god, who may be an ancient king, pronouncing the most wonderful panegyric on this character of the mysterious past, telling of his miraculous beginning or birth, as of Munanui, son of Putangirua, son of Roururoroa (very long hair); which Munanui had such great power from the beginning that he had an island, Haoroangai (now called Hao), brought up out of the ocean for his special heritage.

Their belief in the return of departed ones has not been cast off. The first or second evening after the death of a native Polynesian is often marked by an episode founded in that very ancient tradition. Some one of the mourners, a near relative usually, begins to act strange, rolling the eyes, muttering disjointed or inarticulate words and sounds; they even froth at the mouth. This is a time of mourning and as Solomon says, "The living lay it to heart." Great attention is paid to the actor, for this is a sign that they are soon to hear from the dead; the actor being the mouthpiece. After the self-induced spasm has progressed to the proper stage of development, some one versed in superstition and witchcraft addresses the spirit who has taken possession of the medium, saying, "Who are you?" The answer usually comes, "I am ——," naming the relative recently deceased or some other departed one, a parent or grandparent or some one known to have been famous for spiritualism and superstition among them. Then follows a conversation and many questions are asked by the living and answered by the dead, through the medium. Professing Christians give strict attention to all this and are so intensely interested, so carried away by it, that we can scarcely believe our ears when we discover that they are still enslaved by the same kind of superstition as were their heathen forefathers.

About four years after Elder Metuaore died, one of our elders, president of a branch, reported that he had seen Metuaore walking about in the early morning. The good brother said he advised Metuaore to give up his ramblings over the hills of Tahiti and go to the place which must have been given him as a reward for his services. Another elder who presided over the district and who had served for years under conference appointment, heard of the return of Metuaore and was so angry because of this impropriety that he went to the grave of Metuaore which was covered with roof iron upon which covering our highly respected brother pounded with a club till he raised the neighborhood, and then addressing Metuaore in a loud voice, upbraided the dead bishop for snooping around on the face of this earth before the time, and commanded him to remain in his place till the dawn of the millennium. Referring to the savage beating which he had administered to the top of Metuaore's grave he said he would teach the bishop not to stroll over the hills of Tahiti in the cool of the morning.

A native sister who had traveled much with her husband in the interests of the gospel became angry with a young woman who refused to send for the elders at the suggestion of the old sister when the young woman was very sick. The old sister secretly cut off some of the patient's hair and took it and put it on the grave of a relative and requested the departed spirit to come and take the young woman to the Po, the state of night. She afterward confessed this before the church.

TRADITION OF THE GREAT DELUGE

In Raiatea they have a tradition of a great deluge which came as a result of the anger of Tangaroa, the god of the ocean, who cursed the land and raised the ocean over the highest mountains because a careless fisherman got his fishhooks entangled in Tangaroa's hair while the god lay asleep at the bottom of the lagoon. The fisherman fell on his face and begged for his life, and Tangaroa provided a place of safety for him on a low island where the fisherman and his wife and one other person were protected while the sea inundated the earth, even to the highest mountains. Some say they took with them to this place of safety a pig, a dog, a cat, and a couple of fowls. The Tahitian tradition is that the only survivors of the flood escaped in a canoe and landed on Morea when the water went down. Another one is that one man and his wife and a couple of fowls, a pig, a dog, a cat, etc., escaped to a very high mountain while all the earth, even Orophena, the highest mount in Tahiti, was submerged. This may refer to the deluge of the Bible or it may refer to a tidal wave.

THE SUN SLACKENED ITS PACE

Maui's mother could not get anything cooked for Maui because the sun went down so quickly after rising. Maui took a piece of line, went to the horizon and waited for the sun, caught it and made a line fast to it and held it back while his mother finished her work and Maui feasted. Some people think this may have had its origin in the story of Joshua commanding the sun to stand still while Israel fought with the enemy.

A GIANT SLAIN BY A STONE FROM A SLINGSHOT

I think it was in Makemo I saw what the natives say are the petrified bones of a giant killed by a small man with a slingshot. He missed the first and second shot but the third hit the giant on the head and killed him. The rocks do not resemble bones in any way; but some have thought that this tradition had its origin in the story of David and Goliath in the valley of Terebinth or perhaps of Elhanan and Goliath of Gath. (See 2 Samuel 21 and 1 Samuel 17.)

ISRAELITISH ORIGIN

It will be seen from these traditions and customs referred to here, together with the evidence obtainable by a philological review of the question, that these people are an offshoot of the American Indian and of Israelitish origin. Their temples, altars, sacrifices, lineal priesthood, pyramidal structures, sacred birds, animals, and fishes, traditions of the deluge, the sun being stopped, the killing of the giant with a slingshot, and above all, their vain endeavor to avoid the spirit of the law but to hold to the letter thereof; their great respect for ancient customs and traditions, and the reverence with which they look upon ostentatious ceremony, together with the stubborn resistance towards the Spirit of the gospel of Christ, reminds us often of stiffnecked Israel from Egypt, who always wanted to know what the penalty would be for breaking the law, instead of centering the powers of body and mind on the blessings attending the keeping of the law.

There are many personal experiences which would be interesting and would help show up the points we have introduced here, but I fear I have written more than the editors will have room for. I trust that what we have presented will be of some benefit to some one. Perhaps those who take up the work there in the future may be able through these things to see the cause of present difficulties, and be helped to find the way to remedy the spiritual ailments of a blighted people. If so, I have not written in vain.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK IN THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS

BY ELLA R. DEVORE

At the General Conference of 1890 Brother Devore was appointed to the Society Islands mission. In February of that year I was told, through prophecy, that I would be called upon to accompany and help my husband on a foreign mission, and that a key would be given me by which to reach that people, etc.

The captain's wife said that the trip across the ocean had been a remarkable one, and they believed that it was because Mr. and Mrs. Devore were on board. We arrived at Papeete, January 30, being twenty-nine days on the way. The natives received us in their church house. We spoke to them through an interpreter and they to us. When it came my turn to speak, they were moved to tears, which caused the interpreter to wonder, for it is a rare thing to see a native weep. I taught them two years through an interpreter, and after that in their own tongue.

Brother M. H. Forscutt, by the Spirit, set me apart to preside over the entire Sunday school work in that mission; to organize schools wherever it was wise so to do—this being the first introduction of that work among that people. He wrote a statement of the occurrence to the few white missionaries, including my beloved husband, at the conference to be held on the island of Takapoto, but because of many mishaps, such as leaky boats, seasickness, and adverse winds we were delayed several days. They accepted the statement sent and consented to the work being done, but the natives shook their heads at the new suggestion, yet called for a sample, and, as there was a large attendance from the various islands, we thought best to do so. By the help of my husband we arranged that great crowd into classes with a teacher, explaining what was required of them. The natives at once fell in love with it, causing them to vie with each other as to which island should be visited first.

When conference adjourned all started for home, including the white missionaries. As we stood on the seashore with bared heads an earnest prayer was offered for those entering on the sea and for those who remained, especially for the work that was set for me to do. Thirteen boats started out with their beautiful white sails spread to the breeze, seemingly waving their farewells to me. As I stood, a lone, white woman among so many natives, without an interpreter, not fully understanding their language and equipped for the arduous work before me with only the Bible, having neither concordance, Book of Mormon, nor Doctrine and Covenants, two Mormon elders from Utah stood watching the scene, seemingly realizing the situation. Think you, dear reader, that you can imagine my feelings under these trying circumstances? I walked slowly to the house, sorrowfully, yet rich in faith in the Lord, to proceed in my work, that had been shown to me by the Spirit of God on my way to that conference, lying helpless with seasickness, holding on to the ropes of the boom to keep from falling overboard, the starry heavens my covering.

A BRIGHT LOOKING CLASS

Sister Ellis and her Sunday school class in Papeete

Brother Devore called upon the conference for means to help pay the indebtedness of a church house in Papeete which could not be put off longer. He threw down one dollar on the table and the few white brethren followed. The natives came up like sheep throwing down their dollars, five dollars, ten cents, and so on, until the amount was made up, almost $1,000. Brother Devore was selected to take it there, which threw me in a quandary. Would I go with him or would I go about my work? I asked his advice and his answer was, "Do as you feel to do, and the Lord direct you, for you know the wonderful sacrifices you will have to make and the great responsibility upon you, and I shall not influence you one way or the other." No other source was open to me but to go to God and his Christ, which I did, alone, feeling that I must be led by him. This is the answer that came to me: "I do not command you to go, but if you will go I will go before you and be your rearward and you shall not suffer with seasickness as much as heretofore." (This proved to be true.) I decided there to do the Lord's work, abiding the consequences.

Organizing a school there and on another island close by, I realized that questions and answers would have to be gotten up and written in their language and that I would need a well-read native to assist me. The Spirit of the Lord revealed to me the faces of the man and his wife who were to travel with me, but not their names nor the island on which they lived, therefore I could make no inquiry for anyone. I went to the third island and the second morning, before I was up, I heard a voice on the porch talking to the sister I was staying with. I knew the person talking to be the one appointed to help me. I soon learned their names and their island, which was Arratura. The branch there had been fasting and praying for about ten days for the Lord to send me to their island, and then selected Tapu and his wife to meet me on this island to understand more about the work I was doing and to bring me home with them if possible. I told them what the Lord had revealed to me and they consented to go with me. After organizing and finding considerable opposition from a native French school teacher which was finally adjusted, I went with Tapu and his wife to their island where the teacher followed us and made more trouble which was again overcome. And there in one of the question schools I failed to produce a scriptural answer which I knew was in the Bible but I could not find it in the absence of the concordance. I gained their consent to give me until the next day to find it, and knowing their peculiar makeup that if I failed to produce it from the Bible I might as well go home, I searched with all diligence. Failing to find it while it was yet day I prayed the livelong night to be able to find it, but went back next day unsuccessful. When they learned of my failure they with one accord dropped their heads with shame—their confidence was gone. I breathed a prayer to God asking, "Why am I left alone under such trying circumstances? In the name of Jesus, come to my rescue!" I had the Bible open, searching in the book of Luke, thinking surely it must be there. With my right hand lying on the book an unseen hand was laid upon mine and pushed my hand from where it was to the old part of the Bible, and where my fingers touched the leaves I opened, and the first thing my eyes beheld was the answer to the question. I wept with joy and held my book up before them, and Tapu came at once to see where the chapter and verse was. At the unusual occurrence their heads were all up to see what it meant. Tapu found and read it in their own language. Instantly all their confidence was restored with great joy, and my joy was so great I could scarcely go on with my school.

We traveled from island to island organizing schools, finding considerable opposition, but we were able to overcome it. Six months passed by before husband and I met at a conference held on another island, having heard from each other but twice during that time. Then together from that island we went to Niau. There Sunday school and scriptural schools were started and I thought I would have help from my husband, but the Lord had planned otherwise. The light of the scriptures became blank to his understanding and we understood then that that was the work given me to do, for he had an abundance of work to do elsewhere. On that island (Niau) were the only two natural teachers I found anywhere in the mission, and while standing behind one of them listening to her teaching a class of five, a vision was given me and I saw a throng of children marching two by two, and for the first time the thought of a celebration like I had seen in my childhood days entered my mind. I related the vision to my husband and together we planned a celebration, and made a beautiful banner of rich oil calico. The colors were these: Two shades of red, two shades of blue, two of green, two of yellow, and two of brown. The body of the banner was white with suitable words written in the native tongue. Long streamers of blending colors, notched on each side, like ribbon, hung from the back. It was carried on a pole, which was wrapped with the same colors. The poor natives never having seen anything in the way of an entertainment, were overjoyed and named the day "Mahana oa oa," which means "day of joy." The program was all made from the Bible, having nothing else, and it was beautiful, being directed in this also. It was a pleasant day to us all. When all was over and we were sitting in our home, a step was heard at our door, with a thump of a cane on the threshold calling our attention. An old brother in his eighty-fourth year, with tears of joy streaming down his cheeks, calling us both by name, said: "The Lord hath let me live to see the great day of joy. I am now ready to depart, amen." Our tears mingled with his in the thought of happiness that was brought to those poor souls. I could recite many more similar instances but space will not permit.

I went on with my work traveling alone, (that is, without Brother Devore), from island to island until thirteen schools were organized; originating nearly two thousand scripture questions as the needs required. Taught and directed sisters' meetings and held fasting prayer meetings for the sick ones. Presided over two Sunday school conventions at the general conferences of the mission. Taught, encouraged, and sympathized with each in their turn as they came up before me. I resided with them five and a half years.

SOUTH SEA PHILOLOGY

BY A. H. CHRISTENSEN

Much bad philology has been made, and many incorrect conclusions have been reached upon the assumption that wherever a word or words have been found identical in two or more languages, that the people were descendants of the same original stock, or had been associated at some time. To arrive at certain facts, it is necessary to look more closely to the origin and formation of languages. There are some words alike in different languages, whose origin is known, and it is also known that they were not derived from the same common language, as for instance where the Hindus and the natives of Vancouver Island both call the crow a kaka, no doubt because that represents the call of it, and the name originated, no doubt, in the same way as the word moomoo for cow among American children; or the word mimii for cat among Tahitian children.

The words, oh! ah! uh! pooh! tut! etc., express the same emotional feelings in many languages, slightly varying in sound, according to the adopted vowel sounds of the various races. Other words are borrowed from races with whom intercourse has been had; as when the American speaks such words as the following: Opera and sonata, from the Italian; gallina and mulatto, from Spain. The Hebrews have furnished us with sabbath and jubilee. The Arabs loaned us zero and magazine. From Mexico we have borrowed tomato and chocolate. Haiti gave us hammock and hurricane. Peru gave us guano and quinine; and we even called upon the Society Islands for taboo and tatoo.

So you see we are great philological borrowers. We have paid back our debts, however, for to the South Sea Islander we have given, taite (society), Bibilia (Bible), poti (boat), buka (book), and hundreds of others.

Other words are either borrowed or derived from some quality of the object, as tiputa (Society Island), and tippet (English), both meaning cloak. This word is most likely similar merely by chance.

So we see that in our zeal to establish the identity of the natives of the South Sea Islands as direct descendants of the American Indian, we must be careful as to the method and material we use, lest some student arise to embarrass us. Nevertheless, let us stand our ground, for there is truth there that may be told.

There are a great many words that are similar in their root formations, and evidently did not originate as those already mentioned, but date back to the original tongue, perhaps to the time of the confusion of languages at the tower of Babel. Some profane men, with no knowledge of the Scriptures or the creation of the world, have imagined that the first language was born of wants; first the sign, then the phonetic, then the evolutionary stage, finally the perfected languages. In other words, that languages have been "built." I disagree. I believe that God caused the peoples at Babel to forget their own tongues and speak another in the twinkling of an eye. For example, the gift of tongues in the church of Jesus Christ.

These new languages no doubt changed from year to year until the present time, some having lost all semblance of their former self, others becoming extinct, as the Adamic, which no doubt passed into oblivion with Coriantumr. Marks of others still run through present languages and reveal their kindred, as certain aquiline features run through families for generations. The word know (English), the root word, gno, from Latin gnosco, gnotus, etc., carrying the thought to know. The Greek gignosco, in which is also found the gno. Next, turning to Sanskrit, we find the word gna, having the same meaning. Like the tributaries of a river, this word seems to flow down to the common parent, the Aryan.

The Polynesian word tabu, meaning sacred, is approached in both sound and meaning in the Arabic word tabut, meaning the Ark of the Covenant. This word may be a "cut" clipped by the posterity of Joseph of Egypt, while they still had commercial and social intercourse with people of that language, carried by Lehi and family to the shores of the promised land, and to be re-clipped and carried to these barren coral reefs in the Pacific. Some words, like Indians on the war path, wipe out their tracks as they go; as the word watch, meaning a timepiece. Few men that carry them know the origin of the word. It is, however, older than the thing it stands for, having its beginning before the watch was invented, when the town watchman used to sit in the tower striking the hours on the bell. It was his duty to watch, named from the Anglo Saxon, woeccan, from wacan, meaning to wake, to move. Not so obscure, however, the Sandwich Island word, kanaka (man), the South Sea Island taata (man), and the New Zealand, tangata (man). The trail of this word is clear.

In this way we find many words alike in different languages that bear evidence of common parentage. By a close examination we can usually know them from new or borrowed words. Many Tahitian words are alike in sound and meaning to those of the American Indian; also the rules of formation are similar. I am unable to make an adequate comparison here, not having the Indian words at hand. I would be pleased if some brother would send me a Bible printed in the language of some American tribe of Indians, and I will refund the money paid out by him and be greatly obliged. In Tahitian the method of comparison is the same as in some Indian dialects, as for instance, in Tahitian, roa (long), roaroa (very long), and roaroaroa (exceedingly long). Also fati means to break, fatifati, to break repeatedly. So also, when the Algonquin Indians saw a screw steamer, they named it a yetseh-yetsoleh (kick-kicker). The Tahitian and Indian custom of naming babies is also the same, as Te Ata (The Cloud), Te Mata'i (The Wind), Te Ua (The Rain), Te Manu (The Bird), etc., in Tahitian, and Big Eagle, Red Cloud, Big Thunder, etc., as seen among the Indians.

This very point of similarity of language only complicates matters when we go to the Malay Peninsula, and there find as much similarity to the Tahitian as among the Indians. Similarities are also noted in the Japanese and Filipino languages. We have already noticed instances of increasing quantity or quality, by doubling. We also see the custom in Japanese, as faitobito (men), and in Malay, as orang (man), orangorang (men). Other instances of similarity are: i o (close at hand) Malay; and i o (close at hand) Tahitian. Tasik (sea), langit (sky) Malay; and in Tahitian, tai (sea), and rai (sky). In Malay, eh! (triumph), weh (compassion), chih! (dislike), corresponding to Tahitian, eh! (triumph), ae! (compassion or sorrow), and chih! (dislike).

In Mormon's account he says that both the Hebrew and the Egyptian had been changed by them to the extent that no other people living could read their writing, and for that reason he buried the Urim and Thummim with the plates. It must have changed considerably indeed, for we know that no one can to-day read the inscriptions that are engraven upon the temples of Central America. How our language has changed may be seen from the following examples: By changing, Quiet the baby; Harness the horse; he is puffed up; the workman's strike. These are simply nouns and adverbs that have from usage been changed to verbs, etc. Again some have been changed by shrinking, as, fortnight, from fourteen night, and boat swain to boatswain, and by seamen to bosun. The natives of Vancouver Island say yakpus, which is all that remains of yakhpekuksekous, which being interpreted is, long-face-hair-man, or long bearded man.

As the art of writing is lost to a race, the language undergoes a rapid change, as in the case of the Mulokites, who in the course of three hundred years had so changed their language as to be unintelligible to Mosiah, who also spoke Hebrew. Some English-speaking people, while not having lost the art of writing, have so altered the sounds that other English-speaking persons can scarcely understand them. Compare Old English with American English; or try a stanza or two from Robert Burns. The grammars of to-day contradict the ones studied by me a few years ago. How often do we hear discussions upon the point of the correct pronunciation of a word, or the syntax of a sentence, to be settled only by reference to an accepted book of authority on grammar, rhetoric, etc., and if that book happens to have been printed in New England the Texan will most likely "stand corrected." But if the school book trust is transferred to "Dixie" for a decade, "you all" will learn a new lesson in language when little Willie comes home from school. And the preacher, who on Sabbath morn, faces a mixed congregation, gathered from the four quarters of the earth, each bearing a philological bushel by which he is to be measured, faces a serious condition indeed. He is to be pitied more than censured.

I am told by Tahitians and Spaniards that Americans are always getting the cart before the horse, because they insist in putting the noun or subject first, followed by the verb, and lastly the object. While they say the proper way is as they have it, i. e., first, verb, next, noun or subject, and lastly, the object. The man that tried to invent Esperanto looked at the matter from an international and scientific standpoint and knew what he was about, but they all pointed their fingers at him. Nevertheless, let us uphold the school-teacher and the printer, lest we become philological barbarians.

Principally because of the loss of writing, the Tahitians lost most of the original language of the Lamanites, or Nephites, and as they saw new objects or acts they invented new words to fit the character of the action or thing, a custom among all people, especially among barbarians. Therefore it is practically a new language they speak. Note the following: cat, piifare, interpretation, cry in the house; horse, puaa horo fenua, interpretation, beast run on the land; automobile, pereo uira, interpretation, chariot lightning; blacksmith, tupai auri, interpretation, beater of iron; chair, parahiraa, interpretation, sitting place; telephone, parau niunuu, interpretation, talk on wire; eat or bite, amu; chew or bite repeatedly, amuamu; murmur, to complain, is expressed also by the word amuamu, presumably because the action is the same, i. e., to work the jaw. Americans have unconsciously followed the same rule when they coined the phrase, "chew the rag." After this phrase has been properly "shrunk" and "cut down" it may be spelled thus, churag, and by the hand of a T. R. (tailor of reputation) may be sewed on the old garment of the English language, and everybody will be "delighted."

But to return to the South Seas, we see there is a relationship between the native dialect and that of the American Indian as well as the native language of the Malay Peninsula. Some contend that native South Sea Islanders are from the southeastern part of Asia. To this I agree in part only. I quote below the words of Edward B. Tylor, D. C. L., F. R. S., from his book, Anthropology, page 163:

It has already been seen (p. 102) how the Malays, Micronesians, Polynesians, and Malagasy, a varied and mixed population of partly Mongolian race, are united over their immense ocean district half round the globe by languages of one family, the Malay-Polynesian. The parent language of this family may have belonged to Asia, for in the Malay region the grammar is more complex.

Referring again to page 102, as quoted by him we read:

From the Malay archipelago there stretch into the Pacific, the island ranges of Micronesia, and then of Polynesia, till we reach Easter Island to the east, and New Zealand to the south. The Micronesians show connection with the Malays in language, and more or less in bodily make. But they are not Malays proper, and there are seen among them, high faces, narrow noses, and small mouths, which remind us of the European face, as in the Micronesian (figure 40) who stands here to represent this varied group of peoples. The Maoris are still farther from being pure Malays, as is seen in their more curly hair, often prominent, and even aquiline noses. It seems likely that an Asiatic race closely allied to the Malays may have spread over the South Sea Islands, altering their special type, and crossing with the darker Melanesians, so that now the population of the different island groups often vary much in appearance. This race of sailors even found their way to Madagascar where their descendants have more or less blended with a population from Africa.

It is plainly discernible that the South Sea Islander is a mixture of two or more races, corresponding to the American Indian on the one side, and the Malaysian on the other. The similarity of language and bodily appearance is on account of long acquaintance with each other, which was possible, since the islands are so close together that natives could go from Tahiti to Malay in their canoes.

The present-day Tahitian language seems to be the resultant of a collision of two languages, fitting illy into the straight-jacket of English grammar, into which place it has been crammed by late philological reformers. I believe the South Sea Islander to be a mixture of American Indian and Malaysian.

After the return of Brother and Sister Burton to America, Brother C. H. Lake wrote of them: "It seems rather lonely without Brother and Sister Burton about, and the natives come in and say, 'Ua taota anei Iosepha?' (Is Joseph lying down?) which is their way of saying that they miss him. Mr. Cordella, mayor of the city, told some of the native brethren, 'You will never have another orometua (teacher) like Mr. Burton; he is a good man,' and other foreigners speak in the same way. . . . The sick will certainly miss Sister Burton, who, with her tactful and motherly ways won their love. She has indeed been a 'mother in Israel' to the natives."

HISTORY OF THE SOUTH SEA ISLAND MISSION

BY CLYDE F. ELLIS FROM 1843-1890; 1914-1918.

BY J. CHARLES MAY FROM 1890-1914.

It is with regret that we are unable to furnish a complete history of the work in this mission. Many of the items kept were swept away in the cyclones through which these islands have unfortunately passed. However, we submit a few of the main historical features of the work, whereby you who read may get a hint of the labors, trials, and sacrifices for the maintenance of the work here.

THREE GENERATIONS

Daughter, grandson, and great-granddaughter of Elder John Hawkins, the young missionary of the early forties in the Society Island Mission.

Perhaps one of the most interesting features in the introduction of the work in these distant isles is the Lord's remembrance and recognition of these people in the very incipency of the latter-day work in the world. In Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1 he says: "Hearken ye people from afar, and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together."

In accordance with such divine favor, the church appointed, in 1843, four missionaries for these islands: Addison Pratt, Benjamin F. Grouard, Noah Rogers, and K. Hanks. After preparation and a rather broken journey to the Atlantic Coast, these brethren sailed on the Timoleon on October 9, 1843, from New Bedford, Massachusetts. Elder Hanks was weak in body at the time of embarking, but was desirous of fulfilling the mission appointed him. He, however, continued to grow weaker until November 3 of the same year of their departure, when he passed away peacefully. Not being able to delay his burial until they reached the Cape Verde Islands, he was buried at sea. Thus passed away one of the messengers upon his way to this distant field. Nothing unusual occurred in their trip from then on, and after doubling the Cape of Good Hope and sailing several weeks, they finally landed on the island of Tubuai, about three hundred miles south of Tahiti, on April 30.

OLD NATIVE FORT

This old fort built by the natives to defend themselves from the invading French, is a number of miles from the seashore in the big Fautaua Valley.

There being no missionary on the island, by request and personal choice, Elder Pratt remained among the inhabitants there, while Elders Grouard and Rogers sailed for Tahiti about May 9. Tubuai stands out as the historical island of all the island missions of the church. It was on that island that the first gospel sermon was preached in this mission of the Pacific Ocean. On May 14, Elders Grouard and Rogers reached Tahiti, but found conditions difficult for missionary work, and were compelled to remain for some time with but little success. In the meantime, however, Elder Pratt was very successful in Tubuai, where, after baptizing some foreigners and natives, he organized the first branch of the church in the Pacific on July 29, known as the Tubuai Branch. Eleven members composed it. Thus was the work of the Lord commenced in an organized branch in the Pacific.

On August 5 following, the Lord's supper was administered for the first time among them. Elder Pratt continued with success in Tubuai. After conditions had shaped, Elders Grouard and Rogers rented a house in Tahiti and at once commenced to preach with success. Some twenty whites were baptized, while many natives professed belief, but because of conditions existing as a result of the French taking possession of the island, the natives excused themselves.

One of the whites, baptized as a result of these early efforts, was a young Englishman by the name of John Hawkins, whose posterity is still among us and firm believers of the gospel. Elders Grouard and Rogers ordained one (a Mr. Lincoln who had been a fellow passenger on board the Timoleon and to whom they had taught the gospel at sea, he having been baptized upon their landing in Tahiti) to the office of elder to preside over the branch in Tahiti, which had just been organized. This was the second branch to be organized in the mission. The above Mr. Lincoln is the father of Elder George S. Lincoln of San Francisco, California. Such provision being made, they separated, Elder Rogers going to the islands of the Society group, and to the islands southeast of Tahiti, Elder Grouard going north to the Tuamotuan group, landing on the island of Anaa, where he stayed for some time.

Elder Rogers having returned to Tahiti, left on July 3, 1845, for America on board the Free Brother. He reached Nantucket, Massachusetts, on November 6, 1845; and Nauvoo December 29 following. It was some time during the opening of the above period that Elder Hawkins, who had commenced to labor as a missionary in Tahiti, was taken prisoner by the natives, and conveyed to the mountains, where he was detained for about seven months, subsisting upon nature's own plain production, among an uncivilized race. He did not fail to teach them the gospel, and finally, upon being sought out by a young English friend, he, with him, cautiously sought his way to Papeete, by way of the old native trails, reaching the Fautaua Valley just below the old native fort, by way of a very narrow passage, at places only a very few inches in width, where the natives would roll stones down upon the French in their efforts to reach the natives' fort. After many narrow escapes he reached Papeete, but was confronted with a death sentence for taking up arms against the French Government just prior to his capture by the natives.

Brother Lincoln accompanied him to the governor where after explanations and the intervention of divine providence, he was delivered a free man. Elders Grouard and Pratt continued to labor in the islands aforementioned, but persecution arose which was encouraged greatly by Catholicism. It became so strong the Saints were forbidden to preach, pray, even for their food, or to hold any kind of a meeting. This was to be enforced with severity, and thus officers and soldiers were sent to Anaa where the missionaries had been successful in establishing the work. On a Sabbath following while some of the natives were engaged in prayer in a house of one of the brethren, a French gendarme was summoned and at once came. Although somewhat intoxicated he entered the house and raised his sword with anger, it catching in the thatched roofing above. Whereupon one of the natives sprang forward, spearing the officer with his fish spear, which was invariably at the native's side in those days. The natives followed him and killed him with clubs and knives. The result was, the four who had killed the officer were hanged on a coconut tree. One hundred and twenty-seven sympathizers were brought to Paapeete, and forced to work upon the public road, which, together with their limited diet, change of climate and conditions, very few survived. Some were even forced to the Catholic Church at the point of the bayonet. After a few years of servitude, those who survived, about fifteen in number, were permitted to return to Anaa. Thus were the native brethren called upon to sacrifice for the establishment of their religion in these islands. Owing to this persecution the foreign missionaries were compelled to leave. Elder Pratt sailed from Tahiti on May 15, 1852. Elder John Hawkins was left to look after the work and assist as much as possible although he was not permitted to preach. The year opens another epoch of interest in the history of this mission. On December 13, 1873, Elders C. W. Wandell and Glaud Rodger landed in Tahiti, after a little over a month's travel at sea. It was one of the Lord's intervening ways of establishing again among these people the true gospel. These brethren were on their way to Australia, but because of a leak the vessel put in at Tahiti for repairs. A few days after landing, they found a branch of Saints in the Punaauia District, at a spot called by the Saints, Zion (Ziona). It was their place of refuge, and as they had been taught by the former missionaries concerning Zion, they naturally called this little spot in Tahiti, Zion, it being a place where they could repair without the persecution of their opponents. The majority of the people found here were baptized by men ordained by the first missionaries. Before leaving Tahiti Brethren Wandell and Rodger baptized and rebaptized fifty-one in Zion, or Ziona Branch, and ordained a number, a few of whom left for Tubuai and the Tuamotuan Islands as messengers of peace to the scattered sheep. Thus the Reorganization was started in this mission. A most marvelous and divine intervention, indeed!

magnitude of power, in the personality of T. W. Smith, together with the grand gift of spiritual aid the task was made a possibility. Brother Smith traveled extensively until November 4, 1887, when he and wife left Tahiti for Australia.

Elder Nelson returned to America, not being permitted to remain but a short time without a permit. Sometime in May he returned to Tahiti.

Elder Nelson was in the Tuamotuan group, laboring among the Mormons and other factions which arose after the departure of Elders Pratt and Grouard. Baptisms were frequent in Ziona, Tahiti, as well as some in the Tuamotus. Elder Nelson left for America some time during this period.

The above year, 1884, also marks an epoch of great interest in our history, as Apostle T. W. Smith and wife arrived in Tahiti on November 6 of that year. The apostle was received with open arms by the native people. He at once entered upon the work of reorganization. He went to the Tuamotuan Islands, also to the phosphate island of Makatea, where he set in order, by rebaptizing and other means, the several branches. There were at that time three divisions among the natives, which were the result of the apostasy in the 40's and 50's. It was no small task to eradicate such conditions, but through the Many stone buildings owned by the government (French), and both stone and frame church buildings were totally destroyed by the storm. Our chapels at Hikueru, Raroia, and Makatea were completely destroyed. In many places the tide rose over thirty feet higher than the usual high tides. Brother J. W. Gilbert reported the following regarding the storm at Hikueru: "While at Hikueru we were visited by the most terrific hurricane that has ever been known in the history of the South Sea Islands, completely destroying every building, washing the whole village into the lagoon. There were 377 people killed, and those who were not killed had to find the highest points or

EXPERIENCES OF HUBERT CASE AND WIFE IN THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS

BY HUBERT CASE

In September, 1894, when Joseph Smith, by the laying on of hands set us apart with a special blessing for the work in the Island Mission, he made some very significant statements. After a three months' illness, being unable to work, he pronounced the blessing of health upon my head, saying that I should be free from all manner of sickness and disease during my missionary trip to the islands, and during the four years we were gone I was never sick a day. One very comforting statement he made to my wife was that she should return in safety to her loved ones. These, with other statements, made at the time, served as a comfort to us and it inspired faith for our journey, as we saw them literally fulfilled.

Our journey began with the sailing of the Evangelia on October 8, 1894, with Brother Burton as captain. The history of the sailing of this boat and all those connected with the trip is quite fully described in Sister Burton's book, Beatrice Witherpoon, and has also been published in the Autumn Leaves and Journal of History.

Our landing in the city of Papeete was on November 30, 1894, where we received a royal welcome from the islanders assembled from various islands to welcome the coming of the gospel boat. Brother Gilbert was also with them, he being there in missionary work. The first three months we put in much study on the language and customs of the people. The following spring, on April 6, we met in conference with about five hundred of the natives; also the white missionaries, Brother and Sister Devore and Brethren Newton and Gilbert. By this time I was able to preach a little in the native tongue, but from this conference, in company with my wife, we undertook one of the most difficult feats in missionary experience in the South Seas. Kehauri, one of the native elders, had returned from a brief stay on the island of Rarotonga. He reported a great unrest among the natives and considered the time was ripe for a work to be done among them. He had baptized seven natives and said the others were exceedingly eager to hear. From this report Brother Devore concluded it was best to send one of his force there.

HUBERT CASE

Brother and Sister Case went to the islands on the gospel boat, the "Evangelia," with Brother and Sister Joseph Burton. At present they reside in Lamoni and his mission is the Lamoni Stake. For years he had labored among the American Indians, his island experiences being of much help in reaching their hearts.

Going to Papeete, we went from thence six hundred miles southwest to the island of Rarotonga. This is but one of the Cook Islands where the ship Duff, years before, had left thirteen white missionaries who were eaten by the natives, but since that time the London Missionary Society had maintained a mission and made some considerable headway in partly civilizing the natives. We landed upon this island among strangers and without money. The natives were very friendly, but we found the Protestant missionary exceedingly prejudiced and very resentful at our coming among them. He also manifested great antipathy toward the Seventh-day Adventist missionary who had just landed. We had very little money, but we hired a horse and buggy to take us to the locality where Kehauri had baptized his converts. But we found them changed. Cowed and intimidated by the Protestant missionary, and the force of prejudice among the people, they dared not receive the white missionary into their homes. We returned to Avarua where, after two days, we succeeded in renting a house from a native pilot named Miau, and the next night I began preaching to the natives. They filled our house and many listened from the outside.

These islands being under the English protectorate, a few of the natives spoke a little English, but their own dialect was so different from what I had learned in the Society group it was like beginning over again. I preached five nights to the natives, starting to talk to them in the Tahitian tongue each evening, but as the Spirit came to me I soon found myself using their words instead of the language I had been learning, and speaking one hour each evening with increased interest until the missionary who had control of the island, Mr. Hutchings, came down along in front of the house, warning the natives not to go in and hear that man any more, proving his authority over them by keeping them away. Many of the natives came privately and talked with me many times. The chief judge of the island, Judge Tapou, told me this man had absolute control and that he had ordered the natives to starve us; not to give us any food or sell us anything to eat.

I wrote the situation home to Bishop Kelley, but it took five months to get an answer. After we had been there a few weeks what few dollars we had were gone for rent and the scantiest possible living, so we made the matter a subject of prayer that the Lord would open the way. While on the mountain side, alone in earnest prayer to the Lord, I was assured by the Spirit that the Lord would provide for us. Arising from my prayer and walking about fifty yards I met one of the native men who told me that he had been ordered not to give or sell us food, but pointing to the little tract of land belonging to him, he told me if I would not tell anyone I could get fruit from his land, and cutting off a bunch of bananas he handed them to me and I carried them home.

After talking some time and eating bananas, I went

“HOMEWARD BOUND”

Looking out through the pass to the sea, from the lagoon, island of Apataki.

Homeward Bound

POEM BY ELDER L. R. DEVORE ON LEAVING THE SOCIETY ISLANDS

Adieu to ocean travel,
We'll say as we step ashore.
Adieu to ocean travel,
We'll practice you no more.

Adieu to ships and sailors
Who love the restless sea;
You'll go upon your journey
Without my wife and me.

For five long years we've tried it—
No pleasure did we see,
Rocking in the sailor's cradle
Has no charms for her and me.

As day and night each other follow,
Off the sea as well as on,
During life we'll often ponder O'er the scenes through which we've gone.

For the burdens have seemed heavy,
We have borne so much alone.
Others came and took the burdens—
We are free to journey home.

God be with and bless and comfort
Brother Case and wife while there;
For they are young and need thy counsel
In their trials everywhere.

Tears were shed at our last parting,
Prayers were offered up to Thee
To remain with those behind us,
And be with us on the sea.

How our hearts did yearn with pity
As we took them by the hand,
Knowing well 'twas our last meeting
In that distant foreign land.

We have left them; now we're sailing
Homeward bound—we often sigh,
May we reach that land in safety,
There to live and there to die.

And when life with us is over,
And we reach the other shore,
May we hear our Father saying,
Son and daughter, toil no more.

up to the little village, and entered the store of a Mr. Goodwin. He asked me if I had seen the pamphlet the minister had written against me. I told him, No. He handed me one. After looking it over I told him the man had the advantage of me because I had no money with which to print a reply. After a few moments' conversation he offered to translate the pamphlet into English for me, and my reply into the native tongue, but I told him that having no money at all I could do nothing with it, and thanked him for his kindness, when he reluctantly asked me if we had any money to live on, to which I answered: "Not a penny." Without another word he walked behind the counter and counted out thirty-five dollars, saying that he was not a Christian, but he believed in helping a man in time of need. I thanked him for his kindness, saying I would return the money as soon as I could, to which he replied that he hoped I would not inconvenience myself to ever return the money, and if I did not receive money, when that was gone to come back and get some more. This money being Chilean coin, was worth only forty cents on the dollar. When it was gone I went back and he gave me thirty-five dollars again.

During our stay on this island, all the missionary work I was able to do was in private talks and distributing tracts. While making a tour of the little island one day, in company with a young Englishman from New Zealand, whom I had just met a few days previous, we had driven about four miles when we came to the home of an old Englishman by the name of Oliver, with whom my young friend had formed an acquaintance. He desired that I should stop and see the old gentleman. We did so and as we entered the house I handed the old man six pamphlets. He seemed very much surprised, and looked at me with a look of astonishment, whereupon he told me he had been praying for three months that God would heal him of a very great affliction and send a servant there with the gospel. He told us of a heavenly messenger who touched him and his affliction was healed, and also related a very beautiful vision, which he said the Lord had given him, in which he saw my coming, and said he knew me as soon as I stepped in at the door. After a few minutes talk in explaining the gospel to him, he desired time to think over the matter of obedience, and I told him I would return in a few days and visit him. He said there was one part of the vision he was not permitted to tell me at that time, so upon my return to his place he told me the portion of the vision that he had withheld, saying that one of the pamphlets handed to him by the messenger in his visit he rejected, and he told me at this time that the pamphlet relating to the Book of Mormon was the literal fulfillment of his vision and he would have to reject my message, admitting, however, that he knew God had sent me there as his messenger.

FIRST MISSIONARY CHILD

Cicely Case (recently married to Arthur Church), daughter of Brother and Sister Hubert Case, was the first white missionary child born in the islands.

During our stay upon the island of Rarotonga we made many friends among the natives, but baptized no one.

One incident worthy of note was the limit to which this reverend gentleman's prejudice led him. Just a few days before our baby was born he had the natives throw us out of the house, but we soon found rooms in another home in the village with an English family by the name of Harding. Here our island baby was born, whom we named Cicely.

We found some staunch friends in this island, among them the governor and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Moss, he being also a member of the British Parliament in New Zealand, and having read our books he had formed a very favorable opinion of the Latter Day Saints. His wife visited my wife many times, and helped her while she was sick. We stayed eight months on this island, returning to the Society and Tuamotuan Islands where we visited about twenty-five islands during our stay in the South Seas. We passed through all the experiences incident to missionary work in that mission, but we felt we were among friends while traveling in this group, where we had Saints on so many islands. The natives of the Society Isles are people of mild temperament, very kind and courteous toward their visitors, and especially toward the missionaries. They loved our baby, the women fairly worshiping her, saying she was the church baby; in fact the only one that had been born to the missionaries in that mission at that time.

In about a year and a half after leaving the island of Rarotonga I sent the money back to Mr. Goodwin, which he had so kindly given me, which he acknowledged receipt of in a most excellent letter, saying he hoped we had not deprived ourselves to return the money for he gave it, and gave it freely.

There was a large gathering of the natives at the island of Manihi, where Brother William Newton spent most of his missionary experience in the Society group. From this conference Brother and Sister Devore left us, returning to America after six years sojourn in the islands. They were surely pioneers, restoring confidence, building up the Sunday school work and the branches throughout that mission. After their departure we were left with all the responsibility of the mission until the coming of Brother and Sister Burton, about a year later. Brother Newton and Brother Gilbert had previously returned to America.

One who has not passed through the experience cannot realize what our sisters have experienced in that mission, some having suffered seasickness every minute they were on the water crossing the ocean and traveling from island to island, being deprived of palatable food as they were during those early days when no steamers visited the islands.

The natives are large in stature, very much resembling the American Indian with the exception of the brownish cast instead of the red, as seen in the Indian face.

The natives of all the Society group are religiously inclined and very teachable, all of them, old and young, being anxious to learn. This served as a great help to us in making our stay among them interesting to us as well as to them. We had many pleasant experiences with them, and many times the Spirit of the Lord was manifested, so missionary work has its sunshine as well as its clouds. We translated many songs and Sunday school lessons for them.

THE TRIP OF THE "HITINUI"

The Hitinui was a small boat, about ten tons burden, upon which we spent nine days in a drenching rainstorm, beating against adverse winds which lashed the waves in fury over our little, heavily laden craft. The cabin was filled with dried coconut which sent up such a stench that no one could sleep inside, and during this time, the passengers slept very little, being drenched with rain and the waves of the sea, and being compelled to hold on to the ropes to keep from being washed overboard. My wife being seasick and weakened by the trip was unable to be out of bed for about two weeks after our landing.

RETURN TO AMERICA

After an earnest prayer by one of the native men on the wharf in the city of Papeete and singing, in the native tongue, "God be with you till we meet again," we bade the natives good-by as they stood crying like children. We took passage on the Galilee, bound for San Francisco. After twenty-four hours sail with fair wind we encountered what the sailors call a "white squall" which struck our ship almost without warning, carrying away the foremast and disabling our ship so it took us three days turning back on our course, to make the Papeete Harbor again. After spending ten days for repairs we again set sail, landing in San Francisco after a twenty-five day trip, being driven to the westward by adverse winds until we sighted the Hawaiian Islands. Turning eastward we made San Francisco three days after the blowing up of the Maine.

A report of the Christmas exercises of the branches of Kaukura, Arutua, Apataki, Takapoto, and Manihi, says that besides the distributing of the presents there were thirteen speeches, a song by fifty people, and closing prayer. People in the islands evidently don't go to sleep during one sermon.

Of the origin of the name Tahiti, and something of its history Joseph Burton wrote: "Before the white people visited the island, in 1767, it was known as Niuhihi, which signifies the northeast wind; but when the white people asked the natives the name they understood them to say Tahiti, which means transplanted. . . . Papeete is two words, pape is water, ete is basket, and therefore Papeete is a basket of water, both e's are sounded as a in day, but short."

ELDER VAIAREA

Elder Vaiarea was baptized in the days of the first missionaries sent to these possessions, and was a diligent worker in his early days. He tells with earnestness of the days when Benjamin Grouard, Addison Pratt, and Elder Rogers first labored among them.

SISTER PAPAITERAI

The oldest sister in the mission and was also baptized by the first missionaries to this field. She, from all accounts that we can get, is over 90 years of age, and is so weak that it is impossible for her to hold her head aright. The picture was taken nearly one year ago and still she clings to life.

FROM HERE AND THERE

Sister Joseph Elliott, of Fergus Falls, Minnesota, requests the prayers of the Saints in her behalf. She was injured in an auto accident and is in the Saint Luke Hospital at that place. Her faith is strong in God and his ordinances.

The district organizer of the Woman's Auxiliary in Southern California writes to again affirm that that organization will operate a cafeteria in connection with the reunion at Hermosa Beach, August 2 to 12, even though one statement was published that the cafeteria services would be discontinued.

Bishop Mark H. Siegfried of the Independence Stake expects to attend the reunions at Kirtland, Ohio, and Onset, Massachusetts. President Frederick M. Smith and Bishop B. R. McGuire are to attend the reunion of the Toronto District, in Canada. Bishop James Kier is to be at the Lamoni Reunion.

AN ISLAND TOMB

An instance occurring in the islands at the time of Brother Lake's death shows the typical kind-heartedness of the natives: Four brethren left their work and "burned coral rock and made lime with which they made a cement case for the casket, and a cement wall around the grave, and a cement top. It took them several days to do it, and it was all freely donated."

E D I T O R I A L

WHY DID R. C. EVANS LEAVE THE CHURCH?

The answer to the foregoing question, which some are asking, is found in the character of the man himself as he has chosen to develop it of late years, and in the unchangeable nature of the work of God. There existed no longer a basis of working harmony between the two.

He has furnished a most striking example of the truthfulness of the statement found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants to the effect that no man can assist in this work except he shall be humble, and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity. He now repudiates the revelations, but he himself has furnished a demonstration of the wisdom of this one in particular. There came a time when he could no longer assist, and now he is trying to tear down.

Not retaining the requisite Christian humility, a point naturally was reached where his own fortunes were of more importance to him than were those of the church. Not cherishing the requisite Christian love and charity, but having instead a spirit of ill will toward his brethren, particularly those of the Quorum of Twelve, naturally a time came when he could no longer continue in fellowship with them in the work of building up the kingdom and establishing the righteousness of God.

Again, no man who is false to a friend will be true to the church. During the life of the late lamented President Joseph Smith this man professed at all times to be his warmest and most intimate friend. Constantly he eulogized President Smith, his protestations at times approaching the point of adulation in their perfervid warmth.

In THE SAINTS' HERALD for April 6, 1910, he recounted his experiences with the Prophet. Of their first meeting he said: "One thing impressed me then (and it has often been made apparent since), that he was a man of just principles." Of their experiences in the General Conference he said: "There have his faith in God, his proverbial patience, his matchless courage, and unblemished honor been tried and tested. If ever the divine paradox of Sainthood in frail humanity was exemplified, it was in him. . . . In soliloquy I have said, 'There is the most perfect representative of the manger-cradled King.' . . . President Smith has been like a father to me, and in a thousand ways has endeared himself to me by ties that are stronger than death." He closed the article by saying: "Truth is no flattery! Come, let us . . . as priest and prophet of God . . . crown the living martyr with the well-merited title, Saint Joseph, the Just."

But now that the prophet has gone to his rest, so that this man sees in him no possibility of self-defense, he denounces him as a false prophet and a dishonest man, who concealed knowledge and destroyed evidence of his father's alleged crimes. He is held up by this man to public scorn. Calumny is heaped upon the man who was formerly "Saint Joseph, the Just."

Well might Evans now repeat the further words found in the above quoted article, "I have gazed upon him when merciless and cruel criticism was hurled against him from where it should never have been expected."

The moral decline which could permit such a betrayal of the dearest human friend would forbid further loyalty to the church. The spirit of treachery toward man will surely manifest itself toward God and his work.

In a vision described by his own pen in the HERALD for December 30, 1914, R. C. Evans saw, or claimed to see, Joseph the Martyr, and President Joseph Smith walking in the company of the Savior by the side of a beautiful fountain. These men, last seen by him in glory in the presence of Jesus, he now classes, the one as a fallen prophet and an "unspeakable iniquitous man," the other as a mere pretender. There is an astonishing lack of loyalty revealed here, even toward his own leadings, truly a remarkable crossing of wires both spiritual and intellectual.

The same principle is brought to light in his attitude toward President Frederick M. Smith. No longer ago than the late holiday season he wired the following greetings:

President Fred Smith,
Independence, Mo.

May God's first Christmas light illumine thy soul. May his matchless love radiate thy heart. May he impart to thee spiritual understanding as the chief custodian of his work, regulator of his will. May you stand triumphant as the most prominent representative of his church on earth.

The same R. C. EVANS.

Received 4.14 p. m., December 25, 1917.

Yet at that very time "the same R. C. Evans" in public and in private in the city of Toronto was denouncing President Frederick M. Smith, and doing all within his power to undermine his influence. The prayer sped upon the wires was for his illumination and triumph. The work behind the scenes was for his overthrow and humiliation. It is a shame to be obliged to record such a thing, yet these facts the Saints of Toronto very well understand. Well did James say, "A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways."

We have not been ignorant of the attitude of this man for some time past, but our well-meant efforts to hold his allegiance to the work and win him back to his former state, by giving him marked public opportunity to do services of great importance in the church, seem but to have hastened his decline. Those who are surprised by the final outcome of this man's work are surprised only because they have not been in a position to see beneath the surface.

There may be other reasons which will be more fully brought to light at a later date, but those herein assigned are sufficient. The Presidency and Twelve will take such steps as may be necessary to protect the church and individuals against attack. But it may as well be understood that they do not intend to be diverted from their constructive work. Nor will they enter into a lengthy war of words in the columns of the church papers.

Those who may desire to learn further concerning events connected with the affair in Toronto may obtain from either the Herald Publishing House, of Lamoni, Iowa, or the Ensign Office of Independence, Missouri, pamphlets prepared by Elders John W. Rushton and T. W. Williams. These will sell at a nominal figure of five cents per copy.

We trust that no one will be unduly disturbed by this unfortunate affair. You were forewarned that men of prominence would fall away. You were assured that a sifting time would come. Let your faith stand fast in the work of God. Be loyal to the church. Jesus has told us that he would build his church upon a rock and the gates of hell should not prevail against it. The church will stand though individuals may fall away.

It is with profound regret that we have found it necessary to write as we have done concerning a former friend and companion in arms, one whom thousands have admired and trusted. But every word that we have written is true and will stand at the judgment bar of God. Had this man quietly withdrawn from the church, it would not have been necessary to write these things. But he has chosen to attack the church from his pulpit and through the mails, as an apostate church, and claims to have withdrawn from it on the advice of an angel of light. The Bible tells us that the Devil has power to transform himself into the likeness of an angel of light. Paul admonishes us not to be led away from the gospel by any such angel or by any other creature.

While we may feel deeply moved to reflect that one who has occupied in positions of trust is now an enemy, our hearts are filled with joy to reflect that the fault is not in the church. The charge of apostasy falls flat. The church is exactly the same in doctrine, organization, gifts, and blessings, and in her attitude touching moral questions as she has been during all the ministry of this man, even since the day when he was known and loved as the eloquent "boy preacher" until now. The change is in him, not in the church. There exists no other reason why he should not now be defending her cause with all the oldtime joy and vigor.

BLUE PENCIL NOTES

Recently King Albert and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium flew across the English Channel to attend the silver anniversary of King George and Queen Mary. They went in sea planes and made the trip in about fifty minutes. This is a very good time for kings to sprout wings for they may need them at a moment's notice. The Czar of Russia seems not to have taken to the air quick enough.

The only lesson that the Kaiser seems to have learned from the war thus far is that he must be better prepared next time for "the inevitable ultimate war." The allied pedagogues are intent upon making him believe that there "'aint agoing to be any next time."

The man who sets himself in opposition to changes in church doctrine, organization, or revealed moral concepts is on safe ground. But the man who sets himself merely against changes in methods of work may be on very dangerous ground. He may not be able to see when good cometh, and ultimately will find himself far in the rear of a forward moving procession.

Doctor Pattison tells about a candid, old Scotchman who criticized his pastor's sermon on three points: First, because it was read, secondly, because he did not read it well; and thirdly, because it "was not worth readin' at a'."

A soldier in the English army wrote home a letter that is quoted in American Cookery:

They put me in barracks; they took away my clothes and put me in khaki; they took away my name and made me No. 575; they took me to church where I'd never been before, and they made me listen to a sermon for forty minutes. Then the parson said, "No. 575; Art thou weary, art thou languid?" And I got seven days in the guardhouse because I answered that I certainly was.

Christ with unerring wisdom put his finger on the spot where regeneration must begin, and said that man must be born again.

According to Scripture, even Satan at one time enjoyed the benefits of excellent environment, just government, and access to higher education, yet lost it all by reason of a disease which began in the heart, spread to the brain, and finally controlled every part of his being. We need not be surprised, then, if men touched by the same malady of selfish ambition fail and fall from grace. Spiritual heart disease may prove fatal at any time when an extra strain is placed upon the Christian character.

So strong is the desire for companionship that if one be born like Helen Keller, deaf, dumb, and blind, he will yet find some way to break through the triple wall and communicate with his fellows.

One does not get into society; he is born into society, and it is impossible for him to so live his life that it will not affect others.

We know of no "good society" that is not composed of good men and women. Society is everywhere, and everyone is in society. And the "best society" is composed of the best men and women. Let us move in the best society and be worthy of it, whether we wear silk or calico.

Saints should so conduct themselves that at all times their influence may make for peace and good, not for strife and jealousy. "Peace be to this house" was the benediction that the disciples left when departing from a home; but too often now individuals when departing leave some "bone of contention" to be gnawed on after the other refreshments are forgotten.

Though we may lay considerable stress on the duty of doing, and properly so, there is a still higher duty, and that is the duty of being. What a man does depends on what he is. We are told that Zion is the pure in heart. The Saints are to be identified primarily by what they are and only secondarily by what they do—though the world of course reverses that proposition, judging them "in action," as it were.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE DARKNESS OF SIN

Many times that passage in the Doctrine and Covenants comes to mind: "Light and truth forsaketh that evil one." Taken in its context, its meaning is that the glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth; light and truth, or intelligence, forsaketh that evil one.

Light has always been the idea or symbol set forth to represent God and divine knowledge. But, literally, it is true that evil not only loves the darkness, but is darkness? He who persists in wrongdoing finds himself not only departing from God, but losing his spiritual stature. Many men think that they would be willing to do this—to lose their knowledge of God—to depart from him and choose their own way. Or, they prefer to place him so far off, or, as they say, to exalt him, to such an extent that he no longer enters into their life or consideration. Nor is his love sufficient, to their minds, to cause him to consider our necessity.

A man who is honestly choosing to do what is right, with due reverence, does not deserve criticism, let alone condemnation. But he who follows after iniquity will find, literally, that the light, which was once within, has become darker and ever darker; and when that light becomes darkness, how great is that darkness.

Not only does sin mean spiritual darkness, but it means also, physical darkness and loss of strength. It is so in the use of narcotics, as has been so excellently set forth in recent articles in the HERALD. It lessens a man's efficiency; it lessens the strength of his children. It is so with the social evil; it contaminates the very sources of life itself. It is so with the laws of nature, with late hours; this is true especially in a hot, close place, as at the dance or theater, where it is followed persistently, night after night. It seems to bring its own consequence of physical curse.

But it is also true concerning intelligence. Elder John Rushton loves to quote: "Continued sinning impairs the judgment; the impaired judgment sins continually." We have it again in that "That which is intellectually true cannot be morally bad." We have it in other terms, there can be no lasting intelligence without morality. Insane asylums are the proof of this—that immorality means the destruction of intellectual fiber. But there are many with a less degree of darkness who have not yet been confined to an asylum; but their grasp of the problems of life has grown less and less.

The corollary of the above is, there can be no lasting morality without intelligence. Unless the intelligence is developed, unless we come to know the will of God, we cannot keep it. However, many prefer to do the will of God rather than to learn, still we cannot consistently do his will, unless we first learn to know it. The intention may be good but there is a current expression to the effect that the way to the lower region is paved with good intentions. Good intentions do not excuse loss of life, nor loss of some other faculty to our loved one. There is a moral obligation to be intelligent and an obligation to support the work of God.

Hand in hand we find these two, when we reach the higher plane—morality and intelligence—which is light and truth. Man in his approach thereto, finds his dual necessity to know the right and to do it. And in doing the right he finds his ability, his intelligence, his power to know the light increased; and in knowing and learning of truth, he finds it ever easier to do that which is right. But "light and truth forsaketh that evil one" and all who follow in his steps.

"THE PEOPLE MUST SING"

The North American, Philadelphia, June 30, contains two thirds of a page, headed, "The 'Sing's' the thing." Across the columns is a picture of the singing being led by Albert N. Hoxie. It sets forth briefly the musical community singing and their favorite songs, foremost of which is "Over there," then "Homeward bound," "Just like Washington crossed the Delaware," etc. It continues:

Down at League Island, under the direction of Albert N. Hoxie, who was so successful with his community singing last summer in Kensington, the boys are singing every night and four afternoons a week with a swing and patriotism hard to beat. To see them gathered together for one of their sings is inspiring. Director Hoxie himself just radiates self-confidence and melody and enthusiasm. And the boys respond in kind, voicing the melodies with one gigantic wave of sound that sounds like the finest grand opera chorus instead of just a bunch of Uncle Sam's jackies and marines.

Hushed in real lullaby style, they vocalize the "Missouri waltz" as a soothing, lilting cradle song. Five hundred strong, they hum and whistle and gently chant the lullaby as requested till it's hard to believe that the music comes from rough men and hardened fighters. Then, in a trice, they swing into the "pep" of "The last long mile," and put such spirit into the singing that you almost feel the dust under your feet yourself. Then comes an ambitious "part" song, "Sweet Adeline," which sounds wonderful, and which in turn is followed by the spirited "We're going over."

Time just flies during the "sings," and before they are half over the whole appearance and attitude of the boys has changed. They may have been tired and rather quiet when they wandered in. Perhaps the day was unusually hot, or the drill unusually hard or something. But before they are through every man there is wide awake, eyes sparkle, heads are held high, voices ring with fervor and spirit, and a feeling of good-fellowship and high spirits replaces the lassitude with which they entered.

... A ragged old man, a boy, and a young soldier, whistling "Yankee Doodle" in 1775, started another popular song and won another revolution. And to-day, with all the country joining in with the boys as they march and sing "Over there," it looks as if the biggest chorus yet is bound to make the biggest war ever fought end in victory for the singers.

Popular singing a year ago was still an experiment. A few people enthused at once; the rest waited. This year the thing is different. No longer is it optional with the public. If the boys are to do their best, it's not enough for the camps and trenches and ships to be singing their way to victory. Everybody must sing. In the face of setbacks, disaster and trials, the voice of America must be heard in Germany, still chanting its songs of hope and victory. Whatever comes, the people must sing. Gathered together in the public squares on summer nights, meeting indoors when winter rolls round again, the whole country must start Liberty singing in earnest.

This is the feeling of the big song leaders of the country. "Nothing," say some of them, "will so hearten the boys in the fight as the knowledge that their loved ones at home are thinking of them and singing. The more they sing at home, the surer will the boys be cheered. Even across the Atlantic the message of confidence will reach them, and not only will their morale be strengthened, but they simply cannot lose out, while their dear ones are singing at home."

The world is a comedy to those that think, a tragedy to those that feel.—Horace Walpole.

While there may not be a great many who are by nature instinctively honest, there is that in man, which falling under the guidance of the gospel spirit, through obedience, opens into life and activity and becomes the educator of man's conscience, and it is not until this occurs that conscience becomes the safe guide, as it is so frequently held up to be by sectarian philosophy. Under the influence and teaching of the gospel economy men may become honest by a refined second nature.—A sermon from the laity.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

BISHOP R. C. EVANS VERSUS MR. R. C. EVANS

During the late General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, held at Independence, Missouri, April 6, 1918, certain matters were presented to the joint council, comprising the leading church representatives, which necessitated an investigation of the affairs of the local church at Toronto, Canada. The investigation involved the work and ministry of Bishop R. C. Evans.

As a result, a committee comprising President of the Church Frederick M. Smith, Presiding Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire, and Apostle John W. Rush-ton was directed to proceed to Toronto to investigate and make such disposition of the case as the committee might elect, in harmony with the laws and usages of the church.

These men were proceeding with their investigation in a manly, Christianlike manner when Mr. Evans suddenly resigned his ministry and membership in the church, since which time he has made vicious and unjustifiable attacks on the church and her leading representatives. We herewith present some interesting sidelights to this unusual occurrence.

R. C. Evans has repeatedly affirmed the high character of Joseph Smith the Seer, and of his son Joseph, the late president of the church.

In books, pamphlets, and sermons, on the rostrum and in the pulpit, in public and private, Mr. Evans has fearlessly maintained that both of these men were true servants of Jesus Christ and that God blessed and honored their ministry. He has, with characteristic boldness, affirmed that they were men of pure character and exalted purpose. He has defended Joseph the Seer against the false calumny and malicious charge that he was either responsible for, or implicated in, the teaching or practice of spiritual wifery or polygamy. No man has ever spoken in higher terms of the late President Joseph Smith than he. His present attitude is therefore anomalous, to say the least.

No valid proof, neither testimony direct nor circumstantial, has ever been adduced which would implicate Joseph Smith the Seer, either in the introduction or practice of polygamy.

On this point let me present the statements made by Mr. Evans himself when he was a minister of the church. The following is taken from a pamphlet entitled, "Evans v. McKenzie," being a correspondence between Mr. Evans and Reverend McKenzie. This letter is dated February 23, 1917:

Those who knew and loved Joseph Smith, that is, his wife, his three sons, and many thousands of his people, urge that he was innocent of the charge. There is not a single word in all the sermons, lectures, editorials, books, or other literature published during the lifetime of Joseph Smith wherein he, by a single word, indorsed the doctrine of polygamy. Eight years after his death, long after Brigham Young had departed from the faith, organized a new church, different in faith, hope, and doctrine from the true Latter Day Saint Church, far away in Utah, Brigham Young presented a paper to his people which he claimed Joseph Smith had given on the subject of polygamy. When challenged to produce the original paper he said Emma Smith, Joseph's wife, had burned it. Now, sir, Mrs. Smith lived to be an old woman, loved and respected by all who knew her, and she claimed all through her life to the day of her death that she had never seen or heard of that paper; that she did not burn it; that her husband never had any wife but herself.

You choose to eject all the public sermons, all the books and other literature given to the world by Joseph Smith, turn down the testimony of his wife, his children, and thousands of his followers, and accept the word of Brigham Young and those who, with him, wallow in the cesspit of polygamy. Yes; you prefer to take the word of Brigham Young and his kind. Well, I have heard that "a man is known by the company he keeps." You are welcome to the inference. I prefer to take the word of Joseph Smith, his wife, his children, and thousands of good men and women. You may continue to take the word of Brigham Young.

On June 3, 1918, Mr. Evans stepped out of the church, since which time he has gone over to the side of Mr. McKenzie in his effort to assail the memory of Joseph Smith the Seer, as well as that of his son. "A man is known by the company he keeps."

In his sermon entitled, "Polygamy," and which is found in his book of sermons, Mr. Evans states:

Polygamy was never acknowledged nor taught nor practiced during the lifetime of Joseph Smith, by his consent, nor by the consent of the church.—Page 324.

If it was done secretly or practiced privately by some individual of the church, then the church should not be held responsible for that, any more than the church is held responsible to-day when some of its members commit murder or rob a bank.—Page 324.

Mr. Evans then proceeds to present the testimony of a number of witnesses to prove that Joseph Smith was not the author of polygamy in the church. He gives the statement of Brigham Young to the effect that he (Young) was responsible for the doctrine, as follows: "Joseph had never mentioned this; there had never been a thought of it in the church that I ever knew anything about at that time, but I had this for myself and kept it to myself. (Messenger, vol. 1, p. 29.)"—Page 326.

Mr. Evans shows from the testimony of a number of witnesses of the Utah church that polygamy was not introduced until after Brigham Young had apostatized and led his followers to Utah. He quotes George Q. Cannon who said:

Joseph and Hyrum Smith were slain in Carthage gaol [jail], and hundreds of persons were persecuted to death previous to the church having any knowledge of this doctrine. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 14, pp. 165, 166.)—Page 325.

He gives the statement of H. B. Clawson, a son-in-law of Brigham Young, to the effect that "polygamy, at that time (that is, at the time of Joseph Smith's death) was not known among those of the Mormon faith. The doctrine of polygamy was not promulgated until they got to Salt Lake; not, in fact, until some little time after they arrived there. (Salt Lake Herald, 1882.)—Page 325.

Mr. Evans presents in this sermon the statement of Brigham Young, given in an interview with Senator Trumbull in 1869, to the effect that,

It (polygamy) was adopted by us as a necessity after we came here.—Page 325.

Polygamy was not practiced by the Mormons prior to, and at the time of, the execution of Joseph Smith. (Ephraim Jensen, a leading Utah Mormon.)—Page 325.

Statement of Elder Whitaker:

Go back to the founding of our church, April 6, 1830. There was no polygamy practiced or taught in Mormon literature until five years after that band of persecuted Saints reached Utah. (New York Herald, January 8, 1900.)—Page 325.

Please remember that all these are witnesses used by Mr. Evans. In referring to Mrs. Emma Smith and her testimony Mr. Evans states:

Emma Smith lived to be an old woman. When she died she was loved and honored by thousands. Her house was surrounded, her gardens were dotted with peoples who came for miles to weep at her funeral. If every person for whom she had done good was to drop one tear upon her grave, it would be thoroughly immersed in the waters of sorrow. There is not a man or woman living on record outside of Utah Mormonism but what will say that she was a woman of the highest and noblest character.

On the other hand, you have the vile polygamist and criminal, Brigham Young. There is such a thing as gregariousness. In other words, "Birds of a feather flock together." If you want to stand by Brigham Young as against Emma Smith, you can do it. I would not. . . . There is not a sermon, book, or pamphlet printed in the lifetime of Joseph Smith, under his instructions, that can be produced to show that he ever taught, practiced, or sanctioned polygamy.—Pages 327, 328.

Suppose we say he [Joseph Smith] did teach, practice, or sanction polygamy privately, but the church did not know it. If he did, the church should not be to blame for that. Again, if Joseph Smith secretly taught or practiced polygamy, he did it contrary to all public revelations. He did it in direct conflict with the Book of Covenants, with the Book of Mormon, and with the Inspired Translation of the Bible.—Page 328.

Let it be said here, without the slightest fear of honorable controversy, that Mr. Evans has no additional evidence in his possession at this time but was available to him at the time this sermon was delivered.

Mr. Evans, in a lecture delivered at Broadway Hall, Toronto, Canada, on Sunday evening, June 9, 1918, stated:

Joseph Smith [the Seer] dominated the church until the people were done out of thousands of dollars. Manhood, virtue, and morality were sacrificed by him.

Young Joseph took his father's place. Unfortunately he told so much about his father that the church did not want it. A book was published with much of an unpleasant character in it.

Finally, Attorney Kelley got hold of the books and destroyed them. He told young Joseph, "The witnesses are all dead; all we have to do is to deny it." Everyone of them have been destroyed; plates, type, and copy were all destroyed. Finally, I found one of these old books in New York. It opened my eyes and strengthened my suspicions. Later, in the States, I met a person who had paid one hundred and fifty dollars for a volume of this book. It confirmed the villainy of Joseph Smith (the Seer). When the evidence is placed in my hands, should I continue to cover up, or be an honest man? Joseph's [the late President's] policy was to cover it up. Don't disturb it. [Stenographic report.]

At the Sunday morning service, delivered in the same hall, Mr. Evans stated:

God called Joseph Smith, but just how long after that call he began to sink into unspeakable iniquity I cannot tell. I do not know just when it occurred. I know before we get through we will find many things we have believed are untrue. The evidence came to me we have been mistaken in his conduct. I know one man who picked up an old book, out of publication, paid one hundred and fifty dollars for it and, thank God, that was not the only one. I have that book that wakened me up to a realization that we had been deceived on many things.

I found a book published when Ed Kelley was supreme lawyer of the church, with the confession that Joseph Smith made concerning the church with regard to spiritual wifery and polygamy. He destroyed the type, bought up all the books they could buy, but I bought one. These are some of the reasons why the angel commanded me [to withdraw from the Reorganized Church.—T. W. W.], for the leaders were leading the people astray. [Stenographic report.]

Mr. Evans, in justification of his present position, states that he has only recently come into possession of "a book" which was published by the Reorganized Church, and which contained damning admissions made by the late Joseph Smith, implicating his father; that E. L. Kelley had these books suppressed, and that the late Joseph Smith acquiesced, as his "policy was to cover it up. Don't disturb it." This mysterious book to which Mr. Evans has recourse is none other than the Life of Joseph the Prophet, by Edward W. Tullidge. He also makes reference to the first volume of THE SAINTS' HERALD, which contains a statement made by William Marks and which has been quoted by Mr. Evans in his book of sermons. (See page 326.) The statement from Marks shows that Joseph Smith opposed polygamy.

This Tullidge book was published in 1880. It received quite a circulation. Subsequently, when the general church elected a historian and began the publication of an accredited history of the church, there was no demand for this other book, therefore it went out of circulation. The book was not suppressed. Books in circulation were not called in nor destroyed. Mr. Evans has had access to this book ever since its publication. He has shown this same book to members of the church as much as seven years ago. This book may be found in the private libraries of many of the ministers and members, also in the general library of the church.

The position taken by the late Joseph Smith has been that he had no knowledge of his father's complicity in the teaching or practice of polygamy, nor had there been sufficient proof adduced to implicate his father, though he searched diligently in every possible quarter to discover same. He also said that, even if his father should be proven guilty, it was equally wrong in his father as in any other man.

There never has been any book published by the Reorganized Church, which fastens the guilt of either the introduction or practice of spiritual wifery or polygamy on Joseph Smith.

There is no book containing any statement from the late Joseph Smith upon which any such a charge can be predicated. E. L. Kelley is not guilty of the charge made against him.

We now present a matter which will prove interesting reading. We commend same to the prayerful consideration of Mr. Evans.

On December 13, 1914, the Toronto Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints held a memorial service in commemoration of the late Joseph Smith. Frank Gray, who was then branch correspondent, reported the affair. Same was published in THE SAINTS' HERALD, December 20, 1914, volume 61, number 52. Mr. Gray said:

A remarkable incident took place during this service which is worthy of note. The same hymns were sung as sung at the funeral services of the Prophet, and as the quartet was singing that song written by Joseph, "Lights on the other shore," Brother Evans was wrapped in vision. A number of brethren noticed he was in the Spirit, among whom was Brother Pement of Chicago, who passed a note directly afterwards, asking him what he saw. There were two Utah Mormon elders in the congregation, and during the latter part of the service Brother Evans made some magnificent points to show how the church stood in regard to the teaching of Joseph the Seer, and our Joseph, relative to the polygamy question, and under the Spirit he again buried Utahism deeper than ever, resulting in the following vision as he resumed his chair, which I requested him to write for me for the benefit of the Saints at large.

Before recounting this vision it is pertinent to remark the foregoing quotations are from the sermon of Bishop Evans, in which he outlines the position taken on this occasion. He also recounted a little incident in the life of Joseph Smith where one morning he spoke rather harshly to his wife, Emma, with the consequent result that he could not proceed with the translation of the Book of Mormon. He returned later and asked his wife's forgiveness. The matter had been so trivial that Emma had forgotten all about it. Mr. Evans remarked that a man who had such tender regard for his wife could never have been the author of polygamy.

In his speech, just before he saw this vision, referred to by Brother Gray, Mr. Evans exonerated Joseph the Seer, eulogized his son Joseph, and outlined the general position of the church. Now to the vision:

Elder Frank Gray: According to promise, I write for you the vision. Last Sunday afternoon, while the quartet was singing a song composed by Joseph, entitled, "Lights on the other shore," I was wrapped in glory. The church passed away and I found myself in a most gorgeous park or garden with majestic trees, pretty flowers, verdant slopes, and murmuring waters. While gazing with delight upon nature in all her wealth of beauty, I beheld six persons walking towards a magnificent fountain of water. I was given to know them, and with great joy in my soul I watched them as they approached the marble circle that surrounded the base of the fountain. The persons whom I recognized were Jesus, Joseph the Seer, Hyrum Smith, our Joseph, Alexander, and David. The Master was speaking, and the brethren were listening with great attention as they neared the fountain. Our Joseph recognized me; he waved his hand and smiled very sweetly.

Having arrived at the base of the fountain they stood there, when, all of a sudden the Master turned toward me, and walking four steps away from the brethren, he lifted his hand and looking at me, spoke my poor name, in a gentle but firm tone of voice saying, "Richard, you are justified in taking the position that the principle of polygamy is an abomination in my sight." I watched them for a moment as they stood by the fountain of water, when the vision closed, and I found myself bathed in tears, seated behind the pulpit, surrounded by Saints.

Perhaps I had better say to you that none of the six persons looked to be more than thirty years of age. Our Joseph and Alexander, whom I knew in life to be men weighing more than two hundred pounds, were not nearly so fleshy as when in the flesh; they appeared as young men, strong and beautiful in the full vigor of manhood, as did the others.

My whole being was charmed and filled with joy when our Joseph, looking at me, smiled and waved his hand. When I saw him last he was looking worn, weary, decrepit, and feeble, suffering, as he said, "R. C., please do not pray that I recover; I am so tried I want to go to rest;" and now to see him young, strong, and smiling, in the company of the Master whom he served so faithfully, strolling along mid flowers of perpetual bloom, gazing with pleasure on the sparkling waters gushing from the majestic fountain, enjoying the society of his father, uncle, and his two brothers, I was glad beyond expression. May the Lord give us each strength to wage a faithful warfare, so that when the struggle here is over, we, too, may be permitted to bask 'mid the sunbeams of celestial splendors in the presence of Jesus and those who have kept the faith, is my prayer.—R. C.

At the time this vision was seen by Mr. Evans, he had just completed a brilliant defense of Joseph the Seer and of his son, whose memorial service was even then being observed; he had outlined the position of the branch on polygamy and denounced the doctrine. As confirmation to him that his position was correct God gave him this vision.

From the above we gather: These men were with Jesus. They were enjoying his presence; they had "kept the faith"; they had "waged a faithful warfare"; they were permitted to "bask 'mid the sunbeams of celestial splendors in the presence of Jesus and those who have kept the faith."

What say you, dear reader, as to Mr. Evans's present attitude? Did Mr. Evans really see this vision? If he did, then his position to-day is all wrong. If he did not see the vision, then his testimony is unreliable in every particular. This man is condemned out of his own mouth.

Mr. Evans has slandered the memory of the best friend he ever had in the world—the late Joseph Smith. He has accused him of dishonesty, of knowingly covering up crime. He has sought to steep him in the cesspool of polygamy.

In his recent book entitled, Songs, Poems, Notes, and Correspondence of Bishop R. C. Evans, Mr. Evans recounts the tender solicitude of Joseph, when Mr. Evans was seasick en route to Europe, to the effect that on "the first night out, Brother Joseph took my shoes off and helped me into bed, and in every way possible ministered to my needs. He was kindness personified during the entire trip." (Page 157.)

Again, "President Smith has been like a father to me, and in a thousand ways has endeared himself to me by ties that are stronger than death." (Page 158.)

And what is Mr. Evans's return for all this kindness? When his friend is dead and can make no defense, he cruelly assails his honor and accuses him of covering up crime! For an exemplification of ingratitude, I refer you to Mr. Evans.

Mr. Evans was in his right mind when he offered the following tribute to the memory of Joseph Smith:

He came to the church when it was under the ban of suspicion. He has championed the cause amid the gloom of misunderstanding; he has stood in the front of the ranks 'mid the roar of battle. He has championed the cause for fifty years; he has been in all those years an example worthy of imitation, kind and gentle, just and generous, good and honorable. Even those who eloquently misrepresented the cause he loved dearer than his life have frequently spoken in the highest and most glowing terms of the man, forgetting that he was really the product of the latter-day glory, the output of the angel's message; but if his character was unapproachable by way of conduct, it was because that character was formed under the principles of the latter-day work.—Page 160.

If ever the divine paradox of saintly power in frail humanity was exemplified, it has been in him—gentle, yet forceful; loving, yet determined; bold, yet cautious; mindful of many interests, yet responsible alone to God. Like a guardian angel he has stood 'mid stormy scenes in defense of the weak, the friendless, and deserted. He has ever been the defender of the downtrodden and oppressed. He has thrown himself in the thickest of the battle to protect those who have been misunderstood in the hour of their adversity.

I have gazed upon him when merciless and cruel criticism was hurled against him from where it should never have been expected. There he stood, dignity and pity shining from his tear-stained face, till instinctively my mind reverted to the Master of men, and in soliloquy I have said, There is the most perfect representative of the manger-cradled King.—Page 155.

Reader, do you think a man possessing a character as described above would be guilty of deceiving the membership of an entire church and acquiesce in the suppression of facts which might undeceive these people? The above testimonial was written after Mr. Smith had gone to his account. His character did not change. Who has changed? Let Mr. Evans answer. I can pity a man who, in the burst of anger, misrepresents the living. There is no excuse for the man who so far forgets the relation of "friend" and "companion" as to unjustly assail the dead.

Mr. Evans charges that Frederick M. Smith is an "autocrat," a "base hypocrite and debauchee." Mr. Evans was in attendance at the General Conference of the church which convened at Lamoni, Iowa, Tuesday, April 6, 1915. It was at this conference that Frederick M. Smith was chosen as President of the church. Several of the leading men of the church gave expression to their appreciation of, and confidence in the man. Mr. Evans was among the number. He said:

Mr. Chairman, Brothers and Sisters: It is with profound pleasure, and I deem it a duty to speak upon this occasion. As many of you know by the revelations of the Almighty, I was closely associated with Frederick Madison Smith as counselor in the First Presidency under his father. For years we served together in this capacity. I have sat with him not only as presiding officer at the conferences, but in the high councils of the church when cases of grave importance were being heard by us. I have been with him in almost every condition of life, those of pleasure and of hard work, and I have found him to be a careful, fair, honorable, Christian brother—modest and yet firm; sympathetic and yet just; tender and yet true to his convictions of that which is right. When in examination of cases before the High Council I have known him to study deeply in profound silence for a long time before he would pass one word of judgment.

I feel that God has called him to this high and honorable position, and knowing the man as I do, both in boyhood and manhood before he held the priesthood and since, I feel that the church is and should be happy in the selection God has made as his servant and our President in the person of Frederick Madison Smith.—Conference Minutes, 1915, p. 2,054.

To show that this expression of confidence and good will was continued, I herewith present copy of a Christmas telegram which Mr. Evans sent to Mr. Smith on December 24, 1917. This telegram was delivered to Mr. Smith's office in Independence, Missouri, by the telegraph company and forwarded by mail to El Paso, Texas, where Mr. Smith was then.

HOLIDAY GREETING

Western Union Telegram

Toronto, Ontario, 24.

Pres. Fred Smith,

Independence, Mo.

May God's first Christmas light illumine thy soul. May his matchless love radiate thy heart. May he impart to thee spiritual understanding as the chief custodian of his work, regulator of his will. May you stand triumphant as the most prominent representative of his church on earth.

Received 4.14 p. m., December 25, 1917.

What becomes of Mr. Evans's charges of autocracy, of hypocrisy, and debauchery? Mr. Evans made these statements voluntarily. Now, when his official acts are under investigation and it is clearly evident that he must answer therefor to the responsible officials and judicial bodies of the church, he, rather than meet this investigation, resigns his position as bishop of the Toronto District, relinquishes his membership in the church; and institutes a campaign of villification and abuse.

Mr. Evans's commendation of Frederick M. Smith as late as Christmas Day, 1917, precludes any side-stepping. His present position is inconsistent and defenseless, for there is a notable absence of any definite and concrete instance, and the want of a single specific fact in his so-called "charges."

His eulogy of Joseph Smith the Seer, was given under the influence of the Spirit of God. In confirmation thereof he beholds a vision which portrays Joseph Smith, his brother Hyrum, and his three sons, Joseph, Alexander, and David associated with Jesus Christ, and Jesus, speaking to Mr. Evans, confirms the position which he had taken concerning the life and work of this man.

Mr. Evans's puerile attacks on his own ministry and the lives and works of the servants of God will be as impotent as the attacks of his opponents, during the passing years of his successful career in the church. His testimonials in commemoration of the virtue and manliness of the late President Joseph Smith preclude renunciation now. His personal assaults on President Frederick M. Smith but show the extremity to which a man will go who does not wish to face the consequences of his own official record.

We cannot contemplate the condition of Mr. Evans without experiencing inexpressible sadness and pity; pity because he has the potential qualities for doing great good among men; sadness, in that he has thrown discretion to the wind and, in desperation, seeks to overthrow the work of a lifetime. Thank God that the work which he upheld in righteousness will stand despite his present attitude! May God be merciful to him!

As a fitting tribute to the character of President Frederick M. Smith, we append the address of Representative W. P. Borland.

With love for all and malice toward none,

Yours only for the truth,

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

TORONTO, ONTARIO, CANADA, July 10, 1918.

STATEMENT OF CONGRESSMAN W. P. BORLAND

Mr. President, My Friends, Ladies and Gentlemen: I esteem it a great honor to be called upon to occupy even a few minutes of the time of this important deliberation as your guest to-day. My own heart is with our soldier boys in the field; my work at home, and in Washington, has but one aim to-day and that is the perpetuation of our American institutions and the victory to our boys who have gone so gallantly forth to offer their lives upon the altar of our country.

I know that in whatever assemblage we find ourselves, particularly in a religious assembly, the subject of "Our Boys" is very close to our hearts; it is close to my heart. I am very glad to see this numerous assemblage here in the capital city of our county, in the capital city of our congressional district. I have had the pleasure on frequent occasions of working with your distinguished president, Reverend Frederick M. Smith. I regard it, my friends, as a privilege to say to you that no man stands higher in my estimation for a clear cut, transparent, manly character, a man of influence in the community, and in the Nation, than Frederick M. Smith, of Jackson County, Missouri.

Whatever I have had the honor to receive in the way of communication from him, has had my unbounded, complete, and perfect confidence in its reliability and in the fact that it represented the highest type of citizenship and moral attainment in the community. I am glad to find that he represents an element which is aggressive for the good of mankind; he is always on the moral side, on the betterment side of every proposition. He has always felt free to consult with me upon any question of public importance; I have found that his sympathies are broad; they are nation-wide and world-wide; they extend to our colonial and insular possessions; they have always touched with a healing hand in every enterprise in which they have engaged. I want to renew to him and to you my feelings of the deepest sympathy and cooperation, and tender to you upon every occasion my own services along lines which I know, in advance, will be for the betterment of humanity.

I want to say to you that I shall in the future, as in the past, take it as a matter of honor and privilege to work in the same harness, side by side, with such distinguished leaders as preside over you to-day, for the great betterment not only of my own district, for we are not narrow in our sympathies, but for the better interests of the United States of America, and for the colonial possessions which have come under our charge, and for the world which looks to us, to-day, for the leadership of humanity. I thank you.

The ideal of God regarding man should be our first duty, and to express that ideal was the work of the Master; God was humanized in him, that man might be "divinized." You cannot sin without influencing others in your sin; you cannot do good without influencing others in your goodness.—John W. Rushton.

Motherhood beams with a very different light. The bud has blossomed and borne fruit. The tree of knowledge of good and evil, and also the tree of life, have been tasted. The intuitions are larger, the quality of innocence loftier. These two sides of womanhood here blended have evoked love and adoration in the world second only to that which Jesus himself has called forth. Religious sentiment here idealizes woman as she is conceived to have come from the hand of God, and many a Protestant envies his Catholic friends their attitude toward the Blessed Virgin. No one has ever asked whether she knew Egyptian, Chaldean, or even could read or write her own tongue. She cannot be conceived as bemoaning fancied limitations of her sex or wishing to make sex a sect, but she triumphs and glories in her womanhood and has been adored all these ages as its supreme type, more generic, nearer to the race, richer in love, unselfish devotion, and intuition than man, so that the Madonna idea which teaches that it is more holy to be woman than to have achieved eminence in any kind of superiority, should teach our own sex a corresponding lesson. The worship of Mary has been of potent influence in safeguarding womanhood from the growing danger that it will decline from its orbit, lose just confidence and due pride in its sex as such, till in lapsing toward mannish ways its original divinity becomes clouded.—G. Stanley Hall, Jesus, the Christ, in the Light of Psychology.

THE LAW AND THE COVENANTS—Part 3

BY COLUMBUS SCOTT

PAUL AND THE MINISTRATION OF DEATH

In chapter four, of the booklet we are having under review, the author devotes himself to an effort to save the ten commandments, and therefore the sabbath of the old covenant, from abrogation by the new, or gospel covenant.

The writer quotes 2 Corinthians 3: 6-11, and then presents an assumption from another writer to the effect that Paul in his chapter refers to what they call the "ceremonial law," not including the ten commandments. And on this assumption bases the entire fourth chapter of the booklet, asserting that "from this statement some have supposed that the apostle was here contrasting the ten commandment law with the gospel. This view is an error" (page 44).

And on page 46 he further argues:

1. The apostle is contrasting in this chapter the ministration or ministry of the two covenants, and not the ten commandment law, with the gospel.

2. Wherever the Bible speaks of the moral law in connection with the "tables of stone," the noun stone is used in the singular number, and not in the plural.

Notice how it is thus used and translated in Exodus 34: 12, 31: 18; Deuteronomy 4: 13, 5: 22, 10: 1; 1 Kings 8: 9; 2 Corinthians 3: 3. It is always translated "tables" of stone.

3. The ceremonial law was written upon plastered stones (plural), and the noun is used in the plural, instead of the singular, whenever the inspired word refers to this fact. This is conclusive evidence that the apostle's reference to the law "written and engraven in stones," with its ministry of death (2 Corinthians 3: 7), is the old covenant, including the ceremonial law.

We are then cited to Deuteronomy 27: 2-8. It is true that the apostle is drawing a contrast between the covenant made with Israel at Sinai and the new covenant, the gospel. We have already found that that covenant included the "ten commandments." (See again Exodus 20: 1-18; 23: 12, 13; 21: 12; 24: 4-7.) "Moses wrote all the words of the Lord." "And he took the book of the covenant." Furthermore, by reference to Exodus 34: 4-10, 27, 28, Moses wrote not only in the book of the covenant, the ten commandments, but also he wrote them on the "two tables of stone," and God there states:

"For after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel." (Verse 27.) "And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments." (Verse 28.)

If the ten commandments were never written in the book of the covenant, only on "tables of stone," how came they to be in Exodus 20? Who afterwards wrote them into the book thus adding to the covenant? God's covenant!

After "Moses wrote all the words of the Lord in the book" of the covenant, the altar, the book of the law, and the people of Israel, were consecrated with "the blood of the covenant." (See Exodus 24: 8; Hebrews 9: 18-21.)

It is further asserted that "the ceremonial law was written upon plastered stones," citing us to the transcribing of the law on the stones of an altar at Mount Ebal after the death of Moses, in accordance to a command of Moses before his death (Deuteronomy 27: 2-8), and related in Joshua 8: 30-35.

This is done to show that Paul's contrast between the old and new covenants, did not include the ten commands in this contrast, and thus save the seventh-day Sabbath from being "done away," "abolished" (2 Corinthians 3: 3-13). Now by referring back to the command of Moses, we read:

And thou shalt write upon them all the words of this law, when thou art passed over, that thou mayest go in unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, a land that floweth with milk and honey; as the Lord God of thy fathers hath promised thee.—Deuteronomy 27: 3.

Returning now to the fulfillment of the command of Moses, we read that Joshua wrote "a copy of the law of Moses." (Joshua 8: 32.) This copy was written in "plaster," which they had put on to the stones, and not in stones. It was not written there with "ink" at that time.

Again, what was "the ministrations of death," as referred to by Paul, as contrasted with "the ministration of the Spirit," or "law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus"? (Romans 8: 2.) We shall answer by citations from the old covenant, thus: Exodus 21: 12, 13, 15-18; 22: 20; Leviticus 20: 6-12; Deuteronomy 13: 6-10. In each of the cases cited here, the sin was a transgression of one of the ten commandments, except one. Death was the penalty. Israel of old was not to suffer a witch to live among them. These all show that the penalty, by the provisions of the law, covenant, was visited by the hands of the judicial and executive officers. There was no actual pardon under the law.

Christ died to redeem those who lived under the law given at Sinai. Proof: "But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Galatians 4: 4, 5.

For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of things, can never with those sacrifices, which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect. . . . For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins.—Hebrews 10: 1, 4.

The law was the school-teacher to Israel to bring them to Christ. Christ having come, bringing "in everlasting righteousness." (Daniel 9: 24.) "The ministration of death written and engraven in stones," was no longer necessary for "righteousness," was fulfilled, and the word "fulfilled," in Matthew 5: 17, has the identical meaning in relation to the law, that it has to the prophets. How often does the fulfillment of the prophets have to be repeated to fulfill them; or to fill them full? How often will Daniel 2: 44 have to be repeated to be fulfilled? Or the atonement made, repeated. Or the prophecies relating to Christ's second advent?

When the perfect law of the Lord that converts the soul was delivered to Israel, and the world, so far as the righteousness of God is concerned, what place in the gospel did the law of Moses fill in the church as a religious standard? What did the ten commandments, called God's covenant with Israel (Deuteronomy 5: 2, 3; 4: 13) and with them only, do religiously for Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, or Melchisedec? They were given to Israel by the voice of the infinite God direct, that Israel might fear Jehovah forever. Their place in the code was in the nature of statutes, and statutes they were. (Leviticus 20: 6-10; 19: 30-37; 1 Timothy 1: 5-11.)

Only in the law of the land can they be of use where penalties are visited.

Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator.—Galatians 3: 19.

THE GLORY THAT EXCELLETH

When Joshua set up the stones whereon he copied the words written in the book of the law written by Moses, Moses was not present, neither did the glory of his face shine so that he put a veil on, so that Israel might look on him. But this Paul refers to in order to identify the great, glorious time, or the occasion he refers to. In order to make this plain he mentions the "tables of stone," in the introductory (2 Corinthians 3: 3). Then he refers to the "tables of stone," in immediate connection with the glory of the countenance of Moses calling them "stones," thus further identifying the time and the occasion he refers to, as being the time when Moses was commanded of God to write "the words of the covenant, the ten commandments," on "the tables," even "on stones," two stones. (See Exodus 34: 1, 4, 27-35.)

And it came to pass, when Moses came down from Mount Sinai with the two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount, that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with him. And when Aaron and all the children of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone; and they were afraid to come nigh him. And Moses called unto them; and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned unto him: and Moses talked with them. And afterward all the children of Israel came nigh: and he gave them in commandment all that the Lord had spoken with him in Mount Sinai. And till Moses had done speaking with them, he put a veil on his face. But when Moses went in before the Lord to speak with him, he took the veil off, until he came out. And he came out, and spake unto the children of Israel that which he was commanded.—Exodus 34: 29-34.

In the chapter following, it is recorded that Moses gathered all the congregation of the children of Israel together, and said unto them, These are the words which the Lord hath commanded, that ye should do them. Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a sabbath of rest to the Lord: whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death. Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the sabbath day.—Exodus 35: 1-3.

This described how the seventh-day sabbath of the law, or old covenant was to be kept.

This is sufficient under this head to show incontrovertibly just what the apostle Paul referred to, when contrasting the old covenant made with Israel, with the new covenant, the gospel, just what he referred to as the "ministration of death, written and engraven in stones," and which, compared with the gospel of the Son of God, had no glory, and that covenant was "abolished," at the death of Christ, abrogated, nailed to the cross. (2 Corinthians 3: 7-15.)

Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross.—Colossians 2: 14.

What was "the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones," as related to the law given to Israel, without the ten commandments?

To break one of these statutes was death, to break or transgress all of the ten commandments was no more. (See James 2: 10, 11.) This is "the letter that killeth," "the ministration of death," the gospel being "the ministration of the Spirit," "the New Testament," of which Paul and the other ministers of Christ are made ministers.

"For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious." (2 Corinthians 3: 11.) The old covenant, the ministration of death, the letter that killeth, is abolished. (2 Corinthians 3: 13.)

NEW COVENANT NOT MADE WITH ISRAEL AND JUDAH AT SAVIOR'S FIRST ADVENT

The prophetic promise made in Jeremiah 31, that God promised to Israel and Judah, was offered by Christ to the house of Judah, but they refused it then and have to this day.

The house of Israel, having been carried to Assyria into captivity seven hundred and twenty-one years prior to Christ's advent, and never having been restored, has never as yet had this wonderful promise fulfilled to them. As to the house of Judah, notice the Savior's statements, with Paul's. (Matthew 23: 33-37; Luke 21: 20-24; Romans 11: 25-27.) The house of Israel, because of their rejection of the law and of the gospel, (the ten tribes forsook the law) became "the outcasts of Israel," (Deuteronomy 28: 36, 37; 2 Kings 17: 7, 8, 15, 18) so that at the fulfillment of the Gentile times, the words of Jeremiah will be fulfilled, and they will be brought into the new covenant, and it will be "not according to the covenant made" with their fathers at Mount Sinai.

But let us not despair because the time of Israel's darkness has been so long. The time is near at hand, when the divine favor will be turned to the "ancient covenant people," and God's light, the gospel, will shine unto them as promised, for God has already "set his hand" to recover them, already has God's "ensign," the everlasting gospel, been raised to the nations, that by which God rallies the people to his cause; the angel came to the young man away back in 1823 to 1830 A. D. (See Zechariah 2: 1; Isaiah 11: 12; Revelation 14: 6, 7; Ezekiel 20: 33-38.)

We wish especially to note in this connection that the prophet Zechariah is not referring to the restoration of Jerusalem under Ezra, for at that time Jerusalem's walls were rebuilt, "in troublous times," (see Daniel 9: 25; Nephi 4) whereas Zechariah says Jerusalem's walls were not to be builded at the time here referred to. In our day and civilization, this day of gunpowder and mortars, stone walls are no protection to cities as of olden times.

And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins.—Romans 11: 26, 27.

And in this great divine purpose now near at hand, as in all others, "the gifts and calling of God are without repentance." Such are the conclusions of the inspired apostle Paul (Romans 11). In Paul's day Israel was an enemy to the gospel for the Gentile's sake, but yet "beloved for the fathers' sake."

By this covenant the two houses, Israel and Judah, will be again reunited into one people, no more to be divided. (See Ezekiel 37: 21-26; 16: 61-63.) But Ezekiel tells us plainly that this union or reuniting will not be brought about by the covenant made with them at Sinai. (See verse 61.) "But not by thy covenant."

The great apostle Paul doubtless had the work here referred to revealed to him, as declared thus:

In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace; wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him: in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will.—Ephesians 1: 7-11.

THE FULLNESS OF TIMES

"The dispensation of the fullness of times" in which God will gather together in one, all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and on earth, is surely the closing dispensation. It is God's will, his "purpose," and his "good pleasure" that all in Christ be gathered in one, united in "one," on earth, as well as in heaven.

Dispensation: the act of handing out. God began "the act" of handing out the great work of "the last days," (Isaiah 2: 1-4; Micah 4: 1-3; Joel 2: 28-30; Malachi 3: 1-6; Timothy 3: 1-7; 2 Peter 3: 3-7; Revelation 14: 6, 7) preparatory to the restoration of the two houses of Judah and Israel, when the gospel was restored by the hand of the angel to the young man, 1823-1830. (Amos 3: 7; Acts 3: 20, 21; Revelation 14: 6, 7.) Let it be noted that all passages here cited are associated closely with the second advent of Christ, and by the gospel Israel shall be saved.

Let us pause here to fortify this position. In connection with the restoration of "this gospel of the kingdom," the revelator saw other angelic messengers, following in succession, leading up to the harvest of the earth, which Jesus says shall be "in the end of this world" (Matthew 13: 24-30; 36-41; 2 Peter 3: 5-7).

Babylon's downfall, the visitation of wrath on those who enter into obligation with her, receive her mark in their forehead, as also the time of harvest, when to reap, are indicated by the angels seen.

It has been assumed by the Seventh-day Adventists that the angelic messengers seen in John's vision (Revelation 14: 6-20) are not real messengers, not of the angels sent by the Almighty from heaven with their distinct messages, but are successive classes of human ministers providentially raised up to fulfill these respective prophetic messages seen by the revelator.

If this interpretation be correct, what class of ministers will be so highly honored as to inform mankind when the downfall of mystery Babylon shall occur, and when completed? (See Revelation 14: 8; 18: 2-8.)

Without further revelation from God in the last days, what class of ministers will know when the events there seen begin? And what is the "mark of the beast?" What class of ministers will assume to be the angel of verses 9 and 10?

Our friends assume to tell us that "the mark of the beast" is the observance of the first day of the week, as a day of religious worship. Where do they learn this? The revelations of God so far as we have read are as silent as the tomb, so far as this assumption is concerned. What class of ministers are to inform the "one like the Son of man," golden crowned, when to "thrust in thy sickle and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe"? A high prerogative this!

No uncertainty is to attend the execution of the work to be done when these respective messages are revealed, for "the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God." This interpretation of prophecy is not tenable, as we hereby see.

The Revelator heard the voice of God in connection with these messages, and their commission—authority, as example: "And I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth." (Revelation 16: 1.) This leaves us to conclude that when the gospel of the kingdom is to be declared in "the last days," as a witness, even the gospel as Jesus and the apostles preached it (Romans 10: 13-15), as John foresaw, and as Jesus foretold (as the sign of Christ's second coming), and at the end of the world, this gospel of the kingdom, as our Savior calls it, was to be restored after the long night of spiritual darkness and apostasy. After men had "transgressed the laws"—commandments of God—"changed the ordinance," and "broken the everlasting covenant," (see Isaiah 24: 5) and had forfeited the authority by which God authorized men by direct revelation, God would, in fact now has, renewed the covenant, by restoring that authority, through divine revelations, that we may be enabled to understand, obey, and be saved, and be able to understand the significance of the other signs to be shown forth, which indicate the near approach of our Savior's second advent, and the approaching end of the world, and thus be not deceived.

For Jesus says, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached as a witness," in all the world, "then shall the end come." (Matthew 24: 3-14.) When shall this work begin? Who shall do it? Where shall the work begin? No one can answer these three questions until God tells us. Who in these last days, is preaching "this gospel of the kingdom" as the sign of Christ's second coming and the end of the world? Answer who will, but do not go to guessing about it. God has revealed himself and his purposes to men in the past by his own voice, as at Mount Sinai (Exodus 20), by the voice of angels, as to Abraham, Isaac, Moses (Exodus 3), and to others, clear down to John the Revelator. He also promises John that he shall prophesy again before many nations, peoples, and tongues. (Revelation 10: 11.)

Since the gospel, like God, never changes, being based on eternal principles (Hebrews 5: 12; 6: 1-3), and since, therefore, the gospel is "the power of God," unto salvation, and since therein is "the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith," it is a continuous, a never-failing fountain of revelation to all who obey it. Need it be thought wonderful that the infinite, loving Father of all would stretch forth his hand and restore the authority to chosen men, by which "this gospel of the kingdom" may be declared in the last days; that we, who live now, may hear and obey, and rejoice in its light, power, and salvation, as did those in the days of Adam, Noah, Abraham, and Moses (1 Timothy 1: 9, 10; Galatians 3: 8; Hebrews 4: 2; 1 Corinthians 10: 1-4), as did those who lived then. The gospel consists of all four essential component parts (1 Thessalonians 1: 5), viz: Word, power or authority, Holy Ghost, much assurance. Revelation attended the proclamation of it, from the days of Adam to the middle of the third century of the Christian era; then its light went out, and "the Dark Ages" resulted. This, the history of those days, both profane and religious, attest. No one who has read the history of the Dark Ages will be able to controvert this. It is a strange idea that believers in Holy Writ will teach that the infinite, unchangeable, impartial God would speak to his children from Adam to John the Revelator, a period of some four thousand years, then suddenly change and speak to his children no more so long as the world stands! No such purpose is revealed to us.

All human experience teaches that man forfeits God's revealments and direction by disobedience and apostasy. What would we call the man who favors in every manly way his four older children, but never heeds the needs and cries of the two youngest? They never hear his voice. He turns his back to their cries! Has not God been represented to us thus? No revelation or direction as to his work of salvation to man since the revelation given on the Isle of Patmos! Strange!

"Ah," you say in reply, "did you never read the closing chapter of John's revelation?"

Ye shall not add to these things, or take anything from the words of this book; curses shall be added; name shall be blotted from the book of life; and so on. (Verses 18 and 19.) God there closed out, forever, further revelation to man except what the canon of Scripture contains?

No, such an idea is not conveyed by the language.

"What?" you exclaim.

I read that he prohibits "any man" from taking from or adding to this word when he does speak. Enjoins on anyone not to "add to" or take any words from "the book of this prophecy," (John's revelation) under penalty of being lost, and being cursed!

God commanded John: "What thou seest write in a book." John wrote the book of Revelation, and at its conclusion announces plagues on "any man" who would be so unscrupulous as to "add" to it. God did not say he would speak to man no more forever! There is no such idea as this there. As early as the days of Moses, Jehovah uttered a like prohibition to Israel (see Deuteronomy 4: 2), not to add to the ten commandments there declared to be the "covenant," which God made with Israel, at Horeb. And in Deuteronomy 12: 32, is a like injunction not to "add" to what he says, but in none of these texts does he intimate that he will speak no more to his children. A fair inference from these texts is that he would continue to bless his children with revelation and the divine direction from time to time, as he sees our needs.

He always has given direction to man when his work for man's good and eternal salvation is being accomplished. And as an unchangeable Father of infinite love, he will continue to thus deal with his children, as long as his children will hear him.

The Spirit of his church, the body of Christ, is the Holy Ghost (1 Corinthians 12; James 2: 26; John 16: 7-12), as the spirit of man is the intelligent inward man; man's innate intelligence.

Of the Holy Ghost Jesus says, when he is come into the church, when he "is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come." Where is the church to-day that is thus actuated by the Holy Ghost?

If the church is not thus endowed with heaven's enlightenment, and by the Holy Ghost enabled to see into the future, is it the church of Jesus Christ, and are its ministry declaring "this gospel of the kingdom," and the sign of the near coming of Christ in glory?

In any past age when God has done a work among mankind for their good, he always authorized it and carried it on by continued revelation, so long as they would heed what was said. Without this all is uncertainty, for God tells us that so far as his merciful works toward us are concerned:

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.—Isaiah 55: 8-11.

How, then, shall man be able to carry on God's work unto man's salvation unless God directs? Even the angels in heaven, his ministers, await his direction. (Psalm 103:20, 21; Revelation 16:1; Isaiah 61:8.)

OUR BOYS AT REUNION TIME

Owing to conditions which we cannot control, we have been unable to get the boy movement as well organized as we should have hoped before reunion time. Plans are under way which, when completed, will mean big things for the boys of the church in the near future. We fear, however, that this will not be soon enough to be of service this summer. But why wait? Isn't there something that you can do in the meantime, especially during the coming reunions? It is with this question in mind that I am writing this note, hoping that it will come to the attention of reunion committees and others interested in the activities of the young people.

Why wait? No one can provide you with a cut-and-dried plan for dealing with boys that will work at all times and under all conditions. This is new work for all of us, and what we need now more than anything else is a series of experiments. Try out some plan at your reunion and report the results. In order to help you in this the following suggestions are offered:

1. The reunion committee should see to it that some one has special charge of the activities of the young people during the reunion. If there has been some one appointed in your district as boy leader he should be consulted in this work.

2. If there is a Boy Scout troupe in your district, such can easily be made the center of this work. Get in touch with the scoutmaster and ask his help.

3. By all means give the boys something to do in connection with the reunion work. Give them some responsibility on the grounds and see to it that they are officially recognized in such.

4. Provide plenty of opportunities for recreation under proper conditions. Two entire afternoons devoted to such and in which all participate, both old and young, is not too much. These afternoons were an unqualified success at, at least, one large reunion last summer.

5. Arrange for young people's prayer meetings, or better still, give them an opportunity to arrange their own. Put some one in charge of these meetings who can reach and hold the adolescent boy and girl.

6. Provide, if possible, a young people's tent where some lectures and entertainments may be held. Don't have all of these for the little tots. Get something that will attract the high school boy and girl.

7. Make every reasonable effort to get the young people to participate in a number of the regular services. Don't expect them to attend every one.

There is such a thing as too much "meeting" for certain ages at least.

8. Play square with the young people and they will play square with you. I well remember when a deliberate body of Latter Day Saints, in reunion assembled, refused to let the young people have one half day off, out of ten whole days of meetings, to take a boat ride on one of the most beautiful lakes in the United States. Do you really think that those young people were especially helped by the sermon on that particular, hot summer afternoon? Think it over.

9. By all means try out some plan and report the results. By another summer these accumulating experiences will be very valuable for us. Let me know if I can be of service to you.

Yours in the cause of Christ,
F. M. MCDOWELL,

Director of the Boy Movement.

War Emergencies in Our Choirs

It may occur to some, upon reading the above heading, that the editor is about to write a dissertation upon the internal disturbances that are reputed to be the regrettable accompaniment of so many of our choirs, but not so. We are reserving our energies in that line until such a time as we feel more like tackling the job. It is not the dissensions that may exist within our choirs that we write about, but the disturbances and disarrangements to our choirs, caused by the state of war now existing between this Nation and that portion of the world known as the central powers, Germany and her allies.

The conscription measures adopted by our Congress have taken many of our young men into the service of the flag we reverence and honor. Although we may be a little late in our prophecy, we are of the opinion that before this most terrible of all wars is over very many more of our young men (and some not so young) will also be required to go. We must part with them bravely and as cheerfully as possible, thankful that the cause for which we have to give them is a truly righteous one, in which not merely nations are involved, but the very principles of right, justice, and truth are endangered.

Unfortunately for our choirs the draft exacts its recruits from those ages that are also the most serviceable ones for choir work. As a consequence many of our choirs are "hard hit," and in some instances almost disrupted. In some of the choirs we have met with, almost the entire male contingent has been taken, leaving practically nothing with which the "four part" element of choir work may be conducted. One or two instances exist where a proficient choir leader has been taken as well as his associates, leaving the branch to get along as best it could with a second choice, who must work with depleted forces. Scarcely a choir may be found in the church that has not had to sacrifice in some way. Our general choir movement itself has been levied upon, and Brother Hoxie is now serving the Nation at the navy yard in Philadelphia, in charge of its musical activities, and he cannot give nearly so much of his time and attention to the general choir work as formerly.

Now, what is the obvious thing for our choirs to do in the emergency now upon them? It is simply to keep the work going until conditions improve, even though the present is discouraging. We grant that the depleting of choirs is disheartening; we can understand that when valuable material is taken and there seems to be an insufficiency left with which to work, it is natural to conclude that nothing can be done. And we then quit. But the worst thing our depleted choirs can do is to give up and quit. For the sake of the future, as well as for our present welfare, we must keep the choir work going. This war must ultimately give way to peace, and then we shall again bring our activities to their full strength. But in the meantime we must keep the work alive that our boys may have its benefits awaiting them when they come back to us, for it will be doubly hard to reorganize it after it lapses, and doubly disappointing to them to find it gone when they get back. Let us further remember that the Government is realizing the importance of song work among the soldiers and is providing for its proper cultivation and expression among them. Our boys will come back better qualified to serve in our choirs than before they left us. So, for the sake of these boys who have gone from us in a righteous cause, and who will some day return to us, we must "keep the home fires burning."

You ask, What are we to do; so many of our boys have been taken? The writer realizes the difficulty of choir work when the male voices are gone, so that the "four part" balance can no longer be had, and anthems are no longer possible. But again we say, we must not stop because of this; we must keep those home fires burning with constantly replenished fuel, and they must be brightly blazing when the boys get back. There are other things we can do that will bring paying results. In the line of female work there are many things that are possible. A well-organized ladies' chorus, or quartet, is an asset to any choir; and then there are trios and duets for female voices that can be had for the searching, not to mention the vast number of solos that may be effectively rendered at any time, even in place of the anthem.

One thing of a very great importance that we desire to give special prominence in our scheme of things that can be done, is congregational singing. If our choir possibilities are seriously curtailed here is one that, if properly developed, will prove a real strength to any branch, and besides will save the situation and solve the problem. So fall to with all your might; start developing congregational singing, and since many of the male voices of the congregation have been taken, fill the choir ranks with younger men and maidens to aid in the work with the congregation. They may not be able to take the place of the others in the anthems, but they are possibilities that may in time develop under training.

We urge that choirs and choir leaders throughout the church awake to the necessity of not allowing the choir work to fail because our boys have gone to the colors. We know their loss has cast a cloud of discouragement in many quarters; but for their sake and our own sake we must "turn the dark cloud inside out till the boys come home," for we shall want the things they loved ready for them when they return to us.

We Need More Articles

We mean exactly what we say in the above heading, and by it we are trying to impress upon all the music lovers and workers of the church that The Staff columns are in need of articles, original and selected, that are of value and interest to the choir movement and its work.

We took the post of editor of The Staff last autumn and in the very first number issued under our direction we urged our musical forces and supporters to send us articles (original if possible, selected if desired) of a character suitable for these columns, such as would be of interest and profit to the choir movement and its work. Up to the present writing we have received but two contributions of this kind. Why?

It did not take long to use up the few suitable articles handed down to us from Sister Anderson, the preceding editor, and the few articles we obtained by personal solicitation. The balance of the material needed we have had to supply from our own pen.

Now, no publication or organ (and The Staff is the official organ of the general choir movement) can get along and thrive as it should if its readers are compelled to subsist upon the productions of one individual, be he ever so good—and we are making no special claim for that particular qualification. The writings at all times of any individual will naturally be of a more or less well-defined character, which in composition is termed "style"; and versatile indeed is the writer who can command more than one general style. In time, if not varied by the productions of writers having other styles, the work of any editor will tend to become somewhat monotonous to his constant readers. We must prevent this in The Staff as far as possible.

We again urge music lovers and workers throughout the church to assist us in making The Staff a real representative of our church music work. This invitation is not restricted to choir workers alone; it is to everybody who can aid in this way. Choir leaders may write us upon things concerning their work or give us profitable bits from their experiences; organists may give helpful hints to other organists; choir members may "bear their testimonies" or present some problems viewed from their angles of vision; branch presidents, general church missionaries and officials may write us of some features coming under their observations; even "the laity" may have access. The only stipulation we make is that the customary rights of an editor are granted us, to decline unsuitable or unworthy articles, to correct errors when necessary, or to abridge when conditions require.

The columns of the HERALD and Autumn Leaves are open to us, in a reasonable measure, for articles of merit upon the music work of the church. There is room enough for all such articles and the needs of the work demand that we have them. Let none hesitate to serve who can.

Encourage the Song Habit in Children

In the earliest days of our forefathers, when education was in its most primitive stages, it was quite generally believed that in the three R's—readin', 'ritin,' and 'rithmetic—could be found about all that was needed for the proper schooling of a child for life's battle. We have since learned very differently, fortunately for the development of society.

Not long ago we read an article in which the writer advanced the thought that corresponding to the three R's in our old conception of education, there was for the home three S's that were equally necessary for its welfare—sustenance, sleep, sociability. To this might be fittingly added a fourth, song.

Unfortunately, America is not distinctly a singing race as is the case of Italy. We are not given to spontaneity in our song efforts. In Italy the people sing naturally because the song-spirit has been inculcated in them for centuries. The children sing from the time they leave their cradles, and not only in the home but at their play and in the street are they heard singing the songs of the race. Groups of men or women naturally break forth into song, and a corps of ditch-diggers may frequently be heard singing strains from their operas. Whether the training our Government is giving the soldiers in the camps under song directors will serve to disseminate the song spirit over the Nation remains to be seen, but we believe it will.

Children are by nature musical, and their capacity to express themselves in music in some way is greater than we have supposed and should be encouraged in every way possible. They should be taught to sing at their daily tasks and at their play, and as the family altar of prayer should be maintained in the home so should the time of music and of song. Every home should have its regular repast of music as well as its regular period of partaking food. We well remember when a boy of gathering every week on Sunday afternoon around the old square piano at "grandma's," where the family would sing the pretty, sweet ballads, many of which still live in honor in the popular affection. These "song-fests" had their value; the lives of the family were made sweeter and more wholesome and the family ties more enduring. It will be so for your family. Remember God's counsel to "the young men and the maidens" to cultivate these "gifts of music and of song," and his injunction to the old not to forget "the gladness of their youth."

Why do children die down musically as they advance in years? We know of but one reason: we have made music too much an art and not a part of our lives; too much of a thing to be practiced and performed and not a thing to be lived.

The Music of Israel

The entire Christian world has regarded with more than ordinary interest the capture of Jerusalem by the British, for it is one of the splendid things of the war. For centuries the birthplace and cradle of Christianity has been held in the profane grasp of the Turk, who has mocked every attempt of Christian devotion to wrest it from him. But now the most venerated spots of the holy land have fallen into the hands of a Christian nation, who will preserve them in safety to the world.

But have we thought of how our music goes back to the very beginning of the civilization of which Jerusalem was the seat? As from Judea was handed down to us the religion that has lightened the world, so from the race that peopled its hills and valleys has come to us much that is our music of to-day.

Some one once took occasion to sneer at Benjamin Disraeli, the great English statesman, because he was a Jew. "Yes, I am a Jew," he replied, "and my ancestors were making exquisite music, four thousand strong, in the Temple of Solomon, two thousand years before Christ, while your ancestors were wild, naked savages in the forest."

This was true. In that temple, of which there "was no part but was covered with gold" has made of some of the most wonderful music ever heard by the ears of man. Take your Old Testament and read of the wonderful instruments that were used in that sacred structure and of the magnificent ceremonies, as wonderful and as entrancingly beautiful and artistic as the carvings and traceries of the temple itself. Read also of how the young children were taught to sing, that they might be ready, if called upon, to give their services in that sacred building. Conceive of the impressive grandeur of the temple service itself, when the smoke of the sacrifice and the odor of frankincense were borne to heaven with the pæans of song and praise from the lips of the vested choir. Try to appreciate the poetry and matchless beauty of the Psalms of David, which were sung at these services, when in turn they served as inspiration to David. We receive but faint interpretation of the transcendent beauty of these Psalms, for they come to us stripped of both their sacred, priestly setting and their spirituality-enraptured atmosphere.

To-day the American Y. M. C. A. men have pitched their traveling huts by the site of that wonderful temple, and American and British soldiers are singing their national songs, the anthems of a new dawn for Israel and his land, into which he is so soon to return.

A. H. M.

From President Smith's Address

To a throng which overflowed the lower auditorium of the church, President Frederick M. Smith gave his message to the women, on the morning of April 8.

He stated that, owing to the press of other duties, he had found himself unable to gather the material he wished regarding women's work, and had submitted to Brother Samuel A. Burgess the question, "What is woman's status in the church?" President Smith paid a tribute to Brother Burgess for the excellent assistance rendered, and read before the audience several of Brother Burgess's letters from which we glean the following:

From the vast literature available on "Mother-right" it is found that in ancient times women did occupy as priestesses. The Bible recognizes a Deborah who acted as judge and prophetess. Later her influence in the home and with her children was emphasized more strongly, and we find Paul but reflecting the feelings of the time when he said, "If a woman desires knowledge let her ask her husband at home."

In the Doctrine and Covenants we find women counseled against being baptized without consent of her husband. In all of these statements we find they center in the fundamental preamble that a woman's status in the church is always influenced by her status in the environment about her.

Brother Burgess summed up with the opinion that, with opportunity to develop, women should find that status in the church work where she can function to the best advantage, the equal of men in some lines, and his superior in others.

President Smith threw down the challenge, "How long are you women going to allow us men to assume the egotistical position that we have the brains and you have none?" Women must play an important part in the future work of this church, and the time has come when they must organize, and work together for the accomplishment of much that can only be done in group activity. They must stand for wholesome vision, and be alert to the advance of women throughout the world. He expressed the hope that Latter Day Saints will be in the foreground of all these movements, helping to keep them conservative and safe. Women must intelligently equip themselves to take their stand on morals, ethics, civics, esthetics, and to change customs that have hindered and bound them, into those of constructive freedom.—Daily Ensign.

Three Types of Women

Sometimes we hear the question asked, "Where is a woman's greatest duty; in the home, or in the church?" Let us answer, "Both!"

Many people take the stand that a woman's whole duty is in her home. Let us picture her there! She cooks and bakes, washes and irons, dusts and scrubs, takes care of the children, and attends to all the varied duties of a home. She works hard from morning until night, then gets what sleep she can, and next day starts in with the same old story. I do not call this work, but drudgery! Her children are sent to Sunday school, and perhaps disliked because misunderstood. Their mother is not with them to help them become properly adjusted, for she is spending her time and strength in her home, only.

Now let us consider the woman who feels her first duty is to the church. She is always there, in the front seat, no matter what is going on at home. Her children may be there, too, but she is not worrying about them at all. She feels it her duty to listen to the minister, and "never mind the children." In Sunday school and other places they are unruly and mischievous, but she has no time to attend to that; she expects their teachers to correct and train them. She is busy "warning her neighbors!" She stands for hours telling them the principles of the gospel! When the day is far spent she rushes at her house duties, and tries to do all her work in an hour or two. She fails, of course, and becomes cross and irritable. When the children come home from school, they get out of doors as quickly as possible, and may be found later "somewhere in the neighborhood." Then the mother wonders why her neighbors do not see the "beautiful light" of her religion, and go to church with her!

There we have two extremes. I fancy I can hear the men folks say the first is the lesser evil of the two! I agree with them; but am thankful to know there is still another type of woman to be found in our church.

The third type believes her whole duty is not performed unless she is active both in her home and in her church. She systematizes her work in the former, that she may have time for the latter. She looks after her children, and tries to keep them orderly; she consults with their teachers concerning them, trying to assist in every way she can. She cooperates with all with whom she shares the responsibility of the care and instruction of her children, and tries to encourage other mothers to do the same. She goes about her work with a light, happy heart and a pleasant smile for everyone. "A place for everything, and everything in its place" is her motto, and she tries to impress the beauty of this rule upon her family, making the work of the home lighter. Thus she has time to associate with others, seeking to learn as well as to impart, and becoming more efficient every day.

Does some one say that women like this are few and hard to find? Perhaps when you say that you are not just loyal to the Woman's Auxilliary of our church, which is reaching out a helping hand to all women who desire to attain these heights of efficiency by study and application! The supervisors of our many departments are offering to assist us in every way they can, as we take up study along different lines; are we taking advantage of the opportunities offered?

HOUSEHOLD MANAGEMENT

Lesson I

Chapter XIX

THE HOUSEHOLD BUDGET

- I. Division of income:
 - A. Food.
 - B. Shelter.
 - C. Operating expenses.
 - D. Clothing.
 - E. "Higher" life.
- II. Expenditure for food:

Percentage increases with the increase of salary up to 50 per cent.
- III. Expenditure for shelter:
 - A. Shall we own or rent a home?
 - B. Consider:
 1. Convenience of location to business, etc.
 2. Sanitary conditions of the neighborhood.
 3. Appearance of house and neighborhood.
 4. Adaptability of house to family needs.
 - C. Amount to be spent.

20 to 28 per cent.
- IV. Operating expenses:

Expense of keeping house clean, warm, lighted, insured, and repaired. 10 to 20 per cent.
- V. Clothing, chosen for:

Warmth, comfort, and real beauty.
- VI. "Higher" life:
 - A. Education, recreation, philanthropy, savings.
 - B. The choice of which to be made by the family.

Study typical budgets and make out one for your family. There is a reserve of the right kind on the part of most of us in making public our family finances, so do not ask the members of your class to do so, but rather to make budgets for their families from incomes stipulated by the class leader.

Probably you will not agree with the text as to the amount of income necessary to live "decently." Remember that is a matter of personal opinion largely and need not take our attention from the main questions.

Lesson II

Chapter XX

SYSTEM IN MANAGEMENT

To be frank with you, we know of no one thing in our home management that helps us to make better use of the income than a very easy system of keeping accounts, a plan very similar to the one given on pages 334 to 337 of your text, together with a large envelope in which are filed all receipts by the month. These receipts include all cashed checks on each of which has been marked the purpose for which it was given.

A closed desk is the best place to keep our account books but most of us will have to be contented with a deed box or a heavy cardboard box.

A tablet with pencil attached hung in a convenient place in the kitchen makes it possible to jot down needed supplies as they are discovered or remembered.

Lesson III

Chapter XXI

HOW TO BUY

- I. Know what you need and a standard quality of the material.
Know your stores and in what goods each excels.
- II. Buy only what you need.
- III. Do not be a bargain hunter but rather look for bargains at reliable stores in their closing out sales.
- IV. Avoid trading stamps and prize stores. You pay for your prizes.
- V. Make a practice of buying only what you have cash to pay for. Occasional installments are permissible.
- VI. Read suggestions given in your text on pages 346 to 351.

Lesson IV

HOUSEWIFERY

Our text needs no comment on the advice it gives. Let us adapt its suggestions to our needs. The test of what we have gained from our lessons will come in putting them into practice. What have you learned that helps?

Civilian Relief and Home Service No. 3

MONEY RELIEF

The plans and purposes set forth in the preceding section are the main task of home service. The family allowances now provided by the Government will form, in most cases, an adequate supplement to service pay, and make outside assistance on the financial side unnecessary. This leaves the Red Cross free to devote its energies and resources to provide service wherever it is found to be needed.

There will remain, however, the task of meeting emergencies and unavoidable delays in the adjustment of claims and making of payments, and the larger task of meeting needs by regular allowances when the most that the man in service can reasonably be expected to do, plus the Government allowance and the family income from other sources, is inadequate. This will usually be in the families of a son or brother in service, who was carrying a large share of the family burden before he was called to the colors. Government allowances are smaller for these relatives than for wives and children.

There will also remain a still larger task of relief to two other groups: First, to the relatives who have a moral claim on a soldier's or sailor's support, but one for which no Government allowance is provided in the War Insurance Act. Here, too, after the man in service has made as large an allotment as can be reasonably expected, but not otherwise, the Red Cross may have to supplement his payments. One home service section has supplemented the allowance made by an enlisted man to his father and mother who became dependent after his enlistment. Because he had not habitually contributed to their support for one year prior to enlistment, they are not entitled to a family allowance under the War Risk Insurance Act.

Second, to the families of the soldiers and sailors of our allies. In both of these groups, the money may have to be continuous, and in both it must be understood to be given as a means toward the achievement of the principal aim of home service; namely, the conservation of the human resources in our American communities, and the maintenance of good standards of home life.

In other words, the money relief given by the home service sections cannot be regarded as a natural right to which a family, from which a man has enlisted, is entitled without reference to its needs or condition. Each enlisted man under the War Risk Insurance law must allot one half his pay to his wife and children. The Government then makes an additional family allowance without regard to the financial circumstances of the family. The home service section should take these facts into consideration and supplement with care only when necessary. This part of its work will have to be administered with the highest sense of responsibility in order to prove at once its adequacy and its even-handed justice. It must also be administered without publicity or hampering conditions that would hurt the self-respect of its recipients.

The usual forms of relief will be money payments of loans, grants, or allowances given from home service funds.

LOANS

A money payment necessary at the time, but one which it is reasonable to believe that the recipient will be in position to return, without undue hardship, should be given as a loan. The conditions of repayment should be explained, the obligation put in writing and signed, and the collection of the loan (without interest), when it falls due, should be carefully followed up.

After allotments and allowances began under the War Risk Insurance Act on November 1, 1917, payments were delayed for a considerable period. This meant that payments from home service funds for maintenance to families would be duplicated by the Government later for the same purpose in a lump sum. Therefore, some home service payments were given in the form of loans in some instances, and the family was expected to repay as soon as the Government check was received. Families in temporary straits, but unwilling to accept a grant, have been glad to avail themselves of this arrangement.

GRANTS

Grants may be made necessary by demands which the family income and Government allowance cannot be expected to provide for, such as sickness, funerals, the need of special training, and so on. Grants in small amounts may be required to tide over a period of acute distress until proper inquiry can be made and a plan of service can be decided upon. This special relief given until wiser and more thorough-going action is possible should be enough to provide food and shelter temporarily.

ALLOWANCES

These are payments at regular intervals of a stated sum by the home service section to the relatives of a soldier or sailor. From Public Document, No. 90, Sixty-fifth Congress, we read:

"Article II. Allotments and family allowances.

"Section 200. That the provisions of this article shall apply to all enlisted men in the military or naval forces of the United States.

"Section 204. That a family allowance of not exceeding $50 per month shall be granted and paid by the United States upon written application to the bureau by such enlisted man or by or on behalf of any prospective beneficiary, in accordance with and subject to the conditions, limitations, and exceptions hereinafter specified. The family allowance shall be paid from the time of enlistment to death in or one month after discharge from the service, but not for more than one month after the termination of the present war emergency. No family allowance shall be made for any period preceding November 1, 1917. The payment shall be subject to such regulations as may be prescribed relative to cases of desertion and imprisonment and of missing men.

"Subject to the conditions, limitations, and exceptions here-inabove and hereinafter specified, the family allowance payable per month shall be as follows:

"Class A. In the case of a man to his wife (including a former wife divorced) and to his child or children:

"(a) If there be a wife but no child, $15.

"(b) If there be a wife and one child, $25.

"(c) If there be a wife and two children, $32.50, with $5 per month additional for each additional child.

"(d) If there be no wife, but one child, $5.

"(e) If there be no wife, but two children, $12.50.

"(f) If there be no wife, but three children, $20.

"(g) If there be no wife, but four children, $30, with $5 per month additional for each additional child.

"Class B. In the case of a man or woman, to a grandchild, a parent, brother, or sister:

"(a) If there be one parent, $10.

"(b) If there be two parents, $20.

"(c) For each grandchild, brother, sister, and additional parent, $5.

"(The monthly compulsory allotment, which means wife, a former wife divorced who has not remarried and to whom alimony has been decreed, and a child, shall be in an amount equal to the family allowance except that it shall not be more than one half the pay, or less than $15; but for a wife living separate and apart under court order or written agreement or for a former wife divorced, it shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order, decree, or written agreement to be paid to her.)

"Section 206. (c) If he is making the compulsory allotment to a member of Class A, the minimum monthly allotment so designated to be made to members of Class B shall be one seventh of his pay, but not less than $5 per month.

"Section 207. That the amount of the family allowance to members of Class B shall be subject to each of the following limitations:

"(a) If an allowance is paid to one or more beneficiaries of Class A the total allowance to be paid to the beneficiaries of Class B shall not exceed the difference between the allowance paid to the beneficiaries of Class A and the sum of $50.

"(b) The total monthly allowance to beneficiaries of Class B added to the enlisted man's monthly allotment to them shall not exceed the average sum habitually contributed by him to their support monthly during the period of dependency, but not exceeding a year immediately preceding his enlistment or the enactment of this amendatory act."

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Toronto Branch Items

On the evenings of June 25, 26, and 27, the writer delivered three addresses at the local church, covering all the salient points involved in the apostasy of R. C. Evans from the church.

Reference was made to the standard books of the church, and the writings of her accredited representatives. The audience fully appreciated the significance of the statement of Job wherein he said, "Oh . . . that mine adversary had written a book," as we quoted extensively from the writings and public utterances of Bishop R. C. Evans, and compared them with statements of Mr. R. C. Evans.

As a result of these meetings a number of persons who withdrew from the church with Mr. Evans have returned to the church. One woman who had paid fifty dollars towards

Mr. Evans's new church remarked, "The experience is worth all I paid."

The meetings at Guelph were a complete success. Members of the church were in attendance from a distance of sixty miles. The local ministry was well represented. Among those of the eldership we noticed the following: Duncan B. Perkins, district president, Clavering; James A. Morrison, bishop's agent, Owen Sound; S. G. St. John, missionary; John Shields, patriarch.

The following branch presidents were present; J. H. Taylor, Grand Valley; R. W. Tarswell, Cedar Valley; W. J. Goulding, Arthur; D. W. Cameron, Egremont; M. L. Snell, Redickville; Frederick G. Baldwin, Welland. We met Elder James Gerrie from Drew Station and Alex McMullen from Hamilton.

Brother Rushton preached in Toronto in the morning. Immediately after dinner, with several other brethren, he was driven by Brother Prentice in a real automobile to Guelph. Brother Rushton was the evening speaker at Guelph. What happened to the brethren afterward deponent sayeth not. They reached Toronto at 3 a. m., Monday. I overheard "J. W." talking in his sleep about "lost," "way," "mud," etc. But I have learned from association that he does not give away secrets in his sleep!

Brother Pitt had gone to London owing to urgent request. He reports excellent meetings, and the Saints united in their loyalty to the church. He recounts some interesting experiences, which he will undoubtedly report to your columns.

The citizens of Toronto do not do things by halves. On July Fourth they had a regular flag-raising day. Old Glory was raised to the very "top," whilst a loyal Canadian eulogized the "Stars and Stripes," and testified of the common interests of both countries.

I was proud that I was an American and glad that I was in Canada. My hat off to the "Union Jack" and the "Canadian Coat of Arms"!

Sunday morning, July 7, through the kindness of Brother Williamson and wife, Brother Archibald McLean and Sister Mabel Clark, and the writer motored to Grand Valley, a distance of sixty miles, where a "one-day meeting" was held. All the ministry attending the Guelph exercises were present, with the exception of Brother Snell. Apostle R. C. Russell presided at the morning sacrament service. He was also the speaker at 11 a. m. He related his experience with R. C. Evans and recounted the incidents leading up to his withdrawal from the church. At 1.30 p. m., T. W. Williams was the speaker. S. G. St. John spoke at 4 p. m., and R. C. Russell at 7 p. m.

This is the home of the Taylor's. Nearly everyone in the community seemed to be a Taylor or a relative. The Taylors are all right! An experience like I had convinced me that it is always best not to talk about people to other people!

It was a pleasure to meet so many representative ministers of the church. These sturdy men and women are a credit to any cause and may be depended upon to stand loyally by the truth of the angel's message.

It is still winter in Canada; we were chilled through from our drive. The scenery was magnificent. California has nothing on Canada in July.

On Thursday night of this week Brother Rushton was the speaker at Toronto—a good sermon.

On Tuesday night a number of the brethren drove to Humber Bay; Brother Rushton was the speaker. We heard nothing but praise of the effort. He spoke at Hamilton on Wednesday night.

The monthly Religio prayer meeting Friday night was above the ordinary. We called upon all those who had never borne their testimony before to participate. Quite a large number responded.

Brother F. G. Pitt was the morning speaker at Toronto. He went to Woodbridge for the afternoon. Brother Fred Long held forth at Cookville.

The branch business meeting will be held next Monday night. A farewell service in honor of Brother Rushton will be given on Thursday night.

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

TORONTO, ONTARIO, July 9, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am receiving letters of inquiry from different parts of the United States, asking detailed information as to the apostasy of R. C. Evans. It is impossible to answer all of these letters.

Suffice it to say: My faith is strengthened in this work. Mr. Evans's attacks are puerile. In many ways they are ridiculous and childish. In his characteristic exaggerations he runs amuck. His "fall" will have no perceptible effect upon the church at large. Personal ambition and accentuated egotism have been his undoing. Even here in Toronto the church work is assuming an even tenor.

We have nothing to fear from Mr. Evans. His claims of "inside information" and "mysterious books" are pure fiction. He knows nothing against the church which has not been made public by the church. From every indication Mr. Evans is seeking to outdo Clark Braden. Clark Braden is dead! THE CHURCH STILL LIVES! Mr. Evans is foully slandering the leading men of the church, both dead and alive. He does not even respect the paternal friendship of the late President Joseph Smith.

For several years Mr. Evans has been an impediment to the church. Many of the Saints have been loath to see this. The scales are now falling from their eyes. Some of our people were tainted with idolatry. The idol is shattered. These now have an unobstructed vision of Jesus Christ, our only hope. It may take some little time for such to acquire proper focus, but their vision will be clearer.

Do not be in the least disturbed. We are not worrying at this end of the line. Our work will be arduous. The experience will be interesting. We are absolutely sure of our ground. Each passing incident but confirms the impregnability of the work. Frederick M. Smith, Benjamin R. McGuire, and John W. Rushton, the committee appointed by the Joint Council to investigate conditions and regulate the work, comported themselves while here as men of God. We have reason to be thankful that God has called them to positions of responsibility in this church.

"Busy as a bee" and "happy as a lark,"

Your brother in Christ,

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

Wanted

Copies are wanted of The Olive Branch or any other publication of the church while at Kirtland, Ohio, for the use of the church library, and for purposes of exchange with other libraries. We have been slowly rebuilding the church library and the historian's library since their destruction by fire in 1907. It is of value that books of this kind should be at a central place where they may be consulted by all. We also have a request from the Western Reserve Historical Society. If anyone knows of copies which can be secured on any reasonable terms, kindly advise us. These books are not desired for private use, but for the benefit of the church.

Burtch; died at his home near Vanderbilt, Michigan, June 13, 1918, after an illness of only 5 days. Was a faithful, diligent, young worker in the Master's cause. Funeral sermon by C. N. Burtch, assisted by D. Schruer. Interment in the Vanderbilt Cemetery.

THOMASON.—Osman Thomason died at Lamoni, Iowa, May 25, 1918. Born in Norway in 1831, came to America in 1837, married in 1857. His wife and 4 children, 3 sons, and one daughter survive him. Obeyed the gospel in his youth, and his life was an example of honesty and integrity. The son in Montana could not attend the funeral, but the other children were present. Services in charge of Columbus Scott and Peter Muceus, sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

VICKERY.—Wentworth Vickery was born September 11, 1843, near Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. Baptized November 23, 1863. Ordained elder, afterward high priest. Faithful to the cause. Suffered patiently for 6 months. Married Augusta Rarick, August 24, 1864. To this union were born 5 children: George Wentworth, Minnie Viola, Lewis Israel, Zadie Zerelda, and Ethel Mariah. Minnie and Ethel have preceded him. Died June 17, 1918, at the Winfield, Kansas, Hospital. Sermon by Elder Barraclough of Wichita, in United Brethren church at Hackney. Interment in Hackney Cemetery.

SAXE.—Sergeant Mark Alma Saxe, son of John and Mary Saxe, of San Francisco, at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, May 3, 1918, aged 22 years, 10 months, and 13 days. Buried at Irvington, California, May 10, with military honors. Sergeant Mark Alma Saxe was a native of San Francisco, and enlisted in the quartermaster's Reserve Corps in that city on May 21, 1917. Assigned to Motor Truck Company 380 with rank of sergeant. He entrained from the presidio on November 17, for Fort Sill, Oklahoma. Stricken with sickness on April 5 of the following year, he entered the military hospital. Pneumonia and pleurisy caused his death May 3. The remains, accompanied by Sergeant Ernest McPherson of the same company were brought to San Francisco after a military funeral at the Fort. Services at Saints' church on May 10 in charge of G. J. Waller, sermon by C. A. Parkin. Body taken from there to Irvington; after a short service in the Christian church, was laid to rest in the I. O. O. F. cemetery. Baptized June 21, 1903, by J. A. Saxe, confirmed by J. M. Terry, ordained deacon February 16, 1913. Beautiful floral offerings marked the regard in which he was held by both his friends in civil life and his comrades in arms. A faithful son, an upright and conscientious member of the church, and one who was beloved by all with whom he came in contact. His death is deeply mourned by all.

SAINT LOUIS NEWS ITEMS

The Saint Louis Quorum of Elders was recently reorganized at the May conference held at Lansdowne, Illinois. Since George M. Vandell has removed from the district, it was necessary that his successor be selected. John J. Billinsky was chosen as president, with G. S. Trowbridge and George Vandell as his counselors. Brethren Billinsky and Trowbridge were counselors to the former president. Brother Vandell is a counselor to the district president, as well as being counselor now to the president of the elders' quorum. They are taking hold energetically. We note in the first letter of their president: "Don't simply do your bit, do your best. This

RADICAL CHANGES IN PROVIDENCE

At recent business meetings in Providence, Rhode Island, where Brother R. W. Farrell is pastor, the following changes were made in their church program: The members of the Melchisedec priesthood were all sustained as assistants to help build up the work in the branch, rather in the capacity of counselors to the president. They have for a long time observed the custom of sustaining the Aaronic priesthood rather than reelecting them. From Brother Farrell's letter we quote his summary of the changes: "Sundays, young people's meeting, 10 a. m.; Sunday school, 11 to 12; readings from the law, followed by appropriate comments, 12 m. to 12.20 p. m.; Sunday mission meetings in the church, 4 p. m. No Sunday evening service for the present, but they will begin August 11. The Lord's supper will be held on the first and third Wednesdays in the month, at 7.45 p. m. Religio will be on Tuesdays, 8 p. m., divided into three periods: musical-literary, study, and social and goodfellowship. At the study period we introduced a class in the Spanish language. We also voted to omit the Sunday collections, having instead a treasury box at the entrance of the church into which offerings are to be placed."

COLLEGE NEWS

The new Graceland College Bulletin, volume 12, number 3, contains the catalogue for 1917-18 and the announcements for 1918-19. The new catalogue number is somewhat of a departure from the issues in recent years, in that it has a number of very pleasing views, showing among other things one of the companies in military training as a feature of the physical training, views of the assembly room, the library, the physics laboratory, the home economics laboratory, the shorthand and typewriting room, the business department, music studios, wireless laboratory, and a typical recitation room. These illustrations add quite materially to the attractiveness and value of the catalogue.

Among the new members of the faculty for next year are noted: F. V. Elliott, of the Western University, London, Canada, the University of Toronto, and the University of Chicago, who will have charge of Science and Mathematics; Helene Laura Landsberg, a graduate of the Iowa State Teachers' College, of the State University of Iowa, the University of Chicago, and the University of Goettengen, Germany, who will have charge of the department of History and Political Science; Olive A. Teeters, a graduate of the University of Nebraska, who will teach English and Public Speaking; Anne M. Bodensieck, of the State University of Iowa, who will teach Romance Languages; and Wayve M. Monroe, a graduate of the Iowa State Teachers' College, and Iowa State Agricultural College, who will have charge of the work in Home Economics.

It is also noted that Mr. F. M. McDowell, who has been on a leave of absence for the past year in candidacy for his doctor's degree at the State University of Iowa, will be at Graceland next year as Dean of the Junior College and in charge of the work in Psychology and Education. Mr. McDowell will also be in charge of the teacher training department of the institution.

Among the lecturers for next year are noted the following: Samuel A. Burgess, Philosophy; Frederick M. Smith, Relation of Church to Society; A. M. Carmichael, School Administration; Augustine Dwyer, Travel and Literature; G. Leonard Harrington, Health; Benjamin R. McGuire, Law of Property; and Walter W. Smith, Psychology and Education.

By special arrangement with the State University of Iowa the college announces in this year's catalogue for the first time a combined commercial-academy course, graduates from which are admitted to the freshman year of the Junior College, the State University of Iowa, or any other institution belonging to the American Association of Colleges and Universities, and also granted diplomas showing their proficiency as stenographers, typists, bookkeepers, etc. This combined course enables a student who is looking forward to a business career to save one full year in his preparation. The college authorities are to be congratulated on this added recognition which the State University for the first time has granted it.

The catalogue also shows in detail the courses offered in the Graceland Radio Institute. The register of students for last year shows forty-eight students from different parts of the country enrolled in the wireless course, so that evidently the Radio Institute is meeting the war demand, and from the fact that the Government is sending out requests for so many wireless operators there will undoubtedly be a large enrollment in that department next year, especially from among the drafted men of the church.

The catalogue number contains the usual announcements of courses in the Junior College, the Academy, the Commercial School, the School of Music, School of Oratory, and full general information relative to the work and general activities of the college. Copies can be secured by dropping a postal card to the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED IN TORONTO

At a business meeting held at Toronto church, Soho Street, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted, as reported in a letter from Floralice Miller, dated July 10: "Resolved, that we herewith express our confidence in the general officers of the church and pledge our support in enforcing the law as revealed in the standard books of the church.

"Resolved, that we herewith express our appreciation of the wisdom of the missionary appointing quorums of the church in sending T. W. Williams to labor in the Toronto District, and that we herewith extend a cordial welcome to Brother Williams and pledge to him our undivided support and confidence in his efforts to build up the work in the church in this city."

"Resolved, that copies of above resolutions be forwarded to President F. M. Smith, and to the HERALD and Ensign for publication."

In our last number Bishop Mark Siegfried was announced for the reunions at Kirtland and Onset. Later his plans were changed. On the 16th he started west by auto in company with Sister Siegfried to spend some time in Colorado.

President Frederick M. Smith and Bishop B. R. McGuire expect to attend the Erie Beach reunion and later the Toronto reunion, the latter we understand is August 3-11.

Elder David Dowker of Los Angeles announces that he shall endeavor to see to it that if there is any division in his field it shall be "between those who are loyal to Christ and those who are not." He adds that "loyalty to the church is the watchword of the hour."

Apostle J. A. Gillen has removed his family from Council Bluffs to Independence and they are domiciled in their old home.

Brother Arthur H. Mills sends his copy for The Staff department in this issue from 230 F Street, San Bernardino, California, his new address. It is a little odd that it should happen that our church chorister should be on one coast and the secretary of the choir movement on the other, but it is indicative of the scope of the musical work in the church.

REES JENKINS SAFE

In a letter to President F. M. Smith from Jerusalem, May 5, 1918, Sister Rees Jenkins wrote that she had learned her husband was safe in Damascus with a Christian minister who is kind to him. This is our first word from him since the Turks took him prisoner from Jerusalem when it fell into the hands of the British. Brother and Sister Jenkins have been in the Holy Land since before the beginning of the war in 1914.

Glowing reports are sent in from Logan, Iowa, concerning the recent visit of Brother Augustine Dwyer and the delivery of a number of his lectures. The audiences were to the limit of the houses and were very appreciative. He has been lecturing in a number of towns in western Iowa of late. He was recently at Burlington and was expecting to leave for Kirtland soon.

The Religio at Sharon, Pennsylvania, fittingly celebrated the birthday of Elder Richard Baldwin on the evening of June 22. His natal day was May 11, but he being out of the city, it was postponed till the later date. One of the chief events was a dialogue acrostic, composed by Thomas Jones. He was presented with a handsome set of silver tableware as a token of the love and esteem in which he was held.

Brother J. W. Peterson writes of the reunion at Burlington, North Dakota: "It was a great success. The best we ever had. Quite a number baptized."

UNFAIR ATTACKS

It is a sad commentary upon human thought and psychology that the resistance to the divine plan should so persistently take the form of unfair attack and unsupported assumptions.

This is by no means confined to the religious world of to-day. We find it true of the attacks made on the prophets in the period before the coming of the Master. We find it also true concerning much that was written of him.

As an instance we may refer to the writing of C. F. Bahrdt, and those who follow him. The theory advanced is that Jesus was a member, or rather a tool, of a secret order, who directed all of his works, but especially took charge of his miracles. A Persian gave him two cure-alls; one for the eye; the other for nervous troubles. Luke coached him in the art of healing. The miracle of feeding with the loaves and fishes is explained by saying that the rulers of the secret order had stores of bread and wine, etc., from which they could draw mysteriously.

There has been much of an effort made in modern times, to discredit the miracles of Jesus, to explain them away in some form or another. Some advance the thought that they are only allegories or parables. Others attempt to explain them according to a limited scientific knowledge; in other words, to show that they didn't take place at all, but something else entirely different happened. Others, that it was altogether a plan of deception, and that the Master, Jesus the Christ, was an epileptic, or a fanatic, or in some other way deficient.

This theory advanced by Bahrdt makes Jesus subordinate to a secret order of some kind or other. For instance, in the walking on the water, it is stated by this school that Jesus was provided with a raft on which he floated in the twilight or fog, and so seemed to ride on the water.

Other miracles are explained in a similar manner.

Venturini follows and reaffirms much of the above assumption. He states it was impossible to reach the hard-hearted Jews without miracles, and so they were provided with the aid of a portable medicine chest. This book follows very much the same tendency as the other. ("Natürliche Geschichte des grossen Propheten von Nazareth," 1800-02.)

G. Stanley Hall states that these two works were the first of a long series of more or less fictitious lives of Jesus based on a similar plan, and indeed, accounts of him on this scheme are still represented as emerging from ancient archives, e. g., The Crucifixion, by an eye-witness (Chicago, 1913, 200 pages). (G. Stanley Hall, Jesus the Christ in the Light of Psychology, New York, 1917.)

This is just one of many instances of the manner in which an attempt is made to explain away and nullify the work of the man sent from God. It seems that similar methods are followed in practically every age of the world.

We are under the impression of having read sometime in this literature, a story to the effect that the secret order had it so carefully planned, that they placed a plank under the water and made all arrangements; that Peter somehow knew of this arrangement and so asked permission to join in the show and walk out. The permission being given, he stepped out confidently and was doing well until he missed his footing and stepped over the edge of the plank, so he would have sunk had not the Master moved forward quickly and pulled him up.

Such stories seem disgusting. It is especially unfortunate that men should be so anxious to avoid the divine that they would attempt to create such a fiction. Hall states concerning this idea of a secret order: "Historically there seems to be no scintilla of evidence in favor of this view, and its weakest point is that it is not plain just what great purpose all this collective wisdom was seeking to accomplish."

That is one of the curious features, that historically, there appears no scintilla of evidence in favor of such views; and yet they are persistently put forward, and seem often to gain in strength with the passing of the years. At the time few or none seemed to know anything about it, but as time goes by the number increases. And not only in number but also in clearness and in details, which are often, if not usually, self-contradictory does the fictitious story grow.

In an effort to explain that which they do not explain at all, they are continually stumbling; and unfortunately cause some others also to stumble. All are not so well versed as Doctor Hall so that they are able to distinguish between that which is historically true and that which is false; or between that which has some probability of historicity and that which has very little or none.

We find a similar situation to-day, of stories being manufactured and then growing with the passing of years, without any historical basis.

Of course there would be no comparison between Jesus of Nazareth and any other man, but as he plainly says, "The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me they will also persecute you." (John 15: 20.)

It is a pity that many should be misled by such utter falsehoods and misrepresentations. Many of these stories may now be considered as speculation or intentional fiction. But many stories are told to-day concerning those sent of God to assist in restoring the gospel in this day and age of the world which are manufactured out of whole cloth. Then the story is added to and published and quoted from one book to another, as though it were founded upon fact.

Unfortunately very few appear to be capable of critical analysis, of weighing evidence to determine its value and considering its relation to other evidence, or to its probability of truth. This attack on truth, and villification of individuals, is a profound pity, but is an outgrowth of the desire to explain away rather than to understand the truth. It has been used against science as well as against religion. So it is not surprising that to-day we find as soon as a man rejects the truth that he starts personal abuse, and those who oppose the work depend largely on personal attacks, and so avoid discussion of principles.

We see an instance of this in the various stories told about Joseph Smith the Martyr walking on the water. There is no historic evidence of any such attempt, nor competent evidence that he even made such a claim or pretense. The evidence adduced is self-contradictory, as was pointed out in a recent editorial by Brother Elbert A. Smith.

We see the same thing in connection with the Solomon Spalding story. The manuscript has been discovered and read. Internal evidence is against the theory. Critical analysis shows to students that it does not hold. Yet it is revived from time to time.

Recently word was sent to us that a certain opponent had attacked one of the leading officials of the church and made the statement, among others, that he was born five months after the marriage of his parents. We took the pains to investigate the matter and found that it was five years. The rest of the statement possessed as little basis in fact.

Yet it sometimes happens that such a story, many times repeated, causes some to believe that it is true, and, as time passes, it even grows with added details and particulars.

When sometimes this injustice seems hard to bear we should remember that the same was true of the Master. They accused him of being associated with Beelzebub, the prince of devils. They accused him of practically everything that they have ever accused any other man; and these things are even in this late age revived and occasionally repeated.

Surely unfair personal attack as a means of opposing the Word of God is trying at times. But we have to remember that so have they treated the Master before us. It is written: "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that endureth to the end shall be saved. . . . It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord. If they have called the Master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household? Fear them not therefore: for there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known. . . . Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows. Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven." (Matthew 10: 22, 25, 26, 31, 32.)

And to the church at Smyrna, John the Revelator wrote concerning their tribulations, "Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer; behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Revelation 2: 10.)

Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. He that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory; but he that seeketh his glory that sent him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in him.—John 7: 16-18.

WAS ADAM AN APOSTATE?

Question. "Was Adam an apostate? This is being taught—is it correct?"

Answer. The Bible states that Adam fell. There is a great deal of speculation as to the nature of his fall, instead of taking the simple record. He was guilty of disobedience, yet he afterwards repented, was baptized, and became a Son of God. By him sin came into the world. But under the definition of an apostate it is open to question whether he was such. Webster's New International Dictionary defines an apostate as follows: "One who has forsaken the faith, principles, or party, to which he before adhered; especially, he who has forsaken his religion for another."

If he rejected the light he previously held he repented and made reconciliation. The question is somewhat speculative and would seem not to be of very much profit. If he had apostatized it would seem that his return would be difficult (Hebrews 6). His does not appear as much an open revolt as a disobedience.

Q. "Was there children born in the millennium to the elect?"

A. We assume that this question really is, "Will there be children born in the millennium to the elect?" There are several passages that would appear to bear upon this question.

In those days there shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall not die, but shall live to be an hundred years old; but the sinner, living to be an hundred years old, shall be accursed.—Isaiah 65: 20, I. T.

. . . Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth, when the Lord shall come, and old things shall pass away, and all things become new, they shall rise from the dead and shall not die after, and shall receive an inheritance before the Lord, in the holy city, and he that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; wherefore, for this cause preached the apostles unto the world the resurrection of the dead.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13

And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins; for they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, They shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their lawgiver.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.

It would seem from these and other texts that there will be people on the earth who will continue to live here and have children. This evidently includes the righteous as well as those who are called the wicked or the nations of the earth. It would seem evident that they will continue to have children; whether those who are resurrected will have children is a matter of controversy and is not clearly set forth.

Q. "There are some elders here who teach that the natural man after the creation and before the 'fall' was able to carry out the command to multiply and replenish the earth, and that is the paradisaical state to which we are trying to get back; that which was lost, while others teach that it took the 'fall' to accomplish the part the Lord designated relative to procreation. The first-named elders refer to 1 Timothy 2: 11, showing Adam was not in transgression, and only went with the woman so he could obey the command to be a protection to the woman. The latter elders refer to Doctrine and Covenants 28: 11, and Book of Mormon, top of page 58, old edition. If the church has taken any stand on this subject, a reference to the matter through the HERALD will be appreciated. I want to be on safe ground."

A. As we read the Bible, the first chapter of Genesis and part of the second chapter refers to the physical creation; parts of the second chapter refer to the spiritual creation. In Genesis 1: 27, 28, it is plainly stated that man was created male and female, and the idea held forth that they should multiply and replenish the earth. This does not then refer to a spiritual condition, but to the physical relation. The citations given above by the brother have very little to do with the question, but are rather concerned with the question whether Adam was deceived or did he voluntarily step out of Eden, so as to be with Eve. In 1 Timothy 2: 13, 14, it is clearly stated that Adam was not deceived, but infers that he followed Eve, who was in transgression. Doctrine and Covenants 28: 11 states clearly that he did sin. Consistently, the two together involve his fall, as is in fact clearly stated by other texts of the Bible, but that he knowingly stepped out, he was not deceived. The passage in the Doctrine and Covenants evidently refers to the result of the deception of Adam and Eve.

In 2 Nephi 1: 101-104 is stated some things that Lehi supposed and inferred. It would seem quite consistent with the other passage and with this, we should say that Adam and Eve were commanded to multiply and replenish the earth, Eve fell; separated they could not carry out this command. Adam would not be separated from Eve, therefore Adam fell that man might be.

It is only fair to state that the church has not taken a position upon this question in conference or quorum, or general assembly. There exists differences of opinion. The question is largely one of speculation and of academic interest. As we read it, 1 Timothy 2: 13, 14, and 2 Nephi 1: 111 state the same thing.

S. A. B.

THE EXCEPTION PROVES THE RULE

Many times in years long past have we been puzzled by this assertion. A rule is laid down and then when it is shown not to apply in every case, the reply is made, "Oh, well, the exception proves the rule."

We find this statement in sermons and in articles time and time again. We find it in articles by learned men until it has gained general currency in the world, even among thinking people.

And yet, how is it possible that an exception could prove any rule? If that were true, the more exceptions there were, the more strongly the rule would be proven, and that is evidently a fallacy, as it is ordinarily applied.

As used in this sense, an exception is almost invariably directly contrary to the rule. It, at least, contradicts the rule, and hence, cannot possibly prove it, or assist in its proving.

But there is a sense, a limited sense, in which the exception proves the rule. When a case is being tried in a court of record, and testimony being taken, the opposing counsel will often arise and addressing the court say in substance, "Your honor, I object to that on the grounds that it is irrelevant." (Or he may say it is incompetent, that it is hearsay, or that it is immaterial.) Or some grounds of objection, which he considers good, may be given in support of the claim that the evidence should not be admitted, or submitted to the jury. If the court agrees with him the evidence is excluded, or the question is stricken out. Or it has to be stated in a different form, if it should be that the objection is that it is a leading question.

But if the court overrules his objection then he states, "Your honor, I wish to except to the ruling of the court." In other words, he saves his exception.

When the case is over, the verdict given, and judgment entered, if he has lost the case he will move for a new trial, and if that is denied, will take an appeal.

On appeal, before the higher courts, it is these exceptions which he has made below, which are considered by the court. If he has not stated his exceptions, the ruling of the court is not called in question, as a general thing. So it is his exceptions which prove, or test, or call in question, the ruling of the court. Unless he excepts, and saves his exceptions, the ruling of the court is not called in question by the appellate court.

We trust this is clear to our readers. Some of them, at least, of a logical turn of mind, must many times have been mystified at the statement, "The exception proves the rule," and at times somewhat disagreeably, when a clear argument is made, to have it swept aside with, "Oh, well, the exception proves the rule." In such a case it does nothing of the kind.

It is true, in a primary sense of the verb to "prove," which is to try, or test, but is not true according to the later definition which is to verify or establish. The exception does not in a court of appeal verify or establish the ruling of the court. It tests it or tries it, whether it be true or not; an exception tests or tries a rule, it never verifies it.

LOCAL SPIRITUAL MANIFESTATIONS

For some time the SAINTS' HERALD has hesitated to print very many local communications, for the reason that the word of prophecy so given is usually local in its application, and is intended for those then present, by way of encouragement; also, because printing in the church papers tends to add too much of possible sanction. A revelation through the President of the church must first be submitted to the various quorums and then to the conference. Yet, every once in a while, we note a tendency to give great consideration to a communication which has passed no test whatsoever, and which has not been considered by the leading officials and leading quorums of the church, which are provided for in the law.

We quote herewith an extract from The Unity on this topic, which no doubt will govern our policy in the future. The reasonableness of this action will be at once apparent.

Representatives of the church in using scriptural texts should confine themselves to revelations which have been passed by the quorums and approved or accepted by the church. Furthermore, it is strongly urged that missionaries and representatives of the church do not circulate "revelations" or prophecies given locally, and that said representatives discourage others in doing so. It is further urged that such locally-given prophecies, admonitions, or messages be not transcribed or printed in any instance for general circulation without first passing the scrutiny of the Presidency of the church. When the Lord intends messages for general circulation in the church, he will send them through the channels chosen by him for such purpose.—The Unity, March and April, 1918.

Do not get an education with the idea of avoiding work; but that you may do more, and do it better. Banish all fear that the number of well educated people will be too great, if you join their ranks; the crowd is at the foot of the hill; the ranks grow thinner as you near the top.—Edward Rannie.

THE JEWS AND THEIR GATHERING HOME

Notwithstanding our claim as a religious body that the return of the Jews to Palestine is to take place soon, and that the certainty of this restoration was made known by revelation many years ago, yet very little has been said about it in our church papers to advance the idea as being still a living issue at this time. Indeed, of late years not as much has been written or presented in sermons, apparently, as was spoken and published during the early years of the Reorganized Church, or in the older days when our claims and beliefs were first set forth. I can remember well how frequently mention used to be made of this important doctrine and its bearing upon the latter-day work and its final results. Some have expressed a desire that more be written and spoken upon the subject, especially at this time, when such remarkable events are coming upon the world and with great rapidity, affecting all nations, the Jewish portions of them as much as the Gentiles, all suffering tribulation and woe, and anxious for peace and for deliverance from the overwhelming disasters.

The proofs are before our eyes and before the eyes of all the nations of the earth, if they only comprehended Bible history and the prophets, even that such restoration and gathering are according to the promises of an unchangeable God, and that they cannot now be long delayed.

At the time above referred to the angelic visitor also declared that the return of the Lord Jesus Christ was not far distant, even that personal coming which was foretold by the prophets. About the visit of the personage with these instructions it is written in a little book entitled, Remarkable Visions, that the messenger brought "the joyful tidings that the covenant that God made with ancient Israel was at hand to be fulfilled, and that the great preparatory work for the second coming of the Messiah was speedily to commence."

And now in our time we can see that the greatest event that has happened to Palestine for centuries, even the event that has made possible the return of the Jews, was the capture of Jerusalem from the Turks by the British Army in December, 1917. That event also marks the partial fulfillment of the Savior's prophecy in Luke 21: 23, namely, that "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Although the English are known as Gentiles, yet the British Nation has proven itself as the great friend and benefactor of the Jewish race. Also the probability is that the Anglo-Saxons will be found at the end as being of the posterity of Ephraim, and that they will be numbered with those entitled to the blessings of the seed of Abraham, at least many of them in the British Isles, and in Canada and the United States.

In Ezekiel, chapter thirty-eight, the Lord speaks of "Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal," and he says that Gog and "all his bands and many people" with him shall, "in the latter years," come "against the mountains of Israel," "into the land that is brought back from the sword."

As "the land" was virtually "brought back from the sword" last December, by the overthrow of their Turkish oppressors, therefore is the word thus far fulfilled. And more than ever before have the British now become the "nursing fathers" to the Jews. And we confidently expect a gathering of some of the Jews ere long. Of course, only a small portion of the thirteen million Jews that are said to be among the nations can find or now wish to find homes within the present boundaries of what is called "the Holy Land." But, according to Daniel 12: 1, those who go there will be those Jews who are deeply interested in the work of restoration, even those whose names "are found written in the book," as the Lord declares. Evidently they are known to God because of their devotion, faithfulness, and dependability. They will be like those who rebuilt Jerusalem after the return from Babylon, as related in the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah, those who have faith, courage, strength of character, and also a "mind to work," as did their ancestors.

A sketch of the conditions in Jerusalem before the Turks were driven out by the British, and of the great change for the better that followed their occupation of the city, is well worth reading by all who are interested in Palestine and the Jews. I quote here from the account of an eyewitness of the scenes, as published in the Christian Herald, as follows:

Jerusalem was half emptied of its population; some had fled, some had been expelled. Of those who remained all the men who could be pressed into military service had been taken by the Turkish Government, even men who were partially disabled. . . . On every side one saw houses closed, with doors and windows fastened. . . . The houses and schools surrounded by gardens, where hundreds of children had played, were silent as the tomb. . . . In the interior of the city half the shops were closed. The inhabitants who remained in Jerusalem were subjected to the exploitation of the government, and to the ravages of famine and disease. Army officials, both Turk and German, monopolized the food supplies and other provisions and sold them to the population at high prices. . . . A kilo of flour (about two pounds weight) cost ten francs ($2).

The intense anger of the Turks and Germans was concentrated upon the Zionist Jews. Orders were received every day, giving long lists of names, including whole families, who were to be deported to the north, to Damascus, or to the interior of Turkey, or to Constantinople, Sivas, or Angora. There was not one house from which some member of the family had not been lost by deportation, exile, or death. . . . The pasha executed his orders with ferocity. For example he proclaimed that those who hid themselves to escape deportation should be condemned to death, if discovered. Executions had become a daily event in Jerusalem.

After the Zionists had been deported or executed, the Americans became the chief object of hatred. They were named in the official lists and their deportation, to the number of one hundred and twenty persons, was announced. They were to be deported to Damascus. . . . They were expected to go on foot along the miserable trails, under the pouring rains and in the bitter winds of winter, suffering all the risks liable to arise from exposure and exhaustion. . . . The United States Government refrained from declaring war against the Turks, that the lives of American subjects in the Turkish Empire might not be endangered.

When the deportation of the Americans had been satisfactorily accomplished by the authorities they began to make arrests without any formal accusation. They apprehended people in the houses and on the streets and cast them into prison. Among these was the consul of Holland and other prominent Jews. . . . Unexpectedly a new order was proclaimed by Jemal Pasha, expelling from Jerusalem all the Jews and all the Christians. One can imagine the panic which seized upon the population. Even the Turkish officials were themselves embarrassed how to execute this command, how to carry off practically the mass of the inhabitants of the city. . . . The unfortunate multitudes condemned to deportation saw no means of salvation. They hastened to hide themselves in subterranean passages and in various other places of concealment where they could possibly hope to elude the evil hand that sought to destroy them. . . .

By this time the Turkish cannon on the fortification of Jerusalem were directed against Rama, the site of Nebi Samuel (the tomb of Samuel) which was occupied by the English forces. The eyes of the inhabitants of the Holy City were directed toward it, with the prayer that the English might arrive quickly. . . . It was in this darkness that the Jews awaited the approach of their greatest national patriotic festival, "The feast of the miracles," which should now take place in a few hours. And when the sun had set and the city was glorified with the rosy light of the oriental afterglow, the miracle was accomplished, for the English had arrived.

When the next morning dawned upon the city, which had been so long desolated by famine, pestilence, terror, and death, there was established the reign of a righteous peace. The great news of the joy of the deliverance passed from mouth to mouth. All those who were hidden in holes and in subterranean passages, came out into the light. Many threw themselves upon the necks of the English soldiers and embraced them, crying, "We have prayed for you day and night." Jewish women made their way toward the synagogues, carrying with them pots of oil, the offerings of the vows which they had made for deliverance. Also Arab Christian women carried their "oil of offering" to the Christian shrines. And the protecting English flag waved from the tower of David. From day to day life revived. Bread was distributed, the sick cared for, and the schools and shops opened.

The Jews heard openly from the lips of the English victors this message, The land which we conquer is for you. Thus the hearts of the Jews, the race oppressed for centuries, now overflowed with joy. The daily life at Jerusalem has become like a festival, because the sense of deliverance is so great, also the assurance of protection.

The American Hebrew, a Jewish periodical published in New York City, contains news each week about the experiences and affairs of that people throughout the world, and, of course, it reports the Zionist movement, that of preparation and the purpose of many Jews to go and dwell in or near Jerusalem. In the issue of that paper for June 7, 1918, the editor states that "some interesting details of the new life in Jerusalem since the British occupation are contained in a letter from Doctor Jacob Thon, of the Palestine Bureau," the letter being addressed to the Provisional Zion Committee. It appears that the School of Arts and Crafts, which "seemed to have received its death blow" as a result of the war, obtained a start again in January after the British came in December. This school is "devoted to the task of teaching useful vocations to the native youth, devoting particular attention to the arts and crafts." And the paper says that "the British occupation has had the effect of creating a splendid local market for the products of the school, especially among the English officers." The result was that by the end of January three hundred and fifty women were busy at work in the shops of manufacture.

It is also stated that another result of the British occupation has been the starting of many vegetable gardens near Jerusalem, in which much food is being raised to meet the demands of the English soldiers, "and they pay well for everything." This work is expected to "develop into a permanent feature of Jewish life in and about Jerusalem."

Another important point is the statement that "there are now fifteen hundred pupils in the Jerusalem schools," and that "several thousand more could be taken care of if sufficient means were provided." The Jewish societies "are very anxious to secure teachers for their neglected schools," both at Jerusalem and at Jaffa. The editor says that "Doctor Thon writes that if these requests could be granted it would be possible for the Zionist school board to place these institutions on a sound basis, and to permanently establish Hebrew as the language of instruction."

Although the Jews now at Jerusalem and those who are preparing to go there may not now accept the Messiah of the New Testament Scriptures, and though their ways and doings may be far from acceptable to Christians in general, yet they at Jerusalem are fulfilling prophesy, and such will see the truth about the Lord Jesus Christ and be converted when Zechariah 12: 10, 13: 6, and 14: 4 are fulfilled. And certainly the time is near when the historic future will unfold, as declared in Ezekiel 38 and 39, followed by the wonderful manifestations of the Savior in person, as foretold in Zechariah 12, 13, and 14. Those who are known as Latter Day Saints, and all others, must wait patiently for the time when the Lord will accomplish the purposes he has had from the beginning, as declared through his prophets. And the foregoing account of recent events and present conditions at Jerusalem bears witness that the Lord is moving mightily and swiftly toward fulfilling the promises made to Abraham concerning his posterity, when God called him out to be the beginning and the head of the Hebrew people. Surely the hastening time is upon that people, and, indeed, upon all the nations of the earth.

The American Hebrew also contains an account of "an official dinner" on April 27, at which "the notables of Jerusalem" were gathered. The purpose was to hear from Doctor Weizmann, "the leader of the Zionist Commission," as to just what are "the aims and intentions of the commission." Among other Jews present were M. Levi and Major J. A. Rothschild; also the Greek archbishop of Mount Sinai, the Armenian bishop of Cairo, Egypt, the mayor of Jerusalem, the director of education in Jerusalem, and prominent Arab officials, also Colonel William Percy of England. Among other things spoken by Doctor Weizmann were the following:

We are united to-night under the wing of the mightiest of the world's powers, which is fighting for great ideals that are rooted in the love of the old prophets of Palestine. We are the guests of the greatest Bible loving nations. The Jews are not coming to Palestine—they are returning to it. Returning to link up the glorious traditions of the past with the future, in order to create once more a great moral, intellectual center, whence perhaps a new word will come forth to a sorely tried world. . . .

Zionists desire to create conditions under which the moral and national development of those of the Jewish people who freely choose to come to Palestine will be rendered possible. That development must not be to the detriment of any of the great communities already established in Palestine. There is land enough and room enough in Palestine to sustain a population many times larger than its present one. . . . Morally and materially it is for the mutual interests of Jew and Arab to live in friendship and in peace. Only under such conditions is the development of the country possible. . . . Zionists declare that they desire that the supreme political authority in Palestine should be vested in one of the civilized democratic powers, which ought to be selected for this purpose by the League of Nations, such power to hold Palestine in trust until the population becomes capable of self-government.

Zionists watch with deep sympathy and profound interest the struggle for freedom which the ancient Arab race is now raging. To the north the Armenian nation, which is now paying the bloodiest toll to a cruel enemy, will rise triumphantly to claim justice and the right to live in peace. I feel that these three nations, Arabs, Jews, and Armenians, who have suffered most in the world, have the highest claim to a life of their own, to a life of freedom and of peaceful development.

Doctor Weizmann's speech was received with joyful applause, and the Governor of Palestine translated it into Arabic to the understanding of the Arab Grand Mufti of Jerusalem, and the latter made an appreciative reply in Arabic. He said that he "was convinced of the sincerity of the Zionist declaration, and he hoped to work hand in hand with the commission for the good of Palestine."

In their issues for April 10, 1918, American newspapers published a telegram from London about the improved conditions in Palestine since last December. The heading reads, "A new era for Jerusalem," and I quote from the words of the correspondent in Palestine, as given in the Kansas City Star, of that date, as follows:

Jerusalem's first Easter since the British occupation was celebrated with quiet solemnity. . . . The Passover coincided with our festival and was celebrated with a new meaning of joy for the Jews in the occupied territory. Although the occupation dates only four months back, the very atmosphere of the region seems to have undergone a change. Distress has vanished, and sickness and fear no longer are at the threshold of the towns and villages. Everywhere is evidence of reviving industry and prosperity. What has contributed more than anything else to the immediate relief has been the employment of thousands upon repair of roads. Entire households work together and are drawing fair wages, which are paid regularly. The roads near the bigger towns are lined with laborers, Christian, Moslem, and Jew, men, women, and children. Road making and repairing provide an occupation for all who are able to work.

Everybody realizes that a new era has dawned upon this land. The Bedouins can graze their flocks in peace and security, and husbandmen can till the soil with the knowledge that they will not be robbed of the fruits of their labor. The roads which are being built solidly in every direction, together with the railway to Egypt, will insure them easy disposal of their surplus crops. . . . The benefits of a rule of liberty and justice are already making themselves felt, and the people have a lively gratitude to the new occupants, who show them nothing but kindness, fairness, and good nature.

To make more plain the condition of affairs at Jerusalem before deliverance came I quote from the letter of Mrs. Anna Spofford, as published in the Chicago Tribune of May 26, 1918. Mrs. Spofford is one of the leading members of what is called the American Colony at Jerusalem. She wrote as follows:

After having been shut up for more than a year, without one word from the outside world, neither letter nor paper, you can understand our joy when the British walked triumphantly into Jerusalem, delivering us and the people from the heel of the oppressor. Twofold oppressed, one tyrant and another behind him, urging the first on to double cruelty, the Christian tyrant teaching the heathen his tricks, twofold more cruel and treacherous. Humanity, compassion, and love have not been tolerated. You can realize our gratitude and thanksgiving to God who has sent us this wonderful deliverance. . . . I cannot keep the tears from flowing as I write this to you. Not only this deliverance came to us, but also to a poor, oppressed, and starving people, whom we had endeavored to sustain and keep alive till succor could come.

In the Chicago Tribune for June 2, 1918, is published the statement of one of the civilian commission now in Palestine making a beginning toward the reconstruction of that land. He says, in part:

The greatest of all Palestine's needs is afforestation. For centuries the land has been denuded of its trees, with most disastrous consequences, the heavy rains at certain seasons having carried away much of the soil that was on the high lands and valley slopes. Palestine has not always been treeless. There were valuable forests. . . . Now trees of rapid growth will be planted, and for the more cultivable districts fruit-bearing trees will be used. The storage of water in lakes and reservoirs is comparatively simple in Palestine, and supplies can be held that will last through the dry season of the year. Also in southern Palestine are hundreds of living springs, which under centuries of misrule were allowed to choke up and become useless. These can be opened up. Palestine to-day possesses an advantage it never had before, in a first-class railway connection with Egypt. All the surplus crops will find a ready market in the growing Egyptian cities.

According to The American Hebrew of June 21, 1918, some of the Moslems residing in England have submitted to Mr. Balfour, the British Secretary of State, a protest against the Jews being given great rights and powers in Palestine. The paper says of the protest:

They point out that for a period of eighteen hundred years the Jews have had no vestige of claim to the land. . . . The Moslems state that during the eighteen hundred years, excepting the short interruption when the Crusaders held the country, the Moslems have acted with justice and toleration toward other creeds and peoples; indeed that the Jews have enjoyed greater toleration, good will, and respect in Moslem lands than in most Christian countries. And as regards Palestine they protest against any proposal to place Jews in a privileged position, as "the spirit of exploitation, for which the Jewish race has always been noted, is likely to bring them into collision with their neighbors."

They proposed that it should be a Moslem state, but with a council consisting of members from the Jewish, Christian, and Moslem peoples, in proportion to the number of their followers, with equal rights and equal opportunities for free development without political backing from anyone. Nothing is said about any action or opinion expressed by the English Government, or if any reply was made by the officials.

Under the heading, "Modern Jerusalem," The American Hebrew says:

Modern Jerusalem is a peculiar and interesting city. . . . And the population is very mixed, because Jerusalem is the Holy City for the three great religions, Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism. There are representatives of these religions from almost every country on earth. As to language alone it is estimated that at least fifty different languages and dialects are spoken. . . . Also students from all nations throng to Jerusalem, as there are schools there for the study of the Bible and of the languages of Palestine, Hebrew, Arabic, Syriac, etc. Some day a great Jewish university may be in the city of David, and send its knowledge and learning to all the Jewries of the world.

The cruel and bloody persecution of the Jews by the Russian Government and people is well known, especially in 1905, when tens of thousands, perhaps fully hundreds of thousands, were slaughtered in Odessa, Kishineff, Vilna, Warsaw, Kieff, and other cities, when blood flowed in rivulets. Also in Roumania the Jews suffered enough persecution and denial of any rights and privileges as citizens. But now the peoples of both those nations are suffering themselves the very woes they put upon the Jews in times past, being starved and beaten, and slain, also particularly the Roumanians, being robbed of their civil rights and all privileges by the Germans, such as they withheld from the Jews. We wonder if any of them realize the justice of their punishment for the wrongs they inflicted upon a hapless and a helpless people in their borders, to whom they denied citizenship and all school privileges, or to own homes and properties.

But now also Germany is about to begin a worse persecution of the Jews than that nation has inflicted before, as reported from Stockholm, and published in the Chicago Tribune for June 2, 1918. It says that "a new anti-Semitic campaign has begun in Germany. . . . All indications point to the fact that this anti-Semitic movement will be carried on in more extensive form after the end of the war, and that extensive preparations have been made for that purpose." The scheme is to make use of the popular hatred of the Jews to accomplish their desire. We can see that this seems to make quite certain that the Kaiser of Germany will be the "chief prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal," as mentioned by the Lord in Ezekiel 38:2.

The Literary Digest for July 10, 1915, published an editorial from the New York Sun about Jerusalem and the Jews, from which we make the following extracts:

It is estimated that Palestine can accommodate a population of from five to six million people. With the establishment of a new political control of the Holy Land it is intended that Jews shall migrate there. The leaders of the movement say that thus a solution will be found for the race-old Jewish problem. Not only will the Jews have their own land, but also an end will be brought to the discrimination against them in other countries. . . . Many American Jews have already made investment in Palestine. Jews of New York City have made investments in the neighborhood of Haifa. Saint Louis Jews have bought eight hundred acres near the sea of Galilee. Chicago Jews control land near Cana. A large tract in the vicinity of Joppa is in the hands of Jews living in Winnipeg, while Jews of Pittsburgh and Cleveland own eighteen hundred acres near the ancient Armageddon.

The paper adds that it is asserted that the great possibility is that from the sea to the River Euphrates the land will be made productive and yield abundant crops. Soil formerly supposed to be barren has already yielded good wheat crops and other grains and vegetables.

One of the great men of England, Viscount James Bryce, says that it is impossible for Palestine to support five million people, whereas another authority, as quoted by The American Hebrew in June 28, 1918, issue, declares "it is quite possible." He figures that in "the fertile valleys and lowlands" there are about one million, eight hundred thousand acres, which, he estimates, "will suffice to produce sufficient food for six million people, reckoned in meat and corn," and still leave the highlands for orchard and similar development. I do not mention this matter as being needful, because I am sure that the Almighty will provide by greatly added fertility; and also the original grant to Abraham extended from "the river of Egypt unto the great river Euphrates." As six million Jews will not migrate there at any near time no one need be worried about the space for them.

On June 23 to 27, 1918, there was held in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, the twenty-first annual convention of the Federation of American Zionists in America. There were seven hundred delegates present, the largest number ever gathered in their assemblies. Before convening for the five days business there was a grand march through the streets of the city, at least fifteen thousand Jews from all parts of the United States, Canada, and other portions of America being in the parade. It is stated that great "throngs of the general population watched the parade" and its representatives, "from Jewish boys in uniform to aged Jewish mothers," the countenances of all expressing their enthusiasm. In the five days of business it is said there were "various new measures for the furtherance of the Zionist aims," and that "the scope of the new activities may be judged by the knowledge that a budget of three million dollars was adopted for the coming year."

All this manifests the earnestness of the Jews in America; and it appears that in other nations only the overflowing tide of woe and evil, of devastation and death, forbids a like manifestation in those lands. Many more things could be added which I think would be interesting, but this material is enough for one article, and I believe that the items of information herein contained will be of interest to Saints who have desired to know the situation in Palestine and Jerusalem, and what is being done toward the work prophesied of as to come. From about two thousand years before Christ, practically during nearly four thousand years of time, the Lord has spoken about the ancient land and its coming redemption and glory, and surely he will bring it to pass.

I add that a telegram in the Chicago Tribune of July 17, 1918, publishes the following:

Great Britain has shown her sympathy with Jewish aspirations on numerous occasions, and, as a further evidence of this feeling has promised the establishment in Palestine of a Jewish national center, to which Jews from all countries who wish to unite in spreading the influence of Jewish thought and ideals from Palestine to other parts of the world can do so in complete harmony with other peoples.

This was announced "at an official meeting of the American Zionist unit while there on its way to Palestine," held on July 16.

The American Hebrew for July 5, 1918, states that the latest news from Northern Palestine (which is still in the hands of the Turks) is that the condition of the Jews who were driven from Jerusalem last December, or before, "is growing worse every week; . . . many families are literally starving." Very little work is to be had, "epidemics continue to spread, and the death rate is appalling." In one place are fifteen hundred Jews who were taken from Jaffa; they "are on the verge of starvation." At Safed there are five hundred Jewish orphans, those whose parents have already perished.

In this same issue The American Hebrew states that "eight hundred and forty-two American citizens are in the hands of the Turks in Damascus" and elsewhere. It says, "All these are in a pitiable plight. They have suffered many privations, hardships, and indignities." Our missionary, Brother Rees Jenkins, is among those sufferers, as he was one of those driven from Jerusalem by the Turks, but late word from his wife in Jerusalem tells us he is with a Christian minister who treats him kindly.

Mentioning the colonies of Jews in Palestine, The American Hebrew states that the largest one is near Jaffa. "The value of the land has increased twelve-fold since 1890." The population is three thousand, and they own eight thousand acres of land. There are "great water works for irrigation," and they raise oranges, lemons, almonds, grapes, and all kinds of cereals, and they also have a dairy farm. They hire Arab laborers at an expense of about two hundred thousand dollars per year.

On another page of this issue of SAINTS' HERALD will be found a quoted article, "Results of the Zionist Convention." It contains the resolutions adopted and shows how the three million dollars will be raised for the work intended.

I close this with a few extracts from an article, "The deliverance of Jerusalem," written by a noted Jew, Doctor Tchlenow, after the occupation of Jerusalem by the British. The doctor died since December. Following are most excellent paragraphs:

It has come to pass. A great and splendid event has happened before our eyes, the significance and consequences of which we cannot yet fully realize. . . . Jerusalem has fallen before the bloodless advance of Britain's victorious army. . . . Above the tower of David the banner of the British lion is unfurled. . . .

Fellow Jews, eighteen centuries and a half have passed since the enemy drove our forefathers from their native land. Like lions did they fight and defend their Jerusalem. Their hearts were rent asunder by the mere thought that they might have to leave it. But Rome was merciless. Only in one thing she could not affect them. The fugitives bore away in their hearts the fire of love which they handed down from generation to generation. And they also handed down a solemn injunction: no Jew shall laugh aloud until Jerusalem is once more made free. Thus centuries passed. And during the term of the persecutions that swept over it, along the whole thorny path of its wanderings, the people did not cease to believe that the dawn would again appear. . . .

We shall come there, and with the sweat of our brow, and our love in our hearts, we shall make the land blossom again. . . . Boundless is our joy, but equally boundless is our responsibility. . . . Will we be equal to our task? . . . Gather your physical and material forces. Purify your spiritual powers. Prepare yourselves and your near ones for the great act of regeneration of our land which awaits us, and we shall then fulfill it. Nobody can or dare doubt.—The American Hebrew, June 14, 1918.

THE LAW AND THE COVENANTS—Part 4

BY COLUMBUS SCOTT

"THE ANNEXED LAWS AND PENALTIES BECAME A NECESSITY"

The ceremonial law was not "annexed" to the moral law for the reason that the law was complete. (Deuteronomy 5: 22.) It was added, or annexed to the Abrahamic covenant because of transgressions, and as a means of leading men to seek the means of grace as provided in the everlasting covenant. When the everlasting covenant was made with Adam, as the remedial system to do away with sin, certain penalties were joined to the gospel, such as the curse upon man, and the earth for man's sake.

The idea that the ceremonial law was "added to" the Abrahamic covenant, is a new one! This seems to have been unknown to any of the Bible writers. Jesus never taught it, Paul was ignorant of it, although he studied at the feet of Gamaliel, a learned teacher of the law (Acts 22: 3), and learned the gospel by divine revelation from Jesus Christ only. (Galatians 1: 6-12.)

The author is here commenting on Paul's statement found in his epistle to the Galatians, when he contrasts the law and the gospel, the inability of the law to save—give eternal life—and asks,

Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator.

We cannot learn from the Bible what is meant by a law called the "moral law" as contradistinguished from a "ceremonial law." Did God ever give a code of law to any people at any time that was not moral? When? Where? Jesus recognized the law given to Israel at Sinai, as one, not two.

For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.—John 1: 17.

And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also.—Matthew 5: 40.

The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it.—Luke 16: 16.

Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.—Matthew 5: 17, 18.

What is the difference here in the meaning of the word fulfilled, as applied to the fulfillment of "the law," and the fulfillment of "the prophets"? After their fulfillment, shall either be continually in force, and repeated?

But again at this point: When the Savior and his disciples went through the cornfield "on the Sabbath Day," and the Jews objected because it was not lawful, as they thought, to do thus, Jesus replied to them, first referring to David and friends, eating "the shewbread," which was not lawful to be eaten save by the priests, and quoting: "Or have you not read in the law, how that on the Sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the Sabbath and are blameless?" (Matthew 12: 5.)

In the offering of the "daily sacrifice," Exodus 29: 36-42, it was not omitted on the Sabbath Day, but was offered "day by day continually." But the lesson here learned is that all the requirements of the law of God are of equal importance, whether it relates to the observance of the ten commandment part of the law, or any of its ceremonies. Jesus recognized any part of the law as "the law," not one command in the law stood in the way of any other part. Offering of the daily sacrifices was how the priests profaned the Sabbath.

"For the Son of man is Lord even of the Sabbath Day." (Matthew 12: 8.) His Father and he instituted it. They abrogated it when its purpose intended was accomplished. The law ceases as a religious requirement where and when the great covenant, the gospel, is in force.

Paul says:

Now the end [or purpose] of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned: From which some having swerved have turned aside unto vain jangling; desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm. But we know that the law is good, if a man use it lawfully; knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers, for whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for men stealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine; according to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust.—1 Timothy 1: 5-11.

Doubtless this language refers to the law of which the decalogue was a part. Here the apostle says that those who embrace "the commandment," new covenant, the gospel, and then assume to teach the law as essential to salvation, turn "aside to vain jangling," and we add, to unite the gospel and the law, create that by which a union of church and state may be created. But Paul tells such as embrace the gospel:

Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead.—Romans 7: 4.

The law was a national law, and all who to-day transgress that law, answer at the courts of the land, where penalties may be visited, as a national law is holy, just, and good.

But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter.—Romans 7: 6.

The law here referred to by Paul is the decalogue, which says, Thou shalt not covet, the tenth commandment thereof.

Paul did not condemn the law God gave to Israel at Sinai, but since the gospel of God's grace had found him, and he had obeyed it, he found it to be death, not life, to attempt to serve God under two adverse systems of law, that were "contrary the one to the other."

For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot do the things that ye would. But if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law.—Galatians 5: 17, 18.

Saints by the gospel, then, "the dead to the law," "are not under the law," "the new covenant," the gospel, is all-sufficient, "that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

The law given to Israel was a national law, and related wholly to the mortal life. It was designed to govern and keep order, and preserve Israel as a nation if faithfully observed, till Christ came. Its principles of justice are now found in the civil law. But the penalty of the ten commandment law, as visited on the transgressor, is not in force in all respects, as in ancient Israel. Its penalties are dead, so far as the gospel is concerned. The law as given at Sinai cannot be executed by the church. Transgressors of the law of the land, if members of the church, are handed over to the government for punishment. This is right. The only thing the church can do is to disfellowship its sinning members, when they are impenitent. "Wherefore then serveth the law," in the church, under the gospel? Where would be forgiveness for the Sabbath breaker in the church (see Exodus 35: 1) if that law is yet binding, and not fulfilled? (Matthew 5: 17-19.)

But it was fulfilled, and as a religious guide in the church died at the cross, was taken out of the way. (Ephesians 2: 13-16.)

But to show conclusively that inspiration recognized all the law as one, and as a code not contradistinguished as the moral law or the ceremonial, let us quote a final text:

Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill me? The people answered and said, Thou hast a devil: who goeth about to kill thee? Jesus answered and said unto them, I have done one work, and ye all marvel. Moses therefore gave unto you circumcision; (not because it is of Moses, but of the fathers;) and ye on the Sabbath Day circumcise a man. If a man on the Sabbath Day receive circumcision, that the law of Moses should not be broken; are ye angry at me, because I have made a man every whit whole on the Sabbath Day? Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment.—John 7: 19-24.

This is sufficient. To kill is forbidden by the law. To circumcise is a part of the law, so Jesus decides. To divide it as to a "moral law," and a "ceremonial law," is wholly human, and not authorized of God.

Wherefore then serveth the law now?

THE LAW ADDED TILL CHRIST

Since the apostle Paul does not say in Galatians 3: 19, the law "was added" to the Abrahamic covenant, there is no evidence that it was, nor is it said anywhere in the Bible that it was because penalties were needed; we can fully agree with the rendering given in the Emphatic Diaglot, thus:

Why then the law? It was appointed on account of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise related; having been instituted by means of angels in the hand of a mediator. Of one party, however, he is not the mediator; but God is one. (Galatians 3: 19.)

To affirm that the law was added to the Abrahamic covenant because penalties were necessary, is to assert that the covenant God gave to Abraham was a covenant that was not perfect. Moses says: "He is the rock, his work is perfect."

The covenant made with Abraham is the gospel. (Galatians 3: 8, and verses 16 and 17.) It is the identical gospel preached by Paul. It is through Abraham and his seed, the Christ, we are saved. And it is through Christ Abraham is to be redeemed. So Paul argues in his letter to the Galatians 3.

But why need we dwell here? The gospel was perfect from before the foundation of the world. It is God's eternal purpose. (Ephesians 3: 11.)

out of the gospel, to the obedient, so the penalties to be visited on those who rebel against it, and those who impenitently transgress it, likewise grow out of it, as a part of it. The gospel is God's eternal law, and law as related to intelligent agencies is not law without rewards and penalties, for obedience and disobedience. Law as thus related does not exist without these. Otherwise, what is its purpose? The law, or covenant, was instituted at Sinai with Israel, "on account of transgressions." (See Exodus 34: 27-35; Deuteronomy 5: 1-4; 4: 13, 23; Exodus 24: 1-8; 4: 13, 23; Jeremiah 31: 32.) All teach that the covenant in whole and in part, was made with Israel as a nation, and with them only, including all its individual relationships; was with them only. All say it was instituted at Sinai and not in Eden, nor with Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, or Jacob. (Deuteronomy 5: 1-4.)

And as Paul argues, its continuance was to be only till the seed, Christ, to whom the promise was made, should come; as a religious guide, or as a means to eternal life, it was fulfilled, brought to an end, served no purpose to the church, or kingdom of heaven, after Christ came, and so ended. We are no longer under the law. (Galatians 3: 19-25; 4: 19-25.)

That the law, covenant, made with Israel, instituted at Sinai, was fulfilled by our Savior (Matthew 5: 17), and ceased to be binding, can be learned by a diligent study of John 8: 3-12, with Leviticus 20: 9-12. By the law the penalty, death, must be executed by the court and its executors. No place was provided for repentance and a change of life. No pardon for sin on conditions of repentance was provided in the law, but Jesus, by the gospel, came to seek and save the lost, on conditions of repentance, and obedience to the gospel. It was in this that the law was "contrary to us." And the Savior "took it out of the way." (Colossians 2: 13, 14.)

No real pardon could be granted unto life by or under the law. Hence its fulfillment and abrogation, and for penalties we must look to the law of the land, and to the future judgment.

(To be concluded.)

"Success is largely a matter of a good beginning. Also a knowledge of when to quit."

At present man loves personal gain, and it is the incentive that urges him to his labors. Take away that incentive and he would not work. Imbue him with a broader ambition that shall include others and he retains an incentive; he will work just as hard for the advancement of Zion as he did for his own sole advancement. If we doubt this we may well ponder the question, What incentive did Christ have? He thought so much of others that he became the servant of all.—Elbert A. Smith.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

RESULTS OF THE ZIONIST CONVENTION

Among the many important things done at the National Zionist Convention, in Pittsburgh [June 23 to 27, 1918] was the passing of a new constitutional provision putting a personal tax upon every member of the Zionist organization in America, to make good the $3,000,000 budget that is to be raised this year toward the establishment of the Jewish Republic in Palestine. The imposition of this tax is the first "national tax" imposed upon Jews in 2,000 years. It is to be the beginning of a tax that all loyal Jews will be asked to pay, until the republic in the Holy Land has become self-supporting.

Briefly stated, the fundamental laws by which the new Jewish State will be governed are:

First: We declare for political and civil equality irrespective of race, sex, or faith of all the inhabitants of the land.

Second: To insure in the Jewish national home in Palestine equality of opportunity, we favor a policy which with due regard to existing rights shall tend to establish the ownership and control by the whole people of the land, of all natural resources, and of all public utilities.

Third: All land owned or controlled by the whole people, should be leased on such conditions as will insure the fullest opportunity for development and continuity of possession.

Fourth: The cooperative principle should be applied so far as feasible in the organization of all agricultural, industrial, commercial, and financial undertakings.

Fifth: The system of free public instruction which is to be established should embrace all grades and departments of education.

Sixth: Hebrew, the national language of the Jewish people, shall be the medium of public instruction.

While the words "single tax" are not mentioned in the resolutions, Mrs. Fels, who is one of the delegates to the twenty-first annual convention of the Federation of American Zionists, is satisfied that they embody her ideals.

"Palestine will be free of all the evils from which modern society is suffering," she declared. "We are profiting by the experience of the rest of the world, and the whole world will come to us and institute the reforms which are now part of the fundamental plans underlying the creation of the Jewish State."

Bernard A. Rosenblatt, chairman of the Palestine Bureau of the Provisional Zionist Committee, and for six years past the honorary secretary of the Federation of American Zionists, addressed the Zionist convention on the subject of "Taxation of land values and the Palestine labor problem." He outlined a policy which is recommended by the Palestine bureau of the Zionist organization for action in up-building the Jewish State.

This policy deals with the program of land taxation, the recommendation being that all the increased land values of Palestine from August 1, 1914, after the beginning of the great war, shall become the property of the Jewish State and shall be appropriated by the Jewish State in the shape of taxation annually assessed. Mr. Rosenblatt said:

The plans of the Palestine bureau call for enlistment of "soldiers of industry" who will volunteer to go to Palestine for a period of two years and to work for the purposes of rehabilitating the old Jewish land. The plan contains the provision that this industrial army should be organized on a cooperative basis.—The American Hebrew, July 5, 1918.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Mid-year Executive Meeting
June 20, 21, 1918

The executive has been holding monthly meetings, but it developed that it would be convenient for all but three members of the committee to be present at this special meeting. According to the request of the president the day was named for a mid-year meeting, and plans were made for a two-day session. Mrs. D. J. Krahl, president, Holden, Missouri; Mrs. Helen Silsbee Smith, Philadelphia, supervisor Relief and Service Bureau, who was visiting relatives in Lamoni; Mrs. Lydia Wight, Lamoni, supervisor Home and Child Welfare Bureau; Mrs. Alice Mae Burgess, supervisor Young Woman's Bureau, en route from Saint Louis to Lamoni; Mrs. Fred Koehler, first vice president; Mrs. William Madison, second vice president; Mrs. J. A. Gardner, secretary; Mrs. F. H. Esgar, treasurer; Mrs. M. H. Siegfried, historian, all residents of Independence, were present at both sessions. A message had been sent to Mrs. Frederick M. Smith, honorary president, who was in Washington, District of Columbia, notifying her of the meeting. Mrs. Dora Glines, supervisor Educational Bureau, is in California for the summer and could not be present. Mrs. Audentia Anderson, Omaha, Nebraska, editor, had notified us that it would be impossible for her to attend.

The meeting opened on June 20 at 10 a. m. with an automobile drive through Kansas City with eight of the principal Kansas City institutions for social service as objectives. The cars were graciously provided by Brethren N. F. Tower and A. J. Green. Walter W. Smith and wife, M. H. Siegfried, and Mrs. B. R. McGuire accompanied the committee. The following institutions were visited: Children's Home, Institutional Church, where a summer school for all nationalities was in session, mothers' training school, Swope Settlement, Athenæon Club House, Girls' Hotel, a working girl's home, and Mercy Hospital, an institution for crippled children.

The day was one of the hottest June days that Kansas City has known, and we were uncomfortably warm at times, but were met and conducted with courtesy and consideration at every place. This day was a happy and profitable introduction to the session which followed on Friday. The conclusions formed in the minds of the women since the visit will bring results to the future work of the Auxiliary, we feel sure.

The suggestive program for Friday was arranged by the president as follows:

Routine business from 10 a. m. until noon.

Luncheon, 12.30.

Address, Mrs. Frederick M. Smith.

New business: Establishing the Woman's Auxiliary in London. Topics for discussion for prospective service: "The war and the Woman's Auxiliary." "The church and the Woman's Auxiliary." "The community and the Woman's Auxiliary."

Interesting items noted from the reports of officers.

Mrs. Lydia Wight submitted fifty-five articles which she had secured from the Government and which she hoped to have used in the HERALD as space would permit. These articles are on home and child welfare work and are the best that the Government can secure.

Mrs. Gardner had secured free over one hundred and fifty leaflets for distribution to the organizers. These had been contributed at her request by Doctor Drake of the Illinois Board of Health, Doctor Thomas Wood of New York, Chairman Committee on Health Problems of National Council of Education, and Mrs. Ira Couch Wood, Chairman Home and Child Welfare work, Chicago. Mrs. Gardner also reported that previous to the time when Mrs. Glines had started west, she had written to the presidents of branches in several of the western cities through which Mrs. Glines would pass and asked them to arrange meetings for her at a stated time. It was worthy of note and most encouraging to receive the prompt response and the expressions of willingness to arrange according to Mrs. Gardner's request. We are assured of the hearty cooperation of these brethren from Denver, Colorado Springs, Ogden, and Salt Lake City. Sudden illness in Mrs. Glines' family prevented her making the appointments but she plans to arrange for the same appointments on her return trip.

Mrs. Helen Smith reported that the influence of the war had interfered with the regular course of the relief and service work but that she had considered the war activities her first and most important duty.

Mrs. Alice Burgess stated that she saw a great necessity for girls' meetings where girls may discuss girls' problems. She had secured the services of Mrs. Bertha Anderson Hulmes of Independence as Social Advisor to the girls and young women of the Auxiliary.

The discussion of the necessity for more printed matter and of leaflets defining the work of each bureau was lengthy and important, promising definite action later.

The question of coordination was discussed at length and out of it developed the discussion of local and district organizations, trained workers and field workers.

In the establishing of the Woman's Auxiliary in the British Isles Mission, the president nominated Mrs. Pearl Crick, daughter of Bishop May as organizer, and the executive approved the nomination.

The meeting adjourned at five-thirty. Each member present expressed herself as having enjoyed the two days given for this midyear meeting, the first of its kind in the history of the organization, the work done being educational and inspiring. MRS. J. A. GARDNER, General Secretary.

"One man can do but a small part of this work; and no man can do any part of it without God's help, or when he pits his strength against God and against his brethren."

From the Holden Stake

The Woman's Auxiliary in Holden was organized in the fall of 1916, shortly after the stake was organized. For many years there had been a very active and prosperous aid society, which later joined the Auxiliary. Three Oriole circles were organized before the stake organization was effected.

In education we have a class in child study using the Forbush textbook, with Sister Georgia Dillon teacher. Sister Dillon is greatly interested in this line of study and has aroused a deep interest in the members of the class. The class began studying last fall and continued through the winter, and has decided to pursue their work on through the summer, as the attendance is the best it has ever been. The first Sunday afternoon of the month we have a mother's problem meeting, followed by a Bible research class. In the problem meeting we discuss both the social and spiritual welfare of our young people and are attempting to work concertedly in their behalf.

In the Bible research class we felt the need of more accurate knowledge on the apostasy of the early church, profane history bearing thereon, and the events that led up to the restoration of the gospel. Therefore we have been studying prophecy and the history of the first and second centuries, thus far. The subject matter is most interesting and we feel we are preparing ourselves for a more intelligent presentation of the gospel, which every member as well as minister should be qualified to do.

The Evergreen Circle with the B-Square Circle decorated the chapel in the "Home for the aged" and gave a Christmas program. The three circles, the third one consisting of very young girls, gave a banquet to all visiting Orioles at reunion last fall. This was held in the dining room of the home and was a most pleasant affair.

In the home building two splendid rooms have been given to the Oriole Girls by Bishop McGuire for their use until such time as they will be needed for the home occupants. The larger room was furnished with rugs, couches, tables, etc., making a very attractive rest room for the guests of the reunion. (The reunion was held on the home grounds.)

The individual activities of the Evergreen Circle are two ice cream socials, netting $12 and $10.58, a pie social on Thanksgiving, $12.60. A large oval, gilt-framed mirror was purchased for the rest room, with green trading stamps collected by the girls. A cloak and dresses were made for poor children. Substituted in Religio programs. Sent six plates of fruit to sick ones at home. Sent carnations to home at Christmas time. Gave a New Year party to the other Oriole Circles.

The B-Square Circle was given the use of a plot of ground, a part of the home garden, on which they raised tomatoes, sweet potatoes, pop corn, and onions. The proceeds amounted to $20. Waited on tables at a social given by the aid society. Assisted in serving refreshments at a recital. With the Evergreen Circle and Boys' Improvement Association gave a supper for the purpose of purchasing permanent furnishings for Oriole rooms. Proceeds were $12. Gave a social at the home of Brother and Sister Mitchell for the purpose of creating a fund for recreation at reunion. At present preparing an honor roll for soldier boys. Both of these circles have paid their circle tithing and assisted in branch expenses.

Sister I. M. Ross, stake organizer who succeeds Mrs. D. J. Krahl, went to Post Oak on the 14th by request of the Oriole girls there and reorganized them. The circles previously organized seemed to have lost interest for a time, but now are enthusiastic and anxious to take up the work again.

At Lexington Mrs. Lola Johnson is doing a splendid work along relief and service lines, demonstrating wartime economy to a group of women who meet once a week refashioning and recoloring clothing. She is also conducting an enthusiastic class that is taking our public speaking course. Several of the brethren have asked admission to the class.

We hope to have the work revived at Knobnoster and Warrensburg after the reunion is over. At both of these places excellent classes were organized and several branches of our work taken up, but of late, for many reasons, there has not been much activity. At Sedalia some relief and service work has been done. We shall endeavor to have class work in every branch of the Holden Stake.

SISTER KRAHL.

Have You Sent for These Bulletins?

Things every mother must know, if the Nation is to meet the health needs of its children as indicated by the draft and still further revealed by the weighing and measuring test, are made available to-day by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor in its new bulletin on Child Care, prepared by Mrs. Max West.

A third of the men examined for military service in the first draft were found to have physical defects which rendered them unfit. Many of these defects might have been overcome if they had been recognized and dealt with in early childhood; the period between two and six is often the time when such defects make their first appearance. Child Care has been prepared in the hope that it would enable mothers to understand and recognize symptoms which indicate the need of special care, and also to give mothers the better understanding of the simple laws of hygiene through which it may be possible to prevent the development of such defects at all. It will be especially useful to thousands of mothers who have learned by the weighing and measuring test of defects and weaknesses in their children which need particular attention.

Child Care deals with children from two to six years old and is the third issue in the series which began with Prenatal Care and Infant Care. It contains simple rules of health and hygiene, including carefully compiled directions about proper food, suitable clothing, suggestions for play and exercise, for discipline and training. It gives simple menus for young children. A list of books on child care and training is added.

Don't start nervously if a child makes a noise or breaks a dish—keep worry for broken bones.

Don't sigh too often over servants' shortcomings.

Don't get excited if the servant has neglected to dust the legs of the hall table; neither the welfare of your family nor the Nation is involved.

Don't exhaust all your reserve force over petty cares. Each time that a woman loses control over herself, her nerves, her temper, she loses just a little nervous force, just a little physical well-being, and moves a fraction of an inch further on in the path that leads to premature old age.

Don't go to bed late at night and rise at daybreak and imagine that every hour taken from sleep is an hour gained.

Don't eat as if you only had a minute in which to finish the meal.

Don't give unnecessary time to a certain established routine of housekeeping, when it could be much more profitably spent in rest or recreation.

Don't always be doing something; have intermittent attacks of idling. To understand how to relax, is to understand how to strengthen nerves.

Don't fret and don't worry are the most healthful of maxims.—Selected.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Temple Chimes

All departments of church work radiate with the light of hope from the dome of this temple branch. We had the enjoyable privilege of addressing the mission so ably opened and conducted by Brethren Joseph Biggs and Earl Curry at Mentor Plains, last Sunday evening. An intelligent class are very near the door of the kingdom at that point.

Another opening on Waite Hill, a historic point in the Northwestern Reserve, 1827-1830, when Alexander Campbell's reformation star was in full blaze, but long since eclipsed. When Sidney Rigdon embraced the so-called delusion of latter-day revelation, the disciples at Waite Hill staggered, the church of Campbell, Scott, and Stone reeled and fell. What will grow up in its place?

Sunday school is largely attended at the temple, and prospering greatly. Indeed there is an encouraging status to branch work in its various lines. Brother John Lewis presides with wisdom and dignity.

We are glad to report the organization of two choral societies—senior and junior. Kirtland throbs with vocal and orchestral rendering of anthems. Apostle Griffiths and District President Manchester visited Kirtland last week, giving good cheer and encouragement to all. The former tarried over sacrament Sunday.

Visitors yet come in streams, especially on Sundays, to look over the grand old temple. On the Fourth of July, with a large party came one gentleman, distinguishing himself as follows: "I have traveled in Europe and the Orient, visited the pagodas, the temples of Moslem, and India, admired the pagan splendor of marble and gold, but never witnessed such beautiful simplicity, made marvelous by hand carving, as is the architecture of this building. I am a designer myself, and I do not see how that people who erected this temple, could do the delicate work without a pattern."

I replied: "They did have a pattern which they claimed was given by revelation from God." He gave me a vacant stare, and then continued, "I am with you on baptism, you have that right, but where do you get your Aaronic priesthood in the New Testament church?" I answered: "John the Baptist, 'sent of God,' was a leading minister of the New Testament church, and was a priest of the order of Aaron, administering the gospel, and he baptized Jesus Christ into the New Testament church. He inherited the priesthood from his father, Zacharias, and not a single person is recorded as questioning that authority. Also, in Acts of Apostles, the New Testament says that in the progress of church work, 'many of the priests became obedient to the faith'—the gospel. Now from the standpoint of your religious belief, you would not take the position that those priests gave up their priesthood, would you?"

"Well, I don't care to discuss the subject," said he, and we moved up to the second auditorium.

A party of ten from Oberlin College were much pleased to be reminded of the checkered career of "Spaulding's Romance," and said, while they were apprised of the safe keeping of the original manuscript in the archives of the college, they would be enthused to request a perusal of the same when returning.

A week ago last Sunday we had no less a distinguished visitor than Lieutenant "Teddy Roosevelt, jr.," attired in his official British uniform. In the midst of our talk to about thirty or forty people in the second auditorium, he blurted out with a "Teddy" show of teeth, "Where do you keep your wives?" I answered with as much jest as he intended, "Oh, they got tired of civilian life, and are gone off to France after British officers." This brought the laugh, but we there preached a second sermon on the "one wife" system, based on the teachings of the architect of the building known as the Kirtland Temple. I wonder that so few of the many visitors here know the distinction between the true and the false as relates to the two churches.

We are all still interested in the conduct of the great war waged on the eastern soil. We have confidence in the ancient record of America which foretells that the Gentiles "set up" on this continent should be a standard to the nations of the world, and feel that the cause for which our boys are fighting will bring victory to our arms, and as a consequence establish the Gentile government on this land as a model republic. But oh, the depths of intrigue and profiteering! We do detest the idea of coining the tears, the heartaches, the sacrifices of fathers and mothers, wives, sisters, and brothers, whose dear ones are suffering and will likely leave their bodies, torn by shells, on the ensanguined field.

Happy indeed, Mr. Editor, is the situation of that country whose internal resources are such that all her food, clothing, and elements which make for convenience, and comfort, can be produced within her own borders, and trebled be her happiness in her security if with all these resources she is separated by thousands of miles of ocean from other great powers that would desire to threaten her. No nation can compare with the United States in these respects, and while the greatest industrial power on the globe has evolved from this situation, how many think of the prophecy, "Blessed of the Lord be his [Joseph's] land," for just such resources, just such situation.

Hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

A Sailor's Prayer

[Brother A. N. Hoxie recently sent us the following unusual letter which we are pleased to pass on to our readers.—EDITORS.]

June 25, 1918.

Dear Al: I crave your indulgence for a little spiel on prayer. I made up my mind a few weeks ago that, as I often forgot my prayers when all was rosy and things "coming my way," resolved, that when danger and perhaps death were lurking around I would not suddenly remember to call on the Lord whom I had forgotten when there were no clouds on my horizon, but take my medicine in silence.

This argument I think is perfectly logical. If the Lord is not interesting to a man in times of quiet, why "squeal" for comfort when you need him more? I don't mean to be sacrilegious, but I don't want to be "yellow," either, hence this conclusion.

This last trip was especially dangerous, and we turned in, many a night, wondering if we would be alive in the morning, for the way of the transgressor and the way of the transport ship is hard. The President Lincoln was sunk a day or so back of us; the Powhatan we believe torpedoed, as we picked up one of her empty and drifting lifeboats, with evidences of having been occupied. The Dvinsk was sunk just in front of our path and we brought forty-six of her survivors to port. Submarines laid for us in front of our harbor, and we made a detour of many miles to avoid them.

But rather than raise a prayer for my hide when I knew I didn't deserve an answer, I kept my mouth shut. But to come to the main point. When there was no danger I did find it most comforting to pray one night, and as near as I can remember, this was the prayer:

"Heavenly Father, Lord God of battle! Thou didst give to Jacob's son a fruitful country over the hills; yea, a running vine which thou hast nourished often, a land of freedom blended by the nations' overflowing peoples who sought refuge here—free from oppression, and never oppressing others.

"Lord! hear the prayers we raise to thee! Our country's heroes, inspired by thee, walked in paths of wisdom and truth, cherishing thy laws and loving our neighbors—seeking not conquest but striving for peace.

"Now we, a mighty nation, have risen, bearing the sword for just principles. If thy cause be ours, if thou art with us, baring thy sinew, we must conquer.

"Lord, give courage to the hearts of our youth; arm their souls with thy Spirit. We beseech thee to ease the sorrow caused to friend and foe alike. Blend the kingdoms into a kingdom. Thy kingdom come. If it be thy will, abolish war, establish Zion, and give us the King of kings to rule. Amen."

Then, somehow or other, just because I felt that way, I began humming the "Hymn of admonition," and to my surprise found I could blend the words to that music easily. I want your opinion of the words as arranged for the music, and tell me if I can use any other old tune to it than "I will sing of my Redeemer." If it is worth using, you may have it. If you advise sending just the words to the HERALD, I shall do it. If you think it is a new line of thought, I shall hum it to myself at nights. If you think it is trash, I shall tear it up. Will you try to let me know by the 29th, as I think we will sail again?

Yours,

OGDEN.

PRAYER FOR AMERICA

Heavenly Father, Lord God of battle!
Thou didst give to Jacob's son
Over the hills, a fruitful country,
A running vine oft nourished by thee.
Land of freedom, blended by nations'
O'erflowing peoples—refuge sought here,
Free from oppression, never oppressing—
Lord, hear the prayers we raise to thee.

Our country's heroes, by thee inspired,
Walked in paths of wisdom and truth,
Cherishing thy laws, loving their neighbors,
Seeking not conquest, striving for peace.
Now have we risen, a mighty Nation,
Bearing the sword for principles just,
If thou art with us, baring thy sinew,
The cause be ours, conquer we must!

Lord, to the hearts of our youth give courage,
With thy Spirit arm their souls.
Ease the sorrow, we beseech thee,
Caused alike to friends and foes.
Blend the kingdoms into a Kingdom,
Give us to rule the King of kings.
If it be thy will, Zion establish—
With war no more—thy kingdom come.

Toronto, Ontario, News Items

A "farewell" to Brother J. W. Rushton was the chief event of the week in Toronto. The Woman's Auxiliary conceived the idea. Everybody "fell" for it. Result: The basement of the church, which has hitherto housed previous social features, was crowded with a happy, joyous gathering of Saints and friends. A very appropriate program was rendered as follows:

Opening address, A. McLean; reading of resolution of appreciation and presentation of token of remembrance by Sister Molly Dodd; remarks, T. W. Williams; duet, "The Allen Sisters"; piano solo, Sister F. G. Pitt; reading, Louise Bryant; vocal solo, Charles McLean; reading, Molly Dodd; remarks and recitation, F. G. Pitt; reading, Eva Whitehead; vocal solo, Blanche Needham; refreshments.

This occasion was the outpouring of generous hearts in appreciation not of the man, but of the new vision of Christ which he had brought to them.

Regular business meeting of the branch continued over two evenings and then postponed to Wednesday night of this week. The duration indicated the general activity. Not a jar throughout the sessions. The following actions obtained:

Election of officers: Archibald McLean, president; Mike Crowley, presiding priest; Leslie Prentice, presiding teacher; James Clark, presiding deacon; Sam Clark, musical director; W. Ward, secretary; A. McLean, treasurer. In addition to the above a branch correspondent, board of auditors, librarian, and other officers were selected.

Provision was also made for:

A branch council meeting comprising all branch officers, officers of the Sunday school, Religio, and Woman's Auxiliary, together with all standing and special committees. This meeting to be held on the first Monday in each month.

Quarterly business meetings convening on the second Monday in March, June, September, and December.

Annual election of officers at the December meeting.

Monthly priesthood meeting on the third Thursday in each month.

Holding of a special patriotic service on Sunday evening July 28, at which time a service flag will be dedicated.

Holding of a reunion at Low Banks, August 3 to 11.

Election of a general reunion committee with T. W. Williams as chairman.

Resolutions were adopted as follows:

To rescind all resolutions or branch actions which, in any way, reflect on the general church or church officials, together with all resolutions at variance with the general laws and usages of the church.

Expressing confidence in the general authorities of the church and pledging support in the carrying out of the laws of the church.

In appreciation of the action of the appointing powers of the church in sending T. W. Williams to labor in the Toronto district and pledging support.

Extending welcome to Patriarch F. G. Pitt.

Directing the president and deacon of branch to remove picture of R. C. Evans from the front window of church.

Establishing a gospel literature fund and election of gospel literature committee.

Indorsing copy of letter presented by T. W. Williams accepting challenge of R. C. Evans for public debate and pledging support.

Authorizing publication of suitable literature and pamphlets dealing with the apostasy of R. C. Evans and supporting the positions of the church.

Brother Rushton returned from Chatham on Thursday.

He reports successful meetings, with the church membership standing loyally by the church. He went to Niagara Falls on Saturday accompanied by Brother Pitt. He will return to Toronto, Thursday, and leave for Erie Beach reunion, from there to Independence and home.

A significant dream was related by Sister Johnson at the Sunday morning prayer service. Sister Johnson came to Toronto in 1916, her husband being in France. She is a member of the Edmonton Branch. In her patriarchal blessing, under hands of Brother John Shields, she was warned that she would be tempted even to the point of leaving the church but commanded to stand by the standard books of the church. At the time of the recent deflection she was in doubt—attended some of the meetings of R. C. Evans—after which she had the following dream: She saw herself in one end of a large room; one half of the room was light, the other half dark. The light began at the center of the room and grew more brilliant as it approached the end where it was brilliant beyond description. At the very center of the light was Jesus Christ. As it was with the light so in contrast appeared the darkness in the other half of the room. She saw herself in the extreme end of the room where the darkness obtained. She was filled with a desire to go to the other part of the room where Jesus was. She found that she was prevented from doing this by a man who was standing near the center of the room on the dark side. She lifted her voice in prayer that Jesus would look toward her, feeling that, if he did, she would be enabled to pass. He did so, stepped towards her and beckoned her to come. She was now enabled to pass the person who blocked her way and crossed to the other part of the room.

She did not, at once, get the interpretation to this dream. In the meantime she had been importuned by Mr. Evans to sign a card and thus join his church. Whilst debating whether she should do this or not she had another dream. In this dream she saw herself and another who was urging her to sign a paper and she heard a voice saying, "If you sign this you will sign away all your rights. She awoke and then realized the import of both dreams and her duty in the matter. She never signed the card. She is now with the church, and Mr. Evans has not prevented her coming to the service of the Master.

Our prayer meetings are looked forward to by all of us with joy. The Spirit of the Lord is with us in power and the members are rejoicing in the Lord.

An Assault Over Result of Debate

Brother W. W. Christensen and I have just returned from Twelve Corners, in Camden County, where we engaged in a four-day debate with Elder James M. Bandy of the Baptists, on church propositions.

The debate developed from an attack on the Saints by Elder Bandy, in January; the writer was sent for to meet him. We met and answered him at the time, and tried to engage him in debate immediately; but this he would not do, although he was offered fifty dollars to engage in debate at that time, as he had claimed he would be out that amount if he remained to engage in debate; but even that would not induce him to enter into the debate, but wanted to wait till the summer. So by correspondence we agreed upon the date of beginning to be July 9.

A large arbor was built adjacent to the Twelve Corner's church building. Large crowds attended the debate, and great interest was shown. Two days were given to each proposition, our church being affirmed first.

All passed off peacefully and quietly till the debate ended; then it was apparent that some of the Baptists were very angry. One of their members and his brother, not a member of any church (but whose wife is a Latter Day Saint) attacked Brother W. P. A. Willoughby and gave him a severe beating, for no reason whatever, only that they charged him with starting the whole affair, because he challenged Elder Bandy at the time he began his attack on the Saints.

The Baptists and their sympathizers formed a ring around the attackers and the attacked and forbade anyone interfering. However, interference was made before our brother was killed, but not until he had been severely injured, and some others coming to blows.

Some one suggested it looked as though they were repeating the "mad men of Munster" scenes. Those not Baptists look upon the affair as a plain concession of defeat. The few Saints there are greatly encouraged. Brother Willoughby says he is ready to take another threshing upon any future occasion of victory for the truth when it has been assailed by enemies.

We remained and held meetings over Sunday, but it seemed the people had become so frightened over the disgraceful occurrence after the debate closed that not many came out to the meetings.

Elder Bandy will never make an effective debater against the Saints. To his credit we may say he is more of a gentleman than some others we have met. His moderator, Reverend R. B. Cornett, seemed to be a gentleman in every particular. We were pleased with his deportment.

Brother Chrestensen was my moderator, and rendered valuable assistance.

We are now holding meetings at and near the home of Brother David Williams, five miles northeast of Cross Timbers. Several calls for preaching in this county.

A Mother in Israel Gone

Each succeeding year that the Saints met at Plano, Illinois, to hold their annual reunion, one individual Saint was always found among them, old Sister Brand, well up in her eighties when she first attended, and past her ninetieth milestone at the last one.

On July 4, we received a message from her daughter, Mrs. C. E. St. Clair, saying her mother had passed away, and asking me to come and conduct the funeral the following day. Of course we responded to the call.

I formed the acquaintance of Brother and Sister Brand about thirty years ago, while I was living in Wisconsin, and often listened to their testimony, and interesting experiences crossing the plains and in Utah.

Brother Brand passed to his reward October 3, 1906, at the ripe old age of ninety-one years.

From Marengo, where the funeral was held, we went to DeKalb, Illinois, where there is a lively branch of the church with Elder John S. Casper in charge, with two efficient assistants, Doctor C. D. Carter and Elder Hayden.

New Branch at Waterloo

Several Saints had gathered here in Waterloo from various localities during the past few years, and some missionary work done which resulted in several more being baptized. Then a Sunday school was organized, and a request made to Elder William Sparling, district president, to have a branch here. Brother Sparling and Apostle Paul M. Hanson came here and held meetings several evenings, instructing the Saints in regard to their duties and responsibilities. On Monday evening, June 17, at the residence of Brother Victor A. Hall, a branch was organized, Apostle Paul M. Hanson in charge of the meeting. The branch was named for the town, Waterloo.

Victor Hall, deacon, was recommended to be ordained a priest, and was elected president; Brother Edward L. Loper elected teacher; William H. Hinds, deacon; Peter M. Hinds was appointed clerk, and Sister Maud Loper, agent to solicit subscriptions to the church periodicals.

There are about thirty members. We hold Sunday school from two to three, and meetings from three to four o'clock every Sunday, at Kistner's chapel, 316 West Third Street.

Respectfully, PETER M. HINDS.

Experiences with "Anti-Mormon" Lecturers

[The following extracts from a personal letter to President Smith from Elder E. J. Gleazer, of Archbald, Pennsylvania, are of much interest.—EDITORS.]

There are some things which I think you should know in regard to the lectures which have been delivered throughout this valley by representatives of the National Reform Association. When I learned that they were to speak in German I asked two of the brethren to attend the lecture and see that we were not misrepresented. I warned them to be polite and to keep cool. If nothing were said in regard to our church I told them to be silent, but it happened that the difference between the two churches was called for, and Doctor Tibbers gave the audience to understand that there was little difference. They will state that we do not believe or practice polygamy, but that is about all they are willing to give us credit for. This did not please the brethren that were present, especially when they noticed that the feelings of the audience was stirred against our church. Remarks were made about us occupying on the street, etc. So one of the brethren asked Doctor Tibbets if we believed in blood-atonement, Adam-God theory, and other certain things which are practiced in the Mormon church. He answered no. Then Mrs. Marion Williams arose and cleared the name of the Reorganized Church. I have heard her lecture in Carbondale and Peckville, and I wish to state that she commences with Brigham Young, and all through her lecture she deals with the Mormon church. I had the pleasure of having twenty minutes of conversation with her preceding her lecture, and I discovered that she was well informed in the history of the two churches. I escorted her into the Baptist Church where she was to lecture. I thought that it would have an effect upon the audience, many who know me because of our street work in that town. Her lecture was very fair and no Latter Day Saint could find fault with it (I mean the Reorganized Saint). I could discern that some things were not clear to the audience. I waited for others to ask questions but no one attempted it; after careful thought I asked questions which, when answered, cleared the name of Joseph Smith and the Reorganized Church. She told them of Young's dream in Europe; held him responsible for polygamy; told how Emma Smith claimed that she was the only wife her husband ever had. Accused Brigham of stealing the presidency, stating that provision was made for the eldest son of Joseph to be his successor. She further stated that we were hated by the Mormon church more than other people. Said that it was a shame that an innocent people should suffer for the crimes of the Mormon church, and many other things did she say in regard to our work. In fact, she made it so clear that certain people are accusing her as false, finding fault with her lecture, all because she told the truth. The Baptist preacher said he was glad that I asked that question, for he was given to understand that we were conducting a Mormon mission in Archbald.

Far West Stake

The work in the Far West Stake is making steady progress—not moving with great rapidity, but we trust it is developing in good form. The First Saint Joseph Branch has been favored with a variety of speakers since the General Conference, among them being J. W. Rushton, F. M. Sheehy, F. F. Wipper, F. A. Smith, P. M. Hanson, in addition to the local force. Good work is being done in the branch services. The Sunday school has a competent and successful superintendent in Brother Harry W. Tilden, and the Religio is in charge of Brother Lonnie Woodside, who is increasing attention and interest. Sister E. E. McCormick and others of the sisters are active in Red Cross work; a divisional department of the Saint Joseph Chapter of the American Red Cross was duly organized at the First Branch, in behalf of which a public patriotic service was held, prominent people representing that work participating.

The Bible Class of the Sunday school presented a large flag to the church, which, with a service flag purchased by the Sunday school was duly dedicated by prayer, address by W. W. Scott, accompanied by appropriate music, dedicatory prayer by B. J. Scott.

Not the least among the useful features of our service is the choir, led by Sister Dana Scott, chorister of the stake. Sister Edna Christiansen continues to act as organist, and is reliable and attentive to her duties, though a very busy person in her home and professional life. Those who devote their musical talents to the service of the house of God are to be commended and appreciated, as many do here. The Sunday school orchestra, led by Sister Pearl Kinnaman, is a feature that has greatly contributed to the success of the school. It has rendered programs elsewhere and thus advertised the church and its works.

Besides the First Branch, Saint Joseph contains the Second and Third branches, also the South Park Mission, presided over by Brethren J. L. Bear, Coventry Archibald, and D. W. Wilke. The Second Branch has lost some of its boys who have been called into the service of their country, as have the others, but it is growing and doing good work. The Third Branch will hold a dedicatory service on Sunday, August 4, at 2.30 p. m., when the building will be formally dedicated. An interesting service is anticipated. The South Park Mission is doing well; the Saints there are considering a proposition to buy the building now rented by them, and if so will improve it.

A. E. McCord has been having success at Trimble, where he baptized a goodly number, which provides a nucleus for future growth. B. J. Dice, formerly president of the Far West District, has been placed in charge there; he also assists G. W. Mauzey at Edgerton Junction Branch. O. W. Okerlind is continuing his missionary work in the northern part of the stake; he is a reliable man and an untiring worker. Brother McCord did tent work at Hamilton; he has taken the tent to Mirable, a point near old Far West.

Samuel Twombly, appointed to do missionary work in South Saint Joseph, is succeeding well and is liked because of his genial disposition. He will locate his home in South Saint Joseph soon.

R. S. Budd has been duly installed as pastor at Cameron, hence that important point will have the constant service of a young man who can and will give the work careful study and active service. He is a young man, progressive and able to develop the work among young people as others.

The reunion of the stake will open at Stewartsville on Friday, August 16, and on time; those coming should be ready for the beginning. New grounds, high, beautiful, well wooded and drained, and good programs prepared for all, old and young.

The semiannual auxiliary convention of the stake convened at Guilford, Saturday and Sunday, July 20 and 21.

Other points and features will be reported later.

A BROTHER.

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE, June 23, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have been thinking of writing a letter to your valuable pages for some time, because I wanted to thank you for the comfort I receive from reading the splendid sermons, articles, and letters that I see in the HERALD, and I have the same praise for the Ensign and Autumn Leaves.

When I get through reading them, I let the other boys read them, if they care to, or I take them to the Y. M. C. A. if there is any around where we are, which of course is not always the case, but as a general rule if there is none a "hut" soon comes on the scene, and we surely like to see them here, for they take the place of home here in the Army.

Our chaplain preached quite an interesting sermon this morning at the Y. M. C. A. Among other things he told us why a rooster was placed on nearly all the church steeples over here in France, and also in some of the other countries in Europe. I thought it might be interesting to some of the HERALD readers as it was to me, so here it is as near as I can remember it.

In Matthew 26: 31, Jesus said: "All ye will be offended because of me this night." Peter answered (verse 33): "Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended." Jesus answered: "Verily I say unto thee, that this night, before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice." Peter replied more boldly than before: "Though I die with thee, yet I will not deny thee."

The rooster is placed on the church steeples to remind the people of that event, and help us not to make such straightforward promises and then not keep them. I might also add that if we do make mistakes, let us repent of them as Peter did, and not give up, but keep on trying.

It reminded me of the verse I read in the HERALD some time ago of the man who starts to make a fortune, but fails, and gives up, and is not half the man as he is who fails and keeps on trying.

So, dear Saints, when we fail or make a mistake, let us not get discouraged and quit, but let us keep on trying. I know I've made many mistakes or failures in trying to do right, but I am still trying to overcome them, and ask an interest in your prayers that I may receive strength to overcome that which is not in harmony with the Father's will.

This is a very pretty country where we are at present, with the beautiful sweet-scented hay, flowers, fruit, and other things. The only thing that spoils it is the thundering of the big guns a short distance away, but it strengthens my faith, as I see prophecy fulfilled every day. But I hope the war will soon be over, so that we can enjoy a season of peace again. Those of the Saints who read this and care to write to me, I would surely be pleased to hear from, as letters are very welcome over here. Well, I will have to close for this time, wishing the HERALD and its editors and all the Saints many rich blessings from him who knows our every need.

Your colaborer,

PRIVATE JOSEPH SANDIDGE.

[This letter from Sister Stinson was accompanied by the relation of a spiritual experience which was personal to her, and for that reason we do not give it further publication. This experience afforded her much encouragement, with the assurance that this is the true church, though she has been about to stumble because of darkness, and because of apostasy. Especially was she in danger of stumbling because of the failure of one man. The important item is that she received the assurance of the truth and comfort in her hour of trial.—EDITORS.]

OTTAWA, ONTARIO, June 29, 1918.

Editors Herald: As I am a sister in the gospel, I have great joy in being able to add my testimony of the truthfulness of this work.

While I feel that I am not at all worthy of the many blessings which my heavenly Father has given me, being among the least that should receive, for the reason that I have been of such a doubtful nature as to the work being right.

I have been in the church for the last two years, and had set my mind and heart on serving the Lord better than I had in the past, and enjoyed this gospel message very much. I saw it was in complete harmony with the Bible, yet that awful doubt would arise so often within me. Is this the true Church of Christ? was the question with me.

I had been deceived before when I thought I was being truly led by the Spirit of God, for I was always an earnest worker in the churches, and tried to live a life which I thought would be most pleasing to God, my heavenly Father. Then the thought would arise, Was I still being led by a wrong spirit?

I knew of none that could settle this question in my mind but my heavenly Father. He had said, Ask and ye shall receive. I therefore made it a matter of prayer, turning my whole heart and thought to him, and I can rejoice and praise his name, because he has proved to me to be as good as his word. For on that same night of that day, June 23, in which I turned to him for light, it was given to me.

I am sending you a copy of what was given and if you think it wise to publish it, it might help some other person who may be in the condition I once was. I hope we shall always be able to put our trust in the Lord, and call upon him in all times of trouble, for he is a friend to all those who love him. May we ever be found faithful.

In gospel bonds,
ELIZABETH STINSON.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, June 29, 1918.

Editors Herald: Our annual reunion was dispensed with this year, and the district conference was held at Spokane, June 21, 22, and 23. There was a goodly representation from the various branches, and a very enjoyable three days were spent.

Brother S. S. Smith is still our district president, with Brother Oscar Case as vice president. Brother Oliver Turnbull was sustained as secretary. L. E. Holmes and Harley Clark were ordained to the office of elder.

Friday evening a fine program was rendered; consisting of music and papers on timely subjects. Saturday night, an interesting patriotic service was held. The new stars were added to our service flag, bringing our number up to fourteen.

Brother Amos Tomlinson left for Camp Lewis, Friday, June 28. A number of the Saints gathered to his home the evening before his leaving, and bade him Godspeed.

The Sunday school is showing a good interest in the Christmas offering. The little girls are to be especially commended for their efforts in the past months.

Brother Smith left for Kellog, Idaho, Friday. Recently he has visited the following branches: Valley, Mansfield, Sagel, and Coeur d'Alene.

We hope these branches are duly appreciative, for his smiling countenance is greatly missed by the Spokane Saints.

• CORRESPONDENT.

RISCO, MISSOURI, June 30, 1918.

Editors Herald: This is my first attempt at writing a letter for your valuable pages, which I feel sure can better be used by those more ably fitted to instruct. But I shall not try to instruct, as I very much need instructions on many things. I hope all, or at least all essential things, will be made plain to me as God sees fit to enlighten.

But what I desire is that some of the elders may see this and give us a call, as the gospel in its fullness is badly needed in this growing neighborhood. We have some fine neighbors, and a few are interested in our gospel as preached by Latter Day Saints.

We have done our best to be good neighbors. We have loaned our HERALDS and other literature, and hope to do more, as the Lord directs. My husband was a Baptist, but desires baptism in our church, as he has been shown the greater light, and anxiously awaits some of our elders' coming, that he may unite. Our home, though a humble one, will always shine forth a welcome to God's messengers, and I think our schoolhouse would be available to preach in, as others hold protracted meetings here. As we hold singings at our house occasionally, we could also hold meetings, if refused other places. But we feel too sure of the firm friendship of our good neighbors to think of being turned away.

We want to stand firm and steadfast, and hope and pray that we may be visited soon by elders.

We feel that much good may be accomplished here. Before closing this letter I would like to tell how my husband was converted, as he desires it.

After reading the HERALD and other church literature, and comparing certain passages in the Bible, he began to believe, but a Hardshell Baptist is hard to convince. He and his people are all Hardshells. He thought he would obey that old passage in the Bible: "If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God." So he prayed one beautiful, clear evening for the Lord to let him know if the Latter Day Saint Church was the only true church of God, and to let it be known by sending a rain before day. And I, not knowing my husband's thoughts or prayer, awoke, and wondered to find it raining. But he doubted yet.

A few nights later he retired, feeling in perfect health, and he prayed again, this time, that the Lord would make him so restless he could not sleep. About ten o'clock that night he became very sick, and it lasted about four days. He had to get treatment from our family doctor before he was able to perform his daily duties. But he wore a contented smile, and does to this day, which makes the writer very happy, too, so that we want to share our joy with others, including his people, who are still Hardshells.

We live about one quarter mile west, one mile south, and about three quarters west again from Risco, but a letter would bring us to the station to meet you any time.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. J. E. CLEVELAND.

Editors Herald: Thinking that something from me at this juncture would facilitate my mission work, I address you this letter. To begin with: I have received many responses to the notices I have inserted in the church papers. Practically all these responses have come from the Panhandles of Oklahoma and Texas. I have therefore decided that I will arrange a tour covering the various points from which invitations have been received. This "tour" will include several places in what has been called "No Man's Land" in Oklahoma, and the parts of Texas immediately to the south. I have not of course had invitations from all the Saints that are known to be living in this part of my field. Nor will those who have failed to respond be visited unless they let their wants be known. This notice is herewith inserted to inform such that they will be passed by, for I shall take it for granted that conditions with them or in their several localities are not favorable to missionary effort. I would like to hear from as many as can see their way to write, so as to include as many places as possible in my itinerary.

One of the reasons for this trip will be to ascertain as to what places offer the best opportunities for ministerial labor. After having found these places work will be concentrated on those which are the most promising, although we shall endeavor to do justice to all so far as time, strength, and opportunity will permit. I wish the Saints to understand that this journey will be especially in the interests of remote neighborhoods, or places where isolated Saints reside. Under these circumstances we appeal particularly to places that may be considered neglected. Our object is to get into touch with places where we may be able to form working groups of Latter Day Saints, with the view to the permanent up-building of the church in organized form. We do not mean by this localities where such groups of members already exist, but also places where groups may be formed by baptismal accessions.

This trip will probably take up my time until the beginning of autumn; indeed, the autumn may be well advanced ere it is completed. Please respond, Saints, that you many not be left out. I am beginning this "tour" now, so there will be plenty of time for those farther along the line to inform me as to their wishes ere the trip is over. I am sending a copy of this notice to both the HERALD and Ensign that the matter may be given as wide publicity as possible. My permanent address is still Hugoton, Kansas.

Praying for God's richest blessings on his work and people, I am

Your brother in Christ,

FLINT, MICHIGAN, July 7, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am writing you from Flint to let you know how things are progressing here along the gospel line. We now have two branches in this city and the possibilities of another very shortly.

The Saints here are of a high spiritual caliber (I speak for branch number one) led by our able branch president, R. A. Harder. We have working in this city Elder Matthew Liston, who has won his way into the affections of the Saints by his brotherly ways. To illustrate: Branch number one is making some much needed alterations, and to save expense a call was made for volunteers to do the work evenings and Saturday afternoons, when, lo and behold, here came Mr. City Missionary, donned up in a suit of overalls, and who worked just as hard and just as long as the rest of us. He can preach just as well as he can mix cement.

June 22 and 23 the district conference was held here, and according to action of General Conference, the district was divided and new officers chosen for the new districts. Everyone who came to the conference was well repaid for the effort, as we had a very good time, the Spirit of the Lord being felt in mighty power.

It was brought to a conclusion by the rendition of the cantata, "The Holy City," by the choir and orchestra of number one branch before an audience of about eight hundred people. The work is growing apace, and baptisms are getting to be quite the rule. The priesthood are all awake and alive to their responsibilities.

We have twenty-two stars on our service flag, denoting that number having gone from us into the service of our country. May the Lord of heaven preserve them and bring them back to us safe. We leave them in his care, well knowing the love he has for his children.

Let us stand firm, Saints, in these trying times, for we remember it is said, "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." Let us, then, press onward and upward to the mark of our high calling in Christ Jesus, is the earnest desire of your brother.

FREDRIC, IOWA, July 8, 1918. *

Editors Herald: I have been a reader of the HERALD and Ensign, and enjoy the sermons. I am isolated from all church privileges, as Hiteman is the nearest place and it is fifteen miles from here.

I was past sixty-nine years of age when I heard Brother J. S. Roth preach the first Latter Day Saint sermon I ever heard. He was holding meetings at Avery, Iowa, three years ago. When I came home I told my wife I had found my church. I was baptized September 25, 1915. The only thing I regret is that I did not hear of this work sooner.

Brother C. Scott has been here and held meetings at Fredric three times, and Brother Roth twice since I embraced this gospel. Brother Roth came here June 27, 1918. He preached nine sermons.

Friday, June 28, we had to give up the schoolhouse for a War Savings Stamp program. Brother Roth made us a patriotic speech which all thought grand, as well as his sermons. Our village subscribed $740 to the War Savings Stamp fund, after Brother Roth made his speech.

Both my wife and oldest daughter have embraced this gospel, through the preaching of Brother Scott and Brother Roth, and good seed has been sown in this community. I think more will follow and will be ready for baptism when we hold our next meetings, which I hope will be in the near future.

Moines Saints, preaching the Mothers' Day sermon. Here I also met our congenial colaborer and president of the district, O. Salisbury, also Bishop E. O. Clark. I made a number of new acquaintances and renewed a number of old ones. In the afternoon I was requested to make a talk before the men's meeting, and whatever there was lacking in quantity, was indeed made up in quality.

In the evening in company with Elder H. H. Hand we went on to Perry, a very neat and up-to-date railroad town, where we began what later proved to be one of the very best series of services I ever held, this being greatly enhanced by the cordial treatment received from the editor of the Daily Chief, who gave us space for a synopsis each day of the sermons preached. By this means we were enabled to reach thousands of people. I found in this branch a loyal, loving, united band of Saints, ably presided over by Brethren H. H. Hand, John Salisbury, F. A. Settles, M. B. Skinner, L. W. Maley, and E. C. Kibby, whose efforts all contributed to the success of our three weeks' meetings. Four were baptized at the close, and two later.

June 1 found us at Rhodes, attending the district conventions and conference. Here, too, we found some Saints fully entitled to right of that name, and the kindness of a number will not soon be forgotten. Elder C. M. Richeson and his assistants preside over this branch. Be it to the credit of the Saints of Rhodes, they have one of the neatest church buildings I have ever seen amongst our people. After the conference, Brother E. A. Warr and myself tried to hold meetings, but the inclemency of the weather hindered us until later, when we were enabled to prosecute our work for ten days longer. We hope that some good resulted from our efforts, both from within and without.

This writing finds us occupying each evening in the city park, with fair crowds, and some little interest. In and around this country are to be found some few faithful ones, the parts that make up what is left of the Concord Branch. On last Sunday we met in the McClland Schoolhouse, where Brethren Fred Wells, Frank Robertson, and the writer administered the sacrament. I tried to encourage the Saints, resulting in the organization of a Sunday school, which I trust will prove of great benefit.

The weather conditions are ideal; crops of wheat, rye, barley, and oats are good; corn never looked better. One cannot help viewing these conditions as strong indications (providential or otherwise) to frustrate the object of the Kaiser.

Any information with reference to missionary work will be gratefully received by the writer, at his home address, 1517 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri. The demands and importance of the times impel us to utilize every opportunity, that it may count.

Being unable to answer all who have written from my late mission in Central Oklahoma, let me say that your many tokens of kindness will linger on memory's walls, that more and more make the poetry effective, "Blest be the tie that binds."

Ever praying and laboring for the time to come when peace shall be established upon the earth, to be taken therefrom no more.

Your brother and colaborer,
JOSEPH ARBER.

G. R. Wells, superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, visited Guilford, Missouri, on the 20th and 21st, having a part in the Sunday school and Religio convention of the Far West Stake at that place. He reports a very good convention with much interest, and attendance as good as could be expected. He spoke principally on coordination.

Married

LINDQUIST-SILK.—A very pretty military wedding took place Tuesday evening, July 2, at the home of Brother and Sister J. W. Silk, when their oldest daughter, Myrtle Irene, became the bride of Richard Lindquist, of Chicago. Ceremony was performed by Elder E. M. Orton, in the presence of about thirty guests. The bride looked charming in a dress of pale pink with veil and orange blossoms. She carried a bouguet of white carnations. The groom, being of the military police of Fort Brady, was dressed in his uniform. Miss Louise Hemmerson was bridesmaid, while Sergeant Lawrence Campbell supported the groom. House was decorated with flags and flowers; a dainty luncheon was served.

FROM HERE AND THERE

The Independence Sanitarium recently took first prize in a Camp Fire Girls' parade in Independence for the best decorated truck. They were awarded ten dollars on a truck that was occupied by a number of nurses from the Sanitarium, all in Red Cross costume.

W. S. S. FUND TO THE BISHOP

At Columbus, Ohio, the First and Second and Clintonville Sunday schools held a Fourth of July picnic on the State fair grounds. There were about 120 present from the three schools. At the noon lunch there were short patriotic talks from Brethren Clark, Lewis, Matthews, Schaufenberg, and Mills, Sisters Weate and Arthur, each having a son in the service "over there." A collection was taken and sent to the Presiding Bishop to purchase War Savings Stamps as a free-will offering to the church. Enough was secured to purchase two stamps. It was a pleasing combination of patriotism and religion.

Apostle Peter Anderson was in Lamoni last week, looking after the work incident to the Sandhedens Banner, being on the editorial staff. Later, he went on to Idaho and Washington, via Independence.

Elbert A. Smith and family, Israel A. Smith and family, J. W. Luff and family, and probably J. F. Keir and family, expect to be among the campers at the Lamoni Stake reunion, beginning July 31, at Lamoni.

ATTENTION, MISSIONARIES

This word is from a missionary to a missionary. What is it that persistency will not accomplish, when we are on the right track? Where would we be, as a church, as a nation, if every printing press were destroyed? And had there been no scribe, in days of old, what would we have to offer in place of the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants? Nothing. We recognize their importance. Yet, after all, not one of these three books means much to the people if not taught by those having authority. And this teaching is done with the voice and the pen. We do not dispute this fact. The HERALD, Ensign, tract, church book, have their mission. An explanation or exposition of the gospel in them will reach millions of persons if proper organizations are effected to bring about this end. Won't you help? I believe that this work primarily falls upon the shoulder of the missionary. As yet few branch presidents seem to take proper interest in the gospel literature movement. We hope that an awakening to the seriousness of this call, which is from God, will be felt by every member of the church. Will you, brother missionary, urge every president you meet (branch, Sunday school, Religio) to organize local boards of the gospel literature work? In some way get them in touch with the Gospel Literature Commission, that the momentous work of warning our neighbor may be accomplished. Every effort made by a missionary to distribute literature will bring forth fruit a hundredfold, for the gospel literature work is doing the work of a John the Baptist in preparing the way for the gospel to be preached in its fullness. To-day, brother!

R. W. FARRELL.

Prayers are desired for Mrs. A. M. Taylor, Los Angeles, California, Station T. She is the mother of five little children and is now in the hospital at that place awaiting an operation.

A "PERISCOPE" IN THE GOSPEL STANDARD

In The Gospel Standard, of Sydney, New South Wales, for June 1, 1918, appears a new heading, a fac-simile of the one used over the Periscope department in Autumn Leaves, edited by "Delbert." Above it is a line which says: "Imitation is the sincerest flattery," and instead of "By Delbert" is "By Telbert." The department is composed of short news items and comments, ranging from serious to humorous. The introductory paragraph is as follows: "This periscope is not related to those on German submarines, but to the Periscope of Delbert in Autumn Leaves. Since it will be the object of the writer to tell what he sees and hears for the benefit of readers, he has decided to adopt the pen name 'Telbert.' Related to Delbert? Yes, full brother. That is all I intend to tell with regard to my own personality, so please do not be too inquisitive." Success to you, brother, there is room for both of you; we all like to have the foibles of the rest of the folks shown up and be told the things we ought to know.

Apostle J. W. Rushton visited Independence two days, en route from Canada to his home in Los Angeles. He had a short conference with the Presidency, and on the 25th took his departure for the West. He is to be at the Southern California reunion.

Elder Floyd M. McDowell took his final examination for the degree of doctor of philosophy on the 24th at Iowa City, after spending the school year at the University of Iowa at that place. His dissertation was on "the junior college: a study of its origin, development, and status in the United States." From the biography we quote: "Returning to Graceland College (after receiving his B. A. and M. A. degrees) he became dean of the first junior college to be organized in Iowa." His recent studies and research have been valuable to him for the work of the coming year; as dean of the junior college and teacher of psychology and education at Graceland College.

Brother and Sister W. M. Young state that they have moved to Superior, Wisconsin, and would like to meet any of the Saints in that community. Call or mail locations.

Any of the Saints in the Saskatchewan District who desire the services of Elder James C. Page as missionary to the district should address him at 1009 Twelfth Street, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan.

Apostle J. A. Gillen will do office work in Independence for a few weeks.

Assistant Historian H. S. Salisbury is expected to attend the Lamoni Stake reunion, beginning July 31.

It was thought best to call off the arrangement whereby S. A. Burgess and wife were to be in attendance at the Southern California reunion. They will be at the Lamoni Stake reunion about the same dates.

Brother Arthur B. Church, formerly in charge of the radio department at Graceland College, is now a special duty man at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. There are about six hundred men in the radio school there all the time, and Brother Church is one of four instructors to teach the theory of electricity. The work given is not nearly so thorough as that offered at Graceland and he is sure that Graceland graduates would soon be promoted to noncommissioned officers in military duty.

President F. M. Smith, Bishop B. R. McGuire, and Apostle Paul M. Hanson are in Canada attending the reunions.

CHURCH FLAG CHOSEN BY WAR-TIME COMMISSION

In recognition of the peculiar solemnity and national significance of religious services at the present hour and in response to a widespread demand throughout the country, the General War-Time Commission of the churches has selected a church flag, which it recommends that the churches use as a symbol of their patriotic purpose to further by their spiritual force the great cause of democracy to which our country has dedicated its arms. This flag may be retained after the war as a flag representing the church, a flag of worship and of service, to be used whenever it is deemed appropriate by the churches.

This flag may be obtained in two patterns. One, a triangular white pennant with a blue cross in the center, is the regulation church flag of the American Navy. It is the custom to fly it during divine service just above the American flag and on the same staff. It is the only flag which may be so flown. The Commission has obtained permission from the Navy Department for its use by the churches in a similar manner. The other pattern is a rectangular white flag with a blue cross in the center. This is recommended particularly for draping within the church itself. Both flags can be used for draping within the church, but only the pennant should be flown from a vertical flagpole.

On July 19, Elder Ammon White officiated at the marriage of Silas C. Elliott, of Denver, Colorado, and Miss Ethel F. Kelley, of Lamoni, a sister of the late James E. Kelley of the Quorum of Twelve. The bride is a graduate nurse from the Independence Sanitarium. They will likely make their home in Denver, where the ceremony occurred. Brother Elliott is an employee of the Santa Fe Railway.

In a personal letter, a Canadian brother whose name we are not at liberty to disclose, writes from Toronto: "I have had good success in my field; a number are ready for baptism. I had a good turn out last evening, and was blessed by the Spirit of God to a great measure. The work in Toronto is improving; the people who went out with R. C. Evans are beginning to come back. I heard yesterday that quite a number of the Saints are disgusted with his attacks. We have had the nicest prayer meetings since he left I ever was in; everyone seems to be baptized by the Spirit of God. Brother McLean made this significant statement yesterday: 'We have passed through some very trying times, but the degree of the Spirit we have enjoyed in our meetings has more than repaid us for all our sufferings.' I am beginning to think that we have not heard a sermon in years since I have been listening to the brethren preach. If the Devil does not start something quick we will get too happy to want to go to Zion or anywhere else. The peace we are having is blessed."

Bishop A. Carmichael recently visited Nauvoo in the interests of the church work there, in connection with the repair work being done on the church property at that place.

Brother T. R. White writes to the Church Recorder from Lowry City, Missouri, that there is no longer a branch at that place and only a few members. They would appreciate a call from any of the elders if for nothing more than a visit. He does not know of any place for holding meetings.

"BY STUDY, AND ALSO BY FAITH"

When Joshua builded an altar upon Ebal he was instructed to use rocks that were unpolished and unshapen, upon which the tools of man had never rested, just as they came from the hillsides. Upon these rocks Joshua was instructed to inscribe the law of God. God could wash them with his rain and whiten them with his sun in his own time.

When done the altar reflected the copartnership of God and man in the work of its construction, but to God was granted the initiative and the ascendancy all the time. None of the polished stones from the pyramids upon which the skilled workmen of Egypt had labored found a resting place in that altar.

Just so God has often passed by the learned and polished and has selected some common man, and having washed him clean in the gospel covenant has inscribed his law upon his heart and erected him before men as a memorial—so it was with Peter, whose name signified a stone. A rough, unpromising stone he seemed; in the schools of the rabbis there were a hundred more prepossessing, yet God called him and made him one of the "lively stones" in his building. Such men may be ignorant when called; it is no crime to be ignorant; it is a mistake to remain ignorant, and that they do not do.

Joseph Smith was one who availed himself of the true theory of education from the very beginning of his religious life, and there was the secret of his success. That theory was epitomized in a revelation given to him in 1832, and it is this, "Seek learning even by study, and also by faith." (Doctrine and Covenants 85:36.)

He put that principle to the test in the opening chapter of his religious life, when only fifteen years old. The great revival which had stirred his mind regarding religion was ended. The almost inevitable quarrel followed. Church was divided against church. Contention, confusion, and strife reigned. Men tried to "argue it out." The boy was torn in spirit, and he studied the matter but was not equal to the task of sifting the truth from the contradictory claims presented to him by various denominations. Then he sought by faith in connection with his study.

In the woods, alone, he prayed for light. He had read in the Bible the very definite promise, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

He accepted this promise as still being in force. In response to his faith God gave him a most remarkable revelation.

Now mark the contrast: Here were the churches striving to settle divine questions in man's way, studying, disputing, contending; yonder was the lad in the quiet of the woods, taking religious questions to the author of religion.

The world says that God inspired the churches and that the Devil inspired the lad. We do not believe it. We believe that no sage or philosopher could have taken a wiser course. He had laid hold upon a great principle, and that is the principle which he came to stand for above all others, namely, the principle of continued revelation.

So far as we know he then stood as the sole representative of the thought that God would still answer prayer. That may seem a harsh statement but mark you: first, the general surprise when he declared that God had answered prayer; second, the general incredulity. The reception of his statement shows the condition the religious world was in.

When he came out with his message two courses were open to people: If they really believed in answer to prayer, they could say, "It may be true; we will examine it and see"; if they did not believe in answer to prayer they could say, "It cannot be true, because God no longer speaks." The latter course was almost universally adopted and is still maintained. The issue is fairly drawn:

Above the cry of the world, "God used to speak," Joseph Smith shouted, "God does speak," and the world has neither forgotten nor forgiven him. He restored the original text of John's great definition of God to read as of old, "God is love," as opposed to the popular rendition, "God was love." God must not be defined in the past tense.

Men may learn a great deal by study, and when in connection with study a living faith is exercised, there exists a cooperation between the student of facts and the author of facts that is strictly in line with the divine plan. Christ taught his disciples to search the Scriptures and he also promised that in response to faith he would guide the one searching until he should obtain all truth.

Here is the church; one day in seven men come to it to exercise faith; yonder is the school or college; to it men go five days in seven to study: we need a closer union of faith and study. Bring to the church the keen, analytical intelligence of free men, and study and assimilate all that is to be found in sermon or prayer meeting or Sunday school. Do not hire a pastor to do all the thinking, and evidence a supreme and self-effacing credulity by accepting him as infallible. On the other hand take to the school or the workshop a faith that will bring God into your investigations.

This church stands for the thought that man is free to study all good books and thus find what his fellow man thinks about certain subjects; and in addition he is free to betake himself to intimate personal communion with God and learn what he thinks about those subjects.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A MAN WHO CHALLENGED GOD

Some years ago, as a child, we read a clipping about an agnostic who demanded to know, why, if there is a God, he did not strike him dead when he was going up and down the country denying him all the time, why he was permitted to do so apparently without objection.

One of his hearers gave the answer in asking another question. "Did you ever see a dog bray at the moon?"

"Why, certainly."

"Did you ever see the moon come down and hit him?"

"Why, no."

"No, the moon just kept right on shining. The dog's barking didn't hurt it a bit. So it is with an agnostic. God just goes on doing his work, shining and loving humanity. But have you ever noticed that when a man really comes out to defy God in direct terms, that the consequences often follow with surprising suddenness?"

The author went on to cite an instance which had come under his observation, to show that a man might go on just talking against, but when he proposed a final test, when he openly defies God, the consequences had followed.

This theme had remained on the edge of consciousness as rather a curious instance of marked interest, such as is to be verified later by observation. We have known many young men who have talked against the church, against the religion of their fathers, against religion in general. But we only know of one who put it directly to a test.

Some years ago we were shown a letter written by a man who was then a member of the church, to a branch president. He had sent in one letter resigning from the church. The branch president wrote back and informed him of the rules of the church, that it was necessary that labor be performed, and an elder's court appointed, and an effort be made to convince him of his error, and to help him do that which is right, and asked, "When can we call to see you?"

He replied at once in a very indignant tone and to the general effect, "I don't care what you do as long as you take my name off the church records; and as long as you don't come around bothering me. I positively refuse to see or have anything to do with any of you.

"Now, see here. You make a good deal of your church; I think it amounts to nothing; so I will propose to you a test. You and I are of about the same age, and of about the same education. My test is this: You just watch me, and I'll watch you, and see where we both land in the next ten years—you with your God, and I without God. Yes, I challenge you and your God to beat me. Just watch me where I will be in ten years' time, and I'll watch you. That's my test."

At the time he seemed to have entirely the better of the argument from a worldly point of view. He had a good position and was drawing a large salary. He had made investments which had proven profitable. Apparently he was on the high road of success. While the other man, on account of his work in the church, showed but little hopes of progress.

This appealed to us as an instance to watch, with perhaps even more of a direct challenge than we have set forth above. But it did constitute a direct challenge to God, as well as a direct denial of his existence.

The result was that scarcely a year passed before rumors began to go around that something was not quite all right. In another year the rumors were stronger and incidents were repeated that showed that things were not going right with the man who was so boastful. In less than five years he was an inmate of an insane asylum. Ten years found him still there. Fifteen years, having spent the last ten in an asylum, found him dead.

While the other man whom he had challenged, while not a man of great wealth, had comfort, a good family, and is looking forward to a happy middle age and, in the years to come, to a peaceful and joyous old age. He is not by any means an old man as yet, for the challenger died before reaching middle age.

The one died before his time, having spent over ten years in the asylum. The other continues with success in his daily work and in the church.

We have noticed this several times in various degrees. After all it is reasonable that he who denies the truth, who limits his own development, goes against that which is highest and best in himself, as well as in the world, soon reaps the consequences. Again and again is this principle verified, "The wages of sin is death." Again, "Light and truth forsake the evil one." And he who utterly rejects God and openly defies him reaps the just consequences.

MEETING PLACES IN THE LARGER CITIES

The importance of regular attendance at church services can hardly be overemphasized, and especially is this true when one goes from a small country place to one of the large cities. There is so much to distract our attention and so much to cause us to forget our early teaching and high standards. But many would be only too glad to have the privilege of meeting with the Saints, if they knew how to find them.

Especially is this true of many of our soldiers and sailors, who wish to know if there is a meeting place near their encampment. Many passing through the eastern ports would like to have the privilege of meeting with the church once more.

It is one of the problems of work in a great city, that so many come to the city and are practically lost. The officers of the church do not know of their being there, perhaps, until long after they have left, and it may be that they would be glad to meet with the Saints but find difficulty in locating them. In the eastern cities there is but little else to be done on the Lord's day. It is an especially good opportunity to extend our acquaintance with those of like faith. In an effort to help both, those who would like to find the meeting places and those interested locally who would be only too glad to meet them, we are publishing a list herewith, of the meeting places in a few of the larger cities.

New York City. The meeting place is in Brooklyn at the corner of West Park and Schenectady.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Corner of Howard and West Ontario Streets, 3400 North.

Boston, Massachusetts. In Somerville on Sewall Street, just off Grant. Take a Broadway car at Sullivan Square and get off at Grant.

Buffalo, New York. Corner of Midway and Hutichon Avenues, Kensington.

New Bedford, Massachusetts. Corner Bourne and Thompson Streets.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Tonapah and Reality Avenues. Take Beechview car, No. 42, at Third Avenue; get off at Coast Avenue.

Chicago, Illinois. First Church, Corner Gladys Avenue and 44th Street.

Saint Louis, Missouri. Recital Hall, The Odeon, Grand Avenue near Finney Avenue. (On Sundays only.)

Kansas City, Missouri. Central Church, 8th and Lydia Avenue.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Fourth Floor over Hahn Brother's Clothing Company, Grove Street and National Avenue. Take elevator at National Avenue Entrance. Chicago and North Shore and all National Avenue cars reach meeting place.

San Francisco, California. Corner of Banvers and Caselle Avenues. Take 18th Street car and get off at Banvers.

Oakland, California. Sixteenth and Magnolia Streets.

Seattle, Washington. First Avenue Northwest and Leary Avenue. Take cars No. 19 or No. 23.

There are other addresses we would give if we had them. Please note that the Church Recorder is calling upon all of the Branch Presidents for this information, and reports that he already has a good list of addresses of our church buildings or meeting places.

For our boys in Government service, Harry C. Smith, of Boston, suggests that each one wear a Z. R.-L. S. pin, as thereby they can recognize one another in camp and abroad.

GENERAL DONIPHAN

The State of Missouri has erected a monument at the west end of the courthouse in Richmond, Missouri, at a cost of $10,000, to perpetuate the memory of General Alexander W. Doniphan. The red granite base bears inscriptions telling of the exploits and character of General Doniphan, while above it towers the bronze statue of the soldier, lawyer, and statesman, in heroic proportions, wearing the uniform of the period in which he served. The hat is clasped to the left breast, the unsheathed saber is held in the right hand, and the face and figure are commanding and majestic. Near the long spur that projects from the left cavalry boot is represented a portion of the skull of a buffalo beside a growth of Mexican cactus. The statue was unveiled July 29, just 72 years after his entrance into Mexico at the head of the First Regiment of Missouri Volunteers in 1846.

The gathering of the people to witness the unveiling was large. Many State officers, both civil and military, were present. The Seventh Regiment National Guard of Missouri, with their military band, came by special train from Kansas City, while Lieutenant Marshall Neal, United States aviator flew over the same route, bringing Lieutenant Robert J. Bagues, French machine gun officer, and high commissioner to the United States. Lieutenant Bagues was a conspicuous figure, in his sky-blue uniform, decorated with two wound stripes, and a Croix de Guerre. Governor Gardner took a trial flight over the city with Lieutenant Neal, after the ceremonies.

General Doniphan's grave and tombstone is at Liberty, Missouri, but he was a resident of Richmond for about twenty years.

General Doniphan was in command of a division of Missouri militia during the persecution and expulsion of the Saints in 1835 to 1838, and on several occasions defended them, both in his capacity as a lawyer, and as a military officer. When Governor Boggs issued his notorious extermination order, General Doniphan condemned and resisted it; and when detailed by Major General Lucas to execute Joseph and Hyrum Smith and other church officers, who were illegally held as prisoners by the State, he boldly replied; as quoted by Heman C. Smith, page 262, History of the Church, volume 2, from page 137, History of Caldwell and Livingstone counties: "It is cold-blooded murder. I will not obey your order. My brigade shall march for Liberty to-morrow morning at eight o'clock; and if you execute those men, I will hold you responsible before an earthly tribunal, so help me God!"

His noble services are not forgotten. Several members and officials of our church were present to pay due respect to his memory. President R. S. Salyards and some others of Far West Stake arrived early. A delegation composed of President E. A. Smith, Israel A. Smith, J. A. Koehler, Ellis Short, jr., and H. S. Salisbury, went from Independence, and while in Richmond, visited the monument to the three witnesses, the site of the old Richmond jail, and the grave of David Whitmer. Several dignitaries of the Utah church were present, among whom were George Albert Smith and Doctor Talmage of Salt Lake City.

Joseph Smith forestalled John Brown by two decades in leading New England Abolitionists into this vicinity. Few, indeed, were the heroes who dared stand with General Doniphan between the Saints, and their proslavery adversaries. The Saints, guiltless of any offense, except those of entertaining strong sentiments against human slavery, and claiming to represent the true Church of Jesus Christ, suffered horrors and losses second only to those suffered by the Belgians of to-day. They found a just and fearless friend in General Doniphan, who in spite of danger of court martial, saved innocent men from dishonor and death. Long may his majestic statue, facing the west, gaze on the setting sun of tyranny; and may the trenchant blade in its good right hand never be sheathed while the powers of Satan, which he opposed, continue to raise up adversaries to the rights of men!

THE COST OF DRINK

William H. Hamby, in McCall's Magazine for July, 1918, gives the data that, of insured men the drinkers have three and one fifth times as many small accidents as the average insured worker. And of those who are injured, drinkers lost three hundred seventy-two days for every one hundred days lost by the average insured man. He further states that one adult dies from alcohol every eight minutes, and that nearly four suicides a day are caused by alcohol. For every one dollar a State receives in liquor licenses, it pays out two dollars in caring for criminals, paupers, and insane caused through drink alone.

The worst of it is, drink strikes every class where it hurts most. To the simple-minded, it brings physical violence; to the poor, deeper poverty; to the convivial, final loneliness; and to those too much master of their will to suffer the coarser effects, it brings the slow but inevitable fate—an hour when they perceive the keenness is gone from their brains—when the silver cord is loosened and the music of the mind has become a dull, confused roar.

In the Des Moines Register for July 12 the statement is made that the death claims average 80% in the general list of insured, and 50% in the section of abstainers or those who do not use liquor at all. Heavy drinkers are, of course, refused by the insurance companies.

This emphasizes the fact that moderate drinking is still highly injurious.

Great men should be above small things, and there can scarcely be anything smaller in great men, than the disposition to belittle others, or to resent the envious criticisms and remarks of others smaller than themselves.—Joseph Smith.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

WILL THE JEWS RETURN?

I have before me a copy of The Watchman, November, 1915, a profusely illustrated magazine published by the Southern Publishing Association, Nashville, Tennessee. A glance at the contents reveals its religious character, but its denominational identity is completely hidden, so far as the title-page is concerned. This, however, is a characteristic of Seventh-day Adventist propaganda. Outside it is "magazine." Within it is just plain Adventism camouflaged, and one is reminded of the prophecy of Isaiah 29: 15, which speaks of a certain class arrayed against the truth whose "works are in the dark," and who say, "Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?"

"THERE WILL BE NO RETURN"

My attention was directed to an article entitled, "There will be no return of the Jews." Being a firm believer in the promises of God to his ancient covenant people assuring them of a return to the land of their fathers in the latter days, I was interested at once. After carefully reading the article, I was fully persuaded the prophet was right when he further said that those whose works were "in the dark" would get "things upside down."

Quoting the Savior in Luke 19: 41 the writer says:

The above solemn words could mean nothing less than the rejection of the Jewish nation. They had reached "the times before appointed." Their chronology was at an end. And we all certainly know that their geography was at an end because only a few years later the Roman armies, under the leadership of Titus, came down and razed the city to the ground, scattered the Jewish people abroad, and to this day they have never been a nation. It is recorded that there are something like eight million Jews all over the world. The little republic of Switzerland has a population of two million, five hundred thousand. The Swiss people, also, are divided into three languages, French, German, and Italian. Yet the Swiss of only two million, five hundred thousand and talking three languages, can form a nation, while eight million Jews with all their wealth and intellect have been nearly two thousand years without national existence.

It is true that the Jews, as a nation, were rejected of God because they rejected the gospel, and became "wanderers among the nations." They were duly warned of this very condition by Moses. (See Leviticus 26: 14-39.) Yet, notwithstanding his exile among the nations under different forms of government, with conflicting environments, compelled to take up the sword against himself, Jacob has never lost his national identity, and his oneness, though "scattered and peeled," is remarkable.

Quoting the Savior again in Luke 21: 20-24, and emphasizing the words, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, this writer says:

Between the fulfilling times of the Gentiles and the second coming of Christ there was to be no event which resuscitated the Jewish nation. For immediately after the words quoted above had been uttered by the Savior, he rapidly passed on to say, "Then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." The great world war now being waged, which is so rapidly bringing to fulfillment many prophecies, is also helping to expose the error and delusion of a false hope in the return of the Jews.

The emphasized words of the Savior quoted above unmistakably limit the duration of Jacob's exile among the nations. And the argument that between the ending of Gentile domination and the coming of Christ there can be no return of the Jews is pure fiction, without a shadow of proof. On the contrary, the Scriptures are replete with promise, and the war, instead of exposing a "false hope" of their return, has already laid bare this spurious assumption of "no return." They are compelled, however, to assume this position for the reason that they have flooded the world with the doctrine that the Turk is to be driven from Constantinople and take up his last stand at Jerusalem where he comes to his end, when immediately the Lord will return to earth, and, per consequence, there will be no time for the Jews to gather. Probation ends right there and then, so they say. They base their argument for this "false hope" on Daniel 11: 45, which reads:

And he shall plant the tabernacle of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him.

THE TURK AT JERUSALEM?

Adventists to a man affirm that this clearly teaches that the Turk is to establish his capital at Jerusalem. But there is no intimation in the prophecy that such will be the case. His "tabernacle" was planted there a long time ago. But from the present indications there is not much likelihood of his establishing his capital there now, or at any future time.

In this same magazine for July, 1915, is an article entitled, "England, Russia, and Constantinople," written at the time when the allies were pounding at the Dardenelles. The article begins with the following extract from the London Fortnightly Review which expressed the general sentiment at the time:

"Unless all the omens are at fault, Constantinople is on the point of passing forever out of the hands of the Turk. Strange the irony of events! The last time English and French warships sailed in company through the Dardanelles and appeared off the Golden Horn, it was the faithful upholders against Russia of the integrity of the Ottoman Empire. Now they are forcing the passage of the straits as Russia's true and steadfast allies. The same sea power which for a century persistently denied to Russia the prize of New Rome now offers it as a gift. The very battleships which so long blocked her path are now with their salvos blowing it clear."

So it seemed at the time. But the fortunes of war changed the situation altogether. Strange, indeed, "the irony of events." The attempt to force the straits was a dismal failure, and the allied cause still suffers from the effects of it. Meantime, the British working from the south have driven the Turk from Jerusalem. Two Turkish armies have been destroyed, and the end is not yet. The Holy City, under the direction of British and American societies, is being renovated, while millions of dollars are being raised by the Jews the world over to rehabilitate the land and rebuild the waste places. The general secretary of the Hebrew Christian Publication Society, B. A. M. Schiparo, as reported by The Christian Work for January 26, 1918, writes: "This war is a subject of Bible prophecy, and a large part of its permanent result will possibly be the restoration of Israel to the land promised by Jehovah to our forefathers. The allies are intent, not on the destruction of the Holy City, but in preserving it for God's chosen people. It is of greater importance now than ever before that the Jews of America, or some of them at least, should have the gospel armor in which to return." As it appears now, the Adventists will again have to revise their opinion about the time of the Lord's coming, and Israel's return to the Holy Land. But they have it all nicely outlined, and the time unalterably fixed, just like they had it fixed in 1840-1844, and as it was then, they are due for another sore "disappointment."

ADVENTIST VIEWS ON ARMAGEDDON

For the benefit of HERALD readers, and to show that I am not misrepresenting them, I herewith present the following lengthy extract from an article in the Signs of the Times for November 3, 1914, entitled, "Powers that gather for Armageddon."

MOHAMMEDANISM AND SUNDAY

Mohammedanism is one of the religions of the world that disregards the Sunday institution. It is itself a protest against idolatry, and therefore against sun worship, and therefore against the Sunday. It was also, when it entered both Asia and Europe, a menace to the papacy. In fact, God permitted its work in the Middle Ages as a check upon the power of the papacy. (Revelation 9: 20, 21.) History tells us that the Turk made war upon the image worship of Catholicism, even as they made war upon the image worship of paganism. We can readily see, then, how both paganism and the papacy could be rallied against Mohammedanism. It not only will not mix in the wine of Babylon, but it is a poison that cannot be tolerated by the world-wide powers. For this reason, every step in the downfall of Turkey is a movement toward the establishment of the triune religious confederacy that is to head in the papacy itself through the pope himself. (Revelation 17: 12-14, 17.)

It is therefore no wonder that God should tell us that when Turkey establishes its capital at Jerusalem, pressed away from its former capital, the same is a mark or sign of the ending of probation, when Christ stands up, lays aside his priestly robes in the heavenly sanctuary, and assumes his royal garments as King. (Daniel 12:1.) Then as the sovereignty of Christ begins to be felt in the earth, there is a time of trouble for the nations, such as they have never known before. (Daniel 12: 1, 2.)

PALESTINE TO HAVE BEEN NEUTRAL

In Deuteronomy 32: 8 we find that when God gave the nations their inheritance, and set the bounds of their territories, he did it with respect to the children of Israel occupying Palestine. That is to say, as we understand it, God designed that Palestine should be neutral territory, occupied by a people entirely neutral, a people who in thought or plans or work would unite with any of the nations of the world. They were to be a separate people. We know that through the rebellion of Israel, this purpose failed. Israel had to be driven from the Holy Land. But the purpose of God, that should have been carried out in one way, must still be carried out in another. It would not do for some mighty nation, some dominant nation, to occupy Palestine; because this territory is strategic, lying between Europe, Asia, and Africa—the one connecting link between the three—and the strong nation that would hold it would become a dominant factor in the world, and establish a new tower of Babel of opposition against God.

Therefore we find in Palestine a nation that will not mix with the other nations. Its thought, its policy, its work, its religion, are such that it cannot mix or be mixed with the others. Consequently when the great world confederacy is to be formed, the people occupying this territory must be conquered. Had God's people remained true to him, they would be occupying this territory, as it is intimated in Ezekiel 38 and 39, and the great confederacy of evil would have been both a design against God's people and an invasion of their territory. As it is now, God's people are scattered throughout the world; but the plan of the Evil One will still work out both to secure the territory once occupied by Israel and also to destroy God's people, even though they be scattered everywhere.

GOD'S PEOPLE WILL NOT BLEND

What about God's people? If it is an impossibility to get the Turk to blend with the great triune confederacy, far more will it be impossible to get God's people to unite in what is nothing more or less than black rebellion against the government of God. Hence we find foretold in the thirty-eighth chapter of Ezekiel that when the great nations shall enter into the land of the Turk, at the very time when they are pressing their campaign within the Mohammedan domains, God says, "It shall come to pass in that day, that things shall come into thy mind, and thou shalt devise an evil device." What is this evil thing that comes into mind, this bad thought invented for the occasion? We read on: "Thou shalt say, I will go up to the land of unwall'd villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell securely." Who are these? Read a little further: "In that day when my people Israel dwelleth securely . . . thou shalt come up against my people Israel, . . . it shall come to pass in the latter days."

THEIR PROPERTY CONFISCATED

From Revelation 13: 15-17 we know precisely what this evil device is. It is a law first providing that those who do not accept the authoritative sign of the great world confederacy, the Sunday institution, shall have all their property confiscated, shall neither be able to buy nor sell, and thus shall be left to starve to death. And when, by the providence of God, this decree of confiscation does not accomplish its purpose—for the Lord cares for his own, their bread and water is sure (Isaiah 33: 16)—then a second decree will go forth that all who do not worship the image of the beast shall be killed. When this decree is issued, giving permission after a stated time to slay God's people who refuse the sign of worldly authority, and who accept the Sabbath—a sign of God's creative power—the nations will be invading Palestine. They will be gathered at Armageddon. They will be laying seige to Jerusalem in the last stand of the Turk. And as they end the power of the Turk at Jerusalem, and are about to accomplish their will upon God's people scattered throughout the earth, God himself speaks from heaven the great final word, "It is done."

It will be seen from the foregoing that they claim that God's original purpose with reference to Palestine was a failure. The Devil outwitted Jehovah, and per consequence, another plan must be worked out in harmony with the Satanic will. Perish the impious imagination! Surely, their "works are in the dark"! If Satan had power to defeat God's original plan he would quite likely overthrow any other plan or substitute that was not to his liking. A careful reading of the Scriptures referred to reveals absolutely nothing to indicate that God's purpose had failed in any degree. But if we allow the apostle Paul a word on the subject we will learn that everything is working out in beautiful harmony with the original plan. He says that through the "fall" of Israel "salvation is come unto the Gentiles." (Romans 11: 11.) But to bolster up this fearful travesty it is necessary to garble the Scriptures as it will readily be seen by reference to Ezekiel 38: 14-16. It reads as follows:

Therefore, son of man, prophesy and say unto Gog, Thus saith the Lord God; in that day when my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it? And thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts, thou, and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horses, a great company, and a mighty army: And thou shalt come up against my people of Israel, as a cloud to cover the land; it shall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee against my land, that the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes.

Notice, there is not one word that indicates that the Turk is in any way referred to. This Gog, whoever he may be, is to come out of his place in the "north parts," against God's people, Israel, and "against my land." It is clear cut that Israel will be dwelling "safely" in his own land, Palestine, when Gog goes up to "take a spoil," the "evil device" he has in mind. Not the "Sunday institution." God's people, after their long dispersion, are to be gathered out of the nations and rebuild the waste places, become rich with much goods and cattle (verses 11, 12) and dwell safely, at rest. Then Gog will have the "evil thought" which is nothing more nor less than a plan of conquest to "take a spoil" from the people of God whose "unwalled villages" appear to offer little resistance.

"THEY SHALL BUILD THE WASTE CITIES"

The following prophecy from Amos is precise and definite. There need be no mistake as to its meaning:

And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall be no more pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God.—Amos 9: 14, 15.

This clear-cut prophecy must have its fulfillment sometime after A. D. 70, for at that time Judah was certainly "pulled up." Why, the Lord says he will "cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it"; and that they shall "serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them." (See Jeremiah 30: 3-24; Ezekiel 34: 22-31; 37: 21-28; Hosea 3: 4, 5.)

The time set by the Lord for the fulfillment of these prophecies is the "latter days," the same time referred to in Ezekiel 38: 16, and quoted by Adventists to prove their "no return" theory.

Here is a choice bit of news from the Far East, just to hand, and fresh from the wires, bearing directly on the subject:

Large areas of Mesopotamia have been cleared of the enemy, denying to him the most fertile districts at a time when the crops are just ripening, thousands of prisoners have been captured, together with many cannon, machine guns, and an enormous amount of booty, by the British forces operating in the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates since March, according to the official correspondent with the field forces in that theater of the war.

Describing the operations which led to the defeat of the Turks in March, the correspondent says the Turks attempted to make a stand at Kahn Bagdhadi, which the British infantry assaulted and took on the evening of March 26. In the meantime the British cavalry, after a weary and difficult march, gained the Aleppo Road where it crosses the Wadi Hamrin, and cut off the enemy's retreat by road and river. The foe's attempts to break through this barrier at midnight were repulsed, and they lost over 1,000 prisoners.

The large quantities of munitions taken by the British forces indicated that preparations had been made for the Turko-German Army that was to have descended from Aleppo and captured Bagdad last autumn. This movement, however, was frustrated by the British forces concentrating on the Gaza front, in southern Palestine.

At the beginning of May the scattered distribution of Turkish forces in the Kifri and Kirluk areas afforded an opportunity for the infliction of another defeat upon the enemy. These operations were successful, both Kifri and Kirluk being taken, with about 3,000 prisoners, sixteen cannon, and twenty-six machine guns, besides much other booty.—The Christian Work, June 15.

Now look at the map and get the location of these two British Armies, one on the Tigris and the other in Palestine, and both working toward Aleppo, near where they will likely form a junction for an attack on the Turko-German Army stationed there. Strange, is it not, that the Euphrates should "dry up" in Mesopotamia and Palestine before it does in Europe and Asia Minor? But so it is, and incidentally a favorite Adventist argument begins to evaporate.

THE TRUE SIGN OF THE END

We are repeatedly told by Adventist writers that when we see the Turk driven from Constantinople and he establishes his capital at Jerusalem we may take it as a "sign," or "mark" of the ending of probation. The Lord will then immediately appear, and all who have the "mark of the beast," Sunday keepers, will perish. Over against that "sign I wish to put another one, and only a short time will suffice to distinguish between the true and false signs.

And it shall come to pass that the time cometh, when the fullness of my gospel shall be preached unto them, and they shall believe in me, that I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and shall pray unto the Father in my name. Then shall their watchmen lift up their voice; and with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye. Then will the Father gather them together again, and give unto them Jerusalem for the land of their inheritance. . . . Then shall this covenant which the Father hath covenanted with his people, be fulfilled; and then shall Jerusalem be inhabited again with my people, and it shall be the land of their inheritance.

And verily, I say unto you, I give unto you a sign, that ye may know the time when these things shall be about to take place, that I shall gather in from their long dispersion, my people, O house of Israel, and shall establish again among them my Zion. . . . And when these things come to pass, that thy seed shall begin to know these things, it shall be a sign unto them, that they may know that the work of the Father hath already commenced unto the fulfilling of the covenant which he hath made unto the people who are of the house of Israel.—Book of Mormon, pp. 660, 662, 663. Authorized Edition.

Here is a "sign" which was published to the world in 1830, before Adventism was conceived, but steadfastly rejected by all "whose works are in the dark." Another writer in this despised Book of Mormon says, "And it shall come to pass that the Jews which are scattered, also shall begin to believe in Christ."—Psalm 159. The prophet Isaiah, too, has some thing to say about this sign. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. (Isaiah 11: 12.) When they are gathered back to the land of their fathers he further says, "And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations."—Isaiah 61: 4.

These "waste places" are in the Holy Land where they lay desolate for "many generations," trodden down of the Gentiles. But the "times of the Gentiles" are at an end and the "work of the Father" has already commenced for the restoration of his dispersed people, as the world war begins to make manifest.

FORMER AND LATTER RAINS RESTORED

Prominent among the many wonderful things in connection with this "work of the Father" when he would begin the restoration of his people was to be the return of the "former and latter rains" to the Holy Land, just a "little while" after the Lord would begin his "marvelous work." So it is written: "Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?"—Isaiah 29: 17. Joel, too, had a vision of the return of these rains in connection with the return of Israel to the land of his fathers. He says:

Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field; for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig tree and the vine do yield their strength. Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month. . . .—Joel 2: 21-23.

THE GOSPEL RESTORED

This "marvelous" and "strange" work commenced in 1827-1830 when the angel of Revelation 14: 6 brought the "everlasting gospel" back to earth, the "gospel of the kingdom," Matthew 24: 14, and the priesthood was restored whereby men were again authorized to represent God as in days of old. And right here let me remark: the men to whom this priesthood was committed were not in any way identified with the Catholic or sectarian churches. These apostate institutions were ignored by Jehovah further than to say that their creeds were an abomination in his sight, and men of his own choosing were ordained to set his house in order. The "new wine" was put in "new bottles," and the "weak and simple" began to make proclamation of the greatest message that ever greeted the ears of mortals. It was the old Jerusalem gospel in all its ancient beauty, the harbinger of latter-day events about to be fulfilled in a grand consummation of the divine plan for the restoration of God's people of Israel, and the final overthrow of Gentile misrule and deception. The second coming of Christ as the grand climax to these latter-day events was proclaimed far and near, an event, not immediately at hand, but after the "wrath of God" had been poured out on the nations for their wickedness (Joel 3: 13; Zephaniah 1: 14-17), after Israel is in his own land dwelling safely, and at a time when the nations come up against them to battle. (Zechariah 14: 1-15; Ezekiel 38: 14-16.)

A COUNTERFEIT MOVEMENT

Shortly after the proclamation of this great message, the counterfeiter made his appearance, and making use of such portions of it as would not conflict with the popular creeds, began to preach the second coming as immediately at hand, even setting the date. This counterfeit movement was started by William Miller, a member of the Baptist Church. He made little headway, however, until about 1840 when there was a general "awakening" and the "second coming" became a favorite doctrine with the popular churches, with the proclamation of "definite time," and the sitting of the great judgment at Christ's coming. The following paragraph from an Adventist historian will explain:

At the time this message was first announced, every Christian denomination held that the judgment would take place at the second coming of Christ. So a people under those circumstances, giving the message of the hour of judgment come, while holding that view, would necessarily proclaim the second coming of Christ. In fact, that which gave force to the message, and most mightily moved the people, was the proclamation of definite time. First they claimed that the end of the world would come sometime during the "Jewish year" 1843, and that this was embraced in the time between March 21, 1843, and March 21, 1844. After this time passed by, we learn in the Midnight Cry of the year 1844 that the definite day was fixed upon for the termination of the prophetic times. This was the tenth day of the seventh Jewish month, corresponding to October 22, 1844.—The Great Second Advent Movement, p. 109.

Miller's first convert was J. V. Himes, who accepted the "message" in 1839. He was a member and minister of the Christian Connection Church, founded by James O'Kelley, Methodist, Barton W. Stone, Presbyterian, and Adner Jones, Baptist, in 1804. Both Miller and Himes were sectarians and bore the "Mark of the beast," according to Adventists' logic, for they were Sunday keepers, and William Miller died a member of the Baptist Church with the "mark of the beast" still on him. Mark this point well: William Miller was the first elder of the Adventist movement, and J. V. Himes the second elder. Both of them had their tap root deep down in the contaminated soil of Rome. No direct message from God was had by either of these men. Miller was a deist, and a student of Voltaire, Hume, Volney, Paine, and others. After studying the Bible for two years he says:

I believed; and immediately the duty to publish this doctrine, that the world might believe and get ready to meet the Judge and Bridegroom at his coming, was impressed upon my mind. I need not here go into detailed account of my long and sore trials. Suffice it to say, that after a number of years I was compelled by the Spirit of God, the power of truth, and the love of souls, to take up my cross and proclaim these things to a dying and perishing world.—Second Advent Movement, p. 120.

OUR TEACHINGS VINDICATED

Contrast that "call" with that of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery who, on May 15, 1829, were ordained under the hands of an angel from heaven, a real, tangible occurrence, and you will readily see the difference between the genuine and the spurious, the true and the false. Joseph Smith taught the return of the Jews before the coming of Christ, to be preceded by terrible calamities on the world. William Miller said the Jews would not return, and that the Lord would come in 1844. Joseph Smith's message condemned the popular churches as being "all wrong," and he made no attempt to curry favor with any of them. William Miller was a "hale fellow well met" with all the popular churches. Joseph Smith said the Holy Land would be restored to its former fertility preparatory to Israel's return. William Miller denied it. Who was right? A strange coincidence in connection with these two "messages" is the fact that right at the time when Miller's message was proven false Joseph's message was being vindicated, as the following bit of interesting history shows, copied from the Jewish Chronicle for December, 1853, by Alexander Campbell, and published in his Millennial Harbinger, 1854:

The Israelites were often threatened by Moses and the prophets, that in case of disobedience, "the rains should be withheld." If they were withheld, they must of course, be shortened in duration. Now the rains that fell in the latter part of the rainy season, and especially those that fell after the usual period for them to cease, were called "the latter rains." These occasional showers, if continued through the time of the ripening of the fruit and grain, would add greatly to their abundance and perfection. The withholding of them would have the contrary effect. The withholding the "latter rains," and the promise of "their return," are things often spoken of in Scripture. These latter rains have been withheld century after century, till the land has been brought into the state that we now find it, and there can be but little doubt but that the return of these rains again will be the means God will employ to restore the land to its ancient fruitfulness.

Commenting on the above in a footnote, Mr. Campbell says:

Within ten years these latter rains, as a matter of fact, have again appeared. The party who have gone from America to conduct an agricultural enterprise in Palestine, learn from the inhabitants, that they have lately had showers in April, after the close of the usual rainy season, which phenomena has not been witnessed by their ancestors for generations back. This party also bear witness to the same fact.

Having been there two or three seasons, they have witnessed the fall of copious showers in April and May.—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 4, series 4, p. 86.

The former and latter rains have been restored, just a "little while" after God performed his "marvelous work and a wonder" (Isaiah 29: 14), vindicating the message delivered by the angel. While those who tried to counterfeit the message were exposed by the failure of the fulfillment of their proclamation. And to-day the war is tearing the mask from this remodeled counterfeit and the final chapter in its "disappointment" is being written in blood on the battlefields of Europe and Asia. The way is being prepared as never before for Israel's return. The allied nations have agreed that Palestine shall be neutral, and that the Israelites shall be allowed to work out their own destiny undisturbed, while the nations who have held Israel in bondage and despoiled him for centuries are being ground to powder. The following from the Book of Mormon, published to the world in 1830, is significant at this time:

And the blood of that great and abominable church, [Babylon] which is the whore of all the earth, shall turn upon their own heads; for they shall war among themselves, and the sword of their own hands shall fall upon their own heads, and they shall be drunken with their own blood. And every nation which shall war against thee, O house of Israel, shall be turned one against another, and they shall fall into the pit which they digged to ensnare the people of the Lord. And all that fight against Zion, shall be destroyed. And that great whore, who hath perverted the right ways of the Lord; yea, that great and abominable church, shall tumble to the dust, and great shall be the fall of it.—1 Nephi 7: 26-31.

THE LAW AND THE COVENANTS---Part 5

BY COLUMBUS SCOTT

THE CONCLUSION

The covenant made with Israel availed nothing where and when the everlasting covenant, the gospel, is in force. Hence it was necessary in order to obtain pardon for sins committed under the law while it was binding, that Christ by his atonement should offer himself as the all essential remedy therefor, as well as for "the sin of the world."

Let the apostle Paul tell us:

Even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world: But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons.—Galatians 4: 3-5.

Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law; that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God. Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin. But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets.—Romans 3: 19-21.

Paul here brings the law and the prophets forward as witnesses to the truth of his statements here made. And continues thus:

Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe; for their is no difference: For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay; but by the law of faith.—Romans 3: 22-27.

Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.—Romans 3: 28.

By this divinely inspired argument, the apostle arrays the law and the prophets as unassailable witnesses to the truth of this conclusion: that salvation from sin and death, unto eternal life in Christ, is attained by obedience to the righteousness of God revealed in the gospel of Christ without the deeds of the law. (Romans 1: 16, 17.) Principles are eternal for the divine purposes intended. In this sense all law exists in the mind of God eternally. (Psalm 147: 4, 5; Ephesians 3: 11.) Law has its various purposes, as Deity designed, yet the ten commandments as a part of the national law given to Israel never were, as given in their form there revealed, given to any other nation, till uttered by his own voice to his people Israel at Mount Sinai, that we have any record of.

This reason there given for giving them to Israel was:

I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods before me.—Exodus 20: 2, 3.

And his reason assigned by his own voice for requiring Israel to remember and keep holy the seventh or Sabbath Day was:

And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day.—Deuteronomy 5: 15.

Remember, reader, here is the Lord's reason as given by his own voice, why he "commanded" Israel to keep the seventh day, because he brought them out of Egyptian slavery, by "a mighty hand and by a stretched-out arm."

Let the modern Saturdarian assign one reason from God or his Son, Jesus Christ, why under the gospel his followers should observe as a day of rest, or worship, the seventh day. Come, show us one commandment from Christ that his followers should, under the gospel, turn back to the old covenant. (Deuteronomy 5: 1-4; Galatians 3: 23-25.) The law was the schoolmaster to lead Israel up to Christ, "but after that faith [the gospel] is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster."

The Galatians desired for some reason to remain under the law (4: 21). And to them he said:

I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed. For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ.—Galatians 1: 6-10.

The tenor of most of Paul's letter to the Galatians shows beyond a reasonable doubt that the gospel of Jesus Christ was perverted by Judaizing teachers trying to enforce on them the law given to Israel at Sinai. Note his line of argument in chapters 2, 3, and 4. Please keep in mind as you read these chapters that we have hitherto herein shown that the ten commandments are twice recorded in "the book of the covenant," and the "book of the law." (Exodus 20: 1-17; Deuteronomy 5: 1-22.)

Twice do we read them there, with the statutes, ceremonies, and judgments. And these commandments, ceremonies, and judgments were all equally binding on ancient Israel by the commands of Jehovah.

Proof:

Wherefore ye shall do my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them, and ye shall dwell in the land in safety.—Leviticus 25: 18.

Therefore shall ye keep my commandments, and do them: I am the Lord.—Leviticus 22: 31.

And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone.—Deuteronomy 4: 13.

Thus Israel was to keep "the covenant" as a whole. No partiality as to one command being more important or binding on them than another. All were equally binding.

This is sufficient for the believer in God's word. This law had fulfilled its purpose and was abrogated at the death and resurrection of Christ, who by his mission including the sacrifice of himself, his "atonement," brought life and immortality to light by the gospel.

WITHOUT A DAY OF REST AND WORSHIP UNDER THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST?

What day under the gospel is the greatest day the world has ever witnessed?

Had not Christ arisen from the dead, and thereby broken death's bars, where would have been the world's hope of a future life after men die and are buried? Answer to your own souls in all honesty. Do you believe that Christ "gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time"? Do you believe that the apostles, including Saint Paul, saw Jesus Christ after his resurrection from the dead? (John 20: 16-20; Acts 1: 1-9; 1 Timothy 2: 3-7; 2 Timothy 1: 9, 10.) Do you believe it was necessary for our Savior to offer himself a sacrifice to answer the penalty of an infinite law, given by the Infinite One, which all the finites that ever were, are, or ever will be, could not in justice answer to? that he, as God made manifest in the flesh, did answer to? (Matthew 17: 5; John 12: 44-50.) Could not God's Son become God, as man's son becomes man? (1 Timothy 3: 16; John 10: 30-38.) Do you believe that through his death, burial, and resurrection he secured the universal, unconditional resurrection of all men from physical death and the grave?

On what day of the week did our Savior break the bars of death, and bring life and immortality to light? This was gospel, good news, glad tidings! It was on "the first day of the week."

By this day the new creation, the spiritual creation is memorialized. Blot that resurrection day out and our hope of the eternal, the future life, dies! It was altogether in harmony with the divine economy that the life of the gospel of Christ should be made to appear a reality, as the old covenant law with its memorials died when Christ did.

But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometime were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby: and came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh.—Ephesians 2: 13-17.

Once more hear the apostle on this point. To the Colossians he wrote:

And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses; blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross; and, having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it. Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days: which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ.—Colossians 2: 13-17.

CHRIST'S DISCIPLES OBSERVED THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK

Jesus arose from the dead the first day of the week; such an unparalleled event as rising from the dead to a state of immortality; on the first day of the week, would constitute it necessarily "the Lord's Day." (Revelation 1: 10.)

This is as true as the new institution, the "pass-over," under the gospel law and dispensation, would constitute the gospel passover (John 13: 1; Luke 22: 19, 20) of bread and wine, "the Lord's supper." (1 Corinthians 11: 20-29.)

The phrase, "the Lord's body," as applying to the church of Christ is an example of how the work of Christ is referred to in the inspired word of God. (1 Corinthians 11: 29.)

The first meeting of Jesus with his disciples was on the first day of the week, the evening of the day of his resurrection.

The meeting following this was the evening of the next first day of the week. (John 20: 26.)

Matthew records that the disciples, after his resurrection, went into "Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them," and there he gave them authority to go into all the world to declare the glad tidings of everlasting life; through obedience to the gospel he authorized them there to proclaim in his name to all the nations.

After the Savior's ascension into heaven, his disciples began to hold daily services for a few days, and when "the day of Pentecost was fully come," they all assembled in an upper room, being of one accord, there being about one hundred of them. This was the first day of the week. "Pentecost" was a notable day in ancient Israel under the law. It was a day on which Israel was to offer offerings unto the Lord. It was the day the law was given. It was fifty days from the day the first ripe fruits of the harvest were gathered and taken and shown to the priest. It was on the first day of the week, and a solemn convocation, or meeting, was to be held on that day. And it was a rest day once a year. Now Christ was the first fruit from the dead, the first ripe fruit of harvest from the dead unto eternal life (1 Corinthians 15: 22, 23), and the Pentecost of Acts 2 was fifty days after our Savior's resurrection from the dead. It was a first day of the week; and the disciples of Christ were all baptized with or in the Holy Ghost on this day. It was an incontrovertible evidence to the disciples that Jesus was glorified at God's right hand as the Savior of man and the Prince of life.

The baptism of the Holy Ghost was given to the apostles and disciples of Christ on this day. A wonderful first day of the week in the divine economy was the day of Pentecost. Not so great as the "first of the sabbath" on which Christ arose from the dead, and thus gave to all men the eternal pledge of the resurrection of all men from the dead. O wondrous event, in which all the human race have an eternal interest!

Truly, in the new creation a wondrous day is the first day of the week since then! After these days (the resurrection of Christ and the wonders of Pentecost) we find the disciples of Christ, historically, meeting on the first day of the week to take "the Lord's supper." (Acts 20: 7-12.)

And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow: and continued his speech until midnight.

Paul had been at Troas seven days at this "first day of the week."

The disciples could have met on the seventh day of the week to break bread had it been their custom. But what is "on the morrow" after "the first day of the week"? Paul did not "depart from Troas" on "the first day of the week." We must not construe the language of Luke into a falsehood to justify a conjecture.

Luke says they met on the first day of the week to "break bread," but an effort is sometimes made to show that Luke was mistaken. They met, say some, the evening before, and separated on the first day of the week. Roman time was the time the Saints at Troas were living under. After meeting "on the first day of the week" midnight followed, so did "the morrow," when Paul departed on Monday as we call it.

Further evidence that the saints in the apostolic age met together to worship "upon the first day of the week" is found in 1 Corinthians 16: 1, 2.

Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.

Paul was interested in the welfare of the poor saints, and when he visited the congregations of the saints, to gather their offerings, he desired their aid (money) to be already gathered into the general treasury, that they might not have to make the collection after his arrival. This could all easily be done by putting their several collections into the general treasury, at their gatherings to worship on the first day of the week, as they had been prospered during the week previous.

We hereby learn that the apostle had given like instructions to the churches of Galatia. This shows that it had become quite general at this date (about 59 A. D.), for the church to meet for worship on the first day of the week. John the Revelator, after his banishment to the Isle of Patmos, "was in the Spirit on the Lord's day," as he worshiped; and in his vision on that day had Christ manifested to him (Revelation 1: 10), and heard him speak; and saw him walking in the midst of the seven churches of Asia on that day.

The first day of the week had become a day of public worship in the apostolic age, as we have just learned. A day of prayer, of preaching, Acts 2: 14-40), of charity (1 Corinthians 16: 1, 2), of wonderful spiritual blessings. (Acts 2: 3, 4; Revelation 1: 10-18.)

Pliny, who lived near the time of John's banishment to the Isle of Patmos, and a governor of one of the provinces of Rome, wrote the Emperor of Rome about the Christians, among other practices, that they observed their public worship with prayers and the sacrament, on the first day of the week. (See Buck's Theological Dictionary, page 97.) Neither Jesus Christ nor any of his apostles ever enjoined on the saints the observance of the seventh day, of the law, in or under the gospel.

If the Sabbath of the law is binding, it should be left as God left it with Israel of old, unchanged. (Exodus 35: 1-3; 30: 12-16.)

The penalty for not thus observing it is temporal death. But it is no part of the gospel, could not be unless the church should visit the penalty for the transgression of it. God never changed it, or commanded any man to change it.

The law killed, but could not, cannot, give life. The law brings into "bondage," but cannot free men therefrom. (Galatians 4: 21-24; Romans 8: 2.) "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth."—Romans 10: 4.

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, the just shall live by faith.

Come unto Christ. Hear him, his sayings, and do them. Build on the rock, and the winds, the floods cannot overflow, or storms sweep you from the eternal life, or its eternal foundations.

MISSIONARIES TO GERMANY

If there has been any doubt that the Hun Gott and the God of Christianity were two different and distinct entities, it has been dispelled by the Corpus Christi day signed article of Pastor Edourd Falck, one of the most noted "divines" in the German Empire. The article appeared in the Berlin Morgenpost.

If there is any doubt in the minds of Americans that the German nation, root and branch, is not saturated with the brutality and treacherous hypocrisy of kaiserism, the words of this pastor to his flock dissolve it.

Pastor Falck says:

"The spirit of Pentecost is the spirit of action, and since the first Pentecostal day that dawned over the hills and valleys of Judea nineteen hundred years ago, no people on earth have more brilliantly fulfilled this divine doctrine than the German.

"It was the inventive German spirit, the spirit of seclusion and holy concentration, that built for itself the slender airship which at length fulfilled the ideal dream of humanity.

"It created the marvel of the U-boat, which defies all the cunning counter-measures of the enemy, and day by day breaks off piece after piece of England's world prestige.

"It brought forth that stupendous piece of artillery whose fire reaches to the ethereal regions of the atmospheric ocean and carries death and devastation across a distance of seventy miles into the ranks of the foe.

"The German spirit creates order and there where the ill-directed impulse toward so-called 'freedom' has crushed into fragments all that is decent and orderly, and has turned everyday life in chaos.

"In this way the German spirit, the spirit of Pentecost, which is the spirit of action, comes as a blessing also to other nations besides our own, because it is the one true representation of the force of Christianity."

After the war the missionary organizations of our churches may well consider the practicability of sending missionaries to Germany to convert the Huns to Christianity.—The Des Moines News.

THE SHOW BUSINESS

I attended a meeting of motion picture theater managers recently. It was quite by accident, since my interest in the movies is regrettably negative. In fact, when I look at the average picture the thought arises, "Why should material of such great photographic beauty be wasted on such an absurd story?" Pictures, from the plot standpoint, have not yet evolved from the Horatio Alger, jr., style of narrative. And so reel features leave me cold. Even the smile of Mary Pickford—just a bit too saccharine and a touch too naive—fails to charm. If not for the optimistic and buoyant Douglas Fairbanks I would even be without a screen favorite. And so I was rather an anomaly at that meeting of managers; I was there simply because one of them was a friend of mine.

The attitude toward life among the members of that group was frankly materialistic. They were discussing a plan to fight Sunday closing and to establish local option by legislative enactment. Sunday is a great day for movie houses ordinarily, possibly the best day of the week. It was, therefore, a fight for self-preservation. As such it reverted to first principles.

"Can you reach Assemblyman A?" the chairman queried.

"I know Rooney (the name is fictitious)," replied the man addressed, "and A eats out of his hand. Rooney doesn't even say 'Please' when he talks to A. A gets his orders and obeys them like a good fellow. Rooney's the Boss, and he lets 'em know it."

"How about the Daily Scrawl? Can you get an editorial out of them?"

"Jones of the Scrawl is a good friend of my partner's. I can fix him," came another answering voice.

"How about X?" A prominent civic worker was mentioned, a man who had been rather a nuisance to motion picture people through his officious administration of the State law forbidding minors to enter motion picture houses without guardians.

"The big stiff!" came a growl.

"He'll butt in once too often," growled number two.

"But what'll we do?" from the practical chairman.

No one seemed to know. This man moved in a social, political, and business circle remote from all of these men.

"I'll tell you," one man ventured, "we gotta get something on him. All these fellers are no good. Reformers are hypocrites. If a snapshot of their think-tanks could be taken, they'd be arrested by the Post Office Department for circulating indecent literature. I've got no use for them. We gotta shadow this feller and get the goods on him. He's gotta be fixed good and proper."

Discussion followed. No moral or ethical values were touched on. The law of the jungle prevailed. These men, fighting for their privileges and their bank books, bared their fangs and snarled their challenge. Not one of them for even a moment suggested any but sordid motives. And it occurred to me that these showmen were blind to the wonderful resources of the human soul. In accepting unquestioningly the dictum of Walpole, that every man has his price, they seemed to forget, with almost Teutonic stupidity, that this was only a half truth, that it could not possibly account for all the actions of even the most materialistic man, not to mention our sincere idealists, dreamers, artists, and sages.

The show business supposedly deals with the interpretation of man's noblest aspirations and with his most exalted emotions. It is conducted principally by men of no moral sense, and of vision strangely thwarted by an opaque wall of dollars. We have our scavengers of the screen, our harpies of the footlights, our vultures of popular song. To all of them a more refined civilization will say, "Thumbs down!"—Elias Lieberman in "The Melting Pot," a regular department in The American Hebrew.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

American Mothers, Uncle Sam is Depending on You!
Are Your Children Well Fed?

(This is the fifth of a series of articles on how mothers can help in Children's Year. By Mrs. Max West.)

The weighing and measuring test of children under school age, now going forward in connection with Children's Year, will afford American mothers a splendid opportunity to take part in the campaign to save 100,000 lives. When a child is found to be notably below the average in his development it may mean in many cases that he is not sufficiently nourished, either from actual lack of food, or because his food is badly chosen, or because he has been allowed to fall into bad eating habits.

A recent report from Doctor Josephine Baker, Chief of the Division of Hygiene of the city of New York, says that 90,000 school children in that city are distinctly undernourished, 30,000 more are in need of medical attention, while still thousands more are in such a state of health that they will easily slip over into undernourishment if present conditions continue. It is impossible to do much to correct in adults the results of malnutrition in childhood, but there are about ten million children under five years of age in American homes to-day who can be prevented from making such a showing as they shall come on to maturity. These undernourished school children began, in many cases, by being undernourished in the years while they were yet at home, when the results might, perhaps, have been prevented if the mother had understood what was taking place.

Children must have plenty to eat. Adults can get along for some time, if necessary, on noticeably restricted diets without serious impairment of health, but children can not draw on their reserves in this way without detriment to their growth and vigor. Children from two to six years should have three good meals a day, the heaviest one being in the middle of the day. Their day's food should include plenty of milk, not less than one and one half pints—skim milk may be used if butter is given also—plenty of cereals and green vegetables, particularly leaf vegetables, such as spinach. It is desirable also to have a more varied diet and to include sugar, fruits, eggs, and meats, with fish and fowl, in the daily meals. Information regarding these matters will be furnished to mothers if they will write to the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia.

Where the conditions are such that children are suffering from actual lack of food, the community must deal with the problem and apply to it such solution as may best fit local conditions.

In a great many cases, malnutrition is due not to lack of food but to a badly chosen diet. In this group of cases the remedy lies chiefly in educating mothers in the better selection and preparation of the food of their children. One proposal of the working program of the Children's Year is that classes shall be established which will give mothers practical information as to the sort of food their children need, and how to prepare it.

Such classes may be undertaken in connection with schools, particularly summer schools, or by the community, as a part of the Children's Year Campaign.

Auxiliary Chat

STORY ENVELOPES

Sister Krahl sent us a clipping from a current paper, in which it is urged that people who have not time for other phases of Red Cross work can, in almost every instance, help in the preparation of "story envelopes" for the soldiers in the hospital, who are still too weak to hold a heavy book or magazine. These stories are clipped from magazines of recognized worth, and are fastened and paged in a systematic manner, which will be explained by the Red Cross workers having this in charge.

Sister Krahl also suggests that good tracts, such as Brother William Lewis's one on "The Church of Christ—how shall I know it?" could be sent to soldiers, as the passive state of mind in certain stages of convalescence is a psychological moment for the presentation of the gospel truths. The idea is a good one, and may be developed by some of our worthy sisters with excellent results. A. A.

"TRAINING UP A CHILD IN THE WAY HE SHOULD GO"

We have noted with content the persistent way in which a discussion in which the Latter Day Saint mothers participate will eventually turn to the topic of child training. No matter if that discussion be in the home, the Sunday school, the Auxiliary, or the Religio class, sooner or later these wide-awake women will be anxiously asking questions or presenting problems or solutions which have come to them in their experiences as mothers. Is not this a very healthy sign? Perhaps these mothers may not always be permitted to be at the prayer services or the preaching meetings, but we can count on the fact that they are faithfully on duty, in the front line trenches, so far as their vision of their opportunity indicates.

This is an encouraging sign. No more hopeful factor enters into the church problems at this time than the one which indicates that the mothers of the rising generation are alert to their responsibilities and anxious to discharge them with credit to themselves and glory to God. Where we see one careless and indifferent mother in the church today, we see a hundred who are making their motherhood the chief business of their life, earnestly seeking to extend their knowledge of life and its duties, and to apply them in their daily work as God desires and expects of those who have entered into his kingdom on earth.

Those mothers who are anxious for more light, in regard to their commission as helpers to the divine Creator, will read with appreciation the announcement found elsewhere concerning the department of study which covers this line of work. Write at once to the sisters mentioned for a complete outline of their plans and course of study in mothers' and teachers' problems. It will prove of value to you. A. A.

(Auxiliary Convention at Guilford, Missouri, July 20, 21.)

Presumably we may hear from their officers the details of the work done by the women at the above stake convention. Sister Hitch sends us a program, however, upon which appear the names of Sister R. S. Salyards as president, and Sister Donnie Lehman as secretary of their stake auxiliary.

Business meeting Saturday afternoon preceded a paper by Sister A. E. McCord, and round table in charge of Brother G. R. Wells.

Oriole work was represented that evening by a talk from a young Cameron sister, and a paper "The standard of living," by Sister Gladys Christiansen. A. A.

The Deselm Local

Knowing the readers of our column are interested in the work of the Woman's Auxiliary, I will tell something of our Deselm local, thinking our experience may help come other sisters.

We have only about a dozen members, but each member is ready to push the work along. Branch officers requested the Auxiliary to procure a service flag for our township. At our next meeting we voted to carry out the wishes of the branch, and a committee was appointed to purchase the flag. The material was accordingly procured and the flag made, containing ten stars, as there are ten boys in the service from Rockville Township. This may seem a small number to some but ours is an agricultural township, there being no town in it.

Through the efforts of the branch president, Elder Earl D. Rogers, and the presiding priest, Victor Eklof, the whole township was interested in the patriotic service held July 2, in the town hall; a lawyer was secured from the county seat as speaker. Special music was rendered, the service flag dedicated and a Red Cross branch organized.

Thus our Auxiliary, working in harmony with the branch officers, was enabled to help make better feeling toward our church in the community, and show our loyalty to the Nation, and the support which we wish to give our boys at the front.

Sincerely yours,

BEATRICE ROGERS.

Correction

I am reading the Society Island Magazine number of the HERALD with interest and pleasure. But I am sorry to find that a portion of my letter must have gotten lost. I spoke of Sister Lillie Peterson organizing the Religios, but it was Sister Alberta Lake that went through with her self-made maps, illustrating the Book of Mormon lessons, building up both Religios and Sunday schools. It was this map work that so captivated the natives. They will learn from maps what they would not learn in other ways.

EMMA BURTON.

[In typing for publication, one line of Sister Burton's letter was omitted, thus causing the error.—EDITORS.]

Nova Scotia

My first appointment in the missionary field was Nova Scotia. After an absence of seven years finds me to-day back in the city of Amherst. Here I came seven years ago with "Dan." There is only one Dan, so you will know him just as well as if I had written, Elder Macgregor. From this province many Saints have emigrated to the States. Since the days of Joseph Burton and Holmes J. Davison, Nova Scotia has been on the church map. The "Orometua" of the South Sea Islands was the pioneer missionary in this province. And after him came others, but none like his pupil, H. J. Davison, the native son of the land of the Evangeline. Ah! There is incentive in the records of those men and it is expressed in a poem by Longfellow, "Lives of great men all remind us we can make our lives sublime." And when we think of the Saints that went to the States we wonder what the Boston Branch would do without them.

Crops in this province are not up to standard this year. Much snow and ice killed the hay crop. Late frost in June spoiled the bean and apple crop. Still the harvest time will come, the war is still waging, so we prayed and worked for a better and more fruitful yield.

It was the boys of Nova Scotia of the 125th who held Vimy Ridge. And, like the boys of the 125th, the Saints throughout the province are holding to the faith. It is indeed a wonderful revelation to me to find these isolated Saints so strongly rooted in the faith, and to see how optimistic they are in these days of trouble.

"I love thy rocks and rills, thy woods and templed hills" can be applied to Nova Scotia as well as to the States. Here are the fertile valleys and the sheep upon a thousand hills. It is very much like the scenery in the picturesque State of Maine. While at Williamsdale I felt very much at home in the church that looks so much like the church at Birch Harbor, Maine. The similarity is obvious, "the hand that made us" is the same. Did you know, Saints, that the short story writer, who first opened his eyes in this world in the province of Nova Scotia, now a preacher in California, was also a church builder? He may be yet.

At Williamsdale the Seventh-day Adventists invited me to preach at the college on the Sabbath and the invitation was accepted. (Maggie Macgregor please take notice.)

My stay at Williamsdale was made very pleasant by Brother and Sister Leander Johnson. While at River Philip it rained about all the time and but for Brother Kenneth Hyatt and wife and Jim's ever ready humorous stories, it would have been a very dull time. Sister Calla (Filmore) Canning's husband was killed in the disaster at Halifax. So the explosion was far-reaching in its deadly work. Your heart would go out in sympathy if you could come in contact with the people of that stricken city, who know what Hun frightfulness means.

At South Rawdon my time was altogether too short. The families of Wood, Haley, O'Brien, and the "lone" Dimmock are well known by all who have been to that section of the province. Good attendance there at the services and a fine lot of Saints, a sample of the finished product of Latter Day Saintism.

I stopped off a few hours at Halifax, en route to Amherst. The wreckage is pretty well cleared away, but not much building has been done to date. The stricken city looks desolate to-day. The story has been told over and over so I will not burden you with any extras. I don't think there would be any trouble for a missionary to feel at home with Brother Boyd Johnson and wife. Held cottage meetings while there and the elements furnished the music in loud tones of "thunder." Surely the Saints of the down east province are rooted and grounded in the faith.

Ever trying to do good wherever sent.

I am sincerely,

Your brother,

JOHN F. SHEEHY.

JONESPORT, MAINE, Box 50.

GROESWEN, BARBERS HILL, GREAT MALVERN.

WORCESTER, ENGLAND, July 8, 1918.

Editors Herald: It is quite a while since I wrote to you. On April 4 it was my privilege by arrangement to meet and give frankly the reason for our hope to one of the archdeacons of the Anglican Church in Wales.

This gentleman, like many others, was not really informed as to the real position of the church, and had endeavored to find out our relationship to what is called Mormonism, and what is represented as "Latter Day Saint" teachings.

We, myself, another brother, and the archdeacon, were comfortably seated in his home, with several purported histories and anti-Mormon works upon his table.

The first attack was upon our ideas and teachings of a God with flesh and blood—a man-God.

I said, "Mr. A, you are not reading from a book of my faith."

"Oh, yes, yes, yes."

"I beg your pardon."

The book was handed to me. Title-page read: "Printed at Islington Printing House, Liverpool, in 1860."

My check caused a surprise. We talked in friendly terms upon God, advancing the idea that if God were just exactly as we are, encased in a body of flesh, governed as we are, then his knowledge, power, and all his characteristics would be circumscribed as were ours.

I was asked if I could describe God. Answer: "No; can you?"

Christ's testimony was advanced—"God is a Spirit."

Paul's natural and spiritual body was dealt with, and much upon the subject was presented. The "Spalding Romance," Book of Mormon, apostasy, reformation, restoration, church history, infant baptism, revelation, canon of Scripture not full in the Bible, were all discussed.

The ground covered in questions and answers would prove instructive and interesting put up in form. I may do so later on. I found this man very fair in discussion and courteous. Much good was done. The supposed wolf was not proved to be an ignorant, wicked teacher of the evils of Utahism.

The archdeacon remarked that he believed that we were a true branch of the Christian church.

"Ah, no sir," was my rejoinder, "we are the root, the restored church."

Many such answers were given on the "Spalding Romance" and Book of Mormon.

Example: Mr. A. said: "Oh, that Book of Mormon is a great imposture, taken from the 'Spalding Romance.'"

Question: "Have you read the 'Spalding Romance?'"

"No."

"Have you read the Book of Mormon?"

"Eh, well, I'm sorry to say I have not."

"Very sorry, sir, but I must place you in a class as told about by the Jewish Sanhedrin: 'He that judgeth a matter before he heareth [or readeth] it, is not wise.'"

Prejudice was removed, and he stated that he had verified a tract of mine upon the subject: "A campaign against prejudice."

We are moving in my field of labor. The brethren in some parts show good desires and activity; at other points we are just marking time.

I baptized three at Exeter, June 25, at the public baths. One was the granddaughter of the faithful old Brother Wilson of Exeter, who has gone to his reward; two from Plymouth, the daughter and granddaughter of Sister E. Riddolls.

Sister Hewitt showed great courage, having passed through a serious operation over nine months past for a cyst. The effect was like the trimming of a tree; it grew enormously; and of course doubts and fear, hopes and faith arose; the wisdom and the folly of risking to baptize her were discussed by friends outside.

Some said to me, "Brother Jones, suppose she dies in the water."

"Well," I said, "suppose she does, it will be death in a good cause." But our faith, prayers, fastings, and the sister's bravery and determination prevailed. Confidence in God and the baptizer was such that we never had an easier baptism. A dream was fulfilled that the sister had just after my previous trip to Plymouth in February. The baptismal service was witnessed by about twenty-five. Pray for her to be spared awhile.

The candidates and myself had our pictures taken just at the water's side before the baptisms. Brother Ireland and Teacher Dohle assisted in our little service. Tears of rejoicing flowed at the answer to prayer. The confirmations were a powerful testimony to our claims of a restored gospel. Whenever and wherever people come into the church rightly, "the testimony of the Lord is sure." There are others to follow, and we expect to have baptisms at several points.

The Adventists are active here with their Saturday Sabbath keeping, soul sleeping, annihilation, judgments, root and branch burning.

But they cannot explain about the day that shall come (Malachi 4: 1) that shall burn as an oven, the proud and all that do wickedly to be destroyed. (Revelation 20: 9.)

After the millennial reign the end will be as Malachi describes of the wicked on this planet, nearing the state of promise that the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ when he shall reign forever and ever. (Revelation 11: 15.)

The annihilation theorists, including the Christadelphians, fail every time to explain that we shall be rewarded or punished according to our deeds done. They fail to explain Christ's statement that it would be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah at the judgment than for Chorazin and Bethsaida. The burning up of leaves, branch, and root theory is extended some by the root being the Devil. The Adventists say, "He'll take some burning."

If I liked article writing you would hear from me oftener. I visited the Y. M. C. A. (the American) last week. Reverend Wright Rose, Wayne County, New York, who has had a troop-ship training, was in charge. We had a couple of hours' chat on war, morals, results, etc. Had permission to leave any of our literature there and to have access to anything that would help us to find our church members. Needless to say, upon this matter we need to get a move on.

Yours in Christ,

THOMAS JONES.

FLOYD HOUSE, JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, May 5, 1918.

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH,

Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother: Your favor cabled through the Syrian and Palestine Relief Committee reached me safely, on the tenth of April, for which please accept thanks, it being the first money received since December, 1915.

I am glad to inform you that on Friday I received word from my husband through the Spanish consulate. He is in Damascus, is well, and lives with a Christian minister, formerly of Jerusalem, and they are very kind to him.

To-day we have had quite a thunderstorm with very heavy rains; this is very unusual for Palestine.

Sister Brown is still sick and needs much care and attention; at times I feel the burden very heavy, as I am quite alone and have had very poor health all winter. I am somewhat better now. I ask the prayers of the Saints in our behalf.

As ever your sister in gospel bonds,

H. S. JENKINS.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, July 5, 1918.

Editors Herald: I wish to bear my testimony through your columns to the truthfulness of this work. Over twenty-three years ago my mother and I embraced this gospel. At the time I was afflicted with a dreadful cough, spitting up blood day and night, and was so weak I could do no work and would eat but very little. My father before me died of this dreadful disease of consumption.

My mother and I attended sacrament and confirmation one Sunday evening, and in this service the elders administered to me. That evening at supper I was hungry and ate a hearty meal. That night I slept without being interrupted by this severe cough. Mother kept awake that night noticing the change. The next morning I ate a good breakfast and felt like a new person, and in a few days after I had strength enough to go to work. I now weigh two hundred and twenty pounds.

In later years our branch was disorganized and we became isolated. Not having the influence of the church services, I gave in to the weakness of human nature and for a few years strayed away. But the prayers and influence of mother in behalf of her erring son soon brought me back into the true fold.

Mother was stricken down with a chronic ailment, and being isolated at the time from the church we could get no elders to administer to her. Long before she was stricken down we both had attended services at the Christian Church and became acquainted with the good minister and his precious wife. During my mother's illness they were both at her bedside and administered to her with all the spiritual light they had.

This good minister and wife prayed for the recovery of my mother, but in his prayer he prayed that if it was not

God's will to spare her, that when the end should come she should pass out without painful struggles.

She was at that time suffering severely, but when the end came the prayer of this righteous Christian minister was answered, as she passed away like a little child going to sleep, and we could hardly notice her struggle. This is one of the plainest cases of answered prayers I have ever seen, even if it was by a minister of another church.

All truth is not confined to our church. The work of God goes on among all the righteous, no matter where their lot may be cast. My mother also selected the text of her funeral the day before her death. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

And I have one consolation. Over her bedside I asked if there was any special request she wanted to make me. She said she had none, which gives the writer the greatest consolation, that he has not only done his duty toward his deceased mother, but in his weak way is living the divine law.

Often she talked to me with her blessed arms around my neck. She passed into the beyond. Shortly after her death, I was so lonesome and I thought best to go to a city and follow my trade as barber, where I could have branch privileges and the influence of the church more. This is why I am now located here. We have a splendid branch, an extraordinary president who is always faithful to his duties, Brother A. W. Duemler, and while I am alone in this world yet the consolation I have in the blessings I receive, from time to time out of this work, both spiritually and temporally, cause me to want to live the life of a Saint.

Your brother,
QUINCY ANDERSON.

QUARTERMASTER SCHOOL, GREAT LAKES, ILLINOIS.

Editors Herald: You will pardon an occasional letter from me. I may give a few reasons why I write and thereby vindicate myself to some degree.

First, I want to be near the Saints. To have them as acquaintances and friends is an essential part of life. Secondly, I am trying to continue my preparation for a life of service and so I am reading, thinking, and talking the gospel. Third, I feel the necessity of being close to God.

Hoping you can to some extent appreciate my feelings, I write the following:

The life of a sailor is very interesting. We have much to do that is preparing us, not only for this war, but for a later life. We can all use our leisure hours as we see fit.

Somehow the reading rooms draw me to them and there I find rest, comfort, and knowledge. Brother J. W. Wight once told me to read good books. The result is that I am learning a little about the true life, the real way of living.

In one of my readings I found the question: "What is a Christian?" It is about that that I wish to write. A real Christian is one who follows the teachings of Christ, who neither adds to nor takes from his words.

The Sermon on the Mount holds all of Christ's teachings. What he said later is only a repetition of the sermon.

Religionists suffered more during the seventeenth century than at any previous or following period. The reformers who at that time came forth and those who followed sought the gospel, and yet their work was incomplete. I say incomplete because no church but ours follows Christ's teachings to the letter.

A preacher, one of my fellow sailors, looked at my Doctrine and Covenants and said it was merely a copy of the Bible.

Thus he vindicated us and at the same time condemned his own church.

Let anyone print creeds and the Sermon on the Mount in opposite columns and he will find no resemblance, but a surprising variation. For example I might cite you to the Westminster Confession. Does not one teach the truth and the other require many unnecessary obligations?

But "our" books are like the Sermon on the Mount because the words are those of the Master. To read the Books of our church is really a pleasure. I am glad that I can carry a few of them.

Thus to me a Christian is one who lives the gospel, and Christ shows us the way. The beauty of him is that he not only thought and did, but first of all he was.

In closing I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints. My testimony is that I will live nearer to him each day.

Sincerely,
E. R. KUHLMANN.

SAYER, PENNSYLVANIA, July 12, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am pleased to tell you and the readers of our dear HERALD that, although I am eighty-nine years of age, I am enjoying a comfortable degree of health and if my eyes were good as my body, I would be rejoicing in great activity. I therefore ask the Saints to pray for me, that my heavenly Father may grant me my sight again subject to his divine will, so that I might be able to walk without fear and without falling.

My belief is unwavering, my faith strong, that he will heal in his own due time. But oh, in these woeful and troublous times, when so much is needed I would love to work. I therefore ask again that the Saints pray for my continued health and the recovery of my sight.

Your sister,
EMMA W. SIMPSON.

TOLEDO, OHIO, July 10, 1918.

Editors Herald: On June 13 and 14 occurred the Sunday school and Religio conventions of the Northwestern Ohio District. They were held in the Saints' chapel at 1202 Waverly Avenue, Toledo, Ohio.

Those present enjoyed a real feast, especially along the educational lines, as the educational work seemed to be the leading feature of the most of the meetings.

Among those present of the ministry of those out of town were G. S. Trowbridge, of Saint Louis, Missouri, E. E. Long, of Lamoni, Iowa, and M. W. Liston, of Flint, Michigan. Brother Trowbridge was here in the interest of auxiliary work, especially that of the Religio, and his talks, as well as those of others were very inspiring.

We are in hopes that when the next convention is held that all will plan on being there, if it is at all possible to get to the place where it is held. These conventions are most beneficial to all engaged in church work, giving new ideas in the work, as well as inspiring all who attend to greater activity in that work, and so be ready to help in the redemption of Zion, when called upon for such assistance. This is the hastening time, and we as Saints should do all we can to improve in every line of church work so we will not be among the sleeping "virgins" when Christ comes to claim his own.

During the time of the convention the action of the General Conventions and the General Conference on the work of co-ordination was indorsed.

Editors Herald: Surely Uncle Sam can feed the world. Crops are wonderful, all kinds of grain, vegetables, and fruit. Our people are loyal, trying to help conserve food and do their duty as good citizens to win the war.

There is a spirit of indifference settling over the people that is very hard to cope with. Brother W. E. Haden and the writer held meetings at Chariton and Lucas, Iowa. Our special effort was to strengthen and build the Saints. Two were baptized at each place, and we feel we did much good.

By request of Brother Gillen for the Presidency, I came to Omaha to hold special meetings which have been well attended especially by the Saints.

Those who are willing to move forward with Zion's cause are alive and working, others are waking up. Surely this is a day when we ought to be living our religion.

Prophecies are being fulfilled daily before our very eyes. The day of the Lord draws near and we need to be doing our bit in his service as well as answering our country's call.

Yours for truth,

HUBERT CASE.

BALD KNOB, ARKANSAS, July 19, 1918.

Editors Herald: Possibly a few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard will not be amiss. On my way south I stopped at Mulberry, Kansas, where my sister, Mrs. Mary Skelbarn, with other Saints are trying to keep the church work moving. I preached for them while there and did what I could to encourage them in the work. My next stop was Joplin where I held forth for over a week and baptized a Mr. White whose wife is a member of the church, so I left them rejoicing in the work. I found the Saints at Joplin very much alive to the work as usual, but some few were thinking more of the world than of the church. That at times the pleasures of the world are enticing we all know, but who can afford to give up the hope of eternal life for a few worldly pleasures, at best only momentary pleasures, which rob us of our spiritual blessings here and send us downward to perdition for the world to come?

The hastening and sifting time is upon us, and only by living close to the Master will we be able to stand.

From Joplin I attended the conference of the Spring River District at Scammon, Kansas, and found the Saints trying to do their part in the Lord's work. Brother Charles Fry seems to have the work well in hand. Leaving Scammon by auto I stopped at Weir to preach for the Saints Sunday evening, and then returned to Joplin for the night with Brother Karlstrom and wife in the Ford. Springfield was the next stop, where I found a little band of faithful Saints, working by day, but ready to sacrifice at night to come to church and help to carry the work along.

Brother Walters assisted me in my work there and I left him fixing up some new seats for the church, which will lend much comfort to those who attend the services. Several outsiders seemed favorable but only one little girl was baptized. Many will admit that we have the gospel, but for some reason still hold on to the world. Jesus said: "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of man confess before the angels of God, but he that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angels of God."

Bidding farewell to south Missouri I stopped at Hardy, Arkansas, where I was met by some of the Saints and for three weeks was kept busy in town and in the country, which finally resulted in eight being baptized. While here I ordained Brother William R. Wood to the office of priest. He certainly has the interest of the work at heart. He and his noble wife make a strong gospel team. Elder Davis, near Hardy, has labored long and well to keep the gospel light burning in different parts and has helped the Saints to keep up courage for the work. There are several families of the Davises near Hardy, and all are alive to the interest of the church work.

While I was in Hardy the court house was secured, by the assistance of the Madden family who are live wires in church work, and we told the gospel story to those that came to hear. The interest is quite good at that place, and four were led into the waters of baptism before I left.

Through the efforts of the Madden family, a home class Sunday school had been started, so that by the time I was there conditions were ripe for organization. We organized a school. I think there were thirty present at the organization. It is a noble work, and in good hands. Great will be the reward of those who sacrifice to save others.

Fisher is the next stop. Here I found some splendid Saints who had purchased a new building for a church and had splendid prospects in view. I turned loose my gospel machine gun and charged the enemies forts and succeeded in capturing fourteen persons, ordained two elders, a priest, teacher, and deacon.

Brother J. T. Riley is to have a debate with the Baptists at this place, commencing July 22. We expect to return there and witness the fireworks during the debate.

My next stop was Bald Knob, where I am holding the fort. We are already making preparation to trouble the waters Sunday, and the organist of the services is leading the way. The interest is good and we are hopeful that others will follow. The church is in the country but most of the Saints live out of town. I find little difference between the Saints in Arkansas and in other places. It is like one great family working for the same good cause, hopeful of the final victory for the right. May the good Master give us all strength for the conflict.

After almost two months of dry weather we had a fine rain which was badly needed. Cotton looks good but corn is cut short from the drouth. Fruit is scarce, and vegetables also in many places. The rice fields are looking good. Several of our brethren are in the rice business.

The passing of train loads of soldiers remind us of the great battles that are going on across the waters. We hope and pray for the right to prevail. We are trying to make war against sin in this country, and hope that by the time we have finished our work that we may have been successful in pointing many to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. Have baptized twenty-seven since March 1.

In gospel bonds,

J. F. CURTIS.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, July 13, 1918.

ELDER ELBERT A. SMITH,
1513 West Walnut Street,
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Dear Brother Elbert: Your letter of July 2 received, and we were all pleased to hear from you.

Brother Chapman and I completed a two weeks' series of meetings at Laguna Beach last Saturday; and I came on to Los Angeles, leaving Brother Chapman to occupy in Santa Ana last Sunday. At the sacrament service in Los Angeles last Sunday I assisted Brother Dowker; through this brother the Lord spoke to the Saints, commending them for their humility and earnest efforts to promote the work in Los Angeles, making special mention of the splendid Sunday school work being carried on by the sisters of that branch. In this message the Lord spoke to me, expressing his pleasure in my past efforts, and approving of my appointment to the mission field; and assured his continued watchcare and assistance while we are laboring to build up his church work. These words of encouragement were appreciated by all present.

Arrangements have been made for Brother Chapman and myself to hold cottage meetings in different parts of Los Angeles, and I find this work to be very interesting, and believe much good will come as a result of such efforts.

Last Wednesday I was called home by telephone to speak at the funeral of Sister Christina Warren. Brother and Sister Dowker accompanied me in Brother Peter Kaufman's machine, Brother Kaufman acting as chauffeur. I stayed over for the Wednesday night prayer meeting, Brother and Sister Dowker returning to Ontario for the evening meeting there. I found the work progressing nicely under the direction of Elder Arthur H. Mills. Brother Mills welcomed me back to the home branch, and seemed pleased to have an opportunity to discuss local conditions as they are now confronting him. He is expecting his wife to arrive next Wednesday morning, and is planning to go direct to the reunion ground, and will remain there until after the reunion.

We wish you could arrange to be with us at the coming reunion. In planning for the reunion we are meeting with a hearty response and anticipate a successful reunion.

Yours sincerely,

463 North Grand Avenue.

G. H. WIXOM.

ARCHBALD, PENNSYLVANIA, July 27, 1918.

Editors Herald: The church at this place is steadily growing, some good people being added to the fold. Elder Edmund J. Gleazer is at present laboring in this district, having been here for the past two conference years.

A great deal of prejudice is being dispelled through the work done in this place. On July 4 the town council invited our church to participate in the parade and flag raising. Our pastor had the privilege of riding with the clergymen and also of addressing the people. Much comment was heard on the able manner in which he presented his views.

He and some of the local men are holding forth in street preaching in three different towns in this valley, and much interest is being manifested. I believe it will be the means of preparing the ground for spreading the gospel.

Doctor J. M. Tibbetts and Mrs. Marian Williams, representing the National Reform Association of Pittsburgh, have made a tour of this valley, speaking on German and Mormon polygamy. The writer, as well as some of the other brethren had the pleasure of hearing them in different places, and found them very fair, putting the blame where it belongs, upon Brigham Young, and openly declaring that the Reorganized Church does not practice any of the evils of the Utah church. And because they were fair and honest the clergymen and people denounced them, especially Mrs. Williams, one man going so far as to state that he was deceived, and that a conference of Missouri had sent her out. The old saying is true; convince a man against his will, and he is of the same opinion still.

Your brother in Christ,

FRED TREAT.

THORNE, NORTH DAKOTA, July 28, 1918.

Editors Herald: The sixteenth annual reunion of the North Dakota District which has just closed was a very successful one. It was held in the grove on the farm of Brother M. D. Graham, six miles northwest of Burlington. This is a beautiful natural grove on the Mouse River and an ideal place for camping. Everyone attending seemed to have an enjoyable time.

The preaching was of the best, conducted by E. L. Kelley, J. W. Peterson, J. A. Bronson, W. E. Shakespeare, J. E. Wildermuth, and others of the local force. Prayer services were a spiritual feast. The Lord blessed us with the gifts of the gospel at several of the meetings. Brother R. A. Lloyd, of Saint Louis, field worker for the Religio and treasurer of the organization, occupied each day, doing good work, which was appreciated by all.

The programs given by the young people of Burlington were an enjoyable feature, and on several afternoons the young folks met in a test of skill on the diamond in the great national game, both young men and women taking part. It was very interesting.

It was decided to hold the 1919 reunion at the same place. Brethren Warren McElwain, Thomas Leitch, and M. D. Graham were chosen as the committee and the time left with them. They were instructed to purchase two dozen seats.

Fifteen were baptized during the reunion. The Saints should make every effort to attend these meetings. They are a great source of strength to those living in isolated places where the elders seldom reach them.

Yours in bonds,

J. W. DARLING, Secretary.

NOWATA, OKLAHOMA, July 29, 1918.

Editors Herald: Sunday, June 23, will be a day long remembered by the Saints of Nowata Branch, it being the day on which we dedicated our church.

We had with us Bishop James F. Kier, who delivered the dedicatory address, using as his text, 2 Chronicles 2: 5, "The house which I build is great: for great is our God above all other gods." The application of the text in part was to the effect that the greatness depended not on the size, location, or cost of the building, but on the teaching of the ministers occupying therein and the lives of the people who chance to worship there. This address was fine and much appreciated by those present. Elder Roy S. Budd, of Independence, Missouri, our former pastor, read the historical sketch of the work done in this community, after which Elder Lee Quick, who started the work here, offered the dedicatory prayer.

Among others who were with us were Elder Charles Fry, district president, three auto loads of Saints from Joplin, Missouri, several Saints from Coffeyville, Kansas, and some from Bartlesville, Oklahoma.

A big basket dinner was served in the city park and, besides a feast of good things to tempt the appetite, a good social time was enjoyed by all present. After the dinner Elder Lee Quick addressed the crowd. A two weeks' meeting followed, in charge of Brother Quick, and while none entered the waters of baptism, yet we believe a good work was done, as the attendance was good and interested manifested by nonmembers was excellent.

MRS. W. F. HAYWORTH.

SULLIVAN, ILLINOIS, July 29, 1918.

Editors Herald: This leaves me in the faithful performance of my ministerial duties in the rich grain belt of the great prairie State where the soil is very rich and black. The yield in wheat, oats, and hay is enormous. If there is no backset the corn crop also will be very heavy. This is a new place where none of our elders have ever labored, and while it is gratifying to look out over the rich fields of grain and see the great provision that is being made for the needs of man, it is still more delightful to report that the gospel also is bringing forth precious fruit in this part.

I just baptized five persons, all adults, and others are interested. This new opening has been made through the faithful efforts of Sister Ella Wiseley, and by her urgent request for an elder to come to preach the word. She was healed of cancer through administration by Brother Isaac M. Smith thirty-one years ago, and while being isolated from church privileges, and located among the popular churches for many years, yet she has not been swayed from the faith by sectarianism in the least. How many of our members who are isolated are willing to follow the example of this sister as stated above? Who will be the first to respond?

In gospel bonds, F. M. SLOVER.

The Higher Powers of Man

Read this extract from a letter to President Frederick M. Smith, in which Charles A. Ellwood, a scholar and author of national reputation, dwells on the subject of the Higher Powers of Man as presented in President Smith's book:

I had the pleasure of reading your book on The Higher Powers of Man. I had hoped to see you in Kansas City, and to express my pleasure in person to you; but I failed to meet you and so drop you this line. . . . I like the book. It seems to me to open up a delicate and difficult topic in a way which the lay reader can understand. It is, moreover, timely, because for the sake of human and national efficiency in our present crisis people in general need to know how to "tap the higher levels of human energy."

ministerial reports read, showing 73 sermons preached and 10 baptisms since last conference. Branch reports: Escatawpa, gain 9, present membership 198; Mobile, gain 1, present membership 102. District president reported as delegate to General Conference. A letter from Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith was read. Recommendations from Mobile were read: Henry Hough for elder, Earl Scott for priest, David Lombard for teacher. Recommendations approved, and the brethren ordained on Sunday morning. Officers elected: President, T. J. Booker; vice president, Oscar Tillman; secretary-treasurer, Edna Cochran; member library board and member gospel literature bureau, Irene Searcliff. A motion prevailed favoring the plan of holding two-day meetings at the discretion of the district president. T. J. Booker, Dan Sherman, and Ebon Miller were appointed a committee to purchase a service flag for the district. A rising vote of thanks was tendered Brother Warr for the faithful service rendered during the time he has acted as president of the district. Vancleave chosen as place for next conference. A demonstration in nursing was given by Miss Goff and Mrs. Rowe in the afternoon. A priesthood meeting was held at 6 p. m. Sunday services were three preaching services, prayer meeting, Sunday school, social purity lecture, and one children's service. The sum of $23.25 was collected for conference expenses. Adjourned to meet at the call of district presidency. Edna J. Cochran, secretary, East Side, Mississippi.

Pastoral

To the Saints of the Northeastern Illinois District; Greeting: I feel that I would like to have a little visit with all of you, so take this means to that end. So far as I am able to judge, the work in the district is moving along about as usual, excepting that the conditions in the world are such that in order to keep the work of the church moving the Saints are required to make greater sacrifice than ever before. This, however, is in harmony with Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7, as follows: "The Spirit saith further unto the church assembled and at large: In order that the temporal affairs of the church may be successfully carried on and the accumulated debt of the church in its respective departments where debts have accumulated may be properly met and in due time discharged, the church is instructed, both as members and as the body at large, to avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continued onward progress of the general work; and both in private and in public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants; and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body. And the Spirit counseleth the church in this regard."

It is good to thus be under the guiding hand of a kind heavenly Father, who is willing thus to direct us here below. It would seem to me that the Saints ought to be the best prepared for the requirements of Uncle Sam of any people on earth, if they have been giving heed to the instruction of the Lord to them. Thus the Lord has given us direction how to pay the debt of the church. In addition to this the Sunday school has decided to make a special offering to further assist, and this too is pleasing to God if we do it in the right spirit, and not neglect the regular tithes and offerings that the Lord has said we should observe.

I heard Bishop McGuire state at the General Convention this spring, that he hoped the Saints would remember that the Christmas offering was to be a special offering, or sacrifice over and above the regular tithes and offerings required by the law. Now at the late district conference held at Mission in June, Brother C. B. Hartshorn as the district superintendent of the Sunday school, and myself as president of the district were appointed as a special committee to encourage and assist the Sunday school and the church to make the Christmas offering all that we can for 1918. This district did very well last year but we hope to see a much better showing for this year. There were some of the schools that did remarkably well last year while some did not take so much interest, but this year we want every school and every member of the church, even if not active in attending the Sunday school, to do what they can to assist the local Sunday school of your branch with the 1918 Christmas offering.

In Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6; we read: "Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good they shall in nowise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned." So let us do our best that the blessing of the Lord may attend. As I see it every child who is a member of the church should be a tithepayer. Should they have a bank, or other way of keeping their money, they should be taught to spend money for those things that are necessary, and then give the Lord a tithe of whatever they have left, and make an offering unto the Lord from time to time, and then, like big folks, feel that the rest is theirs to use wisely and from this tithed money make an offering to increase their Christmas offering. And as Brother McGuire advises that special ways and means, outside of the regular tithes and offerings, be devised, to swell the Christmas offering, because of special needs of the church. Then we can all rejoice together to know that the church debt is paid, as the Lord has said we should do.

Not long ago an old sister gave me some money for the general church debt, stating that she wanted to live to see it all paid.

I wish to say also to all the scattered Saints of the district, as well as to those in branches, that we regret that conditions were such that the conference in June voted that we hold no reunion in 1918. But there were many reasons why it was thought best not to hold a reunion this year, viz: Tents were not to be had only in a very limited number and at a very high cost; the attendance would be very light owing to raise in railroad fare; the general high cost of living and the further fact that the demands and needs of the Government were increasing and we all expected to do what we can; our local organizations, as church, Sunday school, Religio, etc., to be maintained, and also the missionaries and their families to be cared for at greater expense. So let us all be patient, and in due time no doubt the reunion will be ours to enjoy again. So far as I have been able to reach the branches of the district since General Conference, I find them doing real well as a rule and have held a week's meetings in some of the branches and hope to reach them all in due time. Let us all do our best!

Your servant in Christ,
PIPER CITY, ILLINOIS, July 20. J. O. DUTTON.

Our Departed Ones

DURDEN.—Mintie Durden died at Robertsedale, Alabama, June 22, 1918. Was widow of John Durden, who died April 1. Has been afflicted for the last 20 years, so was not very strong, but she was always kind and gentle, and when able never failed to minister to the wants of those who came to her home. She left to mourn her loss 2 sons, 2 daughters, father, mother, brothers and sisters, and many friends. Laid to rest June 23. Was 37 years old. Baptized by W. J. Booker. Funeral sermon by T. J. Booker, assisted by H. M. Aebli.

DURDEN.—Bethel Durden, aged 16 years, died at Robertsedale, Alabama, June 26, 1918. Was the daughter of John and Mintie Durden. Had been sick a year with tuberculosis. Thus the death angel has stepped in and taken 3 out of the same family in a little less than 3 months. All were members of the church; Sister Bethel and her father were baptized and confirmed November 15, 1914, by T. J. Booker. Sister Bethel was laid away June 28. Funeral sermon by H. M. Aebli.

CHRISTMAS OFFERING DIPLOMA

You know with what pride you point to your high school or college diploma. We want every Sunday school to have that same feeling when they point to their "Christmas Offering Diploma" which is lithographed and will bear the personal signature of the Presiding Bishop. This can be framed and hung in the Sunday school room.

How to secure one:

Every Sunday school that contributes $2 or more per member to the 1918 Christmas offering will be given a Christmas offering diploma, which will be a continual reminder to visitors and friends that your school is composed of workers.

By telegram the First Presidency has learned of the death of Elder Rees Jenkins. He died in the hospital at Damascus of typhus, May 9. Sister Jenkins is still in Jerusalem. The church will make every effort to assist her.

From several letters and a clipping from the Chatham Planet of July 26, 1918, we learn that the reunion at Erie Beach was one of the best ever enjoyed in that district. There were 140 tents on the grounds, and a very good attendance all through. President F. M. Smith and Bishop B. R. McGuire were present the latter part of the reunion, and were given a splendid reception. Bishop Becker, Patriarchs F. A. Smith and A. Leaverton, John Shields and James Davis, Apostles R. C. Russell and Paul M. Hanson, and many missionaries from the London and Michigan districts were in attendance. John W. Rushton attended the opening of the reunion and then had to leave in order to be ready to attend the Southern California District Reunion at Hermosa Beach. The meetings were of a high order and the gifts of the gospel were present. The write-up in The Planet is quite enthusiastic, especially with regard to the reception to President F. M. Smith.

"I have nearly all of the HERALDS for a number of years back. If any of the elders or others could use them and will pay charges on them, I will gladly send the lot."—Emma L. Newberry, Argyle, Iowa, R. F. D. 1.

D. O. Harder and his brother are the only Saints in Bixby, Oklahoma, and say they would be glad to have any of the missionaries or elders call on them.

Any of the American or Canadian Saints who may be in the Birmingham District should take note of the following address: Brother F. H. Edwards, 13 Heathfield Road, Handsworth, Birmingham, England. Meetings are held at this address, and all who have obeyed the gospel and wish to be with the Saints will be made welcome.

COMPILING LIST OF MEETING PLACES

Brother C. I. Carpenter has circularized the presidents of branches and asked them to supply the necessary information as to places of meetings held. A good response is being turned in, and he hopes to have soon a rather complete file of information on this subject. Those desiring such information in a hurry should address C. I. Carpenter, 410 North Grand Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

STORIES FOR CHILDREN

Those who attended the recent General Convention, will recall the action taken in regard to stories on the Book of Mormon by Sr. S. H. Forties. These stories prove to be of very high merit and will be published and issued at the same time as the October Quarterlies. President Trowbridge writes it is "not the intention to invite the attendance of small children but only to take care of those who come." The stories should prove of interest to parents, as well as teachers. Further details will be given in the HERALD, as soon as determined.

The Des Moines District Dispatch is now a recognized journal with second class mail privileges. We have the July number and like it very much. It is not pretentious, but features local church news, and unifies the interests of the Saints in the district.

The Mission Voice is the name of Brother R. W. Farrell's city circular and is issued monthly. He prints announcements of meetings, with subjects, etc., and because it is small and inexpensive is able to send fresh ones at least once a month.

Sister E. S. Morey, of Pleasanton, Iowa, says she has a large number of HERALDS for anyone wishing them. They have been well read, and since most of the Saints take the church papers, there seems no way to dispose of them. Anyone needing them, write to her.

LAMONI STAKE REUNION

The stake reunion is progressing nicely at this writing, except for the extremely hot weather, which reached a maximum of 106 on Sunday. There was one prostration from the heat. But in spite of this, the attendance at all the meetings is good. The attendance of campers is equal to that of last year, perhaps a little better. There are 123 tents on the grounds, with a total of 513 campers.

The order is excellent and the entire reunion most satisfactory. The morning prayer meetings are largely attended and very spiritual in their nature, including many manifestations of the gifts of tongues, interpretation, prophecy, etc. The preaching is of a high order.

On Monday, the 5th, there were seven baptisms, four children, Eugene McKean and wife, and E. F. Partridge, at one time pastor of the Methodist church here. His wife was baptized over a year ago.

At a special conference held on the first day of the reunion, the resignations of Paul N. Craig and E. J. Giles as counselors to J. F. Garver, stake president, were accepted. Upon recommendation of Brother Garver, concurred in by the president of the church, the Quorum of Twelve, and the stake high council, the name of Daniel T. Williams, until recently in Des Moines District, with Des Moines as objective, was presented as counselor and his ordination provided for. This ordination was attended to at an early session.

All of three afternoons and one evening service is given over to organized recreational features. The work of the young people is well directed and much appreciated. The early morning prayer meetings for the young people only are well attended and accompanied by marked manifestations of God's Spirit.

Elbert A. Smith, Daniel Macgregor, W. A. McDowell, I. A. Smith, H. S. Salisbury, are in attendance, in addition to the missionary force of the stake and town, and visitors from several adjoining States. President Garver has not regained his normal strength, but is able to carry a heavy load in administrative responsibility, along with Acting President R. V. Hopkins.

THE LAMONI REUNION

The reunion of the Lamoni Stake for 1918 is now past, but leaves a new spiritual strength. We are giving much more space than usual to this event because it may serve as a pattern for other similar reunions.

One of the most prominent officials of the church remarked that these reunions were second only to the General Conference in importance, and that the Lamoni reunion should prove a pattern to others. With the hope that it may prove of interest and help to others, we submit copy of the report of Elder John F. Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake, and also the following items.

The success of the reunion is largely dependent upon thorough organization. The programs are made out and printed in advance. Every detail is thought out and provided for beforehand. Of the material arrangements, electric light wires are extended to the grounds for the period of the reunion. A telephone is also installed for the use of those camping out. Two deliveries are made each day of groceries, vegetables and meat, and also one or more deliveries of ice. Well water is furnished from four hydrants, pumped daily to a reservoir on the hill.

The care of the grounds and tents is carefully provided for in advance, as is also the item of music, which was this year well handled by H. C. Burgess, so that necessary provisions were made for every service and this without delay. The musicians and singers were always on hand before the ringing of the second bell.

As to the arrangement of the meetings, a sacrament service is held on the opening and closing day, but the general order of meetings is: Prayer meeting and preaching each forenoon, and preaching each evening. As indicated in Elder Garver's report, the young people's prayer meeting was provided for as an extra, preceding all other services. On Sunday this with the Sunday school added to the services of the forenoon makes four for the morning. As to the afternoon sessions two are given over to business meeting at the opening and close of the reunion; two are Sunday afternoon preaching services; three are given over entirely to recreation, and the corresponding evenings from nine to eleven, are also given over to recreation. Every afternoon is free except for the one and a half hours' meeting. Suitable games are provided on the grounds, and are in almost continual use except during sessions.

The other five afternoon sessions are given to auxiliary meetings. No attempt is made to hold preaching services in the afternoon except on Sunday. Hence the auxiliaries are not forced to take a second afternoon session when the audience is already weary. In addition to these five afternoon sessions and the Sunday school there is provided regular meetings at the young people's tent—a sermon in the forenoon, story-telling in the afternoon, and illustrated lectures two evenings.

The spirit of humility and devotion on the part of the representative men of the church attending has marked influence in producing unity of effort. The reunion this year is doubtless one of the best ever held. There was a marked outpouring of the gifts of the Spirit, and this through not one but many, confirming each other and evidently directed by the same Spirit.

Brother Garver's report to the reunion follows.

To the Saints of Lamoni Stake and Reunion Conference Assembled: It is with pleasure we report for the committee concerning the present reunion. It has been a delight to be associated with so noble a band of Saints in so good a cause. And while we cannot chronicle fully the various features of the season, nor convey in this report any comprehensive statement of the uniform cooperation and activity of the people, nor of the free flow of the Spirit of God in its varied manifestations, there is due you for record some effort to cover the work of the reunion, and to crystallize the consensus of opinion among the brethren concerning the broader work of the reunion, that is, the general scope of the sessions and the possible effect in the lives of the people.

The Saints repairing to the grounds with hardly an exception in ample time, and making ready for the opening session, the sacramental service of Wednesday morning, July 31, made possible not only our assembling on that morning undisturbed and under the spirit of unity, but has, we think, had its part by way of suggestion and otherwise in directing our occupancy to the good of the sessions.

The order of the camp, the decorum of the people, and the effort to conform to the few regulations necessary have surpassed anything we have witnessed on these premises heretofore, or anywhere else, for that matter. Especially have we been pleased with the conduct of the young. These conditions following the effort of the people to cooperate with the administration in an orderly and timely assembly have made possible among us on the grounds at all hours and in the services especially a common communion and a peace which have been good to see and to experience. This spirit has characterized the social services to a marked degree. As a consequence, we have enjoyed that quiet, intelligent, searching ministration which has borne witness to many that we have pleased God, and which has enabled us to see more clearly the duty before us, and to determine as never before to order our lives accordingly.

In the ocular gifts of the Spirit we have witnessed as marvelous an outpouring as last year, and we are of the conviction that in their effect on the people, more have been touched and melted to humility, the Spirit in its operations being more general among us. In the multitude of witnesses of the gifts, we have been strengthened as never before. And finally, the people resting under a greater degree of intelligence—spiritual intelligence—than we have before witnessed among God's people—I say, under this high order of intellectuality so to be desired, we have reached heights of appreciation, discernment, and determination to do, which if held to will carry us forward under our appointment as the people of God in this critical stage of the world's history and of our efforts under the Master in the establishment of Zion.

Now, if we comprehend the divine appointments of the endowment, these are to be among its components: The people exercising themselves under self-control, as we have here witnessed; under a peace surpassing uninspired understanding; with one common purpose receiving as it were from cloven tongues as of fire the witness of the Spirit burning into their very souls, in common, the same testimony of God's divine approval and operations; with undying determination facing front in solid ranks, carrying forward at any hazard to self the banners of their King and Commander, till from the towers of Zion these banners shall float aloft to guide all who strive toward the city of refuge, and out of the terror and devastation of the present age. These things, I say, as we understand, are to have their place in connection with the endowment. And if this conception be in any part correct, then are we receiving as the Saints of the Lamoni Stake an earnest of our endowment, for never before have we enjoyed so universal an outpouring of intelligence, accompanied by so high a degree of inspiration, and never have we so resolved to do.

The appointment of Daniel T. Williams, as general director especially of the activities of the young, and with the help so freely and ably given him, has made possible a more uniform and more centrally ordered effort along recreational lines. These activities have been broadened so as to reach more classes than heretofore. Brother Williams has also had general oversight of the special spiritual interests of the young. F. M. McDowell was requested to give his especial attention to the activities of the young, both recreational and spiritual. This was before we were sure of having Brother Williams with us at this reunion. As is his wont, Brother McDowell, without hesitation and without jealousy, cheerfully concurred in the suggestion that Brother Williams be recognized as representing the administration in the activities aforesaid, and he has rendered in this connection yeoman service. R. V. Hopkins, Sisters Alice Mae Burgess, Grace and Florence Thompson, Marcella Schenck, May Needham, and Marguerite Wickes, have been intrusted with special appointments in connection with these recreational and spiritual efforts. They have been ably assisted by others. The labor of all is appreciated, and will make for good.

Arrangements were made for the young people to meet in prayer services every other morning. These meetings were so well attended and accompanied by such a fine spirit, the young people by petitioning the reunion presidency have the latter part of the reunion met every morning at 7.45. They have been blessed in their efforts and the work should profit by the same.

The preaching has been of a high order. The following invited speakers have occupied: Elbert A. Smith, J. F. Keir, W. A. McDowell; also the stake missionaries, Daniel Macgregor, W. E. Haden, Hubert Case, J. W. Wight; besides these, J. F. Garver, R. V. Hopkins, D. T. Williams, and Albert Carmichael, of the stake officers, have occupied, as have I. A. Smith and S. A. Burgess. Nothing preventing, Heman C. Smith will speak this evening.

The attendance has been large. There have been 120 resident tents, inhabited by about 550 people of the Lamoni Stake. We have had in use also six service tents, making in all 126 tents on the grounds. Hundreds of Lamoni people and those from surrounding communities not camping on the grounds have attended more or less regularly. Besides our home people there have been in attendance 125 visiting Saints from 23 districts and stakes as follows: Little Sioux, Fremont, Northeastern Nebraska, Des Moines, Nauvoo, Northeastern Illinois, Kewanee, Seattle and British Columbia, Eastern Iowa, Pottawattamie, Southern California, Southern Wisconsin, Northern Wisconsin, Alberta, Canada, Northeastern Missouri, Saint Louis, Minnesota, Northeastern Kansas, Northwestern Kansas, Spring River, and Far West, Independence, and Kansas City stakes.

We have been glad to welcome our friends. We are of the conviction that if we deport ourselves wisely and order our reunions with dignified appointments hereafter, it is possible for us to realize on these grounds many wonderful meetings, and which will be of very marked influence in the forward movement of God's children. To this end let us labor as well as pray.

Sincerely,

J. F. GARVER, for Committee.

HOLY PLACES

We call particular attention to an article republished this week from the Journal of History, April, 1918, under the above title, by Elder Heman C. Smith.

It suggests an explanation which may be new to many of our readers, yet entirely consistent with the text. It presents many good points and too many to be set forth here. In view of the awful conditions now, it would appear as if the time were near at hand for us to stand in holy places. It means not only to stand on the ground, but to feel ourselves in the presence of God, and so keep and make our life right before him.

THE LIBRARY COMMISSION

We are just in receipt of District Library Bulletin, No. 1, issued by the secretary of the commission, Vernon A. Reese. He emphasizes the necessity of our continuing our work unchanged. It should be remembered that no changes have as yet taken place. The General Conference did not sustain the Library Commission this year, because they referred the whole matter to the Joint Council, with power to act. But so far as we have been advised, the Joint Council has not acted, and in the meantime President F. M. Smith has advised the commission that its members should continue as at present until further advice.

To those who read the Conference Minutes carefully, it will be noted that this recommendation from President F. M. Smith came in connection with the request of Graceland College for a library building, and it may be deferred until such time or near such time as it is clear that the college is prepared to organize its library force to take care of the library interests of the church, and this will probably be dependent upon the erection of a library building. It is a change which may be expected in the course of the next year or two, but has not yet been made.

Until it is made the present members of the Library Commission are moving forward with their usual work, striving to see that our library work is not neglected. They are not, it is true, undertaking new plans, as they deem it inadvisable to open up new fields under existing conditions, since this matter of the field of labor is in charge now of the Joint Council.

But it should be noted that this action, when made, will affect only the general commission. No action has yet been taken affecting the district or local boards. It is intended at present that the library work shall be organized under the department of education, so that those in charge will be nominated by the coordinating committee for that department of work, unless it should be found advisable to make the library work a department of college work entirely. In which case it would devolve upon the Board of Trustees of Graceland College. But as already stated this matter rests with the Joint Council and affects only the general commission.

Again, any changes that may be made in the future we shall be in a better position to profit by, if we do the work before us now and do it well. So we sincerely trust that no local or district board will relax in any degree their efforts, but rather push forward more energetically to accomplish the work before them, in a way that seems most effective to meet their own local conditions and secure tangible results.

ROMANAN WIGHT

The Saints among whom he has labored will be more than sorry to learn of the death of Elder Romanan Wight. Elder Charles E. Butterworth has sent us a brief statement of his life, from which we gather the following facts:

He was a son of Lyman Wight, and was born at Fredericksburg, Texas, January 13, 1851. At nine years of age he removed to Gallands Grove, Iowa; and in 1900 to Dow City, where he has resided ever since.

He was baptized by John A. McIntosh in 1862. He was superintendent of the Sunday school at Gallands Grove and for a time was superintendent of the Gallands Grove District Sunday school. He was ordained an elder in October, 1897, and a seventy in April, 1901. In 1902 he was chosen as one of the seven presidents of that order, and labored as a missionary in Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota, and Texas. Since 1905 ill health has confined him to his home. He has grown more and more helpless, so that his death, on August 3, was a relief to him.

So another good man who has kept the faith has gone to his reward.

COLLEGE WORK NOW

A notable feature of the present world struggle is the attention given to collegiate students. They are among the first to volunteer, and they are the first to be given official ranking; and from them are chosen most of the line officers. This is simply because experience has shown the probability of better service from the man with college training.

It is not therefore surprising that we find an urgent demand that the college man remain in school as long as possible. The student soldier, though registered, is placed in deferred classification until needed. And this continues if he continues at his studies. By no means should our school and college efforts be lessened, but quite the contrary. It becomes more and more evident that there are men needed with special training in wireless, and they are greatly needed for that. But men of broad general training are needed now, and will be after the war. Every young man and young woman who can should continue school work if possible.

Graceland College opens September 6. Keep it in mind.

To those who feel they cannot pay their way, there is the Religio offer to loan money to help them through college. Full information can be secured from President George N. Briggs, Lamoni, Iowa, president of Graceland College; or G. S. Trowbridge, 5032 Devonshire Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri, general president of the Religio.

We note also running in the church papers, a request that you write to the advertising manager, R. J. Lambert, Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, to learn another way to help yourself through college.

Besides this, Graceland is the school where work is popular; and the boy or girl who is working his way through school is a regular thing, rather than the exception.

It is not too late now to plan to attend Graceland this year beginning next September, but early action is of advantage.

THE MORALS OF OUR ARMY

An article in The Outlook for July 10, 1918, by Daniel A. Poling, states that after a very thorough investigation throughout France, at the front, through the Y. M. C. A., the Red Cross, reports of landings, and all places where the American soldiers in France are to be found, that he finds the moral conditions much better than in civil life, and also greatly improving.

Contrary to the practice in former wars, General Pershing is laying down very strict rules with regard both to the use of intoxicants and with regard to moral delinquency. Mr. Poling states that at least five men are morally born again to every one that is morally weakened by work in the Army. He confirms the thought that our men abroad must be kept fit to return to us when the war is over.

But there is another matter quite as important. America must be made and kept fit for these men to return to. There rests a great and very grave responsibility.

The American soldier has no rum allowance. Pure water is supplied in sufficient quantities. The program is based upon total abstinence and prohibition.

Mr. Poling, after again emphasizing the condition under which he has observed the American soldier boys, including their return dead tired from the firing line and the front line trenches, concludes with:

They have paid a great price, but, counting all cost, they have found the expenditure justified. They are the very vanguard of the pathfinders of civilization; they are the knights of the twentieth century.

I would be false to these men if, having the evidence of their moral soundness, I did not declare it; and I would be false to those who gave them as a priceless offering upon the altar of freedom.

General Pershing and those who are in authority with him in France deserve, not a resolution of inquiry or censure, but a vote of confidence with the assurance of our cooperation and support.

The American soldier is the worthy inheritor of the finest traditions of American arms, a credit to those who bore him, an honor to the Nation he represents, and the last and best hope that civilization shall not fail in her struggle to establish the might of right.

THE PASSING OF WHISKY

In the American Magazine for July, 1918, there appears an article by Hugh S. Fullerton, on "The last appearance of Old John Barleycorn." It is rather of interest as he argues, that the saloons will be closed automatically in the course of a few years, as they depend for their success, not upon the lighter liquors but on the whiskies and brandies, and that the whisky business is now going out of existence and no more is being manufactured, and the wholesale whisky business has already ceased.

The result is that while there was over one hundred and seventy million dollars of distilled spirits on March 1, 1918, the annual consumption is ninety-seven million gallons, but the price is soaring so rapidly as to make an additional reason for limiting consumption. The Government, in permitting the sale of the liquor on hand has at least satisfied the great manufacturers of distilled liquors, so that with the added prices they are not suffering loss.

Mr. Fullerton states that it is very doubtful if they could be persuaded after the war, again to enter that business. As a result, not only of high prices but of poorer quality of goods, even old drinkers are quitting, and this movement is having a powerful effect towards prohibition.

Again he states that the money was in booze or whisky, and the saloons cannot afford to continue on anything like its present scale and deal in beer or light wine. The fact has come under our personal observation that the number of saloons in the large cities is decreasing at the present time, and somewhat rapidly. Some saloon keepers have already prepared to open parlors for soft drinks instead of liquors. It looks as if the present situation is assisting in the solution of the saloon problem.

"A man is valuable only as he has fitted himself to be."

If forty years' acquaintance with our own nature has taught us nothing else it ought to have taught us humility and charity for others.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

[The following article appeared in the Journal of History for April, 1918, written by its editor, Elder Heman C. Smith, and being on such a timely subject should come to the attention of the HERALD readers as well.—EDITORS.]

That one place can be holier than another seems at first thought to be superstitious, and yet to respect and venerate places made sacred by associations seems to be so ingrained into human nature that to seek to eradicate it would be a hopeless task. It has been a characteristic in the human character as far back as history records the doings of men, and none are free from it. Who of us do not venerate the places of childhood memory, the old home where in memory we see father, mother, brother, sister, and the friends of childhood clustered around the home altar? Who could visit Mount Vernon and not see the stately father of his country walking the garden paths or hear the echo of his footsteps in the time-honored corridors, or see the motherly face of Martha Washington presiding over kitchen or drawing-room?

Who can visit Liberty Hall and discern not the noble face of John Hancock sitting in the ancient chair behind the antique table upon which lies the immortal Declaration of Independence, as with solemn faces the men now famous as statesmen pass by and subscribe their names, pledging their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honors to the cause of liberty?

Who can stand within the sacred precincts of Carpenter Hall and not see before him the venerable form of Washington presiding over a body of as great men as ever deliberated on the affairs of men? Who can stand upon Lexington Green, on the soil that drank the first blood of the Revolution, and hear not the voice of young John Parker saying to the Minute Men as the British approached: "Stand your ground. Do not fire unless fired upon, but if they want a war let it begin here"? Or upon the bridge at Concord and be deaf to the shot heard round the world?

These and many other scenes of general importance crowd upon the mind, and then to every individual comes memory of places not so noted but just as dear, leaving an impress of holy sanctity and respect for places that will ever linger in Memory's hall.

As one of our modern poets has said:

I know that the spirit of what has been Still lives in the place it knew,
I know that liberty speaks again
Where liberty's bugles blew.

I know another thing, out of earth strife
(And I count it a blessing, too,) Freedom and liberty leap into life
'Neath skies that are fair and blue.

In clear, sweet air, on still, far heights,
Where 'tis always glad-voiced morn,
Where never falls shadow but that of night,
The best things of God are born.

The hills where the winds untrammelled roam,
The plains like an upland sea,
Are waiting places for souls to come
And learn they are men and free.

This feeling of reverence for spots of sacred memory has also had divine sanction. When Moses heard the voice of God from the burning bush he was told:

Draw not nigh hither; put off thy shoes from off thy feet;
for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground.

It was this tendency to worship holy places that prompted the crusaders to try to rescue the holy sepulcher from the hands of the infidel, and now we all rejoice to hear that the banner of a Christian nation floats over the Holy City.

Growing out of this tendency to consecrate and revere holy places comes the desire to build or erect monuments which materializes in markers more or less expensive, that mark the places where the dust of our loved ones are buried. This tendency finds expression in a public way in erecting monuments to great statesmen and military heroes in historic places, etc., and even to the marking of old trails or roads of historic note. In a private way we each express ourselves in the cemetery or private burying ground.

This may be called superstition, but it is remarkable to note that as we flatter ourselves that superstition under the light of scientific research decreases this tendency increases, and has increased until all are affected by it more and more as historic scenes and places grow more venerable in history.

Nor is this custom without divine approval. When by the power of God the waters of Jordan were divided to allow Israel to pass into the consecrated land the Lord said:

Take you twelve men out of the people, out of every tribe a man, and command ye them, saying, Take you hence out of the midst of Jordan, out of the place where the priest's feet stood firm, twelve stones, and ye shall carry them over with you, and leave them in the lodging place, where ye shall lodge this night. Then Joshua called the twelve men whom he had prepared of the children of Israel, out of every tribe a man; and Joshua said unto them, Pass over before the ark of the Lord your God into the midst of Jordan, and take you up every man of you a stone upon his shoulder, according unto the number of the tribes of the children of Israel; that this may be a sign among you, that when your children ask their fathers in time to come, saying, What mean ye by these stones? then ye shall answer them, That the waters of Jordan were cut off before the ark of the covenant of the Lord, when it passed over Jordan, the waters of Jordan were cut off; and these stones shall be a memorial unto the children of Israel forever. And the children of Israel did so as Joshua commanded, and took up twelve stones out of the midst of Jordan, as the Lord spake unto Joshua, according to the number of the tribes of the children of Israel, and carried them over with them unto the place where they lodged, and laid them down there. And Joshua set up twelve stones in the midst of Jordan, in the place where the feet of the priests which bare the ark of the covenant stood; and they are there unto this day.

The Lord in the latter-day work also appointed and consecrated certain spots as holy places.

In March, 1831, in speaking of the time when the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled he said: "And there shall be men standing in that generation that shall not pass, until they shall see an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall come over the land; but my disciples shall stand in holy places, and shall not be moved." The Lord began gathering those whom he designed to use for special work into special places many years before the church took organic form. In America's colonial days families whose children and grandchildren were designed to be engaged in the work of restoration gathered in certain places, notably in Massachusetts, near Boston, afterwards celebrated as the place of the cradle of liberty where, as Daniel Webster once put it in speaking of liberty: "It will stand beside the cradle in which its infancy was rocked, and die at last if die it must amidst the proudest monuments of its own glory and on the very spot of its origin." Why was it necessary in God's wisdom that these families should gather to this particular region? In order that they might be imbued with the spirit of liberty then generating there and in turn transmit it to their children who in God's providence were to be used to bring into organized form the kingdom of God on earth.

When these families in harmony with the spirit of the times migrated westward, and those specially chosen to assist in bringing to light the Nephite record gathered near the place where the record was concealed, others moving farther westward found a rallying point where the organization of the church was to have its completion—Kirtland, Ohio. All these places having been chosen of God for special purposes might well be called holy places, and more and more as we comprehend the purposes of God, and witness their fulfillment we become interested in these places of historic import.

Back of the organic movement that culminated in Kirtland was the inspiration that directed the preliminary work of Sidney Rigdon and others in that region, and we can readily indorse the words of inspiration to Sidney Rigdon, which said: "I have looked upon thee and thy works. I have heard thy prayers and prepared thee for a greater work," etc.

The hand of the Lord is plainly visible in leading the young man Parley P. Pratt to these western wilds where he became associated with Rigdon; and when he was himself sent on a mission with the restored gospel, he called on this man Rigdon, and through himself and companions in the ministry a nucleus was established for the Lord's work in this favored land, adjacent to Kirtland, Ohio.

That the Lord had designed Kirtland as one of the holy places, even the place of preparation for Zion and her consecration is evident from his instruction to his people in January, 1831.

And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless. Wherefore, for this cause I gave unto thee commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio, and there I will give unto you my law; and there you shall be endowed with power from on high, and from thence, whosoever I will, shall go forth among the nations, and it shall be told them what they shall do; for I have a great work laid up in store, for Israel shall be saved, and I will lead them wheresoever I will, and no power shall stay my hand.

This promise was remarkably fulfilled in the giving of the law found in Doctrine and Covenants, section 42. And here in this chosen and consecrated spot the church was fully organized and the small, incomplete, preliminary organization effected at Fayette, New York, April 6, 1830, was enlarged upon and developed until the church with its quorums and councils, provided for in the law, was an accomplished fact, and an important factor in the progress of the church and of the world.

Soon after the giving of this law several of the ministers of the church were selected to go to Missouri with the promise that if faithful the land of their inheritance should be made known unto them. (See Doctrine and Covenants 52: 1.)

They complied with this instruction and the place pointed out. (See section 57.) This appointment of a location for the Holy City could not interfere with the appointment of Kirtland as the place of organization and preparation, and both could properly be called holy places.

In September, 1832, the Lord refers to holy places as follows:

A revelation of Jesus Christ unto his servant Joseph Smith, jr., and six elders, as they united their hearts and lifted their voices on high; yea, the word of the Lord concerning his church, established in the last days for the restoration of his people, as he has spoken by the mouth of his prophets, and for the gathering of his saints to stand upon Mount Zion, which shall be the city New Jerusalem, which city shall be built, beginning at the Temple Lot, which is appointed by the finger of the Lord, in the western boundaries of the State of Missouri, and dedicated by the hand of Joseph Smith, jr., and others, with whom the Lord was well pleased. Verily, this is the word of the Lord, that the city New Jerusalem shall be built by the gathering of the saints, beginning at this place, even the place of the temple, which temple shall be reared in this generation, for verily, this generation shall not all pass away until an house shall be built unto the Lord, and a cloud shall rest upon it, which cloud shall be even the glory of the Lord, which shall fill the house.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 1, 2.

The location of the city of the New Jerusalem is here definitely established, but the beginning of the gathering it is said will begin at this place which may mean the place just spoken of (Independence), or the place where the Lord was speaking (Kirtland) so far as the language is concerned. But in paragraph six the location is further designated to be upon the consecrated spot, but as both spots were consecrated, the place is not positively determined. The consensus of opinion was that Independence was the place intended, and the idea that the temple was to be built there in that generation doubtless caused the people to assemble there with more haste than they otherwise would have done. The hoped for temple however did not materialize. Instead the people were by persecution compelled to leave the sacred place and the Temple Lot fell into the hands of strangers. At Kirtland it was different, on the very day, July 23, 1833, that the Saints agreed to leave Jackson County, Missouri, the corner stone of the temple was laid at Kirtland, Ohio. Though there was much persecution they were permitted to finish this Temple which was dedicated March 27, 1836. In June, 1833, the command to build was substantially repeated, but with evident application, as it was to be the place of endowment. (Doctrine and Covenants 91: 2.)

In September, 1831, the Lord said: "I the Lord willeth to retain a stronghold in the land of Kirtland, for the space of five years." He did not fully explain why, but it is well to note that the five years would expire September, 1836, six months after the dedication of the temple, and that this six months were busy ones in adjusting the affairs of the church. It is therefore fair to assume that this time was reserved for the building of the temple. This temple also fills the requirements of the temple promised in September, 1832, in the following particulars:

First. It was built in that generation.

Second. A cloud which was the glory of the Lord rested upon it, and filled the house. The account of the dedication has the following:

Brother G. A. Smith arose, and began to prophesy, when a noise was heard like the sound of a rushing, mighty wind, which filled the temple, and all the congregation simultaneously arose, being moved upon, by an invisible power; many began to speak in tongues, and prophesy; others saw glorious visions, and I beheld the temple was filled with angels, which fact I declared to the congregation. The people of the neighborhood came running together, (hearing an unusual sound within, and seeing a bright light like a pillar of fire resting upon the temple,) and were astonished at what was transpiring.—Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 726.

Third. The sons of Moses and Aaron offered an acceptable offering.

The Sunday following the dedication the following is related:

After this vision closed, the heavens were again opened unto us and Moses appeared before us, and committed unto us the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north. After this, Elias appeared, and committed the dispensation of the gospel of Abraham, saying, that in us and our seed, all generations after us should be blessed. After this vision had closed, another great and glorious vision burst upon us, for Elijah, the prophet, who was taken to heaven without tasting death, stood before us, and said: Behold, the time has fully come, which was spoken of by the mouth of Malachi, testifying that he [Elijah] should be sent before the great and dreadful day of the Lord come, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers, lest the whole earth be smitten with a curse. Therefore the keys of this dispensation are committed into your hands, and by this ye may know that the great and dreadful day of the Lord is near, even at the doors.—Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 739.

Joseph Smith in dedicating the Kirtland Temple said: "Thou who hast commanded thy servants to build a house unto thy name in this place" (Kirtland). If the house commanded to be built in 1832 and in 1833 is not this house this command is not on record. It is referred to in Doctrine and Covenants 102: 10, but referred to as a past event, "which I have commanded to be built" and the Kirtland Temple was then in the course of construction.

In section 91, instruction is given concerning the building up of Kirtland Stake and the house of the Lord is referred to incidentally as though it had been previously provided for. There is no direct command here given to build. The inference is plain that Joseph Smith in his dedicatory prayer referred to the command given in 1832 and 1833 and applied it to Kirtland. The Kirtland Temple does therefore stand on consecrated ground made holy as the place of the temple of the Lord for the preparatory work of gathering, the endowment of the ministry, and the building of the holy city.

Immediately after the dedication of the temple wherein the several quorums received their endowments, ministers went everywhere preaching the word, and soon the first foreign mission was undertaken, with wonderful results, according to the promise made when Kirtland and its importance was first pointed out as a place sacred in the economy of God. (Doctrine and Covenants 38:7.) This building of the Kirtland Temple in fulfillment of the promises of God does not interfere with the designs of God concerning the New Jerusalem to have its center at Independence, Missouri. The Temple Lot has been set apart and is to be recognized as one of the holy places. At the time the people of the church fondly expected to build this house at Independence it was not needed, but the building at Kirtland wherein the servants of God were to be endowed ere they were sent out to the nations was in urgent demand. When Zion is redeemed and the preparatory work for the return of the Lord to the earth commences, the New Jerusalem with its holy temple will be in demand and will doubtless be provided for by the tithing of God's people.

When the Lord spoke of the house then building at Kirtland he added concerning Zion, "And let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law be executed and fulfilled, after her redemption." (Doctrine and Covenants 102:10.)

In early times the Lord gave instruction that certain men should be planted or established at Independence for certain specific and well-defined purposes, but he also declared that further direction should be given regarding others, thereby intimating direction should be awaited before moving. (Doctrine and Covenants 57.) Only a short time after this the following information was given:

And now, verily I say, concerning the residue of the elders of my church. The time has not yet come, for many years, for them to receive their inheritance in this land, except they desire it through the prayer of faith, only as it shall be appointed unto them of the Lord. For, behold, they shall push the people together from the ends of the earth; wherefore assemble yourselves together, and they who are not appointed to stay in this land, let them preach the gospel in the regions roundabout; and after that, let them return to their homes. Let them preach by the way, and bear testimony of the truth in all places, and call upon the rich, the high, and the low, and the poor, to repent; and let them build up churches, inasmuch as the inhabitants of the earth will repent.

This instruction was not heeded and the consequence was that the words of the warning, "not in haste, lest there be confusion which bringeth pestilence," was painfully realized.

"Many years" have passed since the above decree, and hence the time for the residue to obtain inheritance may be here or near at hand, but the decree conveyed with it the information that divine wisdom would determine when the time should fully come.

How long then before we shall be gathered into the holy place to prepare for the Lord to suddenly come to his temple we do not know, but the signs of the times indicate that the time for his people to stand in holy places is fast approaching.

Some of the places mentioned above are evidently yet recognized as holy places as they were set apart for special purposes, which purposes have not yet been accomplished, and the purposes of God cannot fail. Independence, the place of the New Jerusalem, must stand unmoved. Kirtland, the place of preparation, has not filled its purpose, hence the Lord said in 1841: "I, the Lord, will build up Kirtland." (Doctrine and Covenants 107:27.)

Nauvoo, the city of refuge, must continue, for that stake was planted to be a corner stone of Zion, to be polished with that refinement which is after the similitude of a palace. (Doctrine and Covenants 107:1.) "And a resting place was to be provided therein" for the weary traveler that he may contemplate the glory of Zion, etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 107:18.)

Lamoni having been recognized of God as an important place in the gathering of the people will doubtless be recognized as an holy place. (Doctrine and Covenants 122:12.)

The relative importance of Far West, Adam-ondi-Ahman, and other places where gatherings have been had, will no doubt be recognized in proportion to the degree of inspiration enjoyed in their establishment. The regions roundabout have also been considered in the revelations as having a place in the appointments of God.

HEMAN C. SMITH.

THE PERSONAL TOUCH

One of the greatest watchwords of the present age is efficiency, and closely associated to it we may also include preparedness. This is true not only in State and Nation, but in practically all the activities of man.

Considering the importance of our work as associated with all the activities of human life that make for the betterment of mankind, both in a spiritual and a temporal way, we can realize more the necessity of bringing it to the attention of all men. This is also the purpose of its designer. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," was the request made by him. The fulfilling of God's promises to the Jew, the condition of the world and the rapid movement of events, emphasize anew this command of scripture and brings the realization that within a short time, as never before, we will be called to aggressive and efficient evangelism.

Perhaps we should agree upon what we mean by the term evangelism. I do not mean to identify it with special methods, or the special activities of certain men. Perhaps I should have said missionary work, which includes all the activities of our church that are intended to carry the evangel of Christ to non-Christian men and women. We use the word evangelism more particularly because we do not wish the thought to be confined to the traveling ministry, or even the priesthood alone. Not one of the church membership should be excluded. Each member has his own sphere and the responsibility of bearing the divine message in his own way.

The injunction is given that we are to let our lights shine, which does not mean merely the power of a holy example without work upon our part, but also such personal work as confidential talks and deeds of friendship with the sincere purpose of winning some one to the gospel. This calls for consecration and individual preparation. Of course the province of the member in evangelical work is not without limitation. However, the secret of efficiency in life lies in our ability to comprehend our limitation and to operate within its boundary. To the ministry, office and ability are factors in determining limitation. To the member, ability and environment are the principal factors. One may be fitted for certain classes of work while another may be qualified along entirely different lines.

We should concentrate on those things for which we are best fitted. It was a great saying of Emerson that the one prudence of life is concentration. This also applies in another way, as some people are blessed with talent in various ways but spread their forces over so large an area of activity that their talents are practically lost in the confusion. This is a fault due to the condition of the times in which we live, when there is a tendency of all toward fast living. We as a people should be very careful to guard against such dissipation of energy.

There is still another point upon which I would emphasize concentration of energy. Sometimes we succeed in getting some one interested in the gospel message, and because we do not try to understand their likes and dislikes and point of interest, we approach them with wrong methods and thus detract from their interest. We should try to acquaint ourselves with those things in order to concentrate our efforts along the lines of their special interest. Only as we feel in our mind and heart the pulsing of the forces by which they are swayed, will we be able to speak to them in language toned with that sympathetic touch born of love for our fellow men.

Therein lies the secret of the greatest gift and power that we have aside from the Spirit of God, and I am sometimes inclined to believe it is the greatest channel through which the Spirit of God can operate upon the lives of men. In other words it is the point of contact: it is the personal touch.

This is an age of cold logic devoid of that sympathy and fellowship which should exist in the intercourse of men. Through the newspapers and magazines men and women are fed upon information and ideas gathered from all parts of the world, until their minds are filled with bewilderment and confusion engendered by the stirring times in which they live.

It is also possible for us to reduce our message to a matter of words and cold logic, but it should not be the case; for as Paul said, "Our gospel came not in word only, but also in power and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." He also said, "I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some." Of course this must be understood to be with the limitation of righteousness. Paul when speaking of power had in mind something different than the Holy Ghost, which also must be the meaning of his statement, "I am made all things to all men," and evidently it is the power of a consecrated personality.

This is strikingly in harmony with the position of the Master who intended that his disciples should be the leaven of the world. He also said, "Ye are the salt of the earth." He knew this could not be accomplished by holding aloof from the world or by cultivating religious enmity. In the Lord's prayer for his disciples he said, "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from evil." And again, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." Jesus understood that unless the disciples were with men, where they were, they could not likely lead them into that place where they ought to be.

It is true we are living in a new world compared to the time when Christ uttered those statements to his disciples, new kingdoms have arisen and the conditions and customs are manifestly different. The temper of the world has changed, but those utterances are just as true and applicable to his disciples to-day. We must meet these changed conditions with sympathies in tune with the wonderful circumstances that face the children of this generation, and if we would guide and lift them we must understand the forces that to-day are boiling in the great heart of humanity, and already causing it to break. Surely the consoling balm for it all can be found in the gospel. Are we equipping ourselves to apply its healing influence?

Never has the world called so loudly as it calls to-day for this personal touch of the gospel. How sad indeed the picture when often we feed the husks instead of corn because we present our message in a manner suited only to some preceding generation.

Thus it is sometimes made to appear, that "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." It is therefore necessary that we understand the day of our visitation to the extent that we can utilize those things that are engaging the attention of the people of to-day, to show them the value of our message.

Scientific discoveries, philosophy, and art are the chief tendencies of our age and through them many perplexing problems have been forced upon us. It is not at all impossible to reconcile these tendencies with the faith once delivered to the Saints, and when so reconciled and understood will but enhance the beauty of the gospel of Christ. It is true that through them new ideas have been born and adopted by many, but because they are new, it does not follow that they are all false. We should not be too willing to denounce these ideas of others until we have given them a rational consideration, as this is an age of knowledge fast approaching that time when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. It is our duty to investigate these ideas with those who have accepted them, for how can we better help them than by thinking with them upon the problems which this increased knowledge has created? However, we should not allow our thinking to degenerate into a matter of cold logic, for the emotion or feeling in religion is just as great if not a greater factor in moral life. It is true we think things out but our feelings help us determine their truth or falsity; and conversions are generally produced by the emotion or feeling. Through the appeals of our reason upon our conscience it becomes the moving spirit.

In this conclusion I am fully in harmony with the Scripture which teaches us that the greatest attribute of God is his love. How else can it operate except through the emotional life? We should not of course ally ourselves with that class of religionist, who plays upon the feelings actuated wholly by the by the nervous system, as do some modern evangelistic hypnotists who deal in cheap sentimentality. That would be an extreme as radically wrong as the other.

From the pulpit standpoint, if our message is entirely a matter of cold logic, at best we can only convert the head. But the heart must be reached, the soul must be touched, and this can only be attained by seasoning the message with that which appeals to all the noblest sentiments, and thus bring reason into action. It is very true in many cases that the best part of a sermon is the part that is never uttered.

What a barren view of life religion gives one when it has not touched his soul, and, through his emotions, aroused those nobler sentiments which unfold a broader vision and appreciation of life, and those things with which it is associated. Somehow as these thoughts are penned we are impressed with the significance of Christ's statement, "Ye must be born again." Surely he meant just such a change. That we may accomplish this important part of our evangelistic work, we need the power and influence of the personal touch. Some of the greatest achievements of Christ's ministry were made through his personal contact with the people in works of helpfulness and cheer.

The story is told of an old negro woman who during the Rebellion was given the name of "Cheer up honeys," and "Glory day," and was so called by the soldiers of both sides. Whenever prisoners were brought in, or tired and worn soldiers would march by within her reach, she would hobble up to them and say, "Cheer up honeys, Glory day is coming!" The sympathy and cheer of her heart touched the tenderest and noblest chords in their own. There are a great many with whom we come in contact who need, more than anything else, such flowers of personal sympathy strewn in their pathway. We must learn to put this hand to hand contact into our evangelism in order to accomplish the work intrusted to our care.

There is a legend told of a monk who died in the monastery of Arenburg, that many years after his death his tomb was opened, and nothing could be found of his remains but the right hand with which he did his work. The legend is made the basis of the poem by S. T. Wallace entitled, "The blessed hand."

They laid him where a window's blaze
Flashed o'er the graven stone,
And seemed to touch his simple name
With pencil like his own;
And there he slept, and one by one,
His brothers died the while,
And trooping years went by, and trod
His name from off the aisle.

And lifting up the pavement then,
An abbot's couch to spread,
They let the jeweled sunlight in Where once lay Anselm's head.
No crumbling bone was there, no trace
Of human dust that told;
But, all alone, a warm right hand
Lay fresh upon the mold.

It was not stiff, as dead men's are,
But with a tender clasp
It seemed to hold an unseen hand
Within its living grasp;
And ere the trembling monks could turn
To hide their dazzled eyes,
It rose as with the sound of wings
Right up into the skies.

O loving, open hands that give!
Soft hands the tear that dry!

O patient hands that toil to bless!
 How can ye ever die?
 Ten thousand vows from yearning hearts
 To heaven's gates shall soar,
 And bear you up, as Anselm's hand
 Those unseen angels bore.

That is what it will mean to us to give our work the personal touch.

We can see humanity standing in the mire of the problems and difficulties of this modern age, devoid of spiritual light, beckoning and calling to us to reach out our hands and help them. Sometimes we grow discouraged and lose faith in men because of their selfish cries and debased ambitions, but down deep in the soul of all men there is a pleading voice. Are you responding to the call? I plead that we should all be evangelists in that sense and reach out our hands to the world, hands made strong by the love of God, for, brethren, "The love of Christ constraineth us"; and with a perfect consecration of self, for, "greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD

The most important moment in any man's life is when he determines upon his definition of our subject; for that definition expresses his beau-ideal of excellence, of possession, of attainment. What he exalts draws him upward toward itself. The idols of men are their ideals, and an ideal, a supreme end, desirable above all else in the world for him, each man must have, and each man has.

... When the race was young and life more simple, the quest of the sages was to solve this engrossing problem, to discover the summum bonum, the highest good. Socrates calls it knowledge, the far-sighted knowledge that lights the way to virtue. Plato deemed it to be the purification of the soul from the body, whereby the former returned to the world of ideas through absorption in philosophy. Aristotle, keenly searching the purpose of purposes, the end of ends, called it happiness, the happiness of perfect, rational activity. And religion, which is philosophy for the people, aglow with emotion, made luminous with hope, religion was created by this supreme inquiry, religion contains the answer to this great interrogation.

... All around us men are sacrificing comfort, ease, rest, paying out weeks, months, years, from their shrinking, vanishing capital of time; for what? Is it for real enrichment, for eternal values? Is it that they should be more, that their souls should be finer grained, their minds trained and rich in thought? Is this tense, unending struggle to make them master's of themselves, servants of men, climbing the slippery steps of the narrow path, the soul enriched by its poverty, made sovereign by service? Is it to ascend, ever to ascend, that they toil and plan and agonize? Or is it for dross, for the price of comfort and ease, for the glory of self? To get, to possess, to possess more, to possess the most, is it for this the sands in the hourglass are bartered, is this the aim of a life, the dream of the soul? Or to use talent for advancement; to gain authority; to hold success in the hand of toil; to receive adulation; to reach high place and eminence, is this the shining goal of life, to be an inch higher than the other Lilliputians; to command? Or to seek fame; that the trumpet of panegyric may sound and sound; that your name may not be writ in water, but cut in memorial more lasting than brass; to seek fame, "that last infirmity of noble minds"? Are these the steps to the altar where stands the god of men's idolatry? They are the pathways to power. Men covet wealth for the power of possession; success for the power of eminence; reputation for the subtle power of fame. This is the answer of the world to our question. These are the idols of the market place and the forum. Is this the greatest thing in the world?

Ah, full well we all know that it is not. We are all drunken with desire. We are hypnotized with glittering prizes. We are somnambulists, all of us, in a waking dream. And now and then into the market place comes a man pale with anguish, crying aloud, "Awake, ye sleepers." And they wake. They know in the deep heart of them, they know the truth of the message. They may deride the messenger, they may kill him with hemlock, with fire, with a rope. But the word lives, and awakens them. And the messenger at last they honor. They call him a sage. They exalt him as a prophet. Or they may worship him as God. And out of their uneasiness, their startled sense of emptiness and error, this flashing vision of a better and a best, comes a wonderful thing, a compromise between the ideal of the soul and the base reality of life.

We call it religion. Religion is the tidemark showing how high the waters once did rise. Religion is man's perpetual confession of his inadequacy. It is the casket containing the crown jewels of man's moral sovereignty. In religion is preserved the secret of the greatest thing in the world.

And what is that secret? You have been told in the familiar sermon of a great preacher and a thinker what to him it is. To him it is love. To the church the supreme thing is love. In the New Testament, God is love. The instrument of all helpfulness and service is love. It is the means of all union, the cement of society, the fragrance of the soul. It is the essence of the law, the inspiration of life, the goal of all endeavor, the measure of all excellence. Love is perfection. Love is the ocean whence come all refreshments, dews and gracious rains, whither come all the tributaries and streams from the highest summits of the mountains.

. . . Strong is this passion, creative, omnipresent, yet is it supreme, great above all things else? Is it the divine, the finality, the last word?

. . . But can a power so various in use receive the halo of consecration, and crown the summit of all earthly aspiration? For love is simply the greatest means in the world. It moves and melts men. It drives them—to what? It kindles them—into what? It is a passion earthly or divine—for what? Indeed, there arises often a great struggle between love—and what? Duty. Duty, the sacramental work, duty, that dominates and directs love, duty, to whom love is the handmaiden and minister.

The greatest thing in the world, the inspiration of life, the loveliest and noblest of all words, is duty. It is obedience, glad and eager, to the highest law that makes man godlike. Is it cold and austere? Then a mother's love is wintry and forbidding. Is it timid and inactive? Then the soldier dying on the battlefield is a recreant and a coward. The firefighter, perishing in the flames, falls in the cause of duty. The nurse of lepers, the helper of outcasts, the martyr falling that men may rise, dying that many may live, gives up the precious light of day for duty's sake.

. . . Virtue is glorious, because duty is hard. All noble things are difficult, said the sage of Holland, all noble things are rare. Where desire and duty sharply clash, which shall be chosen? This is the crucial question.

And therefore, friends, you come here, therefore men gather to shrines, not so much to learn the formulas of duty as to gain its strength. We need more inspiration than instruction.

. . . Your sympathies become my strength. What I receive from you I give back to you. I ask from you not judgment, not laurels, or dispraise or cold opinion, I ask for your hearts; I ask you to give me yourselves, to lend yourselves in sympathy, in deep conviction, with ardor, to the highest.

Of this, each one of you is capable. You have infinite potencies. You thrill and glow at a vision of heroism, of nobility, of divine life. Within each of you is a sense that discerns and adores the godlike. And it is divine, this holy word—duty. It is not simply a whisper of nature, a social custom, a mere inheritance. It is the drawing of the soul toward God and his will. It is not alone the deed, it is the motive. It is the spirit in which we live and move. We are not to have virtues added unto us. We are not to be composites, mosaics of morals. All must come from within. The heart must be changed, until a man learns by living, until he feels the meaning of renunciation, of humility, of earnest quest, of union with the perfect spirit of holiness.

That is all. The deepest secret is most open. It must be lived to be understood. It is as common as the day, as clear as sunlight. So the poet Lowell taught us in an exquisite parable. A pilgrim, searching for God, prayed that he might find him. And for many weary miles he traveled, and finally he reached the holy mountain, and prayed that a sign might be granted unto him that God was there and that he was accepted. And a rock broke open at his feet, a lovely flower appeared and filled the air with fragrance; and as he plucked it, he remembered that this same flower, so wearily sought and gained, his own little child had brought to him when he started, plucked from his own doorway.

So with the fairest blossoms of life that bring man nigh to the secret heart of all things. O love divine. O radiant source of life and light!

Flowers laugh before thee on their beds,
And fragrance in thy footing treads;
Thou dost preserve the stars from wrong,
And the most ancient heavens through thee are fresh and strong.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

To-day and To-morrow

He speaks! The hills cry out for joy—
His holy lips plead for a dying world,
Blood-stained and grimed with smoke of war,
He stands unmoved behind the mists of fear
Waiting the answer to his century-old cry:
"What will you do with me, the Lord of Hosts,
Me whom you crucify on battlefields of woe,
Me who am Peace, whose name is Love and Life?"

And from the mouth of hell, sin-foamed with rage, Screams out the challenge, death-damp and black—
"We know not thee, Jesus of Nazareth,
For thou art peace and love and life to those who serve;
We are Hate, our name is Lust and Greed and Strife,
And for our sake the world is cinder-burnt;
If thou art God why dost thou let us make
On earth this holocaust of death and shame?"
And from the Holy Place comes back the word:
"It is for you to say what you will do, for now the day is thine;
But mine will come, and then—ye listen now!—I will be heard:
My voice shall be obeyed by all who life desire—"

My day shall know no war—the very air shall perfumed be
With peace. And verdant hills shall shout again for joy,
And by the sun-kissed sea my people shall abide in love with me.”

From an Isolated Saint

I am a charter member
Of a little band of Saints,
And I wonder if they ever think of me,
From them now departed.
Fond memories fill my heart,
And I wonder if they ever pray for me.

God's Spirit was among us
As we came each Sunday morn,
To the little church we all had helped to build.
Just a few of us would gather
For a study of the Word,
And with comfort every loving heart was filled.

Oh, how we miss the gathering
Of that little band of Saints;
And I wonder if we'll ever meet again.
I now am looking forward,
For encouragement so rare;
Surely coming from a sympathizing pen.

We are truly isolated Far away from every Saint;
A word of comfort shouldn't be denied.
Although we know they love us—
They have proven it indeed—
When working there together side by side.

Oh, now that we are from them,
Pray God we will be true,
And have the strength of One who never faints.
If you haven't time to write us,
Remember us at least—and Breathe a prayer for ev'ry isolated Saint.

The Bridle

A bridle is needed to bridle the tongue,
Speaking truth with the reins of caution.
There's a dangerous road to travel along,
A snake, a brink, and a fearful goal
That would sink our souls to perdition.

I will give you a sign—keep close to the line
And follow the narrow ascension,
For broad is the way that leads man astray.
Turn into the right, there's an ensign of light,
Lit up by our God of redemption.

On her summit I see Eureka the tree,
And stars all spangled with glory.
There's a multitude there, God's blessings to share,
There's rest for the weary to anchor his care,
As the prophets foretold of the story.

Then let us be faithful, united in one,
'Tis the secret of knowledge and power;

We have tasted the truth the Lord has revealed;
Let us walk in the paths the righteous have trod,
For time henceforth and forever.

THE STAFF

Edited by ARTHUR H. MILLS, 1514 W. Short St., Independence, Mo.

The Choir Accompanist

Practically all that we have offered in the past through the columns of the Staff has concerned the work of the choir as a singing body; and we have thought it might be well to vary the possible monotony of such a course and direct our pen along some other line for once, at least. So in this issue we shall take up the duties of one of the most important of the choir's officers, the choir accompanist.

By the term accompanist we mean the one who serves the choir and the branch as organist, or pianist, for the accompaniment of not only the choir's individual work but the congregational singing as well.

Almost as important to the success of a choir as a good leader, if not equally so, is a good accompanist. In fact the best of choir leaders will find his work seriously hampered by a poor accompanist; while an indifferent chorister will be immeasurably helped, and the work of the choir stabilized by an efficient accompanist. While the work of the chorister is to direct the choir and keep everything running smoothly, the accompanist will do more than any other individual in the choir to make or mar the excellence of the choir's work.

It matters little whether the instrument used in accompanying the choir and congregation be piano or cabinet organ, if it is well played. Custom and tradition have built the musical service of the church around the organ, and many consider it the only fitting instrument for accompanying devotional services. If properly played, the organ is to be preferred above the piano for church services, but there are many more pianists than organists. It is true that the two instruments have the same keyboard, but there the similarity ends; and in every other respect the instruments are entirely dissimilar. The characteristics of the organ are sustained tones, dignified and broad in quality, in which tone color in its various shades may be had in variety. The organ demands a temperament that can appreciate its needs. How often have we seen and heard piano players attempt to play the organ without any regard to its peculiar qualities as a distinctive instrument, with the result that an insipid, harsh, disagreeable performance was had. Therefore, as the number of those really qualified to play the organ, as an organ, is small, branches and choirs should look well to the problem of securing an organist, or purchase a piano. Let us hope that as our branches grow some of our ambitious, young musicians will take up the study of the organ as an instrument of its own kind.

The problem of accompanying the song services of the branches is a serious one and should never be lightly considered. Too often branches and choirs pass over lightly the selection of such an individual, seeming to think that anybody will do, "just so he can play." The accompanist should be one who can not only play the anthems and hymns correctly, so far as notes and tempo are concerned, but can play them sympathetically. We are often exhorted to "sing with the spirit," but the accompanist should be able to play with the spirit as well. That is, he should give to the accompaniment the same feeling that the choir should be endeavoring to give to the rendition of the anthem or hymn. His accompaniment should not only support the choir in its work but should encourage it and respond to its moods and phases. The result will be a harmonious blend of two efforts to the same end.

What constitutes a good choir accompanist? There are numbers of people who can play the piano well but who cannot play the accompaniment of a simple song even passably. They are sure to play either a little ahead of or behind the singers, either too loudly or with not enough support, or with none of the shading or expression that should correspond with that of the singer.

First of all, a good accompanist should be able to play accurately and well music of ordinary difficulty. Slovenly, inaccurate playing should never be tolerated, and we deplore the tendency of many of our pianists to slight their work in this way. Next, a good accompanist should be able to play intelligently, with a comprehension of not only the spirit of what he is playing, but of the needs of the piece as well. Again, an accompanist needs to be sympathetic and to feel the music he is accompanying in common with the choir or singers who are rendering it. Lastly, an accompanist needs to be alert and responsive; quick to perceive and ready to act. All these are needful in an accompanist and he who essays to serve the church in such capacity should study to show himself approved.

The accompaniment of the choir in its anthem or chorus work is more of a task than many would imagine. The singers in a chorus are constantly, though unconsciously, listening to the accompaniment for leadings and indications ("cues" they are called) that will direct them in their work. The accompanist should be ever ready to give these, and the more unconsciously he responds the better will be his work. His accompanying must be a matter of careful adjustment to the singing, neither so slow as to retard their enthusiasm nor so hurried as to "nag" them into a state of agitation; neither so soft as to leave them wondering if he is "on the job," nor so loud as to be overbearing. His work should be the background of the musical picture being painted; neither so tame as to be colorless nor so obtrusive as to dull the picture itself. He should remember that he is not the soloist but that while the quality of his work is of prime importance he should submerge himself into the background.

Finally, the accompanist of the choir should be at heart a true servant of the church and should be respected as such. He should be at his post of duty when his time for service comes, and should discharge that duty as one who is to answer to God for its faithful performance. As a "workman" in God's cause he should "study to show himself approved unto God," that so far as the quality of his work is concerned he need not be "ashamed." A. H. M.

Voluntaries

Voluntaries are in reality instrumental offerings to a religious service, and consist of preludes, played before the service, interludes, played during the service, offertories, played during the taking of the collection or offering (hence their name), and postludes, played after the service. They have been given by custom the general term "voluntaries" because they were first considered in the public mind as voluntary contributions by the organist for the beautifying of the service.

Voluntaries may be rendered upon any instrument that can be appropriately employed in a religious service. We have personally known of voluntaries being played upon violin, 'cello, flute, cornet, clarinet; and doubtless, other instruments have been employed. It "goes without saying," of course, that the selections played should be of a dignified or devotional character and played in a modest, unobtrusive manner, calculated not to offend the tender sympathies of those who may be desirous of communing in a worshipful condition of mind. To illustrate: the violin, an instrument capable of many shades and varieties of expression, should never in a religious service be made to utter the rhythmic strains of the dance or the sensuous lilt of the street serenade. Neither should the cornet, an instrument of great power and penetration, be blown with such lusty violence as to outrival the expected call of Gabriel at the last great day. Right here let us say that this is a lamentable fault of so many of our cornetists, who seem to be unable to play their instruments with a sweet, mellow tone. Having served in the "brass band" where all outdoors was their auditorium and the blue vault of heaven their roof-tree, they have formed the habit of blowing in such a manner as would crack all the circumambient atmosphere within visible or audible compass, were that medium less elastic than it is.

We heartily commend the rendering of voluntaries in our church services, for they not only beautify these services but, if well played and listened to in the spirit of reverence, they impart an atmosphere of dignity and true devotion to the service. But they should always be considered by the organist who plays them and the congregation that hears them, as a true portion of the service, having their proper and accepted place in the service, as much so as the hymns, the prayers, the anthem, or the sermon. They should receive the same respect accorded to these parts of the service, and not made merely a cloak to cover a bevy of conversation or the inexcusable disorder that is had before the service. We remember a number of instances of attending church services where, to us, the true spirit of worship was shamefully repelled at the beginning of the service by the disorder that preceded it. The Sabbath school had dismissed at its appointed time and such pupils as remained for the service were scattered around the room, some talking, some romping with each other. The gathering worshipers had clustered in groups to exchange greetings and bits of news or gossip, and out of the hurly-burly of the confused scene could be heard fragments of conversation and ebullitions of mirth, blending with the shuffling of feet and the clatter of chairs, books, and papers. While this hubbub was at its height there was distinguished occasionally, when rifts in the uproar would permit, the soft, sweet tones of the organ in the opening voluntary, to which the noisy assemblage paid practically no attention. At the conclusion of the organist's fruitless efforts the presiding officer arose and said, "The congregation will please come to order," and announced the opening hymn. The assembly then subsided sufficiently to enable the balance of the service to proceed in due form; but with what preparation did these worshipers approach the throne of grace that morning? We are told that one of the attributes of the Deity is orderliness; but could he have found a congenial reception for his Spirit in that assembly that morning during the early period of the service? Was not such a scene of confusion actually repellent to the true spirit of reverence and worship? Can we step immediately out of an atmosphere of disorder into one of devotion? Can we instantly lay aside a spirit of levity and assume a spirit of reverence? Is the boundary line between disorder and confusion on the one hand and orderly reverence and spiritual devotion on the other so narrow that we can leap across in one bound? When we enter the house of God to engage in a service dedicated to his name we are in reality entering into the presence of God. The visible manifestation of his glory may not be apparent, but his Spirit should be there in a sensible measure. Dare we come into the presence of that divine guest with the spirit of revelry still upon us? When Moses was called to go into the presence of Jehovah he was required to approach in the attitude of extreme reverence; yet how often do we enter into the divine presence unannounced and unashamed. The writer asserts without fear of successful contradiction that we as a church are sadly remiss in the matter of order and reverential decorum in our services. We condone in our services things that would not be tolerated in other churches. Why should we not be as eager to cultivate the devotional spirit as they?

But enough on the item of disorder at our services; we have discoursed upon it so freely because of its connection with the voluntary, which it so frequently mars.

The real object of voluntaries in our church services is that we may by them the more effectually render praise unto God. The element of making our services more beautiful and consequently more enjoyable, while important, is really a secondary one. The real object, as stated, is that by the consecration of our efforts and abilities in these lines at our services, we the more effectually and acceptably render praise and worship to God's holy name. Does anyone suppose that, with the faculties at hand of making our services attractive and beautiful, that we can please God with a bare, meager, unattractive service? Has he not commanded us that we should not only cultivate the gifts of music within us, but that we should use them in as extensive a manner as possible in his service? If we use music to beautify and enrich our lives, should it not also be used to beautify and enrich God's services?

Let us imagine a congregation that is assembled to do homage to God and render praise to his name. The hour of service is not yet but nigh at hand. The members have quietly taken their seats and in the spirit of reverence are awaiting the hour of service. It comes with the sweet tones of the organ, which seem to steal into the hearts of everyone present, breathing peace to each worshiper and bringing each soul into the true spirit of worship. In such a state and amid such surroundings, is it too much to expect that God will find ready reception in hearts that have been so attuned to him through the power of music? God can speak to us through the subtle, sweet strains of a tone poem just as readily as in thunders from Sinai, but we have not attuned our ears to discern his message when uttered in gentle tones. Heretofore we have thought there was but little of God's message for us in music and have not heeded when he chose it as a means of expression; but if God has but little for us in music why did he so emphatically enjoin upon us its cultivation and extensive use in his service?

But to return to the subject of voluntaries, for our "leadings" are taking us away from that subject about as often as our average preacher strays from his text.

We again assert that voluntaries should be had in every well-regulated church service wherever possible to have them, and they should be regarded as a part of the service, and not (as some would regard them) as a mere ornament to the service or, worse still, as a means to "bring the congregation to order." They should begin the service and the congregation should understand that the service is actually under way the instant they commence and should pay to them the same reverence as to the prayer. We urge all organists to play them if possible and if the congregation will accord them respectful attention, but we advise against their use if the congregation refuses to appreciate them. The Savior gave a very pertinent bit of instruction regarding the bestowal of valuable gifts upon those who would not appreciate them. We prefer not to quote it, but "the wise shall understand."

The voluntary had during the collection is one of the most important as well as useful, not merely from the standpoint of being an efficacious method of inducing a man to part with his money, but of spiritualizing an otherwise sordid appearing ordinance. Very frequently, instead of the usual instrumental number for this place, a vocal number will be equally effective, if not more so. As for the voluntary played after the service, the postlude, it is the most formal and least important of all and some churches are omitting it. In a church the character of ours, where demand is had for a period of sociability, it can well be omitted; and after the service the members may gather to exchange bits of news and felicitations with far less danger to the spiritual welfare of the service than if such enjoyment is had at a time when all hearts should be preparing for the spiritual content of the service about to follow.

A few words regarding the instruments upon which our voluntaries may be rendered. Many of our branches are equipped with a piano, others with a "reed organ." This latter instrument is a little difficult to manage for solos, unless given especial study. We would urge our "organists" to endeavor to get all that is possible in the way of beauty from this somewhat limited instrument. The piano offers greater possibilities to our accompanists who have studied the piano. Many fine selections for that instrument are to be had that are suitable for devotional exercises and not too difficult for the average player to master. Beside the organ or piano there are the other instruments we mentioned, that may be used with judgment and discretion. There are plenty of ways and means by which the ambitious musicians of the church may adorn the service of the house of God and make them more "acceptable."

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

A Review of the First Chapter in Forbush's Child Study and Child Training

With what joy should every woman take advantage of the opportunity to take a course in "Child study and child training"! The opportunities we have are so great that we need all our God-given powers, physical and mental, in order to use them wisely. As church women we should be enthusiastically grateful to our good president and his estimable and cultivated wife, for all they have done to bring before us a realization of our duty and our privileges, and also our place, as women, in the designs of the Creator concerning his work in the latter day.

In taking up the study of the child, one of the first questions that might be asked is, "What is a child?" Shall we answer, "A child is a little adult"? Let us see: he is smaller in body; he knows less; he can do less. Let us consider farther. A child is not so much less than an adult as he is different. His bodily proportions are very different. For instance, a child's height is approximately three and a half times the length of his arm, while the height of an adult is about two and three fourths the length of his arm. The height of a child is one and one half times his waist measure, while the height of an average adult is two and one third the waist measure. The brain of a child increases in weight over four times, the heart thirteen times, and the lungs twenty times, before he is grown. The shape of some organs, also, changes with age. The eustachian tube in a child is not only relatively shorter than in an adult, but is also broader. The child's stomach is much more tubular in form, and more nearly vertical in position, than later in life. At birth, the brain's weight is twelve (plus) per cent of that of the body, while at the age of twenty-five it is only a little over two per cent. Changes in other organs are similarly marked, therefore we should hardly be justified in saying that a child is only a little adult. Should all parts of the child's body grow equally with some, the child would indeed become an adult monster.

We will find that the mental differences between a child and an adult are equally marked. "The child not only 'knows less', but he thinks differently. Tracy compared a child's intellect to that of an adult by comparing a pane of glass to a prism." Now what is meant by this? In looking through a pane of glass we see objects as a whole. We see a tree, and think of it as a whole. Thus a child sees an object, giving little or no thought to the component parts of what he views, thinking nothing of its uses, origin, or development. His intellect is untrained; he has little reasoning faculty, and does not look ahead. An adult is impressed differently. He analyzes things, separates them into their elements, for the purpose of examination of each part. He may look at a tree, and think of its origin, its growth, its leaves, its flowers, veins, sap, uses, even the cells of which it is composed. Just as in looking through a prism we may see an object divided into many parts.

We might here enumerate some of the physical traits of a child which are different from those he will possess when he is mature. First, we have already shown his proportions are different. Second, he develops in different directions at different stages of his growth. In one stage, he grows in weight faster than he does in height, and in another, vice versa. At one time his flesh is soft and flabby, and he is physically weak, while at another his body is solid and strong, and he is sturdy and active, standing hard bumps and knocks without murmuring. A third physical trait is the change which accentuates differences between the sexes. A fourth is the important change and development in the structure of the brain.

Let us now note some of the mental characteristics of a child that are different from those which predominate when he is grown to maturity. "Intellectually and morally," as Boulton points out, "he lives in a realm long ago passed over by his parents and teachers." Parents and teachers have forgotten their childish traits. Mothers, it is the difficulty of remembering our childish impulses which causes us to lack understanding and sympathy with our children. They think differently; they are totally unable to see things in the right light, and are always asking questions. They tear things to pieces in their curiosity to see how things are made. They are highly imaginative, competitive, and imitative. As they get older, these traits become better adjusted. One of the greatest benefits to be derived from a study of the child, is the ability to assist him to this adjustment, to use natural traits and characteristics so they may be developed in right channels, and in such a way as to count for the best good of that child. The curiosity of the child should not be discouraged, but should be directed. If the pockets of your lad are continually filled with bugs, beetles, or stones, you may do a great good for the world of natural sciences by recognizing and directing his propensity instead of rebuking or checking. Do you know how to direct him in his researches?

Do you know how to utilize his curiosity, which is said to be the mother of knowledge? The wise parent is the one who is qualified to arouse proper curiosity, and stimulate it into knowledge.

Parents and teachers of the young should cooperate in training the child; they should talk over his interests, and agree, so far as possible, upon the best methods of attaining desired corrections and developments. This can only become possible when parent and teacher come in contact. Learn to know each other, and assist each other. Fie upon that parent who will not meet the teacher half-way, concur in her right and progressive methods, and establish a helpful, sympathetic relationship between the two who have most to do with the molding and guiding of a young soul!

If, then, the child is not just a little adult, but a creature different, what is he? A little animal? Let us consider: Perhaps it may be a new idea to you, but authority tells us "a child of six has just as quick an insight as a man"! Of course we must explain things to a child in terms he understands, and he must first know something about what we are trying to teach him; but, given a premise of prior knowledge to build upon, and he readily grasps new adaptations or interpretations. It would be folly to try to teach very much about a cow to a child of the city who had never seen or heard of one. After he has seen one, or heard about one, his interest could be aroused in detailed information. The "story of life" may be taught to a child of six, after careful and prayerful preparation on the part of the one who imparts the knowledge, provided terms be used which are understood by the child.

All this ability, on the part of a young child, proves that it is something more than a mere animal. Another proof in that direction is the power of memory in a child. A child of eight has an extraordinary memory, but is, in connection, not a very good reasoner. He memorizes isolated facts, or words, or information of a miscellaneous character. He learns whole chapters of the Bible easily, and it is the propitious time to begin his acquaintance with foreign languages, names of plants, stones, animals, etc. In may readily be seen why this age was chosen for baptism, for the child can readily understand the fundamental principles of the gospel, and his duty therein. It is a mistake to leave the rite of baptism to a later age, when obedience has slipped from the habits of a child, and he has entered upon the storm, stress, enthusiasm, and enticements of youth.

Then, in studying a child, we recognize his individuality, and his right to be treated as a thinking, developing, human, one whom we are to help into safe paths of thought and habit. What is meant by the "original nature" of a child? We mean the natural bent, or disposition with which he is endowed by inheritance. By this, he does much without specific teaching or training, much as an animal does, through what is called instinct. We see evidences of this in many ways, such as in pouncing upon another in anger. He takes by force, if necessary, anything he desires. He often senses danger by instinct, and flees from it; he strikes out in self-defense, or in protection of a smaller and weaker one. He has a "run-away" period; he wants to see the inside of everything, even though it be destroyed in the operation. All this is without deliberate planning on his part. Thus we see the necessity for training and direction, from a mind experienced. "In the absence of a human environment no individual child would become human, as distinguished from animal." A child is not so much an immoral being, as an unmoral one. He must be taught to differentiate in the experiences which come to him, and it matters very much who and what his teachers are! Environment is the big thing in a child's development. Environment should develop a child all around. He acts largely by imitation. He does as his associates do. The members of his household are doing much to lay the foundations for his life, therefore a good home environment is essential to his future success. A good school environment, a good social environment, and a good church environment all help in his development, and are his natural right. If he is allowed to play on the street he will imbibe manners and evils found there, and miss much that should be his. An individual who lives by and to himself does not develop. He is weak intellectually and morally. What little he knows is by instinct.

Thus far, perhaps we have not been able to give a satisfactory definition of a child. We will eventually need to study many more chapters in our "Child study" course, as this course is not difficult, and is most interesting, we should all be encouraged to do the very best we can for our own sakes, as well as those of our sisters, and our children. It is a vastly important study, and upon our proper knowledge of it, rests the welfare of the children intrusted to our care.

A generation ago, and even less, the interest of educators was centered in perfecting the art of imparting knowledge. Now, students in normal schools, and mothers, and teachers elsewhere, are demanding instruction in the study of the child himself, and the proper and best training for him. Young people are realizing that they must face seriously and reverently, this, the chief probability of mature life. We cannot properly teach any subject to a child unless we understand how that child can apprehend it. Attempts to teach a child who is a stranger to us, of whose mind and its workings we are ignorant, will usually fail. He may receive it differently than we planned, or may apply it differently than we intended. A knowledge of the child as well as of the subject to be taught is necessary for our success. Then again, a subject may be imperfectly grasped by a child if given to him at one age, which will be readily understood and applied at another stage of his development. Mathematics, for instance, is not taught to such young children as formerly, and thereby they are often able to do the work of two or three years in one. On the other hand, if foreign languages were taught earlier than they usually are, children would more easily master them. It is well to know just when, and just how, to give training, of any kind, if we wish for the best results. This is especially true of moral training.

We must study our children. One method is by observation, another by remembrance of our own minds and impulses as children. A third method is through literary interpretation, by which we glean from literature a knowledge of human nature, and another still is by scientific study and application. As a child plays in the room, a mother may take notes, jotting down in a small notebook each playful activity, say for the space of two hours. In these observations she may not confine her notes to play with toys. Some activities may involve no objects at all, but are, nevertheless valuable in the study. The age and sex of the child noted add to the interest, for they vary so much. Such fireside study has many advantages, for the child is natural, and is not conscious of being watched, and thus will express himself most clearly. Then, too, the opportunity for patient, consecutive, comparative investigation is most excellent. Such observation is sure to have an intimacy, and a human quality that cannot be duplicated in any other method of study. Candor and justness in these observations are essential if they shall be of value, and a mother must not let her love and sympathy swerve her from a true appraisal of characteristics noted.

Then, too, the mother should have a definite understanding of what she is to record, what she is especially seeking. The topic for special search, may be, for instance, "What proportion of the play of the child is dramatic?" or imaginative?

or investigating in its nature. Such observations as these would be of interest to any mother, as well as of untold benefit, and we, as a church, might contribute each of our own fireside observations, and thereby add most worthily to the world's store of knowledge on this point.

Come, sisters, let us join the "Mothers and Teachers Problems" department of our auxiliary.

Suggested Questions for Discussion in Home and Child Welfare Classes

1. Can child welfare workers tactfully combine the social life of the girl of high school age with war emergency work? If so, how, and to what extent, should it be done?

2. Is your community going to have a "Baby Week" in June, as suggested by the Government? What do you expect to make the predominating features?

3. What kind of "follow up" work can you plan, to make permanent the influence of a Baby Week program?

4. What is the most practical plan by which a small community may secure a public health nurse?

5. Should auxiliary workers ask other organizations, such as civics or commercial clubs, to work with them in fostering any project for community welfare? What will be gained?

6. How can the attendance of the careless mother, who needs the work, be secured for the welfare classes?

7. Can a standard of school dress be secured by working with the individual girl, or must it be attained by a group of girls themselves? What is the best way of suggesting it to them?

8. Is there any way to secure clean milk in small towns where the laws do not provide for milk inspection?

9. Should the social affairs for school pupils be limited to Friday and Saturday nights, and why? How many parents secure this result in their vicinity?

10. Is there any connection between proper disposal of garbage, cleaning alleys, swatting the flies, etc., and earning thrift stamps? Would the establishment of a such a connection in the minds of the young people result in benefit to a community?

11. Should a course in "mothercraft," dealing with the care of children be maintained in the public school? If so, in what year should it be introduced into a girl's study?

(The above questions were submitted by our Home and Child Welfare Supervisor, Sister Lydia Thomas Wight, Lamoni, Iowa, who will be pleased to reply to any letters addressed to her upon these or kindred problems.)

Children and War Food Substitutes

The necessity of guarding the food supply of young children, and assuring to them an abundant diet of properly selected foods, is assuming every day a more critical phase as the war stringency increases and demands for the conservation of foodstuffs become more urgent. A most wholesome educational movement is going forward among the American people in the use of different foods. Nature is exceedingly adaptable, and the healthy human being can be fed with a fair degree of success on widely varying diets.

But while the adult may thrive very well on substitute foods of various kinds and even be better off with some of these dietary changes, it is not always true that young children will profit by the same course. The child's dietary requirements are less flexible than are those of grown persons, and insufficient or unsuitable food is likely to have serious consequences for the growing child.

Authorities on the subject state that there is practically no substitute either for milk or green vegetables in the food of the growing child. Milk should be given in many forms. Directions for the use of milk in a variety of ways are contained in a bulletin of the Children's Bureau, which will soon be ready for distribution.

Spinach is one of the best of green vegetables. It can be prepared in a number of ways and should be used freely in the daily diet. Fish and chicken are better for children in many cases than beef or other meats, and where these foods can be obtained one or the other may be given to children.

In the face of the great need for conserving wheat the use of new cereals has become a matter of necessity. There seems to be no reason why such food may not be as wholesome as wheat, if properly cooked. Mothers may need to be warned that all cereals, and particularly the coarser ones, like oatmeal and corn, need very long cooking to be suitable for children. Therefore it stands to reason that the "quick" breads and griddle cakes, which have been exposed to cooking heat perhaps only a few minutes, will not be well digested and that all preparations of cereals should be subjected to long, slow cooking, if they are to enter into the diet of young children.

At this moment, also, people are being urged to eat all the potatoes possible as another substitute for wheat. The request is made that families shall eat potatoes three times a day but this is not intended to apply literally to the youngest children, who would not get a sufficient variety of food in the day's meals if given potatoes at each one. The manner of cooking potatoes must be constantly varied or the family will tire of them. The methods will include frying and scalloping, delicious to the adult palate, if well done, but not suitable to young children. It is wise, therefore, for mothers to remember that children under five will hardly be able to eat potatoes more than once a day, and that for them this vegetable is better when baked, mashed, or freshly boiled and served simply with the addition of a little salt and milk or cream. Thus prepared they are so completely cooked and so finely divided that children do not swallow them in chunks. Frying, on the other hand, makes foods generally less suitable to the digestion of children.

That $100,000 Christmas Offering

Dear Coworkers: In a recent letter which we mailed to all the Sunday schools—all that we had names and addresses of—we suggested, as a means for helping to raise our offering funds, that we have a little friendly competition in our schools. You know we just simply cannot afford to fall short of that $100,000 mark, and we are not going to fall short of it. To assist us in gaining this end we suggested that we start our competition with a Mothers' Day program on August 18. Mothers always know of just dozens of ways to make money and it is going to be pretty hard to beat them.

Let us start Mothers' Day with a program that will long be remembered by all the mothers as a day filled with love and consecration devoted to a good cause. Let us make the move a really splendid success. We know there is not a Sunday school in our entire organization but what will desire to assist in helping and honoring our mothers and their efforts. Time is short—if your school has not already started—start to-day—do not wait until to-morrow.

September 15 has been set as Fathers' Day program. May we hope to see every father in every Sunday school in attendance on this day. Yes, we know they carry the pocket-book and they work for wages and get many chances to boost the offering—but mothers, girls, and boys, let us help them on this day, let it be a day that will gladden all hearts.

October 13 is Girls' Day, and to be sure they will not lose their chance to be right up on top. They always love to work for the Sunday school—look out for our girls, but let us help them, too.

Last will come the Boys' Day program on November 11. With so many of our splendid boys away in the service of our wonderful United States the boys will have to hustle—and hustle they will, and the results will show how splendidly resourceful they can be.

Now mothers, fathers, girls, boys, altogether, all for one and one for all—remember it's $100,000 we want for the offering this year, and we are going to get it.

If your Sunday school superintendent does not bring this matter to the attention of the school next Sunday, if you are not already working on these programs, call the matter to his attention and let us get things moving—it may be he has not received our letter. Remember, some have already started, because they were wide awake to the suggestions made in our last letter—all they needed was the suggestion.

Appoint your committees—get real, live workers on these committees, those who know what to suggest as a means for raising funds, those who can enthuse—and let us see if we cannot create a social enthusiasm among our workers that has never before been so thorough.

Let us not be satisfied with anything less than our best—we should not—for this work is God's work, and if we work properly he will bless our efforts. Let us look to him, pray to him for assistance, and we shall be successful.

For the $100,000 offering, I am,

Sincerely yours,

A. W. SMITH.

Light on the 51st Psalm

PRESIDENT ELBERT A. SMITH,
LAMONI, IOWA.

Dear Brother Elbert: It is just 4 a. m., and I am writing to you with joy and thanksgiving. The reason for my so doing is that I have received about 10 or 15 minutes ago what I really believe to be the true interpretation of Psalm 51: 5: "Behold I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me."

This passage of Scripture has always remained somewhat of a mystery to me, and the application of it by those who adhere to the doctrine of inbred sin, has been a difficult task to fully clear up in the mind of one so believing. For as you well know they apply that to the whole human race from Adam down, and the defense of the sinlessness of the infant has been, with me at least, predicated upon the statement of Jesus, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." (Luke 18: 16.)

This morning I must have wakened about three o'clock, and I have been thinking about a meeting I have with a woman this evening, and from a statement she made last night I know that will be her strong point for infant baptism. She is a very earnest Methodist, of the Hornerite type; and her husband desires me to talk to her so as to get her out of that if I can. He is a very nice man and one whom I believe desires the truth, and I feel he is very earnest in his views, and one who can be reached by the gospel. Last night was the first visit I made them, and this point came up. How was I to get over the doctrine that infants are whole from the foundation of the world, as we teach, without having to present the Inspired Translation, for fear she might be prejudiced against it and that would spoil my whole effort? I looked at Psalm 51: 5 last night and it appeared as it always did, without any apparent different meaning than what is applied by the advocates that all men are born in sin. I got no light from my reading of the Psalm.

R. C. Evans says that David was the child of polygamy, and hence applied that to himself, but it cannot be proved from the Bible that Jesse had more than one wife, and that David was a child of abomination, which would have a show of reason if such were the case. So I thought of making a personal application to Mr. and Mrs. Mason, to-night, in the following illustration:

"You both admit that God commanded Adam and Eve to be fruitful and multiply, which they could not do without bringing children into the world. Would such children be shapen in iniquity and conceived in sin? I am sure they would never admit that because if such were the case then the keeping of the commandment of God would be sin. Well, then, as you and Mr. Mason have fulfilled the requirements which entitle you to be fruitful in a legal sense, before God and man, by being legally married to each other, will your offspring be shapen in iniquity and conceived in sin any more than Adam and Eve's was?"

To this I felt that they would have to concede the sinlessness of their own children, or else they were in transgression by reason of illegal cohabitation. But that is a rather delicate point to present to people whose sensibilities might be touched by so pointed an illustration, and I did not feel like presenting R. C. Evans's contention that David was a child of polygamy, because I cannot prove that Jesse had more wives than one. What am I to do to get this point cleared up and show conclusively that the race is not, as a whole, born in sin and shapen in iniquity as it is contended for?

At ten minutes to four I looked at the Bible again, and there for the first time in my life I saw, in a light that I never saw before, the following:

*"To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, when Nathan the prophet came unto him, after he had gone in to Bath-sheba."

I saw the asterisk pointing to 2 Samuel 12: 1 and 11: 2, 4, in the margin, and the whole vision of Nathan coming to David and illustrating about the poor man having only one little ewe lamb, and how the rich man took not of his own flock to dress for the traveler (the devil, through David's passions), but took the poor man's little lamb (Bath-sheba), and lay with her and the child was conceived in (adultery) sin, and shapen in (adultery) iniquity.

David confesses his sin, 2 Samuel 12: 13, and the Lord forgives him, and when he composes that fifty-first Psalm, in the fifth verse, he does not speak of anybody else than that illegitimate child of his lust who died as stated in 2 Samuel 12: 14, 18, and he makes the child to say what we find in the fifth verse.

This has taught me that only those who are the children of unlawful cohabitation are shapen in iniquity and conceived in sin.

I thought I would write you this so you could make whatever use of it you might feel like doing. I'll be glad to hear from you on this.

In bonds,

PHILEMON PEMENT.

The Words of Eve

[The following letter raises a new point. So far as the passage in Samuel is concerned, it may be readily seen that Nathan was stating his own opinion first, and later the Lord commanded him differently.

The passage in Genesis is not easy. It would seem quite apparent that if "we," that is, Adam as well as Eve, had not fallen, but Adam had remained within the garden, they could not have had seed. Jude has it that Adam was not deceived, or as the Book of Mormon expresses it, "Adam fell that man might be."

It is, of course, impossible to suppose that man can progress by disobeying God. It is true that the thought is many times emphasized that those who know not the bitter cannot appreciate the sweet. Also it is urged by some that those who have not fallen cannot know the joy of being redeemed; but it is hardly probable that man would not have known good and evil, the joy of redemption and the eternal life which God giveth to the obedient, unless he had fallen. God's work is not advanced by disobedience.

The following letter expresses rather a new explanation by way of suggestion. Probably it will not appeal to all of our readers, nor is it set forth as being authoritative.—EDITORS.]

BASEL, SWITZERLAND, March 5, 1918.

Editors Herald: There are many who find contradictions and errors, especially in the inspired Holy Scriptures, but this can only occur to such as have not studied the Holy Scriptures from first to last, and have not pondered prayerfully over passages dark to them; and especially have not taken into consideration what the Lord says, and what men say. For instance, the prophet Nathan, in 2 Samuel 7: 5, 7, finds the Lord to contradict what he had said to David in verse 3.

And so many get even horrified in reading, for instance, the words of Eve in Genesis 4: 11, which seem to say that the angels in the celestial glory of the Father, who never fell into transgression never got punished, never knew evil, are not fully happy, can never be fully happy; that man after his transgression, and in his state of punishment, became happier than before; happier than all the hosts of heaven who never transgressed.

Well, if these so deeply horrified readers had carefully and prayerfully read from verse 8 of the said chapter, they would have found that the angel of the Lord commanded Adam to repent and that surely Adam did so, because the same chapter shows how strictly obedient Adam had become and that therefore the Holy Ghost fell upon Adam and filled him and gave him the gift of prophecy. (Genesis 4: 10.) Then reading on to verse 11, speaking of Eve, they would have to acknowledge nothing is said of Eve having thoroughly repented; nothing, therefore, of her having received the Holy Ghost, and nothing of her having received the gift of prophecy. And they would feel in her words an attempt to tranquilize Adam in his keen repenting and regretting his sin; and that, therefore, her words are not divinely received from the Holy Ghost, but a human attempt to mitigate their sin, reported to us to warn us to beware of hindrances to our receiving the Holy Spirit.

Some one has said that our garments should be such that another, having seen us and then passed on, could not recall how we were dressed. The reason for this, of course, would be that our clothing was not so plain or untidy, nor yet so elaborate nor gaudy, as to be noticeable.—Ethel I. Skank.

Chastening

"Whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth." (Hebrews 12: 6.) How deep is the mystery of God's chastening of his children, and how the soul shrinks at the very mention of the word. Yet it is one of the most precious teachings of God's word as to his loving dealing with the lives of his own. Let us give heed to it, for it touches the depths of Christian experiences in that it brings us face to face with God's wondrous grace in overruling the mystery of suffering to the enrichment and unspeakable blessing of the lives of his children.

And let us note first that chastening is God's child training, that it is what the word means. It is built upon the Greek word child, it is the root-word for child. With the verb termination added to it, it means to deal with as a child, to child-train. Nine times in the passage occur the words son, child, and father. God is speaking to his own. We are his own dear children. He has brought us into his great family, and now having been born into the kingdom of his dear Son, Jesus Christ, having become new creatures in the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, sipping from the fountain that never goes dry.

He is going to come to his Saints of the most high God. He is going to sup with us and we with him for all time. He will train us when he comes to prepare us to meet God. He is overruling the suffering children, preparing us for his coming to meet him where there will be no more chastening, but the Saints will help Christ to carry out his purposes during the thousand years, and oh, what wonderful blessings will be given from his mighty, omnipotent hand. Let us read, and mark the blessing of the entire paragraph, that they may sink deep into our souls:

"My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him: for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."

If we cannot endure the chastising we are none of his, for what father is there to-day that does not chastise his son that he might make a better child of him. We have had fathers of the flesh which have corrected us and we give them reverence. Shall we not much rather be in subjection to the Father of spirits, and live? For they verily chastened us for a few days, and we gave them reverence, but he chastens that we might be partakers of his holiness.

Now no child training for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous, nevertheless, afterward, it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.

Chastening is for purification. Does God have a grudge against us? Is God trying us as it were to get even with us? I think not, but we often may think so when we are passing through the fiery trials. No doubt it is to remove the dross from us as he sees that we shall be tried as gold is purified in the furnace. It is for our purification. He is seeking to purge from us all that mars the likeness of Jesus Christ within us. It is his own holiness that he is seeking to perfect within us like the silversmith that is watching in the furnace to mold his own image.

As soon as he gets the likeness of himself, he is satisfied, so when we are molded in the image of Christ, then we will be ready to meet him at his coming with gladness, for we shall each be as a polished shaft. God's great purpose is that all of his children should be cleansed from evil and fitted for the Master's use, and that Christ's image may be formed in us.

As everything can be done with an obedient child, so nothing can be done with a disobedient one, unless he is changed by the renewing of Christ's Spirit. Then he will become a new creature in Christ Jesus. Thus we see that all the will and way of the Father is that we should learn this one word: obedience.

"Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience through the things which he suffered," is the wondrous word spoken of the Lord himself, and have you not noted how true this is in the lives of all God's children. The chamber of suffering—is it not the birthplace of obedience? Is not the crowning grace of utter submission to his will wrought out in the place of affliction?

Go into one such chamber of suffering where lies one of God's shut-ins. You express the hope that this affliction may pass away. A smile flits over the wan face and quickly from the trembling lips drop this sentence: "Not my will, but God's, be done." Such was the submission of Christ himself.

How many of us strong-willed men and women have found it to be true that the will of God is wrought out in a crucible of suffering. I was once a very wayward man, but when I came to myself I repented and was baptized for the remission of my sins, and in six months after confirmation, oh, what a mighty power of God's Spirit came upon me. I became as a new man in Christ. The joy and happiness I received were unspeakable.

The blessing that can enrich and glorify that life—the blessing of a human will yielded to the will of God—it is worth striving for. It is worth more than silver and gold, than gratified desires and ambitions, than all the sweet blandishments of friendship, and all the praises of men. To be hidden, sunken in the will of God for all time—that is what God is striving for—to bring us to this point through trial and tribulation.

All that brings you this is worth its costliest price in blood and suffering. By these devious paths God brings us to his next rich outcome in his child training and that is: fruitage.

"Afterwards it yieldeth the fruit." God does not expect us to enjoy chastening, but to endure it for the sake of what it brings afterward. Sometimes we reproach ourselves because we are not enjoying afflictions. We ought to be like Paul who, we say, rejoiced in tribulation. Surely not when they scourged his naked back. Think you that he enjoyed the perils brought upon him by his false brethren? Do you know what it is to have a friend play you false? Would you enjoy those stabs which made the blood writhe in your innermost soul? Surely not. Neither did Paul, nor any man with flesh and blood.

What did this hero of Jesus Christ's kingdom say about affliction? Listen. "I rejoice in tribulation, for tribulation worketh. . . ." He rejoiced, not in tribulation itself, but amid tribulation for the things that come forth from it.

Do not esteem God's chastening lightly. It will yield a bountiful crop by and by to the glorifying of our souls. The seed of the Spirit is planted in the heart of man and no man may pluck it out. When our names are written in the Lamb's book of life, no man can go there and blot it out.

Earthly storms and worldly power are as nothing compared to the power of God which has never failed. "I am God, and there is no other God." As Christ says: "All things were created by me, and without me there was nothing created."

Let us pray God daily, in the name of his son, Jesus Christ, for spirituality, that we may ever have strength to keep our faces Zionward, until the Savior comes to gather up his Saints of the most high God, to sing the everlasting songs of the redeemed, who have been purchased by the blood of Christ, who made the sacrifice of atonement for all the Saints.

And the Saints shall dwell in that home where God will wipe away all tears from off all faces, and where there will be no more parting, but it will be one eternal day. Christ will be our shepherd to prepare us during the thousand years to meet God.

Editors Herald: Provided we are not crowding other more important matter, we would like to have a few words in your valuable pages.

We are holding our Sunday school every Sunday, having about thirty members, which are generally attending. Our Brother L. E. Rippley has been called to Camp Lewis, and we suffer a loss. He was one of our valuable Sunday school teachers, and a strong pillar in the church. We are asking the Saints to include him with others who are under similar duties in their prayers, and that he may still hold fast to the rod of iron. His address is Private Lewis E. Rippley, Sixty-second Brigade, 166th Depot Brigade, Camp Lewis, Washington.

Brother O. B. Snuggins of Outlook comes here once a month, and administers sacrament, also preaches us the blessed gospel with much spirit and power. It is indeed a feast to us, having the glad tidings preached, for it has been so long since we had one of God's servants laboring among us.

I might also say that our faithful brother brings with him his auto full of the Outlook Saints, and words cannot express the joy which we receive when gathered together at prayer meetings; we can surely testify with the Psalmist, "The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart, sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb." (Psalm 19: 8, 10.)

Last Sunday seven were baptized. Although some were young, they had a sincere desire for baptism, two of which were expected by their parents, and the presence of the Holy Spirit was realized during the confirmation. As some of the Saints had the opportunity of attending the conference at Glasgow, Montana, we received much light and encouragement on their return, more especially on the redemption of Zion.

The time is come when the voice of the Lord is unto us: "Come out of Babylon." What a blessing to us—to be awakened to this truth. May God bless us, that we may hearken unto his words, and to treasure these things in our hearts. Asking your prayers on my behalf that I may endure unto the end, I am,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

IDWAL JONES.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure that I send another year's subscription to the HERALD, and am glad to be receiving them regularly, notwithstanding the difficulties of transmission.

Not to have the HERALD would indeed be a loss, as we have so much to learn and its pages contain much valuable information. As a private in the ranks, I have often been encouraged and comforted by a timely word in season from those who are watchmen on the towers of Zion. I would say to all the Saints, "Let us not be weary, comrades," and that "there are glorious victories coming, for the army of the Lord."

The Bishopric

To the Saints of the Spokane District; Greeting: The faithful Saints should be proud of the financial gain during the past six months. Let us not slacken our efforts. The church needs the help. This is a day of sacrifice, and our covenant is not complete without it. Nothing in this world can help us so much to overcome the selfishness of our natures as giving to the Lord that which is his in tithes and consecrations. Let us remember the tenth is the Lord's and he has waited a long time on some of us for a more convenient time. We are asking a great deal of the Lord; what are we willing to give?

The world about us is full of the spirit of speculation and there are so many ways before us that we are liable to put off giving the Lord his portion of that which he has given us until it is too late. Withholding that which is his is robbing God. We have waited patiently to record your name and amount due the Lord: now is a good time to cooperate in the Master's cause. Saints, let us hasten the redemption of Zion by doing our part. The Lord can multiply and turn to our good many things according to our faith and works. Solicitors in every branch prepared to issue official receipt.

Read this extract from a letter to President Frederick M. Smith, in which Charles A. Ellwood, a scholar and author of national reputation, dwells on the subject of the Higher Powers of Man as presented in President Smith's book:

I had the pleasure of reading your book on The Higher Powers of Man. I had hoped to see you in Kansas City, and to express my pleasure in person to you; but I failed to meet you and so drop you this line. . . . I like the book. It seems to me to open up a delicate and difficult topic in a way which the lay reader can understand. It is, moreover, timely, because for the sake of human and national efficiency in our present crisis people in general need to know how to "tap the higher levels of human energy."

If you want a book the study of which will open new possibilities for you, send $1.25 to either Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, or Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, ordering The Higher Powers of Man, by Frederick M. Smith.

Ordained a priest October, 1892; an elder, October, 1897; a seventy April, 1901; one of seven presidents 1902. Since 1900 he has resided at Dow City, Iowa, at which place services were conducted on August 5, by Charles E. Butterworth.

BRAND.—Martha Wardley Brand was born August 28, 1821, in Osset, Essex, England. Married at place of birth to David Brand in 1840. Came to America in 1856, landing at Boston, Massachusetts, in March. From there they went to Wheatland, Illinois. They had already espoused the faith, and in 1863 they joined the exodus to Utah and Salt Lake City. Becoming convinced that evil prevailed at that place, they left it in 1866, returning to Wheatland, Illinois. Moved to Carrol in 1869. In 1886 they moved to Marengo, Illinois, which has since been their home. Her husband died October 3, 1906. She died July 4, 1918. Besides a host of friends, she leaves 6 daughters to mourn her loss: Mrs. Joseph Dusang, Mrs. R. L. Eddy, Mrs. S. L. Cahoon, Mrs. B. S. Cowen, Mrs. C. E. St. Clair, Mrs. Acock. Funeral services from residence, in charge of Charles H. Burr, assisted by J. A. Daer.

FROM HERE AND THERE

ERRATA

In the HERALD for August 7, page 762, the word bray is used for bay. The sentence should be, "Did you ever see a dog bay at the moon?"

On page 764, second column, the word son is used for sun. It should be, "Gaze on the setting sun of tyranny."

TO THE MEN OF THE MINISTRY

We should hope and pray that the world war will close shortly; we should work and plan on the basis that it will not close for many years.

As a part of our plans the young men of the church, especially those of draft age, or soon to become of draft age, should be induced to make the best preparation possible for Government service. As a part of that preparation, their attention and that of their parents and friends should be invited to the very great possibilities attendance at the Grace-land Radio Institute holds for them in the matter of more efficient service for the Government and in the way of finer opportunities for themselves.

The demand for wireless operators is very great, and our own church institution has one of the best equipments in the country for thoroughly preparing our young men for this most important line of work. The wireless department of Graceland College was opened on the request of the Government, and her graduates have received high commendation for the quality of the instruction they have received.

In addition to preparation to help meet the present crisis the profession has great possibilities in times of peace.

Graceland authorities are just in receipt of a letter from the United States Department of Commerce reading in part as follows:

"Owing to the fact that a large number of commercial radio operators have entered the service of the Army or Navy and that many merchant vessels formerly carrying one and two operators are now required to carry three, the Government urgently calls upon the different radio schools throughout the country to train as many men for wireless service as possible. At the rate at which these ships are being built it is feared that the available supply of commercial operators will soon be exhausted. To provide against this, every means possible is being used to license as many commercial operators as can be obtained."

The traveling ministry are urged to call this matter to the attention of the young men of the church of draft age, or soon to reach the age of twenty-one years, and recommend that they write the president, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for a catalogue and descriptive matter of the work of the wireless department. The next term opens September 5, 1918.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

THE AUGUST AUTUMN LEAVES

The August number is a most interesting one from all standpoints. It has a new story from the pen of Sister Marietta Walker, founder of the magazine and editor for many years. There is a story by George A. Kelley, entitled, "The test," one of the special dozen featured throughout the year. Then there is a picture of the group of soldier boys at Camp Funston who conducted a Sunday school and held preaching services ere they were called overseas. The closing chapters of "Timbers for the temple," by Elbert A. Smith, are in this number. This popular serial will be followed in an early number by one from the pen of Sister Jessie Ward, which is of very high quality and intense interest. It will run under the name of "A call at evening." The Periscope continues to tell on folks and show up their foibles in the hope that they will gradually be overcome. The article on the naming of the streets of the Lamoni Stake reunion grounds is short but suggestive. The departments are teeming with excellent things, including coordination. The subject is discussed by G. R. Wells and in the editorial department. There are good poems, a number of short, spicy articles and items, a well-balanced magazine of interest and profit to the entire family. It sells for only a dollar a year.

GOOD COUNSEL

There is no mistake that the church has made, or that individuals have made, that might not have been avoided had men and women heeded the words of good counsel previously given through the prophets for their advice and protection.

In an address to the General Conference in 1900 President Joseph Smith said:

I warn the brethren, as I have in the past, against the machinations of the adversary sowing dissension between brethren. The adversary has tried, in the past, to lead us astray by a popular sin. I do not believe he will be able to do that again; our faces are set like flints in that direction. But he can and he will endeavor to sow dissension between the brethren; and those who are sufficiently sensitive to his attacks, his approaches, will be moved upon by him, and there will be trouble between them.—Conference Minutes, 1900.

Some of those who said amen at the time may have forgotten that admonition. On more than the one occasion he warned us that we need not again fear that the church would fall into apostasy such as came with Brigham Young's regime, that the danger of the future would lie in suspicion, disunion, jealousy, and dissension.

WHO IS YOUR GENERAL?

On the eve of a great battle Napoleon was asked, "What generals among your opponents do you most fear?" He replied, without hesitation: "General Distrust and General Disunion." Is there a lesson there for Latter Day Saints?

Distrust and disunion tend to defeat our work. Even when they are not general, but only sporadic, they do harm, and may always spread and do more harm. Under what general do we fight? God does not promote distrust and disunion among his people. The Devil is only too eager to spread distrust and disunion among God's followers. If we from pulpit or in private promote these things, whom are we serving?

It is possible for a very good man with the best of intentions to conduct himself very unwisely. For that reason God gave us some excellent counsel in the revelation of 1914:

The Spirit saith further, that the spirit of distrust and want of confidence in those who are called and ordained to act in the various responsible positions in the priesthood and in authority in the church is unbecoming those professing faith in God, Jesus Christ his Son, and the Holy Spirit of truth, and evinces a serious lack of that charity which Paul, an apostle of Christ, declared to be the quality of Christian virtue which thinketh no evil. Those who go out from the assemblies and solemn conclaves of the church should exercise great care in their ministration abroad both to the branches where they may officiate and in their preaching the gospel to those outside, to avoid sowing seeds of distrust and suspicion either in public ministration or in private conversation. The church has been admonished heretofore in this respect and the Spirit saith again, it is unbecoming to the character and calling of those who administer in the name of Jesus Christ the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 131: 4.

It is quite possible by throwing out dark hints from the pulpit to create the impression that something is very wrong, when in fact there is not much foundation for the pessimism of the preacher. Again, it is possible in private conversation in homes and in the market place to produce exactly the same result on a smaller scale. Great harm may be done in this way. And God has told us expressly that it is unbecoming the character of a minister to do such a thing.

"SEND NOT IN VAIN"

We often sing, "Send forth the sowers—but send not in vain." How is it when the sowers are sent forth to sow the gospel seed, and instead, in the language of the revelation, "sow seeds of distrust and suspicion"? Are they not sent in vain? They bring another gospel than that with which they were intrusted, and we are not obliged to receive them into our homes, neither can we bid them Godspeed in their sowing.

This revelation was not given idly. It was given because it was needed. It is needed yet. The man who pursues the policy outlined in the revelation, and condemned, must know that if he is aware of any real transgression anywhere there is a lawful way and an unlawful way to go about the work of bringing the transgressors to book. To merely sow seeds of distrust and discord and leave the hearers to guess at the trouble hinted at is condemned by the Lord as unbecoming to a minister. He says we should avoid it. It is unlawful. Brethren, is that good counsel? Let us heed it.

TAKE HEED LEST YE BE CONSUMED

Many centuries ago Paul gave some words of counsel that are still vital. He said:

For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another.—Galatians 5: 14, 15.

Brother A——, as we will call him, went into a certain district to labor. While there he visited in a certain home, and in the presence of the family, both young and old, indulged in very harsh and unjust criticisms of certain of his associates among the church "authorities," as they are sometimes called. The members of the family were very much disturbed and perplexed.

At the very same time in the very same district Brother B—— was making equally unjust and unwarranted assertions against Brother A——. The irony of fate brought us report of both incidents on the same day. Brother A—— could not complain, for he had himself played the game. He had done unto others as he would not that they should do unto him. As he measured to others it came back to him.

But to our minds came the words of Paul, "Take heed that ye be not consumed one of another." The above incident by no means represents the work of the ministry in general. God forbid that it should ever come to that stage. It is an extreme case. But brethren, there is too much of that work. It is spiritual anarchy.

Those who attack us from without with falsehood and calumny are not so much to be feared. But if those who feed the sheep give them poison the danger is very great.

LET NOTHING SEPARATE

In 1890 the Lord gave some excellent counsel, as follows:

Yea, verily, thus saith the Lord, unto the elders of the church: Continue in steadfastness and faith. Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called; and I will be with you by my Spirit and presence of power unto the end. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 17.

This advice is addressed to the elders but will apply to all, in some degree. Let us stand by the work, whatever may happen. Let us guard against division. If any wrong should arise, if we are united and faithful we will be able to cast it out and the work go on. In any event the work will go on and the church triumph, but those who forsake the cause of God and assault their brethren in the conflict without cause and in unlawful ways will surely suffer loss.

Brethren, is the counsel that we have received good? Let us heed it. Thus may we avoid becoming "spots in the feast of charity."

THE FOURTH LIBERTY LOAN

We are already receiving notices that the fourth Liberty Loan is in process of preparation and it appears will be better organized than was the third. An effort will be made to distribute the responsibility thoroughly, according to one's ability to subscribe and past subscriptions.

The drive is to be made September 28 to October 19.

Personally we still favor the idea of voluntary or personal effort. This can still be secured by way of voluntary oversubscription. The sooner the issue is made the sooner the war will be over.

But the special feature that always remains with us is the value and necessity of constant economy and saving. It is the saving that counts more, even, than the subscriptions for the bonds. The fact that we have wasted less and used only that which is necessary thereby has saved supplies for the benefit of others. This is a humanitarian and Christian thing to do.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Questions. What is the law of the church in regard to marriage?

If a man put away his wife for any cause, let it be what it will, has he a right to marry again so long as his first wife is living?

I am not thinking of putting away my wife and getting another; I just want to know the law. I have always thought a man or woman had no right to marry again except the contract was broken by death, but according to a statement made in the Epitome of Faith, he or she may marry again if broken by transgression.

Question No. 2. In a case of difficulty should the offended go to the offender or the offender to the offended?

If the one claiming to be the offended has gone to the offender and tried to bring about a reconciliation without any result has he a right to partake of the sacrament or what must be done next?

Answers. First, The use of the words in the Epitome of Faith, unless released by transgression or death, doubtless refers to the fact that the Master condemns putting away for any other cause, save fornication, or in other words, adultery. We find this in Matthew 5: 32 and 19: 9; Mark 10: 11, 12; Luke 16: 18; also you will find this set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7, 20. This is also set forth in General Conference Resolutions No. 412. That is doubtless what is referred to by this passage in the Epitome of Faith. As you will see from Doctrine and Covenants 42: 20, it states that if one party is guilty of adultery and a separation occur for that reason, the other party shall not be cast out from the church, and implies it leaves him or her free to marry again.

Second. The Master has answered it both ways, that the offender should go to the offended, and the offended should go to the offender. We read in the Sermon on the Mount, in Matthew 5: 25, 26, Inspired Version:

Therefore, if ye shall come unto me, or shall desire to come unto me, or if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave thou thy gift before the altar, and go thy way unto thy brother, and first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. (See Matthew 5: 23, 24, King James' Version.)

Then in Matthew 18: 15-17 Inspired Version, we find:

Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto you as a heathen man and a publican.

We could give further texts, but we think this will answer the question. The one shows that if you come to the church or the altar of God, there to offer your oblations, and remember that your brother hath aught against you, you shall go to be reconciled. That would appear to be that if you are the offender; and in Matthew 18: 15, if thy brother trespass against thee go and tell it to him alone. The responsibility is certainly upon both parties. Neither has the right to sit back and wait and ask the other to make the approach and get right. Both the offender and the offended have the responsibility of striving to achieve a reconciliation. A great mistake is often made in this way, as one thinks he has a right to sit back and wait, and says if the other party comes and confesses wrong, and admits he did wrong, I will forgive him. Often the one who is offended may be the stronger party, and he can show it in no better way than by extending his forgiveness at once, as the Master did when he said, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," and making the advance in the attempt for reconciliation.

HUMBLE AND FULL OF LOVE

We have often had to consider the statement of the Master: "Every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Also the statement of John 4: 3, 4, in the Inspired Version, "Though he himself baptized not so many as his disciples; for he suffered them for an example, preferring one another."

The same thought is set forth in Mark 10: 44: "Whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all." And in Doctrine and Covenants, "No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love." We have often observed this disposition of humility and brotherly love among the ministry of the church, especially in those occupying prominent places, in that they prefer one another.

Though it is probably true that some have made the mistake, because of fear of putting themselves forward too much, of retreating too far. The best testimony, after all, is that of a righteous life, but it should properly be confirmed by an oral testimony.

At the recent Lamoni reunion we were struck many times with this disposition. President Elbert A. Smith is a very model of brotherly love and humility. The stake officers were unassuming, but efficient in their work. They attended quietly to the details of running the reunion. Though they were placed in charge, still they only preached once each, and preferred the missionaries and visiting brethren. And especially was this true of the Sunday and evening services, when the largest crowd is in attendance.

But other members of the priesthood showed a similar disposition to do their part in a quiet and efficient way, and not to be concerned as to where the honor seemed to go. This was a splendid experience in addition to the other manifestations of the Spirit. There was unity of purpose and a preferring of one another in righteousness.

This is as it should be. The great and vital question is not—What can I get out of it? but, What can I give? What can I do to help?

And again, the vital question is not so much whether I or some other does the work, but that the work should be done as well as is possible—not only for present but also future needs. This comes again to the theme of working together, one with another, and also with God.

Sometimes, unfortunately, we see a disposition to measure how much honor is coming to the individual, and whether he is getting all the credit that belongs to him. It would seem that in some instances, most fortunately rare, a favorite song would be, "That shall be glory for ME." Such a spirit, however, is contrary to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. The right spirit is rather, "Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever." (Genesis 3: 3, I. T.) Or again, "I come to do thy will, O God." (Hebrews 10: 7.)

Such passages can be multiplied. The sayings of the Master are full of them, an instance of which occurred at the Lord's supper. But the reason why is evidently social. We should seek first to build up the kingdom of God. We should work for the church and the ultimate good of the individual—and the work is not of one, but of all.

At such a gathering as the General Conference, or even some of our larger reunions, there are as many men able to do the bulk of the preaching, and who would do so in smaller reunions or gatherings, as there are sermons to be preached. At General Conference, there are more able speakers than opportunities to speak. Nor can it be urged that the selection is made always on the basis of the most fit and the most able. There are many reasons to be considered, as to what will be best for the work as a whole.

Thank God that we have a mighty army of those willing to do their part individually, and who are also equally ready to prefer one another in righteousness, and who work for the good of the church and the whole body in humility and brotherly love.

NEW REPORT CARDS

The Far West Stake has ordered printed a number of report cards of uniform size, 4 by 7 inches, with printing on both sides of the card, for use in making reports. One card is a visiting officers' blank. The names of the officers and information is published on one side, and on the reverse side a list of the persons to be visited, with space for date, and a brief note.

Another card is a local monthly report blank. It contains the same items as the usual report blank, and is to be used by all members of the priesthood in the branches of the Far West Stake. It contains these usual items on one side of the card, and on the opposite side, space for remarks and additional notes.

A third card is a monthly branch report to the stake presidency. This blank has space for the name of the branch and for the month and year. It has a space for each of the ordinary church services, allowing for two preaching services, a Sunday and a midweek social service. A space for name of the speaker at each preaching service, and the number in attendance at each church service. Report is asked on monthly priesthood meetings and attendance, and on other church services and attendance; the number of members visited by all officers; a report on the condition of the church building and premises. Four or five separate items are asked for in this connection.

On the reverse side of this blank there is space for report on the Sunday school attendance, Religio attendance for each service; also, on meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary Society, young people's prayer meeting, special services for children and young people, and how often held; and does the pastor and auxiliary officers meet in consultation and cooperate? The responsibility of keeping account of the attendance of all branch meetings is definitely placed upon the teacher of the branch.

The first blank referred to emphasizes the fact that it is the rule of the stake that all members shall be visited quarterly, and an effort is made so to distribute the work as to accomplish this result. It is signed by the branch president, or upon his behalf.

Those having difficulty in filing reports will appreciate the value of having such uniform cards in shape for ready filing.

Other stakes and some districts have also worked out comprehensive systems of reporting which are of great value.

S. A. B.

But it is the real test of manhood to remain fixed and true when the body is broken. This He did. He watched and prayed while others, being worn and weary, slept. He showed himself worthy to command others by being always obedient to his superior officer. He typified the soldierly virtue of obedience when in the extremity He declared, "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine, be done." He faced unpopularity, one of the severest tests. Finally, upon the cross, enduring terrible pain, He showed his ability to stand by a cardinal principle of truth, when He prayed the Father to forgive those who were persecuting him, on the ground that they did not know what they were doing. His moral vigor is undoubted.—Elbert A. Smith.

FAITH AND ORIGIN OF CHURCHES---Part 21

BY J. F. MINTUN

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS, UTAH MORMONS

In 1844, after the death of Joseph Smith, the church over which he had presided became divided into several factions. Quite a large number of the members followed Brigham Young and some of the officials who went with him, who when driven from Nauvoo in 1846 crossed Iowa, and temporarily settled in western Iowa, near where Council Bluffs now is, and in eastern Nebraska, near Omaha. In 1847 a small colony went with Brigham Young to the Great Salt Lake, Utah, arriving there July 24 of that year. In August, this colony were all baptized by the instruction of Brigham Young, and then confirmed, and those who had been officials in the church presided over by Joseph Smith, were ordained to the same named office they had previously held. After their return to what was called Winter Quarters, near where Florence, Nebraska, now is, there was a meeting called of the chief officials as ordained in Utah, and without claiming any instruction from a divine source, or any higher source than Brigham Young, they, on December 5, chose Brigham Young to be President, with Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards, his counselors. The following history from The Life of Brigham Young, page 186, is evidence of the above organization of this new religious body:

There was a feast and grand council, December 5, at the house of Elder Hyde. . . .

Orson Hyde then moved that Brigham Young be president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and that he nominate his two counselors to form the First Presidency. Wilford Woodruff seconded the motion, and it was carried unanimously.

President Young then nominated Heber C. Kimball as his first counselor, and Willard Richards as his second counselor, which was seconded and carried unanimously.

After this action on the part of the officials, the few members who were there in Winter Quarters and vicinity were called together in a conference on December 24, and these selections were ratified.

While these officials and members who engaged in this new organization had formerly been officials and members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, yet, on account of the action taken at this time not being in accord with the law of organization as found in the accepted books of the church of which they professed to be members, it has become an historical fact that by their act they became a separate organization; this being established by the decision of two courts of the United States. These decisions have as their basis a further fact, that as early as 1846 and 1847 there had been introduced privately by Brigham Young and others of those who now formed this organization, the evil practice of polygamy, which it has been decided had something to do with vitiating the authority they formerly held, as the following extracts from court decisions will give evidence:

That the church in Utah, the defendant, of which John Taylor is president, had materially and largely departed from the faith, doctrines, laws, ordinances, and usages of said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has incorporated into its system of faith the doctrine of celestial marriage and a plurality of wives, and the doctrine of Adam-god worship, contrary to the laws and constitution of said original church.—Decision of Judge L. S. Sherman, in Court of Common Pleas, Lake County, Ohio, Journal Entry, February Term, 1880.

Joseph Smith was killed at Carthage, Illinois, in June, 1844. Disintegration set in and the church split into factions. . . . Among the Quorum of Twelve . . . was one Brigham Young, a man of intellectual power, shrewd and aggressive, if not audacious. . . . It was an easy matter for him to seize the fallen reins of the presidency. . . .

There can be no question of the fact that Brigham Young's assumed presidency was a bold and bald usurpation. . . .

The Book of Mormon itself inveighed against the sin of polygamy. . . .

Conformably to the Book of Mormon, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants expressly declares "that we believe that one man should have but one wife, and one woman but one husband." . . . Its first appearance as a dogma of the church [the dogma of polygamy] was in the Utah Church in 1852.

Claim is made by the Utah church that this doctrine is predicated on a revelation made to Joseph Smith in July, 1843. No such revelation was ever made public during the life of Joseph Smith, and under the law of the church it could not become an article of faith and belief until submitted to and adopted by the church. This was never done. . . .

The Utah church further departed from the principles and doctrines of the original church by changing in their teaching the first statement in the Articles of Faith, which was, "We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost," and in lieu thereof taught the doctrine of Adam-god worship. . . .

It has introduced societies of a secret order, and established secret oaths and covenants, contrary to the book of teachings of the old church. It has changed the duties of the president, and of the Twelve, and established the doctrine to "obey counsel," and has changed the order of the "seventy" or "evangelists."—Judge John F. Philips, of the United States Circuit Court, in the Temple Lot Case, 1894.

From the books which they profess to believe in, some of which they are the authors, we extract the following to show their faith:

AUTHORITY FOR BELIEF

As to a person not knowing more than the written word, let me tell you that there are keys that the written word never spoke of, nor never will.—Brigham Young, in Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 667.

According to the records, Brigham Young also said:

We have outgrown the books as a boy outgrows his jacket. The books are of no more worth than the ashes of a rye straw.

If Brother Brigham tells me to do a thing, it is the same as though the Lord told me to do it. This is the course for you and every other saint to take.—Heber C. Kimball, October 9, 1852, First Counselor to Brigham Young, Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 161.

When any counsel came from President Woodruff which seemed to be in conflict with the written word of God, we should follow the living oracles.—Angus H. Cannon, October, 1894, Deseret News.

GOD

When our father Adam came into the garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. He helped to make and organize this world. . . . He is our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do.—Brigham Young, in Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 50.

JESUS CHRIST

When the Virgin Mary conceived the child Jesus, the Father had begotten him in his own likeness. He was not begotten by the Holy Ghost. And who is the Father? He is the first of the human family; and when he took a tabernacle, it was begotten by the Father in heaven, after the same manner as the tabernacles of Cain, Abel, and the rest of the sons and daughters of Adam and Eve; from the fruits of the earth, the first earthly tabernacles were originated by the Father, and so on in succession. . . . Now, remember from this time forth, and forever, that Jesus Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost.—Brigham Young, April 9, 1852, Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 51.

RELIGION

The religion of the Latter Day Saints consists of doctrines, commandments, ordinances, and rites revealed from God in the present age. They are not taken from the Bible, but nevertheless are in complete harmony therewith.—Articles of Faith, Handbook of Reference, p. 91.

Faith in God is the beginning of religion. . . . This faith comes through the authorized preaching of the word of God—the gospel of Jesus Christ.—Ibid., p. 91.

Faith in God and in Jesus Christ truly aroused in the soul, repentance follows as its first fruits.—Ibid., p. 92.

Baptism, or immersion in water by one authorized of God to administer it, is ordained to convey the remission of sins that comes through the shedding of Christ's blood.—Ibid., p. 92.

Men having authority from God to do so, lay their hands upon his head and confirm him a member of the Church of Christ, imparting to him the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Ibid., p. 92.

Among the leading principles of the Latter Day Saints' faith are the resurrection of the dead and the eternal judgment.—Ibid., p. 94.

PRIESTHOOD

The priesthood is a power we should respect, reverence, and obey, no matter in whose hands it is.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, p. 15.

I am the controller and master of affairs here, under Heaven's direction; though there are those who do not believe it.—Brigham Young, April 9, 1852, Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 48.

No man need judge me. You know nothing about it, whether I am sent or not; furthermore, it is none of your business, only to listen with open ears to what is taught you, and serve God with an undivided heart.—Brigham Young, December 5, 1853, Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 341.

You have heard me say, a great many times, that there is not that man or woman in this church, and there never was and never will be who turn up their noses at the counsel that is given them from the First Presidency, but who, unless they repent of and refrain from such conduct, will eventually go out of the church and go to hell, every one of them.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 17, p. 159, words of Brigham Young.

Heber C. Kimball, first counselor to Brigham Young, said November 8, 1857:

In regard to our situation and circumstances in these valleys, brethren, wake up! wake up, ye elders of Israel, and live to God and none else; and learn to do as you are told for the future. And when you are taking a position, if you do not know that you are right, do not take it—I mean independently. But if you are told by your leaders to do a thing, do it. None of your business whether it is right or wrong.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, p. 32.

This same principle was advocated publicly by the successors of Brigham Young in the presidency of that church of which he was president; John Taylor, Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, pp. 264, 265; Wilford Woodruff, Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, p. 83; Lorenzo Snow, Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, p. 314; and Joseph F. Smith, in Deseret News, of April 25, 1896, in the following language:

The fact of the matter is, when a man says you can direct me spiritually, but not temporally, he lies in the presence of God—that is, if he has got intelligence enough to know what he is talking about.

Then note this from Brigham Young:

I have many a time in this stand dared the world to produce as mean devils as we can; we can beat them at anything. We have the greatest and smoothest liars in the world, the cunningest and most adroit thieves, and any other shade of characters that you can mention.

We can pick out elders in Israel right here who can beat the world at gambling; who can handle the cards; can cut and shuffle them with the smartest rogue on the face of God's footstool. I can produce elders here who can shave their smartest shavers, and take their money from them. We can beat the world at any game.

We can beat them because we have men here who live in the light of the Lord; and have the holy priesthood and hold the keys of the kingdom of God.—Brigham Young, in Deseret News, vol. 6, p. 291.

VIEWS ON CIVIL GOVERNMENTS

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land.

Wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet.—Doctrine and Covenants, Utah Edition, 58: 21, 22.

The kingdom of God is an order of government established by divine authority. It is the only legal government that can exist in any part of the universe. All other governments are illegal and unauthorized. God having made all beings and worlds has the supreme right to govern them by his own laws and by officers of his own appointment. Any people attempting to govern themselves and by laws of their own making and by officers of their own appointment, are in direct rebellion against the kingdom of God.—Orson Pratt, in Doctrines of the Gospel, vol. 1, p. 666.

That our belief with regard to earthly governments and laws in general may not be misinterpreted nor misunderstood, we have thought proper to present near the close of this volume our opinion concerning the same.

1. We believe that governments were instituted of God for the benefit of man, and that he holds men accountable for their acts in relation to them, for the good and safety of society.

3. We believe that all governments necessarily require civil officers and magistrates to enforce the laws of the same, and that such as will administer the law in equity and justice, should be sought for and upheld by the voice of the people (if a republic) or the will of the sovereign.—Doctrine and Covenants, Utah Edition, 134: 1, 3, and the preface to the section.

We have stood the damned villainy of these scoundrels, [meaning Government officials] for thirty years in this territory. . . . I would sooner live among savages, than among these accursed Government officials, and the Government itself is as corrupt as its officials. It is a disgrace among the nations, and will be soon wiped out of existence.

We don't want any of those damned Government officials among us, and we won't have them here any longer. The measure of the iniquity of this Government is full, and we won't stand its interference with our affairs any longer. We can manage our own affairs without the assistance of this corrupt Government.—Joseph F. Smith, August 10, 1879, in a sermon in the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Mr. Tayler. Did this manifesto and the plea for amnesty affect also the continuance of cohabitation between those who had been previously married?

Mr. [Joseph F.] Smith. That is our understanding, that it did. . . .

Mr. Tayler. And did you so understand it?

Mr. Smith. I understood it so; yes, sir. . . .

Mr. Tayler. Mr. Smith, how many children have been born to your several wives since the manifesto of 1890?

Mr. Smith. I have had 11 children since 1890.

Mr. Tayler. Since 1890?

Mr. Smith. That is correct, since 1890. I said that I have had born to me 11 children since 1890, each of my wives being the mother of from 1 to 2 of those children. . . .

The Chairman. Do you obey the law in having five wives at this time, and having them bear to you eleven children since the manifesto of 1890?

Mr. Smith. Mr. Chairman, I have not claimed that in that case I have obeyed the law of the land. I do not claim so, and I have said before that I prefer to stand my chances against the law.—Extracts from "Proceedings before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States in the matter of the Protests against the Right of Honorable Reed Smoot, a Senator from the State of Utah, to hold his seat," vol. 1, pp. 106, 107, 132, 133, 196.

Our ecclesiastical government is the government of heaven and incorporates all governments in earth and hell. It is the fountain, the mainspring, the source of all light, power, and governments that ever did, or ever will exist. It circumscribes the governments of this world.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, p. 141, the utterance of Brigham Young.

BOOKS OF AUTHORITY

Mr. Tayler. What are the standards of authority in the Mormon Church?

Mr. Smith. Do you mean the books?

Mr. Tayler. Yes; the written standards.

Mr. Smith. The Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price.—Reed Smoot investigation, vol. 1, p. 85.

MARRIAGE

Celestial marriage is eternal marriage. That is, it is binding not only till death, but after death and throughout all eternity. . . .

If a wife thus sealed to her husband should precede him in that death which awaits all humanity, it would be his privilege to wed another. The second wife, or third if the second should die, would be sealed to him in the same manner as the first. . . . In the resurrection he would have three wives with their children, belonging to him in the everlasting covenant. . . . If the husband should die leaving his wife on earth it would be her privilege, if she felt so disposed, to be married under the divine authority to another man for time only, so that in the resurrection she might take her place by the side of her celestial spouse to whom she was sealed forever.

The revelation on celestial marriage declares that if given to him in the everlasting covenant in the way appointed of God, he is not under condemnation but is justified in receiving more wives than one.—Handbook of Reference, pp. 100, 101.

The principle spoken upon by Brother Pratt this morning [polygamy] we believe in. And I tell you—for I know it—it will sail over and ride triumphantly above all prejudice and priestcraft of the day; it will be fostered and believed in by the more intelligent portions of the world, as one of the best doctrines ever proclaimed to any people.—Brigham Young, Millennial Star, supplement, vol. 15, p. 31.

And again, as pertaining to the law of the priesthood: If any man espouse a virgin, and desire to espouse another, and the first give her consent, and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins, and have vowed to no other man, then is he justified; he cannot commit adultery for they are given unto him; for he cannot commit adultery with that that belongeth to him and to no one else.

And if he have ten virgins given unto him by the law, he cannot commit adultery, for they belong to him, and they are given unto him, therefore is he justified.—Doctrine and Covenants 132: 61, 62, Utah Edition.

And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation, and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 15-17, Utah Edition.

Behold David and Solomon truly had many wives and concupines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken unto the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women.—Book of Mormon, Book of Jacob, chapter 2.

TITHING

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is financially sustained by tithes and offerings. Tithing is enjoined upon all its members by divine commandment. . . . The law of tithing in its fullness requires the surplus property of members coming to Zion to be paid into the church as a consecration, and after that, one tenth of their interest, or increase, or earnings annually.—Handbook of Reference, p. 96.

ANGELS

There are two kinds of beings in heaven—viz, angels who are resurrected personages, having "bodies of flesh and bones."

For instance, Jesus said, "Handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have."

2. The spirits of just men made perfect—they who are not resurrected, but inherit the same glory.—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 1-3, Utah Edition.

THAT REQUIRED OF MEMBERSHIP

We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after those things.—Handbook of Reference, p. 94.

Verily, verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife according to my word, and they are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, according to mine appointment, and he or she shall commit any sin or transgression of the new and everlasting covenant whatever, and all manner of blasphemies, and if they commit no murder, wherein they shed innocent blood—yet they shall come forth in the first resurrection, and enter into their exaltation, but they shall be destroyed in the flesh, and shall be delivered unto the buffetings of Satan unto the day of redemption, saith the Lord God.—Doctrine and Covenants 132: 26, Utah Edition.

And again, verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife by my word, which is my law, and by the new and everlasting covenant, and it is sealed unto them by the Holy Spirit of promise, by him who is anointed, unto whom I have appointed this power, and the keys of this priesthood; and it shall be said unto them, ye shall come forth in the first resurrection; and if it be after the first resurrection, in the next resurrection; and shall inherit thrones, kingdoms, principalities, and powers, dominions, all heights and depths—then shall it be written in the Lamb's Book of Life, that he shall commit no murder whereby to shed innocent blood, and if ye abide in my covenant, and commit no murder whereby to shed innocent blood, it shall be done unto them in all things whatsoever my servant hath put upon them, in time, and through all eternity; and shall be of full force when they are out of the world, and they shall pass by the angels, and the Gods, which are set there, to their exaltation and glory in all things, as hath been sealed upon their heads, which glory shall be a fullness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever.—Doctrine and Covenants 132: 19, Utah Edition.

SIN AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST

The blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, which shall not be forgiven in the world, nor out of the world, is in that ye commit murder, wherein ye shed innocent blood, and assent unto my death, after ye have received my new and everlasting covenant, saith the Lord God; and he that abideth not this law, can in no wise enter into my glory, but shall be damned, saith the Lord.—Ibid. 132: 27.

BLOOD ATONEMENT

All mankind love themselves; and let these principles be known by an individual, and he would be glad to have his blood shed. That would be loving themselves, even unto an eternal exaltation? Will you love your brothers and sisters likewise, when they have committed a sin that cannot be atoned for without the shedding of blood? Will you love that man or woman well enough to shed their blood? That is what Jesus Christ meant. He never told a man or woman to love their enemies in their wickedness. He never intended any such thing; . . .

I could refer you to plenty of instances where men have been righteously slain in order to atone for their sins. I have seen scores and hundreds of people for whom there would have been a chance in the last resurrection if their lives had been taken and their blood spilled upon the ground as a smoking incense to the Almighty, but who are now angels to the Devil, until our elder brother, Jesus Christ, raises them up, conquers death, hell, and the grave. I have known a great many men who have left this church, for whom there is no chance whatever for exaltation; but if their blood had been spilt it would have been better for them. The wickedness and ignorance of the nations forbid this principle being in full force, but the time will come when the law of God will be in full force.

This is loving our neighbor as ourselves; if he needs help, help him; and if he wants salvation and it is necessary to spill his blood upon the ground in order that he may be saved, spill it.—Brigham Young, in Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 220. See Books and Utah Mormonism, pp. 34, 35.

On this subject Elder Charles W. Penrose has issued a pamphlet, in which is found among other items in agreement with the ones quoted the following:

In the year 1856 the authorities of the "Mormon" Church inaugurated a reformation among its members. . . . Certain gross evils being in some instances thus brought to light, the subject of atonement for deadly sin, for transgressions committed after the reception of the Holy Ghost, was forcibly elucidated by leading elders, particularly by President Young and his counselor, Jedediah M. Grant.—Page 3.

The doctrine of blood atonement is founded on the sacrifice made by our Lord Jesus Christ for the sins of the world. . . . He died to offer up a sacrifice as an atonement for the sins of all mankind; for not only did Adam sin, but all his posterity have sinned.—Pages 7 and 9.

Therefore, if Christ's blood had not been shed, each individual would have had to have his blood shed, according to Bible doctrine.—Page 13.

But there are persons who, after having been washed and made clean through the blood of Christ, and made members of his church, again commit sin. What about them? Why, if they truly repent, and make all the restitution that lays in their power, they may be forgiven, they may be cleansed again. But there are some sins that can be committed from which they cannot be cleansed by the blood of Christ.—Page 16.

What I am about to read is in the fourth volume, page 53: "There are sins which men commit for which they cannot receive forgiveness in this world, or in that which is to come, and if they had their eyes open to see their true condition, they would be perfectly willing to have their blood spilt upon the ground, that the smoke thereof might ascend to heaven as an offering for their sins; and the smoking incense would atone for their sins, whereas if such is not the case, they will stick to them in the spirit world.

"And furthermore I know that there are transgressors, who, if they knew themselves, and the only condition upon which they can obtain forgiveness, would beg of their brethren to shed their blood, that the smoke thereof might ascend to God as an offering to appease the wrath that is kindled against them, and that the law might have its course. I will say further I have had men come to me and offer their lives to atone for their sins.

"It is true that the blood of the Son of God was shed for sin through the fall and those committed by men, yet men can commit sins which it will not remit."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 53, the sayings of Brigham Young.—Pages 17 and 18.

Brigham Young understood it perfectly. He says there are some sins men may commit for which they cannot get forgiveness, for which they will have to suffer the penalty in the world to come, but if their blood is shed as an offering for their sin, their spirits might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus; . . . —Page 23.

Elder Jedediah M. Grant, counselor to Brigham Young, says:

"I say that there are men and women that I would advise to go to the president immediately, and ask him to appoint a committee to attend to their case; and then let a place be selected, and let that committee shed their blood."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 51.—Page 31.

What kind of folks was he talking about? Let us see. "Some have received the priesthood, a knowledge of the things of God, and they dishonor the cause of truth, commit adultery and every other abomination beneath the heavens, and then meet you here or on the street and deny it."—Journal of Discourses; vol. 4, p. 51.

These are the kind of people he was talking about. Brother Grant expressed in his strong language his feelings in regard to these transgressors. He felt that they were worthy of death; and that the only chance for them was to have their blood shed.—Page 32.

This people claim that God has a body of flesh and bones "as tangible as man's; the Son also; but the Holy Ghost has not a body of flesh and bones, but is a personage or Spirit." (Doctrine and Covenants 130: 22, Utah Edition.) They also believe that "In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees; and in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this order of the priesthood; (meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage;) and if he does not, he cannot obtain it." (Ibid 131: 1-3.)

They claim as a membership between 300,000 and 400,000, and have local organizations in nearly all the States of the United States, and also in many foreign countries.

They have a large number of missionaries actively proselyting, most of whom are young men. These very seldom mention their belief in the Adam-god theory, plural marriage, or blood atonement, but present what they term the first principles of the doctrine of Jesus Christ, and gather their evidences from the Bible and Book of Mormon; the latter of which they profess to believe in, and distribute a large number of them.

They are believers in the soon coming of Jesus Christ to reign personally on the earth; that we are living in what is termed in the word of God as "the latter day"; and that the Jews will soon be gathered back to Jerusalem.

The place they call Zion is in Salt Lake City, Utah, where the largest of their temples is erected, and where is located the leading officials of the church, known as the presidency, the twelve, and the presidency of the seventy, with the patriarchs.

While as will appear from what has been quoted from their own works, they teach many things that are contrary to what is generally termed virtue, and righteousness, yet there have been many false reports scattered by those whose principal stock in trade is that of prejudice, and books have been written which contain much that is spurious. This people have the right as well as all other religions to represent their own faith.

[Note: This is the concluding installment of a series published at intervals on the faith and origin of churches.—EDITORS.]

As the face reveals the soul, so Nature reveals God, by thought, by sympathy, by intuition, not by mechanical processes. And as spirit speaks to spirit so God speaks to our hearts.—Elwood Worcester, in Religion and Life.

Life, given to us by the Almighty, is not what God makes it, it is what we make it. I have heard some sermons preached on preexistence; I have read some philosophy on preexistence, but without being afraid of heresy this morning, I will say that I do not believe God makes "me"—"I make myself." The only thing that can survive is character. Everything else must go, whether it shall be wealth, or property, or estate, or even life, so far as this world is concerned; these are all transient, all evanescent, and but the frailest of dreams. The real thing is personality, and personality is what I make it; and I articulate personality in character, and that is what God recognizes, and in which eternal destiny is realized.—John W. Rushton.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

MANUSCRIPT OF SOLOMON SPAULDING AND THE BOOK OF MORMON

The accepted theory of the origin of the "Book of Mormon" connects it with a manuscript written by Solomon Spaulding, purporting to set forth the origin and civilization of the American Indians, and to account for the ancient mounds and earthworks and other remains of the ancient inhabitants which are scattered over the land.

The first publication of this idea seems to have been made by the late E. D. Howe, of Painesville, in a volume published by himself at Painesville in 1834, and entitled Mormonism Unveiled. He, with an associate, D. P. Hurlbut, of Conneaut, seems to have been the first to gather evidence on the subject from the original sources; and most later writers on Mormonism have depended essentially upon the material furnished by him. The theory of the connection of the "Book of Mormon" with Spaulding's manuscript has become traditional, and has found its way into all anti-Mormon literature and into the general cyclopedias, such as the Brittanica, Chambers', Appleton's, McClintock and Strong's, and probably others. Professor George P. Fisher, in his work on general history, just published, adopts the theory.

The question whether or not the "Book of Mormon" is based upon a manuscript of Spaulding is intrinsically of little importance. It required only a very moderate degree of literary ability and invention to produce the book, and several of the original leaders of the fanaticism must have been adequate to the work. It is, perhaps, impossible at this day to prove or disprove the Spaulding theory.

The unquestionable facts bearing on the case are as follows:

Solomon Spaulding was born in Connecticut in 1761; graduated at Dartmouth College in 1785, was ordained to the ministry, and preached in New England a few years, taught an academy for a time in Cherry Valley, New York, or carried on mercantile business there and failed, and in 1809 removed to New Salem, now Conneaut, in Ohio, where in company with one Henry Lake he established an iron foundry. His business not prospering, he removed to Pittsburgh, or its vicinity, in 1812, and a year or two later, to Amity, Pennsylvania, where he died in 1816 at the age of fifty-five years. Spaulding had a literary tendency, and while living at Conneaut, he entertained himself with writing a story which purported to be an account of the original inhabitants of the country, their habits, customs and civilization, their migrations and their conflicts. From time to time, as his work went on, he would call in his neighbors and read to them portions of his manuscript, so that they became familiar with his undertaking. He talked with some of them about publishing his book, in the hope of retrieving his fortunes financially; and this appears to have been his purpose when he removed to Pittsburgh. There is evidence that he conferred with a printer, at Pittsburgh, by the name of Patterson, in reference to the publication, but the book never appeared.

Soon after the publication of the Mormon book in 1830, Mormon preachers appeared in considerable numbers in Northern Ohio, and attracted much attention in the neighborhood at Conneaut. At some of their gatherings where the new Bible was read, persons were present who had heard the Spaulding manuscript, and were struck with the resemblance between the two. Thus the opinion arose and was propagated that the Mormon book was written by Solomon Spaulding. The fact that it obtained a foothold there affords a presumption in favor of the idea, and the testimony of parties on the ground, if fully trustworthy, established the fact beyond question. These testimonies were gathered in 1833, apparently with reference to their publication in Howe's book. As these are the entire basis of the theory, I will give from the book the essential portions of them found on pages 278-87. The first is from the testimony of John Spaulding, the brother of Solomon:

In 1810 I removed to Ohio and found him (Solomon) engaged in building a forge. I made him a visit about three years after, and found that he had failed, and considerably involved in debt. He then told me he had been writing a book, which he intended to have printed, the avails of which he thought would enable him to pay all his debt. The book was entitled The Manuscript Found, of which he read to me many passages. It was an historical romance of the first settlers of America, endeavoring to show that the American Indians are the descendants of the Jews, or the lost tribes. It gave a detailed account of their journey from Jerusalem, by land and sea, till they arrived in America, under the command of Nephi and Lehi. They afterwards had quarrels and contentions, and separated into two distinct nations, one of which he denominated Nephites and the other Lamanites. Cruel and bloody wars ensued, in which great multitudes were slain. They buried their dead in large heaps, which caused the mounds so common in this country. Their arts, sciences, and civilization were brought into view, in order to account for all the curious antiquities found in various parts of North and South America. I have recently read the "Book of Mormon," and to my great surprise, I find nearly the same historical matter, names, etc., as they were in my brother's writings. I well remember that he wrote in the old style, and commenced about every sentence with "and it came to pass," or "now it came to pass," the same as in the "Book of Mormon," and according to the best of my recollections and belief, it is the same as my brother Solomon wrote, with the exception of the religious matter. By what means it has fallen into the hands of Joseph Smith, jr., I am unable to determine.

JOHN SPAULDING.

Testimony of Martha, wife of John:

... The lapse of time which has intervened, prevents my recollecting but few of the leading incidents of his writings, but the names of Nephi and Lehi are yet fresh in my memory, as being the principal heroes of his tale. . . . I have read the "Book of Mormon," which has brought fresh to my recollection the writing of Solomon Spaulding; and I have no manner of doubt that the historical part of it is the same that I read and heard read more than twenty years ago. The old obsolete style, and the phrases "and it came to pass," etc., are the same.

MARTHA SPAULDING.

Testimony of Henry Lake, partner of S. Spaulding, Conneaut, September, 1833:

He (Spaulding) very frequently read to me from a manuscript which he was writing, which he entitled The Manuscript Found, and which he represented as being found in this town. I spent many hours in hearing him read said writings, and became well acquainted with its contents. . . . This book represented the American Indians as the descendants of the lost tribes, gave an account of their leaving Jerusalem, their contentions and wars which were many and great. One time, when he was reading to me the tragic account of Laban, I pointed out to him what I considered an inconsistency which he promised to correct, but by referring to the "Book of Mormon," I find that it stands there just as he read it to me then. Some months ago I borrowed the "Golden Bible," put it into my pocket, carried it home and thought no more of it. About a week after, my wife found the book in my coat pocket as it hung up, and commenced reading aloud as I lay upon the bed. She had not read twenty minutes till I was astonished to find the same passages in it that Spaulding had read to me more than twenty years before from his "Manuscript Found." I well recollect telling Mr. Spaulding that the so frequent use of the words "and it came to pass," "now it came to pass," rendered it ridiculous.

HENRY LAKE.

Testimony of Miller, an employee of Spaulding, Springfield, Pennsylvania, September, 1833:

... While there I lodged in the family of Spaulding for several months. I was soon introduced to the manuscripts of Spaulding, and perused them as often as I had leisure. He had written two or three books or pamphlets on different subjects, but that which more particularly attracted my attention was one which he called the "Manuscript Found." From this he would frequently read some humorous passages to the company present. It purported to be the history of the first settlement of America before discovered by Columbus. He brought them off from Jerusalem under their leaders, detailing their travels by land and water, their manners, customs, laws, wars, etc. . . . I have recently examined the "Book of Mormon," and find in it the writings of Solomon Spaulding, from beginning to end, but mixed up with Scripture and other religious matter which I did not meet with in the "Manuscript Found." Many of the passages in the "Mormon Book" are verbatim from Spaulding, and others in part. The names of Nephi, Lehi, Moroni, and in fact all the principal names are brought fresh to my recollection by the "Gold Bible."

JOHN N. MILLER.

Testimony of a neighbor, Aaron Wright:

When at his house one day he showed and read to me a history he was writing of the lost tribes of Israel, purporting that they were the first settlers in America, and that the Indians were their descendants. . . . He traced their journey from Jerusalem to America, as it is given in the "Book of Mormon," excepting the religious matter. The historical part of the "Book of Mormon" I know to be the same as I read and heard read from the writings of Spaulding more than twenty years ago; the names more especially, are the same without any alteration. . . . In conclusion I will observe that the names of, and most of the historical part of the "Book of Mormon," were as familiar to me before I read it as most modern history. . . .

AARON WRIGHT.

Testimony of O. Smith, a neighbor, with whom Spaulding boarded:

... During the time he was at my house I read and heard read one hundred pages or more. Nephi and Lehi were by him represented as leading characters when they first started for America. Their main object was to escape the judgments which they supposed were coming upon the old world; but no religious matter was introduced, as I now recollect. . . . This was the last I heard of Spaulding or his book until the "Book of Mormon" came into the neighborhood. When I heard the historical part of it related, I at once said it was the writings of old Solomon Spaulding. Soon after, I obtained the book, and on reading it I found much of it the same as Spaulding had written more than twenty years before.

OLIVER SMITH.

Testimony of Nahum Howard. Conneaut, August, 1883 [1833]:

I first became acquainted with Solomon Spaulding in December, 1810. After that I frequently saw him at his house and also at my house. I once, in conversation with him, expressed a surprise at not having any account of the inhabitants once in this country who erected the old forts, mounds, etc. He then told me that he was writing a history of that race of people; and afterwards frequently showed me his writings, which I read. I have lately read the "Book of Mormon," and believe it to be the same as Spaulding wrote except the religious part.

NAHUM HOWARD.

Statement of Artemus Cunningham:

... Before showing me his manuscripts he went into a verbal relation of its outlines, saying that it was a fabulous or romantic history of the first settlement of this country, and as it purported to have been a record found buried in the earth, or in a cave, he had adopted the ancient or Scripture style of writing. He then presented his manuscripts, when we sat down and spent a good share of the night in reading and conversing upon them. I well remember the name of Nephi, which appeared to be the principal hero of the story. The frequent repetition of the phrase, "I, Nephi," I recollect as distinctly as though it was yesterday, although the general features of the story have passed from my memory through the lapse of twenty-two years. . . . The Mormon bible I have partially examined, and am fully of the opinion that Solomon Spaulding had written its outlines before he left Conneaut.

This testimony of Cunningham is without his signature, but is called his statement.

Of these eight witnesses, five distinctly state that the religious matter in the "Book of Mormon" was not contained in Spaulding's manuscript. The others state that the historical part of the "Book of Mormon" is the same as of Spaulding's "Manuscript Found."

Mr. Howe inquired of Mr. Patterson, the printer, at Pittsburgh, with whom it was represented that Spaulding conferred in reference to the publication of his manuscript, but Patterson had, at that time, no recollection of the subject, but in 1842, some eight years after the publication of Howe's book, Mr. Patterson signed a statement certifying that a gentleman had put into the hands of the foreman of his printing office, "a manuscript of a singular work, chiefly in the style of our English translation of the Bible," that he (Patterson) read a few pages of it, but as the author could not furnish the means, the manuscript was not printed.

Mr. Howe sent a messenger, D. P. Hurlbut of Connecticut, to the widow of Solomon Spaulding (Mrs. Davison by a second marriage), who was then living with her daughter in Monson, Massachusetts, to ascertain further about the manuscript and to procure it if it were still within reach. Mrs. Davison stated that her husband had a variety of manuscripts, one of which was entitled the "Manuscript Found," but of its contents she had no distinct remembrance; she thought it was once taken to Patterson's printing office in Pittsburgh, and whether it was ever returned to the house again she was quite uncertain. If it was returned, it must be with other manuscripts in a trunk which she left in Otsego County, New York.

This was all that Mrs. D. knew of the manuscript in 1834, when Howe published his book; but in 1839, five years later, a statement was published in the Boston Recorder under her signature, in which she describes the manuscript very fully, states very definitely that Mr. Patterson took the manuscript, kept it a long time, was greatly pleased with it, and promised to publish it if Mr. Spaulding would make out a title-page and preface, which Mr. S. refused to do. She further states that at her husband's death, the manuscript came into her possession and was carefully preserved. This seems to be a great enlargement of memory or of knowledge since 1834, and it is difficult to read the extended and elaborate statement without reaching the conclusion that Mrs. Spaulding-Davison had very little to do with it. Reverend Robert Patterson, son of Reverend Robert Patterson, the printer, now editor of the Presbyterian Banner of Pittsburgh, published some years since a paper on this question, and in quoting a paragraph from this statement of Mrs. Spaulding-Davison, he says that it was made to Reverend D. R. Austin of Monson, Massachusetts, written down by him and published in the Boston Recorder.

Mr. Hurlbut, on his visit to Mrs. Davison, obtained from her permission to examine the old hair trunk at her cousin's in Hartwick, New York, in which the manuscript, if in existence, was to be found, and to carry it to Mr. Howe for comparison with the "Book of Mormon." He found but one manuscript, and this he delivered to Mr. Howe who describes it briefly, but somewhat inaccurately in his book, page 288.

The manuscript, lost sight of since the date of Howe's book, came to light at Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, a year ago last August, in the possession of Mr. L. L. Rice, formerly State printer at Columbus, Ohio. I had asked Mr. Rice, who was an anti-slavery editor in Ohio many years ago, to examine his old pamphlets and papers and see what contributions he could make to the anti-slavery literature of the Oberlin College library. After a few days he brought out an old manuscript with the following certificate on a blank page:

The writings of Solomon Spaulding, proved by Aaron Wright, Oliver Smith, John N. Miller and others. The testimonies of the above gentlemen are now in my possession.

D. P. HURLBUT.

The three men named are of the eight witnesses brought forward by Howe. This manuscript is now in my possession, and it is at hand this evening. The manuscript proves its own antiquity. It is soiled and worn and discolored with age. It consists of about one hundred and seventy pages, small quarto, unruled, and for the most part closely written—not far from forty-five thousand words. It has been printed by the Josephite Mormons of Lamoni, Iowa, from a copy of the manuscript taken since it came into my possession. As thus printed it makes one hundred and thirty-two pages of three hundred and twenty words each—equal to about one sixth part of the "Book of Mormon." No date attaches to the manuscript proper, but on a blank page there is a fragment of a letter containing the date, January, 1812. Mr. Rice probably came into possession of the manuscript in 1839, when he succeeded Mr. Howe in the printing office at Painesville, but he has no recollection of ever having seen the manuscript until it came to his notice in Honolulu.

The manuscript has no resemblance to the "Book of Mormon," except in some very general features. There is not a name or an incident common to the two. It is not written in the solemn Scripture style. It is a story of the coming to this country, from Rome, of a ship's company, driven by a storm across the ocean, in the days of the Emperor Constantine. They never returned to their own land, but cast in their lot with the aboriginal tribes inhabiting the country; and it is chiefly occupied with an account of the civilization and conflicts of these tribes—the Delawares, Ohions, Kentucks, Sciotons, Chiaugans, etc., etc. The names of persons are entirely original, quite as remarkable as those in the "Book of Mormon," but never the same—such as Bombal, Kado-cam, Lobaska, Hamboon, Ulipoon, Lamesa, etc. The introduction expresses the purpose or motive of the author in its composition, and is as follows—orthography uncorrected, and a few words lost by the crumbling of the manuscript:

Near the west bank of the Conneaught river there are the remains of an ancient fort. As I was walking and forming various conjectures respecting the character, situation and numbers of those people who far exceed the present Indians in works of art and ingenuity, I happened to tread on a flat stone. This was at a small distance from the fort, and it lay on the top of a small mound of earth, exactly horizontal. The face of it had a singular appearance. I discovered a number of characters, which appeared to me to be letters, but so much effaced by the ravages of time, that I could not read the inscription. With the assistance of a leaver I raised the stone; but you may easily conjecture my astonishment when I discovered that its ends and sides rested on stones, and that it was designed as a cover to an artificial cave. I found by examining that its sides were lined with stones built in a conical form, with . . . down, and that it was about 8 feet deep. Determined to investigate the design of this extraordinary work of antiquity, I prepared myself with the necessary requisites for that purpose, and descended to the bottom of the cave. Observing one side to be perpendicular nearly three feet from the bottom, I began to inspect that part with accuracy. Here I noticed a big flat stone fixed in the form of a door. I immediately tore it down, and lo! a cavity within the wall presented itself, it being about three feet in diameter from side to side, and about two feet high. Within the cavity I found an earthen box, with a cover which shut it perfectly tight. The box was two feet in length, one and half in breadth, and one and three inches in diameter. My mind, filled with awful sensations which crowded fast upon me, would hardly permit my hands to remove this venerable deposit; but curiosity soon gained the ascendance; the box was taken and raised to open. When I had removed the cover I found that it contained twenty-eight . . . of parchment, and that when . . . appeared to be manuscripts written in elegant hand, with Roman letters and in the Latin language. They were written on a variety of subjects, but the roll which principally attracted my attention contained a history of the author's life and that part of America which extends along the great lakes and the waters of the Mississippi.

Solomon Spaulding's attitude toward the sacred Scriptures and Christianity is brought to light by a record, apparently a copy of a letter, on two loose leaves found in connection with the manuscript, written on paper of the same quality, and in the same handwriting; the statement is without beginning or end, but the substantial part remains, as follows:

But having every reason to place the highest confidence in your friendship and prudence, I have no reluctance in complying with your request in giving you my sentiments on the Christian religion, and so far from considering the freedom you take in making the request, impertinence, I view it as a mark of your affectionate solicitude for my happiness. In giving you my sentiments of the Christian religion, you will perceive that I do not believe certain facts and certain propositions to be true, merely because my ancestors believed them and because they are popular. In forming my creed I bring everything to the standard of reason. This is an unerring and sure guide in all matters of faith and practice. Having divested myself, therefore, of traditional and vulgar prejudice, and submitting to the guidance of reason, it is impossible for me to have the same sentiments of the Christian religion which its advocates consider as orthodox. It is in my view a mass of contradictions, and an heterogeneous mixture of wisdom and folly, nor can I find any clear and incontrovertible evidence of its being a revelation from an infinitely benevolent and wise God. It is true that I have never had the leisure nor patience to read every part of it with critical attention, or to study the metaphysical jargon of divines in its vindication. It is enough for me to know that propositions which are in contradiction to each other cannot both be true, and that doctrines and facts which represent the Supreme Being as a barbarous and cruel tyrant, can never be dictated by infinite wisdom. Whatever the clergy say on the contrary can have no effect in altering my sentiments. I know as well as they that two and two make four, and that the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right angles. But, notwithstanding, I disavow any belief in the divinity of the Bible, and consider it a mere human production, designed to enrich and aggrandize its authors and enable them to manage the multitude; yet casting aside a considerable mass of rubbish and fanatical rant, I find that it contains a system of ethics or morals which cannot be excelled on account of their tendency to ameliorate the condition of man, to promote individual, social and public happiness, and that in various instances it represents the Almighty as possessing attributes worthy of a transcendent character; having a view, therefore, to those parts of the Bible which are truly good and excellent and sometimes speak of it in times of high commendation, and indeed, I am inclined to believe that, notwithstanding the mischiefs and injuries which have been produced by the bigoted zeal of fanatics and interested priests, yet that these evils are more than counterbalanced in a Christian land by the benefits which result to the great mass of the people by their believing that the Bible is of divine origin, and that it contains a revelation from God. Such being my view of the subject, I make no exertions to dissipate their happy delusion.

The only important question connected with this manuscript is, what light, if any, does it throw on the origin of the "Book of Mormon"? This manuscript clearly was not the basis of the book. Was there another manuscript, which Spaulding was accustomed to read to his neighbors, out of which the "Book of Mormon" grew, under the hand of Sidney Rigdon or Joseph Smith, or both? If we could accept without misgiving the testimony of the eight witnesses, brought forward in Howe's book, we should be obliged to accept the fact of another manuscript. We are to remember that twenty-two years or more had elapsed since they had heard the manuscript read; and before they began to recall their remembrances they had read, or heard the "Book of Mormon," and also the suggestion that the book had its origin in the manuscript of Spaulding. What effect these things had upon the exactness of their memory is matter of doubt. No one was present to cross-question, and Hurlbut and Howe were intent upon finding the testimony to support their theory.

In its more general features the present manuscript fulfills the requirements of the "Manuscript Found." It purports to have been taken from an artificial cave in a mound, and thus was naturally called the "Manuscript Found." It sets forth the coming of a colony from the Eastern Continent, and is an account of the aboriginal inhabitants of the country, suggested by the mounds and earthworks in the vicinity of the author, and was written to explain the origin of these works. This purpose it pursues with a directness not found in the "Book of Mormon." These general features would naturally bring it to remembrance, on reading the account of the finding of the plates of the "Book of Mormon."

Of the eight witnesses brought forward by Howe, five are careful to except the "religious matter" of the "Book of Mormon," as not contained in the manuscript of Spaulding, and the theory is that this matter was interpolated by Sidney Rigdon, or some other man who expanded the manuscript into the book. This strikes me as an important circumstance. The "Book of Mormon" is permeated in every page and paragraph with religious and Scriptural ideas. It is first and foremost a religious book, and the contrast between it and the supposed manuscript must have been very striking to have led five of these witnesses to call this difference to mind and mention it, after the lapse of twenty years and more. The other three witnesses are careful to say that the "Book of Mormon," in its "historical parts," is derived from the Spaulding manuscript, thus implying the same exception expressed by the others. Now it is difficult—almost impossible, to believe that the religious sentiments of the "Book of Mormon" were wrought into interpolation. They are of the original tissue and substance of the document, and a man as self-reliant and smart as Sidney Rigdon, with a superabundant gift of tongue and every form of utterance, would never have accepted the servile task. There could have been no motive to it, nor could the blundering syntax of the "Book of Mormon" have come from Rigdon's hand. He had a gift of speech which would have made the style distasteful and impossible to him.

The minuter features of the testimony of these witnesses are obviously of more weight in their bearing upon the probability of another manuscript. When they speak of the Scripture style of the manuscript, the frequent recurrence of the expression, "and it came to pass," the names recalled, "Nephi," "Lehi," and others, the remembrance seems too definite to be called in question. But it must be remembered that the "Book of Mormon" was fresh in their minds, and their recollections of the Manuscript Found were very remote and dim. That under the pressure and suggestion of Hurlbut and Howe, they should put the ideas at hand in place of those remote and forgotten, and imagine that they remembered what they had recently read, would be only an ordinary example of the frailty of memory, and it would not be unnatural or improbable that such an illusion should be propagated among Spaulding's old neighbors at Conneaut. This view must, of course, be purely hypothetical, and could have little force against the positive testimony.

There has been an attempt to support the testimony of these Conneaut witnesses by following the manuscript through Patterson's office, at Pittsburgh, to the hands of Sidney Rigdon. This theory is sustained by abundance of conjecture, but by very little positive evidence. It has come to be a tradition that Rigdon was a printer in Patterson's office when Spaulding went to Pittsburgh, and thus became acquainted with the manuscript, either stole it or copied it, and after brooding over it fifteen years brought out the Mormon Bible. This would be interesting if true; but there seems no ground to dispute the positive testimony of Rigdon's brothers that he was never a printer, and never lived in Pittsburgh at all until 1822, eight years after Spaulding left, and then was there as pastor of a Baptist church.

Rigdon sent from Nauvoo, in 1839, to the Boston Journal, an indignant denial of the statement of Mrs. Spaulding-Davison, already referred to. A sentence or two from this denial will be sufficient:

It is only necessary to say, in relation to the whole story about Spaulding's writings being in the hands of Mr. Patterson, who was at Pittsburgh, and who is said to have kept a printing office, etc., etc., is the most base of lies, without even the shadow of truth. . . . If I were to say that I ever heard of the Reverend Solomon Spaulding and his hopeful wife until D. P. Hurlbut wrote his lie about me, I should be a liar like unto themselves.

The claim in reference to Rigdon's connection with the Spaulding manuscript seems to become more and more definite with every new statement of the case, and without any addition to the evidence. Mrs. Ellen E. Dickinson, a grandniece of Mrs. Solomon Spaulding, in her New Light on Mormonism, recently published, finds it easy to put imaginings in the place of facts, in her statements in reference to Rigdon, as follows:

At an early age he was a printer by trade, and is known to have been in Conneaut, Ohio, at the time Spaulding read his "Manuscript Found" to his neighbors, . . . and it is easy to believe the report that he followed or preceded Spaulding to Pittsburgh, knowing all his plans, in order to obtain his manuscript, or copy it, while it was in Patterson's printing house—an easy thing to do, as the fact of the manuscript being left carelessly in the office for months, is not questionable.—Page 47.

Over against these fancies are the facts given in the testimony of Rigdon's brothers, published by Reverend Robert Patterson, of Pittsburgh, that when Spaulding was reading his manuscript to his neighbors in Conneaut, Rigdon was a boy seventeen or eighteen years of age, on his father's farm in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania; that he never was a printer, and did not live in Pittsburgh until 1822, six years after Spaulding's death.

Another example of the increasing definiteness of the tradition may be found in a volume just published at Cincinnati, giving an account of the various religious sects. Speaking of the "Book of Mormon," the writer says: "Rigdon, who afterwards became Smith's right-hand man, is known to have copied this (Spaulding's) manuscript. A comparison of the 'Book of Mormon' with the original manuscript of this novel, satisfies all, except professing Mormons, that the Mormon bible is simply the old novel revised and corrected by Smith and Rigdon."—An illustration of the facility with which a shadowy tradition becomes definite history.

It does not appear that Smith and Rigdon had any acquaintance with each other until after the publication of the Mormon book. In Howe's book we have a full account of Rigdon's conversion to Mormonism at Mentor, in the autumn of 1830, when Parley P. Pratt introduced to him two Mormon missionaries from Palmyra, New York. In a pamphlet published by Pratt, in 1838, he gives a similar account of Rigdon's conversion and states positively that Smith and Rigdon never saw each other until early in 1831. So far as I am aware, there is nothing to disprove this statement.

A somewhat prevalent theory, which Mrs. Dickinson maintains, is that Hurlbut took two manuscripts from the old trunk in Hartwick, New York—one the genuine "Manuscript Found," which he treacherously sold to the Mormons, the other which he delivered to Howe, and which is present this evening. Of this there seems to be no proof. Howe intimates no such thing in his book. It is true that Mrs. Dickinson reports an interview of her own with Howe, in 1830, in which he expresses the opinion that Hurlbut had two manuscripts, one of which he sold to the Mormons, but in the appendix to her book (page 259) she publishes a letter from Howe to Hurlbut, written two or three months before the interview, in which he disclaims any such suspicion.

There are those who claim to know that the last manuscript is still in existence, and will be brought to light at some future day. It would not seem unreasonable to suspend judgment in the case until the new light shall come. Professor Whitsitt, of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky, has given much attention to the internal structure of the "Book of Mormon," and is about to publish a life of Sidney Rigdon in which he will maintain, and expects to prove, that Rigdon is responsible for the "Book of Mormon," and that he had Spaulding's manuscript as the basis of his work.—James H. Fairchild, in Western Reserve Historical Society, vol. 3, pp. 185-200, Tract No. 77, March 23, 1886.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

The Old-Fashioned Preacher

- Say, what has become of the preacher,
The preacher, old-fashioned and plain, (2 Nephi 13: 4.)
Who stood with his "hands in his pockets,"
Yet made the great message so plain?
Whose words of conviction and power, (Acts 7: 54.)
Inspired by the Spirit of truth, (John 14: 16, 17.)
Went straight to the hearts of his hearers, (Acts 2: 37.)
Converting both aged and youth? (Acts 2: 41.)
- The man with the Scriptures committed, (2 Timothy 3: 15.)
Who quoted Isaiah or Paul,
When asked to define his position (Acts 26: 1-23.)
Concerning a minister's "call"? (Romans 10: 14-16.)
Who knew where to find what he wanted
To prove his position was right,
When some one attempted to argue,
Or questioned the source of his light?
- Somehow in the present transition,
When changes are wrought over night,
The preacher who "spoke by the Spirit"
Has suddenly vanished from sight.
No longer his manner, once welcome
To those who were thirsting for truth,
Is pleasing to popular fancy.
His actions and speech are uncouth.
- To-day there is nearly a riot
As in our mad scramble and haste
We seek some new-fangled creation (Matthew 15: 9.)
Approved by the popular taste. (Acts 17: 21.)
The world with its many inventions (Ecclesiastes 7: 29.)
Our "narrow" pretensions deride, (1 Nephi 2: 75-83.)
And we to "improve" (?) our condition
Are drifting along with the tide. (Moroni 4: 47-51.)
- It's drink of psychology freely
By authors of fame, if you'd teach; (2 Nephi 6: 57-60.)
And feast upon late homiletics
By other D. D's., if you'd preach. (2 Nephi 11: 90, 91.)
For surely those men of great learning,
Who stand at the head of them all,
Are better equipped to instruct us
Than preachers like Nephi and Paul.

But why did the Savior, when choosing

His servants for labors so great, (D. and C. 4: 1.)

Not go to the places of learning (Mark 1: 16-20.)

For men with attainments to date? (Isaiah 29: 14.)

Why choose men like Matthew and Peter, (D. and C. 1: 4.)

Whose manners were rude and uncouth? (Acts 4: 13.)

Had not the learned men of refinement (1 Corinthians 1: 26-29.)

Advantage for preaching the truth? (Job 32: 9.)

We may with a modern equipment

Our frenzied ambitions enhance;

And, meeting the popular favor,

Attract some attention, perchance. (John 15: 18, 19.)

But we of the Lord are admonished— (Isaiah 55: 8, 9.)

And oft does the Spirit remind— (D. and C. 102: 2.)

That weapons of carnal invention (Romans 8: 5-8.)

Approval of God will ne'er find. (1 Corinthians 3: 19.)

Oh, give me the preacher, old-fashioned,

Whose message, aflame from the start, (John 16: 13.)

Enkindled a fire on the altar

Of every unprejudiced heart. (Acts 16: 14.)

I care not how awkward his gestures;

His English may not be the best;

But if he is "led by the Spirit" (Luke 21: 15.)

He'll stand when it comes to the test. (Acts 6: 10.)

Dietetics

Dietetics is a science, and not a matter of guesswork. Properties and values of food have been the subjects of as careful research and study as have qualities of soils and ores. In the laboratory has been determined the exact conclusions regarding food, this research and observation having solved many questions pertaining to the adaptation of food-stuffs to the human body, both in its normal and its diseased states.

Even for one in health, it is often a difficult matter to select the proper food in the many and varied dishes which appear upon the bill of fare at ordinary hotels, restaurants, cafeteras, or boarding houses. Indeed, often the average home table is more conducive to the development of disease than health, through ignorance or indifference upon the part of the one who prepares its food. Dishes are usually concocted to please the palate without reference to the gastric capabilities or tissue needs of the one who is to eat.

It is helpful to know that each food generates its own gastric juice. Parlow has shown that each natural food has subtle elements which act directly upon the nerves with which they come in contact in such a way as to cause the digestive glands to secrete fluids exactly adapted to the digestion of that particular food. This action is due, in part, to the flavoring substance of the food, and in part to a little known substance termed "peptogens." The gastric juice produced by foodstuff varies. Milk produces the least active digestive fluids. Meat produces a strongly acid digestive fluid. Bread produces, during a long period, a moderately acid, but powerfully digestive gastric juice. For an invalid the gastric juice cannot be adapted in a high degree to the digestion of several different kinds of foodstuffs at the same time.

There are four dietetic principles which are fundamental. The first is simplicity. Rich and complicated dietetic mixtures are always more or less indigestible. Rich cake invariably overtaxes the digestive machine, while almost the weakest stomach could digest all the various ingredients of that cake if taken separately and eaten at different meals. This same principle demands the eating of only a few varieties of food at the same meal. Care should be taken, however, to avoid eating the same things meal after meal. One should vary in order to stimulate the appetite.

Another principle which is fundamental, is that the food should be appetizing. While the first demands that it should be prepared with simplicity, yet it should be with a nicety that will invite enjoyment, which is an active element in digestion. Food should be palatable, so that all but a perverted taste can relish it. The body is the medium through which the mind and soul are developed and nourished, which has also to do with the building up of character. That its purpose thus to secure the highest development of body, mind, and soul may be best served, God has put a flavor into every food, as he has put a fragrance into every flower. He is pleased when his children recognize his thought for them, and when they enjoy the good things of life. Good music, beauty in all its many and varied forms, life at its best, are all pleasing to him. Thus it becomes good religion to "eat that which is good." Good taste means good gastric juice, which means good digestion.

It is not enough, however, that food should be prepared with simplicity and good taste, but it must also be nourishing, which is the third fundamental principle in the study of dietetics. A diet should not be lacking in the proper elements of nutrition. Our tables should be spread with that food which will give proper nourishment to the body, and that in abundance. Do not discard an article of food unless you can correctly substitute another with similar elements which may be necessary for your body.

Our diet, in addition to being simple, appetizing, and nourishing, should also be wholesome. It is impossible to build up healthy, strong, robust men and women if they persist daily in eating unwholesome foods, or even good foods in an unwholesome manner. We should condense our health knowledge unto health principles, and consider them, as all true principles are, priceless treasures. A principle is of universal application, and we can feel safe in measuring up our food menus by them, if once we have proven their truth. The necessity for fresh air, for instance, is a health principle, for it is of universal application. Do not make the mistake, however, of thinking that specialized or individualized tastes or adaptabilities are always in the nature of health principles. One man may discover that the wearing of linen next to his skin does him good; he should not, for that reason alone, conclude or insist that everybody should wear linen, regardless of environment or condition. That would be the exalting of a health idea of limited application to the dignity of a principle.

It is more important to us to understand health principles than to receive simply health instruction, for when we possess the former, we can make individual application without error. While there are thousands of health facts, there are but few health principles. Many people have much information, but after all, use but few principles. All human knowledge can be condensed into a few fundamental laws, and the health domain is no exception. The gospel of Jesus Christ, and his love for God and man, is of universal application; so are the fundamental principles of life, of social intercourse, of health, and happiness; and, to those who study and seek to understand them, they are unfailing sources of strength and satisfaction.

Let us now come from the realm of the abstract to a few concrete applications of our four principles of health. There are some suspicious articles of diet that are very commonly used, and perhaps in them we shall find a cause for the vast amount of chronic diseases which are among us. The enormous increase of Bright's disease, rheumatism, apoplexy, nervous prostration, cancer (at present, the most prevailing disease known), and other similar human afflictions, may be traced to dietetic indiscretions. Let us use, in our investigation, our four principles as the court before which various food habits are tried, asking, in each instance, Is it simple? Is it appetizing? Is it nourishing? Is it wholesome?

First of all, let us consider flesh foods. They can safely pass the first test, for usually they are simple in form. They are appetizing, thus they pass the second guard. They are said to contain, pound for pound, much less nourishment than bread and many other ordinary articles of diet, yet they do have something like twenty to twenty-five per cent of nutriment. So they pass the third censor of our health. But when weighed in the balance of the fourth principle we find flesh foods wanting, for they are decidedly unwholesome. From the first dawn of reason, the human mind should become informed upon the physical structure of the body, so that by a study of its organism and functioning, we may correct what is wrong in habit, and thus avoid the sure result of disease and suffering, which makes life such a burden to the wrongdoer. When vital functions have been deranged by a violation of the laws of nature, it is by a great effort the body is able to free itself from the conditions which ensue. If the purpose of our food is to secure the highest development possible for our bodies, our minds, and therefore, our souls, we should seek to use all the laws of nature intelligently, that good and righteousness may prevail. First of all, the tendency of the use of flesh foods is to animalize the human, and to rob men and women of that fine spiritual perception which causes them to love and sympathize with their fellow men. It also tends to give the lower passions ascendancy, and the control of our being is taken from our highest and best impulses. Thus we condemn flesh food, and find that a vegetable diet, supplemented by the addition of milk, cheese, butter fats, and eggs, has a great advantage over that which lowers our spiritual status. Besides this vegetable diet alkalizes the blood, accelerates oxidation, and diminishes the nitrogenous losses and toxins, and besides making us more peaceful and less violent beings, fortifies us more strongly against the inroads of many chronic diseases directly caused by a meat diet. If ever flesh food was healthy, it certainly is not so now. W. Roger Williams, one of the world's greatest authorities on cancer, has recently stated that cancer in England increased as meat-eating increased among the people. He brings conclusive evidence to prove the truth of this assertion, so that we may not be justified in thinking it a coincidence. Other eminent physicians have recognized the close relationship between meat-eating habits and the prevalence of cancer. An old saying has it that there is no great loss but what there is some small gain; we will change it a little and say, if the war is to reduce our meat-eating there will be small loss and very great gain. The words of wisdom contained in the Doctrine and Covenants are most excellent advice, if we would only profit by them. (See section 86.)

The trouble is that we heed so poorly. If we get sick we promptly call a doctor. If he finds we are suffering from kidney disease he immediately forbids us to use flesh foods. If it is rheumatism, or threatened apoplexy, he is equally prompt with the same orders. Why were we not obedient children when the Great Physician prescribed? We would have been wiser, and spared a great deal of pain, had we discontinued the use of meat a few years earlier!

The Doctrine and Covenants also tells us to "study good books." This might also save us suffering and a doctor's bill. Let us as housewives and mothers, as those who are responsible for what our families are eating, who select the foods that shall develop and nurture their bodies, study more seriously that we may perform those tasks in the light of God's intelligence, using that portion of the same, with which he has endowed each of us.

Other practices in eating and drinking work contrary to the established laws of our beings, and if not avoided or overcome through self-discipline and the denial of a perverted appetite, will result in both physical and spiritual degeneracy, along with its legitimate fruits: sickness, pain, sorrow, and premature death. Shall we study intelligently to find out what mistakes we are making, and how we may overcome them, substituting the wholesome and delightful things God wishes us to enjoy?

In conclusion, here are a few things to avoid:

Overeating.

Too great variety at one meal.

Hasty eating, with improper mastication.

Eating between meals.

Late suppers.

Drinking at meals.

Stimulants, including tea, coffee, etc.

Flesh foods.

War Savings and Children's Summer Clothing

Mothers are asked to do many sorts of necessary saving because of the war.

Some sorts of war saving require special watchfulness on the mother's part to guard the children from possible harm. For instance, food substitution must be made with great care in order that the children's food may still contain all the elements necessary to growth.

But with clothes in summer it is different. In hot summer weather it is a distinct advantage to the child's health to be dressed lightly. And the saving of textiles and leather is an important consideration now. Wool must be saved because it is needed for the blankets, underwear, and uniforms of our fighting forces. Cotton is needed for hospitals and many other uses. The need to supply leather for the Army's use is of course imperative.

In selecting fabrics for clothing it is not entirely a matter of finding a cheaper and less needed substitute. Old goods must be brought again into service, turned, cleaned, washed, dyed, and made over. When an old garment is returned to usefulness actual saving of wool or cotton is effected, and in addition manufacturers will be able to concentrate their output on goods for Army uses because of the decreased demand for unnecessary materials.

The purchasing of novelties, fancy fabrics, and elaborate garments tends to withdraw from war uses not only needed materials but labor, especially skilled laborers needed for other branches of production.

Now in summer large savings of woolen materials of every sort including fancy and light colored wools used for knitting can be accomplished. Children can be clothed practically entirely in cotton for several months to come. Wise mothers will make children's summer clothing as simply as possible, thus reducing the work required for washing and ironing, and increasing the child's comfort.

Children like to wear barefoot sandals in summer. Their use saves leather, and stockings. Half soling and mending makes shoes go much farther. Further saving of leather can be effected by using canvas shoes in summer.

The publications of the Children's Bureau on the care of children will be helpful to mothers in the solution of the puzzling problem of clothing children in summer. The Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia, will send these pamphlets free of charge upon request. MRS. MAX WEST.

Keeping Baby Fit in Summer

Through the long, hot summer days it is a great task to keep children happy, well, and out of mischief, especially when the mother already has her hands more than full with the work of her house.

In the first place, children must be kept as cool as possible. In hot weather this is not an easy task, but it may be accomplished in some measure by clothing them suitably. Babies need only the diaper and one other garment, band or slip. Older children need only enough to cover their bodies. As far as possible, children should sleep out of doors at night, if screened porches are available, or, if not, with all the windows and doors wide open. A full tub bath in cool or tepid water will do much to make sleep comfortable, and a little plain talcum powder will help to allay the irritation of prickly heat.

Children must be provided, too, with occupations suited to their age. A play pen on a cool porch, or even under the trees in the yard where the mother can watch the baby, will give much pleasure. Sand piles, swings, and many other simple pieces of play apparatus which are easily made at home without any great expense will keep older children happy and out of mischief. Rainy days may be spent on the porch. Hints for mothers as to the selection of play and occupation for young children will shortly be published by the Children's Bureau. Very much of the annoyance of mothers and the fussiness of children would be done away with if the little hands and minds had plenty of occupation. Many a cross child is cross because he has nothing to do which interests him, and many a piece of mischief is only the result of the child's trying to find something with which to busy himself.

Children's food must be chosen with special care in summer to suit the ages, and proper food habits should be established. The nursing baby will cause the least anxiety. If a baby is nursed at regular times, preferably three or four hours apart, and is clean and as cool as possible, he will not usually suffer harm even in very hot weather.

Babies newly weaned from the breast and up to the end of the second year will need special care. Properly modified cow's milk will form the principal part of the diet of all such children, and must be as clean and as fresh as possible. Detailed directions for the feeding of children will be sent free from the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor to all who care to send for the bulletins on the care of children.

Older children should be taught to observe regular habits also, and mothers must guard against the dangers of over- or underfeeding, and especially against poor food materials, such as overripe fruit. Young children need to be taught to chew their food thoroughly and to eat slowly. Cleanliness of the body is necessary for health and comfort at all times, but is demanded in the summer time. These fundamental rules of health should be in effect in every family, and where carried out faithfully sickness should be largely done away with.

Travel Notes

Thinking that some of the things experienced, or witnessed, since leaving Independence might interest others than those who have asked us to write, but which would be impracticable if not impossible under existing conditions, we offer to HERALD readers a few among the many things, interesting at least to us, which we have experienced since leaving home July 1.

Our first very pleasant diversion and experience was had when, on arriving at Saint Louis the evening of our first day's travel, we were met at the Union Station by Brother Walter Barrett with his car. The old-time welcome we soon received from Sister Mary and Walter, in the home which in our former experiences had shed its rays of comfort and true brotherly and sisterly affection, was in no way dimmed by the passing changes which time or absence had created. In leaving them the following morning, refreshed by a good night's rest, we felt how true it is in our own just relations; and again so sensitively received were the words of the poet: "Blest be the tie that binds" loyal and true souls to an observance of the fundamentals of life as can only find expression in true gospel comradeship. We would not fail to make mention of the pleasant renewal of old-time associates had that evening with "ye editor of HERALD," his mother, and sister Florence, but saddened by an affliction which had penetrated our own lives in the loss, to us also, of a very personal character of one who had always proved in the past such a loyal and interesting friend and brother, Samuel R. Burgess.

An all-day ride and the evening of the second day found us in Cincinnati, Ohio, where what appeared to be a matter of sheer luck or providence, which had seemed to follow us thus far, we secured for Nellie the only sleeper berth to be had, though at ordinarily prohibitive price, but made necessary by her physical condition.

July 3, after a refreshing and quiet rest during the night, and forenoon travel through the beautiful scenery of the Baltimore and Ohio, we arrived at Washington, District of Columbia, and were met at the new union station by Nellie's son and his wife, and motored to their fine home on New Hampshire Avenue, where we were most kindly and considerately entertained by Roscoe, who has been honored by a first lieutenant's commission, and has charge of an office in the War Department, but is likely to be sent to France or anywhere at any time.

Two weeks of interesting and new scenes witnessed in and about this now all-absorbing center of war preparation and activities, constitute a never-to-be-forgotten experience in our life, detail of which, if properly chronicled, might furnish a volume of interesting information, but a tithe of which only we may submit.

Visits, only made possible by his car and acquaintance for years in the city of Washington and relation to Government work, could have furnished us with delightful views of its parks—its military camps—soldiers' home, Alexandria, Fort Myers, Arlington, the former home of Robert Lee, and other places of interest.

Thursday, July 4, we attended patriotic exercises at the Soldiers' Home, speeches, singing, music by a French band, who are now touring the country and will visit Kansas City. Patriotic displays of various nations, in different parks of city, closing with a magnificent parade and pageantry on capitol steps at night, but attendance at which we did not venture on account of crowds or physical limitations.

July 5 we visited the capitol and, with guide and company of Red Cross nurses who were about to sail for France, were shown everything of interest.

Subsequently have visited the Senate and House of Representatives, where Messrs. Borland and Johnson, and other men prominent in national councils were pointed out to me; what was said, however, being largely lost on account of deafness or inability to hear.

The wonders of the National Museum, detail of which would make an interesting book—exhibitions of the marvelous resources in material for the physical, ethical, the necessary, the practical, and the beautiful things that God thought of and has furnished man with; and constant appeal to the inborn sense of praise, worship, and thanksgiving for the essential gifts that are necessary to ecstatic nature and its propagation, but which may only find its apotheosis, however, in the gospel of the Son of God.

I may not close this letter without reference to our visit to Mount Vernon, the home of the "father of his country."

It was a fine day, July 11, when we boarded the steamer for the sixteen-mile ride on the historic Potomac.

Our first visit after landing at Mount Vernon was the tomb, which was open to visitors, the interior of which was filled with costly and beautiful floral displays and shields and tributes to the memory of Washington, placed there July 4 by foreign ambassadors, members of legations residing in Washington, upon which occasion our own great President delivered such utterances concerning the ideals that nations can only safely pursue and that marked his course during our world conflict, and—I may add—great pleasure was given me this morning in reading the editorial comment in Zion's Ensign of July 18, indorsing our President's wonderful statements.

I might mention further concerning the offerings at the tomb, that the most conspicuous one, placed in prominent view at the foot of the marble casket or sarcophagus which contained the body of George Washington, was a magnificent shield and an ample silk banner on which was inscribed in letters of gold: "The soul of America," and signed, "Woodrow Wilson."

The Law of Life in Jesus Christ

Jesus, to humanity, is what food is to the human body, our life. "He came that we might have life, and that we might have it more abundantly." He said: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." But he could not hand it to one, as you would hand out a book; it must be acquired, because he said, "Learn of me." Learn what? Learn how to acquire the abundance of life.

"I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Can we find rest to our souls if we are not meek and lowly? He is the way, can we get abundant life some other way? If not, his way must be closely followed to reach the goal. The man who expects to, is like the man who goes fishing and stands all day on the bank of a stream, where there are plenty of fish in the water, yet expects to catch fish without casting in his line. You would say that he was foolish. Not any more so than the man who expects abundant life, rest to his soul, and wishes to reach the goal, who enters the church, and then becomes indifferent.

The man who does not extend every power of his might, soul, heart, and mind is like the man who goes fishing, but does not cast his line in the water where the fishes are. No man in the church of Christ can reach the goal unless he extends all his powers of observing, practically demonstrating in himself the perfect law of the Lord. "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth, . . . this man shall be blessed in his doing." But what about him if he does not? Paul says, "Let no man deceive himself."

The gospel is a means to an end. But if the means is not followed, the end cannot be reached. Psalm 24 says, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein." If that be true, then all we have belongs to him. We are his stewards. Well, if you have a man working for you, you want him to do the work as you direct, do you not? Most assuredly, or you would say, "You are discharged." How about the Lord? Will a man rob God? Well, if he has given orders that one tenth of all you have belongs to him, and you fail to obey the order, what are you doing? Echo answers, "What?" If you are doing it, all is well. All is fair and all is bright, all is well when we do right.

Render to your government the things which belong to it, and to God the things that are his. "Prove me herewith, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing." Yes, move out as the Lord hath said, do that which will entitle you to a blessing, because if you do not, the blessing will not come. In harmony with the foregoing, see Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2. "It is wisdom in me, therefore a commandment I give unto you, for it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable as stewards over earthly blessings which I made and prepared for my creatures. . . . Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, he shall with the wicked lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."

According to the law of his gospel. What is the law? One tenth of all your increase annually. Yes, you may have food and clothing, first, but if you have a wardrobe worth a thousand dollars, you should pay one hundred and ten dollars on that, too. Necessary clothing, of course, but we are to pay all we can, not avoid all we can.

The Lord expects us to be industrious and economical. To be prudent, be "anxiously engaged in a good work." Is eternal life, to be gained, a good work? Unity, honor, sanctification, then glory. "Sanctify them by thy truth, thy word is truth." How shall the word sanctify me? By making a practical demonstration of it in my life. No other way! How shall I prove to the people that I sing? By singing in their presence. Show them—let them hear me. How shall I prove that I love God? By doing what he says.

Let us have oil in our lamps; too late when the door is shut. We'll be out in the cold, or the heat, which?

Take heed, young man, of an aimless life. Whatever a man's talents and advantages may be, without an aim, or with a low one, he is weak and despicable; and he cannot be otherwise than respectable and influential with a high one. "Water will find its level."—A Mother.

God Is Blessing the Men in the Service

[The following is from a personal letter written to his brother by Brother Harry G. Barto, of Independence, Missouri. He is stationed at Camp Pike, Arkansas, and serving as sergeant major.—EDITORS.]

There is very little we can kick on here at this camp, and I guess it is about as good as any of the training camps, but of course you cannot fix a camp up like home. They tell me that this camp is one of the best in the country, for which I am thankful. The food they give us is quite good, although everything is cooked a little dry and you get so hungry for a little bit of nicknacks. I get some of those from Independence. Mother sent me a cake and a box of candy a little over a week ago, and I just got a box of candy from Vivian yesterday. Those are the things which look good to us when are here all alone, although it gives me a homesick feeling for a little while, to be there with the folks. I was so sick for Independence last Sunday that I could hardly go. I asked for help and it seemed I received it almost immediately.

I have had so many manifestations of the Spirit since I have been here, that I cannot be too thankful. I took all three shots in the back and was not even sick. As you know me of old, that usually such as that would make me as bad as any of the rest, but in this case, I had a little fever, but did not suffer with a headache or stomach ache as most of the other boys did. I am very thankful that I received the help, as I certainly needed it here all by myself.

I miss so much the church privileges which I used to enjoy. This morning when I was working I wished that I could be at church and renew my covenant with the Master, as this is the Sunday, but here I am. However, it was just 11.30 and as I was prohibited from being with the Saints, I asked our heavenly Father to give me the renewal of the Spirit, even though I was unable on account of circumstances to partake of the sacrament. Almost immediately I had a most comfortable feeling and I felt that I could almost reach out my hand and touch His hand. I have had that feeling many times since I have been here, and I am surely thankful that I can call upon the Lord and receive his strength whenever I need it. I am trying to live here in this place in such a way that I can always ask and will receive. It is very hard though, as the men here are so bad and their language is not of the best. However, I see they notice the difference in me, as one or two of them have mentioned the fact, when something not too good has been said or done.

I hope some day that the war will be over and I can go back and mingle and associate with the kind and class of people I desire. Here of course you have to take what comes.

HARRY G. BARTO.

HEADQUARTERS, 11TH TRAINING BATTALION,
162d DEPOT BRIGADE.

Why Do We Need A Home Department

The first reason is because there are many subjects for such a department. When we meet on Sunday morning, we truly appreciate the association of each other, the mingling together in the study of the word of God and the other church services. Ah, how many of us stop to think of the hundreds, yes, thousands, who are living in isolation and do not have this privilege?

When I speak of isolation do you draw a picture in your mind of a home far-off away from all other homes? We think it means more than that. The word isolate means to be placed in a detached situation, and is akin to insulate. Do you think me radical when I say there are hundreds of people who are located in branches and districts fully organized and yet living in isolation? Surrounded with power and yet insulated! Are there not many who are detached from the church and her departments, failing to receive the spiritual food so much needed? There are many causes for this. Some are spiritually sick, others physically sick, some aged, and others are mothers with large families. Do you think these worth your attention?

Perhaps we feel when we have distributed the Quarterlies and gathered them again that we have finished our work. Nay, not so! We have only begun. The home department extends to us a rich field for missionary work. It reaches out into fields uncultivated by other departments. It helps those who are unable to help themselves, not only inside the church but the whole world is extended to us as home department workers.

Where is there a more sacred or effective spot on earth to labor than in the home, the first organization of God upon the earth, the foundation of our nation? One historian has well said: "Show me the nation where homes are decaying and I will show you thrones that are tottering."

Many times while distributing the Quarterlies we can enter the homes of those who have never obeyed the gospel, persuading them to study the Quarterly which only leads to a broader field of investigation, resulting in bringing many into our Sunday schools and Religios and some into the church.

SOME OF THE EFFECTS OF HOME DEPARTMENT WORK

The aim of the home department worker, first, is to carry the words of life to the isolated. Remember who they are. Some say, "Why need we study the Quarterly?" I would answer that question by asking this one: Why need we eat? The apostle Paul says there is a natural body and there is a spiritual body. We are told the natural body was made from the dust of the earth and the spirit came from God out of heaven. The dust in connection with the elements of the air produce each day the food necessary to sustain the physical body. Through the study of the law which has proceeded from the mouth of God and an application of the same to our lives the spiritual man will also be kept alive and will be able to make the spiritual development necessary.

Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." When we look about us we see the manifestation of life everywhere. Geologists tell us even the rocks manifest life, but I believe we are agreed this is not the kind of life spoken of by Jesus. It was the spiritual life which we are to receive through obedience to the law of God. I feel it very necessary to understand the law in order to obey it.

Ofttimes I would like to ask the shepherds of these departments which ones of their flocks are they the most interested in: the ones that can come to the table each week and partake of the spiritual food; or the ones that are crippled, either spiritually or physically, or laden with heavy burdens? I am compelled to think of the parable of the Savior where he left the ninety and nine and went after the one; also the statement where he said, "They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick." The thought is this: he came to help those who need it most.

SOME OF THE RESULTS

It insures greater respect for these departments of the church in the community.

It wins back many who have wandered away.

It leads parents to take a greater interest and see that their children attend more regularly.

It insures home interest and assistance for children in preparing their lessons.

It counteracts the impression of many that these departments are only for children.

It keeps those who are isolated in active touch with the church.

A little illustration I would like to draw before your minds. How many of you have visited a large fruit orchard and noticed some of the trees with their limbs bent to the ground, loaded with fruit, while others had much fruit on one side, and the other side apparently dead. No leaves, no fruit. When we find a Sunday school with each department wide awake and doing its duty, it is like the tree bearing fruit all around. But when we find the home department or any other failing to do its work, just to that extent your school is like the tree, dead on one side and failing to bear fruit.

I sincerely beg the most hearty cooperation of the district and local superintendents both of school and home departments to assist me in my efforts to help you in the great work intrusted to our care.

Sincerely your colaborer,

MRS. J. C. SCHWAB,

General Home Department Superintendent for the Sunday Schools.

Temple Chimes

The emblazonry upon the boards seems to read: "This is our busy day." Evenings are crowded with "something doing" in the line of lectures, choir rehearsals, both junior and senior, midweek prayer services, Religio, Oriole preparation, entertainment, and Sunday services—all give Kirtland the metaphorical character of a "busy beehive." Reunion date is drawing near.

Genial showers have broken the dry torrid zone in this section, and nature is glad with refreshing, while necessities wrenched from the soil are very promising.

Sacramental services the first Sunday were held. There was a large attendance, an elevating spirit prevailed, and promised good things for Kirtland—"if." There were baptisms again last Sunday. Quite a number of clergymen have been among the visitors at the temple recently. The greater number are of the Episcopalian order. Some of other denominational titles who do not accept the belief that "all Israel will be saved." To express their attitude toward the record of Joseph, they claim the Jews murdered Christ, and are "outside the pale of salvation." Strange! Both the Bible and the ancient American record teaches the latter-day glory and rising of Israel, and that in Abraham's seed "all the families of the earth shall be blessed," while the incontestable facts of history, and the thrilling events of the present, unite to confirm the belief that "now is the accepted time" for the preparatory work. "The sands of the seashore," "the stars of the firmament," are used by the Almighty to illustrate Israel's future multiplication.

There is a river in the ocean; in severest droughts it never fails, and in the mightiest floods never overflows. The Gulf of Mexico is its foundation, and its mouth in Arctic seas. It is the Gulf Stream. It flows within its own banks—"the decreed place"—and has a reluctance about mingling with common waters. This curious physical phenomena has a counterpart. The Israelitish nation is as a solemn stream flowing through the ocean of humanity. Its fountain is in the gray dawn of the world's history, and its mouth somewhere in the shadows of eternity—but "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess." Facts historic and analogical combine to vindicate the prophets of long ago, that Israel's existence and indestructibility is measured by the ordinances of heaven—"the duration of sun, moon, and stars." One minister was very severe on the Jews, and in his blind wrath on the record of ancient America. We gave utterance to the thought that the present conflict in Europe is bringing into prominence the Jew as a citizen, soldier, patriot, orator, and statesman; that as the dread notes of war reverberated his superiority as a financier will be thrummed upon the strings of the harp of Judah.

"Why, sir, the Book of Mormon reveals this, your day and ours, as the one dispensationally chosen of God, in which 'Jacob's face shall not now wax pale,' in which Israel will no longer be victims of hisses, and unsavory proverbs among the nations."

"Ah, they are now Jews, and will be Jews," was his retort.

I replied, "Do you remember the answer Disraeli made, when he was England's prime minister, and twitted by the Irish orator, O'Connell, of being a Jew? 'Twas during a session of Parliament."

"I do not remember," said the clergyman.

"He answered, 'Yes, I am a Jew, and when the ancestors of the right honorable gentleman were savages in an unknown island, mine were priests ministering in the temple of Solomon.'"

The visitor changed color and was silent, for he had committed himself as being favorable to Christian evolution!

"Blindness in part, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in." This great slaughter in the unparalleled conflict of nations surely presage the soon-coming King to reign. The relinquishment of the Mohammedan grasp from the neck of the captive daughter of Zion, under General Allenby, December 10, 1917, and Christian standards waving where the Crescent contaminated the air of Jerusalem, insures faith in victory coming to the Book of Mormon as well as to the Bible, and predicts in no obscure way, the closing of Gentile prestige. This is a lengthy paragraph, Mr. Editor, but it will renew old recollections. The Jewish question comes in frequently, when agitating the Spalding Romance. Old ideas are yet to be combatted—especially in connection with the latter-day evangel. After all, progress comes by bursting the fetters—manacles binding us to the dark, misty past, whether in church or state.

A minister of the Lutheran persuasion visited the temple last week and after asking questions as to the "nature" of the tenets of the church, remarked: "You have embraced a deception, as a people, in sundering ties which connected us all, in the reformation of the fifteenth century."

My reply: "There is just where deception is broken. The Bible predicts that the anti-Christian confederation which grew up back of us, deceived all nations by her sorceries, or perversions of the gospel (Revelation 18: 23), and redeems us from the consequences."

"Ah, the old is good enough for me," he said.

"Now see here," I continued, "take a larger view. Mexico was colonized just one hundred years before Massachusetts. Her first settlers were the noblest and most chivalric spirits of Spain in her Augustan age. The epoch of Cervantes, Cortes, Pizarro, Columbus, Gonzalvo de Cordova, Cardinal Ximenes, the great, and good Isabella. Mexico, a rich soil, produces everything for the use of man, possesses every metal; Massachusetts, with an uncongenial climate, sterile soil, no articles of transportation but ice and rock, but oh, the difference! Mexico, a seething mass of human protoplasm—no progress to speak of. Massachusetts, a rich, aristocratic commonwealth, bounteous in beneficence, intelligence, and progress. Who causes the difference? One founded on Spanish tyranny, the other on Puritanism. One right, the other wrong. So with the churches."

He bought Brother Lambert's "Objections to Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants answered and refuted," and took his departure.

Hopefully yours,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

THE CHRISTIAN MAN, THE CHURCH, AND THE WAR.—By Robert E. Speer, 60 cents; the Macmillan Company, New York. Doctor Speer is widely known in Y. M. C. A. circles and counted one of the ablest speakers of the day on practical religion. The questions he discusses here in a very sane manner are of vital interest and import to all. The introduction of the book will show the character of his ideal: "There are three different courses open to the Christian man to-day. One is to throw his Christian idealism overboard, and postpone his efforts to adjust religion to life until the war is over. A second is to hold fast to his Christian idealism and to repudiate the real world he is living in. The third is to take Paul's counsel and seek to behave as a citizen in a manner worthy of the gospel, believing that his present duty is to be a Christian not in some other world but in this one, and that this duty can be done in the highest loyalty both to humanity and to Christ. This little book is an attempt at a statement of this third course. If the attempt

THE BOY MOVEMENT PROGRESSING

Those interested in the boy movement will be glad to know that there is being printed a bulletin entitled, The Boy Scout and the Church. This has been prepared by F. M. McDowell with the approval of the National Boy Scout Organization and of President Frederick M. Smith. It contains a discussion of the needs of an organization of our boys, a statement of the advantages of the Boy Scout plan, and an outline of the nature of this plan, together with methods of organizing local troops.

This bulletin is being mailed to all the district Religio officers and any others who have expressed their interest in the movement. In case you do not receive one, just drop a card to the general director of the boy movement, and you will receive one at once.

On account of other work it has been impossible up to this time to keep in touch with the correspondence. If your letter has not been answered, kindly overlook it. From now on Brother McDowell will be in a position to promise that there will be no more such delays. He is prepared to offer definite suggestions in regard to the district and local organizations. These will be sent out in connection with the bulletins. Announcement will also be made in next week's HERALD. Address all correspondence to F. M. McDowell, Lamoni, Iowa.

We have a letter from a brother at Camp Grant, Illinois, in Company W, 342d Infantry, Barracks 227S, who does not give his name. He wants the Ensign. We suggest that he send his name and address to the Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, and it will be sent him.

Bishop C. J. Hunt, of the Holden Stake, has sent out Bulletin No. 2, an anniversary address to the Saints of the Holden Stake. It is a four-page leaflet gotten out in nice shape and contains two pen and ink illustrations supposed to visualize some phases of the financial law of the church.

COLLEGE EDUCATION AT GOVERNMENT EXPENSE

A bill has just been introduced in the United States Senate and received the approval of the committee to which it was referred, providing for two years of college education at Government expense after the war for all young men under twenty-one years of age whose education has been interrupted because of the war. Now is the time to enter college and remain until you are called into the Government service, thus enabling you to take advantage of the very liberal provision by the Government for college education after the war. Graceland College opens September 5. Write the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for a catalogue and full information.

Apostle U. W. Greene has moved his family from Winter Hill, Massachusetts, to Independence, Missouri, where they will make their home in the future.

Elder Hubert Case left Lamoni on the 20th to address and counsel with a gathering of Indians called together in Oklahoma by Phillip Cook on church matters. There will be nine tribes represented.

PRESIDENT SMITH VISITS DETROIT

On his recent visit to Detroit, President F. M. Smith spoke two evenings at the First Church and met a goodly number from the five branches of the city. At the close of his last sermon the audience retired to the basement of the church where a reception was given in his honor. It was an enjoyable occasion and the only complaint was that his stay was too short. He is urged to come again.

MICHIGAN SAINTS AT ERIE BEACH

A fine representation of Michigan Saints attended the reunion at Erie Beach, Ontario, coming from Flint, Pontiac, Port Huron, Detroit, and as far north as Sandusky. The Oriole girls in the khaki uniforms were conspicuous at all times, and their motto, "Service," was much in evidence. The Lord commended their organization both in prophecy and tongues. They were much encouraged.

Reprints of articles on "Coordination," and "Questions and answers on coordination" which appeared in the Autumn Leaves for August, are being sent out to district and stake Sunday school superintendents and secretaries. These were written by Superintendent G. R. Wells and Secretary E. D. Moore, and might be helpful to anyone who desires to comprehend the scope of this new plan of work. Copies may be had free from either of the above brethren, addressing them at Lamoni.

CONFERENCE MINUTES ABOUT READY

The proceedings of the General Conference held in Independence last April are to be ready for distribution in bound form in about a week. The usual form is observed—book size and stapled, well-indexed, and complete. A copy each is sent upon request to elders and missionaries. To others they are sent upon receipt of thirty cents. They should be widely read and kept handy as a valuable source book of reference in the progress of the church.

TEACHING THE TEN COMMANDMENTS

Superintendent G. R. Wells has been sending out a circular letter to district and stake officers on "A new way to teach the ten commandments." He quotes from the methods of Sister Lucie H. Sears, editor of the Intermediate Quarterly, and shows how the teaching of these negative commandments may be made into a positive proposition and made of much value to the younger minds. The principle may be noted in the following cards made out to aid the memory: 1. Believe God. 2. Worship God. 3. Honor God. 4. Serve God. 5. Be obedient. 6. Be kind. 7. Be pure. 8. Be honest. 9. Be truthful. 10. Be contented.

If there are any of our boys or others near Camp Meade, Maryland, they are requested to get in touch with Roy E. Smith, Co. 28, 154th Depot Brigade, Barracks AA32, Camp Meade, Maryland.

TEA AND COFFEE UNPOPULAR

One of the interesting sidelights of the recent Lamoni Stake reunion is shown in some figures which Brother J. W. Gunsolley, superintendent of the temperance department of the Religio, compiled for his work. He went to the commissary department and found out that in the 12 days of reunion 2,211 meals were served, and that during that time they used 2 pounds of coffee and one pound of tea. Part of this amount was sold to campers on the ground who did their own cooking, and much of the rest was consumed by patrons of the dining tent who were not members of the church.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Bertha Perry, of Rockville, Missouri, who is afflicted with periodical insanity.

Brother and Sister O. L. James send word for a change of their periodicals to Emporia, Kansas, where they have bought the Hotel Mit-Way. They want to get in touch with any of the Saints in that community. The Saints at Tulsa miss these faithful workers very much.

FOOD MEETINGS AT REUNION

One session of the Lamoni Stake reunion was given over to a representative of the Food Administration, Mr. Frank Wisdom, who delivered a much-appreciated lecture on demonstrated patriotism, to a good audience. On the same day Miss Clara Johnsrud, county food demonstrator, gave demonstrations of cooking under the present situation and handed out a large number of tested recipes. Both meetings were very successful and help to the community to the front in patriotic and health-giving conservation. We were pleased to note that the commissary department was easily able to keep within the limit of two pounds of sugar per ninety meals served.

JEWIS MUCH PERSECUTED

In one issue of The American Hebrew one reads accounts of Jewish massacres or pogroms as they are called, in various places. In the issue for August 9 we read of these in various parts of Russia, Finland, Poland, Austria, Galicia, Rumania. It looks as though these events were working directly to the uprooting of the Jews from all these countries and setting their faces toward their home land, Palestine.

PARENTS AND YOUNG MEN OF THE UNITED STATES

THE GOVERNMENT CALLS

It is almost certain that in the United States the draft age will be reduced to 18. That means that thousands of young men under 21 will be subject to call to military service within the next few months.

GOVERNMENT NEEDS EDUCATED MEN

The United States Government recognizes the great need for educated young men for the Army and is going to establish, beginning in September, regular military training in the colleges and universities of the country.

STUDENT'S ARMY TRAINING CORPS

These military units in colleges are to be known as Students' Army Training Corps. A student enlisted in this corps, though in the military service of the United States, is technically on inactive duty. Upon reaching draft age he is automatically placed by his local board in Class V-D as provided by the selective service regulations. The draft board will not call him for induction so long as he remains a member of the Student's Army Training Corps.

When the student's draft number is reached the president of the college and the commanding officer will report to the chairman of the Committee on Education and Special Training of the War Department, for what form of military service the individual is in their judgment best qualified. They will recommend that the student should continue his studies, or that he should go at once to an officer's training camp to prepare for an officer's commission, or that he should be assigned to work in the ordnance, quartermaster or other staff corps, or sent immediately to a division at one of the camps. Enlistment in the Students' Army Training Corps, while it does not hold out any promise of an officer's commission, is at the present time the plainest road leading in that direction.

Regular uniforms, including hats, shoes, and overcoats, will be furnished all members of the Students' Army Training Corps by the Government.

EDUCATION AFTER THE WAR

A bill has been introduced into Congress providing for two years of college education at Government expense after the war for those young men whose education is interrupted because of being drafted. Now is the time to enter college and be eligible for this special Government college education after the war.

PROMPT ACTION ESSENTIAL

When the Government calls you may have to respond on twenty-four hours' notice. You now have ample time in which to make preparation to enter college in September, thus enabling you to take full advantage of all Government provisions. To delay means that the chance is lost forever.

RECONSTRUCTION

The period of reconstruction after the war is going to be one of the most critical through which the country and church have ever passed. Now is the time to make preparation essential to meet the issue.

SACRIFICE NECESSARY

Many will feel that they cannot afford this money necessary to meet college expenses. The fact is you can hardly afford not to do so. The President of the United States has said that it is the patriotic duty of every young man and woman, who can possibly do so, to enter college this year. Money may have to be borrowed, but it can easily be repaid from the greatly increased earnings, not only in civil life but from the larger allowances granted by the Government to her soldiers prepared for special lines of service in the Army.

ONLY A FEW DAYS UNTIL COLLEGE OPENS

Graceland, our own institution of higher learning, fully standardized and officially accredited, opens September 5. In addition to the regular college work she offers courses in the academy, stenography, stenotypy, and full courses in Wireless Telegraphy especially organized for war service under the supervision of the Federal Board for Vocational Education. Write the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for catalogue and full information.

WIN THE WAR

The first business now of the allies is to win the war, and every possible effort toward that end should be put forth. One most essential means is through the educational preparation of our young men and young women at this time. It is hoped that no effort possible will be spared.

Let us all cooperate with the Government at this most critical time.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

ON SOLOMON SPALDING STORY

Elder James Pycock called our attention to the fact that in volume 3, page 187, of the proceedings of the Western Reserve Historical Society, held in 1886, an address is to be found by James Fairchild, president of Oberlin College, which was delivered at a meeting of that society. This address was published in full in the SAINTS' HERALD of last week.

It should prove of great interest since it is clear that President Fairchild was not trying to make a case, but was writing a historic paper; so he presented this problem, as he considered, in a fair manner and leaves the ending indefinite, leaving open the possibility of further evidence.

It is of interest to note that thirty-two years have now passed and none of the threatened proof has developed; but on the contrary the value of the theory of the Solomon Spalding romance has grown weaker with the passing of the years.

The reason is doubtless that so clearly and logically set forth by President Fairchild, in that he shows that what was once a hypothesis or supposition, has, in the minds of those opposing, grown rather stronger with the passing of years, until what was once not known, was supposed, and finally was affirmed as a fact. Critical students observing this feature of memory growing stronger with the lapse of years, contrary to all known experience, recognize the fact that it is a created story and was added to and thus naturally grows stronger the farther it gets away from the historic data, and the time of possible happening.

Originally these witnesses knew very little, but as memory grows weaker their testimonies grew ever stronger, as President Fairchild so clearly indicates.

This is of interest as indicating the fallacy of this particular story; but it is also of interest in similar events, as opponents from time to time make such assertions wholly without reference to facts, yet in time some believe them.

The address of President Fairchild appears in the General Interest department of last week. We have retained in this instance the spelling Spaulding, though in our investigations made years ago, it was ascertained that the family indorsed both that form and the simpler Spalding, which latter has been our preference for years. IS THE BISHOP MISTAKEN?

In the Millennial Star for May 23, 1918, the following editorial is to be found:

A short article on "The Latter-day Saints," found on another page in this week's Star, is credited to the Bishop of Manchester, and appeared, recently, in a denominational publication.

The chief feature of it is a statement which is absolutely void of any foundation in fact and which, in a heated discussion, might hastily be characterized by a very short and ugly word. We refer to the following, "yet the fact remains that the Latter-day Saints teach and practice polygamy."

There is no truth in that statement. It is slander, pure and simple. It is the stock-in-trade of those anti-"Mormons," whose malice and unscrupulousness is on a par with their bigotry and ignorance. But, no matter how often it is repeated, or by whom, it remains untrue.

The question whether the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches and practices polygamy was thoroughly investigated by a committee of the United States Senate, in the Smoot case. That famous case was brought up by certain politicians for the purpose of prevailing upon the Senate to declare the seat of Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah, vacant on the alleged ground that he was a member of an organization that teaches and practices polygamy. The question was gone into in every detail, by expert lawyers, and the outcome of it was that the Senate retained Senator Smoot, thereby fully vindicating the church in that matter.

This was about fourteen years ago. Senator Smoot is still an honored and influential member of the Senate, and another prominent member of the church, Judge William H. King, is his colleague, in that body, from Utah. Would this be possible if the allegations of anti-"Mormons" were true?

Not only has that question been investigated in the United States, but the British Government has also searched for evidence of the truth of the allegations frequently made in this country against the elders of the church, with a result similar to that obtained in the United States, and in a letter to the clerk of the Latter-day Saints' European mission, dated May 22, 1914, the Secretary of State declared that "the extensive inquiries made did not reveal any grounds for legislative action."

We are aware of the allegation that because the revelation on celestial marriage—which, by the way, does not signify "plural" marriage—is still found in the Doctrine and Covenants, the church teaches polygamy.

If the Bishop of Manchester or any other reasonable person will consider these facts, he will realize that the allegations of the enemies of the church are as far from the truth as statements inspired by animosity generally are. Surely, the evidence furnished by the investigations conducted in the United States by one house of the legislative body of the republic, and here by the proper branch of the executive department, ought to be satisfactory to all who desire to know the truth.

It might just as well be contended that the church teaches polygamy because we read the Bible, including the Old Testament, as the word of God. Or, it might be said that the British Bible Society teaches polygamy by publishing and circulating Bibles. "Very absurd!" you exclaim. And so it is. But the argument is equally absurd in both instances.

The Latter-day Saints have published to all the world that they do not teach and they do not practice polygamy. This declaration has been before the world for more than a quarter of a century. Let those who say that that declaration is false, and that the church has broken its pledges, produce, if they can, at least one case of plural marriage performed during all these years with the consent or sanction of the church. That is the test. And if they cannot do that, they ought to hold their peace and not continue to bear false witness against their neighbors.

Just now the Latter-day Saints, as a body and as individuals, are doing their share in the great world-war, financially and otherwise. Really, they deserve well of the leaders of public opinion in this great country; and this we know, the time will yet come when all the world will realize that the attacks made upon the church are inspired by religious intolerance and supported by ignorance and indifference to truth.

GEORGE F. RICHARDS.

The above appears under the caption "The bishop is mistaken."

When one comes to speak of "a very short and ugly word," our attention would be called to the so-called revelation on celestial marriage, referred to above, which is still in the Utah Doctrine and Covenants. We note the editorial above states the revelation on "celestial marriage . . . does not signify 'plural' marriage." Is this true?

Taking section 132, in the Utah Doctrine and Covenants, we note in the title, "Revelation on the eternity of the marriage covenant, including plurality of wives." In the first paragraph we note: "As touching the principle and doctrine of their having many wives and concubines." It seems to be true that some parts of this, as paragraphs 15 to 20, attempt to lay down a law of celestial marriage; that is, by which, contrary to the Bible and the statement of the Master, a man and his wife will live together in eternity. But beginning with the 31st verse, we again find this reiteration of the idea of plural wives, applying it to Abraham, to David, to Solomon, and to Moses. The 44th verse teaches again, that the faithful shall be made ruler over many, and the inference is very plain. It says that ye shall take her who has not committed adultery, that is innocent and give her to him that hath not committed adultery, but hath been faithful; for he shall be made the ruler over many. This thought of plural marriage colors the whole purported revelation.

The 55th verse promises "an hundred-fold of wives and children." The preceding verses speak concerning Emma accepting other companions.

Beginning with the 61st verse it is again and again clearly set forth that the purpose is: a plurality of wives. A careful reading will convince any fair-minded person that this so-called "revelation on celestial marriage" does signify plural marriage.

Now with regard to the Reed Smoot case. It is true that they seated him. Several reasons may be alleged. But it is not true that thereby that church was vindicated, or that they found that there had been no polygamy in Utah, or that polygamy was not then being practiced. In 1898 Brigham H. Roberts openly preached polygamy, in the city of Saint Louis. Years later, we heard it preached in Ogden, Utah. Last year in Lynn, Massachusetts, when before a committee of the city council the Utah elders attempted to defend the doctrine of polygamy.

Instances have been cited in these pages where they have alluded to, defended, or attempted to teach that doctrine.

In the Reed Smoot case, Joseph F. Smith was questioned in regard to his plural wives. The same is true of several others of the leading authorities of the church at that time. Uniformly, they insisted upon their right to continue to live with their plural wives. In addition to that there was considerable evidence up to that time that different ones had entered into new plural marriages. Besides Joseph F. Smith, we notice Brigham H. Roberts as one who was living in polygamous cohabitation, (Reed Smoot case, vol. 1, pp. 710-718); Angus Cannon, (p. 786); Joseph F. Smith, (vol. 2, pp. 310-311); Francis M. Lyman, (vol. 1, pp. 428-430).

The Salt Lake Tribune, April 30, 1911, states in an editorial that they have had names and circumstances of upward of 230 cases of plural marriages.

The Tribune has not undertaken to show any new polygamous cases in England, but we have shown beyond the slightest question a very extensive revival of polygamy in Utah and in the Mormon communities contiguous to and branching off from Utah. We have given the names and circumstances of upwards of two hundred and thirty cases, not one of which has even so much as been denied. We have heard of a vast number of other cases, but on investigation were unable to satisfy ourselves that the guilt was proved. We have no doubt, however, that there have been many times more cases than we have printed, because, in view of the dense secrecy in which all this lechery is now surrounded, it is extremely difficult to get the facts. It is a low estimate to say that where we have secured the facts in one case, there are at least four cases that we have not found. There may, in fact, be a good deal more than this.—Editor Salt Lake Tribune, for April 30, 1911.

We shall be very glad indeed when this corrupt doctrine is finally given up by them for good, that is, neither practiced, taught, nor believed in, but that day is not yet.

The reason Reed Smoot was admitted is reasonably given, because he, himself, was not a polygamist. He stated to the then President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, that he had not had any such relation with any woman except his one and only wife.

The argument was based strongly upon that feature, that Reed Smoot was not in polygamy, nor was it sufficiently shown that, having personal knowledge, he had encouraged a continuation of polygamous cohabitation. It was not a vindication of the Utah church.

A THRIFT CAMPAIGN

Beginning September 1 there will be a drive across Iowa to organize War Savings Societies. This is no doubt part of the national movement to the organizing of people for saving. Incidentally it may assist in the purchase of War Savings Stamps, but its primary purpose is to assist in real economy.

We have pointed out many times in these columns, the fact that we are, as a church, urged to avoid all unnecessary wants, and to save as much as possible to the end that the debt of the church may be paid. (Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7.)

It now becomes also, and has for the past year and over, a duty as a citizen to avoid waste. One great reason is that the wealth of the country, the saved product, may be used for the great work lying before us as a Nation. We save wheat that the poor of Europe may be fed. We save sugar having the same end in view. When we waste or throw out any food products we are decreasing the world's supply. And it is true that this rests not alone with the housewife, but with every member of the family. And also it rests with the larger units which have in the past permitted good foods to decay, or even have thrown it away in order to maintain prices. This is a gross injustice.

It is true that when we ask this saving of grain and of sugar on the part of the poor people, or of the great common people (whom the Lord loves because he made so many of them), we should expect useless and injurious products to be eliminated, such as the manufacture of alcoholic beverages.

We save fuel by avoiding the waste of coal in our own furnaces and stoves. Also, in saving fuel for light, never leaving a light burning unless it is needed, and using as few as is possible. We note that the fuel commissioner asked that we leave at least one lamp dark, in each room, but unfortunately in many homes there is only one electric socket to a room. But we can remember that the less light we burn, the less coal is needed to produce power, and the more is saved for railroad transportation and for other essential uses.

It does not do to substitute gas, for that takes as much coal as electricity. Nor does it do to save coal by burning kerosene. It is well to use either of these when necessity requires, or that we use the best we have, but care should be used not to waste kerosene, gasoline, or gas, as in the end they represent a saving in the fuel problem.

By saving we accomplish two purposes. It would tend to develop thrift and allow means for the purchase of Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps. In this way helping the Government directly by this loan. But we should not overlook the fact that of equal, if not greater importance, is to save the materials which the Government needs.

This same theme may be extended to our clothing, to the use of our stoves, and preventing the waste of tin cans. We are told that tin cans are short, and yet there are millions of them around the country to be had for gathering. If we reduce our consumption of everything, that we can reasonably do without, it means eventually that many less men will be needed for that industry. They may then for the present divert their efforts to essential work of the war. It means also for us the ability to help the church, the practice of thrift, which will prove beneficial in the future, so that we give a greater impetus to the work lying before us as a church.

Simple living and high thinking have long gone together. Nor does this mean a denial of necessary food. Quite the contrary. It means in many instances the partaking of more nourishing food, and so in fact better living—a greater power to help the poor in our own neighborhood, our own State, and in fact, as a body, throughout the world.

Is it wrong to learn all that is to be known about the future life? Or should we timidly shrink from looking behind the curtain because God has not permitted us to gaze with the natural eye into the unseen world where our loved ones have gone? Although the path may seem dreary and lonesome without the assurance of the divine word of God (and surely it is bleak), when the blessed light of revelation is turned on, it drives the darkest clouds away, and opens to our view the unseen life, which skepticism has told us was death.—L. L. Wight.

THE GATHERING

(Sermon by Bishop B. R. McGuire, at Lamoni, Iowa, February 3, 1918. Reported by Mrs. G. N. Briggs.)

I am pleased to meet so many of the Saints of the Lamoni Stake this evening.

You doubtless are familiar with the statement, "I will hasten my work in its time." It is found in the 118th section of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph 1.

I wish to emphasize the first and the fourth words of that text, calling to your attention that these are the words of the Lord to his people in our day. In order that we might possibly better understand what this language means let us apply to it the rule of interpretation which he has given us for this purpose, as found in the 126th section of the Book of Covenants, paragraph 10. The subject to which this refers is a subject which was had under discussion by the brethren in the priesthood meeting this afternoon, and is a question which has been discussed often in the homes of God's people, that is, the subject of the gathering.

He says in this section:

In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others, and their relation thereto.

In the 127th section, paragraph 7, is the statement:

As the saints have heretofore been instructed in reference to the gathering, they are now again admonished that the gathering must not be in haste, nor without due preparation, and must be done in accordance with the revelation given to the church upon Fishing River and in accordance with the counsel and advice of the elders of the church whose duty it has been made to counsel and advise the Saints. The spirit of speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain is unseemly in the Saints and officers of the church, and should be avoided.

MISUNDERSTANDING IN SOME PLACES

He calls to our attention things that should not be done. Here let me interject that the gathering is more than the mere congregating or assembling together of God's people. The gathering should not be in haste, and it should not be without due preparation, and it should not be done in the spirit of speculation and the spirit of greed for gain.

It has come to our attention that in some districts a report is current that there has gone forth from the general officers of the church a proclamation to gather. Only the other day we received a letter from a distant point saying they understood that the Quorum of Twelve had been sent out to announce that the Saints should hurry up and gather to Zion and the regions roundabout. We wish to state to-night that there has not been any such proclamation made or any such announcement sent forth. It is not in accordance with the word of the Lord that it should be done. He says, "I will hasten my work in its time," and if I understand the Scriptures God can only hasten his work consistently with his word already given; and in this 127th section our attention is called to a revelation given on Fishing River, section 102, paragraph 2, where it is stated:

I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom.

SAINTS ARE DOING NOBLY

We sometimes make the argument from this section that the members of the church do not impart of their substance as becometh Saints. I have found the Saints are imparting of their substance. They have responded and nobly, too, to the call that was made through the Sunday school Christmas offering, and if it does not reach the mark it will reach very close to $75,000. We have already received very close to $73,000, and during this time instead of there being a falling off in tithes and offering, I believe we will find when the figures are all compiled the tithing increased at least fifty per cent. The Saints from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the northernmost points in Canada to the Gulf, everywhere in this country and in Canada and the islands of the sea, as well as the European countries where our work has been established, are demonstrating the spirit of consecration. The desire to impart of their substance is manifested; however, I understand the language given to the church in 1834 carries with it the implication that the members of the church had not imparted of the substance which had come into their hands as they should.

Let me cite in this connection the words of section 42 of the Book of Covenants, paragraph 8: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support." Section 102 said that they had not imparted of their substance to the poor and the afflicted as becometh Saints. "And behold thou wilt remember the poor," we continue to read, "and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken." Let the word support express to you its full significance. Thou wilt remember the poor and consecrate of thy properties for their support and the properties which are consecrated for the support of the poor are to be administered, we understand, by the church through its officers and, "if there shall be properties in the hands of the church or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not."

ALL LEGITIMATE NEEDS TO BE SUPPLIED

We would not think that those who contribute of their means or consecrate of their property should be permitted to retain only that which is necessary for the day, or the week, or the month. In other words, we do not think of them as they who have received alms, but as those who have under their control such of this world's goods that they may utilize it so as to be self-sustaining, that they may support themselves. In the same sense I think that the funds that come into the treasury of the church should be administered that those who receive aid might not further be pauperized if you please, but that they might be put in that position, the funds utilized in that way, that they may be helped so that they can support themselves. I understand the purpose of the temporal law is to develop us that we may in the fullest and completest sense realize that we are stewards accountable unto God for those things with which we have been blessed.

Turning then again to section 102, paragraph 2, we will continue to read:

Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.

GATHERING MORE THAN CONGREGATING

We think of the gathering, and I believe that in the minds of a great many, at least I infer this from conversation which I have had and remarks which I have heard, that they think simply of the gathering or congregating together of a number of people. We have here a piano, and upon it a number of strings. Suppose those strings had not been tuned, and whoever played the piano played it according to the music as written, do you think the music that would result would be that which the composer felt or realized or experienced when the music was written? Do you think that if those who have named the name of the Lord Jesus Christ in the waters of baptism, and taken upon themselves his name, and there have pledged themselves that they would become as ambassadors for Christ seeking to reconcile the world unto God, if they gather together and do not respond to the love of Almighty God, in other words they are not at one with him, do you think that from out of that congregation or gathering of people there would be reflected to the world the condition spoken of in our books as Zion?

Let me bring to your mind another thought. If our brother here who was playing the violin were to break one of his strings, do you suppose that when he went to purchase a new string he would take any sort of a string that the shopkeeper offered him, or do you suppose he would take one of a standard make so that when it was properly tuned he would be able to render the music according to the way it was written.

We are told in section 128:

Counsel has already been given to those unto the regions round about to consult with the elders and bishops before removing into these regions, that such removal may be accomplished through the having of all things prepared before them who seek to remove and become resident in the regions round about. It is well to understand that the term regions round about must mean more than a small area of country round about the central spot, and that the necessities of the great majority of the church in gathering together can only be provided for by settling carefully together as many in one region as may be practicable and profitable and in accordance with the feelings of the people under the laws existing in the places where such settlements are to be made.

If the spirit of speculation, the spirit of greed does not move us, why should we not be willing to try to gather carefully, thoughtfully, prayerfully, in a way that would be practicable and profitable, and in harmony with the feelings of the people. And why in harmony with the feelings of the people? Aren't we the people of the Lord, the favored people? Yes, we are the people of the Lord as I understand it, if the Spirit that moved the Christ moves us. We may call ourselves the Church of Jesus Christ, and if our characters do not reflect the spirit that moved him in life, calling ourselves by that name, publishing it to the world that we are the people of God, that we are fellow heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord won't convince them; but if we gather carefully together in accordance with the law of the Lord, in harmony with the feelings of the people, then we will live as was sung this evening, pure lives, and the possibilities are that there may be radiated from our lives to our fellow men among whom we live and move, that that will help them to see that we are not the kind of people we have been represented to be, and they may recognize we have conceived the design and purpose of the Lord through his church as here represented. It may be if we live in harmony with the laws of the Lord, it may be if we gather together, inasmuch as it is profitable and practicable and in harmony with the feelings of the people, the Lord may be able to so work as to show unto those among whom we live and move the Spirit that moves us. He may be able to show unto them the spirit of Christ that there may be begotten within them the spirit to do the will of the Master. If however that spirit which moved the Christ is not that which moves us, it seems to me, worlds without end, we will never be able to accomplish the work. The spirit of greed, the spirit of speculation, the spirit of get rather than give, will not accomplish the designs and purposes of God, and mind you, he says, "I the Lord will hasten my work in its time." He does not promise to hasten our work, the work of some individual or some number of individuals, but he promises to hasten his work; and as I see it if the Spirit of Christ moves us, and we move in harmony with the word as it is written, of necessity the fact that we do so move in harmony with his word, prompted and actuated by the Spirit of Christ, the work of necessity must be hastened. It cannot be otherwise.

As was so beautifully sung this evening, we look for a city whose builder and maker is not a few individuals, or a single individual, but whose builder and maker is God; and to the extent that we appreciate this, to the extent that we make the application in our lives of the word of the Lord we will have part in the building and establishment of that city, whose builder and maker is not the individual, but God.

"WE ARE HERE—NOW WHAT?"

You say, Well, we are here, Brother McGuire, we have come here, now what can we do? I will undertake to say a few things that we may do. If we have not already done so, we can begin by observing the temporal law, and I have no doubt it has been taught from this platform from time to time. We can render obedience to the temporal law.

If our musical instrument here were out of tune, and in attempting to play it we discovered it were so, we would tune it, and we would secure the assistance of one that was experienced in that line of work, and it would be tuned according to correct principles in order that the result we desired should be attained. So if we find that we are out of harmony with the movement of the Lord's people, it seems with the should strive earnestly to learn the mind and will of God. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God who giveth liberally. We find this is very good doctrine. If you cannot understand the necessity of repentance and of receiving remission of sins by baptism by immersion, we refer to the statement of James, wherein he says, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not"; and if that is good instruction for the nonmember it is also good instruction for us who are members. If any of you lack wisdom pertaining to the temporal law, why not ask of God. Let us reason upon this matter for a few minutes.

OUR USE OF WEALTH

If the larger portion of our waking hours are concerned and have to do with obtaining, distributing and using this world's goods, and our heavenly Father is interested in us, do you not suppose he is interested in how we use these things? I believe he is. I cannot understand how my Creator can be interested in me when he is only interested in my attitude toward him, my attitude toward him so far as it does not affect or have any relation whatever to this world's goods. Well, you say, it is all right for God to be interested in us so far as our attitude toward him is concerned; but we have forgotten something, he is also interested in us so far as our attitude towards our fellow men is concerned. Very well, I agree. But how can I show my attitude toward my fellow man if it is not by the way in which I use this world's goods, if I am engaged the larger portion of my waking hours in securing them. The soloist sang very beautifully, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." We are told that upon this law of love is based every correct expression of God's will in human conduct. If the larger portion of our waking hours is used in the acquiring, distributing, and using this world's goods, can we not and do we not express our love to our God and to our fellow men mostly in the way we use these things?

CONVERSANT WITH TEMPORAL LAW

Then it is very essential that we become conversant with the temporal law. Conversant with it to the same extent that we became conversant with the gospel law when we felt to render obedience to the fundamental principles of faith, repentance, baptism, and confirmation.

I have tried to show you to-night that the gathering can only be accomplished, can only be hastened by the Lord in his way, and that if it is not done in accordance with the spirit of the law of the celestial kingdom, that which will result from gathering together will not be Zion. On the other hand, if we as individuals, with hearts attuned to God, with love burning in our bosoms for our fellow men, with an understanding of the law which he has given and a disposition and an earnest endeavor to apply it in our lives are gathered together, there may be Zion. There came to my attention yesterday a case where two had been living together but their hearts did not beat as one. I believe that if we congregate, and our hearts do not beat in harmony with the Spirit of the Master, we will be as far away and as far from the accomplishment of the designs and purposes of God, and I do not know but we will be farther away than if we had not assembled ourselves together. Because the closer we get together, the nearer we live to each other, entertaining different views, having different dispositions, different desires and ambitions, the more intense and bitter the warrings and jarrings, instead of there being reflected and radiated from this assembly of people that for which the nations of the earth will inquire.

READY FOR PEACE

Now the Saints over the country the past year have been very generous and I believe there is a disposition on their part to learn what the law of the Lord is, and to apply it, and as a consequence of that there has come into the coffers of the church hundreds, yea, thousands of dollars, and we have been able to accomplish to a great extent that which we have promised the people of the church we would do. Suppose that same disposition continues: the Saints turn into the treasury their funds, and we are able to liquidate all our debts and are able to build up a large surplus fund. Suppose the Saints come together, but that they come not altogether in harmony with the word of the Lord as it has been given to us. When the terrible war is ended—and I hope some day it may be to that extent at least that we may send the gospel to the nations of the world—suppose from among the people of God's church there may be chosen those who are able to carry the message of life and love to those who have been suffering the consequences of this terrible conflict. Suppose they go to these people who have borne the burden, those who have given their property, their bodies, their hearts in an effort to bring out of this social cataclysm a condition of peace and harmony, and say to them, Here is the panacea for all your social ills; here is the remedy for all; the gospel of Jesus Christ restored to mankind in 1830. Suppose the person to whom this statement is made asks some question about like this: The gospel of Jesus Christ restored to the earth in 1830? There have been several generations born into the world since this gospel was first preached. These men and women have, during eighty to one hundred years, been trying to make application of these principles of life which you are now teaching which you say will accomplish such results, what has been the consequences in the lives of these people? Tell me about the condition you speak of as Zion, a condition where peace obtains, where men love their fellow men, where all men have their wants and their needs that are just amply supplied, where there is no war among them, where they all love one another. You say these people live in the State of Missouri and in the regions round about. There are hundreds and thousands of these people. Does this condition obtain among them? Suppose we do not live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God. Suppose we do not live by the spirit and letter of the law of God, what good will it do for us to send out these men?

IT CAN BE DONE—IS BEING DONE

I believe that the Saints can demonstrate the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I believe the people of God are doing it. It is true it cannot all be accomplished in a day. But God will hasten his work in its time, and although we may pass many resolutions, and may form many organizations, and may do of ourselves many mighty works, if it is not in harmony with the spirit and letter of the law of God, God's work will not be hastened in its time. The work will be hastened in its time. We can gather together and make application of the principles of the gospel so as to gain favor with those among whom we move. In section 128 of Book of Covenants we are told that in the enjoyment of these privileges, in this getting together we should not withdraw ourselves so completely from a qualified dependence upon our Gentile neighbors as to be entirely free from intercommunication with them; yet it is incumbent upon the Saints while reaping the benefits of these organizations to so conduct themselves in the carrying into operation the details of their organizations as to be in the world but not of it, living and acting honestly and honorably before God and in the sight of all men, using the things of this world in the manner designed of God, that the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord.

The Saints are striving earnestly to make application of the law of Jesus Christ, the law of the celestial kingdom, and if they gather together so that they are the individuals who compose Zion as a consequence of this gathering will have much strength. Not to hold fast to something to the exclusion of their neighbors, but rather that there may result from this gathering the instrumentality, if you please, through which there may shine forth to the world the light of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and bring to suffering humanity that which God hath designed that ultimately peace on earth and good will to all men may soon prevail, is our prayer.

God will hasten HIS work in its time.

ENTER INTO THE RESTORED CHURCH

In the world to-day are many organizations denominated churches, the number of which, according to statistics, vary all the way from six hundred to thirteen hundred. For our present purpose it will suffice to take the minimum number, since our aim and object, as manifest in the title, is to show that there never has been and never will be more than one true church of God.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

Generally used in the Scriptures to indicate the church of Jesus Christ are four synonymous terms, will be conceded by all professed Christians, which are "the kingdom," "the church," "the body of Christ," and "the bride, the Lamb's wife." That the church established by Christ, when in the flesh, was also the kingdom of God, is supported by the statement of the Lord Jesus when he said, "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." (Luke 16: 16.)

There is one passage of Scripture at which many Bible readers stumble. It is found in Luke 17: 20, 21.

And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for behold, the kingdom of God is within you.

Should I indiscriminately choose an individual from amongst the multitude of followers of the popular sects of the day and inquire for the interpretation of the foregoing two verses, the response most undoubtedly would be, "It means that the kingdom of God is the universal reign of Christ in the heart." This definition of the kingdom of God seems to the writer peculiar. Can a kingdom be concentrated to that extent that it will be possible to incorporate it within the precincts of the organ of the human body known as the heart? "Ah, but," says the reverent professing Christian, "you must not make the word of God too literal, for the words of Christ are Spirit and life, and then, does not Christ say in the two verses quoted, 'The kingdom of God cometh not with observation,' therefore the kingdom referred to is a mysterious spiritual kingdom, which enters into the hearts of men."

We agree that the kingdom of God is a spiritual kingdom, but, reader, just turn to the passage in your King James' translation of the Bible and there, in the margin, you will see the alternative rendering of the last phrase of the twenty-first verse of Luke 17, which is, "or, among you." The sense of this rendering is used in all modern translations of the New Testament, and it can be seen to be the most reasonable, when compared with other texts on the subject. Then again, should we work upon the hypothesis that the kingdom of God is the universal reign of Christ in the heart, we will be compelled to face the fact that Christ reigned with hypocrites and whited sepulchers, amidst uncleanness. The Pharisees, to whom Christ said, the kingdom of God is within you," were the same sect to whom Christ said:

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves. . . . Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchers, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness.—Matthew 23: 15, 27.

It could never be thus, since the influence of Christ does not cause men to be hypocrites. We would again refer you to Luke 16: 16, in which the statement is made, "since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." This statement gives the inquirer the clear knowledge of the fact that the kingdom of God is an organization of some description, just as the kingdoms of the world have their different organizations, and, just as any individual who wishes to be a partaker in the privileges of any kingdom on this earth must enter into it and become a subject of it, so those who wish to be partakers of the spiritual blessings must enter into the spiritual kingdom and become subjects of it. The kingdom does not enter into them, but they into the kingdom. What does enter the individual, after he has entered the church or kingdom, is the power of the Holy Spirit, which enables him to perform his duties as a subject of that kingdom.

A SUBJECT OF THE KINGDOM

Should a foreigner arrive in the country and desire to become a naturalized subject, he must go through a certain procedure, and there are not many ways of becoming naturalized, but only one way. Briefly, the procedure in Australia is this; he goes to a fully authorized officer of the king's government and, by going through the ordinance of signing certain specified papers, promises to obey all the laws of the kingdom, the authorized officer vouches to the document and the candidate is a full-fledged subject. Christ said (Matthew 7: 14), "Straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it," and so it is. Just in the same way as many foreigners live for years in the country and do not know how to become naturalized subjects, so many professing Christians live for years within the light of the pure gospel of Christ, but do not know how to become subjects of the kingdom of God, for the reason that they put forth so little effort to find the way.

There are four things common to all kingdoms, both material and spiritual: a king, subjects, a code of laws, and commissioned officers to administer the laws. The church of Christ has all these, and all four of these different functions or functionaries must be acknowledged by the one seeking admittance into the kingdom of God. All Christians acknowledge Christ as king and this our king has said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments."

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

Christ also said to the disciples whom he chose, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. . . . Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained." (John 20: 21, 23.) We also remember the great commission contained in the last verses of the gospel according to Luke. In Acts 2: 37, 38 we find the account of certain people inquiring from a company of duly commissioned officers of King Jesus, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" or in other words, "Men and brethren, how can we become subjects of the kingdom of Christ?" and Peter, the senior commissioned officer, replying, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Have we not quoted something concerning the remission of sins previously in our article? Yes. "Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them." (John 20: 23.) Christ gave this authority to Peter, together with the other apostles, and, when those without the kingdom of God ask Peter what they shall do, he tells them, in his official capacity, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." We do not desire to advocate a similar authority to that claimed by the servants of the papacy. When the foreigner went to the naturalization officer, that officer could not say, "Well, the law does not provide for this method, but if you will promise to work for me for a certain period, I will make you a naturalized subject and promise you all the benefits of the kingdom." No, the officer could not do that, for the reason that it would be departing from the law, neither can a priest or clergyman of any description make an individual a subject of Christ's kingdom, or remit his sins, by praying for that individual, receiving money from him, or sprinkling him with a little water whilst in infancy.

THE ONLY LAW FOR REMISSION OF SINS

Christ's commandments or laws are found in the New Testament and Peter quoted the law relating to the obtaining of the remission of sins, when he stood up on the day of Pentecost, and said, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Peter and his fellow apostles were commissioned to remit sins (see John 20: 23 and Matthew 16: 19), and they were commissioned to perform this act, in the name of the king, in only one way, by one ordinance (see Mark 16: 15, 16), "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." The ordinance of baptism for the remission of sins, administered by one commissioned of Jesus Christ, will have the effect of remitting the sins of the individual who has already believed on the Lord Jesus and repented of sin.

WHERE ARE COMMISSIONED OFFICERS FOUND?

"Where is a minister, who has been commissioned directly by Jesus Christ, to be found on the earth in this day and age of the world?" you at once inquire. And then, reader, you continue to say, "Have you not already, in this article, condemned all those who claim apostolic succession, by saying that you did not wish to advocate the claims of the servants of the papacy?" Our answer to the latter query is, "Yes." And we would further remind the reader that the churches called nonconformist do not make claim to apostolic succession or direct authority from God. So to whom shall we go? How is it that amongst all the well-known churches of the day there is not one to which we can honestly join ourselves, for the reason that those that claim the historic episcopate have introduced so many innovations, and the nonconformists leave so much undone? James says, 1: 22-25:

But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he is. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed.

THE PERFECT LAW OF LIBERTY

It will be agreed that the gospel is the perfect law of liberty, and the first principles of the gospel are faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost (Hebrews 6: 1, 2). Inquirer, answer this question for yourself, mentally: Are the churches of the day forgetful hearers or are they doers of the work? Is there one, yes one, of the various denominations that teaches its converts that they must have faith, repent of all their sins, be baptized by immersion for the remission of sins, and receive the laying on of hands, by one having authority, for the gift of the Holy Ghost? There is not one, amongst the large number of organizations, that teaches these four first principles, therefore they are all unacknowledged and guilty before God, "for whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." (James 2: 10.)

A GREAT OFFICER EXPRESSES SURPRISE

Paul, in his day, expressed surprise at the departures from the gospel of those who professed to follow Christ, for he wrote to the Galatians: "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ, unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." (Galatians 1: 6-8.) Paul gave a similar warning to the Corinthians by stating:

But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him [margin reads me].—2 Corinthians 11: 3, 4.

AN APOSTASY

We here claim that there has been an apostasy of the church, not upon our own initiative, but for the reason that God's word has been in prophecy that there would be an apostasy from his church. "Now, here," you at once suggest, "I cannot accept the foregoing claim, for the reason that Christ said to Peter, 'Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.'" We might say that the "it" meant the rock and not the church, but it is unnecessary for us to follow up this line of argument.

DEATH AND HELL

What are the gates of hell, or, in other words, what is it that opens up the way to hell? Our answer is, "Death." In Isaiah's prophecy, 38: 10, we find an expression concerning king Hezekiah's death, which tends to show that the gates of hell are "death," reading thus: "I said in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the gates of the grave: I am deprived of the residue of my years." We notice that the plural form of the word gate is used, and would say that there are two kinds of death: spiritual and physical. "By sin came death," are words well remembered by all, and it is recognized that if the spirit of man is not in harmonious communication with God through the Holy Spirit, it is dead. When Adam sinned, he fell away or apostatized, but since that time the Adamic race has been restored to communication with God through the Holy Spirit, and ultimately will be restored to life everlasting.

AS WITH MAN, SO WITH CHURCH

As with man, so with the church, for according to God's word concerning the church, its death, spiritual and material, and its resurrection, have been decreed. What mean these sayings of Christ and his apostles: Matthew 11: 12: "And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." 2 Thessalonians 2: 3: "Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day [second coming of Christ] shall not come, except there come a falling away first." 2 Timothy 4: 3, 4: "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." The foregoing sayings are plain as to their meaning—they mean an apostasy.

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION

With the death of the first apostles, the authority in the church and the purity of its teachings seems to have waned. Would the death of a few men cause a divine organization to crumble away? Emphatically, no! reply the apostolic successionists, and we say no, also, providing that the members of the organization kept its teachings pure, but this they did not do, as all theologians admit, and therefore forfeited all God-given authority by becoming disobedient to the king and his perfect law of liberty.

WHAT IS TO BE RESTORED?

Since we have arrived at the fact that the church died or apostatized, we may now discourse upon its resurrection or restoration. But, hold! If the church is to be restored, what doctrines and offices are to be replaced? We affirm that it should be every whit made whole. Matthew 24: 14: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Therefore, the same doctrine is to be restored with the church. Ephesians 4: 11-13: "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith," etc. Therefore, the same officers are to be restored with the church.

THE MANNER OF RESTORATION

The manner of the restoration of the church is described by Christ in this way: His apostles were sent at dinner time, as announced in Matthew 22: 1-4, and then again, He would send a servant at supper time, as is stated in Luke 14: 15-20. In the book of Revelation, after an account of the apostasy of the church, which is represented by a woman, has been given, and also the rising up of a false church, in the fourteenth chapter, at verse six, we read: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed," are words of Paul that we have already quoted. The angel of Revelation 14: 6 is not to bring another gospel, but the same everlasting gospel. Notice these words of the verse, "Having the everlasting gospel to preach." This evidently means that the angel would not do the preaching, but that the angel would commit the gospel into the hands of some who would preach it. Would the angel not commit the gospel into the hands of the servant who was to be sent at supper time?

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

We now announce that the angel having the everlasting gospel has appeared, the servant has been sent at supper time, and the church of Jesus Christ has been restored in its purity. The kingdom of heaven is now preached, and we invite every man to press into it. "Enter ye in at the straight gate."

OF GENERAL INTEREST

WASHINGTON'S VISION

[Various ones have urged us to reprint "Washington's vision," believing it of great importance as relating to the present world conditions. It was published in the HERALD of June 2, 1915, but since we have a large number of new subscribers who cannot secure that number, we herewith reproduce the article for what it may be worth, simply to gratify the desires of those who have made the request. We do not wish to appear to indorse the validity or application of the matter in any way. There is no way to verify its source nor that it is a genuine reproduction, if George Washington had such a vision.—EDITORS.]

The last time I ever saw Anthony Sherman, was on the Fourth of July, 1859, in Independence Square. He was then ninety-nine, and becoming very feeble; but though so old, his dimming eyes rekindled as he gazed upon Independence Hall, which he had come to gaze upon once more before he was gathered home.

"What time is it?" said he, raising his trembling eyes to the clock in the steeple, and endeavoring to shade the former with a shaking hand, "What time is it? I can't see so well as I used to."

"Half-past three."

"Come then," he continued, "let us go into the hall—I want to tell you an incident of Washington's life, one which no one alive knows of except myself; and if you live, you will before long see it verified. Mark the prediction—you will see it verified!"

Reaching the visitors' room, in which the sacred relics of our early days are preserved, we sat down upon one of the old-fashioned wooden benches, and my venerable companion related to me the following singular narrative, which from the peculiarities of our national affairs at the present time, I have been induced to give to the world. I give it as near as possible in his own words:

When the bold action of our Congress in asserting the independence of the colonies became known in the Old World, we were laughed and scoffed at as silly, presumptuous rebels, whom British grenadiers would soon tame into submission, but undauntedly we prepared to make good what we had said. The keen encounter came and the world knows the result. It is easy and pleasant for the present generation to talk and write of the days of '76, but they little know, neither can they imagine, the trials and sufferings of those fearful days. And there is one thing that I much fear, and that is the American people do not properly appreciate the boon of freedom. Party spirit is yearly becoming stronger and stronger, and without it is checked, will at no distant day, undermine and tumble into ruins the noble structure of the Republic. But let me hasten to the narrative.

From the opening of the Revolution we experienced all phases of fortune, now good and now ill, one time victorious and another conquered. The darkest period we had, however, was, I think, when Washington, after several reverses, retreated to Valley Forge, where he resolved to pass the winter of '77. Ah! I have often seen the tears coursing down our dear old commander's careworn cheeks, as he would be conversing with a confidential officer about the condition of his poor soldiers. You have doubtless heard the story of Washington going to the thicket to pray. Well, it is not only true, but he used often to pray in secret for aid and comfort from God, the interposition of whose divine providence brought us safely through those dark days of tribulation.

One day, I remember it well, the chilly winds whistled through the leafless trees though the sky was cloudless and the sun shining brightly—he remained in his quarters nearly all the afternoon alone. When he came out I noticed his face was a shade paler than usual, and that there seemed to be something on his mind of more than ordinary importance. Returning just after dusk, he dispatched an orderly to the quarters of the officer I mentioned, who was presently in attendance. After preliminary conversation, which lasted about half an hour, Washington, gazing upon his companion with that strange look of dignity, which he alone could command, said to the latter:

"I do not know whether it is owing to the anxiety of my mind or what, but this afternoon as I was sitting at this very table engaged in preparing a dispatch, something in the apartment seemed to disturb me. Looking up, I beheld standing opposite to me a singularly beautiful female. So astonished was I, for I had given strict orders not to be disturbed, that it was some moments before I found language to inquire the cause of her presence. A second, a third, and even a fourth time did I repeat my question, but received no answer from my mysterious visitor, except a slight raising of the eyes. By this time I felt strange sensations spreading through me. I would have risen, but the riveted gaze of the being before me rendered volition impossible. I essayed once more to address her, but my tongue had become powerless. Even thought itself suddenly became paralyzed. A new influence, mysterious, potent, irresistible, took possession of me. All I could do was to gaze steadily, vacantly at my unknown visitant. Gradually the surrounding atmosphere seemed as though becoming filled with sensations and grew luminous. Everything about me seemed to rarify, the mysterious visitor herself becoming more airy, and yet even more distinct to my sight than before.

I now began to feel as one dying, or rather to experience the sensations which I have sometimes imagined accompanied dissolution. I did not think, I did not reason, I did not move; all were alike impossible. I was only conscious of gazing fixedly, vacantly at my companion.

"Presently I heard a voice saying, 'Son of the Republic, look and learn'; while at this same time my visitor extended her arm eastwardly. I now beheld a heavy white vapor at some distance, rising fold upon fold. This gradually dissipated, and I looked upon a strange scene. Before me lay spread out in one vast plain all the countries of the world, Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. I saw rolling and tossing between Europe and America the billows of the Atlantic, and between Asia and America lay the Pacific.

"'Son of the Republic,' said the same mysterious voice as before, 'look and learn.'

"At that moment I beheld a dark, shadowy being like an angel, standing, or rather floating, in mid-air between Europe and America. Dipping water out of the ocean in the hollow of each hand, he sprinkled some upon America with his right hand, while he cast upon Europe some with his left. Immediately a dark cloud raised from each of these countries and joined in mid-ocean. For a while it remained stationary, and then moved slowly westward, until it enveloped America in its murky folds. Sharp flashes of lightning gleamed through it at intervals, and I heard the smothering groans and cries of the American people.

"A second time the angel dipped water from the ocean and sprinkled it out as before. The dark cloud was then drawn back to the ocean in whose heaving waves it sank from view. A third time I heard the mysterious voice, saying, 'Son of the Republic, look and learn.'

"I cast my eyes upon America, and beheld villages, towns, and cities springing up, one after another, until the whole land from the Atlantic to the Pacific was dotted with them. And again I heard the mysterious voice say:

"'Son of the Republic, look and learn.'

"At this the dark, shadowy angel turned his face southward, and from Africa I saw an ill-omened specter approach our land. It flitted slowly and heavily over town and city of the latter, the inhabitants of which presently set themselves in battle array against each other. As I continued looking I saw a bright angel on whose brow rested a crown of light, on which was traced 'Union,' bearing the American flag, which was placed between the divided nation, and said, 'Remember ye are brethren.'

"Instantly the inhabitants, casting from them their weapons, became friends once more, and united around the national standard. And again I heard the mysterious voice saying, 'Son of the Republic, the end of the century cometh, look and learn.'

"At this the dark, shadowy angel placed a trumpet to his mouth, and blew three distinct blasts, and taking water from the ocean, sprinkled it upon Europe, Asia, and Africa.

"Then my eyes beheld a fearful scene. From each of these countries arose thick, black clouds, that were soon joined into one. And throughout this mass there gleamed a dark red light, by which I saw the hordes of armed men, who, moving with the cloud, marched by land and sailed by sea to America, which country was enveloped in the volume of the cloud. And I dimly saw those vast armies devastate the whole country, and burn the villages, towns, and cities that I beheld spring up. As my ears listened to the thundering of cannon, clashing of swords, and shouts and cries of the millions in mortal combat, I again heard the mysterious voice saying, 'Son of the Republic, look and learn.'

"When the voice had ceased, the dark, shadowy angel placed his trumpet to his mouth, and blew a long, fearful blast.

"Instantly a light as if a thousand suns shone down from above me, and pierced and broke into fragments the dark cloud which enveloped America. At the same moment I saw the angel upon whose head still shone the word Union, and who bore our national flag in one hand and a sword in the other, descended from heaven attended by legions of bright spirits. These immediately joined the inhabitants of America who I perceived were well-nigh overcome, but who, immediately taking courage, again closed up their broken ranks and renewed the battle. Again, amid the fearful noise of conflict, I heard the mysterious voice saying, 'Son of the Republic, look and learn.'

"As the voice ceased, the shadowy angel for the last time dipped water from the ocean and sprinkled it on America. Instantly the dark cloud rolled back, together with the armies it had brought, leaving the inhabitants of the land victorious. Then once more I beheld villages, towns, and cities springing up where they had been before, while the bright angel, planting the azure standard he had brought, in the midst of them cried in a loud voice, 'While the stars remain and the heavens send down dew upon the earth, so long shall the Republic last.'

"And taking from his brow the crown on which blazoned the word Union, he placed it upon the standard, while the people kneeling down said, 'Amen.'

"The scene instantly began to fade and dissolve, and I at last saw nothing but the rising, curling vapor I had first beheld. This also disappearing, I found myself once more gazing on my mysterious visitor, who in the same voice I had heard before, said:

"'Son of the Republic, what ye have seen is thus interpreted: Three perils will come upon the Republic. The most fearful is the second, passing which, the whole world united, shall never be able to prevail against her. Let every child of the Republic learn to live for his God, his land, and the Union.'

"With these words the vision vanished, and I started from my seat, and felt that I had seen a vision wherein had been shown me the birth, progress, and destiny of the United States.

"In union she will have her strength, in disunion her destruction."

Such, my friend, concluded the venerable narrator, were the words I heard from Washington's own lips, and America will do well to profit by them.

CORNERSTONE OF HEBREW UNIVERSITY LAID

In the presence of General Allenby, the conqueror of Palestine, General Storrs, British Military Governor of Jerusalem, their staffs, the Mohammedan Grand Mufti, and a vast concourse of the Jewish, Christian, and Mohammedan population of the Holy City, the cornerstones of the Hebrew University were laid on the Mount of Olives on July 30.

The description of this impressive and unique ceremony which has been cabled to the Zionist Organization of America states that Doctor Weizmann, head of the Jewish Administrative Commission, set twelve stones in place, each representing one of the tribes of Israel.

Among the guests of honor were the diplomatic representatives in Jerusalem of France and Italy, and military squads from the troops of both of these countries and Great Britain. Thousands of Jews came from every part of the liberated sections of Palestine to participate in the ceremony and were joined by delegations from Cairo and Alexandria. The Right Honorable Arthur J. Balfour, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, sent a congratulatory cablegram.

Doctor Weizmann announced in the course of his address that the University would have faculties covering every branch of art and science and special faculties for the Arabic language and sciences.—The American Hebrew.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Congratulations Are Due!

We are again at home, after spending three weeks "back east" getting acquainted with a little granddaughter. "Jane Audentia" is the name chosen for the little lady, and she found a most joyous welcome indeed when she arrived, early on the morning of July 27. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harlow G. Frederick, of Joliet, Illinois, are already building many air castles concerning the future of the little princess, and in common with most young parents, are doubtless believing that to them has been committed the gem of the whole collection of daughters.

As a fond and doting grandparent, we do not feel inclined to dispute this position, and only regret that circumstances have it that we should live apart—too far to watch the daily development of the beloved child. We are very proud, however, of this new acquisition to our family circle, and feel assured of the hearty congratulations of our friends upon the event.

Anew we have been meditating upon the wonderful experience of motherhood—of parenthood. The "copartnership with God," whereby there is committed to the care of erring human beings, the soul and body of another pilgrim through earthly life. How much depends upon that care; how much upon the earnestness with which those parents regard that responsibility! Eternity is involved, and the everlasting good as well as the present comfort of the child so intrusted! Latter Day Saint parents should—and we fondly believe do—view this trust in a truer light than evidently do many around us. Our mothers are trying to discharge their responsibilities with wide vision, with as clear a view of eternal consequences as is possible for them to obtain. They are studying with an earnestness, that they may be qualified to act wisely, to love with a divine love instead of a selfish and thoughtless one. They are trying to keep in mind the eternal welfare of the soul of their child, and not simply make provisions for the comfort and development of its body.

Sister Lydia Wight, the supervisor of our Home and Child Welfare Bureau, has forwarded to us a most excellent collection of articles on the training of little children. These articles are intended to be placed within the reach of every mother in the church, and nothing will better please the good sisters who are trying to develop the interest of our women in this department, than to be completely "swamped" with letters concerning it.

Hide not your light "under a bushel," but let it shine forth to the guiding of many who stumble; if you have received aught that has touched your heart and your intellect in regard to the moral duty of "preparedness" on the part of our mothers, will you not in kindness join our little army of women who are striving to hold out the light to others? Will you not gather about you a few of your friends who share your common crown of motherhood, talk to them of these important things, get them to join you in outlining a course of study, in order that they may indeed show themselves to be workmen who need not to be ashamed before God or man?

Write to Sister Wight; you may reach her at Lamoni, Iowa. She will respond with quick and ready help, and her plans are practical and workable in every particular. Sisters, it is our part, in this plan for Zion's redemption. It is as necessary to victory in this combat of spiritual forces, as is the Red Cross and other valuable women's organizations in the struggle overseas. We must banish error, the sins of ignorance. Mothers must bring up their "children in light and truth," and how can we lead them to any destination we cannot clearly locate ourselves? We must learn for ourselves where lies darkness, where light; where is error and where truth, on many of these multitudinous questions which are to-day sapping at the vitality and the morality of the young. "Redeem" them we must; snatch them from the burning, the suffering which must follow in the wake of mistaken thought. "Come up higher," occupy the planes of purity and consecration which are above all pettishness, above all jealousies, all trivialities, and move forward with the triumphant hosts of those who love the light, and the day of righteousness.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Mothers' and Teachers' Problems

The aim of this department is to provide a systematized study of child nature and child training and to assist both mothers and teachers, by their cooperation, to a better understanding of child unfoldment.

For many years the women's organization of the church has recognized the importance of this line of study and has presented it in various forms to the women of the church.

These years of somewhat fragmentary study have been the stimuli for a more intensive investigation such as we are now offering in text book form with prepared outlines on each chapter.

"It is strange," says a writer, "that the child should be the last of all God's creatures to be studied scientifically," "and it is still more strange," says another, "that we have been content to teach children so long without knowing more about them as individuals."

The child is quite commonly spoken of as a "problem"; certainly, to be developed in untrained hands, he would be a great problem.

Fortunately many children are reared through the intuitive psychology of the mother and are comforting to live with. Racial tendencies to goodness are found in groups of families. But maternity and paternity of themselves do not qualify us for parenthood. Parenthood should be regarded as a science and a profession. Observations of teachers in the schoolroom give evidence of the great need of parents to recognize this fact. Too often teachers must become disciplinarians, time is lost, ill feeling engendered, all because fundamental work of parents was neglected or not understood.

The first six years of a child's life are precious years—precious because parents have the child all to themselves, especially the mother—no outside influence supercedes hers—and if the hand that rocks the cradle has ruled the world as well as it has, what could the trained mother hand not do?

By training we mean, first, an understanding of the material we have, second, the end to be accomplished, and third, the method of accomplishing this end. While no two children are exactly the same type, child nature unfolds according to law. It is for parents to understand these laws and provide favorable environment or remove unfavorable environment according to their intelligence, so that there may be the fullest development in each respective period.

Interesting circles in this study have been formed in various parts of the country and most favorable reports have followed.

We solicit your interest and membership. If you reside in a district or stake and wish to join a circle get a few others interested and write to the Woman's Auxiliary organizer and she will tell you exactly how to proceed. Her name and address may be secured through the secretary, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Street, Independence, Missouri. Or if you reside outside of a district or stake write to the superintendent of the Educational Department, Mrs. Dora Glines, Independence, Missouri.

The textbook used is Child Study and Child Training, by W. B. Forbush; price $1. It can be bought at Bryant and Douglass Book and Stationery Company, Kansas City, Missouri. A copy of same may be examined at the Woman's Building.

American Mothers! Watch Your Children's Teeth!

One of the facts which American mothers must face squarely if they are to do their part in the building the future nation is concerned with the condition of the teeth of American children. How serious a matter this actually is is illustrated in the report of the Provost Marshal General to the Secretary of War, regarding the rejections of recruits for the new Army in the first draft. Over a third, counting rejections at camps, were rejected for physical disqualifications. A preliminary analysis of the cause of rejection in 10,000 cases, shows that more were turned back for defective teeth than for any other single cause except defects of the eyes.

Such a showing as this is more discreditable since for years we have known that the children in our public schools have bad teeth, and the remedies for this condition have been understood. It is true that many mothers live at an inconvenient, even prohibitive distance from dentists; and many more feel unable to bear the expense of dental work; but one of the greatest sources of danger to the children is the fact that so many mothers do not realize the serious and far-reaching effect of neglected teeth and do not understand how to prevent the need of expensive dental work.

The quality of every child's teeth is partly determined before he is born, when the embryonic teeth are growing. This is one of the many urgent reasons why the mother's diet and general hygiene should be scrupulously watched and every means to keep her in excellent health should be employed. After the baby is born the baby's food becomes a matter of prime importance if his teeth are to be strong. These matters are treated in two pamphlets, Prenatal Care and Infant Care which will be sent free of charge upon request to the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia.

As the child grows out of babyhood, not only the diet, but the care of the milk teeth must be clearly understood. It has been demonstrated that the child's first teeth can be so preserved that he arrives at the age of second dentition without a decayed tooth, and the permanent set comes through in perfect condition. Like everything else in the child's care this depends more upon the patient and intelligent care given each day by the mother in the home, than upon outside help. Let us all, American mothers, resolve that our children shall not come to their school life nor later to their adult life as American citizens in anything less than the most perfect condition which it is possible for us to secure.

MRS. MAX WEST.

Let the people sneer, scoff, laugh, and ridicule (who will) at an upright, onward course, even if it be called by the name of "Mormonism," it will soon evince to the world that there is more independence in a forgiving smile than there is in the society of the mean and vulgar.—John Hawley.

The Nation's Eyes

What of our children's eyes? Recent investigation into the condition of American school children reveal that about one fifth—20 per cent—are handicapped by defective vision, and in a considerable number of cases these defects are serious. How gravely this affects the Nation's welfare is demonstrated by the findings in the recent examination of recruits for the new Army. More than 730,000 men called in the first draft were rejected for physical disqualifications. Of the 10,000 cases which were analyzed in detail, more than one-fifth had been rejected for defects of the eye. This single cause was responsible for more than twice as many rejections as the next highest cause, namely, defects of the teeth, and for three or four times as many as most of the other defects. It is, therefore, plain that American parents should take much more anxious thought as to the condition of their children's eyes during the years when the harm is most likely to be done and when trouble can most readily be prevented or cured.

The first essential is to insure the soundest possible health at birth. This depends in a certain measure upon the health and diet of the mother before the baby is born. Proper food and care for the baby throughout infancy and childhood when the structures of the body are growing at the most rapid rate are necessary. Improper or insufficient food, neglect and illness are among the causes which interfere with growth and healthy development of the body in every part and no doubt affect the growing eyes in the same way.

But even when the fundamental laws of good health have been observed and when the eyes are strong and healthy to begin with, they should have very special care from the moment of birth. Directions for this are found in two bulletins of the Children's Year, entitled Prenatal Care and Infant Care. Both these bulletins will be sent free in response to all requests. Send your name and full address clearly written to the Chief of the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, District of Columbia.

Babies are often allowed to lie in their carriages with the sun shining directly into their eyes, or are permitted to look straight into a bright artificial light, thus working harm to the delicate nerves of the eye. As children grow they often strain their eyes by reading or doing other close work in a poor light, or too soon after illness, when the eyes are particularly subject to injury. It is necessary, therefore, that parents know what the care of the eyes involves and so safeguard this precious sense in their children that the inefficiency and unhappiness resulting from defective vision shall be steadily reduced.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

The Kirtland Temple: As Seen by Augustine Dwyer

It was a warm, sultry afternoon in August when I entered that valley in Ohio called Kirtland. Indeed, there is nothing to characterize it as a community, because it is neither a town nor a village, but a fine domain of rolling landscape with rich woodlands and well-cultivated fields. At one time there must have been a flourishing community here. The same bells, in the temple belfry, that summoned them to prayer, still ring out their harmonious sounds over the distant fields. Ineffable influences seem to bless the spot, for there are in it lingering memories of a people who wished to flee from the temptations of the world, and in this secluded spot, by a closer union with God, attain the fullness of Christlike character. In the silent hush of the temple one can almost hear the reverent tread of their footsteps in the aisles.

The place has a fascinating interest for every visitor who loves to revel in the past, and who seeks a tonic for his own spirit in the heroism of those who went before him over life's pathway, treading the rough places, oftentimes with bleeding feet, and leaving their lives as a heroic pattern to all who could come after them.

The temple has stood here for nearly a century. There is nothing in its appearance to indicate weariness of its aged unchangeableness. The approach to it, over a shady road, prepares the mind for its solemn contemplation. Whenever I pass its threshold it seems as if I were stepping back to an age and to a people that are no more. The grounds about the temple are well kept. Vigorous, flourishing maple trees stand on either side like sentinels guarding the sacred edifice from profane intrusion. I often sit within its shadow allowing the influence of the place to bear me back over the years, to that far-off day, when the Saints assembled here—a mighty host—and with a shout of Alleluia laid the corner stone of the edifice.

What their dreams, their hopes, their ambitions were, the temple is still telling to all who come and go. They who labored in its construction did not foresee the results of their patient toil, nor of their prayers, perhaps their tears. Their hearts were filled with the power of a great faith, which made their toil a labor of love, an act of worship to the God they served. With a thought to endurance, and of service to those who would come after them, they laid stone upon stone. In widely scattered cemeteries they rest from their labors, but their work lives after them—an eloquent testimony to their faith.

And so here in this Ohio valley the Kirtland Temple stands like a relic of a past age, but bearing witness to a gospel that is the same yesterday, to-day, and forevermore. The spire still points to the clouds, symbolizing the upward gaze of the first worshipers of the temple. I have walked around it many times. An atmosphere of antiquity hangs over it like a prophetic mantle. It appeals to the mind and halts the attention, like a chapter of history written in stone.

The gray walls are discolored by the dampness of the passing years, but the beauty of the temple is within. To enter it is to behold the embodiment of the beatitude of the Savior: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." The whole interior of the edifice is painted white, with here and there flashes of gold. The white of the temple is not a glaring white, but a soft, subdued white, pleasing to the eye and uplifting to the soul. The pillars glisten in a coating of white enamel, standing out in accented grace, speaking, as it were, to every visitor the wonderful words of Revelation: "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name."

It was with a peculiar sense of fitness, like unto an inspiration, that led those intrusted with the care of the temple to paint the interior white. Any other color would misinterpret its meaning. The world, in many places, has turned a deaf ear to the gospel, and many who once received it have waxed cold. The old scene at Capernaum is repeated: "From that time many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him." But these chaste walls of the temple bear testimony to those who are found faithful, and seem to say to all who enter, what the angel commanded John to write to one of the seven churches: "Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy."

To me the temple is a silent but eloquent memory of a people who suffered and endured, and at last prevailed, and became pillars in that everlasting temple, not made by hands, but where the builder and maker is God.

This lovely valley is one of the quietest places in the world. Few sounds break in upon the Sabbath stillness. The brooks gliding down the hillsides, and the river dam beside the crumbling mill, just murmur enough to lull one to repose. Then in the long summer afternoon is heard the whistle of the quail, or the bleating of a lamb, fearful of separation from the flock. If ever I should wish for a retreat, whither I might steal from the "madding crowd," from the turmoil and care of life, I know of none where heart and mind could find such repose as here. The temple seems like an expression in stone of the peace that passeth understanding. A visit to the place is a tonic to the soul. It is a relief from the "restless thought's endeavor" that wears out our strength, it is accepting the invitation of Him who loved the quiet haunts of nature: "Come ye apart yourselves and rest awhile."

But nature is not the only power that hovers here with uplifting influences. Perhaps some aged Saint, long halting toward the close of his earthly pilgrimage, will take you by the hand, and with tear-dimmed eyes, relate some act of heroism in the life of those who laid the foundations of the temple. It may be that with quivering lip and deep emotion he will point out to you some spot hallowed by the prophet, or will lead you to the house once occupied by Oliver Cowdery. He will tell you what a busy place the valley was in the early days of the settlement. Certain it is the place still continues under the sway of some blessed spirits that hold a spell over the minds of all who come and go, causing them to walk the aisles of the temple with reverent tread, no matter what their faith or creed may be. The dominant spirit which reigns over the place is the temple. The sun glorifies it by day and the stars keep watch over it by night. If the visitor tarries here for a few weeks, unconsciously he imbibes the spirit of the temple which is "Holiness unto the Lord."

It is the temple and all around it—the valleys, the glens, and the high hills—the variety of sweet singing birds that come here to nest and brood—that might inspire this description. The peace within us is best when there is peace without. The great torrent of the incessant changes, going on in the restless cities, sweeps by this valley unobserved. There is an atmosphere of medieval days about the place. One almost expects to see coming along the dusty Ohio road some meek pilgrim with staff and shell, coming to the temple as to the shrine of a saint.

I have viewed the temple from various points and under different aspects. In all it made a tender appeal to the soul, ever speaking of spiritual realities. Especially impressive did it appear to me, one day during the reunion. The autumn afternoon was wearing on to its solemn close. I came into the grounds and found them covered with tents—the temporary homes of those who had journeyed far to be present at the annual reunion. The scene took one back to the description given by the historian of Israel, Josephus, of the feast of tabernacles at Jerusalem, with the tents of the Israelites pitched everywhere in the vicinity of the temple.

It was a moment for reflection. I sat beneath one of the spreading maples drinking in the impressions the place was making. The sky was clear and serene, and nature wore that rich and golden livery which we always associate with the generous hand of the Giver of all good. The neighboring forests were beginning to put on their sober brown and yellow. A streaming file of wild ducks made their appearance high in the air above the temple. To the west stretched fields of Indian corn, with its golden ears peeping from their leafy shelters. Deeper sank the sun. The horizon was of a golden tint. A slanting ray lingered on the roof of the temple like a smile of the God of the temple.

I sat there and meditated upon the wonderful leading of God that had opened my eyes to "a more excellent way" in giving me the light of the restored gospel of his precious Son. It all seemed so wonderful, so divine, that gazing once more at the temple I could not refrain from uttering the exultant words of David: "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

Organized Class Work

At the joint session of the Sunday school and Religio executive held last April, I was asked to take charge of the organized class work of both organizations.

I have only recently received data, correspondence, and material from the former incumbent, Sister Louise Evans. Owing to the extraordinary demand upon my time during the intervening months since my appointment, I have been unable to give much attention to this department of church work.

I am very desirous of stimulating action in this direction and particularly urge upon the superintendents of Sunday schools and presidents of Religios to make all possible effort to see that the various classes in their respective organizations are organized and particularly those classes represented in the intermediate and senior grades of work.

The organization need not be elaborate to begin with. A president and secretary-treasurer will suffice and especially in the smaller classes and schools.

The purpose of the organized class work is to—

- Institute system.
- Secure team work.
- Develop sociability.
- Maintain comradeship.
- Produce good fellowship.
- Increase class membership.
- Augment the church service.
- Develop the spiritual life.
- Aim for a common objective.
- Sustain harmony and good will.
- Be of assistance to the church.

- Create interest in community work.
- Provide for recreation and amusement.
- Establish basis for adequate service.
- Build up the Sunday school and Religio.
- Intensify study of religious literature.
- Give strength and solidarity to the class.
- Afford suitable recreation and amusement.
- Produce a larger Christian brotherhood.
- Cultivate a moral atmosphere for class membership.
- Arouse the latent forces of each member of the class.
- Prepare young men and women for greater church service.
- Provide opportunity for individual and collective expression.

Awaken a larger and more intelligent interest in world-wide Christian service and work.

I wish to get in touch with all organized classes and to learn the scope and character of work thus far engaged in. Will the officers of district and local schools and societies please supply me with the following information:

1. Number of organized classes in your organization.
2. Names and addresses of officers of each class.
3. A short statement of the activities of each class.
4. Suggestions for the extension of organized class work.

This is a "get-together" age. The forces of evil have combined for the overthrow of liberty and truth and justice. As the children of the light we must unite under a common banner to the overthrow of evil, injustice, and wrong.

If we would fulfill our mission and be true to the trust which God has reposed in us we must be leaders of men.

Our brothers now bleeding and dying on the battlefields of the world command our unselfish service.

The marshaling of the coming generation under the banner of peace is an imperative duty.

The present is our opportunity. May God help us to enter in and occupy.

A Modern Psalm

Blessed is that man who in the latter days owneth an automobile, and who stoppeth on the Lord's Day and at other times at the homes of the poor and afflicted, saying, "All that I have is given me of the Lord. Therefore as you are my brother, (or sister, as the case may be,) and I am my brother's keeper, and as you have not, I will willingly take you to church this day in my automobile. For the Lord hath blessed me all the days of my life, therefore, I am now ready to serve thee, my brother or sister."

For such there is great reward.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

ROSEDALE, INDIANA, July 29, 1918.

Editors Herald: I thought I would write you a few lines, hoping I would say something to encourage some one whose path seems dark and drear. I joined the Latter Day Saint Church twenty years ago next February. In all that time I have had about two years of church privileges. The last twelve years I have never been in an organized branch of Saints.

We all have our troubles, and you may believe I have had my share. Words cannot express the suffering I have endured and the longing for a little sunshine. I have thought sometimes that too much rain would kill the crop, but my experience before I joined the church and since has been an anchor to my soul. Before I knew what the Latter Day Saints taught I contended earnestly for the faith that was once delivered to the saints and the church of the long ago, the signs following the believer.

I had heard only two or three sermons by our ministers when I joined the church. I joined from what I heard people say they taught. It was what I had wanted and had concluded I would never find. Christ said, If anyone come to me he shall know the doctrine, whether I speak of myself or him who sent me. I may believe something that comes from faith, but knowledge comes from experience. I know the signs follow the believer according to his word. Then if God confirms his word as heard in the long ago, we should recognize that he doesn't change, but his promises are true.

God is at the helm, and though you and I may jump overboard and drown ourselves, he will land the good ship Zion in the port of her destination. You and I will be the losers. Then listen to his counsel and walk in the paths of the righteous. Be humble and prayerful. Exercise charity toward the brethren and mankind in general.

Pray for me, and when it goes well with you remember me in your joys.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

ROBERT GRIEVE.

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE, July 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: Having been associated with the Saints all my life, in fact, in my daily occupation worked with them; now after being associated with men of the world for nearly a year I am beginning to understand what isolation means.

During my stay in the States I found great pleasure from associations with the few men of the church I was able to locate; but owing to existing conditions we were not able to look after each other's interests as would have done in civilian life, however, I feel that if greater efforts had been put forth results would have followed.

I realize, to a limited extent, however, the purposes of God in this war; and count it a pleasure to do my little bit wherever I am placed.

Whenever opportunity offers itself, I gladly explain what I believe the true principles of Christianity to be.

Though not permitted to meet with you in service I greatly rejoice in the latter-day work; I feel that God's directing hand has been over me and will continue if I will walk in the straight and narrow way.

I find the Tempter is always on the alert and will catch one if he is not on his guard. He seems to me more on the alert in the Army than anywhere else in all my experience.

I am trying to so live and labor that our heavenly Father will recognize me as his child. My mind travels back to the experiences I have had while associating with the Saints, and my prayer is that you all may continue successfully, and if it is the Lord's good pleasure that I may return and do what I can to further the work.

I still ask an interest in your prayers and not only for myself but for the entire allied armies.

Your brother in Christ,

IRA O. WALDRON.

FORT RILEY, KANSAS, August 9, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have been in the service three months now, and it is just like everything else, sometimes it is all right and other times it is all wrong, but as a whole it is pretty good.

Since being stationed here I have had the privilege of meeting with some of the Saints. Brother Crooker of Topeka, and Brother Clark of Ogden, Kansas, are the principal workers around this part. Brother Crooker in his last sermon described the difference between our people and the Utah church so clearly that even a child could understand. I have come to love the Saints in this part as if I had associated with them all my life, but really my heart is back in Saint Louis.

Asking all the Saints to pray for me that I may overcome all temptations and be a true soldier of Christ, I remain,

Your brother in the faith,

GEORGE A. WILEY.

DALLAS TEXAS, August 11, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am led to write to your column concerning a work that needs to be looked into by some missionary. I have been visiting my mother, Sister Barnett, of Emory, Texas, Route 1, Box 77a, and while there for about two months I attended the Sunday school. I finally taught, and I made known to them the old Jerusalem gospel and they welcomed it with gladness. Now the little schoolhouse is open for anyone to preach in; the people are hungering for the gospel.

If any missionary sees this and can attend to this work, my mother, who is the only Saint out there, lives nine miles east of Emory, and she will welcome you.

Your sister in Jesus,

MATTIE WILLIAMS.

AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND, July 10, 1918.

Editors Herald: The HERALD of May 29 just came to hand. That is how we get the news. Over forty days o'd. But there is much that is new to us in this number. Have devoured half the contents and glad to get it. We are watching with great interest the steps taken of late toward Zionie coordination of effort. When the writer came to Independence, Missouri, in January, 1909, I expected that the church would have use for me as a budding engineer ready to help build up Zion. I did not expect to find all perfection, but hoped to find more cooperation. I was somewhat disappointed in that, but have been ever hopeful and prayerful for real results ever since the Lord spoke on that matter in 1909 as per Doctrine and Covenants 129, and am glad to see something doing.

Our work has been full of incidents that show a lively interest in the gospel in this part of the vineyard. We most always have one hundred or more people on the street to hear us on Sunday afternoon and often have more like two hundred there. We have only gained nine souls in this city so far, but are still hopeful that the Lord has other honest in heart here that are to be gathered out from the world. We have enjoyed the Spirit of the Master in preaching. Elder A. V. Robinson is a genius at chart making and has brought forth some stunning creations of late which have wondrously augmented the public interest in our message.

I visited a town called Taumarunui where the Utah elders had been having great street meetings and debating with everyone who opposed them. I tried to draw them into a public discussion on the question of the marriage covenant and plurality of wives which they had publicly declared to be of divine origin, but they would not come to light. I gave a lecture in the theater, where they had met a Presbyterian minister in discussion, exposing their doctrines and laying before the people our claims. I had a full house. The Presbyterian minister publicly apologized for having "erroneously attacked the character of Joseph Smith," saying that he had been deceived by the statements of the Brighamites. He then thanked me for making clear the distinction between the two bodies, the Reorganized Church and the Brighamites. Said he was glad to learn the truth of the matter, that Joseph Smith had not been the author of polygamy, and that Brigham Young was the real author. Said he had no desire to attack the Book of Mormon since he found that it was not the foundation of the abominable teachings of Utah Mormonism. Then he moved a vote of thanks to me for clearing up these matters and it was carried with applause. I thanked them for this and for the collection which paid the hall rent, $12.50 for the night which had been backed by Mr. Monfries, the Presbyterian minister. After speaking on the street and generally advertising in the town and selling two copies of the Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism Exposed, by J. D. Stead, I passed on. The Utah elder left town without replying to me. I hope the Lord will bless the seed scattered there.

Editors Herald: A few lines from this field. I have had some successful meetings this year. I have experienced some happy hours seeing others enjoy the Spirit of God by coming into the church and kingdom. Two weeks ago I met with Brother J. F. Curtis at this place. He is like Paul of old converting the people to that same beautiful gospel. He has baptized nineteen at this place and at Fisher. It is indeed strengthening to meet with a servant of the Lord like Brother Curtis.

On the 22d of this month, Brother J. T. Riley began a debate at Fisher with a Baptist preacher by the name of D. N. Jackson. I acted as Brother Riley's moderator. The church propositions were on trial.

Brother Riley was in the lead. In Elder Jackson's first speech he said he had come down to Fisher to blow up Mormonism, and the last thing that would be seen of it would be the bush of its tail. Elder Jackson put me in mind of a story I heard about a little boy who carried some powder out in the yard to blow up a stump. He was going to blow it up because he had hurt his foot on it. He put the powder down by the stump and set a match to it and it nearly blew out his eyes. And while his mother was doctoring his eyes, he asked her if the stump was still there. She said, "Yes, my son, it is, just as if you had never been there." So in a month from now the good people of Fisher will never know that Elder Jackson was ever there, and the gospel will still remain in Fisher gathering in the good people.

The thing which was hurting the elder was that Brother Riley had baptized several of the Baptist people into the church. His attack on us was about as usual. He sprang a new idea about the late president, Joseph Smith. He said that he was ordained by men who did not belong to the original church. Brother Riley showed that they did, so he dropped that. He tried to show that Joseph Smith the Martyr taught and practiced polygamy, but he went to Salt Lake City to get his proofs. But the courts of the United States set those witnesses aside years ago, and Brother Riley had that well in hand for him.

Elder Jackson's attack was very weak to say the least. When it came to the Baptist proposition, Jackson just kept right on with his negative speeches, attacking the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. He said Spaulding wrote the Book of Mormon. When Brother Riley took up the Baptist question, six or eight of the best historians of the Baptist Church were brought on the stand and testified that Roger Williams organized the first Baptist Church in America.

To say we had a victory would be putting it mildly. A fine man and lady were baptized next day after the debate.

There are as fine Saints in the Fisher Branch as I ever met. They are willing to sacrifice all for the gospel. They gave us money until we had our pocketbook full. May God bless those good people. Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

SUPERIOR, WISCONSIN, August 3, 1918.

Editors Herald: We have moved to this place and Brother Young is working for the Government. If there are any Saints living at this place, or at Duluth, which is just across the lake, we would be pleased to meet them. Also if any of the elders are passing we will gladly share our little with them.

Our desire for some time has been to locate in the stakes of Zion, but the way has not yet been fully prepared before us. We would love so much to be associated with Saints. Being isolated so long from the church and elders, we feel almost spiritually starved, yet under all the trying circumstances and perilous times, we are trying to serve the Lord, and want to do our little bit and help to further the Master's cause. Hoping this will bring us within the reach of some elders or Saints, we remain,

Your brother and sister in Christ,

BERTHA, WYOMING, August 4, 1918.

Dear Brethren: Will briefly tell you that I am busy of late in doing what I can in the way of opening the way for preaching in this far-away, undeveloped West. The families of Saints, their neighbors and friends, planned a picnic for the Fourth at Ewing. They invited me, and although I had never made a speech on such an occasion, I consented to try. I rode on horseback twenty-two miles or more the day before in order to reach the grounds and be on time.

We had a nice crowd, a good program, and an old-fashioned picnic dinner.

I used the first three words in the first verse of the first chapter of Genesis as a text for my address. I enjoyed splendid liberty.

After the services I was requested to stay over Sunday and preach for them. I stayed, and at the same grounds where we had the picnic I preached at 11 a. m. We enjoyed where we had the picnic I preached at 11 a. m. We enjoyed a splendid dinner on the lawn of Mr. Davidson, the postmaster. After dinner we got together and organized a Sunday school, with Sister Pearl Redding as superintendent, Mrs. Davidson, secretary; it is to be known as the Barlow Canyon Sunday School. Sufficient means was collected to send to the Herald Office for supplies. I also proposed the erection of a log church which met with the approval of all.

I was called upon to preach the funeral sermon of a neighbor lady who passed away July 24. Although I had never preached a funeral sermon I consented to make the effort. I had an interested congregation, all worldly people except my son and his wife. I enjoyed splendid liberty. After the services one of the leading ladies of the neighborhood invited me to come to her home and hold preaching services. I consented to do so, and at the grave gave out an appointment for August 11, which I will try to fill, the Lord being my helper. To-day, the 4th, I preached at Barlow Canyon and left an appointment for four weeks from to-day.

I also have an appointment near my home for the 18th. To-day I enjoyed splendid liberty, and the people paid fine attention. I invited any present to ask questions at the close of my discourse. I think the way for preaching the word is opening up in fine shape, and expect to keep the interest alive.

My health is not as good as I would like but I intend to keep busy. Our crops are fine—harvest is in full blast. Everybody has his hands full with harvesting and haying. Help is scarce.

Your brother in the faith,

C. W. DILLON.

JOPLIN, MISSOURI, August 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: Our reunion which closed here on the 11th was among the best we have ever held in this district. For ten days there was not a jar, nor complaint, but all the Saints mingled and worshiped under the spirit of peace and unity, and the light of truth and life was diffused to the uplifting of every soul. The attendance was about equal to former years. The beautiful park was freely offered by the park board with whom we have the reputation of being clean and orderly upon the grounds, and the Saints gathered from all parts of the district, together with local nonmembers to enjoy the annual outing.

Brother J. F. Curtis was with us throughout, and Brethren Ellis Short, J. F. Keir, William Aylor, and H. O. Smith were present a portion of the time, besides whom were the district ministry, A. C. Silvers, A. V. Karlstrom, Lee Quick, William Bath, Sidney Gray, O. P. Sutherland, and the writer. In behalf of the work of the Sunday school, Religio, and Woman's Auxiliary we had as field worker Sister Blanche Andrews of Lincoln, Nebraska, who rendered valuable and acceptable service in those lines, ably assisted by A. V. Karlstrom, superintendent of district Sunday schools, Emmett Lancaster, district president of Religio, and Sister J. A. Graves, district president of Woman's Auxiliary. District chorister, Neil McCallum, and assistant general chorister, Ed Bell, had charge of the choir work and by their efforts helped very much in making the reunion a success. Under the management of A. V. Karlstrom the commissary department furnished excellent meals, in fact, the best we have had in years, for 20 cents each to regular boarders or 25 cents each for single meals, with only a slight deficit. Considering the drouth and shortage of vegetables, with high prices, besides food restrictions, this was an excellent showing. The committee aimed to have the meals served at cost. The preaching was inspiring, the auxiliary work educational, and the devotional services uplifting, the spiritual gifts being manifested on several occasions. Nine were baptized, and about fourteen children were blessed. It was voted to hold a reunion next year.

As a means of advertisement, two parades were organized with the approval of the city officers on the first Saturday and Sunday evenings, the first being led by a car containing Brother J. F. Curtis, and a male quartet and Bilhorn organ, carrying a large United States flag. "America" and other hymns were sung as the streets were traversed, and a stop was made at Third and Main Streets where Brother Curtis spoke, and songs were sung. The fourteen cars were decorated with flags, bunting, and streamers announcing the reunion. In the Sunday evening parade a large float was added, carrying the junior chorus in charge of Sister May Carrow, which also sang along the way, while the rear of the eighteen cars was brought up by another load of singers. Every part of the city was reached and thousands learned of our meetings who otherwise would not have known of them.

CAMP MACARTHUR, TEXAS, August 19, 1918.

Editors Herald: My last Sunday in citizen's clothes, fortunately enough, was sacrament Sunday. It was on that date that I became a soldier in Uncle Sam's Army. The message that was given to me on that day at the sacrament meeting from Brother Bullard came as a light amidst a storm, for indeed many doubts were flooding my mind, yet even in the darkness I felt the light must come, and surely it did.

I had been the president of the Denver local Religio one year and seven months and though the work was new to me it has proved a great help in preparing for my life's work, which, God helping me, I shall do with all the force that is in me.

I find as many others have, that camp life and Army life is indeed rough, and that the true metal is brought out in the melting pot process. The process starts when one dons the uniform, and continues to the end of the struggle.

I find in my experience thus far, even as a civilian, that the field is great and the workers few, for the development of the Christian character. In the Army this is so to a far greater degree than in ordinary pursuits, perhaps so to me because I have mingled largely with Christian people. However, I can trace the desire or the longing on the part of my comrades for the Christian character in their conversation, even though it is uncouth.

The young men of the church in the Army can do a wonderful work, for the Lord in watching over them to a much greater extent, it seems to me, than those of any other such organization. My message to the men in the service who belong to the church is to uphold and live up to your religion with all your power, and you will certainly be blessed. Men will gather around you for guidance, strength, and consolation. I have been at the mess hall, walking and talking with the men, sitting in my tent, and have felt the power of the Holy Spirit to such an extent that I can hardly hold back the tears of joy. My prayer is that the time shall speedily come for the preaching of the gospel to all men.

I hope to be out of detention by next Sunday and would like to know where the church is located in Waco, Texas.

I would like to have any who read this letter and care to do so, write me, for I wish to keep in touch with the church and the members of it.

Your brother in bonds,

PRIVATE MERRILL B. KECK.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, August 21, 1918.

Editors Herald: I notice in your issue of the 7th inst. the addresses of a number of the churches in the larger cities. I believe it would be well to publish the address of the Wheeling church, as our city is on the old National Road and Lincoln Highway, and large trains of Army trucks are almost constantly passing through eastward. These soldiers usually stop and camp just outside the city and there may be some among them who are Saints and could meet with us.

The church is located at the corner of Forty-second and Jacob streets. Take north and south car on city line or Ben-

The Higher Powers of Man

Read this extract from a letter to President Frederick M. Smith, in which Charles A. Ellwood, a scholar and author of national reputation, dwells on the subject of the Higher Powers of Man as presented in President Smith's book:

I had the pleasure of reading your book on The Higher Powers of Man. I had hoped to see you in Kansas City, and to express my pleasure in person to you; but I failed to meet you and so drop you this line. . . . I like the book. It seems to me to open up a delicate and difficult topic in a way which the lay reader can understand. It is, moreover, timely, because for the sake of human and national efficiency in our present crisis people in general need to know how to "tap the higher levels of human energy."

If you want a book the study of which will open new possibilities for you, send $1.25 to either Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, or Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, ordering The Higher Powers of Man, by Frederick M. Smith.

There are eight young men who are members of our branch in the service of their country now. We are endeavoring to be as faithful in the service of the church as they are in their service, especially trying to locate and place our scattered members and revive the inactive ones.

Book Reviews

SUNSHINE AND AWKWARDNESS.—By Strickland Gillilan, $1, Forbes and Company, Chicago. This is a book to make people cheer up. It is one of Mr. Gillilan's public lectures now put in book form. It is a series of anecdotes loosely strung together with a short sermon in between. It is pleasing not alone for its wit and jollity but also for the serious touches which appear here and there, such as these closing lines: "The purpose of humor is to foster in human beings that sane, wholesome philosophy or religion known as optimism. Now, optimism isn't what some people think it is. Some people think an optimist is that sort of thing that goes around grinning all the time like a Cheshire cat, saying, 'Everything's all right, everything's all right,' when half the time everything isn't all right. That isn't an optimist who does that—it's a cheerful idiot. There's a vast difference between an optimist and any kind of idiot. It takes intelligence of the finest, faith of the most sublime, sanity of the most complete to be a real optimist. Faith and intelligence and balance to know that although there may be heartaches to-day—and God who made us and loves us knows that some to-days are just crowded with heartaches that nobody but an idiot or a lunatic could laugh at at the time—though those things come and hurt as deeply as we think we can bear, those things aren't permanent."

PREPARING FOR WOMANHOOD.—By Doctor E. B. Lowry, $1, Forbes and Company, Chicago. This is another excellent volume in the world-famous sex hygiene series by Doctor Lowry, the foremost writer on the subject. It is a book for girls from fifteen to twenty-one and it helpfully discusses health, home-making, and everything girls need to know to become happy, healthy women. The questions which arise in the mind of every girl concerning her health and her future are answered in this splendid book.

The author, who is a physician of high repute, understands girls and their needs, and talks to them in this book in an intimate, friendly way which will win their esteem. The knowledge which leads to noble womanhood and efficient motherhood could not be better set forth. Any girl or young woman would enjoy the book and derive lasting benefit from reading such a valuable aid towards making life a success. The civilized world is now awake to the great importance of healthy babyhood and such a book as this is needed to instruct girls and young women so to care for themselves that the next generation will be assured of healthy mothers. The widespread reading of this book would help to advance the nation and the race. The book is written with scientific truth and scientific purity; and what renders it greatly valuable is the fact that the directness and the unpretentious clearness of its style make it thoroughly comprehensible to all who care to read and care to understand.

FROM HERE AND THERE

SONGBOOKS FOR REUNION

The reunion of the Southern California District have made a new development which may be of interest to others. Noting how severely the regular hymn books are used at reunions, they have published a small pamphlet of 16 pages, giving the hymns to be used during the reunion, and one page of a short description of the church on the back cover. They are a very convenient size for handling, and have their principal value in saving wear and tear on the regular hymn books. They suggest that they may also be used to advantage at conferences and at special services when an extra supply of songbooks is needed. The back page means a little of missionary work and it permits the ready duplication of the hymns to be used. A rapid survey indicates nearly 50 selections from the Saints' Hymnal, and 10 from Zion's Praises.

Zionists in Russia, despite the chaotic conditions, have undertaken to raise $10,000,000 for the economic and financial reconstruction of Palestine.—The Public.

Doctor A. W. Teel of Glendale, California, was ordained an elder on the 6th of August, and was called to enter the United States service, entering Camp Kearney, Monday, August 12. The Saints at the Hermosa Beach reunion gave him a sort of a banquet and send-off, and subscribed and made him a present of a well-equipped service kit, as a token of esteem. That evening he was entertained by the citizens and members of the Knight Templars in Glendale, when he also received gifts, a wrist watch and fine equipment for his tent. Elder John W. Rushton was invited to be present and make an address, which was well received. Doctor Teel is evidently held in high esteem by those who know him, and it is a case where one is honored, all are honored.

Word comes from Fort Worth, Texas, that on account of the severe drouth in that section of Texas, hundreds of families are moving out, with little left to them of value. The letter says: "In many places cotton is a failure. We have no vegetables, etc., and Texas is so full of Army camps that what is in the market from the North is beyond the reach of ordinary people."

Bishop A. Carmichael left Lamoni for the reunion at Logan on the 23d. He will represent the publishing interests with a large line of church books and tracts.

Louisiana tried it once more and though a wet state, ratified the constitutional amendment for national prohibition. That makes fourteen States that have thus voted, with not a one on the other side. It only takes thirty-six to constitute the necessary two thirds and it looks as though there would be no trouble in getting them.

Word comes from Elder Holmes J. Davison, dated August 19, that the Northern California reunion has been running four days. He says further: "Even in these strenuous times we are having success. A large number are attending and a splendid spirit prevailing. Preaching above the average and prayer meetings good. Brethren Rushton, Chapman, and Wixom of the Southern California District are present, with our own local ministerial force in attendance."

OFFICERS' AND TEACHERS' MEETINGS

It is recognized by all progressive workers in the auxiliaries that regular meetings of officers and teachers should be held to insure best results. But experience has taught that it is one thing to call them together and another to interest and instruct. G. R. Wells, superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, has prepared a suggestive program for such meetings which will afford much material and suggestions for those who find a need of it. It is used by Chris B. Hartshorn, superintendent of the North-eastern Illinois District. While it has been sent out to a number of district officers, it possibly may not have reached some who would appreciate it. Drop him a card, asking for one or more of the "Suggestive programs."

EDITORIAL

TO OUR YOUNG MEN

The especial attention of our young men is called to the editorial of President Smith in last week's HERALD.

At a conference of college and War Department representatives at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, August 29-31, the plan as originally announced by the War Department and published last week has been considerably altered.

It will not be possible to give the details at this time, as they have not been perfected, but there can be no doubt about the wisdom of the advice which we have here set forth to aid the young people of our church.

It is urged that young men who are high school graduates and who are eighteen years of age or over should by all means enroll in some college this fall and plan to make use of every opportunity which the Government will provide for their education and military training. As the plan will not be put into operation in institutions before October 1 it will be possible to change one's enrollment from Graceland to any other college or university should it be deemed advisable at that time.

For those who are not high school graduates the Government has nothing definite in the way of military training to promise at present. It, however, is planning to offer more opportunities to all secondary schools. It is certain that a young man between seventeen and twenty years of age will make no mistake by enrolling in some institution of academic and special vocational training. The Graceland Wireless Institute has been organized under the supervision of the Federal Board for Vocational Education and accepts students with limited education. If those enrolled prove efficient they are assured of assignment to radio work in the signal corps of the Army.

To young men of our church of less than high school education who are or soon will be of draft age, we are frank in saying that you have everything to gain and nothing to lose by enrolling at Graceland, making every possible effort for preparation until such time as the plans of the Government shall be completed.

The issue is more plainly set before us than ever before. It is recognized so clearly by the Government that the college-trained man makes the more efficient officer and is worth more to the country in this great crisis, that every patriotic young man should push his educational opportunities as much as possible. There is a grave need of specialists in every department, as line officers, as ordnance officers, as wireless men, in fact in every capacity which requires unusual ability.

Our loyalty to the church and its college, our patriotism to our country, requires that every father and mother, or sister or brother that possibly can shall help our young men to go to Graceland.

Any boy of seventeen is liable to draft within the year; a boy of sixteen in a little over a year. And when we give we want to give the best we can for our country. Now is the time to get ready.

But many ask, "How can I render the most valuable service to my country during the period of the war?"

The War Department has just offered a new answer to the question. They say: "Enter college if you are fitted to do so or return to college if you are already enrolled, and enlist in the Student Army Training Corps." (See statement to the colleges of the United States in this issue.)

By enlisting in the Student Army Training Corps you will become a member of the United States Army. You will receive a uniform and be given military drill under officers detailed by the War Department. You will be carefully rated both by the college authorities and by the military officers who will help you to discover a special line of military service for which you have the greatest capacity and preference. Later in your course you will have an opportunity to specialize in a branch of training designed to fit you to become an officer of field artillery, medical or engineer officer, an expert in some technical or scientific service, or other special service.

On reaching the age of eighteen you must register with your local board. You may remain in college until your call is reached under the selective service law. At that time it will be decided whether you will be called immediately to active service or whether you should remain in college to complete the course you are pursuing. The decision will depend upon the needs of the service and upon your achievements in your military work and in your studies as determined by the military officers at the college and by the college authorities.

The choicest young manhood of the country is coming into action these days. To-day our Nation is asking for hundreds of young men to enter her various colleges, enlisting in the Students' Army Training Corps. It is not its purpose to send these young men to the front now, but to keep them in college, giving them training, preparing them for effective service later on; in the war perhaps; God willing, in peace. They will be needed in any case.

Naturally we hope that the war will be over before a boy of sixteen will be called to the colors, but is the need of the church less for trained men than is that of the Government? The Government recognizes plainly the need of trained men after the war. Your country needs you now, but needs you most of all in Graceland College getting ready for better service.

Even though it is late, if you cannot see your way clear and want to go, write to President George N. Briggs, at once. There is an old saying, "It is better late than never." Of course, it is best to start on September 5, but you who read this will find that impossible. But it is not impossible that you make your decision and act now. The quicker you act, the less will be your handicap. You have this to remember, you cannot make this important decision any earlier in life—now is the time.

It is a time of sacrifice. It is a time to make a special effort to give your boy and girl this opportunity. At least make the effort.

Young men and young women, you can never find a better time to accept this splendid opportunity. If you cannot see your way clear as to how you can do it, write at least, there may be some way in which Graceland can help you. This year means a new opportunity for our college and a new opportunity for you.

TO THE COLLEGES OF THE UNITED STATES

The man-power bill pending in Congress definitely binds the country to the policy of consecrating its entire energy to the winning of the war as quickly as possible. It fixes the age limits from 18 to 45, both inclusive. It places the nation upon a war basis. The new military program, as outlined by the Secretary of War, calls for the increase of the Army by more than two million men by July 1, 1919. This will probably necessitate the mobilization of all physically fit registrants under 21, within ten months from this date. With respect to students, since they are not to be made in any sense a deferred or favored class, this means that they will practically all be assigned to active service in the field by June, 1919. The only exceptions will be certain students engaged in technical studies of military value, e. g., medicine, engineering, and chemistry. Under these conditions it is obvious that schools and colleges for young men within the age limits of the new law, cannot continue to operate as under peace conditions. Fundamental changes must be made in college and school practices, in order to adapt them to effective service in this emergency.

The following statements outline the general plan under which the Students' Army Training Corps will operate under the changed conditions produced by the revision of the Selective Service Law:

1. All young men, who were planning to go to school this fall, should carry out their plans and do so. Each should go to the college of his choice, matriculate, and enter as a regular student. He will, of course, also register with his local board on the registration day set by the President. As soon as possible after registration day, probably on or about October first, opportunity will be given for all the regularly enrolled students to be inducted into the Students' Army Training Corps at the schools where they are in attendance. Thus the corps will be organized by voluntary induction under the Selective Service Act, instead of by enlistment as previously contemplated.

The student, by voluntary induction, becomes a soldier in the United States Army, uniformed, subject to military discipline, and with the pay of a private. They will simultaneously be placed on full active duty and contracts will be made as soon as possible with the colleges for the housing, subsistence, and instruction of the student soldiers.

2. Officers, uniforms, rifles, and such other equipment as may be available will be furnished by the War Department, as previously announced.

3. The student-soldiers will be given military instruction under officers of the Army and will be kept under observation and test to determine their qualification as officer-candidates, and technical experts such as engineers, chemists, and doctors. After a certain period, the men will be selected according to their performance, and assigned to military duty in one of the following ways:

(a) He may be transferred to a central officers' training camp.

(b) He may be transferred to a non-commissioned officers' training school.

(c) He may be assigned to the school where he is enrolled for further intensive work in a specified line for a limited specified time.

(d) He may be assigned to the vocational training section of the Corps for technical training of military value.

(e) He may be transferred to a cantonment for duty with troops as a private.

4. Similar sorting and reassignment of the men will be made at periodical intervals, as the requirements of the service demand. It cannot be now definitely stated how long a particular student will remain at college. This will depend on the requirements of mobilization. In order to keep the unit at adequate strength, men will be admitted from secondary schools or transferred from Depot Brigades as the need may require.

Students will ordinarily not be permitted to remain on duty in the college units after the majority of their fellow citizens of like age have been called to military service at camp. Exception to this rule will be made, as the needs of the service require it, in the case of technical and scientific students, who will be assigned for longer periods for intensive study in specialized fields.

5. No units of the Students' Army Training Corps will for the present be established at secondary schools, but it is hoped to provide at an early date for the extension of military instruction in such schools. The secondary schools are urged to intensify their instruction so that young men 17 and 18 years old may be qualified to enter college as promptly as possible.

6. There will be both a collegiate section and vocational section of the Students' Army Training Corps. Young men of draft age of grammar school education, will be given opportunity to enter vocational section of the Corps. At present about 27,500 men are called for this section each month. Application for voluntary induction into the vocational section should be made to the local board and an effort will be made to accommodate as many as possible of those who volunteer for this training.

Men in the vocational section will be rated and tested by the standard Army methods and those who are found to possess the requisite qualifications may be assigned for further training in the collegiate section.

7. In view of the comparatively short time during which most of the student-soldiers will remain in college and the exacting military duties awaiting them, academic instruction must necessarily be modified along lines of direct military value. The War Department will prescribe or suggest such modifications. The schedule of purely military instruction will not preclude effective academic work. It will vary to some extent in accordance with the type of academic instruction, e. g., will be less in a medical school than in a college of liberal arts.

8. The primary purpose of the Students' Army Training Corps is to utilize the executive and teaching personnel and the physical equipment of the colleges to assist in the training of our new armies. This imposes great responsibilities on the colleges and at the same time creates an exceptional opportunity for service. The colleges are asked to devote the whole energy and educational power of the institution to the phases and lines of training desired by the Government. The problem is a new one and calls for inventiveness and adaptability as well as that spirit of cooperation which the colleges have already so abundantly shown.

9. The plan contemplates the making of contracts with all institutions having units of the Students' Army Training Corps for the housing, subsistence, and instruction of the student soldiers to take effect on or about October 1, 1918. A separate statement of this date sets forth the procedure and principles governing these contracts.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Questions. 1. Does this church teach that we have a father and mother in Spirit world? Was spirit of man created or did it always exist?

2. Do we have to have money to live in Zion, if so how will those elders?

3. Can one sin against the Holy Ghost and not know it?

4. Is it right for the Saints to bear testimony in meeting without the higher priesthood present?

5. Can an elder who holds no office take the chairman's place in the middle of a business meeting without the sanction of the audience and conduct business?

Answers. 1. The church does not teach that we have a father and mother in the Spirit world. It teaches the one Godhead, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. There is not one line of the teachings of the church to uphold the idea of a mother in the spirit world.

The question whether the spirit of man was created or did it always exist, is receiving very careful attention at present. The church has made no definite statement on it, so far as we are advised. There are the teachings of the books of the church, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants to be considered. There are several passages bearing upon this question and opinions differ greatly. The Doctrine and Covenants 90:6, is perhaps the strongest statement to the effect that the spirit was not created or made. Several passages point to a preexistence before the spirit came to this world.

There is quite a difference in the two preceding answers. As to the second, there are several passages in the books dealing with the question, but as to the first we know of no passage in the writings of the church sustaining the idea of a mother in the spirit world, except as our earthly mother may, in time, precede us. But that evidently is not the question that is asked above.

2. Money is a means of exchange. There certainly will be wealth and exchange in the land of Zion. The question is evidently not complete. It doubtless is intended to ask, What will those elders do who devote their whole time to the service of the church? Those who are worthy will receive provision from the common fund of the church. Their stewardship is to preach the gospel. Their inheritance will be a home. Sufficient should be provided to meet their just needs.

3. To sin against the Holy Ghost is usually defined as to sin against knowledge. (Hebrews 6:4-6, Doctrine and Covenants 76:4.) This being true, it would appear difficult for one to sin against the Holy Ghost and not know that they were sinning. To sin against the Holy Ghost involves doing wrong against knowledge of the better way; especially after having knowledge of the way of God.

4. Saints may meet for prayer meeting under almost any conditions, where a number wish to meet and unite their efforts.

The Saints may bear their testimony as individuals under a great variety of circumstances. We are commanded to lift a warning voice. (Doctrine and Covenants 85:22.) It has been clearly set forth in the HERALD and in the Unity the past year, that the presiding at prayer meeting, as well as other services, belongs to the Melchisedec priesthood. There is a reason for this. But where no member of the Melchisedec priesthood is present the testimony meeting may proceed and the sacrament be administered by a priest after the order of Aaron. Saints may bear their testimony, if one of the higher priesthood is not present; but they should exercise great care concerning the gifts of the Spirit. The discerning of spirit belongs to the Melchisedec priesthood, who are called upon to preside. (Doctrine and Covenants 46:7.)

5. This question is by no means clear. If some elder has assumed a right not proper it would be best to take it up with the district president, or a member of the Twelve in charge in the vicinity or with the First Presidency. One might be called to the chair, temporarily, by the presiding officer, but this presumes tacit consent by the body. All things are governed by common consent. No principle has been more plainly set down and upheld by the church, than that the body has the right to choose those who shall preside over it and conduct the business meetings. By courtesy the presiding officer is often permitted to request some one to take the chair, especially when he finds it wise for any reason not to continue to preside for a short time.

WHEN IS WAR JUSTIFIABLE?

In The Chicago Herald and Examiner for August 5, 1918, there appears a short sermonet by A. M. Fyrando, of Magnolia, Iowa. It appears upon the editorial page and is as follows:

Text: "Scatter thou the people that delight in war."—Psalm 108:30. This is spread across the top of the editorial column, then at the head of the second column appears the sermonet as follows:

TO-DAY'S SERMON

By the Reverend A. M. Fyrando, Magnolia, Iowa.

The question often arises, When is war justifiable? The statement of the Psalmist is a forceful answer. That when a nation threatens who "delight in war," they represent a people by nature vicious, dangerous, and it becomes a duty to "scatter them." The advice of the Psalmist is especially applicable to the central powers in the present world conflict.

To war for home protection, for the rights of a people, in self-defense, is justifiable. But when nations study and plan war deliberately to gain prestige and conquest, delighting themselves in growth irrespective of others' rights, who wantonly destroy life and property, they must be scattered and their power for destruction destroyed.

This is the purpose of the entente nations, for, though we war, we delight not in carnage and strife, but our delight shall be in the victory of an enduring peace and the future welfare of nations.

"Adversity is the common heritage of man, unevenly and sometimes thought to be unjustly distributed; nevertheless an essential element in the disinfecting of the race. The Master Physician has undertaken to heal, cleanse, and purify humanity."

"ISRAEL," WHO AND WHERE ARE THEY?

Among other momentous questions of the present time is one that, to the mind of the writer, is of vital importance to the religious world to-day. It is, Who and where are the descendants of the people composing the kingdom of Israel that was conquered and taken captive by the Assyrians about 715, B. C.? There are a number of theories advanced regarding the present location and condition of this people, some of which are:

1. That the Eskimos of the north are what remains of them.
2. That the Bushmen of Australia are these people.
3. That the aborigines of Africa are the remnant of them.
4. That the people known to us as "Jews" are the remaining representatives of what were known as the twelve tribes; in other words, that the words Jew and Israel are synonymous.
5. That they were scattered among all nations of the earth, and are still in this condition.
6. That after they were taken north by their captors they became lost for the reason that the Lord led them still further north, somewhere beyond the icebergs, where he has walled them in so securely the other people of the earth have been unable to find them, hence the title given them, the "lost tribes."

This last idea or theory seems to have been the one most tenaciously adhered to by the members of the church whom the writer has heard, both from the stand and otherwise, speaking on this subject; and it has seemed to be the prevailing idea among some in the church since our boyhood days. Another thought that has been advocated in connection with the above is: that the revealment of who and where these people are and have been depended very largely upon the church in this dispensation of time. Or in other words: when the church had reached a certain state of advancement, these people were coming in a great multitude from some part of the earth unknown to the civilized world; thus making the length of the time of their so-called captivity dependent upon our efforts or actions here as a church body, principally upon this continent.

USUAL THEORIES INCORRECT

After a careful and extended research on this subject, both from a Biblical and historical standpoint, we are forced to the conclusion that the ideas or theories as named regarding these people are incorrect; and as we firmly believe are not tangible or logical when viewed in the light of the sure word of prophecy, history, and the physical evidences with which we are confronted. As for our reason for the above statement, the writer will briefly submit a few of the many evidences as to the truth of the position we shall assume pertaining to the question, hoping to thus arouse the mental activity of the intelligent thinker and reasoner, that they may delve into the subject and ascertain the true solution to the problem as outlined by the prophets of old, and of which they surely spoke.

In order that we may reason intelligently on the question, it is necessary that we should begin at the foundation of their existence as a people and see if we can trace them to their final destiny as prophetically foretold by divine inspiration.

Out of the many different peoples on the earth at that time, God selected the one man, Abram, and made a covenant with him that was everlasting; unconditionally covenanting that Abram's seed should be exceedingly fruitful, that he (Abram) should be the father of many nations: "Kings shall come out of thee. . . . And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, . . . all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God." (Genesis 17: 6-8.) This covenant was reaffirmed to Isaac. (Genesis 21: 12; 22: 15-18; 26: 3, 4.) Was again reaffirmed to Jacob (Genesis 28: 3, 4, 13-15; 35: 9-12). Thus we see that expansion did not begin until the time of Jacob; the three important promises: First, the increase of population or the racial covenant; Second, the kingly right or blessing; Third, the birthright blessing or right of possession to the landed inheritance, was passed from father to son, one person at a time only holding the right to the promises as mentioned, until Jacob became possessed of them. We ask the reader to keep these promises in mind as we proceed with the subject, as they are of vital importance.

After Jacob became possessed of these promises, the Lord for reasons there given, gave Jacob the name of "Israel." (Genesis 32: 27, 28.) This is the first time that this heavenly name was made known; and as we proceed we may grasp the importance of why it was withheld until bestowed upon Jacob.

We pass on until the time we find Jacob (Israel) about to be gathered up to his fathers. Surrounded by his twelve sons and his grandchildren gathered at his bedside at his request, "Gather yourselves together, that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the last days. Gather yourselves together, and hear, ye sons of Jacob; and hearken unto Israel your father." (Genesis 49: 1, 2.) In foretelling the destiny and bestowing the blessings and promises which he was empowered to impart by divine inspiration to and upon his twelve sons, we notice that he meted out to the several sons their portion of the blessings and promises direct, except to one, namely, Joseph. The blessings and promises Joseph would have received and did receive were bestowed directly upon his two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh. "And he blessed Joseph, . . . the angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads; and let my name be upon them." (Genesis 48: 15, 16.)

To show that this was clearly the intention we read:

And now thy two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt, before I came unto thee into Egypt, are mine: as Reuben and Simeon, they shall be mine. And thy issue, which thou begetteth after them, shall be mine, and shall be called after the names of their brethren [brothers] in their inheritance.—Genesis 48: 5, 6.

Hence we can see it clearly indicated why the blessings and promises Joseph would have been entitled to, were bestowed direct to Ephraim and Manasseh, it being the intention that the "two lads," and they only, should inherit those promises. So whenever or wherever we find the name of Joseph mentioned in connection with this divine plan, we must look to Ephraim and Manasseh as the holders of, and through whom these promises must and would be fulfilled.

If we will pause just a moment, go back to the time here recorded, and we find one of the most noted and important gatherings recorded in all history. Lying upon his death couch was the grand old patriarch who alone held the grand blessings God had given for his chosen people. The time had come when he must and would transfer or bestow them upon his children as led and directed by divine inspiration (for none other could inherit them). Around the death couch were his twelve sons, who knew of the promises held by their father, each anxious to hear fall from his lips the words that they knew would be divine, assigning each one of them his part in the great world drama; though his eyes were dimmed with age, yet with that clearness of vision which inspiration alone can give, he looked down the stream of time over a period of more than forty centuries, telling them what would be their condition in the "last days"; transferring those divine promises and blessings upon his sons and to their seed; so that the plan as outlined by the divine Architect would be carried out as he had willed. We who can read of this epoch-making event, then look backward over the centuries since this grand rehearsal took place, note the fulfillment and materialization of the promises as outlined at that time as well as other promises God made to this people down through the ages, cannot refrain from bowing our heads in humble adoration to the Being who said: "And I will be their God." (Genesis 17: 8.)

THREE PROMISES

Now let us note to whom the three important promises were bestowed: 1. The promise of increase or racial covenant. 2. The kingly right or blessing. 3. The birthright blessing or right of possession to the landed inheritance, were bestowed. And let us not overlook the importance of these three promises, for in them are couched the very elements that it takes to build a kingdom: people, a king, and territory. The racial promise was given to Ephraim and Manasseh. (Genesis 48: 16, 19.) The kingly promise was given to Judah. (Genesis 49: 10.) The birthright promise was given to Ephraim. (Genesis 48: 5; 1 Chronicles 5: 1, 2; Jeremiah 31: 9.) Thus we see that Joseph obtained two of the three promises, and not only these, but also the heavenly appointed name "Israel" was bestowed upon the two lads. "And let my name be upon them." (Genesis 48: 16.) At the very beginning these two lads were placed at the head of this chosen people, Ephraim and Manasseh taking the place that would naturally have fallen to Reuben and Simeon. (Genesis 48: 5.) Reuben, being the firstborn, was entitled to the birthright; but for reasons there given, he was disinherited and the birthright was given to Ephraim. Simeon, being the next under natural conditions, would have fallen heir to the inheritance upon Reuben for any reason being disqualified and not otherwise provided for. But whatever rights he may have been entitled to were given to Manasseh. We notice that some of our brethren advocate the idea that the "birthright" blessing conferred on Ephraim was the "priesthood." This position cannot be correct, for the priesthood is distinguished from the birthright by being conferred on the descendants of Levi, as an everlasting priesthood throughout their generations. (Exodus 40: 13-15.)

We pass on down the centuries (as the history of the bondage of these people is well known to Bible students) until they were delivered out of bondage, and began to govern themselves. The Lord through his servants gave them laws for their guidance. All are no doubt familiar with the history of their rebellious and faultfinding disposition; and for which they were severely chastised, of which we will speak later, as we wish to deal with the tribal features of this people at the present. Beginning with the time of Moses they (after they were led out of captivity) had become quite numerous, were divided into tribes, the descendants of each one of the sons being called and known by their respective names. All united under one government, but notice: the tribes had blended into two bodies or factions, and held their distinction as "Israel" and "Judah" long before the political division (2 Samuel 19: 40-43). United politically they were known as "Israel" to the other nations, and why? For the reason that the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh predominated by virtue of their greater authority; that being true, the entire body were known to the political world by the name of "Israel"; but not so among themselves as above noted.

We now call your attention to the statement of when the word Israel was first used, and the query may very naturally arise: Why did not the Lord pronounce this name upon Abram? He changed his name when he gave him those wonderful promises. Why did he not give the name to Isaac; the name that he uses more than any other in speaking to the people of his choice? Because if he had done so, all of the tribes could and would have claimed the right to the name of Israel; but the Lord had a special people he wished to be the standard bearers of the name he had chosen; so drew the line of demarkation very strongly, hence we feel at liberty to do likewise and say that, strictly speaking, the name Israel was transferred from Jacob to Ephraim and Manasseh, and to them only. Notice the language when calling his sons. "Gather yourselves together, and hear, ye sons of Jacob; and hearken unto Israel your father." (Genesis 49: 2.) Thus he spoke to them as the sons of Jacob, and they were hearkening unto "Israel" who was their father. It was evidently the intent of the divine mind that Ephraim and Manasseh should be the leaders of this people (with Ephraim the greater), inasmuch as he bestowed upon them the two most important blessings of the three necessary to form a government, namely: people and territory. They were chosen to be the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel. "But his bow abode in strength, and his arms and his hands remained firm; from the hand of the mighty God of Jacob, and from there thou becamest the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel." (Leeser's Translation, Genesis 49: 24.) God's definition of the word Israel (and we know of no better authority) is "For as a prince thou hast power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." (Genesis 32: 28.) As a shepherd controls the destiny of his flock, so Israel, Ephraim and Manasseh, would control the destiny of the chosen people. As the rock or stone indicates strength, solidity, endurance, a place of safety and refuge, so Israel, Ephraim and Manasseh, would be to the others of their brethren. As the man or nation who has power with God and with men can prevail over all, so will Israel, Ephraim and Manasseh, prevail.

DIVISION OF THE KINGDOM

We have laid much stress on this particular point, for we wish the reader if possible to grasp the thought advanced, as you will see the importance and wisdom of this divine arrangement later on.

These people, all retaining their tribal identity, continued on, their face toward their promised landed inheritance, and at last became possessed of the same, and an allotment made to each of them, with the exception of the tribe of Levi. Thus they continued under one government until about 975 B. C., when in fulfillment of prophecy the political division took place, the Lord telling Solomon he would rend the kingdom from his son; but would not take all, but would leave one tribe for a purpose. (1 Kings 11: 11.)

Prior to this division they were known as the kingdom of Israel, for reasons we have already stated. And here occurred an incident that has not a parallel in history, and that is: The seceding people taking the name of the government seceded from. They, the ten tribes, formed a government or kingdom and called themselves the "Kingdom of Israel."

The tribe of Judah, with the one tribe left to them as foretold (the tribe of Benjamin), continued the former government, but called themselves the "kingdom of Judah." Thus they continued and were known by their respective names by the other nations. The Lord also recognized the division and distinction because of being in fulfillment of his word; also, the time had come when the scene should change in this great world drama, and the leading actors should be viewed from a different setting. After this division, the prophets in speaking of and to them, illustrated them as: Two houses, 1 Kings 12: 16-24; Jeremiah 33: 14. Two families, Jeremiah 33: 24; Amos 3: 2. Two staves, Zechariah 11: 7-17. Two kingdoms, 1 Kings 12. Two women, Ezekiel 23: 2. Two nations, Ezekiel 37: 22. Two sticks, Ezekiel 37: 16-28. Some of our brethren may possibly differ from us on our application of this last quotation; but refrain from a too hasty opinion, until you have carefully read the context as well as the text. Grasp the subject matter the prophet is talking about, listen attentively to his illustration and his explanation of the same, let the Scripture explain itself, then pass judgment.

In our researches of the divine word, we have every confidence that the Scriptures self-explained, firmly establish the divinity of this latter-day gospel; but we are inclined to the idea that possibly some of us are adhering to some ideas or theories that present-day research and enlightenment has proven to be without merit. And while we may be very reluctant to abandon certain ideas that we have cherished so long, let us suggest that it is that divine light that is clarifying the spiritual atmosphere and quickening the intellect of men; for the time has come when "the blindness in part" that was over his chosen people must pass away.

Thus we see the tribes divided as shown, and whenever they were spoken to, the Lord always made the distinction. Hence the blessings or punishments of Israel would not nor could not apply to Judah, or vice versa except only where the Lord so stated.

PROMISES TO ISRAEL

Among other promises conferred on and made to Israel are the following:

1. Ephraim is to become a company of nations.
2. Manasseh is to become a great people (a great nation).
3. To be a nation never to be conquered by other races. (Isaiah 54: 17.)
4. Must possess the "gate" of their enemies. (Genesis 22: 17.)
5. To be the chief of nations (Jeremiah 31: 6, 7.)
6. To speak another tongue. (Isaiah 28: 11; 65: 15.)
7. To bear another name. (Isaiah 62: 2.)
8. To be a northern power. (Jeremiah 3: 12-18; 23: 8.)

These promises as outlined were made to Israel, and Israel only. Among other predictions pronounced on Judah, are the following:

- Are to be punished, are to be a reproach, a taunt, a curse. (Jeremiah 24: 8, 9.)
- Their name is to be a curse. (Isaiah 35: 15.)

We have heard it heralded for years, both by some of our brethren and others, of the dire things that had befallen the "Jews" (or Judah), citing us to the fact of it being in fulfillment of prophecy: but it seems we had entirely lost sight of the grand promises made to Israel; made by the same divine power, given by an oath which he swore by himself. Why is it we have done thus: is it not because we have been following one or more of the above-mentioned ideas concerning these people? failing to comprehend and understand the true position of these people? No wonder we have heard the statement among our brethren, when some undertook to harmonize and connect up the chain of Scriptural evidences along this line, endeavoring to make the same harmonize with the different theories, that Brother So-and-so, preached on the "hoofs and horns." The very statement expresses mystery, uncertainty, theory, and an indefinite understanding of the subject matter.

PUNISHED "SEVEN TIMES"

In order for us to follow the line we have in mind, it is necessary for us to go back to a time when the tribes were all under one government. As before stated, these people were prone to wander away from the will of their Lord, until it seemed that God determined to place a chastisement upon them for a period of time, so when they passed out from under it, they would be willing to give heed to what he told them. Listen to the word the Lord spoke to this people: "Then will I also walk contrary unto you, and will punish you yet seven times for your sins." (Leviticus 26: 24.) Again: "Then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins." (Leviticus 26: 28.) It is very evident that this people could have saved themselves from this chastisement if they had followed and obeyed the laws and commands God gave them; but they would not do so, hence the sentence became operative, and the Lord proceeded to put the same into execution.

As the author of this great world drama had arranged the stage setting for each act, knew the part each actor was to play, knew when they should appear on the scene, knew the length of time it would take for each act and between each act, knew when and where to introduce and connect each thread of the grand story so that the plan as outlined would all merge into a glorious finale as the last curtain was being rung down on the closing scene, he also knew when the chastisement should and would commence; for mark this: From the first act of this great story to the last, centuries will have passed; so we see that time is one of the essentials for its proper rendering.

We will no doubt all agree that the "seven times" spoken of, referred to a fixed period or length of time; and not that they should be chastised seven different times. We also no doubt will agree that a prophetic "time" is a fixed period of time or cycle, representing 360 years. Hence seven times 360 years gives us 2,520 years as the length of the time of the chastisement. Now if we can ascertain when the chastisement commenced, it should be very simple to ascertain when it should end. In order to be sure we have correctly located the time of commencement, we must notice the conditions that would exist when it did commence. For this see Leviticus 26: 30-33. When this chastisement began, these people were divided into two political kingdoms, namely: Israel and Judah. Israel's chastisement began 745 B. C. and extended over a period of thirty years, or to 715 B. C. before they were finally conquered and taken captive by the Assyrians. As the chastisement was to be for the fixed time of 2,520 years, it is very evident the commencement of the sentence on Israel began at the time they were finally conquered, or 715 B. C. Then 2,520 years from that date brings us to 1805-6, A. D., when it should end. Adding the same time (30 years) it took to conquer them to this, as the time it would require for them to reach their normal condition or be restored in divine favor so far as the seven times of chastisement were concerned, and it brings us to 1835-6, A. D. Hence beginning from 1805-6 is the time of the end, but not the end of time. Truly the Lord spoke of this period when the prophet said: "The Lord hath removed thy punishment." (Leeser, Zephaniah 3:15.)

Judah's chastisement began in 623 B. C. or 122 years after the commencement of Israel's chastisement, and extended over a period of forty years or to 583 B. C. before they were finally conquered and taken captive by the Babylonians. As Judah's punishment did not commence until 122 years after Israel's, it must necessarily follow that it would extend that much further down in time. As the date of the sentence would begin at the time they were finally conquered, or 583 B. C., 2,520 years from that date brings us 1937-8, A. D. Adding the same time (40 years) it took to conquer them, to this, as the time it would take them to be restored in divine favor so far as the "seven times" were concerned, and it brings us to 1977-8. And by that time, Ephraim Israel will be in possession of the promised landed inheritance. These are the days spoken of when: "In those days Judah shall walk with Israel out of the land of the north." (Jeremiah 3:18.) Do not overlook this important fact revealed in this last quotation: That Judah is coming from the same north land that Israel will come from, when they gain possession of the promised land. This is the time when they will realize the good thing promised to "the house of Israel; and to the house of Judah." (Jeremiah 33:14.)

ISRAEL "PLANTED"

Prophecy and history discloses the fact that, during the first half of this chastisement period, Israel was scattered in fulfillment of Leviticus 26:31-33. They were sifted, "like as corn is sifted in a sieve." (Amos 9:9.) They were caused to "be wanderers among the nations" (Hosea 9:17), and they are to be gathered. (Zephaniah 3:20.) Beginning with the latter half of the time of the chastisement period, they began to gather together, to the "place" that the Lord "appointed," "ordained," "prepared," the land God covenanted with them he would "plant" them in, so they would "rest" and renew their "strength," to prepare themselves for the important role they would take among the nations in the "last days." Remember, Ephraim is to be a company of nations. Manasseh is to become a great people. The Lord had made preparation for this event; knowing the ordeal through which they would pass, and through all of which they were guided by that unseen force until they were led to the place God had appointed for them to rest and regain their strength. "Moreover I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as beforetime." (2 Samuel 7:10.) Again, "Also I will ordain a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, and they shall dwell in their place, and shall be moved no more; neither shall the children of wickedness waste them any more, as at the beginning." (1 Chronicles 17:9.) We must concede that this "place" that the Lord was to "appoint," to "ordain," and "plant" Israel thereon, was not the land of Palestine or the land of their original inheritance, for the reason they were at that time in possession of those possessions; and the "appointing" and "ordaining" and the "planting" was yet in the future: "I will," etc. As further proof of this we quote: "Thus saith the Lord, the people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when I went to cause him to rest." (Jeremiah 31:2.) The place was appointed, ordained; God planted Israel there. The place appointed, ordained, prepared, was in the wilderness, where they are fed, nourished, or rested during the remaining half of the chastisement, or 1,260 years; Ephraim to grow into a company of nations, Manasseh into a great people.

THE PLACE OF SOJOURN

In order to accomplish the fulfillment of the oath God made with this people, it was necessary that the "place" ordained would be so situated that, when the time came for expansion, physical conditions would be such that would force them to go to other lands; if they had been planted on some vast continent, they would have simply enlarged their borders and grown into one vast nation. But no; Ephraim was to be a company of nations, not one, but many: Hence we can plainly see where the location must have been, and is, by the language of the prophets when speaking to Israel. "The isles shall wait for his law." (Isaiah 42:4.) "Sing unto the Lord a new song, . . . the isles and the inhabitants thereof." (Isaiah 42:10.) "Listen, O isles, unto me." (Isaiah 49:1.) "Keep silence before me, O islands; and let the people renew their strength." (Isaiah 41:1.) Thus we may go on with other quotations, but believe these will suffice to show that the "place" ordained and appointed was an "island home," making possible the fulfillment of the following: "Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall." (Genesis 49: 22.) They were to be walled in so when the time came for expansion, they, the branches, would run over the wall, thus forming nations, in the "last days."

A NATION BORN IN A DAY

Let us take up the line now, when Israel passed out from 'under the chastisement, to-wit: 1805-6 to 1835-6, A. D., and note the events that have taken place since that time and just prior thereto, as the time for expansion had arrived. Ephraim and Manasseh had been together under one government; but the time had come when Manasseh must break away, in order to play their part as an actor in the great drama, and to fulfill his destiny as foretold in prophecy, and which it would be impossible for him to do as long as he remained with his brother. Notice the event: A nation born at once, a nation born in a day, in fulfillment of Isaiah 66: 7-9, Zion (Israel) brought forth before she travailed (or before her time). And why before her time? because her time to bring forth was not until she had reached the end of the time of her chastisement period, 1805-6. But she brought forth before that time; and the event of "A nation born at once, a nation born in a day" being fulfilled in 1776, A. D. the date of American Independence. This very time was appointed of God for this event in the drama, in accordance with the prophecy: "The little one shall become a thousand, and the small, a mighty nation; I the Lord will hasten it in its time." (Leeser, Isaiah 60: 22.) Physical evidences demonstrate the fulfillment of the divine promise concerning the birth of this mighty nation at its appointed time. Surely our nation is a child of prophecy. After God planted Israel in the place he had appointed, ordained, and prepared, they take root, "He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root; Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." (Isaiah 27: 6.) There to dwell in their own place, and be moved no more. There to blossom and bud, sending forth their roots as the forests of Lebanon, their branches running over the wall, "they are gone over the sea" (Isaiah 16: 8); until to-day we see and can witness the fulfillment of that wonderful blessing and promise God gave to Ephraim, that he should be a "company of nations." And note: this has materialized since 1805-6 and just prior thereto, the time of the end of Israel's chastisement. "The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, shall say again in thine ears, The place is too strait for me: give place to me that I may dwell." (Isaiah 49: 20.) Thus after the nation was born in a day, after she had lost the other, Israel's island home became overcrowded, and they were forced out over the wall by which they were surrounded (the sea), establishing one colony after another, led by that divine power, until we see Ephraim, Israel, a "company of nations." In the face of the Scriptural and physical evidences before us, will we still continue to say, lost, lost? When the all-seeing eye of God was ever watching over them, leading them as he had foretold; and in order to protect them from their enemies, so they could accomplish that which he had ordained, he caused them to lose their identity as Israel, caused them to be called by another name, so they could carry out the great work he had planned for them in the "last days." Can we not see and identify God's chosen people Israel?

ANOTHER MARK OF IDENTITY

Another proof of the identity of this people, and which the writer is very frank to say should be among the most convincing, especially to us who believe in the gospel as restored, is this: In fulfillment of Isaiah 28: 11, the time was coming when God would speak to them (Israel) in another tongue. All through the centuries both before and after this language was spoken, the tongue that Israel spoke and in which the Lord spoke to them was the Hebrew tongue; thus it was at the time of Christ, when he came to fulfill his mission. He instituted the gospel plan in its fullness, came to his own, (he being of the tribe of Judah) and was rejected by them; having the gospel presented to them, they rejected it also. Christ tells them, as recorded in King James' Translation, Matthew 21: 43, "Therefore say I unto you: The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." But a correct translation from the Hebrew should read: The gospel of the kingdom, etc. As proof that this is the correct rendering, in speaking of the same subject matter, namely: that which God had offered, the higher law, the perfect law, was what was presented to these people and called the gospel; and when Christ was talking again pertaining to the same subject matter, he says: "And this gospel of the kingdom," etc. (Matthew 24: 14.) But for the purpose of bringing out the thought, it is really immaterial whether they had the kingdom only, the gospel only, or whether they had both. The fact remains: whatever those people had, was taken from them, and would be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. The question then which would very naturally arise is: When was it given or restored to a nation? The Lord first gave it; the Lord took it away; and the Lord is to give it to a nation. In what manner did he give it? By speaking to his people. How did he take it away? By speaking to the same people; in both instances in the Hebrew tongue. How will he give it to a nation? By speaking to the nation. The sure word of prophecy is: "I will speak to them [Israel] in another tongue." "They [Israel] shall be called by another name."

From the time the gospel was taken away, we have no record of God speaking to any people or nation, until the time of the end, the "last days." John was permitted to look down the ages, and says: "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come." (Revelation 14: 6, 7.) But note, it is to be given to a nation. When? At a time when the hour of God's judgment is come. When was that time? It could only be in the "last days," or the time of the end. When was the time of the end? Beginning with the end of the chastisement, or 1805-6, A. D. And within the thirty-year period, or before 1835-6, to-wit: in 1830, A. D., in fulfillment of what John saw, God sent his heavenly messenger bearing that which he had taken away, namely: the gospel, and gave it to a nation called by another name, speaking another tongue, and those heavenly visitors spoke in the tongue spoken by this nation. And most wonderful to relate, commissioned one as his representative who was a literal descendant of Ephraim. Then and not till then was the gospel given to a nation, as foretold in these prophecies; and that nation or people is the Anglo-Saxon people. God giving the honor to both Ephraim and Manasseh; restoring the gospel on the land of Manasseh, but intrusting this heavenly gift to the care of Ephraim. (Remember the words: "from there thou becamest the shepherd, the stone of Israel.") Note the result of the angel's message the first fourteen years. It is estimated that over two hundred thousand souls heard and obeyed the wonderful story. And notice: from what nations of the earth did they come? History will give us the answer; for fear some may not have the time to ascertain what the answer is, we will give it: From the nations of Israel.

THE GOSPEL AND ISRAEL INSEPARABLE

The gospel and God's chosen people are inseparable; and whenever and wherever you find the gospel, there you will find Israel, and none other intrusted with the message. As proof of this we submit this proposition: There is not one promise of divine favor within the lids of the sacred word, except it is to, through, or by Israel. And we are very frank to say that we can hardly comprehend how it is possible for us to have a true and intelligent conception of the basic work of the gospel, and still retain the scales over our eyes obscuring the vision of the wonderful destiny that was planned for the people of his choice—Israel.

FAITH IS THE ESSENCE OF LIFE

Faith is the fundamental principle of all true religion and yet we mortals often fail to understand that it is also the essence of life. It is well, therefore, that we consider the dynamic proclivities of faith. The degree of faith we have in God and godliness (God-like-ness), will determine our relationship to him, and our relationship to God will determine the extent of our life. We can best understand the real meaning of faith, its principle and virtue, by considering it in the comparative or relative sense; for to think of faith only in the absolute is to fail to see it as it is.

It was no less a one than Jesus, the anointed one, who with all earnestness and solemnity admonished his disciples to "have faith in God," and yet, despite this fact, he was obliged to speak of the apostles as having "little faith," and of the Syrophœnician woman as having great faith. The apostles, by reason of their contact with the divine example, should have had a profound faith, but they failed as yet to reach the mark set for them. The Syrophœnician woman exhibited a faith that surpassed or transcended her environment. Considering the possibilities of the apostles, their faith was small, but considering the opportunities of the woman, her faith was great. I find but few people, however, who are disposed to think of faith, or the operation of the principle of faith, in the comparative or relative degree. My idea may be best illustrated and understood by that which follows.

Some years ago the writer was asked to teach an adult Bible class in a Union Sunday school, where he happened to be preaching at the time. The lesson as we remember it was entitled, "The grace of giving." As we analyzed it, we drew out the thought that this subject involved considerably more than the mere idea of taking up a collection.

As we evolved the thought of the lesson we urged that if we made claim of being followers of Christ, and it was discovered upon examination of our lives that we were not reflecting the likeness of the Divine One, our profession became useless, and our faith at best was very small, or as Saint James has expressed it, our faith is dead, being destitute of the fruits that should rightly be borne.

We then further qualified the thought by saying that the degree of our faith could very easily be determined by the nature of the work we performed, or by the service we rendered.

This, however, raised a query in the mind of a rather aged brother of the Holiness persuasion, who was a member of the class, and he said: "If I have faith in God, I have faith, and what more can I have? Isn't faith faith?"

After the class had taken a turn at this query of the good brother, it was passed up to the teacher for a final answer, and I can give no better answer than I gave at that time, so will here repeat it. We must not confuse terms, but we should seek to rightly discriminate between the terms essence and degree. Faith is, and necessarily must be, one in essence, but there may be and often is, a vast difference in degree. For example, is there any difference in the essence of a single drop of water and the water of the ocean? One is water just as the other is water, but there is a vast difference in the degree. Again, if I were to take up a small quantity of earth and hold it in the palm of my hand, it would be earth in essence, just as the earth upon which we tread and out of which all the herbs of the field grow is earth, but there would be a decided difference in the degree. I might hold in the palm of my hand a sufficient quantity of soil to germinate the smallest seed, but it would not be sufficient in quantity to mature it; so in like manner I may have faith sufficient to germinate within me a desire for the divine life, but that faith may be so small that it would fail to bring it to a florescence or fruitage.

That faith is susceptible of growth or enlargement was understood by the disciples of Christ when they prayed, "Lord, increase our faith." To have a little faith, therefore, is to have a little life; to have a larger degree of faith is to have a larger degree of life; to have an abundance of faith is to have an abundant degree of life; but to be destitute of faith is to be destitute of life."

This principle is self-evident, and Jesus sought to teach this truth to his disciples when he said: "If you have faith as a grain of mustard seed, you may say unto this mountain, be removed and cast into the sea, and it will obey you."

That which is of greatest importance in the consideration of this parable is, that the mustard seed though small of itself, has within it the possibilities of development, of unfoldment, of growth and enlargement of life. So Jesus is simply saying to his disciples: "If you have a living faith, a faith that will respond to the divine touch and thereby enlarge itself, a faith that will unfold and grow as the mustard seed unfolds and grows into the largest of herbs, you will find that you are equal to any emergency in life, for even the elements will yield and become subject to such faith as this."

Thus, faith becomes the moving cause to all action, and I can act only in proportion to my faith. If I have a little faith in God I will act in accordance with that faith and thereby develop a godliness in my life; if I have a larger degree of faith in God I will develop a larger degree of God-like-ness in my life, so that those who behold my work and conversation may be able to determine thereby the degree of faith I have in God.

If we think of faith only as an abstract principle, the chances are that we will not be able to enlarge our lives thereby very materially, but if we think of it as being the practical means whereby we may be able to enlarge our usefulness in life, we will unfold and develop a life and character that is divinely beautiful. In this sense faith becomes the essence of life, or in other words, it becomes the elixir by which we are able to transmute the baser metals of our human life into the unalloyed gold of God's goodness and love. When I think of faith as being thus applied to our lives I am able to understand the scripture which says: "According to your faith be it unto you."

This is not only philosophically true, but it is scientifically correct. The things we have faith in are the things we do, the things we don't do are the things we haven't any faith in, however much we may profess to have faith in them. For, as effect follows cause, so must we grow into the likeness of that which we most earnestly and habitually contemplate.

If we have an imperfect faith we can at best have but an imperfect life, but if we have a perfect faith we must also have a perfect life, because like begets like, and nothing but good can come of good, and nothing but evil can come of evil. A man is literally what he thinks, and he must necessarily think of that in which he has faith. It is well, therefore, that we should have faith in the highest and noblest, and that our faith be of such a nature that it is capable of growth and enlargement, that through its transforming power we may be changed into the very image of the Divine One.

KIPLING WELCOMES AMERICANS

The other day Rudyard Kipling went to Winchester, near which ancient capital of England a large number of American soldiers are encamped, and formally opened a Y. M. C. A. hut. Inspired by the presence of the "Yanks," he broke a self-imposed rule against speaking in public and our boys "over there" heard a bit of Kipling at his best. His speech in part, as published in the London Times follows:

Several years have passed since England was permanently occupied by the armed forces of a foreign nation. On the last occasion, eight hundred years ago, our people did not take kindly to the invasion. I know they did not because I live a few miles from where the Battle of Hastings was fought, where all the trouble began, and I assure you we are still talking about it. But, conditions have changed.

You may have noticed that we do not resent, either, the presence of your buildings, such as these, which are one of the visible signs of your occupation. As far as you are concerned, we are a placid, not a pacifist, community. You couldn't annoy us if you started in to build pyramids. On the contrary, we should be pleased. We should say: "This looks like business. This looks as if the United States meant to stay till they had done their share of the job thoroughly."

We have been a long time over our present job and we may be a long time yet. It has been a little bigger than we expected, because this is the first time, since the creation, that all the world has been obliged to unite to crush the Devil. You remember that before the war one of our easy theories was that the Devil was almost extinct, that he was only the child of misfortune or accident and that we should soon abolish him by passing ringing resolutions against him. That has proved an expensive miscalculation.

MUST NOT BETRAY MANKIND

We find that the Devil is very much alive and very much what he always was—immensely industrious, a born organizer, and better at quoting scripture for his own ends than most honest men. His industry in organization we can all deal with, but more difficult to handle is his habit of quoting scripture as soon as he is in difficulties.

When Germany begins to realize that her defeat is certain we shall be urged, in the name of mercy, toleration, loving-kindness, for the sake of the future of mankind, or by similar appeals to the inextinguishable vanity of man, who delights in thinking himself holy and righteous when he is really only lazy and tired—I say we shall be urged on those high grounds to make some sort of compromise with, or to extend some recognition to, the power which has for its own object the destruction of man, body and soul.

Yet, if we accept these pleas, we shall betray mankind as effectively as though we had turned our backs on the battlefield from the first. Your own President has said that there is no conceivable half-way course in dealing with the world's enemy. It is certainly no part of our business to strike moral attitudes for our own satisfaction till we have administered some measure of justice to those who have made it their religion to do iniquity.

I say some measure of justice, because when the full tale is told, the world will see that no retribution which, for our own soul's sake we dare not exact, can atone for the sin against the light that Germany has deliberately committed. To that extent then, the world's enemy is protected by humanity's decree that there are certain things which man born of woman must not do.

GERMANY'S HEART MUST CHANGE

Outside that bare protection, what right has this power of absolute evil to concern herself either in the shaping or the substance of life on earth after the war? None whatever, till we have evidence—not merely belief, but sure proof—that her heart has been changed.

But you have not come three thousand miles to protect Germany. Your vanguard is sure to help her change her heart, and I read in a New York paper the lines on which you propose to change it:

"When we went to war with Germany it was with the resolve to destroy German war power. If that power is inseparable from the German people then we are resolved upon the destruction of the German people. The alternative is in their hands."

That is reasonable and easy to understand. You are going into a world which has been laboriously wrecked by high German philosophy on the Devil's own creed that there is nothing good or evil in life, but thinking makes it so; in other words, that right and wrong are matters of pure fancy. That belief it will be your privilege to assist in removing from the German mind.

These beliefs are primitive. Except on certain portions of the front, where he has been better educated, the German believes that the United States Army does not exist. In the first place it could not cross the Atlantic; in the second, it was sunk while crossing; in the third, it was of no use when it arrived. It is possible that you may be able to persuade him that he has been misinformed on these points. But we are of a more credulous disposition.

We are convinced that you have come over, and that the allied armies at the front, who are authorities on the subject, tell us that your vanguard there is extremely useful. Meantime, your invasion of England goes forward according to program day by day. Unlike the other invaders we have known, you bring everything you need with you and do not live on the inhabitants. In this you are true to the historical vow of your ancestors, when they said to ours: "Millions for defense, but not a cent for tribute."

AMERICA'S FEAT ALMOST A MIRACLE

At any other time the nations would be lost in amazement at the mere volume and scope of your equipment, at the terrifying completeness of your preparations, at the dread evidence of power that underlies that, but we have lived so among miracles these last four years that, even though the thing accomplishes itself before our very eyes, we scarcely realize that we watch the actual bodily transit of the New World moving in arms to aid in redressing the balance of the Old.

We are too close to these vast upheavals and breakings forth to judge of their significance. One falls back on the simple, the more comprehensible fact that we are all blood brothers in a common cause and, therefore, in that enduring fellowship of loss, toil, peril, and homesickness which needs must be our portion before we come to the victory.

But life is not all gray, even under these skies. There is a reasonable amount of fun left in the world still, if you know where to look for it; and I have noticed that the young generally have this knowledge. And there are worse fates in the world than to be made welcome, as you are, more than welcome to the honorable and gallant fraternity of comrades-in-arms the wide world over. Our country and our hearts are at your service, and with these our understanding of the work ahead of you. That understanding we have bought at the price of the blood of a generation.

By virtue of the authority vested in me by a few citizens of the United States I declare this inn opened, for the comfort and refreshment of the officers of the armies of the United States in the intervals of their labors, which may God bless!—The Kansas City Times, August 23, 1918.

BRITISH SOLDIERS REBUILD PALESTINE

CAIRO, August 4.—Not quite eight months have passed since the Egyptian expeditionary force crossed from Sinai into Palestine, and already a marked improvement is visible not only in the general economic situation, but also in the demeanor of the people.

When the British entered Palestine the country was in a terrible plight economically and morally. The Turks had systematically laid hands on all stocks and had literally stripped the people of all they possessed. In the towns they had pillaged all the closed houses and had opened up the government buildings, which the mob dismantled of everything of any value.

The crops had been seized or commandeered and next to no seed had been left to the cultivators, who were already short of food. Where it might have been possible to grow crops the land could be but poorly prepared for the winter sowings, for the simple reason that most of the able-bodied men had been rounded up for military service and the Turks had carried off all the available cattle and horses.

POPULATION ALL BUT STARVED

In addition, all the books, records, etc., had been removed; the courts, such as they were, and the administration had been disorganized by the withdrawal of all the senior officials, leaving, with the exception of the mufti, only the very junior, who knew little of the work; public security was at its lowest ebb, owing to the total disbandment of the police and gendarmory force; and all the treasuries were empty. It was into a disorganized, starving region, with its population depleted and generally in a state of panic and misery that the British entered in November last.

The establishment of law and order was a comparatively easy matter, since the presence of military forces naturally commanded the respect of even the most truculent characters, but as the British line advanced and the force in the rear became more scattered the necessity arose for the creation of some body which would police the country.

PEOPLE WELCOME BRITISH

Directly in the wake of the army the military police carried out this task. In Jerusalem the British reformed the gendarmory from the remnants left of that force, and from Arab deserts, from the Turkish Army, and elsewhere they introduced military police, who have since been succeeded in the Jaffa area by locally recruited police, while they re-established under a British officer the Jerusalem summary court for the trial of minor cases. It is satisfactory to note that there have been very few cases, in some districts none, where disrespect of the new regime has had to be severely dealt with or where any situation causing anxiety to the occupying power has come into existence.

The relief of distress was a much more difficult matter. The distress took the form of real want of food and clothing, or inability to cultivate or give the proper attention to the land and collect, market, and dispose of the crops as they became available. As regards the lack of food, the military had at the outset to bear the full brunt, and had to import wheat, maize, millet, and rice in large quantities from Egypt. Later the Palestine and Syria relief fund and the Jewish organization relieved the army of part of the work, but the main difficulty has still been the procuring of food itself. In many cases the people, especially the Jewish community, had the money, but there were no stocks which they could purchase.

REFUGEES GIVEN WORK

Relief work has now been properly organized, relief camps have been established, and the refugees and distressed people have been provided with suitable work to enable them to earn their living instead of being dependent on charity. Many of them are occupied in such work as road making and road mending. The transport difficulty has been the great obstacle, but it is gradually being overcome, and the amount of distress due to lack of food and clothing is steadily decreasing.

In this connection a word of praise is due to the military transport staff, which achieved wonders, not only in handling the purely military traffic, but also in meeting the requirements of civil population. In virtually every village which the British entered they have had immediately to start distributing supplies, and the task falling in this respect to the transport officials must have been stupendous. Yet in spite of the heavy demands necessarily made by the army in the field, and of the fact that the only means of communication with Egypt, whence everything has had to be brought, has been the Trans-Sinai railway line, with latterly an occasional steamer to Jaffa, it has been found possible, without in any way disorganizing traffic, to bring up thousands of tons of commodities.—Des Moines Register.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

[At this season with the opening of Graceland college under the unusual situations prevailing, wherein she is to be recognized and given support by the Government, it is well to record here some of the songs sung by the students. As the evening closes and the hearts at home are prone to sadden, let those who remain gather together and sing the same songs the youths so far distant are enjoying, and it will strengthen and hearten greatly.—EDITORS.]

Graceland

(Tune: "Nellie Gray.")

O Graceland, happy Graceland
On the hill crest in the sun,
Where the free winds are singing all the day.
With thy corner stone laid firmly,
And thy story just begun,
We would write their deeds of honor all the way.

Chorus:

O fair Graceland like the blue
Of the heavens over you,
And as faithful as the seasons we behold,
May thy sons and daughters ever
In their heart of hearts be true
To the honor of the Navy and Old Gold.

O Graceland, happy Graceland,
Our own Mater Queen uncrowned,
We are weaving a laurel wreath for you.
With your feet in meadow grasses
And your glad hills guarding 'round,
All serene be your life and calm and true.

O Graceland, busy Graceland,
Let no hand in weakness fall,
Let no voice now be silent all the day,
Let the well-trained mind be list'ning
For the souls of men will call
To the skilled sons of Graceland come away.

Then when our voices tremble
With the cadences of age,
And the pages of thy glory be unrolled,
We will here again assemble
Every white-haired, wise-browed sage
With a blessing for the Navy and Old Gold.

VIDA E. SMITH.

Graceland College

(Tune: "Yankee Doodle.")

Come, let us sing a little song
About a little college,
Unto whose doors come many youths
To add unto their knowledge.

Chorus:

Graceland College, boost her, boys,
Boost her, too, ye daughters;
Boost her till her fame shall spread.
O'er many lands and waters.

This little school upon the hill,
Has grown in power and numbers,
And thus in time her fame shall stand
Among the Nation's wonders.

The faculty are specialists
In many kinds of learning;
And for such wisdom, too, the boys
And girls are ever yearning.

The students all are brave and true,
And to the college loyal,
And in their daily intercourse
They treat each other royal.

Thus all together we will stand
Till all our toil is ended,
And then at last we'll wear a crown,
All virtues in us blended.

Graceland's Fame Goes Marching On

(Tune: "Battle Hymn of the Republic.")

Come all young men and maidens; come all friends from far and near;
Come let us sing a song of praise for her to us so dear;
Come let us sing of Graceland and her memories revere,
While her fame goes marching on.

Chorus:

Glory, glory, hallelujah; glory, glory, hallelujah;
Glory, glory, hallelujah, while her fame goes marching on.

She has stood upon the hilltop mid the storms of wind and rain,

She has stood amidst the fiercer blasts of opposition's train.
She has stood amid the conflicts, yea, of pen and tongue and brain;

Yet, her fame goes marching on.

Let us still defend her, comrades; let us brave and loyal be,
For the wondrous strength and blessing she's bestowed on you and me;

And for the further promise of a glorious victory,
While her fame goes marching on.

And we shall soon behold her in the glory of her power,
When she has endured the storm and blast of every trying hour;

And unto our successors we shall leave a worthy dower,
While her fame goes marching on.

Chorus after last verse:

Glory, glory, hallelujah; glory, glory, hallelujah;
Glory, glory, hallelujah; Graceland's fame goes marching on.
J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

Hail To Graceland

On the broad and rolling prairie
Of a grand old State,
Stands majestic Graceland College,
Now and ever great.

Chorus:

Sing the chorus, ever stronger,
Gold and Navy Blue!
Hail, our noble alma mater!
Hail; our Graceland true!

Reared by consecrated efforts
Of a noble band,
Guarded by the God of wisdom,
May she ever stand!

Earnest men and women ever,
From her doors each year,
Go to honest toil and service.
Hail! our Graceland dear!

Shout, ye, then and greet our Graceland,
Strong in purpose grand!
Hail to thee, our foster mother,
Fairest in the land!

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

(This song was composed especially for the Graceland program at the General Conference at Independence, Missouri, in 1912. It was set to music composed especially for the words by Sister Audentia Anderson. The music is arranged as a male quartet, and is very fine.—J. A. G.)

When a man begins to develop self-confidence a new power is born within him.—Common Sense Sayings.

Old Gold and Navy Blue

(Tune "Angel's message," No. 206, Zion's Praises.)

In the work of education, also in the cause of right,
Stands our Graceland College, humble, brave and bold;
To all the world a beacon, to all the youth a light;
So we'll shout the praises of the Blue and Gold.

Chorus:

Then hail! all hail! to Old Gold;
Fling out your streamers, Navy Blue;
We'll sing and shout till continents and isles
Send back to us the echoes clear and true.

She has been a means of blessing unto many a needy youth;
She has lifted up a standard to the old;
Let us rally round that standard, which is the word of truth;
Let us hold aloft the Navy Blue and Gold.

So onward then to victory we'll press our upward way,
In the midst of rain, the sunshine, heat or cold;
Till our banner shall be planted in that eternal day,
In the presence of the Shepherd of the fold.

Then, let us all together work, and none stand idly by,
Let our loyalty in deeds, not words, be told;
And in songs of sweeter cadence in the coming bye and bye,
For the Navy Blue we'll sing, and the Old Gold.
J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

College Glee

(Tune: "Angel's message," No. 206, Zion's Praises.)

Join our ranks, ye happy youths, in learning's noble sphere,
Let us sing a song of praise for her we hold so dear;
E'en though Calliope should smile 'twill please her still to hear
Our song in crude meter together.

Chorus:

Hurrah, hurrah, come join our college glee;
Hurrah, hurrah, with joyful hearts and free,
Let us here increase in strength and sing forevermore,
While we are toiling together.

Thou the fruit of toil and care of earnest hearts and true,
May their zeal transcending in thy children e'er renew
All their hope and loyalty thy growing childhood knew,
While we are toiling together.

When in coming future days our mem'ries backward glide,
Recalling all the happy hours we passed here side by side,
We'll think of thee with gratitude, we'll think of thee with pride,
As we toil onward together.

May thy sturdy walls for aye resist the northern blast,
May thy great heart throb and beat in friendship as we pass,
May the Gold and Navy Blue be with thee to the last,
Graceland, our fair Alma Mater.

MARY L. FITZPATRICK.

Onward and Upward

(Tune: "What a friend we have in Jesus," or "God is marshaling his army.")

Oh, thou God of ancient Israel,
Hear us as we call to thee,
Let thine ear to us be open,
As we humbly bow the knee.
Here in meekness we would serve thee;
Out of weakness make us strong,
From this world of sin and evil,
Save us with the ransomed throng.

In our searching after wisdom,
Guide us, Lord, by thy great might.
Let us seek by faith and study
To improve, and know the right.
To this end may our fair Graceland,
Founded, owned, and blest by thee,
Guided by the God of heaven,
Still a tower of strength e'er be.

Thus in consecrated service,
"Onward" may thy people come;
"Upward" toward the perfect standard,
Till they reach that heavenly home.
Then in bliss ne'er dreamt by mortals,
Dwelling on the other shore,
We shall dwell through countless ages,
In thy presence ever more.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

Our Patroness

(Tune: "Maryland.")

Upon the hill, majestic, grand,
All builded by a loving hand—
The hand of sacrifice and love,
Directed by our God above—
Stands Graceland College, stanch and strong,
Famed both in story and in song.
Oh, may her banner ever wave;
Her mission ever be to save.

Just by her side and ever near,
Patroness Hall to all so dear
Holds second place within our plan,
For here is fed the inner man.
'Tis here the girls all have their home;
'Tis here the boys all love to come;
'Tis here that friendship deep and true
Is now extended unto you.

Four years have passed since open door
Made welcome girls, both rich and poor.
Since then have come adown the years
Fullness of joy oft mixed with tears.
The star of hope kept shining bright
Has beckoned on both day and night,
Until to-day our girls do bless
The sacred name of Patroness.

Dear ladies of the Patroness,
We sing this song thy name to bless.
We love you for your noble deeds
In caring for our daily needs.

And to our friends, both new and old,
Who shared with us your meed of gold,
We wish for you a rich reward,
When you shall stand before the Lord.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

(This song was sung at the celebration of the fourth anniversary of the opening of Patroness Hall, and was composed especially for the occasion.)

Invocation

(Tune: "America.")

Our Graceland 'tis of thee
Of grace and purity
Thy name we sing;
Long may thy banner wave,
Long may thy precepts save
Till millions strong and brave
Their tribute bring.

O'er all the land afar
May truth thy guiding star
Ne'er cease to shine;
May wisdom from on high
May guardian angels nigh
Inspire us all to try
To keep thy shrine.

Our Father, God, to thee
We bow the adoring knee,
Thy name we praise;
Oh, give us much success,
Crown up with happiness,
And we thy name will bless
Through endless days.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

The Boy Movement Again

Intensely interested as we are in the "boy movement" of the church, it is a source of gratification to receive copies of the little circular Brother F. M. McDowell is sending out in regard to this work. We feel that the right man is in the right place, when we see the practical manner in which Brother Floyd is going to work at this problem, a problem which is gnawing at the vitals of every church organization in the land. We trust the Saints everywhere will see to it that the suggestions made by our brother are not allowed to drop idly by the wayside, to culminate in nothing of real tangible good to them or their children. It is a great opportunity, as well as a real duty, of every branch president, and every other person in a position to do so, to initiate those movements within their province which shall aim to carry out, so far as possible, these plans concerning their young people.

All must concede that the systems we have had in the church in the past have proven more or less failures in interesting and holding the young people of the adolescent age. Go into the assemblies of the Saints, anywhere; what percentage of the young people whose names are upon the records can you find at the preaching or prayer services? And, if we grant that nature seems to have it that religion holds little attraction for these people at that age, what other means are being used to attract and hold! How many of our older, wiser men, think you, are taking direct, constant, un-failing, thoughtful, consecrated charge of the right training and the right guidance of our boys?

Ah, there is the rub! When we feel the impressing of the Spirit upon our hearts, and feel the fires kindled there, we immediately think of the stranger, the outsider who must be "warned." Our men are ordained, sent out to preach to a careless outside world. They are burning with the ardor of their desire to spread the gospel, and they turn their whole thought and study to the work of converting the stranger, meanwhile shutting their eyes to the fact that there is a rich (and, alas! in too many instances, wholly uncultivated) field right at their feet, among the young of the church! These young souls need the light of the gospel, as well as any other, and yet how rare it is to find an ordained minister who is taking a regular and faithful share of the work of the Sunday school or the Religio! The officers of these institutions plead constantly for the services of consecrated teachers, seeing as they do, the dire need for such services, instead of the half-hearted, wholly-cold efforts put forth by many so-called "teachers."

Our children go through a perfunctory Sunday school lesson, "illuminated" and made intelligible to their understandings by an indifferent or unqualified teacher, perhaps; then about their spiritual or ethical training of any kind for the other 166 hours of the week, regarding which Brother McDowell so pointedly inquires, no one seems to be definitely concerned. The Sunday school teacher leaves it to the home; the parents leave it to the Sunday school teacher, and between the two reedlike supports many a child has fallen to grave disaster.

The Religio seems but a second Sunday school with a variation in texts. Its social feature seems defunct--crowded out. Beyond being, in some instances, a sort of forum, where some timidity is overcome, in rare instances only has it ever fulfilled a tenth part of its possibilities. Too few, and too far between, are the opportunities it affords for the social contact with each other which young people need. They do not crave the opportunity, say, of studying the Book of Mormon (or any other text) in company with other young people; what they do crave is the opportunity to giggle together, to pull taffy, to play games, to exchange whispered confidences, to get acquainted! These things are in young blood, and how shortsighted has been our policy of shutting our eyes to the fact, of ignoring nature, and of just providing sermons, prayer meetings, or study classes for these vital beings, whose joy in life surpasses books and can only find expression in action!

How inconsistent we are! We have, as a church, provided little or nothing to bring about the social contact of our young people with each other. We have left all that to their school circles, and then have lifted holy hands in horror when they chose life companions from those circles! But when had they ever an opportunity to know, in the way they need to know, their church companions? Why, John could sit in his class, across the church from Mary in her class, fifty years and never discover her warm heart or sympathetic nature, or become alive to the fact that she could be more to him than all the world beside! The girl he met at the school class party, with whom he danced a couple of times, and who shook her curls in charming naivete when he whispered boyish nonsense in her ear, or good night at her door, means a whole lot more to him!

God is in this youthful desire for activity, for companionship, for our common heritage to beauty, we old fogies to the contrary notwithstanding! A normal young person does not need religion—or what has passed with us as such!—during certain years of his life nearly so much as he needs simply to have a wholesome light placed for him upon his natural cravings, and upon the many wonderful things he is discovering in the world about him. These discoveries are as new to him as life itself was new. He is as much a primitive in love as was Adam. He is as much an adventurer upon the sea of impulse and emotion as if he were indeed the first man to make the voyage. How much he needs the clear light of truth, then! Biblical history does not fill the bill; philosophy and theology, science and research do not touch this human need, God-given, God-encouraged, and God-blessed as it is! He needs to be given the proper rudder, the knowledge that all that is lovely and pure is his by right of heritage, and that God breathes approval upon his virtuous joy in life! How could we expect him, otherwise, to make any safe passage through the dangers of the channel of youth? Without a rudder, without a chart, without a sympathetic pilot, such as a loving "big brother" could be to him, who could point out to him, not only the rocks of danger, but also the clear waters of safety, we say, without all this, who is to blame when our young people disappoint us?

We wonder if this is not the secret of the whole trouble, simply that we have been wont perhaps to cry "Rocks!"—howbeit, often too late!—and not mark "Clear water!" We have said, "Don't go there!" but how many have said, "Come hither!?" It would seem to be no idle word when God said he would hold the parents responsible for their children, and why not likewise, the church for its young? The duty of parents is far-reaching. Might it not indeed reach to the point that they should deliberately seek to place their children where, during impressionable years, they may come in contact with other young people of like faith? We need not call her a "designing mamma" who wisely plans that her young daughter, living in an isolated town, shall go to Grace-land, or to the General Conferences or the reunions, in order that she may find pleasant acquaintances among the young people of the church. Better make a sacrifice if need be, that such a daughter may come in contact with the right people at the right time, than later to rue, in sackcloth and ashes, the fact that she has been "unevenly yoked with an unbeliever"! In this connection we call to mind a young girl who recently made her second matrimonial venture, "getting," as one brother remarked, "just another crooked stick"! The girl is bright, well-mannered, and good, but what chance had she in that small country home, with no associates about her who were worthy at all of her?

All these observations concerning our daughters are equally true when applied to our boys. Impressionable, they will continue to be; certain to pass through the period of awakening sex life, and wise indeed are those parents who have not only counseled their lads truly, and given them the true perspectives of life and its purposes, taught them to hold all their powers and strength of body and mind sacred, but who have also helped them to walk without error, by providing them with proper companions, of both sexes, and helping them to maintain the proper balance of relation thereto! Such parents will have little to regret when the tale of life is told, and much, very much indeed, for which to render humble thanks.

Let us try to see that the young must be held to us, through their own interests, and not through our conceptions of those interests. Let us become enthused by a great desire to effect that among us which will undo in some measure the wrongs we have in the past worked upon our youth, and which shall insure the throngs which are even now approaching those whirlpool years against suffering at our hands as their predecessors have done. Our sins are none the less real because they have been sins of omission! Our young people are not bad; they have no desires to go wrong; they are simply undirected, unguided, and they come to grief because of the immaturity of the experience, their lack of wisdom, or of an adequate conception of consequences. The fault then lies at the doors of the adults, who have taken too much for granted, have lulled themselves into a state of blissful ignorance or have not tried truly to put themselves into sympathetic touch with the spirit of youth about them. How long, oh, Lord, how long shall we be blind, or foolish, or headstrong, to the hurt of the innocent ones intrusted to our care!

Teaching Children to Play the Game

During the summer months, while American soldiers in the front-line trenches have been demonstrating that they possess the ability "to play the game," the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, acting with the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense, has been conducting a recreation drive, in an attempt to bring home the importance of play in fostering those qualities of courage and resourcefulness that make not only good soldiers but good citizens. The Duke of Wellington said that the Battle of Waterloo was won on the cricket fields of Eton. On the playgrounds of America, boys and girls must receive the training that is to fit them to do their part in keeping the world safe for democracy when the war is over.

Many parents do not realize the training and discipline to be obtained by a child from neighborhood games. Such games increase physical adeptness, train the eye, and develop in a child the ability to respond instantly to the direction of the leader. They foster in him the habit of subordinating himself to the need of the group with which he is allied. They teach him the value of "team-work." He learns, in brief, "to play the game"—a lesson that will always be valuable to him.

Fathers and mothers should accept as one of the responsibilities of parenthood the leading and encouraging of group games for children. No neighborhood can be called an ideal place for young people to grow up in until the people who live there accept the fact that they are under a moral obligation to provide a place, a time, and a leader for games and sports. One of the sorry sights of any city or village is that of a crowd of young people—oftentimes very young indeed—wandering about seeking amusement where no amusement has been provided for them. Especially in war time, when the air is full of disturbing influences, the provision of recreation, abundant and free, is necessary in every community. The neglect to provide such recreation has been named as one of the causes of the increase in juvenile delinquency in European countries since the war. Furnishing attractive, wholesome play is the best of all means of keeping children out of mischief.

One of the very best and most wholesome forms of recreation lies in the playing of the old familiar games, which call for no expensive equipment, and are within the reach of every community. Suggestions for playing them will be found in the booklet, "Twelve Good games," which will be furnished free upon request by the Playground and Recreation Association of America, 1 Madison Avenue, New York City.

MRS. MAX WEST.

The Recreation Drive

It is quite according to fashion to bewail the vanished social life of rural districts—the corn-huskings, the quilting bees, the taffy pulls, the log rollings, the military musters, the barn raisings, the tournaments, and camp meetings; all the community gatherings of earlier, simpler times. It has been demonstrated in many localities, however, that even with the "good old days" so far beyond recall, a social life as rich and varied as that of the city is possible in the country. Many rural communities, with the schoolhouse or the small town as a center, have shown that it is possible to secure for the country, in addition to purely recreational activities, the lectures, the concerts, the plays, even the art exhibits that are so highly valued a part of city life.

The recreation drive now being carried on under the direction of the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor and the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense has as one of its chief objects to foster and encourage a richer social life for all rural communities, particularly for the children of those communities. According to the Children's Bureau, country children are often worse off for recreational facilities than are children of crowded city districts. In too many cases the village that is the center of social life offers nothing for young people seeking amusement but the cheap pool room, moving pictures that are often sordid, and the saloon. Children in such localities as these are not being given a fair chance to develop. They are not only exposed to grave moral dangers, but are often inferior physically to the city children whose bodies have been trained through games and sports.

Many of the workers for Children's Year are using the recreation drive to emphasize the need for better recreational facilities in their own communities. They are taking an inventory of what they have to offer boys and girls in search of amusements, and are trying to make that offering more varied and more attractive. Such organizations as the Boy Scouts, the Camp-Fire Girls, the Boys' and Girls' Clubs of the Department of Agriculture, the School Garden Army, the Junior Red Cross, and the Young Women's Christian Association are helping the Children's Year workers to demonstrate that play in which a whole community can take part is not only more healthful, but more fun than the exploited recreation and passive amusements of the town, and that a good deal of the play spirit can be put into useful leisure-time activities that range all the way from gardening and stock raising to making bandages and "helping mother."

The climax of the recreation drive will come in September or October with a patriotic play week or a play day to be held in some cases in connection with county fairs or grange meetings or some other community gatherings. This week will be made the occasion for a demonstration of the use to which children can put their leisure time. There will be songs and games and tests of physical efficiency and exhibitions of things made and raised. In some cases it is planned to give a patriotic pageant especially prepared by the executive secretary of the Drama League of America for use during play week. This pageant will emphasize the importance of the part to be played by young people in the fight for democracy—a part that can be well played only if they are given a chance to grow and develop healthfully and normally, with plenty of play, not too much work, and their full due of schooling.—Government Bulletin.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Our Nation's Defenders

To the Young Men and Women Who Have Responded to the Call in This Critical Hour of the World's History and From Our Church Have Joined the Service in Armies or Navies of the Allies in Any Capacity;

Dear Brothers and Sisters: As there came into the Presidency's office numbers of names and addresses of the young people who were taking their places with the allied forces in this great conflict, it was felt that some step should be taken to keep in touch with you and that you may know that though away from home and church we were not forgetful of you.

So the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric requested President Frederick M. Smith to take steps to provide for the care of our church boys and girls who are engaged in the service of the United States. Pursuant to this action the undersigned was requested to take up this work. Owing to some very important matters which had to be attended to and the crowding of other duties, this has not been given the attention which it deserves and only now we are making a preliminary move which we hope will lead to more useful and detailed effort.

At the present we have not worked out any details except that we have tried to get the names and addresses of each one and have them listed in a register. But, it will be easily understood that this will not be satisfactory as the movements of the troops and Navy bring daily if not hourly changes which cannot be noted with anything like accuracy. So we concluded that we might reach more through a circular letter published in our church papers and then invite every one engaged in the service to respond either by letter or by card.

We are anxious that each shall feel that this department is your own and any question or problem which you may have send it in to me personally and it will be taken care of. Should there be any needs or wants of any kind let us know what they are and every reasonable attempt to supply them will be made.

Never before has the line of cleavage between right and wrong been so definite and deep as in the underlying principles of this war. With a clear conscience the United States has taken its stand with the allies in the effort to guard the most sacred heritage of human liberty and to discharge the duties of democracy in guaranteeing the same rights to all, irrespective of numbers or position; and, we should be traitorous to our past and present if we faltered or shirked in this trying hour. As we move from place to place and see the number of stars in the different service flags of our church, there is a feeling of thankfulness that so many from our comparatively small number have bravely taken their stand with the colors.

Our church is represented in the various departments of the allied forces, a number of our young women have joined the medical corps and are with the troops in France already. No doubt many of our church boys are sharing the splendid honors which are coming to the American Expeditionary Force because of the heroic work in this great offensive since July 18. We know also of some who are serving with the Navy and have been with the American squadrons associated with the British and French in overcoming the deadly and cowardly attacks of the enemy submarines and safely conveying the merchantmen and troopships across the infested waters of the Atlantic, while from Great Britain, Canada, Australia, and other places comes information of the participation of our members in the military activities of those countries. In all of these departments we are sure that the church men and women will do their part well and nobly.

Many prayers are being offered in church meetings and around the family tables from the ministry and laity, including the old and young. Some of the most touching are the petitions which are lisped by the little children asking that God may grant the victory to our brave soldiers and sailors and all may come back to us in safety.

May it please God to keep all safe amid the multiplied dangers, not only those which can affect the body, but also from those which can poison the mind and ruin the fair spirit which resides within.

On behalf of the church, sincerely yours,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Letter Writers Wanted

To Whom It May Concern: The president of the church requested the undersigned to take steps to meet the needs of the church people, both young men and women, who have joined the American Army and Navy for service in the present war. It is not easy to carry out the details of this work at once, and more or less we are trying to feel our way to a program which will be useful and satisfactory.

It seems impossible for the church at headquarters to keep in touch personally with every one of those who have joined the American Expeditionary Force and while we may reach many through circular letters published in the church papers yet some will likely not see these. And also letters lack the element of personal touch and have an official flavor. We are asking that some one in each of the branches of the church will secure the names and addresses of all who have been called to join any department of the United States service or of her allies and that parties will take the responsibility or corresponding with any who are away, in a personal and friendly manner and give to our soldiers and sailors and any others the personal items of home, church, or neighborhood which will be interesting.

I need not say much about this important work for it has been well advertised that General Pershing has made it known that one very important work which we at home can do is to keep in touch with the ones who are far away. The eagerness with which letters from home and friends are looked for and the keen disappointment suffered when such letters do not come can be appreciated by those of us who know the meaning of absence from home and friends.

It will be appreciated therefore if every branch president will make it his business to secure the names and addresses of all who have left and gone into the service and then select some brothers and sisters who will promise to become regular correspondents with one or more every week or month. Kindly send in to my address the names and addresses of those who will volunteer for this work so that I may get reports and also that our work in this department shall be unified and systematized.

Very sincerely yours,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Who Goes to the Prison House?

[The following letter was received in June, but has been unintentionally delayed in publication. The church has never attempted in General Conference to give an official interpretation to 1 Peter 4: 6. The series of articles: "The faith and origin of the churches," only purported to give the views of the author, just as the following letter presents the views of its writer.—EDITORS.]

By your courtesy may I be permitted to ask a few questions and make a few remarks, relative to a position that is taken in the article, "Faith and origin of churches," of the SAINTS' HERALD, for June 12, 1918.

The following is the statement referred to: "They believe that 1 Peter 4: 6 teaches that those who do not hear the gospel in this life will hear it in the prison house." I would like to know when the church officially said that such was their interpretation of 1 Peter 4: 6. It may be the opinion of the writer of the article, but that such a belief is the consensus of opinion of the church I do not believe is true; neither is it in harmony with the standard books of the church. Such affirmation is a denial of the atonement of Jesus Christ, therefore it is fundamentally wrong and damaging to those who have such a belief.

The Scriptures say that "God is love." In fact they are replete with the thought that all he did for mankind was because of the great love he had for them. (John 3: 16; 1 John 3, 4.) Now shall we turn around and present him as being just the opposite? Is not that done in the above position? Who is going to send that class of people to the prison house if that is the place of their confinement? Answer, God. "Now concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection: Behold, it has been made known unto me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they depart from the mortal body; yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life." (Alma 19: 42, 43.) Then those who do not remain in paradise which is "a state of rest; a state of peace," verse 46 says they are cast into outer darkness, or into the prison house, or hell which is the same place. Thus we have God, if the brother's position is true, putting those who do not hear the "gospel of love" in this life in a place of punishment; not because they were transgressors of the law, but because they were unfortunate in not hearing the gospel in this life. Does not that make God out to be more unmerciful than man? In fact it makes him to be an exacting or even a tyrannical being. If such position is true then in place of him being a just, merciful, and loving Father as the Scriptures say, he is just the opposite. But to prove that God is just, merciful, kind, and loving, and that the position taken by the brother does not represent the God we worship, the following is what is written: "Wherefore he hath given a law; and where there is no law given there is no punishment." But our brother has him putting them in the prison house which is a punishment. "And where there is no punishment, there is no condemnation; and where there is no condemnation, the mercies of the Holy One of Israel have claim upon them, because of the atonement; for they are delivered by the power of him: for the atonement satisfies the demands of his justice upon all those who have not the law given to them, that they are delivered from that awful monster, death and hell, and the Devil, and the lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment; and they are restored to that God who gave them breath, which is the Holy One of Israel."—2 Nephi 6: 51-55.

The brother says that those who do not hear the gospel

Liberty's Battleground

Do you know where it is? Can you pronounce the names of the villages, towns, rivers, roads, etc., which are referred to in your daily papers in their accounts of the fighting now going on?

PRONOUNCING AND LOCATING any point of interest in the war zone is made easy when you possess one of our Battleground of Liberty Maps, and you may have one for the asking if you are a subscriber to any two of the three journals embraced in our Gospel Trio—just by renewing for one year for any two of the three, and requesting the map sent to your address. We will do the rest. We also give a map to each new subscriber for any one of the Gospel Trio—HERALD, Ensign, or Autumn Leaves.

OUR BOYS ARE FIGHTING THAT WE MAY BE FREE, and we should keep posted on where they are and do all we can to keep ourselves free from ignorance of them and their work. There is no excuse for you when you can be informed at such small expenditure of time and money, as is made possible by this offer.

THE NEXT MAIL should carry your order to either the Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, or to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE MAP IS 33 by 28 INCHES. Large enough to make it convenient for anyone to find the various points noted thereon. It is made by the leading map makers of the United States, and is standard in every particular.

in this life "will hear it in the prison house," but the prophet says because of the atonement they are delivered from the prison house, or hell, and restored to God, which places them in paradise. Which is right, the brother in his article, or the prophet? Which position represents God as being a God of love? Which position teaches the efficacy of the atonement, and which denies it?

Again, it is written: "For behold, and also his blood atoneth for the sins of those who have fallen by the transgression of Adam, who have died, not knowing the will of God concerning them, or who have ignorantly sinned."—Mosiah 1: 107.

"And these are those who have part in the first resurrection; and these are they that have died before Christ came, in their ignorance, not having salvation declared unto them, and thus the Lord bringeth about the restoration of these; and they have a part in the first resurrection, or have eternal life, being redeemed by the Lord."—Mosiah 8: 58, 59.

"For behold that all little children are alive in Christ, and also all they that are without the law. For the power of redemption cometh on all they that have no law; wherefore, he that is not condemned, or under no condemnation cannot repent; and unto such baptism availeth nothing."—Moroni 8: 25, 26.

Since the Book of Mormon writers are so positive in their statements that those who do not hear the gospel in this life, which is the law they refer to, are redeemed by the atonement of Jesus Christ, and are "alive in Christ," the same as little children, I must dissent from the position taken by the brother believing that such position is anti-Christian and does not represent the faith of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Sincerely,

B. L. McKIM.

The Boone Reunion

The reunion of the Des Moines District, which is now history, began on August 9, lasting until the 19th.

Of the missionary force there were present, William Lewis, Daniel Macgregor, Joseph Arber, and A. E. Warr, James F. Keir, of the Presiding Bishopric was present several days, accompanied by Brethren Audet, Fairbanks, and Farber, also D. T. Williams now of Lamoni Stake. J. W. Gunsolley of Kansas City was present in the interests of the temperance department. Mrs. J. A. Gardner of Independence represented the Woman's Auxiliary.

District President O. Salisbury and Counselor Henry Castings presided over the reunion.

Preaching services were held on the streets each evening in both East and West Boone. These, with those in the large tent and pavilion in Herman Park, were of a high order, the local men taking their places with the missionaries.

Brother and Sister Clement Malcor of Boone were in charge of the dining tent, and certainly gave great satisfaction.

Thursday, August 15, was children's and young people's day. A patriotic program was given in the morning, and in the evening a play, entitled, "A congress of nations," written by Sister Maggie Davis of Des Moines, and Roy Cheville of Rhodes, was staged: The time of the play, a few years in the future, the place Washington, national capital. Supposedly the war was ended with an allied victory, and world democracy had triumphed. An armistice has been declared.

After deliberation the council has settled the question of indemnities, and restoration of property. The final question to be settled is national disarmament. This question is now fixed by the council.

Characters: Uncle Sam, Daniel Macgregor, Woodrow Wilson, Roy Cheville; Lloyd-George (England), Joseph Arber; President Poincare (France), G. F. Hull; King Albert (Belgium), Fred Mussell; President Kerensky (Russia), Avil Salisbury; Victor Emanuel (Italy), Victor Lents; Count Luke Toruchi (Japan), Guy Fairbanks; Doctor Van Seykler (Austrian), Farber; Ta-Lauby (Turkey), J. Alexander Arber; President Liebnicht (Germany), A. E. Warr; General Pershing, Thurman Ziegenhorn; General Foch, O. Salisbury; Columbia, Ruth Lewis; Joan of Arc, Nellie Mussell; Belgian refugee, Leona McCowin; Woodrow Wilson's private secretary, Mae Huffaker; Page, Lee Mussell.

Services began each day with priesthood meeting at 7.30 a. m. each morning, prayer service at 8.45, Auxiliary meeting 10, preaching 11.15, choir practice, 2.15. Afternoons were largely taken up with recreational activities for both old and young, prominent among those providing for young people's activities were Roy Cheville, Victor Lents, and Nellie Mussell.

One of the most pleasant social functions was a wiener roast on Thursday night, at which Daniel Macgregor was master of ceremonies, and impromptu speeches were heard from various ones. In the prayer meetings and in various ways the Lord's presence was manifest, and altogether we are pleased to report a pleasant and profitable time.

A Personal Appeal to You from Detroit

DO YOU KNOW:

That this letter is addressed to the fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, uncles and aunts, and in fact every member of the great Latter Day Saint family in every quarter of the globe, who may have loved ones living in this great city?

That I take this means of attempting to reach you because I believe it to be the best we have at hand?

That if you will heed the advice and pleading of this epistle you may save yourself many a heartache in the future, incident to the carelessness and neglect of your dear ones, and because of a failure on your part to take advantage of the means at hand to assist them?

That I am writing this appeal because Detroit is a city of about 1,000,000 inhabitants; is one of the most prosperous as well as one of the largest industrial centers in the United States, having many temptations and allurements to catch the untutored and unwary?

That because of all these and many more advantages, it attracts people from every part of the world?

That there are hundreds, we believe, who subscribe to our faith and who are living here, whom we have never seen at church and who have died, spiritually, for the want of companionship of those of like faith?

That not long since, we met with people who had lived here for six years and had never been inside the church?

That we have gone out a hundred miles in the country to attend a two-day meeting and found people whom we had never seen at church, and who lived in our city?

That young people marry outside of the church, come to our city and are seldom if ever heard from after, so far as the church is concerned?

That you will have to foot some of the bills on the great reckoning day, you who have neglected to advise us of their coming?

That the city missionary, the pastor of every branch, (and we have five of them) together with the large force of consecrated young men holding the priesthood, stand ready to assist you in locating your loved ones and interesting them in the church?

That if you do not have the address of any Latter Day Saint in the city, you can always secure this by writing to the Presidency of the church, who we feel sure, stand ready to lend all assistance possible?

That the First Church is located on Fourth Avenue near Holden? Take Hamilton car to Holden or Woodward car to Antoinette Street, then go east to Fourth Avenue. Second Church, Corner Crane and Louis. Take Sherman Kerchival car to Crane, then north to Louis, or Mack Avenue car to Crane, then south to Louis. Third Church, 1685 Russell Street, 14th car to Clay Avenue. Clay car to Russell. Fourth Church, 2300 Fort Street, West, Fort car to number. Highland Park Church, 2942 Hamilton Boulevard, take Hamilton car to corner Florence and Hamilton Boulevard.

That you should take the addresses now—don't put it off a moment, because you may forget, or the paper get lost and you lose your opportunity?

That we advertise in the two most popular papers in the city, the News and Journal? You should look us up?

That we are also advertised in the city directory, but why do so many say they "couldn't find" us?

That this is a time of sacrifice, therefore you ought to be willing to sacrifice a few moments of your time and write to some one, wherever your boy or girl may be going, and have the church officers, or some of the members at least, get in touch with them.

That this few moments of your time may mean the saving of a precious soul from a life of misery and shame, or misfortune to say the least?

That our address is 1164 Fourth Avenue, telephone connection?

Yours in the interest of our young,

J. R. GRICE,
City Missionary.

BE SURE TO REGISTER FOR THE DRAFT

The man-power bill has become law and the date of registration set for September 12. All who have attained their eighteenth birthday and have not attained their forty-sixth and who have not hitherto registered in answer to the country's call are required to register. No one is exempt. The president of the church as well as the boy just arrived at his eighteenth birthday, are included. The selections will be made after the registration returns are made. The expectation is that those who are single or without dependents and able-bodied will be called first, but the Government wants the essential information concerning each man who comes within the ages mentioned. Those between twenty-one and thirty-one have already come under registration provisions and will not be affected by this extension of the draft age. We hope all who read this will deem it a duty to spread the news of the registration, watching the papers for the date, that none may come under the penalty of a year's imprisonment for failure to register. The country requires our cooperation that speed may be attained.

An office room has been fitted up for the use of the Assistant Church Historian, Herbert S. Salisbury, in the church office building at Independence. This will facilitate the work of the Presidency, as there are times when it is necessary to have immediate consultation with the Historical Department.

Apostle J. A. Gillen left Independence for the north last week. He is to travel in Canada for some time, laboring in his calling in connection with Apostle Paul M. Hanson.

J. W. Layton, caretaker of the Latter Day Saint church properties in Nauvoo informs us that the visitors are becoming very numerous, and among them he finds some from California and as far east as New York. When the church erects the monument in honor of the prophet, Joseph Smith, here, the flow of visitors will be still more numerous.—The Nauvoo Rustler.

A group of about fifty young people, composed of Lamoni Temple Builders and their friends, recently gathered together at the church, and, as the shades of evening deepened, marched over to the residence of their pastor, Brother J. F. Garver, where they sang the songs of Zion. He appeared and was addressed by one of the party, expressing their feelings of appreciation and respect, as well as loyal support. He responded most fittingly, asserting that he was most mindful of the importance of the efforts of the young and that it was the intention of the administration to see that provision was made for the utilization of the individual efforts of each member and each organization. Brother D. T. Williams, who is soon to move to Lamoni as the newly chosen counselor of Brother Garver, is to be charged with considerable responsibility along this line. Brother Garver also felt that some definite things should be done to provide proper recreational and social privileges for the young people. A book was presented to him, containing written personal messages from a large number of his admirers. The leaves were tied into folds with ribbon, and were so dated that he could open and read as indicated. It was an enjoyable affair, informal in its aspect, yet eminently worth while.

A CUP AND A LOAF FOR THE MASTER

Jesus is not with us to-day, hungry, thirsty, weary, homeless, that we may administer to his needs. But through service to others he opens up to us an avenue by which we may hand to him the cup and the loaf. He has said:

For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.—Matthew 25: 35-40.

The Salvation Army, once despised and ridiculed, has won the respect of the religious world by deeds of mercy quite similar to those mentioned here.

A BOX OF ORANGES

As I have said, Jesus is not sick to-day that we may visit him. But thousands of poor human beings are sick. Were you ever visited when you were sick? With the right kind of a visit? A little over a year ago I was sick on a lonely beach in California. And a good brother by the name of Will Mills used to drive down often and bring some of the brethren to see me. He would make a round trip of perhaps sixty or more miles in his little Ford just to take me out riding four or five blocks, for that was all I could stand. And usually when he was about to leave for home he would happen to think of a box of oranges for which he seemed to have no other use, so he would leave them with me.

WILL MILLS'S SERMON

That man was an ordained man. But I doubt if he could preach a sermon to save his life. That was his sermon. Some time I imagine he will stand before the throne of God and Jesus will say, "Brother Mills, I was sick and you visited me." And I can imagine his look of surprise as he asks, "When saw I you sick and visited you?"

And the answer will come back, "You remember when Brother Elbert was sick at Hermosa Beach. Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the very least of these my brethren you have done it unto me. I tasted your oranges, they were sweet. I rode with you in your automobile."

I have watched the nurses at their work in the Sanitarium at Independence. And instead of the emaciated form upon the bed, to which they administered, I have seen the form of Jesus of Nazareth. Yes, and I, too, have received their ministrations, and know that if I was worthy to be called one of the least of the brethren I was in Jesus' stead and their reward is sure.

PRAYERS FOR HUNGRY MEN

Jesus is not hungry now that we may feed him. But others are hungry. I read not long ago a little account of how the Salvation Army lassies work in their dugouts, among the bursting shells, just back of the firing line, baking pies and krullers. And in the morning as the soldiers come from the trenches, each boy as he marches by receives from the kindly hands of a Salvation Army lassie, three hot krullers and a half of an apple pie. I like apple pie, but I presume that under those conditions apple pie tastes better to the soldier boys than it ever did to you or to me. There was a poem with the story. One verse runs like this:

Prayers are good, at proper times,
As every soldier knows,
But coming from the trenches,
It's pie, not prayer, that goes.

I do not think that sentiment is irreverent. I think that there are times when it is better to feed a man than to pray for him. James didn't like the idea of turning a man away with a prayer and an empty stomach. Then if we can put the man in the way of earning his next meal, if he is destitute, we have done real constructive work.

A VISIT TO THE PRISON HOUSE

Jesus is not in prison now that we may visit him. But once in a while some poor mortal falls into trouble. Not long ago a brother in one of our larger cities in a time of temptation diverted the funds of an institution to his own pockets. He was put into jail and was about to be sentenced to the penitentiary. Brother — called upon him and later upon the bankers whose institution he had defrauded. He said to the bankers, "Come, let us go and see this man." They were astonished. Why should they go to jail to see a man? He had taken their money. They had put him in jail. The matter was ended.

But they were persuaded to go. They talked with the man. They heard about his family. The case was no longer abstract. It became concrete. The incident was humanized. In the end they consented, upon having their interests guaranteed, that the judge should parole this man to Brother — and permit him to have another chance to make good and care for his family. The interests of society are best safeguarded by the reformation of the offender. Jails are the poorest guarantee.

Here was a case where one in prison was visited to some purpose. There is a story to the effect that the prisoners at Fort Madison were visited so often by ministers who so invariably preached from the text of the prodigal son that when the prisoners saw a preacher appear upon a Sunday morning they would say, "Here comes another prodigal son." But in this instance something better than a homily was delivered. Is it too much to say that Jesus himself was visited in that prison?

THE HOMELESS SAVIOR

Jesus is not naked and hungry now. The seamless garment has given place to robes of glory. He is not homeless. He dwells on high. Yet he says, "I was a stranger [homeless], and ye took me in." One of the saddest complaints that ever ascended from human lips sprang from the homesick and lonely heart of Jesus Christ when he said, "The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." These missionaries, some of them, have tasted of that experience, perhaps.

We cannot open our door to Jesus now and say to him, "Come in and lie in my bed." But we can sustain the Children's Home here on the hill, and homeless little children can come there and find shelter. And those who have no children of their own can open their homes to children, and as one has said, "love into maturity those whom others have loved into life." And in that way Jesus will come in at our door and sleep in our bed.

(NOTE: In the foregoing sermon an effort was made to emphasize the principle of service, perhaps somewhat to the neglect of theological niceties of interpretation. The line between the "brethren" and the "righteous" may have been obscured at times. But I hold that if God will reward such works so gloriously when done by "righteous" men of the world, he will also reward them when done by the "brethren." Again, it may be urged that in the illustration of feeding the soldiers, many of those served were not among Christ's brethren. But I hold again that it would be a mistake to always demand a man's baptismal certificate before rendering an act of service. Paul said to do good to all men, but especially to the household of faith. The work of the Salvation Army and the Red Cross is essentially Christlike, no matter who may be the recipient, even though he be a wounded German soldier and a disciple of frightfulness. Again, it may be urged that the man in prison was guilty of sin and so could not be held to represent Jesus in any way. Would Jesus visit only those who are stainless? I read that he visited the spirits in prison who were disobedient under the preaching of Noah. He set up God's mercy seat in hell. So perhaps he would not refuse to visit a defaulter or decline to recognize a visit made under such circumstances.)

WESTERN RESERVE

Recently the question was raised as to what was meant by western reserve, and it was used in the sense that eastern people seemed more reserved than western.

Of course, our readers are well aware that this is not the sense in which it is ordinarily used, but that it refers to a tract of land.

Not much can be found in the encyclopedias, or ordinary histories concerning it. But an investigation shows that by the treaty of 1783, Great Britain surrendered to the United States all of the land south of the Great Lakes and east of the Mississippi River. Several of the Eastern States, New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, and Virginia, claimed interest in this land; but it was finally turned over to the Federal Government, all except four million acres, around the present site of Cleveland, which was held by the State of Connecticut. This land amounting to about six thousand sections is referred to as the Western Reserve.

SOCIAL SERVICE

One of the notable developments of the times, is the growing interest in social service throughout the world. Those who have watched carefully have noted this tendency increasing somewhat rapidly for the past ten years, from the individualistic to the social ideals.

Many reports and records come to our desk from time to time, showing what is being done by the larger corporations for the public in general and for their employees. The street railway companies and the packing companies are making their appeal directly to the public, to set forth their reasons and defense. This is something which scarcely had been thought of ten and fifteen years ago. More and more is the appeal being made to the public, which is only another name for society as a whole.

There is also a great increase in the number and duration of organizations looking for social betterment, labor legislation, political legislation with municipal government. Social welfare does not stop with provisions made by large corporations, but is analyzed and extended by independent organizations to consider how far it is really beneficial to those most interested.

There are probably still some whose only thought and consideration is what they can get out of a man. But the larger organizations are coming to recognize that it is economy in the long run and makes for better production to care for their employees, as shorter hours and proper, clean surroundings mean a better, total product, and a higher quality of product.

For several years the Associate Editor has been in receipt of German and French magazines and literature. Foi et Vie is published monthly in Paris. For the past two or three years it has been devoted almost exclusively to a consideration of the war, and the history of certain districts affected by the war, with a list of the atrocities and such elements. But in the latest issue received, under date of June 10, 1918, we note an editorial printed entirely in italics, calling attention to a review of the social service, and the work that is being done under this head. This, it states, is a question growing more and more vital to that country, though limited space causes them to use only the last two or three pages of the issue.

This apparently is a department of work taken up by them, and direct appeal is made for the refugees, especially the children.

Great credit is given to the work done by the American Red Cross especially, as well as by the State and other organizations. But this social service is to reach the cases which are not reached by either private organizations or public organizations. It is to reach down in a human way to the real needs of individual cases. In one department considerable help is being given to the refugees. It is not the size of the movement alone, but it is the prominence given to it, and its recognition of the growing value of service which makes a special appeal to us. It is but one additional sign that through all of the allied nations this appeal is running deep for social good which means, not the national good so much as it means the good of humanity.

S. A. T. C.

Last week we printed a communication from the United States Government. It is one of the most remarkable ever presented, as they propose to place young men, eighteen years and over, in college, furnish them with uniforms, house them, pay for their sustenance, pay their tuition fees, and pay them thirty dollars a month as privates, in order to prepare them for later service to the country. These are men who have voluntarily enrolled in college and who are high school graduates.

It appears that definite provision has not yet been made for those who are not high school graduates and for those who are not yet eighteen years of age, but such plans are being worked out and will no doubt be announced soon. It evidently is to the interest of a young man to attend school or college so he may be prepared, if he can possibly arrange to do so.

To be admitted to the wireless department does not require high school graduation. This offers an opportunity for all. The Government desires to secure 150,000 young men suited for officers and special work, and with this end in view proposes to train 250,000 in various colleges, within the next ten months.

This move comes into full effect October 1. A young man is not called any sooner to service, but when his name is reached by his local draft board he is notified, and then his disposition is determined. But in the meantime he remains in school and on the active list of the Government and is paid for attending school, as well as having all of his expenses met.

Young men of eighteen and over will have to register September 12. This may have caused some delay, but as soon as you have registered you should make your arrangements to attend college if you are a high school graduate, or to take special training if you are not a high school graduate.

As we pointed out last week, there are many young men who are not now eighteen, but who will be within the next year or year and a half, and it is to their interest, even though it be at their own expense, to make preparation now, by attending a suitable school.

In addition to the above, we now learn that students in recognized vocational schools securing a students' army training corps will also be placed upon the active list, their expenses paid as college students, while they are paid thirty dollars a month, the same as students in colleges having the students' army training corps.

Four hundred universities and colleges have made application to the Government, but the list has not yet been announced. If Graceland should be recognized for a branch of the S. A. T. C., boys who register in the wireless department will be placed upon the active list.

The Government plans to recognize special vocational schools, in addition to those already recognized, to which young men will be sent upon recommendation of their local boards.

Several schools have been recognized by the Government to teach wireless, as has Graceland College; but so far as we are aware, none of the wireless schools have yet been accepted for the S. A. T. C. Several colleges have delayed their opening until October 1, because of the uncertainty this occasions.
S. A. B.

COLLEGE DAY, OCTOBER 6

The importance of Graceland College is becoming more apparent each day. War will claim thousands of young men upon whom we have depended for leaders in society, business, and politics. The Government is realizing that these ranks must be filled and has urged all young men between 18 and 21 to continue their college work. They also appreciate that an intelligent and educated man can render to his country better service as a soldier.

If this is true of our earthly warfare why not of the war against sin and evil? Why not prepare a great army of young men and enthuse them with the idea of making special preparation for service in the army of Jehovah?

It has been gratifying to note the feeling of admiration manifest by fathers and mothers who have sent their boys to the colors. Have you realized that a joy as keen or greater is experienced by the parents who have presented a son or a daughter to the service of God?

If you have children, send them to Graceland where they are under the influence of such splendid men as are in charge of "Our College."

It is your privilege to support Graceland financially and that you may have a special opportunity General Conference has named the first Sunday in October, College Day. Every branch will take up a special collection for the benefit of the college. If you are isolated or are not able to attend the branch service on that day, mail your offering direct to the undersigned.

Yours sincerely,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

THE GOSPEL TRIO AND THE MAP OF THE BATTLEGROUNDS OF LIBERTY

During the past few months, since the flow of our manhood across the sea began, we have had many inquiries for a map which would show the various points of interest on the western front. We located a good map and found that the same could be sold by us for a commission, but with this we were not satisfied. It seemed to us that we could cement our relations with our patrons if we would make it possible for them to obtain what they desired in this line as a premium to accompany our publications. We set in motion this plan, and have secured one of the best maps of the western front which can be obtained in the country, and which we can afford to give to any who will renew their subscriptions to two or more of the publications which we denominate The Gospel Trio, composed of the SAINTS' HERALD, Zion's Ensign, and Autumn Leaves.

The increased cost of labor and printing materials has become a menace to the present low price of the SAINTS' HERALD and Zion's Ensign, yet there is a feeling of extreme reluctancy to advance the price of these publications to our people, many of whom are already making a sacrifice to pay for the privilege of reading the news of the gospel and its progress in the world. There is one way in which this situation can be cleared up, and we are determined to give it a fair trial before we further consider the advancing of the price, and that way is this: There are thousands of the church people who are not readers of the church organs. If we can increase

TEN TRIBES FROM THE NORTH COUNTRY

In Doctrine and Covenants 45 (part of the third and fourth paragraphs) are the words of the Savior to his disciples at the time when he called their attention to what would befall Jerusalem:

Ye say that ye know that the end of the world cometh; ye say, also, that ye know that the heavens and the earth shall pass away; and in this ye say truly, for so it is; but these things which I have told you shall not pass away until all shall be fulfilled. And this I have told you concerning Jerusalem; and when that day shall come, shall a remnant be scattered among all nations, but they shall be gathered again; but they shall remain until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. And in that day shall be heard of wars and rumors of wars, and the whole earth shall be in commotion, and men's hearts shall fail them, and they shall say that Christ delayeth his coming until the end of the earth. And the love of men shall wax cold, and iniquity shall abound; and when the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel; but they receive it not, for they perceive not the light, and they turn their hearts from me because of the precepts of men; and in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

The Savior makes it plain in this statement that when the times of the Gentiles is come in, the fullness of the gospel should be restored, in this latter day; and that in this generation the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled.

In Luke 21: 23-25, 32, Inspired Version, we read:

Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled. . . . Then his disciples asked him, saying, Master, tell us concerning thy coming. And he answered them, and said, In the generation in which the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled, there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity, like the sea and the waves roaring. The earth also shall be troubled, and the waters of the great deep. . . . Verily I say unto you, this generation, the generation when the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, shall not pass away till all be fulfilled.

The apostle Paul speaks of this also and he must have learned it from what Christ said about it:

For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. And then all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob.—Romans 11: 25, 26.

This great "mystery" of the gathering of Israel is to be brought about in the generation when the times of the Gentiles is fulfilled. We have the words of Christ and Paul in relation to it, and the Master said that "in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established." So this generation is to witness the gathering of Israel and the fulfillment of the words of the prophets concerning them. Are not the times of the Gentiles nearing their end?

Jesus said in his day: "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd."—John 10: 16. Where is this fold to which he refers?

In the Book of Mormon (authorized edition), page 648, paragraph 4, when Jesus visited his people upon this land he said to them, "But now I go unto the Father, and also to show myself unto the lost tribes of Israel, for they are not lost unto the Father, for he knoweth whither he hath taken them." So we see that Jesus visited his people at Jerusalem and here in America and while at this latter place he tells his people that he will "show himself" to a people whom he calls "the lost tribes of Israel."

In the Apocrypha we read:

And whereas thou sawest that he gathered another peaceable multitude unto him; those are the ten tribes which were carried away prisoners out of their own land, in the time of Osea the king, whom Salmanasar the king of Assyria led away captive, and he carried them over the waters, and so came they into another land. But they took this counsel among themselves, that they would leave the multitude of the heathen, and go forth into a further country, where never mankind dwelt, that they might there keep their statutes, which they never kept in their own land. And they entered into Euphrates by the narrow passages of the river. For the Most High then showed signs for them, and held still the flood, till they were passed over. For through that country there was a great way to go; namely, of a year and a half; and the same region is called Arsareth. Then dwelt they there until the latter time; and now when they shall begin to come, the Highest shall stay the springs of the stream again, that they may go through: therefore sawest thou the multitude with peace.—2 Esdras 13: 39-47.

In the Doctrine and Covenants 88, appears the following:

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, concerning the Apocrypha, There are many things contained therein that are true, and it is mostly translated correctly; there are many things contained therein that are not true, which are interpolations by the hands of men. Verily I say unto you, that it is not needful that the Apocrypha should be translated. Therefore, whoso readeth it let him understand, for the Spirit manifesteth truth; and whoso is enlightened by the Spirit shall obtain benefit therefrom; and whoso receiveth not by the Spirit, can not be benefited; therefore, it is not needful that it should be translated. Amen.

In 2 Kings 17, mention is made of the trouble of these kings with Israel: "Therefore the Lord was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight; there was none left but the tribe of Judah only." (Verse 18.) Israel at this time consisted of the ten tribes. They had previously become divided and are described in Bible history as the kingdom of Israel and the kingdom of Judah. And from this time the ten tribes have been lost to the knowledge of men. The writer of this claims they are in the north country, and they are hidden from the knowledge of nations, but when Israel is gathered they, by the power of God, will be brought out of their hiding place.

And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.—Isaiah 11: 12.

He gathered together the outcasts of Israel.—Psalm 147: 2.

The ensign that the Lord has set up is the church with the restored gospel, which is to be preached in all the world before the end comes. (Revelation 14: 6, 7.)

The Lord God which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him.—Isaiah 56: 8.

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall beat off from the channel of the river unto the stream of Egypt, and ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel.—Isaiah 27: 12.

Go and proclaim these words toward the north, and say, Return thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord; and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you; for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger forever. . . . In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers.—Jeremiah 3: 12, 18.

Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them; and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers.—Jeremiah 16: 14, 15.

Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land.—Jeremiah 23: 7, 8.

Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth. . . . Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock.—Jeremiah 31: 8, 10.

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah.—Jeremiah 33: 14.

The gathering of Israel and Judah in these latter days will surpass in grandeur and power and might the going of the Israelites out of Egypt.

And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dry-shod. And there shall be a highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.—Isaiah 11: 15, 16.

Israel from the north. There is no doubt but that the house of Israel is hidden beyond the northern ice, just as America was hid from the nations of Europe before it was discovered, and Esdras says in his statement that they were to tarry until the latter time when, "the Highest shall stay the springs of the stream again." And Isaiah is made to say: "There shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt."

Prepare ye for the coming of the Bridegroom; go ye, go ye out to meet him, for, behold, he shall stand upon the Mount of Olivet, and upon the mighty ocean, even the great deep, and upon the islands of the sea, and upon the land of Zion; and he shall utter his voice out of Zion, and he shall speak from Jerusalem, and his voice shall be heard among all people, and it shall be a voice as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder, which shall break down the mountains, and the valleys shall not be found; he shall command the great deep and it shall be driven back into the north countries, and the islands shall become one land, and the land of Jerusalem and the land of Zion shall be turned back into their own place, and the earth shall be like as it was in the days before it was divided. And the Lord even the Savior shall stand in the midst of his people, and shall reign over all flesh. And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep.—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 5, 6.

Jesus mentioned among the things that would come at the fullness of Gentile times: "The earth also shall be troubled, and the waters of the great deep."

Isaiah 11: 15 says the Lord shall "shake his hand over the river and shall smite it in the seven streams and make men go over dry-shod." With this calamity what does it mean? It means the loss of life; also the changing of boundary lines by water. "The great deep" will "be driven back into the north countries," "and the land of Jerusalem and the land of Zion shall be turned back into their own place."

For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory; and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name. Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God. Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate; but thou shalt be called Delightful, and thy land Union; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married.—Isaiah 62: 1-4.

The two places become one.

Wherefore, because that ye have a bible, ye need not suppose that it contains all my words; neither need ye suppose that I have not caused more to be written: For I command all men, both in the east, and in the west, and in the north, and in the south, and in the islands of the sea, that they shall write the words which I speak unto them: for out of the books which shall be written, I will judge the world, every man according to their works, according to that which is written. For behold, I shall speak unto the Jews, and they shall write it: and I shall also speak unto the Nephites, and they shall write it: and I shall also speak unto the other tribes of the house of Israel, which I have led away, and they write it; and I shall also speak unto all nations of the earth, and they shall write it. And it shall come to pass that the Jews shall have the words of the Nephites, and the Nephites shall have the words of the Jews: and the Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the lost tribes of Israel; and the lost tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews. And it shall come to pass that my people which are of the house of Israel, shall be gathered home unto the lands of their possessions; and my word also shall be gathered in one. And I will shew unto them that fight against my word and against my people, who are of the house of Israel, that I am God, and that I covenanted with Abraham, and I would remember his seed forever.—Book of Mormon, pages 157-158, verses 64-74.

The words of the Jews is the Bible.

The words of the Nephites is the Book of Mormon.

The words of the lost tribes of Israel is not yet revealed to this generation, but when it is revealed it will contain the same gospel that is in the Bible and the Book of Mormon.

Another parable spake he unto them, The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, until the whole was leavened.—Matthew 13: 32.

The woman is the church, and the leaven is the gospel; and it was hidden among three different classes of people. Two have been revealed and we await with high expectations the coming of the third when the ten tribes cross the great divide that now separates us from each other.

The above are some of the things that the prophets have spoken about before or at the coming of the Savior.

Let none of us assume to know the day or the hour of that coming, but let each of us look well that our hearts are purified before God.

Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame.—Revelation 16: 15.

Joseph Smith made no mistake when he located the gathering place about the middle, between the two oceans, and he said God told him to do it.

In the SAINTS' HERALD for August 14, 1918, is the following, in relation to matters pertaining to what took place at Kirtland the Sunday following the dedication of the temple at that place:

After this vision closed, the heavens were again opened unto us and Moses appeared before us, and committed unto us the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north.

This is also found in the Millennial Star, volume 15, page 739, and in the Journal of History for April, 1918, in an article by H. C. Smith, the Church Historian.

There can be no question but that this is to be one of the leading events of the last days in the gathering of the seed of Israel, following "the fullness of Gentile times."

In the Journal of History for July, 1918, page 275, in the General Conference Minutes for April, 1918, in the articles of agreement between the Church of Christ and the Reorganized Church, we find the following:

Number 17. "Agreed, that we believe in the literal gathering of Israel, and the restoration of the 'ten lost tribes.'"

The above statement shows the position of the church on this important point of doctrine.

THE OLD-FASHIONED PREACHER

Where is the old-fashioned preacher? You ask it with grief. Has some one stolen him from us? If so let us capture the thief. Is he psychological, biological, zoological, homiletic? Is it Fred M., or Sam, who has caused this pathetic want ad to appear, with a sigh and a tear for the old-fashioned preacher?

Methinks from the ranks of the elders sent out, each year by the conference, in faith, without doubt, there comes this reply, for which we give thanks, "Calm all your alarm, and restrain all your fear, pray do you no harm, we are all of us here—the old-fashioned preachers."

'Neath a new-fashioned coat and a new style of hat, with a clean, white collar, and a well-tied cravat, is the old-fashioned preacher. There's the same faithful heart, and the same thoughtful care; the same earnest wish, and the same fervent prayer to preach the Lord Jesus and the gospel of light, to keep himself clean and do right.

Name over the men you most intimately know, who are giving their lives for the work, not for show; and see if you dare, after that to declare that the Spirit-led man has gone from our ranks, quite vanished from sight. Look above you, give thanks for the old-fashioned men to left and to right.

It is true that their hands are not deep in their pockets, each one. (But what about that? Did Peter have pockets?) They don't wear brogans or suits of homespun. They have read a few books, one or two went to college. Forgive them their looks; don't balk at their knowledge. Their correct use of language surely isn't a sin. Shall we make them offend, and that for a word, no law being broken, as of old we have heard—and that word fitly spoken.

The fact that they've dropped, with some thought and some care, many faults from their speech, and have stopped the use of some gestures fantastic, forsooth, doesn't keep them from telling the truth, whether old man or youth. The Lord who used Peter, so rugged and rough, called Luke, with learning and polish enough, and Paul with a whole head full of knowledge. Perhaps some lad from a college, to-day, may have a wee bit of His Spirit, and share with you in God's call—don't think that you got it all.

Cast off those dark goggles, touch Charity's hand. Don't reject as untrue, every man not fashioned like you. There's a great deal of gold not cast in your mold. Who am I to reject those whom Jesus has called and sustained by his arm, from school or from farm? Here's my hand to our elders, wherever they are, whether near or afar, and my prayer shall ascend in their cause to the end. For the Spirit must move, like the breath of the Master of love, where it will. It touches us still, and then we are all old-fashioned men.

AN OLD-FASHIONED PREACHER.

THE PACIFIC COAST OR UTAH, WHICH?

The claim is advanced that the people who, under the leadership of Brigham Young, established themselves in the valleys of the mountains, did so in fulfillment of prophecies delivered by Joseph the Seer, who before his death had predicted and advocated a general exodus of the church.

Having had occasion to look into the history of the exodus from Nauvoo, I fail to find anything to indicate that the Saints, or even their leading men, knew that they were going to locate in the mountains, neither is anything found in the teachings of the latter-day Prophet pointing to the Rocky Mountains, as a gathering place for the Saints, but to the contrary the revelations he gave to the church teach another place as the center stake. That no general removal from Nauvoo was contemplated, even as late as 1845, is plainly shown by the following from Farley P. Pratt, who, under date of July 20, among other things says:

Yes, my friends, think it not strange, if before ten years, Nauvoo is the largest and most wealthy city in America, diffusing wealth, comfort, peace, and knowledge throughout all parts of the West, and more or less to the whole world. Think it not strange, if a million people, of industrious Saints are congregated in that and neighboring cities, all acting in unison with one heart and one mind, while every market in the world is more or less supplied with the productions of their skill and industry.—Millennial Star, vol. 6, p. 92.

Had the Prophet Joseph pointed out a new location for the Saints, there would have been a general understanding as to where that would be, but this was evidently not the case, as it appears that California, Oregon, and Vancouver Island were all under consideration as the possible refuge.

The Millennial Star, volume 8, page 142, contains a copy of a memorial that had been forwarded to Her Majesty the Queen of England, pleading for permission and aid for her poor subjects to emigrate to Vancouver. In volume 9, page 74, is shown a diagram of forty-nine numbered squares, each representing a section of 640 acres. Said diagram had been attached to the memorial, with the prayer to the Queen that the emigrants be granted the sections bearing the even numbers, leaving the uneven numbers to be disposed of as the government might choose, claiming that such settlement would greatly enhance the value of the remaining. It was guaranteed to send twenty thousand people of all trades and from most districts in Scotland, England, and Wales at once, or as soon as vessels could be found to convey them. That they were hopeful of success and did actually desire to remove the Saints to Vancouver, is plain from the following in a letter from Orson Hyde, dated Cheshire, February 5, 1847:

It would not be proper, under existing circumstances, for any people to make their calculations to emigrate to the camp in the wilderness, until after you get official communication from the council, as an answer to the representation that Brother Pratt, Taylor, and myself shall make on our return, unless the queen should listen to our prayer, and prepare the way for emigration to Vancouver. In that case let emigration begin as soon as government may open the way.—Millennial Star, vol. 9, p. 59.

Again, in an editorial in Millennial Star, volume 9, page 104, after quoting from a letter from Brigham Young, we read the following:

From this extract of President Young's letter, it will be perceived that Vancouver Island is the gathering point of the Saints from the islands and distant portions of the earth. To this point let the Saints of England steadily direct their attention, in all their arrangements for emigration. Any other arrangement such as going in the company of Elder — through the States, or to some points east of the Rocky Mountains, must not be made upon our responsibility, or upon that of the presidency in America. No companies are counseled by competent authority to go to any other parts of America than Vancouver Island.

Evidently Her Majesty did not look with favor on the proposition, for nothing came of the scheme, but at the very time the European Saints were preparing to emigrate to Vancouver, the followers of Brigham Young were leaving Nauvoo for California or the western coast of America. The first proposition in this line comes not from Joseph Smith, but from Governor Ford of Illinois. The following is from a letter from his excellency to Brigham Young, quoted by Orson F. Whitney in his history of Utah:

I would suggest a matter in confidence, California now offers a field for the prettiest enterprise that has taken place in modern times. It is but sparsely inhabited, and by none but Indians or imbecile Mexican Spaniards. I have not inquired enough to know how strong it is in men and means. But this we know when conquered from Mexico, that country is so physically weak and morally distracted that she could never send a force there to reconquer it. Why should it not be a pretty operation for your people to go out there, take possession of and conquer a portion of that vacant country, and establish an independent government of your own, subject only to the laws of nations? You would remain there a long time before you would be disturbed by the proximity of any other settlements.—History of Utah, vol. 1, p. 238.

Of course Mr. Whitney will not admit that Brigham Young acted upon the suggestion of Governor Ford, but California or the Pacific coast did at that time, through some means, become the promised land, to which the westward moving Saints were aiming. The mountains are not mentioned in any of the instructions to the Saints in those days, only as they spoke of going "beyond the mountains," or "west of the mountains." The following is from an address by Elder John Taylor to the Saints in Great Britain dated March 1, 1846:

You have no doubt been informed of our removal from the city of Nauvoo, and of the cause for that removal you may not be entirely ignorant. . . . Many living witnesses can testify that we proposed moving to California, leaving the land of our oppression, preaching the gospel to the Lamanites, building up other temples to the living God, and establishing ourselves in the far-distant west."—Millennial Star, vol. 8, p. 97.

In same address, on page 115, speaking of the movable property the Saints had taken in exchange for their homes and farms in Hancock County, Illinois, he says:

This property, together with our families, we are removing to a distant land; when we arrive in that land we shall have the very kind of property that is requisite to settle and improve it. When we arrive in California, according to the provisions of the Mexican government, each family will be entitled to a large tract of land amounting to several hundred acres; but as the Mexican and American nations are now at war, should California fall into the hands of the American Nation, there has been a bill before Congress, in regard to Oregon, which will undoubtedly pass, appropriating six hundred and forty acres of land to each male settler; should California fall into the hands of the American Nation, this privilege will unquestionably extend to that land for the encouragement of emigration. . . . It was the labor, the enterprise and settlement of the Saints that made Nauvoo valuable, the same result must necessarily follow their settlement in California.

Utah is sometimes asserted to be a part of California, but no authority is found for such claim. This is immaterial, however, as the following lines composed by John Taylor at the time of the exodus makes it plain that when he speaks of California he refers to the country along the Pacific coast:

The Upper California, oh, that's the land for me;
It lies between the mountains and great Pacific Sea;
The Saints can be supported there,
And taste the sweets of liberty
In Upper California—oh, that's the land for me.

We'll go and lift our standard, we'll go there and be free;
We'll go to California and have our jubilee.
A land that blossoms with beauty rare,
A land of life and liberty,
With flocks and herds abounding, oh, that's the land for me.

We'll burst off all our fetters and break the Gentile yoke,
For long it has beset us, but now it shall be broke;
No more shall Jacob bow his neck,
Henceforth he shall be great and free
In Upper California—oh, that's the land for me.

We'll reign, we'll rule and triumph, and God shall be our King;
The plains, the hills, and valleys shall with hosannas ring;
Our towers and temples there shall rise
Along the great Pacific sea,
In Upper California—oh, that's the land for me.

We'll ask our cousin Lemuel to join us heart and hand,
And spread abroad our curtains throughout fair Zion's land;
Till this is done we'll pitch our tents
Along the great Pacific sea,
In Upper California—oh, that's the land for me.

Then join with me, my brethren, and let us hasten there;
We'll lift our glorious standard and raise our house with prayer;
We'll call on all the nations round
To join our standard and be free,
In Upper California—oh, that's the land for me.

While Brigham Young and followers were preparing to move from Nauvoo, overland to California, the Saints from the Eastern States were instructed to go by sea round Cape Horn to the coast of that land. In Bancroft's History of Utah is found the following:

During the height of the trouble in Nauvoo, Orson Pratt was in New York, where on the 8th day of November, 1845,

Sunday, October 6, is College Day. You are expected to "do your bit."

he addressed a farewell message to the brethren in the East, calling upon such of them as had means to sell their property, buy teams, and join the overland emigration, and to those who had none to take passage in the ship Brooklyn, chartered for that purpose by Elder Samuel Brannan, and which was to sail round Cape Horn via the Hawaiian Islands, for California. Shortly after the Brooklyn sailed with 238 emigrants.—Page 213.

In his history of California the same writer says: "The Brooklyn sailed from New York February 4, 1846, and arrived at San Francisco July 31, same year."—Vol. 5, p. 548.

Under date of March 7, 1846, Wilford Woodruff writes from New York and says:

There were two hundred Saints that went West with Elder Brannan; they were loaded down with freight, some for Toubone, where Elder Pratt is. The Saints are expecting to charter or buy two ships in September. All are alive for emigration, most of the eastern churches are going by water.—Millennial Star, vol. 7, p. 124.

When Elder Woodruff speaks of the eastern churches going by water, he did not have in mind a gathering to the Salt Lake Valley, as that is nearly one thousand miles inland, but as seen, the coast of America, on the Pacific shore, was the land to which they were expecting to move. Of Elder Brannan's company the Times and Seasons has this to say:

We have thought proper to issue an extra this morning to inform our brethren and friends, scattered abroad, of the ship Brooklyn leaving port last Wednesday, with about two hundred and thirty souls on board, including men, women, and children, together with three or four passengers. As regards the getting up of the company of emigrants, we desire to give a brief and correct statement, for the benefit of all concerned. Some two months since, Elder Brannan was counseled by President O. Pratt, of this city, before leaving for the West to charter a vessel, and take out a company of the Saints to Oregon or California, and as soon as an opportunity offered others would follow, and endeavor to get beyond the reach of persecution and oppression. Accordingly he obeyed the counsel.—Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 1126.

The same article states that the ship was loaded, besides passengers, with agricultural and mechanical tools, consisting of plows, hoes, forks, shovels, spades, plow irons, scythes, sickles, nails, glass, blacksmith's, carpenter's, and millwright's tools. Three grain mills, turning lathes, sawmill irons, grinding stones, a printing press and type, paper, and schoolbooks of various kinds. Also dry goods, twine, etc., brass, copper, iron, tin, and crockery-ware, with provisions and water enough for a six or seven months' voyage. They had also on board two milch cows, forty or fifty pigs, besides fowls, etc. All this goes to show that they were expecting to make a permanent settlement, not in the interior of the country, but on the coast, to where such merchandise and implements could be shipped better and cheaper by water than overland. Should there be any doubt that these emigrants by sea and overland were destined to the same place, the following will make the matter clear:

We have referred to the interesting position of the church at the present time. The multitude on their journey in the wilderness, others that are preparing to follow them on their route, hundreds on the water rounding the Horn, to meet their brethren on the coast of the Pacific.—Millennial Star, vol. 8, p. 29.

California, or on the coast of the Pacific, was where the companies expected to meet. It was a prearranged plan by the leading church officials, and had not the project of locating in California been abandoned, the plan of sending many more shiploads would undoubtedly have been carried out. Whitney barely makes mention of the company on the ship Brooklyn and speaks of it as an undertaking for which the church authorities were not responsible. He says:

It seems that about the beginning of the exodus from Nauvoo, there had sailed from New York, on the ship Brooklyn, a company of Saints bound for the bay of San Francisco. They numbered two hundred and thirty-five souls and were in charge of Elder Samuel Brannan. The company were well supplied with farming implements, and all tools necessary for the formation of a new settlement which they proposed founding somewhere on the Pacific coast.—History of Utah, vol. 1, p. 250.

While Whitney makes it appear as if the company under Samuel Brannan was a sort of volunteer move on the part of the eastern Saints, it is seen by the foregoing, that it not only had the sanction of the church officials, but indeed was gotten up through their council and instruction. This company was equipped as pioneers going ahead around Cape Horn to prepare for the reception of the main body coming overland. This is still further confirmed by the following, from a petition presented by Elder Jessie C. Little to President Polk:

From twelve to fifteen thousand Mormons have already left Nauvoo for California, and many others are making ready to go; some have gone round Cape Horn, and I trust before this, have landed at the Bay of San Francisco. We have about forty thousand in the British Isles, all determined to emigrate to this land, and thousands will sail this fall. There are also many thousands scattered through the States, besides the great number in and around Nauvoo, who will go to California, but many are destitute of money to pay their passage either by sea or by land.—Whitney's History of Utah, vol. 1, p. 257.

Elder Little, as can be seen from Whitney's History, volume 1, page 256, had gone to Washington, at the suggestion of Brigham Young, soliciting aid for the people in their exodus. This led up to the enlistment of "the Mormon Battalion," who were to be discharged in California, their destination, an opportunity sought for, now easily proven even from Mormon publications. When Captain J. Allen had come among them at Winter Quarters, to accept of their offered service, Brigham Young did not hesitate to comply with the request, but said:

You shall have your battalion, . . . and if there are not enough young men, we will take the old ones, and if they are not enough we will take the women.—Whitney's History of Utah, vol. 1, p. 261.

That this was not the cruel and inhuman act upon the part of the Government that it so frequently has been pictured, but instead a favor sought for, and so regarded at the time, is further shown by the following statement by John Taylor, in his address to the Saints in Great Britain:

Although we have been inhumanly and barbarously dealt with, by the surrounding country where we dwelt, yet the President of the United States is favorably disposed to us. He has sent orders to have five hundred of our brethren employed in an expedition that was fitting out against California, with orders for them to be employed for one year, and then to be discharged in California, and to have their arms and implements of war given to them at the expiration of the term, and as there is no prospect of any opposition, it amounts to paying them for going to the place where they were destined to go without.—Millennial Star, vol. 8, p. 117.

Again, it will be seen from the following, first published in California, January 1, 1847, that it was expected that the company overland would join them on the coast; and that they were making preparations for the reception of their brethren coming over the mountains:

There have been no arrivals this fall, from those coming by land, but we are anxiously looking for them next season. They will in all probability winter on the headwaters of the Platte, where they can subsist on buffalo meat. We are now all busily engaged in putting in crops for them to subsist on when they arrive. . . . About twenty of our number are up at the new settlement which we have called New Hope, . . . making preparations to move their families up in the spring, where they hope to meet the main body by land some time during the coming season. . . . At present our attention is more particularly called to temporal affairs—if we may so term it—than spiritual, by making every exertion in our power to provide for our brethren over the mountains.—Millennial Star, vol. 9, p. 306.

The fact that California or the Pacific coast was the land for which they aimed, both by sea and by land, leads us to conclude that the Prophet had not designated the valleys of the mountains as the gathering place for the Saints; or if he had, both the leaders and the people had become heedless to his instructions. We learn that it was not until in 1847 a change was made in the program, and the thought of going to California was abandoned. In regard to this, let the historian, Orson F. Whitney, tell the story. Speaking of conditions in 1847, he says:

It was pretty well decided in the mind of the Mormon leaders at this time, that the Pacific coast, to which it was generally supposed they were migrating, in spite of its many natural advantages, was no place for the main body of the people to settle. It might do for a colony such as that of the ship Brooklyn, to make its way to California and there form a settlement—as Elder Brannan and his company were now doing—and other Mormon towns might spring up upon the Pacific slope. But for the headquarters of the church, and a permanent abiding place for the majority of the Saints, California proper, or any part of the coast was exceedingly undesirable.—History of Utah, vol. 1, p. 282.

This makes it plain. To locate in the mountains was an afterthought, and it was not concluded to do so until the pioneers were on their way in 1847. The foregoing also makes clear that Utah was not considered a part of "California proper," for it was now decided that that land was exceedingly undesirable as a gathering place for the main body of the church. But the historian proceeds and gives the reasons for not going to California, as follows:

Towards that favored land, that Eldorado—though gold in California had not yet been discovered—large numbers of emigrants from Missouri and other border States were now wending their way. Many had gone, and were still going to Oregon, which Great Britain had relinquished, while others, as early as 1841, had bent their course to the future land of gold. Colonel Fremont, as seen, at the outbreak of the Mexican war, had found enough settlers in the Sacramento Valley to form, with his exploring party, a small army. And that California like Texas was part of the American domain—only awaiting its cession to the great Republic—emigration thither was bound to increase manyfold.—History of Utah, vol. 1, p. 282.

No doubt Mr. Whitney is correct. It was Brigham Young's and his associates' policy to establish themselves somewhere, if possible, where they could carry on their polygamous practices unmolested by any government. But Mr. Young assigns still another reason for not going to California. He said in a sermon delivered in Salt Lake City, October 6, 1863:

When we were ready to start on our pilgrimage West, a certain gentleman, who signed himself "Backwoodsman," wished to know on what conditions we would overcome and settle California. He gave us to understand that he had authority from headquarters, to treat with us on the matter. I thought that President Polk was our friend at that time; we have thought so since, and we think so now. We agreed to survey and settle California—we drawing the odd numbers and the Government the even numbers—but I think the President was precipitated into the Mexican war, and our prospective calculations fell through, otherwise we should have gone to California and settled it. Many of you did not know this.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 10, p. 255.

Elder Samuel Brannan, who with his company had established themselves in California, and had made extensive preparations to aid the main body when it should arrive, became anxious to meet the overland company, came east and met Brigham Young and the pioneers on Green River, expecting to escort them to his settlement in California, but was doomed to disappointment because of the change in the plan that now had taken place. Of this Bancroft says:

Brannan went east to meet Brigham Young and the main body, leaving Helvitiata late in April, 1847, reaching Fort Hall on June 9, and meeting the Saints at Green River about July 4, to come on with them to Salt Lake Valley. He was not pleased with the decision, to remain there and found a city, and soon started back sorrowfully with the news. The members of the Brooklyn company were likewise disappointed to learn that the new home of their people was to be in the far interior.—History of California, vol. 5, p. 533.

The same historian, speaking of the Brooklyn party which had arrived at San Francisco Bay in the summer of 1846, says:

During this year a settlement named New Hope was founded by a portion of the company on the north bank of the Stanislaus River, near the junction with San Joaquin, but was abandoned when news was received that the brethren had resolved to remain in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake.—History of California, vol. 5, p. 593.

All of the foregoing goes to show that the location in Salt Lake Valley came about through an after consideration, and hence not because of any inspired utterances of the Prophet Joseph Smith. The hoped-for move to Vancouver had failed, and California was now deemed undesirable. The change was a disappointment to those who had gone to California and there made preparation. In selecting this new Zion they were not guided by the word of the Lord through the Prophet Joseph Smith, nor by any revelation to the church, and we are forced to conclude that whatever credit or responsibility attaches for the location of the Latter Day Saints in the mountains, these are due Brigham Young and his associates. Likewise must the same persons, and not Joseph Smith, bear the responsibility for the introduction of the new and unscriptural doctrines forced upon the people in that land; which doctrine has made the latter-day work a hiss and reproach throughout the civilized world.

The Reverend Doctor R. C. Shimeall, of the Presbytery of New York City, treating upon Isaiah 18, on page 305 of his book, the Second Coming of Christ, says: "This passage, instead of 'Woe to,' etc., should read, 'Ho! the land of overshadowing wings,' etc. This prophecy refers to that nation which shall hold a maritime preeminence over all others, and which can refer to none other so emphatically as to the United States of America." Reverend Doctor Shimeall is the author of eight or more literary works, and is a very prominent writer and historian.—C. J. Hunt.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE LABORER IS WORTHY OF HIS HIRE

In every crisis of national life the clergymen of America have stood in the forefront of patriotic endeavor; in every human crisis they have brought support, and guidance, and comfort to souls in desperate need. Now it is time to measure the work and the needs of the preacher and pastor as men in other departments of work to-day are being measured, that their value may be rightly appraised and their needs fairly met.

The cost of living has greatly increased. Clothing, food, fuel, and all the daily incidentals that go to make up American life have gone up from thirty to a hundred per cent. And the loans and taxes for Freedom's war are ever making deeper drives into the purse. Wage-earners in every department of the Nation's work have been demanding more income, and their demands have been recognized as just and necessary. Railroad men and miners, lumberjacks and shipbuilders, munition workers, telegraph operators, automobile makers, and all the multitudes of skilled and unskilled laborers have been counted "worthy of their hire," and of higher hire. The United States Government, very recently, has raised the wages of two million railroad workers alone, giving the poorest paid men an increase of 43 per cent. Corporations and individual employers without number throughout the United States have taken similar action. Trade unions are standing back of their men and using pressure when necessary to gain for them the means to live their lives and do their work as Americans should.

Who stands back of the clergymen of America in these days of pressure? What great organization or compelling authority, what generous heart or spirit of fair play is winning for your minister, or pastor, or priest, or rabbi the salary increase that will give him strength, courage, efficiency, and success in his vital and exalted work for the welfare of the nation, and the kingdom of God?

Your pastor is not a cheap man nor an unskilled laborer. He has brought long, careful training to his task. He was chosen with scrutinizing care as to his qualifications, and he is being measured to-day by high and exacting requirements in the performance of his work. Carry that measurement to its just conclusion. What salary would you expect to pay to the trained man in business of whom such important work and expert ability were required? Set down on paper some of the qualities and duties you demand of your pastor, and then judge their value.

He must be a man among men, a man of force, tact, and agreeable personality, a good mixer, a man of knowledge, wisdom, and authority, whose presence commands respect and whose word carries conviction. He must be able to influence men and women, win their confidence, kindle their enthusiasm, direct their energies, and organize their working powers. He must be full of sympathy, ready with consolation, a strength in weakness, a bright light in times of darkness, and a never-failing source of inspiration to the souls of his people. You expect all this of him.

Your pastor, also, must be the successful head and center of your organized church activities, business, social, and spiritual. On occasion, or as a regular part of his task, he must be an expert money raiser. You engage him as your chief and leader, the general manager of your church, if not its actual creator, or savior from its difficulties. You put upon him a burden and a responsibility you would never dream of intrusting to any cheap man in business.

Nor are those his greatest tasks. He must read, and study, and meditate, and commune with the Infinite. He must understand men, and know their work, their trials, their problems, their temptations, their deep inner feelings and aspirations, and the avenues of helpful approach to their sympathies and convictions. He must know something of history, science, literature. He must be familiar with all social needs, and institutions, and methods. He must be able to interpret the word of God with true spiritual insight, and practical human application. He must stand before you in the pulpit on the Sabbath and deliver messages that search the soul, feed the mind, bring courage to the heart, make plain the path of daily life, and lift you nearer to heaven, or bring heaven nearer to earth.

In these days, also, your preacher must proclaim the ideals and principles of America. He must stir the patriotism of his young men and send them with strong hearts and noble vision into the service of their country. He must pastor them in the camps and follow them with his letters and prayers as they go across the sea to fight. The Government values him so highly that it has already called thousands of American clergymen into active service to shepherd the fighting men and help them win the war. At home the Government calls him to be its mouth-piece in its appeals to its citizens for every form of patriotic service or economy prescribed as needful for victory. You expect your pastor to be equal to such demands and to do your church credit when called upon for public addresses or community action.

When you have listed all the qualities and services you ask of your pastor, make out the bill for the amount your church ought to pay for such a man, and then move things to see that the church pays that bill. Never mind what has been done in the past, nor what long habit has accustomed the church to believe can be done. The standing record of clergymen's salaries throughout this great rich nation is a pitiful shame, and belies the real heart and fairness of the American people. The average salary of clergymen in ten of the largest denominations is only $793 a year. What trade or business would tolerate such a condition?

The minister of your church is a human being like the rest of us, and he is feeling the pressure of increased cost of living just as we do. But no Government decree has raised his salary. No corporation or trade union stands back of him. He does not go on strike. He simply trusts his people, and works faithfully for them seven days a week, and many nights, and struggles to look respectable, and pay his bills, and perform the miracles expected of him, often for less than the salary of the young girl stenographer who teaches a class in his Sunday school, or the wages of the man who lays the sidewalk in front of his church.

Among the more than two million readers of The Literary Digest are active and substantial members of thousands of churches throughout the United States. To them this frank appeal is made, in keeping with the urgent needs of the day, and the American spirit of justice and generosity. Give your minister a lift. Take the initiative now and have his salary increased to an amount which will come nearer to the real value of his services, and enable him to meet the increased cost of living. He is not demanding it, but he needs it none the less, and your own sense of right demands it for him. If his salary is $800, it ought to be made, at once, $1,200. If it is $1,000, it ought to be raised to $1,500. There is scarcely a church, large or small, anywhere in America that cannot increase its pastor's salary at least 50 per cent. Money never was so plentiful. More actual cash—gold, silver, and paper currency—is in circulation to-day than at any time in the Nation's history, and there is a bigger share for every man, woman, and child. See that your pastor gets his fair share of your profits and those of every member in your church.

Back up the soldiers of America who follow the flag to France! Billions for them! Nothing is too much nor too good for our soldiers of liberty. But now remember that your minister is one of the bravest, worthiest soldiers of all. He is fighting for America, for the righteousness that "exalteth a nation." He is fighting for America, as he puts his clean, valiant, patriotic spirit into the youth and into the men and women of his congregation and sends them out into the tasks of the week better fitted to answer America's call. He is fighting for the kingdom of heaven on earth, to help win its victories over the archenemy of the human race, the destroyer of bodies and souls. He is the soldier of mercy to those in distress, the ever-ready soldier of service to those who need help. Back him up with wholehearted support and a quick, generous increase in salary.

We have taken this page to speak for the clergymen of America in this supreme crisis of the Nation's readjustment, because we know that they are the one great devoted, indispensable body of faithful workers who have no spokesman. Only in this way has it seemed possible to reach the individual consciences and hearts of millions of men and women who, in all our experience, have never failed to respond to any just call.—The Literary Digest.

KEEP OUT OF IT

During the last General Conference a young elder of the Church of Christ (Hedrickite) and an elderly man of the Utah Mormon faith (who later turned out to be a son of Brigham Young) were having a friendly argument beside the building on the temple lot. Quite naturally a group of Saints gathered around to listen, among them some women. One woman, apparently of the Reorganized church, thought it her duty to do something, and hurled some uncomplimentary remarks about Brigham Young at the elderly man (not knowing he happened to be Brigham Young's son). The remarks very vehemently expressed her feelings towards Brigham Young and his teachings, but they added nothing to the argument, nor did they do any good in any other way. On the other hand she interrupted a friendly argument much to the annoyance of many quiet listeners, and manifested a spirit of spite and bitterness more closely allied to that of Brighamism than to that of the gospel of the meek and lowly Nazarene. Both men properly ignored her.

The argument grew important enough that they decided to carry it on more in the form of a debate and retired to the auditorium of the building on the temple lot. Fortunately the sister did not follow, but unfortunately some brethren who could not possess their souls in patience, did. Some of them could not keep out of it. Adjournment probably saved this meeting from ending in confusion, but it lasted long enough to show that there are Saints—even elders—who have not yet learned that there are times when "silence is golden."

But this is not the only place that such things have occurred. Too often when an elder is having a debate or an informal discussion with an opponent of the work, Saints want to "butt in," even sometimes from the audience. Fortunate indeed is the branch which has not one or more who seem to think their principal duty in the church is to go around with a chip on their shoulders inviting all comers to a theological combat. Too often these brethren spoil what an elder has accomplished in a debate or a reply to an attack made upon the church. They "buttonhole" strangers in the audience, start discussions with them, often following them outside, creating a "hub-bub," attracting undue attention, and the people go away with an unpleasant recollection of the whole affair, whereas if these interfering brethren could keep out of it, and leave the matter where the preacher thought it wise to leave it, the audience would disperse orderly and impressed with the dignity of the occasion and respect for the preacher and assembly.—Editorial in The Glad Tidings for June, 1918.

THE SECURITY OF THE CHURCH

In Julian the Apostate, by Christopher James Reithmuller, Basil replies concerning the security of the church, as follows:

God will protect his truth, you need not fear.
 And pondering much upon such thoughts of late,
 Moved by the sound of discord in the church,
 There came to me a light as from above,
 That not by outward signs can we discern
 The progress of the faith. It works unseen,
 And wins its way in silence to the souls
 Of humble men; its fruit is in their lives,
 And all the powers of earth and hell combined
 Will not prevail against it. Courts may change
 Their tenets like the fashion of their dress—
 Emperors proscribe, and venal priests condemn,
 The best and noblest shepherds of the flock—
 False brethren, by their actions, bring disgrace
 Upon a sacred cause, and heathen foes
 Join with the spirits of evil to predict
 Our swift decay and fall. But, as of old,
 In quietness and confidence shall be
 Our strength and our deliverance. God has built
 His church upon a rock, and it will stand.

It is impossible to govern the world without God.

The Aim of Education

I

The aim of education is growth. Not to grow is unnatural. There sometimes is life without normal, physical growth, as in dwarfs; and what is sadder than to see a man in years, but a child in stature? Sometimes, too, we find growth of body, unattended by growth of mind—a full-grown person, with the intellect of a babe. We call them imbecile. There is still another abnormal development—and that is where we find men and women with well-developed minds and bodies, but with stunted souls! They had grown physically, and mentally, but had forgotten the most important thing of all, the spiritual development. Christ said the simple and foolish things of this world would bring to naught the wise and mighty. In other words well-fed bodies and minds amount to little when connected with starved souls.

A good education aims to develop all three sides of our nature, to train the head, the hands, and the hearts. We need all in everyday life. It is our duty to seek the best way to accomplish this all-round development, which way is to lean upon the loving Father for daily blessing and sustenance.

The soul was intended to grow like the body or mind. You cannot feed the body on ideas; they are for the mind. You cannot feed the mind on, say, strawberries; they are for the body. Likewise the spirit is not developed very much by playing ball, or motoring. Yet, all are necessary in their place, and by wise use of all things we develop all parts of our nature, mentally, physically, and spiritually. This is true education.

Properly cared for and nourished, the body will grow. Given the necessary stimulants, the mind will develop. The soul, also, will expand if given divine substantialities, since it is composed of divine essences. In this way only can it have life—"and this is life eternal, that they may know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

Not to know these divine beings is to be dwarfed forever, no matter how gigantic we may be in mind or body. So let us strive earnestly to develop in body and mind, and also "in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ."

II

The aim or purpose of education is to fit us for efficient work in the Master's cause, and to have a clear understanding of the many difficult problems which confront us from day to day. We are in the "hastening time" of the world; therefore we need to become more educated in order to take our places in the ranks and to discharge more worthily that part which is our personal responsibility.

The purpose of the Woman's Auxiliary is to assist us in so qualifying, that we may be better Saints, better mothers, better neighbors, and better in every place and under every circumstance. Our everyday conversation and actions, and our conduct in the assemblies in the house of God, should proclaim our higher spirituality.

To be learned is good, providing we hearken to the word of God. By means of study we are fitted to perform better work, whether it be in temporal or in spiritual affairs. An educated person can be of greater service in the world than an ignorant one.

Sometimes we have felt keenly our inability to do that which is allotted to us; but we feel sure that none of us can do better than to quietly and resolutely study for an increase of knowledge, and also for an increase of faith, whereby we may show ourselves approved of God. Then we will be better able to explain to others the reason why we bear the name of "Saint."

We are admonished to acquaint ourselves with the doctrine of the kingdom, and also to teach it to others, as well as everything that pertains to it. When we have truly tried to do this, and to qualify for it the best we know how, the Comforter is ever ready to teach us the "things of the Father."

Thus, as we "grow in grace and knowledge," and become better able to teach others to walk in the sunny way that leads to life and true happiness, we find indeed that "wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."

Will Women Reform the World?

A recent popular minister has lifted a warning voice against the possibility of commercializing women's gifts and powers at the expense of her womanliness. From him we quote the following for the benefit of our readers:

"The ideals of mankind are poured into the race through and by its women. To-day our women are going out and working side by side with the men. Herein lies a danger to be avoided. God pity us if we grind down our women by paying them unfair wages, or by putting them where their idealism will be smirched.

"There are three ideals which must be preserved—the ideals of womanhood, of usefulness, and of the heart. If women will carry their high ideals into business, into politics, and all the new fields of their endeavor, they will transform this old, bored, stale world in a startling manner. They must seek to preserve these ideals; we cannot, in justice to coming generations, allow these sacred things to become dulle.

"The ideal of usefulness is higher to-day than it was a year ago. Yet to-day there are more useless women in the homes of the well-to-do, than anywhere else on earth. They gossip, waste time, spend money, and use up the energies of society. They yield no service, thought, character, or the fruits of womanhood. This should not be.

"The ideal of the heart must also be preserved. In the outpouring of her love and self-sacrifice woman stands towering above man so high that he fails to comprehend her. She is an eternal marvel to him, a wonderful mystery before which he stands like a child. And this ideal is developed and enshrined in the home, the real home, where woman is wife and mother. It was the ideal of the mother of the Grachii, Cornelia, when a vulgar woman was displaying her jewels, brought out her two sons, and said, 'These are my jewels.'

"We must be careful in these days when 'careers' are beckoning to woman, in what some of them wrongfully consider 'greater fields of usefulness' that this wonderful heart ideal is not forgotten or besmirched. We cannot permit the next generation to be mothered by the weak women of this generation, but we need the strong ones, those of big womanly hearts, and high ideals, full of self-sacrifice and love to be the mothers of the strong generations needed to reconstruct the world torn by the present conflict of nations."

Better Play

The drive for better play and more inspiring out-of-school activities for children is on. Plans are rapidly developing in the States to make this recreation drive count for increasing the health and vigor of the boys and girls of the United States, according to an announcement made by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor. One purpose of the drive is to make plain that the vigor of young people can be gauged by their ability to perform certain game tests and that their health can be increased by wholesome play.

Although play is instinctive with children many of them have never learned to play with other children, and need to be taught to take part in group games. Such games teach the spirit of cooperation and team work, and develop the ability to make the quick decisions demanded by the needs of the game.

The child welfare committees of the Woman's Committee in each State are undertaking the organization of the Recreation Drive. Their plans contemplate a summer of healthy play, good wholesome games, and leisure time activities that keep the children happy and out of mischief. At the end of the Recreation Drive there will be a week set aside as Patriotic Play Week in which the children can show by game tests how strong their summer's recreation has made them. They will show also what they have learned of outdoor life, what skill they have acquired as war garden workers, what food they have conserved through their work in the canning clubs of the Department of Agriculture, what garments they have made in the Junior Red Cross for the soldiers and sailors and refugees, and whatever other local activities are especially worth while and interesting. In short, the idea of Patriotic Play Week is to give a picture of what the community is doing to make the leisure time of its children healthy and worth while.

The game tests will be a special feature of Patriotic Play Week. They are progressive tests and when the boys and girls have passed them certificates will be furnished free of charge by the Playground and Recreation Association of America as proof that the test has been passed. Boys and girls are beginning now to fit themselves for the tests by playing the games which develop special muscular agility. A leaflet telling how to play twelve good games, and showing just how they will help to make the children stronger can be secured on request from the Playground and Recreation Association of America, 1 Madison Avenue, New York, which is cooperating with the Children's Bureau and the Woman's Committee in the plans for the recreation drive of Children's Year.—Children's Bureau.

What One Family is Doing for Play Week

The mother of five lively young children who wants them to have part in the Patriotic Play Week for which the Children's Year workers are now making ready has devised as a new way of helping children to get ready for Play Week an exhibit that will show how much they know about their own home town and the fields and woods about it. She believes that now when everyone is alert to the needs of the country there is an unusual opportunity to foster in young children the love of the place in which they live and to persuade them to assume some responsibility for making and keeping their home towns desirable places in which to live. It is this spirit of pride in the neighborhood that will grow into the sense of civic and national responsibility which is the foundation of good citizenship.

The Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor wishes other mothers to have the benefit of this mother's suggestion. Her plan is to interest children in learning about the town, competing with one another in seeing who can learn the most interesting facts about its history. Possibly some of its present-day civic undertakings can be described. What the children learn can be shown in ways they should be urged themselves to devise—the facts they have learned can be written in stories, or listed and illustrated to make one of the Play Week exhibits. Study of the flowers and trees, shrubs, and birds can result in the same sort of exhibit. This is the way she describes her idea:

In a certain place in Indiana there are said to be more wild birds than in any other one place in this country, because there the birds from north, south, east, and west meet. To catalogue all the birds that come there would be not only a delightful piece of work for boys and girls but a task of real value to the State. Doubtless this listing has already been well done, but it illustrates the kind of things that older children and young people may undertake in their various communities. To learn to know the trees that grow in one's yard, on the street near the house, or in the entire town well enough to be able to list them all is a summer's outdoor task that is worth while now and will always be a source of enjoyment. In addition to the making of lists a collection of leaves from each tree can be gathered, pressed, and labeled, and will add to the value of the collection. The same things may be done with shrubs and to some extent with flowers, although they present greater difficulties. Stones, soils, minerals, weeds, grasses, and fruits may all be catalogued in the same way.

Photographs would of course add much to this sort of collection, but usually will be beyond the reach of the younger children. However, a supply of blueprint paper and a photograph printing frame will afford a great amount of pleasure to a boy or girl old enough to use them properly. Leaves, insects, grasses, and other things may be printed in this way, and the prints may be used for scrap books or to adorn homemade Christmas presents.

Another fascinating field of pleasurable occupation for somewhat older boys and girls would be the classification of historic monuments in the place, such as very old residences, trees; streets, mountains, and other landmarks, interesting either historically, or because of their conspicuous beauty. In addition to the list, each name should be accompanied by a brief explanation and, if possible, by a photograph. Such a piece of work may very well lead to the preservation of trees, houses, or streets from despoilation in future years. If a section of the Lincoln Highway or other national road passes through the town, that stretch might be chosen for the work, and appropriate tablets put up to point out the objects of interest. In all such work a certain amount of judicious advice and suggestion from fathers and mothers is needed, but in every community there can be found some man or woman glad to interest himself in it and give an occasional hour to meet the boys and girls to talk over their plans. Some fortunate young people will have among them a nature lover who will accompany them on their walks and excursions. In a few rare communities the whole wonderful scheme of Nature is opened up to the young people by the fact that a bird sanctuary has been established there, and that men and women who love birds and flowers live there and are glad to help the young people of the place to acquire the same sort of appreciation of the out of doors.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

When You Send Word to London

By reason of my notice in the HERALD and Ensign expressing our willingness to open our house in London for the benefit of our soldiers and sailors, I am receiving letters from the United States and Canada requesting that I visit some who are unfortunately confined in hospitals. Some come by cablegram with urgent request for immediate information returned in the same way. Two very important matters must be considered, i. e., railway fares and other expenses to reach short or distant places and the cost of return cablegrams.

To further inform the Saints who desire that our people in England visit their relatives in hospitals, will state that we have no churches nor Saints in any towns in the east, south, southeast, or southwest of England except at Exeter and London, and none nearer to London than one hundred miles. There are no Saints in Scotland except a few scattered members in Glasgow. The majority of the Saints in England are located in towns as follows: London, Exeter, Birmingham, Leicester, Stafford, Clay Cross, Sheffield, Sutton-in-Ashfield, Leeds, Wigan, Gloucester, Stockport, Warrington, and Manchester; in Wales: Nantyglog, Neath, Pontyates, and Gilfach Goch; therefore it will be seen that it will not be easy for church members to get in touch with hospitals in places far from the towns mentioned.

Soldiers and their home people should be particular in giving full addresses, spelled correctly, and plainly written, printing the name in full in capital letters: JOHN SMITH.

Letters and cablegrams addressed to me according to directions given below will reach me if they reach England. Cable address, Rodermay London. Letter address, Bishop R. May, 58 Ickburgh Road, Upper Clapton, E. 5, London, England.

Yours in the faith, R. MAY.

Northern California Reunion

Irvington became a very interesting town to live in during the ten days just past, between the 15th and 25th of August. This will not be questioned when it is known that the Northern California reunion has been held there, especially since it is known that it was one of the largest, and some say, the best that was ever held there. It certainly was a good one, including the district conference and the different conventions.

The chairman of the reunion committee, C. W. Hawkins, is an adept at the business. That is one good reason for it. He had good supporters—that's another.

Still another consists in having with us the indomitable traveling university—perhaps better known as the Animus opibusque pariti sacratia—otherwise, J. W. Rushton; accompanied by the genial president of the Southern California District, George Wixom, and the smiling southern missionary, N. T. Chapman.

It is no reflection upon our home talent when the statement is made that the general interest centered in the radiation of the above-named trio. "Come again," is the universal refrain.

There was no occasion for the term unusual concerning the weather, so no more need be said as to climatic delectability. War-time cuisine preparations and provisions were pronounced excellent.

A splendid spirit of unity and "smiles" prevailed and became the unwritten law of the occasion. The preaching was fully up to the standard type; which also might be said of the prayer and auxiliary meetings in their respective spheres.

The regular Sunday school and Religio entertainment was carried out in a well-rendered program.

In harmony with the spirit of the times one evening was devoted to a patriotic demonstration. A fine program was staged by Sisters Lillian Ewing and Christiana Waller, Brother Rushton being the orator of the occasion. A generous collection was taken up and donated to the Irvington local Red Cross Society.

The generosity of the Saints in the matter of collections and individual contributions helped out wonderfully in keeping the reunion movement out of debt. It is to the credit of the Northern California District that the word deficit does not belong to their reunion vocabulary.

Speaking of financial matters, I should not fail to note that Sister Ruth Griswold did a two-hundred-dollar business at the Herald Office tent this year.

On the last Sunday—"the great day of the feast"—a cantata, "The Holy City," by Gaul, was finely rendered by the choir, under the leadership of the district chorister, Sister Christiana Waller, the result of efficient work of the leader as a musical educator, and a hearty response on the part of the instructed.

There were two baptisms and two ordinations. With all the favorable things that might truthfully be said of the reunion, there is yet room at the top for improvement. We hope some of it may be made next year, and more the year following and so right along as the years go.

However, it seemed to be the unanimous verdict that there was no mistake made in deciding to continue to hold the reunion even in this trying year of national restriction and conflict.

The great aim and goal of Saintly life was strongly strengthened and more determined to fill the measure of divine requirements and holy idealism.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

Southern Illinois Reunion

The Southeastern Illinois District reunion convened at Xenia, Illinois, August 16 to 26. Brother Henry Sparling and the writer were chosen to preside, and Sister Ruth Holman for secretary. Sunday school work was in charge of M. E. Harris, the district superintendent. There was also round-table work in which much interest was manifested. Many important questions were considered and a great deal of information brought out. This feature of our work was highly educational, in which many took part. Brother Granville Trowbridge represented the Religio in a manner that helped to make the reunion a success, while Sister Edith Bailey had charge of the sale of our church publications and handled the matter in a way that awakened an interest among our people and made them feel that they should be well equipped with our literature.

A patriotic meeting was held at which there was a very large attendance of both Saints and outsiders during which a service flag, upon which were inscribed twenty-four stars, was dedicated. The dedicatory prayer was by the writer, and a very excellent speech was made by W. H. Kelley. There were also songs and recitations which added much interest and enthusiasm to the occasion.

The prayer meetings were also good and very favorable comments were heard in regard to the preaching services, the speakers being greatly blessed in presenting the word. The most of the preaching was done by Brethren Henry Sparling, W. H. Kelley, and the writer. Brethren R. H. Henson, Granville Trowbridge, and M. E. Harris spoke once each.

The boarding house was kept in good condition by George Burgess and wife, and the meals were of a very high order at a very reasonable price. The Saints donated a great deal of the necessaries of life. The reunion committee and the brethren who labored on the ground and in many ways to make the meetings a success should be highly commended for their efforts. The spirit of love and sacrifice was manifested in power and the Saints were so highly enthused with the work of the reunion that they voted to hold another one next year, and selected R. H. Henson, S. D. Goosetree, and M. E. Harris, as a committee to choose time and place and make all necessary arrangements.

I would be pleased to hear from any of the Saints in my field relative to the conditions and the needs of the work.

Sincerely,

F. M. SLOVER.

The Southeastern Illinois District reunion will be one long to be remembered. Owing to war conditions, tents were almost out of the question—nine dollars for ten days—and it was feared that the reunion would have to be called off. However, a number of Saints owning tents decided to forego the pleasure of tenting and lend their tents to visiting Saints, so that all from a distance might be accommodated, and those living near the grounds could attend during the day time. Also a number of small shacks were built; so with tents, shacks, and the use of the church building, all in attendance were taken care of.

The reunion committee were three very busy men, and preceding the reunion had made arrangements for a new well to be dug on the west side of the church. This has been badly needed for several years and so was very much appreciated.

In the absence of a large gospel tent, the committee erected a temporary tabernacle, using the trunks of small trees for posts, and canvas for a roof. If every reunion was held under such adverse conditions, probably the Saints would appreciate them more, for "we must have the bitter in order to appreciate the sweet."

The weather really could not have been any more pleasant for a reunion, so while we had our hardships in other ways, we were blessed with cool, pleasant weather. The first day of the reunion a gentle rain fell; this was just enough to lay the dust and make the roads better for traveling. Then every other day we had a nice shower—just enough to keep down the dust, until the last Saturday night when it seemed that the heavens were opened and "it" just poured down, so that by Sunday the tabernacle was unfit for use and all services were held in the church.

The dining tent served excellent meals at a very reasonable price: Breakfast 20 cents, dinner 30 cents, supper 25 cents.

The dining tent was well supplied with provisions by a number of Saints, and although this has been a very dry year, and very few vegetables have been raised, still the table was heavily laden, and one thing in particular we noticed was, "a number of chickens entered the ministry during this reunion." Evidently the Saints thought this would be a good chance to feed the ministers well and to show them that although this is not Missouri, still Illinois is not far behind!

Brother G. S. Trowbridge, president of the Religio Society, was present and ably represented the Religio and normal work. The Religio work in this district is at present in a very low condition and I believe Brother Trowbridge's visit and talks will be encouraging to those interested in this work, and will be the means of interesting others who have seemingly been asleep along this line. There is no other line of work in the church which is more interesting and more beneficial to the Saints than the Religio and normal work, and I feel that it is the duty of each and every one to take hold and do all possible to further this branch of the church.

The girls on the grounds decided to organize and carry out part of the program arranged for the Oriole girls for reunion. This being the first year the Oriole work was presented in this district, only a few of the many things—mentioned in the reunion program arranged by Sister W. Madison—could be done. Two very helpful things the girls did—not mentioning a number of little things—were keeping the grounds clean, picking up papers, rubbish, etc., and taking care of small children and babies during the morning and afternoon services, so that the mothers might enjoy the meetings and not be disturbed. Of course, this is only a beginning, but we notice that most of the girls have become interested in the Oriole work and are now eager to be organized into circles, and I predict that this time next year—if another reunion will be held—the Oriole girls of Southeastern Illinois District will play an important part in the reunion.

During this reunion we tried to encourage congregational singing. For thirty minutes preceding the evening service, the singers met for a song service and the audience was urgently requested to join. The first few nights there was no response whatever, but toward the latter part of the reunion we noticed an improvement. We surely need some encouragement along this line.

On Friday evening a patriotic service was held; a very interesting—short—program was rendered, followed by a patriotic address by Brother W. H. Kelley. This was an inspiring speech and we heard many complimentary remarks about the same. The Brush Creek service flag, containing twenty-seven stars, was dedicated by Brother Francis M. Slover. Taking it all together, this was an inspiring service, and I consider it the best of the reunion.

The reunion, as a whole, was a decided success, and while many sacrifices were made by the Saints in order that they might attend, yet I am sure they feel amply repaid and I believe each one will say, "Vote for a reunion next year, for we need the spiritual food received in these meetings of the Saints."

CORRESPONDENT.

Kewanee Reunion

Kewanee District had a reunion at Matherville, Illinois, August 9 to 19, and although it rained so that many were unable to be present who had intended to come and contribute toward its success, yet those who were there had a pretty good time anyway. There were many pleasant experiences, and the unpleasant ones were largely due to conditions beyond the control of anyone there.

It rained often and much at a time, but no session was omitted, and a very peaceful spirit seemed to prevail throughout. The order of services was prayer meeting, preaching in the morning, children's meetings at 2.30 p. m., and after that a "class," or "forum" period for the older folks. At these sessions various timely topics were discussed with considerable interest. On Saturday afternoon, an "experience" meeting was held and a good many interesting and remarkable experiences were related. We noted as a hopeful sign for us sometime arriving at "a unity of the faith," that while we were not able to view subjects nor conditions from the same angle, and hence differ in the conclusions reached, yet there did seem to be more of a kind and brotherly spirit manifest in these differences than in the past; and at the conclusion of each session, or discussion, the wish to learn the truth seemed to be uppermost in each heart. To me, that is as it should be.

But I am well-nigh forgetting to tell you that we had preaching every night. Interspersed throughout, and in between, Brother Cole had some one, two, or more singing the sweet songs of Zion and of America. A "patriotic" session on the last Friday evening, in which the children of the village of Matherville helped the children on the grounds in a patriotic drill and salute, was among the most pleasing of the many good sessions.

The Saints were very glad to welcome Brother O. E. Sade back on the first visit from Colorado; also Brother C. E. Willey from Lamoni, Iowa, as well as Brother and Sister Reuben Elvin from the same place.

Elder D. S. Holmes and J. L. Terry who were among those who laid the foundations for the district back in the sixties were present, and Brother Holmes remained on the grounds and was quite active in helping.

The reunion was in charge of W. E. Peak and E. A. Curtis, but many others assisted, and the Matherville Saints did very much, as did other Saints.

Sister Laura Sackfield gave a demonstration of the Oriole work and had her class give first aid to a few imaginary injured folks as well as make the bed and change the clothes correctly. It was interesting, and one can realize that such instruction given our young girls must result in good.

Sister Eva Bean told stories to the very tiny folks and worked out the story with miniature dolls, trees, boats, etc., an excellent method to be used in the primary room with the Sunday school.

Well, after all, I have not been able to tell you very much about the reunion. It cannot be done, can it? But the preaching was good, the prayer meetings peaceful, and all in all may God continue to bless the influence of the reunion for good to all who were there and to those who hear about it.

Are You at Work on Your Christmas Offering

If we could just put in print all the very excellent reports that we are getting from the various Sunday schools; if we could just tell you of the many and splendid ways some of our good workers are earning their offering; if we could tell you how wonderfully blessed has been the efforts of these good workers; if—but what is the use! We would not be allowed space in the papers for this, in fact we would have to use all the space and then more.

Mother's Day is past. Some of the schools report excellent programs and large collection—what did your school do?

Are you working with us? Father's Day is just a short distance ahead—September 15. Why not have a merged service—have a short lesson period, a good program with the morning preaching service merged with the Sunday school program with a short, enthusiastic, inspirational sermonet? A real get-together meeting, with lots of good cheer and sociability.

Would you believe that we are advised that some of our schools have not joined in with us in this good movement? Well, it is a fact, but there are very few we are glad to state. Look about you, think it over, ask yourself whether you are satisfied with your effort—are you satisfied with the effort your school is making? Bring this matter before your school if it is not already one of your prominent features, and above all do your part.

Remember, it is $100,000 offering this year. Are you doing your bit?

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR W. SMITH.

About the "Words of Eve"

In reading the letter on the above subject in the HERALD for August 14, I thought it might not be amiss to give the different renderings of those words; as I saw them about a year ago, which takes away the stumbling block. I believe I received light on that subject at that time. "The fall" has been a subject about which I have thought and studied for years.

The transgression of Adam and Eve consisted in eating of the tree of knowledge of good and evil in disobedience. God had commanded Adam not to eat of it, but their eating in disobedience did not prevent the beneficial effects of the properties that that fruit contained from being received by them. The peculiar properties for which the tree was noted, or was designed to impart would just as surely follow the eating, as eternal life would follow the eating of the tree of life—only in a darkened sense because of their transgression. Yet the knowledge that they received was a joy to them notwithstanding the transgression, and it seems that besides the knowledge of good and evil that this tree imparted to the eater, there was another peculiar property that this tree was designed to impart, even the germ of human life. We are indebted to mother Eve for the knowledge that would be handed down from generation to generation, just as the tree of life imparts the germ of everlasting life to abide forever.

When, therefore, Eve uttered her words, she clipped it short, and instead of saying, "Had we not eaten of the tree of knowledge," she did say: "Were it not for our transgression." Now no one knows so well as Saints that transgression does not bring joy or any good thing, therefore it was not the transgression, but the effects of the eating of the tree that gave the knowledge and the joy, and if it gave joy even in transgression, what would it have been in obedience with a God-given right, as I firmly believe it would have been had our first parents abode their test? For all things were created for the good of man, and a tree whose fruits were created to impart so much good would not long have been denied to man since the prime object of man being sent to this planet was to multiply and replenish the earth. But they were human; they transgressed, yet all was not lost though the knowledge of good and evil was darkened so that no man even to this day knows in full between good and evil, else we would not so often hear it said: "If I only knew which was best to do." Even with Saints, though their knowledge of good and evil is greatly increased through obedience to the gospel, but thorough transgression darkened, it did not frustrate the works of God. They will go on, thanks be to his holy name.

One of God's redeeming attributes is to cause all things to work together for good to those who love the Lord and keep his commandments.

It will be seen in the Inspired Version that the words of Eve in Genesis 4:11 were uttered after they had received the gospel, and she was rejoicing in the knowledge that the gospel brought to them also, viz, "the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient." They had become obedient then, and rejoiced in their redemption from their transgression, evidently.

EMMA B. BURTON.

A Sermonet on "Know Thyself"

Wise men, and some not so very wise, in every generation quote the old axiom, "Know thyself." To do this thoroughly would be a great help to the individual. How well acquainted are you with yourself? We venture the assertion that you who read this do not know yourself—your strength, your weakness. Well might the Master say, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Peter thought he knew himself when he volunteered to faithfully go with and stand by his Lord, but Jesus knew him better than he knew himself, when he said, "Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice."

Judas no doubt had failed to size himself up just right when the Master gave warning that there was one present who would betray him. We see men and women daily who think they know themselves, yet do not.

Two hindrances for knowing self may be: We spend too much time trying to know about somebody else; and a certain self-conceit. In our superficial compliance with "Examine yourselves," we call ourselves right when wrong. To be satisfied with ourselves may be a dangerous symptom of a fall, decay, danger. But to know ourselves truly, both our strength and our weakness, is our only safeguard; this is true physically, morally, spiritually.

In our examination of ourselves, we must first be humble, then thorough and searching, then willing to apply the correctives found in the "revealed word," and in the character and teaching of Jesus.

The gospel is a mirror but we have seen some queer specimens pose before a looking glass and go away happy in their good looks (to them). We must let the gospel leaven our whole lump. With the Spirit as a searchlight, get an X ray examination of yourself (spiritually), and see your weak spots, then remember "Knowledge is power" if you use it wisely. Imbued with the Samaritan spirit of "Lord be merciful to me, a sinner," be sure you are free from the pharisaical spirit, "I thank God I am not as other men are." Keep busy correcting self while helping others.

ALMA.

LOOMIS, MICHIGAN, August 12, 1918.

Editors Herald: Thinking some that knew me when a boy might be interested to know my whereabouts I write, also because I am interested in this "great work of God."

I was baptized when but a boy eleven years old by Elder Levi Phelps, and like others have had my ups and downs, but that good Spirit that I received through the laying on of hands has followed me. This still finds me trying to do the Master's will. I have found it hard at times to say, "Thy will be done and not mine," and more so since being ordained to the holy priesthood. I was ordained to the office of teacher at Saginaw, Michigan, by Elder George W. Burt, served as teacher one year; was ordained a priest, served in that office until coming here. Came to this place by direction of the Spirit, secured a meeting place, and with wife and children opened up services.

That was in August, 1914, and by the help of our heavenly Father and the assistance of others there has been a branch organized. I have baptized some who were bitter enemies at one time. Of course, along with success come discouragements, but we are still striving to hold the banner up. Am at the present holding meetings some six miles southwest of here among some Lamanites, with good interest. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your brother,

LEWIS E. WELCH.

MIMICO, ONTARIO, August 26, 1918.

Editors Herald: The Toronto Branch, of which I have been a member for many years is having grand meetings. Love and friendship prevail such as we have not seen for a long time. The handshakes and greetings are indicative of the warmth of feeling had among us. It is like the good old times. We sing not only from our lips but from our hearts:

"We thank thee, O God, for a prophet
To guide us in these latter days;
We thank thee for sending the gospel
To lighten our minds with its rays;
We thank thee for every blessing
Bestowed by thy bounteous hand;
We feel it a pleasure to serve thee,
And love to obey thy commands.

"When dark clouds of trouble hang o'er us,
And threaten our peace to destroy,
There is Hope smiling brightly before us,
And we know that deliverance is nigh;
We doubt not the Lord nor his goodness,
We've proved him in days that are past;
The wicked who fight against Zion
Will surely be smitten at last."

F. M. FREEMAN.

NORTH DETROIT, MICHIGAN, August 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: There are events occurring in Detroit that are so far from being everyday ones that we feel they are worth mentioning.

The last two days of July were red letter days to the Saints who were able to congregate at the First Branch, owing to the long looked-for visit of our beloved President Frederick M. Smith. While we were disappointed earlier in the year, having heard of his coming, and yet seeing no fruition of our hopes, we were made doubly happy at the occasion of his sojourn here for the simple reason that it was extended two days.

The first evening, the subject of his discourse was that which is rife in the minds of the majority of the people—the war. More especially did he dwell on our duty, as Saints, in this critical time. He stated that our attitude in this critical juncture should be unqualified loyalty toward that Nation that has harbored us with its encircling bands of freedom.

The evening of July 31, the first chapter of James formed the basis for his remarks, which were words of admonition to the Saints to come to a higher level, to establish an intermediate plane upon which our temporal and spiritual labors could be successfully coordinated.

He illustrated this counsel by presenting to us the life of our Savior, his untiring zeal, his mighty works, which seemingly must have been coupled with a wonderful physique. This to Brother Smith's mind was possible, not only because Jesus was the Son of God, but because in addition thereto he cared for his own physical being and powers wisely, together with the help received from on high.

Following the sermon, all retired to the lower auditorium where several of the church officers renewed their testimonies of loyalty to both country and church. This was followed by light refreshments and a pleasing entertainment. Taken as a whole we feel that the Saints here are encouraged and bouyed up by having had the stimulus of Brother Smith's association. May we all as Saints uphold him in continued prayer that he may be able to lead the destinies of this, the church of God on earth.

With our thoughts turned to the war which is prevailing, we feel that Detroit is foremost in the ranks as a producer of practically everything that is needed to satiate the voracious maw of Mars, the war god. The first and hardest sacrifice has been that of noble men, many from the church going forth to who knows what, perhaps never to be allowed to look into our eyes or clasp our hands again. Airplanes are seen daily, some in flocks numbering as high as twenty or more. The tranquility and calm of both day and night are unceasingly broken with the whirl and buzz of the motors on the test block. Millions of dollars have been turned over to Uncle Sam as our quota of Liberty Loan, War Savings Fund, and Red Cross subscriptions. The shipyards are doing their utmost to increase their productions. Henry Ford is building submarine chasers. Detroit is a Mecca for ordnance officers seeking war trucks, artillery, and shells. Munitions and supplies of all kinds are being manufactured until it is claimed the sum for war orders here alone amounts to one billion dollars, and still we are continuing to break acres and acres of ground daily for Government use. If it's the Kaiser that's causing all this I think we are justified in hoping his regime shall soon terminate.

The woman plays an important (if not to be envied) position in the mechanical status of our city. The visitor is surprised to see dirty, greasy, overalled damsels and even dames, intermingling with the men at the street lunch-counters during the noon hour. In fact, some of the young ladies seem to have acquired a fondness for the masculine-like attire, judging from the surplus amount of parading they do when outfitted in this regalia.

We, here, are only praying and preparing for the day when the church shall, like the Nation now is, put forth all her power to enter in upon the last stage of the war of right against wrong. May God add his blessings to us, and may we work as a consecrated band to the end "that wrong shall fail and right prevail."

HOWARD CARPENTER.

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS, August 31, 1918.

Editors Herald: A few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard. He has not forgotten this place though it is very wicked and the people care but little about God and his law.

There are quite a number of Saints around Hot Springs, striving to keep the gospel banner waving. Brother Erwin paid us a visit this month and held a fine meeting; baptized six noble people. So the gospel still gathers those who are honest in heart, and there is still good interest. The Saints are doing all they can to let the beautiful light shine. We have a Sunday school organized and hope in the near future there will be a branch organized also, that we may have the privilege to enjoy its benefits and have the Saints united that we can more perfectly praise the Lord.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I remain as ever,
Your brother in the gospel, T. A. DONATHAN.

ABOARD STEAMER, LAKE SUPERIOR, September 2, 1918.

Editors Herald: I left Port Arthur on the 28th ult., after over two months of labor in that city, and suffering from a cankered mouth so I was not able to eat any solid food. I concluded I would go home.

During the time I was there I opened up appointments in four different parts of the city and was ably assisted by Brother Miller. Prejudice is very dominant in Port Arthur, which the inclosed clipping from the city paper, with my rejoinder, will disclose. Howbeit, the gospel seed has been sown, and we leave the results with God. Seven have been baptized, of whom some were the results of Brother Miller's labors. One sister was healed of an inward trouble of long standing at the time of her baptism, and is rejoicing in the gospel. She came from the Salvation Army and acted as secretary for that organization for years. Another little girl who was baptized on July 4 along with Sister McLean took very sick. I was called upon to administer to her, and after entering into the room, God revealed to me that it was scarlet fever. I said as much and Brother Miller spoke up and said he had received evidence as well. I then administered to the child in the presence of the father and Brother and Sister Miller who had come in. Then the latter, fearing it might be some contagious disease, called the doctor, and he pronounced it scarlet fever and ordered her rushed to the isolation ward of the hospital. The father went with her and said she sang all the way and never had to take her bed, although she was there about six weeks.

There are some others interested there, and one fine lady said she was ready to obey but was waiting on her husband. Three children were blessed.

There is trouble existing, which is a drawback to the work there, which we hope will be rectified in the near future. For the good of the work we think some young married elder should be placed there.

On my way down I dropped off at the Soo and met with the Saints at 9 a. m. on the American side and preached at 7.30 p. m. in the church. I did a lot of visiting as well. The work is ably presided over by Elder Brown and A. H. Tomlinson.

Sincerely,

THE LONE NEPHITE.

the next sixty days. Let all our branch and special agents take note of these sentences, and at once go out and get the necessary touch with the people which will bring these results. We are offering the new map of the battleground of liberty as a premium with each new subscription, so that your work of presenting the publications will be made a little more pleasant, and successful. Every family in the church needs all of the Gospel Trio, and every family in the church needs the map of the western front. They can get them now, and should do so, not alone for themselves, but for the sake of the members of the church who are reading the church papers and who are not able to pay any advance of the subscription rates.

From one branch alone there have recently been secured over seventy new subscribers, and the end is not yet reached in this branch. But it will take work, and the proper presentation of the proposition to our people—that is all. Are you willing to aid in this drive for new subscribers?

Remember the proposition is that for a new subscription to any of the Gospel Trio, either the SAINTS' HERALD, Zion's Ensign, or Autumn Leaves, you can now secure a map of the battleground of liberty, which is a first-class map of the western front with self-pronouncing index; or you may have this map if you will renew your subscription to any two of the trio.

COLLEGE OPENING

Work was started at Graceland College for the coming school year on Thursday, September 5. By Friday morning 175 had been registered, but quite a number who had come from a distance had not yet registered, and hence not counted; and also a number of local students have not yet registered.

This makes the most favorable start that Graceland has had.

The formal opening exercises were held on Friday morning, the 6th, with a band concert and reception at 9 a. m. and exercises at 10 a. m. The principal feature was the address by Elder Daniel Macgregor. He spoke on the subject of personality. We hope to print his address in full in the very near future, so will not here attempt a resumé.

The auditorium was well filled, and standing room at a premium. Many stood clear through the address and most of the exercises. Addresses of welcome were made on behalf of the Sunday school, Religion, the high school, the Methodist Church, and the local congregation.

In the evening at 7.30 a meeting of the young men was held, addressed by President George N. Briggs, of the college, and Elder John F. Garver, as president of the Lamoni Stake. At this meeting the plan of the students' army training corps was explained. Nothing can be done under this plan before October 1. Elsewhere in this issue we try to give a brief summary of additional facts for the benefit of our readers, and especially of our young men.

THE LIBERTY SING

The Outlook for September 4 has a page and a half on "Philadelphia and the Liberty Sing." This raises again the issue of singing in the cantonment. Second: community singing wherever is it possible, and that is every place where people can get together and sing. Third: The liberty singing which should be spread all over the country.

We urge this upon all of our communities, business interests, locals, and elsewhere, that they assist or lead out in arranging for these liberty sings in the nature of a community song-fest. It is not a matter of few trained singers. The value of the movement rests in getting everyone to sing, and to make the singing of that character that all may take an interest in it.

We should have a special interest in this because of the special share taken by Albert N. Hoxie. He is the only one of the leaders of community sings who are mentioned in this article in The Outlook. It states that "at the first of a series of Sunday community sings held last summer by Mr. Albert Hoxie, one of the pioneers of community music, some three thousand residents of the city district were present; at the last there were at least ten thousand. Such a preparation represented weeks of work saved for the Liberty Sing Commission."

This gives an additional reason why our choir leaders should take up this work, but it must be recognized it is not choir practice. It is a movement for the whole community.

NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN DISTRICT

The territory formerly known as the Saskatchewan District having been divided into the Northern Saskatchewan District and the Southern Saskatchewan District, upon the recommendation of the district conference, we are hereby appointing Brother C. E. Diggle, 1011 Dufferin Street, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, as Bishop's agent of the Northern Saskatchewan District. The Saints of the Southern Saskatchewan District will kindly continue paying their tithes and offerings to Brother T. J. Jordan, Viceroy, Saskatchewan.

We appreciate the splendid manner in which the Saints of the Saskatchewan District have heretofore supported the Lord's work, and I trust that with the division of this labor that the brethren may have the same loyal support which has hitherto been rendered. We have been admonished as the children of God that the hastening time is upon us. We can truly all realize that the field is white and ready for the harvest, and that more laborers should be sent into the field to present the gospel message. This will require the faithfulness of those who have embraced the gospel in order that this may be made possible.

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

BURNS.—Richard Otis Burns, born at Beetown, Grant County, Wisconsin, October 13, 1897; was son of John and Ada Burns. Enlisted in infantry February 6, 1918. Killed in action somewhere in France, July 19, 1918. Memorial service at Beetown, August 18, 1918. As he was the first one to be killed from Grant County, the attendance was large, there being between three and four hundred present. Sermon by J. O. Dutton.

ANTHONY.—Jacob A. Anthony, beloved husband of Mary Edwards Anthony, of 281 Castro Street, San Francisco, California, died September 1, 1918. Born at Newport, New Brunswick, April 5, 1843; baptized by Hervey Green at Stockton, July 30, 1873; ordained elder by Joseph C. Clapp, at San Francisco, February 28, 1897. For many years labored in San Francisco and Oakland, was always a faithful and loyal supporter of the church which he loved above all else. His home was the abiding place of the many elders who have visited the Coast for many years and his generous hospitality will be missed. Funeral service held at the church, Casselli and Danvers, September 3, the pastor, G. J. Waller, in charge, sermon by J. W. Rushton. "My peace I give unto you."

JOSLYN.—Alice M. Joslyn was born March 29, 1873, at Standish, Michigan, and departed this life August 21, 1918, at West Side Hospital, Bay City, Michigan, where she had undergone an operation for tumors. At the age of 16 she lost her mother, and from that time tried to fill the mother's place in the lives of the younger children, 2 brothers and 3 sisters. She succeeded admirably. A brother and sister have preceded her across the river and one brother, Elder George H. Joslyn, of Onaway, Michigan, and 2 sisters, Mrs. William Barker, of Onaway, and Mrs. William Wiles, of Port Huron, Michigan, and a host of other relatives and friends are left to mourn. Funeral at Elder Joslyn's home in Onaway, August 23. Sermon by Arthur E. Starks, for many years Sister Joslyn's pastor and associate in church work. Miss Elsie Follette, of Boyne City, rendered a very beautiful solo: "My task," which was especially appropriate for the life that had passed, and the task done. The floral offerings were beautiful and profuse, the casket being entirely covered, showing the love and esteem in which Sister Joslyn was held. She lived an exemplary Christian life, always helping others, always sacrificing her own pleasure to do for others, and will be missed by all who knew her.

FROM HERE AND THERE

All who can conveniently bring baskets with them to the district conference at Beaverton, September 20, 21, 22, are requested to do so. We would appreciate the help very much. Woman's Auxiliary, Beaverton, Michigan.

BUDGET PLAN TO BUY BONDS

One of the methods urged upon those who would like to purchase some of the bonds of the Fourth Liberty Loan to be offered on September 28 is the family budget plan. Every man and woman worker selling the bonds is asked to acquaint himself or herself with the budget system whereby the family may immediately take out sufficient from the weekly pay envelope to apply on the purchase of a bond. It is urged that it is thus possible to divide the money received so it will meet all required obligations. The same plan would be an excellent one for those who find it hard to save out the Lord's share.

Brother J. N. York calls attention to a typographical error in his article of recent date. In the quotation from Genesis 48: 5, 6, third column, it reads: "And thy issue, which thou begetttest after them, shall be mine." It should read: "Shall be thine."

Brother William C. Cummings, of Hopewell, Virginia, asks the prayers of the Saints in his behalf, as he is afflicted with stomach trouble. He explains that he has been unable to answer the many letters sent him, but there is plenty of work there for all kinds of mechanics. Carpenters get 75 cents an hour and pay and a half for over eight hours. The powder company is doing a great deal of extension work. He desires that those who write include stamps for reply.

BOUND COPIES OF "HERALDS" FOR SALE

An elder who is sorely in need of money, offers for sale his full set of SAINTS' HERALDS uniformly and neatly bound, complete from 1860 to 1917, inclusive. There are but a very few complete sets, hence these are very valuable. Address Bishop A. Carmichael, Lamoni, Iowa.

READ THE OFFICIAL BULLETIN

In order to save many thousands of unnecessary letters from clogging the mails and necessitating endless answers, the Government is urging citizens everywhere to read the Official United States Bulletin which is issued daily and posted prominently in post offices and other public places. It gives full information about all of the following and prints full casualty lists daily. The subjects covered are: The army and navy, Red Cross, selective draft law, food administration, fuel administration, trading with the enemy, war labor board, war industries board, railroad administration, and all other permanent or emergency governmental departments, boards, committees, and administrations at the Capital and elsewhere. Those who wish to do so may subscribe by sending $5 to 16 Jackson Place, Washington, for a year's subscription.

THE SEPTEMBER AUTUMN LEAVES

One of the leading articles in this magazine which has just come to our desk is "Gospel experiences," by Elder Lee Quick. This brother wouldn't object to being classed as one of the "old-fashioned preachers" we have been reading about. His experiences are so typical of any struggling young preacher that they interest anyone. Then there is a cozy little letter of "how two soldier lads 'bivvy-wacked.'" The editorial department treats on "A soft snap," "I am weak," and "Lend us your letters." There are two excellent stories by young sisters in the church: one by May Needham and another by Edith G. Frazer. The Periscope passes a few suggestions on such subjects as sleeping in meeting, "patriotic" blessings, first attempts at writing, voluntaries, "I for one," etc. There is an account of a visit to Camp Pike by C. B. Keck and a testimony of angelic ministration in 1879 by Martha Eleanor Waldorf Kearney. There are some minor articles on what a boy of sixteen should know, thirty-one reasons why people stay away from church, etc. The three departments team with good things and promise more. Autumn Leaves is deservedly popular and a real necessity in a Saints' family. It is only a dollar a year, and new subscribers are given a liberty map free.

PERFECT UNDERSTANDING VERSUS PERFECT TRUST

Moses was shown the whole world from its beginning to its ending. He was shown all the children of men. The drama of the world for all time was enacted out in his presence. (Doctrine and Covenants 22.)

We, who at times have felt depressed and almost confused in our efforts to understand the events of an hour or a year, and have felt our minds grow dizzy with futile attempts to answer the insistent "why," need not be surprised that Moses, after witnessing such a stupendous rehearsal and seeking to grasp it, fell to the earth and did not regain his natural strength for many hours.

He had seen the bad and the good, he had seen the sorrows and excesses of the world; and he could not understand it more than we. We are told that he saw the very "bitterness of hell," and that he began to fear "exceedingly." Nevertheless he seems to have reached a safe conclusion, and he declared, "Depart from me, Satan, for this one God only will I worship."

Moses could not understand the problem yet, but he had seen enough to convince him that he could trust it all in God's hand. That is the very anchor to which we must cling in times of perplexity such as these when it is not given us to understand.

The vision was again repeated, and after it was all over, Moses had again failed to solve the problems, and he put to God the question the world is still asking: "Tell me, I pray thee, why these things are so, and by what thou madest them?"

Moses, having twice passed through the whole cycle of time, could not understand; it was too broad for human comprehension. It was capable of explanation; but Moses was not capable of understanding. Let us remember that—we who see but a few years of time in this world and that but once. God replied, "For mine own purpose have I made these things. Here is wisdom, and it remaineth in me."

If words mean aught he meant that for a time at least a full understanding of the purposes of creation must remain with God alone.

The Lord, after describing the flight of worlds, says, "Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms, that ye may understand? . . . Any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power. I say unto you, He hath seen him: nevertheless, he who came unto his own was not comprehended. The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not."

There is the difficulty. God may explain, but as yet we do not understand. The light shines but the darkness is unlightened. We see God moving in majesty in the evening stars, but still say we have never seen him. "Nevertheless," he says, "the day shall come when you shall comprehend even God. . . . Then shall ye know that ye have seen me."

We gather from all our reading, then, that the imperative need at present is not a perfect understanding; the imperative need is perfect trust. Human intelligence has not been equal to a perfect comprehension; but human intelligence has been equal to a perfect trust. Moses, Enoch, and the brother of Jared, all were given a survey of the complete history of the world; none of them, so far as we know, could fully understand God's plans from what he saw; but all of them evolved a perfect faith.

We must become fully satisfied concerning God and his trustworthiness and Christ and his saving power. This is the rock on which we must build—the sonship of Christ and the power of God—and the gates of hell shall not then prevail against us.

Having established ourselves thus we may move out into all fields to the investigation of things "both in heaven and in earth." If we come face to face with a blank wall that bars our progress in any given direction, we may fall back upon our citadel, instead of fretting our life away, as some have done, against the seemingly invincible. We may fall back and gain strength for another attack.

WAR WORK AND OUR WORK

In the young woman's department in the Autumn Leaves, there appears an article under the above title that is well worth rereading even though it is short and is addressed primarily to the young women of the church. Still it is of general interest as the spirit and purpose of it applies to all of us.

Unfortunately in the Autumn Leaves it appears over our signature, S. A. B., but this is a mistake as it was written by the head of that department, Alice Mae Burgess.

We are quite willing to concede that we might have written it (except perhaps one or two sentences) but the facts are that we did not see it until sometime after it had appeared in print.

It is of vital importance as many are recognizing that we must not forget, with the needs of the Government, that the church also has to continue its work and needs our contributions. This we have emphasized several times in these columns.

And while this war is being fought for democracy there is much to be done at home. The problems of social justice cannot rightfully be postponed until after the war. This is seen in the Government effort to fix prices to prevent profiteering; in the works of William H. Taft and Frank B. Walsh in the adjustment of wages and securing better living conditions for working men.

It is shown also in the greater liberty and rights given women in countries abroad and in the movements in this country. If the war continues another year, woman's burden will be greatly increased in carrying on the work of the country. Already it is very common to see places formerly held by men now filled in large part by women. This is seen in messenger girls, delivery girls and delivery women, conductors on the street cars in the large cities, and elevator girls. It is also shown in some of the heavier work. This being true, in the very interest of our work for democracy and justice for others, justice should be extended to women in the franchise.

There are industrial questions which can justly be postponed until after the war. So far as the Nation is concerned it is true that our primary efforts should be to a just completion of the war as speedily as is possible. And that which can be deferred fairly should be done. But there is much that cannot be fairly postponed, and there are some instances, as pointed out above, where common justice requires that old errors be now corrected.

The work of the schools is emphasized elsewhere in this issue and has been several times. And further than our effort for the Government, further than our social effort and our efforts to win the war there remains our obligations and privileges as members of the church. The church has this especial duty to preach repentance, faith in God, and a higher idealism; to preach within the church and out greater personal righteousness, and the church is especially needed for this work at this time; and the church needs each one of us to do our particular duty in attendance, in support, and in any other way that we may be called upon. We need to do this special work at this time. We need also to prepare for the work after the war, at home and abroad—the work of the kingdom of God. If we are to do this our efforts must not now become lax.

The article from the August Autumn Leaves is printed below.

WAR WORK AND OUR WORK

In some places the girls and women have made the mistake of dropping all church work since this war began, saying, "The war relief work is all we have time for." It would be just as reasonable to say we can have no schools during the war, because we have to devote all our time to the war work.

Some brother has said that praying will have just as large a part in the winning of this war as fighting. We think, also, that keeping on with our normal activities of a religious and literary nature will help to win this war, and we know that it will be of vast importance when the great readjustment comes after the war is over.

Our fingers must be busy with knitting and sewing and making bandages, and we must learn to use the new foods. We must conserve and we must sacrifice to bring peace again to the world. But that peace will be more easily won if we continue to advance morally, spiritually, mentally, and physically, if we do not let go the important agencies for self-development that the church and State still offer.

Many of our chapters and circles fill their meeting time with Red Cross work, but while their fingers ply some one lectures to them on personal hygiene, vocational guidance, art, or home making, etc., or some one reads to them a carefully selected course in literature. Girls, this is the "building time" of your lives, when your permanent tastes are acquired. The things you read and think now will affect your whole life. If you do not develop mentally, socially, and religiously now, you will find it most difficult, if not impossible, to progress and develop later.

Do not neglect to do your share of war relief work, but do not make that an excuse for dropping your educational and preparational work. We must be busier now than ever before in our lives. Don't waste time foolishly, and you will have time for all things.

"These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

CELESTIAL MARRIAGE AND POLYGAMY

As we pointed out a few weeks ago, these terms are sometimes confused. It is possible to make a distinction between spiritual wifery, celestial marriage, plural marriage, and polygamy. The first two terms might be associated together, and the latter two also associated together; but in fact there has been a great deal of confusion in the use of the terms.

Celestial marriage does not of necessity mean plural marriage, though it was doubtless an initial step in this modern abomination. (Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 33.)

The initial stage of spiritual wifery or celestial marriage was probably the idea advanced by some that man is spiritually male and female, and so some desired to be sealed to their own wife for eternity. (Sealing.)

A later stage is where some suggest a relation superior to marriage ceremony, the God-chosen companion—or as the world calls it, an affinity. Then some man wants to be sealed to a woman not his legal wife, as such a companion.

Then follows the sophistry, time is part of eternity. Why wait for eternity? Especially as we are God-chosen companions (?). This idea allowed to develop means in the end adultery.

Because of this adultery, as is shown by Congressional records and by the address of Orson Pratt, August 27, 1852, they felt the need of something to excuse or justify plural marriage.

Some suggest that a man married and was sealed to his own legal wife. She died. Then he marries and is sealed to his second wife. This involves plural wifery or polygamy hereafter—a sort of spiritual polygamy. And this leads to terrestrial polygamy.

Polygamy means, literally, plural wives. It may exist without celestial marriage. Celestial marriage or spiritual wifery is the idea that man and woman will live together hereafter as husband and wife. As pointed out above, it tends towards adultery and polygamy.

Section 132 in the Utah Doctrine and Covenants is throughout a document for plural marriage (polygamy). With it is coupled the idea of spiritual wifery, and thus they assert polygamy will continue in eternity.

The question naturally arises as to the position of the church. The church has not affirmed any form of spiritual wifery or celestial marriage. In fact the church has denounced polygamy in any and every form, on several occasions. (In 1870, 1902, and 1903, General Conference Resolution No. 530.)

And on the further question of spiritual wifery, or celestial marriage, the Master plainly stated as related by three of the evangelists:

The same day came the Sadducees to him, who say that there is no resurrection, and asked him, saying, Master, Moses said, If a man die, having no children, his brother shall marry his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother. Now there were with us, seven brethren; and the first, when he had married a wife, deceased; and, having no issue, he left his wife unto his brother. Likewise the second also, and the third, and even unto the seventh. And last of all the woman died also. Therefore, in the resurrection, whose wife shall she be of the seven? For they all had her. Jesus answered and said unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God. For in the resurrection, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels of God in heaven.—Matthew 22: 23-30, Inspired Translation.

Then came to him certain of the Sadducees, who deny there is any resurrection; and they asked him, saying, Master, Moses wrote unto us, saying, If any man's brother die, leaving a wife and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother. There were therefore seven brethren; the first took a wife, and died without children. And the second took her to wife, and died childless. And the third took her in like manner; and the seven also; and they left no children, and died. And last of all, the woman died also. Therefore in the resurrection, whose wife of them is she; for seven had her to wife? And Jesus answering, said unto them, The children of this world marry and are given in marriage; but they who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, through resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage. Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him.—Luke 20: 27-38, Inspired Translation.

We refer as well to the twelfth chapter of Mark. However, it is plain that the question was asked to trap him, as others even to-day ask similar questions with a like purpose. Yet it is plainly stated that they neither marry nor are given in marriage. But some plead that it says, neither marriage nor giving in marriage in heaven, because we are sealed here. So there is no need nor opportunity for marriage ceremony in heaven.

Such a plea begs the question and would make the answer of our Lord Jesus Christ to be decidedly misleading. According to the question, she was married in this world to each one of them. There was no necessity for further marriage. If there was a necessity for a special marriage or sealing here, in common honesty it would appear his answer should so have indicated. Hence it is plain that there is neither marriage nor giving in marriage in heaven.

The word of God upholds the belief that we shall know each other in the great hereafter; that our love for one another is divine and shall not die. That our knowledge and affection is not for a passing moment only, but belongs and is akin to the great eternal intelligence and love. Just what shall be our relation to our friends and loved ones, father, mother, brother, sister, companion, and children is not plainly set forth. Nor is our relation to the great family of God. There is nothing known to us that upholds the idea of the continuation of sex, or of spiritual wifery, a continuation of the earthly physical relation in the life beyond the grave.

But the plain reply is made by the Master, No marriage; she shall be the wife of none of them, for there is to be no marriage nor giving in marriage in heaven. This would exclude spiritual affinity in companions. His statement is unequivocal.

This muchly married woman would be wife to no man, for there exists no such relation in heaven.

"THIS MAN HOXIE"

The Philadelphia newspapers are making much of Albert N. Hoxie, General Church Chorister, these days. Leigh Mitchell Hodges, in The North American for August 21 has a column which follows:

You've heard Hoxie, haven't you? I mean, you've seen Hoxie, felt him, come to know and love him within half an hour—just while singing war songs and old songs because he made you sing 'em?

If not, go down to League Island, where he has charge of the music, or follow him to some Liberty Sing somewhere, no matter where. Travel fifty miles after standing in line fifty minutes for a railroad ticket and standing up for your country all the way!—and still you'll be unanimous with yourself that you never spent time, money, and effort to better advantage.

For Hoxie—he's a big man physically, mentally, and spiritually—will throw out a smile-noose and slip it over your soul before you are aware he has looked your way—and you sing and soar and sing until you feel as if something new and wonderful had come into your life.

So it has! Something as old as the birth of the morning stars and more wonderful than words can tell! Something that lifts you out of the dull round and brings boyhood or girlhood back into your heart—lets you slip back for the moment into those gold-flower-set fields of childhood!

Something that sends queer electric thrills up and down your spine and makes you feel as if you, too, were marching out to fight for the things that count more than gold and lands and titles and possessions of whatever sort!

Yes, this man Hoxie—khaki, smiles, and baton!—just coaxes the bashfulness clean out of you, and you unbend and unwind and get all warm-like and human and forget to see whether your neighbor is singing or silent.

You sing! You mean it! You wish you could sing twice as loud; twice as well. And you keep right on singing—pumping yourself and all the singers 'round about you full of pep and purpose and deep-sealed pledges! And all the other Hoxie-ized singers do the same, until you might think it could be heard "over there," where khaki bunches, groups, and long lines are singing, too.

It is heard over there!

That's the marvelous part of your singing, and of Hoxie's making you sing!

How is it heard—across the miles of land and thousands of miles of ocean, and more miles of land?

How does a green stem carry the maiden-glow of pink to the petals of the rose? How—but why dwell on those profound mysteries which surround us at every step with material for unending questioning and wondering?

It is heard—or maybe felt. Anyhow, it gets to them. And it carries to them the message they need. And helps to make and keep them strong. And boomerangs back to us and does likewise! Forms a circle of helpfulness and happiness and Hoxie-ness!

God bless him!

The Evening Public Ledger has a half-page illustration of a liberty sing conducted by Hoxie. He can easily be located in the group, but there is also a large picture three columns wide in the lower half of the page of Hoxie alone in the act of leading.

The Evening Bulletin of August 12 has a full column on the "Man with an idea is 'sing' founder," in which it gives the credit to Hoxie of trying to make the whole Nation a singing nation, and to prepare for the peace jubilee. It credits him with starting community sings all through the East, in an effort to make community sings national rather than local. His motto is: "A singing man is a fighting man."

S. A. B.

If "forever" always means "without end," is Jonah still in the whale, as stated in Jonah 2: 6?—J. S. Roth.

There must be a continuous, unchanging operation of law everywhere, else no form of life were possible. So God permits these operations to take their course, blessing the many and destroying the few, without interference, except in cases where special reasons demand interference. Sometimes he sends, upon the very wicked, destruction that would not come without a special dispensation, as in the case of Sodom and Gomorrah. Sometimes he interferes, to save the very righteous and faithful, as in the case of the Hebrew children in the furnace, and Jesus in Galilee, and then fire loses its heat and the storm its fury.—Elbert A. Smith.

PERSONALITY

(An address by Elder Daniel Macgregor at opening of Graceland College, September 6, 1918.)

Mr. President, Members of the College Faculty, Students, Ladies and Gentlemen: It has been with no little anxiety I have looked forward to this hour.

The subject which has suggested itself to me, impressively so, as being appropriate for this occasion, is personality.

The one ambition, rarely expressed but ever present, is, "How can I make an impression on humanity that will make for something really helpful and beneficial?"

A lady of vim once remarked in commenting on the unprogressiveness of another: "Why doesn't he do something? If I were he I would get out and do, even if only something desperate." But the facts are the man was doing all the time; the trouble was he did not accomplish anything. His doings did not make for any distinctive service. He was occupying as a commonplace consumer, producing only sufficient to meet his immediate needs. In short, he was a poll parrot, waddling and jabbering in the calf path of uneventful repetition. The man was minus a personality.

But let us have the dictionary significance of this subject:

Personality is made up of three attributes: consciousness, character, will.

Quality or state of being. A person and not a thing or abstract; that which makes a being a person. That which constitutes distinction of person, distinctive personal character; individuality. Personality is individuality existing within itself.

PERSONALITY, WHAT IS IT?

Personality is not a freakality, but is a concentration of power that delivers the knock-out punch.

Personality is that which disarms your foe, and turns his wrath into admiration.

Personality is an irresistible, magnetic force which cannot be downed by others, but which can be weakened and imperiled by one's self.

Personality is the oil of loveliness and the light of intelligence that gives to the possessor a passport into any society.

Personality is a royal gem of rare value, available unto all and secured by the few.

Personality is that rich halo of distinctiveness heavenly designed for the man of destiny and the man of power.

Personality is man cultured and accomplished.

Personality is man in his fullest expression.

The animal man is distinguished from the beast in that he was made to exercise dominion to direct and control. The beast was made to be in subjection, subdued and enslaved. Only the man with a personality can fulfill the former.

Personality is that unconquerable something that moves in its sphere as a God in the universe, enforcing attention, and compelling recognition.

Personality is that other half of man without which he fails in his mission, rising no higher than the common level of a misfit and a disappointed wreck.

Personality is an absolutely indispensable quality to insure one a success in life, without which the days and years will be filled with the wrecks of half-finished exploits.

Personality is a divine attribute with which we may claim creation in the image of God; without it we are still the inanimate clay.

A man with a healthy personality is the modern superman, the one whom you unconsciously follow and unintentionally adore.

HIGHEST TYPE OF PERSONALITY: SPIRITUALITY

Personality is spirituality, demonstrated in a Moses who talked with God, and who constrained two million souls to follow him for forty years through a dreary wilderness. Demonstrated again in Jesus Christ, who by the touch of his hand could raise the dead, by the word of his mouth could still the troubled sea, and who ultimately will draw all men unto him.

THE MIGHTIEST DISPLAY OF HUMAN PERSONALITY

Perhaps the mightiest display of personality ever revealed through mortal man, was that through Enoch of old. Of him it is said, "He spake the word of the Lord and the earth trembled and the mountains fled, even according to his command, and the rivers of water were turned out of their course, and the roar of the lions was heard out of the wilderness, and all nations feared greatly, so powerful was the word of Enoch and so great was the power of language which God had given him." And what was the secret of this unusual power? The answer is plain: "He walked with God." In daily life he had done the Master's bidding for three hundred and sixty-five years.

PERSONALITY NEVER DIES

Personality is that which lives after one is dead. What a magic charm still attends the name of Joan of Arc, of Christopher Columbus, and of George Washington.

Indeed, personality, containing the germs of life, is that which grows. With the passing of the years the name of Abraham Lincoln becomes more and more effective as an inspiration to his countrymen and an object of adoration to the people of all lands.

Joseph Smith, underestimated and unappreciated in his time, wields to-day an influence over thousands, where yesterday there were few to do him reverence. His name has gone to the four corners of the earth, inciting attention, and that attention compelling an investigation of his remarkable claims.

His autograph to-day commands a price of two hundred dollars, recently purchased from a collector in Illinois.

PERSONALITY NOT NECESSARILY POPULARITY

It is not necessary to be popular to exercise personality. The most commanding characters of all history were misunderstood and abused.

Elijah was driven from his home to the haunts of the wild beast. Saint Paul was persecuted unto death, and Jesus Christ was no exception to the rule. Indeed, it is amid the biting atmosphere of oppression that the human soul arouses itself from the lethargy of passivity and commences a constructive course.

PERSONALITY IS CONSTANT

Personality is not unfolded by any assuming display, nor is it revealed in a meteoric glare. It is the sunshine of unending light eternally radiating its genial warmth. Its scintillating rays incessantly gleam, casting a borealis of hope and help in the frigid sky of a chilled and chilling world.

THE CHURCH NEEDS A PERSONALITY

What the church needs and demands to-day is a place in the sun. We cannot obtain it by permitting ourselves to be absorbed by other institutions, whether secular, collegiate, or religious. Neither can we obtain it by an unsocial aloofness. It must be by creating an active, positive, and distinct individuality.

PERSONALITY: HOW OBTAINED

1. By attention. Personality is a tender and entwining vine. It requires the constant attention of a good husbandman. It must be watered by the showers of service and nourished by the fertilizer of faithfulness.

2. By activity. In this world of ever-changing and ever-engaging entertainment, one becomes unconsciously busy in a negative way—busy being entertained. Such is the defensive and unproductive life.

But hark! It is the actor who exercises personality, not the audience.

3. By study. Personality increases its power as receptivity enlarges: and the receptive one is he who sits at the feet of the Gamaliel of learning.

4. By specializing. Personality is expressed only by the specialist. The man of many ways excites the attention of no one. Like a ship without a rudder he becomes helpless before every wind. He has no destiny for he aims at no port—a pitiless derelict upon the sea of uncertainty.

You who aspire unto personality, it will be your duty to single out a purpose and a profession in life. Make a wise choice and then stick. Plant your plot with a special kind of plants and you will succeed. Otherwise if you indiscriminately sow a mixture you will grow an inferior product; a mongrel at best.

Gladstone and Beaconsfield led their respective parties for fifty years, and Sir John MacDonald, the first premier of Canada, held the affections of his people till only death prevented a continuance of his exalted honor.

5. On the soil of social isolation. Personality is a distinctiveness that distinguishes, and it germinates best in the soil of social isolation. Society's four hundred extended no invitation to John when he preached in the wilderness of Judea, faring upon locusts and wild honey; yet he exercised such an influence over them that all they of cultured Jerusalem resorted unto him to hear the unapologetic denunciations of this man of God. There was something about the man that compelled obedience.

In this quiet retreat upon the happy hills of Lamoni I am sure you will find these elementary opportunities that make for concentration of thought undisturbed by those distracting yet alluring ways of a gay and giddy world.

Here you will find an abundance of material from which you may build an enduring and a proportionate character of intellectuality, of sociability, of spirituality, and the whole focusing into an overmastering personality.

6. In Graceland. Graceland, as the child of the church created by the revelations of God, commands a unique and unequalled distinction amongst the innumerable institutions of learning, inheriting a personality all its own. Many of her faculty, endowed by honorable degrees of learning, are endowed in another and more distinguished way. As holders of the holy priesthood they are in the way of receiving that divinest of all endowments, that enriching personality of Pentecostal times.

Who shall not perceive that contact with such magnets, yes, a personal contact between master and student so permissible and possible at Graceland, will endow her offspring with a personality of the most pronounced type.

GRACELAND A PARTNER IN THE FIRM

The story of Graceland is one of suffering and success, of trial and triumph. Born, as was Isaac, when its parent, the church, was advanced in age; cradled, as was Moses, amid the bulrushes of opposition; and banished, as was Jesus, to an Egypt of temporary rejection, the child, returning to the Nazareth of the church, has grown up in our midst until at last attaining its majority it has been incorporated into a full partnership with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and to-day as an institution of higher learning we meet in a jubilee of deliverance, destined henceforth to sit in the councils of the government of God, doing our bit for the uplift and amelioration of mankind.

GRACELAND, THE MELTING POT

It has been said that the United States, as the melting pot of all nations, produces from the rich ore of humanity constantly brought to her shores from foreign lands, the best possible in the line of an iron manhood. And it is the work of Graceland to take of that manhood and from it produce the tempered steel.

It is intended that, in Graceland's gold refining crucible, the ancient methods of yesterday and the freakish notions of to-day shall submit to an acid test and only the serviceable shall survive. The church in all of her departments wants only the serviceable.

GRACELAND, THE INTRODUCTORY MEDIUM

"The world do move." It is evolutionizing itself every decade. But the church as the custodian of ancient truths, imperishable and eternal, has given much, if not all of its time, to a proclamation of those truths, hence it will be apparent to all, that the church and the world, each pursuing divergent paths, must needs separate and that separation widen into an unbridgable chasm. In this the world loses sight of its greatest benefactor, and the church loses sight of the object of its mission.

Herein is manifest the indispensable mission of the college. By it the church is kept in touch with the ideas of modernity, and the world is kept in touch with the principles of antiquity and eternity.

THE RELIGION OF GRACELAND

All institutions consciously or otherwise have a religion. It has been said that Graceland is non-sectarian. In a sense that is still true, for we will not force our religion upon any, nor yet does it form part of the curriculum. But whether taught or not it will be practiced in the daily life and conversation, in and out of Graceland. And herein exists our mightiest force making for a personality.

Ours is a unique religion, different and distinct from all others. It encompasses the historic past and reaches in to the revealed future. The story of one half the ancient world is known only by Latter Day Saints.

Unto us has been committed a religion undoubtedly the most ancient and unquestionably the most modern. It was written in olden times upon plates of imperishable gold, and revealed in latter days from the sacred Sinai of Cumorah.

Harvard, Princeton, Oxford, and Cambridge owe their prestige largely to those celebrities educated within their walls. But you, the sons and daughters of the restored church, may claim as your ancestral faculty Joseph the deliverer, Abraham the faithful, Daniel the learned, Jared the man of faith, Lehi the seer, Nephi the stalwart, Moroni the general, Mormon the historian, and the twelve of special calling. Professors all of them, for they professed and possessed the fundamentals of all learning, past, present, and future.

And does not the consciousness of such prenatal greatness send the conqueror's blood a-thrilling through your veins?

Indeed, if we lift higher the veil, we shall note that angels from heaven frequently ministered of their learning, when earthly understanding had reached that impenetrable darkness which separates the human and divine.

With such an inspiration who will not appreciate the limitless possibilities at our doors? And who shall not apply himself with diligence and service?

Yes; you will apply yourselves, but not with any groveling, servile spirit—rather with an invincible will to solve the problems of the ages.

In this work of study, you will not be building yourselves into the theories of others, but you will gather from those fundamental stones of fact, and those timbers of truth, the materials out of which you will erect for yourself a palace of learning all your own.

Sunday, October 6, is College Day. You are expected to "do your bit."

It is said that every race reveals a peculiarity developed through long years of subjection or freedom, as the case may be: the Negro his servility; the Irishman his kind-heartedness to a fellow sufferer; the Scotchman the granite inwoven with his soul from the hardening experience of harvesting his living from the rugged hills of his native heath. But Graceland, located in the very bosom of that people, who politically and religiously know no taskmasters, ministered unto by masters and matrons of exceptional talent, and nourished by a student body comprising the brain and brawn of the church, gathered from the four corners of the earth, shall grow up into a veritable endowment house.

With such an aggregation of choicest material who shall doubt that Graceland has in store for her students a personality of rare quality, distinctly Latter Day Saint, and exercising a commanding control.

IN CONCLUSION

You will allow me, Mr. Student, and Miss Student, to congratulate you not as victors returning with the spoils, but upon your fortunate finding of an institution of higher learning, where, under the canopy of her personality, you will presently be impregnated with the principles that gave her birth and gives her life.

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

DIFFERENCES IN THE CREEDS

The numerous creeds of Christendom are the legitimate fruits of spiritual decadence, a striking illustration of the correctness of the divine pronouncement, "Without me ye can do nothing." Every attempt of man to supplement the wisdom of God has but tended to scatter his forces and lessen his power for good.

Creeds, an authoritative arrangement of religious belief, grew out of the conflict of opinion touching certain fundamental doctrines, and first found expression in what is popularly known as "The Apostles' Creed," of unknown origin, which reads as follows:

I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth: and in Jesus Christ his only Son, our Lord; who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, buried; he descended into hell; the third day he rose again from the dead; he ascended into heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead.

I believe in the Holy Ghost; the holy Catholic Church; the communion of saints; the forgiveness of sins; the resurrection of the body; and the life everlasting. Amen.

This brief summary has been revised, enlarged, and elaborated by churchmen and reformers of high and low degree many times over. The Nicene Creed was adopted at the Council of Nicæa, A. D. 325, and grew out of the controversy relative to the nature and character of Christ. It was formed by an enlargement of the Apostles' Creed, and was again elaborated at the Council of Chalcedon, A. D. 431. The Athanasian Creed is an interpretation of the doctrine of the Trinity presented by Athanasius. These four creeds formed the basis of Catholic belief till the middle of the sixteenth century when, at the Council of Trent, 1545-1563, a more detailed statement of belief was formed, and with the additions of 1854 and 1870, comprises the fixed and authoritative confession of Catholic faith.

The Protestant Reformation, beginning with Martin Luther, has been a fruitful source of religious dogma. With the growth of religious and civil liberty creeds have multiplied galore, until to-day it would require a volume of large proportions to give a detailed account of their origin and differences. Prominent and foremost among them are the following: the Presbyterian, or Westminster Confession of Faith, being the latest and most elaborate; Lutheran: Augsburg Confession, 1530; Articles of Smalkald, 1537; Luther's Catechism, 1529; and the Book of Torgau, 1576. Calvinistic Reformed: The Helvetic Confession, 1530; Bullinger's Expositio Simplex, 1566; The Tetrapolitan Confession, 1531; The Gallic Confession, 1559; The Belgic Confession, 1559; and the Palatine or Heidleberg Confession, 1575.

The Thirty-Nine Articles, of the Church of England, 1553 (originally forty-two), have been revised a number of times and form the basis for the more elaborate Westminster Confession, and numerous smaller ones of later origin.

Such, in brief, is the history of the most prominent creeds of the "church," and a brief canvass of some of their differences will reveal the futility of trying to comprehend the divine by human standards. The numerous differences are so complex that it will be impossible to consider them in any other than a general way in a paper of this kind. For a detailed study of this important subject, Philip Schaff's Creeds of Christendom is the best work extant.

GOD

The Anglican, Calvinistic, and Presbyterian creeds comprehend God as a being "without body, parts, or passions." The Methodist creed omits the "passions" from its concept and leaves the communicant in doubt on that point.

TOTAL DEPRAVITY

The Romish doctrine of total depravity is retained in the Calvinistic and Presbyterian creeds, but is repudiated by the Methodist creeds, and others of later origin.

PURGATORY

The Methodist creed, article 14, says: "The Romish doctrine concerning purgatory, pardons, worshiping, and adoration, as well of images as of relics, is a fond thing vainly invented, and grounded upon no warrant of Scripture, but repugnant to the word of God."

JUSTIFICATION

The Protestant creeds of the Lutheran, Presbyterian, and Methodist schools assure us that justification "by faith only is a most wholesome doctrine, and very full of comfort." The Church of England creed is quite positive that we find regeneration in baptism.

BAPTISM

The Catholic, Anglican, Lutheran, Presbyterian, and Methodist creeds all assure us that sprinkling is valid baptism, while the Baptists, Adventists, Disciples, and some others of lesser note are quite positive that it is an unscriptural innovation.

INFANT BAPTISM

Catholic, Anglican, Lutheran, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Methodist creeds affirm the dogma of infant baptism, while Baptists, Disciples, and numerous smaller bodies repudiate it as a heresy.

CONFIRMATION

The Romish, Anglican, and Calvinistic creeds affirm the apostolic rite of confirmation, but the Baptists have allowed it to lapse and no longer practice it. The Presbyterian, Methodists, Disciples, and others deny it entirely.

THE IMPOSITION OF HANDS

The imposition of hands in ordination is a doctrine of the Romish and Protestant churches, except those of the congregational school, who treat it with indifference.

ORGANIZATION

Organically the creeds manifest as much disparity as they do in doctrinal matters. The Church of Rome is positive that the pope is the vicar of Christ, and the head of all churches. Protestants as a whole repudiate this claim, and support their contention by many conflicting opinions and usages. As to what was designed of the Lord to constitute a living, perpetual ministry in the church is with them a matter of uncertainty and speculation, bishops and deacons being the only offices recognized by the various creeds generally as standing ministers. The Congregational creed "shows conclusively that there were but two orders of church officers, bishops and deacons." But for the continuance of the office of evangelist in the church they are quite sure "there is no direction in the Scripture." The Methodist creed provides for bishops, elders, and deacons, while the Disciples, in common with others of the Congregational school, affirm that bishop and elder is all the same, but contrary to the regular Congregational church, the Disciples claim the evangelist is a standing office. With the Presbyterians, Methodists, and some others, an evangelist is merely a revivalist, while the Disciples make him the highest official whose duty it is to "set in order" all others. The Westminster Confession affirms that "The ordinary and perpetual officers in the church, are bishops or pastors; the representatives of the people, usually styled ruling elders; and deacons," the pastoral office being "first in the church, both for dignity and usefulness." The Methodist creed provides for bishops, presiding elders, traveling elders, local preachers, and missionaries, all of whom are ordained ministers with their duties clearly defined. And be it remembered, all those conflicting opinions are drawn from the New Testament. Truly, the world by learning cannot know God.

THE LORD'S SUPPER

Here again we find a great clash of opinion. The Church of Rome assures us that when the priest blesses the bread and wine it automatically becomes the actual flesh and blood of Christ. Protestantism rejects this dogma, but disagree among themselves when it comes to the administration. Some Baptist and Presbyterian bodies, the Dunkards, and others are, in harmony with the "Mother Church," close communionists, while the others are more liberal and administer the communion to all believers "in the Lord," irrespective of their credal affiliations.

MEMBERSHIP

The Catholic Church holds that all others are heretics, and will receive no one only by ritual. As on all other points of doctrine and practice, the Protestants are divided. The Lutherans, Presbyterians,

Sunday, October 6, is College Day. You are expected to "do your bit."

Congregationalists, Methodists, and minor bodies will receive members from other churches on their original membership. The Methodist Episcopal Church, however, takes them in, as they do new converts, on six months' probation. The Baptists, Dunkards, Disciples, and smaller churches receive communicants only on baptism by immersion. The Baptist view is that baptism is the door into the visible church. The Disciples see more in it than that and affirm that the candidate is baptized into the name of Christ for the remission of sins, that is, in order to remission. The Baptists agree that baptism is for remission, but because the sins have already been remitted. With the Methodists and many others baptism is no more than an outward sign of an inward grace, and is in no sense a means of pardon. We might also mention that the Greek Orthodox Church continues to practice immersion as the only scriptural mode of baptism.

We might continue this paper at greater length, but why penetrate the gloom any further? It must be apparent to all that the modern "church" has no clearly defined conception of the kingdom of God on earth. The more one examines the creeds the more pronounced will become his convictions that great is the mystery of modern creedology.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

LOYALTY A TEST OF GREATNESS

Loyalty has always been the test of a great soul. In the beginnings of humanity the man who could put his loyalty to his tribe above his own self-interest was the great man of the tribe. As the tribe expanded into the nation, or, as oftener happened, when several tribes united to form a nation, the man who could put his loyalty to the nation above self-interest and even above the lesser loyalty to the tribe, stood the test of greatness. Patriotism at its highest means the merging of self in the interests of the nation, a loyalty to the community rather than to self.

It is interesting when one turns to the New Testament to note that Jesus first, and Paul afterwards, make loyalty, this power to put the common good above one's own good, one of the chief tests of the great man. The great man according to Jesus is the man who does not want anything for himself that he does not want for everybody else. Just as Jesus himself could not look forward to a reign and kingdom which his disciples did not share with him, so the Christian was not to seek any good that he would not share. In fact, he was to go further; he was not only to be anxious to merge all his ambitions in a common welfare, he would even put the welfare of the community above his own. He would live for the kingdom of God, which was the one community that deserved the chief loyalty according to Jesus—the kingdom of God; that is, redeemed humanity.

When one turns to the writings of Paul one finds that, out of the several measures of greatness given by Jesus, Paul chooses this one of loyalty as the most outstanding of them all. According to Paul the great man, the good man, the man who has achieved the finest Christian perfection, is the man who orders all his life by a great principle of loyalty to the blessed community. Our readers will recall how Professor Josiah Royce devoted his life to showing how Paul's whole teaching could be summed up in that one word, loyalty. Paul perhaps had the more limited idea, namely, the church. The church was the blessed community and the perfect Christian was he who ordered all his actions with the best good of the community in mind, who interested himself primarily in the welfare of the community and bore its burdens; whose ambition even to the saving of his soul, was always shared with the community, and to whom sin consisted in disloyalty to the community.

This Christian idea of the great man being the man who can thus lose himself in a great loyalty to the community, one in whom self and humanity have practically become one and the same, has come to be pretty generally recognized by the world as the final test of greatness. Its really great men are the men who have been able to say, "I desire nothing for myself that I do not desire for all my brothers; I live not for myself but for mankind." Recall how splendidly Matthew Arnold puts this when he refers to his great father, Thomas Arnold, in the poem, Rugby Chapel.

But thou wouldst not alone
Be saved, my father, alone
Conquer and come to thy goal,
Leaving the rest in the wild.

And then, after describing how many hundreds of Englishmen were floundering about in the mires of doubt, losing faith and courage in the great battle, he shows how his great father never went on ahead, in his own sure way, seeking his own delivery, but remained with them, holding them fast by the hand:

Therefore to thee it was given
Many to save with thyself;
And at the end of thy day,
O faithful shepherd! to come,
Bringing thy sheep in thy hand.

But the great new thing is that at last we are beginning to apply this same test of loyalty to the nation. The great nation of to-morrow—yea, of to-day—is the nation that can sink itself in its devotion to humanity. The great nation is the nation that can say as our President has said again and again for our nation: "The United States does not desire anything for itself that it does not desire for all the other nations of the world." This is exactly the same test that Jesus and Paul apply to individuals. Now it is being applied to the nations, and after this war it is to be hoped that it will be as commonly accepted for nations as it now is for individuals, that just as the great man is the man whose greatness is measured by his loyalty to the community, to the kingdom, to humanity, so the great nation is the nation which can throw off selfishness, which is the traditional greatness of nations, and can live and strive for the community of nations, the common good of all mankind, humanity.

President Wilson is the great prophet of this new application of the gospel to the nations. Let us close with some of these great texts from his messages and addresses:

"Fellow citizens, it is an unprecedented thing in the world that any nation in determining its foreign relations should be unselfish, and my ambition is to see America set the great example; not only a great example morally, but a great example intellectually. . . . In the day to come men will no longer wonder how America is going to work out her destiny, for she will have proclaimed to them that her destiny is not divided from the destiny of the world; that her purpose is justice and love of mankind."

"There have been other nations as rich as we; there have been other nations as powerful; there have been other nations as spirited; but I hope we shall never forget that we created this Nation, not to serve ourselves, but to serve mankind."

"... We are a part of the world, and nothing that concerns the whole world can be indifferent to us. We want always to hold the force of America to fight for what? Not merely for the rights of property or of national ambition, but for the rights of mankind."

"We are saying to all mankind: 'We did not set this Government up in order that we might have a selfish and separate liberty, for we are now ready to come to your assistance and fight upon the field of the world the cause of human liberty.' In this thing America attains her full dignity and the full fruition of her great purpose."

"The position of America in this war is so clearly avowed that no man can be excused for mistaking it. She seeks no material profit or aggrandizement of any kind. She is fighting for no advantage or selfish object of her own, but for the liberation of peoples everywhere from the aggressions of autocratic force."

"My dream is . . . that the world will never fear America unless it feels that it is engaged in some enterprise which is inconsistent with the rights of humanity; and that America will come into the full light of the day when all shall know that she puts human rights above all other rights, and that her flag is the flag not only of America, but of humanity."—Frederick Lynch, in an editorial in The Christian Work.

EDIBLE FRUITS OF FOREST TREES

It is said that Daniel Boone and some of our other early pioneers could go into the wilderness with only a rifle and a sack of salt and live in comfort on the game and other wild food which the woods afforded. While few people want to try that sort of thing nowadays, persons who know the food value of the fruits of our native trees and shrubs are, according to foresters, able to use them to good advantage in supplementing other foods.

Aside from the numerous edible mushrooms, roots, fruits of shrubs and smaller plants, the trees of our forests afford a large variety of edibles which are highly prized by woods connoisseurs. First in importance, of course, are our native nuts—beech-nuts, butternuts, walnuts, chestnuts and chinquapins, hazel nuts, and several kinds of hickory nuts, including pecans. The kernels of all of these are not only toothsome but highly nutritious and are used by vegetarians to replace meat. The oil of the beechnut is said to be little inferior to olive oil, while that of butternuts and walnuts was used by some of the Indians for various purposes. The Indians, it is said, also formerly mixed chestnuts with cornmeal and made a bread which was baked in corn husks, like tomares. In parts of Europe bread is made from chestnuts alone. The chestnut crop in this country is being reduced each year by the chestnut-blight disease which in some sections is gradually killing out the tree.

Acorns are commonly thought to be fit only for feeding hogs, but many kinds of them can be made edible and nourishing for people as well. The Indian custom was to pound or grind the acorns up and leach out the tannin, which makes most of them unfit for eating when raw, by treating the pulp with hot water. The resulting flour, which contained considerable starch, was made either into a porridge or baked in small cakes of bread. As a rule, the acorns of the various white oaks having less tannin are the ones best suited for food, but Indians also used those of the black oaks, even though they contain much tannin. The acorns of the basket or cow oak, the chinquapin oak, shin or Rocky Mountain oak, live oak, and of several other species, are sweet enough to be eaten raw.

Another nut which is not suited for eating raw, but from which a palatable food is said to have been prepared by the Indians, is the buckeye. The kernels of these nuts were dried, powdered, and freed of the poison which they contain when raw by filtration. The resulting paste was either eaten cold or baked.

Several western pines have seeds which play an important part in the diet of the local Indians. Perhaps the best known of these is the fruit of the nut pine or pinon, which forms the basis for a local industry of some size. Not only is it extensively eaten by local settlers and Indians, but large quantities are shipped to the cities where the seed is roasted and sold on the street. The similar seed of the Parry pine and the large Digger pine seeds are eagerly sought by the Indians. The latter tree is said to have gained its name from its use as a food by the Digger Indians. The seeds of the longleaf pine are edible and are improved by roasting. Indeed, it may be said that most nuts are more digestible when roasted than if eaten raw.

One of the best known fruits, the foresters say, is the persimmon, which is edible only after it is thoroughly ripe. As this is usually not until late in the fall, it is commonly thought that the fruit must be frostbitten. If the persimmon is eaten before it is well ripened, the tannic acid which the fruit contains has a strongly astringent effect, which justifies the story of the soldier in the Civil War who said he had eaten green persimmons so as to shrink his stomach up to fit his rations. The pawpaw, or custard apple, is also best when thoroughly ripe. The fruit of some species of haws is eaten or preserved in different parts of the country, while those of several different kinds of wild cherries have a food value and are used for various purposes. Wild plums are abundant in certain sections and occur in particularly plentiful quantities along the streams in the eastern and middle western States.

Several varieties of wild crab apples make delicious jellies. Some of the largest, which attain the size of small apples, are more or less abundant throughout eastern North Carolina. Elderberries are frequently used for pies and for sauce. Those found in the West are sweeter and have a better flavor than the eastern varieties.

The berries of the hackberry, or sugar berry, as it is called in the South, are dry but have an agreeable taste. Those of the mulberry are sweet and juicy when ripe. The mulberry is valued in some sections for feeding hogs and poultry and some species are occasionally cultivated.

Many people like the fruit of the shad bush, "sarvice" berry, or June berry, as it is variously called. In parts of the country this fruit is used to make jelly.

The French Canadians are said to use the acid flowers of the redbud, or Judas tree, in salads, while the buds and tender pods are pickled in vinegar. Honey locust pods, often locally called "honey-shucks," contain a sweetish, thick, cheeselike pulp, which is often eaten. Those of the mesquite furnish the Mexicans and Indians with a nutritious food. The Creoles of Louisiana, famous for their cookery, are reported to use the young buds of the sassafras as a substitute for okra, in thickening soups.—From Forestry Service, United States Department of Agriculture.

PRESIDENT INDORSES ZIONIST MOVEMENT

The President has written the following letter to Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, former president of the provisional Zionist committee:

I have watched with deep and sincere interest the reconstructive work which the Weizmann commission has done in Palestine at the instance of the British Government, and I welcome an opportunity to express the satisfaction I have felt in the progress of the Zionist movement in the United States and in the allied countries since the declaration by Mr. Balfour, on behalf of the British Government, of Great Britain's approval of the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and his promise that the British Government would use its best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of that object, with the understanding that nothing would be done to prejudice the civil and religious rights of non-Jewish people in Palestine or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in other countries.

I think that all Americans will be deeply moved by the report that even in this time of stress the Weizmann commission has been able to lay the foundation of the Hebrew University at Jerusalem, with the promise that that bears of spiritual rebirth.

We cannot pass by the first lessons and proceed to master the later ones. And the first great need is to become thoroughly assured of the verities of the Christian religion; then we can bear with the problems of life without losing faith, even if we do not understand them for a time, because we have our feet planted on something substantial.—E. A. Smith.

The Head and Not the Tail

On the first, or editorial, page of Zion's Ensign for August 22, 1918, is an article entitled, "You shall lead," that we can well urge our choir people to read carefully. It contains a selected article from Musical America of July 27, 1918, describing the notable work of Brother Albert N. Hoxie, our general church chorister, in developing the element of community singing at Philadelphia to such a degree that our Government was pleased to recognize his abilities, commissioning him as song leader for the League Island Navy Yard at Philadelphia. Since then his work in community singing and camp activity has grown and the principle and element of community singing is spreading over the Nation in a noticeable measure. The Government is taking active steps to put "a singing nation behind a singing army" by sponsoring the "Liberty Sing Commission," which it designs shall extend nation-wide in its work.

The editorial comment accompanying the article from Musical America is what we hope will be productive of much thought among our musical forces. It is to the effect that when God's people have set themselves consistently at work in the performance of what he has commanded them to do, they have risen to be the leaders of men—"the head and not the tail."

If we would read of God's promises to bless his people, not only in their temporal, physical, and spiritual affairs, but in their attainments as well, let us take up for careful consideration the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy. God had established his chosen people in the promised land, and in this chapter he recites the wondrous and varied blessings that should be theirs, contingent upon their keeping his commandments. They should be the first of all people; ahead of all and not behind, above all and not beneath. But oh, the awful things that should come upon them if they failed to keep those commandments!

This was given to former-day Israel but it applies with just as much force to Israel of to-day. For our guidance God has given some very plain and explicit commandments which he desires we should follow; and he has promised us some exceedingly rich and choice blessings, if we would faithfully keep these commandments. We are told, among other things, that we shall stand preeminently before the world as leaders of men and promoters of thought.

The writer once heard a prominent elder of the church give a very beautiful and edifying testimony in an afternoon prayer service at Independence. It was to the effect that God desired his people to be the best in every good thing and at the head of every good work and that if we obeyed his commandments as we should the Holy Spirit would guide us into achieving these things. He stated that he was spiritually impressed with the knowledge that if God's people were as faithful as they should be his Spirit would guide them into attainments they little dreamed of; that the church would in time have within its ranks the greatest statesmen and scientists, the most learned philosophers, the most gifted poets, the most talented musicians, sculptors, and artists; all of these if we but lived as God designed we should. Why not? Is it not the province of the Holy Spirit to guide into all truth? Why are we so lacking in these things and why does God have to so often go outside of his church to the vast world about us that he may find his adequate expression?

But we are not trying to preach a general sermon on this topic for our mission in The Staff is to extend "the gospel of good music" throughout the church and call our musical sinners to repentance.

At the conference of 1887, within the hallowed walls of the Kirtland Temple, God graciously spoke to his people upon several very important matters. One of the things that he chose upon which to give counsel was the work of music in the church. He commanded that the musical services of his church should be well cared for by those qualified for that work. He further commanded that "the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song." (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6.) This is remarkable in view of the fact that while God in other instances commended the general pursuit of knowledge everywhere and in every line, and the universal cultivation of all the arts and sciences, he has singled out the one art of music upon which to place his particular stamp of approval.

Now, what have we individually and as a church done to honor and obey this commandment? Over thirty-one years have elapsed and what is the great amount accomplished? We suffered a quarter of a century of valuable time, one fourth of that which we have considered as "this generation," to pass before we took official action as a church to put into effect the active elements of this counsel. God said that if we kept his commandments we should excel all others, that we should be "the head and not the tail." But time has gone on, and with perhaps the notable exception of Brother Hoxie, the praiseworthy things of the musical world have been and are being mostly done by others than God's people. Have we kept God's commandments and have we done our part in the musical work of this world? Thirty-one years is a long time, and in that period many things can be accomplished. Mendelssohn and Chopin, the great composers, each lived less than forty years and their productive periods were probably not over a quarter of a century each; yet they each gave to the world a quantity of the choicest and most valuable musical heritages. But in the same length of time what has been done within our ranks, individually or collectively, as our contribution to the musical enrichment of the world?

God's commandments are eternal, and his promises are always kept if we do our part. God desires that we shall stand preeminent as leaders of the race, as "the head and not the tail," and the only reason why we do not so occupy is that we have not done our part.

The writer asserts from both conviction and knowledge that we are, musically, as well as in other ways, a talented people. God divinely recognized our powers, given us of himself, and gave us the commandment to cultivate them. How many of us have buried our talents in the napkins of neglect and indifference!

There are abundant evidences about us that God is richly rewarding us for even the little heed we have given to his instruction and he is constantly showing his willingness to make us preeminent in the glorious art of music. Wherever persistent and intelligent efforts have been put forth, individually or collectively, in musical development, we have risen to heights of excellence. We propose to mention some concrete instances, probably familiar to most of you.

The Independence Stake (Stone Church) choir at Independence is an organization, the development of which has occupied a long period of time, and its present high status is the result of devoted, constructive work on the part of faithful, energetic leaders, who had ideals and worked to them; who were endowed with vision as to what might be done, and strove to accomplish what they saw in their vision. Although these leaders had each his individual character and style, they labored in the main towards the same objective—the development of the organization over which they had been placed. They labored freely and willingly, giving service that involved both sacrifice and endurance. They overcame many obstacles and suffered many things, the greatest of which was the lack of appreciation on the part of those who could not understand them or their ideals. But they kept on, and what is the result? God vindicated in them and through them his own commandments and promises. The Stone Church choir is to-day alike the fitting monument to their efforts and the living fulfillment of God's promises. It stands as the living example of what can be done by persistent, faithful effort toward an objective ideal. It is preeminent in its rank and attainments, not only in the church but in the world circle around it, in which it has commanded the greatest respect; for in all the territory of Kansas City and vicinity there is probably no sacred chorus that has accomplished so notable achievements. This chorus and its faithful masters, who have truly been devoted servants, have kept the commandments of God, and his promises have been fulfilled; they are, as an organization, at "the head and not the tail," above and not beneath.

But what has been done by the Stone Church choir in a big way, owing to the large amount of talent available, can be done in a proportionate degree in many of our branches. We know of several branches of very moderate size, that because of like faithful efforts have choirs that do real credit to them and the church work where they are situated. Also, sad to say, we know of a number of branches of equal size that, because of a lack of proper effort, have either indifferent choirs or none at all. So far as the kingdom of heaven is concerned it receives but little advancement or benefit at their hands.

Not alone in choir work are the commandments of God applicable, but to the individual as well are they binding. This is preeminently true for the reason that advancement of society in the mass is dependent upon the development of the individual.

We again assert that, as a church, our people are liberally endowed with abundant talent which, if cultivated, would enable us to stand forth as leaders in the fields of human attainments. Where individuals among us have realized their talents and have stepped forward in the intelligent cultivation of them they have invariably arrived at the condition where they brought signal credit upon themselves and the church. Probably Brother Hoxie is the most prominent example among us but there are some others. Sister Wallace N. Robinson is another example, who because of her attainments occupies an honorable place in the musical circles of Kansas City, as well as in the church. Sister Blanche Allen-Needham is another soprano whose attainments were discovered last conference when the securing of a soprano for the difficult and exacting part in the oratorio, Elijah, was a real problem. Brother Paul N. Craig worked hard and faithfully with his talent that he might accomplish for the church what he now has in hand, and his services are now of real value to us. Brother Joseph Anthony, now in charge of the department of orchestral instruments in Graceland, has also labored hard and unremittingly, and against some real obstacles and discouragements, that he might stand where he can be of real service to us. A number of other instances could be cited but these are sufficient, and we trust they will pardon us the personal use of their names. But they are "ensamples, given for our admonition," and they vindicate the principle. But the thought is ever present, why, with the wealth of talent with which the church is endowed, do we have so few that stand preeminent; why so many that are content with mediocrity or inferiority? We should have ten individuals of really preeminent attainments where we now have one. As an instance, last conference, when a diligent search was made for some one to take the difficult contralto role in Elijah, no one was found available and an outside voice had to be engaged. But there should not have existed this want.

God has given us a definite, positive commandment to "cultivate the gifts of music and of song," and he has demonstrated his promise that his people, if faithful, should be "the head and not the tail," in those who have moved forward and intelligently obeyed. But we are sadly wondering how many, to whom God has given these divine talents, are covertly wrapping these precious gifts in the napkins of slothful and indolent indifference and seeking places where they may bury them. But God will require them at their hands.

ARTHUR H. MILLS.

Soprano or Alto?

"Why, Mary, what is the reason you are not singing in the choir this morning?"

"Well, I've quit the choir. Sister Paischens, the chorister, told me she thought my voice was better fitted to sing alto than soprano and she would like to have me change to the altos, and I won't do it. If I can't sing soprano I won't sing at all."

The above conversation, although hypothetical, has been heard in substance by the writer a number of times. It has invariably occurred when the chorister, detecting an alto voice struggling in the sopranos, has endeavored to correct the same and assign the singer to her proper sphere. Almost always the friction thus engendered produces the flame above described, for the misplaced alto refuses to be corrected.

Nature, who regulates and distributes more wisely than we can appreciate, has decreed that in female voices the proportion of sopranos and altos shall be about equal, with perhaps a very slight preponderance of sopranos, which is considered by musicians as fortunate. But the writer has observed that, with scarcely any exception, in the female sections of our choirs the sopranos greatly outnumber the altos; the soprano side is so much heavier than the alto that the harmonic balance of the choir is seriously disturbed.

Now, in the face of nature's provision, what is the reason for this disproportionate arrangement of our female singers? We think we can furnish at least a fairly adequate reason and we propose to deal with the question in a plain, blunt way.

First, many of those who essay to sing with the sopranos, when in reality they should be serving with the altos, do so from motives of mere pride only. They feel that altos are "inferior" to sopranos and that the sopranos occupy a more honorable place in the choir than the altos. It is the same feeling of pride that prompts all the violins in an amateur orchestra to fight shy of the part of second.

They, like the sopranos, don't want to be "second fiddle" to anybody.

Although we cannot in the slightest degree indorse this attitude, we presume it is, like most of our failings, natural. Also, it is the result of false education. We are confident that if our musical people would carefully consider the subject from an intelligent standpoint this absurd conception would disappear. Let us examine carefully the relative positions of soprano and alto, that we may arrive at a proper understanding.

In all chorus or quartet work the "four part" element is ever present and each part is equally important to every other part. If any one part is missing the balance and beauty of the whole is impaired. Next, in all well-composed music, the beauty of melody is not given solely to the soprano voice and even though that voice may carry the thematic melody the other voices are continually moving in their relation to it in counter melodies, which, if we analyze them, are individually beautiful. Hence, no one should suppose that in chorus work the sopranos enjoy a monopoly of the beautiful parts, for they do not.

Personally, the writer loves each of the two female voices equally well and he particularly delights to hear a beautiful contralto voice, for in this voice is frequently to be heard some of the most sympathetic qualities. A beautiful contralto is always prized in the highest measure.

Another reason why some of our natural altos essay to sing soprano (and it is a far more pardonable one) is that their musical perceptions have not been trained to that degree wherein they can appreciate the counter-melody character of the alto part. It takes a really good musical ear, and one that is properly developed, to not only be mindful of the principal (thematic) melody being voiced by the sopranos but to be able to sustain a true counter melody to it. Some of those who properly are altos cannot easily follow a melody independent of the sopranos and so, following the lines of least resistance, they sing with the sopranos. The remedy for this is, of course, the cultivation of taste and musical perception.

We trust that our sisters who desire to serve the choir will endeavor to place themselves where nature has indicated, for thereby can their own interests as well as those of the choir be best served. If you are in doubt where your voice belongs consult some competent authority. We, however, submit a few simple tests which may help. The human voice has a compass of about two octaves. Unless under intelligent cultivation, this compass is usually less than two octaves. No one who finds herself having to strain to reach the pitch of d or e, an octave above middle c, should attempt to sing soprano.

In conclusion let every singer strive to learn his true vocal place and occupy therein.

"Make it a habit to be accurate in everything you do. Never make a single step until you are sure that it is just what you want. Be accurate in your writing: Dot your 'i's' and cross your 't's' is what our school-teacher used to ding into our ears in our boyhood days, and it taught us habits of accuracy which we never had cause to regret. In sending orders to your merchant, be accurate in them; put down just what you want and how you want it, in such plain language that you can't be misunderstood. Be very careful to get your address right, street, number, town, county, and State, and you will save a great deal of trouble at the office where your order is received. A great deal of the misery in this world is caused by inaccuracy of word or deed."

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

They Mean Business!

We are pleased to present, in this issue, articles from Sister Burgess, supervisor of the Young Woman's Bureau, and Sister Thompson, the new director of the Oriole movement. These letters, you will agree, sound businesslike, and manage to make us feel that the leaders of this part of our auxiliary work are alert to the needs, and sympathetic to the demands, which abound in their department.

We have always believed that God qualifies for any special work to which a person may be called, providing that person puts into that work his whole heart and interest, and is willing to work. He must also prove receptive to those leadings and promptings by which the good Spirit seeks to guide us. A desire to qualify will express itself in a readiness to reach out and learn how things are being done by others, how they may be improved, where they may be copied, what should be avoided, what are failures and what successes. A quickness to perceive where methods may be adapted to our special needs, and an earnest effort to carry those adaptations into effect cannot but meet with some degree of success in the work undertaken. We have, after such study and such effort, then, a real right to help from divine sources.

The leaders of our young women have been, we believe, consecrated to the best good of the girls of the church, and have anxiously taken hold of all within their reach which could be adapted and used to advantage. Not claiming that perfection has been reached, or indeed ever can be in this life, we still take pride in the record made, and feel sure that the many, many branches in which the Oriole work has been taken up with earnestness, will join in this appraisal of its value to us. It is progressive; it is constructive, and will make our girls more efficient in the branch as well as in the home.

The work of the organization for older girls, called The Temple Builders, though still in its incipency, promises much of ideal accomplishment, also. Let us but direct the thought of these young people into the right channels, fire their enthusiasm for that which is noble and enduring, and the wonderful spirit of youth will do the rest. The very ardor, or "pep," which is making our soldiers the talk of the world, is an asset which will be felt in our church when it is awakened to the fact that there is a place waiting for it to occupy. Let our young people feel that we need them, that God wants them, and they will discover for themselves that joy lies in the doing, in the serving.

Please notice, dear readers, the practical ideas Sister Thompson puts forth in this little note to the monitors of Oriole circles. Her little paper is full of suggestions, and should cause many to feel that their time and effort are spent in a splendid cause when put into this work of unifying the interests of our girls—of getting them to love "team-work," or to see the nobility of doing well the little everyday duties of life.

If, in your branch, there are, as yet, no organizations of Oriole Girls, or of the Temple Builders, and if you have among you groups of young girls who would benefit by these well-thought out and well-planned ideas for their activities, just write Sister Burgess at Lamoni, or Sister Thompson, at the same place, and see how quickly and how generously they will respond with their practical and helpful suggestions. These sisters will, we hope, have other contributions for our columns in the near future, for such good should be widely scattered, and thickly sown, that the harvest may be abundant and assured.

The Work of the Young Woman's Bureau

PURPOSES AND IDEALS

Why have an organization for girls alone? Are not the Religio and Sunday school enough? Because our girls have their own peculiar problems of girlish development which are not met by the Religio and Sunday school. They need an organization whose special business it is to meet these problems. Doctrinal and religious instruction is necessary, but social training, practical service, and the right physical and mental development are imperative and must go hand in hand with such instruction.

Our organizations attempt to help the girl to apply the great principles of the gospel in her everyday life. They lay so little stress on the doctrinal phases and mere church membership that they appeal to our friends outside the church. Yet they emphasize service in the church as well as in the home and the community and hold always before the girls the gospel ideals as they may best apply to girlish life.

Our purpose is to assist the girls to organize and work together, with self-development and service as the great aim. We know we have a body of girls and young women who are the very "salt" of earth's maidenhood. We must open to them opportunity for self-expression and service in the church, and in turn give the church the benefit of their organized and directed energies.

A FREQUENT QUESTION

"I would like to work with girls, but how do you go about it to interest them? How do you get them out to the meetings?"

This question is often accompanied by a torrent of narrative, how the sister in question labored with the girls, how hard she tried and how utterly ungrateful the girls were, etc. The very question shows that there is something wrong in the sister's attitude. The question she should ask herself is: How may I interest myself in these girls? How may I come to a real participation in their hopes, fears, interests, and pleasures?

THE GROUCH

In the first place don't be a grouch! Try to renew your youth. Do not tell the girls, with your lips in a stern line, that they must join the Orioles because it is their duty. Don't try to impose upon them this organization—or urge them to join because you want them. Don't convert their little meeting together into a solemn, too orderly occasion.

THE UNDERSTANDING PERSON

Meet your girls with understanding. Interest yourselves in their interests, enjoy their innocent pleasures and enter seriously into their hopes and ambitions, little or big. Don't try to make them over, but merely to help them to find the right self-expression. Be their true friend.

HAPPINESS AND SERVICE

Offer them your organization as a happy opportunity for fun, development, and service. These organizations when properly explained carry their own appeal, since they have been formed expressly to meet the peculiar interests of girlhood.

Don't make the mistake of running the chapter or circle entirely. Make it their own organization and make them feel responsible for its success or failure. If they are giving a party or picnic, let them plan the menu and prepare, etc. Don't "baby" them by doing everything for them. They won't enjoy it.

Every girl is unconsciously seeking the road to happiness and service. Open to them this road through your organization. Give them something of Helen Keller's ideal. With all her afflictions she voices the true ideal of girlhood when she says:

"There is joy in self-forgetfulness. So I try to make the light in others' eyes my sun, the music in others' ears my symphony, the smile on others' lips my happiness."

OUR PROBLEMS

There are many problems to be worked out in helping our girls to full development and happiness. Health and beauty are essentials of normal girl life. Study your girls to determine how to help them to become physically fit, and to possess those wholesome and attractive qualities which make for true beauty and charm. We want our daughters to live up to the æsthetic ideals which have always been so precious a heritage of womankind. So far as we are told all the great and godly women of the Bible were attractive. Think of Sarah, Rachel, and Rebecca, not to mention Esther, and the beautiful Ruth, who became Christ's progenitor.

What of the cultured development of your girls? Do they appreciate the best in literature, music, and art? Can they distinguish a good novel from a trashy one? Do they appreciate what is worth while in drama or would they prefer Theda Bara in some hideously immoral melodrama to Forbes Robinson in "The passing of the third floor back"? Does each girl have some means of artistic expression? And are they using their talents and developing them rightly?

What success do your girls make socially? Social training involves a more rigid application of the second great commandment than many of us realize. Have your girls developed that tactful consideration for others and that joyous lack of self-consciousness which makes any girl a source of happiness to others? Are your girls modest and unobtrusive on the street and in other public places?

Then what is the economic status of your girls? If you have poorly paid factory girls can't you help them to make their way to something better? Often you need only to point out the way and encourage. If you have girls whose lives are narrow and starved mentally—what are you doing to help them to better schooling?

Are your girls going to be good homemakers? What do they know about the practical rudiments of the care of a house, cooking, or sewing? Every girl should have a working knowledge and some skill in this line.

What is the spiritual status of your girls? Are they developing spiritually at all? We think the problems which have gone before pave the way and in fact go hand in hand with spiritual development. But did you ever take your chapter or circle out for a sunrise prayer session? Do they come to you with vital religious difficulties and problems?

Help them to appreciate the value and comfort of prayer, and broaden their faith and vision of the gospel.

All these lines of development are necessary. And if you keep these problems in mind you will be better able to understand and use our two organizations.

THE HEART OF A GIRL

Sometimes it's a long, long road to the heart of a girl. Sometimes you try and try and seem never to get nearer to her. But if you have love for the key and unselfish interest as a guide, no girlish citadel is finally proof against you. And when you once reach her heart and see the true hidden beauties of her seemingly crude self you will never regret the time and effort spent. To our workers with girls we would say, "Hope much, love ever, and pray always."

ALICE MAE BURGESS,
Supervisor of Young Women.

To the Oriole Monitors

I wish to write this time more especially to the monitors of the many Oriole circles that are already organized and are being organized, for the monitor is a very important factor in these circles.

As monitors you hold a place of great influence, for you come in direct contact with the girls. Your conduct, manners, and conversation will be copied to some degree and unconsciously by the girls in your charge. Your ideas of right and wrong, of beauty, of politeness, will be the ideals for them. They are in the impressionable age and the woman who loves them and is with them as a leader will exert an influence that might surprise some.

Because of the influence you have I make an appeal, now that it is so near time for school to open, for you to see that the girls in your circle have physical exercise. By that I mean, get them out of doors to play. Girls of Oriole age very often never get out and play games at school. They stand around marking on the board or sit and talk or study. They need the outdoor exercise. Just telling them to play will not do. Lead them. A school-teacher cannot always play with them. There are too many groups and she has to watch all.

What shall you do? Take long hikes for one thing, with perhaps a little lunch at the end. The hikes should not be so long at first. Work up gradually. Do not walk so far the first time that they never will want to go again. And have some objective point. An aimless walk is worse than none at all. As is also the walk that is a saunter. Put life into it.

But first do they know how to walk? That is an important feature of hikes. They should stand with hips back and head up. Lay the stress on those two things. If the hips are back the shoulders will take care of themselves. At each step swing from the hips. Following the plan of the Boy Scouts is good. Walk fifty steps then trot fifty. They will need practice to do that and not overdo at the beginning.

When I was twelve or thirteen one of the college teachers, seeing the need of physical training for the girls of the town, started a gymnasium. There was a marked difference in the way the girls stood and walked and in their self-possession after a year's training. They knew what to do with their hands and feet and were not so self-conscious in the presence of older people. It did wonders.

Now perhaps there is no such teacher in your locality, but there are lots of books with the exercises explained and pictured out. With one of these, an earnest monitor would soon direct a few of the best exercises. The girls will enjoy them and will not be the only ones to profit by the work.

Urge, of course, the keeping up of the regular work. Take a little time at the meetings to see about the points won; then spend the rest of the time in having a good time. And again, let me urge, have it out of doors as much as possible. Snow and cold will not hurt anyone if properly clothed and if they keep moving enough to keep up the circulation. Be dressed for the weather and the occasion. For instance, never attempt a hike wearing high-heeled shoes. Walking shoes are low heeled.

What glorious evenings we will have for games after it gets frosty enough to make the blood tingle! Then is the time for bonfires and "weenie" roasts. And the long walk back in the dusk! Doesn't that make you wish that October were here now?

What games are there to play? "Flying Dutchman" or "Too Late for Supper," "The Last Couple Out." Relay races, of which there any number of good ones. If there are two circles in the place where you live, form two teams and play matched games of ball, using the indoor baseball if you wish, or play "Steal the flag," a Boy Scout game, but which girls can play as well as the boys. All of these games mean running in the open and a great deal of exercise and sport. Do not stand back and say, "You play," but instead let it be, "Come on, let's play." The girls thoroughly enjoy having you play with them. After you've played with them it will be easier to say, "I hope to see you all at church Sunday." Try it and see how quickly they will respond.

If it's a stormy day and outdoor games are barred, it will be a good time for a story. I think I hear some one say, as I heard a mother say a few days ago, "I just can't tell a story." Have you ever tried? You will be surprised at what you can do. But if you can't tell a story then have a talk with them about some of the things that are of vital interest to them. Their school, their lessons, their playmates, and so on. Direct the talk, though, and do not let it degenerate to fault finding. Be interested in their interests.

I must leave "the talks" for another time. That is a subject in itself. We hope to hear from many of the monitors about the work we are all interested in, making suggestions or asking questions. The first will be gladly received and the latter will be answered if possible.

Your coworker, GRACE THOMPSON.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Temple Chimes

Venerable old Chronos has disported himself with characteristic rapidity, and hurled the Kirtland reunion into the current of history. Worthy to be in the front of the volume was the ten-day association around the grand old temple "on the hill." After the "break-up" on Monday morning, we thought of desolated Belgium after the German invasion; felt that way, too, so lonely.

'Twas an educational Chautauqua during which the departments of church work appeared to proper advantage. The details we leave to the press committee. Of generalities we may speak: social purity, Religio, Sunday school, institute work, priesthood themes, loyalty, patriotism, sermons, devotional seasons, auxiliary, Oriole, and musical departments; all, all scored victories glorious and permanent.

Thirteen States of the Union and three provinces of Canada representatively mingled in the assembly, while many "outsiders" from afar almost flew like doves to the temple windows. The temple choir, and orchestra, organized in June, was admired by all. This musical aggregation rendered some lofty anthems of almost oratoria counterpoint, and thorough bass. "Sing Allelujah forth," and "Rise, shine, for thy light is come," was pronounced "classically rendered." The junior choir of twenty-seven voices rendered silvery the waves of song. Many services were provided with soloists of fine voice timbre. Sisters McDowell and Thomas, of Pittsburgh, Sister McNeil of Kirtland, gave extra touch to solo and duet, while Sister Bellisle, of Flint, Michigan, captured the plum, rendering the sacred solo, "By the waters of Babylon." Sister Curry, of Pittsburgh, conducted the musical institute work on a fine plane.

We enjoyed brief visits with acquaintances of long ago, and grasped the hand of some whom we led into the waters of regeneration thirty years ago. The march of time and events bring changes, but they are yet in the faith. May we meet on Zion's Hill when the conflict ceases.

A service flag with twenty stars, and provision for more, was dedicated by appropriate ceremonies on Sunday the 18th at 2 p. m. The flag was suspended over the central aisle of pews in the lower auditorium. Brother Griffiths presided, and Brother Dwyer and the writer made remarks. Credit is given the Orioles for the purchase of the flag, who, under their able and energetic monitor, Sister Earl Curry, worked ceaselessly in a patriotic entertainment conducted in the town hall.

An experience in conducting an intelligent gentleman and his family through the temple during the reunion, will, perhaps, be in place. In answer to his question: "Why should this people build this mammoth structure out here in the wilderness?" I replied, "It is a concrete religious idea represented in this monument, and this idea is wrought in the structure of the building which stamps the character of the people erecting it, artistically carved are the ideas for which the people struggled, sacrificed, lived, and died. They were true Americans, ruled by ideas which served as inspiration to all true citizens. You know the American flag is the symbol of the American spirit as well as representative government made manifest in the flesh. When we look upon the flag to-day, we see the embodiment of these great ideas, and they give it meaning and value.

So when we look on this edifice, we see the embodiment of the principles of the government divine, the architects were moved by justice, the righteousness and the divinity of their cause. In the restoration of the kingdom of God, they prove the divine relationship between the builder and the building. This idea is perpetuated, and again, you cannot say, as you look upon this architecture, and learn its Bible significance, that a bad people could ever incorporate these overshadowing and pure principles into an almost imperishable building."

He rejoined: "Now you have said the right things. Works are witnesses. I have told my wife when reading of this house from other religious sources, and find them concluding their write-up with sarcasm, ridicule, or odium, that something was wrong with their religion. If the works of Joseph Smith were so admirable, from a physical viewpoint, why seek to depreciate, or render them diminutive by slimming them over?"

This gentleman was broad-minded, and reasonable. He departed with a supply of "The angel's message." The hour for conducting members of the church through the auditoriums were fixed at 1.30 p. m. to 2.30 p. m., to avoid conflict with the time for nonmembers. At this hour, we would lecture to from seventy-five to a hundred Saints, and a grand spirit of enlightenment accompanied, often bathing the cheeks in tears. One can scarcely refrain from entertaining the idea of divine indorsement. The Kirtland Branch sustained a commendable attitude toward the reunion and received a vote of thanks. The sermons by Elders Greene, Long, Hanson, McGuire, Ebeling, et al, were all of high grade, and thoroughly enjoyed. Brother Griffiths was ever present, mastering the situation with courage and cheer. Cartoonist Collins, in his cozy corner, kept the humorous side of the camp ablaze with merriment, and by many entertaining and educational programs the reunion emphasized the fact that the latter-day work is one of fixed principles, that the banner held aloft by our people carries a message of hope and inspiration to mankind; waving a benediction to the yesterdays, and beckoning the to-morrows with confidence; heralding self-sacrifice, and universal obligation of service. The grand old temple—the place—reinforces the truth: there are no myths associated with its origin—"no cunningly devised fables."

In its majestic beauty it expresses the independence of a thoughtful, courageous people, conscientious in faith, with lofty ideals, and splendid aspirations—the advance of a people dedicated to liberty, law, justice, and fullness of opportunity to establish the divine concept of God.

Chetek Reunion

The Northern Wisconsin reunion which began August 16 at Chetek, Wisconsin, closed its sessions on the evening of August 25. The usual order of meetings was observed with prayer meetings for the young at 8 a. m., for all at 9 a. m., preaching 10.45 a. m. and 8.30 p. m. The afternoons were devoted to Sunday school, Religio, boy movement and recreation, in all of which Brother J. A. Gunsolley of Lamoni manifested much interest and gave very good instructions and advice, giving also several lectures on social purity.

The preaching was good, some very good, and as few outsiders attended the services the main efforts of the ministry was to educate and develop the Saints and help them to see more clearly the high calling to which God has invited them.

The social services were interesting and edifying and the many good testimonies revealed the determination of the Saints to continue, and if possible make a more complete consecration to the service of God. God spoke to the Saints several times in prophecy, expressing his satisfaction with their efforts and admonishing them to come up higher.

Special services were conducted by Brother P. Muceus in the Scandinavian language, by which we are sure good was done.

The Oriole girls were there with all their helpfulness and good cheer, many beautiful flower decorations, both in the dining hall and in the auditorium, being the result of their spirit of service. They were granted two evenings of entertainment, one for the married and one for the unmarried folks, where ice cream, cakes, weiners, and sandwiches were served.

The entertainment for the young folks was not lacking, and its several features were much appreciated. The combined program showed to them that true pleasure may be had in the church and that the Saints should be the happiest of all people.

The remaining indebtedness on the reunion grounds with buildings, amounting to more than six hundred dollars, was almost liquidated by subscription. It was unanimously voted to have reunion at Chetek next year.

We trust that the Saints will look forward to and prepare for this event next year. Every loyal Saint should strive to be there.

Travel Notes

July 12 we visited Great Falls, or falls of the Potomac, sixteen miles from Washington, where the Potomac descends through a series of rocky gorges into the pool below, forming a series of cataracts, differing from, but not unlike in beauty and interest, the falls of Niagara.

Of other places of interest and instruction: the national headquarters of woman's Red Cross association; Pan-American building; Washington Monument, from the lofty top of which we beheld numerous airplanes over us and the city, trying out their wings for future service in the wartorn fields of Europe; our visit to Camp Mead, a veritable city of warriors fitting for the fight for a world democracy, interesting incident and detail of which I must omit.

Of most noteworthy things, however, our visit to Walter Reed Hospital brought most vividly to our consciousness the awful seriousness of America's part in the world war which is now raging and desolating American homes. Fifteen thousand sick and crippled men, some maimed for life, in the bloody trenches of France; one man with both limbs gone, another trying on a wooden leg for the first time, another British officer blinded by hand grenade, every form of mutilation, but through the marvelous skill of modern surgery, and the splendid nursing and care provided by our Government, excellent food, and not only sanitary but cheerful quarters and entertainment, these half-men, bodily speaking, were cheerfully facing the new conditions of life which their answer to their country's call had imposed.

Wednesday, the 7th, we left Washington at 8 a. m. for Providence, Rhode Island, arriving at 7 p. m., and were met by our friends at the station. Visited among old associates and scenes, speaking on following Sunday to the old and new acquaintances in the Bellevue Avenue chapel presided over by Brother Farrell and faithful aids in gospel work.

Tuesday we left Rhode Island for Onset reunion. We had a fine ride through New England, a change of scenery from western prairies. Arriving at camp were agreeably, but surely again, apprised of the fact that we still have friends in the Massachusetts District, when we were ushered into a nice room in the home of Sister Arnold, close to dining hall and tabernacle, which somebody, whom we are not able specifically to point out, had provided for our, and especially Nellie's, comfort, giving her the unexpected and joyful privilege and happy experience of a renewal of old-time associations under spiritual conditions and atmosphere which the children of the covenant of God are able to discern and appreciate.

Excellent weather, good provision and plenty; instructive lectures in morning (too little interest shown, however, as we thought), by our Sister Farrell and others on fundamental questions, followed by social service, visiting, recreation, bathing in afternoon, preaching in evening. Principal speakers were: Brethren Sheehy and Greene; presidents of reunion, and others of the missionary force from Maine and other sections of eastern mission.

It was a pleasure to us to note the zeal and advancement that marked the growth of our young men and women who had remained true to a spiritual leading and had persistently sought spiritual environment and direction in their lives.

August 18 we went to Boston; met with church presided over by Brother Taylor, in Somerville, Brother Pycock speaking at morning services, myself in evening. The ensuing four days we were well cared for and interestingly entertained by Nellie's daughter, Florence, and husband, Henry Taylor, and her cousins, also, who are now employed by the Government and have charge of the work being done by the Knights of Columbus, in caring for soldiers and sailors coming from all parts of the country, getting ready for service and going over, some of them daily, to France. Huts, tents, and service and entertainment for the boys who are being sent over the seas to fight the battles of freedom for our country and the world, occupy large space in the great Boston common, in which the patriotic impulse manifests itself in notable and praiseworthy work of the Red Cross, Salvation Army, Knights of Columbus, and other helpful war agencies.

On the 23rd went to Somerville, where Nellie was confined to bed, as a result of overexertion, and for a week was nursed and cared for in a way we shall never forget, by Sister Sears and her husband, and truly and surely has God raised up friends all the way on our last and most interesting visit to our former home in New England.

Visited Brockton, and was blessed in preaching morning and evening of the 25th, and comfortably entertained at the home of Mr. and Sister John Sears, and with tokens of Saintry regard and affection that will be treasured long in memory's casket.

Saturday, the 31st, we bade good-by to Boston, coming to Plainville to redeem our pledge to visit Brother Charles and Sister Coombs, and the Saints residing there. Sunday met with church in Attleboro in communion service which was marked by the Spirit's presence; spoke in evening by request of Brother Hull who ably and satisfactorily presides over a growing branch.

Our stay in Plainville was of an unusually pleasant, and we think profitable character, and we are glad we did not miss our visit to that place of old and pleasant memories.

Came to Providence, Tuesday, and found welcome at home of Brother Daniel Joy, and where we now are at time of this writing. Enjoyed fine communion service with Saints in their chapel last evening. Yesterday was spent in visiting the homes of Brother John Suttill, his mother, and also a visit to the homes of two ladies whom we met at Onset and are interested in our claims as a church, and who had secured a promise from us at reunion to make them a visit upon our return to Providence.

To-day we expect to visit Narragansett Pier, returning Monday and expecting to leave latter part of the week for Buffalo, the West, and home, calling for brief time perhaps at Cleveland, Kirtland, and Chicago. To answer all the invitations from all quarters would bar our home coming for months, and visits can be only partially satisfactorily on account of the enfeebled condition of our companion.

Our eastern trip, however, in spite of this, has proved in point of importance and interest to us the most satisfactory of any journey and I may say, adventure, of our lives; detail of interesting experience which cannot be chronicled. But God's care and wonderful direction, outstretched hands, and true saintly communion and service, the memories of which will fill our closing years of life with the joy and comfort which the gospel of our Lord only can afford.

Of church work and progress in New England as opportunity has presented itself for observation and ability to correctly analyze, no statement will be undertaken save one thing which we hope will not be taken as unkindly criticism, and that is, the indifference, indisposition, or neglect to support the publications of the church literature, and I speak particularly of absence in very many homes of HERALD, Ernsign, Autumn Leaves, etc. These all furnish to the family, to the children, and often to our neighbors, information vital to our spiritual as well as our temporal interests that can be obtained from no other source, in no single instance that I have observed could the plea of financial inability be reasonably made. Just carelessness—indifference, lack of appreciation of the nature and importance of regarding the mutual interests of the church and ourselves, our children and neighbors.

Time and money for magazines, stories, Sunday papers, etc., seem largely in evidence in many quarters, forming a serious check upon the individual and church advancement toward a successful and acceptable warning of the world by us who, by the mercy and call of God, have been warned ourselves of the perils that confront the world in our day and time.

M. H. BOND.

LONDON, ENGLAND, August 14, 1918.

Editors Herald: In this week's paper there is a question on page one: "Once in a while we see one turn back. Is he ever happy?"

I can truthfully answer that question, "No," and again, "No!" When I see young friends and old turn away, I feel like shouting, "Don't go from God's loving care. You will never be happy."

Now I can look back and see that I really was unhappy and I am glad I could find no joy away from the church of Christ, and I can also see by the power of the Spirit the lessons I have learned. I am glad that knowing the sadness, I can the more enjoy the blessing I now have.

We must learn all the truths we need to know to make us perfect. And if we will not learn them by obedience to the law, we must learn them by suffering.

My testimony to anyone who reads this letter is that one may be happy before they knew of the work, never after he has known God, and fallen by the way.

I am glad of this fact for the longing to be one of God's children never left me, and although I never saw a Latter Day Saint for many, many years, I always remembered and longed for the true church and a place to work that I might show my love for his work.

Pray for me earnestly that I may have wisdom to bring my three children up to be useful to our Lord and Savior.

Yours sincerely,

VIVIAN F. SHORT.

IN ACTIVE SERVICE, August 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: I was just reading a church publication that I brought with me from the States, and of course it called for more. I miss the church papers here. There are no members of the church in my regiment that I know of, so I feel somewhat lonely by myself. I hope the day will hasten when we will get orders to sail across the big blue sea to the westward. I haven't seen anything over here to admire.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all Saints that I may overcome the temptations and trials that seem to be almost unbearable, especially since I have landed here. I thank you for sending the HERALD since I came into the service last fall.

Your brother in bonds,

ANDREW F. FLANDERS.

AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND, August 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: We are living in an enlightened age, a glorious golden age, full of beauty and the divine goodness of our Creator. We have been lifted up out of the dark ages into a marvelous age. For ages the whole world seemed lost, people were groping, as it were, blindly, not even seeking for light and knowledge; but now, take the last thirty years: first, the wheel called the bicycle, then the motor cars and other wonderful inventions of mankind, and now the airplane which is getting so common that we have ceased to wonder as we did when we first saw them flying about in the air like a bird.

But, ah, best and glorious of all, we are living in an age of the restored gospel. The gospel and the true church of God has been restored to us in all its fullness. Oh, how grand it is to be a Saint of God, to know that we belong to his own church; Saints, let us be Saints indeed, keep loose-ness of all kind out of our midst and the church of God will never fall again.

For ten years or more I was looking for the true and only church of God (because God has only the one church, not hundreds of different religions). I got tired of the world's churches, because they could not satisfy my soul, they could not tell me about the hereafter or our life in heaven. No, because they were and are in darkness themselves, they are like the blind leading the blind. I used to go in quiet solitude and speak to my heavenly Father and pour out my soul to him and ask him to lead me to his own church and his own people, and as soon as I heard the latter-day gospel I knew it was the restored gospel sent from above.

I knew that I had received what my soul wanted, but, last of all, as soon as I found God's true church, I felt that he had answered my prayers indeed. People ask: "How do you know this is the true church?" My answer is that we know it at once, we feel it in our very being, that we feel the Spirit's presence more than in any of the so-called Christian churches. Ah! and we know it by the enlightenment we get, by the understanding given to us, and if we are true children of God and pray earnestly, the Spirit will never leave us, but will help us to use our talents for the honor and glory of God, also it will be a shield unto us and the church always.

"Blest Spirit of peace and love,
Of light and truth,
Come and stay with us always."

Let the light divine shine forth so that the world will see that the divine presence is with us and the Devil and his angels will be afraid and fly.

Yours in Christ, ELIZABETH JOHNSTON.

PORT ARTHUR, ONTARIO.

Editors Herald: I thought I would drop you a little news from Port Arthur and express my appreciation of the glorious gospel which I have just obeyed, although I believed and had a desire to obey when Elder S. W. Tomlinson was here last fall. But I thank God that he spared my life to obey because I know it is his glorious work by the Spirit of God. I have suffered for some months with internal trouble which caused me much suffering and I was suffering up to the day of my baptism. I shall never forget that memorable event as myself and six others stood on the bank of the river all ready to go forward and obey the Lord.

Elder Tomlinson asked us to covenant before the people that we would serve God to the best of our ability to the end of life. I said to myself, "Yes, dear Lord, if it were not for this awful pain." And thank God, from that day to this I haven't had a symptom of pain. I was fully restored. My husband and others can bear testimony to this.

I had been a member of the Salvation Army for years and acted as secretary, and thank God for the good I received in that organization. Many of their members think that I have made a mistake by leaving them but I thank God with all my heart that he has led me into the true church where I can receive evidence of my acceptance with him. I trust I shall be faithful to the covenant I made at the water's edge and bring up my children in the good way, and I ask the prayers of the church to that end.

Our elder has left us after two months of hard labor in our city. We are sorry to see him go as he has been a father to the little flock here and has endeared himself not alone to the Saints, but to many of the outsiders. With best wishes to all my sisters and brothers.

Your sister, MARGUERITE MCLEAN.

FARMINGTON, MISSOURI, August 27, 1918.

Editors Herald: I just happened to think that to-morrow is the last day for my year's subscription to the HERALD, and I must renew. The HERALD is a very welcome visitor, as it keeps us in touch with the general church work, and feeds us on spiritual food which is the best of all foods, and is cheap, only $1.50 per year, and oh, what a good variety!

I think the great war will be a great test for every Latter Day Saint; there are so many crucibles to pass through; only last night I dreamed I was at war in our country, and there were shells fired at me and I could see them coming and was soon able to dodge them. Afterward, I found myself giving my enemies a lecture, telling them of the power of God that was upon me, and that was why I was protected from being struck by those shells. The calling to be a Saint is the greatest of all callings, as we can't even be an apostle without being a Saint first.

There are hidden mysteries for us if we will live worthy to receive them; I have tried to live up to the Word of Wisdom this summer closer than before and have realized some of the benefits; I do not recall being sick one minute; always able to eat, do not fear diseases, and some folks think I am ten years younger than I am.

Let us cultivate our talents and gifts of the gospel, then when we live the gospel we will be richer than Rockefeller; the Lord promised the earth to his Saints, but didn't promise it to Mr. Rockefeller or the Kaiser. We are isolated Saints and get hungry for the gospel food except what the HERALD and Autumn Leaves bring to us. I think the Saints should contribute more to The Staff department.

If there is anyone who wants HERALDS, I can supply a goodly number if the party will pay express.

Yours for the right, A. RICHARDSON.

CAMP FORREST, CHICK. PARK, GEORGIA, August 28, 1918.

Editors Herald: I have been in the army one month today, and have seen some very wonderful experiences so far. I have been blessed greatly by the prayers of the Saints, and the Lord has cared for me both day and night. My desires are for greater faith that I may withstand the trials which come each day, and that I may resist all the evil temptations which are lurking near.

There are four church boys in this regiment which makes a strong defense for the gospel. They are: Gerald Gunsolley, Stanley Burton, Walter Rasmussen, and myself. We surely would be glad to hear from the Saints. We attend the Y. M. C. A. services and near-by churches whenever possible, but it doesn't seem like the good services at our own church.

We are located in a very beautiful camp with good surroundings. The climate is agreeable so far, and we enjoy this camp life fine. Your brother in the faith,

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, September 2, 1918.

Editors Herald: It has been quite a while since I sent you even a short letter so, not having seen anything in the pages of your valuable paper from this part of God's vineyard, will send you a few lines and let you and the people know that we are still on the land among the living in so far as our little branch (the Second San Antonio) is concerned. We are still able to hold our regular meetings and we have had a few protracted meetings. We had Brother J. W. Metcalf with us not a very great while ago, and he gave us some rousing sermons, especially on the atonement. He is a fine explainer. I understand, however, that he has returned to his native State, Kentucky.

Our local priesthood have commonly done the preaching.

Sunday, October 6, is College Day. You are expected to "do your bit."

However, our district president has occupied occasionally Brother G. M. Hiles preached for us Sunday evening.

May the good work go on.

Yours truly,

W. H. DAVENPORT.

BERTHA, WYOMING, September 2, 1918.

Editors Herald: Just a line to tell you I am preaching every Sabbath—sometimes twice in the day. Am enjoying good liberty—the best in my life. Rode 22 miles on horseback Saturday afternoon, August 30, to fill an appointment at Barlow Canyon on Sunday. Baptized four, also blessed two children. Expect to baptize others in two weeks when I return.

The Saints here are rejoicing to see their numbers swell. The people are getting interested. The heaven is working. Dear Saints, remember me. I need your prayers. I am ordering the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants for those I baptized.

May the Spirit of the Master abide with us and assist us in our work.

Hopefully,

C. W. DILLON.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, September 3, 1918.

Editors Herald: No doubt many of your readers will be grieved to learn of the death of Brother J. A. Anthony of San Francisco, which occurred with tragic suddenness last Sunday morning, September 1. On this beautiful morning, following one of the finest and most spiritual reunions ever held in the Northern California District, Brother Anthony and the writer left his home early to be in time for Sunday school and also to enjoy the monthly sacrament service. After arriving at the church apparently as well as usual, though he complained as we climbed the hill together of shortness of breath, he sat in conversation with one or two of the brethren, and in the midst of the conversation he was stricken and lapsed into unconsciousness, after a short time of stentorian breathing, he gave a little gasp and all was over.

All had occurred with such dreadful swiftness that while one brother was out to secure a doctor, Brethren Waller, Thorman, and myself carried the lifeless body into the home of Brother and Sister Saxe at the rear of the church. When the doctor arrived he could only say that life was extinct and that he likely died instantly. Certain it is that our brother suffered no pain but passed on without any spasm or even groan, into the other land, which seems always to be so very close to us.

Loving and sympathetic friends broke the sad news to our aged sister who for over twenty-five years had been his near and dear companion in wedlock; and with remarkable poise Sister Anthony quietly commended herself to God who, she said, had always helped her in the past and would be her support now.

Many will remember the kindly welcome and unfailing hospitality of the Anthony home at 281 Castro Street, and will mourn the sad loss of our brother very keenly. It was one of the pleasures of our brother and sister to recount the many experiences which they had enjoyed in the church throughout the years, and to one belonging to a new generation it was refreshing to listen to the many testimonies of God's grace and power which accompanied the servants of God as they labored throughout this region. Our deceased brother was well known for his zeal and rugged courage in the defense of the work, and many within and without the church honored and respected him for his stalwart work

Read this extract from a letter to President Frederick M. Smith, in which Charles A. Ellwood, a scholar and author of national reputation, dwells on the subject of the Higher Powers of Man as presented in President Smith's book:

I had the pleasure of reading your book on The Higher Powers of Man. I had hoped to see you in Kansas City, and to express my pleasure in person to you; but I failed to meet you and so drop you this line. . . . I like the book. It seems to me to open up a delicate and difficult topic in a way which the lay reader can understand. It is, moreover, timely, because for the sake of human and national efficiency in our present crisis people in general need to know how to "tap the higher levels of human energy."

as a protagonist who seemed to know no fear. He was very kind and tender and many have enjoyed the unadvertised benevolence of Brother Anthony and will mourn him as a "friend" in the full sense of that term.

We especially appreciated our brother's interest in the work and enjoyed hearing him relate his experiences in defending the Book of Mormon, and he had accumulated during years of investigation a large amount of evidences by which he supported the claims of this book and only in the recent reunion preached his sermon on this topic to an interested congregation.

A brave and faithful servant has been called to rest, and his call came so beautifully, without anguish, pain, or distress. Of him it can be said: "He fought a good fight, henceforth a crown is laid up for him." May God sustain our aged sister who, while surrounded by many loving relatives and friends, will feel lonely and sad in her closing years.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, September 4, 1918.

Editors Herald: A word to the isolated Saints of the Seattle and British Columbia Districts: At our recent convention held in Bellingham, I was placed in charge of the home department work for the Sunday school, and would deem it a favor if the Saints who cannot enjoy the privilege of the Sunday school would kindly send me their names and addresses.

The home department work is a great factor in keeping the isolated in touch with the advancing church work, and a great means of supplying the spiritual food we all need in these trying times. So Saints, let us all be found fortifying ourselves with the study of God's blessed word and be found on the watchtower. Any word from the isolated ones shall be gladly received.

Your sister in the conflict,

MRS. EMILY McMULLEN.

Our Departed Ones

PETERS.—George Alma Peters, four-year-old son of John and Iva Peters, died at the home of his parents in Taylorville, Illinois, July 18, 1918. Funeral at Saints' church; sermon by R. L. Fulk.

BIXBY.—Arminda Jane Bugher Bixby was born August 18, 1842, at Washington, Pennsylvania. Came to Iowa in 1859. In 1878 married David S. Bixby. Baptized June 22, 1884, by J. S. Roth. Died at Boone, Iowa, September 3, 1918. Services in charge of Thomas Lewis; sermon by Clement Malcor.

BROOKS.—Edward Omer Brooks was born near Taylorville, Illinois, March 24, 1890. Died August 28, 1918. Leaves 4 sisters, 2 brothers, and 2 children to mourn, his wife having preceded him. Baptized by I. N. White when about 10 years of age. Sermon by Luther Simpson at Saints' church at Taylorville, Illinois.

IZATT.—Frank Izatt was born at Sterling, Scotland, May 11, 1848, died August 17, 1918, in Springfield, Illinois, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Martin Bolt, where he had been taking treatment for cancer. Located in Taylorville, Illinois, about fifteen years ago. Baptized June 11, 1865. Ordained elder January 3, 1886, at Saint Louis, Missouri. Leaves widow, 5 daughters, and 6 sons, all of whom were present at funeral save one son who is in service overseas, one brother and one sister. Funeral at Saints' church in Taylorville; sermon by R. Archibald, of Saint Louis.

ORTON.—At Independence Sanitarium, after a severe illness of many months, Samuel Orton passed to his reward, aged 74 years, 1 month, 21 days. Of Latter Day Saint parentage, he experienced the trying scenes of the dark and cloudy day, including several years in Utah. Uniting in 1871 with the Reorganization, Brother Orton served diligently as a local elder, and counselor to William Leeka in the bishopric of the Fremont (Iowa) District. His last years were spent in Lamoni, Iowa, where his widow now resides, and where they for a time served the church as caretakers of Liberty Home. Services were at his late residence, in charge of Lorenzo Hayer, sermon by J. F. Garver, interment in Rose Hill Cemetery. A good and devout man, Brother Orton has his rest with the faithful.

FROM HERE AND THERE

The Saints at Des Moines had an eating tent and a refreshment stand at the State Fair recently and cleared a nice sum from them. They served good, clean meals at a dining tent twice as large as last year and had capacity crowds constantly, sometimes more than they could care for, at the price of 45 cents a meal. The refreshment stand was run by a class of young men and women and they netted about $250 for the Christmas offering. The total amount cleared was $1,000.50, the $750 being applied on the church debt at Des Moines.

Modern Use of Narcotics is the name of a booklet on temperance recently gotten out by J. W. Gunsolley, superintendent of the temperance department of the Religio. It is numbered as leaflet number 11 and sells for 5 cents a copy, or 40 cents a dozen. It is a 20-page summary of the opinions of eminent men on the subject, with conclusions of the author, and a brief bibliography of books and journals on the subject of narcotics.

REUNION EDITION OF KIRTLAND BELLS

This district monthly is out in a fine-looking four-page edition for September, with seven illustrations and the pages larger than those of the HERALD. It is artistically gotten out by the Arts and Crafts Press at Cleveland and contains a goodly number of "Chimes from the Kirtland reunion," and some items of interest to nonmembers as well. Just why the notes in the chimes should each be quoted separately we know not—possibly they were contributed by individuals not on the staff.

A personal letter from Davenport, Iowa, tells us the Saints there have just begun to hold services in their new church building. They have had four baptisms recently and many strangers have heard the angel message. Several families have moved in, thus enlarging the number. The Christmas offering has already exceeded last year's quota and the prospects are good for a victorious charge "over the top." The Religio is forging onward and the attendance increased three and four fold.

OUR BOYS AT CAMP DODGE

Those having sons, brother, relatives, sweethearts, or friends at Camp Dodge should send them the following church address: Church at 717 East Twelfth Street, Des Moines. Take Walker or East Fourteenth Street car, off at East Twelfth Street, walk two and a half blocks north.

A warm welcome awaits the soldier boys both at the church and in the homes of the Saints. Send their full address to the undersigned and they will be looked up.

In behalf of our boys, A. E. WARR.
DES MOINES, IOWA, 719 East Twelfth Street.

CHRISTMAS OFFERING THERMOMETER

The First Chicago Sunday school is using the following described thermometer with splendid results in their Christmas offering effort. By its use all are kept informed as to the amount of the Christmas offering already raised and also at what point the school should be.

This drawing is one third the regular size. The frame was purchased at 5 and 10 cent store. To represent the fluid, sew a white and red ribbon together with a button attached, back of the card. The bulb can be cut from red paper to match ribbon, paste same on bottom edge only, have slot underneath through which the ribbon is to pass to the back of the card to the upper slot.

Secure a good, heavy, white card and have some one print the dates and amounts.

BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE.

In this age of conservation there is rather an interesting article in General Interest Department on "Edible fruits of forest trees." Probably most of it is not new to our people. Possibly some of it is, as it gives a new idea. It is really surprising how much there is around us having food value which is ordinarily neglected. Vegetarians have for a long time substituted nut dishes in place of meat. This seems to be an effort to substitute certain nuts in place of wheat in making bread, using the starchy quality of nuts.

Elder D. T. Williams and family moved to Lamoni on the 10th and he will immediately take up active work as the newly chosen counselor to Elder J. F. Garver, president of the Lamoni Stake. His attendance at the stake reunion gave him an introduction to the community, and his special work in connection with the young folks of the community will be much enhanced by that experience.

We note an item in the daily press that Brother T. A. Hougas, of Macedonia, Iowa, has been elected state organizer for the Farmers' Union, which expects to move the State exchange from Columbus Junction to Des Moines. The elimination of the middleman by buying and selling to each other is the aim of the union.

THE BANNERS OF THE FREE

(Address by Elder Elbert A. Smith, at the Walnut Park Branch, Independence, Missouri, September 15, 1918, at the dedication of a service flag. Mrs. A. Morgan, reporter.)

And now it came to pass that when Moroni, who was the chief commander of the armies of the Nephites, had heard of these dissensions, he was angry with Amalickiah. And it came to pass that he rent his coat; and he took a piece thereof, and wrote upon it, In memory of our God, our religion, and freedom, and our peace, our wives, and our children; and he fastened it upon the end of a pole thereof. And he fastened on his headplate, and his breastplate, and his shields, and girded on his armor about his loins; and he took the pole, which had on the end thereof his rent coat (and he called it the title of liberty), and he bowed himself to the earth, and he prayed mightily unto his God for the blessings of liberty to rest upon his brethren so long as there should a band of Christians remain to possess the land; for thus were all the true believers of Christ, who belonged to the church of God, called, by those who did not belong to the church; and those who did belong to the church, were faithful; yea, all those who were true believers in Christ, took upon them, gladly, the name of Christ, or Christians, as they were called, because of their belief in Christ, who should come; and therefore, at this time, Moroni prayed that the cause of the Christians, and the freedom of the land might be favored. And it came to pass that when he had poured out his soul to God, he gave all the land which was south of the land Desolation; yea, and in fine, all the land, both on the north and south, [to be] a chosen land, and the land of liberty.—Alma 21: 40-46.

MEETING THE ASSASSIN

By way of comment on the scriptural reading, before I begin the address, I may say that it appears from this reading, and the context, that there may be a time when it is proper to go to war. These were Christian people, and God blessed them. Ah, but some one says, If our land were actually invaded, then we would feel free to go to war.

If some armed assassin were going through the neighborhood, visiting homes in the night and killing women and children, would you wait until he actually crossed your threshold, or would you go out with your neighbors into the street and put him to death, if necessary? Germany revealed her purposes and methods in Belgium, and America has gone out with her neighbors to meet this assassin on the battlefields of the world.

Occasionally we meet individuals who say that they do not see why America is in this war, and that they do not understand what the war is about. It seems to me that the best answer to this question is found in a scrutiny of the alignment of nations in this conflict, and that is what we propose to undertake this afternoon for a brief time.

THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE

At the beginning of the war, as you remember, there was the Triple Alliance, consisting of Germany, Austria, and Italy. Italy refused to join in the struggle, at that time, and drew out of the Triple Alliance on the grounds that it was a defensive alliance. Whenever any one of the three was attacked, the other two were to come to her rescue. And Italy perceived thus early that Germany had not been attacked—something some people do not yet see. She saw then that Germany was the aggressor, and refused to have anything to do with the enterprise.

Her place was taken, in a sense, by Turkey—and that was a very appropriate bird to fly to the German's colors. "The unspeakable Turk" was a term applied to Turks for a generation past. The character of the Turk is the only thing about him that is worse than his reputation, and both have been well known to the world for many years past. The fact that Germany could find such a friend at such a time speaks volumes for the character of the enterprise. Bulgaria came in later.

THE ENTENTE ALLIANCE

Opposed to this Triple Alliance was the Entente Alliance, consisting of Great Britain, France, and Russia. A little later in the war they were joined by Italy, still later by others. Russia, as you know, because of internal disruptions and her severe losses in the war, became disorganized and dropped out, and then, at the very time when England and France were defeated, only that they would not admit it, America entered the war and joined the alliance. The fact that England and France at such a time could find such a friend, speaks volumes for the character of their enterprise.

FRANCE—LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY

Now, consider the character of these various nations. France first. France was reborn in the great French Revolution and, after the Reign of Terror, coming out of her delirium to sanity, she bore upon her lips three great watchwords: "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity."

These were very much like the sentiments expressed in our Declaration of Independence, wherein we hold that all men are born equal, with an inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. They are very much like our church ideals, only that we might change the wording a little and make it read, "Liberty, Equality, and Brotherhood." Christ wants men to be free, to be equal, and to be brothers.

ENGLAND—LIBERTY AND JUSTICE

When we turn to Great Britain, she, we must say, was free even before France. The English people wrestled with the pope and with the king, and won their freedom both religiously and politically. Their two great watchwords, especially after they had forced King John to sign the Great Charter, were liberty and justice. Their political institutions are free, and their jurisprudence is based upon the dispensing of justice to all men without regard to estate or station. It is significant that the House of Commons, representing the people, to-day is much more important in Great Britain than is the House of Lords. The House of Lords has receded into the background. And it is significant that David Lloyd-George is more important than King George.

AMERICA—ALL MEN FREE AND EQUAL

We inherit from the British people. America was born in revolution. As Lincoln said in his great Gettysburg speech, America was conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are equal. And on that great occasion, when he delivered the Gettysburg address, dedicating a battlefield to be a cemetery for the burial of loyal Union soldiers, he also dedicated the Nation of the living to the proposition that "government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

In that dedication, we find one answer to the question, Why is America at war? These three great nations are united under flags that are composed of a commingling of the red, white, and blue. England and France and the United States all fight under the red, white, and blue—those colors being differently disposed and combined in their various banners. It seems to me that there is a significance in this, perhaps more than a coincidence—that there should be this unity of colors differently arranged on our banners, as also this unity of ideals, differently expressed in the history of the various nations of which I have spoken.

THE THREE RIGHTS OF GERMANS

But, on the other hand, we find in the Triple Alliance (or the central powers) no such ideals appearing in their history. There is nothing in the history of Austria or Turkey to appeal especially to our imaginations. Germany now stands for all of them, as the others have become only puppets in her hands.

There never has been a successful revolution in Germany. They cannot understand our language. I don't mean by that they merely cannot understand our speech. They cannot understand our ideals. I could not understand a Frenchman, so far as his speech is concerned, but I can understand his ideals. We cannot understand the German ideals. They cannot understand ours. Democracy means nothing to them. They are satisfied, apparently, that the kaiser shall command, and the people obey. They have no real representative government. The people do not enter anywhere, as a people, in the management of the affairs of the nation. As one great German socialist said not long ago, "We Germans have three inalienable rights: to be soldiers, to pay taxes, and to keep our tongues between our teeth." Evidently he told the truth.

ON THE CELESTIAL FENCE

The ideals of Germany, the national ideals, are brutal force and universal dominion. These ideals do not appeal to us, and as for these men who say, We do not know why there should be war, I think possibly that long ago, when there was war in heaven and Lucifer fought with the hosts of heaven, the preexistent spirits of these men sat astride the celestial fence and wondered what it was all about.

Now, the facts are that there were two conflicting ideals in heaven; and heaven wasn't big enough for both of them. And to-day there are two conflicting ideals on earth; and earth isn't big enough to hold both of them in their present power and manifestation. That's why there is war. And America is in that war because Lincoln at Gettysburg, like Moroni of old, dedicated this Nation to the proposition that government of the people, by the people, and for the people should never perish from the earth.

We meet to-day to honor those who have gone, at their country's command, to help fulfill the pledge that Lincoln made. We trust that the blessings of heaven may attend America to-day as they did the ancient inhabitants when they lifted up the title of liberty and dedicated the whole land, north and south, to be a land of freedom.

FOURTH LIBERTY LOAN DRIVE

This is the last issue of the HERALD before the Fourth Liberty Loan drive will start on September 28. The Government is trying to raise more money than in any previous loan, and requires a larger subscription from each one of us. It is a time for close figuring to see how we can help and how much. The sooner this help is given and it is fully demonstrated that the United States will continue to the limit of a just and righteous peace, the sooner will such a peace be possible. It is the duty of all citizens to assist to this end.

FOREIGNERS IN AMERICA

The Social Service Bulletin for July-August, 1918, refers to an article in The Survey Magazine of July 6. It appears that there are three million adults in this country who cannot understand or speak English. Five million, five hundred thousand cannot read or write English; nine million read almost exclusively foreign language newspapers, while many of them cannot attend the public evening schools, even where such schools exist. In New York alone, half a million men and women cannot read, speak, or write English. Many important communities in the industrial States, where the population is at least half immigrant, do not maintain classes where English can be learned.

The Survey Magazine points out that naturalization has been made too cold-blooded; there is nothing to show any direct interest, as was the case with the American Indian who took citizenship upon himself a year ago, when Secretary Lane delivered an address and presented to each an American flag. It signified to them the change in their condition.

But nothing of the kind is attempted in the ordinary case of naturalization. It is very formal and many are discouraged because they cannot pass and no one appears to be interested in helping them.

This is a matter that interests us because good will depends so largely upon understanding. There is an unconscious suspicion of those speaking another tongue. Many immigrants are woefully misled as to actual conditions and their own opportunity. We are glad that something is being done, but much more remains to be done.

The Social Service Bulletin will gladly give information. Address 72 Mount Vernon Street, Boston, Massachusetts. And this issue gives the list of a number of pamphlets and of books dealing with the problem.

FINANCE

The revenue of the Government, from all sources, has been estimated as four billion dollars for the year ending June 30, last. The amount loaned to the allies has been rather in excess of that amount and is approximated as being between four and a half and five billion. The war expenditures on behalf of the Government were rather less than were at first estimated, but still would be close to seven and a half billion. Much of this is represented by capital expenditures, for shipyards and permanent establishments for airplanes, and other necessary manufactures of this kind.

The amount from Liberty Loan bonds is nearly ten billion, and War Savings Stamps is close to one million more. This allows but a small percentage of excess over expenditures, perhaps something about two billion, but at the rate of fifty million a day, this would only last fifty days. A booklet from the Guaranty Trust Company, of New York, says that Professor Friday has estimated the war savings for 1917 at approximately eleven billion dollars; the income of the country is figured at forty billion. It is now estimated that nineteen billion will have to be paid in taxes or Government bonds for the coming year; that is, nearly fifty per cent.

Of course there remain two methods of raising or securing this saving. One is negative, that is, doing without and saving materials. The second is to speed up production and accomplish more. The second, however, presents increasing difficulty because of the draft of five million men or more, in the rank and file of the army at the present, who will not, during the coming year, be producing wealth. That means a speeding up of effort on behalf of the rest of us, as well as self-denial or saving.

However serious the condition may be, there is nothing to fear if we are willing to let God act in the matter—there is nothing to fear but wrong.—Leon A. Gould.

THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH INCORPORATED

The past few months reports have been circulated criticising the articles of the United Order of Enoch and claiming that the same were in conflict with the laws of the State of Missouri where issued. These articles before publication were, in accordance with the law of Missouri, duly passed upon, and approved by the Courts of Missouri, and later by the attorney general of the State.

A verbatim copy of the work and the action of the officers authorized by the State to pass upon such confirmations, plainly shows the falsity of the position, also the futile work of certain opponents of the work and the church at the time of the incorporation.

The absolute falsity and baseness of the claims that the articles of said incorporation are not in harmony with the laws of the church as also the laws of the State where incorporated, will be fully seen upon a careful reading.

The editorial of President Joseph Smith, published at the time, together with articles of incorporation, with legal papers attached, are herein re-submitted for the benefit of our readers who may wish to personally examine them for themselves. It appears in the HERALD of May 25, 1910:

THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH INCORPORATED

Some time in the summer of 1909, as soon after the closing of the session of conference on April 21 as was found practicable, the Bishopric set about forming and securing an incorporation. A number of the brethren favorable to the movement were called together at the office of the general bishop, and the articles were drafted and agreed upon, and were presented to the circuit court of Jackson, County, sitting at Independence, Missouri. These articles were filed in the court before the judge then presiding, and were met by a protest upon the part of persons who had sought and obtained articles of incorporation, called the United Order of Equality.

The court under the provision of statute appointed an attorney, known as amicus curiæ (friend of the court), to whom was delegated the duty to examine such articles and report to the court after such examination as to whether the articles were within the limitations of the statutes of the State providing for incorporations and proscribing the rules governing them, and to make such recommendation as his duty and understanding made requisite, either recommending the issuing of a pro forma decree or recommending the denial of such a decree. The attorney appointed by the court reported unfavorably to the articles which were filed and the pro forma decree was denied.

Subsequently the persons desiring to incorporate held a meeting and took the objections raised against the articles which had been filed into consideration, formulated new articles thought to be in harmony with the statutes, and filed the same in a division of the circuit court at Kansas City, petitioning for the pro forma decree as before. The court appointed another attorney as "friend of the court" who made an unfavorable report to the court.

The same parties who had protested at Independence, Missouri, again entered protest. Upon consideration of the report and the protest the court listened to arguments both for and against the issuing of the order, and after hearing the arguments and taking the matter in consideration, he overruled the report and directed the issuing of the pro forma decree granting the incorporation.

The articles were sent to the secretary of state of the State of Missouri for attaching the certificate, but the persons objecting to the issuing of the order interposed by an appeal, setting forth their reasons for the denial of a charter. The matter was sent to the attorney general, who, it is presumed, took the matter of the articles into consideration, as well as the objections made against the granting of the charter for the incorporation, the result being that on Friday, May 13, 1910, the articles were returned to the Bishop with a certificate of the secretary of state attached thereto, and as far as the statutes provide the incorporation of the United Order of Enoch was complete.

We take pleasure in giving to the readers of the HERALD the articles of incorporation upon which the pro forma decree had been issued, together with the necessary papers attached by the requirements of the statutes. Doubtless the persons who have objected to the issuing of the order before the courts will be disappointed that the articles have been approved and the order issued, and that the association has become an active working body having the sanction of the laws of the State of Missouri. It is fortunate for us that this protest was made, for it brought the object of the incorporators of the association into direct notice of the secretary of the State and the attorney general, the last-named being the officer whose duty it is to look after such corporations as are formed and do business in the State of Missouri, and who must, by virtue of his office, be thoroughly informed in regard to the rights and privileges of incorporators.

I do not feel to attach any blame or find any fault with those who were objecting to the incorporation of the Order of Enoch, as they availed themselves of their privileges under the laws of the State, and were entitled to be heard. We are pleased, however, that the wishes and views of the incorporators' rights and privileges under the statute were not found to be so far astray from what could be granted under the statute as to prevent the carrying into effect the provisions of the action of the conference of 1909. It now remains for those upon whom devolves the carrying of the provision of these articles into operation according to the intents and purposes thereof, to do so in such a manner as to approve themselves in the consideration of the Master and all good men.

While we deplore the delay that may have occurred, in a sense we are pleased to know that the incorporators have taken the matter patiently, have made no statements of impatience or faultfinding, but quietly waited the action of the courts, as they were in duty bound to do, believing that the right would triumph at the last, and trusting to the direction of the Good Spirit in the affairs intrusted to them.

As soon as practicable, there will be a meeting of the incorporators, and steps will be taken to authorize the Board of Trustees and their executive committee to begin active work of incorporation.

We commend the reading of these articles to the patrons of the HERALD, and especially those who feel disposed to become benefactors under their provisions.

The articles are given below, together with the papers necessary to complete the incorporation.

JOSEPH SMITH.

Article 6. Special statement of work and powers.

The purposes of the association are:

First, to provide the advantages of permanent employment and thereby permanent homes for those found worthy, but who are unable to arrange for steady employment and who are without sufficient means to procure homes for themselves.

To accomplish this work, it will be necessary to acquire by gift, purchase, devise, or other legal and just methods, real and personal property; also acquire lands suitable for carrying out the benevolent purpose and object set forth in these articles of association, and for suitable homes or inheritances, and, when desirable to improve and convey the same; but the properties, accumulations or gain from all or any of such transactions shall be held and used in maintaining and carrying out the benevolent work herein provided for, and in no case to be given or used for the pecuniary profit or benefit of any person or persons, corporation or corporations, but solely for the aiding and maintaining of the proper stewardships of the needy, and of its members in the benevolent, beneficial, and helping purposes herein set forth.

Article 7. Membership.

Membership in the order requires as a prerequisite a full compliance with the law of Christ, both as relates to duties known as spiritual, and those referred to under said law as temporal; that is, the precepts and ordinances of the gospel having been fulfilled through acceptance and obedience to the same as set out in the Holy Scriptures, also, the following specific duties set forth in the law of equality, to-wit:

A. To render a just and true account of the condition and business of his or her stewardship annually, setting forth the amount, or value, with the loss or gain of the same for the period named, together with a faithful estimate of necessities, and the amount required for repairs of stewardship, or the enlarging or extension of the same when proper, for the succeeding year.

B. Stated or annual settlement as provided under the law, by turning into the treasury or storehouse any surplus or talents remaining after a due fulfillment of the law as before set forth.

C. In case of a lack or shortage, after a faithful and attested performance of duty in his or her stewardship for a time, or a year, such steward to receive from said treasury or storehouse, such a proper and just supply as the law directs according to "his needs and wants, inasmuch as such wants are just."

D. That in all labor and association, each and every one shall seek the interest or good of his neighbor, "doing all things to the glory of God."

E. In case of withdrawal, or transgression and expulsion, such person or persons shall retain that which has been set apart or deeded to him or her or them, for a home or inheritance, but shall have no further claim upon the common treasury and shall not be entitled to any withdrawal, benefits, or interest in the common fund or storehouse, whatever.

Article 8. Management.

The trustees may also appoint an executive committee to act in business matters when the board is not in session.

B. The members of the Board of Trustees shall be elected at the annual meeting of the members of the association to be held the first Monday in April of each year or at an adjourned meeting of the order held subsequent to the said first Monday in April, and shall hold their offices until their successors are chosen and qualified. Vacancies occurring in the board may be filled at any time by the unanimous action of a majority of the members of the board, properly constituted, being present and voting.

C. The Board of Trustees may adopt by-laws, not inconsistent with these articles and the statutes of the State, as may be deemed necessary for the management of the affairs of the corporation and the carrying out of the work of the order.

D. The president, secretary, and treasurer herein, shall perform the duties usual to such offices in similar associations in addition to the specific duties named herein, providing such duties are not inconsistent with the rules of the association.

This corporation shall have a seal, and all conveyances of real estate shall be approved by the Board of Trustees of the order or association, and be signed and sealed by the president of the same. And such association may sue or be sued in its corporate name, and all claims made against it shall be made in the corporate name, and the individual or private property of the members shall in no case be held liable for the debts of the association.

Article 10. Dissolution and distribution thereunder.

It is hereby expressly provided and made a part of the conditions of this order, that in case of the dissolution, or abandonment of the work of the same, the properties of the order, after satisfying all just debts of the same, shall be turned over to the Presiding Bishop and Trustees of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to be distributed to the poor and needy according to the rules and regulations of said society for aiding the poor and needy.

Article 11. Trustees.

The names of the persons chosen by these incorporators to act as trustees until their successors shall have been legally chosen are as follows: F. M. Smith, Ellis Short, Joseph Mather, Roderick May, G. E. Harrington, Elbert A. Smith, W. E. LaRue, I. N. White, A. H. Parsons, E. L. Kelley, Geo. H. Hilliard, and Edwin A. board of trustees: E. L. Kelley, president; F. M. Smith, secretary; Ellis Short, treasurer; executive committee, E. L. Kelley, F. M. Smith, Ellis Short, Joseph Mather, Roderick May.

NOT EVOLUTION BUT SUCCESSIVE CREA- TION

Scientific men, those who wish to learn something more concerning the origin of life and activity, their source and power, still speculate about the great unknown. And no doubt they will continue to do so until God, the Creator, shall take away the veil that yet hides the fullness of knowledge from the intellectual creature, man. When that is removed he, the intelligent being that was made "a little lower than the angels," will enter upon a new path to the real and actual "higher education," that course which now is impossible of attainment. We read that "the glory of God is intelligence," and our certain hope is that the partial and imperfect knowledge that is possible in this present imperfect life will be succeeded by an endless age of opportunity to all who are willing to learn.

According to The Outlook of New York and The Pathfinder of Washington, Professor Henry F. Osborn has recently issued a book named, The Origin and Evolution of Life. By these papers it appears that Mr. Osborn is very moderate in his claims and not strong in assertion. One says that he does not "even pretend to offer a clearly developed energy-conception of the origin of life, or of all the marvelous facts of evolution, adaptation, and heredity."

In The Pathfinder's review of Mr. Osborn's labors and their results, it states as follows:

Professor Osborn believes it possible that the cause of evolution may yet be found, although it is a problem that so far has baffled all scientific inquirers. . . . It seems to be established that life evolves in an orderly way, and this encourages the belief that the energy which keeps the universe in order is in some way, as yet not understood, also the cause of the orderly procedure of life. . . . With reference to the mode of the actual origin of life, science as yet can do no more than speculate, as is distinctly stated by Professor Osborn.

These are good admissions and true statements, I believe. What is it that "keeps the universe in order," and what is "the cause of the orderly procedure of life"? Why not accept the unbounded evidence and admit that God, the one declared in the Holy Scriptures as the Creator of all things, the one who knows "the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done," why not accept his claim that he was the originator of life, and that he is also "the cause of the orderly procedure of life"? In the future, when men learn the whole truth they will indeed know that all his work has been "an orderly procedure," and not a mixture of uncertainties. From many wise students and capable interpreters it should already be evident that the evolution that has been and all that is now in process came by the design and the creative authority and wisdom of the Great First Cause. And the promise is that knowledge and understanding shall be given by and by to the people of the earth, whenever they are willing and prepared to receive it. To seek for knowledge is great, but to wait God's time for the fullness of it is better than a feverish haste in the darkness or a continuing to flounder in the quagmires and quicksands of extreme speculation and perpetual uncertainty and disappointment.

For instance, Professor Osborn writes as follows:

The tracing of an unbroken line of descent from the protozoan to Plato does not in any way really explain Plato's consciousness, of which there is not a vestige in the protozoan. . . . There is something new that did not exist in the protozoan. It has been produced in the course of evolution. But it is a play on words to say that such evolution is not creation.

Indeed there is a vast difference between the insensate protoplasm and the giant mind of the world-renowned philosopher, Plato. And this great difference and immeasurable distance between them has never been reconciled by any past theories or explanations of Darwinian evolution. To Plato the words of Shakespeare fully apply where he says, "There reason sits enthroned, sole monarch of the universal earth." But as to the protoplasm the words of Professor Osborn fully apply when he says that "there is not a vestige" of any such intelligence in the protozoan.

In The Outlook Theodore Roosevelt reviews Professor Osborn's book, and he says that "there are plenty of phenomena unquestionably proceeding from natural law, which nevertheless have in them an element totally incomprehensible" to man, and that are "incapable of comprehension by our intelligence." That is, we are not able to reach it, even as it is now impossible for a small child to comprehend the working of a steam engine though his father may understand it perfectly and all its workings. The most learned man is still a child in knowledge, and all of us will have to "grow up" in ability to be able to learn in God's great school that is yet to come.

We see that Professor Osborn admits that some great and remarkable change took place between the production of the protoplasm and the birth of Plato, with his high and noble characteristics and powers. And he affirms that this great change was really an act of creation, although he says that it was "produced in the course of evolution."

To the believer in the Bible it appears a great mystery that sentient and otherwise sensible people have such a purpose and determination to persist in claiming that all the changes in types and forms came by evolution, acting through millions of years, and that such evolution came from and through the very lowest forms of life, in order at last to produce a man, something worthy to be called a man. It is remarkable, if they actually believe it, that they can continue to hold that the various grades of beings that have existed from the time of the protozoan were really the ancestors and progenitors of man, that he had perforce, to come into existence as the offspring of a protoplasm, of a trilobite, of a mollusk, or from some other obscure and nonintelligent order, and thus on up through the ape or monkey form to the supposed "connecting link" (which, however, has never come to light) to prove the supposed relationship between man and the inferior creations. Yet to us there seems to be abundant reason to understand and to believe that Adam was the beginning and the head of a higher and far superior race of beings, which was brought into existence to rule over the earth and its creatures for the happiness of all, after the previous ages of inferiority had passed away.

All scientists agree that there were distinct and widely separated periods of creation, which periods and intervals extended through thousands of years each, perhaps millions of years, during which most wonderful changes took place, and varied new forms of life were brought into being from age to age. Also it has been established beyond doubt that during at least some or all of these intervals there were long periods of intense heat and of overwhelming fire which melted the very rocks and mountains. Then again, such intense cold and arctic ice that no form of life could possibly remain existent. In either case everything that had lived perished, as learned geological students have declared is fully proven. Yet many fossil forms have been found in the coal beds and rock strata of the earth, and also giant bones and partially preserved remains are said to have been discovered in great ice beds of the arctic zone, where they have lain for ages. Professor Edward Hitchcock states that there have been found in the rocks thirty-five thousand species of animals and plants, thirty-five thousand kinds or sorts of organic life that differ from each other. The number of specimens seen have been unnumbered millions.

About the successive periods of creation and the intervals between them, when death destroyed all life by overwhelming billows of fire, or by universal flood, or by unparalleled cold, Professor Winchell has written as follows:

If we are to judge from that which is known, rather than from that which is conjectured, we are compelled to conclude that the varied forms of animal life did not come into being by a gradual evolution from the Eozoon (beginning), but as so many original creations of the skilled Artisan of Creation.—Sketches of Creation, p. 70.

Successive extinctions, wrought by the lapse of time, or by violent geographical revolutions, (were) followed by successive creations of higher and higher forms.—Sketches of Creation, p. 133.

G. J. Douglas, Duke of Argyle, wrote about the distinctive differences between the creations in one age and those of another. For instance he mentions the Silurian and the Devonian ages, and says:

There is no trace of links or of transitional forms between the great class of mollusks (in the one) and the great class of fishes (in the other). There is no reason to suppose that such forms, if they had existed, could have been destroyed.—Primeval Man, p. 45.

That is, while there are found abundant specimens of beings created and living in each period or age, yet there are not found any forms that connect the two creations. And the same of the other periods.

Professor Edward Hitchcock wrote as follows:

Still further confirmation of the same important principle is found in the well-established fact that there have been upon the globe, previous to the now existing races, not less than five distinct periods of organized existence, that is, five great groups of animals and plants so completely independent that no species whatever is found in more than one of them, have lived and successively passed away before the creation of the races that now occupy the surface.—Religion and Geology, p. 22.

These testimonies, given after years of patient, faithful study and delving among the rocks and records of the earth, ought to have weight, especially when taken along with the discoveries by such great minds as those of Louis Agassiz, Hugh Miller, Alexander Winchell, Charles Lyell, Arnold Guyot, J. P. Thompson, J. D. Dana, and Doctor Buckland. And after their honest testimonies about the system and the periods of creation, it seems far more reasonable to believe and to teach that the creation of Adam and his race was a new beginning, as described in the Scriptures, a new and higher order than had been before created, not that Adam grew from a protoplasm, a trilobite, a tadpole, or an ape.

Then about the lack of the connecting link between these and man Professor J. P. Thompson makes a good argument as follows:

If man was produced by evolution from preceding organisms, where are the transitional forms? No traces have been found of a creature intermediate between the ape and the man, nor a simian tribe so far advanced as to fill the gap. . . . In the thousands of years since men and apes have lived side by side, the ape has made no advance toward the form, the habits, or the intelligence of man.—Man in Genesis and Geology, pp. 43, 44.

There has been a great deal of speculation as to the people of what is called the "stone age," and as to the "ape man of Java," who is supposed to have lived (that is, his species) about five hundred thousand years ago. Also some believe that a half-human race dwelt in caves in France about fifty thousand years ago. And a skull found in Sussex, England, is supposed to have been that of an inferior man who lived in England perhaps three hundred thousand years ago. The "Heidelberg man" is supposed to have been on the earth probably fifty thousand years ago. And Professor Osborn and others assume that some of them were the ancestors of the highly-developed intellectual races that have lived during the past few thousand years, in fact that they were the progenitors of the man who is called Adam.

Since writing the foregoing pages I have decided that it may be of interest to some who have not time or opportunity to study this subject that the main points be here given of Professor Osborn's views, as presented in a book he wrote in 1915, as sketched by Colonel Roosevelt in the National Geographic Magazine for February, 1916.

In his review of the book Colonel Roosevelt says that the earliest works of man along the Euphrates and the Nile "are things of yesterday" when we attempt to trace man's development "from an apelike creature, struggling with his fellow brutes, to the being with at least longings and hopes that are half divine," that is, man as he is now. But this conjecture, or supposition, is not necessary, neither reasonable nor warranted, according to the findings and conclusions of as great or greater students and scientists than those who make such claims, those equal in learning and who have spent their lives in honest research, in careful study, and who have made faithful investigations. From them I have already made a few extracts in evidence.

According to Roosevelt the belief of Professor Osborn is that when the Age of Mammals came in "they developed along many different lines, including the primates, from which came the monkeys, the anthropoid apes, and finally the half-human predecessors of man himself."

From the study I have made of leading scientists I do not understand, nor believe, that there is any need for such conclusions as the above. Also how very far from being warranted is the following claim that the beginning of man was during the great creative convulsions that undoubtedly occurred long, long before the man lived who was created in the likeness of God's own person at the beginning.

Yet, as unreliable and unworthy as the conjectures are, there are those who believe as follows:

The Pleistocene Age followed the Pliocene. . . . Throughout its duration the world went through many physical changes. Continents rose and fell, became connected and again disconnected; mountain chains were worn down and others thrust upward; lakes filled and vanished; periods of great cold were followed by periods of warmth. . . . But man was slowly developing from the half human to the wholly human throughout the immense period of time, and at its close the Age of Man may fairly be said to have begun.

Again, read the following statement in the afore-said magazine article:

But, while we could doubtless learn more of the peleo-history and prehistory of man if we knew what had happened to him in Asia during the two or three hundred thousand years before history dawned in Mesopotamia and on the Nile, we do not as a fact possess such knowledge.

Why? They say because no such high type of half-human beings is known to have existed in Asia or in Egypt. Again, about Europe they write:

Then came the second and severest period of glaciation. During the mild interglacial period that followed, new species of elephants and rhinos appeared. . . . Most important of all, the Heidelberg man appeared, the earliest true man, clearly human, but equally clearly, closer kin to his remote anthropoid kinfolk than to any existing savage.

A strange statement. The Heidelberg creature was the "earliest true man" yet he was more related to the monkey tribe than to the human race. And about another supposed being of the past, Roosevelt states Osborn's views and ideas as follows:

Then he discusses the famous ape-man of Java, the pre-human creature, probably, however, only collaterally in our line of ancestry, who appeared at the dawn of the Pleistocene period. This being was already half way upward from the beast and (from) those Miocene ancestors of his, the anthropoid apes. He, or some creature like him, was in our own line of ascent during those uncounted ages when our ancestors were already different from all other brutes, and yet had not really grown to be men.

After the ape-man of Java we skip a quarter of a million years, or so, according to Mr. Osborn's conservative figuring, before we get our next glimpse of a near-human predecessor of ours. This is the Heidelberg man.

Again we make a long skip, this time of somewhat over a hundred thousand years, and come to the Piltdown man, or near-man, a being seeming little farther advanced than the man of Heidelberg, and in some ways less so, for he possessed apelike canine teeth.

The next race was that of the Neanderthal man, much more modern and more advanced, but lower than any existing savage. These Neanderthal men were squat, burly, big-headed, thick-skulled savages with brows projecting over cavernous eyes, knees permanently bent, and jaws almost chinless. Some of their favorite caverns were lived in by them and by their successors for fifty thousand years. At last the life term of these primitive hunter folk drew to a close. They were not our ancestors. With our present knowledge it seems probable that they were exterminated.

The most profound change in the whole racial history of western Europe was the sudden and total supplanting of these savages, lower than any existing human type, by the tall, finely-built Cro-Magnon race of hunters . . . and who belonged to the same species of man that we do.

Notwithstanding that dream the race did not survive. He states:

Then the Cro-Magnons in their turn succumbed. . . . This fine race disappeared, almost or quite completely, and in its place there came, seemingly from Asia, four or five different types of humanity, all of which can to-day be discerned in Europe's ethnically very mixed population.

You see these writers have no place in their ideas for the account of the creation in Genesis.

The closing paragraph in the article reads as follows:

The sudden appearance in Europe, some twenty-five thousand years ago, of a human race with a high order of brain, was not a local leap forward, but the result of a long process of evolution elsewhere. . . . It is a fascinating subject, and no one has dealt with it as ably as Mr. Osborn.

Brother S. A. Burgess, associate editor of the HERALD, who has read much more that I have on this subject, informs me that the theory about the ape-man of Java is based upon three bones, a piece of the skull, a piece of jaw, and a piece of a thigh bone, and these were scattered over a hundred square yards of ground. He asks, What is the probability that they belonged to one individual? One bone (femur) has human characteristics, and another bone (jaw) has ape characteristics, according to some anatomists.

Brother Burgess states that the characteristics of the Neanderthal skull are considered to be clearly simian, and that it probably does not belong to the lineage of man. As we have seen, Professor Osborn states that the skull shows lower characteristics than do the skulls of "any existing savage." This being the case it is remarkable that men should spend time, strength, brain power, and money trying to prove that which they never can prove from bones or skulls, namely, that the ancestors of our race were brutes, monkeys, or protoplasms. But if any of the skulls or bones are as old as conjectured, and such low types of beings existed, then the Almighty knew his own purpose in creating them, and either in the millennium or in eternity we will learn the reasons for their creation and existence in the times when they lived. I am satisfied with the great and eternal truth that all previous orders of beings passed away at the end of the periods of creation for which God created them.

And that when Adam was created he was the first of a new race, the first of a new age, indeed the "first man" upon the earth, and very likely the "first flesh" also, this word meaning only in the new era, in the new period after all the others had passed away and were gone. The Lord spake only of the new creation. In the Genesis account he was not teaching geology nor about the previous periods of creation, but only about the age beginning with Adam. He did not go into the mysteries of the past but spoke to the understanding of the people of Israel in the time of Moses, twenty-five hundred years after Adam was created. I am glad to say that the subject appears clear and plain to me, and I doubt not that it is true.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

IF SOME GREAT THING

What is great and what is small—in duties, careers, opportunities? Is there after all any test thereof which is immutable, which is absolute? There is in fact no objective difference; it is a subjective one. It is our vision that decides magnitude. It is the eye that magnifies or diminishes. Quantity is relative; and quality, too, "If the prophet had asked of thee some great thing." Why, as a matter of fact great things are asked of thee; they are asked of every man; they make up life. Have you the eyes to see and recognize them? For that which is great is by no means that which is uncommon. . . . Do you look for sacrifice; do you instance martyrs, immortal heroes, supreme types of renunciation? Is their generation extinct? Far from it. There are millions of them. Under every roof-tree you will find the father fighting hard for the sustenance of others, enduring more than fatigue, more than the hard grind of every day, enduring oftentimes bitter humiliations with clenched teeth and set jaw; for others depend on him, he is the burden-bearer. Though of high spirit, he abases his spirit; he conciliates, he smiles without mirth, he served a great cause at whatever sacrifice. He, the wage-earner, exhibits the finest type of heroism. And the mother, too, sacrificing not only luxuries but necessities for those in the springtime of life, those still sensitive, not yet inured to the hardships brought by the passing years! She who loves much and seeks no return, expects none; she who gives life at the risk of her own, bestows upon those lives also the treasures of her tenderness, the glory of her renunciation. Is there any saint of monastic seclusion that can surpass the tender mother that we all have known, to whom the word sacrifice had no meaning for it was so commonplace, whose life was a self-surrender, almost a self-obliteration in the name of love? Are there greater things than that? I know them not. . . . If the prophet had asked of thee, O parent, physician, nurse, teacher—if he had asked of thee some great thing! He has asked it of thee, but thou didst not hear the word, or didst not understand; if thou dost still crave for a resounding sphere, for a higher mission than the one already committed to thy hands. . . "If the prophet had asked of thee some great thing!" Ah, he has asked it of thee, if thou hast but the eye to see, the ear to hear it. What is asked of thee is great, if thou thyself art great in soul and sympathies.—From Temple Israel Pulpit, "The heroism of commonplace lives," by Rabbi Leon Harrison.

What Service Can We Render?

(Suggestions for the supervisors of our Relief and Service Bureau.)

The Relief and Service Bureau has for its purpose, as its name implies, that of giving capable and organized relief of any nature that is needed, and that of being of service to the church. Following are a few of the many activities in which Relief and Service workers may engage:

1. Appoint a visiting committee, or one member, who shall take branch record, divide branch into districts, and assign certain districts to each member of Relief and Service department, for the purpose of making friendly sisterly calls on every church member in said district. In this way, cases of dependence or need for relief may be ascertained. Under the circumstances let these visits be "charity calls." Every member of church is to be called upon, for the purpose of advancing a feeling of friendliness and sisterly love.

2. Appoint a committee from their number to cooperate with local bishop, president of branch, and presiding deacon. It shall be the duty of this committee to take cognizance of all cases of dependence or suffering in branch, and consult with church officers regarding the dispensing of necessary relief.

3. In every branch where it is at all feasible, let the relief and service workers organize themselves into Red Cross auxiliaries, in accordance with rules set forth in the Red Cross pamphlet called "Manual of instruction for auxiliaries" (S. E. P. C. No. 3). Copies of this pamphlet may be secured by applying to the nearest Red Cross chapter, or the national headquarters at Washington.

4. Encourage younger girls of branch to join with relief and service department, giving them something definite to do, such as visiting the sick, and sending flowers to the unfortunate, funds to be supplied by relief and service department. Young people should be encouraged to buy Thrift Stamps, War Savings Stamps, etc.

5. Socials, bazaars, etc., may be undertaken, by the relief and service workers, provided regular business methods are followed. No soliciting for free donations can be allowed. A reasonable profit on all merchandise offered for sale is sufficient. Voluntary offering and contributions need not be refused.

6. Swing on children's clothes may be done by this department, a nominal price charged, thereby helping mothers who have not time or ability to do the sewing, at same time adding small sums to their treasury.

The relief and service workers should make themselves known in their local branches, so that they may be appealed to without publicity when help is needed. In all activities, let them not forget to keep in close touch with branch and church officials, so that they may not work at variance with the general church work. Otherwise, they will defeat the very purpose for which they are working, that of being of service in church work.

WAR-TIME ACTIVITIES SUGGESTED FOR RELIEF AND SERVICE WORKERS

For the duration of the war, there are many lines of activities in which it is not only advisable that our women shall engage, but absolutely imperative, if the general morale and high standard of living our church has always stood for, shall continue to be upheld. Most of these activities will be found under the general work of the National Red Cross.

1. Our women are urged to organize themselves into local Red Cross auxiliaries, in accordance with the rules given in the "Manual of instruction for auxiliaries" (S. E. P. C. No. 3). This manual should be studied carefully before application is made to the chapter headquarters for permission to organize.

2. Every auxiliary thus organized should take care that our own boys, both those in camps, and those "over there," be furnished with all necessary equipment; for in this way, the boys themselves will be benefited, and the National Red Cross will be relieved to this extent.

3. The relief and service workers should have on hand a fund for the direct use of families of soldiers in their midst, cooperating with the local bishop, presiding deacon, and other branch officers. This fund, of course, will be entirely aside from the Red Cross funds, which must be submitted to the Red Cross chapter.

4. The relief and service workers should arrange to organize study classes in Red Cross service, using as a text the eight-lesson manual (A. R. C. 205), especially prepared by the Department of Civilian Relief. This takes up the study of and preparation for modern social work, and is specially pertinent to the work of our Relief and Service Bureau.

5. If possible, or feasible, Relief and Service workers should have a committee whose duty it shall be to encourage and stimulate the sale of Thrift Stamps, War Savings Stamps, and Liberty Bonds. Close cooperation with the local pastor in this matter is necessary, in order that the fullest and most complete benefit may be derived.

6. In all activities of the relief and service workers, too much emphasis cannot be placed upon the necessity for the closest cooperation to be maintained with the branch and church officials. Otherwise, the work done by this bureau will fail in the very purpose to which it owes its existence, that of service to the church membership.

Echoes from the Reunions

The reunion work was unusually encouraging to those who have taken part in it, according to the reports received. We think the success this year is due largely to two significant facts; first, our reunion workers were courteously and heartily received by the reunion committees as officers of the woman's department of the church; second, because of this we felt more freedom of thought and action in explaining the various activities and departments of the Woman's Auxiliary work.

Mrs. D. J. Krahl had charge of the auxiliary work at Perle Springs. An educational lecture was given each day by specialists, at meetings in which the coordinated departments of the church, Woman's Auxiliary, Sunday school, and Religio were represented. The Forbush textbook was discussed and converts made to the use of it as the textbook for mothers' and teachers' problems. A demonstration was given on one afternoon on home nursing by Miss Sarah Rogers, Superintendent of Nurses at the Independence Sanitarium.

Mrs. William Madison attended the reunion at Stewartsville, Missouri, and was given charge of the meetings and activities for young people as well as the Woman's Auxiliary work. One general meeting was held on Saturday afternoon and other educational meetings daily. Special meetings were held for the young people, the boys in one meeting and the girls in another. The Red Cross work was presented and the women urged to give all the time they could to caring for our soldiers and winning the war.

The auxiliary work was well represented at the Southern California reunion by Mrs. Dora Glines, assisted by Mrs. Lola Mitchell, organizer. Special lectures were given to the women and girls and the men and boys. A Red Cross lecture was given by one of their representatives in the State. A Red Cross shop was opened and articles made by the sisters in the district were sold. The proceeds were given to the Red Cross fund. The Woman's Auxiliary of the district had charge of the cafeteria for the reunion. It was considered a decided success. Educational classes were held daily under the auspices of the auxiliary.

Mrs. J. A. Gardner represented the work at Boone, Iowa, and in consulting with Brother Salisbury learned that the Woman's Auxiliary had been given equal time with the other departments of the church. Three general sessions were held and one round-table meeting. On Sunday afternoon Brother Salisbury, District President, talked to the women. He spoke of the importance of woman's work in the church and with enthusiasm and understanding urged the sisters to interest themselves in some of the activities outlined. The Government food demonstration agent from Boone gave an interesting lecture on one afternoon.

At the Dow City reunion, which followed the one at Boone, the work was well received. At this place the afternoons were given to Auxiliary work, Brother A. E. Warr representing the Sunday school and Religio, and the writer representing the Woman's Auxiliary. Two interesting and active meetings were held here, one for two hours. This session was the exhibition of the child welfare panels and a round-table on Woman's Auxiliary work. Brother Warr generously shared his question box, and as a result a lively discussion was held. In every mention of the departments of church work Brother Warr included the Woman's Auxiliary as of equal importance with the others, which is as it should be. Unusual interest was shown in the auxiliary departments.

By invitation from Sister Kennedy, organizer for the Little Sioux District, Mrs. D. J. Krahl and the writer attended the Logan reunion. After consultation with Mrs. Kennedy and the reunion committee time was allowed for seven sessions. A general outline of the departmental work was given by Mrs. Krahl and Mrs. Gardner, and sufficient time permitted for discussion. Mrs. Krahl demonstrated a lesson from the mothers' and teachers' problems which was taken from the Forbush textbook. Professor Floyd McDowell spoke briefly on psychology and sociology, and announcements were made of the courses on these subjects offered by the Woman's Auxiliary. Mrs. Frederick M. Smith arrived on Thursday morning and spoke encouragingly to the large number of men and women who had gathered for the morning meeting. Sister Grace Thompson represented the Young Woman's Bureau. Miss Harris, Government Food Demonstrator talked on sugar conservation.

Announcements were made at these reunions that the men were invited to all meetings, and the branch officers urged to attend. As a result many of the brethren attended and took part in the discussions. Many expressions were made, to the effect that the auxiliary work was better understood, the plans of activities and courses of study outlined being practical and helpful to the church women in their effort to raise the standard of the homes and to serve the church and community.

The child welfare panels were used by the reunion workers, enlisting the interest of the men and women in the children's year campaign. These panels are complete in their instruction and attractive in design.

By invitation of Brother Salisbury and several of the branch presidents of the Des Moines District the writer returned to that district at the close of the Logan reunion, visiting Perry, Des Moines, and Runnells. Other invitations were refused owing to the necessity of returning home after an absence of almost four weeks.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER, General Secretary.

Holden Stake, Also

The Woman's Auxiliary work at the Holden Stake reunion was in charge of Sisters D. J. Krahl and I. M. Ross.

Miss Rogers of the Independence Sanitarium was with us and gave excellent assistance in caring for the sick on the grounds, as well as conducting class work for mothers and Oriole girls on the subject of "Home nursing."

Miss Mary Moreland, the Johnson County demonstrator in home economics, delivered interesting and instructive talks and demonstrations along the line of food conservation, especially emphasizing the need for, and the ways of saving sugar. She expressed her pleasure at her reception and treatment among us, and asked to be permitted to be with us in our reunion work another year.

Sister R. L. Dillon, of Holden, gave a splendid talk on child study.

Sister Etzenhouser, of Independence, had charge of the young women of the camp, and was a great success in this direction.

The Government Health Charts, exhibited and explained by Sister Krahl, were very interesting, and highly appreciated.

Sister Lyman Fike and Sister Lora Wier, both of Warrensburg, and Sister Maud Simmes, of Holden, had charge of various groups of children and rendered much service in different ways, which added greatly to the success of the reunion.

We are looking forward to an even bigger and better reunion another year. "Advancement" is our motto.

SISTER I. M. ROSS, Stake Organizer.

A Voice from the Waves at Hermosa Beach

Dear Sister Anderson: Since you were with us when our auxiliary was organized a year ago, we think you will be interested in learning of our activities this reunion. We were indeed very sorry we could not have you with us again, but we were very grateful that we had Sister Glines, who took charge of the Educational Department, and assisted in every way possible. Deserving special mention was her lecture from Government charts emphasizing the children's year campaign.

All our supervisors were on the ground, each happily busy in her own department. Sister Floss Balchen had charge of the Young Woman's Department, and provisions were made for carrying out the social and recreational activities usual to camp life, such as wiener bakes, watermelon feasts, hikes, fishing, etc. A nursery tent and rest room were also provided, and the Oriole girls acted as decorating committees and helped in many other ways to make our programs interesting and entertaining.

In the home and child welfare work, Sister J. W. Rushton presided over a class of young mothers every afternoon at one thirty. This class was exceptionally well-attended, and exhibited a lively interest in all subjects discussed.

Brother Rushton conducted a study hour every morning at eight o'clock, using as text, The Teacher and the Child, by Mark. This was also a very popular class, and its study greatly enjoyed by all.

The cafeteria was conducted by the sisters this year, and netted the auxiliary $162.40. They turned over $25 of this to the district reunion fund, and have a neat balance in the treasury. A Red Cross shop was also conducted on the grounds, and a nice little sum was realized for that good cause. Am inclosing a copy of our convention program.

Sincerely,
LOLA S. MITCHELL, Organizer Southern California District.

Have You One of the New Year Book Supplements

To the sisters of the church we wish to announce that the supplement to the Year Book is ready for mailing. Orders are being received every day. "This supplement, issued by order of the executive committee and prepared by the Year Book committee, is not intended to take the place of the Year Book; but, in view of changes brought about by the war, and those anticipated when the departments of the church are coordinated, it is designed as a guide while temporary innovations exist and the coordinating committee shall make adjustments." The new constitution is found in the supplement, the one printed in the Year Book being obsolete. Every sister and every branch officer should have one of these leaflets. They sell for fifteen cents each and all orders should be sent to the secretary, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 711 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

When We Give Our Sons

[The following is a copy of a letter written by one of our elders to his wife when he received the news from her that their oldest son had been called to service overseas. It may give expression to sentiments welling up in the hearts of many another parent and help to dull the edge of the grief which would all but overcome if allowed full sway.—EDITORS.]

My Dear: Your letter, written the morning you received the news of W—'s leaving for "over there," came this morning. I sense, somewhat, your feelings, but no one can know what is in a mother's heart, under such circumstances, save God and other mothers.

You say, "Possibly you can find more of civilization and spirituality in this great carnage than I do." That depends. This inhumanity is at variance with the sublime and lofty teachings of the greatest of all teachers. It is not consonant with the life of Jesus. He not only taught, but practiced what he taught. Herein lies our hope.

Despite all claims to civilization and Christianity, if the doctrine of the Sermon on the Mount had found expression among the nations this carnage would have been avoided. It is not Christianity but the lack of Christianity which has produced this, the Gethsemane of humanity. Our present duty is to make the vision of the higher purpose come true. The responsibility for this war must rest with those who, inspired with un-Christian and sordid purpose and filled with hate and unrequited ambition, desire for themselves that which they are not willing to share with others.

Until that "perfect day" shall come when man will love his neighbor as himself, men will live and die; the brute in man will snarl and grapple and kill. The struggle 'twixt the carnal and the spiritual, the animal and God in man must go on until carnality is eliminated and God doth fully reign.

Despite the awful sacrifice which we must make, we still must realize that we owe something to the generations yet to come. Had it not been for the sacrifice and service, the denial and courage of the good men and the noble women of the past we would not now be enjoying that modicum of liberty and justice which is our present heritage.

The dogma, "Whatever is, is right," is a lie. Likewise the slogan, "Whatsoever serves my purpose is right to me," is also a lie. Class consciousness is false to humanity and also to the class it seeks to perpetuate. Class consciousness eventuates in race consciousness and race consciousness eventuates in class and racial conflict. Crass materialism is the incubus of tyranny and the fertilizing bed for bestiality and animalism and finds its concrete expression in the spirit and purpose of Germany. The sociologists of Germany with their materialistic interpretation of history make appeal to the class, whilst the Kaiser, blasphemous and egotist, appeals to racial prejudice and purpose to heap it upon his own lusts.

The allies, on the other hand, are dedicated not to class but to mankind. They are fighting, not for pelf, or plunder, or territory, but for justice, and right, and humanity. The Slogan of the allies is, "Not for self but for others; the strong for the weak; special privilege to none, equality for all."

The solution of our social, civic, and moral wrongs is not the banding together to work for ourselves. We must unite to secure for all that blessing which we crave for ourselves. The Golden Rule is the only specific for the world's ill. True, it has never been fully tried, but this is not against it. Men and nations have failed to measure up either to its spirit or purpose. Let us attribute this failure more to the ignorance than to the viciousness of the people.

Life is continuous, whether you center it on one personality or many. The whole weight of this terrible world war has come home to us. Its crushing blight, its unutterable despair, its frightful agony will be ever with us!

How I wish I could be in the boy's place! I could meet it better than he. It would not mean so much to me as it does to him. My life is largely spent. I have had my day. He should have his. Life, physical life, does not mean so much to me now as it necessarily does to him, just merging as he is into complete manhood with the vista of years, a wonderful prophecy of possible achievement, beckoning him on and on. I would give everything to take his place! God grant that the stuff of which he is made may be sufficient for him! He is ever in mind with me.

On the other hand, there are millions of other lads—lads loved and cherished as ours; lads whose lives are just as precious; trusting, brave mothers and heroic fathers who are just as loyal—all working for one common end, the overthrow of brutality, the dethronement of injustice, the establishment of a common brotherhood. Our sorrows blend with theirs. They are included in our prayers and purpose.

Take heart, my love! Our duty to our son, our duty to ourselves, our duty to humanity is to hold the thought of eventual right and justice. Thoughts are things—sentient things. Let's concentrate our thoughts on the best, both for him and all the other brave lads. If we think good enough and earnest enough our thoughts will break through despite all hell. For his sake, for the sake of others, we cannot give way to despair.

It does not need letters to convey one's feelings to those we love. I am going to choke down all this depression, this agony of heart, this unutterable void, this tendency to despair and suppress the "What's-the-use?" feeling, and though the pain will be poignant and the days long, still I'll rise above it for his sake, for your sake, and for humanity's sake and will hold the very best thought for you and for him and for all others. I'll be pleasant and loving and kind. This is the only surcease for sorrow, the extinguisher of hate and the metamorphosis of wrong.

I do not know how far my prayers ascend, but, having poured out my soul for others, I find a peace and purpose which eclipses doubt and overshadows despair.

I cannot get away from the thought that the fates will be good to him. Let us be good for his sake. We will work and trust. We can do nothing else. We are mere puppets in this frightful holocaust. There are forces which are beyond and above us. God is in his universe. He is working out his wonderful purpose. We only "see through a glass darkly." Could we sense the divine mind and understand his purpose we would not worry, nor murmur, nor yet complain. We would rest content in the assurance that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

This life is only momentary. Our one concern should be to spend it, not for self, but for humanity. The revivifying impulse of real life is not to grasp and hold but to grant and bestow, to give out rather than to retain. To sense life one must lose his hold on the perpetuation of the ego, and, with perfect abandon, give himself to the conservation of life in the aggregate.

The lessons learned through the suffering of this war will not be lost. What men did not learn through intuition and observation they are now learning through sorrowful and bitter experience. The lesson will not be lost, however.

Autocracy is doomed; the "divine right of kings" is in the discard; national prejudice and racial hatred are being dissipated; selfish purpose is giving way to altruistic good; human brotherhood is blossoming in the hearts and minds of men; the dark night of tyranny and injustice and inhumanity is passing and, even now, the sky is streaked with heartening gray, the sure indication of the coming day.

"Each for all and all for each" is the magna charta of the coming age from which shall evolve a government where human will shall blend with divine purpose, and unselfish love have dominant place in all human activities.

God strengthen you for this ordeal, and help you to visualize the ultimate purpose.

Yours in sorrow as well as pleasure.

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN, September 4, 1918.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since you have heard from Port Huron, but while we have not said very much we have been fully alive and working.

Five years ago last spring when the writer was urged to locate in Port Huron, there was a membership of about seventy on the books with about thirty-five active, and an old church building out on Fifteenth Street, but the Saints were doing their very best and had a hard up-hill road to travel.

Since that time we have erected a new church building, located at 1016 Varney Avenue, in 1913, at a cost of $6,250, and at the present time the property is worth not less than $10,000. The Saints at the time were mostly all poor in this world's goods, but with a good heart and willingness to work and sacrifice for the cause they love, and with God's help, the church was finished and opened January 18, 1914, with an indebtedness of $3,750.

Since that time they have used every possible means to raise this money, and with some outside help, for which we wish to thank the Saints, we have been able on the last day of August to pay off the mortgage and now we have the property free and clear and expect to dedicate it on January 18, 1919.

With street preaching, and distributing tracts and other papers, and with those who have moved here, we have at the present time a membership of 275. When we look back over the past five years and see what a wonderful growth and development has been made here in the city, it fills our hearts with gratitude to think that such a small handful of faithful Saints have been able to accomplish so much.

A great many people are moving to Port Huron at the present time on account of so many new factories springing up in the last few years. Property is cheap, also land surrounding the city, and such a beautiful location has all been a great drawing card to a great many. Of course this has helped us in our church work and we expect the future will still bring forth a great deal more.

We have been favored in the last month with a visit from Bishop McGuire and later by President F. M. Smith. This has been a great honor to us. Our district was divided last June conference at Flint, the family getting so large, it was necessary to part with some of them.

We expect to have our fall conference October 12 and 13, and with a large attendance which is expected, we are looking forth to securing the auditorium building which will seat at least twenty-five hundred.

Our Sunday evening services are so well attended that it takes all the room we have to seat the crowd, and we expect in the near future to open missions at the north and south ends of the city. We have a noble bunch of young men who hold the priesthood and are well qualified to advance the work still further.

We are especially favored with a live wire as superintendent for our Sunday school, Elder J. N. Muir. He is taking a great interest in the Sunday school work and it seems to be his special calling. We have a regular attendance of one hundred and forty to one hundred and fifty. That with the good choir we have at the present time is a wonderful aid in advancing the work.

We are glad to welcome any of the Saints to Port Huron, especially those who live out in isolated districts, and will be glad to give them any information we can.

Always praying for the welfare and advancement of the work,
I am,

Yours very truly, OTTO FETTING.

GLEN EASTON, WEST VIRGINIA, September 5, 1918.

Editors Herald: I just returned home from attending the West Virginia District conference which met with the Mount Zion Branch. After staying all night in Parkersburg, I started for the Baltimore and Ohio station to leave on train at 6.45. On my way to the station I thought I might meet some of the Saints there. After arriving I looked about and shortly recognized Brother Thomas Mills of Wheeling.

We greeted each other as Saints do, and he told me to see if I could recognize Brother McGuire. I couldn't place him for a long time but finally noticed a hand grip with the initials "B. R. M." Yes, that was the Bishop. I met him and he told me that he was on his way to the East and would attend the West Virginia conference that day and that evening would continue on his journey.

We arrived in due time at Cornwallis, and after waiting some time were met by the Saints with automobiles. Brother McGuire, Brother McAlldowney, Brother Mills, and myself were invited to ride in Brother Charles Bell's car. We traveled about one mile and a half and the car refused to go, so it had to be pulled to one side of the road that others could pass by. The machine had stopped in a low place where a drain crossed the road.

As soon as James Ross drove up he said he would pull it up the hill, and soon it was in a safe place, where it was out of the way. The Bishop helped just the same as the rest of us. There was no dust, but what had been dust was now mixed with water.

We picked up our grips and went on, but Brother Ross returned and we then rode to the church where the business session was going on. About noon it began raining. The rain was much needed, as we have suffered with a drouth for the past two months, but it made it necessary for us to get our boots muddy before we could get to the place where we were to eat dinner. Brother McGuire preached to the Saints at 3 p. m., then he journeyed from the church through mud and rain to Cairo to meet the evening train. We all said good-by to him as he left, hoping that we would be permitted to see him later.

Brethren Lewis Serig and Samuel Martin walked through mud and rain to the church from a point some fifteen miles away. They arrived all right before preaching commenced in the evening. We were glad to meet so many of the Saints from the different branches. It brings to my mind a hymn:

"Sweet the time, exceeding sweet,
When the Saints together meet,
When the Savior is the theme,
When they joy to sing of him."

Sunday was a lovely day. The mud had settled some, and by noon the sun shone brightly. The Saints of Mount Zion Branch are like most all branches in the country, scattered over the hills; so they all decided to bring their dinners to the church and stay all day.

After morning session, it was announced that dinner would be served to all in the little grove by the church. Seats were taken from the church and set around among the trees and everyone was waited on by the sisters and brothers. I thought to myself that if Bishop McGuire could have stayed over Sunday with us it would have paid him because he would always have remembered the dinner and the love and union of the Saints.

I had the privilege of attending conference ten years ago, and I noticed many vacant seats there now. The children that were small are now grown, but we all expect changes and wonder what ten more years will bring.

Monday noon finds us, Brother Serig, Brother Martin, Brother John Martin, and myself eating dinner at Brother Charley Bell's. We are on our way home now, a journey over the hills of Ritchie and Pleasants counties. We all started out with grips in hand as though we had only a mile or two before us. After a walk of about ten minutes Brother John Martin decided to return and assist in the meetings for a few days. We said: "Success to you, Brother John," and traveled on.

Two hours later found us crossing the hills of Pleasants County carrying our grips over our left shoulders. We found it much easier to carry our grips swung over a pole in this way than in any other. Later on two men in an auto came along and relieved us of them, saying that they would leave them at the hotel in Saint Marys, which they did.

About four o'clock we came in sight of the Ohio River; we felt glad, for soon the journey would be at an end. But to stand on the hill and look at the beautiful Ohio River and the valley so inspiring makes one feel glad that God has permitted him to see the grandeur of the earth.

At eight o'clock in the evening, I said good-by to Brother Serig and Brother Martin and stepped off the train at Moundville. I must add a verse of 160 to express my feelings:

"You may value the friendship of youth and of age,
And select for your comrades the noble and sage,
But the friends that most cheer us on life's rugged road,
Are the friends of my Master, the children of God."

I feel that it always pays to attend conference and meet with God's people and I feel that God is spiritually blessing his people there among the hills of West Virginia.

JASPER N. DOBBS.

SARNIA, ONTARIO, September 7, 1918.

Editors Herald: Surely the Saints assembled to worship God in this place on last Sabbath morning realized the truth of the words: "In the midst of life we are in death." While Brother Bert Burley was in the stand declaring the word of God from the fourth chapter of Proverbs and had commented on it, then had just begun to relate an experience of his own when he first obeyed the gospel, he suddenly fell backwards. Two of the brethren present administered to him and a doctor was called, but he passed away in a few hours, not having regained consciousness.

We are stunned by the shock of having been brought face to face with the king of terrors, but how soon we forget and again indulge in the frivolities of life. They seem to appeal to many to the exclusion of eternal things.

Sister Burley has the sympathy of all in her bereavement. She is also undergoing a very severe trial, her children being sick, and one of her sons at death's door with that dread disease, tuberculosis. He is the president of the Port Huron religio. They need the prayers of the Saints in this time of trial. Brother Burley was a kind, sympathetic man, faithful in the discharge of duty, and although on account of narrowed vision we cannot see why he should be taken when he was so much needed, we feel to say, "Thy will be done."

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

COLUMBUS, KANSAS, September 7, 1918.

Editors Herald: I was thinking this morning on returning from church and Sunday school of the lesson, and remembered the conversation had regarding the attendance at the church services of the Saints. What a consolation and comfort it is to be able to know of the promises of God to us as a church, if we are true to him. We will be true to our fellow men if we are true to God, but if we are not true to our Creator we will be untrue to our fellow men.

Let us study his word so we will understand his promises. They are not to the world, but to those who keep his law, so we must know the law in order to heed it. How truly wonderful and precious they are to those who are really convinced of their truthfulness.

Just at this time when so many of us are going to the stations and bidding our sons good-by as they go in response to the call of the Government, do we feel sure our heavenly Father will fulfill his promises? Possibly our faith is a little weak; if so, let us renew our efforts, seeking him in prayer. Thus may our faith be increased to more fully trust him, believing he will do all he has promised if we will be faithful to him. While those of the world are fearful and doubtful, and even rebellious, we as Saints should be able to send our young men and women forth with a feeling of security. If we have done our duty we have inspired them with a spirit of duty and responsibility, with a deep loyalty to the Government. If all these things be true of us we may trust in God and be entitled to his protection and care as though it were a part of the detailed church work.

So let us seek to trust in Him and have faith in all his promises. Thus we may be able to separate ourselves from doubt, fear, and despair, being able to rejoice in the service of our country or church. Our duties, of whatever nature, will be discharged faithfully.

Your brother in Christ,

C. C. RANDALL.

WITLEY, SURRAY, ENGLAND, August 25, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am taking this liberty to write a few words to you. You will see by my address I am a private in the Canadian overseas army. I have just had the HERALDS for June and July sent to me. I used to reside at Humber Bay in civilian life, so I am pretty well acquainted with the branch at Toronto. I was very sorry to read of the changes taking place there. But I sincerely hope the people will be brought to their senses and remain firm in the truth.

This is the first time I have written to the office, but I believe you welcome the correspondence of the Saints. I guess you know the conditions in army life are not very conducive to good, so it is a relief to talk, as it were, to some of God's people again. There are a few of us Latter Day Saints at this camp, about four or five as far as I know. I wish there were more so we could hold meetings, but we believe the arm of the Lord is not shortened, and that he is able to care for his own if they are willing to let him. It is still my desire to serve him in a way which is pleasing and according to the divine plan. I know the work is of God and hope to continue faithful to the end. Asking an interest in your prayers, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

PRIVATE JAMES W. DADSON.

SWANTON, VERMONT, September 8, 1918.

Editors Herald: This is my first venture at writing to your pages, though I read every line, from the first to the last page. I am sending in a year's subscription as I think the church papers help us greatly, especially when we are isolated and wish to keep in touch with the Saints.

I have moved here from Peterboro, Ontario. This town is mostly French Catholic and very worldly. They evidently do not know the difference between our church and the organization in Utah.

While in Peterboro, my sister was convinced of the truthfulness of this gospel and was baptized July 21, at Cameron, by Brother A. Kennedy, of Hamilton, and confirmed by Elder Braden. I was glad that mother and father had the opportunity of seeing her baptized. They were much impressed.

Brother Kennedy preached at our house every Friday evening and has convinced mother of this gospel. I hope to see her baptized some day. Brother Kennedy has done good work while with us in Peterboro, and I wish the Hamilton Saints to hear of it. We are going to miss his discourses very much.

We had the pleasure of hearing Elder Robert Braden of Cameron, September 1, at our home. He preached an excellent sermon on the unchangeability of God. We were also glad that our afflicted Brother Watson was with us, for it is several years since he heard any of the elders. I wish the Saints would remember him in their prayers, as he will be completely isolated again after my mother and sister leave there this month.

And I desire an interest in the prayers of the Saints, not only for myself but for my people. I desire to be faithful to the end. I always remember God's people.

If there are any Saints living near Swanton, Vermont, let me hear from you, please.

Your sincere sister in gospel bonds,

MOLLY BLANEY.

PORT ARTHUR, ONTARIO, September 9, 1918.

Editors Herald: It is with great pleasure I read in the HERALD of the good work that is being carried on in different parts of the world by the Saints who are striving to build up this great latter-day work, and I feel it might be interesting to others to know of the work that is being done at Port Arthur.

I moved here from Saskatchewan about eight months ago and found that a good work was being done in this city, though under rather unfavorable circumstances.

Just here I would like to mention the good being done by Brother Abraham Miller, who is a priest and the only one in authority here, and who was holding midweek and Sunday services from house to house. Shortly after the arrival of my family, Brother Miller reorganized the Sunday school which previously had been organized by Brother S. W. Tomlinson and unfortunately had fallen through; and through the school and the labors of Brother Miller, six of my family have been baptized into the church, and also two of Brother Miller's sons, and one Mrs. McLean. Brother Miller also baptized her husband and my brother about a year ago. On May 12, he baptized my son and one of his sons. One week after the arrival of Brother S. W. Tomlinson, who had been sent here by the church, he baptized seven others who had been convinced of this work through the winter, thus making seventeen members in Port Arthur.

Though our work has been somewhat clouded, we know that the darkest part of the night is just before the break of day and we are trusting that if faithful, we will in the near future see a branch organized in this place. And I may say on behalf of the Saints that should any of the priesthood or Saints be passing through our city we extend a hearty invitation to them to call and pay us a visit.

Your brother in Christ,

ALBERT E. BONSTEEL.

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA, September 10, 1918.

Editors Herald: The Southern California reunion held at Hermosa Beach, August 2 to 12, was no doubt one of the best reunions ever held in the district.

We all missed the familiar faces of Brethren Harrington, Cooper, and Williams, and were made to realize that these brethren were occupying a unique position, and difficult, before they were called to other service. Heartly welcome was given the new missionaries, Elders D. E. Dowker, A. H. Mills, and N. T. Chapman, who responded to the call for service with willing hands and hearts.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the district, presided over by Sister Lola Mitchell of Santa Ana, also volunteered their services, and the success of the reunion was assured.

At the close of the reunion, upon the invitation of Brother and Sister Evan Davis of El Centro, California, and the consent of Elder Rushton, Elder N. T. Chapman and the writer drove to the northern reunion in Brother Davis's new automobile. The trip was very enjoyable, and the weather very pleasant. Arriving at Irvington, we received a welcome that made us glad that we could meet with the Saints of the Northern California District.

The reunion was presided over by Elders J. W. Rushton, C. W. Hawkins, A. J. Damron, and H. J. Davison. The speakers were J. W. Rushton, C. W. Hawkins, H. J. Davison, W. A. Brooner, J. A. Anthony, N. T. Chapman, and G. H. Wixom. The services were well attended, and the Saints seemed very devoted and earnest. One service was devoted to the Red Cross work, Elder Rushton delivering the address. A collection was made, amounting to $65, which was given to the Red Cross local at Irvington. The people of the town were highly pleased with this service; and we heard some very fine compliments upon the lecture of Brother Rushton. The very pleasant sojourn came to a close all too soon, and reluctantly we said good-by.

In company with Elder Rushton and Brother E. H. Tor-doff, I was invited to visit the State University at Berkeley and to be one of the guests of Doctor Bade, principal of the Theological Seminary of Berkeley, and Doctor McCowan, Professor in New Testament literature and an instructor in the university. We were welcomed into the dining hall in the large club house adjoining the school buildings where we enjoyed a very pleasant hour eating our lunch and visiting with these distinguished gentlemen.

Before leaving Berkeley we called upon the secretary of the chamber of commerce, Mr. Wells Drewry, who proved to be a very interesting man. Mr. Drewry showed us a copy of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants which were presented to him by the General Conference of 1888. This was in token of appreciation for the fair and able way in which he had reported the proceedings of the conference published in the Kansas City Journal of that year. He said that he was very favorably impressed with the ability shown by the late Joseph Smith in presiding over such a large assembly, and the ability and thorough knowledge of parliamentary law on the part of the delegates of the conference. We have in Mr. Drewry a warm friend to our people.

Our next stop was in San Francisco, where we enjoyed the association of the Saints of that city for a few days. But our visit there was made sad by the sudden death of Elder J. A. Anthony at whose home I was staying. Brother Anthony died in the harness and was true to his faith until the Master called him home.

The branch at San Francisco is ably presided over by Elder G. J. Waller, who is backed up by a splendid lot of young Saints who seem anxious to do their part. Next, I called upon the Oakland Saints, presided over by Elder J. W. Presley. It was a pleasure to meet with that earnest band and to be able to assist them in their noble work. While at this place I was invited to speak at the institution of the blind; there our message was well received.

At all of these places Elder Rushton alternated with me in the preaching the word. The Saints gave each of us a hearty welcome, their support, and close attention.

Our next stop was in San Jose where we met a crowd of earnest Saints who made us feel at home and urged us to call again. The pastor of this branch and district president, Elder C. W. Hawkins, accompanied us to the Fresno Branch, where we were scheduled to speak at 8 p. m.; but because of tire trouble and other delays we did not arrive until 9 p. m. The house was crowded and being entertained by Elder J. B. Carmichael of that place. We were then introduced as the next speaker, and exceptional liberty was enjoyed while speaking to this people.

Dinuba was our next stop, where we found a house filled with Saints and friends awaiting our arrival. Brother Rushton was the principal speaker, and his message was a real treat for all. This branch is presided over by Elder A. S. Votau, an earnest worker, and no doubt he will be heard from. This band of Saints is without a church home, but a movement is on foot to purchase two lots and to build a church building. The Saints seemed very much encouraged because of our visit, and expressed themselves as being willing to take hold of the work with renewed courage.

We then drove to Tulare where the branch president, Elder A. J. Damron, had arranged for a preaching service. A large crowd greeted us; and Brother Rushton and the writer both occupied for a short time.

I was much pleased to find the Saints of the northern district so interested and wide-awake. Their enthusiasm and earnestness gave us a new vision and much encouragement, and we take up the work with an earnest desire to be able to promote the work in this district and to awaken all of the Saints to a sense of their duty.

All must know that the race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong, but to those who do their part and endure to the end. All are called upon to assist in whatever way may be open to them; and those who cannot stand in the pulpit and preach with an eloquent tongue can find work to do which is of vital importance; and that is, to distribute tracts, and to promote sociability among associates and friends. The more active one becomes in promoting the gospel work the more of the Spirit of Christ will he enjoy, and the less inclined to find fault with others or to become jealous of what others are doing. Let us try to be active and studious that no time will be allowed to go to waste; and try to hold up the hands of those called to be leaders in Christ's great work.

Yours sincerely,

G. H. WIXOM.

ORCHARD, NEBRASKA, September 10, 1918.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since you have received any news from the Central Nebraska District and I thought I would write and let you know we are still trying to keep the camp fire burning.

We have just closed our district conference which convened at Neligh, Nebraska, and it was one of the most peaceful conferences I have ever attended. Sister Blanche Andrews, of Lincoln, Nebraska, was present, giving instruction in the auxiliary work which indeed was both instructive and edifying. Brother W. M. Self and the writer presided over the conference, and we are glad to say that every session was marked with the spirit of unity and good feeling.

There were a number of visiting Saints in attendance which always adds to the spiritual uplift of all such gatherings. Brother Charles M. Sodersten was ordained to the office of teacher and Brother Oscar Oehring was recommended to be ordained to office of priest, but by his request it was deferred for a time.

There seems to be a desire among the Saints for greater activity, for which we are thankful. Everyone visiting the conference was very kindly entertained by the Neligh Saints, and we have a great deal to be thankful for. One deplorable condition of our district is the lack of local officers. In the twenty-four years of membership in this district I never saw the demand for labor that there is now. We are made to realize the onward march of the church and the high spiritual standard to which it has attained and still coming up higher. I had the pleasure of attending the priesthood meetings of the late General Conference which were of a high order.

Central Nebraska District voted a ten-day reunion for 1919 to be held at Neligh, Nebraska. The writer was appointed chairman of the committee, and would be glad to receive any information that would tend to make it a success.

We should also like the names and addresses of the scattered Saints of the district, so that we may be able to visit them, so those who may read this please address me at Orchard, Nebraska. May God bless and prosper his work in every department, and may all the Saints and the local officers see the pressing demand for active and efficient service that we may all be collaborators together for the advancement of the work intrusted to our care.

Yours in bonds,

F. S. GATENBY.

DALLAS, TEXAS, September 10, 1918.

Editors Herald: Yes, there is such a thing as a Dallas Branch, and we are pleased to be able to say it is one which is growing rapidly. Three were baptized September 1, and new members are constantly coming in from other branches. Already our little church is too small for the congregation which regularly attends. Brother S. N. Gray and family, formerly of Joplin, Missouri, have recently come to help us in our branch, for which we are very thankful. We feel that the Joplin Branch has lost much in the leaving of this active family, but we are thankful their loss is our gain. Brother Gray took charge immediately upon arrival and we can hardly realize, much less express, how greatly we have been helped in the short time our new pastor has been leading us. We have heard several splendid sermons, three of which have been preached from excellent charts made by himself. Last Sunday night he preached on "The final destiny of the righteous man," and next Sunday night we are promised a sermon on "The final destiny of the wicked man." Many investigators are present at nearly every preaching service.

Every division of the work is growing and is trying hard to keep pace with the rest of the work, even to the Religio. Last Tuesday evening the Religio gave a social at the home of Brother and Sister Nicoll, hoping in this way that our new pastor, wife, and daughter would get better acquainted with the Saints and friends of this place. A very enjoyable evening was spent in games and music, and refreshments were served to about fifty-five. This was such a perfect success, we are encouraged and hope to try it again soon.

Hoping and praying we may ever move onward and upward in this great and glorious work that our goal may be reached, I am,

Your sister in the gospel,

THELMA D. NICOLL.

3014 Birmingham Avenue.

ELKTON, MARYLAND, September 11, 1918.

Editors Herald: New York and Philadelphia District conference and joint conventions of the Sunday school and Religio were held at Elk Mills, Maryland, August 31, September 1 and 2. The business was transacted with dispatch, good order, and a peaceful spirit. The early sacrament service was a spiritual feast especially to the isolated Saints. Many testimonies were given to the truthfulness of the angel's message and of our heavenly Father's care over his children. With the poet we say, "In sickness, in health; in poverty's vale, or abounding in wealth."

After the Sunday school session, preaching was at the appointed time, but Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire who was to be the speaker failed to appear; however, Elder Glaud R. Kuykendall, who is always on the job, occupied the hour to the edification of the Saints and intense interest of those not of the faith. Brother Glaud, by his faithfulness and efficiency, has endeared himself to all the Saints of this district where he has broken the bread of life. May his shadow never grow less, and nothing ever allure him from his calling as a minister for Christ.

The Woman's Auxiliary rendered a very interesting and instructive program. Indeed the work of our sisterhood of the church is a potent factor for the redemption of Zion, as all that are spiritually alive will attest.

Just as our district president was making announcements at the close of the morning sermon Bishop McGuire put in appearance. Nahum's chariots, belated for some cause, explained the nonappearance of the Bishop at the time expected. The Saints were glad indeed to again get a hearty handshake from our Ben, who still carries with him the same sunny smile as of yore. Surely no one will blame us for being justly proud of this product of the New York and Philadelphia District.

The priesthood meeting, with Bishop McGuire presiding, was truly beneficial to all present, and the ministers of the district left this meeting with a deeper conception of the temporal law of the church than ever before. May the time soon come when the bishops of the church will be able to travel among the Saints teaching the temporal law more extensively than hitherto. This is the crying need of the church, if this part of the Lord's vineyard is a criterion to go by. At 7.15 p. m. Brother Roy Squire, son of our district president, the offspring of Ephraim in any way you take him, was there with the musical goods to deliver, like one of Israel's musicians of old. Methinks I can read in his soul these words, "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget its cunning." (Psalm 137: 5.)

At the eight o'clock hour Bishop McGuire was introduced as the speaker. A large audience was present, the speaker making clear the position of the church in having all things equal.

Monday morning at eight o'clock the Saints met in prayer service, the Spirit of the Master being present to a marked degree. The gifts were manifested, giving encouragement to the young, and individual instruction to some.

At 9.30 a. m. the Sunday school association met to transact business for the district. Much work of a reconstructive nature was done at this convention, and foundation laid for more effective work for this department of the Lord's work in the future.

At 10.45 a. m. the Religio convened for business. The business was transacted in a very orderly fashion, and the Religio will surely do better work in the future. It has been lagging in some parts of the district for some time past. And the writer wishes to emphasize that which was emphasized at the conference and conventions to all local workers: Be prompt with your communications with both the district and General Association officials. Do not by any means fail to write them or answer their communications to you, for by so doing you are clogging the machinery of the Lord's work.

At 7.30 p. m. Brother John Lentell, pastor of the Scranton Branch, by request of the Saints, preached to a good audience in the church, many of the visiting Saints leaving on an early train for their respective homes. Brother John L., as we used to call him when he labored in our branch a few years ago, certainly is getting better all the time as herald of the gospel in these latter days. Come again, John L., you are always welcome.

Among the other ministers present in the district were Elders Calvin Rich of Brooklyn, Edmund Gleazer, missionary in the district, Daniel Shaw, and Hosea Bacon, president of the priest's quorum of this district, Brother Walter Lewis, with others of the Aaronic priesthood whose names I do not recall, were present.

Last but not least I must not fail to mention the baseball game Labor Day afternoon; married men versus single men. The writer was manager for the married men while Brother Roy Squire managed the single men, Ephraim Squire, umpire, and be it known to all that he escaped from the diamond without any personal injury. Brother Frank Dipple, of Archbald, and Brother Stanley Jackson, of Elk Mills, were on the mound for the married men, while the battery were two Wilsons of Philadelphia. It was an exciting and interesting game, and no one could tell till the last man was out who would be the victors, but as I am compelled to record the facts, though it hurts, the single men won by the small margin of one run, score 8 to 9.

Respectfully submitted,

HENRY CARR.

TULSA, OKLAHOMA, September 13, 1918.

Editors Herald: Such good things were experienced at the recent Central Oklahoma conventions and district conference, which convened September 6, 7, and 8, that we felt it would be of interest to others.

The Sunday school convention, in charge of Superintendent F. W. Kueffer, was brimful of interesting instruction. One of the excellent features was the address given by Elder Hubert Case on "The opportunities of the times." Our Christmas offering campaign was carefully considered and our determination reaffirmed to reach the goal of $2,000 this year. Timely suggestions relative to home department work were presented by Brother F. F. Wipper.

Religio work in the district was revived. Brother Wipper was selected district president to complete the unexpired term. The "boy movement" of the district was placed in the same hands, subject to ratification by the general director.

Conference opened promptly at 9 a. m. Saturday, and due to President Rannie's splendid arrangements, the rough places were made smooth and the business glided along in excellent order. Noon found the conference routine finished, and everyone in the best of spirits. The educational session of the afternoon was started by Brother Rannie with a paper on "Present needs of our district." It hit the nail squarely on the head. Discussion followed, much enthusiasm developed, and the conference ordered extra copies of Brother Rannie's paper published for all the branches and priesthood of the district.

Our hearts were gladdened by the appearance of a greatly loved former worker in the district, Brother Hubert Case, and we appreciate the good fortune which allowed him to spare a few days from his special mission to the Oklahoma Indians. Brethren Case and Wipper each preached twice, all four sermons being highly inspirational and appropriate.

One of the brightest spots in our conference was the prayer meeting held Sunday afternoon. The spirit of Zion pervaded the assembly. The Lord spoke through Brother Case, calling the Saints to "Come up higher."

The conference was well attended, well arranged by our president, well supported by the Saints, and greatly appreciated and enjoyed by all. The ladies' aid furnished luncheon on the grounds Saturday and Sunday. Visiting Saints found ready welcome in Tulsa homes, and, as usual, Brother Robinson kindly entertained a number at Hotel Tulsa. At the church as well as at the hotel, we missed the bright faces of Brother and Sister James and family, and mourned anew our loss in their removal from the district.

Brother Case preached Monday night, Brother Rannie, Tuesday night, and Brother Wipper is completing the week's series. Brother Case has gone back to the Indians at Elk Reno. Brother Rannie left Wednesday morning. The conference leaves us much encouraged. The Lord continues to bless. All things good and true are working toward the great purposes of God.

Yours for success,

PRESS COMMITTEE.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, September 14, 1918.

Editors Herald: Some of the many readers of our official church paper may be interested in the events that are transpiring in the valleys of the mountains, so will make an effort to chronicle some of them. The last time we wrote for your columns in company with Brother McKim we were in the southern part of the State, preaching to the people who came to hear us, using our missionary automobile on the streets of different towns. In each place where we made an effort we met with some degree of success in reaching the people. We had good crowds to listen to our message and we are pleased to report many friends were made to our cause. Many nights we were kept answering questions until after the midnight hour. The crowds usually would be divided so that we had nearly as many friends who were members of the dominant church as those who were opposed who were also members of that church.

At a small town called Annabella we found some warm friends and they would defend us even when in so doing they would engender strife with their own brethren. We also held meetings in the town of Heber, and on one occasion we had at least four hundred people to hear us. One of their men, an editor of a paper, asked for the privilege of speaking at the conclusion of our service, which was granted. He attempted to show where we had no authority because as he claimed all our authority came through men who had apostatized. We were very glad to reply to him and we think good resulted from his efforts as it permitted the people to see that we had the truth and it could be defended. Brother Ola Johnson, who has stood for many years, is the only member we have living in that place. He has shown his integrity by standing firm amid the bitter opposition which he has met since coming into the church many years ago.

By invitation of the officers and Saints of the Idaho District, I attended the reunion held in Hagerman. I am pleased to say the reunion was a success in every sense. The meetings were well attended by those outside the church at all the evening services. The Saints responded nobly to the demands made upon them not only in trying to attend, but also in helping with their means in defraying the expense of the reunion. Brother R. C. Chambers and Brother N. L. Booker had charge, and everything moved along nicely under their administration. We were blessed in having with us Apostle Peter Anderson who contributed much toward the success of the reunion. The gifts of the gospel were given to cheer and console the Saints as well as to warn them of the conditions coming in upon the world. The Lord has been good to his people, and if they are not prepared for the scenes of distress and calamity which are surely coming on mankind, it is no fault of the Lord's. He has repeatedly warned his Saints of that which is causing distress of nations, but how many are heeding the advice and counsel given? The Saints were strengthened and encouraged for the conflicts of life, and went away from the reunion better prepared for the conflict as a result of being in attendance. I am pleased to say we have some very fine Saints in the Idaho District who are alive in the work. We need more laborers in that field to fill the demand made for missionary work.

The conference of the Utah District will be held in Malad,

Idaho, on October 12 and 13. We hope the Saints who can possibly attend will make an effort to be present. We are trying to provide some interesting programs for the conference, as well as speakers. We believe if the Saints realized the great benefit they would receive by being in attendance, they would make a strenuous effort to be present. It is hard for the Saints, generally speaking, to fully realize the conditions that we are called on to endure here where there is little spirituality manifested.

Hopefully in the conflict,

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, September 14, 1918.

Editors Herald: I notice in your issue of August 28, 1918, a letter from a Merrill B. Keck stationed at Camp McArthur, Texas. He expresses a desire to receive letters from any who care to write, that he may keep "in touch with the church and the members of it."

Such is a good and wise desire, and instead of writing him direct, I am sending it through the HERALD that other of our brethren as well as he, who are so situated, or at the front may receive the benefit, if any is to be had, from the pen of a colaborer. My daily prayers are that our brethren in the army and navy will live clean, pure and holy lives before their comrades and associates, reflecting the light of Christ in the restored gospel, designed by the Master to win souls unto him and to glorify his Father in heaven.

This great conflict is for the establishment of freedom and liberty for all people.

The great spiritual conflict being waged against sin is that men may be entirely free from sin and eventually from the effects of it.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 31, 32.)

"If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."—John 8: 36.

"Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."—Ibid., 17: 17.

"Abide ye in the liberty wherewith ye are made free; entangle not yourselves in sin, but let your hands be clean, until the Lord come."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 24.

These scriptures and many more of the same nature, to which we could refer, urge upon man one thing in particular, above all others: the elimination of sin and the putting on of righteousness. For where sin is in control, righteousness does not abound.

My dear brethren, it has been my lot in life most of the time to labor side by side with a very rough, coarse, vulgar lot, generally speaking. At times some have seemed to vie with each other in seeking to place temptations before me, or to say or do, if possible, that which would endanger me.

I have at times watched for and availed myself of the opportunity when it came, to take one aside and speak kindly and in a brotherly manner to him, telling who I was, that I was trying to live a Christian life, that men ought never to take the name of God upon their lips only with reverence, and that we should set a good example before the young that the rising generation might be free from much of this sin and evil.

In most every case those whom I thus approached seemed humiliated and some even thanked me for the counsel given, and expressed surprise that they had indulged in such low and profane language, saying: "I very often use bad language through habit, not thinking what I am saying."

Now I know this is or has been the case with me. So let us, as the Master has said, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."

May we each stand in holy places and be prepared for the day of vengeance to be visited on the ungodly, is my earnest prayer.

Your fellow yokeman in Christ,

T. J. LAWN.

Erie Beach Reunion

I do not remember of having seen any report of the Chatham reunion at any time in your columns although this year was the seventh one held.—[It was briefly reported in issue of August 7.—EDITORS.]

Our first one was held in 1912 with seventeen tents, and this year we had over one hundred and fifty, besides quite a number who lodged with Saints residing at Erie Beach. It was the largest, and many said the best, yet held. We were favored with the presence of the following-named brethren as the preachers of the reunion as well as a number of missionaries who did not take a part in the preaching.

President Frederick M. Smith, Apostles R. C. Russell, J. W. Rushton, and Paul M. Hanson and Bishops Benjamin R. Mcuire and J. A. Becker, Patriarchs Frederick A. Smith, (who was with us in our first reunion) John Shields, James Davis, and Arthur Leverton, Elders William Grice, R. D. Weaver, John R. Grice, William Flegg, Kenneth Green, and B. H. Doty.

And of the special features of this year's reunion was the presence of Frederick M. Smith. We believe his presence did a great deal of good especially this year while there has been some unrest in Toronto. He endeared himself to the hearts of the Saints wherever he has gone in Ontario. We hope to have him with us again next year.

The three auxiliaries held sessions alternately throughout. Brother Doty had charge of the music.

Another feature of last year and this was the young people's prayer meetings. Owing to the large number in the general prayer meeting the young were desirous of going on a hike down the beach and there in the open air hold their prayer meetings. After lining up on the grounds, about two hundred and fifty marched to their meeting place headed by such young men as Brother R. C. Russell, Patriarch James Davis, B. H. Doty, and John R. Grice. Upon return there was at once a report read of their meetings and how the Lord was with them to bless.

We feel that our young are safe under such care and, from the remarks we have heard from many, they are longing for the next reunion time to come.

The committee consists of the following brethren: Stewart Lamont, president; John C. Dent, secretary-treasurer; David Snobelen, John Hildreth, and Vern Pritchard.

Brother Lamont lands on the grounds, on the day of erection of tents, with a chart of the grounds with place of everyone's tent marked, and has the tents so distributed and then comes his time to answer questions. By the time he has tried hard to satisfy everyone he is very dissatisfied himself and the next day wonders if he really held his religion, so he makes a round trip to see everyone is settled and finds them all happy so forgets for the time the little trouble he has trying to place all where they will enjoy themselves. Brother J. A. Hildreth, with Brother Vern Pritchard to assist, looks after the dining tent and that with credit for themselves.

As the time comes each year for the selection of a committee we look over those present and wonder who could handle the work so satisfactorily and patiently as these three men.

Brother Snobelen lives close to the grounds, and we sometimes wonder how he lives during the reunion from the way he furnishes help to the committee and campers.

The preaching was excellent and the prayer services of a very high order, the Lord making his will known on several occasions.

There were twenty-one baptisms reported, several children blessed, and sick administered to. There were several brethren ordained, several priesthood meetings were held by president Smith.

This year there was a splendid turnout to erect tents. The price of meals was 15 cents for breakfast and supper, and 25 cents for dinner.

Yours fraternally,

JOHN C. DENT.

FROM HERE AND THERE

"Still busy in this part, doing what we can to advance the cause of truth; the progress we leave for the future to reveal. We hope to continue the warfare till the victory is won."—D. E. Tucker, Lucasville, Ohio.

"I am willing to entertain any of our soldier boys at Sunday dinner or any other meal. We live fifteen miles from Camp Dix—the nearest large city to the camp. My husband's business takes him out to Wrightstown or Camp Dix most every week. He is a salesman for the Texas Oil Co., and drives a small car with the Texas star on the side. If any of the Saints have sons or relatives at Camp Dix, please let them know, so they can look us up."—Mrs. A. W. Guild, 207 Parkway Avenue, Trenton, New Jersey.

"Please tell the Saints that visit Rockford, Illinois, and especially any of the boys who come to Camp Grant, that the Rockford Saints welcome them to meet with us at 120 Oakley Avenue. Take a West State Street car to Oakley; first house on the left hand side going north. Sunday school at 10 a. m., and preaching at 11, Religio at 6.30 p. m., with preaching following, every Sunday. Cordial invitation to all."—John A. Daer, 120 Oakley Avenue, Rockford, Illinois.

NO TEA AND COFFEE AT REUNION

"I noted the item in the HERALD about the small amount of tea and coffee used at the Lamoni reunion dining hall. I am quite sure that the one at Joplin used none at all."—In a letter from Sister Blanche I. Andrews, field worker at the Spring River District reunion at Joplin, Missouri, to the general superintendent of the Sunday school.

is spent by the Government. When we learn that such a vast sum as $24,330,000,000 is appropriated by Congress for 1919, it astounds us with its enormity. But that it is well-spent few of us doubt. But if we like to get the details of such enormous transactions, this series of informational letters will give it, freed from bewildering technical terms. If you would like it for yourself, write and ask that your name be put on the mailing list for their literature, to National Woman's Liberty Loan Committee, Treasury Department, Washington, District of Columbia.

A NEW SERIAL IN STEPPING STONES

In an early number of Stepping Stones, the popular Sunday school paper, will begin a new serial by Joseph Anthony, well known in musical circles and who has written some for publication under a little-known nom de plume. The title will be "Birds of a feather," and it will be of special interest to boys of all ages.

Bishop F. B. Blair has sold his Lamoni residence and moved his family to Kansas City, where he is acting as bishop of the Kansas City Stake.

The Government spends more than half of a $1,000 Liberty Bond ($555) every second, in the present war. It takes $4.93 of that amount to draft each man into the service. Ten cents of each dollar is spent to keep the cantonments and training camps going. The Fourth Liberty Loan opens on September 28, and all are urged to start buying at that time. It is expected to dispose of the whole issue in a few days.

THE CHURCH OFFICIALS AND REGISTRATION

September 12, many of our men were called upon to register, among others, President Frederick M. Smith, Bishops B. R. McGuire and J. F. Keir. Of the Twelve, John W. Rushton, Paul M. Hanson, and J. Frank Curtis. In the Lamoni Stake, all of the stake presidency are included, and this is also the case in Independence. All the stake presidency is included and doubtless many of the general missionary force and local presiding officers; also the editors of our publications, HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves, all are included within the registration, except President Elbert A. Smith. In the Herald Publishing House, the manager, linotype men, and many all through the establishment are included. Please remember this if work is not done as promptly as you would like. It is reasonably sure that some will be drafted. Already the Herald Office efficiency is affected.

"At the Toronto District conference, at Toronto, Ontario, October 11, 12, and 13, the following are fully expected to be in attendance: President F. M. Smith, Presiding Bishop B. R. McGuire, Apostles P. M. Hanson and J. A. Gillen. Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith may come. Aside from these we will have James Davis, F. G. Pitt, Grant St. John, and James Wilson of the General Conference appointees. We extend a cordial welcome to any of the general church missionaries who may be contiguous to this city to also attend. Every member of the church in the district should make all possible efforts to attend. A pressing invitation is extended to the membership in the Owen Sound, London, Chatham (Canada) and Kirtland (Ohio) Districts to be present. We hope to make this the very best conference ever held in this district. Give us your support and presence."—T. W. Williams, 139 Springhurst Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

News has just reached us of the death of M. C. Fisher's oldest son, Lawrence. He was a splendid all around young man, took an interest in all boys' sports, his school work, and in the church work. He was in his junior year at high school, and just getting to the point to be of real assistance to his father. On Thursday, the 12th, it appears he visited one of the military camps where there were over a hundred cases of Spanish influenza. Friday he complained; Saturday a physician was called and pronounced it a light touch of grip; Sunday he seemed to be doing very well and there was no complication, but that night at 2 a. m. pneumonia developed, and though every resource was used, including oxygen, he passed away within twenty-four hours. It is a grievous loss to this family and the church.

SUCCESSFUL MEETING WITH INDIANS

Elder Hubert Case has returned to Lamoni after meeting with the representatives of twelve tribes of Indians at El Reno in a big council meeting, and later with two of the tribes separately. He reports a wonderful meeting with remarkable response from those present as he presented the story of the coming forth of the record of the forefathers of the Indians. The meeting had been called by Elder Philip Cook, and arrangements are made for a similar meeting to be addressed by President F. M. Smith on October 12, at Red Rock, Oklahoma.

The Lamoni Sunday school recently made a little drive to get most of the Christmas offering out of the way. As a result, $1,104.05 in cash and $473.55 in pledges were raised in one week. The goal set is $2,250, with a membership of about 700, and the committee are confident the amount will be raised before Christmas.

Allen Trachsel, who was in the radio school at Harvard University, took sick about the 16th of the month, speedily developed pneumonia, and in a few days had passed away. There seems to be a serious epidemic of Spanish influenza in the East. We learn that several prominent physicians and nurses have passed away from its effects. When a person is run down it speedily develops into pneumonia and that appears so far, in most cases, to be fatal. Brother Trachsel was an exemplary young man and died in a course of service, preparing himself for work in the United States Army.

EDUCATION AS "COLD-BLOODED UTILITY"

From the military pamphlet put out recently by the University of Iowa, we quote a statement or so of great import: "The decision of the War Department to train in college this vast body of men is the most striking indorsement of higher education that history has ever recorded. Not as a matter of sentiment but with a view to cold-blooded utility this plan has been adopted." The plan referred to is the students' army training corps, which is making provision to train as many as possible of the men who have graduated from high school, but has not as yet arranged work for those in secondary schools or with less schooling. So there are instances where education is stripped of all sentimental trimmings and viewed in the cold light of efficiency. This is only one instance.

CONVERT YOUR BONDS

Governmental authorities are at a loss to understand why there are so many people hesitating about converting their 3½ and 4 per cent Liberty Bonds into the 4½ per cent issue. There is nothing at all to lose, and the ¼ per cent interest to gain. But the bonds should be taken to banks or trust companies at an early date lest at the latest date allowed (November 9) there be an overburdening of these institutions in handling the rush. Holders of coupon bonds are strongly urged to request issue of registered bonds in order to protect themselves against risk of loss, theft, or destruction of their bonds.

CHILDREN'S HOME LIBRARY

The east parlor of the Children's Home has been made into a reading room and library for the benefit of the children. Several secondhand bookcases have been purchased by the committee, and some donations received. One subscription to a boys' magazine has been donated by the committee, and several in town have been solicited to give their old magazines to the Children's Home. They have, therefore, a small selection of secondhand magazines, but they are mostly of one or two kinds. They still need more good magazines, as they have a large family. Also they need good children's books. Before sending, it would be well to write to Elder A. M. Chase, at the Children's Home, and avoid unnecessary duplication. An effort is also being made to fit up the play room, though they have very few playthings at present.

Sister Emma Burton reports that on page 900, line 5, of the issue for September 11, it reads "but thorough transgression," instead of "through transgression."

Not in war, not in wealth, not in tyranny, is there any happiness to be found—only in kindly peace, fruitful and free.—Ruskin.

COLLEGE DAY

Pursuant to action of General Conference, next Sunday is College Day, at which time collections will be taken up to assist in the maintenance of one of the most important institutions of the church; and one that means more for the future of the church, we can safely say, than any other one, since it is preparing young men and young women for better service.

It is a coincidence that as we were preparing an editorial on College Day, the mail man brought a letter from Doctor P. P. Claxton, Commissioner of Education for the United States Government, requesting that we publish the following letter from President Wilson:

I am pleased to know that despite the unusual burdens imposed upon our people by the war they have maintained their schools and other agencies of education so nearly at their normal efficiency. That this should be continued throughout the war and that, in so far as the draft law will permit, there should be no falling off in attendance in elementary schools, high schools, or colleges is a matter of the very greatest importance, affecting both our strength in war and our national welfare and efficiency when the war is over. So long as the war continues there will be constant need of very large numbers of men and women of the highest and most thorough training for war service in many lines. After the war there will be urgent need not only for trained leadership in all lines of industrial, commercial, social, and civic life, but for a very high average of intelligence and preparation on the part of all the people. I would therefore urge that the people continue to give generous support to their schools of all grades and that the schools adjust themselves as wisely as possible to the new conditions to the end that no boy or girl shall have less opportunity for education because of the war and that the Nation may be strengthened as it can only be through the right education of all its people.

Cordially and sincerely yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

We are also printing in these columns a communication from George N. Briggs, President of Graceland College, setting forth the present situation.

Graceland was accepted at one time, but it later developed that no schools receive the students' Army Training Corps except those having enrolled one hundred or more young men, eighteen years of age or more, who had at least graduated from high school.

Graceland College has grown stronger with the passing of years and is worthy of our support. It is true that it has not confined its efforts to strictly collegiate work, because being the only institution of learning maintained by the church, it has tried and still tries to meet the needs of our young people. So strong departments in commercial, preparatory, and studio work have been maintained.

At the same time, during the past six years, the collegiate department has shown a steady increase, which has become more marked since Professor Floyd M. McDowell was placed in charge of this department as dean. This year, the largest enrollment in the history of the school is reported, and over fifty per cent increase over last year. This is especially due to the heavy enrollment of our young women, who are seeking to prepare for more efficient service to their country and church.

Graceland College deserves our heartiest and strongest support. Our boys of eighteen years of age who are not high school graduates should be encouraged, and even urged, to at once take advantage of the radio department, which is fully accredited by the Government.

Each of us should consider it a privilege to render all the support we can at the regular annual collections for the benefit of our school work. Graceland deserves and should receive our best support. Remember College Day, October 6.

S. A. B.

Sunday, October 6, is College Day. You are expected to "do your bit."

STUDENTS' ARMY TRAINING CORPS

There has been considerable misunderstanding and lack of understanding, not only among our readers but throughout the country generally relative to the organization of the Students' Army Training Corps in colleges and universities of the United States. This is not to be wondered at, because of the fact that the final legislation authorizing the S. A. T. C. was not enacted by Congress until late in August, and the official announcement of the new plan was first made public at a meeting of the war officials with about 600 presidents and deans of colleges and universities of the Middle West at Fort Sheridan on August 30 and 31.

Previous to this the war department had sent out preliminary announcements, because colleges and universities had to be advised in view of the fact that their plans for the year would be very materially altered. However, the announcements were tentative and were based on proposed legislation by Congress, and no one could make an official announcement of just what that would be. The Assistant Secretary of War summarized the situation very completely when he said in the United States Official Bulletin of September 6, 1918:

I think that the Students' Army Training Corps plan is now going along in good shape. The technical difficulty about the whole thing was that it got jammed for the reason that we could not anticipate action by Congress; but the college business, as I know from experience, is a seasonable business, like a summer boarding house—you have to make your plans before a certain date in order to start by a certain date. We had to do a certain amount of guessing and we had to do a certain amount of keeping the institutions guessing, but now I think the thing is perfectly clear.

Graceland College, along with many others, had been granted a unit of the S. A. T. C. A complete list of such colleges and universities appears in the Official Bulletin of September 16, 1918. However, when the final plans of the War Department, based on the legislation of Congress enacted the latter part of August, were officially announced it was found that only collegiate students, that is, graduates of fully standardized and officially accredited high schools, were eligible for enrollment in college and induction into the S. A. T. C., and that the minimum number for the organization of such a unit was one hundred. Students of academic attainment of less than high school graduation could not voluntarily enroll in any school and secure induction into a unit of the S. A. T. C. Induction of such young men into the S. A. T. C. can be accomplished only by application through the local board in the county in which the man of draft age is registered, with the chances that the applicant may be inducted soon or may not be inducted at all.

Graceland College could not meet the requirement of the one hundred collegiate students, that is, one hundred young men who were graduates from the high schools of the country. The result is that no unit of the S. A. T. C. is to be organized at our only institution of higher learning, but our young men of high school graduation must seek their training elsewhere. If the church could have produced the necessary number of high school graduates the unit would have been organized. Lieutenant Frank Godfrey arrived at Graceland on Friday, September 20, to complete the organization, but on ascertaining our condition he was ordered to another college for work.

As has been announced, "The decision of the War Department to train in college this vast body of men is the most striking indorsement of higher education that history has ever recorded. Not as a matter of sentiment but with a view to cold-blooded utility this plan has been adopted."

In response to the call through the papers a large number of our young people reported at Graceland ready for study and work. Many of them, not being high school graduates, were not eligible. When this fact was ascertained application was made for a combined collegiate and vocational section, which would include our young men of less than high school graduation. The Government could not approve this combined unit because of the fact that the registration in the collegiate section all over the country was found to exceed the Government's estimate, with the result that they did not have sufficient equipment and officers for the collegiate men alone. For example, the estimated number of collegiate men in Iowa alone was 4,000, whereas the advanced enrollment in the universities and colleges of the State will be exceeded by at least 50 per cent, so that the Government cannot for the present extend military training to secondary school students.

The Government very strongly urges young men of draft age who are not high school graduates to enter school and prepare for some vocational position in the army, such as wireless operators, mechanics, plumbers, carpenters, blacksmiths, engineers, automobile drivers, etc. The Government needs some 27,500 of these each month, and among these vocations perhaps the best is that of wireless operator. Graceland College is fully equipped to train wireless operators in eighteen weeks and to those young men who entered without high school graduation the Government recommended the pursuit of such a course, with the assurance that they would be inducted into the radio or wireless branch of the Government service on being called into the army. These young men were also urged to file with their questionnaires an application to be inducted into the vocational section of the S. A. T. C. in those institutions where it is already organized. Pending such induction they could continue their preparation in college as radio operators and be certain of service either with the S. A. T. C. or in the army when their order number is reached in the regular course of calling men of draft age.

The church, through its scholarship fund and the funds established by the several institutions of the church and many of Graceland's friends, has made provision for assisting all worthy young men who desired to avail themselves of this exceptional opportunity. Many young men have taken advantage of these provisions and their preparation for better service to their country and consequently to the church will result in great good, not only to the individual but will justify the wise provision for such help made by the church, the several auxiliaries concerned and the individuals who have assisted in the establishment of the funds.

These young men will thus be assured of radio service, a service on a much higher level than many others, better paid, and above all enabling one to render a high grade of service in a branch in which the Government is in very great need of men. It is the high privilege of such men to render a most patriotic duty to the Government in this time of her great need, and Graceland authorities rejoice to know that there is a very large group of the church young men responding to this patriotic call of our country. These young men will be able, within a very few weeks, to send and receive the minimum of ten words per minute, which the Government requires for entrance into the radio work, and they will thus be assured of induction into the radio branch of the Government service when their number is reached. They may then be either (1) continued in school; (2) sent to some other school; or (3) ordered to a cantonment for further instruction. Graceland's radio work is conducted under the supervision of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and official Government certificates are issued to those attaining a proficiency of ten words per minute, which can ordinarily be reached in five or six weeks.

College is now in session, but our young men of draft age are strongly urged by the Government to take advantage of the few remaining months to make the preparation essential for this most important piece of work. But such young men should act promptly. Full information can be secured by writing to the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Not only has the response on the part of the young men of the church for preparation for service been of the very highest order, but our young women have responded to the call of the Government as never before, with the result that Graceland is entering upon a year with the largest attendance in her history in spite of the war and war conditions.

Last college year the average decrease throughout the country in college enrollment was 20 per cent, whereas the increase in Graceland was 25 per cent, and the enrollment this year as compared with last year at the same period shows an increase of 54 per cent.

The period of reconstruction is to come, and our young women are to be called upon as never before in the history of civilization to occupy in lines heretofore unknown to them, but may it be said, in their honor and that of their parents and friends, that they are preparing in numbers beyond the fondest hopes of the church, and they will be ready when their great opportunity comes.

GEORGE N. BRIGGS,
President Graceland College.

The foregoing from the pen of President Briggs will be read with interest by all who are directly concerned in the question of the S. A. T. C. It is to be regretted that our young people could not meet the educational standards the Government requires for the organization of a unit of the S. A. T. C. at Graceland College, but it emphasizes the urgent necessity of qualifying educationally for greater responsibility. There is every reason to urge redoubled energy in this direction. We must be alert, active, and zealously interested in what are the tremendous tasks ahead of us.

We urge careful reading of President Briggs's article.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
President of the Church.

BOY MOVEMENT

Attention should be called to the editorial on this topic, in the Woman's Auxiliary columns, as Sister Andentia Anderson, in the SAINTS' HERALD of September 5, has made some excellent points, especially in calling attention to our neglect of young people in the past, not giving proper opportunities for reasonable and right association. It is right that opportunity should be given for study, but it is also right and more than right, and necessary, that opportunity be given for social development, unless we wish it to take place entirely outside of the church.

Nor do we plead in this for narrow and exclusive action, trying to make ourselves entirely sufficient for ourselves, and excluding all others, for this should not be. We should offer an opportunity to get acquainted with one another, and especially should we consider the needs and proper development of our own young people.

The boy movement belongs, at least in large part, to a period before adolescence. But it includes and is carried over into the adolescent period. It is at this period that the Oriole girls and Boy Scouts ought to have something in common, that is, in the early years of adolescence; not forcing matters but providing for reasonable social time.

Professor F. M. McDowell, second vice president of the General Religio Society, has chosen the Boy Scout Manual as a basis for the boy movement in the church. The writer has had some acquaintance with this problem, both in consideration of young men and boys, and also in the study of psychology and education. The problem differs somewhat in dealing with young men, as at Graceland College and in our Sunday school class, and dealing with boys of an earlier age.

When we were in Boston, Massachusetts, we took particular pains to arrange for a women's organization and also for men's classes. This latter took up at least as much time, if not more time, than the priesthood meetings, as they were open to all the men of the branch. The Oriole girls were already organized. Steps were taken for the organization for the young boys, and a few tramps took place that fall, including one on a holiday of the boys and Oriole girls together, with proper chaperones. At this time and before, we made a considerable review of the situation and then came to the conclusion that the Boy Scout Manual offered our best basis for proceeding, and for general organization. We therefore secured the book, had a scout master appointed and arranged for preliminary organization.

Our plans for that first winter included a few tramps in the woods, and then joint tramps to certain points of Boston, with a proper guide to offer suitable explanation at each point of interest. Unfortunately we were called back to Lamoni and have not been informed that this latter plan was ever fully carried out.

Something of instruction should be given, but not in a pedagogic manner. Boys will learn if turned loose in the woods, and will ask rather too many than too few questions. It is by no means necessary that the military features be given the principal emphasis, though there may be some tendency that way at present. The Boy Scout movement is strictly in accordance with the best information now possessed in psychology and pedagogy, for work with boys, leading up to and including early adolescence.

Having given the matter considerable attention, we think it is only fair that we should give to Brother McDowell this word of support and encouragement in his work, for we are satisfied that he is proceeding along right lines.

He has not laid his plan down as inviolable, but merely as a working basis upon which we will build, and from which we shall vary as circumstances render that advisable.

It is related as it should be to the young people's society, the Religio. We hope for great things under the organization of the Religio, making it more distinctively a young people's organization and providing for social recreation, as well as for study.

SOME FALLACIES

The Christian Work for July 13 contains an excellent editorial pointing out some of the fallacies which have been overturned by this war. First: "It makes no difference what a man believes; only his actions count." It has been the belief of the Germans, their conviction, that might makes right, which has forced their action. They have shown a man will act as he believes, so follows a Germanized idea of the Deity who is a sort of kaiser and of like power.

"The creed of the Hun, including its title has been reproduced by extracts from such men as Frederick the Great, von Clausewitz, William II, Moltke, Treitschke, Lasson, Bernhardt, Bethman-Hollweg, and the war book of the German General Staff."

Another fallacy is that education will change disposition and conduct. Germany has many great universities but its men of education were powerless to prevent this catastrophe, the greatest catastrophe of history. Her education has been only to laud her selfish intentions and justify her crime.

We have known this a long time and our men have preached for a long time that sincerity is not enough. We have urged and insisted as a church that it makes the greatest possible difference what a man believes. We have not needed this war to show us that, though it is true that this war has demonstrated both of the above fallacies as existing in Germany.

We have insisted that education is largely development, and increases a man's power for good or for ill. But this is an argument in favor of education rather than the reverse. We urge that together with the intellectual there must and should be moral training; and moral education is best furnished by the church according to the leading psychologists. Morality or ethics is best taught through and as religion.

The war, especially so far as this country is concerned is a battle of spiritual ideals or creeds and not for material advantage.

TWOFOLD AIM OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

(Address by T. W. Williams to the General Sunday School Convention at Independence, Missouri, April 5, 1918.)

Surely music hath charm for the soul. The people of Independence should certainly feel grateful for their opportunity along musical lines. While listening to the renditions to-night I felt as though I could sense "God with us." I sincerely trust that his presence will continue during the entire service.

PURPOSE OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The all-absorbing purpose of the Sunday school is to—Win men and women to the service of God.

Arouse the latent forces and enlist the buoyant spirits of the young men and women in practical Christian service.

To train the mind and discipline the heart of childhood.

To inspire reverence for God and love for humanity.

To make the establishment of God's truth and service for others the paramount purpose in all human effort.

To demonstrate that unless one has self-crucifixion he cannot have communion with the Soul of Things.

To demonstrate that self-abnegation is absolutely necessary in order for one to be in touch with the Infinite.

The department of the Sunday school has presented its purpose and objects in this form:

"To bring souls to a knowledge of the truth revealed in the gospel of Jesus Christ as given anciently and restored in these last days.

"To inspire with a love for doing God's will that they may develop perfect characters in Christ."

I would like to transpose these two declarations, putting the language in the first person instead of the third. It will then read as follows:

To come to a knowledge of the truth revealed in the gospel of Jesus Christ as given anciently and restored in these last days;

To be inspired with a love for doing God's will that we may develop perfect characters in Christ.

Please remember that our mission is to come. Only by coming ourselves can we bring others, and, as we come ourselves, we will bring others. The word bring savors of satisfaction—as though we had arrived. We haven't. We are coming. We are growing in grace and farther knowledge of the truth. The word bring suggests stagnation in that we assume that we have approximated to the Ideal; that we have arrived at the goal and with this feeling we will go out and bring others to the point where we are.

GOODNESS IS NOT A GIFT

The great illusion of the world is the thought that man can make other men good. This is impossible. Goodness is not a gift. It is not a contribution. It is a growth. It is something which springs up in a man and expands. You cannot take it to another. You cannot bequeath it. You cannot impart it. The goodness in you must reach the goodness in some other man and form an affinity. This is the only way in which you can reach men.

The old idea of conversion is wrong. Men have gone out and sought to convert others. No man can convert another man. The man himself, by the aid of God, can bring about his own conversion. When an individual attempts to convert another, he assumes a task far beyond his keeping.

When we try to make others good, we invariably approach them in the wrong spirit and with the wrong attitude. This has been the trouble with the religious world down through the ages. Men have assumed that they were enabled to interpret God and that any man who did not understand God as they did needed to be taught, and so each one has approached the other with a wrong attitude of mind.

Have you not sensed this feeling when you have come in contact with other religionists? Do you think that others will be pleased when you approach them in this manner?

The great dominating impulse of the world is love—love for God and love for fellow man. Only as we approach others in the spirit of love; only as we convey to others that we place them upon the same plane with ourselves; only as we evidence to them that we ourselves are only learners, that we are striving to find the ultimate truth, can we hope to reach or stir their deepest impulses. It is only as we recognize the honest purpose of others, and attribute like honesty to what we claim for ourselves that we can hope to win them to Christ.

The attitude which the religious world has largely assumed towards men generally has been one of narrowness, of intolerance, of bigotry. It has assumed that "what we have is good and what you have is not good." It has conveyed the thought that "what we have is true and what you have is not true."

UNIVERSALITY OF TRUTH

Every religion contains truth. It is the truth in every religion which holds the devotion of the people. Were it not for the truth which is inherent in each religion, its votaries would not stand for it—would not live to it—would not die for it. It seems to me exceedingly presumptuous that we arrogate to ourselves superiority as we contemplate the wonderful revelations of God down through the ages, and sense the statement of Paul wherein he said that, "God . . . hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him." It seems, in the face of this significant statement, that we should be abashed and humbled. Let us be resolved as we approach others with this message of truth and testimony of righteousness, that we do so in the spirit of contrition, of love, and forbearance, and fellowship.

When Paul stood on Mars Hill and looked upon that bewildered crowd of idolatrous worshipers and noted the multiplicity of gods—gods of every description and of every kind—and realized that these people were ignorantly worshiping God he was led to take their very idolatry and establish a common relationship.

These people believed in propitiation. They wished to keep on the good side of all the gods. For fear that there might be one god which they had overlooked and for whom they had not erected an altar wherein they might offer worship they proceeded to build an altar, and above it they placed an inclusive inscription which read, "To the unknown god."

A modern teacher seeking to impose his idea of another god on these people would say, "Why, you are all wrong. You are mistaken. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves. You are idolaters. You haven't any religion worth while."

Paul did not do this. Paul was a diplomat. He said, "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious." He then proceeded and stated, "Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship him declare I unto you." What! Him (the God whom ye ignorantly worship) declare I unto you! That is to say, "Athenians! You are worshiping the same God that I am worshiping. You are worshiping the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and of Jacob. Deep down in your souls there is a hunger for the Infinite; in your hearts there exists a longing for the great God of the universe. I do not appeal to your ignorance. I do not emphasize your error. I waive all that. I come to you as your friend and brother to talk to you about that God which is deep down beneath the rubbish and the error and the wrong. I appeal to that God." In this appeal he reached their hearts. He stirred them to penitence and action.

THE MISSION OF OUR INSTITUTIONS

The mission of the Latter Day Saints; the mission of all the Latter Day Saint institutions, is to find the divine in every man—to touch the God within—to speak to the soul of man. We are not here to quibble over theology. We are not here to carp and to wrangle over petty differences. We are here to interpret God in terms which can be understood by men in their particular vernacular and in their own language and to appeal to them where they are—to reach them on the plane on which they live.

Unless the Latter Day Saint Sunday school, this institution of which I am to speak to-night, is doing something for the world which no other Sunday school is doing, there is then no excuse for its existence. If we are doing identical work, if we are performing identical service with the rest of the Sunday school organizations in America, then the thing for us to do is to disband and cooperate with them. There is no occasion for us to multiply organizations and thus divide the forces making for the same purpose.

I ask, What is the function and purpose of the Latter Day Sunday school? It is not a sect. It is not concerned with sectarian philosophy or doctrine. It is a divine institution. It has a world-wide mission. What is that mission? What is the character of this institution?

Let me have a heart-to-heart talk with you, to-night. How many of you believe that God called Joseph Smith and inspired him to restore the everlasting gospel to men? How many of you really believe this? When I use the term believe I mean all which the term comprehends—not blind assent—not nominal avowal, but consecrated accord. How many of you feel in your very soul that the Church of Jesus Christ has been established on the earth for the last time and that this church is to be the one solvent of all human ills? How many here really believe this? How many of you are willing to risk your all—your hope for success in this life and realization of the life to be—on this proposition?

HOW MUCH DO YOU BELIEVE?

How many of you believe that Independence, Missouri, is, in time, to become the capital city of the coming theocracy of God? I want you to answer this question to your own consciousness. Do you believe these things theoretically? Or do you believe them in every fiber of your being, in every heart beat? How many of you recognize that there is a wonderful preparatory work to be carried on before the fulfillment of these purposes—that swift messengers are to go to the various nations of the earth by hundreds, aye, by thousands, yes, by tens of thousands, to carry the message of love and peace to the inhabitants of the world?

How many of you feel that in this day when the institutions of men are tottering that this great institution, the Church of Jesus Christ which God has established for the last time, is to be the one permanent institution which will stand when all other institutions have crumbled into dust? Do you as members of the church and also of the Sunday school really believe this?

If you do, then I ask do you believe that in this great preparatory effort some one else will do the necessary work or do you feel in your very soul that God has delivered the oracle of God to you and that upon your loyalty and upon your service depends the fulfillment of that purpose?

Religion consists not so much in seeking God as in feeling him. A man might see God and be a long way off from him, but when he feels God he is close up to the life of things. He has the power to accomplish what God intends for him to accomplish.

I believe in the old-fashioned conversion. Let me repeat that statement. I believe in the old-fashioned conversion. I believe in a religious experience. No man is safe in this world unless he has had a religious experience. How many under the sound of my voice have had a religious experience? How many of you have really sensed God? How many of you have felt something beyond the human—have felt God in even a limited degree? Raise your hands! Thank God for that!

In the years which have passed I have attended prayer meetings and Sunday school and church and listened to adults bear testimony and boldly assert that they knew that this was the work of God. At the same time I have heard the young say, "Oh, I wish I could say that." Many young men and young women in this church to-night are drifting along life's highway wholly absorbed with the transient, trivial, and superficial, entirely oblivious of the weightier affairs which concern the soul as well as the mind.

There are many members of this church who have been baptized and yet cannot lay claim to a religious experience. Hundreds of our young people have had no religious experience. The mission of the church—the mission of the Sunday school—is to exert every possible effort to make it possible for our young people to have a religious experience, so each can say, "I have sensed God."

As between a religion of the head and a religion of the heart, give me a religion of the heart. I need both, but a religion of the head without a religion of the heart is of little moment. It is not reliable or trustworthy. Given a religion of the heart and it must eventuate in a normal and reliable head religion.

A RELIGION OF TO-DAY

The great need of your young people is that they may enter into the very heart of things, to secure a grip on the dynamic power which inspired the establishment of this church, to sense God in the direction and guidance of the church.

Unfortunately and all too frequently, we have talked to the youth of the church in terms of yesterday. We have told our children of Paul and Peter and James and John. We have stressed the achievements of the past. I do not criticise this particularly except to emphasize that this church was organized not to teach that God was yesterday, but to demonstrate that God is to-day, that he lives and that he is present in his universe.

Unless we can establish this fact there is no excuse for our existence either as a church or a Sunday school. We must demonstrate the living presence of God. I am satisfied that our Sunday school lessons contain the message which God gave to Paul and Peter. There is no occasion, however, that we canonize Paul and Peter and carnalize Gomer and Ulysses. If you expect to get a grip on the world and to convert men you must show them that God is doing as marvelous a work in Independence to-day as he ever did in Corinth, or Galatia, or Rome two thousand years ago.

Our Sunday school lessons have had to do with the biographies and geographies and ethnologies of the past to such an extent that our young people know practically nothing of the church polity, or divine purpose of our own church.

The things of the present grip. Many wonder why Christian Science is absorbing the attention of so many people. They are puzzled because millions of people throughout America are flocking to the Christian Science standard. There is a reason.

It is not my mission to attack Christian Science nor do I care to reflect either on the intelligence or integrity of its devotees. If you will study the institution closely you will discover that the one thing which Christian Science claims to do is to bring God down to the present. It postulates God here and now instead of there and then, and herein lies its power, here its secret and success.

In opposition to Christian Science stands the church of the living God, the kingdom of heaven, the one institution above all others which God has established to lead men to the right. If we would reach the masses, if we would counteract the mental delusion of mortal mind found in Christian Science, we must, in terms of sanity and reason, interpret God to men to-day.

Why go down to the catacombs of the past and live in the ruins of yesterday when the responsive hearts of men and women have but to be touched by the inspiration of our philosophy to spring forth as monumental witnesses for God?

I assure you my friends, ministers, and members of the Sunday school, the hour is here when we must bring God into the consciousness of every man and woman with whom we come in contact. This is our paramount work. This latter-day evangel which God has established in our day must absorb our thought and engage our attention. It should be the central thought around which we weave our entire propaganda. If we fail in this we have no particular excuse for our existence.

We live in a different age from the apostles. We are grappling with vastly different problems. Along many lines we have no recorded criterion to determine the course which we must pursue. God does not require that we gauge our lives entirely by the record of the lives of men long since dead. He does ask us to live our lives as he would have us live them to-day. I am not reflecting on the validity of the Scriptures. I do not minimize their value as a general rule of action. They are not absolute. They are finger posts pointing the way rather than metes and bounds beyond which we cannot pass.

Our young people, for some reason or other, are not entering into the spiritual realization of our religion. The reason for this is that we do not bring them into the consciousness of God. We are not conveying to them a vivid conception of God in terms of to-day, neither are we supplying living evidence. God placed eyes in our forehead so we could look ahead. If he had intended for us always to look to the past he would have placed our eyes in the back of our head. Our Sunday school lessons must connect up with life's experiences or we will utterly fail to hold our young people.

HONOR THE GIFTS OF GOD

There has been a disposition in the later years among our people to deprecate spiritual manifestations. True, mistakes have been made. Ofttimes humanity asserts itself. The human has in many instances obscured the divine. There have been times when we could not distinguish the line which differentiated the divine from the human. We should be exceedingly careful however not to speak slightly of the things of God in the presence of the young. Their little ears are big enough to detect the carping word or the criticising spirit. When they note your criticism of the things which are spiritual they will easily emulate. They are great imitators. It is only a step from destructive criticism to absolute doubt and unbelief.

The purpose of the Sunday school is to establish faith in this latter-day work. I do hope that those of us who have passed through the varying experiences of the church have really arrived at that point where our every purpose, where all that we may do or say, will converge to establish faith in this church, in its institutions, in its philosophy, in its eternal purpose. Things may at times go askew and we do not, and possibly will not, exercise the highest wisdom, yet, after all, we must know that the mistakes are of men, and back of all of these human limitations stands God working out his wonderful purpose, and this in spite of human limitations.

THE ARMY OF TO-MORROW

The Sunday school is preparing the army of tomorrow. You heard last night, and the same has been repeated here this afternoon, of great opportunities in the South. Opportunities for service and work are opening up in Mexico, Yucatan, and other countries. It has been shown how our young people may be instrumental in carrying the gospel to these benighted people. I wonder how many young men and young women, boys and girls, are thinking of the day when God is going to call you to service—not Brother Wells or Brother Williams—but when God is going to call you to service! I wonder how many of you have said, "If God wants me he can have me. I am ready. I am ready to do anything that God wants me to do!" How many of you have come forth on bended knee and lifted your voice to God and said, "O Lord, the talent which thou hast given me is thine. It is at your service and call. Accept and bless it for thy glory. Lead me to so apply that when thou may desire it I can consecrate it all to thy glory!" How many of you young men and women are holding this thought?

There should be many young men and women in the church who would be willing to study Spanish and French and Chinese and Italian and other languages with a view to going to these respective nations with the latter-day evangel.

This is the all-absorbing question which should concern the church and Sunday school to-day.

The Sunday school wishes you to feel that you must consecrate your life to the service of God. Pennies in the coffers of the Sunday school is not necessarily an index of spiritual power. Souls saved measures the real worth of any institution or purpose. The bringing of pennies into the treasury is vital and necessary. I would not discourage this laudable purpose. I congratulate the workers for the heroic service which you have rendered along this line and for the continued service which I know you will give but, Sunday school workers, the great big thought which should grip your souls to-night is not the financial success of the Sunday school, either local or general, not the temporal prosperity of the local or general church. This should be our concern: The salvation of souls. How many souls are you reaching? How many individuals are you lifting from the slough of despondency and the fields of sin to the point of divine contact—to communion with God?

This is our mission. This is our work. To reach men. Individual consecration is the slogan of the age. It is the one passport to divine endowment. It makes for enlarged vision and soul expansion.

"GOD WANTS CONSECRATED SERVICE"

The Bishop yesterday made a statement which impressed me very deeply. He said, "If our giving only embraces money it will not amount to a great deal—what God wants is consecrated service. Men must give themselves unreservedly to the service of God." I am in accord with this. What a man loves he is interested in—what he is interested in he loves. The man who is interested more in some other woman than he is in his own wife does not love his wife. The man who is more interested in bushels of corn, in horses and in cows and acres of land than in the establishment of Zion, does not love Zion.

Many of you are willing to gamble with a life insurance organization as to the duration of your life. How many of you are willing to seek protection for your house or your property with some earthly insurance company? This church is the greatest insurance company on earth. We should be willing to trust God and his institutions. The man who is willing to really trust God will throw his all into the execution of the divine purpose without any mental reservation.

Salvation is not protection from evil. Salvation is immunity from sin. A great many people believe that when they are saved they are protected—a kind of a lightning-rod arrangement. This is not salvation. It is selfishness. A man might be in hell and still be saved. Those who believe that salvation consists in coming up to Zion, getting within the inside walls of the city and, whilst chaos and confusion is rampant on the outside, expect to be protected and shielded, are due to a great awakening.

"DINNA GIE UP"

True consecration comprehends going up to Zion to be disciplined for service to, in turn, go out into the world of sin and confusion and win souls to Christ. The man who really loves this work would rather be in hell working to redeem souls than to abide in heaven sitting still. He would rather be in China or California or Canada converting the heathen than sitting down at ease in Zion.

It is stated that at the siege of Lucknow, when the British garrison was sorely besieged and the struggling defenders were contemplating surrender an old woman lying on a pallet of straw cried out, "Nay, nay, dinna gie up. I 'ear 'em comin'. I 'ear 'em steppin'." The brave men looked into her dying face, took courage and continued to defend the fortress. A few hours later relief came, the garrison was saved, and the enemy vanquished.

I want you aged men and women who have grown gray in the service, those of you who have kept the camp fires burning throughout the dark and trying day, during the heat and the storm and trial of the passing years, do not lose heart! Some of you have lost heart. Some of you are commencing to think that we will not win. Place your ear to the ground and you will hear the steady tramp, tramp, tramp of thousands of feet, young men and women who are coming to carry this work to consummation, to bring it to its full fruition, to carry the banner of King Immanuel farther into the enemy's country than you have ever carried it before, to storm the trenches of the enemy and drive him back into his own land. These young men and women with clear eye, clean expression, pure bodies, and consecrated souls are the sure word of prophecy of to-morrow.

For such the Sunday school has been organized to bring them in touch with God.

Keep heart, comrade, God may be delayed by evil
 Yet he suffers no defeat, Even as a chance rock
 In some upland brook may change a river's course
 Yet no rock, no, nor the mountain fastnesses can Hold it, from its destiny, the sea. God is not foiled.
 The drift of the World's Will is greater than all wrong.
 Earth and her years down joy's bright way, or sorrow's longer road
 Is leading toward the purpose of the skies.

SUNDAY THE EDENIC SABBATH AND JESUS CHRIST THE TRUE WAVE OFFERING

[The following may prove of some interest as presenting a different view on the question of the Sabbath. It is based principally upon Gamble's work. It may also be noted that no effort is made to carry the days back before the exodus. Gamble's work, however, does raise an interesting question concerning the Sabbath from the exodus to the crucifixion of Christ. We have seen a note in one of the Hebrew papers tending to confirm this, that the Sabbath was not a fixed day of the week in ancient times, but was rather a date of the month.—EDITORS.]

The day that God rested (Genesis 2: 1, 2) was, and is, his holy sabbath. Though it was the seventh day, yet it was Sunday. Now in order to prove this we will have to start at the time when God brought the children of Israel out of Egypt (1491 B. C.), and follow the dates and days down to the time when God came down on Mount Sinai, which occurred on the fifth day of their third month (Exodus 12: 1-6; 13: 1-4; 19th chapter; Leviticus 23: 10, 11, 15-17; Nehemiah 9: 13, 14), because there are no records of Sabbath keeping before that event: the exodus from Egypt. Now, the record says God brought Israel out of Egypt on the fifteenth day of the first month of their sacred year. (Exodus 12: 1-18.) The name of this day (Abib 15, 1491 B. C.) was Saturday. (See Wermer's Encyclopedia, pages 589, 590.) It was named after Saturn by the Egyptians, (Encyclopedia Britannica, pages 664, 665.) Then if, as some people claim, Sunday is a heathen name, so is Saturday, as all week days were named by the Egyptians after the planets.

Now starting with Saturday, Abib the fifteenth, and respecting God's appointed dates for the Sabbaths, you can see that it would be impossible to have the sabbaths to fall, or come regularly on Saturday, or any other named day, study the following references: Exodus 12: 1-18; 13: 3, 4, 9, 10; Leviticus 23: 10, 11, 15, 16, 24-38; Deuteronomy 16: 1-9; Exodus 40: 16, 17, 23; Leviticus 24: 5-8. So Israel never kept a regular Saturday-sabbath. You may use any calendar you wish to make a reckoning from, and it would be impossible to have the sabbaths come out regularly on Saturday. Try it and be convinced. But, if you will use the calendar as given in God's word—the Bible—and drop the idea that Sunday was always the first day of the week, and Saturday the seventh day of the week, you will have no trouble about the holy sabbath.

As all things were created spiritually first (Genesis 2: 9, Inspired Translation), then Adam was not created physically until the eighth day in point of time, Monday, the first day of the week; as God rested on the seventh day (Sunday) then formed Adam physically from the dust of the earth, and put him to work in the garden (Genesis 2: 1-15), so Adam could work six days, and rest on the next Sunday, the seventh. You can see the perfect harmony.

The mistaken idea that Saturday was always the seventh day, has come from two things; first, the year our Lord was crucified the Sabbath came on Saturday, and he arose on Sunday, then the first day of the week; but in reality it was the seventh from creation; second, because the Jews now keep Saturday, commonly called the seventh day. They, the Jews, however, lost out in their sacred year because of their rejection of the Christ. Had Jesus been crucified the year previously, then Saturday would have been the first day of the week, or had he been crucified a year later, then Monday would have been the first day of the week. Now a Hebrew sacred year consisted of only twelve months, of thirty days each, but there were five intercalated, and added days, which made a calendar year of three hundred and sixty-five days. Also about every twenty-eight years, seven days more—a week—were added to make up the solar years, which also provided for the ripe sheaf, on Abib 16, because by adding the seven days at one time prevented the disturbing of the Sabbaths appointed by the Lord. (Loyed, Akers & Bessey in Gamble's work, page 145.)

Here are a few quotations on the measure of time, or days, weeks, months, and years. A day—Genesis 1: "The evening and the morning were the first day," and so on until the seventh. Seven days in a week: "Six days shalt thou labor," but the seventh day rest. (See Exodus 20: 8-11; 34: 21; Leviticus 23: 3; Deuteronomy 5: 13.) Please notice the command is that six days shall you work. The thought is that work had to be performed before rest, or Sabbath. A month consisted of only thirty days. (Genesis 7: 11, 24; 8: 3-14, which shows 150 days as five months.) Again, see Revelation 12: 6; 13: 5, naming 1260 days or forty-two months. Daniel 7: 25; Revelation 12: 14: "Time, times, and the dividing of time," or "time, times, and half a time." Again, only twelve months in a year, as shown in 1 Kings 4: 7; 1 Chronicles 27: 1-15; Esther 3: 7.

The lunar calendar will not work out if we respect the appointments of the Lord.

By permission of the Reverend Samuel W. Gamble (to whom much credit is due for this article) I herein copy one and one fourth years of the Hebrew sacred calendar as has been worked out by him, with the exception of a few things, such as changing the name of the second month, and the placing of references on the calendar over a number of the months.

[The calendar is omitted because of exceptional difficulty in reproducing it in type.

The principle of it is that the year consists of twelve months of thirty days each, Abib, Iyar or Zif, Sivan, Thamuz, Ab, Elul, Tisri or Ethanim, Bul, Chisley, Tebeth, Shebat, Adar.

After the sixth month, Elul, three intercalary days are inserted, and after the twelfth month, Adar, two intercalary days. This would make the year 365 days long. If the year starts on Saturday, the first of Abib, (the passion) the 15th would fall on the same day, as would also the 4th of Sivan, which would make Pentecost, Sivan 5, fall on Sunday. So after six days of labor, the following Sabbath days would fall upon the 12th, 19th, 26th, etc. Special festival days are marked upon the calendar, as the 10th and 14th of Abib, the 17th of Thammuz.

It is apparent that with the 365-day year, that the first day of the next year, which is the Sabbath day, the 1st of Abib, would fall upon Sunday, and the Sabbath would be upon Sunday until the 4th of Sivan again, when Pentecost comes on the fifth which is Monday, and thereafter the Sabbath units come on Monday.

The Jubilee Calendar (Leviticus 25) shows that the 49th and 50th years correspond with the 49th and 50th days. The 7th year is a Sabbatical year. The 50th year is a second Sabbatical year. This naturally changes the Sabbatical year for the second half century. In fact, each 50 years, the number of the year would differ. That is, 7th, 14th, 21st, 28th, 35th, 42d, 49th, years are Sabbatical years. The 50th is a Jubilee year, so the 57th, 64th, 71st, 85th, 92d, and 99th years would be Sabbatical years, and the 100th year a Jubilee year. This corresponds to the double Sabbath of the 49th and 50th day on the 4th and 5th of Sivan.—EDITORS.]

Now if we start at the 15th day of the first month, Abib, and follow the sabbaths down to the fifth day of the third month, Sivan, you will notice that the sabbaths change from Saturday to Sunday (1491 B. C.) and it was on this date, Sivan 5, and day, Sunday, that God came down on Mount Sinai. Study carefully Exodus 19, Leviticus 23: 10, 11, 15, 16. Note, too, that Nehemiah said that it was God's holy sabbath. (Nehemiah 9: 13, 14.)

So the day that God rested (Genesis 2: 1, 2), the day of the sheaf offering, or wave offering; and the first Pentecost, as also the day of the Lord's resurrection, were all the same day, that is, Sunday. The Lord crowned his holy sabbath by the resurrection. Please note, Pentecost was the fiftieth day after the resurrection.

No wonder the Psalmist David said: "This is the day that the Lord hath made" (or appointed). (Psalm 118: 22-24.)

The sabbath that is mentioned in Exodus 20: 11 was to be kept in commemoration of the day that God rested after creating heaven and earth (Genesis 2: 1, 2), but the sabbath that is mentioned in Deuteronomy 5: 13-15 (second law) was to be kept in commemoration of the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage. So in the second decalogue provision was made for keeping the ceremonial law—the added law—which was a schoolmaster to educate or bring them to the knowledge of the Christ. (Galatians 3: 16-25.)

Thus the vacillating sabbaths were given so that the typical, or ceremonial law could be kept, both of which were done away with when Christ was crucified and resurrected, Abib 14-16.

The Lord said to his servant Hosea, "I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feast days, her new moons, and her sabbaths, and all her solemn feasts." (Hosea 2: 11.) Thus we can see the wisdom of God in scattering Israel from their land, so they could not keep the ceremonial law, for the Holy Land was the most favorable land in whole world in which for them to keep the typical law. They were to bring in a ripe sheaf of the harvest as a "sheaf or wave offering to be waved before the Lord." (Leviticus 23: 10, 11, Abib 16.) This was the "first-fruits day," and as Christ was "the first-fruits of them that slept" (1 Corinthians 15: 20) then he was the true sheaf or wave offering to be waved before the Lord for our sins. So the Lord scattered Israel so they should no longer bring in a sheaf as a type, and thus deny the true sheaf, or wave offering (Christ); and neither will they be permitted to return as a nation until they begin to believe in Christ and his divine atonement, "and look not forward any more for another Messiah." (2 Nephi 11: 27.)

If you have followed the dates closely from the time of the exodus (about 1491 B. C.) you will see that a wonderful program was given them; typical of the great atonement (Exodus 12: 6.) A lamb was to be slain, Abib 14 (Exodus 12: 11); it is called the Lord's passover. Paul said that Christ—our Passover—was sacrificed for us (1 Corinthians 5: 7). Then two days after the slaying of the lamb (Abib 16) was the sheaf or wave offering. This is the resurrection day. Then fifty days later we come to Sivan 5 which was pentecost day. How beautifully this was carried out by our Savior about 1519 or 1526 years after the exodus from Egypt, when the typical law was given to Israel. (Exodus 12 and Leviticus 23; read them through.)

The year that Jesus was crucified the sabbaths fell on Saturday. (Mark 15: 42; John 19: 14-31.) He ate the passover with the apostles on Thursday night, Abib 13. (Matthew 26: 1, 2; Mark 14: 1; Luke 22: 1; Matthew 26: 19, 20; Mark 14: 26-43; Luke 22: 54.) Then he was taken before the Jewish high priest that night (Matthew 26: 34, 57; Mark 14: 26, 27, 53; Luke 22: 54-66), then before Pilate on Friday Abib 14, in the morning (Matthew 27: 1; Mark 15: 1; Luke 22: 66; Luke 23: 1; John 18: 28), and they crucified him about nine o'clock that day (Mark 15: 25), the day before the high sabbath, and he died in the afternoon, at the going down of the sun (Matthew 27: 46-50; Mark 15: 33, 34; Luke 23: 44-46), and as none of the passover was to be "left until the morning" (Exodus 12: 10), so Jesus was buried that evening (Matthew 27: 57), but on the first day of the week—Sunday—Abib 16, our Redeemer came forth from the dead and appeared unto Mary Magdalene, and he said, "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father, but go and tell my brethren that I ascend unto my Father and your Father; and to my God, and your God." (John 20: 16, 17.) That same evening he appeared unto the brethren and apostles and said: "Handle me and see that it is I myself," etc. (Luke 24: 29-43.) Then after showing himself unto them for forty days (John 21; Acts 1: 2-4; 10: 40, 41) he was received up into heaven. But they were to "tarry at Jerusalem until endued with power from on high," which came ten days later—on pentecost (Acts 2) which was Sunday, the 5th day of the third month, Sivan.

The sabbaths given to the Israelite people from about 1491 B. C. till Christ's fulfilling the law were not on set days, but on fixed dates. After the law was fulfilled the holy sabbath came on Sunday, a fixed day.

I hope that these thoughts may at least create a desire in us to study on this important question,

J. W. A. BAILEY.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

BACK TO THE AZTECS

Just how far the Aztecs would have advanced in the last three hundred years, had they been permitted to develop their civilization, well under way when the Spaniards arrived in America, must be left entirely to conjecture. There is a basis for optimistic speculation, however, in the fact that, at the time of the conquest of Anahuac, or Mexico, the natives had made very considerable progress along many lines. They had conquered all the territory between the oceans, had set up a monarchy, had acquired a wide knowledge of the arts and crafts, had established industry and trade and had instituted land laws that, while long since superseded by those of the stranger, have never been wholly rooted out of the consciousness or the regard of the people. At the bottom of nearly every revolution that has broken out in modern Mexico has been agrarianism; and Mexican agrarianism has always had for its aim and end, not only the overthrow of the proud hacendado and the division of the land among the people, but a return to the system which permitted one to possess land only so long as one made proper use of it.

It seems strange that, after three centuries, the people of other races and other parts of North America should be seriously studying the Aztec land system, with the view of incorporating it into the plan they have in view for providing veterans of the European war on the allied side with homes and holdings. The British Columbians are a unit in desiring that Canada shall do its whole part by the returned soldiers, and, in agreement with the other provinces, that one of the best methods, if not the very best, of helping the brave fellows is to provide them with means whereby they can achieve independent subsistence. They are ready, that is, to make an allotment of lands to the veterans; they will favor cooperation in the plans of the Imperial and Dominion governments to meet the cost of buildings and other improvements; and they will cooperate, likewise, in whatever may be done toward furnishing the beginners with equipment; but they are going to be very cautious in the matter of making grants which later may be diverted from the intended purpose, and fall into the hands of speculators.

This is what has led many British Columbians and other Western Canadians to inquire, lately, into the Aztec land system. They found, among other things, that in Anahuac the various tribes held land in common, under the control of the elders of the community, and that any individual of the tribe could hold, in his own right, as much land as he cared to cultivate. Of this tract, or patch, or parcel of land he was, for all practical purposes, absolute owner so long as he made use of it; when he ceased to desire it, or ceased to cultivate it, the title reverted to the tribe. Land held by the tribe was used for purposes of grazing, or for the raising of products in which the whole community shared.

Now, if the term province or state should be substituted for tribe, the Aztec idea would work out about this way in Canada and in the United States: Any idle land might be taken up, on such terms as might be imposed, the principal condition being that the person securing occupancy should keep it employed, or, failing to do so, should surrender it to the public. Some single-taxers would have the Province or State collect a rental to correspond with the producing ability and value of the land, rentals or taxes collected in this manner to constitute the only public charge the land occupier would have to meet. Other single-taxers would impose other conditions, but all single-taxers would be in agreement as to the wisdom of removing penalties from improvements, and as to securing to the public the right of seizing and reletting all land neglected or taken out of production, or failing to meet its share in the general contribution to the public revenues. The Carranza Government in Mexico, as has been pointed out, is restoring the communal lands to the peones as rapidly as the work can be accomplished. In Yucatan the ancient Aztec system has been practically revived. The great estates formed of holdings wrested by the conquerors from the peasants of Anahuac are rapidly becoming snug little Mexican homesteads. When the peon millions shall have come into full possession of their own, Mexico will be a very much better country to live in than it has been since Montezuma's time. The western provinces of Canada, which have land to bestow upon the returned Canadian soldiers, and the disposition to bestow it generously, are very wise in considering the best means of safeguarding their gifts. The experience of the United States along similar lines should be sufficient, even if taken alone, to satisfy them on this point.—Christian Science Monitor.

STUDIES ON FOOD ECONOMICS

FRUITS, POTATOES, OYSTERS

The teachings of geology show that vegetable life preceded animal existence on this earth. The oldest historical work we have tells us that the first food of man was fruit, and only after he had partaken of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil did he become a vegetarian and omniverously feeding animal.

Fruits contain an abundance of those organic acids most required by our bodies. The following from Doctor W. Williams is very instructive:

"I inherit what is called a 'lithic-acid diathesis.' My father and his brothers were martyrs to rheumatic gout and died early in consequence. I had a premonitory attack of gout when at the age of twenty-five, and other warning symptoms at other times, but have kept the enemy at bay during forty years by simply understanding that this lithic acid (stone-forming acid) combines with potassa, and forming thus a soluble salt, which is safely excreted. Otherwise, it is deposited here and there, producing gout, rheumatism, stone, gravel, and other dreadfully painful diseases, which are practically incurable when the deposit is fairly established. By effecting the above-named combination in the blood, the disposition is prevented.

"The potassium required for the purpose exists in several conditions. First, in its uncombined state as a caustic potassa. This is poison, for the simple reason that it combines so vigorously with organic matter that it would decompose the digestive organs themselves if presented to them. The lower carbonate is less caustic, the bicarbonate nearly, but not quite neutral. Even this, however, should not be taken as a food, because it is capable of combining with the acid constituents of the gastric juice.

"The proper compounds to be used are those which correspond to the salts existing in the juices of vegetables and flesh, viz, compounds of potassa with organic acids, such as tartaric acid, which forms the potassium salt of the grape; such as citric acid, with which potassa is combined in lemons and oranges; malic acid, with which it is combined in apples and many other fruits; the natural acids of vegetables generally; lactic acid in milk, and so on.

"All these acids, and many others of similar origin, are composed of carbon, oxygen, and hydrogen, held together with such feeble affinity that they are easily dissociated or decomposed by heat. This may be shown by heating some cream of tartar or tartaric acid on a strip of metal or glass. It will become carbonized to a cinder, like other organic matter. If the heat is raised sufficiently, this cinder will all burn away to carbonic acid and water, in the case of pure acid, or will leave carbonate of potassium if cream of tartar or other potassium salt is thus burned.

"Unless I am mistaken, this represents violently what occurs gradually and mildly in the human body, which is in a continuous state of low combustion and gives off its excess of carbonic acid and water, to be breathed out, evaporated, and ejected, leaving behind the potassium, which combines with the otherwise stony lithic acid just when and where it comes into separate existence by the organic actions which effect the above-described slow combustion."

There is an ingredient of fruit, a vegetable jelly, called pectin. An acid may be separated from it, which has been named pectic acid. This acid is in combination with potassa, soda, and lime. Fruit should be more generally used than it is at the present time. We shamefully neglect the best of all foods, in eating so little fruit, and drinking so little of fruit juices in water.

With regard to cooked fruits and jams, I have this to say: Jam for the million, jelly for the many, and fruit juice for all. With these partaken of in abundance, abstinence from alcoholic drink will follow in a great measure, as a result of an acquired distaste and natural nausea for alcoholic beverages.

One thing I have learned in my fifty years of practice is that vegetarians and fruit-eaters are remarkably free from the lithic-acid troubles and rheumatism, and that many who were sufferers before, have subsequently escaped when they became vegetarians.

Just here I would add our meed of praise to that noble statesman, W. J. Bryan, for the brave example he set before the Nation in entirely abstaining from the use of alcoholic beverages on all occasions. I hold with the great and good Doctor Jacobi, that there is a place and use for alcohol in medicine; but, further hold that it should be strictly limited to that place. Alcohol is not a food, neither can it take the place of a food. It does not belong to the reconstructives. It is a poison, as is nux vomica, hyoscyamus, belladonna, aconite. Therefore it acts, as all poison acts, first as an excitant and afterward as a depressant and anesthetic. Hence, its use should be confined to the medical practice and the arts and sciences.

All the popular stimulants, such as coco-cola, all refreshing drugs and "pick-me-ups" have two distinct and opposite actions—an immediate exaltation, or the calling forth of reserved power (which lasts for a certain period, varying with the drug used and the constitution of the victim) and a subsequent depression proportionate to the primary exaltation; but, as I believe, always exceeding it either in duration or intensity, or both, thus giving, as a net or mean result, a loss of vitality; and thus calling for renewed application of the stimulant.

In boiling potatoes, the bursting of the skin occurs only at quite the latter stage of the cooking. The greatest practical authorities on the potato—Irishmen—appear to be unanimous in this respect. I do not remember to have seen a prepeeled potato in Ireland. I find that I can at once detect by the difference of flavor whether a potato has been boiled with or without its jacket and that this difference evidently is saline.

These considerations lead to another conclusion, namely, that baked and fried potatoes or potatoes cooked in such manner as to be eaten with their own broth, as in Irish stew, (in which cases the previous peeling does no mischief) are preferable, physiologically, to boiled potatoes. When steamed, potatoes probably lose less of their potash juices than when boiled; still, this is uncertain, for the modicum of distilled water condensed upon the potato and continually renewed may wash away as much as the larger quantity of hard water in which the boiling potato is immersed.

Those who eat an abundance of fruit, of raw salads, and of other vegetables supplying a sufficiency of potassium to the blood may peel and boil their potatoes; but the poor Irish peasant, who depends upon the potato for all his sustenance, requires that they shall supply him with that element.

As regards the nutritive value of the potato, it is well to understand that the common notion concerning its cheapness as an article of food is a fallacy. Taking Doctor Edward Smith's figures of 760 grains of carbon and 24 grains of nitrogen contained in one pound of potatoes, then 2½ pounds of potatoes are required to supply the amount of carbon contained in one pound of bread, while 3½ pounds of potatoes are necessary for supplying the nitrogen in 1 pound of bread. With bread at 1½ pence per pound, potatoes should cost less than one half pence per pound, in order to be as cheap as bread for the hard-working man, who requires an abundance of nitrogenous food. More, potatoes contain 17 per cent of carbon; oatmeal has 73 per cent. Taking nitrogenous matter also into consideration, 1 pound of oatmeal is worth 6 pounds of potatoes.

Observations in Ireland have fully convinced us of the wisdom of William Cobbett's denunciation of the potato as a staple article of food.

The bulk that has to be eaten, and is eaten, in order to sustain life, converts the potato-feeder into a mere assimilating machine during a large part of the day and renders him unfit for any kind of vigorous mental or bodily exertion.

My strictures on potatoes do not apply to them, though, as used in America, where the prevailing vice of our ordinary diet is that it is too carnivorous. The potatoes we eat with our meat serve to dilute it and supply the farinaceous element, in which flesh is deficient.

The reader may have observed that most of the starch foods are derived from the roots or stems of plants. Many others are used in tropical climates, where little labor is demanded or done, and, therefore, but little nitrogenous food required.

It is within my own memory when oysters were retailed in London at fourpence per dozen. They were not then supposed to be exceptionally nutritious, were not prescribed, by fashionable physicians, for invalids, as they have been lately, since their price has risen to threepence each.

More than half a century has elapsed since Doctor Beaumont published the results of his experiments on Alexis Saint Martin. These showed that fresh raw oysters required two hours and fifty-five minutes, and stewed fresh oysters required three and one half hours for digestion, against one hour for boiled tripe and three hours for roast or boiled beef or mutton.

Oysters contain more than 80 per cent of water, and are, weight for weight, far less nutritious than beef or mutton; less than the easily digested tripe. But tripe is cheap and vulgar, therefore kitchen-maids, footmen, and fashionable physicians despise it.—A. T. Cuzner, American Journal of Clinical Medicine, September, 1918.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Edited by AUDENTIA ANDERSON, 5020 California St., Omaha, Nebr.

Are You Helping to Open These Doors?

"The war is bringing to women not only new opportunities, but also a clearer vision of her duty to others," is the ringing message of Miss Sarah Arnold, of Boston, one of the leaders of the home economics movement, who is opening doors of opportunity to hundreds of young women throughout the country, whereby they may qualify to help their country with skilled service.

Through such efforts as hers, the food conservation campaign is setting before the women of America a new standard of housekeeping, and home efficiency. Pertinent questions are being thrust upon us, such as: "How do you know that your family is being well-fed? Are you sure your children are having the proper food for muscle and bone building? Or for the essential repair and growth? Are your active and growing boys given enough to eat, and of the right sort of food? Does the dollar you spend for food buy the essential foodstuffs for your family? Or could you buy equally satisfying food for half the money?"

Miss Arnold goes on to ask that while the mood of research and study into all these problems is upon us, we will not try to make it possible for other women and girls to acquire the same knowledge we crave, that they, too, may be better qualified to cope with the economic problems which are assuming such terrific proportions before us as a Nation. She feels that since competency in the home requires a knowledge of the elementary principles of nutrition, it should be required of every girl, before she undertakes the feeding of a family, that she obtain the knowledge essential to a wise performance of her duty. She asks:

"Are the elementary principles of housekeeping being taught in the schools of your town? Is this teaching required for every girl in the community? Is instruction available now for the women who 'want to know'? Do you know the available textbooks which can help you in this emergency? Will you see to it that these opportunities are open to all the women in your community?"

She goes on to assure us that every effort put forth in this direction will bear fruit after the war, in the years ahead, and pleads that we should build thoughtfully in these days of clear vision, so that the instruction of the future may be based upon a secure foundation, and "thus added light and added strength be given to every woman of our land because we have so clearly measured our own deficiencies."

An Omission In Our New Supplement

For the benefit of those interested we wish to make the following announcement: The Educational Department of the Woman's Auxiliary is still preparing courses and conducting classes in Bible research, story-telling, and the cultural subjects. Through accident, or misunderstanding, these subjects were not mentioned in our new supplement to the Auxiliary Year Book.

The Bible Research work should interest officers, teachers, and parents. It is intended to develop and broaden one's religious ideas. The Bible is used as text, supplemented by scientific, historical, and archaeological books. Those interested should write Mrs. J. G. Pointer, Independence, Missouri.

The story-telling course is conducted by Mrs. Walter W. Smith, of Independence, Missouri. She will gladly reply to any inquiry regarding this fascinating course.

Those wishing to take any of the cultural subjects, should correspond with Mrs. Dora Glines, supervisor of the Educational Bureau. Her address is 622 South Chrysler Street, Independence, Missouri. She will also give information concerning any of the many other attractive opportunities for study which the Auxiliary is prepared to offer, and anyone desiring her help, whether a member of our organization or not, may feel assured of prompt and generous assistance upon appeal to her.

Our Home Economics Course

Sister Glines, in her capacity as supervisor of the Educational Bureau, is adding to her corps of instructors from time to time. She announces the completion of her course in home economics, which now comprises four divisions, viz: Domestic science, domestic art, home decoration, and home nursing.

The first two of these are in charge of Sister Bertha Mader, who has offered suggestions along these lines frequently in the past, and who is already well-known to Auxiliary workers. She has two short articles in our column this week, and students will receive generous attention from her.

The third division, that of home decoration, will be in charge of Sister Fern Weeks, who also contributes an article this issue. Those who may have problems about their home-furnishings, will receive practical help from Sister Weeks upon application. Try, if possible, to take the course she has outlined, for it deals with recognized principles of good taste in home surroundings, and will prove valuable knowledge to any home maker.

The fourth division, home nursing, will be cared for by Sister Gela Cook Moorman. Many who have been patients at the Independence Sanitarium, will remember this graduate nurse with kindness. Sister Moorman has obtained permission to use the Red Cross textbooks, which are considered, by those who know, to be the finest in use to-day. From these, she will prepare a simple but comprehensive outline of study, and the response in this department should be most hearty. The great need for trained nursing for the boys "over there," as well as thousands in camps in this country, makes it quite imperative that all mothers should have some degree of knowledge and efficiency along the lines of home nursing. Sister Moorman's address is 1028 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Domestic Science

The term Domestic Science is entirely too comprehensive for our elementary lessons as outlines in the HERALD for July 10 and 24, but we are trying to live up to the name given it, by offering advanced work as soon as these first lessons are finished.

The classification of the common foods, their particular uses in the body, and the effect of heat upon the different classes, constitute our first course, Part I.

In the warm weather we want to use something in place of meat; thus, if we can classify foods according to the use they are to the body, we can answer all our own questions. Perhaps we wish to use a substitute for the potatoes, of which we have grown tired. A few domestic science lessons will help us to make many such desired changes in our diet.

To meet present needs, the question of wheat substitutes will be taken up, and encouragement given to make use of Government bulletins handling the subject.

Part II of the course deals with the keeping of simple household accounts, encouraging systematic spending and saving.

DOMESTIC ART

The best way to learn sewing and dressmaking is directly under the supervision of a competent teacher. But did you ever stop to think that better and more suitable purchases might be made, and clothing give better satisfaction if we know more about the raw material used for our garments, their manufacture, and the effect of various cleaning agents upon them?

While a few easy first lessons in sewing are offered by the writers of our text, and some simple lessons in drafting patterns given, the lessons outlined in our course will deal mostly with the manufacture of cotton, wool, linen, and silk; a comparison of the four materials, with tests for adulteration and processes of cleaning; a brief history of costume and embroideries; selection, care, and repair of clothing, and the proper clothes for different occasions. Suggestive question on the last topic: I live on the farm. When I put on a clean dress for afternoons, shall it be a gingham or a silk one?

Home Decoration

Our new department of home decoration is but one of the small parts of the Auxiliary movement, which is endeavoring to instill into each one of the home makers in the church, a desire to understand her business better that she may the more effectually labor. This small part seeks to show how money may be used more wisely and more economically in the matter of decorations or furnishings for the home. The old adage: "We can learn something new every day," is especially true when applied to this subject, since it deals with so many problems women have been battling with for years with very little outside help.

Included in this study are the buying of the fixtures, furniture, carpets, dishes, etc., for a new home, large or small; the separate and harmonious treatment of rooms, singly or adjoining; the problems of light or dark rooms, large or small, low or high ones; also the question of the old house, and its fine possibilities; the proper treatment of hangings, wall paper, styles of furniture, use of bric-a-brac, selection, hanging; and location of pictures, etc.

The present soaring prices of everything counted necessary cause many of us to come face to face with the problems of sacrifice, of doing without new, and of making the old serve us longer. These subjects handled in a practical way, will be helpful to every one of us. Have you a set of old bedroom furniture, and yet desire one of the "old ivory" ones which are now so popular? We can tell you how with work and a dollar's worth of paint, you can have your wish. Do you need new overdrapes this fall? Perhaps some one in the family has a cast-off gingham or lawn dress which is just the shade, and with proper manipulation will add much to the brightness of your rooms in the capacity of over-curtains.

Write us of your problems; it will be a pleasure to tell you of many ideas which have come to us which may prove helpful. We expect to maintain a "questions and answers" bureau. Upon the receipt of your inquiry, together with a stamped, self-addressed envelope, you will receive prompt attention.

Here's hoping we will be fairly "covered up" with business, and be able to be of real service to many!

A New Worker in the Mothers' and Teachers' Problems Department

The leaders of classes interested in the mothers' and teachers' problems will please take notice of the appointment of Mrs. Maude Peak Parham as superintendent of this department. Sister Parham succeeds Mrs. D. J. Krahl in directing this study. Those who have begun the course will continue as before. Address all communications to Mrs. Maude Parham, 306 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

An introduction to Sister Parham will assure the sisters as to her interest and qualifications. She is the daughter of Brother Warren E. Peak, many years a missionary for the church, and the eldest of his five children. Sister Parham was a student of Graceland and since her work there has taught eight years. During her first years of teaching she specialized in kindergarten work, has taught all grades up to the eighth and served as principal of schools for three years.

Ever since Sister Parham was a very young woman she has been actively engaged in Sunday school work, and dealing with children is no new thing to her. Now that she has become a mother, seriously and religiously considering her responsibility, there comes an assurance that she will be well qualified for her work and will consecrate her efforts to the service of other homes and mothers as far as she may be spared from the duties in her own home.

MRS. DORA GLINES, Supervisor of the Educational Bureau.

Our Women of the New York and Philadelphia District

Sister Lentell reports a very interesting Auxiliary convention at Elk Mills, Maryland, on September 1. The short business session was followed by a educational program, upon which papers were read, and addresses made, not the least appreciated being Bishop McGuire's talk on "Our opportunities." We notice such suggestive topics were discussed as: "What is home?" "Star and crown," "Daughter's duty to mother," and "Mother's duty to daughter." One thing which served to encourage the sisters at the convention was the marked degree of interest taken in their meetings by the brethren, who attended in large numbers, and seemed inclined to participate in the discussion of problems which have come to have a wider meaning for both fathers and mothers. The officers in this particular district of the church, are in close sympathy and harmony with the efforts the sisters are making for better homes and better Saints.

The sisters are loyal to the Government, too, and are active in many ways, most of them doing Red Cross work to the extent of their time and ability. A trained nurse, (not a member of the church) is in charge of one class of Latter Day Saint women who are taking up the study of "Better babies." This is in Scranton, Pennsylvania, and they are hoping to extend the good work to other localities.

Maturing the Inner Life

In the consideration of this subject, we should first obtain a clear idea of what is meant. By the "inner life" is meant the spiritual side of man, as mentioned by Paul where he said, "Though our outward man perish, yet the inner man is renewed day by day."

To "mature" this life, would be to bring it to a state of perfection or "the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

At first thought this may seem a very highly-placed ideal. Perhaps it is; but it were better for us to aim high and strive to reach such a goal, than to aim low, since through the former effort we reach an infinitely better result at the end of the race.

The things necessary for the maturity of the outward or physical life are nourishment, plus exercise, plus time. We may draw some useful analogies from this formula.

Spiritual nourishment, food and drink, are freely supplied at the table of the heavenly Father, in the form of instructions, both in Holy Writ, and in latter-day revelation.

Spiritual exercise would require that these instructions were obeyed rigorously and fully, for it is only by earnest application to the performance of all our known duties that we can assimilate our nourishment and avoid a case of spiritual indigestion.

And lastly, we come to the "time" element. We should not lose sight of the fact that the ideal can only be reached by development. This presupposes time. We do not leap from infancy to womanhood in a day, a week, or a year. It takes years of slow progress; sometimes sickness retards or even permanently stunts our growth. It will also take days, months, years of progress and development for our spirits to reach the desired goal. We should most carefully avoid pitfalls which will cause delay, spiritual sickness, or decay. If we are to reach eternal life — the "maturity of the spirit" — we will need every wholesome power of the mind, body, will, and heart.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Central Illinois Conference

At 9.30 Saturday morning [September 7] the gavel fell that opened the first Latter Day Saint conference in New Canton. John Beaver of Beardstown, vice president of the district Religio, was in the chair, assisted by Elder Walter L. Daykin of Taylorville. A good profitable business session was held.

At 10.45 Clifford Norman of Beardstown opened the district Sunday school convention. After the regular order of business was transacted the convention adjourned till Sunday morning at 9.30.

The local members arranged to entertain all visitors at the Massie Hall, so at 12.15 the church bell rang announcing that dinner was ready. All the visiting members and friends as well as the locals repaired to the dining hall where there were long tables fairly groaning under their loads of good substantial food. But a shortage of dessert was noticed as the food administration asks that sugar be conserved. Latter Day Saints as a rule do not drink tea or coffee so much sugar is saved to this Nation as a result of this rule. It was not hard to tell by the satisfied smile and the long breaths drawn by those who came downstairs that the dinner was up to expectations. Mrs. Lydia Gill was the chef, assisted by the local ladies. The visitors all said, "Just like mother's cooking."

At 2.30 p.m. the district conference of the church was opened with President Daykin in the chair. Reports from the local branches of the twenty-two counties of the district were read and approved. Then followed the regular order of business, and adjournment at 4.30 to meet at Beardstown, February 10 and 11, 1919.

After adjournment the visitors took in the sights and places of interest about town. At 6.30, again that welcomed bell and the trip to the dining hall.

On Friday evening Elder R. L. Fulk was the speaker, assisted by Elder P. R. Burton. Elder Fulk was at his best and a good instructive sermon was preached. Saturday night Elder E. E. Stonger of Pana was the speaker, assisted by Elder E. O. Butler. Elder Stonger preached a fine sermon on "Revelation," and the need of the same to-day. Those who missed this, missed a scriptural treat. Sunday morning a priesthood meeting was held at 8 o'clock.

At 9.30 Sunday school was called to order by Superintendents E. E. Stonger and Miss Mally Brown. Invocation by Tilphard Phillips of Snicarte. A solo was sung by Clifford Norman. Beautiful music and singing was a feature of the conference. The songs and anthems rendered by the district choir were enjoyed by all.

When 11.00 came, Elder Daykin spoke, assisted by Elder E. E. Stonger. This sermon was to the members concerning their duty to the church and to their government.

At 12.15, again that welcomed bell, and a large crowd went to the hall. Two hundred and six registered at noon Sunday, all of whom ate at the hall. Thirty roast chickens and what goes with them helped to add to this feast.

At 2.30 a good spiritual prayer meeting was held and the house was crowded. Many good prayers and testimonies were offered, and this season of worship was enjoyed by all. The special subject of the prayers was for President Wilson and the boys "over there."

When 8.30 in the evening came, Elder Burton faced one of the largest crowds that had been in the Union Church for many years. He was assisted by Elder Fulk. He took as his text the 7th verse of the first chapter of First John: "But if we walk in the light as he is in the light we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin." Elder Burton was his own self—nuf sed.

At the close of the sermon Elder Daykin was called on to dismiss the conference. A motion was adopted by the conference thanking the New Canton Saints and friends, and all who added to the comfort and entertainment of the visitors. It was said at parting, "New Canton and her people are all right," and a good time was enjoyed by all. The local Saints desire to thank all the Saints who assisted.

Mrs. Stadler was baptized at the river Monday at noon by Elder Burton. The lady is a visitor from New York.—The New Canton Press, September 12, 1918.

Our Nation's Defenders

Elder John W. Rushton,

September 7, 1918.

Los Angeles; California.

Dear Brother: I have just read your letter in the HERALD, and the suggestions you made in regard to corresponding with our boys in the army and navy impress me very much. I will relate the work we are doing in our branch along these lines.

I suggested that the Sunday school take up the work, and outlined the plan I had in mind. It was to form a club whose membership would write a letter once a week to each of the boys in the service. As you see by the stationery I am using our club is known as the Homefire's Club. One member of the club is designated each week to write the letters, so it does not make it burdensome on any one member. We keep copies of all letters written, and the tenor of the correspondence can be kept by each correspondent. While we do not receive many replies from the boys, yet we often receive letters that are very interesting, and these are made a feature of the exercises of the school by being read each Sunday morning. Our correspondence is not limited to the members of the church. We write to all the boys from this vicinity, and we have received some very highly appreciated letters from them. I wrote a young man that went from near here who I knew would never hear from home, as his parents would not write to him. It was the only letter he had received since being in the service, and he surely appreciated it.

Sunday, October 6, is College Day. You are expected to "do your bit."

The expenses of our club are met by voluntary contributions and the treasury of our Sunday school. . . .

SERVICE NOTES

I have had letters from several of the church boys who are engaged in either army or navy duty recently, also from Sister Mary Wise and Sister Ethel Hanson, both of whom are known to the church because of their association with our own Sanitarium. The former has been in France for some months and has been working among the British "Tommys" and has written some interesting items of her experience with the wounded men of our allies. Sister Hanson has only been over there a short time and was located in some part of southern France where the climate and weather were described as being beautiful, we guessed it was nearly like California.

The boys of the fortieth division who were in training at Camp Kearney including a number of the church boys, Chester Young, Joseph Tordoff, Roy Hardy, Frank Ballantyne, and several others who are now in France. Some interesting items of news have been received. Most of them write of their appreciation of England and France and seem to think that the former is a very pretty country and speak of the warm reception they have had. Some are already within the range of the big guns and some have been within the radius of bursting bombs dropped by the aviators of the German Army, and while they were spared, they saw the wounded gathered up and the silent dead laid tenderly to rest.

The news of the great victory at Saint Mihiel is very gratifying to us because it is one of the engagements which evidently was distinctly American, and while we feel a just pride in the heroic exploits of our own brave men, we nevertheless feel anxious as we think of the casualty lists which will come in. Already these are coming in daily and bringing sorrow and distress to many. Our prayers are for all who in any way, immediate or remote, are affected by this awful conflict.

We have been interested in the news of the progress of the British, in which the men from the United Kingdom, Australia and Canada have been engaged so successfully. We had news recently that one of our church families is experiencing a double drain, not only the oldest son, Norman Issott, a bright boy of but nineteen is with the gallant "Koylies," the King's own Yorkshire Light Infantry, but on the 30th of this month his father, Fred Issott, will go into training.

We note with thankfulness that our appeals for help to keep up correspondence with our boys have met with responses. Sister Lewis of Lowell, Arkansas, Bertha Harvey of Kansas City, Kansas, Sister Vance of Red Oak, Iowa, have already volunteered for this work. An interesting letter from Brother F. G. Hedrick of Fanning, Kansas, shows that they have already taken up this work in their branch and have organized a club by the name of "The Homefire's Club," and I inclose extract of the letter to illustrate how this club works, so that others may follow the lead.

I have also received letters from some of the Canadian boys whom I had the pleasure of meeting when in that country early in the summer. I have also had the sad news of Ira Hathaway's death. He was Flight Lieutenant in the Royal Flying Corps and was killed while flying in England. He was a handsome, clean young man and his widowed mother and many friends mourn deeply his tragic end. May God bless and sustain those and especially his lonely mother.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Toronto Branch Items

The position of the church in Toronto grows brighter day by day. Interest is increasing. Our people are being educated and grounded in the faith. We are meeting all opposition to the gratification of our own people and the dismay of those who would disrupt and destroy the church.

The attendance at our Sunday services is showing a continuous and healthy increase. The building will be crowded to its capacity during the fall and winter. As an indication of how things are going, during the month of June there were four and five automobiles in front of the church at the Sunday evening service. Now we have from twelve to sixteen.

On Sunday evening, August 18, we held a patriotic service in honor of the boys now in Canadian service overseas, and dedicated a large service flag containing over fifty maple leaves. This flag was supplied by the Woman's Auxiliary. The main auditorium of the church was well filled. It fell to my lot to deliver the address and to offer the dedicatory prayer. The position of the church on government, the underlying causes of the present world war, the universal scope of the church activities and our loyalty to the cause of human freedom and democracy together with an appreciation of the heroism and valor of "our boys" were the dominant themes of the address.

The music was under the direction of Brother Sam Clarke. Sister Blanche Needham was the soloist of the occasion and exceeded herself in her excellent technic and interpretation.

The following Sunday morning a memorial service was held in commemoration of Brother Ira Hathaway who was killed while completing his training in the Royal Flying Corps in England. Brother Ira had achieved a wonderful proficiency in his particular line and went overseas early in June. He was an exemplary young man, an active member of the church and was loved by everybody.

Have been lecturing each Tuesday evening for the past month reviewing some of the attacks on the church. The attendance has been most gratifying. We covered every salient point raised against the church, showing the unreliability of the attackers, and clearly pointing out that quotations were garbled, testimony distorted, and conclusions absurd and ridiculous. Last Tuesday evening we devoted entirely to questions, and for two hours a continuous stream of questions were answered to the complete satisfaction of the audience.

It has recently been predicted by some that thousands would leave the church and that the church throughout the world would "be shaken from center to circumference." Only a fraction of the church membership in Toronto has so far left and a number of these have returned to the church. From all over Canada comes the word that the Saints are not in the least disturbed and with scarce an exception are loyal to the church.

It is remarkable how quickly the local church has readjusted itself. Each department of the church is running smoothly, perfect harmony prevails, and all seem moved by one dominant purpose. This is in striking contrast with the not distant past.

The branch is in healthy condition. There is nothing but a slight scar to indicate the point of disease. We are building safely and soundly. Our rallying cry is not to any man but to Jesus Christ. We are making him the ideal of our work. Idolatry is dead in the Toronto Branch.

Brother James Pycoc recently returned to Toronto for an indefinite period. Sister Hanson is making her home in Toronto. Brother Hanson spent a couple of Sundays with us since which time he has been visiting other branches. He has been to Hamilton and Niagara Falls and also was in attendance at the Kirtland reunion. Brother Hanson is a clear-thinking, earnest, worker and will be of great service here in Canada in educating the membership in the fundamental doctrine and organic character of the church.

Brother James Pycock recently returned to Toronto for a well-earned respite from missionary service. He reports good success following his work in the Eastern Mission.

Brother Grant St. John was a visitor here for a few days. He has been doing some good work and reports a number of baptisms in his field of activities.

The local elders of the church are busy caring for the several missions which have been established at points contiguous to Toronto. Their reports are encouraging.

During the summer the young people have been quite active along social lines and with socials, picnics, boat rides and other amusements have provided for suitable recreation.

The Woman's Auxiliary, which adjourned for the summer, now resumes its work and the officers of the organization are planning a season of intensive activity as an aid to the church.

A parents' day exercise was recently given under the auspices of the local school. It was to institute a campaign for Sunday school recruits.

The annual district conference will convene in Toronto early in October. We expect a large delegation from the various branches.

The summer is ended, fall is here, and then winter. Oh, for California!

The Toronto Exposition which is held annually has been the chief attraction for the past two weeks. It compares favorably with International Exhibitions. It does credit to the skill and versatility of the Canadian people. Canada is rich in resources and her products and progress is in keeping with that of the United States. The grand pageant of nations which is shown each evening is an inspiration. Old Glory is given almost equal honor with the Union Jack. True Canadians have naught but good will for the Americans. So be it.

T. W. WILLIAMS.

Eastern Colorado Reunion

The reunion of the Eastern Colorado District convened at Adams Crossing, Colorado Springs, August 24 to September 1. Saints from various parts of Colorado, Nebraska, Wyoming, Kansas, and other states, to the number of three hundred or more, being in attendance.

Meals were served in the dining tent without charge, the cooking and other necessary work being done by voluntary helpers under the efficient leadership of Sister Olive Bullard of Denver. Enough money was raised by one collection, and voluntary contributions, to meet all incidental expenses and leave a balance of nearly twenty-five dollars to be divided among the missionaries of the district.

The following-named brethren assisted by preaching once or oftener: Walter W. Smith, Ammon White, Ellis Short, E. F. Robertson, W. T. Bozarth, Swen Swenson, C. W. Prettyman, Richard Bullard, J. Charles May, J. D. Curtis, and J. R. Sutton.

The prayer and social meetings were of a high spiritual tone and a number of beautiful manifestations of the Spirit in the way of prophecy, tongues, and visions enjoyed. The young people held three early morning prayer meetings on the rocks amid the beautiful scenery of the Garden of the Gods which, we are sure, will never be forgotten by many of the participants.

The Sunday school and Religio work was ably represented by Arthur Shupe, A. E. Bullard and wife, Sister Fishburn, the Sampson sisters and others.

Most of the afternoons were left open for social enjoyment and sightseeing, and many of the visiting Saints were given an opportunity to visit the Cave of the Winds, Garden of the Gods, Seven Falls, Pikes Peak, and other famous scenes in the vicinity of Colorado Springs.

Brother J. R. Sutton being called away on account of sickness in his family, the heavy part of the management fell upon his assistants, Brethren A. E. Tabor and M. F. Ralston, who did the work admirably.

We were all glad to see the face of Brother Sutton again, however, on the evening following the closing day, though he came with the tidings that his little granddaughter had passed away during the period of his absence from us. One thing that makes the association of the Saints so sweet is the ready sympathy they have for each other in times of sorrow.

We believe we are but voicing the sentiments of all present in saying that this was one of the most pleasant and profitable experiences of our lives in the work.

We are truly grateful to the Saints of the Colorado Springs and other branches who contributed so nobly to its success; the efforts of Sister Helen M. Liggett being worthy of special mention here.

A Glimpse of Camp Life

I am one of the many who have been selected for special or limited service and sent here for classification. Our camp is located in the valleys among the hills in the outskirts of Solvay, New York. The scenery is the most beautiful my eyes have ever beheld. To see the beautiful valleys, surrounded everywhere by the high hills, reminds me of Christ's Sermon on the Mount. I can imagine as I stand upon one hill and gaze out into the valleys and upon the hills, that the Christ himself is standing there with a large multitude of people gathered around him, and he breaking unto them the bread of life. I can see before me a mental picture of the expression on his face, how gentle and how kind it appears as he smiles upon all. Then I can imagine that I hear his voice speaking words of cheer and comfort, those words which bring peace to one's soul. One can see in these valleys and hills the extent of God's power, and realize more than ever the greatness of the infinite mind which created these beautiful scenes of nature.

As one man expresses it, you can see sermons in rocks, books in the trees and shrubs, and hear music in the brooks.

I may be a little incorrect in quoting it but you will understand my thought, that is, one can see good in everything and gain new knowledge if alert.

Our tent is about sixteen feet square, has a wooden floor and wood walls about two and one half feet high and screened in for about three feet higher, making a total height of five and one half feet. Around the sides of the tent on walls are shelves on which to lay certain articles of our equipment, such as mess outfit, stationery, Bibles, and any other things one may have. In the center of the tent hangs an electric light which adds to the comfort of camp life.

The men are divided into companies of two hundred and fifty men each and are assigned to a certain number of tents, eight men to the tent. The camp is laid out like a small town, there being streets between each row of tents. These streets must be kept clean, all rubbish picked up and deposited in receptacles provided for this purpose. They try to keep things as sanitary as it is possible to do. They are also very particular as to the welfare of the men. Any man who is sick in any way, such as sore throat, colds, stomach trouble, or any other ailments, is requested and urged to report to the hospital so he can be taken care of.

Sunday, October 6, is College Day. You are expected to "do your bit."

The meals are good. Of course, one here cannot expect to receive the same things which he had at home. When I left home I expected to meet hardships and not be able to enjoy the same comforts I had at home. I was not in the least surprised at the difficulties encountered or the food provided.

The boys occasionally receive delicacies from home which are ever welcome, since these things are rather scarce at our meals, although at times we are given peaches, apples, and other fruit.

The majority of the boys are of a rough class, using language not pleasing to my ears, but I try, with the help of God, to keep my mouth, heart, and mind as clean as I can. The only church privileges here are the services of the Y. M. C. A. tents and K. of C. hut. I attend, whenever it is possible, the meetings at the Y. M. C. A. as I gain some strength there by hearing short talks by leading men of near cities. But I miss the good old Latter Day Saint sermons which I had become accustomed to hearing every Sunday, and I miss very much the prayer meetings, for it was there I gained the most strength.

One Wednesday night I met a young man at the Y. M. C. A. who was an ordained minister. After service we had a little talk together, and then withdrew out into the open away from the others, and there we had a word of prayer. It was a great few moments and brought to my soul peace and rejoicings. It was an occasion which will long be remembered.

I get some of the church papers and when through with them I deposit them on the reading tables in the Y. M. C. A., so some other hungry soul may also read and be filled.

One here, isolated from church privileges, needs the help of God, so I ask that I be remembered by all in their prayers to God. I want to live as close as possible to the teachings of Jesus Christ, and strive each day to come closer to the standard set by him, so I can be of as great service as possible in advancing this work. Pray that I may have strength, that my faith may be increased, and the necessary wisdom be given me so I can whenever possible, tell the story of the Christ and his kingdom.

May God bless all in their endeavors is the prayer of your humble servant.

BROTHER EDSTROM.

Company 5, Battalion 2, Syracuse Rec. Camp, New York.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 15, 1918.

Editors Herald: Have I neglected you too long? Here I have been at Independence since the sixth of last March and I have not said a word to you about it. But never mind. I am still a reader of your pages as well as the other church publications. Some one asked me lately, "Aunt Em, are you not going away to the reunion?"

"Why," I replied, "should I go any place to a reunion when it is all reunion to me right here in Zion."

There are more meetings all the time than I can attend. This morning I hurried to the early prayer meeting at the Stone Church. There were about fifty present so nearly all took part. Then I stayed to Sunday school and was in a Book of Covenants class. Brother Yingling has been the teacher, but he was absent and Brother Spurlock taught the class. Then after Sunday school, Brother Gomer Griffiths gave us a good sermon. His text was: "God works in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform." I enjoyed the spiritual food dealt out in the three services so much that I never missed the temporal food, so I think it is well to fast occasionally. We are hoping this great war will soon end. But to be prepared, every man within the ages named was required to register last Thursday, and show their willingness to help in time of need. There was some controversy about whether my brother, Arthur Whiting, should have registered or not, as he certainly has not passed his forty-sixth birthday. But he contended that he was not old enough, as he had not seen his eighteenth birthday yet. Now I suppose some of you will wonder how old he really is. Well, he is not sixty, but his birthday was the twenty-ninth of February which does not come very often.

My faith in this latter-day message grows stronger and I believe the majority of the Saints are really seeking for personal righteousness and we read that Zion's converts shall be redeemed by righteousness. But trials may be in store for us, in the future even as they have in the past. But the Lord will be as ready to help.

It is my desire to keep the faith and be numbered among those that overcome all things through faith, and I believe that the Saints must not yield to a war-like spirit, but to the one that leads us to love our enemies, and pray for them that persecute and despitefully use us. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am still,

Your sister,

MRS. EMMA L. ANDERSON.

718 North Cottage Street.

HEATHFIELD HOSPITAL, WOOLAHRA, SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA.

Editors Herald: I read your pages with great interest. They come to our land of Australia, filled with letters of comfort and cheer from Saints in all parts of the world, where the true gospel has found its way, and as they have been a source of help and strength to me, I desire to add my brief testimony to this glorious latter-day work, which may possibly help and strengthen others. About eight years ago I was baptized into the Utah Mormon church, after hearing them preach the first principles of the gospel of Christ and the gathering of the Saints to the land of Zion. I determined in my own mind to prepare myself financially and spiritually for that object of being gathered to Zion, although I was refused financial assistance at the time by those elders.

I decided to accumulate enough money of my own and hence went into business in a private hospital at Hornsby, twenty miles from Sydney. It was here I subsequently met Sister Neville, a member of the Reorganized Church who informed me of and concerning the true church of Latter Day Saints, and that the angel of the Lord had shown her in a dream that she was in the vicinity of one who was seeking for more light, that Elder A. C. Barmore of the Reorganized Church would more fully instruct me in the knowledge of the truth. Eventually Brother A. C. Barmore was brought into our home and taught myself and Sister Nowland the true faith; subsequently we were both baptized. Since then the Lord has shown me in such convincing power and manifestation to me that I greatly rejoiced. I immediately opened my home for gospel meetings; just at this time Brother Barmore left these shores for America, but the good work was carried on by Elder Thompson and others who tracted house to house for three years. Having relinquished business and having to undergo an operation and convalescence at Picton, the Spirit of God caused many to visit me at my room where prayer meetings began. I, by the help and power of God, explained to many the true gospel which I feel sure will shortly bear fruit. At this present writing I am a patient in a private hospital waiting to undergo a serious operation, and just recently the Lord showed me a beautiful spiritual dream.

I shall never forget the feelings of peace and love and joy this gave me. It was with me for several days.

Sincerely, in gospel bonds,

SISTER E. A. HORNE.

SHELLBROOK, SASKATCHEWAN.

Editors Herald: The work is progressing nicely here now. We have had with us Elders T. J. Jordan and James Page. All were pleased to see how congenial Brother Jordan, with his pleasant smile and good counsel, was. We might be led to think that Tom was not in earnest because of his jovial disposition, but when he takes the stand and the Spirit of God rests upon him the hearts of the people are touched as that same Spirit flows from heart to heart. We hope his timely advice was well received here.

Elder Page is a stranger in these parts, but has already endeared himself to the Saints. We only wish he could remain and encourage the Saints. We held a two-day meeting in town. So far as numbers went, it was not a success; but the Saints made sacrifice that those outside might hear, so we are not discouraged. Out at Rayside where meetings have been held in the past, seven were baptized, five being heads of families. Elder Page made a new opening at Three Creek Schoolhouse with a good attendance.

Sister Page, also Sister Lottie Diggle and baby Marion, has been with us of late and organized a Woman's Auxiliary, with Sister Ida Casey, president; Sister Minnie Sims, vice president; Sister McLeman, secretary-treasurer. We hope good will be accomplished.

Crops are very good in these parts, and with the Saints enjoying so many blessings we hope every one will feel his obligations to the work in imparting his tenth which is not ours, but that which rightly belongs to God; this is the wish of your sister in the good cause.

MRS. OSWALD S. SCHRANK.

CAMP UPTON, NEW YORK, September 15, 1918.

Editors Herald: I am taking the opportunity afforded by the SAINTS' HERALD and other church papers to keep in touch with the church and its activities. Although isolated from church I am striving to keep the commandments. That was my every effort when at home. I do not believe that there is a place to be found anywhere outside of the army where a young fellow can be tempted to do small things which amount to greater evils in time; I find it so, and it requires a great effort on a young man's part to be faithful.

I think that this condition—being drafted into the army—is for my own benefit and I am going to try harder than ever to make it as such. I ask an interest in your prayers as other Latter Day Saint boys have, that have been called to do their bit for Uncle Sam, that I may come to that exalted condition that when the strife and turmoil of nations has ceased I may be one of those selected to do a work for the Master. I have a Testament with me and I have started to read a chapter or two every day—that will keep me in touch with the divine law.

I will close now, hoping a few of the lines may appear in your paper as it may have a tendency to cheer some one and give them renewed courage to continue on without a falter, but to help them to keep in the straight and narrow path that leads to eternal life.

Your brother in the faith,

CHARLES S. YATES.

BAZINE, KANSAS, September 16, 1918.

Editors Herald: The reunion of the Northwestern Kansas District began August 24, lasting until September 2. Of the missionary force, there were present: Elders George Harrington, William Anderson, Samuel Twombly, J. D. Shower, our district president and the local men taking their places with the missionaries.

Several talks were given in the interest of the Woman's Auxiliary. Brother Willie Twombly gave an interesting talk on Religio. We also had Brother Dice of Stewartsville, Missouri, with us who is very much interested in Religio work. Many Saints were here from a distance. Each day was occupied with good services, recreation for all each afternoon from 2 p. m. till 4 p. m. A good program was given the last Saturday night. A hard rain was had Sunday evening, which lasted about three hours. Camp broke up Monday morning. Each one present reported a pleasant and profitable time.

ELSA EBERT.

BUFFALO PRAIRIE, ILLINOIS, September 21, 1918.

Editors Herald: We are few in number and scattered among the hills, but strive to meet together each Sabbath in Sunday school, preaching, prayer, and Religio services, each striving to do his or her "bit."

I have recently returned from the Sunny South where I spent three weeks visiting my son, John H. Williams, Company A, Forty-sixth United States Infantry, Camp Sheridan, Alabama. My lodging place was in Montgomery, about five or six miles from the camp; the street car line ran down into camp and thus I went to and fro almost daily visiting the drill fields watching the boys at their work. As they were all northern boys I felt very sorry for them during the long, hot hours of the day, but they seemed to make light of it and said, "You should have been here two weeks ago." One hundred in the shade was enough for me. Of course the heat was not so great as that every day although eighty was the lowest drop in all the three weeks of my stay. The boys certainly look fine and are well cared for in every sense of the word. Everything it is possible to do is being done for good, wholesome amusements to help pass the idle hours. All are required to devote a certain amount of time each day to singing, lead by a good musical director.

The Y. M. C. A. is doing a good work for the boys; there they can do their writing and reading, there being a news rack, kept well filled with the best magazines and most papers. For those who care for music there is a victrola and a piano. Each Sabbath there are religious services held in each of these buildings in different parts of the camp and the boys are required to attend.

My son says the only drawback for him is that thus far he has been unable to get in touch with any of our people. If there is any Latter Day Saint in or near Montgomery, he would like to have them make themselves known. So far as he knows, there are no other boys in the camp who belong to the church. If there is anyone who knows anything about where the Saints in Alabama are, if there are any, will you write to the HERALD for the benefit of our boys, for there may be others besides my son and if there is, I hope they or their parents will see this and take note of the address given, as that is my real object in writing, and I hope and trust I may have helped others to find congenial comrades.

Yours in Christ,

ELSIE J. WILLIAMS.

JOY, ILLINOIS.

ARTLAND, SASKATCHEWAN, September 20, 1918.

Editors Herald: Our branch was pleased and not a little elated to have a man so famous in church annals as E. L. Kelley visit us after our summer conference. He was given a welcome indeed, and his discourses were listened to with interest. Elder J. W. Peterson accompanied him, and helped us also by wise counsel. Our branch is hearing more about the gathering to Zion from the ministers who visit us than we ever heard before.

Elder J. J. Cornish went to his mission field in Washington after conference. Some are interested there and some too busy to listen.

Elder W. P. Bootman, a missionary to Alberta, stepped across the line a few weeks ago, and in his forceful and energetic manner, laid down the law. He gives emphasis to forgiveness and declares that if we do not forgive neither will our heavenly Father forgive us. He baptized three following his series of meetings.

It has been a happy summer in this branch. Very little trouble, and we have been going down to the lake at intervals all summer to witness baptisms. They have been entering the door by twos and threes all summer. Some of these have heard the message for years, while to others it was a new story, but so precious they embraced it with gladness. One young lad, about sixteen years of age, a stranger to most of us, came early one Sunday morning to the home of Elder W. J. Cornish, and demanded baptism. Upon inquiry, it was found that his father belonged to the church, but had always been bitterly opposed by his mother, and in spite of strenuous opposition had taught his son the message that had brought such peace to him, hence the request for baptism.

Brother William Atkinson started for Lamoni a few days ago, where he will attend Graceland College. His aim is to become proficient in music.

The crops in this section were almost a failure this year, and many are discouraged. Besides not having a wheat crop, the gardens were destroyed by frost.

CORRESPONDENT.

BASE HOSPITAL, CAMP BOWIE, FORT WORTH, TEXAS,
September 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: It is some time since I last wrote to you but my thoughts have often gone back to Lamoni, and the good times I spent there while at Graceland. It has been fourteen months since I left there to enter the service of my country, but I have tried to keep the branch clerk informed as to my whereabouts so that I would not become a "lost member" of the Lamoni Branch.

I have been stationed at this camp for thirteen months, and for all I know at present I may be here for some time to come. Not that I do not wish to go overseas, for personally I am as anxious to go as anyone; but for some reason it has always fallen to my lot to remain and help train the new ones coming in. There may be a reason in the sight of God for my not going; at any rate I am trusting him and know that all will be for the best in the end.

As we are expecting a large number of new recruits in this camp in the near future, I am especially anxious to get in touch with any Latter Day Saint boys who might be sent here. Just at present I am the only Latter Day Saint that I know of in camp.

If any of the boys expect to be sent to this camp, and will write me or look me up as soon as they get located I would appreciate it very much, and will try to make things as pleasant for them as possible, and perhaps be able to do something in the way of classes.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be able to withstand the temptations that come before me, and that I may be an instrument in the hand of God for accomplishing some good during the time allotted to me on earth.

Every praying for the welfare of Zion,

I am your brother in the gospel,

SERGEANT WILLIAM J. MURRAY.

Arrangements were made three months ago with the Herald Office whereby pictures for handwork may be obtained at one half cent each. Announcement of this was made in the Quarterly for July, August, and September. The manager informs us that not enough pictures have been ordered to justify the printing.

We sincerely hope that every school through its beginner teachers will show its appreciation of this effort to furnish our own pictures for handwork by ordering a supply of these pictures each quarter. Believing that many have not read the notice in the foreword of the Quarterly, we are now making the announcement through all the church papers.

As soon as the Quarterly arrives beginner teachers should read the foreword and then go through the Quarterly and read under the heading "aids in teaching" the pictures that are recommended. Write out the list and order as many as are needed for the whole quarter, these supplies to be paid for by the local school. We would be pleased to learn of any school that refused to secure these pictures for the children. These Herald pictures have been used by the Lamoni school for a number of years. Other near-by schools heard of it and wished to get them. We thought that all schools would take advantage of it if they knew. If you have not had handwork in your school, give it a trial. If you do not understand it, the editor, Mrs. Walter W. Smith, 631 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri, will be glad to explain it, but we are sure that those teachers who have been following her directions in the Quarterly are familiar with it.

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT.

Private Thomas W. Price writes from Camp D 1, 63d Spruce Squadron, Bay City, Washington, and says the church papers would be very welcome and would like to get letters as well. He is working hard six days a week in the big forests and says they appreciate getting letters when the mail comes about as much as the boys across the seas. He would like to spare some time to answer any letters. He says there are about 300 men in the camp.

Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith returned to Lamoni on the 25th from an extended trip in the East, where he had visited Maine, Boston, Brooklyn, and stopped off at the Erie Beach reunion.

The Department of Labor is notifying various industries that according to the classification worked out by the department, essential industries should be supplied with labor first, then the other three classes listed, and that no further unnecessary enterprises should be undertaken during the war.

It is stated that not less than 10,000 men are needed for war industrial work in Iowa alone.

Elder R. S. Salyards, president of the Far West Stake, has been giving a series of lectures on timely topics at the city hall in Trenton, Missouri. Among other subjects we note that he features "Social purity." We are in receipt of two handbills used with the series.

Apostle G. T. Griffiths has left Independence for a missionary tour of western Canada.

Bishop B. R. McGuire has returned to Independence from his tour of the East. Bishop J. A. Becker and family have moved from Kirtland, Ohio, to Independence, Missouri. He will engage in church work at that place.

Will some one give us the address of George H. Stone, who asked us to send some literature to one of his points en route as a lecturer, but which is returned unclaimed?

All publishers are being insistently urged to use the strictest economy in the use of paper, and sign pledges to that effect. Even then, it is uncertain whether all needs will be supplied this winter, on account of fuel scarcity and the labor situation. Our publications have all been changed in some mechanical features some time ago, which materially reduces the amount of paper used without decreasing the total lines of reading matter.

Hereafter you are apt to get letters from us written on both sides, as a part of this general scheme. Our contributors may send handwritten (but not typed) contributions to us written on both sides of the sheet and we'll be good-natured about it. Even this little item is being written on the back of a letter from the Government. And of course all wastebasket contents are carefully saved and baled, to be used again when made over.

A pleasing response is being made to the request of the Fuel Administration that all who reside east of the Mississippi refrain from driving automobiles on Sunday except for essential purposes. The indications are that this will be extended to the west of the Mississippi as well, as the saving is not deemed sufficient. Some quite truly point out that the restrictions of pleasure driving should not be confined to the Sabbath, but a rationing system would be more expensive than the saving effected, so an appeal is made to the patriotism of the people. The American Issue calls attention to the difference in the attitude of the garage men and auto owners as contrasted with that of saloon keepers and brewers. The former have taken the situation philosophically and made the sacrifice of profit and pleasure cheerfully, while the latter have set up a protest concerning the amount invested in the business, infringements on personal liberty, etc.

A JOURNAL OF DEMOCRACY

Our readers may note that we have quoted several times the last year from The Republic. It is issued as a journal of democracy. It is the organ of the single tax, but by no means confines its interest to that theme. It is upon the whole a free-lance periodical. It takes a new and refreshing view of public events at the present time, including constructive interpretation of the war and developments growing out of it. It is nonpartisan as to politics. At present they are offering 13 weeks for 65 cents, and with this trial subscription a free copy of the Crime of Poverty, a book by Henry George. It can be secured by remitting to 122 East 37th Street, New York City. It is a good magazine for thinkers.

HARVEST HOME FESTIVAL IN INDEPENDENCE

On September 27, 28, and 29, Independence held what they termed a "Religio harvest home festival." The evenings of the first two days (Friday and Saturday), were devoted to general educational programs, including short addresses, musical numbers, and readings. On Sunday the program was: prayer meeting at 8 o'clock, Sunday school at 9:30; preaching at 11, by President F. M. Smith, on "The church; the young people, the Religio;" workers' conference from 2:30 to 4:30. Preaching in the evening by J. F. Keir on "Thrust in your sickle." G. S. Trowbridge and R. A. Lloyd, president and secretary of the Religio Society, in addition to T. J. Elliott, former vice president, had prominent places on the programs. The attendance was excellent and the interest indicated much good was done. The local Religio in Independence is in a flourishing condition under the leadership of John Lloyd.

On Sunday afternoon, September 29, Lamoni observed its second memorial service for one of its sons lost in battle. The first one thus honored was Ralph Judson, killed in action, H. A. Stebbins delivering the address two weeks prior to the second. On this occasion it was in remembrance of Lieutenant Lyman E. Case, who met his death in a collision in the air with a German airplane. J. F. Garver was the speaker.

A most successful one-day meeting is reported from Marion, Michigan, by F. W. Hastings. It was on August 31, in a hall where the Saints of Marion usually meet. The first meeting was an interesting priesthood meeting at 7 a. m., followed by prayer and sacrament meeting. This was followed by five sermons during the day and evening, at 10:45, 2:30, 4, 5:30, and 8, with a baptismal service for one candidate at 2. The speakers were John Schruer, A. Whitehead, John E. Bennett, E. W. Burt, the first-mentioned speaking twice and having the responsibility of the district presidency. The song service by the local choir was much appreciated, as was the excellent spirit of hospitality by the Marion Saints. We can well imagine that these one-day meetings are busy occasions, with eight meetings in one day.

EDITORIAL

CONSECRATION, SURPLUS, AND TITHING

In the early part of September the editors received a letter asking a number of questions on consecration, tithing, and surplus. Since these questions are of general interest we referred them to the Presiding Bishopric, and Brother McGuire has kindly returned an answer which we think will prove of general interest and should be read with care.

This article clearly shows that consecration is not simply a matter of dollars and cents. It is of much broader significance and means to dedicate to God. If we consecrate ourselves, the property questions are readily answered. If we ask ourselves, how can we help the most? What can we do to assist in the work? we will find it easy to answer these questions of how much to give. But if our primary question is, how little can I give? What is the least I can do? What is the least I can give and have the Lord accept it, then we will find confusion in our mind and difficulty in interpretation.

This article also removes the misapprehension in the minds of a few, that the church now or ever will want us to turn over our homes and all of our property. Such is not the case. We bespeak for it a careful reading. It follows:

First. What has a man to consecrate who has no money or property?

Anyone possessing no property or money naturally would not be expected to make a consecration consisting of either of those commodities. However, consecrations are not limited to those material substances to the exclusion of other talents—our late beloved President had very little of either, yet who would not say that his consecration of time, energy, mental, physical, and spiritual power were in excess of most other men not even excepting our most well-to-do members.

There is no record available of the Savior contributing either money or property to the gospel cause, yet it is universally conceded that his consecrated service exceeded any and all money and property consecrations of which the world would be capable.

Very few of the men whose lives are devoted to the church service have any considerable amount of either of the named goods to contribute, but the church is rich, in their consecrations, analagous to the labors of the Savior and the early apostles in New Testament times.

This application of the term consecration may faithfully be applied to all lines of endeavor for the gospel's sake wherever labor or energy or effort is expended in the cause, from the First Presidency to the Sunday-school teacher, or the one who sweeps the church and makes the fires for the gospel's sake, including preaching, teaching, fireside visiting—whether in capacity of priest, teacher, deacon, or any other order of priesthood—toiler or singer in the choir.

Second. When and what are the Saints supposed to consecrate?

In this question we deal only with the phase touching temporalities or property interest. Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, paragraph 8, answers the query directly. "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, . . . and they [the consecrations] shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors."

In this connection the word properties would mean houses, lands, etc., crops, goods, money, bonds, or other forms of property possession, and the amount to be consecrated is simply "that which thou hast to impart."

"Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Corinthians 9: 7.

Second, after making this consecration of "that which thou hast to impart," if there shall be found a "residue" in the hands of the individual "more than is necessary for their support," or as new profits may accumulate in course of time over and above the needs of the individual, it, too, should be consecrated, i. e., turned over to the Bishop, and "it shall be kept [by the Bishop] to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied and receive according to his wants."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10.

As to when this should be done, it is obvious that inasmuch as these funds are to administer to the wants of the poor and needy, consecrations should be made of "that which we have to impart," as soon as there may be any poor and needy and anyone has anything to impart. The Master said, "The poor ye have with you always." (John 12: 8.) It would follow that such consecrations of that which we have to impart should not be postponed at all.

As a limit to the time beyond which such consecration may not be deferred, the Savior fixes the time of gathering to Zion in section 106. He enunciates and reiterates that he requires all their surplus property and the payment of tithing annually thereafter. In paragraph 2 he says, "Verily I say unto you, it shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties and observe this law or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you," and the penalty for disregarding this rule is, "It shall not be a land of Zion unto you," which would mean all the gathering and kindred efforts would be in vain, and according to the Book of Mormon (2 Nephi 11: 109), "But the laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish."

3. Are they supposed to give their homes to the church for the poor and do without themselves?

No. The books nowhere teach such procedure. That would simply be a personal transference of the individual location of the necessity to be supplied and would work unjust hardship, dissatisfaction, and waste.

4. What does it mean by surplus?

In Church History, volume 4, page 400, on September 15, 1882, Joseph Smith interpreted surplus to be "wealth and possession not in use and occupation by you."

In the Law of Christ and Its Fulfillment, by Bishop E. L. Kelley, then the presiding bishop of the church and the one entitled at that time to give an authoritative definition, he says, on page 33, "The surplus called for, section 106, is that which a person can spare without injury to his business. In other words that which he can do without and yet perform all of his duties to himself, his family, and his creditors."

THE WORD "SURPLUS"

At a meeting of the joint council of the Twelve, Presidency, and Bishopric, held in Lamoni, Iowa, April 17, 1909, action was had which will be of some interest to the readers of the HERALD.

It appears that some difference of opinion has arisen among bishops, bishops' agents and counselors relative to the meaning of the word surplus, used in the "Address to the Saints" by the joint council. The matter was referred to the joint council of the Twelve, Presidency, and Bishopric by a meeting of bishops, bishops' counselors and bishops' agents in which this difference arose; and to this joint council the presidency submitted the following opinion, which was indorsed by the joint council, after considerable discussion:

"The Presidency are of the opinion that the word should mean, when used by the ministry and the church that part of the man's possessions, whether of moneys or properties, of which he has no present or immediate need; the word need being determined by the man's position, sphere of action, his business and his dependencies. Not all have a surplus, many may have; the widow standing before the treasury giving her two mites did not give her surplus; she did consecrate of her living. Many widows and dependent women, hard-working self-sacrificing give of their labor a consecration, yet all may give of that which they have if they choose who may have no surplus under the general laws, either as tithing, freewill offering, or consecration."

Those who have a copy of the Address to the Saints' might be pleased to know the interpretation of the word surplus as given by the joint council.

5. What do the Saints pay tithing on—surplus or all they earn?

Tithing consists of one tenth of all one's net possessions, accumulations or earnings that one may have over and above his debts, after a reasonable expenditure to supply the just wants and needs of himself and family. So it would mean that the tithing should be paid, not upon our gross earnings, but upon the total net earnings, including surplus.

6. Does one pay on garments he must have to wear?

All the garments or clothing one possesses are acquired after coming into this world, for we do not bring any with us, therefore, it represents gain, and tithing should be paid on them at a reasonable valuation. However, the clothing of an average Latter Day Saint does not vary much in value from year to year, and if tithing is paid on $100 worth of clothing in 1916, and by 1918 they have all been worn out and replaced by other garments at a similar valuation, no tithing would be due on the new ones—the replacement being merely the reasonable wants and needs of the individual. It will prove less confusing to us if we dismiss from our minds the thought of paying tithing on this article or that and remember that the making out of our inventory is the only true way to determine where we stand financially with the Lord and in that inventory everything that we possess of value must be included at its present value, every time we file our inventory.

7. Or on a piece of furniture needful in a home? a home?

Yes, precisely the same as in case of needful clothing already explained in question No. 6.

CONCERNING EXCUSES

When Booker T. Washington presented himself at Hampton to plead for an education, he was given a room to sweep and dust. He swept the floor four times and dusted each article of furniture three times. When his teacher inspected his work she passed her fine white lace handkerchief over some of the furniture and the handkerchief remained absolutely unsoiled. Booker T. Washington remained at Hampton. His work had more weight than any excuses that he might have offered.

God requires nothing impossible, and those who go forward in any field of church work and do their best will receive a blessing.

The duty that now looks mountain-high will be surmounted one step at a time.

And yet times, seasons, and conditions are seized. When Paul stood before Felix, procurator of Judea, and reasoned with him regarding "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," Felix was "under conviction" and trembled within himself, as many other politicians have done, but the ready, time-honored excuse came to his lips, "Go thy way for this time; when I have a more convenient season, I will call for thee." Thus he bowed himself out of the gospel limelight and was seen no more. That was the end of Felix.

A more convenient season than God's season never comes. Yet the excuse did not vanish with Felix. Men still wait for a more convenient season. It is too hot in the summer and too cold in the winter; and seedtime and harvest occupy the spring and autumn months.

Jesus met similar conditions, and touched on them in his "parable of the excuses" wherein "all with one consent began to make excuse." One had bought a piece of land—he was a "landed proprietor," if you please. The gospel does not seem to reach the landed proprietor very readily. Go to the door with a tract and you are met by the servant. Get past the servant to the landed proprietor and you are met with a rebuff. The man who gets and holds more than a fair share of this world's goods has no time to invest in mansions in the sky.

The second man had bought five yoke of oxen, "a business man," if you please. Barring those business men who are among the honorable men of the earth, business men generally fall into two classes: There are those who are making a failure, and they are so distracted with business cares that they have no time to listen to any call of religion; and there are those who are successful and are so drunken with the heady wine of success that they look with contempt on the man who throws business aside and goes out to preach the gospel. Shares in the New Jerusalem are not quoted in any stock-market report, and so they do not appeal to him as being of value.

The third man had married a wife—he had an "affair of the heart." Well, come on, and bring the wife. Scores and hundreds of women have led out in gospel work, and because of their faith and prayers, the husbands have come trailing in years later. We recollect baptizing one such, who came out of the icy water and with chattering teeth declared, "I feel pretty good. I ought to have done this years ago." All because his wife did not shirk her duty and plead the excuse, "I have married a husband."

Remember, Jesus was speaking at the dinner table, in response to the sentiment, "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God," so the connection shows that these people excused themselves from the privilege of eating the bread of life in the kingdom of God. That is quite the character of excuses in general. We fancy that we are evading duty, but it is a blessing that we evade.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES ADVANCED

In the Here and There Department is an announcement which we had all hoped might be avoided, but which has finally come to be essential—the raising of the prices of three of the church periodicals. The prices of the others remain untouched for the present.

Strange as it may seem, the only criticism we have heard is that it should have been more. As a matter of fact, a large number of religious periodicals using less space and paper than we, charge two dollars a year, while monthly publications such as the Autumn Leaves, are not less than $1.50.

The difference to an individual on the year's price is not very much, but the total will make sufficient difference to the publishing interests that they will likely be saved from a deficit. Those who wish to take advantage of the old rates may have their subscriptions extended as far ahead as desired, no matter when they expire.

NECESSITY OF POLITICAL ORGANIZATION FOR DEMOCRACY

The whole of the July, 1918, issue of the quarterly Equity is given over to a discussion of the international problems of the war, and especially to emphasize the necessity for an organization to insure peace.

Equity points out that this war is against militarism, but that Napoleon's war was to the same end, and yet Prussia came back in time to assist in defeating him. The articles are written before the allies' offensive the latter part of July, and so is based in part on a different military situation. But the arguments of the situation after the war still remain the same, and the need not only of a military united action, but also the necessity for political co-operation.

The Teutonic powers have already organized such a league under the supreme control of Germany. They want a peace and an insured peace, but a German peace, in which all the rest of the world will be subject to their will. If they have their way it will mean a triumph for autocracy.

Something has been accomplished since these articles were written the last of June, for Equity. Since then Czechs and Jugo-Slavs have been recognized as distinct entities. The articles point out the situation at the time of the American Revolution, and the necessity of united political action, and urges that now, during the war, a political council should be formed which would then be in shape to assist in peace terms and making the world really safe.

CHRISTMAS OFFERING

We have not heard much of the Christmas offering this year, and yet there are quiet workers throughout the church and Sunday school doing their best to secure a hundred-thousand-dollar offering. There is an item recently about Lamoni. We hope when the record is made up that it will not be less than last year. And now we note in Stepping Stones for September 24, a letter from Huntsville, Missouri. This is a Sunday school of seven. There were six in the school last year and they gave an offering of sixty-six dollars, raised in a few months. This year there are seven of them, and they have already raised one hundred and three dollars and sixty-two cents, and have set their mark for one hundred and fifty dollars. They want to have the highest average of any Sunday school in the church. The letter from V. D. Ruch, to the editor of Stepping Stones, states that they have no special plan, but make it a matter of consecration, by each one giving as much as he could each quarter, and giving at any time they desire to do so. It seems to us that this is a special plan and a very proper one. What are other Sunday schools doing?

OUR COLLEGE

Recently we were running over some of the catalogues of Graceland College. The file is not complete but it shows some interesting developments. The enrollment in 1896 was 91; the next year 96; the following few years it declined; but in 1902 it increased to 127. In 1906 it was 162; by 1908, 194. The next two years show a decided falling off; but in 1911 it was 229. (This was represented in good part by the marked increase in the studio department.) The following years it was 176, 203, and 172; and in 1916, 213. Despite the effect of the war, 1917 shows 271.

The collegiate department proper had an enrollment in 1896 of 17. The following year it was 18. It fell off rapidly so that in 1903 there were only two. The number was apparently less than 10 from 1898 until 1907. At the latter date it was 11; for 1908, 26. The next five years, to 1914, averaged 13.

In 1915 the collegiate enrollment was 24, and an increase of about 25 per cent was secured the next year to 29 or 30. In 1916, the attendance was 41 in this department; and in 1917, 47.

President Briggs reports an increase of over 50 per cent for 1918-19, over last year. We are not yet clearly informed if this is in the general attendance or in the collegiate department; or if it is the increase in the attendance of young women.

THE ANTIQUITY OF THE GOSPEL

Ever since the restoration of the gospel in 1830, the elders of the church of God have emphasized at every opportunity the fundamental truth that the principles of the gospel are not new or modern ideas, but that they are everlasting truths established by God before the foundation of the world; that these principles have been taught at various epochs of mankind, but that man through his ignorance and folly has estranged himself from these holy ordinances, and has dwindled in darkness and unbelief until God in his mercy has reintroduced his gospel.

It shall be the purpose of this article to examine the evidences of this argument and note wherein they prove this contention.

THE DIVINE LOGOS

In John 1: 1, King James Version, we find this statement:

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

By the use of this verse eminent theologians have deduced that Christ is the divine Logos (whatever that may mean), by or through whom God spake and the worlds were made; that Jesus Christ was of "like substance with the Father as touching his Godhead," and that this divine Logos was in the beginning with God—no mention whatever being made of the gospel.

This idea of the Logos is man-made. It is merely the reaction of the philosophy of Platonism upon the Christian church. From Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History we quote:

This venerable simplicity (of the Christian system) was not, indeed, of a long duration; its beauty was gradually effaced by the laborious efforts of human learning, and the dark subtilities of imaginary science. Acute researches were employed upon several religious subjects, concerning which ingenious decisions were pronounced, and, what was worst of all, several tenets of a chimerical philosophy were imprudently incorporated into the Christian system. This disadvantageous change, this unhappy alteration of the primitive simplicity of the Christian religion, arose partly from pride, and partly from a sort of necessity. The former cause was the eagerness of certain learned men to bring about a union between the doctrines of Christianity and the opinions of the philosophers; for they thought it a very fine accomplishment to be able to express the precepts of Christ in the language of philosophers, civilians, and rabbis.—Second Century, part II, chap. 3, p. 61.

The Neo-Platonic philosophy as stated by Philo, among its other theories, advanced the belief that under the title of the Word, the attributes of the Messiah were portrayed.

From Philo we quote:

If we are not yet deemed adequate to be reckoned children of God, yet we may be of his Eternal Image, the most sacred Word for that eldest Word is the image of God.—Mangey edition, vol. 1, p. 427.

The Image of God is the Word, through whom the universe was created.—Ibid, vol. 2, p. 225.

It will be seen from the preceding quotations that, no doubt, this Platonic philosophy so completely took possession of the former-day Christians that they interpreted John 1: 1 in the philosophical sense of the term, obscuring the pure and plain teachings of the apostle of Christ.

Let us then turn to that version of Scripture from which the "plain and precious things" have not been interpolated or stricken out.

In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God. The same was in the beginning with God.—John 1: 1, 2, Inspired Translation.

This is in harmony with the statement made by Paul to the Galatian saints:

And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, in thee shall all nations be blessed.—Galatians 3: 8.

It is in harmony with the fact that God is no respecter of persons (Romans 2: 11), but commandeth all men to repent; also that Jesus Christ is "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." (Hebrews 13: 8.)

JESUS CHRIST AND PROPHECY

The Old Testament is filled with prophecies relating to the Messiah. From Adam downwards the human race in an enlightened state has looked forward to a Deliverer who should bring the blessing of peace.

Let us examine the Scriptures regarding this.

After the fall of Adam and Eve, God cursed the serpent in the following language:

And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.—Genesis 3: 15.

Two of the three Targums of the Jews make the fulfillment of the above promise "in the days of the King Messiah." (See Targum Jonath and Targum Jerusalem.)

Again, please note this:

The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be.—Genesis 49: 10.

The word Shiloh is often defined as The Peaceful, or the Giver of Peace. Without any stretch of the imagination we can readily believe that Jacob was well aware of the Messiah and his mission to earth.

Again, after the Israelites had wandered in the wilderness for many years the Lord spoke to Moses, as follows:

I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words into his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him.—Deuteronomy 18: 18.

Moses was the law-giver, teacher, deliverer, and ruler of the people of God. Not one of the Hebrew prophets was a legislator; not even David, who yet was prophet, priest, and king. No, there is but one personage who fulfills these attributes, and who, without doubt, was the one pointed out to Moses—the Messiah.

From the remarkable utterance of Job to the open confession of John the Baptist, the Scriptures are replete with prophesies, pointing with no uncertain finger toward the coming of the Christ. Instance after instance could be quoted (as Psalm 89; Job 19: 23-27; Psalm 15: 6; Psalm 110; Isaiah 6; Isaiah 7: 14; etc.), but the strongest evidence is seen in the attitude of the Jew to-day. With longing eyes he still looks for the fulfillment of the promises made to his forefathers. He has studied those divine words as no one else has. And to-day his gaze is still as eager, just as earnest and faithful toward the day of his promised deliverance, as it was in the day in which the utterance was made.

KNOWLEDGE OF CHRIST, THEN KNOWLEDGE OF GOSPEL

Now, having this knowledge of the Messiah, in the very nature of things, the righteous must have prayed fervently to receive the further knowledge of his divine mission. And God in harmony with his law would have given the needed "wisdom" and upbraided not those who asked in faith. (See James 1: 5.)

To Latter Day Saints, believing in the Book of Mormon, the inference is fully proved, as will be noted in the following passages.

And after God had appointed that these things should come unto man, behold, then he saw that it was expedient that man should know concerning the things whereof he had appointed unto them; therefore he sent angels to converse with them, who caused men to behold of his glory. And they began from that time forth to call on his name; therefore God conversed with men, and made known unto them the plan of redemption, which had been prepared from the foundation of the world; and this he made known unto them according to their faith and repentance, and their holy works; wherefore he gave commandments unto men, they having first transgressed the first commandments as to things which were temporal, and becoming as gods, knowing good from evil, placing themselves in a state to act, or being placed in a state to act according to their wills and pleasures, whether to do evil or to do good; therefore God gave unto them commandments, after having made known unto them the plan of redemption, that they should not do evil, the penalty thereof being a second death, which was an everlasting death as to things pertaining unto righteousness.—Alma 9: 47-52.

Oh, how great the holiness of our God! For he knoweth all things, and there is not anything save he knows it. And he cometh into the world that he may save all men, if they will hearken unto his voice; for behold, he suffereth the pains of all men: yea, the pains of every living creature, both men, women, and children, who belong to the family of Adam. And he suffereth this, that the resurrection might pass upon all men, that all might stand before him at the great and judgment day. And he commandeth all men that they must repent, and be baptized in his name, having perfect faith in the Holy One of Israel, or they cannot be saved in the kingdom of God. And if they will not repent and believe in his name, and be baptized in his name, and endure to the end, they must be damned.—2 Nephi 6: 44-49.

Also, the brother of Jared was taught the principles of the gospel, as will be found in Ether 1: 76-94.

There are those, however, who are unwilling to accept the testimony of these inspired witnesses. For them, then, it would be well to examine the statement of Paul to the Galatians.

ABRAHAM AND MELCHISEDEC

In his epistle to the Galatian saints (Galatians 3: 8) the apostle tells them that the gospel was preached before to Abraham. A remarkable coincidence with this expression of Paul is found in a recorded incident in the life of Abraham. When Abraham returned after the rescue of Lot from the four kings, he met Melchisedec, a high priest, of whose order we are told that Jesus Christ was also a high priest. (See Hebrews 5: 6, 10.)

The important meeting between Abraham and Lot is related in the following language:

And Melchisedec king of Salem brought forth bread and wine: and he was the priest of the most high God. And he blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abram of the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth: and blessed be the most high God which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he gave him tithes of all.—Genesis 14: 18-20.

We notice particularly the bringing forth of bread and wine and the giving of tithes—both ordinances of the gospel. Shall we say that these are mere coincidences? Rather let us exercise the divine faith in the truth that the promises of God were known in all ages of time.

ISRAEL AND THE GOSPEL

We notice again from the apostle's writings that the Israelites were well aware of the gospel principles.

And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them and that Rock was Christ.—Corinthians 10: 2-4.

For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it.—Hebrews 4: 2.

The law . . . was added because of transgressions.—Galatians 3: 19.

Here we note three things:

1. The Israelites obeyed certain fundamental principles of the gospel.
2. They did not have the requisite faith.
3. They were given a law fitting more nearly to their carnal condition to serve as a "schoolmaster" until they should be in a condition to receive the true gospel law.

The prominent feature is that at first the Israelites were cognizant of the gospel. Turning to archaeological research in the orient we discover an important point which may have some bearing on the question.

In The Bible and Modern Discoveries, by H. A. Harper (1891), we find on page 104 that mention is made of the "Sinaitic writings," in the Wâdy Mokatteb, near the Red Sea.

They number thousands. . . . Various are the ideas about them, some thinking they are early Christian because the cross comes in often; but the cross is a well-known heathen sign. . . . The cross is found marked on Phœnician monuments before Christ 1600.

The intelligent reader will promptly connect the above fact of the "Sinaitic writings" with the knowledge of the gospel that the Israelites had.

But what of the idea of the cross being of heathen origin? Ah! here is the germ of a thought whose beauty and simplicity has escaped all the erudition of the learned.

THE "HEATHEN" HAD HEARD THE GOSPEL

One of the strongest arguments hurled by atheists at Christendom is that Christianity or at least its miraculous traditions were not founded by Christ, but were taken from heathen tradition.

Kersey Graves, in his book, Thirteen Crucified Saviors, brings up the traditions of the Chinese, Japs, Hindus, Polynesians, Indians, Mexicans, etc., and proves among other things: first, that before Christ was born there were other Saviors who were crucified and rose again; second, that the conception of the virgin was an old tradition of the Greeks, Chinese, and Hindus; third, that paradise and purgatory were known before Christianity was evolved; fourth, that baptism and the sacrament were taught and practiced by heathen nations; and so on.

The very argument he uses is one of the greatest evidences of the antiquity of the gospel!

The Duke of Argyll in his essay on Primeval Man, after an almost inexhaustible array of evidences, and with the clearest possible logic proves, regarding man, "that even in his most civilized condition he is capable of degradation, that his knowledge may decay, and that his religion may be lost."—Page 65.

Professor Max Müller says:

If there is one thing which a comparative study of religions places in the clearest light, it is the inevitable decay to which every religion is exposed. . . . Whenever we can trace back a religion to its first beginnings, we find it free from many blemishes that affected it in its later stages.—Chips From a German Workshop, preface, vol. 1.

Believing, as we do, in the descent of man from a primitive pair, using the above laws stated by Argyll; and Max Müller, and with the coincidental evidence from the atheist, Kersey Graves, of the similarity of the various heathen religions, together with the Christian religion, we cannot escape the grand fundamental fact that all religions can be traced to the simple, pure teachings of the gospel, and that to that nation which has been the most highly civilized have been reposed the simple principles as taught to Adam. Furthermore, the nation which has become degraded has taken with it these pure truths and mixed them with so much error and tradition, that only the Spirit of God can detect in it those "pure and precious things" which have been interpolated.

"Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."

FRANK BEST ALMOND.

THAT "OTHER SEVENTY"

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come.—Luke 10: 1.

Does this mean that this is the second quorum of seventy that Jesus called and sent out to preach? or does it mean that these were other seventy apostles, or other seventy ministers? Which interpretation is correct?

So far as I know, the advocates of the first position stated, base their whole argument on the word "other;" but, unfortunately for their position, there is nothing in the definition of the word which compels us to take the first position more than the second, to say the least. All the other evidence, it seems to me, almost compels us to believe that this was the only quorum of seventy appointed and sent out to preach.

Here is Webster's definition:

Other.—Pronoun and adjective. 1. Different from that which has been specified; not the same; not identical; additional; second of two. 2. Not this, but the contrary; opposite; as, the other side of the river.

This is a correlative adjective, or adjective pronoun, commonly used in contrast with one, some, this, etc.; or by ellipsis with a noun, expressed or understood."

A careful examination of this definition will reveal the fact that in it we have abundant support for the second interpretation, which we believe to be the correct one.

The first definition applies in its entirety. Jesus had already chosen and sent out twelve ministers, "whom also he named apostles," but there were only twelve, not seventy. These two sets or quorums of ministers were the only ones chosen and sent out to preach, so far as the record shows, the twelve being the first, and the seventy the second; hence the seventy were "not identical" in number, but were the "second of two" sendings, and "additional" to the first.

Nor is it difficult to see where the "ellipsis" comes in and to supply the elliptic word. "Other seventy," Seventy what? The word apostles, or ministers, either word will properly supply the ellipsis. Seventy apostles or seventy ministers. The seventy are apostles, but not of the quorum of twelve. Their commission was very similar to that given to the twelve. (See Matthew 10; also Luke 10:1-20.) The seventy are apostles, special witnesses for Christ, assistants to the twelve. (See Doctrine and Covenants 120:3; 104:13, 16.)

If we accept the first position, as stated above, to be the correct one, we are compelled to assume that Luke, who is one of the best, if not the best, historical writers of the New Testament, passed by the selection and sending out to preach the first quorum of seventy, but gave us a very plain account of the second. Such an assumption, in the absence of proof is dangerous, and stamps the interpretation as incorrect. It is one of those speculative positions which some seem so prone to indulge in. Nor is the assumption at all necessary, inasmuch as the choice of the first quorum with just as definite a number as the quorum of twelve, established the seventy as an order in the Christian ministry.

It will be seen that I do not claim that the whole definition applies to the second interpretation, but that there is nothing in it to prevent a proper application, and much to support it. So far as the definition alone is concerned, it can properly be applied to the first interpretation also; but the definition of the word other does not contain sufficient evidence to establish either position.

The main evidence upon which we rely is inferential but strong, because it is the only legitimate inference that can be drawn. It is this: If another preceding quorum of seventy had been chosen, Luke would not have failed to mention it. He might possibly have failed to mention the second quorum, had there been one (though I do not believe he would), but to presume that he might have failed to mention the first, while he made a good, clear record of the second, is a monstrous assumption and an unsafe way to interpret.

Another good evidence is found in the close connection between the choosing and sending of the twelve and seventy. (See Luke 6:13; 9:1-6; 10:1-12.) It is easily seen that Luke establishes a very close connection between the twelve and seventy, both in the manner of choice and the character of their commissions. Please bear in mind that the connection is between the twelve and seventy, but there is not so much as a remote hint of the existence of a preceding quorum of seventy.

We concede that the vital point is not whether Jesus sent out but one or more quorums of seventy, but that he did choose and send the seventy additional apostles, as his authorized ministers, as much so as he did the twelve. This establishes the harmony between the New Testament and Doctrine and Covenants on the leading ministry of Christ. However, our purpose is not so much to prove that there was but one quorum sent, as it is to show the importance of correct interpretation. If we reach an erroneous conclusion in one case, because of wrong interpretation, we are equally liable to make the same mistake when the consequences might be far more serious.

EARLY MISSIONS OF THE REORGANIZATION TO UTAH

Perhaps, of all the fields for missionary labors, the apostles of the first century found none more difficult, nor more fruitful, than among the Jews, their own nationality, and among whom were "the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Here was entrenched the priestcraft that had been developed in the perversion of the priesthood given to Israel of old, and here were many who, weary and worn, waited for the "Consolation of Israel," only waiting to see the light that they might enter into that rest sought so long by them.

What was true of this field in that century was also largely true of the Utah field when, in the early sixties the Reorganization sent its first missionaries to call latter-day Israel back to her allegiance to the "One living and true God" and the simplicity of the gospel of his dear Son.

Here the doctrine of the infallibility of the priesthood had become entrenched until "Long live the king, the king can do no wrong!" had its full application in the saying, "If you are told by your leaders to do a thing, do it. None of your business whether it is right or wrong." (H. C. Kimball, November 8, 1857; Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, p. 32.)

Notwithstanding the fact that Brigham Young, secure in the consciousness of his power, had issued the edict, "I feel to say to Jew and Gentile, Let this people alone in these valleys of the mountains, or you will find that you are not looking for," and that one may see what he referred to as to that which was calculated to disturb the peace of the people, we quote from the same edict, but just a little nearer to the opening of the sermon: "Now you Gladdenites, keep your tongues still, lest sudden destruction come upon you." And going on, he instructed the bishops to "kick these men out of your wards," and proceeded to warn the "apostates" as follows: "Do not court persecution, for, remember, you are not playing with shadows, but it is the voice and hand of the Almighty you are trying to play with, and you will find yourselves mistaken if you think to the contrary." Notwithstanding this edict, the Reorganization answered the invitation issued by one of the Pratts in the Seer. "If editors and ministers wish to put a stop to the rolling of the great wheels of 'Mormonism,' we advise them to try another plan. . . . Let missionaries be sent among them; they shall be treated with respect; meetinghouses shall be opened to them free of all expense. . . . A voice is heard from Utah, saying, Come over and help us," etc., and in 1863 sent the first missionaries to the rescue. These missionaries were E. C. Briggs of the Twelve, and Alex. McCord of the Seventy, and they went at once to the authorities with a request for places wherein to deliver the message to the people.

Not only did they meet with a refusal here, but the Saints of the mountains were counseled not to hear or give them any encouragement in any way. The papers were closed against them, except for one called The Reporter at Corinne, and only through the assistance of some of the "Gentile" merchants, as they were dubbed by the Mormons, did they finally secure a place wherein to preach. Even the use of places wherein to baptize was denied them, so that they had to walk far to administer the ordinance to those who demanded it. This opposition was not confined to the first two missionaries, but continued for many years, in fact has not altogether ceased yet, only conditions have changed and the conduct of the leaders have been modified by changed conditions in the Government.

Do not think we make this statement without warrant, for in the last year of our missionary work in Utah we had evidence of the same spirit at work among the leaders there, when we were denied even the privilege of announcing a reply to a lecture given in Ogden against us, under the title of "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints"; but the streets could not be closed against us this time. In former times, notwithstanding the fact that their elders were preaching in the streets of cities of other countries, the Mormons had passed a law forbidding such missionary work in Utah, but these conditions are changed now, though occasionally one of their elders will come to us with the belligerent statement, "You could not preach here this way thirty years ago, sir!"

However, we were speaking of early missions, but the fact that conditions here have been such that, largely, those who were called into the fold have emigrated eastward or westward, has kept this field with only few members of the Reorganization in it, has made our missions here all seem like early missions, with this exception, the first missionaries, E. C. Briggs, Alexander McCord, D. H. Smith, Alexander Smith, James W. Gillen, E. C. Brand, et al., must have baptized from four to five hundred during the years from 1863 to 1865, but now the baptisms come more slowly; still there are sheep who only wait to be found.

The weapons used against our missionaries from the first, here, besides the priestcraft already mentioned, have mainly been personal testimony of what Joseph the Seer is alleged to have done "secretly" in doctrine and practice, and always in violation of gospel precept. We need not mention the effort to prove to the "Smith boys," as they were called, the statement that their father was a polygamist to be a fact, but will mention that at one time the name of a woman who claimed to have been one of the numerous wives of that father, and who also claimed to be the mother of a daughter of that father, was given to them, and Alexander Smith took the pains to call upon her, but he found that the "daughter of Joseph Smith," as she was called among the Mormons, was born in 1847 and, as her mother said, was "his by proxy."

Another story told by Brigham Young and others was to the effect that Joseph and Hyrum Smith had started for the Rocky Mountains, but came back and gave themselves up to the authorities at Carthage at the instance of Emma Smith and William Marks. We do not hear this alleged "prophecy" now as often as the early missionaries did, for the reason that, like the other stories, it has been proven false, their own men being the witnesses against them.

But it was not in baptisms that our early missionaries made the largest impression upon the Mormons. It was in the seed sown in the work done here. As one elder said to me about ten years ago, "You men are doing more here than you think you are. Our people are fast coming to the positions occupied by you, and you are the ones who are bringing them there."

It has been a work of sowing seed, largely ideas, of getting the people to do some thinking for themselves. One does sometimes still hear the position taken by some zealous Mormon, that they must follow the leaders even though they are in opposition to the books, as Apostle O. F. Whitney said before the conference of October, 6, 1910, "We do not take our commands from the Bible. We are not governed by the gospel as revealed to the Nephites. . . . No man can stand up to-day in this church and justify himself in any course by pleading what the Nephites did or did not do." The rank and file are coming where they begin to demand that the church get nearer in line with the books, the standards of the church, and as in former times "other men labored, and ye are entered into their labors," so we are, in a measure, reaping where they sowed the seed.

May we not only reap, but sow as faithfully as our predecessors, and both laboring and praying for the day when Zion shall be redeemed.

JOSEPH SMITH, JR.

This latter-day work is certainly a marvelous work and a wonder to me. The older I get the more marvelously it shines. In meditating, my mind often turns to the man whose name was to go out in the world for good and for evil.

From my earliest childhood I listened to as satirical, invective anecdotes as could be conceived by the mind of man, inspired by the prince of darkness, told on this man. I believed them then.

It is a mistake in my opinion for men to think that they can gather evidence against the Seer of Palmyra, when it could not be done forty or eighty years ago. I maintain, it is unjust to cast the name of Joseph Smith, jr., into outer darkness.

To me the word of the Christ and his handful of apostles is better than the word of all the remaining multitudes on the three eastern continents. Then I shall go to a righteous man for evidence. Anno Domini 1877 I started to investigate, to find the personality, morals, and virtue of our Elijah of these last days.

I asked an elder of our church whether Joseph Smith, jr., were a good man or a bad man. The answer given was that the Seer must have been partly wrong, or there would not have been so much told about him. If I had a right to make an astronomical survey, I would say that from that time until now I have gone from the glory of Fomalhaut to Polaris and from the Pleiades to Lyra to ascertain the facts about Joseph Smith, jr.

I will confess that there were many Mormon polygamists who testified that Joseph the Seer secretly taught polygamy, but I would not believe them any more than I would believe the words of an extortionate person in the days of Paul.

Give me one righteous man's word before the word of ten thousand sinners. The Utah elders said that the Prophet secretly taught polygamy. Our elders said no.

First, I would not take a polygamist's word because I think a polygamist is worse than a liar, and if a man were guilty of such a crime he might falsify to justify himself. No, I will not believe them. To be fair I went to men whom I considered upright men to ascertain facts, men not of our church.

I was told if I would go to a certain town that I would find these foolish stories to be true. I then lived in Kansas. I went to this town of rumors, even Nauvoo, Illinois. I approached a man who appeared to be an honorable man. I asked him if he was acquainted with Joseph Smith, jr. This man said he lived next door to the Smith house, and that the rear of his house was adjacent to the side of Joseph Smith, jr.'s house. He also told me that he had heard so many rumors about the Seer that in order to ascertain facts he would go in his kitchen, blow out the light, and sit and observe the movements in the Smith house. He said men would be consulting with Joseph until late in the night. As soon as the men would leave, Sister Emma, Joseph's wife, would come in the room where Joseph was, and the lights in the house would go out. Further, he said he was acquainted with Joseph, jr., until he was murdered at the Carthage jail, and that he never saw one thing wrong with the man.

I asked the man if Joseph ever taught or practiced polygamy. He said Joseph was a clean, pure, man. I asked if Joseph ever did any of the many things that were told on him. The answer was no, nothing wrong, nothing to it. As I was conversing with this man, my thoughts turned to Matthew 5: 11, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you and say all manner of evil against you falsely," etc. Also, I conversed with others who were acquainted with the Prophet. They all spoke highly of him. I asked others if they knew any man who could say that the Seer taught polygamy. I then could not find a man of morals who would say that he knew one word against Joseph Smith, jr. Remember, that was over forty years ago. Not one word could I get against the Seer of Palmyra. I wanted to know the facts for myself. I found many lewd people who were willing to and did slander the Prophet.

WHAT JASON BRIGGS SAID

I got acquainted with Jason Briggs in 1891, in Denver. He had been a member of our church, but he was not when I was acquainted with him. Remember, Jason Briggs was one of the men who stood by the church through the dark days, then left the work after it began to shine in its glory. Jason Briggs said he was well acquainted with Brother Joseph, jr., and that personally, morally, and virtuously, he was a clean, righteous man. I asked him if Joseph ever taught polygamy. Jason's answer was no.

Brother Jason said that he often argued with the Utah elders and he would ask them the question, "Was Joseph Smith, jr, an author of confusion?" The answer they would give was in the negative. Then Jason would say, "Joseph, jr., taught us to watch and keep iniquity out of the church, and if he secretly taught you polygamy, and taught us to keep iniquity out of the church, that would be confusion, since polygamy is iniquity." Then he would say that the Seer never taught polygamy. Jason Briggs said that he started over eighty-three years ago (from the present time) and that he had a chance to know, and there could be no facts produced against Joseph Smith, jr., and if there could be he would not hesitate, he would produce them, and he was in a position to know.

Again, I heard Brother E. L. Kelley say that he had spent considerable money to find the true facts about the Seer, and he could not get one fact against him, by a person of morals.

Furthermore, after much investigation, Brother Joseph, who passed away only a few years ago, said, "I do not think my father was a bad man. I believe he was a good man." So do I believe that the Seer of Palmyra was a good man. The evidence brings those facts strongly to my mind.

To my mind the words of the Seer are worth more than the words of all men who left the church and went into polygamy. If he fell, he fell. If not, then it is well to beware.

To recapitulate. If Jason Briggs started eighty-three years ago and I started over forty years ago, and many other good, true-hearted Saints have striven to ascertain facts, and we could not get one scratch against the Seer of Palmyra, it looks impossible for some men to go out and get enough evidence to condemn him at this late day. I think such men are easily persuaded. I believe that they want the wrong side.

Again, I know we are in touch with God's will, and whether the Seer stood or fell, makes little difference to us, only the strength we get by his holding on to the rod of iron to the end. I believe from the evidence we gathered that he was faithful to the end. It is a sin to speak evil of a righteous man. If Joseph Smith was alive, he would be bold enough to uphold any prophet of God who had sealed his testimony with his own blood. Let us be bold.

Some say that the Seer's mind became darkened and that the last part of his work was not inspired. Let every man read his works and judge for himself. If they cannot believe all, let them believe what they can. The way I understand this doctrine of the church, he had the right to appoint another in his stead, and the one appointed in his stead had a right to appoint another in his stead, and so on, to avoid confusion. For my part, I can see inspiration in all of the Doctrine and Covenants. I took much pains to gather facts, and I believe that they will give a certain degree of strength to the Saints.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE PRESIDENT'S 14 CONDITIONS

The President referred to the fourteen propositions in his address to Congress of January 8, and the four principles into which these fourteen propositions were compressed in his address to Congress of February 11.

The President's fourteen propositions, all of which are very specific, are as follows:

I. Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind, but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view.

II. Absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas outside territorial waters, alike in peace and in war, except as the seas may be closed in whole or in part by international action for the enforcement of international covenants.

III. The removal, so far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all the nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance.

IV. Adequate guarantees given and taken that national armaments will be reduced to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety.

V. Free, open-minded, and absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial claims, based upon a strict observance of the principle that in determining such questions of sovereignty the interest of the population concerned must have equal weight with the equitable claims of the government whose title is to be determined.

VI. The evacuation of all Russian territory, and such settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest cooperation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her an unhampered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development and national policy, and assure her of a sincere welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing; and more than a welcome, assistance also of every kind that she may need and may herself desire. The treatment accorded Russia by her sister nations will be the acid test of their good will, of their comprehension of her needs as distinguished from their own interests, and of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy.

VII. Belgium, the whole world will agree, must be evacuated and restored without any attempt to limit the sovereignty which she enjoys in common with all other free nations. No other single act will serve as this will serve to restore confidence among the nations in the laws which they themselves set and determined for the government of their relations with one another. Without this healing act the whole structure and validity of international law is forever impaired.

VIII. All French territory should be freed and the invaded portions restored, and the wrong done to France by Prussia in 1871 in the matter of Alsace-Lorraine, which has unsettled the peace of the world for nearly fifty years, should be righted in order that peace may once more be made secure in the interest of all.

IX. A readjustment of the frontiers of Italy should be effected along clearly recognizable lines of nationality.

X. The peoples of Austria-Hungary, whose place among the nations we wish to see safeguarded and assured, should be accorded the freest opportunity of autonomous development.

XI. Rumania, Serbia, and Montenegro should be evacuated, occupied territories restored, Serbia accorded free and secure access to the sea, and the relations of the several Balkan states to one another determined by friendly counsel along historically established lines of allegiance and nationality; and international guarantees of the political and economic independence and territorial integrity of the several Balkan states should be entered into.

XII. The Turkish portions of the present Ottoman empire should be assured a secure sovereignty, but the other nationalities which are now under Turkish rule should be assured an undoubted security of life and an absolutely unmolested opportunity of autonomous development; and the Dardenelles should be permanently opened as a free passage to the ships and commerce of all nations under international guarantees.

XIII. An independent Polish state should be erected which should include the territories inhabited by indisputably Polish populations, which should be assured a free and secure access to the sea, and whose political and economic independence and territorial integrity should be guaranteed by international covenant.

XIV. A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small states alike.

These fourteen propositions were subsequently reduced by the President to four general principles which were submitted to Congress in February and which were as follows:

First. That each part of the final settlement must be based upon the essential justice of that particular case and upon such adjustments as are most likely to bring a peace that will be permanent.

Second. That peoples and provinces are not to be bartered about from sovereignty to sovereignty as if they were mere chattels and pawns in a game, now forever discredited, of the balance of power; but that,

Third. Every territorial settlement involved in this war must be made in the interest and for the benefit of the populations concerned, and not as part of any mere adjustment or compromise of claims among rival states; and,

Fourth. That all well-defined national aspirations shall be accorded the utmost satisfaction that can be accorded them without introducing new or perpetuating old elements of discord and antagonism that would be likely in time to break the peace of Europe and consequently of the world.—New York World.

TURNING TO THE BIBLE

The "best preparation that you can give to an American soldier going into battle to sustain his magnificent ideal and his faith" is "certainly the Bible." This message the American Bible Society receives from Marshal Foch in appreciation of the quarter of a million copies of the Scriptures distributed among soldiers abroad. Besides these, the society is supplying thousands of copies every week to men in the embarkation camps just before they sail for the other side. The Congregationalist (Boston) sees the war as having brought about a remarkable revival of interest in the Bible:

This would be true if we take into account only those who are studying the Bible to find in its prophecies something about the war. Compared with the study being done week by week by thousands of young men training for the army and navy, the narrow study of prophecy is a negligible matter. The call for the Bible since we entered the war has taxed the resources of our printers. The American Bible Society granted last summer to the Y. M. C. A. for the soldiers a million Testaments. It had no stock at hand for this grant, which required ninety tons of paper. A New England firm furnished the needed amount; a New York printery worked night and day for months on the job, and the testaments were ready for distribution the middle of May. The British Bible Society issued nearly 10,000,000 Bibles in 1917-1918, and sent 3,000,000 of them to China. This society is now 114 years of age and is still in its youth, and in spite of the war keeps up its work in Berlin, Vienna, and other cities of the central powers. It is reported that when the British entered Jerusalem a few months ago they found the depot of the society safe, with 30,000 Bibles on hand. Typical of the Bible classes for our men in the service are those held at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station north of Chicago. Ministers and laymen in large numbers have taken great interest in this work. On a recent Sunday there were over seventy classes, taught mostly by laymen, and double this number could have been formed if there had been teachers. The work is going forward with so much interest that it is expected that 20,000 Jackies will be in the classes at the station by September 1. The laymen are rising nobly to this opportunity and are themselves receiving great good from the service. One of them said recently, "We are learning more than the boys."

INDIANS MINED WYOMING IRON ORE

The Sunrise, Wyoming, iron ore mine of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, Denver, Colorado, was originally discovered by the Indians who operated it as a source of supply for war paint. As the ore they sought was a soft, red oxide of iron, it probably suited the purpose admirably. How long ago the mine was discovered is a question of conjecture, according to the April Bulletin of the Colorado company.

Implements discovered in the ancient workings indicate that operations of the aborigines date back to the Stone Age, because stripping and other excavating work has uncovered working places fully 30 feet below the present ground surface. Wash from the surrounding hills has, of course, obliterated all traces of the workings of other days which could not have been disclosed without modern excavating tools and appliances.

Stone implements such as hammers and digging tools, left by these Indians, have been brought to light by modern excavating. Many excellent specimens of arrow heads made of agate and flint have also been found and in the more recent workings, implements of iron and steel. The latter were used by the Sioux, Cheyenne, and Arapahoe tribes who inherited the land from their forefathers.—From the Iron Trade Review, June 18, 1918.

THE FOURTH LIBERTY LOAN

Again the Government comes to the people of the country with the request that they lend their money, and lend it upon a more liberal scale than ever before, in order that the great war for the rights of America and the liberation of the world may be prosecuted with ever increasing vigor to a victorious conclusion. And it makes the appeal with the greatest confidence because it knows that every day it is becoming clearer and clearer to thinking men throughout the Nation that the winning of the war is an essential investment. The money that is held back now will be of little use or value if the war is not won and the selfish masters of Germany are permitted to dictate what America may and may not do. Men in America, besides, have from the first until now dedicated both their lives and their fortunes to the vindication and maintenance of the great principles and objects for which our Government was set up. They will not fail now to show the world for what their wealth was intended.—Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States.

War Camp Community Service

There are some phases of "war work" which are open to women of certain localities which have not yet been emphasized in our columns. I refer to the opportunities which come to qualified women who are living near any of the many camps and cantonments in our country. There is a distinct duty to be done to and for our soldier boys, many of whom are very young, and who are for the first time thrown upon their own initiative. Without the balance wheel of parental counsel these boys are very much in danger of going wrong, in spite of the very efficient efforts made by the Government officials to prevent it.

The "lure of the khaki" is one which exerts its influence not only over those young men who are by it irresistibly drawn into army service, but, in a very different way, and (one really deplorable in many instances), it is causing many of our young girls to take risks, go places and do things of which, under more normal conditions, they would not be guilty. This interest and pride in the uniform of our national soldier is not an unnatural one, and it is not an unworthy one, if only our young people of both sexes could be impressed with its sacredness and the necessity of keeping it, at all times and in all places, an emblem of uprightness and true chivalry. Here is where mothers should rise up and concern themselves, in an educational campaign to the end that their daughters and their sons, as well as all those who come under their influence, shall be made conscious, in no uncertain terms, of what conduct is becoming both in, and toward, one who wears a uniform of the United States!

Boys in the service should be imbued with a sense of their responsibility in representing their country's honor, and be made to feel that it is not all contained in physical courage or endurance nor upheld thereby; they should be taught that purity of personal conduct is as necessary to the full honoring of their uniform, as are courage and valor. Mothers and sisters, in their letters to loved ones in the service, will do well to put these eternal truths plainly before the boys, and do what they can in every way to help them to see clearly the path of safety and honor. It is not the clear light of any truth, however ugly it may seem on the face of it, which is to be feared, but the twilights of half-knowledge, or the blackness of complete ignorance, which fill the lives of our young people with such grave dangers.

A word now in regard to the duty the mothers owe to the girls in this connection. A mother who thoughtlessly allows her daughter to go alone, or in company with other careless young girls, to an army post or camp, or who allows her to meet soldiers and make acquaintance with them in an irregular and unprotected manner, is a mother who is blind not only to the things which threaten the peace and safety of her own home-ties, but to her God-given duty as well. It is natural, we repeat, for a girl to be interested in a young man in khaki: his uniform proclaims him her defender, and all the sentiment of her young fancy, all the romance which is so real and vital in the life of all the youthful, are aroused within her. She wants to be with him as often as possible, to talk of the great things being done in the world to-day, or of the trivialities of the play, or the dance, or any of the thousand topics which seem so fascinating to them. This is not wrong, we insist; the danger lies in the improper ways taken to obtain this companionship, and the laxity in regard to proprieties which are entailed.

Dear girls who may read this, please understand that proprieties—that great bugaboo to some—is only your guardian angel in disguise! It is only the brick-and-mortar of the wall which surrounds and protects from wayward trespassers, the sacred precincts of your maidenly reserve and chastity. Be assured that no girl can afford to break down, even the smallest chink of this defense without great danger to herself, and without giving a most grave advantage to the alert enemy of her soul. In the conventionalities you may safely trust, and feel sure that so long as you walk within their boundaries, you are indeed “free” in that kind of liberty which is most desirable.

Women of mature mind and warm hearts, who live near an army camp of any kind, can do much toward heartening and encouraging the young life about her. And the way opens easily, and is a pleasant one. All such a woman has to do, is to get in touch with the national War Camp Community Service, organize a group of girls into a club or association, and then follow some of the many fine plans which are outlined for her, or which her own good sense may suggest. An evening a week, upon which such a group of girls under the direction of their mature and sympathetic leaders, may entertain the soldiers from the near-by camp, when a well-planned program of music and games and wholesome frolics may be carried out, will prove an increasingly popular affair in the community, you may be sure. At these gatherings no “pairing off” should be allowed, no partialities shown by any girl for the association of any one young man, and the entire affair entered into by all, in a spirit of cordial good-fellowship, such as any wholesome girl would show for her brother or cousin or schoolmate. At the close of the festivities, the girls should stand near the door, and shake hands in parting with each khaki-clad guest, thus emphasizing their position as hostesses. There should be no taking of the girls home by any of the soldiers, the girls coming to the gathering place in protected groups and returning the same way.

There is one such club which has come under our notice, and their evenings are very popular. Recently an enterprising newspaper reporter wrote an enthusiastic article for a Sunday issue, telling of the successful events planned and carried out by these girls, and he illustrated his little news story with a snapshot taken of a group of these young people about a piano, singing patriotic songs—which, by the way, is one of the most favorite pastimes. A few days after the paper with this story came out, the publishers received the following letter, which we are glad to copy because of the fine spirit of appreciation it shows, as well as yearning desires of a good mother for a beloved son, torn from her side by the stern demands of our present crisis.

“To the Editors: Kind friends have sent us a copy of your paper of September 22, in which is a picture of some young men and girls at a piano in the Young Woman's Christian Association hall. Among these we recognized our son. He looks so jolly and happy! I want to say right here you have voiced the sentiments of every soldier boy in camp in your city when you say they do not want to be transferred anywhere else except overseas! Our boy has been in training camp seven months, and in several different camps, but he says, ‘There is no place like — for me!’ In every letter he tells of some kindness some one in your city has shown him. I tell you, we mothers appreciate it, and I wish I could meet each and every one of these people and thank them personally.

“One day he wrote of some people who had invited him for a car ride and then home with them to eat watermelon and ice cream. He said, ‘Mother, you don't know how nice it seemed to get into a real home for a while. It sure makes a fellow feel like living a clean life!’

“You can print this letter or not, as you choose, but in it I am trying to show a portion of our appreciation to the people of your city for the glad hands they have extended to our boy while he is among them. He has a clean record, and may God bless the people who are helping him to keep it so!”

“Signed, —.”

The part of this letter which should appeal to all mothers is this closing sentence. Does it not make you feel that any effort you may make to give the soldier boy in your midst a little clean, wholesome diversion is a small offering indeed compared to that he is making for you, and all of us? A leader of such a movement told me that it was almost pitiful to see how, sometimes, a young man would come into their gatherings almost reluctantly, but would gradually relax, his shyness and reserve gradually melt away under the genial sun of whole-hearted fellowship and good will which prevailed there. She added that they had found that the reserve and bashfulness in almost every case were due to sheer loneliness. One brother, writing to the Ensign lately from one of our training camps, said that some of the soldiers there seem but boys, apparently, they were so young, and so unused to life away from their homes. It made his heart ache to see the loneliness and homesickness upon their faces.

But this is war, grim war, and we cannot withhold our intense admiration for the young men who have responded so nobly to its demands. Let us try to make their duties more bearable, while they are within our reach. We can do little after they pass overseas except by way of letters; but while they are within reach of our ministry, while warm hands can welcome, and glad words of cheer and pure fun and frolic can relieve the irksomeness of their condition, let us plan that these things may come to them in innocent ways, from sources free from attendant danger of wrongdoing, and from hearts bubbling over with sympathetic understanding. They do not want to be coddled or petted, what they want is a harmless outlet for the pent-up energies and spirits which have no expression in the stern duties of study and training.

If any of our readers live near an army camp and learn that there is no organized effort in their city to entertain the soldiers stationed near them, why not busy yourself in seeing what can be done in this direction? (An inquiry addressed to the Division Secretary of the War Camp Community Service, would doubtless receive prompt attention. This gentleman is Mr. Donald G. Price, and his address is 1 Madison Avenue, New York City.)

Let us do what we can for the soul welfare of our boys in the service; let us mother them, and sister them, in wisdom and wholesome understanding of their moods, their trials and their difficulties. Let us believe in them, and let us guard their honor as we do our own. We cannot go far wrong, if this is in our conscious thought towards them, and then we will feel justified when we sing the new stanza which has been added to our patriotic hymn, "America":

"God bless our noble men,
Bring them safe home again,
God bless our men!
Keep them victorious,
Patient, and chivalrous,
They are so dear to us,
God bless our men!"

The Girls' Patriotic League

Here is a copy of the pledge which the girls in many cities are signing in order to help place themselves in line with progressive and helpful efforts to win the war in the right way. Our readers will agree that in a few words much is included, and that a faithful living of the pledge will enable every girl or woman who makes it.

I pledge to express my patriotism—

By doing better than ever before whatever work I have to do.

By rendering whatever special service I can to my community and my country.

By living up to the highest standards of character and honor, and helping others to do the same.

Our Women in War Work

Some inquiries have been made concerning the attitude our church women have taken in regard to what is termed "war work." Those who have read our columns have doubtless noted that the sentiment of the readers among our women is one highly favorable to their doing all that they possibly can to help the Government in these days of serious turmoil, and also to assist in every good movement for "sweet charity's sake."

Since no religious denomination makes greater claim to the guidance of the spirit of love and consecration than ours, it surely is reasonable to expect that our members should not hesitate when the opportunity to assist in good deeds is offered them. And also, since our church believes that this American Government was instituted under the guiding influence of God, by wise men whom "he raised up unto this very purpose," we should be ready, nay, eager, to uphold in this crisis, the hands of those burdened with the affairs of state.

In connection with the subject of our loyalty at this time, we publish the letter which our general secretary, Sister Gardner, sent to the Director of the Division on Woman's War work, a few weeks since. This letter was in response to a request coming from Reverend E. M. North, secretary of the War-time Commission of the churches, who was gathering data for a Government pamphlet on "War work of women in the churches." The perusal of Sister Gardner's reply will give a partial idea of the activities of our women, a complete record of which, it is obvious, is quite difficult to obtain. Were our locals better organized, and more alert to respond to the requests for reports we might have at hand a more accurate record — and, thereby, make an even finer showing of our active loyalty.

Our secretary's letter follows:

Clara Sears Taylor,

Washington, District of Columbia.

Dear Madam: Since receiving Doctor North's letter in April of this year, there has been made a direct inquiry as to the extent of war work done by the women of our church in America and foreign countries. The response is such as to permit us to make the following general survey from tabulated, detailed returns:

The Red Cross is receiving preference in interest, many units being organized and active among our women, work reported such as knitting of all required garments and the making of surgical dressings, bed linen, hospital garments, haversacks, etc. Church buildings and private residences are turned into workrooms. Many report also, refugee work for Belgian babies and children. Our survey indicates that the women have responded very generally to the call for workers in the various Red Cross and Liberty Loan drives. Many serve as chairmen of divisions, units, or groups, and as instructors in Red Cross work.

An extensive interest is shown in gardening and canning as a direct war-winning activity. Specific instances of war work are reported, such as that of a woman in Switzerland who conducts a class in nursing and relief work.

As a further conservation measure, the Woman's Auxiliary is enlisting the interest of its members in the Children's Year campaign which is authorized and urged by the Government as a second year war measure. This Auxiliary has purchased the Children's Year Posters from the National Child Welfare Association, and is sending them free throughout the United States to the summer conferences of our people. Circulars have been sent to those in charge of the women's work at these conferences, requesting them to urge food conservation as directed by the Government, and Red Cross work. Girls and young women have been asked, by personal letters and circulars, to interest themselves actively in gardening, canning, Red Cross work, etc.

At a convention of the General Woman's Auxiliary in April, representing a membership of about four thousand, a resolution was adopted voicing the patriotism of the women of our church. The resolution is inclosed herewith.

The Woman's Auxiliary, as a department of our church, stands ready to further any additional plans which the Government may suggest, and we ask that our name be placed on your mailing list that we may receive the literature which is issued from time to time.

Very respectfully,

MRS. J. A. GARDNER, General Secretary, W. A.

War Work Pamphlet

"War work for women," is a very useful pamphlet gotten out by the information department of the National Council of Defense. It contains a list of occupations, both paid and volunteer, which are open to women in war work, classified as to requirement, salaries, foreign or home service, and to whom or where to make applications. Copies may be had by applying to any county chairman of the woman's committee or to the State or national chairman.

Are We Really Sacrificing?

People who complain because they are unable to get some little luxuries should remember that our forefathers lived without sugar till the thirteenth century, without coal till the fourteenth, without butter till the fifteenth, without tobacco and potatoes until the sixteenth, without tea, coffee, and soap till the seventeenth, without umbrellas and lamps till the eighteenth, and without trains, telegraphs, telephones, gas, and matches till the nineteenth; without automobiles, electric appliances, airplanes, and wireless or U-boats until the twentieth century.

HYMNS AND POEMS

Selected and Original

The Dahlia and the Tea Rose

'Twas summer, in a garden fair I walked
Where bloomed, in great profusion, flowers rare,
To Nature, each their incense burned, for she
Their queen, must needs their loving worship have;
And near a wall, a bed of dahlias grew,
Majestic, tall, and many colored,
The summer air their fragrant perfume wafted;
Then near I drew, and plucked a blossom red,
Its petals to the wind I strewed, and then
From out its heart a nauseous odor came,
Upon the ground I dropped what I'd destroyed,
And crushed it with my heel; but oh, and then
The odor from it stronger still arose.

Ah! conspicuous to every eye had grown
This flaming flower in all its regal state;
Yet when dissected to its very heart,
Repellant it was found to be; it mocked
The pomp and show it once to all did flaunt.
Thus shall we find those in the world who most
Do like their wit and beauty to display,
But underneath they hide from public gaze
The real unworthiness of which they're made;
The more one seeks to break the barrier,
The more one finds of what attracts him not.

But look! Down there, close to the ground what hides
In modesty from prominence and grows
All by itself, content to live and bloom
And give its very best to all who chance
To find its hiding place? Why, just a wee
And dainty tea-rose, flushed with softest pink,
A hue as delicate as the flower,
And from the tiny blossom there did come
A fragrance rare and sweet and unsurpassed;

Then near I drew and plucked a blossom pink,
Its petals to the breeze I flung, and then
From out its heart the same sweet odor came,
Upon the ground I dropped what I'd destroyed,
And crushed it with my heel, but, oh, and then,
The odor from it stronger still arose.

Ah! In modesty to every eye had grown
This dainty flower close to its mother earth,
And when dissected to its very heart,
Still sweeter it was found to be; enhanced
Was all the loveliness contained therein.
Thus shall we find those in the world who are Content to live in modesty alone,
But underneath it we may always find
The worth so true and real of which they're made;
The more one seeks to break the barrier,
The more one finds to make him farther seek.

Nay; Speak No Ill

(From an unpublished manuscript.)

Nay; speak no ill, but lenient be
To others' failings as your own.
If you're the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known.
Our life is but a passing day;
No tongue can tell how short the span.
Then, oh, the little time we stay,
Let us speak of all the best we can.

Nay; speak no ill, a kindly word
Can never leave a sting behind.
Then, oh, to breathe each tale we've heard
Is far beneath a noble mind.
Then let us reach a higher mood,
A noble estimate of man;
And if we know but little good,
Let us speak of all the best we can.

Give me the heart that feign would hide,
Feign would another's faults erase.
What can it pleasure human pride
To prove humanity but base.
For oft a better seed is sown
By choosing this the wiser plan.
And if but little good be known,
Let us speak of all the best we can.

Brotherhood

When we see a brother falter, from God's house away remain
Do we blame him for his folly, say his love is on the wane?
Do we hasten to assist him, and his trouble seek to share
And in love tell how we miss him when we see his vacant chair?

Do we sympathize in earnest, lead him safely back again?
No?—Then do we judge him harshly, with a selfish kind of aim?

Do we say with heads toss'd proudly, unaware of Heaven's laws?—

Never thinking once to ponder in our hearts the real cause!

When we see a brother hungry—thirsty—naked—tired—cold,
Do we think it is our duty to at once begin to scold?
Do we turn our backs upon him, with a cunning kind of sneer,
This poor, wretched, shipwrecked brother, who has failed to steer quite clear?
Do we rescue, feed, and clothe him, or refrain and let him drown—
Is our look one of compassion, or a dismal kind of frown?
Do we own him as a brother, give his hand a friendly squeeze?—
Knowing Christ smiles down upon us when we succor "such as these."

When we see a brother falling 'neath the burden and the heat,
Do we lend a hand to save him, or seclusively retreat?
Do we watch him from a distance, see him crash to depths below,
Mutt'ring with self-satisfaction, "There you are, I told you so"?
Come, say, do we really love him, as we many times profess—
Swiftly run to his assistance, lead him from the precipice:
If he topples over ne'er perhaps to rise again?—
Knowing that our brother's losses are to us not any gain!

When we see a brother turning from the "strait and narrow way,"
Do we seek at once to help him ere he wanders far away?
Do we let him drift and wander, never lend a helping hand?
Chide we him for harb'ring follies, with all power at our command?
Do we try our best to help him and his backward steps retrace,
Do we point him to the Savior and his all-redeeming grace;
Do we tell him how we battle, how we conquer in the fight—
How the power of God will help him, if he will but do the right?

When we know that hearts are aching for the lack of sympathy
Do we speak a word of courage, rest we on our dignity?
Do we wait for yet another opportunity more great,
And withhold small acts of kindness, till we find it is too late?
Come, let's do our humble duty, with a sympathizing tear:
Binding up the broken-hearted, comforting with words of cheer.
Quite forgetful of the human, we have oft misunderstood
The great Spirit of the Master, and his one great brotherhood.
DOVER E. JUDD.

"Keep a watch on your words, my darling,
For words are wonderful things;
They are sweet like the bees' fresh honey—
Like the bees they have terrible stings;
They can bless like the warm, glad sunshine,
And brighten a lonely life;
They can cut in the strife of anger
Like an open, two-edged knife."

We have said that the subject of our clothing is an important one. It is, but there are things of much more importance. Our clothing, like our food, is merely one of the things necessary to our physical existence. It should occupy no more of our time and thought than is necessary in order that it may serve its twofold purpose, that of giving comfort and refinement.—Ethel I. Skank.

LETTER DEPARTMENT

Conversation in the Home

Conversation in the home may be made not only pleasant and entertaining, but very profitable as well. When one hears a sermon or attends a prayer service the good impression made by them on the minds of the hearers may be much more deeply impressed by quietly speaking to each other about it in the home, parent and children talking, each telling what they can remember.

When we hear things of great moral and spiritual importance and say little or nothing at home about it, it is strong presumptive evidence that we took but little, if any, interest in it. For, "from the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," and if when one returns from hearing a good sermon or attending a good prayer meeting, instead of talking it over in the home, they begin to speak of the weather or the state of the market or the war, the good effect of that sermon or prayer service is largely lost on that home.

The parents have treated lightly that which was sacred, and if the parents do this, the children will surely do the same. If such a course is persisted in in the homes of Saints, then certain it is that their children will lose interest in the work.

That which is worth retaining in the mind is worth talking about, and if it is not worth talking about, we had better have nothing to do with it. After supper is over and the table is clear is a fine time for conversation on general or special topics, as wisdom may direct. In such conversation, each of the family old enough should take part. None should seek to speak the loudest and say impertinent things, but the voice should be pleasant and natural, the father presiding in the home in a courteous manner. If children are taught the art of wise and judicious conversation at home then they will so converse when speaking to others.

Our conversation should not be of minced words or slang phrases, but we should use the best language we know.
Why spend years in schools and colleges acquiring a good use of language and then not use it? It would be foolish for a man to go to the lumber yard and buy a nice lot of costly lumber with which to build a house, and then split the nice boards into small strips and put them into the building.
So with good language, let us use it and not abuse it.

World-Wide Peace---What Will It Cost?

There has been much speculation in regard to this saying, not by individuals only, but of nations, because of the fact that President Wilson's proclamation has gone to all people and nations. Man within himself could not multiply figures enough and speak words to explain and show his fellows either the beginning or end; but, alas, we see and hear on every hand men of great learning trying to solve the problem. But after they have gone their limit, their hearers are not satisfied, neither they themselves.

Neither is it for man's wisdom to know, for God has said the wisdom of this world is foolishness with him; and men have begun to realize what a great thing it would be to obtain only a dim ray of light from above, that their longing might be satisfied.

The world, even this Nation, is grabbing, as it were, at a floating straw. Visions and dreams reported by individuals are being published to the world which seem to indicate things pertaining to the great world war. But where is the Daniel of old, or Joseph of Egypt, and others, that the interpretation might be given to-day? When we ask the world who has believed our report or to whom has the arm of the Lord been revealed, they look down at the ground, as though they had lost something, and true it is.

Then as a dreamer of dreams, and a descendant of Ephraim, the son of Joseph of Egypt, according to a patriarchal blessing received at the hands of A. White, I write the following, that it may pass the final examination at the hands of those whose right it is to know, and also who have proclaimed the things already found herein, and have been criticised as I shall be if this writing goes to the world. If I were asked why it was that many of our people did not stand with President F. M. Smith, what could I say but that it was for the lack of inspiration, or that inspiration was covered up by some carnal weapon? To say that they were right would be to deny the words of the prophets of God.

[Brother Cox included several dreams. In the first in 1910, he dreamed that he was across the Atlantic Ocean and there was shown that a great war would take place, and many would be killed; great would be the mourning, and many would suffer because of famine.

The second dream, in 1911, appeared to indicate that by the image of a cloud that would proceed from the East, that this country also would be affected.

The third, in 1914, appeared to indicate the gathering of the Saints, and the building up of Zion—the pure in heart. Also that certain churches would have to suffer loss.

After a fourth dream concerning the destructiveness of the war, he continues]:

Then I said, peace and liberty are sure, but great is the cost; so great that no man can count. What a dreadful thing it is to fall into the hands of a living God, and at last be made to know that God still lives, and that all men and nations must reap that which they have sown, and that the harvest time is here.

May God bless the heads of the Church of Jesus Christ, that they may stand in holy places and direct her people aright, together with the heads of this Nation, to stand firm and unmovable, and at last rejoice together under the one great flag of nations, which shall bear the Stars and Stripes—the emblem of peace and liberty to all people—till he shall come whose right it is to rule—the Lord of lords, and King of kings.

The Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, Was It Literal or Real?

The fact that many believe the tree of knowledge of good and evil was not real calls forth an exhaustive elucidation by the use of all Scripture that in any way deals with the fall of man.

Latter Day Saints should not be ignorant of things which are so plainly set forth, because the results to be obtained in winning souls to the truth necessitates the utilization of power that is available from only one source, the source of learning. Then why will a Latter Day Saint allow his learning to fall short when he has the books and the Holy Spirit to guide him?

Although atheists claim they do not believe in the Bible, almost any of them will manifest a belief in the story of the fall of man, but will say the story of the forbidden fruit pertains to no real tree at all, but in misuse of the procreative system.

It is my purpose to show by way of reasonable interpretation of the Scripture that this is a mistake.

First, let us consider the simplest things, then proceed to the deeper. Certainly no one will say the earth was not real in Adam's day. No one will say Adam was not a real man, nor that the garden was not a real garden in the eastern part of a real country called Eden. In this garden were actual trees, in the midst of which was the tree of knowledge of good and evil, then was it not an actual tree? Moreover, Satan said to the woman, "Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" Every tree includes all the others besides the one under discussion. The woman said she was allowed to eat of the fruit of all except the one tree in the center. They were talking about actual trees in an actual garden and this one tree was in the midst of this garden. She was not even allowed to touch this fruit, for, as stated, death would follow. Could this be said of the imaginary tree of which we hear so much? Then, too, Eve ate fruit and not the cause of fruit. Consider still another point. Eve first ate alone, after which she gave to her husband and he ate with her. When she ate alone did she not partake of the same fruit of which they together partook?

Here was fruit, already borne and ripe, good for food, pleasant to the eyes and capable of imparting wisdom of a given nature. Eve was aware of all this, including the danger involved, but the ethereal, magnetic, devil-possessed creature before her brought to bear his shrewd words of enticement, and she, being somewhat curious, slightly losing the fear of death or forgetting it entirely and wishing to be as great as her Maker, yielded to the temptation. One thing the serpent did not attempt to do was to first get her to partake of the fruit of the tree of eternal life. More than one theory could be put forth regarding this, but it would be digressing so we shall not consider it.

The fruit of the tree was not poisonous, for had it been, its strength would have been obliterated in a few generations and people would again be living indefinitely. The curse of death was not put upon other men because of Adam's sin, but the children partake of the dying nature. "Dying, thou shalt die," says the margin. The half-lie Satan told was that Eve would not surely die, but God had said, "In the day that thou eatest thereof," etc., and Adam lacked only seventy years of living one day. (Genesis 5: 5; 2 Peter 3: 7, 8.) After God made man and said, "Let them," etc., he added to his creation by making helpmeets for them. (Genesis 1: 26, 27; 2: 20-23.) God blessed the man and woman and commanded them to multiply. (Genesis 1: 28.) Would it not have been inconsistent for him to give a command, then later give another tending to counteract it? This is the way some look at it, i. e., they would have God in verse 17, chapter 2, commanding man not to effect procreation.

After they had partaken of the forbidden fruit they were driven from the garden in the midst of which the tree stood.

Many questions arise in connection with this, but I confine myself to the question, Was the tree real? I think I have proven it to have been so.

All the peace, all the happiness, all the joy, all the praise, all the glory derived from God's word to sweeten life and inform the judgment comes through thought.—Heman C. Smith.

How Many Have YOU Converted?

At the close of a tent meeting a couple came and requested tracts explaining the doctrine of the church. One or two were given and the man and his wife went home. Two years passed. An elder received word to come and baptize these persons. It seemed that they had received much literature from the Herald Office and had read their way into the church.

After I had related the incident of a sister passing tracts and interesting many families in the gospel, a brother in the audience arose and said that the worker was his niece, and that she succeeded in reaching not only thirty-five persons but over a hundred and thirty-five men and women who came into the church as a result of her work and God's power.

What a wonderful thing is the experience of these tract workers! Results count. If such results can be obtained once they can be obtained twice, under similar circumstances. And other persons are being brought into touch with the words of life by means of the printed word. That man or woman who is not interested in the spiritual welfare of his fellow men, is certainly living below his gospel privilege.

Whose life has not been influenced by a book read? We all can look back to some story that has helped us. The man who wrote Tom Brown's School Days never knew that years after his death he would speak encouragement to thousands. This is true of other books. But how much more true is it of written stories that point the way to the Lamb of God?

Pertle Springs Reunion

The Holden Stake reunion was held at Pertle Springs, Missouri (near Warrensburg), August 16 to 25. Invitations had been extended to the Clinton District, and Kansas City and Independence stakes, and a number of Saints from these places were in attendance. The grounds and appointments offered a splendid place for a reunion. Adequate quarters for the campers in cottages and places for tents were provided by the management of the Springs grounds. All of the cottages were electrically lighted. Some of the campers, taking advantage of the privileges thus extended, brought their electric irons, grills, and toasters.

The regular schedule of services was so arranged as to leave the afternoon for rest, recreation, and special conferences. The beach was an attractive place for those who enjoyed swimming and was well attended in the afternoon, many of the campers taking the opportunity of learning to swim. The request of the reunion committee that there be no swimming during services was respected, and the conduct of the young especially was very creditable.

To supply the campers with meals, one of the cottages was set aside as a cafeteria. This with the help of camp stoves and oil stoves on the screened porches of the campers, and the Springs hotel near by, made it possible that no one need go hungry. The effort of the committee was to supply food at the cafeteria at as near cost as possible.

The large permanent tabernacle, electric-lighted and well-seated, afforded a splendid place for the services.

One day was set aside as Farmers' Day, with special invitation extended to those interested in Agriculture and live stock raising. The State University and Missouri Department of Agriculture furnished two lecturers, Mr. J. Kelley Wright, who was with us last year at our reunion, and Mr.

Paul B. Naylor. Mr. Wright gave a splendid lecture in the morning on the war and its causes, emphasizing the necessity of special attention being given to agricultural work. In the evening he gave an illustrated lecture on Missouri and her resources. Mr. Naylor lectured in the afternoon on organization of the farmers in their work, and Professor E. A. Davison, of the agricultural department of the Warrensburg State Normal, explained what they were doing in the agricultural department of the Normal. Miss Mary Moreland, Johnson County Home Demonstration Agent, and F. A. Gougler, County Farm Agent, also gave lectures on farm and war measures. The work of this day was very greatly appreciated by campers and those who attended and we feel was one of real value to those who are interested in country life and its progress.

President F. M. Smith was present on the first Sunday and gave two sermons, the afternoon sermon being at a memorial service held for Brother Wilmer C. Andes who died at sea while in the service. The Home Guards of Warrensburg attended this service in a body. The sermons of President Smith were very much appreciated by the Saints, and many of the non-members present spoke very highly of the sermon which represented the position of the church relative to this Government and the present war. It was a fine opportunity to place the attitude of our church before the citizens of Warrensburg and will mean much for the church in the future, we believe.

Miss Sarah Rogers, superintendent of nurses at the Sanitarium, was with us during the entire reunion and rendered valuable service in emergency cases and in consultation with the Saints who approached her for advice. Her lectures were very beneficial, as were also the demonstrations given.

Arrangements were made for children's services and those experienced in teaching and caring for children were placed in charge.

The general feeling of those who attended the reunion was that a reunion should be held next year and they looked with favor on holding it at the same place.

Brother George A. Gould, Scout Master from the Kansas City Council, organized a temporary troop of scouts and gave the boys instruction in some of the scout activities. He also gave demonstrations illustrating some of the good work done by the scouts. His work was one of the pleasing features of the reunion.

After some of the evening services some of the young people indulged in weenie roasts and watermelon cutting with improvised programs. These activities were under the fostering hands of Brother and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser.

The work of the Woman's Auxiliary was in charge of Mrs. I. M. Ross, stake organizer, and Mrs. D. J. Krahl, president of the general society. Numerous profitable sessions were held.

The following ministers preached: President F. M. Smith, Apostle William Aylor, H. E. Moler, Evan A. Davis, Joseph E. Yates, W. W. Chrestensen, J. W. A. Bailey, Isaac M. Smith, William Anderson, Bishops J. F. Keir, C. J. Hunt, and F. B. Blair.

The interests of the Sunday school and Religio were represented by Brethren F. A. Cool and I. M. Ross. Brother Granville Trowbridge, general president of the Religio Society, was present part of the time and met with the Religio workers.

The devotional services were marked by a goodly degree of the Spirit. The voice of the Spirit was heard in the meetings and the divine influence thereof was experienced by the Saints.

FOR THE COMMITTEE.

News from Canada

[Brother J. A. Gillen writes the office of the Presidency as follows]:

Agreeable to your request, Brother Hanson and myself visited Redickville where the Owen Sound District conference convened. I want to assure you that this meeting proved to be one of the richest in my ministerial experience. Glad that Brother Paul Hanson and myself could be present; many expressed themselves to the intent that it was the best meeting held in fifteen years.

Ontario must receive some consideration at the hands of the joint council in order for them to properly recover from the peculiar lapse into which they have naturally fallen because of a czaristic spirit prevailing so long. It is almost pitiful to hear them plead for Brother Paul and myself to remain with them; they are as a people once in bondage but now enjoying great freedom in their liberation; they must be looked after.

You may be assured that with few exceptions Ontario is with the church. I hear that some murmurings are heard in the adjoining camp; some are not so hostile as heretofore. I feel that some of the belligerents are losing their force. Well, time will reveal.

We also adjusted some minor difficulties. Great news from Palestine and the fields of "Armageddon." Surely the Lord is with the hosts of (Israel) the allies. Am feeling fine and hope to move on apace. I am,

Yours sincerely,
J. A. GILLEN.

DES MOINES, IOWA, September 27, 1918.

Editors Herald: Truly it has been said, "The old order changeth." We are very artistically reminded of this law of nature at this season as the hand of the Frost King deftly touches leaf and vine turning nature's green to gold. The summer is past, the autumn is here, and many things undone which we hoped to accomplish away back in the springtime when our hearts beat high with lofty aspirations. How do we stand spiritually? As we glide into the autumn of years, we should remember that we are also in the autumn of the world's history when many changes must come and events ripen fast. "The harvest is past, and summer is ended, and we are not saved."—Jeremiah 8: 20.

Speaking of changes, when my field was changed from the South to this State, many thought it a mistake, but I wish to say that the experience of half the year has fully convinced me that the hand of divinity was in the change. I regretted very keenly the necessity of severing the ties of association of more than seven years with the noble Saints of the South, still the associations formed here have already partaken of that same spirit of saintly love and gospel fellowship. As I left the South the Saints, by my request, sang, "My times are in thy hand." When I arrived in the Des Moines District, the first song was, "My times are in thy hand." I appreciated the sentiment, and am willing to be so governed. I wish here to thank the noble Saints in the South for their many kindnesses to me while laboring among them. I shall never forget the spontaneity of their love and service. A warmer-hearted people I never expect to meet. It being impossible to write all who so kindly requested it, I take this means of reaching all. Would be glad to have a letter from all who care to write.

In conclusion I have a word for the various schools who are looking for plans for their Christmas offering. Last year the young woman's class of the Des Moines Sunday school published a booklet of sixteen candy recipes, called "Sweet Sixteen." These sold for ten cents, the class clearing fifty dollars for their offering. This year we felt to branch out, but owing to sugar restrictions, we felt it improper to publish candy recipes. So they have been changed to sixteen which conserve wheat and sugar. Title, "Sweet Sixteen in War Time." We are prepared to mail these to the schools in any quantity desired upon receipt of five cents per copy. They easily sell for ten cents, giving a neat profit for the offering. Here's a chance to earn your offering. Send money and orders to me.

Very sincerely,

A. E. WARR.

[Brother G. C. Tomlinson writes the office of the Presidency as follows]:

REDICKVILLE, ONTARIO, September 23, 1918.

President F. M. Smith,
Independence, Missouri,

Dear Brother: The Owen Sound District conference goes now into history of the past. Brethren Gillen, Hanson, Pitt, and J. W. Davis were in attendance and lent dignity and prestige to the assemblies. The divine presence of the Holy Spirit was manifested at every session throughout the entire convention and conference. The sermons were far above anything we have had in Ontario for years. The speakers were Pitt, Davis, Hanson, Gillen, and Pement. The social services were an outpouring of the Spirit of God from the opening to the closing. Some of the most convincing testimonies were borne of the divinity of the work, and many were heard to say that it was the best meeting held at our district conference for years. Peace, joy, and consolation filled the heart of every Saint present. What a change from past years when friction, selfishness, and vain ambition ruled; when Saints returned to their homes discouraged and heart-broken because of the condition that prevailed with no desire to ever attend another conference. Now they return with a song of praise on their lips and joy in their hearts.

Brother, I feel very grateful to God for this change of affairs. I feel like shouting Hosanna to God in the Highest, realizing that a brighter day has dawned for the church. May he who guided your grandfather and father and all the ancient prophets of the past be with you to strengthen your hands for the work is my prayer. I expect to go home to-day for a visit, and return to the island. If I do not go to the island they will be left without anyone. I hope you will pray for me that my health may improve.

Sincerely,

G. C. TOMLINSON.

PAPEETE, TAHITI, September 13, 1918.

Editors Herald: As I am renewing my subscription to the Autumn Leaves I will also drop a few lines for good measure.

We arrived here last October and at the April mission conference I was elected superintendent of the mission Sunday school work, and as such I have tried to do what little I could under the conditions that exist, which are very different from what they are in America.

I am rather inclined to think that we will be able to make a fair showing with our Christmas offering this year, one school has about eighty dollars, but they are in better condition than any of the others from the fact that they are constantly associating with some of our foreign missionary force.

Another school has their offering finished, having paid two dollars a member. It happened in this way: the native people think that in order to do anything they must have a command from the one in charge, and they took from my talk at the convention that the Bishop had demanded two dollars a member from all the schools and they wanted to be among the first to obey. It is rather difficult to get them to understand that it is not a command when the two-dollar mark has been mentioned.

The Sunday school work here has not attained to the heights of efficiency that the work in the home land has, but I will say that those who have labored in this department of the work have not labored in vain, and the name of Sister Devore is very frequently heard in connection with the Sunday school work.

Your well-wisher and colaborer,
ROBERT T. BROWN.

CAMP PIKE, ARKANSAS, September 22, 1918.

Editors Herald: While in civilian life I enjoyed reading the letters from the boys in the service, so now that I am training to be a soldier, I will send a few lines.

I have been in Camp Pike, Arkansas, for three weeks and have not located a member of the church yet. I wish I could find one, for it seems that there is something missing in this kind of life without the association of some friend of that kind. And I would like to get a HERALD occasionally to read.

We just got out of quarantine and had a chance to go to church when we were informed again that we were to be quarantined for Spanish influenza. There are about sixty-five cases so far and I have been fortunate enough to escape.

During the time when I attended a service at the Y. M. C. A., Pastor Shannon spoke to us. He was a jolly man and had the audience laughing all the time.

The camp is on a mountain about eight miles from Little Rock. There is a little town adjoining called Bellmont, where the nickels and dimes of the soldiers are gathered in, it being a resort for them. We get our liberty a half day each week and ordinarily use it to clean our guns when not singing church songs. We surely have the time of our life. Will some of the Saints write to me? And I would like to hear of some one else in the camp of our faith.

The credit for the increase this year, in any event, belongs to the young women who have given the heaviest enrollment in the history of the school. This shows their keen appreciation of the value of better training.

These figures show the increase in general attendance since George N. Briggs became president of Graceland. They also show the marked increase in the collegiate department since Floyd M. McDowell was appointed dean in 1914.

In the earlier years, Graceland suffered greatly from lack of support, and it was often a problem how to keep going at all. We are very glad that during the past three years, the support by the church and

HELP WANTED

The following opportunities are offered in the stakes. If interested, write to Benjamin R. McGuire, Box 125, Independence, Missouri.

Wanted: Experienced laundryman and helper. State age and experience.

Wanted: Party interested in purchase of dray line, good business. State amount of capital you have to invest, experience, and age.

Wanted: Party with capital interested in the purchase of lumber business involving possibly $10,000 capital; good business opportunity. State age, experience, and capital you have to invest.

Wanted: Man with capital to invest in bakery business; paying concern in good town.

the Presiding Bishop has changed this condition; and that Graceland is receiving deserved attention here.

When we realize that the State of Massachusetts gains in income over thirty times the amount paid out for her splendid school system, it seems quite reasonable to assert that Graceland has repaid and is repaying the church many fold for every dollar expended in her behalf. As a financial investment, can you find a better one than this? But when to this is added the increased efficiency for all the work of the church, we see that this is one of the very best ways to help in carrying on the work of the kingdom of God.

If you have not yet contributed liberally to the College Day collection for 1918, it is not yet too late to give her your hearty support.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S BASIS FOR PEACE

On September 27, President Wilson reaffirmed the ideas for which the allies are fighting, and the conditions upon which peace shall be carried out. It certainly is a remarkable statement, and probably the most remarkable that was ever issued by the head of a great state, under like circumstances. It implies no claim for indemnity, for colonies, for place or power, or for money to be paid; but the basis is laid on the simple terms of justice for all even a little in telling neighbors and friends of this marvelous work and a wonder, can accomplish most profitable results.

Get a Dollar Library, become acquainted with the 34 tracts and the price list in it. Know the contents, the style, the special aim of each. Then see that others know the message of salvation you have heard.

This is the special mission of the gospel literature workers, but anyone can help in some way. It is important work and should be done right—but it should by all means be done.

In most places the boards are organized to carry on this highly-important work. If there is no such board in your community, yet you have a branch, Sunday school, or Religion, let us know.

Where boards are organized you may help them very much by your service and moral support as well as patronage.

One important feature of such a board's activities is a campaign to secure subscriptions to the church periodicals. It is a real accommodation to the Saints to have some one call and take care of the details for them, suggesting what is available, the offers to be had, the announcements being made, etc. In places where there is a book agent, work with him in this regard. If you want information along this line, write either the Herald Office or the Ensign Office and it will be forthcoming.

You have been warned: warn your neighbor. Do you have one of our instruction leaflets, sent free?

and every people. These grounds are given as follows:

First, the impartial justice meted out must involve no discrimination between those to whom we wish to be just and to those to whom we do not wish to be just. It must be a justice that plays no favorites and knows no standards but the equal rights of the several peoples concerned.

Second, no special or separate interest of any single nation or any group of nations can be made the basis of any part of the settlement, which is not consistent with the common interests of all.

Third, there can be no leagues or alliances, or special covenants and understandings within the general and common family of the league of nations.

Fourth, and more specifically, there can be no special, selfish, economic combination within the league and no employment of any form of economic boycott or exclusion except as the power of economic penalty by exclusion from the markets of the world may be vested in the league of nations itself as a means of discipline or control.

Fifth, all international agreements and treaties of every kind must be made known in their entirety to the rest of the world.

The following statement from General Pershing also indicates the high plane on which this war is waged on the part of America. For this reason we call it to the attention of our readers.

The invisible, unconquerable force let loose by the prayers, hopes, and ideals of Christian America is incalculable. It furnishes the soul and the motive of the military body; it steadies us to resist manfully the temptations which assail us in the extraordinary conditions in which we find ourselves.

He had been a sufferer from paralysis for 21 years, 14 years of that time being totally helpless. During the last two years of his life he failed more rapidly, being confined to his bed all the time, and was lovingly cared for by his companion and daughter. He was in the insurance business for years and widely known throughout the State of Iowa, continuing as agent for the Hawkeye Company till his death. Many of his loyal friends continued to send application blanks, signed, to him, thus showing the utmost confidence and which was commented on by the company as the only instance on record, of such support. On March 28, 1864, he married Mary C. Holcomb. To this union 6 children were born: Levina, deceased; Nellie Martin, Perry Iowa; Adele Langton, Lawton, North Dakota; H. C., of Newcastle, Wyoming; W. BOOK OF MORMON STORIES READY

Our readers who have been waiting for the announcement concerning the Book of Mormon stories for little folks, issued by the Religio Society, will be pleased to learn that they are now ready and will be distributed at the mere cost of the postage and handling in the office. They are an experiment, and it is hoped they will be liked sufficiently to encourage the printing of others of similar nature. These are put out on the same size sheet and type as the Quarterlies, sixteen pages, and eleven stories with questions and answers following. They are written by Mrs. Sallie Forties, who has been successful in telling them to children in Kansas City. The titles are, "The book of gold or the buried treasure," "Oliver Cowdery," "The three witnesses," "The gospel restored to earth," "Parley P. Pratt," "Sidney Rigdon," "Satan," "Bringing the gospel to the Indians," "Another precious book," "The first bishop," "A place of safety," all these in one leaflet. In ordering, send 3 cents for 6, or 5 cents for 12, and larger amounts at the same rate. A limited number were printed, not knowing the demand, so those wishing them should order early.

INDEPENDENCE INSTITUTE

A recent mail brings to our desk the announcement of the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences for the season 1918-1919. Courses are offered in normal kindergarten training, religious education, and social service, requiring two years for completion. It is the most thorough institute in the church, and is dedicated "for those who must work, but who are willing to study." Day classes are held for women who can attend, and evening classes for those who cannot attend in the daytime. Each unit of a credit represents 36 hours of class work. Thirty-two units are required for the completion of a course. A commercial course is added this year fitting for work as bookkeepers or stenographers.

Bishop B. R. McGuire was in Lamoni for a short time on the 4th, attending to some business matters. He was on his way to Denver, to take part in the dedicational services of the church in the First Branch of that place. He would return via Omaha, where some matters required his attention, and would be at home in Independence perhaps by the 9th.

On the evening of the 4th the Saints of Lamoni gave a reception to D. T. Williams and family, who recently moved here from Des Moines, that Brother Williams might take up his new work as counselor in the stake presidency. It was a pleasant occasion, the basement of the church being decorated most cozily and the program excellently arranged. A goodly amount of canned fruits, etc., was left with them as a substantial token of esteem.

A WAR EMERGENCY DEMAND

Graceland College is in receipt of the following from the Government:

"There exists a war emergency demand for mechanics and radio and buzzer operators. The army was several thousand men short in both these lines before forming its present plans for an army of at least four or five million men. An army of 4,000,000 calls for 1,600,000 mechanics! Vital war industries are also short. One munitions factory alone reports a shortage of 2,000 mechanics! There is no possibility of exceeding the needs and a very great danger that we may fall short."

Graceland College is now preparing a large number of young men of draft age for radio and buzzer service in the army. The Government strongly urges every man of draft age who knows that he will be called upon in the course of the next few months to enter the Government service to use these few remaining months in preparation as a radio operator.

Full information can be secured by writing to the President, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa; or better, pack your grip and hasten to Lamoni and enter upon this very important piece of work during the short time at your disposal.

Patriarch William Lewis, of Cameron, Missouri, will hold a series of services at Bevier, Missouri, beginning Sunday, October 6, continuing until the following Sunday, October 13, which will be home-coming day. Dinner will be served in the basement to all visiting Saints. Scattered members please take notice and make an effort to be with us on the 13th, if unable to attend other meetings. J. L. Williams, branch clerk, Bevier.

"Among the Johnson County men who have lost their lives in the service are four from the Latter Day Saint Church. They are William F. Pittenger and Frank Perry, both of Knobnoster and both killed in action; William C. Andes and Guy Leaverton, both of Warrensburg; the former was in the navy and during a heavy gale he and another sailor were washed overboard and lost; the latter died on his way to cantonment."—Holden Progress, Holden, Missouri.

CHANGE IN INDEPENDENCE STAKE BISHOPRIC

At the stake conference held at Independence on the 5th and 6th, a recommendation from the First Presidency was concurred in releasing Bishop Mark H. Siegfried from the bishopric of the Independence Stake to take up special work under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric. Bishop J. A. Becker, who has recently moved to Independence from Kirtland, Ohio, was chosen to take over the work as bishop of the stake.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES ADVANCED

At a recent meeting of the Board of Publication held at Independence, Missouri, the matter of advance in price of the various publications was carefully and seriously considered. Material, wages, and even postage had been so materially advanced in price that it was deemed no longer safe to publish the SAINTS' HERALD for $1.50 for the year, and this price was set at $1.75, to become effective on and after October 20. Zion's Ensign was raised from $1.00 to $1.25 for the year, to become effective at same date. Autumn Leaves was raised from $1.00 to $1.25, effective on same date.

We are anxious to increase the circulation of all these papers, as the good effect of their being read in the homes of the Saints is apparent to all who have a chance to observe. We are, therefore, going to urge you to get in before October 20 with your renewal or new subscription, at the old rate. But do not be content with this—get your neighbor who is not taking these papers to send in his subscription also. An increase of our list by many hundreds is necessary, in addition to the slight advance in subscription price, to make these journals pay their cost of publication.

Work with us in this effort. Hold up the hands of the working forces in the Ensign Office and the Herald Office. Many are working at these places at a financial sacrifice because they love the work of the church and are willing to do their part to see it prosecuted. The church has asked them to fill these positions to the best of their ability, and they have answered to the summons. They in turn are coming to the membership, asking you to support the church publications. Will you do your part? Almost any Saint can find a new subscriber for either the HERALD, Ensign, or Autumn Leaves, and if it is done now, further advance in price may be averted.

Renewals may be sent for more than one year if desired. We will save enough in the postage, material, and time used to secure renewals, to justify us in extending you this privilege. Remember, the new rates will commence at the opening of business on October 20, 1918. Get in your orders before that date.

KNOWING PEOPLE

Paul speaks of the time when we shall know as we are known. We have sometimes wondered if this would not be as accurate, if not more accurate, if it were reversed, that we shall be known as we know ourselves, and shall know ourselves as we are. If the soul is filled with guilt, it will be exposed; but if it is full of innocence and love, no misadventure can then be perverted into evil; since we shall not only have that gift that will permit our seeing ourselves as others see us, but others will have the gift of seeing us as we are.

This theme is called to mind by a story recently read of a young girl in college. A mere incident, occurring in the exuberance of youth, caused her to be expelled from college in disgrace; simply because the old maids of the college faculty read into her acts the evil which existed only in their own minds.

This calls to mind how often harm is done, because some old maid, man or woman, married or unmarried, utterly failed to appreciate or understand youth, or proceeded in a way to provoke an infraction of rules; or what is many times worse, to procure actual wrongdoing, and create evil thoughts that had not previously existed.

Children are not born of the Devil; they are very largely human and partake of the nature of their progenitors. The school work for a young child is really of secondary importance; it is rightfully so, if the child is to develop as he should. Usually we are more concerned with inconvenience to ourselves, rather than with the good of children.

Then we come to the period of youth or adolescence. This is the age of high school and early college life. It is a time when sociability is sought by young people everywhere. Admittedly there is much evil in the world; admitted that there is wrongdoing among young people at times. But better instruction and intelligence on the part of adults would have prevented or at least very greatly reduced it. The facts are that all too often we read into the mind of youth the evils of the experience of old age.

Young people are not bad, because they want to have a good time, because they want to associate together, because they like a good show. It is a result of natural development that they should desire sociability; many a prank, if fairly considered, is after all, innocent.

For dealing justly, we need more of discernment of individual character rather than the making of rules. Too many times the life of young people is made troublesome and even forced down to a lower level by lack of intelligent direction and sympathy.

Work is important for young people. Education is important also. But sociability is equally important. An education is not of so very great practical value in a hermit. Only a few hermits have managed, out of their complete withdrawal, to bring us something worth while. At least we should be able to secure a proper balance between the value of solitude and concentrated thought (of which, after all, but few are capable) out of which may be brought a great lesson or some new truth of philosophy or science, for the betterment of humanity, and the value of sociability, of which everyone is capable. The value of humanizing life and recognizing each individual as a part of mankind and the social order is shown in the appeal for democracy and cooperation. We do not live for ourselves alone. A part of the social order for adolescence is acquaintance with young people of like or nearly like age, and the developed appreciation of others' viewpoint.

We have known young men to get too wise for Sunday school; too wise for Religion; too wise for socials; and finally, get too wise for church. They spend their time in studying and work aside, and bring forth as a result, a monstrous fallacy. They had not the advantage of running up against rational criticism and so produce an unbalanced concept of life. For one man who goes aside, stays aside, and works as a hermit, and brings forth a wonderful truth, there is a host, who, out of their solitude and separateness produce a crooked crank, a species of mental inequilibrium.

Nor does this decry the value of study. The writer, for the greater part of his life was, and is, a book-worm and student. He appreciates keenly the wonderful advantage, as a child, as a young man, and now, of continued study and reading. But he appreciates also the fact that the great multitude of young people, all young people, need social life; and they need it in order to secure social development along rational lines. To decry to young people social life is as foolish as to order a child to sit still, be still, keep still indefinitely. Children should be seen and not heard, and young people should work and not play are like fallacies.

It is just because all good times are not safe that we insist so strongly upon a proper provision for recreation by our young people. And it is just because essentially there is so little real harm in young people's ambitions and hopes that we insist they should not be beclouded, but treated rationally and kindly for what they really are.

Many a college develops the intelligence. We need also to have the feelings developed, of sympathy, understanding, cooperation, and sociability, to say nothing of all that may rightly be included in that word love.

Play is a vital part of life. It is just exactly what it is sometimes called, "re-creation." It makes us over and renews our energy for other work of life.

Nor is it a matter of finding the right man or the right girl. This may be an unconscious after-effect. There should be acquaintance with other young men and other young women to get the social viewpoint. Acquaintance with other lives, other personalities, and other ideas than our own is essential for a well-developed life.

We are living in an age requiring devotion and consecration; an age in which our time should be put to the best possible use: an age when we should remember our church service and prayer meetings, and the need of divine direction for a time of trial or of proving. It is an age for the young people of the church, when if Zion is to be established, we must get ready to do our part and have less time for frivolity.

We should recognize the shortcomings of many of the moving pictures and other shows which are presented. Such should not be a primary purpose in life. Dramatics have their place when properly used; they have also their dangers, when abused. But young people have a need of social life. We should provide for it in our own ranks, and that in no narrow, bigoted way either, but with a broad realization of its possibilities rightfully directed for proper development.

But above all, should we recognize that young people are not depraved. Nor should we read into their acts the evil thoughts in our own minds gained from reading newspapers or otherwise. For a sin to be committed it is necessary that there be not only opportunity, but also the desire or tendency. To prove guilt requires that not a general but a special tendency be shown, as well as opportunity, so far as to create a strong presumption of guilt.

This principle which we urge on behalf of the young people should also be recognized towards all people. We should be quick to help, slow to condemn; and consider first carefully the evidence, or have it considered by one who is capable of evaluating and distinguishing testimony, assertions, and rumors, from proof. An affidavit is not proof. Testimony or even evidence is not proof.

What is needed more than anything else is charity; a broad spirit of human love partaking also of the divine; a spirit of discernment which will not let the guilty escape, yet takes no delight in exposing wrong; quick to believe and hope—slow to condemn.

Alas! All too few, as yet, possess this attribute. To condemn does not require skill or wisdom. It is one of the easiest things we do. Wisdom and understanding is necessary to help the stumbling one on to a firm foundation, and bring about a reconciliation with right. We need understanding hearts to know and help one another. S. A. THE LIBERTY LOAN

It is of interest to note that at present the Federal debt of the United States is but one eighth as much per citizen as it is for the German Empire, according to the figures furnished us by the Bureau of Publicity. They further advise that the buying of bonds does not take money out of the country. It practically amounts to the selling of our products on time. The farmer buys bonds, the Government takes the proceeds from these bonds and gives its note with interest, which is the bond. Then it takes the proceeds from the bonds and buys farm produce, so the farmer still has his money but has the bond in place of his crops. He can afford to borrow and then sell his crops and take up the note.

Some apparently fear that the banks will eventually secure the larger part of the Liberty Bonds. We note in the first place that the third or fourth Liberty Loan does not form a basis for the issuing of bank notes. Liberty Bonds are exempt from ordinary taxation but not from war profit, excess profit, or estate taxes, except in small amounts. In the second place, on June 29 only about 400 million of Liberty Bonds were held by the national banks. And about the same amount as security for loans. This would be less than nine per cent of the issue to date, held outright or as security for loans. If this percentage holds true it would mean that the bulk of the bonds are held by individuals and are paid for.

THE VALUE OF EDUCATION

President George N. Briggs of Graceland College recently handed us a book on the Money Value of Education, for perusal. We wish that we could put it in the hands of all of our readers. They would then appreciate how great a sacrifice we should be willing to make for proper training, as it increases so greatly the value of our labor.

It is shown very clearly that communities which pay out large sums for education receive a manifold return in state wealth; and this is not due to the age of the community as is demonstrated clearly in the various states of the American Union.

In 1889 Massachusetts was spending twelve million a year more on education than was Tennessee. She spent between eight and nine times as much per pupil. The result was that Massachusetts shows a productive capacity of $144 more per year per inhabitant than did Tennessee. A total of about $404,000,000. That this ratio remains true is shown by later figures for 1910, in which the average productive capacity in Massachusetts is more than two and one half times as large as in Tennessee.

Comparison with other States, and a comparison between the nations of Europe show similar results. Nations with efficient educational systems show two and one half times as much average income as do the nations with inadequate educational systems. And the national wealth is increased proportionately, the national wealth being represented by savings.

As to individual success, Who's Who in America for 1899-1900, and for 1910-1911, shows practically the same percentage. These figures show that only one in a hundred and fifty thousand achieve notable success without education; with common school training, four times as large a percentage; with high school education, eighty-seven times as many; and with college education, eight hundred times as many.

While only about one per cent of the population graduate from college, about fifty-eight per cent of those who succeed notably are college graduates; and seventy-five per cent have attended college.

The same figures are shown over and over again. Averages taken in the Eastern States show that a boy who goes to a good technical school until he is eighteen, will have earned as much by the time he is twenty-two, as will the boy who left school at fourteen years of age and was shop trained. While beyond twenty-two the technically trained boy continues to forge to the front; so much so as to make such special training a splendid investment.

Figures taken in Brooklyn show that the boy with an elementary education in the common grades represents in his income an investment of fifteen thousand dollars over an uneducated workman.

In addition to this, to meet modern conditions, the trained man is an essential.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME

It has been our privilege to visit at the Children's Home several times of late, and we have been much interested in the effort made to establish a real home. We have been there at unexpected times for meal service, and have partaken of the same, so know that it is good and substantial, and that the children are well cared for.

We have also been present in the evening and note the regular custom of calling the children together for family prayer. As a rule, a short story is first related. The room is covered with pictures from the Bible, and these pictures draw their first attention. After a short talk, a suitable prayer is offered and the children dismissed. They gather around them to say good-night, but in no formal way. Those who choose to do so, come to Mother Chase, and some of the boys to Father Chase, for a good-night.

In the dining room the older children are frequently called upon to return thanks or say grace. So far as we can observe there is no effort for formality, or to call on them in rigid turn. Naturally in a large institution, some simple rules are necessary, but no more are used than are necessary. The children are called by bell, at mealtime and bedtime, and enter in an informal way.

The children also have their several duties assigned them, to assist in the necessary work of their home. Several girls are assigned to do the dish-washing; others help with the preparation of the meals. Certain of the boys get water; and certain ones help in the care of the horses and cattle. As is proper in a well-regulated family, an effort is made to give each child of suitable age, something to do and also to let the children of suitable age have their own garden, and to dispose of the produce to secure pocket money. After all, this is necessarily small, yet no doubt quite an item in the eyes of the child.

In fact, all through an effort is made to secure proper family life, which should be the case in a well-regulated Latter Day Saint household.

The Board of Trustees look carefully after the financial needs, and the clothing and care of the children, upon the recommendation of the matron. Parents who have trouble in getting two or three children ready for school, may think what it means to have twenty or thirty wanting papers, pencils, books, or shoes and stockings, for the opening day of school. You will see then that the board needs your help from time to time, in suitable donations.

THE COST OF THE WAR

The Outlook for September 25 calls attention to an item that our war bill for two years will be $50,000,000,000. This is based upon the assumption that all appropriations made by the Sixty-fifth Congress for the two fiscal years ending June 30, 1919, will be spent and spent irrecoverably. It is true that nearly $19,000,000,000 was appropriated for the year ending June 30, 1918. Of this amount, the actual disbursements were $12,696,702,470. Of this amount over one billion was used for ordinary expenditures of the Government, which continue in times of peace; and over $4,700,000,000 as loans to the allies; leaving less than $7,000,000,000 used by the government for war, of which probably not more than $5,000,000,000 is irrecoverable. Over one billion was put into ships, war finance, and railway revolving funds.

The Outlook then proceeds to point out that McAdoo's estimate for the present year, with expenditures for the past year shows a total of a little less than $36,700,000,000, but that of this amount the peace establishment for two years, the amount for farm loan bonds, Panama Canal, and interest on the pre-war debt, accounts for $2,365,000,000; loans to allies, $10,000,000,000; ships and shipyards, $2,750,000,000; railroads in France and permanent investment value, $1,000,000,000; the Capital Warfare Finance Corporation, the United States Grain Corporation, army warehouses, all of which will be permanently available after the war, and are adapted for peace use, and other permanently valuable productive investments, amount to $3,300,000,000; giving as a permanent war investment about $16,000,000,000, and leaving a balance for two years' war disbursements, irrecoverable, $18,300,000,000, instead of $50,000,000,000, as first set out. In other words, less than half of the Government expenditures is irrecoverably expended for war purposes, and about one third of the appropriation.

This expense is met from Liberty Loans, estimated to June 30, 1919, at $22,000,000,000; War Savings Stamps, $2,000,000,000; taxes and other revenue, for two years, $12,000,000,000.

According to this, approximately two thirds of our irrecoverable war expenditure is met by taxation, and against the bonds and War Savings Stamps, $24,000,000,000, we have $16,000,000,000 of recoverable assets; leaving a net or uncovered increase in the public debt of $8,000,000,000.

It may bother some to deal with such large sums, but those who are interested in the actual expenditure will be glad to consider this analysis.

BOOK DEPARTMENT

It will be noted that from time to time a book review is published in the HERALD. The Herald Publishing House will be more than glad to advise you in the purchase of books. Those that we have reviewed have been given personal attention, so we are acquainted with the contents and the character of the book and its qualities.

There has from time to time, been printed a notice of the fact that our Board of Publication is more than glad to order these books for you. You have them delivered directly to you from the publishers at the same price. Yet it helps the publishing house and so helps you and the church.

We give from time to time the name of the publisher and the price of the book, but shall be more than glad to order them for anyone desiring and at no additional expense to the purchaser.

The publishers allow a small discount to the Herald Publishing House as a wholesale agency. This meets the necessary expense, but it also assists us in keeping in touch with recent literature and so is a double advantage.

The Herald Publishing House has tried to establish a bureau of advice for the purchase of books so as to fill your particular need if you do not know what book you want but do know the subject matter.

When writing for advice it is well to give some personal information so that we can the better determine about what book would best suit you; that is, state something of the amount of reading you have done and your school work.

A catalogue of Herald Office publications will be sent upon request and we will be glad to order all of your books for you and send them at the same time.

THE JEWS AND THEIR GATHERING HOME NO. 2

The work of preparation by the Jews goes on in many nations, even an awakening and a realization of their opportunities at this time, such as they have never had and were unable to realize before, namely, that they are to be given a chance in the world among other peoples and nations, and that they may now step forward and have charge over the land of their fathers, under a protectorate of the greatest and most magnanimous of the so-called Gentile nations.

JEWS IN THE WAR

Especially is activity seen among both Jews and Gentiles in England, France, and the United States. The American Hebrew for July 26, 1918, quotes an address by a French officer, in which he said that there is "complete accord between the French and the British Governments in favor of establishing a Jewish home in Palestine." "Thus," he said, "the old ancestral dream of Israel is near realization by the liberating efforts of the Franco-British Armies." The same speaker declared that the French Republic has never made any distinction between its citizens of different races and faiths. Even before the present war, while her armies were on a peace footing, there were many Jews of high rank in the French Army, such as eight generals, thirty-five colonels and lieutenant colonels, and sixty-eight majors, which shows the good will of the French Government even before the great changes wrought by the world war, which has caused to be fully expected the restoration of Palestine and the exalting of the Jewish race at an early time. He also said that before this war there were in Paris thirty-five to forty thousand Jews. Many of these were men, and ten thousand of them enlisted, and of them seven to eight thousand were able to be enrolled and go to the front as fighters for justice, liberty, and righteousness.

Recently a Jew, Sir John Monash, has been honored by England with the high office of lieutenant general, and he has been placed in command of the Australian Army in France. Also another Jewish soldier from Australia has been commissioned a major general. These acts show Great Britain's generous feeling toward the Jews. The editor of The American Hebrew states that the British Government insists upon the granting of full rights to the Jews in Rumania.

For all these benefits and helps the Jewish people are thankful, as well as having hearts full of gratitude because of the "Palestine Declaration," as it has been called, meaning the declaration by England and France that Palestine shall again become the home of the Jews. The editor adds: "The worldwide British Empire has, in the course of the war, virtually assumed a protectorate over the Jews in all the backward countries."

Even the Jews in Russia are trying to do great things for "the ancient land." The following is from The American Hebrew:

In the midst of the chaos that is engulfing Russia, the Zionists of that country have remained steadfast in their adherence to the Jewish national ideal. According to addresses received by the Zionist organization of America the Russian Zionists have entered into competition with their colleagues in this country as to which shall be the foremost in the restoration of Palestine. . . . At a meeting of the Zionist leaders held in Petrograd several days ago, it was resolved to raise forty million roubles (nearly thirty-two million dollars) for the economic and financial reconstruction of the Jewish national home land. The purposes for which this fund will be employed includes the founding of an industrial bank. This bank will, by a system of credits, encourage the development of the industries and mineral resources of the country. It is capitalized at twenty-five million roubles, all of which has already been subscribed.

Another important venture of the Russian Zionists is the founding of an immigration society, whose object will be the encouragement of desirable people to migrate from Russia to Palestine. The ten million roubles required for its operation has also been fully subscribed.

It is remarkable that the Jews in Russia have wealth to do so much.

CAPACITY OF PALESTINE

In reply to the assertions by some that there will not be room for millions of people to live and prosper in Palestine, a Jewish writer in The American Hebrew for August 2, 1918, says:

Now the truth is that Belgium, with an area of 11,373 square miles, could before the war support a population of eight million. Why cannot Palestine, which is of equal size, support after the war an equal population? Moreover, the English Army, reinforced by the Hebrew battalions, now wresting the land from the Turks, can push further into the desert for a larger Palestine. Under the Turkish yoke, and on lands covered with sand and rocks, the Jew has created the beautiful and self-supporting colonies which are true oases in the midst of the desert, and he can be trusted to make free Palestine as flourishing and thickly populated a country as was Belgium before the war. . . .

It will not be necessary for all Jews to live in Palestine. . . . Palestine will need, above all, agriculturists and working men, and later also business men. These will flock from all parts. . . . It will come to pass that Israel, tried in the crucible of long suffering, will, for the first time in history, put up a government on the basis of love, applying in letter and spirit the precept, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. . . . Many Gentiles believe that the restoration of Israel will put an end to wars. . . . The rays of love will spread from Jerusalem and Zion to all corners of the earth, substituting for hatred and selfishness among individuals and nations the policy of love and fairness, establishing forever the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God.

How grand is this idea! Yet how very few among the Gentile world have a thought that so it is destined to be, as declared thousands of years ago by the prophets of God. Here are given a few of their most striking declarations:

For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory. . . . Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God. Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate. . . . And they shall call them, The holy people, the redeemed of the Lord.—Isaiah 62: 1-12.

Surely the isle shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them. . . . And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee; for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favor have I had mercy on thee. . . . The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down. . . . Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders.—Isaiah 60: 9-18.

For, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in her people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying.—Isaiah 65: 18, 19.

Many similar quotations can be given from the prophets, yes, from all the prophets whom God sent to declare the return of Israel, and the peace, prosperity, and happiness that shall exist among all nations, as especially outlined in the seventy-second Psalm.

THE JEWISH LEGION

The Literary Digest for July 13 states as follows:

A Jewish legion of eight thousand men are now fighting with the British for the complete conquest of Palestine, but a force ten times as great is expected to form the Jewish Legion of Honor to march in behalf of the coming Jewish Republic. On July 1 the east side of New York City gave over two thousand of its sons, who went to Canada for training before proceeding to the East.

At the Zionist convention in Pittsburgh, spoken of in my first number, Doctor Newman said that "every Jew who has enlisted in the legion from the United States has pledged himself to remain in Palestine for the remainder of his life." As the chief of the British recruiting office in America has stated that "more than fifty thousand American Jews are in Egypt or elsewhere on their way to join the legion already with General Allenby in the Holy Land," therefore thousands of Jewish soldiers will be ready for the great last war and the assault on Palestine and Jerusalem when, not many years ahead, the prophecies in Ezekiel 38 and Zechariah 14 shall be fulfilled, when "the chief prince" over the bands and armies of the "north quarters" shall come against Palestine and Jerusalem.

According to The Literary Digest a member of the British embassy has said that "in taking Palestine from the Turk Great Britain did not take it for herself but for the Jewish people," and that the policy of England is to "do everything reasonably within her power to put the Jews back in the home of their ancestors," and that she also "looks to the Jews to set up a civilization there."

The same paper states that opposition among the Jews to Zionism has disappeared almost entirely, and the New York Tribune says that "every class of the Jewish people in every land is fast approaching unanimity on the subject."

The American Hebrew for August 2 says:

The British authorities have announced their intention of establishing civil courts of justice in the occupied districts of Palestine. The court of appeal will be at Jerusalem. . . . Local law, which will be substantially unaltered, will be administered.

Of the soil and crops and the water supply in southern Palestine a correspondent in Cairo, Egypt, writes the following, as given in the Digest:

Thanks to the permanent supply of water along a strip of fertile land on the western border of southern Palestine the country may soon be expected to supply its own needs and part of those of the occupying army, in the way of grain, fruit, and vegetables.

A rapid revival of all farming industry "under the beneficent rule" of Great Britain is confidently looked for. The Zionist Commission is at work and "Jerusalem is to be endowed at last with a supply of pure water. Officials have already made the preliminary study for laying out the city on modern and sanitary lines." Jaffa and other places will have their turn when it can be done.

A cablegram announces the safe arrival in Palestine of the first and second contingents of the American Jewish Legion, and they were to join the others now fighting the Turks in northern Palestine.

Sir Alfred Mond, a leading Jew in the Zionist movement, states that the Jews will not return to Palestine to monopolize the land, neither to displace other races. They go to cooperate with all other races, in developing that country.

THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY

The American Hebrew for August 9 makes the important announcement that on July 30, 1918, "the corner stones of the Hebrew University were laid on the Mount of Olives," in the presence of General Allenby, General Storrs, the Mohammedan Grand Mufti, "and a vast concourse of Jewish, Christian, and Mohammedan" people of Jerusalem. Twelve stones were set in their appointed places to represent or symbolize the twelve tribes of Israel, and thousands of Jews were present from every part of liberated Palestine. Great Britain, France, and Italy were represented by their diplomats and military officers and troops. The British Secretary of State, Honorable Arthur J. Balfour, sent a telegram of congratulation over the important occasion. Thus we see how events are hastening on toward the re-occupation of Palestine at an early time. Soon there will be a rebuilding of homes and villages, also a planting of orchards and vineyards, and the word by Isaiah will be fulfilled, "Our land shall yield her increase."

A Zionist conference was held in Moscow, Russia, on May 5 to 8, and The American Hebrew says that "the proceedings were of the greatest importance for Jewish development in Russia. The delegates discussed "the immediate problem of work in Palestine," and also other subjects.

The town council of Jerusalem has posted notices over the city that all who are able to labor repairing the roads about Jerusalem will be employed, and wages paid to men, women, and children.

About the university at Jerusalem I quote as follows from an editorial in The American Hebrew of August 9:

The Hebrew University will cultivate not only all the modern arts and sciences, not only the Hebrew language, literature, and history, but also the Arabian language, literature, and history. The two peoples, who, more than once in their history, had so happily worked together, but whom fate had lately estranged from each other, will once more be able to cooperate for the common good and for the advancement of mankind.

The editor declares that the founding of a Jewish university at Jerusalem in the midst of the world war, and with the approval of England, France, and Italy, manifests that those powers are determined that Palestine shall not revert to Turkey again, but that the whole of Palestine "will be liberated from the blasting rule of the Turk. No such enterprise would be undertaken if there was the least doubt as to the future disposition of Palestine and the fate of its people."

JEWISH CENSUS

The same paper states that under the care of the Palestine Bureau there has been made a census of the Jewish population. These authorities say that in 1908 the whole population of Jerusalem was about 75,000, of whom 50,000 were Jews. In five years, 1913, the Jews had increased 8,390, total 58,390. As a result of the war the Jews decreased over one half, until only 26,605 remained.

The London Zionist Review reports about the schools and teachers and children in Jerusalem. Most of the Hebrew teachers were exiled by the Turks after the war began, but a few remained. I quote as follows:

Cut off almost entirely from outside help the schools have had a hard time to survive. . . . When the Turkish authorities took possession of the school buildings the school committees contrived to find some place where they could keep alive the torch of Hebrew learning. The number of the children was bound to fall as the population diminished by death and deportation to half its size before the war. . . . It is a signal tribute to the strength of the Hebrew feeling in the new Jewish settlement that the young growth of the Hebrew schools of Jerusalem, not a year old when the war broke out, should have weathered the fierce storm of over three years.

The past and present feeling and conduct of the nations toward the Jewish race is of interest at this time of world-wide action and of readjustment in all lands. We see plainly what Great Britain, France, Italy, and the United States are doing, but what of the nations of eastern Europe? We find that although hundreds of thousands of Jews have fought in the armies of the nations where they were born, even though those governments had for centuries persecuted them, yet their service in the war and at home appears to count as nothing with those cruel and wicked nations, Russia, Germany, Austria, Poland, Rumania, and Bulgaria. For late events manifest that, both by government action and popular hatred, the Jews in cities and villages are being persecuted, robbed, and murdered, and that there is seldom any protection for them by the police or by officers of the law. In many places to mistreat, or rob, or kill a Jew is considered no crime. Yet those nations are counted as being civilized and as Christian peoples.

PRESENT CONDITIONS

And they have the Bible in their homes and churches and can read the promises of God that he will surely recover and restore the posterity of Abraham, and that at the same time he will pour out wrath and punishment upon all nations and peoples who persecute and do evil to that people, without repentance or making reparation. About present conditions I find as follows:

The Jewish Press Bureau at Stockholm, Sweden, says that although the newspapers in Austria and Germany reported the recent outrages committed on the Jews in the city of Cracow, Poland, yet the Polish papers passed over it "in complete silence." Besides the wrong done at Cracow, the Jewish paper in Vienna, Austria, protested "against the anti-Jewish excesses committed by Polish ruffians in Galicia." It asks "whether the Jews in Galicia are to be treated as Austrian subjects and as members of the Polish people, or whether they are to be delivered into the hands of ruffians and hooligans." It concludes with these words:

Jewish blood flows in streams on the battle fields. Our old men, our women, and children should at least be spared from bloodshed, even in Galicia. Or is it really to be the fact that Jews are beyond the protection of the law?

But in spite of the assurance then given by the minister of the interior that "such incidents would not be allowed to recur," yet on May 22 a telegram announced that the same thing had taken place elsewhere in Poland, and "many Jews were seriously wounded, shops were plundered, windows were broken, and the damage exceeds a million kronen." The local police did not act, and military help was summoned from Cracow. The Jews in Switzerland met at Zurich and adopted a resolution demanding guaranteed civic and national rights for the Jewish masses in Poland and Galicia, of the Austrian Nation, also complete equality for the Jews in Rumania, as was provided by the treaty of Berlin. For a long period Rumania has been as severe on the Jews as any other people. Also "the National Jewish Council of Russia has protested against the atrocities committed by the German troops in the occupied Russian districts," so says The American Hebrew.

The August 9 copy of that paper relates that an eyewitness of the attack on the Jews in one Galician town stated that the wrongs "were committed under the eyes of the authorities who did not interfere in the slightest. When the plundering started and Jewish blood began to flow the official to whom appeal was made said, 'It is nothing.'" Even the mayor and the police captain to whom the Jews appealed replied "not to disturb them." Also the head of the police "accompanied and assisted the rioters."

About one hundred thousand Jews dwell in Persia, and they have been made to suffer in this war. Some communities "have been totally ruined." But the Jews there are revived by the redemption of Jerusalem, and they are now "connected with the Zionist organization." Branches have been formed "in all big Jewish communities," and money is being given for the national fund.

The American Hebrew for August 16 says that "the anti-Semitic disposition of the German Christian Socialist party in Austria" is causing the Jewish population in Vienna, which numbers more than two hundred thousand, to be very uneasy. That society is fomenting hatred against the Jews and it may cause an uprising against them. They even "blame the Jews for the distress which the war has caused, including the shortage of food."

General Pershing, commander of the American forces in France, has asked Jewish authorities in America to recommend twenty-five Jewish rabbis of mental and physical ability to serve as chaplains in the army. Many Catholics have been appointed, also ministers from other denominations, but perhaps not any Jews before.

It is stated in the papers that there has been discovered in the New York Public Library a pamphlet in the Hebrew language, published in 1885, which tells of a visit to Berlin in 1881 by several Russian generals, and of the talk by the then Kaiser, Emperor William I. He spoke to them about the Jews and what ought to be done with them, saying:

I do not love the Jews, knowing well that in Germany men like Carl Marx, Edward Lanker, and others are undermining the monarchical spirit, and they plan the ruin of the present system of government. But in our country they are deep rooted, therefore it is necessary to act carefully, as they are leaders in science, in finance, in culture, and in industry. But it is different in Russia. I advise you to learn from us. Crush them before it is too late. Crush them in every possible way. I beg you to take this lesson home with you.

The year following the civilized world was horrified when massacres of Jews took place simultaneously in hundreds of Russian towns and villages. The Kaiser's advice bore fruit. —American Hebrew for August 23, 1918.

It appears that because of these murders and outrages the Jews, having heard of his advice to the Russians, remonstrated in a lengthy written appeal to the Kaiser, and they wanted to know if he did really give such advice, or if what they heard was false. Their appeal included the words, "O king, we pray thee in the name of humanity, and in the name of civilization, to permit us to denounce the statement that you have used such words." But no reply came from the Kaiser, so they were satisfied that he must have given the reported advice. And they published the pamphlet among themselves, in their language.

ZIONIST MEDICAL UNIT

One day in this month of August the London opera house was packed with people to welcome the "first contingent of doctors and nurses from America, prior to their departure for their work of succor and relief in the Holy Land." It was named "The American Zionist Medical Unit," and was organized by the women Zionists of America. At the meeting in London there were speeches by Lord Rothschild, Honorable George N. Barnes, Sir Alfred Mond, Ian Malcolm, Josiah Wedgwood, and George Lloyd, all members of Parliament, also by Nahum Sokolow, a prominent Jew, and by others. There were present members of both House of Lords and the House of Commons. Mr. Barnes said among other good things:

I want to welcome the Medical Unit because of their mission. They are taking health, and hope, and succor to peoples long oppressed and downtrodden. They are going to apply their skill and knowledge and science to the rescue of a land which is the shrine of all that is best in civilization. . . . They are inspired by a great ideal to help in raising Palestine out of the depths of despair into which she has been thrown by Turkish misrule.

WHEN WILL WAR BE OVER?

So often now the question is asked, "When will this terrible war be over?" The answer may be that it is possible for it to end when the German Armies are driven across the Rhine into their own original country. However, the people and Governments of Great Britain, France, the United States, and indeed all the rest of the world, can see plainly that to stop there would give the central powers the desired opportunity to immediately plan and prepare for a greater war, one to be set in motion whenever the Kaiser and his wicked counselors shall again suppose that it is possible to conquer the world. It is entirely reasonable to believe that such will be their course if they are not fully subdued. Not until they give up all thoughts of conquering western Europe will there be safety for the nations dwelling therein, or for America, either. Their past doings prove this.

Hence the determination of the allies to drive on across German soil until that nation is willing to make a righteous peace, until the "rule or ruin" spirit of the German war lords is entirely broken, even if the allies find it necessary to travel the three hundred miles to Berlin. And if they meet with a continued and stubborn resistance on German soil, then the war will be long and the bloodshed will be terrible. Only the Lord knows what will be the course of events in the future. But we can pray that God will weaken the cruel and oppressive nations and cause their courage and strength to fail and that right shall triumph by his great help to all who seek to establish justice and righteous government in all lands. The word of the Lord shows that this will yet result among all nations. Yet in the rebuke of wickedness great suffering will result. One prophet says:

Behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain.—Isaiah 26: 21.

GREAT INVASION OF PALESTINE

It is so already and it may continue some years. One thing that those who believe the prophets are certain of is that the Germanic confederation will ultimately give up their efforts in the west and then begin their work of preparing for the great invasion of Palestine as described in Ezekiel 38. Of course the nations do not understand the prophets about the latter days, even though they use the Bible in their forms of worship, any more than the Jews did of whom Paul spoke, saying:

For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every Sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him.—Acts 13: 27.

In similar unbelief and ignorance, yet with the Bible in their hands the Gentile nations of our time do not know that God himself will yet overthrow and destroy these very nations of eastern Europe after their great onslaught on Jerusalem. At that time he will fulfill his word and will nearly annihilate their armies by "great hailstones, fire, and brimstone," and will "plead against him with pestilence and with blood," and through such fighting among themselves that only "the sixth part" of them will live to return to their own lands, as is stated in Ezekiel 38: 21-23 and 39: 1-4.

That effort to rob and to destroy the Jews and to possess Palestine and its vineyards, its fields, and flocks by the "chief prince" of the nations who shall come out "of the north quarters," that war will be the final war before the millennium. Although Zechariah 14: 2, 3, states that those armies will capture Jerusalem, yet their possession of it will be brief. Because the prophet says, "Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations. . . . and his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives."

Then will the Jews recognize him as the true Messiah whom their fathers slew long ago, and they will be converted and restored to divine favor. Also their land will be redeemed by the Lord and their city will be made the capital city of the earth. As I close this the daily paper (September 23) states that the Turkish troops have been driven out of more Palestine territory, and no doubt the time is near when all of it will be "brought back from the sword," as the Lord spoke by Ezekiel. Then gradually all lands and regions of the earth will become fertile and beautiful under the smiles of heaven and under the government of the Prince of Peace. No one who believes in God's promises can doubt this.

And the people of many lands are now learning to hate and abhor war, and to long for universal peace, when all will be friends and neighbors. And by and by Isaiah 2: 4 and Micah 4: 3 will have complete fulfillment, after Zechariah 14 is accomplished.

I have been indebted to Brother D. C. White for the use of copies of The American Hebrew. It is a valuable paper about the Jews.

In closing this second chapter on the subject, I will say that the study of it has been a pleasure, notwithstanding the time and labor in collecting and using the material. If some readers of the HERALD are interested in the subject both writer and reader will be pleased.

SYMBOLISM OF THE TABERNACLE

The purpose of presenting this subject to HERALD readers is that we might cultivate within ourselves the deepest respect for those divine commands which our heavenly Father has given in the days that are past to those whom he has chosen as a people or a nation; to demonstrate his great paternal care and loving-kindness, made manifest according to his divine law, to those whose faith was such that he could operate in and through them.

Thus, when in his divine pleasure he wished to make his presence more perfectly felt by the Hebrew nation; which people through faith, shown by their father Abraham, had been chosen as a people who could point out clearly God's love for fallen man, he commanded that they build for him a dwelling place among them; a place which they could recognize as his abode among them. The construction of this tabernacle was so divinely ordered that all that appertains thereto was symbolic of God's love for his people or of his wishes in regard to their obedience to his divine law. He so ordered and ordained its construction that his approval or disapproval of their acts was made manifest through their divinely given laws and symbols, accompanied by direct manifestation of his will through the high priest.

There has always existed in the world a class of people who have been antagonistic to everything which represents itself as of divine origin. Thus we find a numerous class of people who are continually trying to propagate the theory that both Moses and Jesus the Christ were imitators of theology introduced by other surrounding nations. Because they find in the code of ethics of Confucius and Buddha a great many of the divine truths demonstrated by Jesus, they are ready to proclaim him an impostor. Because of the effect of this gross darkness which they are unable to penetrate, the beautiful fact of the gospel being given in the beginning is so obscured to them that they really believe that their arguments will stand.

But careful study presents the fact that the truth was manifested in the early morn of this earth and that one of the great missions of Jesus was to give a more perfect demonstration of God's power made manifest, therefore both Buddha and Confucius were imitators of the gospel law and not the originators. We also find among the learned doctors of divinity, so-called, an effort made to class the work of God, as manifested in the commands given to Moses to erect this tent (or tabernacle) to his honor, a partial imitation at least of some of the forms of idol worship then existing in Egypt and other surrounding heathen nations.

It sometimes seems that there is a lack of comprehension of the fact that the sacrifice, the cherubim, and the sacred fire had their origin in the revelation which our heavenly Father gave of his desire to open a way of atonement after the fall of man.

These holy symbols naturally became a matter of tradition through all nations, as originating from a common source. And to the mind of the writer, the more we find these symbols distributed among all nations, in connection with their worship, the more sure we may be of the gospel's being declared from the beginning.

The first and most impressive thought is that the complete plan of procedure came not by the wisdom of men (although the Lord no doubt used such wisdom as man possessed to accomplish his purposes), but the entire structure was erected according to the will of the great Jehovah, who later revealed his plan to his prophet Moses.

Thus he proceeded in the same manner as he said, namely, that he will reveal his will to his servants, the prophets, wherever he has any work to perform. Moses in response to his divine instructions went to work immediately to carry forward the building of this wonderful tabernacle. In spite of the fact that this structure was to be very expensive and that there seemed to be no chance of raising such an amount yet he did not waver, for he knew that the God of Israel had commanded and his duty was to obey.

These circumstances call to the writer's mind the direction given by inspiration through revelation for the building of Solomon's Temple, also our own Kirtland Temple. Things which appear impossible are accomplished when accompanied by the will of God. When we realize that Israel was a nation without a home—just out from under the Egyptian servitude—it surely must have been a great test of their faith not only in God but in his prophet, when they were called upon to sacrifice about one million dollars of their limited means. With this in mind we can understand the stupendous task they were prepared to confront.

But how well were they repaid for their sacrifice! It was here the Hebrew could seek for divine guidance and as long as its purity was maintained their joy was replete in the privileges which they enjoyed in the receiving of God's will.

In the construction nothing but the best that the earth produced was used. The metals were the purest and most costly gold, silver, brass, etc. The wood used was the rarest of its kind and almost indestructible and the hair and hides used for the coverings were from the noblest that the animal world produced; typifying that the best we have to offer is what God requires.

As our earthly bodies are tabernacles for the indwelling of his Spirit, we have no right to do anything that will debase or destroy our mentality or physical structure. He cannot dwell in unclean temples, either spiritual or physical. Even if it means a sacrifice of what we sometimes style personal liberty, yet we must realize that when we can present a pure temple before God, he will enter and make his abode there. The glory of God is intelligence, so we must keep our minds or seat of intelligence free from contaminating influences, if we are to develop as the Lord would have us develop. God put the best into the tabernacle, as a symbol that we must give our best to him.

We sometimes see individuals who seem restless, and are inclined to complain because they are not called upon to do some great work. They feel that they would be a storehouse of energy if only commanded to do something which would startle the world, yet fail to realize that while they can conceive the beauties of the mountain top from the valley, the only way they can confirm their conception is by climbing step by step.

I have seen travelers who have climbed step by step, realizing how each step brought new beauties and wonderful pictures. While others who reached the mountain top by tramway or other artificial means lost all the beauties of the intermediate views. How flat their description seems as compared with the one who has attained by his own efforts.

So in the construction of our tabernacle here, we sometimes lose sight of the important daily task of living and doing all we can, no matter how small that task may be in comparison to the larger things which are occurring in constructing the tabernacle of the house of God. Directions were given for the minute details which were important; nothing was overlooked, since Moses directed under the supervision of the great architect Jehovah. We must not overlook the fact that the Lord separated first, Bezaleel, then Aholiab, and inspired them with mechanical skill to become the master workmen in the work of construction, everyone performing his appointed task and improving the opportunities given him under the direction of these inspired men.

We know that in the foundation of the gospel plan of salvation there can be only one acceptable way and that is an equal law for all. The rich cannot buy, and the poor cannot beg their way into God's kingdom. There must be equal service on the part of all, namely, obedience to God's law, so in laying the foundation for the tabernacle in the wilderness, an equal burden must be shared by all.

The foundation was blocks of silver, all alike. We are told by competent authority that the complete weight of the foundation was about five tons, equal to about one hundred sixty-five thousand dollars, and the necessary funds for this was raised by an equal tax on all Israel. Each man paid his share and no one desired to escape this tax, signifying that equality in burdens must be borne by all to start the foundation, just as each must do an equal part to-day to enter God's kingdom, that is, by obeying gospel principles, no more, no less.

After this was accomplished then each was given an opportunity to donate as they felt able. When we realize the cost of the tabernacle we cannot help but comprehend how liberal they were. We are informed that Moses had to stop their giving, as more than enough was quickly furnished. I often wonder why more of this spirit is not made manifest to-day.

The boards of the tabernacle were bound close together with tenons and appeared as one solid piece all covered with gold, symbolic of how we as a part of his great plan to-day must be bound together with the golden covering of charity, appearing as one solid band, with our lives purified and burnished so that when viewed by the world we will be as pure gold, that needs not refining. We must be bound together by the tenons of the gospel law, that we must each fit in the place where most useful. In the same manner as the fastenings of rods and staples firmly bound together this magnificent structure, so must we let God's law bind us in one firm consecrated band. Even the curtains were firmly connected by taches, or clasps, of gold, and we are told were ornamented with representations of cherubim, woven in colors which represented the height of royalty.

These cherubims, according to some, were special representatives of Jehovah to man perhaps in the form of winged messengers. God had them placed here as a constant reminder of his deliverance of the Hebrew nation. The cherubim were represented as the direct messengers who proclaim the power of God; thus we are told that they were placed at the garden of Eden with a manifesto of divine power to prevent men from returning, and no doubt conveyed to the mind of sinful man the direct manifestation of Jehovah's wonderful power.

The curtains of the tabernacle were closely and firmly bound together, showing that there is no place where God will permit perfect Christian fellowship to be separate from those who go to make up his celestial kingdom.

I do not believe any better symbolism of the colors can be given than the following taken from a book entitled The Wonderful Tent.

The high priest on the great day of atonement, after having first washed and purified himself, went into the holy of holies with the blood of the atonement, arrayed in a linen robe of spotless white, the insignia of heavenly purity. This symbolism was continued under the Christian dispensation. (See Mark 9 and 3, also Revelation 3 and 4.) In ancient Christian art others of these were given a definite signification. The Savior was usually painted in a red tunic and a blue mantle, expressive of heavenly love, truth, and faithfulness. The use of the blue was common, and allusions to it are frequent. It was associated in the minds of the Israelites with the idea of heaven and the supremacy of Jehovah. . . . When Moses and Aaron with the seventy elders of Israel ascended the mountain, invited to an interview with God, they saw the God of Israel: and there was under the feet, as it were, the body of heaven in clearness. (Exodus 24: 10.) The sapphire was a gem of a beautiful blue, and this sapphire was but the footstool, while over and around him was the azure blue of the boundless heavens. . . . The purple is used much in the same way; for these two colors in their hues stand intimately connected and in many things their symbolism may be considered the same. From remote antiquity it has been the symbol of exaltation and royalty, and was an appropriate color to adorn the palace of their king.

We will now consider a new subject which is the showbread as a type of the bread of life, which Christ gave to the world when he volunteered in the morn of creation to redeem the world and intervene in our behalf, as one who had tasted of the trials of this world. Near to this showbread were the seven lamps that were kept shining continually that the showbread might be visible. In like manner we must keep the light of our gospel experience trimmed and burning continually, if we are to be able to see and receive spiritual nourishment from the bread of life, which is intended for our use and benefit. The number seven to the Hebrew mind represented completeness, no doubt originating from God having completed the forming of the earth from the existing elements in six days and resting on the seventh day, representing the completion of the task undertaken. The seven lamps were not permitted to be without light, representing the gospel light giving us power to remain in touch with the divine Spirit continually.

Another peculiar feature was the fact that no provision for lighting the sanctuary from the outside world was made, but such light must come from within, from the golden candlestick especially consecrated for this service. Does this not indicate that the gospel truths must not be measured by vain philosophy, but should be directed by him who said, "He that doeth the will of the Father shall know of the doctrine." So this revelation must come to us as Job says: "There is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." No outward manifestation will be of effect, unless we prepare our tabernacle for the promised light through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

The priest in officiating passed between the showbread and the lamps, indicating that he who officiates must recognize in God's plan a place for both the spiritual and temporal needs, and wisely indeed Christ provided for his people both a spiritual and temporal kingdom recognizing the need of both, and has provided for same in his church, and the closer we approach the keeping of the temporal law, the brighter becomes the light from the golden candlestick of the spiritual law in directing our pathway.

In the tabernacle were placed two altars, the brazen altar and the golden altar. The first named was where the burnt offerings were immolated, but on the golden altar which represents the altar before the throne of God incense of great value only was offered. Herein lies a lesson. Many have attempted better lives by the light emanating from the divine altar of God's law, but have never allowed themselves to become real partakers of its great and beneficent influence because they feared to approach. Others by a form of faith and a semblance of repentance, have dared to look inside, but because of the shallowness of their pretensions they have been dazed by the brightness of its glory and have been satisfied with the glimpse. While still others by obedience to the law of faith, repentance, baptism by immersion, laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost, a belief in the resurrection and eternal judgment, get a view of the golden altar, but content themselves with a single view and then continue to offer on the brazen altar. Whereas they should go on unto perfection, not returning to their old ways, but continue in the divine presence continually by obedience to law (the brazen altar). They are then permitted to take a higher position, provided they do not fall by the way, and provided they offered on the golden altar (the power of God to reveal his will) the best they have, and thus have his Spirit always with them as a cause of divine rejoicing. In this condition even the desire to sin will be obliterated and we can then let his light shine through and in us.

Upon the brazen altar death is made manifest in the sacrifice, in like manner upon the approach to his kingdom we must bury sinful self by baptism to arise and walk in the newness of life, here we therefore see is a plain symbolism of what is expected of us. Upon the golden altar, however, we see no sign of death, but instead, an offering of costly incense or the best service we can give, by which is symbolized the entrance of God's Holy Spirit.

As we offer this sacrifice we are made to feel the power of God made manifest in our behalf. As the ancient Hebrew by the odor of the ascending incense realized the atonement and power of Jehovah, so we, as we pass the veil from the offering of a sin offering of obedience to the law, are made to realize the wonderful love of our heavenly Father. This knowledge increases in proportion to our attempts to grow by adding to our faith virtue, to virtue knowledge, etc.

Some day, when Christ's work of redemption shall have been accomplished the veil of the temple will be opened, and we will delight in the august presence of God and our Redeemer. At that day perfection will be manifest to us. While we may now receive of the divine presence through the power of the Holy Ghost, we will then realize the great love of our Creator in a manner which few have known, as the parental love of our Father dawns upon us.

There is another matter of importance before we leave this subject, which is the mercy seat. Have you noticed that this was placed over the law in the ark of the covenant, symbolizing that mercy must be extended to mankind by and through the law? No wonder the Psalmist David cried out: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul," realizing then that God's mercy is made manifest through law, we must realize that obedience to this law is necessary if we are to obtain the divine pardon and receive his blessings. While Jehovah wished the children of Israel to realize that he was merciful, he also wanted them to understand that only through law could mercy be extended. Jesus said: "If ye love me, keep my commandments," and again, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me," again, "If a man love me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him," and lastly, "He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings. The word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me." How then may we expect divine mercy to be extended in our behalf if we keep not his law, but expect merely a belief in the divinity of Jesus through tradition to be our passport through the portal of glory? I am thankful that in our country mercy is extended through law, and much more so that hereafter a just judge will reward us according to law for deeds done in the body.

Many thoughts in the above have been gleaned through study of a book entitled The Wonderful Tent, written by D. A. Randall, D. D., although the application is according to the light of the gospel. We surely appreciate the command given to read all good books, and the above work contains many thoughts that space prevents our even mentioning. The glory of God is intelligence, but as life must have food so also must intelligence have food if it is to grow.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

THE ORDINATION OF PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH

[A request has been made that the prayer of Elder Gomer T. Griffiths, President of the Twelve Apostles, at the ordination of Frederick M. Smith as President of the church, May 5, 1915, be republished. As many others will be interested in rereading this ordination and noting how its prophecy is being fulfilled, we print it herewith. It will repay a careful reading.—S. A. B.]

Almighty God, who dwells in the heavens above, we thy servants entreat thee in the name of thine only begotten Son, to breathe upon us the spirit of our office and calling as we officiate in this holy ordinance of ordination, that we may give utterance to those things that will please thee, O God.

Brother Frederick Madison Smith, the Lord, our God, has designated through the late prophet, thy father, that when he should be overtaken by the hand of death, thou shouldst succeed him in the presidency of the holy priesthood and the church of God here on earth. The late General Conference has approved and indorsed the selection that has been made by our heavenly Father, and directed this ordination. Therefore we, thy fellow servants and authorized ministers of Jesus Christ, impose our hands upon thy head, and through this holy ordinance of laying on of hands we separate thee and ordain thee president of the high priesthood which is after the order of Melchisedec, and we ordain thee President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. We ask God, our eternal Father, to confer upon thee through this sacred ordinance the special gifts that God bestows upon the one who is president of this Melchisedec priesthood, even that of a translator, revelator, seer, and prophet, and all the gifts, blessings, and powers that God bestows upon the head of the church; because that through this ordination you are now called to be the presiding elder over all the church of God on earth.

And we ask God, the eternal Father, that inasmuch as this responsibility is great that is now placed upon thee, thou mayest have power given unto thee to perform the functions and the duties thereof with an eye single to the glory of the great God, in the interests of the church over which thou art called upon to preside.

It will be thy duty to receive revelations and commandments for the church, for its government on the earth; and it will be thy duty in connection with thy brethren who shall be associated with thee in the First Presidency, to preside over the deliberations of the High Council. And O God, our eternal Father, do thou bless our brother with the spirit of discernment and wisdom that he may become a mighty and wise counselor in his day; and when called upon to pass upon transgressors to make decisions, that they may be just and inspired of God and rendered in righteousness, to the glory of God and the honor of thy name and the good of those upon whom he shall pass judgment.

And, oh, dear brother, it is now thy privilege because of this position unto which thou hast been called and set apart, to commune with God the Father, with Jesus Christ his Son, and with the assembly and church of the first born and with angels; and we feel to say unto thee by constraint of the Spirit: As God has blessed those who have occupied this high and holy calling in ages past, the same God will be with thee, and thou shalt receive revelation upon revelation, and angels shall come and talk with thee as one man talketh with another, if thou wilt place thyself in that condition to receive these communications. The Lord will direct thee in dreams by night and heavenly visions, and he will make known unto thee his mind and will in relation to the affairs of his church and kingdom, and thou wilt have the watchcare and the jurisdiction of all the ministry of God.

O thou Father above, do thou bless our brother! Make him strong in body; make him strong in mind and in spirit. And I say unto thee in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that the God of thy fathers will be with thee, and he will enlighten thy mind, and will quicken thine understanding, and increase and develop thy intellectual powers and forces; and he will give unto thee special gifts, even that of eloquence, and thou shalt be a leader, a mighty leader in Israel; for thou shalt have power in the church with thy brethren. But remember, brother, thou shalt have trial; thy heart will be made sad and sorrowful because of false brethren; thou wilt have enemies within and foes without, but the God that has watched over those who have occupied in this holy office in ages past, will be with thee. And brother, be humble in thy heart; be meek and lowly, and put thy trust in God who has called thee to this holy position, because he has watched over thee since thou wast born into this world, and he has raised thee up for a wise purpose, and he will be with thee, and thou shalt feel his power resting upon thee, and he will comfort thy heart in the hour of trouble and the time of distress.

Thy mind will often be perplexed. Many things will arise in days to come that will try thee sorely, but our Father in heaven will be with thee and will strengthen thee in the inner man. And we ask God, the eternal Father, in the name of Jesus Christ, to make thee well, every whit, from the crown of thy head to the soles of thy feet, that thou mayest be made strong and qualified and fitted in every respect for these duties and great obligations that are now placed upon thee.

And I feel to say unto thee, dear brother, that thy companion shall be a comfort to thee, and in the hour of distress and sorrow, she, by the power of God operating upon her mind, will speak words of comfort to thy heart and cheer to thy drooping spirits; and therefore thou shalt give heed to her when she shall come to thee under the power and influence of the Holy Spirit.

Mine angels will be around about thee and they will protect thee, and the hand that is raised against thee shall not prosper. Therefore be of good cheer. Remember that God has now placed upon thee a great honor; but few men in the ages past have been honored as thou art honored to-night, to receive this high and holy office, to be president of the holy priesthood of the church of the first born on the earth. Rejoice exceedingly in thy heart, because God has been mindful of thee.

And thou shalt be great in his sight, a mighty prince in Israel, and thy brethren will have confidence in thee and they will support thee, and those who are called and associated with thee in this great work of redemption, they shall with thee carry on this great work; therefore, when thou art tried and even tempted by the Evil One—for he will seek to mar thy peace and to weaken thy confidence in thy brethren—I say unto thee, in that hour thou shalt go to thy secret chamber and upon thy bended knees thou shalt go to God, unto him who knows thy thoughts and the intents of thy heart, and thou shalt pray for them—thou shalt be as thy Savior was, meek and lowly in heart and spirit. Be humble, my brother, and look with pity upon thy weak and erring brethren. Many of them desire in their hearts to do good, but permit themselves to be overcome in their environments and the evils that are in the world.

Remember, thou art a leader in Israel; thou art a father unto the flock of God; and he who has watched over thee in days past will be with thee in days to come. And I feel to say unto thee in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ that as long as thou art humble in thy heart and wilt trust God and seek to do his will, to carry out the trust that is reposed in thee, he will be with thee and stand by thee; and though thou shalt have many trials and shalt wade through deep troubles and afflictions, and he who knows how to try men will try thee to the uttermost—I say unto thee, that in the hour of trial, God will come to thy rescue; he will not permit thee to be overcome. Thou shalt stand as a mighty man in the world, and even those outside of the church will look upon thee as a great man in the world; if thou art humble God will operate upon thy mind and heart, and thou shalt speak as one honored of God. And as the Lord said unto Joshua who succeeded Moses as a leader over Israel, so I say unto thee: Be strong and of good courage; keep thy hand in the hand of God and he will lead thee safely on.

We feel to commend thee to him. We cannot leave thee in better hands than in his; in the hands that have been over thee in the past, even in thy late illness; for God watched over thee and heard the prayers of thy brethren and recognized their fasting; and he did bless thee and has brought thee to this place that thou shouldst be set apart and placed in this position, to set the work in order, with those whom God has called to be thy colaborers.

And may the love of God abound in the heart, and that peace of God that no man can give be with thee, that at last it may be said unto thee, "Come unto me and I will give thee that reward that I give to those who have been faithful to their trust." And thou shalt stand with those who have gone before—the patriarchs, apostles, and prophets who have been faithful in their trust. Thou shalt stand with them in the world to come. Amen.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mother Love

Along with a contribution, a dear sister sends us a letter so sweet and full of vision that we feel impelled to publish a portion of it. Her quick and true sympathy with the many mother-hearts which to-day are sore over the separation from their loved sons breathe throughout, and she but voices the yearnings of all when she whispers her own. Mother-love is hard to fathom; it is showered in richness and splendor upon its objects, whether in poverty or wealth. It shines as gloriously in the hovel as in the palace. All that is eternal in the experiences of humanity are sensed and visioned in the lives of mothers who toil, as truly as in those of easier circumstances. Environment seems to have influenced this primitive emotion but slightly so far as quality is concerned, it differing only in form and opportunity of expression.

Sister Vida's desire to be close to her son in the unfolding days of his young boyhood, is echoed in the breast of every mother, and it is only when that mother is unconscious of the importance of, or indifferent to, the results, that she, through neglect or selfishness, loses her God-bestowed power of influence over her child, and sorrow ensues.

Seen in the light of life's fuller experiences, none of us should lightly turn aside the proffered confidences of our children; neither should we fail them in sympathy, recognizing that their struggles are world old, and that they are but passing the milestones of our own youth. A guiding hand, a clear vision that takes the trouble of interpreting for a child his own thoughts, feelings and impulses, and understanding love that helps him to sift out the dross, the chaff, and the nonessentials of his many experiences, and teaches him how to hold the noble, the sound, and the really priceless ones close to his heart—these are the influences for which a man in later life will go down upon his knees in gratitude. Are you taking enough care and pains, of the right sort, concerning your child's life? Have you his confidence, and his abiding trust?

From a Mother's Letter

When my boy was a lad and when he grew to be a "fellow," I tried to keep ever close to him. One thing I prized very much, was his confidence. I felt that all else could be delayed or turned aside to meet that confidence when it was ripe for me, feeling that else I might fail of getting it at all. Always I lay awake when my children are out, like the other mothers of all time.

It was a feature of the boy's entrance, to slip to the top of the stairs and in a whisper call; "Mother, got something to tell you!"

You know how quickly that calls a mother forth, no matter what the hour, or how weary her frame. Wrapped in a blanket I often sat on his bedside, and heard boyish accounts of a jolly time, in detail which the glare of the next morning would have greatly modified.

That was years ago. Always when I think of it I say to myself: "I am so glad I did!"

We make so many mistakes in this life, that it is good to look back and "see oursel's" at any point, and be glad.

The inclosed letter I wrote my son, as you may note, when the shadows shut me in, and the purple curtains of sorrow were thick and close. When the letter was written I must have had hold of a Walt Mason string of some sort, and it just kept unwinding, as you may read. Finding the letter during my recent visit with the children, I fancied I saw some lines that might find an echo-place in some one of the many lonely mother-hearts of to-day. Oh, if I only could comfort one, the privilege would be inestimable!

So I am sending it to you that it may go forth in search of such an one. In the last few months a wider vision has been opened to me. I may not yet be able to see "over the top," but by the help of "words fitly spoken" by a friend, I have had glimpses of the "top" and how glorious they were!

Love as of old,

To My Own, Own Son

I'm hungry as an exile for the sight and sound of you,
I want to hear you singing, just as you used to do,

Or whistling hymns and love tunes

The sound seems part and kin,

Of all the bits of heaven the good Lord sprinkled in,
To this swift race I'm running and likely not to win.

I want you close beside me, a telling all your plans,
And quoting queer old English and stepping leagues and spans,

The quick spring of your footstep, your eager ringing voice,
There is just one boy neath starlight, to make me so rejoice.

One night I thought we journeyed together, you and I,
The way led o'er rough mountains but dawn was in the sky,

The snowy peaks above us, were hushed and still and white,
But we rode on together towards the plain of light.

The snow lay cold and shadowed where night was loth to go,
We glided swiftly past it, toward the dawn's pink glow,
The wide highway lay open up to the far wide pass,
But we went on together 'tween fields of sere, brown grass.

I know not how we started, nor where at last we came I woke t'was morning, daybreak, on scenes humdrum and tame,
I was so lone, so lonely beneath the old north eaves
Where slept my high school laddie and where sweet memory grieves,

For all the whispered secrets, we know there, you and me
While other souls were sleeping, beneath the old roof tree.
I'm glad 'tis merry laughter and songs of love and glee
That hold their echoes ever, (where'er the singers be).

In every nook and corner of this love-haunted place,
Though one sweet voice from out it, the choirs of heaven grace.

And so to-day I'm longing, just as an exile longs
To hear the hearts own voices a singing its own songs.
Not sadly nor with breaking, but lilting glad and free,
Just as those fresh young voices come ringing back to me,
I'd hear again, all sudden, the leap from song to shout,
Of merry heart sweet laughter, nor care for words left out.

But wait, I'd want the new ones, the boys and girls you know,
That come to share my heart holds, domains I ne'er let go,
And with them gleeful, glorious, the little ones of love,
The ones with hair like sunbeams and eyes heaven's blue to prove.

And those with shadowed love light in dusky depths a fire
And 'bove them soft dark ringlets, its mother's sweet desire.
In fancy I have opened the window to the breeze
That sweeps across the prairies and through the whispering trees,

And all the house is ringing to voices glad and young,
To songs, the ones my children and I together sung.
The breath of woodbine lingers in every breeze that comes
And soft, white girlish fingers the waiting ivory thrums.

'Tis gone, I look about me, we're lonely and alone;
There's not one lad or lassie that we can call our own,
Within the fire-warmed circle within the old home wall
Not one to say, "Where's mother?" or answer if I call.
Outside the snow lies drifted, where summer roses bloomed
And coldness, bitter coldness, in winds that were perfumed.
I touch the keys and falter, the sounds you would not know
They are as chill and lifeless, as yonder drifted snow.

The music lies in order, the best loved neath them all,
And through the western windows the winter sunbeams fall.
And you are all where roses are blooming and the tide
Comes sweeping softer breezes from salted waters wide.
And I'm as hungry as an exile to hear the welcome ring,
The shout and glee and music your voices used to bring.

Can you look out on the world and see anything except dollars and cents?

Fatherhood

I could not tread the path you went last night
O my beloved, with your eyes of awe;
It was a time when my protecting might
Could bring no shield between you and life's law!

I could not guard you on your way,
Nor share one little mite of all your pain;
I could but feel—and hope—and dumbly pray
That you would safely come to me again.

And you have come—I do not seem to know
I am a father—all my thoughts outpour
To you, who last night felt the undertow—
Safe in the haven of my heart once more!

Service, a Developer of Character

We quote from Sister Anderson's address at the late convention, "The awakened woman":

"The Nation is on its knees, seeking and finding its God in the common service of the brotherhood of the race."

Service to humanity, "brotherhood of man," is the slogan of to-day. Such service is service to God, and is its highest form. The crust of selfishness, the veneer of society, the hollow mockery of formalism are all crumbling and will soon be broken entirely, and shattered, even as Moses broke the golden image of the Israelites. The test for eternity will be the nature of the characters we build here, untrammeled by selfish motive.

This terrible war is bringing about a leveling movement.
"Side by side in the camp . . . softer hands and horny ones are grasping the implements of war! . . . The self idea vanishes before the great leveler—the common need!" Humanity has stretched out its arms in meretricious response to the common need, and such response has found favor in the eyes of God. Character is being molded rapidly to-day, either for or
